There are a significant number of questions that are raised in this bill and very few answers that are provided except: trust us; we'll figure it out in the regulation process. I'm not prepared to do that; I don't think the good people of Alberta are either. We've seen what this government did through Bill 6.

We're talking now about intending to iron out the details through regulation, but this is not a government that has taken right actions to earn the trust of Albertans in the past. It's not a government that has shown its dedication to really fulsome consultation. After pushing Bill 6 through by invoking closure, it created its consultation panels without any regard to the demands of farmers at that time, that they so desperately needed feedback from. Furthermore, they set up these panels in major cities, and we heard that the consultation, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung listed, was again in the two major cities with the exception maybe of AAMDC representation. Where was the consultation in Innisfail? Where was the consultation in Sylvan Lake? Where was the consultation in Grande Prairie or Peace River or around this province? Where were they? Where were the seniors invited to come?

Again, I come back to this thing regarding standing committees and that process. It might seem too slow for this government, but – you know what? – it's there to be thorough. I am quite certain the senior citizens of this province, that built this great province, wouldn't mind some carefulness in the crafting of legislation rather than hurriedness in the development of legislation.

What else do I want to cover off? Just a couple more things. The cost-saving opportunities for the entire systems if resources are allocated efficiently: we need some data, some research that has been done on this. Are there some significant cost-saving opportunities that the government can point out in the allocation of resources to our seniors? Wildrose supports the spirit of this bill. We really do. However, we do not support an untested program that this bill represents without really fulsome consultation. It has yet to be shown by the minister that sufficient consultation has occurred to demonstrate that this program is what senior citizens are saying is the fullness of what they really need.

In the end, I can't support this bill as it is, and I am hoping that we can have some amendments put through to make this bill significantly better.

I thank you, Madam Chair, for this time.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to table an amendment. [interjection] Yeah. One more. I will now give the requisite number of copies of the Wildrose amendment, and I'd like to read it into the record as the pages are distributed or at your convenience.

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Yao: Thank you. I move that Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, be amended by adding the following after section 12:

13 This Act expires on April 1, 2021, unless the Assembly adopts a resolution on or after April 1, 2020, that this Act not be repealed.

Madam Chair, this is an amendment that would set in place a legislative mechanism forcing the government to review this piece of legislation. This is a substantial piece of legislation which places caveats on homes and requires significant changes from contractors, and most of all it affects the largest asset of most seniors. It is our responsibility to ensure that this program is helping seniors in a prudent and effective manner.

This government is cancelling programs or saying that they're going to cancel programs that are currently in place that address our most vulnerable. They're choosing to cancel these for a broader based bill that doesn't necessarily capture what we're trying to provide to our most vulnerable. When we're assessing these programs – and we've yet to see any reasons why they're cancelling the previous programs because they have to determine the quality and the effectiveness. That is good management, and that is your responsibility as the government, to be very thorough and understand what you are cancelling and make sure that you have good due diligence and reasoning why, because when you do not do this and when you just follow your ideological policies, you destroy this province, and you do not address the issues.

I recognize that this government has access to a lot of money now, more than you've ever noticed and ever seen and grasped, and you're throwing it left, right, and centre. As much as we appreciate some of the spending that is required, you've demonstrated no savings either.

This amendment is just to address this particular Bill 5. It is to ensure that we do a proper evaluation, and we're hoping that this government will also provide measures in there to understand if this bill is working effectively and that we are addressing the most vulnerable. If this is just an ideological bill, then you'll ignore all the facts, but if you are a true government and truly wish to provide good, common-sense approaches to our citizens, you would evaluate these things and assess whether they are of true quality.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in opposition to this amendment regarding savings that might be approved by a government. I think that one element of the savings might have been savings on the paper they expended on this amendment because it really is totally unnecessary and redundant. A government, upon the evaluation of any program and legislation it adopts and passes, can choose to end a program if it's unsuccessful. We believe this program will be successful. Of course, it may be something that runs for a long period of time. If not, as with any government program or legislation, it can be monitored and adjusted as time goes on. But to spend money on even the paper that this amendment is written on is really an unacceptable expenditure, in my view, because it's an unnecessary, redundant amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment to Bill 5. This amendment, of course, adds the sunset clause to Bill 5, and it will have the bill expire unless the Assembly adopts a resolution on or after April 1, 2021, that this act not be repealed. Now, some may ask: why is this sunset clause important? Well, we know that the NDP has a history of trying untested, unproven, and risky ideas. Since we really have no idea what the outcome of this bill will be, it would be wise to not commit ourselves forever to this program should this program not work as designed.

I have no doubt that the NDP wants to keep seniors in their homes. We in the Wildrose support this idea as well. Keeping seniors in their homes does add to a better quality of life for seniors and, of course, cost savings to the government. It's a win-win situation. However, the road to disaster is paved with good intentions. This is why a sunset clause is important. The NDP thinks that they mean well and that that's enough to govern effectively. Well, I have news for them. It's not enough to mean well. We must also have effective programs that achieve desired outcomes, making wise use of taxpayer dollars. A sunset amendment will ensure that if this program does not meet its objectives, we can roll up the program without wasting further taxpayer dollars.

The government of Alberta is in a large deficit situation. How large? We aren't really sure. I guess we find out tomorrow. It's surely a large enough number, though, to make my eyes water. Therefore, it is imperative that we do not rush and commit ourselves to untried programs and risky experiments with taxpayer dollars. They expect us to do well. However, risky experiments with taxpayer dollars are what the NDP government is known for, so we expect that pattern to continue in this bill.

Our amendment will ensure that at least the experiment has an end date and we won't be paying forever for a program in the event that it doesn't work and that there are some unexpected complications. The Auditor General, of course, cannot audit every government program every year, and this amendment will ensure that at least this program has a deadline for a review and it won't be throwing good money after bad year after year, perpetually. It is a lot easier to start poor government programs than it is to get rid of them. This will ensure the government of the day in 2021, which will likely be us, will revisit the program.

We do want to support seniors in this province, Madam Chair, and certainly we're interested in any improvements to government programs that already exist to help seniors age in their homes. But we're not sure that this is the bill to improve any government program. It's creating a new program, but we would like to have just a little more research done on how or why it will work. We're kind of flying blind here.

Here the NDP is saying that staff should add 20, 30, 40 minutes into their days to implement this new program. Well, no doubt this time allocated will come at the expense of some other program that the bureaucrats are already administering. So our seniors could be worse off as delays and approval processes in every other program take longer. This is why several of my MLAs here in the Wildrose caucus are concerned. Ultimately, we need to have a government that undertakes new programs with a lot of care and forethought. We really need to be careful here. The sunset clause will ensure that at least there is a built-in evaluation ahead. That's not as good as studying the program more now, but the NDP leaves us no choice on the matter of this bill.

I will be pleased to vote in support of my colleague's amendment.

The Chair: Are there any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment today. As has been stated in the Chamber this morning by all members that have risen, there is an important need, requirement, desire on behalf of members to ensure that seniors are well supported. As highlighted by a number of members of this side of the House, there are some concerns around this particular program and the creation of new programs that may or may not actually meet the needs of seniors, as good intentioned as they may be, particularly in light of the fact that there is a significant cut to other programs and in this case a $6 million cut to the grant program that may in fact be meeting the needs of seniors, particularly low-income seniors, even better than this new proposed program.

In fact, Madam Chair, a case may be made that when new programs are introduced in government, other noneffective programs should be removed from the books. Similar to this sunset clause amendment that my colleague has introduced, perhaps if there was a commitment on behalf of government to do those sorts of things, where you remove one program if you're going to be adding another to prevent significant growth in the size of government, we wouldn't need amendments like this. Certainly, we've seen in other jurisdictions who have made a commitment to reduce red tape that when one new regulation with respect to red tape is introduced, another must be removed.

My hon. colleague has proposed a reasonable amendment. I understand that the member across the way said that the amendment isn't worth the paper that it's written on. While I find it relatively offensive that he would make such comments about another member in the Assembly trying to do work on behalf of their constituents, he's certainly entitled to his opinion. I don't agree with his opinion because the desire of the member is to ensure that we have the right program at the right place at the right time. I think you may have heard the Minister of Health rise in this place talking about similar sort of language around ensuring that the right health care is available at the right place at the right time. Just like that's a noble cause — while I don't know that she is meeting those same statements, certainly that is the same kind of desire that the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has, that we are going to wind up with the right program meeting the needs of the right people at the right time. In this case it is the seniors that we're hoping to be able to meet the needs of.

All this amendment does is provide an opportunity to ensure that the program is reviewed. Often what happens in government is that the government of the day gets busy, caught up, focused on only the issues that are right in front of them. Oftentimes those issues are very important, but sometimes they may be politically motivated. Certainly, it's my opinion that we've seen that with the introduction of Bill 1. It was significantly more politically motivated than actually based on facts when it comes to giving the minister the ability to do his job. But you can get caught up doing things that are pressing for that day and not focused on the big picture.

What amendments like this do is require the government of the day to keep their eyes on the big picture, to keep their eyes on ensuring that the machine of government is actually delivering the right program that is meeting the needs of individual Albertans. When we don't do that, we see programs that wind up on the legislative books, if you will, continuing at length. It may very well be that this piece of legislation is passed and that it winds up being a good program that needs to continue. While I think this program is intertwined with lots of potential risks, it's possible that the government will in fact mitigate those risks. It's possible that contractors won't take advantage of seniors. It's possible that the checks and balances, that the hon. member assures us will be in place, will in fact be there to ensure that seniors aren't taken advantage of.

But the reverse is also true. It's possible that this isn't going to be a good program and that many of the items that the opposition has highlighted today will in fact come to pass. We've seen that already in the short time that this government has been in power. We've seen that in the form of the jobs program, where the government was convinced that they were providing for and meeting a need. The opposition warned them of some of the pitfalls, but the government was steadfast in their assurance that they were right. Now, we learned just two days ago that, in fact, the opposition did have some merited points, that we brought to the table at that time.

Now, in the government's defence, not that I'm in the business of defending the government, they did heed the warnings and stopped the program before it went on for a long period of time, potentially creating exposure and risks to employers that believed the program was on when it wasn't, and so on and so forth. All that we're doing is saying that this program may in fact get into place and may meet some needs, but if there's not a requirement for review, often there isn't a review. Not only is this amendment worth more than the paper it's written on, but these types of amendments provide Albertans with assurances that good governance will happen.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View was recently part of a mental health review. That mental health review was in place because of a clause similar to what's being proposed today. For so long in this province these sorts of acts weren't reviewed until clauses just like this one were put in place to ensure that it happens. Sometimes a review of legislation can be politically unpopular. Sometimes it can create exposures to current governments that they would prefer not to bring up. Some would make a case that we saw that yesterday in the Auditor General's report, that the politics of the day would get in the way of good governance.

Now, I'm not saying that that is the case for this government. I'm not saying that they would allow the politics of a particular situation to get in the way, but there is a very good possibility that at some point in time in the future there will be a change in government. I know that it took quite some significant time for there to be a change in government most recently, and in fact this government may govern for multiple terms. I think, given their record, that that's highly unlikely, but it is possible.

When we pass legislation, Madam Chair, we're not just passing it for ourselves or for this government. We're passing it on behalf of Albertans and in many respects future governments. While this government may have the best of intentions and review legislation in an appropriate manner and timely and promptly, the next government may not in fact do that. It's important that we build into legislation these sorts of clauses, amendments, rules that prevent long-term exposure of a program that may not be helpful. There may be ongoing costs that aren't meeting the needs of seniors and, in fact, just costing bureaucratic time and resources. If there are clauses like this, we prevent that concern.

I think that if members of the Assembly believe in good governance, if members of the Assembly believe in ensuring that legislation will be appropriately reviewed, if members of the Assembly believe in putting principles ahead of what could be politics, these are exactly the type of amendments that ought to be passed in this Chamber to ensure that this government, future governments, and Albertans, more importantly than anything, are respected in the legislative process.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak on Bill 5 in Committee of the Whole. Protecting our seniors is something that all Albertans are in favour of, and I believe that all members of this Assembly are in agreement that seniors should be afforded every opportunity to age in place for as long as possible.

However, this bill has so many problems with it as it stands that it cannot reasonably be supported. As my colleagues and I have indicated to the minister in second reading, this is a bill without any substance to it. I've heard member after member on the other side rise to speak to the value of the $75,000 income threshold, rise to speak to the $40,000 loan maximum, rise to speak about the wonderful grant component, and rise to speak about all the consumer protection mechanisms in this bill.

I take exception to this because, actually, we're voting on giving the minister the power to establish all of these rules in the regulations. We're not actually voting on the numbers themselves. For the $75,000 income threshold we're debating the minister's promises. No hard number is in the legislation itself. For the $40,000 loan maximum again we are debating the minister's promises.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the bill, Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Looking at the time and seeing the progress we made this morning, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:57 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 13, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Welcome. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you from the unsurpassed city of Lacombe a class of students from l'école Lacombe upper elementary school, home to the province's most exciting Mock Rock, I hear, a grade 4 to 6 school with both English and French immersion classes. I was pleased to meet with this remarkable group of students earlier today. French immersion was something I missed out on, and now I kind of envy those students who have the opportunity to learn both of Canada's great languages from such a young age. I am proud of my community for providing this kind of opportunity to learn under these awesome teachers. I'm going to read the names of the teachers – and I ask if they would stand as I do so – and some of the parent helpers as well, I understand: Maryann LaFrance, Alison Ferguson, Gillian Marshall, Justin Peterson, Jenn Schimke, and Liz Clegg. I would ask that the students also please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 44 students from Rio Terrace elementary school in the fantastic riding of Edmonton-McClung. These students participate in either German immersion or French immersion programs, and I had the opportunity to speak in both languages with them earlier this afternoon. The teacher group leaders are Josie Smith and Mrs. Rita Sarrate and parent helpers are Mr. Derek Heslinga and Ms Sharon Springer. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the teachers and students from the grade 6 class from Holy Spirit Catholic school in Devon. I'm just starting to get to know this school, but I have been so very impressed with the parent involvement in this educational community of faith. Together the teachers, parents, and administrators work to ensure that all of their students are challenged to learn in an environment that encourages love, respect, and faith. Would the class please rise, and would the members of this Assembly please say hello to these students by giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school guests, hon. members?

I would therefore recognize the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Newton & Neighbours Seniors Society, which is a newly formed club with a mandate to bring joy and happiness to seniors and residents in my constituency of Beacon Heights and in the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood's constituency in the Newton area of Edmonton. The club gives their members enjoyable cultural experiences around the city such as visiting the Alberta Legislature, which they're doing today. Every month they support a wide array of local organizations with various donations, so this is not just a social club. The organizations they support include Newton preschool, Candora Society, Edmonton SPCA, Edmonton's Food Bank, and the Olde Towne Beverly Historical Society.

I will ask them to rise as I call their names and to remain standing: Pat Moffitt, Jenny Kolada, Hilda Royer, Michael Rezko, Joyce Busch, Jean Johnston, Mary Schneider, Joe Danchuk, and Audrey Peltier. I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in giving them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to present to you and through you two introductions today. My first introduction is Adele Boucher. Adele was born and raised in the Grimshaw area and went to university in Edmonton and taught for 22 years in Peace River. Adele was married to a local farmer, and they raised bison for 20 years. She also operated a local tour guiding service and still provides commentary for visitors from afar. In 2002 Adele was awarded the Queen's golden jubilee medal. Adele helped campaign in the north for Grant Notley and has been an NDP candidate in three provincial elections and one federal election. She has travelled extensively in Canada and to many parts of the world and hopes to do more in her retirement. I would ask Adele to stand, and I would ask my colleagues of the Assembly to provide a warm welcome to her.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Sorry, Mr. Speaker, I have a second one. Secondly, I would like to welcome – and I want to thank the Speaker for allowing me to do this – Mrs. Simmonds' grade 5 and 6 class from Bonanza school, who, thanks to the special permission from the Speaker and through technology, are joining us virtually today by way of live streaming, being viewed from their classroom. Bonanza school, whose motto is the Best Little School in the West, is a small kindergarten to grade 8 school located in a rural community of Bonanza and Bay Tree, approximately 580 kilometres northwest of Edmonton, in my constituency of Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley. The school is part of the Peace Wapiti division No. 76, which has its head offices in Grande Prairie. Bonanza is one of many small schools in my constituency who face challenges in coming to the Legislature in person, so today I'm trying to bring the Legislature to them through technology.

I had the pleasure during constituency week to meet these students in person in their classroom, and, believe me, they asked very good questions. They asked me thought-provoking questions, and I very much enjoyed meeting the 13 grade 5s and 6s of Mrs. Simmonds' class. Today they are also being joined by the grade 4s from Ms Spragg's class, and they are all learning about how citizens can work with government to bring about change. I ask the students to rise in their classroom and receive the warm virtual welcome from our Assembly.

The Speaker: If you can hear me, welcome. I thought the House saw that this was something, as technology changes our world, that we may need. Today I tried it as a pilot, and we may need to discuss this matter in the future. Nonetheless, I thought it was worth some value.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you my constituency assistant from my High Level office, Margaret Meyers, along with her husband, Tyrone. Margaret and Tyrone moved to High Level a few years ago after the Slave Lake fires. Since joining my office in January, Margaret has become an avid follower of all things political, so I'm thrilled to have her. I'm so pleased that she's part of my office. I'd ask Margaret and Tyrone to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me considerable pleasure today to rise and introduce a friend of this House, former MLA Ray Prins. Ray served in this House as a representative of Lacombe-Ponoka. He's a modest man, but I can tell you that he's well respected in the worlds of business, politics, public service, and of course personally. I would ask now for Mr. Prins to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you two very special individuals from the Edmonton Public School Archives and Museum, the McKay Avenue school. I've spoken with the culture minister about this important institution. This august institution is a research facility containing records and artifacts from the earliest days in the Edmonton public schools. It's housed in the oldest standing brick school, just a few blocks from here, built in 1904. Some of you will know that this was the first Legislature, this school's top floor. It's really worth a visit. I happen to live right beside it. In addition, my mother went to school there in the '30s, so it has a special meaning for me.

It's currently undergoing massive renovations, and an important institution needs a solid roof, which is now under threat. We are hoping that the budget tomorrow will show some support for this important historic institution. I'll ask the museum's manager, Cindy Davis, and archivist, Lori Clark, to stand for the first time in this Legislature, to be introduced to the Legislature.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Government Spending

Mr. Fildebrandt: In just a few short years Alberta's debt will reach $50 billion. That's $50,000 of debt for every household in Alberta. With interest payments soon to be the most expensive branch of government outside of health, education, and social services, it's critical that we take reasonable but serious steps to get the costs of government under control. Taxes will be raised, not to pay for government programs but to pay back the banks. Today's deficits are tomorrow's taxes.

The problem didn't just start with this government. Alberta has run eight consecutive deficits under four Premiers and one NDP Premier. Despite record revenues and $100 oil in many of those years, we went from having $17 billion in the bank to $18 billion of savings.

Only the Wildrose has consistently stood on the side of everyday Albertans and fought for getting spending under control while protecting the Alberta advantage that made us the economic powerhouse of North America. We believe that government should act like families who are being forced to save to make ends meet. That's why I was proud to release the Wildrose budget sustainability recommendations, a 10-point plan with common-sense ideas that will save our government $2 billion this year and even more going forward. We can get the costs of government under control.

We are calling for a hiring freeze throughout the bureaucracy, with money set aside for critical new hires like teachers and sheriffs. With job losses and wages dropping, we believe that it is only reasonable for a wage freeze to be implemented across the public sector, which enjoys job security that those in the private sector could only dream of.

While this government continues a decade of reckless overspending, Wildrose stands for fiscal responsibility and restoring the Alberta advantage that made us great.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member.

Could I again remind the House, as we discussed yesterday, that on Members' Statements there's been a past practice that you listen to the member speaking and not speak at the same time, and I would request that you do that today as well.

Īyāhé Nakoda First Nation

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell you and members of this Assembly about the First Nation in Banff-Cochrane commonly referred to as the Stoney Nakoda First Nation. In accordance with their distinct heritage the nation is restoring and preserving their authentic identity by working to eliminate the name Stoney from common usage in favour of their preferred identity as Īyāhé Nakoda, meaning mountain people. I'd like to thank those behind the website rockymountainnakoda.com for their rich history and vocabulary guide. The age-old method of cooking with stones resulted in nonaboriginals referring to the Īyāhé Nakoda by the contrived name Stoney. They are the only indigenous group in Canada that, after signing a treaty, were assigned a single land allocation for three individual groups.

Tourism and hospitality along with commercial and industrial developments are key to the economic sustainability of the nation. In upholding the traditions and culture of the Īyāhé Nakoda, environmental stewardship remains a priority when any proposals for land development are considered. The Īyāhé Nakoda groups nowadays are referred to as the Bearspaw Nakoda Nation, led by Chief Darcy Dixon; Chiniki Nakoda Nation, led by Chief Aaron Young; and Wesley Nakoda nation, led by Chief Ernest Wesley.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud that our government has made a commitment to renew the relationship with indigenous peoples. Repealing Bill 22, repatriating sacred and ceremonial objects, and having relationship agreements with the three treaty organizations are just a few ways our government will continue to demonstrate this commitment. I look forward to continued discussions with the Īyāhé Nakoda Nation with the view to supporting their interests in economic diversification, environmental stewardship, and a more prosperous Alberta for all.

Īsniyēs. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Calgary-Greenway Constituency

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all of you for your kind words and congratulations over the past days and weeks. I am honoured to take my seat in this Assembly as the MLA for Calgary-Greenway.

Within my constituency is the diversity that makes Alberta and Canada such wonderful places. There is a vast array of religions and ethnicities and a wide range of socioeconomic conditions within my constituency. It is the diversity that brings us closer together as a community by focusing on shared goals and shared values instead of getting caught up in the issues that divide us. I hope that our riding can be a shining beacon for what makes Calgary and Alberta such wonderful places to live, work, and raise a family. Many of my constituents want nothing more than to work hard every day to give their children the opportunities that they may not have had personally, and I feel that this is something that we can all agree on.

As we are well aware, the Calgary-Greenway seat became vacant because of the tragic passing of Manmeet Singh Bhullar. Manmeet was a dear friend of mine, who I had known since he was a young, passionate, and inspiring university student. There's no one in this province who could step in and fill Manmeet's shoes. All I can do is to wake up every morning and learn from what Meeta taught me: listen to your constituents, their concerns; work hard every day; and serve the public with dignity and respect and seva, or selfless service. These were the things that Manmeet was passionate about and employed every day. Hopefully, I can employ what I learned from Manmeet to improve the lives of my constituents and my fellow Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Pipeline Development

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week we heard noisy claims that our Premier is not standing up for Albertans and the need for economic growth and the development of pipelines to get Alberta's energy resources to tidewater. This is not true. Under this Premier's leadership Alberta will be an economic driver in the energy industry while ensuring that we are being environmentally responsible, too.

A few days ago our Premier spoke to the steelworkers of Canada and made it clear that we are supporting the development of pipelines using Canadian steel. She spoke to over 2,000 delegates at the NDP Federal Convention and was very clear that we as a government are going to continue to work across all provinces and with the federal government to get our resources to market via tidewater, something that neither the past provincial or federal governments have been able to do.

So let's make it very clear, Mr. Speaker. This NDP government supports pipelines. I support pipelines. This government understands that all Canadians will benefit from the economic success of Alberta. We have entered into an economic age where we are competing with the United States for oil production, and now it's time to get our resources to new markets.

The opposition will say that this government doesn't get it, but let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. No member of the opposition has been successful in getting a pipeline built to tidewater while in government. As the MLA for Edmonton-Manning I will continue to advocate for pipelines and for value-added production in Alberta's Industrial Heartland. These are things that I know my constituents support. We must get to yes on a pipeline, and that is what this government will do.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

PDD Bathing Safety Standards

Mr. Jean: David Holmes was only 35 years old when he died from severe burns while living in a PDD group home. David had severe epilepsy and was not able to communicate the intense pain he felt when a caregiver placed him in a bath of scalding water. Only when his skin started to blister was he removed from the bath, but he wasn't taken to the hospital for two and a half hours. This tragedy has since been repeated in other scaldings of persons with developmental disabilities. Mandating the use of water temperature controls is a simple way to prevent these deaths. Why has this government failed to do that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the previous government and also this government, carrying on with that, have been working very closely with service providers and caregivers in the PDD sector to ensure that scalding protection measures are fully implemented. In fact, that work has been under way. It was under way a couple of years ago. We continue to work with providers to make sure that the standards that have been put in place are fully implemented.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the opposition has been raising the issue of scalding injuries for over a decade. The Premier herself raised the issue when she was in opposition. The Education minister actually talked about it as well. Training is good, but human error will always exist. The solution is simple. Install a relatively inexpensive technology. Will the Premier mandate changes to the regulations to make it impossible for someone to be scalded regardless of the training of their caregivers?

Ms Notley: Well, let me, of course, again reinforce the same sentiment that the Leader of the Official Opposition has made. This was a very tragic situation. Our thoughts are with Mr. Holmes's family, who continue to feel his loss, as well as the other families.

It's important to understand that even though there have been clear rules put in place about antiscalding technology in the settings, even where those exist it is still possible for human error to come into play. So that's one of the things that we're working on, both the technology as well as the training, to ensure that there's no way the mistake...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: It's a tragic situation that continues to happen, Mr. Speaker. When I read the fatality inquiry report, I was hoping that the judge would say that changes had been made to ensure that the senseless scalding of David Holmes would be the last to happen in Alberta. But the judge couldn't say that. Temperature controls have not been mandated, and Mr. Holmes's father says: extra training for caregivers is just not working. The solution is simple, it's inexpensive, and it should have been implemented a long time ago. What exactly has the Premier or this minister done to ensure that scalding deaths never happen again to Albertans that are in our care?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, a great deal of work has been done on the antiscalding procedures as well as, as I say, the technology, the changes to the taps and the actual material. So that work has been done. In addition, though, our minister and our government have moved forward in engaging in very extensive consultations with service providers in terms of how we move forward in a way to ensure safety while at the same time not inadvertently creating homelessness among the very population we are working to protect.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Government Spending

Mr. Jean: This NDP government is taking our province down a dangerous path. Their economic policies have seriously damaged our ability to compete, and to date the Premier's fiscal plan has been more spending, more taxes, and a path to a dangerous amount of debt by 2019. By the time this NDP government is done, the average Alberta household will own $50,000 in government debt. This will hurt in the long term hospitals, schools, teachers, nurses, and families. Will the Premier commit to Albertans today that overall spending will not increase in this NDP budget?

Ms Notley: You know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker. I know that the members opposite have come up with a couple of their ideas, or maybe it was the third party's ideas. I couldn't quite get them straight. They can work it out on Twitter, which idea was which. I will say that although they deny climate change, they are certainly very good at recycling. A number of the things that they talked about yesterday are things that our government is already doing. We're already saving through hiring restraint. We're already holding the line on wages that we're legally allowed to do that for. We're already implementing results-based budgeting. We're doing all the careful things that we're going to do. We are not, however . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: We've already seen what happens in other provinces in Canada when NDP governments fail to get spending and debt under control. It means in the long term fewer services for families, increased taxes, and new sales taxes. All Wildrose is asking for is just a few pennies of savings for every dollar spent. Freezing wages is a good place to start or implementing a hiring freeze. These ideas alone could save Albertans $700 million per year. This is a simple first step and will start bending the curve to get us back to balanced budgets. Will the Premier commit to taking up just one of these ideas?

Ms Notley: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the savings that are projected from their plan have no connection to reality. But let me just look at one of their proposals. They're suggesting that we stop hiring for any vacancies. Now, we already do have a hiring restraint policy in place. Nonetheless, here are a few positions that the members opposite would have us not hire for: a registered nurse in Strathmore, a home-care aide in Fort McMurray, an X-ray technologist in Hardisty. What the opposition is saying is that we shouldn't fill these important front-line positions, and we disagree.

Mr. Jean: We disagree as well. That's why the hiring freeze is for nonessential services. Surely the Premier understands that. If you can save a few pennies spent on every dollar, our budget will put Alberta back on a path to sustainability and to balance. It sends a message to markets that Alberta is serious about getting its fiscal house in order. It's important. If we put the right principles in place to grow the economy, it allows revenues to catch up to expenses. It protects Albertans from higher taxes and protects health and education over the long term for all Albertans. Will the Premier at least commit to providing a timeline for getting Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker. It appears as though the member opposite ought to read what it was that his Finance critic introduced yesterday because – let me tell you – those positions were not ones that they would have saved according to their plan. That being said, here's the bottom line.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Point of order.

Ms Notley: We will not roll back front-line services that support Albertans, and we especially won't do it so that we can finance a tax cut to wealthy Albertans so that these guys can help their friends. That is not what we will do. We will move forward carefully. What we will do is ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

School Construction

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General report released yesterday is a scathing criticism of the previous government's practice of making funding announcements and promises that they couldn't keep. In fact, "the ministers announced new schools, replacements and modernizations and committed to completion dates . . . before school sites were ready." Wildrose spoke clearly and consistently about the broken promises made by the previous government. Under the current minister's leadership the first comprehensive management report on the program was produced in 2015. What were the results of that report, and are they consistent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. Certainly, it's very important for us, considering that we're in the midst of the biggest infrastructure build for schools in history, that we make sure that we get it right. We need those spaces for thousands of kids across the province. The Auditor General gave us very valuable information about what to do and what not to do as well. Certainly, you have to make sure that you have money in place to actually pay for those schools. You have to have those sites in place to make sure that they will be actually, physically in the ground. We've done that job, and, quite frankly, we're very proud of the reforms that we've made.

2:00

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's report states quite clearly that neither department has adequate systems to plan, deliver, and report on the program; no one was responsible for overall results, so information on project schedules, including completion dates, was not known; internal reporting on project progress was lacking; and public reporting was consequently weak.

The Auditor General is absolutely correct. This must change. Would the minister take the advice from Wildrose and consider tendering a bid for outside project management to provide the two ministries with the expertise they obviously lack?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, I am very, very proud of Alberta's public service and the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Infrastructure, and the school boards that take on these projects as well. What we took from the Auditor General – and thanks for his efforts and for using KPMG as well – is that we've integrated and found ways by which we can communicate with each other. One interesting innovation that we found is that we can save $15 million a year by financing the school projects as they need the money, at each stage of the way. I'm very proud of the progress that we've made. Thanks to the Auditor General . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report states very clearly that project management needs to be addressed, Education must establish the necessary processes to provide oversight of the school building program, Education needs to implement a gated project approval process, Education needs to agree on project expectations with school jurisdictions, including scope, budget, and schedule. To the Minister of Education: has KPMG been hired to get these schools built or simply to consult with school boards to identify these problems with your government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We hire contractors to build the schools, and I'm very happy to say – I've said it before, and I'll say it again – that we're getting bids that are coming in far below what we had anticipated, I believe 23 per cent for two schools in Edmonton public, saving a considerable amount of money, more than $20 million. I think that the public service and the school boards around the province are doing a very, very good job of this. You know, this idea of contracting out: we know that it was a failed idea to run P3 schools in the first place. We've moved past that, and we're getting the job done in an effective way.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Support for Business

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, PC caucus and Alberta business said that the failed job program would not work. The minister finally admitted his mistake and cancelled the program. Business also wants a reduction in taxes so they can keep their current employees. If they really want to show, quote, leadership and partner with business as the minister said, please listen and get it right. To the economic development minister: can Albertans now expect that their government will do the right thing and reduce the new heavy tax load that NDP policies have placed on job-creating businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, again, our government has been out consulting with business and industry, and we're listening. We've decided to reprofile the tool to help spur job creation and economic growth. That is and will continue to remain our number one priority.

As for questions the member has asked, first of all, we'll have to wait for the budget tomorrow, which the Finance minister will table. But, quite frankly, our government has been very proactive in doing a number of things for our economy, investing over $34 billion into infrastructure, increasing access to capital, $2 billion through ATB, AIMCo, and AEC.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Well, that was after the cattle prod from business, Mr. Speaker.

In the Premier's kitchen address her advice to Albertans was – wait for it – apply for benefits. Albertans want jobs, not just benefits. Creating dependency does not equal economic activity: this just in. Will the new job-creation program that replaced the old job-creation program be a social program, or will it create jobs to support families, jobs that pay a good wage? Is it more of the same poverty-level program that you failed at last time?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, two points. In my address one of the things that I said, when I was speaking particularly to the federal government, was: give Alberta the tools that we need to create our own jobs and build our own economy, and that's why I was talking about the need for a pipeline. In addition, I talked about our focus, just as identified by the minister, on job-creation and job-creation programs. I can assure the member opposite that, in fact, the programs that are described tomorrow through the budget will indeed create jobs.

Mr. McIver: Here's another tool they've asked for. Business groups across the province have asked this government time and again to hold back on minimum wage increases. Last week, with the circus in town, the Premier doubled down on committing to $15. We know minimum wage jobs do not always pay the mortgage, but they provide opportunities for Albertans to get on the first rung of the economic ladder. To the minister: will the government now get it more right and hold back on increases to minimum wage to allow Albertans that need that job to get on the first rung of the economic ladder so they can work their way up?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what I find quite rich is taking advice from a party that was in power for 40 years and failed to diversify the economy or from another party that doesn't believe in diversification to begin with. Quite frankly, our government has been out consulting and engaging with the business sector and with industry, looking at ways for our government to be supportive, to partner with the private sector, who are the job creators. Unlike one party that talks and another party that failed to act, our government is taking meaningful action.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Public Accounts Committee Activities

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's public servants make a tremendous contribution to our province, but there have been some troubling allegations over the past couple of days. Yesterday the Official Opposition released a document called Budget Sustainability Recommendations. In this document, which I will table, they allege that $25 million is "wasted or stolen" by members of the public service. Given the mandate of the Public Accounts Committee to oversee allegations of fraud, a question to the chair of the Public Accounts Committee: have you received any specific examples of fraud or theft, and if so, has this issue been added to the schedule of the Public Accounts Committee?

The Speaker: Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, I think from what I'm advised that there has been a ruling, a precedent on that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, questions addressed to the chair of the Public Accounts Committee have to be addressed through issues upcoming on the agenda of the Public Accounts Committee. It is therefore out of order, but I will say this. There's plenty of evidence of fraud. We saw it in the special duty report of the Auditor General from 2014.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll try again. Now, I do know, based on that answer and past history, that the chair of the Public Accounts Committee and the committee itself . . .

Speaker's Ruling Questions to Committee Chairs

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think it needs to be made more clear with respect to this precedent. As I understand it, there are some generic questions that can be asked in terms of next meeting and location, et cetera. However, I sense by where you may be headed on the next supplementary that you're going much deeper than that, so I would urge you to reconsider if, in fact, it is not focused on those matters.

Public Accounts Committee Activities (continued)

Mr. Clark: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do base this on a question asked on the 26th of November by the Member for Rimby-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, where he was asking about Tobaccogate and whether there's information that would be put on the agenda going forward.

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, if you read Beauchesne's, chapter 10, there are some illustrations that give more clarity to yourself and to the House. I think I have to rule, suggest that your question has gone too far.

Is there another supplemental?

Mr. Clark: Sure. I will ask a second supplemental. This time, Mr. Speaker, I will go to the Government House Leader. Having heard these remarkable allegations – and I believe you've read the document – I have a tremendous amount of respect for the people who serve our province, and I want to know from the Government House Leader or the Premier or anyone on the front bench: how do we create a healthy culture within the public service so people feel confident coming forward with evidence of wrongdoing if, in fact, there is such evidence?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. First of all, let me reiterate the fact that our government has tremendous confidence in the public servants who serve the people of this province. Secondly, I don't believe, even in a time of economic insecurity like what we have now, that scapegoating public servants is the way to move forward.

Thirdly, I will say that our government is committed to working with all members in this Assembly through our democratic accountability committee to improve whistler-blower . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

School Construction (continued)

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the doorsteps during the last election my constituents of Calgary-Shaw were concerned about the number of students crowded into classrooms. We know that we need more schools in communities like the ones I represent. I was concerned to read the findings of the Auditor General's report released this week when it comes to the capital planning by the previous government. To the Minister of Education: what did this report uncover?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I certainly do agree with the member that with increasing enrolment we need new schools across the province, plenty of them. We thank the Auditor General for his investigation. He found schools were being announced without proper funding and sometimes without even proper sites in place. We are in the midst of fixing that problem, building schools, and we've accepted all of the recommendations of the Auditor General's report.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is being done to ensure these scales of delays never happen again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, our government has moved to better reporting and data collection on all these projects. We're also streamlining funding to projects, as I said, for which we expect to save at least $15 million annually. We now expect 48 projects to be completed in time for the fall school session, so I encourage everyone to go to those openings. Albertans can count on us to build these schools, and we will do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General's report states that the previous Tory government did not include the money necessary to build these schools, how exactly would school projects have been affected had you not put the necessary funding in place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. For example, I know the members from Calgary have seen a surging student population there. In Calgary-South East, for example, they're waiting on 13 projects in one constituency. I mean, who knows when these schools would have actually been built under the previous government? It's a good thing that we changed the government to allow this to actually happen. Again, I'm happy to say that in Calgary, as you mentioned, we have 17 projects being completed by September. These schools will serve thousands of students in the city of Calgary, of which I'm very proud.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Safety Standards for Persons in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are right to feel upset after seeing the report released by Judge Shriar after the tragic and unnecessary death of David Holmes. The fact is that a tragic death like this should never happen again. Whether it's having the technology or regulations in place or ensuring that front-line staff are not suffering from burnout, Albertans need to know their government has the ability to protect our most vulnerable in care. What will the Human Services minister do to ensure that there is better support and oversight in care homes across the province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. It's an important issue. It was a tragic situation, and my thoughts are with the Holmes family, who continue to feel the loss. Although a number of changes have been made in response to this incident and similar ones, I know that we can certainly do better. There is a safety consultation going on within the sector. The first phase has been completed, and these topics will certainly be discussed at the second stage of the consultation.
Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, over the past several years half a dozen seniors have either been severely burnt or have died because of injuries. It's 2016. We can and must do better for our most vulnerable. Given that we know the previous government held off on implementing new regulations in care homes, when can the minister assure Albertans that there will be new mandated provincial regulations to help protect those in care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Member, for the question. The safety of the individuals we serve is of paramount importance, and the first stage of the consultation respecting safety has been completed. That report was made public. The second stage of the consultation is under way, and they are expected to complete it within six months, before the end of this year.
Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that we know that the staff who work in these homes care deeply about their patients but need supports in place and given that Judge Shriar found in the report that there's clearly not enough support in our homes to not only prevent human error but value "professionalism of care" – Albertans want more than just assurances. They want to see action. What will the minister do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Member, for the question. These are all very important issues, and that's why we have put together a team, led by John te Linde, and my hon. colleague from St. Albert, who has worked all her life in this sector, is also part of the team. These important issues will be discussed within the community, within the sector, and recommendations will be brought forward to the government. At that point I will be able to tell the House and Albertans what steps are recommended and what the action will be going forward.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Rural Health Services

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our PC Engage document promotes strengthening access to primary care networks to provide proactive health care. Our previous government initiated the rural physician action plan over 20 years ago, and it's been extremely successful. To the Health minister: considering the uncertainty that your review is provoking and the fact that you've finally confirmed that RPAP will continue but in a different form, can you please provide Albertans with details about your government's change in direction?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the opportunity to talk about how important it is, obviously, to make sure that no matter where you live, you have access to the right health professionals, which, of course, includes a physician in many circumstances. Immediately when rumours were speculating about the future of RPAP, I put them to rest. I made clear that RPAP will continue. The responsible thing, though, I'd say for any government to do – and I was shocked that it hadn't happened previously – is to at the end of a funding cycle review the funding that was allocated and make sure it's meeting the objectives for which it was intended. I'm proud to do that as a government on behalf of the citizens of Alberta.

Mr. Rodney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the hon. minister is aware that our House leader a full year ago made insightful recommendations for enhancing RPAP. Given that the NDP's vague musings now about RPAP have shaken the stability of many rural communities and that the review recognized that access to medical care increases quality of life while stabilizing the economic base for rural communities – it's not rocket science – can the Health minister please tell us: which of the rural health service review's recommendations are you considering implementing or dropping so that these fine people can plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To be very clear, RPAP does some very great work, and there is no question of it being eliminated, but it's simply good governance to review a program when it approaches the end of its current funding cycle. We've extended the funding in certainty through to the fall, and during the next few months we're taking the time to liaise with communities to make sure that we're achieving the right outcomes for rural Albertans. Unfortunately, over the last several years the percentage of physicians practising outside of Edmonton and Calgary has actually declined, so I want to make sure that we can find a way to address the needs of everyone throughout Alberta. It might not just be physicians. There might be other health practitioners, like nurse practitioners, that we need to be attracting.

Mr. Rodney: In my previous role in wellness I learned this very well, but I wonder if the minister is aware of this. Given that the rural health services review actually consulted with Albertans across the province already and it recommended expanding the mandate of RPAP to include other health care professionals – nurse practitioners, midwives, and nurses – and given, as Engage attests, that fostering a healthy society reduces the strain on our health care system, thereby reducing costs, exactly when will the Health minister provide details on NDP changes to this already successful program, and will you be doing this solely in voice mode?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. That was delivered in voice mode. I'm happy to respond in voice mode or via e-mail, whatever way you would like it to be responded to.

The $10 million that is committed currently through RPAP is an important investment, but it's actually only about 10 per cent of what we do in terms of investing in rural-specific education, training, recruitment, and retention programs for rural communities. Certainly, it's an important piece, but it's not going to be the stand-alone be-all and end-all. We need to make sure that we continue to consult through a variety of modes with our partners like the AAMDC, which I was very proud to attend just a few weeks ago and continue to get feedback from them as we move forward.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Sport Fishing Management Strategies

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this House we often hear from this government the desire to diversify our economy. We also hear that tourism may be the next great industry to save us from our dependence on energy resource development. I agree that Alberta's lakes, parks, and communities have a lot to offer, but my constituents have some questions. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: do you think that the current sport fishing management strategies are doing anything to help promote tourism, especially in our northern communities?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I have certainly heard from various communities on this matter of tourism and our fish populations. That's one of the reasons why we expanded the Castle park, and that's one of the reasons why we're embarking on a robust parks management plan and working with the tourism minister in the development of that plan. We're very proud of Alberta's natural heritage and very proud of the contributions of the angling community that underpin much of that economic activity.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that possession limits for most Alberta lakes for walleye are zero, pike have a slot limit of one, and many lakes are also zero and given that in Saskatchewan anglers can keep four walleye and five pike, to the minister: with the recent suffocation of thousands of fish and the current fish management strategy, are we now sending our tourists to Saskatchewan along with our workers and companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, our fish population and allowable catch and catch-and-release programs and all of those various regulations are studied every year to make sure that they're consistent with the science and consistent with the fish population. That's one of the reasons why, as well, we need to ensure that we are investing in environmental monitoring, so that we can keep a good eye on our biodiversity monitoring indicators, and that is exactly what this government has committed to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that walleye are very aggressive predator fish that have significant effects on all other fish species like perch and whitefish and given that in many lakes like Lac La Biche it's hard to keep them off your hook but anglers are not allowed to keep any, to the minister: will you work with Alberta fish and wildlife to at least review the restrictions on catch limits to help communities attract more tourism, please?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. I have certainly talked to the county of Lac La Biche about this matter, and other fish and wildlife stakeholders have brought it up with me. I will commit to the member that we will review this matter, and I'll get back to him as soon as practical.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans want to be safe in their communities. Safer communities is a top priority of Wildrose. It is deeply concerning for me to see how crime rates are increasing across this province. In my constituency a deputy mayor has been both robbed and vandalized in the past six weeks, and in Red Deer various types of crime have almost doubled. To the Minister of Justice: what are you doing to reduce the crime rates and keep Alberta safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, we're all deeply concerned when crime affects any citizen of Alberta. We will be working with the police to ensure that they have the necessary resources going forward to address these issues, but I think that it's also critical that I work with my colleagues to ensure that we address the underlying drivers of crime by making sure that funding for mental health, for health care, for education, for affordable housing all remains in the budget. I think that that is the best way to move forward.

Mr. Taylor: Given that a gas station convenience store in Wainwright, located right beside the school and mere blocks from a police detachment, was just recently held up at gunpoint and that normally quiet, peaceful towns like Amisk and Wainwright are turned upside down by crime and since this is a major concern across the province, where can Albertans turn when this very government is not working to keep their communities safer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, I think I'd like to begin by saying that, actually, we work very hard with our police partners. Our police partners are doing a very good job. They are working to address these crime issues. You know, as I've said, it's really critical to ensure that front-line services are there, whether those be services for the police, whether they be health care or mental health supports, whether they be supports for people who have lost their homes. Moving forward, we will continue to ensure that those things are in place. You know if we follow the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Since the Wildrose have put forward recommendations to combat some of the systemic problems that may lead to an increase in crime and given that fentanyl is having a devastating impact on our communities and can be tied in part to the rising crime rate and given that Albertans don't want to hear platitudes – they want action – will this government commit to implementing all 10 recommendations found within Wildrose's fentanyl report, that would lead to safer communities and saving lives?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, fentanyl is an issue that is of concern to all of us. It has a devastating impact on our communities. We are absolutely committed to working to correct that problem, but I think the ways that we work to correct that problem are by investing in jobs for the people in Alberta, investing in the public service. If we followed the recommendations from the folks over there and hollowed out those services, crime would only get worse.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness was initiated in 2008, almost eight and a half years ago. The nationally recognized program provides permanent affordable housing to homeless Albertans and offers crucial support services to help them avoid returning to the streets. As a former member of the Alberta Secretariat for Action on Homelessness I can attest to this program's success. To the Minister of Human Services: how do you plan to continue to build upon the success of the 10-year plan to end homelessness?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The member raises a very important issue. We as a government believe that every Albertan deserves a place to call home, and our government will work with our community partners, with organizations working on that plan to make sure that we do proper investments and we provide homes to every Albertan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per our PC Engage document, taking care of Albertans proactively before they are in crisis is not just the right way to govern; it's the fiscally prudent way to govern. Given that according to the government's own website Alberta's homeless strategy has helped more than 4,400 Albertans leave the streets and given that more than 1,900 housing units have been developed for homeless Albertans, the program's value in reducing crime as well as social services and health needs is clear. To the Finance minister: is ongoing support for the homelessness plan the kind of proactive cost-saving measure we will see in your budget?

Mr. Ceci: Well, let me see. You're about 24 hours and 37 minutes too early for that question.

You know, subsequent to the budget presentation there will be briefings by each of the ministers, and you'll find a great deal more about the Human Services funding in the briefing that'll take place after my budget presentation.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Minister. I've always been a man ahead of my time.

Given that Edmonton's police chief has publicly questioned the success of Alberta's groundbreaking homelessness initiative and given that any erosion of Alberta's homelessness plan will put Albertans at risk and cost taxpayers more money and given that there are ways to make a good program even better by building on its success, to the Justice minister: what meetings have you had with the Edmonton police chief regarding homelessness, and what have you told him about the 10-year plan to end homelessness?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Well, of course, I've had the opportunity to meet with the Edmonton police chief and several police chiefs across Alberta on numerous occasions. I've also met with mayors of various cities, with AUMA, and with AAMDC, and I think that everyone is committed to moving forward to address the homelessness issue. In terms of what I've told the chief of police about our programs, for the most part what I've done is listened, you know, to his views on what the impact has been because he is the person delivering the front-line services. I mean, certainly, our government is committed to providing those services, but we're also committed to listening to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans and Canadians love Alberta beef. Albertans also know that our livestock sector is one of the most important parts of our economy, creating prosperity and jobs in rural Alberta. They also know that BSE, or mad cow disease, threatens that prosperity and those jobs in our province. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is your department doing to protect Alberta's cattle industry from BSE?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm pleased to say that Alberta and Canada have a world-class BSE surveillance system, which has been recognized internationally for the effectiveness of its surveillance, management, and eradication measures. My ministry is continuing to work with industry, veterinarians, and the federal government to continue this good work and to improve and refine our excellent system. I take this issue very seriously. Alberta's beef industry is one of our province's highest quality exports, and we need to ensure that our markets remain open.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta is expected to test 10,000 cattle for BSE annually and given that in recent years the number of animals tested each year has dropped to about 5,000, how is the same minister acting to ensure that these low numbers do not impact market access for Alberta beef?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont is correct that fewer cattle are being tested. The trend is seen in other provinces as well such as Saskatchewan. Some reasons for this include increased cow cull prices, shrinking cow populations, and perceptions among producers that the program is over. I want to make absolutely clear that testing is voluntary in Canada, and this has not had any implications for our international BSE status, the safety of our herd, or market access for our beef. That being said, my department has launched extensive education and awareness campaigns to highlight the importance of surveillance. More recently we contracted with several private veterinarians to work with us in promoting the program.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association estimates that the BSE crisis of the last decade cost producers between $6 billion and $10 billion and given that a case of BSE was confirmed in this province as late as 2015, what does the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry plan to do to protect Alberta's livestock industry in the event that a new case of BSE is discovered in our province?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in a previous response, Alberta has an internationally recognized surveillance and response system for BSE that allows us to systematically determine the origin of animals, any risk to the food chain, and fight any unfair trade barriers that might be erected should a new case be discovered. I've had the great fortune of meeting with some of the folks who work in my department while they were conducting a simulation similar to a new case of BSE. I can tell the House that I, personally, have never been in a room with so many capable experts, veterinarians, and dedicated public servants. The success of our system was evidenced when the last case was detected. Prices were not affected, and our trading partners ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Little Bow.

Capital Infrastructure Planning

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's Auditor General's report made it obvious why we need a clear and transparent sunshine list for infrastructure projects. In her TV address last week the Premier said that tomorrow's budget would be setting out more details of a major five-year infrastructure plan. It's also been one year now since members on the government benches promised a transparent infrastructure sunshine list for all Albertans. Will the government finally unveil the list so communities can see where their needs stack up?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. The hon. member is right. This government is coming forward with a capital plan that will help build communities, that will help build the economy and create jobs for all Albertans. I'm very proud of it.

With respect to the sunshine list I think I can tell the hon. member that he can stay tuned for the budget tomorrow, but it seems that it is dawn for the sunshine list.

Mr. Schneider: Given that postsecondary institutions have shovel-ready projects, many would benefit from such a list. The Wildrose jobs action plan includes a proposal to invest in knowledge infrastructure. Recently the University of Calgary said that they have shovel-ready projects that could support over 500 person-years of employment during construction. Given that this government proposes to spend more than double British Columbia's capital plan, there's no excuse to not include this sort of investment. Will the government commit to prioritizing knowledge infrastructure investments to better Alberta's future?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. Infrastructure, of course, takes many forms, and it's a key part of this government's strategy to put Alberta back to work, to make sure that we have the infrastructure that's needed for the growth of the economy when the price of oil recovers. I think that the hon. member will find that if he's patient and waits until tomorrow, when the budget is released, he will understand the priorities of this government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this government's ambitious capital spending agenda, the government should give procurement priority bids to include more opportunities for apprentices. Our Wildrose jobs action plan also called for an increase in apprentice usage on government infrastructure projects. Rather than have apprentices waste their training and stay at home, will the government sit down with the construction industry to figure out the best way to fairly incentivize the use of apprentices on provincial projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the hon. member's question, you know, I can tell him that we are having discussions with respect to the question of apprenticeship. We do want to make sure that as many young people as possible have a chance to learn their trade and to become proficient and to be certified in their trade. Those discussions will continue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Service Delivery

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past year under the NDP government a procurement policy has been put in place related to adults with disabilities. This policy has resulted in a deterioration of PDD supports the likes of which this province has never before seen. It is time for this government to start paying attention. To the Minister of Human Services: why do you continue to advocate for procurement given the massive damage this policy has done to some of the most vulnerable people in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. In all of our policies relating to procurement, our government is committed to making sure that we do it in a transparent and accountable manner, and that's how we intend to do this one as well. We will work with the community and the sector who are affected by that policy to make sure that we get this right.

Ms Jansen: Now, the problem is that you're not working with them.

Given that procurement essentially puts PDD clients up for bid by service providers, even out-of-province providers, who might have dubious experience, again to the Minister of Human Services: why would you reduce our citizens to such a humiliating process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. First, I will reject the premise of your question. That's not what the government is doing. We are working with ACDS, which is the representative organization for 139 members who serve the PDD community. I got an e-mail – I can submit that later – and I will quote:

There is an openness to listening and pursuing solutions together that I believe was demonstrated in the review of PDD Safety Standards by this Minister and I am confident he values collaboration and respects our perspectives and contributions.

Ms Jansen: To the minister: you can say that you're listening, but I'm hearing you're not.

Given the hard work and dedication of those who work and advocate for Albertans affected by developmental disabilities, I am shocked to hear that it has become almost impossible for them to meet with the minister to face the challenges that they are facing right now. Again to the Minister of Human Services: how can Albertans trust you to make any decision that puts health and dignity over politics when you won't meet with them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I am in touch with the community and with their representatives. These are all the social deficits which we inherited from this government when this hon. member was the minister of disabilities. All these policies we are fixing today: that's the mess created by the previous government. We are working with the community to make sure that we collaborate and get this right for vulnerable Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

2:40 Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a lot of heated conversation in this House last fall around the extension of workers' compensation and basic labour rights to Alberta's farm and ranch workers. At the time my office and I heard from some people who wanted us to slow this legislation down, but we heard from even more workers who said that this legislation couldn't wait even another day. To the Minister of Labour: how many farm and ranch workers have accessed WCB in the time since coverage was finally extended to them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to update the House. As of April 9 154 farm workers have had approved claims through the WCB. Of those approved claims, 61 were for lost time, meaning that the worker was injured so severely that they were not able to continue work, and they have received compensation from the Workers' Compensation Board. With the WCB coverage farm workers are benefiting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you recently announced a review of the WCB and given that farm and ranch workers have only recently been given protection under WCB, again to the Labour minister: will the concerns and perspectives of farm and ranch workers be included in this review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. The WCB review panel will be having meaningful discussions with farmers, ranchers, and their wage farm workers, who are new to the WCB system and will have recommendations. The panel will also have access to any feedback on WCB that comes through the consultations, being led by our Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. Our government is committed to taking as long as needed to get good feedback into the system and to make sure that the WCB system is serving all Albertans.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that consultations on the regulations for the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act are still being developed, again to the same minister: can you update the House on how these conversations have been going?

Ms Gray: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is putting the final touches on the consultations, that will include representation from all stakeholders in the farm and ranch sector. We also know that we're moving into some very busy months for farms and ranches in Alberta, so we need to be respectful of those farmers and ranchers. The timing of when things will get started will depend on the availability of these very busy people. These are important issues, and we look forward to getting them right.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

Red Deer Regional Hospital Flood

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to rise today and speak about the outstanding AHS staff at the Red Deer regional hospital. On March 1, 2016, an accidental cut was made to a pipe in the Red Deer hospital's sprinkler system. The response time in this disaster was extremely quick, with equipment being moved in minutes. As a result of this accident the hospital received major water damage. The damage took out four operating rooms – they went offline immediately – as well as 12 patient beds and medical device reprocessing. After the first week they found one more operating room in need of remediation. As you can imagine, ORs are built to the highest standards and cannot be compromised. All this work is being done within a functioning OR system at a major hospital.

Mr. Speaker, as you can imagine, AHS staff have been working day and night since March 1 due to the flood. They have had to juggle hundreds of surgeries, run operating rooms into the evenings, and work around the clock on repairs. They have made sure patients with critical needs have received surgery without delay. The region has been very responsive to our hospital's needs, with staff from Olds, Stettler, and Innisfail stepping up to help alleviate pressure in Red Deer by taking patients. It has been hard on patients who have had to have surgeries rescheduled, but people realize that AHS is taking all the precautions to make sure that the operating rooms are up and running as quickly as possible without compromising patient health. The first OR came back online on March 11, and the rest are scheduled to come online in the coming days.

I want to thank all of the hard-working AHS staff for their help and dedication during this time of crisis. Every employee in this hospital has gone above and beyond.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Housing in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend I returned to my constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, and I spoke with residents in my community about seniors' care. I was asked, "When is it going to be built?" and "Was it cancelled?" I was disappointed to have to tell my constituents that this NDP government still won't provide any answers on this important issue. In fact, it seems like not much has changed since the last government. We're still being told to sit tight while time is wasted on needless bureaucratic delays. This is a project which already has assessments. It already has allocated money and a prime location across the street from the hospital, close to all amenities, from shopping to major public transit routes. It is time that we act now.

All Albertans deserve to age in dignity and, for those who require palliative care, in a safe living environment, which is not in a hospital. Seniors who have built our province and have lived in Fort McMurray all of their lives deserve a home where they can age with dignity. This project, to be built on the site known as Willow Square, has the ability to address seniors' residential needs for the next 20 years if it is done properly. To do this properly, you should consult with the community, with the seniors of Fort McMurray, and with the municipality of Wood Buffalo. Until this project is built, the local hospital, the Northern Lights health centre, must accept the burden of housing for long-term care residents, taking away much-needed acute-care beds from this isolated community north of Edmonton, a staggering 450 kilometres away.

This government must recognize that ensuring that seniors are able to have a good quality of life is a priority. This shouldn't be a partisan issue. The community needs this place for their seniors as it was promised to them. Now it's up to this government to keep that promise. We must not forget that this government's local NDP candidate in Fort McMurray also campaigned on Willow Square. It's time for this government to do right by the seniors of Fort McMurray, not only to answer their questions about the Willow Square facility but also to take the necessary steps to take this project and move it forward.

Thank you.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I would like to report that the Standing Committee on Private Bills has had a certain bill under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that Bill Pr. 1, the Bow Valley Community Foundation Repeal Act, proceed in the Assembly. I request the concurrence of the Assembly in this recommendation.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in agreement, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: All opposed, say no. So ordered.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Bill 8

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016.

The Fair Trading Act is Alberta's primary consumer protection legislation to safeguard Albertans from unfair business practices and to promote a level playing field in consumer transactions. Under the act the minister may establish regulatory schemes for certain types of businesses and create regulatory organizations to whom powers, duties, or functions set out in the legislation may be delegated.

The proposed amendments will enhance ministerial oversight of delegated regulatory organizations in a manner similar to other legislation. The provisions of this bill are necessary to ensure that organizations delegated responsibility for consumer protection are held to a high standard.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce first reading of Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences.

Bill 9 proposes amendments to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and the Traffic Safety Act that will streamline and simplify how our provincial laws and bylaws are managed. These amendments will help protect vulnerable Albertans and create efficiencies in our ticketing process.

Mr. Speaker, the first amendment serves to end the outdated process of jailing individuals to enforce tickets for minor infractions. Under the amended legislation Albertans will not be arrested for failing to respond to their ticket, nor will they face jail time for failing to pay a fine for a minor infraction.

The second amendment will enable the expansion of electronic ticketing in Alberta. These amendments will help ensure that the thousands of hours spent annually by police, courts, and corrections staff processing warrants for minor infractions are dedicated to more urgent and serious matters. The change to the e-ticketing will help to ensure that processing times for tickets are simple and errors are reduced.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The minister of Strathmore-Brooks. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm always pleased to rise as the minister for Strathmore-Brooks, Mr. Speaker.

I have several documents to table today, so if you'll please entertain me. First, I'm very proud to table the Wildrose 2016 budget sustainability recommendations. I have five copies of the document here. There are 10 points laid out by the Official Opposition to move Alberta back towards budget sustainability. This would bring a $2 billion reduction in operational spending from the baseline of last year's budget. Moving forward, this would continue to build savings in a direction of a balanced budget in this province, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to table these now.

Further, the Member for Calgary-Elbow graciously was interested in my role as Public Accounts chair during question period today. Unfortunately, while the questions were ruled out of order, it's a topic near and dear to my heart, fraud or malfeasance within the government of Alberta. I'm happy to table . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you just clarify where you're headed with this?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm tabling documents.

The Speaker: The documents being what?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Auditor General's reports.

Mr. Speaker, the member was asking about examples of government fraud within . . .

The Speaker: Table the report. There's no need for references, particularly since it was out of order.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm happy to table five copies of the Auditor General's report of August 2014, Special Duty Report on the Expenses of the Office of Premier Redford and Alberta's Air Transportation Services Program, a clear example of corruption and possibly fraud within the government as well as . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, have you got the report tabled? Have you already finished?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm tabling it here.

The Speaker: Then do it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: As well, five copies of an article from the Calgary Herald, titled Disgraced Alberta Public Servant Now Faces Charges in Manitoba, regarding the former executive director of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission who was sentenced to three and a half years in prison.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of the list of unproclaimed legislation under the Statutes Repeal Act. The Statutes Repeal Act was intended to spur review of all legislation that remained unproclaimed for an extended period of time. Upon review unproclaimed legislation may be found to be unnecessary or obsolete, and repealing it may help to reduce legislative confusion and duplication. The act requires the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General to table a report listing the unproclaimed legislation for all departments that is more than five years old. The report I am tabling lists all unproclaimed legislation passed prior to January 1, 2011.

Legislation on this list will automatically be repealed on December 31, 2016. However, if legislation is still required, the repeal can be avoided as follows: the legislation can be proclaimed into force on or before December 31, 2016, or the Legislative Assembly can adopt a resolution that the legislation not be repealed. This ensures that any useful or necessary legislation can be retained. My ministry has been communicating with the departments responsible for any unproclaimed legislation to ensure that they are aware of the options and are taking the necessary action.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table the required number of copies of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal 2015 annual report. As you know, the appeal tribunal is a quasi-judicial body with a mandate to resolve disputes over land and membership and other bylaws set out by the Metis Settlements General Council. The tribunal promotes self-governance, certainty, and respect within Alberta's eight Métis settlements. In tabling this report, I wish to thank the tribunal for the important work that it does preserving and enhancing Métis self-governance under the laws of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive 7(7) to extend our daily Routine past 3 p.m.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document published by the Mining Association of Canada taking the position of calling on governments, in fact, to "establish a broad-based carbon price" that is "revenue neutral" and to "address competitiveness and carbon leakage concerns." Its revenue neutrality is defined by investing revenues generated through carbon pricing into the development of lower emission technologies to manage the transition to a lower carbon future, including climate adaptation, and to ensure a level playing field for trade-exposed industries.

I would like to table the requisite number of copies.

Speaker's Ruling Interrupting Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on, I would like to first of all mention that I reminded the House yesterday as well as today that during Member's Statements the past practice and tradition of this place have been that you listen attentively and not interrupt. I, in fact, noted in one of those statements today that the noise in the House during one of the speakers was excessive, and I believe I should have stepped in on that at an earlier stage. Again I remind you of the common principle: respect and treat the same on both sides.

There was also a point of order that was made today. The Member for Strathmore-Brooks, I believe. Is that correct?

Opposition House Leader, are you doing it on behalf of the member?

Mr. Cooper: I certainly am today, sir.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on Standing Order 23, essentially language that's going to cause disorder in the Chamber. During question period the Premier made an allegation that the opposition wouldn't replace front-line workers that were essential to the operations of the province. I'd just like to highlight two quick statements that would give some indication that her statement was untrue: "By implementing a broad hiring freeze across the government (with exceptions only for essential employees)." That can be found on page 3 of the document. On page 4 of the document:

There should . . . be no expansion of positions across the public sector except in rare cases such as for needed front line health workers, . . .

As the Premier specifically referred to front-line health workers in a number of communities, including Hardisty and some other areas around the province.

. . . or new teachers and teacher assistants to meet enrolment growth and to staff new schools.

The Premier, from time to time, likes to make allegations against this side of the House, particularly of what she may or not believe to be true, and, in fact, misleads the House with some of her statements. Clearly, this is not just a matter of debate because the statement of this side of the House is clear in the document that was just tabled by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. It's my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier will take some time to read the document as opposed to just making allegations about what this side of the House would or would not do. There is one side of this House that is currently in the process of laying off front-line workers – they are the only ones that have that ability – and it's the government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you clarify again? Section 23: which subsection?

Mr. Cooper: Subsection (h), (i), and (j), or whatever it is: uses language that is "likely to create disorder," "imputes false or unavowed motives" – that could be possible – or "makes allegations against another Member." Clearly, that's what happened today when the Premier made allegations about what we would and would not do.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll rise and begin by cautioning my friend across the way as far as allegations and his comments toward the Premier because the very document that he just cited actually contradicts itself. I will draw attention to page 2 of the very document, that says that there will be "no increases on wages or positions for the rest of the public sector beyond new teachers." Well, the public-sector workers that the Premier was referring to were a registered nurse in Strathmore, a home-care aide in Fort McMurray, and an X-ray technician in Hardisty. Those three are nonteachers. Yet page 3 in the very same document then goes on to talk about "a broad hiring freeze . . . with exceptions only for essential employees." Either it's only for teachers, or teachers suddenly have become essential employees. I'm not quite sure of the definition of essential.

That brings me to my point, Mr. Speaker, and to why this is not a point of order. Quite frankly, people disagree – and when I say "people," I'm talking about this also going through many different systems – on the definition of essential services. There is much disagreement. There is no one universal definition of essential services. It is an opinion. It's a difference of opinion, which again brings me back to the point here, right now, that this is not a point of order. This is a difference of opinion about essential services. Therefore, like I said, this isn't a point of order.

I'll just remind you, Mr. Speaker, that you've made several rulings over the past couple of weeks as far as differences of opinions. You yourself have ruled that "a dispute amongst members on the facts surrounding [an] issue [is] more a question of debate, not a point of order." That was what you had spoken of on April 12 this week. Therefore, this is not a point of order; this is a difference of opinion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: New information to cite to the point. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, is there new, additional information?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I congratulate the member for being able to read the cover page, pages 2 and 3, but he has not read page 4. On page 2 the member is referring to highlights, bullet points, high-level points of the document. I congratulate him on reading the highlights. Then in the weightier aspects of the document it says: for essential employees such as teachers. On page 4, if he were to have made it as far as page 4, the member would see that there is "no expansion of positions across the public sector except in . . . cases such as for needed front line health workers, or new teachers and teaching assistants." Very clearly, this is not a matter of debating an interpretation of a document. It's in black and white if the member would read as far as page 4.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. It is my view, in listening to what I've heard, that the point of order was raised in response to the Premier's comment about the Wildrose policy. In my view, there is no point of order. This is a dispute of facts and a difference of opinion similar to the ones that we've dealt with.

Sections 23(h), (i), (j), and (k) seem to have come up in this House a lot of late, and they continue to be referenced. The relevant citation, that all members may draw their attention to, page 510 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, in fact, suggests that these kinds of points should not use the point of order to engage in debate on an issue. I therefore would rule that there is no point of order.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to continue on what I was speaking about this morning. I rise today to speak to Bill 5 in Committee of the Whole. Protecting our seniors is something that all Albertans are in favour of, and I believe that all members of this Assembly are in agreement that seniors should be afforded every opportunity to age in place for as long as possible. However, this bill has so many problems with it that as it stands, it cannot reasonably be supported. As my colleagues and I have indicated to the minister in second reading, this is a bill without any substance to it

I've heard member after member on the other side rise to speak to the value of the $75,000 income threshold, rise to speak to the $40,000 loan maximum, rise to speak about the wonderful grant component, and rise to speak about all of the consumer protection mechanisms in this bill. I take exception to this because, actually, we are voting on giving the minister the power to establish all of these rules in the regulations. We are not actually voting on the numbers themselves.

For instance, the $75,000 income threshold: we are debating the minister's promises because there is no hard number in the legislation itself. For the $40,000 loan maximum, again we are debating the minister's promises because there is no hard number in the legislation itself. For the grant we have no figures on exactly how much the maximum amount will be or exactly how the $2 million promise will be disbursed. Again, we have vague talk from the minister with no specifics, and – it's a big surprise – there are no hard numbers and no concrete details in the legislation itself.

For consumer protections what we have are a lot of rules around contracts being cancelled, and we have an emphasis on the contractors' responsibility to educate seniors on the government's complicated home equity loan program. Not surprisingly, this government has paid little heed to the construction industry. In fact, five pages of the 12-page bill are focused on restrictions and responsibilities that this government is placing on contractors.

Madam Chair, here we are in Committee of the Whole debating a bill with huge implications for seniors, for industry, and Alberta's taxpayers. Looking at the bill itself, it is clear that the only thing this government is prepared to legislate is the role of and restrictions on industry, while at the same time it isn't prepared to legislate what the government's roles would be. This is a double standard and typical of an NDP government's antibusiness approach.

In the minister's press announcement she was asked how much the government expects to loan out in total under this program, what this full amount will be from the government's perspective. She was unable to provide a firm answer, but she did state that you can multiply the number of eligible households by the loan amount. That is exactly the problem. The minister herself was not sure of the parameters of this program. Originally, she had stated that this program would have an eligibility of up to 145,000 households. Multiply those seniors' households by the stated maximum amount of $40,000, as the minister suggested. I would ask the government side to consider these numbers and see if they can provide a simple calculation.

Yesterday the government reported that the actual expected uptake number is only around 5,000 people and that this would equal a taxpayer-funded liability of around $200 million. That's a substantially different figure, and frankly it's worrying to see this government give such widely different answers to simple questions like these. How can we be expected to vote on a government bill with little to no insight into the actual or expected numbers or the parameters? I realize that the members opposite may have blind faith in their government, but let's make something clear. The people of Alberta absolutely do not. The faith and trust that Albertans gave to this government a year ago are quickly dissipating as risky ideology and failed policies have come forward from this radical government again and again.

Madam Chair, I'd like to echo a few concerns that I've heard over the course of my stakeholder outreach. This government is getting into the business of high-risk lending and is forcing contractors to take on the lion's share of consumer education, outreach, and work.

This first point comes from the fact that there are currently products on the financial market for seniors and homeowners to access in cases where they do not necessarily qualify for a traditional loan.

As my colleagues and I have mentioned before, we just think that we need more time to consider this legislation from all angles and to hear from all experts in finance to learn more about the home equity loans and the risks that may be involved here. In second reading the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills recommended that this bill be sent to committee for more consideration, but that motion was defeated.

Another question I'd like to ask here in the Committee of the Whole is whether the government has considered the problems that may arise by taking on a loan program directly. Currently Alberta Treasury Branches is responsible for the seniors' property tax deferral program, so I'm wondering why that hasn't been considered here. It presents an option for the government to use already existing financial infrastructure instead of duplicating services and mechanisms in the bureaucracy. I'd like to hear more about this option from the members opposite.

The third issue that I've heard about has to do with the $75,000 income threshold, which is for both couples and single seniors. I've heard a number of questions about how the government came up with this figure and why they're getting into the business of providing home equity loans to single seniors with incomes of up to $75,000 a year when they would more than qualify for a competitive, market-based rate.

Madam Chair, these are just some of the many problems with this bill.

We need to remember that our seniors are the ones who built this province. They are the ones who have passed on good Albertan principles such as freedom, family, hard work, and compassion. Seniors' ability to age in place is something that I certainly want to support. However, I believe that we need to be looking at better options than what is presented here in this bill. Rather than competing with the market, we should focus on creating a real strategy for those with the greatest financial hardship. We have still not heard all the details of the grant component, which is for the most vulnerable, but this government did cancel the previous grants that were available for the most vulnerable seniors.

This isn't all of it, Madam Chair. There are many more questions I could ask, but I would like to now give the government the chance to respond to the points that I have raised.

Thank you very much for your time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Cyr: Madam Chair, it is my honour to rise and speak on Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. I'd like to start by noting how incredibly grateful I am to our senior citizens for all that they have given to our wonderful province. The seniors are the ones who built this province, which we've heard many times from our side, and through their hard work, dedication, and sacrifice they deserve to be protected and supported. World-class care for seniors is one of the core principles of the Wildrose Party. I can see that this government also sees the value of our seniors and that this legislation comes from a good place. I see that they feel for and want to help seniors, which is why this debate on this bill is so important.

The ability for our seniors to age in their homes is an important part of supporting our mothers, our fathers, our grandparents, and it's commendable that this government has taken up the cause. The unfortunate reality, however, is that once again this government is trying to rush through experimental legislation without taking the essential time to do the foundational work. This is precisely the legislation that should be sent to a standing committee. This program is untried, untested, and many of the details remain fuzzy, and this is simply unacceptable. These are real people with real homes, real lives, and real bills to pay, and they should be able to count on consistency and reliability of well-planned-out, thoroughly researched and tested legislation.

For myself, I have worked doing personal taxes for 15 years. I have worked with a lot of vulnerable seniors throughout my career. My concern is that when these seniors finally need to move on to the next step of their lives, they're not going to have the ability to be able to continue with the lifestyle that they are going to need. We won't be in essence protecting these seniors in their time of the most need because they'll already be in long-term care. We are taking equity from the houses that will later serve as income for these senior citizens. Many senior citizens that came through my office, the low-income, the most vulnerable, had between $10,000 and $12,000 per year in income. They need the equity from their homes to continue on to that next stage.

Now, the other problem in all of this, taking equity out of your home and using it for repairs, is that normally repairing your home doesn't add to the value of your home. Once all the equity is gone, then really there's nothing to protect that senior should home prices go down in, let's say – I don't know – a low-oil environment. You will lose, like in my riding, 22 per cent of the value of your home. This is a concern because now we've got a senior that is overleveraged. That is a problem because then we've got seniors going into bankruptcy. Bankruptcy.

Now, we've seen this government time and again move forward with broad-based, unsubstantiated legislation. These changes will have real and meaningful impacts on the daily lives of Albertans. This cycle of legislating first and figuring out the regulations or details later, in fact, does not make for an accountable, transparent, or reliable government.

With so many details not worked out yet, this is taking a risk with the most vulnerable part of Alberta's residents, Alberta's senior citizens, again, people that have built this province. Implementing a program for seniors that has not been proven to be economically sustainable does not do them any favours in the long term. Having to renege on promises made now could prove to be devastating for seniors in terms of their financial planning and ability to provide for themselves, which is something that I've already mentioned. If this program is not financially viable long term, it will do far more damage than good.

If the Alberta government decides that this isn't working for it, what exactly happens to these loans? Do we suddenly turn them over to a bank? The bank is not going to accept loans that don't actually bring any profit; they bring too much risk. These are exactly the kinds of things that got passed down in the United States when the subprime loans went through. When Alberta is in billions of dollars' worth of debt and can barely afford its own interest payments, it will be programs exactly like this that will be cut. In this economy we cannot afford to be reckless and thoughtless with commitments in legislation today for things that we will have to pay out some day in the future.

I truly believe that it is imperative that this bill and its implications be studied further to ensure that we protect the interests of both the Alberta government and its most vulnerable citizens. According to this bill we could affect up to 145,000 households.

I have questions regarding the personnel required to properly monitor and maintain this program. Has the minister fully laid out the costs and long-term commitments associated with this program?

It is large and complex. Who is eligible for grant versus loan? What will the interest rates be? The list goes on. This is a key piece of legislation. The minister should be able to clearly and concisely answer now. If she is so confident in this program, why are all the details of this bill to be decided later? Are we voting on a bill, or are we voting on an idealistic idea? They are two different things.

I am personally of the opinion that the bulk of the bill should not be created after the bill and that we should have gone to a standing committee, which would fully debate this legislation. As representatives of this province we have a duty to our constituents to do our due diligence and ensure the legislation that we are passing in this Legislature will be recognized to its fullest extent.

Now, we have heard already from one of my fellow members that this legislation has a range of costs, just for the loans themselves, of approximately $200 million to $5.8 billion. That's like throwing darts at a dartboard with a blindfold on and hoping that you hit it. The fact is that we start looking at what exactly we're going to need to help facilitate this program. I started to look at it, and I did a quick calculation. One loan per hour, eight per day, 40 per week, four weeks in a month, 11 months in a year: that works out to be 1,760 loans per year.

An Hon. Member: What happened to December?

Mr. MacIntyre: They're on holidays.

Mr. Cyr: We do give holidays in our government.

When we start even looking at the lowest one, which is 5,000 loans sent out, well, that's three employees. It doesn't seem like a lot, three employees. Then I went and I talked with a friend that's a loans officer, and she said: Scott, it takes a lot longer than an hour to get a loan done; loans officers normally get a loan done about 20 times a month. So when you start looking at 11 months, again, for that same employee at 20 loans per month, that's 220 loans for the year. That's 23 loans officers getting paid probably – I'm going to estimate – $80,000 a year. We're looking at $2 million just for the loans officers. We're not talking about the senior loans officers. We're not talking about the loans managers. We're not talking about the CEO that's probably going to need to be set up here. That's just for the loans officers: $2 million on the $200 million.

Now, if we look at the highest for the loans officers, that would be 660 that we would need. That's $53 million. Now, I understand and I agree that it's unlikely that every household is going to take a loan – that's unreasonable – but we've got a range now. We know probably what the minimum is going to be, and we know what the maximum is going to be.

This is where my next point comes in. Instead of just leaving this to luck and throwing at that dartboard with a blindfold on, maybe we should put some kind of a maximum on this so that we can protect the taxpayers from unlimited liability.

Finally, we've heard about the new loans program reducing the amounts that we provided under the grants program, and this will be about a $6 million reduction to that program. The problem is that we don't have a good price tag on the administration of this program, which has already gone through, on how much it will cost, on how it will be rolled out exactly. In the end, we have no plan. This, actually, with a rollout of July 1, seems very unreasonable for the scope of what we're trying to do.

Let's do our research on these bills and ensure that we can deliver on the promises that we make. Why would we want to let down the seniors like we let down the people that were looking for jobs? We came up with the wonderful $5,000 for every new employee. We told you that it wouldn't work. It didn't work because the plan just wasn't right. You didn't go to the right people to get the answers you needed. Had you done that, you would have found out. Now that's cancelled. Coincidentally, that was a $178 million program. Guess what? Two hundred million dollars is what we're bringing in now, potentially, as the minimum. Really, it's like we're just picking numbers out of the sky now and hoping that this works for our seniors.

I believe, like many of my colleagues, that really we need to find the support for those seniors in the households. The fact is that reducing the already existing funding means that we're probably going to end up with less. I know that for my own parents, when I had told them that the Alberta government was going to consider bringing out a home equity line program, the only thing they could say was: "Scott, why would I ever let the government put a lien on my house? Why would I ever let the government do that?"

Even if they needed that $40,000, they're going to be too terrified to allow our government to put a lien on it. Again, in the end, potentially, this has the ability to flop just like our wonderful jobs program. This could have been identified if you'd just sent this to the standing committee, which – guess what? – you didn't do. In the end, we're rushing things through the House.

The fact is, too, that we need to be doing a better job here because we continually put legislation through just too fast, and when it's time to actually do our job, it's hard to do it because it's too compressed a schedule. We get this legislation, and a week later it's implemented. That's just not enough time. By the time the opposition, all the opposition parties, have time to actually get through that bill, we've got three other bills right on its back. That tells me that, in the end, we're rushing things through. The government needs to slow down. In this case it especially needs to slow down when it comes to our seniors because if we get this wrong, our elderly pay for it, and that is your fault.

Now, I ask you to reconsider. I am asking you to send this to a standing committee. This is something that we cannot afford to get wrong.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak against Bill 5. Now, I'm not here to speak against the title of Bill 5 or the intent of Bill 5. I believe that Bill 5 is a very well-intentioned bill, trying to address a real problem and address a real social need, that lower and sometimes even medium-income seniors who own their homes sometimes have difficulty turning the capital asset of their home into cash to make renovations or do whatever they need to do. That is a real issue that the government is nobly trying to address. But the road to hell is paved with good intentions. The bill here is trying to address a real social need, to allow seniors to access the capital in their own homes to improve that property. Well, if we were just passing a bill of intent, if that was essentially a motion, I would support it. The problem is how the government goes about it.

Governments can do some things well and other things horribly. Governments can set broad policies and goals. They can set direction, strategic direction. Governments are almost always bad at specifically doing. That's why the minister doesn't personally manage doctors on the floor of the operating room. That is why the Minister of Justice doesn't personally manage cases of Crown prosecutors, the minister of social services does not direct the casework of social workers. It's the idea, the broad principle that government can set the direction, the goals of a department, but it should never be specifically directing the implementation of those policies. That is for experts to do.

The government is proposing here to create what amounts to a second government-owned bank in the province. The government is proposing to create a financial exposure to the balance sheet of this province of just under $6 billion if the eligible population were to take the government up to its maximum. That is a $6 billion exposure for the people of Alberta, with an exposure based on our seniors. We're now going to put liens on seniors' homes, where the taxpayer is responsible and where the government comes collecting.

But it's not even going to be managed by people who know what they're talking about. We're not talking about putting this in the hands of ATB, who have bankers, who can do credit checks, who actually are familiar with how banking and lending work. We're talking about running this through a department. This is insane. This is absolutely insane, to say that the bureaucrats in a department are capable of intricate financial management on a case-by-case basis. Alberta Treasury Board itself would be almost swamped by a task of this magnitude. If Alberta Treasury Board was responsible for administering this, Alberta Treasury Board would have to hire scores of new employees to manage this. It is ATB which is mostly independent and has experts in it who know what they're doing.

The same cannot be said of government department bureaucrats. Bureaucrats are meant to administer a program. Bureaucrats are meant to carry out the policy directions of the minister. They are not qualified to approve people for loans where their houses are on the line. This is grossly irresponsible in the name of trying to accomplish a positive social outcome, allowing seniors to access the capital in their homes.

I would propose to the minister that she should think about this and send this to a committee where we can hear from financial experts. Let's hear from Alberta Treasury Branches. Let's hear from other banks and credit unions in this province. If the minister was serious about properly administering a program for seniors to access the capital in their homes, they would alter the mandate of Alberta Treasury Branches. They would give Alberta Treasury Branches a political mandate to provide loans to seniors to access the capital in their homes if they're not able to obtain that capital through the private lending markets. They would allow the Alberta Treasury Branches to do this, experts who know what they're doing, who know how to manage risk, who are not going to make loans to people who might not be credit worthy, who might overleverage, who might not know how to conduct complicated financial matters.

We're talking about handing it to bureaucrats. This is grossly irresponsible. Now, I know that the minister is trying to accomplish something positive here. This is an act with a very good name, an act whose intentions I support and, I would chance to say, probably all members of the House support. But the mechanics of this bill are grossly irresponsible.

This will expose us to a potential subprime mortgage crisis in this province. We're talking about a $6 billion exposure to the taxpayer. We're talking about a $6 billion exposure, with loans made by people who don't know what they're doing; a $6 billion exposure made from a department, not an arm's-length agency; a $6 billion exposure from bureaucrats with a political mandate, not experts in the banking industry. We have to have people administer a program like this who know what they're doing, people who have experience making loans, people who have experience doing credit checks, understanding the creditworthiness of customers.

Are we saying that absolutely anybody can access this regardless of their past credit history? Is this now a true loan with risk management, or is this an entitlement program which anybody whatsoever can access even if they have a poor credit history? Well, those are very, very serious questions that need to be answered before we pass a bill that could expose the province's balance sheet to a liability of up to $6 billion. This is not a casual bill, members. This is a very serious bill that will have serious implications.

Now, this won't create a crisis overnight. This will set in over time. It'll probably be after the next election before the chickens come home to roost on this one. But if we are talking about a program where anyone can obtain a loan regardless of their history and the program is administered by bureaucrats without a proper financial background, who don't have the experience making loans, who don't know what the broader picture is going to be, as a bank does with its own balance sheets and lending ratios, we are setting ourselves up for a boondoggle here.

This is the problem with too many politicians. We get elected to play with other people's money like it was a casual toy. We are talking about passing a bill here with massive financial repercussions for this province, for the seniors we're proposing to lend money to, and also for the taxpayers, who will backstop this program. People want us to act responsibly with their money, and pushing a bill through here without even going to a proper committee to hear a single expert witness is being irresponsible with people's money. It is being irresponsible with seniors' money. It is being irresponsible with taxpayers' money. It is being irresponsible with the money of future taxpayers, who will be on the line to pay the unfunded liabilities of this if these loans end up going sour.

How many people here feel qualified to determine if someone is credit worthy? Who here? Not a single member of this Legislature is qualified to do a credit check on anybody. Not a single member of this Legislature has any qualification as to who should and who should not get loans and in what amount. This is not a lending program. This is a boondoggle in the making, Madam Chair. And, unfortunately, the best we're going to be able to do is say, "I told you so," when in four, five, 10 years we've got a balance sheet problem on our books because loans were not properly made. They were made by bureaucrats. They weren't made by financial experts.

We should at the very least ask people who know what they're doing at the Alberta Treasury Branches to come to a committee of this Legislature and testify as to who is best positioned to administer a program of this scale. Let's talk to economists. Let's talk to lenders, bankers, credit unions. Perhaps a better program would be to guarantee loans in the private sector, for private-sector banks and credit unions to make these loans rather than the government itself. I don't know. There are many different ways we can achieve this social outcome that the minister is trying to get to. Again, the minister's goals here are very noble and well intentioned and I think would enjoy the support of most members of this Legislature, but the way she's trying to do it is hugely irresponsible.

I don't want to just sit here and warn the minister and then six years from now have to say: I told you so. The minister should be here for the entire debate. The minister should answer questions from members of the opposition as to the administration of this program. This is not a casual bill to sweep through the House because it has a nice name. This is a serious bill, and the minister should answer serious questions about it, and she should answer as to how they will administer a bill that will expose the people of this province to a $6 billion liability without a single proper expert in place to administer it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to table an amendment to Bill 5. If I may speak a little bit as they pass this out, Madam Chair. This government doesn't seem to demonstrate that they understand how to consult prior to drafting a bill, but they have said that they will consult after the bills have been drafted. This amendment that I'm going to be providing to this government is to simply review certain sections of this bill in order to measure, to identify concerns, and to identify issues and problems within one year. These are standard things that people do when they create new rules and new regulations, especially when they affect so many and especially when it can fiscally impair this province.

With that, I now give the requisite number of copies of my second amendment, and I'll read it into the record as the pages distribute it. I move that Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, be amended by adding the following after section 12:

13 A committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of the operations of sections 2, 5, 7, 9 and 11 within one year of the coming into force of these sections and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within 6 months after beginning the review, a report that includes any recommendations for amendments to these sections by the committee.

Madam Chair, this amendment will require a review in one year, tabled by the committee in the Assembly, on the sections 2, 5, 7, 9, and 11. Section 2 is loans, 5 is grants, 7 is the right to cancel certain contracts, 9 is the effect of contract cancellation and responsibility of supplier, and 11 is regulations.

Madam Chair, it is absolutely critical that this legislation be reviewed properly to ensure that this major government program is operating in a way which is in the best interests of our seniors and of those who work to support them. I ask that the members would support this amendment to add this safeguard to Bill 5, to review and evaluate it as time goes on. This is a responsible, decent amendment. It would demonstrate from this government that they are truly providing some diligence in their haphazard development of their bills.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. I rise to speak against the amendment. I appreciate the hon. member's intent in bringing forward this amendment. I believe that what he's intending to do by that is to confirm that the government has ongoing oversight of this bill, and I certainly agree with that. It's a necessity for any government to, in an ongoing way, consider the effects and implementation of legislation, no matter what it happens to be.

That's exactly what we will do as a government with this piece of legislation and any legislation that we pass in this House. We will always have an ongoing monitoring of legislation. If indeed there seems to be a difficulty with functioning or outcomes, then we'll as a government take stock of those and take action to amend difficulties that may arise. But we do have full confidence in this legislation, that it will very positively affect the targeted seniors who live in their homes right now but may not have the savings to effect repairs and alterations to allow them to live in those homes longer. Therefore, I don't believe this amendment is necessary, and I would urge its defeat.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak this afternoon to the amendment of what we have reiterated over and over is an important piece of legislation. Obviously, the intent of this legislation is to ensure that seniors get the care that they need and the ability to stay in their home wherever possible.

What we had attempted to do this afternoon was to provide some additional checks and balances when it comes to this legislation and the need to review the legislation. While I can certainly appreciate the Member for Edmonton-McClung's comments about the government's commitment to review the effectiveness of a program, there are a number of questions that the opposition has raised that remain unanswered or cause significant concern, particularly for some members in the community of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, around this piece of legislation. Again, they certainly support the intention of a government that is respectful of our seniors but want to ensure that the program that's initiated actually is going to be a program that does that.

This amendment requires a review. The government chose not to send the bill to committee yesterday, which would have provided that review up front and would have provided some additional analysis to all members of the Assembly. That committee was going to need to report back before the end of May, so it wasn't like we had a reason or a desire to delay the bill. I know that the government is committed to getting the sweeping regulations in place by the 1st of July. That in itself is going to be a significant amount of work because so much of this bill is going to be in those regulations. This amendment here provides an opportunity in the future to review the legislation in committee, to see if it's going well.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung said that they promise to review it, but this House, this Chamber, the Assembly is larger than the government. I know that the government thinks they have all of the right answers all of the time and that they are going to continue to be right. The government has made a number of missteps, on some of which, as the Minister of Economic Development and Trade says, they've pivoted and gone in another direction, and hopefully that is going to be a better result for the province of Alberta. But one of the reasons why they've pivoted on those things is because issues or concerns have been highlighted by the Official Opposition. The Official Opposition, on a number of files, has done a good job of engaging Albertans to ensure that they are aware and familiar with what is happening here in the Assembly and, as a result, have spoken up and informed the government about some of those concerns.

So the government has pivoted, and this amendment requires the government to consider whether or not they need to pivot. It's not an amendment that would repeal the whole bill, although some in the Assembly would suggest that that might not be terrible. It's not an amendment that requires undue or uncalled-for red tape but that a committee of the Assembly provide a comprehensive review. These are the very sorts of things that we as members of this Assembly are here to do.

Just today in question period the hon. Minister of Justice tabled a list of legislation that has not been proclaimed. One begins to wonder how it's possible that legislation was passed through the Chamber but never actually became law or wasn't ever proclaimed at the time by Her Excellency or His Excellency, as the case may be. Some of that legislation is quite old. Sometimes that can happen when the Assembly introduces legislation that, as they find out during the consultation process, that should have been done before, that's happening after, has all sorts of different consequences or things they did not realize, so the legislation doesn't wind up being proclaimed in the end. These are all examples of when governments haven't been a hundred per cent correct.

What this amendment does – in a number of sections, including section 2, which discusses the loan; section 5 in the legislation, which discusses issues around the grant; section 7, which discusses issues around the right to cancel certain contracts; section 9, the effect of the contract cancellation and responsibility of suppliers; and a number of these sorts of things, it would have been very helpful if these would have been dealt with prior, particularly when it comes to contractors and suppliers and their ability to provide feedback into the legislation, into a very robust conversation around this piece of legislation.

Then, again, section 11, which has to do with the regulations: one of the reasons why that committee ought to review section 11 is because so much of this bill is going to be done in the confines of the minister's office. I know, as the representative of the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that they didn't ask me to come and provide sweeping powers to the cabinet but to do everything I could to ensure that the Assembly, the Legislature, the voice of the people are able to have input and feedback in as many areas of government as possible. When we consolidate power in the minister's office, the openness and the transparency of the government can come into question. We've seen that in other decisions that the government has been making. What used to be third-party, independent bodies are being brought into the confines of government, and the power and decision-making are being consolidated. That's one of the things that regulations do.

What this amendment provides is a real opportunity for a comprehensive review of the legislation and the regulations that this government is going to put into place with little to no consultation with the stakeholders. It allows us the opportunity to shine light onto whatever those regulations may or may not be in the future. So it is my strong recommendation that members of this Assembly support such a valuable amendment. If the program is going off the rails, light can be shed. If seniors are being taken advantage of, if there are contractors that aren't doing the right thing – unscrupulous, I think, is what I was heading towards there – then we will have the opportunity to review the legislation and have a robust discussion and make sure that this legislation is what's right for the province. More importantly than that, we can ensure that this legislation is what is right for our seniors because we've heard lots of concern and discussion from this side of the House about some of the potential risks. This would be an opportunity for us all to address some of those risks.

With that, Madam Chair, I'm happy to take my seat and encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak on amendment A3? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to my colleague's amendment requiring that a review be tabled once a year for Bill 5. You know, multiple times in this House we've heard members from across the way speak about how important it is to get it right. Albertans have been offered assurances over and over again that the government has their best interests at heart. Often, however, those assurances have fallen a little flat in the aftermath when it is discovered that there is not quite as much consultation as has been promised or has been claimed. Well, I believe all the members of this House can also attest to the fact that we have offered repeatedly to help the government get it right, and, yes, that's what we're doing here today, trying to help get this right.

Just recently the Member for Edmonton-McClung claimed we were intent on installing a practice in this House of referring pretty much every motion we can to committee. There's a reason for that. Often while in opposition the government also attempted to refer to committees. Often they accused the government of ramming through legislation. Often they accused the government of lack of consultation. We're all aware of how the vote went on our referral motion. We are, after all, still here debating.

At this point, however, I'm now going to the bones of this amendment. We're saying: "Okay; you're confident that this legislation is air tight. You're positive there's nothing that could go sideways, nothing that could go haywire, upside down on this particular bill. You're adamant that you've consulted extensively with stakeholders and individuals, and you're going to move forward come hell or high water." Okay. We get it. We understand that.

Now what we're suggesting – and it's a little thing, really, but a vitally important thing for good governance – is that the government task the legislative committee to review it once it's been rolled out. I don't understand what the harm could possibly be in that. Let's consider how such a review could play out. I'll give you three scenarios here.

Scenario 1: it's a success. Look, I'm even giving you the benefit of the doubt here. The committee reports back in a year, give or take a couple of months probably, and reports to the Assembly that everything is running remarkably well. The response has been great. The rollout goes smoothly. It's a complete success. In that event, everybody in the House is happy. Members opposite may gloat. We may applaud the government, pat them on the back, on its good work.

Scenario 2 is a bit of a hit and miss. Aspects have been rolled out that have gone smoothly while there have also been some bumps in the road. The committee reports back to the House and is able to relook at the legislation in order to improve it, to ensure it hits all the right points. We may have heard comments throughout that period, over the period of a year, that would tweak us to think that we could possibly make some changes to this bill that would improve it. What could possibly be wrong with that?

Scenario 3. Let's just say that it's a flop. I was giving the government the benefit of the doubt here a moment ago, so now I have to take it away to be fair. I won't go so far as to say that it's an epic fail, but it might be close. There's confusion, discontent. It's not properly utilized. Potentially the savings aren't there. Also, potentially it's a mess, with administration costs running away.

In any one of these three scenarios the committee reports to the Assembly, and a decision is made as to where to go from there. There are a few members opposite who know what I'm talking about because that's what happened with the previous government, and those same members before May 5, 2015, were quick to point out how they had warned and cautioned but that the government had done its own thing without listening first, which resulted in legislation having to be revised and repealed.

Contrary to popular belief, my colleagues and I are not trying to be difficult, believe it or not, and as I said earlier – we've said it, and you've heard it before – we're trying to help. We're trying to inject a bit of common sense into the process of all legislation that comes through this House. It's not unheard of. Federally bills are sent to committee all the time. This is part of the process, or at least it should be, and it would certainly be nice if it was part of the process of the Alberta Legislative Assembly.

Madam Chair, I'd like to share an analogy to make this clearer. When a person lands a new job, they're often put on probation for three to six months. The point of that probation is to ensure that things are working out, that the employee is settling into the role, learning the ropes, putting in the effort. At that point the employer gets a better idea of how good a fit the new hire is in the team and as part of the company. At the end of that time there is a review that happens, where everything is laid on the table, and employment decisions can be made for the future of the company. Why apply a different standard to legislation? If there's nothing to worry about, why be nervous about a review? The legislation will already be in place. It's simply a means of seeing and learning how things are working out. Furthermore, an in-depth review of legislation by members of this House could provide opportunities for better knowledge and understanding when crafting the next piece of legislation.

Let's not forget that this program is brand new. There is no similar program anywhere in Canada. It could well be that our sister provinces are looking at us to see how this works, how it goes, so let's show them. Let's use a formal review to get formal results that can be shared. As we've heard often from the members opposite, that's just good governance.

Madam Chair, I urge all members of this House to consider the benefits of this amendment, not only to improve this bill but for the benefit of good legislative practice in general, and to vote in favour, as I will be doing.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 5

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and move third reading of Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

I want to thank my colleagues on both sides of this House for raising important issues for a good debate on this valuable legislation. I want to thank my colleague the Member for Edmonton-McClung for his support and commitment to this bill and his hard work during this debate. The principle of this bill, Madam Speaker, as I have said before and as the Member for Edmonton-McClung has said during this debate, is our belief that many seniors simply wish to remain at home. I know there is broad support for the worthy principle that is underpinning this legislation.

I wholeheartedly agree with another colleague, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, who said during this debate that one of our prime responsibilities as legislators is to look after vulnerable seniors. The member, who is also a physician, talked during the debate about his years treating elderly patients who have suffered strokes or heart attacks or are battling cancer. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that many of these patients may spend long periods of time in hospital because their homes are not equipped for their current needs. Their homes need the repairs or adaptations that they will be able to get under this bill.

This bill helps our health system and our seniors, and it benefits our communities. Seniors are valued members of the community, and we want them to be able to stay at home and age in their communities. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud for sharing his understanding and giving us the benefit of his years of experience treating patients. This helps us to better understand that for seniors and for all of us home means independence, an increased sense of well-being, and greater quality of life.

This, of course, is not just about seniors who are sick or recovering from illness. Many seniors deal with the diminished physical capacity which is a result of aging. In those cases it would be tragic if a senior had to leave their home because a hallway to the bedroom was too narrow or because they couldn't afford to install a walk-in tub, but this is the situation many seniors face. To remain in their homes, they need to make repairs or adaptations.

One specific example of a senior needing home repair was a senior with thick shag carpet along the hallway. That shag carpet is difficult to navigate with a walker. A smooth flooring surface would make all the difference to this senior being able to navigate the hallway many times a day. Another senior is scared of falling as he carries a laundry hamper down a flight of stairs to the basement. The solution is simple: move the washer and dryer to the main floor for easy accessibility. It is these kinds of adaptations that can make the difference between staying at home and needing new accommodations. These are the kinds of projects that we will fund through the low-interest home equity loan proposed under this legislation.

A HomeEquity Bank and Ipsos research study in the news today surveyed 300 Canadian homeowners who said that they want to remain at home as they age. About 58 per cent of the respondents said that improvements to their homes would be necessary; 44 per cent said that they would need to make improvements to their kitchens or bathrooms to improve accessibility. The new program will also increase the options currently available for any reasonable repair or adaptation that assists the senior who chooses to remain in their home. Proposed adaptations or repairs that increase safety, mobility, independence, and health for seniors will be eligible.

The loan amount of $40,000 will cover the costs of most needed repairs or adaptations and strike a good balance between access to financial assistance and ensuring homeowners retain sufficient equity to repay the loan. For many seniors another monthly payment is not an option given fixed incomes and pensions. We will charge simple rather than compound interest against the loan, which will allow seniors to maintain more equity in their homes than when using general market products. Seniors will be able to borrow up to $40,000 without the burden of making monthly payments. The loan will be repaid upon the sale of the property or earlier if the senior chooses. The new program will include a grant component for low-income seniors who do not qualify for the loan.

We believe that many seniors will be interested in the program. Our projection is that as many as 145,000 senior households will be eligible.

We know that seniors need to be confident about the application process and entering into contracts for repairs or adaptations. As a colleague said, with the increasing use of fine print, some seniors may not be as financially literate as they once were or are not as confident about negotiating a financial arrangement. We want to protect these seniors. We have built consumer protection measures into this bill to ensure that seniors get the information they want and the protection they need. The application package will include the Service Alberta publication on consumer tips, home renovations. This publication provides important information about contracts and best practices to select a supplier and about getting comparative quotes from more than one business.

The bill includes provisions to protect consumers, including the following. The loan program will consider the reasonableness of the cost to the individual for the home repair, renovation, or adaptation as part of the loan approval process. Contractors will be required to advise the consumer that the loan program is available to eligible individuals and to advise the consumer of their cancellation rights if they are not eligible for the loan, the effect of a contract cancellation, the responsibility of the contractor to refund any money paid if a contract is cancelled, details about how contracts may be cancelled, and how the consumer may notify the contractor.

As well, the bill details the consumer's cancellation rights. A consumer may cancel a contract with no penalties or costs if the consumer applies to the program within 45 days of entering into a contract and if the consumer is not eligible for that loan. The consumer can cancel a contract within 30 days of being notified that they are ineligible for the loan. The consumer may waive cancellation rights, and the consumer removes cancellation rights if the consumer accepts delivery of goods or services outlined in the contract.

Albertans will have access to application forms and the information they need prior to the launch of the program on July 1. We will have staff ready to assist seniors and answer questions as we enact this new home repair/adaptation loan program. This program is an investment in our economy. It will spur economic activity for contractors, skilled workers, and suppliers. In our current difficult economic climate we will be saving $6 million while still supporting low-income seniors through the grant component of the new program.

Finally, this is, of course, a voluntary program. It will give seniors another option to make the repairs and improvements they need. Whether it's ripping out the shag carpet or moving the appliances upstairs, this program is designed to support seniors to remain in their communities. This bill supports Alberta seniors and addresses the needs of an aging population. As my colleague said, we are fulfilling our responsibility as legislators to help the most vulnerable segments of our population, and I thank all my colleagues for their support.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, it's fairly obvious that there are some members in this House that aren't willing to listen to reasoned debate and amendments, but have no fear; I have some information here. I think it's very important for us to have an overview of what the rest of Canada is doing in regard to the situation of providing seniors with assistance to stay in their homes longer, which I really do think is very important. I think there's obviously, you know, cause for the concern that we've highlighted here today. The government being in the business of banking should definitely cause us to pause and to think and to really, really bring in the experts to debate this, and I would still encourage you to do that.

Anyway, I'd just like to point out, as we go through, what other provinces are doing, that I've pulled up through my research here. This is certainly not an endorsement of any of their projects, but I would like to point out that no other province or territory in Canada has actually gotten into the business of being the lender.

British Columbia has a program called home adaptations for independence, HAFI. It provides financial assistance to eligible low-income seniors and people with disabilities to live in the comfort of their own homes. Renters and landlords can receive up to $20,000 per home in the form of a forgivable loan. There's no age requirement for this, but you or a member of your household must have a permanent disability or diminished ability. The adaptation is for your primary residence, and it includes limitations such as that your household assets are less than $100,000. These include your cash or bank balance, stocks, bonds, term deposits, mutual funds, business equity, land, real estate, or property holdings. These exclude RRSPs, RESPs, RDSPs, RRIFs, vehicles, and the home that you live in if you own it. It sets forth that the household income is within the housing income limit for your area, which also takes into account the household composition.

They also have a home renovation tax credit for seniors and persons with disabilities. It assists eligible individuals 65 and over and persons with disabilities with the cost of certain permanent home renovations to improve accessibility or to be more functional or mobile at home. This is maybe a little bit more similar to Alberta's RAMP program, which has been providing accessible upgrades here in Alberta in the form of a grant.

Now, Saskatchewan has the homeowner repair program. It provides financial assistance to help low-income homeowners make major repairs to their homes to meet the minimum health and safety standards. Eligible homeowners may receive up to $23,000, and the program is for all persons, seniors and otherwise.

Some highlights here. You must own and occupy the home as your primary residence, the household income and asset levels are at or below the established limits as determined by the Saskatchewan Housing Corporation, the repairs address health and safety needs, the repairs will extend the useful life of the property by 15 years, and the property is substandard or deficient and requires major repairs to at least one of the following areas: structural, electrical, plumbing, heating systems, or fire safety.

Another program that Saskatchewan has is the adaptation for independence program, AIP. It provides financial assistance to low-income homeowners or rental property owners to make a home more accessible for a person with a housing-related disability. Eligible homeowners and rental property owners may receive a forgivable loan of up to $23,000. It's available to rental property owners and homeowners if they rent the modified units to low-income households that include a person with a housing-related disability and maintain affordable rents based on Saskatchewan Housing Corporation's rent schedule for the term of the loan.

Manitoba has the Manitoba emergency repair program for homeowners. Homeowners with low incomes may be eligible for financial assistance for emergency repairs to their homes. Key facts: you're eligible if the house is in need of major repair, it's your primary residence, and it's located in Manitoba outside of First Nations communities.

There's also the homeowner renovation assistance program. Homeowners with low incomes may be eligible for financial assistance to repair or restore their home to a minimum level of health and safety. Up to $20,000 for eligible repairs may be available to qualified homeowners. If your home is located in a northern or remote community, you get a little bit more, up to $23,000 to qualified homeowners. Now, you're eligible if your house is in need of major repair, it's your primary residence, you're located in Manitoba outside of First Nations communities, the house is at least five years old, it's assessed at a value no higher than the current program limit, and your total gross household income is at or below the income set by Manitoba Housing for your community.

Ontario has the Ontario senior homeowners' property tax grant. This grant helps seniors with the cost of their property taxes. Those eligible could get up to $500 each year. Key requirements of this: you or your spouse or your common-law partner paid Ontario property taxes in the previous year, you meet the income requirements, as of December 31 of the previous year you're 65 years of age or older, you're resident in Ontario, and you own or occupy your principal residence.

Quebec has the residential adaptation assistance program. Persons with a disability where everyday activities in the home are limited may be eligible for the residential adaptation assistance program. The program grants financial assistance to homeowners for eligible work to adapt a dwelling to meet the disabled person's needs. The work must provide simple and economical solutions. The financial assistance is paid in the form of a grant, up to $16,000 per eligible person. In specific cases the Société d'habitation du Québec – I'm not great at French – may pay additional financial assistance up to $7,000 in cases . . .

An Hon. Member: Housing society.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you. Housing society.

. . . requiring specialized equipment. Additional assistance not exceeding $10,000 may also be paid based on certain criteria as set by the Quebec housing society. Key facts: you must reside in Quebec outside of a native reserve, and you must provide a report by an occupational therapist demonstrating that their impairment is significant and persistent and requires alterations to their home.

In Newfoundland and Labrador they have the provincial home repair program. It's designed to provide funding to assist homeowners with low income who require repairs to their homes to bring dwellings up to the minimum fire and life safety standards with improvements in basic heating, electrical, and plumbing services and for applicants who require accessibility changes. Funding is limited to the costs associated with repairs. The forgivable loan funding is available for homeowners up to a maximum of $5,000, $6,500 in Labrador, and for persons with accessibility needs, $7,500 in both Newfoundland and Labrador. Repairs exceeding these levels may be addressed under a repayable loan of up to $12,500 or $15,000 in Labrador. Key facts here: homeowners with low income, a household income of less than $33,000, who require repairs to their dwelling. There's a lifetime assistance cap at $12,500, and an application for a second project can be submitted after seven years have passed.

New Brunswick's federal-provincial repair program for homeowners in need of major repair or disabled accessible modifications assistance is in the form of a loan, a portion of which may not have to be repaid. The maximum forgivable loan for a housing unit is $10,000 for regular repairs and $10,000 for disabled accessible items. The amount of a forgivable loan is based upon a sliding income scale and the amount of required repairs. The loan amount is at the provincial borrowing interest rate and can be repaid over a period of 15 years.

One of the things that's interesting, Madam Speaker, about the current legislation that's being put forward – at least, it hasn't been made clear that there is any sort of requirement to actually submit the work to the program to receive the funding. This one actually addresses that.

In addition to that program in New Brunswick, households may be eligible for a forgivable loan for both disabled accessible modifications and other major repair items, structural and electrical, to a maximum of $20,000. Seniors are eligible for a forgivable loan for minor adaptations to facilitate independent living to a maximum of $3,500. And landlords are eligible for a forgivable loan for disabled modification to a maximum of $10,000. The eligibility in New Brunswick for this program: your household income must be below the established housing income limits, you must own the home and live in it, and you must require major repairs or lack basic facilities. Adaptations required for seniors must facilitate and prolong independent living.

Nova Scotia has a home adaptations for seniors' independence program. This program helps homeowners pay for home adaptations so that seniors with low incomes can stay in their homes independently for longer periods of time, and a one-time forgivable grant of up to $3,500 is available. To be eligible for this program, you must be of age 65 years or older, experience difficulty with daily activities due to your age, have a low annual household income, and be a permanent resident of the home that will undergo repair or adaptation.

P.E.I. has a seniors' home repair program. The program provides assistance to low- and moderate-income seniors to make necessary repairs to one of the major components of the physical structure; for example, the roof, the furnace, windows, doors. This program is not meant for cosmetic repairs or renovations. The program will contribute 50 per cent of the cost of eligible repairs to a maximum of $2,000. To be eligible for this program, repairs must be essential to the structure of the building as well as to health and safety, the applicant must be 60 years of age or older, and the combined income of the applicant and spouse must be less than $35,000 per year.

So right across this country there are many programs that other provinces have put in place to help seniors age in their homes. They are very diverse in nature, certainly a lot different than the one that's being proposed here today. There's a mixture of grants, tax credits, and loans. Primarily, the format of dispensing is through the grants, which has worked well in the past. In all circumstances the provinces primarily use forms of forgivable loans with very loose terms such as maintaining that structure as your permanent residence for an average of between two to five years, depending on the province. All of the loans are placed against the individual and not the property. Repayment options vary by province. Quite simply, no other province is getting into the business of placing caveats against our seniors' homes.

I would like to emphasize that my colleagues and I fully support seniors staying in their homes. During the election process my mother sat me down with her friends and a teapot and asked for some assurances on how this province is going to assist them as they go on. [interjections] Many unique things. And I hope to always be invited for tea. My mother herself is not as able as I hoped she would be at the age that she is, so there are things that we're going to need to be putting in my parents' home to assist them in their daily lives. Fortunately, my parents have been good fiscal conservatives over the years and will likely not need to access a loan program or a grant program or any of those.

Making sure that our seniors can live in their homes and live better lives for longer is extremely, extremely important to myself and to the members in the Wildrose Party. The quality of care and services for our seniors is certainly a priority. While I'm sure that this bill was brought with good intentions – I truly do. There is certainly a lack of access to capital for seniors. Actually, low income or not, the fact of the matter is that a retired person over the age of 65 is not bringing in a whole ton of cash and therefore has a hard time accessing loans for anything, quite frankly. I do really recognize that that's an issue that we need to address.

Again, my caution is for the government stepping in and being the banker. There's got to be a different way to do this, and you'd have less resistance if we could address that issue.

Anyway, I do have some data here that's been collected as to what other provinces are doing, you know, what's working and what's not. I urge you to take that into consideration if you, perhaps, may not have your minds fully made up on pushing through this piece of legislation. It's just something to consider.

With everything that comes through this House, I think it's really important that we're passing good, solid legislation, that we're not doing an oops later – we all probably have larger-than-life egos in this House – and I understand that that's hard to do. So let's get it right this time. Let's really do good for the seniors in this province and for the jobs that we were elected to do here in this House.

Thank you for listening to me. I hope it wasn't too dry.

An Hon. Member: Never.

Mrs. Pitt: Never. I'm losing my voice if you're that interested.

Anyway, please take this into consideration. Again, there are quite a few concerns with this bill, but I think this is something that we can work towards changing, really making a good piece of legislation that works here in the province and is something we can all be proud of. Certainly, I can assure you that if this is really, truly a good bill, you guys are going to look just great, and everybody's going to love you. So just consider that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up in support of Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. This is actually the first time during this debate that I am standing up.

As I've been listening to the debate over its various stages, like many people, I think of my grandparents. My grandparents on my mother's side are both alive and well and fairly deep into their 80s currently. I love them very much, as I'm sure you would imagine. I was thinking that many provisions of this bill are for them. As I was thinking of them as the debate went on, I feel that there are some very good parts of this bill as it would relate specifically to their situation. For example, my grandparents' house, which they have lived in since the early '50s, has a water softener in it, and recently that water softener had a catastrophic mechanical failure, and it needed to be replaced. Through the process of that, my grandparents were asking me about various salespeople that had come to their house to upgrade their water softener to a new, more energy-efficient unit or perhaps to fix their old one.

One of the provisions in the bill is about ensuring consumer protection measures to ensure that seniors know their rights when hiring contractors and cancelling their contracts. I think that's very important because, although my grandparents throughout their lives are still very sharp individuals in some ways, they don't have access to the Internet currently. They retired before personal computers were a thing. As a result, you know, they don't have access to online reviews such as the Better Business Bureau's. I do my best as a good grandson to help them out with that, but not all seniors may have family nearby to help with that. I'm thinking that that provision, in particular, about ensuring that seniors know their rights, would be very valuable to somebody in my grandparents' scenario.

Another thing is that when they speak of the home adaptations and renovations that this program would include, as I was listening to the hon. minister speak earlier, some of those my grandparents have already had a chance to do in their house. A perfect example of that is moving the laundry machines from the basement up onto the main floor of their house. They jokingly refer to it as slowly decommissioning their basement. At their age going up and down stairs is a bit of a slow process, more so than it used to be. They've also done things like installing walk-in tubs so my grandparents can have showers without stepping over the edge of the bathtub to have a shower or a bath. There's another one here. This could apply for roof replacement, which I know is something that my grandparents are thinking about as well. As you can imagine, their house is now a solid 60 years old, so that's important.

Now, another part of it is that there was a quote that came from the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton which basically says that research consistently shows that seniors prefer to age in their homes, so it is so critical that seniors are able to adapt and maintain their homes to meet their changing needs over time.

Madam Speaker, I couldn't agree more. I have this conversation with my grandparents all the time. My grandparents, like I said, are at a stage where they do need a little bit of help with their daily activities, and after looking at all the options, they decided that they wanted to continue to be a part of their community, the community that they've been a part of since that area of Calgary was first developed. They wanted to be with their friends. They wanted to go out and walk their dog. They wanted to be able to garden in their own backyard.

This program is to help those people like my grandparents do just that, which is why, Madam Speaker, I am going to be supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am, as always, honoured to rise, especially to speak about the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. Again, I'd like to say that the intention of this bill is exactly what I think all of us would like to see happen, but the bill has the potential to be wide-reaching, with perhaps a great deal of unintended consequences for our seniors and the taxpayer.

Seniors have worked hard their whole lives. Understanding that, when they reach their golden years, their families and friends and, yes, their province should be there for them. Certainly, I think there's a desire on all sides of this House to ensure that we do right by our seniors and to ensure that all can enjoy a high quality of life, especially in their own homes wherever possible. But when you look at a risky economic experiment, that does not seem to be the best way to go about attaining those goals.

I agree with many members of the Assembly who have suggested that we explore the viability of having a market mechanism to achieve the same ends, our banks. We are particularly unique in this province, having ATB Financial. And our local credit unions need to be involved in the discussion around a program such as this. I think that the government is underestimating what a complicated venture this has the potential to become in proposing that a banking type of operation can be set up within the bureaucracy.

The notion of simple interest is good. No monthly payments until a person moves, sells, or passes away sounds great. But once we get into the territory of government registering caveats against a senior's home, it introduces a great deal of complexity and potentially very significant long-term consequences. It's not really hard to imagine the complications arising around estates once the time comes for ownership to be transferred. And I would really hope that the government had considered how delays and bureaucratic wrangling could impact the executors of the will and the families of these seniors.

Meanwhile, on the other side, this bill could create potential for tens if not hundreds of millions of dollars of liability for the province of Alberta. We can't take that too lightly. Has the government given any consideration, Madam Speaker, to the need to build a whole other entire bureaucracy to administer this program? The minister says that it will be managed with existing resources. I would really, really appreciate having an explanation as to how that will work.

Aside from any unforeseen circumstances or complexities that this bill entails, I have some extremely serious concerns with the rollout of this legislation and the manner in which it has been presented in this House. There is much of this bill that remains to be seen, parts that have been buried in regulations, with the government asking us to trust them. This is not a good practice. Such core points of a bill of this magnitude have to be debated in the House, in the open. Madam Speaker, for example, it seems that the government will decide by regulation what repairs will qualify under the loan. What sorts of things will this entail, and what mechanism will the minister use to ensure that these requirements are being adhered to? This is a humongous responsibility.

Now, another part of this bill is the requirement to have work be approved by the minister and done in an approved manner. Again, this is massive. It seems to entail an even bigger, more complex government apparatus and bureaucracy. We need to understand how that's going to work. We're left without clarity on what would be approved, who would be approved to construct it, and what would constitute a reasonable project. We are assured that these, too, will come once the minister is given regulatory authority. Of course, the implication with such wide regulatory authority is also that whatever we are being promised today can just as easily be changed behind closed doors at any point down the road.

This is extremely well intentioned. All of us see that. We understand that. But the reality is that at a time when we can least afford it, I strongly encourage the government not to get caught passing a piece of legislation in a rushed or haphazard manner, not when it has the potential to add unforeseen costs and bureaucracy, that stand to worsen the growing problem of debt. More importantly, what we're all talking about here is dealing with seniors' care in housing. We owe it to them to do things right and to get it right the first time.

I strongly urge all members of this Assembly to vote against passing Bill 5 at this time. Let's take some time, let's bring some experts in, and let's talk about this and figure out what is best for our seniors. In my culture these are the gems of our society. These are the wisdom; these are the storytellers; these are the people that have impacted absolutely every aspect of my life personally and my children. The respect that is due to these people, the group of people that have built this province up, is much more than what is entailed in this bill. It's so much more. We owe that to them.

I urge every member of this Assembly to vote against this at this time. It may be that there are some interesting parts of this concept and there are aims that we all share, but it cannot proceed in its current format.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is a remarkable opportunity to speak to Bill 5 in support of the seniors' home adaptation and repair program. During such variable economic circumstances it is important to look to the value-added strategies that recognize the balance between economic sustainability, fiscal responsibility, and strong, sound governance. I believe that Bill 5 embraces this delicate stability.

Bill 5, or SHARP as it is commonly referred to, will provide our seniors the element of independence by assessing the equity in their homes to make structural modifications that support the comforts of the home that they are so fond of. This, in turn, allows them the peace of mind that accompanies the quality of life they so rightfully deserve. Independent living provides continuum, and that is an important aspect to our seniors. Continuum provides the reassurance of safety, that is important to everyone. Continuum allows family to attend to family needs in the atmosphere that resonates, home.

The SHARP program not only echoes continuum; it is viable in that it does not require monthly repayment to sustain it as the equity exists within the home. Up to $40,000 can be made available to provide our seniors with the safety mechanisms that ensure their well-being and their families the peace of mind that their parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents enjoy the ultimate comfort they deserve.

Madam Speaker, sound governance echoes in this bill. I applaud our government for recognizing this opportunity as it addresses housing concerns for our seniors as wins on many levels. Recognizing consumer protection to mitigate the advantage of our seniors is strong accountability. Providing the essence of home safety and the independence of our seniors is a priority for the great work they have accomplished to make Alberta the great province it is and always will be.

This initiative provides work in these challenging times for our Albertans. SHARP provides a housing market for our seniors, with adaptations that already meet needs. The SHARP program is an innovative way to stimulate our economy through measures of opportunity. Madam Speaker, I think we can all agree that this bill incorporates the fiscal responsibility that Albertans are waiting for.

We need to recognize that Bill 5 incorporates many advantages that support value-added objectives and aims to resolve on many levels. Many of our seniors have equity as well as fierce independence. This initiative allows the continuum of their self-sufficiency while addressing the needs and priorities of this invaluable demographic. Bill 5 provides seniors the opportunity to access this value to improve their home as well as their quality of life. This provides greater opportunity than what is currently available under the special needs assistance program.

SHARP is an investment geared to increasing accessibility as well as ensuring the structural integrity of property. When we invest in infrastructure on any level, we are investing wisely. When we invest in Albertans, we are empowering Albertans. Madam Speaker, I am confident that the seniors' home adaptation and repair program will evolve to ensure we are speaking to Albertans' needs, maintaining the integrity of their essence, and building strong foundations for future generations. This program looks to almost triple the eligibility of households compared to the current special needs assistance program, and that defines value-added.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, it's with the greatest respect that I rise to question the Member for Red Deer-

North in this regard. We've had some great conversations before and hopefully will afterwards. I also mean the greatest respect to the fabric and the foundation of the seniors of our province. They are the backbone of our province.

But to the member. She made a comment about investing in infrastructure, and I was wondering if she could further explain how she feels that the government involvement, the government investment in homes – because ultimately these homes will have to have a letter of credit applied to them for the government to allow these developments – could more properly adjudicate this than, possibly, a government backstop to a private institution that could do the same thing.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the comment and question. The proposed seniors' home adaptation and repair program will allow seniors to use their home equity to make modifications to remain in their homes and maintain their independence. More seniors will be eligible to access further funds to do a much broader scope of work than what was already available under the special needs assistance program.

The proposed Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act will include consumer protection measures to ensure seniors know their rights when hiring contractors and cancelling contracts. The seniors' home adaptation and repair program promotes effective and responsible governance. It is anticipated that the proposed program will save the government $6 million annually.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 5, at this point in third reading. As it currently stands, there are far too many unanswered questions about Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. It is, quite frankly, unacceptable for this or any other government to pass a bill which commits the government to a major financial lending scheme until we can actually see what the details of the program will be. We need details, we need facts, and we should have research done and reviews done before we get Alberta's taxpayers into the practice of providing home equity loans administered by a bureaucracy with no experience in doing so.

Madam Speaker, we would all be better served and better able to fully represent Alberta's seniors and our constituents if this bill had been sent to committee, where we could have heard from the experts in financial transactions, the contractors, the experts in renovations, and so on. We had a motion to refer it to committee, which would have allowed the government the time that is necessary to think about what the program will look like and come back to the House with actual concrete terms. Instead, we have this government that's going to push this bill through regardless of this lack of research and this lack of broad, province-wide consultation with the experts, including legal experts because there are going to be a number of legalities surrounding this.

Some Albertans are already reporting their concerns about this bill in the media. Simply, people are somewhat confused on whether or not this is a reverse mortgage. Some have asked that question. Is this a home equity loan? Some are familiar with that instrument at their banks. Some are raising concerns that the government will be getting into – we even heard this – predatory loan practices with our seniors. I mean, people are confused. They want answers to this. The committee process would have provided that kind of a forum where Albertans could have been more fully informed and have input into the finer details of this act.

While I am absolutely certain that it is not the case that the government is getting into something predatory, it's the type of problem that occurs when a lack of detail in legislation happens. One person said that she's afraid this will mean seniors will lose valuable equity in their home and face more difficult choices down the road. This is true.

Madam Speaker, it is incumbent upon the minister and this government to explain these things and why these details are not ironed out as we develop this piece of legislation. Albertans are already worried and with good reason given this government's record with regard to trust and consultation. It should not be adding to their concerns again with an untested program heretofore unseen in our country without allowing for a thorough study of its potential ramifications. According to the minister's own briefings and comments, a program like this has never been attempted before in Canada, and the minister needs to stop letting a manifesto govern policy choices. This bill apparently may make a loan available to up to 145,000 households, or 260,000 seniors, according to the government's estimates, and those not eligible for the loan may be eligible for a grant. That is a lot of people depending on a lot of mayes. They may be eligible for a grant; they may be eligible for the loan.

Madam Speaker, the eligibility and loan maximum in its extreme could lead to a whopping $5 billion maximum liability for the government. It's an unbudgeted liability and an unknown and heretofore unbudgeted administration cost. There is no subscriber limitation put on this. Therefore, staffing levels are unknown. Debt levels are unknown. There are far too many unknowns here to be going down this road in such an irresponsible management manner. This is governing by guess or by golly. This is not really government as it should be. There ought to be a larger focus on ensuring that we get this right and that we're not rushing ahead on a very sensitive piece of legislation. We need to have proper research to use as the foundation for deciding our next steps forward for our seniors, so it's important that we take time to hear from Alberta's seniors.

Of all things that I have a problem with in this bill, it is that element right there, that it didn't go to committee. Seniors were not invited to come to this place and to talk to everyone and to ask all of the questions that they ask and make the suggestions that they have. This is the group of people that built this province, and they know a thing or two about what they need, and they know a thing or two about business and about home loans. They are the experience in this province. I am quite certain they could have provided significant amounts of input into this bill's development.

Madam Speaker, we took some time to reach out, and we heard from seniors, seniors' organizations, some banks, some contractors about this new program. These people are also going to be affected by this bill if it's passed, and the one thing we heard is that they really feel like they deserve to be consulted. How about that? Bill 6 all over. This loan program, as of yet untested in Canada – we heard from my esteemed colleague about some of the other programs similar to this in other parts of the country, and if we're going to veer so far off the beaten path, we do really need more information about the potential consequences of a program like this. We need the minister and we need the government to give some reasonable responses to some of these issues.

Just like all Albertans, seniors are worried about their futures and the future of this province, and their families are worried as well. They're worried about legislation that hasn't been fully thought through, that could impact their future, the future of their children, their grandchildren, the future of the asset value, the value of their home, and on issues like these, in a matter of such importance, Wildrose believes that an efficient and compassionate government should be focusing on the most vulnerable in a very well thought through manner, and we just don't see that.

The government says that they think that there will be around 5,000 loans, I believe one of the other hon. members suggested. I understand that this is an estimate. The press release says that over 140,000 homes could qualify. This is a significant amount of money. As my colleagues have mentioned previously, it seems unlikely that the department is going to be able to administer this without adding increased staff, but we don't know because we don't know how many. There's no limit on the subscription to this. Given the stated goal of monitoring costs of these projects and the cost of administration and the cost of these loans, these are all great big unknowns, far too many expensive unknowns.

My colleagues asked for this bill to go to committee so that more of these details could be worked out. The government is not interested in doing that consistently. Madam Speaker, as my colleagues have clearly articulated, we do not believe government should be in the business of business. We just have too many questions at this point about the details to be supportive of this bill. So I encourage all hon. members that – unless this government is prepared to do some very serious research into this and allow for a more fulsome exploration of this bill, I cannot support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to finally get an opportunity to speak to Bill 5. I'm rising here to support Bill 5. I have over the past couple of days listened to the debates on both sides. You know, it's interesting. There are compelling points made on both sides of this argument. I've come down to the decision to support the bill on the principle that it is an opportunity to help seniors and one, I think, that we should take advantage of. It may not be perfect. I have many questions, as my hon. colleagues have raised those questions, but those questions do not concern me to the point where I would vote against it.

There are many other ways that seniors need help, one of those, of course, being help with daily living. This, of course, will not address those issues of income gaps or accessibility outside the home, those sorts of things, but it does address one of the very many important aspects of keeping seniors in their homes as long as possible and allowing people to age in place on their own terms, using their own equity and their own money. To me, it seems like a great example of a cost-effective program, allowing people to use the equity built up in their homes. Yes, there is some government expense to taxpayers, but it's minimal, and I have no grand concerns. The cost to administer that program, I think, is one that I do worry about. That's been spoken about at length by several people, hon. colleagues, in the House.

The regulations themselves are unclear. We have guidelines or indications from the minister about what those regulations will be, especially as they relate to asset limits. I have yet to hear a hard asset limit. If there has been one discussed, I haven't heard it, which doesn't mean it hasn't been discussed; it just means I haven't heard it. But what I would encourage the minister to do, if asset limits – of course, for seniors as well as many of us the most substantial asset we have is our house. A $500,000 house in a small town in Alberta is a very different thing than a $500,000 house in Edmonton or Calgary, and that's something I would certainly hope that the minister takes into account. Then, also, I really encourage open communication as the regulations are developed, as the program is rolled out. I know, again, that that's been talked about, and I trust that the minister will in fact do that.

You know, my friends in the Wildrose opposition talked about several of the groups that they've consulted with – and I trust they have – who have concerns and questions about this. I know we perhaps didn't get off on the best foot earlier this afternoon, my friends in the Wildrose and I, but I hope you'll consider, you know, that the Alberta Real Estate Association does support this bill.

In summary, what I'll say about the bill is that although I have concerns – and I won't enumerate those concerns at great length here as we are short on time – the upside of the bill, the benefits of the bill outweigh the risks and outweigh the downside, and in this case, given the importance of aging in place, given the importance of allowing seniors to choose their own path, I think that I'll give the government the benefit of the doubt on this. So I would encourage all members, even with the concerns and hesitations, to support the bill. It has important aspects, and I would encourage everyone in this House to support the bill. Let's try and let's find out if, in fact, this can become an effective program for seniors in Alberta.

With that, Madam Speaker, I thank you for the time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill?

Bill 6 Securities Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016.

On behalf of the Minister of Finance I would like to recap for members in this Chamber our government's approach to securities regulation as we have recently made our position quite clear. I would also take this opportunity to recap some of the key elements in this bill so that members are aware of the good work we are doing to carefully manage our capital markets right here in Alberta. Finally, I would like to briefly address some of the comments made yesterday during the excellent discussion on this bill.

As members of this Assembly know well, our government recently announced that we will continue to regulate our own capital markets right here in Alberta instead of joining the national securities regulator. We'll be sticking with the Alberta option, with our first-class provincial regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission. This decision was not taken lightly. We studied the issues carefully. We spoke with members of industry, with members of the financial sector, and, of course, with regulatory experts. After careful consideration we came to the conclusion that our unique capital markets, driven by the enormous needs of the resource sector, are best served by a street-level regulator. A regulator that knows the industry can provide local oversight right here in Alberta, not thousands of kilometres away on Bay Street.

This was the right decision. We are proud to be sticking with the Alberta option, and we are pleased that members of industry in Calgary and Edmonton and all across this province agree with us.

As our government moves forward with an Alberta-based regulator, I should also say a few words about the Alberta Securities Commission. Recently, after a decade of noble service, Bill Rice retired as chair and CEO of the Alberta Securities Commission. He was a champion for Alberta, a first-rate regulator, and a leading voice on the national stage. Replacing Bill Rice was no small challenge.

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member.

Hon. members, can you please keep the conversations down or take them outside. Thank you.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, replacing Bill Rice was no small challenge; however, I'm so very pleased that our government met that challenge. The incoming chair of the Alberta Securities Commission, Stan Magidson, is a veteran lawyer and an accomplished securities expert, and he has deep roots right here in Alberta. Stan is an excellent choice to lead the ASC as our government ensures that we have a robust framework for capital formation while ensuring strong investor protection.

On that note, Madam Speaker, let me now say a few words about the very important piece of legislation, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016. This bill codifies our government's commitment to ensuring that our capital markets are well regulated and done so within the framework of a provincially led regulator. As members of this Assembly are well aware, the securities landscape is rapidly evolving. We all know that it is becoming more complex, sophisticated, and international in scope every year, and it is being driven by remarkable technological advances. In this context our government and all members of this House have a job to do. Our job is to ensure that our system of securities regulation keeps pace. We must keep pace with evolving international standards and global regulator reform initiatives, and we must make use of the best technical expertise that is available to us. That is what this government has done.

As part of this government's commitment to effective oversight we have been working with our partner regulators in other provinces to create a more harmonized regulatory framework across the country. It is our belief that this harmonization approach will create market efficiencies while still respecting our decision to continue with a provincially led regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission. To be clear, as our government seeks to amend this act and as we continue with an Alberta-led regulator, we are driven by three key goals. They are effective investor protection, strong market integrity, and maintaining an effective system of capital formation.

Now, let me recap for members some of the more important items in the bill. First, the bill will update definitions of a derivative, reporting issuer, and security in section 1 of the act. Updating the definition of derivative will allow the Securities Commission to regulate hybrid products, those with characteristics of a security and a derivative, more effectively and on a harmonized basis across the country. This change, while it might appear small, is crucially important to ensuring effective regulation of new financial products. Updating the reporting issuer definition will eliminate a gap in section 2 of the act as the current definition is not necessarily complete, and updating the definition of a security will ensure that a security that is prescribed by rule to be a derivative is not also captured in the definition of a security. Madam Speaker, these are common-sense reforms to the Securities Act. They are supported by the Alberta Securities Commission, regulators across the country, and I sincerely hope by all members in this House.

Second, Madam Speaker, amendments to section 29 and 42 of the act will allow our regulator to act more quickly when there is risk of potentially illegal activity. Currently the Alberta Securities Commission is required to follow the Alberta Rules of Court notice requirements before a witness can be summoned to appear before a hearing or an investigative interview. While these rules are appropriate for civil matters, the 20-day notice requirements are just too slow when it comes to the rapid nature of our capital markets. Therefore, the Alberta Securities Commission has proposed a shorter 10-day notice period, and our government agrees. This change to the act is just one illustration of this government's serious commitment to investor protection.

Third, Madam Speaker, this legislation will amend the wording of the halt-trade provision in section 33. The halt-trade order is a new tool, another illustration of this government's commitment to investor protection. The halt-trade order allows the Alberta Securities Commission to quickly and temporarily halt trading in our capital markets. It is a quick-action mechanism that allows the Alberta Securities Commission to intervene in the market if it sees potential illegal or problematic activity. While we don't anticipate that this provision will be used frequently, giving the Alberta Securities Commission the best possible tools to regulate our markets is just good governance, and industry agrees.

Fourthly, Madam Speaker, the act proposes an amendment to section 42, which will allow a justice of the peace to issue search warrants rather than a Court of Queen's Bench judge. This will allow the Alberta Securities Commission to move more quickly and free up the courts so they can deal with other pressing matters. Once again, this thoughtful and measured amendment to the act is another illustration of our government's commitment to ensuring investor protection.

Fifth, Madam Speaker, the act will update regulations related to exchanges, self-regulatory organizations, trade repositories, and clearing agencies. These updates will make the provisions more consistent and easier to understand and are part of this government's commitment to keeping securities regulation current.

Sixth, Madam Speaker, as part of this government's mission to harmonize regulatory provisions across the country through our work with the Canadian Securities Administrators, we are proposing changes to part 17 of the act related to civil liability provisions. These changes are supported by regulators across the country, the Alberta Securities Commission, and by stakeholders.

Finally, Madam Speaker, this act will make amendments to the Lieutenant Governor in Council's regulation-making powers to assist Canada in meeting its G-20 commitments relating to the use and trading of derivatives. This is an excellent example of how we can work with other regulators across the country to meet national and international standards while maintaining a provincially led regulator right here in Alberta.

As I wrap up my remarks, Madam Speaker, I should say that we are on the right track. While I appreciate that some members opposite wanted this bill to be referred to further study, amendments to the Securities Act shouldn't have to wait. For example, I doubt you could find serious expert testimony that would suggest it was a bad idea to introduce a halt-trade order provision. My point is that experts have weighed in, the Alberta Securities Commission has weighed in, and our government has listened carefully to experts and industry.

The amendments to this act are reasonable, straightforward, and simply good governance. They deserve the support of all members of this House. Even Thomson Reuters, in a summary undertaken by their regulatory intelligence unit, highlighted the obvious. We are giving the Alberta Securities Commission new enforcement powers, and we are doing so reasonably. These reforms are important, Madam Speaker, as Thomson Reuters correctly points out that Alberta is the second largest capital market in the country, with roughly a third of all capital market activity. We simply have to get this right and continue to evolve as our capital markets evolve. I should add that this is commonplace, for us to amend the Securities Act. In fact, it is amended nearly every year.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I am proud that we are sticking with our provincial regulator in the Alberta Securities Commission, and I am also proud that we are taking practical, concrete steps to ensure that we have a first-class regulatory framework. Alberta is doing its part and more to ensure that we protect investors, and this government is ensuring that the Alberta spirit will continue to thrive with one of the world's most vibrant and efficient capital markets. It is in the interest of all Albertans that we adopt this bill.

I ask all members of this House to join me and support these critically important amendments to the Securities Act, and I would offer, Madam Speaker, that as our government continues with its thoughtful and measured approach to the governance of our capital markets, we are always ready to listen to good and new ideas. If members opposite have suggestions, we ask that they share them with us. We are willing to listen, and we will consider their ideas as we move into the future with an Alberta-led regulator.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and once again I ask for all members' support on this important bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to see the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is evolving to support capital markets as a principle.

I rise to speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016. The Wildrose recognizes the need for periodic administrative updates to legislation such as our Securities Act. We would have appreciated seeing the bill go to committee to ensure that members understand the legislation and to hear from the experts. It is important that the Alberta Securities Act provide a competitive advantage for our province while protecting our investors. This government has said that it will maintain Alberta's independent securities regulator, and the Wildrose caucus is very pleased to hear that.

At the same time we're also happy to see our securities rules harmonized with other provinces' where necessary. This is a positive step that will improve the interprovincial flow of capital. Harmonizing our securities rules with other provinces' while maintaining our independent control of our securities is important. Breaking down interprovincial trade barriers, whether we're engaging in commercial trade or trading in securities and derivatives, is sorely needed in this country.

This bill is a good example of what responsible government should do, one that legislates in response to market needs rather than trying to direct the market. I would hope that we see more legislation in that spirit.

We also appreciate that this bill streamlines the process for investigating shady trade deals. Specifically, amendments to sections 29 and 42 cut the 20-day waiting period in half so that there only needs to be a 10-day notice period before regulatory investigations can commence. Who here remembers Bernie Madoff? He wanted a few days to settle some accounts before the Ponzi scheme he was running collapsed. This reduction in days will help ensure that Alberta-based Madoffs of the future will get investigated sooner, before they can do more damage to investors.

We've also seen that the amendment to section 33.2(4) updates language surrounding halt-trade orders, allowing for flexibility around how long such an order can remain in effect by making it equivalent to an interim order. By amending section 42 of the existing act, this bill will align our securities process with current criminal law by allowing a justice of the peace to issue a search warrant in the event that it is needed.

Most importantly, the changes this bill introduces respond to the confusion in market trading surrounding hybrid securities and derivatives products. The bill updates definitions of securities and derivatives in order to reflect the complexity of products in the market today. It makes it possible to have hybrid derivatives that are not designated or prescribed as derivatives. Likewise, it allows certain hybrid securities that are not designated or prescribed as securities.

It is often a bit nerve-racking to have to decide on a technical piece of legislation for a Legislature like this. Thankfully, we have experts like those at the Alberta Securities Commission to look into all of these market products and protect consumers. It is incumbent upon us to provide the Alberta Securities Commission with the tools necessary to do its job. At Committee of the Whole I outlined some of the changes that people in the industry would like to see made in order to protect and, thereby, encourage investors. Perhaps the minister would kindly answer some questions and take those suggestions and come back with those changes in the fall or spring when we next update this bill.

I will close with this, Madam Speaker. Oversight is increased by having a regulator blocks away, not miles away.

Albertans are the ones... with the best understanding of our industry. Given that our capital markets are defined by [our unique] resource sector, it only makes sense to have a provincially led securities regulator who understands our province's unique needs.

Those were the words of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance on April 6 in the National Post. For once I agree with him.

I ask my colleagues in all parties to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 7 Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to speak about amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. The proposed amendments in Bill 7 would authorize the early appointment of an Electoral Boundaries Commission on or before October 31, 2016, which is earlier than currently allowed under the act, and clarify the commission's authority to consider recent information respecting populations not collected on a province-wide basis such as municipal population information. This information would be used along with the federal decennial census of population or more recent province-wide census.

As mentioned, the first proposed amendment would allow early appointment of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. The act's timelines for appointment of a commission are based on the assumption that general elections are held about every four years. The last election was held about a year earlier than anticipated. The current wording of the act provides that a commission will be "appointed during the first session of the Legislature following every 2nd general election after the appointment of the last Commission." However, if fewer than eight years have passed since the appointment of the last commission, the following commission is to be appointed "no sooner than 8 years" after that.

As the commission was last appointed in July 2009 and there have been two general elections since then, the earliest the commission could be appointed is eight years after that date. As such, with the current wording of the act a commission cannot be appointed earlier than July 2017 and must be appointed no later than July 2019. A commission needs to be appointed before July 2017 so that there is sufficient time for it to do its work, to make its recommendations to this House, and to allow candidates to prepare for the next election. It is anticipated that the next general election will be held between March 1 and May 31, 2019, as per the fixed election period set out in the Election Act. The Chief Electoral Officer recommends that the commission be appointed in the fall of 2016.

I will now explain why it's important to proceed with authorizing the early appointment of the commission from a legal perspective. The Charter right to vote includes a guarantee of effective representation. Currently Alberta has 87 electoral districts. The act says that the population of a proposed electoral division should be no more than 25 per cent above or below the average population proposed for electoral divisions. There is an exception for four special electoral divisions which have a population that is up to 50 per cent below the average population. This exception is intended to deal with situations where the riding is extremely or unreasonably large and certain other provisions laid out in the legislation. The 25 per cent deviation from average population is intended to be rare and not the norm. The early appointment of the commission will give it time to consider the population of the electoral divisions and protect that right.

With respect to the commission's use of population information, the second proposed amendment would clarify a current section of the act dealing with information that the commission must and may use when determining the population of Alberta. The act says that the commission must use the population information in the federal census carried out every 10 years, the decennial census. However, if there is a more recent province-wide census, such as one that's carried out every five years, the commission must use that population information. The act does not explicitly state that the commission may use population information which is collected not on a province-wide basis such as municipal population information censuses conducted by individual municipalities. The proposed amendment clarifies this authority but does not represent a change in policy. The last Electoral Boundaries Commission used municipal census data and found it helpful in their determinations.

Madam Speaker, these amendments are important to protecting Albertans' rights to effective representation, and I ask for support on these amendments.

At this time I would like to adjourn debate on this issue.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise, first of all, to say that I think we made incredible progress today, moving through a number of very important bills.

Seeing the time, I'm actually going to request unanimous consent from the House to adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow at the request of the opposition to give them the opportunity to prepare for tomorrow's budget.

[Unanimous consent granted; the Assembly adjourned at 5:50 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 14, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect. Today as we come together in this Chamber in this province of Alberta on Treaty 7 land, let us affirm our common commitment to enhance the lives of Albertans and to continue the pursuit of the common good. Let us embrace a culture of compassion and sharing, a culture that allows people to be true to themselves and to everyone else. Individuals who allow their inner authenticity to grow become sources of wisdom and agents of justice in our families and our communities. A compassionate society produces wise, creative citizens and leaders. A sharing society produces strength. Our strength is each other. Thank you.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Press Gallery Centennial

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to take a moment to briefly acknowledge that today is the 100th anniversary of the press gallery of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. I'm sure that many of the gallery's current and former members will be watching the proceedings keenly today. At another appropriate time soon, most probably next Monday, I will be making a further statement on this occasion.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a man who has contributed greatly to Alberta. Mr. George VanderBurg was elected as the MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne for three terms. He also served as minister of seniors and community supports, and Mr. VanderBurg was a highly respected whip for our PC caucus and a legislative mentor to me. My guest is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce a class of students from St. Augustine school in the town of Ponoka, in my constituency. I was pleased to take a photo with this group a little while ago. St. Augustine school provides a faith-based learning environment for Ponoka students and the area. I'm proud of Alberta for giving parents a choice in education. A choice in education is something that adds to the incredible richness and diversity of education in our province and something that I hope we will all continue to uphold. And I'm proud of my community for providing these kids with this great opportunity to learn under their awesome teachers.

I'd like them to stand as I read the names of the teachers and the parents that have come to help, and I'd like the school to stand after and receive a welcome. The teachers are Mr. Ken Hackett and Mrs. Sharon Hackett. The parent helpers are Mr. Romeo Mandanas, Mr. Brandon Bishop, Mrs. Leanne Dillon, Mrs. Crystal Fleck, Mr. and Mrs. Tagupa, Ms Julie Evans, Ms Nicola Hoag, Mrs. Trista Loughheed, Mrs. Nancy Giles, Ms Loanna Gulka, and Mr. Ken Kustiak. Students and teachers, please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other hon. members with school groups here today? Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests from St. Mary's University, Dr. Michael Duggan and Ms Debbie Osiowy. Dr. Duggan is an old friend of yours, Mr. Speaker, and a professor of religious studies and theology at St. Mary's University, located in the wonderful constituency of Calgary-Shaw. Debbie is a vice-president of business and finance at St. Mary's. They are seated in your gallery. I'd ask that they both rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Kim Unrau and Karen Popal from the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta – Edmonton Chapter, also known as LD Edmonton. Their vision is that individuals with learning disabilities and/or attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, commonly known as ADHD, are empowered to develop their potential, thereby enabling them to make positive contributions to citizens in their community. Karen Popal is the program co-ordinator at LD Edmonton, and she is the parent of two children with ADHD. Kim Unrau is the president of LD Edmonton and a registered psychologist in Alberta. Kim has been a volunteer with LD Edmonton for seven years and is an advocate for special-needs children. Many Albertans have learning disabilities. My youngest son, Wade, is among them, and I'm sincerely grateful to the association for their support in making a real difference in the lives of people like my son. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a couple of individuals that I've had the honour to be able to call close friends for over 30 years, which, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned yesterday, produced some interesting stories from the past that, I'll suggest, should stay in the past. They are long-time successful entrepreneurs here in the city of Edmonton and provide superior home automation products with second-to-none customer service, all delivered by their highly qualified and amazing staff at Shore 2 Shore Automation. I would now like to ask my closest friend, Darryl Shore, and his brother Jay Shore to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two leaders from my constituency. The first is Mrs. Pam Hansen, who hails from Bentley, in my constituency, but is also a trustee for the Wolf Creek public school board, taking care of schools both in Bentley and within Eckville, in my constituency. As I said, she's from Bentley. I don't know if you've had the pleasure of being there, but they call it the model town for a reason. With her today is Her Worship Rachele Peters, who has the honour of being the mayor of the village of Caroline. While not only being the home of Kurt Browning, it's also the gateway to some of the most spectacular country that this province has to offer. I would ask that both rise in this Assembly and receive the traditional warm welcome of my colleagues.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my friend Connor and his dad, Don Staus. Connor helped me get elected, and he was a former constituency assistant for the Rt. Hon. Stephen Harper back when pipelines were recognized as the lifelines for Albertans. Now, as someone who worked for the government, Connor took the advice of the minister seriously, and he's moving, not to B.C. to find work but to South Korea to teach English and experience a new culture. Don Staus, Connor's father, is the president and CEO of Carrick Petroleum, located in Calgary. Prior to that he built Culane Energy from scratch. I'm thankful to Don for creating jobs and wealth for this province. Don and oil workers like him are very proud of the contribution their companies make to Alberta's economy. Don, myself, and the rest of Alberta except those who voted for the Leap Manifesto hope that this government supports and approves pipelines so that Albertans can continue to reinvest back.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm waiting to see the individuals.

Mr. Panda: Sure.

I would like to ask Don and Connor Staus to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

1:40

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two good friends and distinguished guests, Lacombe Mayor Steve Christie and Ponoka Mayor Rick Bonnett.

Mayor Steve is a 21-year resident of Lacombe, a diehard community builder and volunteer. Steve is married to Cheryl, who is also my constituency assistant, and together they have two grown daughters and three granddaughters. Mayor Steve continues to strive for solutions that create a healthy, balanced Lacombe. Accountability and progress are key components in his eyes, but, most importantly, people are always the key element. Steve served for four years on the AUMA board and concluded his tenure as vice-president of cities up to 500,000. In this capacity he served on many provincial committees, notably the Premier's working group on the MGA review. Steve was first elected to council in 2004 and as mayor in 2010 and is currently serving his second term as mayor of Lacombe.

Mayor Rick was first elected to Ponoka town council in 2010. After serving a term as councillor, he ran for mayor in 2013. Get this: he won the mayoralty in Ponoka by one vote. For those of you who believe that your vote doesn't matter, in Ponoka it does. Mayor Rick is an advocate for regional communities, full of ideas about collaboration for municipalities.

I would like to ask Mayor Rick Bonnett and Mayor Steve Christie, two excellent mayors, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I say again: time is a valuable commodity in this place. We would urge you to have brevity in your introductions.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some guests from the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. First off, I'd like to introduce the mayor of Hanna, Chris Warwick, and his wonderful wife and local school trustee, Angela. Secondly, I'd like to introduce a fine young man from my area also, Stettler, Cody Borek, and his lovely wife, Eva, who were instrumental in putting together our recent AGM and social event. It was a great success thanks in no small part to their efforts. I ask that they all please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two distinguished guests. We have with us the hon. mayor of Grande Prairie, Bill Given. I always considered Grande Prairie my home city even though my hometown is Valleyview. It's a beautiful place to be, and I enjoy my time in Grande Prairie. Also with us today is the mayor of the town of Sexsmith, Claude Lagace. Sexsmith is located about 20 minutes north of Grande Prairie and is the home of Chautauqua Days, which is a great event that everyone should have a chance to enjoy. I ask that they both please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two of the most important municipal leaders in my constituency. I would ask that they please rise as I call their names. They are Bud Massey, reeve of Westlock county; and Bill Lee, reeve of the county of Barrhead. Together Bud and Bill represent over 14,000 residents. They are most concerned about municipal grant funding, particularly water, waste-water, and strategic transportation infrastructure programs. Bud and Bill will be sticking around to take in the Budget Address later today. I ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a man from my constituency who helped me extensively throughout my election period last year, Kelly Innocent. Kelly owns and runs a small welding company, Keltan Consulting Ltd., and employs hard-working Albertans. He works closely with the oil field and construction industries and is here today because he has a passion for his children's future and is looking forward to seeing what is contained in today's budget. He is seated in the members' gallery. Kelly, would you please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. My pleasure today to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly prominent members of the Edmonton Sikh community in the gallery. This week, as we know, we celebrated Vaisakhi in the Legislature rotunda, the 300-year anniversary of Khalsa. Guru Gobind Singh established Khalsa over 300 years ago, and the faith has grown throughout the years. The Liberal caucus congratulates the Sikh community on this holy celebration and encourages everyone to attend the Vaisakhi celebrations coming up in the Jubilee Auditorium on May 8 and the parade on May 22. I'll ask the members of the community to stand as I mention their names: Harjinder Singh Gill, Harpreet Singh Gill, Maghar Singh Ubhi, Gurcharan Singh Sangha, Baldev Singh Dhaliwal, Mehar Singh Gill, Sital Singh Nanuan, Karnail Singh Deol, Harjeet Sandhu, Last Bhinder, Jas Longowal, Charanjit Singh Dakha, and Amarjit Singh Grewal. Let us give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce Dave Truscott. He is a resident of Fort Saskatchewan.

The Speaker: My apologies, Member for Calgary-Mountain View. We'd lost time in some other earlier introductions, so I was trying to catch up. You have a second introduction.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm privileged to introduce two friends and colleagues, Dr. Avalon Roberts, a retired psychiatrist in Calgary, and Dr. Judy Johnson, a retired psychologist who taught for many years at Mount Royal University. Both are shrinks, basically. Avalon and Judy have distinguished careers, but I'll simply note here that they served for 15 years consecutively on Friends of Medicare. Dr. Johnson also happens to co-chair my board of directors, Calgary-Mountain View constituency. Please welcome my two friends, colleagues and shrinks.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will start again. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce Dave Truscott. He is the owner, reporter, and editor of the Sturgeon Creek Post in the wonderful constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville and located right in Fort Saskatchewan. It's my pleasure to introduce him. If he would please stand and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Does any other member have a guest to introduce today? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As always, I'm so honoured to introduce to you and through you Sherrie Cameron from Autism Speaks Canada. Sherrie started her working career and training in learning development management for Canada Post after receiving her certificate in adult education from the University of Alberta. For the past decade Sherrie has worked extensively and volunteered her time for the not-for-profit and charity arena, like Kids Help Phone, Ronald McDonald House, Breakfast Clubs of Canada, and KIDS.Now, to name a few. After her son was diagnosed with autism spectrum disorder three years ago, Sherrie wanted to put her career and background into charity work at Autism Speaks Canada. For the past two years Sherrie has led and managed the Alberta and Saskatchewan region for Autism Speaks Canada, an organization that focuses on awareness, advocacy, research, and family service granting for individuals and families living with autism. Sherrie currently lives in Edmonton with her husband and two children. Sherrie, would you please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, did I miss somebody? Go ahead.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly Al and Pamela Koenig, who are close friends and supporters here today to see if perhaps this budget contains, among other things, any mention of our urgently needed urgent care centre in Sylvan Lake. Will they please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: My apologies, Members, for missing people.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Cancer Care Wait Times

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, despite having the most expensive health system in this country, this government is again showing that they cannot get resources directed to patient care. Under the NDP we lag far behind the national average for cancer surgeries. Wait times in Alberta are often the worst in the country for prostate, colon, and breast cancer surgeries, and it is happening under this Health minister's watch. What is the minister doing to correct these failures of her department to support front-line care and to help those on a waiting list and suffering for months?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, longer wait times are not something that we'd like to see continue. It's vitally important that people receive the medical procedures that they need in a timely fashion, and that's one of the reasons why the people of Alberta dismissed the previous government, which was proposing nearly a billion-dollar cut for the Health budget. Certainly, ensuring that we have stable health care funding and ways that we can continue to move forward was a priority for us in the election platform, and it will continue to be in the term of this government.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the value this government gets for its growing health spending is dismal, but our broken system costs more than dollars and cents. On the ground it is the human cost that matters. It's the demoralized staff, frustrated communities, worried families, and ailing patients who are paying the price. The minister talks about the right professional in the right place at the right time, but for cancer sufferers the right time is apparently months from now. This is unacceptable and shameful. When will the minister stop the talk and start getting results?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, we ran on a platform of finding efficiencies in health care that will protect front-line services and improve patients' access, and that's why the people of Alberta elected a government that actually believes in public health care, and we'll continue to move in that direction. The stats that the member opposite is referring to talk about a number of years under a previous government and 16 weeks under this government. Certainly, 16 weeks isn't enough time to address many challenges that are created, but we're certainly working to get access to the front lines and increasing screenings. I'm very proud of the results we have in those areas.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, the NDP has bragged about their commitment to health care by spending more money. They boasted that they can run our centralized, top-heavy, broken, $20 billion system better than anyone by adding yet more layers of management. But while the minister loves to hear herself talk, the performance tells a different story. This government is proving itself incapable. Will the minister commit to real action by restoring local decision-making, enhancing accountability, peeling away the layers of top-down bureaucracy, and actually helping Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Only the Official Opposition thinks that the solution to long wait times is to slash billions of dollars from front-line care, to slash the opportunities that we've created through a centralized system, and to create more disorder by reorganizing, disorganizing, and unorganizing. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. It takes a lot more than just nuance and ideological spin in this House to find solutions – we're actually moving forward – and you'll hear about more of them in a few minutes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Construction

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government inherited a mess from the previous government, but the Auditor General was very clear in his report that the two current ministries of Education and Infrastructure do not have the internal capacity to work together to get the schools built. While the Minister of Education says that he's very proud of what they've done, in fact very little has been accomplished in the last 10 months. To the Minister of Education. Albertans expect to see shovels in the ground instead of signs on empty lots. How many schools will this government build this year and next year?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as we move through our constituencies, as all members in Alberta look through our province, we see that we literally have dozens of schools being built right now. We have 48 school projects that will be ready in September. It's very important to work through a process by which you can be more efficient. The Auditor General gave us a hand with being able to find those efficiencies, which is resulting in saving tens of millions of dollars so that we can build more schools, that we need even more.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Auditor General's report was clear that project management capacity is lacking in both ministries. They don't even have common policies and procedures in place. The Auditor General even included a school-building process model in his report to help this government, yet it seems that this government has decided to hire KPMG to gather information from school boards rather than build schools. Why is the minister spending money hiring KPMG to meet with school boards when that won't build schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the hon. member in opposition might not see how you actually organize these things, but you use different mechanisms by which you can build the schools. You know, I find it quite ironic that the same people that are looking for schools in their constituencies want us to cut billions of dollars out of those same schools.

Mr. Smith: Throwing good money after bad is a practice of the previous government and one which this government appears to be following. Having more meetings was not a recommendation of the Auditor General. This government has been in power for a year now, and they need to start showing some accountability. Why is the minister wasting time and money holding meetings and hiring managers to manage managers in this oversized government when Alberta families need schools now?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I've extended invitations for the first time, I think, in a long time where opposition can come and open some of the 48 schools that we're opening here in the fall. We have 232 school projects that we're moving ahead with even during difficult circumstances – you know why? – because we deserve the best to give to our children, and we expect that every step of the way, and that's what we're doing.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Job Creation

Mr. Panda: There was no doubt the government's failed job subsidy program was going to fail in the first place. It's a lesson that the NDP should listen more to the Wildrose, a party that truly has the pulse of the province. To blunt criticisms from his government's zero-jobs plan, the minister managed to find $10 million for important business incubators like TEC Edmonton and Innovate Calgary. How did the minister manage to increase the capital while Bill 1, the government's flagship jobs program, is gathering dust and sitting on the Order Paper?

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, get to the question sooner. I was waiting for it to come out.

Please proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: [interjections] Excuse me.

Sorry; proceed.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting in the House here. You never know with the Official Opposition if it's a cut day or a spend day. It depends on what they're talking about here.

I'll tell you this much, Mr. Speaker. Our government's number one priority – and Albertans have been telling us – is jobs and the economy. That's exactly what we're doing despite what the Wildrose would do, again, slashing our public services, cutting billions of dollars from much-needed infrastructure projects, infrastructure that is going to help give the tools that our job creators need to get their products to market and infrastructure that Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: It is stunning that while jobs were being shed across the province over a year ago, the NDP government sat on its hands, and their so-called jobs creation program failed and created confusion in the business community. This type of instability and uncertainty has dramatic impacts. Today vacancies in downtown Calgary have reached a 30-year high. With extreme economic manifestos hanging a shadow over this government, how can businesses trust this government to get their next program right?

Mr. Bilous: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the members of an announcement that I made a couple of days ago that we are investing $10 million in incubators and accelerators that are going to help job creators. We're going to help start-ups, working through already successful systems in Innovate Calgary and TEC Edmonton and other regional commercialization opportunities. Our government is taking action. Our government later today will be unveiling our budget, and Albertans will see that our government has listened to the job creators, and we're doing our job partnering with them.

Mr. Panda: Here is an example of the type of economic chaos the government has caused to working families. I received an e-mail from one of the few Calgary companies able to use this program and that was about to hire, expecting the grant. Now the staff position might soon be gone, and this business has been twisted like a pretzel in confusing red tape and chaos coming from this minister. How can Albertans trust the NDP when their flip-flopping is doing real harm to working Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm not quite sure if the Wildrose is coming or going. One day they like the job creation incentive program; the next day they want it cut. The only people that are confused in this province are those across the way. Our government is taking meaningful action. We've listened to the business community. They've said: listen, this tool isn't going to have the outcomes that you've intended. We've retooled that. We are listening to the job creators, and I think they are going to be quite pleased with what they hear today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Minister of Human Services

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were appalled this week by statements made in this Assembly by the Minister of Human Services. On Tuesday the minister called out the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for not disclosing his interest in adoption. Now, he later offered a sincere apology. Everyone can make a mistake. But on Wednesday the minister incorrectly identified the Member for Calgary-North West as the former minister of disabilities and blamed her for an egregious practice that was in fact introduced by the current government. These incidents call the minister's competence into question. To the Premier: what are you going to do about it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important to understand that our government is working very hard to improve the situation for people who receive services from PDD and also to ensure that while we do that, we work very carefully with those service providers to ensure that the work that is done allows those providers to continue to provide that support so that people don't ultimately find themselves without homes. Our minister has been working very carefully and very closely with those communities and with those service providers and with those clients . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-North West raised serious questions about the new – and I stress: new – disgusting practice to have PDD clients essentially put up for bid by service providers, and all the minister can do is quote from old e-mails and blame the past. But his knowledge of that past is incomplete and inaccurate. He doesn't even recognize that my colleague's past exemplary service within his own ministry never included responsibility for PDD. It is clear that he doesn't know his ministry, either what's happening now or what happened in the past. To the Premier: what are you going to do about it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I'm going to do and what the rest of this government is going to do is continue to reach out to support the Albertans who require the services. It may well be that the minister misspoke and identified the wrong minister. That happens. It is not in any way indicative of whether or not he is working very hard every day to ensure that people who receive PDD services get the care they need, and he will continue to do that.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's try another place that he misspoke. During the Calgary-Greenway by-election the NDP sent out a fundraising e-mail, which I will table, signed by the Human Services minister. That e-mail said, and I quote: people of Calgary-Greenway are fed up with broken promises and empty platitudes; they want an MLA who can actually get things done for them. Really? He says these shameful and disrespectful things about a man loved and respected in our province and beyond, a man that five months ago both the minister and the Premier stood in this Assembly and honoured. To the Premier: what do you have to say about that?

Ms Notley: What I have to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the member opposite is engaging in a great deal of exaggeration and creative thought to suggest that what was said means what he is suggesting. [interjection] No. He was talking forward, and I think that that is quite reasonable. That's what we did in the election, and that's what we did in the by-elections, and that's what we will do going forward. You know what? Many, many Albertans did not have their needs met under the former government, and that's why there is now a new one. [interjection]

Mr. Mason: You pretend that it is so you can make an issue.

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjection] Hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Small-business Tax

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are for the Premier. Small businesses, over 85 per cent of all Alberta businesses, are struggling in the current downturn. They don't need a handout, but they could use a level playing field and in these times a clear message that this government is not just about taxes. Other companies in other provinces have enjoyed investment tax credits, which allow new dollars invested in new enterprise to benefit and reduce taxes and later provide increased income to government through more successful businesses. To the Premier: why is your government opposed to significantly reducing small-business tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by thanking the member opposite for that question and, of course, acknowledging that it is quite true that small businesses and small-business owners contribute to the greatest number of jobs in Alberta, and it's important for us to be able to reach out to them and to work closely with them. So we're very excited about the details that will be forthcoming in the budget in just a short period of time, and I am hopeful that members of the small-business community will agree with us.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, small business in other provinces over many years has received investment tax credits. Why not Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important, just generally speaking, to remember that in Alberta we don't have a sales tax, and as a result of that, all members, all Albertans, including small-business owners, benefit from the fact that overall we continue to have the lowest tax regime in the country. That being said, on the specific issue raised by the member, I would suggest that he stay tuned.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I am eager to stay tuned.

Given that the government's incoming carbon tax will have a significant impact on small business, what plans does the government have to compensate small business?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, again, as I said, even when the levy is introduced, Alberta will still enjoy the lowest overall tax regime in the country. That won't change. But that being said, there are a number of ways in which we are going to work with small-business owners. We, of course, just reintroduced the STEP program, which the previous government had cut, and then expanded it to small-business owners. We will be moving forward on a number of other supports for small-business owners. Again, as I say, stay tuned.

Pipeline Construction

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, many of the organizations and constituents in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill rely on the oil and gas sector for work and for business, and in meeting with private citizens and companies who are stakeholders in the energy industry, I've heard how it's imperative that our government succeeds in getting new pipelines built. Our province's reliance on a single price and a single market for our energy products is having a negative impact, and my riding is feeling the brunt of the drop in oil prices. Can the Minister of Energy update the House on the work she's doing to get pipelines built?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this important question. I am very, very proud of the work we are doing as a government along with our Premier to get to yes to pipelines. We know that access to international markets is critically important, not just for Alberta but for Canada. We are now in a state where the United States was our biggest market; now they're our biggest competitor. We have to continue with the drama-free dialogues and get a pipeline case that is judged on its merit, not on politics. We also need everyone to work with us.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McPherson: Thank you. Thank you to the minister. Mr. Speaker, given the inability of previous governments to get pipelines built, again to the Minister of Energy: how is the minister working with her counterparts across the country to get pipelines approved?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We are doing a new approach. Past approaches of bullying people and being dramatic about it have not worked. We are taking a conscious approach to work with people, work with industry, work with constituents in a concerted effort to get to yes. This isn't just about Alberta; this is about Canada. This is about our economy and the Canadian economy.

The Speaker: Second supplemental question.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that pipelines will not only help my constituents and other Albertans get through this economic downturn but all Canadians as well, again to the same minister: how will a pipeline benefit our economy as a whole?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. We know that pipelines are the safest mode of transporting our product to market. We know that we lose a lot of money in Alberta, which stays in Alberta and that we could be using, because of the prices people have to pay, that companies have to pay for rail and other ways to get our product to market. We know there are benefits in pipelines. We know there are benefits to jobs here in Alberta and in Canada with the steelmakers, with our workers, and this is why we all need to work together to get to yes.

Human Trafficking

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, recently the Action Coalition on Human Trafficking, also known as ACT, identified that there has been a massive increase in the number of human trafficking cases reported in our province. In fact, the executive director for this coalition stated yesterday that she is seeing the average number of trafficked victims doubling every year. Can the Minister of Human Services explain his strategy to ensure Alberta's men, women, and children are not trafficked for the purposes of labour exploitation, sexual exploitation, or the removal of organs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, human trafficking is a serious issue that hits home for us all. Our government is committed to moving forward, working with our police partners, to ensure that the right information can flow from one organization to the other. ALERT is an organization that helps to bring all that policing information together so we can do intelligence-led policing. We will continue to move forward to fight this sort of crime.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this issue has received little attention in recent years, even as more and more Albertans are at risk, and considering that even one Albertan left to the heartbreaking fate of being a victim of human trafficking is one too many, will the minister tell this Assembly if his government is taking a strong stand for Albertans who may be vulnerable to human trafficking?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, this government is committed to protecting vulnerable Albertans, and I think it's a tragedy when any Albertan falls into human trafficking or into the clutches of any other groups that are trying to do these inappropriate things. You know, our government will continue to work with front-line services to ensure that these people have the protection that they need, and we will also continue to invest in front-line services to ensure that people don't become vulnerable to these sorts of groups.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the CBC article that came out yesterday could only cite conviction data from 2008 and that an up-to-date understanding of the situation is vital to our ability to tackle the problem of human trafficking in Alberta, does the minister have any current studies that she could share that would help organizations such as ACT and the members of this Assembly reach solutions to protect those who are at risk for human trafficking?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. With respect to the data that we keep, I'll obviously have to look into it and get back to the member, and I can report back on that issue. You know, in terms of this issue I think that the critical piece moving forward is to keep in mind that in addition to having the correct law enforcement measures in place, we need to continue to invest in front-line services, in human services, in health care and mental health care to ensure that people aren't vulnerable to these sorts of things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Service Delivery

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many people with disabilities don't have families to advocate for them. This means that their legal representation is crucial to ensuring that they get the quality and meaningful supports they need. When the Human Services ministry recently asked any PDD legal counsel who had worked with the previous government to recuse themselves, it sent service providers scrambling at the last minute for substitutes ahead of a much-needed meeting with the minister. To the Minister of Human Services. Forcing service providers to find alternate legal counsel before one of the few meetings you agreed to is more than a little mean-spirited. What were you . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. It's an important issue, and today my ministry legal team will be meeting with ACDS, which is the representative umbrella organization for 139 service providers, and they will work to deal with all issues relating to the procurement and the new contract.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that according to one family member of a person with disabilities what they've seen from the Human Services ministry isn't collaboration – it's petty bullying – and that if not for the resourcefulness of this community they would have had to cancel one of the very few meetings they had with you, can the Minister of Human Services tell us whether this shameful behaviour is what service providers and stakeholders can expect in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member refers to one particular incident. I would invite the member to send my office the details, and I will look into that issue.

The second thing. We took a collaborative approach. One example is PDD standard 8, that was slammed by the previous government onto service providers. We consulted with them, and we repealed those standards. We are working with them to make sure that we get this right.

Ms Jansen: And my last question . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a preamble? We're after question five. You were awfully lengthy before you got to the question, so when you use this one, please be more conscious of that.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Premier. Given that you stood with the disabled community on the steps of this Legislature in solidarity, how can you defend the devastating changes to PDD that your government made and that left countless Albertans feeling helpless and hopeless?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The allegations levelled against our government are not true. We are working with the community to resolve all issues. That includes PDD safety standards that were imposed on the community, that includes procurement, and that includes all issues that matter to that community. We will work in collaboration with them. We will not bully that community. We will work with them, and we want to work with them. I assure all Albertans that's our approach going forward, and we will stick with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Transportation Infrastructure Priorities

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents and those of neighbouring constituencies are grumbling about their increased commute time on highway 2 through St. Albert. Former Premier Stelmach did a deal to cover some of the costs and designated Ray Gibbon Drive on the west side of St. Albert as the future highway 2 freeway that will serve as the St. Albert bypass from south of Morinville to the Anthony Henday ring road. Can the minister tell the House where this entire project is on the secretive prioritized transportation sunshine list?

Mr. Mason: No, Mr. Speaker. I can't do that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have many construction companies that are looking for work yet, and we can get going on this construction.

Given that the current two-lane alignment of Ray Gibbon Drive from the Anthony Henday ring road to Villeneuve Road has already reached and exceeds the traffic counts required for twinning and whereas the minister has the power to break up giant projects into smaller pieces, can the minister advise the House of when this section of the future highway 2 will be twinned to accommodate the current and future volume of traffic?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have many competing priorities for transportation dollars in our capital plan. The capital plan will be presented to the House and to the public in just a very short time, and I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned. But I do want to indicate there are very many priorities and far less money than is needed to meet them all. That doesn't mean they're bad projects. It just means that there are other projects that are a higher priority.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans fear losing construction seasons from bad planning and delayed tenders and given that the construction industry is trying to get some sense of when the work is coming so they can better plan their labour and equipment and given that this government has promised billions in infrastructure spending on projects not unlike the twinning of Ray Gibbon Drive, can the minister account for the absence of a prioritized infrastructure sunshine list?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the sunshine list will be made available as part of the capital plan and will be released as part of the budget later this afternoon, so I can't make any further comment with respect to the member's question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Urgent Health Care in Sylvan Lake

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twenty thousand people live in the Sylvan Lake area, and over 900,000 tourists visit annually. A committee of health care professionals and area mayors proposed a Sylvan Lake urgent care facility to the minister. With an operating expense of only $2 million, it would have saved AHS well over that figure by diverting non life-threatening care away from Red Deer regional hospital. Those facts are clear. This business plan reduces patient trauma, reduces wait times, and saves money. What excuse does the minister have to give the mothers and fathers of Sylvan Lake for saying no to this common-sense proposal?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I haven't said no. I actually had a very productive meeting with the community last December. We continue to exchange materials and have follow-up conversations. Certainly, there is a desire to make sure that everyone gets the right care in the right place, and clearly Sylvan Lake is a very busy community and even busier during the summer months. We'll continue to look at the data that we have on the central zone, including communities like Sylvan Lake, and find the best way to meet the needs of the community.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, Mr. Speaker, that might be welcome news, but given the fact that this government has a proclivity for grand statements and words about review and the right things in the right place at the right time, which is a lot of rhetoric, the fine people of Sylvan Lake would like to ask the minister: when can they expect this desperately needed urgent care facility to open? These families deserve a firm timeline.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer yet another spend question. I imagine in about an hour we'll be hearing comments around deep cuts that should be seen in the budget.

Certainly, in terms of electing a government that's going to move forward in a reasonable, responsible, and sustainable way, that's what the people of Alberta elected, and that's what we're pleased to give them. That includes making sure that we have the right access. Certainly, the physicians that I've met with in the community as well as the mayor and other local advocates are looking at ways that we can use the existing infrastructure as well to increase capacity. I appreciate that everyone is turning their heads to that, and as I've said in the past, when I . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, Mr. Speaker, just to correct the hon. minister, that plan . . .

The Speaker: Ask the question, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: If I may ask the question, that plan, Mr. Speaker, was a cost-savings plan. Why didn't the minister just approve it? This minister has become very . . .

The Speaker: Is that your question, hon. member? Is that your question?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes. It's been nearly a year. When will this minister . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. You asked two questions, or I thought you did, at least, but you got it confused.
I'm going to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Ms Hoffman: Don't I get to answer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister would like to reply?

Ms Hoffman: If you'd like me to. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question that was asked around a cost-savings initiative: I know that the community worked very hard when the past government made an announcement about building a number of family care clinics that certainly didn't follow with the money. It created great confusion not just in Sylvan Lake but in many places across Alberta. Certainly, we're looking at ways that we can work with the community. I understand that there's a desire to increase expenditure in one area that may be offset in another. We're going to continue to consider their proposals and work in partnership as we move forward.

Services for Indigenous Peoples

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, the identity of potential foster parents is often considered an important factor in the placement of indigenous children. According to a StatsCan report released just yesterday, in western provinces Alberta had the lowest proportion, at just 29 per cent, of these children living with at least one indigenous foster parent. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what current initiatives are you undertaking in this government to increase the number of these children placed with at least one indigenous foster parent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. This ministry believes very fundamentally in the philosophy of indigenous children residing with indigenous foster parents, and as a result we've had many meetings with chiefs and councils from across the province to talk about the process of bringing foster parents up to speed so that they can take in children from their own communities.

Thank you.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, a lot of improvement to go from 29 per cent.

Given that today's Supreme Court ruling in Daniels versus Canada, that Métis and nonstatus Indians are indeed Indians, affirms federal responsibility for indigenous peoples and given that in the past Alberta filled the breach in providing requisite services with little or no help from the federal government, again to the minister: what will you do to ensure that Alberta receives its fair share of support from the federal government for continued provision of necessary programs and services for all indigenous people in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. Alberta is very proud to have been ahead of the curve on the issues that have been brought forward under the Daniels decision. We are the only province in the country who has settlement lands assigned for Métis people. We have signed recently the consultation agreement with the settlement people, and we are also looking at a consultation agreement with the nonsettlement people. We are ahead of this, we are working very hard, and we are going to be working with the federal government for tripartite arrangements.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, according to the most recent Human Services child intervention data there were over 72,000 people who received child intervention services in Alberta. Given that 34 per cent were indigenous, despite making up only 6.2 per cent of Alberta's population, what is the Human Services minister currently doing to decrease this number, and how will he ensure that he addresses the needs of indigenous peoples across Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the very important question. Certainly, our indigenous children are overrepresented in our system, and that's a cause for concern across Canada. Even this morning I spoke to my federal counterpart exactly around this issue. We are working with our indigenous partners, indigenous communities, and federal counterpart to make sure that we put in the right supports for the indigenous people so that we can decrease the number of people in our care.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Strategic Transportation Infrastructure Program

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After years of cutbacks by the previous government communities across the province are facing massive infrastructure deficits. Ensuring that our communities have strong and modern transportation networks and infrastructure is essential to the economic well-being of these communities. I've heard from many municipal councillors and leaders throughout my constituency who have told me how vital the transportation infrastructure program, or STIP, is to the future of their communities. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what are you doing to ensure that funding for this program is maintained?

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you please contain the length of the preamble.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. That was the first question, I think, Mr. Speaker.

I want to thank the hon. member for the question. Supporting rural communities and helping them build strong, resilient communities are key priorities of our government. The STIP program, the strategic transportation infrastructure program, will help to improve local and municipal transportation infrastructure that Albertans use every day. I announced in last year's budget that $100 million will be made available between 2017 and 2019 for this program. I ask the hon. member to stay tuned this afternoon.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that we need to ensure that programs like STIP, which are designed to help municipalities continue to meet the specific needs of these municipalities, again to the Minister of Infrastructure: have municipalities and counties had the opportunity to provide input on how this program is working?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I promised last fall, we've been gathering input from stakeholders, rural and smaller municipalities that STIP is designed to serve. In March, at the start of the AAMD and C we launched our STIP engagement process, and over the last month my ministry has held four workshop sessions, including one at AAMD and C, where 69 members were represented. I've personally been meeting with mayors and reeves with respect to this, and we're getting excellent feedback on how this program can meet the needs of rural municipalities.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities across the province are all facing similar challenges when it comes to the backlog of infrastructure projects, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that municipalities' specific infrastructure priorities are taken into account?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think that one of the key things about the STIP program is that it does provide capital funding to municipalities, who work on the priorities that they have for their community, for their citizens within the scope of the program. So we're glad to partner with those communities to invest in local priorities like roads, bridges, and small airports, and we've engaged with them, as I mentioned, to find ways to improve the program and to tailor it to the actual needs of rural municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Way back in 2014 the previous government promised a value scoping for Father Lacombe school for a much-needed modernization, but the school is still waiting. We heard from the Auditor General that ministers made promises without having adequate systems in place to deliver. Will this government do any better? So far, no. STAR Catholic's board was promised value scoping, but appointments have been cancelled multiple times by the current government. What will the minister do to correct the government's practice of leaping to promises without the leadership to deliver?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for his question. Well, I think the best example is the Auditor General's report with respect to school construction, which was something that was initiated by this government because we were concerned that we needed to strengthen our processes within our own departments, but we were also concerned that so many schools had been promised without adequate planning, without even land being in place in many cases. I think the Auditor General has shown that there were very serious deficiencies.

In answer to his question – are we going to continue to do that? – the answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: Glad to hear the answer. That's the right one.

Mr. Speaker, also given that Alberta Education confirmed this project in September, well after the current government took control of the helm, and given that it's just one example of failed initiatives, which include the failure to deliver that promised infrastructure sunshine list, the question again, from another person, I guess: when will the Minister of Infrastructure be able to finally produce that sunshine list to give clarity to infrastructure projects, both for STAR Catholic and communities across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, I think the answer is on the face of my watch with respect to that, but the member knows that I can't disclose what's in the budget. He's trying to get me into trouble.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, as long as the answer is actually in the documents that get presented.

Given that Father Lacombe school is 60 years old and that modernization has been a top priority for the board but they can't even get to the first step of assessment and given that it's been forced to create its annual capital plan while still uncertain of when modernization might be coming and as a result is struggling to provide properly for its students, will the minister commit to resolving this particular issue and establish a firm date for the value scoping of Father Lacombe school?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, thank you for the question. As part of the mechanism that we put in place with the Auditor General and better communication – what better communication is is to have individual MLAs give us some information about their schools and what they need. So I'd be glad to work with that to look for a mechanism by which we can scope that out. We let the school boards make those decisions about prioritizing where their money needs to go because they have the best eyes on the ground to see what their children need for the best education possible.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I was about to say that the Government House Leader does not need any help in terms of getting into trouble, but what is abundantly evident to the House today is that I, too, can do it alone.

The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Agricultural Trade with India

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just over two years ago the government signed a historic trade agreement with the state of Punjab in India. That agreement focuses on the agriculture industry, which is one of the major drivers of the Alberta economy. Growing this industry is integral to diversifying the provincial economy. To the minister of economic development: can you provide an update on the status of the agriculture working group that was formed with this trade deal as well as an update on your ministry's recent trade initiatives with the state of Punjab?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member and congratulate him on his first question in this House. I'll begin by saying that trade is very important to our government. Alberta is a resource- and trade-based economy, so we are working to strengthen our ties with all of our trading jurisdictions. India, of course, is one of our major trading partners, and our government is committed to looking for opportunities, especially within the agricultural sector, not only adding value to our product here at home but also looking for opportunities to increase trade and get our products to market.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that when the trade deal was signed, in January 2014, there was an average of $102 million worth of products and services exported from Alberta to India each year and given that this is a key portion of economic diversity, to the minister. As I mentioned, Alberta was exporting over $100 million worth of products and services two years ago. What is the expected export value for this year, and what is your government doing to grow that number?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I want to thank the member for the question, a very good question. There are a number of initiatives that our government is undertaking. Unfortunately, the member will have to wait about another 40 minutes to get more details.

But to his previous question: I don't have it off the top here as far as the status of the working group. I'm happy to get back to the member on the status of the working group and can assure this House that we are looking at growing our trade and our exports to markets like India.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the creation of the agriculture working group as well as the deal itself was intended to promote the sharing of ideas, skills, and the best practices and given that facilitating and maintaining this exchange are integral to the success of Alberta business on the world stage, to the minister: what current initiatives is your ministry working on today to facilitate the sharing of ideas, skills, and best practices with our partners in Punjab?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for his second supplemental. Again, not only is trade absolutely critical; we do need to work collaboratively with our trading partners and look at opportunities to enhance that. I know that the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry has this at the top of his priorities as far as looking for opportunities to support Alberta-based businesses in agriculture, agrifoods, and forestry, looking for opportunities to increase our trade and at all corners looking to decrease any type of inhibitors that are cutting down our trade. Again to the member's question: I will get an update on the working group . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Community Development

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this is National Volunteer Week, a time for all of us to thank all the hard-working Albertans who are fostering community capacity, reducing barriers, and promoting inclusivity in Alberta, to the Minister of Culture and Tourism: how is your ministry helping volunteer organizations and community groups in this vital work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. I was happy to attend an event and bring greetings on behalf of the government at a volunteer week celebration earlier this week. We know that Albertans value volunteerism and contribute thousands of hours each year to their communities. My ministry supports their efforts by distributing funding to community groups through programs like the CFEP and CIP grants. I'll also take this opportunity to thank every volunteer in Alberta for the amazing work that they do and the contribution they make.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, given that community organizations rely heavily on volunteers to provide vital services in their communities, especially during these challenging economic times, to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that Albertans continue to have accessible and comprehensive programming in their communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. I am proud of the work that my ministry does to promote keeping Albertans engaged in building their communities. We continue to provide funding to recreation facilities and programs, which help to keep our children healthy and active. Additionally, we continue to support museums, heritage sites across the province to ensure that Albertans have access to high-quality cultural experiences.

Thank you.

Dr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, given that developing relationships with one's constituency is critical to the democratic process and given that my constituents were very pleased to have had personally delivered CFEP and CIP cheques in Edmonton-Whitemud, is this a common practice for all MLAs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the member for the question. Along with my cabinet colleagues I'm working hard to make our government open, transparent, accessible, and this includes the grant cheque distribution. I was pleased to give all MLAs in this House, regardless of political party, the opportunity to distribute CFEP and CIP grants in recent quarters. I look forward to continuing this type of work of collaboration across parties. I have received a lot of positive feedback from members of the opposition, and I think it's a very good way to promote working collaboratively in this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 15 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Municipal Collaboration

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today in the House and speak about the collaborative relationship that we share with our municipal counterparts to develop our communities. As members of this Assembly we have a lot to learn from our municipal counterparts. Around the world municipalities are being recognized for their innovation and leadership on a wide variety of issues. Be it social or economic, municipalities are exploring cutting-edge solutions and developing innovative policies to help people. Most importantly, they are taking co-operative approaches in addressing socioeconomic challenges faced by families.

In my beautiful constituency of Spruce Grove-St. Albert we have many examples of co-operative spirit. All Spruce Grove-St. Albert municipalities are part of the Capital Region Board, a platform composed of 24 municipalities and representing 31 per cent of Alberta's population that tries to make the best decisions for the citizens of our communities and helps us grow our economy and standard of living together by working with Edmonton and area municipalities.

In Spruce Grove-St. Albert we also have the tri area, made up of Spruce Grove, Stony Plain, and Parkland county. Together these three communities strive to work together to address crime, build common community facilities like the tri leisure centre. This centre in particular opened in 2002 and strives to meet the recreational, social, and wellness needs of the tri-area communities and develop a sense of community spirit.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, municipalities are adept at coming together to work toward common goals, to compromise when it is needed, and, most importantly, to grow together as a society. Those of us in this Assembly have a lot to learn from our municipalities.

We can identify common goals and then take a unified approach to make them a reality and build a stronger community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Autism Spectrum Disorder

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on an issue very close to my heart. Autism spectrum disorder touches the families of 1 in 94 school-aged children in Alberta, and my family is one of those families. I remember the day that my beautiful blue-eyed boy was placed into my arms. He was sweet, affectionate, fully aware, and was our gift to our older son. For nine months he developed fairly consistently with our other son and was making sounds and starting to call us by our names. Music to any parents' ears. Then one day he disappeared. His eyes, that once lit up when he saw me, suddenly would not focus on my face, and his mind was trapped somewhere deep inside.

Autism spectrum disorder is a neurological condition that is characterized by repetitive, rigid behaviours and lifelong impairments in communication and social relationships. Anyone in this House who has encountered one of the over 515,000 people living with autism spectrum disorder in Canada knows that it is these initial challenges that make a breakthrough with any one of these children beautiful and precious. Because of early intervention and because of the amazing support that we received, we pulled Sehran back from autism. He is now 17 and a half and will graduate from high school in May.

Upon graduation my son Sehran will face a new challenge, the support cliff resulting from a less-systemized and less-generous support system available for adults with neurodevelopmental disabilities. As my son struggles to find his place in a PDD program that was not designed to see him have true independence, I will continue to cherish breakthroughs and advocate for his needs.

Globally 80 per cent of those with autism are not in the workforce. These beautiful minds need to be nurtured, their potential unlocked and not squandered. I ask that the members of this House work diligently to provide my son and other members of this vulnerable group with the care, consideration, and protection of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have an opportunity to rise and speak on an issue top of mind for most Albertans, of course, the impending budget and our children's economic future. In the last while Albertans have been bombarded with economic notions and posturing from all sides of the political spectrum. One side would have us borrow $10.4 billion with no clear plan nor timeline for balance or repayment. The other side would have us cut 2,000 jobs from the civil service in the name of austerity while saying that this won't impact front-line services for Albertans. The PC Party would engage Albertans, hoping to listen better this time and undo the distrust over decades of financial mismanagement. Albertans deserve better than these ideological platitudes. The serious issues facing us transcend easy labels of left, right, or centre.

Our health care system is the most expensive in the country, with mediocre results, including today's report on growing cancer wait times. We know how to save millions in health care. We need leaders that will shift to prevention and make the changes needed in our primary care system.

Our power grid has been overbuilt, subsidized by oil royalties and ignorance of the different energy futures that we need. It will soon cost businesses and all of us far more in power than we've paid in decades.

Many years of promises to diversify our economy have resulted in naught. The lowest tax regime in the country didn't create the businesses that would sustain our economy through an oil crash, nor did the subsidies to some of the largest corporations in the world, whose profits went elsewhere.

Albertans don't need their government to hold their ideologies with both hands. Albertans need leadership, and they need us here in the Chamber to listen to them and debate thoughtful, evidence-based solutions that stimulate small business and advance our postsecondary education and training programs.

It's my fondest hope that today's budget will offer Albertans not another subtle reorganization of priorities based on ideology but real hope for all, including our First Nations, and a good way forward. My hope is that we in our collective will in this House will demonstrate vision of who we are becoming in our diverse and potential society, compassionate and secure, and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government Policies

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For months now the opposition has been fond of accusing us of engaging in risky ideological experiments. Now the Oxford dictionary defines ideology as "a system of ideas and ideals, especially one which forms the basis of economic or political theory and policy," or "visionary speculation, especially of an unrealistic or idealistic nature." Since we're all here to defend our political and economic ideas and ideals, I assume the opposition is referring to the latter. On that point, I dare say, they're hardly immune.

Risky ideology is believing you can instantly cut billions of dollars from public services and not affect front-line workers. Risky ideology is blindly insisting, despite clear examples like Kansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, that slashing taxes always increases revenues and promotes growth. Risky ideology is wanting those cuts so badly that social issues aren't even on your radar. Risky ideology is questioning, in the face of 97 per cent of publishing scientists, the pressing reality of man-made climate change. Risky ideology is believing that a growing province could afford to adopt an experimental flat tax and depend on volatile royalty revenues to fund essential public services. Risky ideology is believing that you can run on deficits when oil was $100 a barrel but must be austere when it's less than $40. Risky ideology is saying little on LGBTQ rights because maintaining your base is more important than the safety of children in our schools. And risky ideology is insisting that anyone who doesn't embrace your own extreme views is some kind of red menace out to destroy our province.

Mr. Speaker, I was elected by the people of Edmonton-Centre to stand against these sorts of risky ideas. This afternoon we will table a budget based on compassion and common sense, a budget that will help create jobs, build and repair public infrastructure and affordable housing, and help all Albertans cope with the effects of the historic drop in the price of oil. And that is an ideology I can believe in.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Greater Forest Lawn 55+ Society

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a hard act to follow.

I rise today to recognize an amazing organization serving my constituents of Calgary-East, the Greater Forest Lawn 55+ Society. Recently I had the privilege of attending the society's 40th anniversary celebration. I was resoundingly teased, being the new kid on the block, and was mostly asked to relay messages to the hon. Minister of Finance, who has worked with this exceptional organization for years in his role as city councillor. It was a wonderful event, filled with good food, friends, and lots of laughs.

It's no surprise that the Greater Forest Lawn 55+ Society has been around for 40 years. Their membership fees are only $5 a year, which is a pretty incredible deal considering the wide range of activities they offer. Carpet bowling, square dancing, bingo, crib, bridge, Zumba, Saturday night dances, and Wednesday lunches are only a few examples. They also provide a wide range of valuable services: snow clearing, lawn maintenance, good food boxes, and the memory plus program for seniors with dementia.

I have neighbours on my street who take advantage of the lawn services, and I can say from experience that they do an amazing job. They're working hard to help keep these seniors in their homes longer.

The society was recently able to secure funding to replace their old sign with a new electronic sign, which has been an exciting addition as they can now advertise all of the amazing activities they offer without risking anyone falling off a ladder.

It's important to note that almost all of these activities and services are run by volunteers. I think that's appropriate, considering it is volunteer week here in Alberta. They do this valuable work to create a sense of community, a place where everyone feels welcome. They want seniors to be engaged in the community and to not be isolated. Their goal is to keep members young, active, and as independent as possible, and from what I saw at the 40th anniversary, they're easily meeting that goal.

I'm looking forward to joining the club when I turn 55, which is a ways off, but based on their past success, I have no doubt that they will be waiting for me when I get there.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Registry Service Renewal Reminders

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently this government announced it is switching to electronic reminders for registration, licence, and ID card renewals in an effort to save money. While this government certainly needs to start finding ways to save money, I'm concerned that it hasn't properly balanced savings with the priorities in this case.

Specifically, I'm concerned with the impact this change will have on the vulnerable seniors and rural Albertans that don't have access to Internet, let alone e-mail. Several constituents and their families have contacted my office with these concerns. I humbly suggest that the minister reconsider the government's position with respect to seniors and rural Albertans as Internet service is simply not reliable or readily available in all rural areas.

While the federal government's most recent budget left much to be desired – and maybe today's will, too; who knows? – it did include $500 million for investment to further expand and enhance high-speed Internet infrastructure in rural and remote communities. I urge the provincial government to take advantage of this program so that more Albertans can access the Internet and savings and measures like this can have a universally positive effect.

In the meantime, the NDP government should extend the grace period beyond one year for those vulnerable seniors and rural Albertans without Internet access so they're not left behind. It's only fair.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

The proposed bill covers amendments in several different areas, including the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, and several tax statutes. These amendments will provide flexibility to address current economic and fiscal challenges, and they will also protect the integrity of our provincial tax system and provide for greater clarity and consistency in our financial legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to table with you a copy of the spring 2016 main budget estimates schedule.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from a concerned Albertan, the mother of a daughter with cerebral palsy, a caregiver as well to another individual with FASD, expressing her concern over the procurement plan – actually, concern is a mild word – with the policy and the treatment from Human Services. I have five copies here to present to you right now.

As well, my second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of a post-mortem on B.C.'s experience moving to their procurement policy. It is what I like to call a cautionary tale. It would have been nice if our government had actually read through it before they decided to go ahead with procurement, but better late than never. I'm tabling five copies.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Mr. Sabir, Minister of Human Services, an e-mail message dated April 6, 2016, from Ann Nicol, chief executive officer, Alberta Council of Disability Services, to hon. Mr. Sabir, Minister of Human Services, confirming a meeting regarding the new disability services contract, relating to comments made by hon. Mr. Sabir during Oral Question Period on April 13, 2016.

The Speaker: In order to allow adequate time to prepare for the Budget Address by the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance this afternoon, this House is recessed until 3:15.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:59 p.m. to 3:15 p.m.]

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! All rise, please.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the offices of the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province of Alberta for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the government for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Government Motions

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2016-17 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2016-17 government estimates. In addition, I also wish to table the 2016-19 government of Alberta strategic plan and the Budget 2016 ministry business plans.

Budget Address

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the government's Budget 2016 fiscal plan and move Government Motion 13.

I am pleased to present Budget 2016, the Alberta jobs plan. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta jobs plan supports families in a tough economy. The Alberta jobs plan protects health care, education, and the vital public services that Albertans count on. And, above all, the Alberta jobs plan diversifies Alberta's economy and creates thousands of jobs. In short, the Alberta jobs plan moves Alberta forward.

Let me begin today by expressing my thanks to the thousands upon thousands of Albertans who contributed to the plan. In telephone town halls, at public meetings, in homes, workplaces, and chance encounters on the street Albertans from every walk of life in every part of the province offered me, the Premier, and our government their views on the priorities we should set. I am extremely grateful for their thoughtful input. One thing was crystal clear in everything we heard: though the collapse in oil prices has shocked our economy, it has not shaken our spirit. Hope, optimism, and an abiding faith in a better tomorrow are in our DNA. They are how this province was built. So, too, is our deep commitment to the communities we call home.

Alberta is made up of people from every part of the globe pursuing their dreams as only we can in a province blessed by an abundance of natural resources, talent, and entrepreneurial spirit. We share common ambitions for a future in which we all participate as full citizens and equal partners. As the throne speech said, in Alberta "we always pull together." Mr. Speaker, these are the values, the bedrock values, upon which the Alberta jobs plan is built, and these are the values that will get us through the collapse in oil prices and lay the foundation for a more resilient, more diversified, and more prosperous economy.

Mr. Speaker, we are at a critical moment in Alberta's history. In the past year and a half the price of oil has dropped by over two-thirds, from a peak of more than $105 per barrel in the summer of 2014 to less than $30 in January. In Alberta we're used to volatile oil markets, but this price bust is the most dramatic in generations. It is causing tremendous economic pain and anxiety. I see that every day in letters that arrive in my office and in the concerns brought to me by my constituents. Many Albertans are hurting. Unemployment has risen dramatically, peaking at 7.9 per cent this year, and revenues to government have fallen off a cliff. In 2013-14 the province booked almost $10 billion in nonrenewable resource revenue. This year we are forecasting an almost 90 per cent drop to $1.4 billion, less revenue than we've seen in 40 years. Dollar for dollar lower royalties mean there will be a higher deficit, and revenues from other taxes will be lower as well.

Mr. Speaker, the oil price shock has produced a deficit of $10.4 billion in this year's budget. To account for the extreme volatility of oil prices, particularly in the last year, the deficit includes a $700 million risk adjustment. Faced with the collapse in prices for our most valuable commodity, Albertans are confronted with a choice that will have profound consequences for generations to come. When oil prices fell in the past, Alberta governments responded by making reckless and extreme cuts to public services, firing thousands of teachers and nurses, cutting supports for seniors, and abandoning the most vulnerable. Some say that we should turn the clock back and do the same thing today, but on this side of the Legislature we fundamentally disagree. On this side of the Legislature we are standing with Albertans because Albertans told us how detrimental the slash-and-burn approach would be for our economy and our society. It would only cause more pain and economic anxiety, tearing at the fabric of our communities and making a difficult situation even worse.

Mr. Speaker, that's why our government is taking a different approach, a better approach. We are thoughtfully and carefully reducing the cost of government while protecting the public services we all count on. Let me provide you with a few examples. Instead of extreme cuts, our government is amalgamating or dissolving 26 agencies, boards, and commissions, saving approximately $33 million over three years. Instead of slashing public services, our government is reducing budgets for salaries and supplies in government departments by nearly 2 per cent this year, saving $121 million. Instead of taking a panicked approach, our government is deferring some of our platform commitments, slowing down the rollout, and reallocating savings to where they are needed most, and we are streamlining programs such as Alberta Innovates and community partnership grants and suspending payments to the access to the future fund.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to these careful measures to bring down the cost of government, we are also taking action to control costs in the public sector. We have frozen management salaries at government agencies, boards, and commissions, and we have commenced a review of salary rates overall in these agencies. Cabinet, MLAs, and political staff will not see a salary increase for the entire term of this Legislature. The same is true for managers in the public service for two years. Cost control measures such as these are not easy, but they are necessary.

Quite frankly, however, they are not enough to get the job done. For that, we need to tackle rising costs in our public health care system. I want to be clear. Public health care is a sacred trust shared by every Albertan, and this government is absolutely determined to protect it today and for future generations. Owing to the work of my colleague the Minister of Health and her dedicated health partners, the health care cost curve is bending down. Over the last six years the Health budget increased by an average of 6 per cent each and every year. Over the next three years the operating budget for health care will increase by an average of 2.5 per cent. We are making good progress, but to secure public health care, we need to keep at it. We have to reduce the cost of pharmaceuticals, we have to improve mental health care in the community, and we have to address the rising costs of compensating Alberta's dedicated doctors.

Mr. Speaker, our government's plan to control costs is working. Overall growth in the government's operating budget falls to an average of 2 per cent for the next three years. At the same time, Alberta maintains the lowest overall tax regime in Canada, with no provincial sales tax, no payroll tax, and no health premiums, and we have a significantly lower debt-to-GDP ratio than Canada and other provinces. That means we have the fiscal capacity to protect the health and education services Albertans count on, with thoughtful measures to control costs while maintaining certainty and stability for families.

But, Mr. Speaker, we have to stick to a plan that carefully brings the budget back into balance as the economy recovers, and we must take action to create jobs and diversify our economy. The Alberta jobs plan focuses on doing just that. As the Premier outlined in her televised address to Albertans, the Alberta jobs plan has four key pillars: supporting families and communities, investing in infrastructure, diversifying our energy industry and our energy markets, and supporting Alberta business.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to outline each of the Alberta jobs plan's themes in more detail. Almost every Alberta family in our province has been affected in some way by the collapse in oil prices. Many of our loved ones, friends, and neighbours have suffered a job loss or are worried they soon will. Some are having a tough time keeping up with the bills and paying the mortgage, and still more wonder how they will care for aging parents, help their kids get through school, and put something away for retirement when the future looks uncertain. That's why the first pillar of the Alberta jobs plan is to help Alberta families weather this economic storm.

As the Premier has said on many occasions, as we confront the consequences of the oil price shock, we must protect the most vulnerable Albertans, especially children, because the moral compass of any society is best judged by how it treats its most vulnerable citizens. No child in Alberta should go hungry, and no child's future should be sacrificed to the roller coaster of global energy prices. It's a fundamental commitment we owe to each other.

So starting this summer, Alberta families will receive the new Alberta child benefit and enhancements to the Alberta family employment tax credit. Mr. Speaker, this initiative is a major step forward for Alberta families: groundbreaking social policy to fight poverty, to ensure that children get a good start in life, and to help Albertans in need get back on their feet and into the workforce. Under our plan a low-income single parent with two children will receive just over $3,000 a year in benefits. In all, 380,000 children will be better off. It's a powerful expression of that most basic of Alberta values, that in tough times we are all in this together.

Let me also take a moment to acknowledge the federal government for introducing a new national child benefit. Owing to its commitment, middle- and low-income families will receive significant new support in addition to that provided by our government.

Mr. Speaker, the oil price shock also means far too many Albertans are suffering from the anxiety that comes with not knowing where their next paycheck is coming from. Here, too, we owe it to each other to help these Albertans get the support they deserve. Year after year hard-working Albertans have paid into employment insurance, helping to finance a national system that supports all Canadians. When energy prices were high, very few Albertans qualified for benefits because unemployment here was lower than in other parts of the country and average weekly earnings were higher relative to the rest of Canada.

These rules need to change. That's why our government led the call for accelerated adjustments to EI rules to ensure unemployed Albertans were treated fairly and had more money in their pockets. The federal government responded in part, and for that it deserves credit. Some Albertans now have access to up to 20 more weeks of benefits, a step in the right direction, but still not good enough. The exclusion of Edmonton and its surrounding communities from EI improvements makes absolutely no sense. So today, once again, the Alberta government calls on Ottawa to fix this unfair situation and to fix it soon. Because it doesn't matter if you are an unemployed oil worker in Nisku or Fort McMurray, you deserve to be treated fairly.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to helping the most vulnerable through tough times, the Alberta jobs plan supports Alberta families by investing in education and skills training. It is well understood that in today's global economy our most important asset is our people, and education is the most important investment we can make in their future. Education is the key to building a strong economy and a healthy society. The last government didn't understand this. It imposed reckless and short-sighted cuts. We stopped those cuts. The Alberta jobs plan builds on our commitment to education by fully funding enrolment growth in our public schools. We are also increasing operating grants to our universities, colleges, and postsecondary institutions, and we are helping families cope with rising postsecondary education costs by extending the tuition freeze for a second year.

Today I am also pleased to announce two new initiatives aimed at helping unemployed Albertans acquire the skills they need to get back to work. First, I am announcing $15 million to help apprentices complete their training and work experience requirements; and, second, $10 million is provided to the training for work program. This program targets a broad range of Albertans who are underrepresented in the workforce, including women, indigenous people, and newcomers, to help them secure and maintain employment in high-demand jobs. These two initiatives, together with our government's unwavering commitment to giving our children and youth the tools they need to succeed, are strategic and prudent investments that support families today and will pay big dividends in the future.

Mr. Speaker, the second key pillar of the Alberta jobs plan is to invest in infrastructure for schools, hospitals, roads, transit, and other much-needed infrastructure. Infrastructure is the lifeblood of the modern economy; ask any of Alberta's global competitors. They know that those jurisdictions that invest now in schools, transportation, and green infrastructure will be best positioned to compete and win in a fast-paced and ever-changing global economy. With interest rates at historic lows and the economy and people in need of support, there is simply no better time to seize the initiative and invest for the future.

Acting on the advice of the former Bank of Canada governor, David Dodge, last October the province announced an ambitious $34 billion plan to build and upgrade new roads, transit, schools, and hospitals. That plan increased investment by 15 per cent compared to the previous government, an additional $4.5 billion in new investment over five years. Mr. Speaker, the Alberta jobs plan puts that commitment to work.

Over five years we're more than doubling investments in affordable housing, to almost $900 million. As a result more Albertans will live in safe, affordable homes. The funding also funds housing in support of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. We're allocating $365 million for continuing care, consistent with our commitment to fund more than 2,000 new long-term care beds for seniors. This investment will help ensure that the Albertans who built this province get the care and support they deserve. We're also financing critical new transit and transportation projects, including the ring roads in Calgary and Edmonton, a twinned bridge in Peace River, and the Gaetz Avenue interchange in Red Deer.

We're funding upgrades and new buildings on our college and university campuses such as the University of Lethbridge destination project. We're supporting our fast-growing tourism industry with expansion funding for the Calgary Zoo and Fort Edmonton Park. We're allocating $3.5 billion to build and modernize schools, including $500 million for additional school projects in future capital plans. And we're helping municipalities address their infrastructure needs with $9 billion in funding, primarily through MSI grants. In addition, nearly $700 million is allocated for flood recovery and protection projects. Today and for generations to come, Albertans will benefit from these investments.

Patients will benefit from Calgary's new cancer hospital and major improvements to health facilities in Edmonton and throughout the province. Students will benefit from good schools and modern classrooms. Commuters will benefit from significant new investments in buses, light rail, and other transit initiatives. Rural Albertans will benefit from improved water and road projects and new monies targeted to small and rural municipalities throughout the province. And Albertans are benefiting today from the thousands of good jobs these projects create.

Yes, these investments cost money. But with the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio in Canada and with community infrastructure throughout Alberta in desperate need of attention, failing to act would leave a terrible legacy of overcrowded classrooms, longer health care wait-lists, and decaying infrastructure. Some argue that that's the choice we should make, that we shouldn't build new schools and hospitals, that we should let our roads and bridges fall into disrepair, and that we should leave our towns and cities behind. That would be a mistake Albertans can't afford, and that's a mistake this government won't make.

Mr. Speaker, the third pillar of the Alberta jobs plan is diversifying our energy industry and our energy markets. Achieving this goal is critically important to Alberta's future and to the economic security of every Albertan. That's why last November the Premier stood with industry, indigenous, environmental, and community leaders to set out a climate leadership strategy.

Alberta's climate leadership plan is the single most important step any Canadian government has taken to act on climate change. It's the cornerstone of our plan to build a greener and more diversified economy that creates jobs for Albertans. We are phasing out emissions for coal-powered generation to reduce pollution. We are implementing a world-leading methane reduction plan. We are investing in new, green infrastructure and helping to grow Alberta's renewable energy industry. Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan erases any doubt about Alberta's environmental record.

Putting a price on carbon is at the centre of this strategy. Mr. Speaker, we are bringing in a carbon levy to do two things. First, a carbon levy sends a clear market signal to consumers and to businesses about the need to reduce their carbon emissions, and second, every penny raised will be rebated back to Albertans and reinvested in our economy. A carbon levy of $20 per tonne will become effective on January 1, 2017. One year later the levy will increase by $10, to $30 per tonne. Beginning next year, single adults will receive carbon levy rebates of up to $200 per year, depending on income. Couples will receive $300. Parents will receive an additional $30 per child under 18 to a maximum of four children. As the levy increases, so too will the value of the rebate.

Mr. Speaker, 6 in 10 Alberta households will receive the full rebate, and small businesses will benefit from a tax initiative that I will detail in a moment. All Albertans will benefit from investments in the green infrastructure and energy efficiency initiatives that the carbon levy will support, creating thousands of jobs, diversifying our energy economy, and driving new technologies that will add to our exports. It's a win for our environment, it's a win for our energy industry, and, above all, it's a win for Albertans, who will benefit from a stronger, more sustainable economy with good-paying jobs.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the steps we are taking to secure the future of our energy industry and the jobs it creates, we are also working to open up new markets for our energy. Think about it. With only one market available to us, Albertans and Canadians get shortchanged on every barrel of oil we sell. Since 2010 we have sold our oil at an average discount of 20 per cent. As a result, the price bust is even worse for Albertans than it is for other energy jurisdictions around the world.

Every school, every hospital, every road, every Canada pension cheque, indeed, every program and service that Canadians rely on owes something to the success of Alberta's energy sector. Arguments about Alberta's environmental record no longer hold water. Our province now has the most progressive climate action plan in North America, and pipelines are the safest and most environmentally responsible way to transport oil. We have the technology, we have the know-how, and we have the expertise to build a modern, safe, and well-regulated pipeline to tidewater. Mr. Speaker, we need to establish a framework that gets us to a yes to a pipeline so that Albertans and all Canadians can get full value and a fair deal for Alberta's oil on world markets.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth pillar of the Alberta jobs plan is to support Alberta business. In October I announced an increase in capital to the Alberta Treasury Branches of $1.5 billion to support lending to small and medium-sized businesses in every region of the province. So I was pleased to see ATB announce that it increased loans to small and medium-sized business by $335 million in the fourth quarter of last year.

I also announced a two-year, $50 million investment in the Alberta Enterprise Corporation to help ensure that Alberta entrepreneurs have the venture capital they need to launch their businesses, drive innovation, and create jobs, and I directed the Alberta Investment Management Corporation to earmark half a billion dollars for investment in Alberta companies with growth potential. In each case financial professionals are making financial decisions in the best interests of Albertans.

We are also seizing an opportunity to diversify our economy through the petrochemicals diversification program. Up to $500 million in royalty credits will be awarded to businesses that invest in petrochemical facilities that use methane or propane to produce higher value products such as methanol and plastics. So instead of shipping out our raw resources and the jobs that go with them, we are adding value to them here at home, creating thousands of jobs and attracting billions of dollars in new investment.

Mr. Speaker, today I'm also pleased to announce additional measures to diversify our economy and support Alberta business, particularly small business. First, I am announcing today that the province is establishing two new tax credits. The new Alberta investor tax credit provides an incentive to invest in eligible small and medium-sized enterprises, and the capital investment tax credit provides an incentive for first-time acquisition of new or used property in value-added agriculture, tourism infrastructure, culture, manufacturing, and processing industries. These two new tax credits, valued at $165 million, will help give Alberta's entrepreneurs access to the capital they need to drive innovation, diversify our economy, and create new jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge the business community and others for their diligent advocacy for tax credits such as these to promote early-stage capital investment and make Alberta's economy even more competitive. Their advice and collaboration were invaluable. I am grateful for their input.

Second, I am pleased to announce a package of initiatives aimed at growing and attracting new businesses and creating new jobs. For example, $10 million in new funding is allocated to the entrepreneurship incubator program, which helps entrepreneurs bring their ideas to market; $25 million is provided to the Alberta Enterprise Corporation to spur innovation and job growth in Alberta's knowledge economy. The new funding is in addition to the $50 million commitment made last year and will help the AEC build on its success in leveraging new investments to cultivate homegrown innovation across the province.

Ten million dollars is earmarked to expand the Agrivalve Processing Business Incubator program. This incubator is in Leduc, and it's having tremendous success creating new companies in Alberta's food industry. With these new resources it will do even better creating new companies and new jobs. There will be $5 million in additional funding for potential investors to help Alberta attract major new headquarters to the province. Finally, $10 million is set aside for the regional economic development program to encourage co-operation within regions to promote a wide range of industries, from tourism through to value-added processing.

Mr. Speaker, taken together, these job-creation incentives reflect our government's central commitment to Albertans: in tough economic times we've got your back. Faced with similar circumstances in the past, Alberta governments chose to do nothing except to impose reckless and extreme cuts to public services in a race to the bottom. The impacts were severe, they were long-lasting, and they didn't succeed in creating jobs or diversifying our economy. This government won't choose that path. This government is moving Alberta forward.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to talk about small business. Owning and operating a small business takes enormous grit and determination, with long hours and many late nights. Over my years at Calgary city council and now as Minister of Finance I've spoken to thousands of job creators, innovators, and entrepreneurs. Like the Premier and everyone in this Legislature, I have tremendous admiration for the work they do and the contribution they make to this province day in and day out. When oil prices collapse, I know that small-business people are some of the first to feel its effects. I know how hard they struggle to keep their businesses open. Therefore, to help small-business people in Alberta, today I am announcing that the small-business tax is being cut from 3 per cent to 2 per cent, amongst the lowest in the country. It's the right thing to do to help our job creators weather this storm, and it's the right thing to do for jobs and our economy.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by remarking on the great Alberta story. Over many generations, beginning with Alberta's indigenous peoples, we have built one of the world's great societies. From the Great War to the Great Depression, through fire and flood, in times of prosperity and peace our strength has always been our people, and we have always stuck together as one community, joined by a common destiny. Today the Alberta family is younger, more diverse, more talented, and more ambitious than ever before. We are truly blessed. We can never forget that.

But it is also true that the collapse in oil prices is a threat to our collective future. Owing to years of inaction by previous governments, we are far too dependent on the price of one commodity. In the past when oil prices fell, the cost of that inaction was downloaded onto hard-working families through short-sighted cuts. Albertans paid in longer hospital wait times, overcrowded classrooms, longer commutes, higher fees, and lost opportunity. Some say we should repeat those mistakes. We say no. Our government won't turn the clock back on Albertans.

With the Alberta jobs plan we are moving Alberta forward. Our plan creates jobs and diversifies our economy. Our plan maintains stability for the important public services that support Albertans and their communities. Our plan supports families with new child tax credits and skills training to support good jobs. Our plan invests in new schools, hospitals, and transportation infrastructure to create jobs and build our province. Our plan diversifies our energy industry as we work to open up new markets, and our plan supports Alberta business with new tax credits and a cut to small-business taxes to grow our small-business sector and support our innovators, entrepreneurs, and job creators.

Mr. Speaker, there will be more difficult days ahead. The global economy remains volatile and uncertain. But as Premier Notley said, Albertans are resilient. "We've always shown that when we're faced with challenges we come together with optimism and determination." Today we are called upon once again to meet the challenges of our time head-on. We are called upon to move Alberta forward, and we are as one province, as one people united in our determination to build a more prosperous economy and a brighter future for every Albertan onward.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. House leader for Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've certainly waited a long time for that, and there will definitely be a lot of debate about that.

But for today I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn the House until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:03 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to April 14, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 18, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Let each of us reflect in our own way. Let us encourage the right to speak up for things you believe in, not only for those seated in this Chamber but for our constituents, especially our young children. It is important for them to know that their voice matters and that it can make a difference. Let us particularly remember the children of our nation who consider suicide as their only escape.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we now will be led in singing our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Press Gallery Centennial

The Speaker: Hon. members, as mentioned last Thursday, I would like to take a moment today to point out an important milestone concerning the Assembly's press gallery. One hundred years ago, through amendments to the Assembly's standing orders, members of the press were afforded their own gallery in the Chamber to observe the proceedings. In 1916 Standing Order 92 read: "A gallery shall be reserved for the use of press representatives only." The standing orders also provided that the representatives could come from registered newspapers and that the Speaker controlled the gallery and rooms adjacent to it, which were made available to the press.

Today much has changed technologically and, in fact, continues to change, and reporting is often instantaneous in the world of social media. But what has remained constant is the essential role of the press in helping to communicate and report on what happens here in this Assembly to constituents throughout our province.

I'm sure I speak for all members when I share our appreciation for the critical role that media play in this our sacred democracy.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the wonderful grade 6 class from the Airdrie school C.W. Perry and their volunteers and teachers. Would you please rise as I call your names? Miss Stephanie Wilson, Miss Ashley Woronuk, Mr. Brian Jackson, Mr. Roel Suasini, Mr. Daniel Fortier, Mr. Keith Foord, Mrs. Sarah Machan, and all the kids: please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups for introductions today? I would recognize the hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of students who are leaders from across our province, who are part of the leadership program Forum for Young Albertans. We are joined by their executive director Jason Stolz and four alumni of the organization, those being Kathyne Davey, Samantha Hossack, Tanya Hrehirchuk, and Loryn Marcellus, who are chaperons for this year's forum participants. Thank you for rising.

We also have 23 students from grades 9 through 12 who are immersing themselves in politics during their week-long forum in Edmonton, which is this week, sitting with leaders at both municipal and provincial levels. The students have travelled from across the province, communities like Fox Creek, Bonnyville, and Fort McMurray, and they're forming lasting friendships with the unique experience, which we are sure they will remember as one of their highlights from their junior high and high school experience. I ask that our guests from the Forum for Young Albertans who are here with us today please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I had the privilege of speaking with the group this morning.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the folks who work in my office as the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and the staff who work in my constituency office in Mayerthorpe in the great district of Whitecourt-St. Anne. Our work relies so much on the support that we get from our staff. They ensure that both the minister's office and the constituency office run smoothly and efficiently. They also do a pretty good job of keeping me out of trouble, more or less. I would like to ask my constituency staff, Epiphany Dober and Florence Henning, and my minister's office staff, Melanie Gaudet, Alice Marouelli, Renato Gandia, Keith Gardner, and Tony Clark, to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of the bravest constituents in Edmonton-Castle Downs, Austin Post. I had the privilege of being at his birth and the privilege to introduce him to you today. Austin is only 11 years old but recently underwent a heart transplant. During the process and while waiting for a donor heart, Austin displayed an unbelievable amount of bravery and positivity throughout such a difficult time. Austin is joined here today by his mother, Christine, one of my dearest friends for over 20 years; his father, Ian Post; his sisters, Ashley Reisinger and Meleah Post. Throughout this whole process the family was constantly a source of strength, love, and support for each other during such an uncertain time. I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege for me to introduce to you and to the Assembly the executive members of the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. CPAWS is a society committed to ensuring a healthy and wild Canada, where people can experience and respect nature. Their tireless efforts have been pivotal in preserving Alberta's sensitive environments for the future. Most recently they've been integral along with the Alberta Wilderness Association in the designation of the Castle wilderness and Castle park area, protecting a vital watershed while concerns remain about off-highway vehicle traffic in those regions. Please stand as I mention your names. Joining us today are Pat Chan, Liv Vors, Alison Ronson, Gord James, Phil Nykyforuk, and Anne-Marie Syslak. Please give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

AdaptAbilities

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my privilege to join AdaptAbilities, a nonprofit organization that supports families throughout the Edmonton area, for their Fun-raiser gala last Thursday, April 14. It was an incredible opportunity to hear about the positive impacts that they've made on our community while raising money to support the important work that they do.

AdaptAbilities has been providing supports to our city for over 10 years, offering one-of-a-kind programs and services empowering individuals with special needs to grow, succeed, and belong. Relief care and community specialists work together with individuals and families to create a safe and caring community, enriching the lives of those with disabilities.

Under the direction of founder and Executive Director Michelle Hordal, AdaptAbilities has grown to serve hundreds of families who were often turned away from other programs. Michelle and her team have worked hard to create a home away from home for their participants, designed to enhance each individual's recreation and motor skills, life skills, and creative talents. Their services and support programs are developed as per the needs and wants of individual participants by promoting citizenship, valued social identities, supporting real relationships, and personal development first.

I am proud to be a part of a government which is committed to supporting an inclusive society and ensuring that the rights of all Albertans are protected, especially our most vulnerable. Our government recently committed $65,000 through the community facility enhancement program to help AdaptAbilities as they move to expand to a larger location. I would like to thank AdaptAbilities for their ongoing commitment in supporting the vulnerable in our community, and I would like to congratulate them on their brand new logo designed by Catapult Marketing here in Edmonton.

Thank you.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, on the drive up from Medicine Hat to Edmonton I'm sure you saw the same thing as me: empty buildings, for sale signs, and vacant parking lots. I'm sure you drove past the oil service businesses that have closed their doors and the construction companies with no orders on the books. But what might not be as easy to spot is a family struggling to get through a layoff or the children who won't be enrolled in their favourite sport or the charity forced to do more with less.

In response to such crippling financial and human costs, this NDP government has decided to take a bad situation and make it worse. With the implementation of a carbon tax that will bring massive price hikes across the board, Albertans will face even more hardship: hardships on their utility bills, at the gas pumps, and at the grocery store. The NDP's carbon tax is regressive, punitive, and damaging to every sector of the economy and everyday life. Imagine the shock that a fixed-income senior will get when they open their monthly bills and see an increase of 8 per cent on electricity and 50 per cent on natural gas. Imagine the struggling family that will now pay 10 per cent more filling up their vehicle on the way to school. Imagine the business desperately trying to keep its head above water while being pulled down by the weight of this new tax.

Perhaps the Premier doesn't need to worry about the price of heating her home or buying a car, but I can assure you that these problems cause pain, worry, and sleepless nights for my constituents. Quite simply, this government has chosen to dishonestly foist a harsh new tax upon a province that can't bear it, a tax that they kept hidden from Albertans. Mr. Speaker, it's time that the NDP stop putting the price of its own mismanagement on the backs of hard-working Albertans. It's time they stop governing against us and work for us.

Public Consultation

Mr. Ellis: In 2014 I had the honour of being elected as the MLA for Calgary-West. I put my name on the ballot because I believe strongly in serving my community and in serving Albertans. This is a great responsibility. If Alberta is succeeding, then it means that we the elected Members of the Legislature have done our jobs. This is the attitude of my PC colleagues, and I, too, have been working hard to bring this to the Legislature.

We reject the notion that as opposition it is our job to simply oppose the government. We do not believe that the responsibility of governing lies only with the government but that every single person in the Legislature carries this obligation as well. The Progressive Conservatives value professionalism and respect. We offer constructive feedback and common-sense suggestions. Our goal is to be the best legislators and best representatives that we can be.

I think that many of the issues facing Alberta can be resolved with plain old common sense. Many of the best policy ideas simply come from listening and talking with the people. Having the ability to interact with and gain insight from so many different people is a powerful tool at the disposal of every single MLA. Being prepared to listen to people and recognizing you don't have the answers should be the central qualification for this job. It is key for government to listen to the people on the ground who deal with the situations first-hand.

In the year and a half that I've been an MLA, I have learned that there are no magic spells for dealing with the issues and that no one has a monopoly on good ideas. I'm proud to be a member of the Progressive Conservative caucus, that is using this session of the Legislature to promote real, common-sense solutions to make sure this government is properly engaging with Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The week of April 17 to 23 is National Organ and Tissue Donation Awareness Week in Canada. It is my privilege to rise and speak about this important issue today.

I'd like to share with you Austin's story, whom I had the opportunity to introduce earlier. Austin is a brilliant 11-year-old boy, full of life, like most other kids his age, but one major difference is that the heart that beats inside Austin is not the one that he was born with. Austin was eight years old when he suddenly fell ill and was diagnosed with end-stage congestive heart failure from an unknown cause. This required further medical assessment, and he had to be placed on the transplant list. Thanks to the generosity of a grieving family and the expertise of the transplant team at the Stollery children's hospital, Austin is alive today. Austin says that he loves life and that so many of his days are what he calls his best days ever.

Mr. Speaker, while heart transplantation is not a cure, it is definitely a life-saving treatment. We have seen people with successful transplants enjoy a high quality of life for over 30 years. In Alberta the list of people waiting to receive a transplant is growing. Although the number of donors has increased since 2012, we still need more. In 2014 we had 13.6 deceased donors per million population compared to 9.9 in 2012. People are six times more likely to need a transplant than to become a donor, and only 1 to 2 per cent of people die in a way that would make them a potential organ donor. Tissue donation is equally as important as organ donation. For example, donated corneas can restore sight, and heart valves are life saving.

About 2,500 Albertans register every week to become organ and tissue donors. Just one organ and tissue donor can save up to eight lives and make life better for up to 75 other people. Today let's take a pledge to spread awareness to ensure that everyone who needs a transplant has the opportunity to receive one.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Glenbow Ranch Provincial Park

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Between the city of Calgary and the town of Cochrane is a stunning piece of Alberta ranchland paradise. The area was first cut open to settlement and industry by the CPR back in 1883. Shortly thereafter Glenbow townsite was established, with a post office, general store, and about 150 residents. On the neighbouring hillside Glenbow Quarry was founded and excavated the very stone used in the building that surrounds us here, the Alberta Legislature.

The area later became a successful ranch under the stewardship of the Harvie family. Over 40 years ago Neil Harvie recognized that a sprawling Calgary threatened the surrounding countryside and passed on the vision to his children to preserve the land as a park. In 2008 the family made a generous philanthropic land deal through a unique partnership with the Alberta government and the Glenbow Ranch Park Foundation.

Last summer, in August 2015, I participated in a spectacular trail ride, the Ride for the Ranch fundraiser, with Andy Crooks, chairman of the board of the foundation. The tour was guided by Tim Harvie and took us on an intimate tour of the ranch. Tim pointed out the ruins of the sandstone quarry, archaeological evidence of teepee rings, described vegetation such as native grasses and fescues, animal habitats, and explained the importance of preserving the area as an active ranch. Later that evening the journey was complete with the narration of cowboy stories by poet Perry Jacobson.

Glenbow Ranch provincial park protects 1,300 acres of parkland, river, and forest landscape along the Bow River. Residents of Calgary and beyond can benefit from over 30 kilometres of paved trails and pathways, which is part of the Trans Canada Trail network and system. I encourage all Calgarians to take full advantage of this sensational park at their very doorstep. As Tim Harvie remarked at the end of the trail ride: where else in the world can you sit on a grassy hilltop like this with a vast river valley sprawled out in front of you, backed by rolling foothills, and witness 50 miles of mountain range on the not-too-distant horizon?

I'd like to thank the Harvie family for their generous vision that has preserved this wonderful landscape for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For many Alberta families life has never been more challenging than it is today. Thousands are out of work and struggling to pay their bills. Their main priority is putting food on the table and keeping a roof over their heads. On Thursday this government took a bad situation and introduced a budget that made things much worse for Albertans. A carbon tax makes the price of everything in Alberta more expensive for everyone, not just for gas and heating but also power bills, groceries, clothes, and rent. Will the Premier be honest with Albertans and give them the full cost of how much a risky new carbon tax is going to cost for families?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly have been very open and will continue to be. The direct cost for an average family, including heating, gasoline, and electricity, will be about $500. Two-thirds of Alberta families will be receiving rebates; 60 per cent of Albertans will receive a full rebate. So, certainly, this is very positive.

When it comes to doing accounting and math, I certainly think that the Leader of the Official Opposition, who had to recorrect his numbers in less than two hours this morning – I'd be happy to sit down with his research department and explain some of the math to them, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that this Premier just hit the typical family with at least $1,000 a year in new costs. If you're lucky enough to qualify for a rebate, you'll still end up hundreds and hundreds of dollars poorer as a result of this carbon tax, brought in by this NDP government. Transportation companies already estimate that costs will rise by 5 per cent. For families it means that diapers, formula, hockey equipment, clothes, vegetables – anything moved in Alberta by truck – will be more expensive for Albertans. Why is the Premier downloading hundreds of dollars in new costs from this carbon tax onto Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly take our responsibility and the evidence around climate change incredibly seriously. We know that what will be best for Alberta families is to be able to have a strong international reputation to get our pipelines built, expand our markets, and to make sure we move forward with a strong public service. The Official Opposition's proposal is to lay off at least another 22,000 jobs in the public sector. I'm sorry. That math doesn't add up, and Albertans know it.

Mr. Jean: Rebate or not, families that buy food, buy clothes, rent or own their own property will all see their costs go up. The cost of living for Albertans will go up under this government. Half of Canadians report they're barely scraping by and that losing as little as $200 a month would bankrupt them. A carbon tax, that increases prices of everything, only makes things worse for everyone in Alberta. Only 10 per cent of revenue raised by the carbon tax is actually being returned to Albertans in rebates. Families will simply have to eat the rest of these new costs and new taxes. What does the Premier have to say to families that feel like they have just been kicked while they're already down?

Ms Hoffman: Our government knows that climate change is real, Mr. Speaker. Our government takes it seriously, and we are working to make sure that we have a reasonable plan, one that's modelled on climate leadership plans from other jurisdictions, that's reasonable and balanced, that actually creates meaningful change.

Mr. Speaker, 60 per cent of Alberta families will see a full rebate. That certainly is going to be very helpful to them. But, also, we're going to be reinvesting every other dollar in making sure that we have opportunities to diversify the economy, something that members opposite have no intention of doing.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Mr. Jean: Here's another example of how the NDP carbon tax will hurt Alberta families. The city of Calgary is estimating that this tax will cost them $6.5 million a year. For cities across Alberta feeling the pinch, the Premier told them they get zero in return. I'm sure the Premier knows there's only one way for cities to pay for this tax, more borrowing or higher property taxes. Either way, it's Alberta families who will pick up the tab for this government's mismanagement. Why is the Premier downloading the cost of her carbon tax onto municipalities and onto Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, if the budget papers had been read on Thursday, the Official Opposition would have noted that there is $2.2 billion in new green-infrastructure investments that will be recycled straight back into the economy, supporting municipalities, supporting rural municipalities as well as large cities. Certainly, those investments are over and above existing investments and will help municipalities adjust.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, that's going to take a lot of adjustment. You see, the cost of the carbon tax doesn't stop there. School boards across the province need fuel to operate. Thousands of kids every single day take a bus to get to school. It's not uncommon for parents to actually have to pay hundreds of dollars in transportation costs every year for their children to go to school. This new carbon tax will only make things worse by forcing school boards to increase these fees, to download other new costs to parents. What does the Premier have to say to the families who will be further punished by this NDP government for having to bus their kids to school?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this government kept our commitment to ensuring stable, predictable funding for schools and for students and for the next generation of children in this province. It's certainly not something that the Official Opposition is at all interested in.

In addition to that, we will be reinvesting the carbon levy in a series of efficiency initiatives that can be used to defray the costs for school boards, municipalities, indigenous communities, and other communities, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: For Albertans already pinching pennies, the Premier's carbon tax will have a huge impact on fuel expenses. I'm not sure if the Premier actually knows this, but people do drive trucks for their livelihoods here in Alberta. The weather in Alberta also means that four-by-fours might be necessary from time to time. Trucks help Albertans move hay on the farm. They help move their tools to the job site even in the cities. For families, a larger vehicle is just a fact of life when you have to take kids to hockey practice or to ballet. Why is the Premier increasing the cost of living for everyday Albertans, and will she show leadership by changing herself from her own large Suburban to maybe a Smart car?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we are mindful of the impact on lower and middle-income Albertans, which is why we are implementing a rebate that will apply at the full rebate for 60 per cent of Albertans, a partial rebate for two-thirds.

In addition, we have exempted marked gasoline and diesel – that is to say, purple – for agricultural producers, Mr. Speaker. In addition, there will be a full array of energy efficiency investments for all Albertans to avail themselves of.

The Speaker: The third main question.

Tax Policy

Mr. Jean: Albertans clearly know that this NDP budget is going to make things much worse. It will lead to fewer jobs. It will lead to a weaker Alberta economy. They know that this budget's carbon tax will have them paying more provincial taxes and more municipal taxes, more taxes on everything. They know that bad fiscal planning has lowered our credit rating and now makes borrowing more expensive for Albertans. Now they know that the Premier has considered a sales tax in Alberta's future. Why does this Premier reject any cuts at all but, instead, seems excited about a new Alberta PST?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta jobs plan takes a different path than the opposition would take. The path we will take will be to stand with Albertans. We will stand with Albertans by supporting families and communities, investing in infrastructure, diversifying our economy, and supporting Alberta businesses. They would not do that. They would cut supports to seniors, they would cut teachers and nurses, and they would abandon our most vulnerable. That's not the path we're going to take.

Mr. Jean: A direct question on PST; direct avoidance of the question.

Tax increases will only drive money out of our economy and jobs out of our province. When we look at the budget, it is clear that last October's tax increases will not bring anywhere near the revenue the NDP said they would. Nowhere near. Businesses are moving jobs out of Alberta. Wealthy individuals are moving to lower tax jurisdictions. Alberta will not be the most attractive place to invest when energy prices rebound, and now the Premier has chosen to signal that a sales tax is in our future. Why is the Premier so determined to drive investment and prosperity out of Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. During and after the 2015 election we said that we would not introduce a sales tax, and during the term of this government we will not introduce a sales tax. We'll honour that commitment. We committed to bringing back fairness to the PIT, the personal income tax, and corporate income taxes. We moved quickly to make that happen in June because this province was behind all other provinces in terms of a fair, transparent tax for PIT, so a marginal tax rate is the right thing to do. We brought that in.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental. With respect, Opposition House Leader, I request that you direct your comments through the Speaker again, please.

Please proceed. Go ahead.

Mr. Jean: The Opposition House Leader, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: I meant the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has the most expensive government in Canada by a lot. When adjusted for population, B.C. actually runs its government operations for $8 billion less a year than Alberta does. Think about that. If Alberta spent at B.C. levels, our deficit this year would be very, very modest. But, instead, the Premier wants to fearmonger and tell Albertans that any cuts to the budget would lead to thousands fewer teachers and nurses. Fearmongering. Albertans aren't buying it. They know this Premier won't do what needs to be done. Will the Premier commit to getting spending under control before she even considers a sales tax, and will she agree not to bring in a sales tax next term?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the Leader of the Official Opposition, who himself talked about the cuts of the '90s as something to be looking back on gloriously, recalls, but teachers were laid off, and nurses were laid off. Those are the plans of the past. The Official Opposition wants to recycle these failed plans. He wants to talk about cutting $8 billion. That's almost the entire Education budget. Give me a break. That is not what the people of Alberta voted for. They voted for a stable, predictable government that's going to support them.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted.

The volume is getting excessive.

I think we're on the first supplemental. Is that correct? [interjection] The fourth main.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know with the carbon tax that 40 per cent of that will be purely wealth distribution. We know that the carbon tax will increase costs to Alberta households. We know it will cost three times more to run and administer energy efficiency Alberta than the total amount being put aside for communities affected by the rapid phase-out of coal. What we don't know is what it will do for the environment. To the Minister of Finance: by what amount will your carbon tax reduce both emissions and energy consumption?

Mr. Ceci: I will jump up and say that I know the reduction in emissions by 2020. Thirty-five megatonnes is the forecast of the amount it will reduce the size of emissions. For the second part of the answer I'm going to turn it over to the environment minister to answer that in future questions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to U of C economist Trevor Tombe, in 2018-19, combined with output-based rebates, the total tax revenue will only have 3 per cent returned to small business; 10 per cent returned to household rebates, which will not cover households' additional expenditures; 30 per cent for green infrastructure and energy initiatives. He says that we don't know yet the administration cost of the new tax. To the Finance minister: how many jobs will your carbon tax cause Albertans to lose? In comparison, how many can you actually say will be created, and when will you release an analysis of how you arrived at your numbers?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. On the matter of energy efficiency – we'll take that first – there are a couple of different ways that one can deliver energy efficiency programming. I'm not surprised that the previous government has no idea how that works because they did not do it and were the only people in Canada to fail in that regard. We have chosen to deliver these programs through a Crown agency. We could do it through a utility, but we don't have a Crown utility, so we will do it through a Crown agency. This is the leanest way to do it, and we will make sure that there are programs for small business, for municipalities, for individuals, for indigenous communities, and for rural communities through our energy efficiency investments.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that when the government calls it the jobs plan, the answer never included a word about jobs although they were directly asked about that.

On page 96 of the budget plan it estimates that in 2017 it will cost a couple with two children $338, if you believe the government, and they'll get a rebate of $360. To the Finance minister: how can $22 possibly cover the additional cost of food, property tax, shelter, clothing, consumer goods, and all the other costs that will pile up on Alberta families as a direct result of your regressive carbon tax?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, of course, you know, all of this talk of indirect costs is based on some faulty math coming from the Official Opposition in which they took a three-year-old study that is Canada-wide and that does not have any appreciation for the investments that Alberta will be making, does not have any appreciation for even the current or historical PC climate policies, and then projects that outwards. That is faulty reasoning. It was certainly faulty math on behalf of the Official Opposition. The fact of the matter is that we know that investments in energy efficiency are very quick ways to make sure we are putting construction workers back to work.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Budget 2016

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the second budget in a row the Alberta Party is the only opposition party to create our own shadow budget. We prove it's possible to find a middle way, a better way than sacrificing the present with brutal front-line cuts or risking the future on massive deficits. Unfortunately, the impact of the ND budget is already being felt as Alberta suffered yet another credit-rating downgrade. To the Minister of Finance. I asked you last session whether you had calculated the cost of a potential downgrade. Given your plan to borrow more than $50 billion, have you done it yet?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, we all know that the collapse in oil prices has had a significant effect on our economy and put people out of work. The opposition would have us respond to this with significant job losses of nurses and teachers and by cutting back on investments in infrastructure. We believe there's a better way to move Alberta forward, and we are. Alberta's credit rating is still among the best in the country even with the low price of oil. This fiscal year we expect to spend 2.4 per cent of our budget revenue on debt servicing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party's shadow budget balances in four years, funds front-line services to match population growth, builds badly needed infrastructure, all of that without taking on unsustainable levels of debt. Again to the Minister of Finance. The Alberta Party's plan calls for per capita spending to come in line with the national average within three years. Do you have any plans to meet this target, and if so, when?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, in the past the member opposite has provided us with some good ideas on how we can work together to move Alberta forward. Thank you for that. There are also some ideas here that we've already included in our Alberta jobs plan, some ideas in his shadow budget. We're freezing the wages, of course, of MLAs, political staff, management, government, and executive staff in agencies, boards, and commissions. We're working with the civil service to find savings every day, and we've reduced overall spending, unlike the third party, to 2 per cent per year going forward. We will not recklessly cut back on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, Mr. Minister, that wasn't an answer, so I'll take that as a no.

The Alberta Party's shadow budget, which I will table later this afternoon, respects the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP law this government passed just a few short months ago. Again to the Minister of Finance: given your plan to repeal the debt-to-GDP limit, do you have a new target, or is the sky the limit?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. It's very clear in our fiscal plan that 15.5 per cent debt to GDP will be reached in three years. We anticipate staying under that if we are able to bend the cost on things like health services in this province and other programs and services, if we are able to see diversification take off in this province as we understand it will through Economic Development and Trade, and if we're able to invest all across this province with the biggest investment program for capital this province has ever seen, at $34.5 billion over five years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

STEP Program

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Times are tough right now for all Albertans, and that's especially true for young Albertans. We know that youth unemployment across this country is at an all-time high. Summer is coming, and students in my constituency are looking for work. With the reinstatement of the summer temporary employment program gearing up to launch, can the Minister of Labour explain to us how this will help our current economic state and support businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government committed to reintroducing the summer temporary employment program, or STEP, a program the former government cut. The Alberta jobs plan brings STEP back at a critical time for Alberta and for Alberta employers. With the economic downturn impacting the bottom lines of many businesses, our government knew it could do more to help. That's why STEP was opened to small businesses for the very first time, in addition to municipalities, nonprofits, school boards, and postsecondaries. This program provides a wage subsidy of $7 an hour to Alberta employers hiring high school or postsecondary students, who, in turn, gain valuable . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Dang: Mr. Speaker, given that this initiative is so important for employers and small businesses, again to the same minister: what has the ministry actually done to ensure that there was adequate uptake and information being relayed to businesses so that as many as possible were able to apply?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We engaged employers, municipalities, nonprofits through direct engagement, advertising as well as social media. We know that Albertans were engaged because the uptake was through the roof. We received over 2,600 applications between January and February 29. We received a significant number of applications from small businesses, the newest category that we included in the STEP program. It was clear that Albertans sorely missed this program, that was cut by the former government, and were eager to take advantage of it.

Mr. Dang: Given the significant changes made to STEP under the new government, to the same minister: how much money has actually been allocated, and how many students do we expect this program to help and to actually employ?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We plan to allocate the full $10 million that was laid out in the Alberta jobs plan. This year 1,184 applications were approved. Businesses across Alberta and across various sectors will have received their notifications as of last week if they were successful. As well, up to 3,000 student jobs will be funded through the STEP program this year.

Provincial Debt

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Finance tabled a budget that included $56 billion of debt and a $14 billion consolidated deficit. Soon we'll be spending more than $2 billion a year on interest payments to the banks instead of on schools, hospitals, and roads that we need. This isn't just bad financial management; this is morally repugnant. Why is the minister making tomorrow's generation pay for today's reckless spending?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. We are doing what we think Albertans want us to do and what we ran on. We said that we would keep programs and services strong in this province, and that's what we're doing. Budgets 2015 and '16 keep funding enrolment, keep hospitals going, ensure that the capital spend is what this Alberta province needs, and we're going to do that because that's the right thing.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, when the Wildrose warned the minister that he would break his own 15 per cent debt ceiling just five months ago, he replied to us at the time, and I quote: we won't come anywhere close to the 15 per cent; I don't see where there's going to be an issue, like you the Wildrose do. Will the minister admit that he should have listened to the Wildrose now that he's going to break and repeal his very own debt ceiling law just four months, 11 days, and 14 hours after he passed it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're dealing with a once-in-a-generation decline in our economy, two years of recession. The Wildrose did not predict it. The opposition over here did not predict it. The best minds and the people who are providing the economic forecast did not see this coming last July. They did not see it coming in October. We are doing the best for this province, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the Wildrose predicted it, and he refused to listen to it.

The Premier admitted that she expected a credit downgrade from this budget. This is like knowing that there's a speed trap ahead and hitting the gas anyway. Is the Premier so ideologically committed to enlarging the size of government that she is willing to ignore the facts and take on limitless debt to satisfy her agenda?

Mr. Ceci: As I said to a previous question with regard to borrowing, Alberta's credit rating is still among the best in the country, even with the low price of oil. In this fiscal year we expect to spend 2.4 per cent of our budget revenue on debt servicing; B.C.

spends 5.5 per cent, and Ontario spends 9 per cent. We're well below those, and we'll continue to be well below them.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our PC caucus, in a spirit of collaboration, made a $4 billion challenge that reflects Alberta's culture of fiscal responsibility. The challenge provided means for cost savings that would have sent a message to Albertans and credit-rating agencies that your government takes deficits and debts seriously. Instead, we are aghast to see a budget that ratchets up spending and debt to unparalleled levels. To the Finance minister: why did you not even consider our PC caucus's well-thought-out recommendations to control spending?

Mr. Ceci: You know, I did engage briefly in your document, but I was kind of busy working on the budget for government and bringing that in. We also had thousands of Albertans, not unlike the opposition in the collection of information they provided, who through telephone town halls, e-mails to my office, and in our going around the province gave us their suggestions. Those, too, have found their way into our budget.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Finance minister misrepresents the limitation of his cost-saving choices to — and I quote from his budget speech — “firing thousands of teachers and nurses” and given that he is the only one talking about laying off teachers and nurses and given that there are efficiencies to be found in a $51 billion provincial budget, Minister, are you seriously telling Albertans that there is no way of finding savings other than laying off teachers and nurses?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. The third party, in their election plan, planned on cutting nearly a billion dollars from health care. The Official Opposition in their address last week talked about returning to some of the proven mechanisms of the 1990s. Let's remember the 1990s. Let's remember teachers being laid off, nurses being laid off, the Calgary General hospital being demolished in that big plume of smoke. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. Albertans had a choice, and they chose our government because we believe in health care and education and protecting our future.

Mr. Ellis: That billion dollars had to do with administration and efficiencies.

Given that the Finance minister and Premier fail to credit our previous government for creating our low debt-to-GDP ratio, which they are now destroying, and given that business and individual Albertans have enjoyed the lowest overall tax system in Canada, once again thanks to the previous government, and given that Albertans recognize the carbon tax is an ideological effort at wealth redistribution, to the Finance minister again: why is this budget such a drastic departure from Alberta's long-held heritage of fiscal pride?

Ms Hoffman: There was a long-held heritage of electing the same government that made the same decisions time and time again. Albertans had a choice in the last election, and they chose a different vision. They chose a vision that would protect children, that would protect our seniors, that would continue to move forward and be environmentally and economically sustainable and reasonable.

Talking about pragmatism, certainly the Leader of the Official Opposition supported five consecutive deficit budgets. The only time he seems to oppose them is when he's on the other side of the aisle, Mr. Speaker.

Job Creation

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has had almost a year to produce a credible jobs plan. Instead, it has admitted that its first plan has failed, and now it has released its second attempt, that is no better than the first. When he was asked how the plan would create jobs, the minister couldn't answer, and the details are not in the budget either. To the minister: you told everyone to wait for the budget, but where are the details of your jobs plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would encourage the member to look in the budget. I'll try to find the page number for you. Unlike the opposition over there, our government believes in diversification and believes that it's critical to moving our economy forward. Our Alberta jobs plan is very robust. We went out and met with many, many business leaders, industry leaders, experts, organizations, chambers of commerce, and they told us: there are a number of initiatives that you can do that will help get the economy going. And we've done just that.

Mr. Panda: Let me give you the page number. Mr. Speaker, I think the minister enjoys jumping up and down to tell us absolutely nothing. Given that page 10 of the budgets says that Alberta's unemployment rate will go up to 8 per cent but the minister says that he will create 100,000 jobs without giving details about how he is creating them, this is creating a lot of confusion. Will the minister tell us how the unemployment rate will still go up when he magically creates a hundred thousand jobs?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, the more jobs that are created, the unemployment numbers will go down, actually, not up.

I'll give the member a few of our initiatives. Earlier today I talked about an investor tax credit, $90 million over two years for an investor tax credit, that is being celebrated province-wide. This is something that other jurisdictions have brought in. It has been very successful in helping the job creators create jobs. This will create thousands of jobs by providing capital available to small and medium-sized Alberta businesses, much-needed . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Given that this government promises to create jobs but also says that the government doesn't create jobs, I'm not surprised that Albertans are confused and worried. Given that the NDP's job-killing carbon tax will cost small businesses far more than the 1 per cent tax reduction will save them and that the new investor tax credit isn't even accepting applications until 2017, will the minister tell us how he's going to create any jobs this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll spell it out for the member. As I've said many times, government sets the right conditions to help economic growth and diversification. We believe in diversification; members opposite don't. I can tell you that we have a robust capital infrastructure plan. We're spending $36 billion over five years, which is going to create a number of jobs and fix much-needed infrastructure that the previous government failed to invest in and, quite frankly, that the Official Opposition wouldn't invest in. I'd love to know which hospitals, schools, and roads . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are worried about job losses and the state of our economy. During the election I met Joan from Rimbey. Joan was concerned about the PC's proposed tax hikes. I saw Joan the other day, and now her husband has been laid off because of the NDP tax hikes. Only Wildrose is standing up for hard-working Albertans against these massive tax hikes. What evidence does the government have that says that higher taxes, more bureaucracy, and increased red tape leads to job creation and economic growth?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm guessing that it's coming to me. I wasn't quite sure there. Let me clarify to the member that, first of all, the creation of this ministry was exactly to provide business and industry with a one-stop shop, one place to come to government, where we can work with the private sector to help them navigate, whether it's through forms or whatnot. We also believe that we want to simplify and streamline processes. But let me reiterate that on Friday of last week the Finance minister and the Premier announced our small-business tax cut, where we're cutting small-business taxes by . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that during the election I also met Stan, a small-business owner who has a few employees in the Sundre area, some of them right around the minimum wage, who since the implementation of the NDP's radical and risky economic policy has let one of his employees go so that he could keep the rest of his staff and given that that means another hard-working Albertan is out of a job because of this NDP government, when will the Premier learn that her risky economic manifestos have real-life consequences in our communities?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, our hearts go out to any individual who has been impacted. The record low decline in terms of oil and gas revenues has impacted all of us, whether it's provincial revenues, where we've seen royalties go down by 90 per cent, or whether it's a family who has been impacted by the low price of oil. This is one of the reasons why we're doing the prudent thing and working to diversify our economy. The strategies of the last 10 years under both Conservative governments, federal and provincial, didn't get a pipeline built to tidewater, Mr. Speaker, and it certainly didn't help us diversify our economy.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just wish to remind you: preambles are being included and ought not be. Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Given that this government needs to stop experimenting with radical economic theories and get back to the business of governing and given that we recently saw the consequences of its negligence when the environment minister refused to heed Wildrose warnings about serious aeration concerns and because of that Alberta's lakes have now lost tens of thousands of fish, to the Premier: how can Albertans trust you with their jobs when your government can't even keep this province's fish alive?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the question was about lake aeration. The Alberta Conservation Association's use of bubble diffusers instead of traditional surface aerators has resulted in a partial to complete collapse of a number of stocked fisheries. Environment and Parks is committed to managing fisheries to provide abundant and sustainable fishing opportunities. Through an MOU with Environment and Parks the Alberta Conservation Association is responsible for aerating many of our lakes to improve survival of stocked fish throughout the winter. This season, due to the ACA's concerns regarding section 263 of the Criminal Code, the ACA tested a bubble diffuser, and it did not achieve the results.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP budget is an alarming departure from the fiscal responsibility that Albertans have to display in their lives every day. Six months ago this government legislated a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio, which is a huge concern in and of itself, but now it has no ceiling whatsoever and there's no timeline or even an intention to ever pay it back. Last month Calgary-Lougheed constituents urged you to control spending. To the Finance minister: why have you ignored this advice from Albertans clear across Alberta, who simply want you to treat their hard-earned tax dollars with respect?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this side of the House treats every tax dollar with respect. The 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit that we have removed from the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act has been removed to provide the flexibility required to deal with the current economic situation. Unless they, you know, haven't noticed on the other side of the House, we're in two years of recession. It's the worst downturn this province has felt in a generation. We're dealing with that. That side of the House over here wasn't able to balance a budget with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: With great respect, I'm not sure if either party over here knew that I was talking about everyday Albertans.

Now, given that finding efficiencies and savings in a $51 billion budget is something the NDP simply did not care to do in this budget, which Albertans are calling many things, including irresponsible, unconscionable, and I daresay much worse, and given that Albertans directed their government to be fiscally responsible by controlling spending and investing strategically, to the minister. Before the budget and our Engage document our PC caucus offered you a $4 billion challenge. Why did you ignore this, not just this but the advice of Albertans clear across this province, who are now forced to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Hon. member, when I stand, please sit.

Mr. Rodney: I am sitting, sir.

Mr. Ceci: You know, the number of people who have come forward to say that they validate and are supportive of this budget is significant. Ken Gibson of the Alberta Construction Association said that we applaud the number of measures in Budget 2016, and he goes on to talk about a number of things that will put Albertans back to work and assist those very Albertans that you're talking about. The University of Lethbridge President Mike Mahon says that the destination project will make it possible for the government of Alberta to transform the University of Lethbridge so there are validators for postsecondary, for business, for jobs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Rodney: We agree with infrastructure spending; we just would like to see a plan to pay it back.

Given that the NDP's fiscal left turn was so alarming that our hard-earned provincial credit rating was downgraded yet again – and this increases the burden on taxpayers by untold billions of dollars – and given that our municipal governments will face higher interest rates as a result of this, which they have no choice but to pass on to the same Albertans, which is an unmistakable message that the NDP is taking Alberta in the wrong financial direction, Minister, can you give Albertans one good reason why you think that this is a good idea in any way for any Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I think the reason is that there won't be long hospital wait lines, there won't be crowded schools, and there won't be an absence of affordable housing throughout this province. Those are the things that we provide, the services to Albertans, and we're going to keep doing it.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Carson: Mr. Speaker, many families are struggling to find safe, affordable housing, especially during the current economic downturn. I understand that there are a large number of people on waiting lists for affordable housing programs, and that number is growing. My question is for the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is the minister doing to address the waiting lists and help ensure vulnerable Albertans can find a place to live?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I share the member's concern about the number of families that are waiting for housing supports. I'm very aware of the need for housing for lower income Albertans. I can also tell the member that affordable housing is a high priority for our government moving forward. The fact that "Housing" has been added to my ministry's name is one sign that it is a higher priority for our government. We will continue to work with our housing management bodies and community partners to help as many people as possible.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Some affordable housing properties, like the townhouses in Londonderry in Edmonton, are being closed because they are in very poor condition and no longer habitable. At a time when we are short of affordable housing units, why are these properties being allowed to deteriorate to the point where no one can live in them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member has touched on one of the key challenges that we face. Most of our government-owned or -supported housing stock is more than 30 years old and in need of significant maintenance and repairs. We inherited a $1 billion maintenance and repair backlog from the previous government. We will ensure capital funding is targeted for repair and maintenance of existing units. Doing this helps us look after what we have and gives management bodies the ability to quickly turn units around to help address waiting lists.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government has promised to invest in affordable housing, can the minister tell us if any of that money will be invested here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to tell the member that our partnership with the federal government gives me much hope for the future of affordable housing. As the member points out, the new federal government has committed to invest in social infrastructure, which includes affordable housing. We have had discussions with our federal counterparts about these investments, and I expect that these discussions will lead to a definite plan in the near future. I look forward to working with my federal counterpart, and I am confident federal dollars will find their way towards Alberta's affordable housing.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Climate Change Strategy

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government created a climate leadership panel as a smokescreen. That panel clearly stated that a carbon tax must be made revenue neutral by offsetting reductions equal to the amount of the carbon tax. Instead, we have a scheme that will grow to cost Albertans an extra $1,000 in taxes each year, financing government bloat on the backs of Alberta's poor, unemployed, fixed-income seniors, and others. Will this government do the compassionate thing and take a giant leap back from this harmful carbon tax?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many, many ways to describe the mischaracterization of what the Official Opposition is doing with these numbers, that are wrong. One could try wrong, one could try economizing with the truth, misrepresenting reality, grabbing numbers out of thin air. I think earlier today I called it intellectually lazy. It is also slovenly. It is also like throwing spaghetti at the wall. There's a noun to describe what they are doing; it starts with an L and ends with an E.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier, who is driven around in a Suburban, flippantly said that those who are feeling the acute impact of her government's costly carbon tax should just change their car and given that this NDP government doesn't seem to realize that the lucky ones in our current economy have seen their hours rolled back, their wages decreased, never mind over 100,000 who have lost their jobs, when will this government realize just how damaging this carbon tax policy is and put an end to it before they destroy Alberta?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, when you answer the next question, I would like to draw attention to section 29 of the Standing Orders. Please adjust accordingly.

Ms Phillips: Understood, Mr. Speaker.

I would commend to the hon. member the Ecofiscal Commission Choose Wisely report. The analysis suggested that:

transferring between 3% and 9% of carbon revenues to lower-income households could fully offset this burden . . .

and that

. . . successful investments in innovation and emissions-reducing technology in Alberta would help improve the performance of the oil sands . . . Such improved performance would help to position it as a longer-term participant in global oil markets.

Mr. Speaker, this is about making our economy resilient for the future.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, given that these hard-core socialists are using the climate panel's report as a smokescreen to destroy our resource economy, destroy our agricultural sector, impoverish our people through oppressive taxation, and force the redistribution of wealth into the hands of a bloated government, since the Premier says with her mouth that she repudiates the Leap Manifesto but given her actions against our job-creating industries and private-sector unions and farmers and our most vulnerable, we have to ask this question: how are her actions different from the Leap Manifesto?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the characterizations of the hon. member are false. One of the reasons we know that is that the largest employers in the Leader of the Official Opposition's riding had this to say about it. For example, Shell Canada: "I firmly believe that Alberta's climate plan is a win for both the economy and the environment." CAPP: "Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan provides direction that will allow the oil and natural gas industry to grow." Cenovus: "I believe it will lead to Albertans and Canadians receiving full value for their oil and natural gas resources." CNRL: Alberta wins at today's announcement. Those are the validators for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Investor Tax Credit

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, our caucus called for the introduction of a small business venture capital tax credit in our recent Engage document. In this we noted unconditional success in British Columbia, where every tax dollar generated almost $2 of provincial tax revenue. However, my concern is that this government has injected a lack of foresight into an excellent formula, diluting chances of success. To the minister of economic development: why are you handicapping this program with a narrow focus on a handful of industries? Instead of choosing winners and losers, why not make it accessible to all of Alberta's struggling small businesses?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, our government did listen to business and industry. I'm very proud to have announced the investor tax credit, which will create thousands of jobs in our province, here in Alberta.

You know, it's quite rich coming from the third party. They had 40 years to do something like this and failed to whereas our government is committed. We have an Alberta jobs plan. There are a number of initiatives that we will be rolling out that will help Albertans get back to work and help create new sectors and build on our strengths, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Albertans are getting dissed with this new Alberta disadvantage. Given that we heard this government campaign all through the election about how they would create 27,000 jobs with their job creation plan and given that they stuck with this method all through the fall only to scrap the plan without having created one job outside of the minister's office, one worries about the commitment that this government has to do their own job creation initiatives. To the minister: why are you delaying the rollout on this tax credit program until January 2017, and are you actually committed to following this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm quite proud of the fact that our government throughout the fall went out and consulted with business and industry leaders, and they said to us: your initiative, the job creation incentive plan, is likely not going to incent new jobs. So they said, "You know, we have other suggestions on wiser, more prudent ways to help the economy move forward," and that's exactly what our budget is doing. We pivoted that program. We've dropped the small-business tax by 1 per cent, which is something that we've been talking about for many years. We've implemented it, and we now have an investment tax credit.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, congratulations on the one job.

Given that our caucus and the small- and medium-sized business owners across Alberta are now waiting for details on this program and given that this program does have the potential to be highly effective if utilized correctly, I would like some clarifications on a few details. To the Minister of Finance: what is the annual maximum tax credit for individual investors? What is the annual maximum limit for corporate investors? Can these tax credits be rolled forward if they are not used in their entirety during a particular tax year? Some details, please.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question, a very good question. On our program that we announced today, throughout the summer and early fall we'll be consulting with stakeholders and industry leaders to ensure that we get the parameters of this program right. I can tell you, for example, that this program does exist in British Columbia. They have quite a low limit – I think it's around $60,000 – that an individual can invest, and we've heard feedback from those that do business in that province that say that that cap is too low; it helps early start-ups, but it's not doing what it's meant to for medium-sized industries and businesses. That's why we will be . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Horizon School

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you about a place where hope, opportunity, and education meet. Horizon school is a jewel in the crown of the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and Chinook's Edge school division. The school is a provincial leader in educating students with special needs. Students at Horizon face a variety of challenges, including communication difficulties, physical disabilities, cognitive delays, and significant mental health challenges. The school provides world-class educational programming that is custom designed for the individual. Perhaps more important than leading the province in special-needs education is that it provides hope for families, an inclusive place for students to belong, and opportunities for the community. Over the past 24 months Horizon school has doubled in size and is bursting at the seams. I am so proud of the hard work of parents and teachers to continue to provide this critical school environment for so many students, as many students as possible.

As a province we have a responsibility to our most vulnerable, yet one of the largest stresses that parents face is considering what life will look like for their child after Horizon. Graduation for most students, Mr. Speaker, should be an exciting day, but for students of Horizon it comes with a new set of fears and challenges. Community organizations, parents, and other stakeholders are currently working to provide new inclusive opportunities for students that may include Horizon university or an educational space called the hub. It's my hope that the province will work closely with key stakeholders to be leaders in Canada to work to continue these educational opportunities.

To the parents of these precious individuals: keep up the incredible work you do. You make all of our lives richer.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table copies of a graph provided by Trevor Tombe, assistant professor of economics at the University of Calgary, entitled Where Will Alberta's Carbon Tax Revenues Go? It shows that 56 per cent of them will be spent on output-based results to large emitters.

The Speaker: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the Alberta Party shadow budget 2016-17, entitled A Better Way. It balances in four years, accommodates for population growth, uses more conservative revenue forecasts than the government but still continues to build infrastructure, all without plunging Alberta into crippling levels of debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg your amusement for a minute. I have the pleasure to table five copies of the Brooks-Spruce Grove junior hockey finals. It is my pleasure to challenge the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert to a friendly wager. I bet him $100 to the winner's food bank and to wear the winning team's jersey in the Legislature at the first sitting after the final.

The Speaker: We'll have to talk about the jersey part.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to table five copies of the same schedule. Of course, the Spruce Grove Saints are obviously going to win because they started in St. Albert. How can two of the best communities lose?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a document from the Asthma Society of Canada. The Asthma Society of Canada has chosen to give an award to this government based on the announcement of our coal-fired phase-out, indicating that they know "there is a direct link between the burning of coal and asthma exacerbations, hospital admissions, and untimely deaths, not to mention climate change." The Alberta government, in their words, "has responded to protect the health of all Albertans."

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the Workers' Compensation Board agriculture sector information package for the 14 weeks ending April 9. This summary report contains updated information on employer operations, injury statistics, and the 154 accepted claims.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table this document issued today by Iron and Earth endorsing our government's support for training opportunities included in the Alberta jobs plan. Iron and Earth is an organization comprised of oil sands workers who want to transition into new jobs in the green-energy economy, and this is definitely an organization that has an impact in my riding. I applaud the vision of this organization, and we are honoured by this endorsement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe there was a point of order that was drawn. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today during question period during an answer that was being given by the Minister of Finance to a question, the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky shouted out: lies. Now, we should all know that that violates 23(h), (i), and (j) of the standing orders. As well, I'm looking at previous rulings that have been made by the chair in this Assembly. Since 2000 there have been 35 rulings from the chair with respect to the use of that word or words very much like it. That is unacceptable. I think that it is beneath the dignity of this House, and I would ask that the hon. member withdraw the remark and apologize to the House and to the minister.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to rise. Certainly, Speakers in the past have ruled that this language is unparliamentary. I have a little bit of a hearing challenge today, so I'm not entirely sure if that word was used or not. Certainly, if that word was used – it sounds like it must have been – I would be happy to withdraw it on behalf of my colleague and ensure he's aware of that being unparliamentary language. With that said, I understand that there have been times just in the past couple of weeks that that word has been used, particularly – well, it doesn't matter who. But it has been used. As you so rightly pointed out, sir, the minister of environment today was certainly leaning in that direction. Unless she was spelling the word "love," I would say that it was also inappropriate. For today I'm happy to withdraw and apologize on behalf of the member.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Hon. Opposition House Leader, I'm pleased that you offered the apology.

I did not hear the remark, for the record. I did not personally hear it largely because, as I continue to remind you, it's that other words are being said. Trying to hear in here, it's the volume issue that continues to impair the dialogue in this place. I would urge both sides of the House to reconsider that as we move forward.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 204 Alberta Tourism Week Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to start off the debate on Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act. I want to first start off by thanking all of my colleagues, the people in my constituency, and supporters of this bill, who have encouraged me to think about this idea and help start a conversation and dialogue about creating a week dedicated to promoting tourism in our beautiful province of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, This bill was born out of my conversations with stakeholders, with municipalities, and with many people who have told me that we need to find ways of promoting tourism in this province as a means of diversification. I've met with mayors and business and industry stakeholders in tourism across the province over the last several months, and the value of tourism and the value of these diversification opportunities has truly resonated with me. Time and time again I hear of the importance of supporting our tourism industry and promoting our tourism industry as an amazing opportunity to diversify our economy; not only that but so that we can be proud about our province because we have so much to be proud of here.

Mr. Speaker, our province has some of the most amazing man-made and natural heritage sites in the world. Some of my personal favourites include the pysanka in Vegreville, the perogy in Glendon, and, of course, the landing pad in Vulcan along with the Star Trek themed hotel. Whether it's digging for dinosaurs in the Canadian badlands or canoeing in paradise in the provincial parks, going ice-fishing with bannock in the bag, following the northern lights in Elk Island, driving the scenic highways in the breathtaking Rockies, enjoying international heritage in the August Heritage Festival, the Stampede in Calgary, Klondike days in Edmonton or still-standing grey and sagging pioneer homes and barns, mixed-wood forests, wind farms of Pincher Creek, and the centuries-old heritage of the indigenous peoples that we have here in Alberta, Alberta has it all. We are something to be proud of. We are something to be proud of that we should show off to the world.

Mr. Speaker, visits to these beautiful heritage sites is an $8 billion industry employing over 127,000 people in this great province. Alberta is culturally and geographically diverse, a province with a multitude of opportunities for travel, tourism. The tourism industry contributes greatly to the economy, and the continued growth of this industry promotes that great economic diversification in Alberta. I think that a week-long celebration of tourism in Alberta will provide an opportunity for organizations, regions, cities, towns to collaborate and to promote the tourism that we want to show the world, to promote Alberta, and to promote this province.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am bringing this legislation to the House today. The first week of June is traditionally Tourism Week in Canada. It's led by the Tourism Industry Association of Canada. This is a grassroots initiative that strives to bring attention to the economic opportunities available to Canada through travel and tourism and the public policy challenges preventing the sector from capitalizing on these opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, by embracing the vision of an Alberta tourism week, we will be contributing to the continued diversification of our economy and our shared goal to foster awareness amongst communities about the importance of tourism: its social, its cultural, and its economic value. The week would be an ideal opportunity to further showcase tourism in Alberta as a key contributor to the provincial economy, that helps to create jobs and encourages investments in all communities across our entire great province. It is a week that is already supported by the government of Canada and is celebrated in other provinces such as Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Newfoundland and Labrador. By creating an Alberta tourism week, it will allow our local stakeholders a specific outlet to promote our province and our local tourism activities.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that the government of Alberta, through Culture and Tourism, is proud to support the growth of tourism, especially by promoting our rural tourism activities. I am proud to be a part of and supporting a government that is working to diversify and strengthen this provincial economy. Tourism has been identified as an important contributor to diversifying Alberta's economy away from energy dependence and away from a roller coaster that takes away from our ability to provide services for Albertans everywhere.

As I've already stated, Mr. Speaker, currently tourism is an $8 billion industry, and the over $8 billion spent in Alberta by visitors supports 127,000 jobs and more than 19,000 businesses, including many small and family-owned businesses across the province. Rural tourism is a growing piece of Alberta's tourism industry and is already making that significant impact that we all strive to achieve. Having said that, there is always the potential for more growth, especially given our province's incredible natural and man-made attractions, events, and destinations. This bill will help not only tourism operators and organizations but municipal representatives in promoting Alberta's many tourist attractions. It will also help support the job creators such as our local eateries, our local coffee shops, our tour operators, hotels, and bed and breakfasts. Small businesses in all corners of our province will benefit.

Mr. Speaker, as rightly pointed out by the minister in the House earlier this month, I think tourism is a pipeline that brings people to invest in our economy. A week-long celebration of tourism in Alberta will provide an opportunity for businesses, organizations, regions, and municipalities to collaborate and to promote tourism across this province. I'm confident that this piece of legislation will grow this industry, making it an even bigger contributor to our economy to support that much-needed diversification.

Designating this tourism week in Alberta will contribute to setting a common vision in our province. It will encourage everyone to join forces in collaborating and maximizing resources that celebrate the passion and commitment of Alberta's tourism industry while attracting even more visitors, even more investors and attracting those people so that we can broaden our horizons and we can show off the amazing province that we all love to call home. Mr. Speaker, it will help us to grow our visitor economy in this province to over a $10 billion industry in 2020, which will allow us to become a diversified economy and allow us to support our entrepreneurs, support our local businesses, support our small companies and our employers.

This is why I'm very proud today to introduce Bill 204, so that we can move forward as a province and move forward to make sure that we are supporting our economy and supporting our communities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm impressed by the scenic trip that you took us through the province of Alberta. You neglected to mention Medalta and the largest teepee in Medicine Hat.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd really like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for proposing a bill that does no harm. That's the first and most important rule of government, and I really hope that your colleagues will be able to follow suit and create one-sentence bills from now on that do no harm.

Let me say right at the outset that I will be in support of this bill. I think it's got a great intention. I do have to say, though, that as a feel-good bill the intention is somewhat called into question by the actions of the current government. A few days ago Albertans were hit like a truck with this government's horrendous deficit and carbon tax budget. Talk about slashing our credit rating and burning our future in orange flames. While the Alberta Council of Technologies recently released a report that stated that tourism in Alberta was our third most resilient industry, the budget isn't making things better; it's making them worse. So I do feel like the words of this bill are getting drowned out by the actions of the government.

Fortunately, with the low cost of the Canadian dollar people have been inclined to come to Alberta to see our gorgeous mountains and our beautiful plains and our peaceful lakes. Tragically, though, they're now full of dead fish, which may have to be cleaned up. I truly wish the environment minister had taken our advice and saved the fish in our lakes while she had the chance. Now that aspect of our tourism will be suffering as well.

There are other aspects of our tourism industry, though, that are thriving, or at least they were last year. This coming year will see an increase to the carbon tax, which will cancel out most of the benefits of a low dollar. The cost of fuel will increase thanks to the carbon tax. Alberta is a huge place. You can't just walk to most places. It's tough for most people, especially tourists, to walk from Jasper to Banff. You have to drive or bus or fly across this province to really enjoy its beauty. One of the major drivers of tourism to Alberta is direct flights from other countries. The carbon tax will increase the costs to those airlines. Will this discourage the flights available and then people from coming to Alberta? The carbon tax will make flights more expensive, reduce scheduled flights, and hurt tourism.

Promotion is great – I do agree – but realities are more sobering. Let's be realistic here: 95 per cent of our tourism dollar is generated by Albertans in this province. Our own tourists are going to be hit hard by restaurant prices increasing due to carbon tax and minimum wage increases. The cost of food will increase because every aspect of harvesting the food and getting it to markets will be affected by the carbon tax and wage increases. Hotels and restaurants will become more expensive due to these increased prices. Tourism will be put off by the increased cost to their living and eating arrangements.

The low Canadian dollar and one week promoting Alberta will not be incentive enough to make up for the lost revenue our tourism industry will see these next few years. Promoting tourism is good. Helpful policy would be much, much better. Tourism in Alberta will be hurt by the damaging, risky ideological experiments our government is implementing.

I also question a little bit the member's choice of date for this tourism week. Last year we already celebrated the week. The same as this bill does, we promoted Canadian Tourism Week. As has been mentioned, Canadian Tourism Week does happen the first week of June. So why choose the same date again? Is it to compound the value? Is it to promote Alberta? Will this government, then, not acknowledge Canadian Tourism Week in place of Alberta tourism week? Will that encourage more or less tourism? We all agree that there's a need to promote tourism, but the real question is: has the Tourism Industry Association of Canada or the Tourism Industry Association of Alberta actually been consulted about this choice of time? I mean, they know their needs more than anyone else. Have they had their input specifically on that? Alberta is special. Should it be hidden underneath Canadian Tourism Week? Maybe it's a benefit; maybe it's not. Alberta should probably promote its own week and not be overshadowed by the entire country.

Two weeks of promoting Alberta might be better than one, the first promoting Canada, the second promoting Alberta alone. We could have chosen, say, for instance, the first week of December or Alberta's birthday and invited the world to celebrate a birthday party with us by encouraging them to visit our province. We could have chosen a week during July or August, when kids are actually out of school and people take their vacations. Ninety-five per cent of Alberta's tourism is local. People would be encouraged to spend the entire week here in Alberta during our warmest months, when they can visit with their children.

Consulting is the issue, and I think that with this overlap with Canadian Tourism Week, the whole issue stems back to the endless problem of this government not actually consulting with industry. The government didn't consult on Bill 6, didn't consult on the failed job-creation plan, didn't consult on Bill 203. Have they consulted anyone in the industry before creating this bill? There are lots and lots of stakeholders that have an interest in this bill: the Hotel & Lodging Association, sport tourism, Seniors Games, Alberta Sport Connection, and dozens and dozens of other industry players. They all would have had valuable input into this bill. Did the stakeholders want the member to promote Alberta during a week that would be overshadowed by Canadian Tourism Week? Has he consulted with them?

I also have a few questions regarding the cost that this bill will add to Tourism's budget. How will Alberta tourism week be promoted by the government? How much will it cost to advertise Alberta tourism week? Has the member actually even consulted with the minister to ensure that they will be able to afford to promote Alberta during this week? The Tourism budget is, I respectfully acknowledge, down in a difficult time, where the government is trying to find cost savings. Will the ministry be able to fund this, or even should it? The cost is completely unknown. How are we to know what the cost will actually be? Could there be better delivery channels for this initiative? The Tourism Industry Association of Canada actually delivers the Canadian one. Why not the Tourism Industry Association of Alberta? Questions to be asked.

Of course, tourism is important in our province. I am in support of tourism, and like every other industry, it's important that we support tourism and ensure that it continues to create jobs in Alberta. Personally, I've spent weeks and weeks canoeing the many rivers and lakes of Alberta. That's my form of tourism. If there's one thing I know, it's that Alberta is a beautiful place, and it deserves to be promoted, so I will be supporting the bill.

Furthermore, my riding of Lacombe-Ponoka has a great deal of tourism in it and would benefit from tourism in Alberta being promoted. We have many museums that would benefit. There's a corn maze, berry-picking farms, and beef and dairy farms that allow visitation, open to the public. During the week we have all kinds of festivals: Lacombe Days, the Ponoka Stampede. By this bill the promotion of Alberta tourism in general would be beneficial for those festivals.

I'm glad that the Member for Edmonton-South West believes that the promotion of Alberta tourism is important. I just wish that he would have consulted with industry specifically on it: on the date, worked out some of the costs, questioned a little more carefully who should actually take the lead on this. But it is what it is. I encourage all the members to vote in support of Bill 204 and support tourism in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to speak in support of the proposed Bill 204, acknowledging a provincial tourism week. I wish to impress upon the House that Bill 204 gives rise to our ability to celebrate and engage our communities with each other, Canada, and the world.

Mr. Speaker, tourism helps the economy immensely. It is another aspect of diversification that stimulates the economy while promoting municipal, provincial, and stakeholder conversations. What more than proud Albertans are our constituents? Alberta is unique and, as such, has great capacity to showcase the beautiful landscape that makes our communities. The raw glory that surrounds us makes Bill 204 a tremendous opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I am the MLA for Red Deer-North. Red Deer is the third-largest city in Alberta and has many opportunities to celebrate as well as capitalize on Alberta tourism week. Nestled in the hub of central Alberta, Red Deer has numerous opportunities to embrace a celebration of itself as a central component to our great province.

My city has just over 100,000 citizens, who are fortunate to enjoy the breadth of what Alberta has to offer. On a clear day we can gaze to the west to glimpse the splendour that is our mountains. Within the boundaries of Red Deer municipally, however, is an excess of natural beauty. Red Deer is committed to promoting and enhancing a healthy lifestyle. With more than 100 kilometres of easily accessible trails inside the city, we have championed the connections between Red Deerians and nature. Amongst the trails are variable landscapes supporting the beauty of the Red Deer River and its accompanying wooded areas.

If you follow the right trail, it will lead you to our remarkable Kerry Wood nature centre, a beautiful, nature-based playground that encourages those who visit to learn more about the area's wildlife, environment, extensive history, and interpretation centre. It is a testament to the beauty that our central Alberta gem has to offer. Its versatility allows 85,000 annual visitors to enjoy its exhibits, programs, tours, and heritage regardless of age.

Mr. Speaker, we also have an extensive paved trail system that is enjoyed by joggers, walkers, and cyclists and is kept clear all year round. Some of these trails connect to our outdoor gym facilities. On a beautiful day you can see constituents strive for excellence as each contains 12 double fitness machines. All outdoor gyms have benches, playgrounds, and picnic areas that connect to our widespread trail systems.

Some trails lead to our beautiful Bower Ponds, a classic setting where Albertans can rent a kayak, canoe, or paddleboat if they don't have one of their own. Nestled in the beautiful north end of our great city, Bower Ponds hosts our Canada Day fireworks every year. An outdoor stage gives opportunity for entertainment to be enjoyed in the beauty that is Red Deer. Overlooked by the historical Cronquist House, a Victorian farmhouse, Bower Ponds is steeped in history.

Mr. Speaker, I can speak to so many aspects of Red Deer that would benefit immensely from the proposed Bill 204. All of our constituencies make up the beautiful province of Alberta. What I wish to touch upon, however, is our ability to showcase the natural beauty, historical sites, and tourist attractions which promote the vitality of our Albertans.

Job development is key to our government right now, and this engages sound governance through economic development. In Red Deer our government has committed to supporting the expansion of our airport, and that aligns with Bill 204 as we become a destination that is accessible. As the future home of the 2019 Canada Winter Games, Red Deer has much to gain from the proposed Bill 204. Why come to Red Deer? We are a destination and a point of departure. We are central to this great province and, as such, have much to share with the rest of Alberta, Canada, and the world.

Mr. Speaker and fellow members, let us remember that we are currently amidst economic challenges. Bill 204 is not just a fantastic opportunity to capitalize on the greatness of our province, but it is truly a remarkable occasion to engage our Albertans positively. Positivity is a very important element to Bill 204. It is the very essence of why we should showcase individually the hidden treasures that our constituencies have in a week that celebrates our great province. It engages us to be proud and to truly appreciate Alberta as a beautiful province with much to share with everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I support Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act, and encourage all of our members to support this bill as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm absolutely delighted to speak in support of Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act. I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for proposing this bill, and I'd like to thank him very much, indeed, you know.

The constituency of Banff-Cochrane is arguably one of the most delightful constituencies in the entire province, I think. We attract tourists from all around the world, who come to see our mountains, our agricultural landscapes, our forested areas, enjoy all sorts of activities in Banff-Cochrane. But I know that this bill itself isn't just about Banff-Cochrane; it's about the entire province, and I'm absolutely delighted to be showcasing Alberta in this way.

Just before I get started here, I'd like to respond to a question that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka brought up earlier about who was engaged in the consultations and who did we speak to regarding this. I know that the Member for Edmonton-South West had spoken to various mayors, people in Travel Alberta, people working in the industry such as Brewster, a very well-known travel company, and, of course, many others. I myself have spoken to, actually, the award-winning CEO of Canmore Business and Tourism. He's won an award for an event that I was fortunate to attend just this past week, which I'll speak a little more on later. Absolutely, the people that I've spoken to that are very interested in the tourism industry, especially in my riding, were extremely supportive of this and especially the first week of June.

One of the reasons for that was that in Canmore and Banff during the summertime their rooms are full, and they actually don't need to promote tourism because they've got almost too many people to begin with in those times of year. So they said that the beginning of June was a very good time because, you know, their hotel rooms aren't full. It's a good time to get out in the summer. There are wildflowers, lots of things to do outside, so early June was an excellent time according to them. So that's why I'm standing in support of this.

You know, tourism week would give the industry even further opportunities to collaborate to promote tourism in Alberta. I know that the tourism industry is already very collaborative, that they work together. I understand there used to be a bit of an adversarial relationship sometimes between communities. For example, Canmore and Banff would often sort of fight each other for tourists, but they've come to a better understanding of how to work together in a collaborative fashion to support each other. It's not about competing for tourists in general. They just want to bring people to the region, so having a province-wide collaboration would be absolutely positive for the tourism industry.

It's a way that we can work together and maximize our return on investment, and, you know, promoting Alberta and sort of concentrating it, perhaps, around one week as a group effort is a way for us to make better use of our advertising dollars, I think. It's also a great opportunity to acknowledge Alberta's hard-working tourism industry. We can attract even more visitors and investors around the province.

I'd like to just talk about a couple of attractions that we have in Alberta. I know the Member for Edmonton-South West mentioned a few earlier. I think that promoting tourism in Alberta also gives us a great opportunity to tell the story of Alberta to the rest of the world, and we have a great story to tell here.

Our climate leadership plan is turning heads around the world. People are looking to Alberta and saying: they're finally taking climate change seriously. So, you know, people around the world are saying: hey, I want to go and see what they're doing there; like, what is going on in Alberta, and what is this great climate leadership plan that they've come up with? This is groundbreaking stuff, and it's certainly attracting a lot of attention.

One of the ways that that's attracting attention is through some World Cup events. In the Canmore Nordic Centre just recently we had a World Cup of cross-country skiing and a World Cup of biathlon. There were millions and millions of television viewers watching these events live on TV. A lot of the viewers are concentrated in Europe and Asia. Showcasing Alberta in such a way, in Canmore we had beautiful bluebird skies, you know, beautiful white snow, and incredible athletes just showing off their talents. People from across the world are seeing Alberta in this kind of light, and they're hearing about our climate change plan, and they say: I want to go and visit that place; that place looks pretty awesome.

Another part of the story that we can tell through promoting tourism is through the Fort McMurray Oil Sands Discovery Centre. This is, you know, an excellent facility up near Fort McMurray. It tells the story of our incredible energy sector in the province and all that we have to be thankful for, for the wealth that it's generated for our province and the jobs it creates.

We have stories in the energy sector that go back even further; for example, in Drumheller the Atlas coal mine. I believe they're doing some refurbishments and some community fundraising for refurbishing some of their infrastructure there. This tells the story of Alberta's coal mining past. If you haven't been there, I'd really encourage you to go to the Atlas mines. They have a working model of a train. You know, it's an incredible site to see. You can actually go in the old tippie and everything like that. It's marvellous.

Similar coal mining stories would be found in the Frank Slide in the Crowsnest Pass. It's a tragic event, obviously, that happened, but it has to do with our mining history and how resilient Albertans are, that we can go through disasters like this and, you know, still pull together and support one another.

We're fortunate here in Alberta to have Wood Buffalo national park. It's actually Canada's largest national park. It's also one of the biggest national parks in the world. This is a way for us to preserve our natural landscapes, work towards our conservation targets that have been set out in some respects for looking at interconnected spaces and protected spaces.

Another great attraction is the Royal Tyrrell Museum. This tells the story of Alberta's geologic past. We've got fossils and dinosaurs that people come from around the world to see in the Royal Tyrrell Museum and do research right there in Drumheller.

Of course, you know, I have to mention some of the amazing attractions in Banff-Cochrane. In Bragg Creek, my hometown, they have festivals throughout the year at various times, Bragg Creek Days, where they've got parades, incredible local vendors that are promoting some of the talents of Bragg Creek residents.

The charming town of Cochrane has MacKay's ice cream. Now, who here hasn't been to MacKay's ice cream? [interjections] So, you know, there you go. It's a charming little downtown. They've tried to maintain that real western feel in the architecture of their buildings. They have a lot of independent shops downtown. It's a great place to walk around with your family.

The village of Waiparous, just sort of to the west of Cochrane, has incredible off-highway vehicle trails for people to take their trucks and ATVs and whatnot on. This is another way that we can tell the story of Alberta and get people to come and experience what it's like in the forests of Alberta. You know, you can get on your ATV and go for a quick drive and see some incredible natural landscapes.

Of course, I have to talk about Ghost Lake. The Ghost Lake reservoir is another wonderful natural asset, of course, a man-made asset. It provides incredible recreation opportunities to people in the Calgary region. It's one of our best medium-sized reservoir water bodies where people can go water-skiing and sailing, that kind of thing.

There's the Stoney Nakoda Resort & Casino just at the doorstep to Kananaskis country. It's an incredible facility. The First Nation there is looking at that as an economic development opportunity for the nation. They've been quite successful. I understand that even during the economic downturn they're still doing quite well, and that's great news to hear. I know they're looking at possible expansion around the casino in terms of having an RV park and a gas station, coffee shop, and whatnot.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today on Bill 204. It's enjoyable every once in a while when all members of the Assembly can find some agreement to latch onto, and certainly the intent of Bill 204 is positive. It has the potential to strengthen an industry that is already thriving.

I think what's important is that we all just take a moment to breathe because in this province it's very easy – you need to remember to breathe because when you don't, you can miss some incredible opportunities. Certainly, as we look across and around the province, we have a province that, in fact, does take your breath away, Mr. Speaker, and it is a province to be celebrated. From all around the world people come. People come to see this great land that we've been fortunate and blessed enough to call home, and it's not a responsibility or a blessing that we should take lightly because there are so many others who would love to be here, would love to be in this great province that we all call home. So when we have a chance to do things that allow us to share our community with others, I say that those are the types of things that need to be supported, and certainly tourism week has the opportunity to do that.

One of the potential challenges here, Mr. Speaker, though, is that if we get tied up or spend more focus and energy on just one week, it may divert some of our attention away from the rest of the year. I know that the good people at Travel Alberta have certainly done some great work in the past. That doesn't mean that Travel Alberta hasn't been challenge free, but they do some incredible work. So we need to make sure that we're not adding to the mix that would detract from the wonderful things that take place the rest of the year. Now, it's quite possible that inside the confines of Travel Alberta they'll have the capacity to move the Alberta tourism week forward, but I think that it's important that as we pass legislation, we do ensure that we're not passing on undue burden, that the return may or may not be there.

Now, in this case I certainly hope that it is there because I think what can happen is to expand that industry. While we are at a time where many people are talking about diversifying the economy, one of the things that the government ought to do is – and I recognize that this isn't a piece of government legislation. Generally speaking, one thing that we as legislators should do is look at our strengths and focus some of our time and attention on those strengths. I think of things like the agriculture and forestry sector, our number two industry. I believe that our number three industry is in tourism, so there is a real opportunity to work to diversify that economy, to take advantage of some of the things that are going on in the marketplace when it comes to the low Canadian dollar and encouraging our American friends to come and experience all that Alberta has to offer. We have an incredible place to share, and we ought to do that with as many people as we can from all around the globe and certainly from all across the country.

Now, I would be remiss if I didn't just mention that while the Member for Banff-Cochrane does a fine job of defending his constituency, I think we should all agree that the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is outstanding and, in fact, has so many great things to offer people from corner to corner and coast to coast and right around the world, whether it's our honey production or our mead production or the incredible number of innovative agrifood businesses that we have, that are so interesting that people actually come from all around the world to tour them, whether it's the postsecondary institutions that bring people to our province or the incredible number of day trips that can take place right in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for people to come and visit.

I think that it is a nice opportunity for us to join together and to support a piece of legislation like this. But I think it's important that we do everything we can as legislators to support tourism right across the province all year round as we focus on ways to create environments and to strengthen industries that do so much for this province.

I'm pleased to support Bill 204, and I look forward to the rest of the debate and to seeing this bill proceed through the legislative process.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act. I would like to commend the Member for Edmonton-South West for proposing this idea as a way to promote the many tourist attractions that we have here in Alberta and, in doing so, to support small businesses, who are the job creators in the province and help to diversify our economy.

Now, our province has some of the most amazing man-made and natural heritage, as you've heard from the speakers before me. However, today I wanted to speak about the world-class sporting events that we host and that bring tourists from Alberta, Canada, and the world to our communities. As this Assembly knows, myself and the Member for Edmonton-Centre are a bit fanatic about cycling. I am proud that the world is starting to recognize our wonderful roads and scenery, that provide for fantastic amateur and professional events. For example, for the last 20 years the Tour de l'Alberta has been held on the last day of the Tour de France. For 20 years this amateur tour, with distances from 50 kilometres to 185 kilometres and over 1,400 riders, has showcased the French communities outside of Edmonton such as Morinville, Legal, Bon Accord, and Gibbons.

For the first time this year the tour will start in another great francophone community, the community of Beaumont, and meander through Leduc county and visit Strathcona county. I would like to invite all of you on July 24 to join myself and, hopefully, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont in taking part in this cycling ride. There is no better way to discover rural areas than by cycling through them and discovering the joys of the yellow canola fields, the cows and the horses that follow your bike, and the occasional moose, fox, or coyote watching you.

Last Friday a professional Tour of Alberta was announced for 2016. This professional tour, that has 120 riders from all over the world, will start off in Lethbridge and end up in Edmonton. Last year the tour began in Grande Prairie, went to Jasper, and brought the amazing scenery of one of the national parks to millions and millions of world-wide cycling fans. I know that in Canada we're more into hockey than cycling, but – believe me – cycling is huge in Europe and many other parts of the world. While the peloton, which is the technical name for the group of cyclists, did not have not have an encounter with a black bear for a perfect tourist photo shoot last year, I can say that in the second year, while the peloton was going through Strathcona county, it was followed for a while by a huge moose. This was such an incredible way to demonstrate what Alberta has to offer to Europeans and others.

The Tour of Alberta is very unique as it is the only professional cycling race in Canada apart from one in Quebec. This event has for the last three years brought tourists, cycling teams, and fans from all around the world who have the opportunity to discover our wonderful province and, of course, spend tourist dollars here.

Another event is the Birkebeiner, which is held every year in Cooking Lake-Blackfoot provincial park in Strathcona county. This is the premier event for cross-country skiers. This event, with a variety of distances, is only one of three held outside of Europe. Many participants come to our region from across Canada and Europe. This event is geared to both professional and amateur racers and also to people like myself who ski recreationally. I think that in past years they've had about 1,200 cross-country skiers who have skied the race. There are also miniraces for families, and it's been my pleasure to volunteer to sweep these races, knowing that the five-year-old who participates in this race may become the professional racer who wins medals for Canada in the future.

In my own riding of Sherwood Park we have hosted a variety of national sporting events that bring visitors and their tourist dollars to the community. This year we hosted the Olympic wrestling trials, with the winners going to Rio de Janeiro to represent Canada, and in 2014 we hosted the Canada 55-plus Games, which saw over 2,000 athletes compete furiously for medals and the pride of their province. If you've never seen a 55-plus athlete compete for their province, you know, it's just incredible how dedicated you are to actually winning the older you get. I have to say that when you have 2,000 athletes who are 55-plus who come to your community to participate in something, you know that the hotels and the restaurants and so on are very happy with that.

At the end of April my riding is hosting another world-class event. It is the Grand Slam of Curling. While I look forward to watching the curling and cheering for the Albertan teams, I also know how important this event will be in my riding of Sherwood Park, especially to the hospitality industry, that has lost a lot of its room usage due to the downturn in the oil and gas sector.

While I have no agritourism businesses in my own riding, I am very aware of how important this type of tourist attraction is to rural Alberta. Yesterday I visited a local agritourism business, Prairie Farms, located near Bon Accord. This business contributes to the local economy through employing many local residents and helps families understand how food grows and hosts and supports a sustainable-food feast. I would like to take the opportunity to thank the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who was one of the promoters of the agritourism business when he was in cabinet. I see tourism week as an opportunity to promote the diversity of products grown in Alberta, be it the bison, the saskatoon berries, elk, rhubarb and raspberry wines, and, especially, the chefs and the restaurants that promote world-class meals using these products.

Madam Speaker, while some of us see Alberta as a place of our national parks and wonderful sceneries, I see Alberta and the promotion of tourism as promoting cycling and triathlon events and wrestling events and supporting our hospitality industry. I would once again like to thank the member for having put this bill to suggest that we have a tourism week.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests. I will need unanimous consent, so I'll ask one question: is anyone opposed to reverting to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a group of grade 6 students that have come for a visit from Captain Nichola Goddard middle school in the riding of Calgary-Northern Hills. They are accompanied by their teachers, Lindsay Gorday, Darren Grant, and Lindsay Wolkowski, and three parents as well. You'll also notice that many are wearing the purple sweaters for the Captain Nichola Goddard sports team, the Phoenix. I ask you all to please stand while my colleagues give you and your group the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: Welcome.

3:40      Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 204
Alberta Tourism Week Act

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills, you happen to be next on my list.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Well, thank you. Amazing how that worked here. Okay.

Madam Speaker, I rise today to discuss thoughts on private member's Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act. As a few of you might know, I've been an airline employee for the last two decades, and in my spare time I packed as much leisure travel as I possibly could into those years. I have frequented many popular tourist destinations and hot spots. Other times I have discovered some that were off the beaten track. Some of these little vacation gems are some of my favourite trips.

Madam Speaker, each year travellers come to Alberta to visit our parks, visit family and friends, and check out the outstanding landscape this province has to offer. Tourism helps to diversify the economy and creates lots of jobs and encourages development investment in communities all across Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I represent an electoral district on the northern edge of Calgary. We're well known for our hills, our trail systems, and, of course, our hospitality sector. However, many of my constituents are employed in the tourism industry through the neighbouring airport and all the industries related to its operation such as air traffic control, border services, ground services, and in-flight services, to name a few. More air traffic and flight arrivals mean that more people will have employment opportunities in tourism-related industries.

Calgary Airport Authority recently opened its fourth runway, in 2014. The runway is 4.2 kilometres long and 600 metres wide and is the longest runway in Canada. Needless to say, Calgary has clearly laid out the asphalt welcome mat to the world. With the expansion efforts at Calgary airport, airlines have taken notice. Beginning June 30 of this year, Hainan Airlines announced that it will offer direct service between Beijing and Calgary. The airline will start with three flights a week and will add an additional flight later in the year. Stephan Poirier, the chief commercial officer of Calgary Airport Authority, was quoted as saying that the new service would bring an estimated 600 jobs and contribute to an annual economic benefit of $75 million to the Calgary region.

New global markets are taking an interest in this province's abundance of travel experiences, and these efforts should be supported as much as possible. As the Member for Edmonton-South West mentioned earlier, tourism in Alberta is currently an $8 billion a year industry, with over $8 billion spent by visitors in Alberta annually. More than 127,000 jobs and more than 19,000 businesses, including many small and family-owned businesses, were supported across the province.

Madam Speaker, Tourism Week in Canada is lead by the tourism association of Canada. This generally commences annually on the first week of June. Many other provinces, such as Saskatchewan, Newfoundland and Labrador, and British Columbia, already have a tourism week. In the case of Saskatchewan and possibly others it coincides with Canada Tourism Week. By creating an Alberta tourism week, local stakeholders could have access to a specific outlet to promote our province and add to our local tourism activities. As mentioned earlier, this could complement the efforts of the government of Canada as well.

Madam Speaker, it might surprise you to know that I grew up in a small town, Wellington, Ontario, with a population of about 1,200 people in the community of Prince Edward county. Among the many tourist attractions that the county offered, we had Sandbanks provincial park, a famous beach known to many in Ontario and Quebec. As we grew up, we were educated in the school system and taught about the ecosystems and the history and the touristic opportunities that came with living so close to such a wonderful landmark. As well, some of the best summer jobs for high school students were at the provincial parks.

Later in life I became a ski instructor in Zell am Ziller, Austria, and there are many parts of the program to becoming a ski instructor. First, was that I physically trained to ski. The course was intense, especially with jet lag. There was also an academic piece to the training as part of the program explained the theory of positions and ski movements as well as emergency procedures such as injuries and what to do in the case of an avalanche. Finally, there was a section on tourism and hospitality. For the duration of the ski season I became a host for the tourism board of Austria. The point I'm making here, though, through both of these examples is that everyone is involved in tourism, whether you grow up and live beside a tourist attraction or become employed in the industry directly.

Tourism week could also have a component to it that recognizes and brings awareness to all people involved in the tourism sector. Similar to Saskatchewan Tourism Week, this could be done by appreciating the efforts of many of the communities that organize special activities. This could also be an opportunity to educate students on the value of landmarks in the communities that they live in. Finally, it could educate and reward those that work on the front lines and give such a memorable experience to our visitors. I think that a week-long celebration of tourism in Alberta would provide an opportunity for organizations, towns, and cities to collaborate and promote tourism in the province.

Madam Speaker, by embracing the vision of an Alberta tourism week, we are contributing to the continued diversification of our economy and our shared goals, to foster awareness amongst communities about the importance of tourism and its social, cultural, or economic value. I believe that Bill 204 will not only help the tourism operators and organizations and municipal representatives in promoting the many tourist attractions but also support job creators such as local restaurants, coffee shops, tour operators, hotels, bed and breakfasts, and other small businesses throughout this province.

I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for his efforts in bringing this idea forward. I'd be happy to support this bill in second reading, and I look forward to further debate on this topic.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize next the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a valuable topic that we have here today. In my previous iteration of my life in the Chamber I, too, was a critic for tourism and the development of it in the province, and I came to know and learn of the value that it brings to the province. Coming from a sparse rural area and, even so, the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, I've come to know the value of this benefit to our constituency and indeed to our province.

Madam Speaker, in Drumheller-Stettler and indeed in Drumheller there have actually been many movies made with the extreme terrain that the badlands provide. As a result of that, there are a group of municipalities that have joined together to create what's known as the Canadian Badlands tourism association, and actually, as we speak, they're meeting in Drumheller right now at their annual general meeting. It's a good diversification for the area. Out where I live, in the openness of the prairie, there are many ways that we need to diversify our economy.

One of the things that I brought forward to the minister – and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster knows some of my questioning to him in the budget estimates – was as to the delivery model of some 50-plus million dollars in this province. The delivery model of this province primarily and generally is based on a government form of assistance, and I've come to learn and know that in many other jurisdictions that is not necessarily the case. Certainly, there are other and variable methods of bringing tourism forward, but wholly the licence of tourism in Alberta is through a government delivery model, and sometimes that may not necessarily allow for all the options that are available.

If I could just give people some idea of some of the things that go on in the province. The Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller is only one of three museums, not unlike the Royal Alberta Museum and the Glenbow Museum in Calgary although those museums are not and do not have the interactive model of the Tyrrell museum. Of the three brothers or three family members of those museums, the Tyrrell museum, Madam Speaker, is always the museum that makes the most money. They actually pool all their resource revenues together, and the Tyrrell museum happens to be for whatever reason – and I believe it to be the interactive model – the rich cousin that supports the other two. Now, is that necessarily the way that it should be done? It seems to be the government's idea that that's the case.

But 15 miles away from where I live is the potentiality, Madam Speaker, of an Indian artifact find and dig known as the Bodo archaeological site. The scientist who has done some of the exploration at this site says that it has and may have as much significance as Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump. Now, this facility is sitting there languishing because of the lack of government involvement and, with our financial economic implications that we have now, probably will, not unlike the reserves of artifacts in the back of the Tyrrell museum, have some 25 to 50 years' worth of artifacts that are simply going to be collecting more dust. If there was some interactive way that a philanthropic organization could allow the development of these artifacts and finds to come forward beyond government regulation, there could be economic development come forward in many diverse locations, including not necessarily in my constituency but in Battle River-Wainwright. That is what it's called. I live right on the boundary, on the border.

I want to implore and make it known to other members of the Chamber that there are other delivery models available and possibilities to come forward for these types of developments that do not necessarily always need or require government funding but could have a change of government policy to allow these developments to come forward in a way that would increase the revenues that come forward from that.

That's primarily one of the reasons why I wanted to make my comments known. To the Member for Banff-Cochrane: I know that he has spectacular vistas, but I also believe that we have spectacular vistas in the prairie scenery, in prairie landscapes.

Mr. Schmidt: Those mountains don't block your view.

Mr. Strankman: Well, on the comments about blocking your view, I'd just like to relate a story of an aviation friend of mine who was flying to Brooks one day and happened to spot upon the horizon what he perceived to be a dinosaur. It was early in the morning. He was making a flight down there to get his aircraft inspected. As he got closer, Madam Speaker, and after some 15 minutes of peering over the dashboard of his aircraft, he realized that actually what was going on was that a balloon was being brought to life for a photo opportunity. Ladies and gentlemen, that photo opportunity – my friend was the first person to see it – actually became a cover photo shoot in National Geographic magazine. As he circled the thing many times, the gentlemen who were also airborne in a helicopter and hoping to get the photo radioed him and told him to move on because he was goofing up the photo opportunity.

I just wanted to let you know, Madam Speaker and other members of the House, that there are other delivery models available for tourism in the province, and we need to expand them. The idea of bringing forward more tourism is a diversification model that's renewable, sustainable, generally green friendly except when it comes to the requirement, the need for those horrible oil-laden bike paths that use asphalt for their delivery. We have many other ways to create revenue in the province.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Speaker, thank you so much. I'd like to first of all start by commending the Member for Edmonton-South West for this bill and especially commending his enthusiasm for tourism. Through members' statements and questions to the minister involved, he has shown that tourism is something that he cares deeply about, and I appreciate that. I think it's good.

In addition, Madam Speaker, at least in the time that I've served, this is the first time that here in the Chamber we've had two hours to talk about tourism. As a former minister of tourism, parks, and recreation that does my heart a great deal of good.

Madam Speaker, I'll tell you the reason why it's easy to be positive about tourism. As a former minister I can tell you that I quite freely confided to my colleagues in cabinet and my colleagues across the nation that being tourism minister is the best job ever. It's the best job ever, and being tourism minister in the province of Alberta is the best job ever because we have in this province something that we can all be tremendously proud of.

One of the reasons that we're all so passionate about tourism and why, I would suggest, all 87 of us could stand up today and speak to this bill is that unlike a lot of our other industries, that may happen in only certain parts of the province, tourism happens everywhere. In all 87 constituencies across our province there is something to offer visitors. Now, those visitors may come from nearby, they may come from across the province or across the country, or indeed those visitors may come from around the world. Indeed, the tourism industry in Canada, I would suggest, was largely born right here in Alberta when William Cornelius Van Horne said on the completion of the CPR that since we can't export the scenery, we'll have to import the tourists. It was that vision, Madam Speaker, that really got the tourism industry going.

I'd like to again thank the Member for Edmonton-South West. I'll have to confess that I was a little bit cynical when I first saw this bill. I'll be supporting the bill, but to the member: don't take any offence to this, but in designating a specific week to promote tourism in Alberta, I question just how much good that will actually do. I don't think it will do any harm, and it might do some good, but I really don't know that it will have the effects because, indeed, tourism is something we really should be promoting in this province 52 weeks of the year, not just one week in June.

Beyond that, Madam Speaker, tourism is something that, quite frankly, our tourism industry is trying to expand outside of traditional times of the year. Our tourism industry is very, very busy in June, July, August, and into September. It's also quite busy, especially in areas where there are winter resorts, in January, February, and March. But it's the shoulder seasons – it's April, May, right around this time of year, and October, November – where tourism actually slows down a fair bit. One of the big challenges of tourism is its cyclical nature. It goes up and it goes down, yet you need to have skilled staff, skilled workers in the industry, and because of that variability in demand, one of the things that the tourism industry has worked very hard on is developing ways to make that demand more consistent.

Now, I said that there are a lot of things to be proud of in our province in the tourism industry, and there certainly are. There are 17 UNESCO world heritage sites in Canada. Fully five of them are right here in the province of Alberta. One of the things that really was a concern to me when I was tourism minister was that not very many Albertans had visited all five, and not even very many Albertans could even name all five. So for the edification of the folks here, the five Alberta UNESCO world heritage sites are Wood Buffalo national park; the Rocky Mountain national parks, Jasper and Banff; the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park; Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump; and Dinosaur provincial park, near Brooks. In addition to that, we have a sixth site that is being considered, which I hope is named soon – there's been a tremendous amount of work done on this by Alberta parks officials – and that's the Writing-on-Stone provincial park, Aísínai'pi provincial park, in the very deep south of Alberta. If you've never been there, I will tell you that you have to go. It is absolutely breathtaking.

Tourism is something that happens everywhere, and tourism is something that we can agree on, not just for its economic benefit. The economic benefit is wonderful – as the member said, $8 billion, with 127,000 people employed – but the other number is really important, 19,000 businesses. If you do the math, that's roughly six people per business, so it truly is something that is delivered by small businesses right across this province. For every Banff Springs hotel or Hotel Macdonald, that employs hundreds of people, you have countless businesses that are one or two or maybe three people, and they're proud of the story they tell.

The other thing that I love about tourism is that tourism, in my view, is one of the most effective ways – and it's been said – to tell Alberta's story, and we tell that story proudly to other Albertans, to people from across Canada, and indeed to people around the world.

One of the things we sometimes talk about is establishing social licence. What are the ways to establish social licence so that we can continue on with the various things that we try to do in Alberta? Well, one of the most effective ways, in my view, of establishing social licence is by creating ambassadors and by creating people who love this province because they visited here. I will tell you from having hosted many, many international visitors to Alberta that one of the most effective ways is to have them come here for a visit. Not only does it create ambassadors; it creates investors. There are a lot of people who have invested in Alberta whose first encounter with the province of Alberta was on a visit, and they found the province beautiful. They found the province an incredible place to have an opportunity for future investment, and as a result they invested.

Well, let me turn my attention now to, specifically, tourism week. Tourism week, if it was implemented, would indeed piggyback onto the Tourism Industry Association of Canada's Tourism Week, which has been practised in this country for the last five or so years. When I spoke to the chair of TIAC, she wasn't entirely sure how long it had been going on. What is interesting to me is that Tourism Week in Canada was brought in in response to a federal government cut to tourism funding, and it was to let the federal government know just how important tourism is to their industry. I can't help but think that there's a certain level of irony there because the hon. member wants to bring in tourism week in Alberta three days after the provincial budget cuts tourism funding by more than 10 per cent.

The reason that's important is that tourism is self-funding in this province. I want to say that again. It's self-funding. Not a nickel of taxpayer dollars goes into tourism. Tourism is completely funded by the funds that are collected through the tourism levy, the 4 per cent pillow tax that we pay on hotel bills. The multiplier effect of those funds that are created was estimated in 2012 at being 19 to 1. For every $1 of tourism levy funds invested into tourism, the return in economic impact, in fact the return in taxation revenue to the province is $19.

So to me it is unfathomable why this government would siphon away funds from the tourism levy, which have increased by 5 per cent in the last fiscal year, and cut tourism funding by 10 per cent. I recognize that we have to tighten our belt in some things, but every day we're told about how economic diversification is happening or it's something that should happen, and tourism is held up as one of the shining examples of that. How are you supposed to do it when you are starving the goose that lays the golden egg?

Madam Speaker, while I am in favour of anything that advances tourism in our province and I am in favour of a measure like tourism week, I would suggest to this government that they would do better by fully funding tourism and do what was always intended: take the tourism levy and fully dedicate it to tourism promotion and product development in this province and not have funds siphoned into general revenue.

One other thing happened on Thursday that I think is a tragedy for Alberta tourism. The Alberta Strategic Tourism Council was dissolved. This group of 17 industry experts, including the friend of the Member for Banff-Cochrane, the award-winning CEO for Canmore-Kananaskis who was on that council – that council of industry experts has been disbanded, and we've lost now the ability to consult with them on important tourism issues.

So while I support this private member in terms of creating a tourism week – and I think it's great. We should celebrate tourism all year round, but if we want to focus it on a week, I'm fine. But I really wish that this government would support tourism in more meaningful and productive ways that, in fact, will support and promote tourism as an economic diversification driver in our province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 204, put forward by the Member for Edmonton-South West. I thank him for bringing forward this bill and giving us the opportunity to discuss the many great tourist destinations in our province and, as was ably noted by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the many benefits it brings to our province, which, of course, he knows well from his time working in that portfolio, in which he accomplished many great things. I have previously thanked him, and I thank him again.

Just to comment on a couple things that have been mentioned by our friends across the aisle, I agree with the Member for Banff-Cochrane in regard to the questions around placing the week in early June. I know for myself here in Edmonton-Centre and in the city of Edmonton, certainly, we have a very crowded slate of festival events and many other activities which begin roughly around mid-June and run through the summer. So I think that placing this tourism week in early June would provide an excellent opportunity for us to celebrate tourism and begin to promote and look forward to the events that occur here over the summer months.

There was also some concern that was raised by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that this could potentially take away focus from some of the larger efforts towards tourism during the rest of the year. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster also mentioned that he had some concerns that this might not have a significant impact or that it wouldn't necessarily be something which Travel Alberta would be able to add a lot more to. I certainly recognize the concerns that are being raised there. I think, in general, this is a great opportunity for Travel Alberta to partner with a lot of our other community organizations which are also looking to promote tourism. I don't see this being, specifically, a burden that would have to land only on them.

I know in my own work I have the honour of sitting on the Downtown Vibrancy Task Force here in Edmonton-Centre. I'm on that task force along with members of the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation, the city of Edmonton, and the Downtown Business Association. Certainly, it has been an education for me, and I'm so grateful for that opportunity as I've had a chance to see the work and the effort that all of these individuals put into promoting tourism here in the city of Edmonton and particularly within the downtown core. These are people, I believe, who would embrace this opportunity of a tourism week to work with Travel Alberta and to be able to bring forward some of their own initiatives and some of the work which they are currently doing to be able to help celebrate how tourism benefits our province.

Certainly, I know that it's a real benefit here in downtown Edmonton in many areas. For example, downtown Edmonton has only 16 per cent of Edmonton's hotel space, but in 2014 it captured 28 per cent of demand in the city. That generated $420 million in direct expenditures, helped support over 6,800 jobs, and produced $208 million worth of tax revenue.

Downtown Edmonton offers a lot of things to people who want to come to visit. We have amazing culinary destinations. In fact, downtown Edmonton's culinary scene has never been stronger. It's rapidly expanding. It's home to 15 per cent of Edmonton's restaurants. Whether it's Italian, Mexican, Portuguese, Spanish, French, Japanese, Ethiopian, or Lebanese, if a cuisine exists, you can probably find it at a restaurant in Edmonton-Centre.

For me personally, one of the things that I love most about downtown Edmonton is its promotion of arts and culture. There are many opportunities for tourists coming to our city to explore. We have the Winspear Centre with the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, a fantastic, beautiful, acoustically perfect space. I've been told by many who have performed there and who have conducted shows there that it is one of the finest concert halls in the world. We have over a dozen galleries, including the Art Gallery of Alberta. We're soon to have the Royal Alberta Museum, and the new Royal Alberta Museum will in fact be the largest museum in western Canada. We have the Citadel Theatre.

We have many, many – and this is of personal excitement for me – music venues. At a time when Edmonton has lost many music venues, we've gained many new ones. We have many classic ones here such as the Starlite Room, the Needle Vinyl Tavern, 9910, the Mercury Room, the Chvrch of John.

And we, of course, have the city of Edmonton archives at the Prince of Wales Armouries.

I know that the members of the Downtown Vibrancy Task Force and EEDC here in Edmonton have been working very hard to bring many sporting events to the city. They've been very pleased to participate in the Tour of Alberta, which, again, thank you to the member who spent many years promoting that and bringing that here to our city. They brought in the Red Bull Crashed Ice event last year, which brought thousands of people into the streets of downtown Edmonton. That was a fantastic event as well. We have the Edmonton Marathon, which starts outside of the Shaw Conference Centre. Of course, now with the building of Rogers Place, we will soon be home to the Edmonton Oilers and the new Ice District. We look forward to the many opportunities that's going to bring to us here as well. [interjections] We look forward to some eventual wins with that as well, absolutely.

We're home to over 37 festivals, including the Taste of Edmonton, the street performers' festival, the Cariwest Caribbean arts festival, the Edmonton International Jazz Festival, Hip Hop in the Park, the Works Art and Design Festival, and Edmonton Beer Fest.

From downtown Edmonton we have immediate and close access to Edmonton's river valley, which at 7,400 hectares is the largest stretch of urban parkland in North America.

Of particular interest to me as well is something I've been working on for a while. I've had the opportunity over the last year to work with the Edmonton live music initiative as well as some folks from Alberta Music and the city of Edmonton, and I've had the opportunity to learn about the Alberta music cities initiative. This is an initiative that was brought forward by Alberta Music along with the new National Music Centre in Calgary, Music Canada, and the Scotlyn Foundation. This is an initiative that's focused on building the music industry across Alberta and promoting Edmonton and Calgary as cities known for the quality of their local music scenes. We know how music drives tourism in such jurisdictions as New Orleans or Austin or other places like Nashville that have become known as music cities. I believe, Madam Speaker, that Edmonton and Calgary have the potential to become known for the same.

Right here in Edmonton we have an enormous wealth of resources. We have MacEwan University, which I'm proud to say is relocating their arts and music program to Edmonton-Centre in 2017, which produces an amazing calibre of musicians. We have so many talented people here in this city. We have the quality venues I mentioned, so many fantastic festivals like the Edmonton Folk Festival, Interstellar Rodeo, the Edmonton Blues Festival, and the Up and Downtown Festival, which all work to incorporate Alberta performers. We have talented performers that come from our province like Corb Lund, Joe Nolan, Shout Out Out Out Out, and the Wet Secrets, folks that are getting international recognition.

An Hon. Member: Nickelback.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, yes. We have others that we don't speak of so much as well.

The opportunity to celebrate an Edmonton tourism week offers us the opportunity to continue to work with groups like the music city initiative and others to promote the arts and culture of our province and to showcase that and have the opportunity to celebrate it not only with people that we would want to bring into the city but people within our city. We can have the opportunity to show them so much more of what they could come out and enjoy and where they could be spending their own dollars here within our city, supporting so many of our tourist attractions and opportunities.

With that, I'd like to thank again the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing forward this bill. I look forward to supporting it and to the opportunities to continue to work with the folks in the Downtown Vibrancy Task Force and so many others to continue to promote our city as a fantastic place to visit.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: I just want to pull out my notes, Madam Speaker. I don't want to allude too much to some of the elements that were talked about before, but one of the things that I've spoken about is that I'm a proud born-and-raised Albertan. Growing up in the early '90s, when we dealt with a recession similar to the one that we're experiencing today, a lot of how we travelled on vacations was based around the stay-cations, if you will. As a young Albertan I got a great chance to really see this province from a very unique perspective.

With that being said, avoiding the clichés, like saying West Edmonton Mall or Heritage Park or the Calgary Zoo, I thought it'd be prudent for me to really share these amazing experiences that I had because I think that right now with the way the Canadian dollar is sitting and how a lot of Albertans are avoiding that travel to the United States just on the merits that it would cost a lot more now than it did two or three years ago, it's similar to how it was in the '90s. You know, some of the early thoughts that go through my mind are my visits to Drumheller, which I enjoyed as a child and now get to bring my children to, which I'm very fond of, too, and my visits to Canmore or Banff. I can spot a child of the '90s if I simply say: Banff Candy Store. They all know what I'm talking about.

You know, I had a great opportunity to really go camping in areas like the Cypress Hills. Trust me, though, I spent most of my time on the Alberta side. We used to go to Carseland provincial park and went camping in that area as well, and it was neat. I always was baffled by the fact that my parents would point at the Bow River and say that that cut through Calgary. At the time, I would not believe them. There was a lot of visiting of the Crowsnest Pass. I would spend a lot of time visiting Frank Slide, and I marvelled at Turtle Mountain located there, too, and visiting the Hillcrest Mines and learning about the Hillcrest mining disaster as well. That was pretty neat to see as I experienced the history that was vast to this province.

My uncle, actually, was partial owner and managed a hotel in Lloydminster, actually on the Alberta side of Lloydminster, and he led me to where I pursued a career in the hospitality industry. As we are very well aware, during these economic hard times in certain cities like Calgary and Edmonton the hospitality industry is having a little bit of a struggle, specifically in the downtown cores, so one of the things is for us to really encourage those people to travel throughout Alberta and, not only that but for those that are travelling abroad, who are going to the Rocky Mountains, which is seeing a tremendously busy year, find ways to encourage people, as they're coming from the United States or coming from abroad to Canada, to stay that extra day when they're going to the hubs like Calgary and Edmonton.

I think that if we really promote a lot of the tourism that we have here in Alberta – and it's amazing, when I see people who've only lived in this province for two or three years, that some of them are unaware of the great things like the Frank Slide or the giant egg in Vegreville. I think that really driving this awareness – and it doesn't have to be expensive awareness. We've all seen the trends that come from social media and retweeting and sharing your favourite aspects of your childhood, similar to myself, how in leaps and bounds it costs nothing but can lead to a tremendous amount of return for different companies. We saw that with the ice bucket challenge, a prime example of that.

That being said, I want to applaud the hon. member for this private member's bill. When I heard about it, I started thinking of these fond childhood memories that I had as well and, to be quite frank, that I am grateful I get to share with my children now. So I stand here to support the bill in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thanks, Madam Speaker. I'd like to rise today and commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West for his insightful approach to this industry, which is of great interest to many Albertans at a time, particularly, when we're focusing so much on diversification.

I've been blessed and privileged to have spent about 20 years of my life in a career in the tourism marketing business for an international airline, which gave me a lot of opportunity and experience not only to promote tourism but to be able to talk with people around the world on what's important to them and what's of interest to them. I spent a lot of time promoting travel outbound from Canada to parts of Asia and Southeast Asia and other parts of the world, but I was blessed to have the opportunity, in meeting all those people, to always promote Alberta, which is, of course, near and dear to all of our hearts.

Now is an incredible time for us to leverage our diverse and world-class tourism assets. I think that this is an opportunity which we should always be driving towards, but of course we have a rather unique opportunity right now as Alberta is, unfortunately, on sale. The tourism assets we have are world-class. It is time to invest in our future, and it's time for us to invest in a hopeful future which is going to support some of the hard work done by the tourism sector – groups such as Calgary and Edmonton tourism, obviously Travel Alberta, the airport authorities of both Calgary and Edmonton and some of the smaller centres – bringing in flights finally from places like China and different parts of Asia and around the world.

It's even more important that we work hard now to maintain those flights because having been in that business, I know that the worst thing that can happen is that you attract a flight in and then you lose it because they rarely come back. Now is an opportunity for us to offset the fact that we have a challenge in our own economy, which is likely to translate into a reduction in outbound tourism, which, of course, sends our dollars out of the country, a time for us to take advantage of that excess capacity and bring people to Alberta, maintain those flights, and bring in the revenue that those people bring.

Of course, I think the other benefit is that when people come here for tourism, they maybe come here for short stays, but there are many people from around the world who, when they come here, look beyond that. They look for opportunities to invest; they look for other opportunities. Is this a place to send their children to school? Is this a place to buy recreational property? Is this a place to buy a business? Is this a place to emigrate to? Those are the fringe benefits of tourism which I think we need to keep our eye on as well and an opportunity to do so with tourism week.

The other thing that we need to think about is the hotels that are now suffering. In spite of whatever we do within the tourism sector, the honest truth is that the 80-20 rule typically has applied to most of the hotels, particularly during the latest boom, which is that Monday to Thursday is when they generate about 80 per cent of the revenue, and then Thursday or Friday to Sunday is when they can offer all kinds of deals and opportunities to the tourism marketplace. Typically they don't want to displace that during the week when the market is robust. We do have an opportunity now, again, with Alberta being on sale, where those hotels are actually looking at promoting tourism and leveraging that opportunity seven days a week. Sadly, that's the truth of the current economy.

Tourism is always a key pillar of diversification. I think that we have a strong and robust infrastructure in place. We have passionate people in the industry who have invested not only their own personal skills and time and knowledge but many of whom are small operators who have invested their own capital and taken big risks to do that. We have, I think, an obligation to work with them to help them to diversify that. Again, with the low Canadian currency and an opportunity where there's very little competition for capacity, this is an opportunity for us to do that. You know, really, it's an opportunity to take small advantage of that soft business market and that soft business traveller market, which is what, of course, drove some of our average room rates to some of the top in North America over the last few years. Those are things for us to keep an eye on.

I've also been blessed to be involved with a group called Skål. It's world-wide, international travel and tourism. There are chapters in Calgary, Edmonton, and the Canadian Rockies: 17,000 members world-wide, 400 clubs in 80 countries. During my involvement I was president of that organization in years gone by, and I've been bugging the people there to make an opportunity to do a world congress here in Alberta, to bring in people, industry leaders from around the world. That's one of the groups. I'll encourage the Edmonton, the Calgary, and the Rockies clubs to work together to do that, to promote Alberta as an opportunity to bring world leaders, who tend to have great influence around the world, to see what we have here in Alberta. I think that's a great opportunity.

Many other organizations, as I referenced before, the tourism authorities – unfortunately, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, as we know, has been disbanded, which is sad, but there are many organizations out there to work with, not the least of which, of course, are those who represent the youth within the marketplace. Obviously, SAIT and NAIT have tourism and hospitality programs, and through the Skål organization we've invested in many scholarships over the years, which have helped to nurture that next generation. I think that an obligation for anybody who's in tourism is to always mentor and work with those up-and-comers in the industry, who really are going to be the lifeblood in the future of what we're doing.

Another concern I have, of course, is convention facilities. We've seen a lot of focus on the need for convention facilities. Sadly, I know Calgary is now, I think, the 11th-largest convention facility in Canada, and that's a sad, sad statement. You know, I guess the good news is that the Calgary Stampede is expanding their facilities, but it's not a downtown location per se, and that's often what a lot of the conventions are looking for. So I think those are some of the things we need to look at investing in, not only encouraging the private sector to do so but also looking at where we can assist in making that happen.

I was lucky enough to be at the Economic Developers conference just over a week ago, and I noticed that Pomeroy Lodging, which is actually headquartered in Grande Prairie, where my esteemed colleague is from, but with hotels across the province, are looking at expanding their convention facilities there in Kananaskis, which I think is, again, good for all Albertans as an opportunity. Of course, that was the Economic Developers of Alberta there. If you talk to them, they are about economic development, they're about tourism, whatever will work for them to promote and enhance what they're doing.

Tourism week is an opportunity which I think we need to embrace. It's another opportunity. As the esteemed Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster pointed out, it's always an opportunity, and if we have a chance to promote that, we should take it. I think everybody in this room, everybody in Alberta – I think there was a promotion many years ago about being a tourist attraction. I think we all have to be tourist attractions. I think we all have to be tourism promoters as well wherever we go, wherever we travel. Be proud, as I know we all are, of this province, of the natural resources and the opportunities we have for people to visit and see things that they won't see in their own backyards, and that's not just the natural resources but the cultural resources that we have here as well, that I think we're all too humble about.

You know, this is an opportunity, I think, for us to invest in the future. Again, I'd like to see the tourism levy being pushed toward promoting this. We do have an opportunity to do so. I'd like to see us invest although within very tight budgets we need to take this as an opportunity for further diversification. If Bill 204 helps that, then I think that that's a good thing.

I would like to hope, obviously, that we have the support of this entire House – obviously, we have the Culture and Tourism minister, we have Finance, we have Economic Development, and we have Infrastructure, who all have to keep their eye on this ball and work towards ensuring that we have an opportunity here to diversify, to grow, and to strengthen us while we have Alberta on sale – and that we can support not only the flights that we have now and maintain them but that we can grow those in the future in the Asia-Pacific market, which is all-important to us in the future.

I will be supporting this bill. Again, I thank the member for bringing it forward and for the opportunity here to speak about the importance of tourism in Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and speak to Bill 204, Alberta Tourism Week Act. First of all, I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for proposing such a brilliant way of promoting tourism in the province of Alberta. The bill is an excellent gateway to promote the amazing tourist attractions of Alberta as well as the small businesses that extensively contribute to diversify our economy and create jobs. I'm very proud to say that in my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore we have a number of attractions that bring people together from the city, province, country, and the world. Those big attractions include Heritage Park, Weaselhead park, North Glenmore park, South Glenmore park, and Glenmore Sailing Club.

We have discussed many attractions in the province, and I would like to focus a little bit on Heritage Park specifically because it's a very unique park we have in the province. It gives a very unique experience to its visitors and tourists. For example, touring Heritage Park is like living the history of Alberta, no matter if it is dining, entertainment, education, recreation, or a special occasion. One cannot miss a moment. Going back in time, the visitors of the park experience the diversity and rich culture of Alberta as it culminated over time. In fact, the park is the pride of our province as it is a true example of how the west was once.

Whenever visitors go to Heritage Park, they feel that they're experiencing something that they cannot find somewhere else. It's basically bringing the province of Alberta all together in many forms. It has festivals going on all year-round, and every festival is representing a different culture or representing different values or something unique that you would experience. Also, it's a hub where indigenous communities get together as well because Heritage Park is right beside Tsuu T'ina Nation, and they work in collaboration a lot, so promotion of indigenous culture is also very dominant through that park.

Around Heritage Park there are many trails that allow people to come and visit and experience Glenmore reservoir as well. Walking or biking right beside the reservoir is an amazing experience. I myself go there quite often. Seeing the beautiful sights around that area is a commendable experience. There is a cliff right beside it that adds a beauty to the place that is hard to find in the city. At the same time, all four places that I mentioned before – for example, North Glenmore park, South Glenmore park – are also connected through Glenmore reservoir. In North Glenmore park we have canoe rentals available. We can see many people canoeing around, kayaking. Many competitions, even dragon boat races, take place every year in North Glenmore park. It is an amazing opportunity to celebrate diversity in our province because that's an excellent way to learn about Chinese culture. At the same time, at the dragon boat races they represent different cultures by allowing different groups to do performances on the same day, and through the entertainment every culture tells a story, which allows us to connect with each other.

I also mentioned Weaselhead park. Weaselhead park has a lot of history because it is basically a division between Tsuu T'ina Nation and the constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. It talks about the time when there was an army that used to use that place for their purposes as well as how it connects to the history of indigenous communities. It's a beautiful park. It was initially man-made, but over time due to its ecosystem and ecology it evolved into a natural park. Now it is known as a natural park, and its history and beauty make it a very unique attraction for the residents.

I also mentioned the Glenmore Sailing Club. That is a place where we have the opportunity to see many yachts, and it allows people to learn about sailing. Yachts are available as rentals as well, so this gives a very unique experience to the citizens of Calgary to enjoy seeing the mountains while they're sailing and also to enjoy the liveliness of Heritage Park. As I mentioned, all these parks are connected in such a unique way. That anybody who visits Glenmore reservoir gets to experience so many things at a time is hard to describe in words.

This was very specific to Calgary-Glenmore, but if I zoom out a little bit and look at the province as my other colleagues have been talking about, we are blessed with so many attractions. Either natural or man-made, they just are amazing. That helps make Alberta a very unique province and different and a very attractive place to be.

I have lived in different parts of the world myself, including Southeast Asia, the Middle East, Europe, and I grew up in Ontario. I can say with confidence that when I was living in different parts of the world and when I interact with people from different parts of the world, Alberta is seen as a very beautiful and attractive place, and people talk very passionately about how much they would like to visit Alberta. Alberta has rivers. Alberta has mountains. Alberta has history. Alberta has diversity. Alberta has culture. Each individual riding has so much to offer. In fact, if I spent so many minutes talking about my own riding, we can imagine that if all the members sitting here in the Chamber start talking about their constituencies and the attractions they have, then I think we would definitely need more than the three, four hours that we are spending right now. The list goes on.

Also, when I've been to Banff or when I've been to different parts of the province, I have seen many tourists coming from all over the world for various reasons. Sometimes they would just come because they want to have a quiet moment. They are working on a book, for example, so they would probably go to a place like the Banff arts centre, where they could rent a place and just stay and work on their projects. At the same time, there are people who would just come for skiing. There are so many reasons why people would want to be in Alberta and want to have that experience.

Travelling is important. I can also share from my experience because I have not only lived in different parts of the world; I have been in different parts of the world as well. I could see that whenever I appreciated something or some kind of attraction or in any kind of experience that I appreciated, I noticed in depth how thoughtful people were when they designed something, even if it is a man-made attraction, having that convenience for tourists to be there and thinking about how we can make it more inclusive or how we can design it in a way that it would cater to families, it would cater to couples, it would cater to individuals so that different groups could enjoy the experience of being in that place.

By having this week of tourism, we're actually not only promoting the tourism of Alberta; we are actually encouraging all the industries in Alberta that are involved in tourism and other small businesses and giving them ideas of how they can get involved to diversify our economy. If they know that this is the week when we are expecting people coming from different parts of the world and different cultures, then they would consider having more modifications, innovation, and they would consider having more ideas. When there are ideas and creativity, then we are basically allowing our artists, allowing our businesses to think outside the box and to be in that competition. Once we have that competition going on and people striving for the competitive edge, then this will help build the reputation of Alberta's tourism in the world. Once we have that level reached, then basically that will help boost our economy because there will be more travellers coming in.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise and speak to the private member's bill presented today. It's absolutely something I'm in favour of. It also gives me an opportunity to talk a little bit about my riding and its wonderful opportunities there, as many members have already done. Recently in Strathcona-Sherwood Park the Beaver Hills initiative was recognized by UNESCO as an internationally, world-renowned biosphere, so it's now designated for ecotourism, which is an absolute accomplishment, and it also protects the land there.

Something that hasn't been discussed as much – you know, it's great to promote tourism but also to link it back to mental health. Having been in social work before and studying the importance of relationship with environment, one of the best things about the environment, Mr. Speaker, is that it doesn't actually require a connection with the amount of money that you make. The environment is something that is available to everybody, and that makes it one of the best resources that we have.

Opening up a tourism week not only promotes the great resources that we have in our communities, but it does something that recently the social work program in MacEwan University recognized. One of its main pillars is on the environment. The reason for that is that you're seeing a difference that is being made by people connecting to their environment in a nonhierarchical manner, in a way that builds a relationship in the way that many of our aboriginal leaders have demonstrated for many years. By building that relationship and creating that connection, it actually addresses some of the mental health issues that are all over our province, Mr. Speaker. So recognizing those opportunities – and sometimes all it takes is to demonstrate what resources are available to you when you're looking for a place to go with your family, with your friends, to go out and know that.

In Strathcona-Sherwood Park you can go and tour all sorts of really great lands and see something that is recognized by the world as being a place that needs to be protected for ecotourism. Also, to demonstrate the great food, you know, Open Farm Days is an opportunity for people to go into farms and visit those very farms that have our food and create that relationship, especially for people in urban centres, who don't get that opportunity every day. It provides that initial opportunity to develop that relationship. Again, that relationship is really essential to creating an overall strong mental health society, and it can't be lost. Yes, tourism is a great industry, but overall we need to address it in multiple facets, and this is one of the ways that we do it.

I mean, at the beginning of being elected, I was meeting with the president of the conservation society, and he was showing me that he had a book with a whole bunch of information on camping sites: the costs, the places that you need to go, and, you know, connecting those people with the resources, making it simple. The more barriers that you put towards people, the less they'll travel. Really, at the end of the day, promoting that pride in our local economy and things that we have to offer promotes a connection to our community, and that also is great in building a strong family unit.

With the work that is already being done, something like this just highlights that and gives it a space to shine and gives it a space for people to be there and to access that information, which, at the end of day, sometimes is what's needed. I remember that that was part of our conversation of how to highlight – they have a wonderful book. You know, it's pages, pages long, but people don't know about its existence. They'll search all over Google and try to find the camping sites that are most searched. But at the end of the day, if we start looking for other ways to express what is available to people and what the resources are locally, it also provides the opportunity that, you know, if you're struggling right now, you can still travel and you can still have those experiences. It's great for a lot of reasons.

Also, I would say that, you know, the Edmonton region has a very strong couch surfing community, and it's a community that is known in the world. Part of it is that you host somebody as they come in, and then you show them the great things that are a part of your area. If I were to host somebody in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, I would take them to the winery in the area. I would take them horseback riding. I would take them to just view the wonderful sights of this bioreserve. Those experiences are something to promote in different ways, having an opportunity to connect with people that want to see those things. Mr. Speaker, that's something that people at all ages are interested in. Travel is something that completely engages people, and it opens up your way of living. It just opens up your daily activities that you get kind of lost in.

Tourism is a way of opening up and expanding conversations and meeting people that you might have not met.

You know, back to the mental health portion that I was saying before, I have the Dreamcatcher ranch in my constituency. It's a connection to animals within therapy, animals as a therapeutic modality. It provides a connection, again, going back to nature, a way of connecting that is a way that people find very relaxing. It's an important element of our daily living.

There are so many places in my constituency where you can see these things: the great food that is to be had, a lot of local food that is being promoted in the area, and restaurants that are starting to pop up and demonstrate that they want to showcase that local cuisine, what the farms are offering and items of that nature. Something like this really allows us to promote things locally and promote what we have to offer and give a space for people all over Alberta to really know what their options are when they're talking about Alberta tourism.

Mr. Speaker, really, again, I'm absolutely thrilled that this private member's bill is with us here today and that we get to discuss it and that I get to mention the wonderful things that happen in my constituency. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: I would like to start off by saying: how could I not support Bill 204? I commend the Member for Calgary-South West for his hard work on this bill. As someone who was born and raised in this beautiful province, I've had the pleasure of participating in many events that help promote all the culture and diversity Alberta has to offer. For as long as I can remember, growing up in Calgary I would go down to see the Calgary Stampede parade with my friends and family, and afterwards we'd go down to the grounds and check out the rides and the games. It was truly an honour to be part of that parade last summer. It definitely fulfilled a childhood dream for me.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is blessed to be a culturally and geographically diverse province with a multitude of opportunities for travel and tourism. The tourism industry contributes greatly to the Alberta economy, and the continued growth of this industry will in turn promote economic diversification in Alberta.

In my riding of Calgary-Bow I am so proud to have Canada Olympic Park, whose ski jump can be described as one of the most recognizable attributes in the city of Calgary. During the 1988 Winter Olympics, Canada Olympic Park was the primary venue for many different sports, including bobsledding, luge, figure skating, hockey, freestyle skiing, just to name a few. Calgary was the host to athletes from all over the world. In 1988 Calgary, with a population of 657,000 people, was put on the world map. As it stands today, people from all over the world are still taking advantage of all the great things COP has to offer.

COP is also the home of Canada's Sports Hall of Fame. Canada's Sports Hall of Fame was established in 1947 and was moved to Calgary in 2011. I had the pleasure of touring this museum, which is located at Canada Olympic Park. It is a joy to spend a day or two exploring what the museum has to offer. The hall of fame also offers programs that allow students to experience the museum's 12 galleries and to try over 50 hands-on interactive activities, including shadowboxing with Lennox Lewis, 3-D goalie and backcatcher experiences, sport challenges, rowing, wheelchair racing, and more.

Some of the items on display include Terry Fox's shoes, in which he dipped his foot in the Atlantic Ocean, a hockey stick with Wayne Gretzky's misspelled name on it, and the Calgary number one torch, which was used to light the cauldron at the opening ceremonies of the 1988 Olympic Games. This museum is a perfect place for people of all ages. Throughout the exhibit you can interact with statues of honoured members. For example, you can see Herman Smith Johannsen, the famous cross-country skier, in action. He finished his last race at the age of 75.

Today COP is one of the landmarks in Calgary. It is a unique site. It provides a place to ski, ice-skate, cross-country ski, and, in the summer, to mountain bike and zip-line. For the residents of Calgary it provides a place to train Olympic athletes, host events, and bring award-winning snowboarders like Shaun White – he was here recently – to our slopes.

Mr. Speaker, I am so proud that I have the opportunity to represent them here today in the Legislature, and I'm also so proud of being part of a government that is working to diversify and strengthen the political economy. As mentioned, tourism has been identified as an important contributor to diversifying Alberta's economy away from energy dependence. This is why I stand in the House to speak in support of this bill, and I applaud the Member for Edmonton-South West for bringing this idea forward.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 204?

We have no one left to speak, hearing none. I would call upon the Member for Edmonton-South West to close debate.

Mr. Dang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to stand today and hear the support of all of my colleagues from both sides of the aisle for Bill 204. Bill 204 is one of those bills that we really can all get behind because we all believe in Alberta and we all believe in selling Alberta to become the absolute best that it can be. Like members opposite have mentioned, we do really want to be pushing Alberta every single day of every single week, and I really do believe that the Alberta tourism week will become one of those tools we use, one of the pieces of the puzzle that we can use to promote Alberta and create that diverse and vibrant economy that we speak about.

I just wanted to make some comments around what I really believe the Alberta tourism week will be able to highlight, because we do know that Budget 2016 made commitments to tourism. Budget 2016 made commitments such as investing in our world-class tourism facilities, with the expansion of the Calgary Zoo, with Fort Edmonton Park, and the Royal Tyrrell Museum. Mr. Speaker, these projects will attract more visitors to our province and enhance our reputation at home and abroad to ensure that accessible travel opportunities are available for families right here in Alberta.

Alberta tourism week will be something that we as communities, we as Albertans, we as citizens can rally together and rally behind. Mr. Speaker, it celebrates our passion for Alberta, and it maximizes our resources and our opportunities for Alberta. Our tourism industry will be able to attract even more visitors and more investors to our province. Each year visitors flock to Alberta's parks and attend our world-class sporting facilities, our world-class events, and our world-class communities. Alberta tourism week will be able to promote these important attractions and will help to build long-term success for the tourism industry province-wide.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to have been able to introduce a bill that will commit to diversifying our economy, that will commit to making sure that Albertans stay employed. Those 19,000 businesses, those 127,000 jobs, that $8 billion that we're talking about, all of these very important not statistics but people, jobs, and lives that we are talking about in Alberta, the people that we must support as legislators, will be supported by the Alberta Tourism Week Act. I'm extremely excited that we are able to utilize this bill to push forward and sell our province, that we all can be so proud of. We all can go and say that we voted for something that we will be able to present to the world and show to the world that we are the greatest province in Canada, that we are a great place to visit, and that we are somewhere that we can be excited to show off.

Mr. Speaker, being cognizant of the time here, I will be absolutely optimistic that all members of this House will absolutely support this bill. Thank you, all, so much for speaking about it today.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent of the House to proceed with Motions Other than Government Motions.

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Educational Delivery Choices

504. Mr. McIver moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to affirm its commitment to allowing parents the choice of educational delivery for their children, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, or public education programs.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. It's my honour to rise and talk about my motion, Motion 504. Now, this is something that I feel strongly about, and it's something that I think is really consistent with Alberta. The purpose of the motion is to simply have the government confirm what they're already doing. In fact, I'm asking the government to give Alberta parents the assurance that the choices they have today in educating their children will remain, the assurance that education will not go backwards in Alberta and that students can continue to benefit from the many options of education available for delivery today. Alberta has one of the best education systems in the world. [some applause] I agree, and we should all pound on that one. The PC caucus encourages this government to keep it that way. I know that the government wants to keep it that way.

Choice in Alberta education, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, and public education programs, is about meeting the needs and interests of children so that they can reach their full potential and choice for parents to decide which school is choice for their kids. This motion encourages the government to ensure stable and permanent access to choice in education and to bring a sense of stability to students and their parents. These choices contribute to a robust system that respects the diversity of backgrounds and interests among Alberta children.

It is essential that all Alberta schools, whether they be public, private, separate, charter, home-school, all the choices that exist today, provide students with safe and inclusive learning environments. Anything other than that is unacceptable. Mr. Speaker, I didn't feel with what I've just said that I was going to have a really hard time convincing members of this House because these are things that we have talked about: safe and inclusive communities, safe and inclusive schools, and recognizing the value of children to the future of Alberta.

One of the things that I think we all agree on here, again along those lines, is that all children are equal. But I think we can also agree that all children are not the same. Different children require different choices, different options. Some have special needs, and some have additional needs, other than other children's. Some children learn very well in one way and not so well in another. Sometimes we need to make sure that they can reach their full potential and the very best chance and opportunity that they can to live the most full life. To contribute to the top of their potential, to become the best contributors they can to Albertan and Canadian society, sometimes some kids need a little bit different education.

Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. Some kids are so very gifted that in a classroom that would be considered run of the mill or expected for most Alberta kids – for some Alberta kids that are gifted, that's too easy for them. And why would we as parents, why would we as Albertans, and why would we as legislators hold those kids back?

Of course, one of the things that really matters is that all kids are special. They all deserve to have the best chance. Who better to evaluate them and to work to decide for those kids what the best course of education is than their parents?

I recognize, too, that even there, even with this, while all Alberta kids are equal, they're not all the same. Some have two of their birth parents at home, some have one, some are lucky enough to be adopted, and some are living in other situations. But they, too, deserve the same chance as every other Alberta kid to have those that love them the most, those that know them the best, those that co-exist and live with them and care for them and put them to bed and feed them be able to have input into the way they're educated, because those are the people that love their kids the most.

Mr. Speaker, again I will emphasize that this is about doing what's best for Alberta's children. This is about putting Alberta's kids in the position to fully participate, to become – to borrow a phrase from the military – all they can be, and to fully access every success that they could possibly have. I don't think anybody in this Legislature is going to argue with that. I really don't.

The reason I bring it forward, Mr. Speaker, is because I've heard from a lot of parents from around Alberta. We have asked the Education minister about this in the past: are you going to continue to provide the choices? I'm comfortable enough in what I'm saying that I don't think the minister is going to argue with me – if he does, I will table documents – about the fact that he has stood up in this House and has said: we are going to continue to provide those choices. But there's been once or twice where he's said: for now. Or he's said: in this year's budget. I see he's not even arguing that, so that's okay. We're still getting along here, and there's no reason why we need not.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, a lot of parents have said: well, what does that mean? There's an opportunity for, hopefully, the minister and the government to stand up and say: we're committed to this. While I guess I'm not sure they're going to do that, I'm surely hopeful that the minister and the government are going to say: we're still committed to that choice for parents in the way they educate their children. It appears from the budget that the government put on the table on Thursday that they are. At least, it looks to me like they are going to continue to fund the different choices that Alberta parents have now, and I think that's a tremendous, tremendous reassurance to Alberta parents.

I'm hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that members of this House can come together and say to Alberta parents: your kids are important; we believe in your ability and your right to make choices on behalf of your children's education. Again, parents are a gift to those kids, and those kids are a gift to parents. I sincerely hope that members of the House can agree with this motion, which continues to give parents the choices that they already have – that they already have – in how they educate their children.

I thank you, all members of the House, for your attention. I will sit down and listen. I sincerely hope that I can look forward to the support of the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to rise and speak to this motion in the House today. I am a teacher by trade, so I believe I share everyone's belief that education is really something extremely fundamental that can change lives, that will make the province better, that can make Canada better if it's something that's done well. I think that we do currently offer an amazing amount of choice in our system to parents, and I have some examples that I'd like to share about that.

I was a teacher in the CBE, the Calgary board of education. I do just want to mention the amazing, incredible job that the Calgary board of education is doing within the public system to offer choice to parents. The Calgary board of education has programs for exceptional and complex needs. They have gifted-and-talented programs. They have French immersion, a Spanish bilingual program, a Mandarin bilingual program. They have arts-based schools, they have sports-based schools, they have science- and inquiry-based schools, they have international baccalaureate programs, and they also have trades programs. And those are just a few. The Calgary board of education has responded incredibly well to parents' desires to have choice for their children.

I can speak to that a little bit personally. When I was teaching, I taught at the Alice Jamieson girls' academy, which is an all-girls program for grades 4 through 9. That's a program of choice within the Calgary board of education where, if parents so choose, they can send their girls to school in an all-girls environment. I think it has wonderfully beneficial effects. I taught math and science, and I have never been so privileged as to see so many girls just really excited about math. You know, that's something that doesn't necessarily happen in regular mixed-gender environments. It really has a huge amount of value. It has a huge amount of value in terms of self-esteem building, in terms of peer support, in terms of getting girls more involved in STEM, science, technology, engineering, and math. It really has a lot of benefits.

What was special about my school was that it wasn't only a girls' program. My school was housed within Stanley Jones school, which is a large, hundred-year-old sandstone building. Within that same school there were three operating programs. There is the Alice Jamieson girls' academy. There is the deaf and hard of hearing program, which is for exceptional students. It also housed a regular K through 6 elementary school.

The reason that that came about was because parents who lived in that area wanted to keep their regular K through 6 school, but there wasn't enough enrolment to be able to keep the whole building open, so the Calgary board of education brought in these alternative programs to keep the school filled. Now it's filled to huge amounts of capacity. We lost several of our rooms over the course of my tenure there – our computer room, our science lab, our library – to classrooms. The building of new schools, hopefully, will soon alleviate some of that issue. But it was an incredibly successful program, an incredibly successful program of choice, within the Calgary board of education.

I only can speak to the Calgary board of education, but I know that there are other school districts that are doing an amazing job with that as well. I can point to, you know, the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills' comments about Horizon school earlier today, which is also a public school doing incredible work for exceptional students.

I just wanted to highlight that there is, in fact, a huge amount of choice available within our public system.

At this time I'm going to bring forward an amendment to this motion. Now, if there are questions about the ability to do this, I do have examples where this has been done a whole bunch of times in the past, mostly in 2007, it looks like. The motion has been stamped by Parliamentary Counsel for approval.

Do I wait to read it?

The Speaker: If you would read it while it's being passed out.

Ms Luff: Okay. What this motion is doing:

Ms Luff to move that Motion 504 be amended as follows:

- (a) by striking out "affirm" and substituting "support public education, including francophone and separate schools, while affirming";
- (b) by adding "and" after "charter,";
- (c) by striking out "francophone, separate, or public";
- (d) by adding "in such instances where they offer alternatives not available in the public system" after "programs".

If I just read the whole thing, it makes a lot more sense. The amended motion would read as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to support public education, including francophone and separate schools, while affirming its commitment to allowing parents the choice of educational delivery for their children, including home, charter, and private education programs in such instances where they offer alternatives not available in the public system.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Speaker: He has a point of order.

Point of Order

Admissibility of Amendments

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I guess, first of all, the first part of the point of order is that under the standing orders it's extremely unusual and irregular for a private member's motion to be amended. In fact, I cannot remember an instance where this has been allowed or has happened in the Legislature. Part of that is because of the very limited time that we have to debate these motions. We have one hour; that is it. It has always been the practice of the House that we debate the motion as it is presented in the Legislature.

Second – and I'm sitting next to the mover of the motion – is that it is the mover's opinion, and it's certainly my opinion as well, that this amendment substantively changes the intent of the motion. Of course, an amendment is not allowed to do that. An amendment can, you know, make changes or alterations, but this substantively changes the intent of the motion. I would suggest to the hon. member, with all respect, and certainly to you, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment to this motion is out of order and should be disallowed at this time.

The Speaker: Could I just have a moment to read this myself.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Amendments have come forward to motions other than government motions many times in the past. I would agree that it hasn't happened, you know, in the recent past, but it has happened. I can also indicate, as the member has mentioned, that the amendment coming forward has been reviewed and approved by Parliamentary Counsel. Now, on those amendments to nongovernment motions that happened in the past, it happened on April 2, 2007, a motion that was amended by the current third party. Again, a motion, Motion 507, was amended on May 14 of the same year, 2007, and Motion 511 and Motion 515 in 2007 as well.

Mr. Speaker, it has happened. It is, I would agree, a little bit out of the ordinary, but it is not against the rules of order.

On the member stating that it is a point of order because it substantially changes the motion, I don't believe the amendment does. It still revolves around the affirmation and the sustainability, speaking to the nature of schools, especially public schools. I don't think it does change the intent.

I would look forward to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would speak to this amendment. I believe that it actually does substantively change this motion, that when we take a look at the nature of education, this is about parental choice. This is not about whether or not the government has the ability to decide whether this is substantively different or whether the parents should have the right to this kind of an educational option or choice. That's the whole nature of this motion. It's about providing parents with the choice to make these decisions about their children's education, not about the state granting permission.

I believe that this substantively changes this motion. I believe that when we take a look at the nature of some of these independent schools, some of the charter schools or the alternative schools, they should not be held up to whether or not some bureaucrat or some individual decides whether or not this actually meets a definition of whether it's available in the public system. These people that are asking for these alternatives in their children's education are there because they want to see an alternative that is unique, that meets their desires for their children. Therefore, this amendment is substantively changing this motion and should not be accepted.

The Speaker: Member for Calgary-Lougheed, have you new information you'd like to submit with respect to the amendment decision?

Mr. Rodney: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I would not be standing up if I did not have new information.

That's exactly what this is designed to do. It is true that this changes the intention to a great degree. But let's face it: it was great to speak for two hours on the tourism bill, and we had support from all sides of the House. This is not about a PC caucus or a third party or the opposition. This is about the students and the parents of Alberta.

The new information I'll offer you at this point, sir, is that I happened to be in the House on those occasions. The hon. House leader on duty at this time has brought up that they were favourable amendments. They were friendly amendments that were accepted by the mover to make the motion even better than what they had originally intended. They were never done with the intention of changing the original motive of the motion.

I'll be honest. As a former educator myself and a parent and an advocate I have a speech ready. The fact is, as my hon. colleague from Calgary-North West has pointed out, that we have very few devices in opposition to, you know, put forward any sorts of agendas. Under private members is one of them. We had two hours a short time ago on tourism. We only have one hour now, and this is winding down the clock, that is now down to 46 minutes. I would like to read my speech and get on to the original motion. I would actually encourage the mover of the amendment to rescind this and speak to the original motion, perhaps outlining ideas why she may not vote for it instead.

The Speaker: Something new with respect to the point of order? Is that correct? Substantive?

Mr. McIver: Yes, I believe it's very substantive, Mr. Speaker. On the amendment passed out by the hon. member – I'll only read as much as I need to – at the end of the first line: "urge the government to support public education." Then it has "affirming" below that. Well, support can surely be interpreted as financial support, and I believe that's what it means here.

Of course, with a private member's bill it can't be a money bill. It cannot. If it has to do with money, it's no longer a private member's bill, Mr. Speaker. It cannot require the government to spend money or not spend money.

On top of the other good arguments from my colleagues on why this should be out of order, also another reason is the fact that this makes it a money bill, which is, in my view and, I think, according to the rules of the House, out of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I need to first advise that the clock stopped at the time the point of order was raised, so you are not consuming time. In an ideal world I might have taken more time to do this, but a point of order has been raised with respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East to Motion 504. That amendment makes several changes. You've all received a copy of that, a form substituting just some of the points.

Now, I'm advised that in Beauchesne's, sixth edition, page 175, paragraph 567 states that an amendment to a motion may seek to "modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question." At paragraph 578 the same book notes that "an amendment proposing a direct negative . . . is out of order." It is argued that this is what is happening with this amendment. In this case, however, I find that the purpose of the proposed amendment is to modify Motion 504 to present the House an alternative to the original question. The amendment is not a direct negative. Accordingly, I find that the amendment is in order as moved.

Point of Clarification

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, point of clarification. I rise under Standing Order 13(2), which reads, "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I've also received a copy of the notes that you've liberally quoted from just now. I'm fascinated and puzzled, actually, that we should have such a completely drawn-out set of notes here given to us that clearly anticipates the challenge to this amendment. I guess my question as an hon. member to you as Speaker under 13(2) is to explain to the House, sir, when you first became aware of this amendment. You must have known ahead of time in order to have prepared the notes for this ruling, which was distributed to us before the ruling was actually even made. In fact, our first word of any amendment was just actually as the hon. member introduced it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'm not exactly certain how you obtained the piece of information that you have. I was advised by my table officers, and I did make a decision based upon a precedent, as cited in the decision that I made, and I would ask that . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, no. You made the ruling before you heard people make their arguments. That's a fact. This was printed out before people stood up in this House and made their arguments. I know because I had it in my hand, and it's in Hansard. This is not the way you run a Legislature. I'm sorry. I know you're unhappy with me, but I'm unhappy with you. When you make a ruling before you hear the evidence . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you please sit down?

Mr. McIver: No, I will not, not unless you reverse your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member . . .

Mr. McIver: I will not sit down unless you reverse your ruling.

The Speaker: Hon. member, respectfully, could I ask . . .

Mr. McIver: Respectfully, I will not sit down unless you reverse your ruling. I'm happy to explain this on the front page of the newspaper tomorrow.

The Speaker: Hon. member . . .

Mr. McIver: I will not sit down unless you reverse your ruling.

The Speaker: I'm asking you one final time if you would sit down.

Mr. McIver: My answer will not change, Mr. Speaker. I will not sit down unless you reverse your ruling, that you made before you heard the evidence presented in this House.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I received this, handed to me by one of the pages. Lest there be any suggestion that I had any notice of this coming to me – I did not. I did not receive this, and I am curious how this was received by you. That's another matter that needs to be discussed within the House in terms of practice here. You can only accept the word that I saw this at the same time.

Finally, therefore, you've made your request, that's conditional. I'm sorry. Unless you sit down, I'm going to have to ask you to leave the House.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I will not sit down unless you reverse your ruling.

The Speaker: Then I must ask that you leave the House now. Would you do that?

Mr. McIver: No, I'm not. You need to reverse your ruling, Mr. Speaker. This is not how it should be done. Rulings should be made after hearing the evidence, not before. I had this typed up in my hand before the evidence on the point of order was even presented.

The Speaker: As I continue this conversation with you, hon. member, in this particular context I recognize that we are breaching the past precedent and practice of this House, as I understand it. It seems to me, sir, that you ought to sit down so that we do not have to ask you to physically leave the place.

Mr. McIver: If you change your ruling, I'll be happy to sit down, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm not sure that you as an hon. member can hold the House – the Speaker represents the entire House – to a condition on a point of order, and that's, in fact, what I understand you are doing, hon. member. You're asking that the House, which the Speaker represents, based upon a belief, an allegation – the Speaker's honour has been brought to bear. You're saying that the Speaker received a ruling from staff prior to me making a decision. You can accept or not accept my word. I can only give you my word as an honourable member that I received this now from a page.

Mr. McIver: I believe I'm upholding the dignity of this House, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: By doing so, sir – one final time could I respectfully ask that you either sit down or leave the House?

Mr. McIver: I will sit down when the ruling is reversed, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm afraid I cannot do that. I would ask that you respectfully leave the House with the Sergeant-at-Arms.

[Mr. McIver was escorted out of the Chamber by the Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms]

Debate Continued

The Speaker: I believe that we are back to the amendment.

Ms Luff: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Really, I don't believe that this changes the intent of the original motion. All that this amendment does is that it affirms our commitment to public education. In fact, the current way that the charter school regulations are worded is that the regulations state that charter school applications should only be approved in instances where proposed programs are not available in the public system. Those words currently exist within the way that charter schools are set up. So I would not say that this amendment particularly changes the intent of the original motion, sir. I do want to speak to a couple of really excellent examples where charter schools are providing a service that is not currently available in the public system.

I have a charter school in my riding, Almadina Language Charter Academy, that serves ESL students. Now, ESL students are served within the Calgary board of education, but this is a school specifically for ESL students that also offers an Arabic language program, which is not something that's currently available within the Calgary board of education. They do an amazing job. Their teachers love working there, their kids love attending there, and it's really providing a core service. They have a very long wait-list. Parents in my riding of Calgary-East really like this school. They like that their children can go and that it specifically targets children with ESL needs. Their test scores show that the scores of the children who attend this particular school achieve far higher than they would be expected to given their socioeconomic status and also the status of their language. I mean, that's an example of a charter school that's doing amazing work.

The Connect Charter School in Calgary is also doing amazing work. It is a very intense, inquiry-based program that is doing a really good job.

There are some really excellent examples of where charter schools are providing a service that is not available in the public system, and this amendment simply speaks to the original intent of how charter schools were set up while also affirming our commitment to allowing parents to choose however they want to educate their children, simply affirming that we have a strong commitment to public education.

I think that's all. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, I'm happy to say a few words on the amendment. Certainly, as well, it's very important for everyone to understand, judging by the two budgets that we have just passed in the last six months and all of the work that we have been doing, that we affirm our commitment to all forms of education in the province of Alberta as long as they're providing high-quality education that we regulate through the Ministry of Education.

We are, quite frankly, very concerned to make sure that we have all the capacity in our education system that we can. We have a growing enrolment in our schools, Madam Speaker, and certainly we are in the midst of a very large infrastructure build in regard to schools as well, the largest infrastructure build in history, quite frankly, in this province. Those are all indicators that we need all the capacity that we have available to us.

I certainly in the last 11 months or so have found wonderful examples of charter schools and private schools and home-schooling that are providing education choices for parents and children in our province. I mean, this is a very important point that I say every time I'm with people. Of course, you can judge us on the actions that take place in regard to funding that has happened and will continue to happen as well.

What is important – and I think the amendment speaks to that – is to talk about the regulations around starting new schools, starting new private schools and charter schools and so forth. You know, it's always important to remember that we do provide public funding for these schools as well. It goes through a regulatory process based on public funds, and being responsible for those public funds is very important. Our ministry works through those processes to ensure that there is a standard of education that's being met and that we are looking at ways to supplement education as it stands in the province as well.

The amendment simply is a manifestation of the regulations that already do exist when we do make an evaluation on a new private school or a new charter school as well. In the 11 months that I've been minister, I mean, we've made deliberations on both of those things. I have re-established licensing for charter schools, and I've evaluated other new applications as well through our ministry, using the criteria that is available to us. I think that's an important distinction for people to understand, and that's certainly part of the reason that, I guess, this motion is important and useful and that that distinction is made in the motion as well.

We, of course, are very proud of the steps that we've taken to ensure that our children have a high quality of education, especially during these difficult economic times. As minister I know how important stable and predictable funding is for our students, our teachers, and our education partners. The budget we just released on Thursday ensures that every new child entering our schools in the fall will be funded for that enrolment. They will have the teacher, the physical space, and the support staff that's available for them to succeed.

We know that the restoration of funding, which includes all forms of schools, Madam Speaker, has led to the opportunity to hire at least 740 additional teachers, protecting 800 support staff jobs. Now with this new budget from Thursday we can see another 360 teachers and 260 support staff hired. Of course, this is an important commitment and definition of commitment, quite frankly, and I think that it's been very well received indeed.

On Friday last week I held a phone conversation with public, charter, and private school boards after we released our budget, and what I heard on the other end was very pleasing indeed. They were very happy with our choices for funding and the hope for the future that that entails. I think that making sure that we establish funding and have long-term, predictable funding is what school boards have been looking for for a long time, and I think that our budget on Thursday was a reaffirmation of that as well.

It is obvious that I am an advocate and a product of public education, but I also recognize that there is very good work that does take place in charter and private schools as well as home-schooling. As a good example, I had a chance to meet a student and a principal of Boyle Street Education Centre, which is a charter school here in Edmonton. The students attending Boyle Street are often vulnerable and survivors of difficult circumstances, so the dedicated staff at this charter school go out of their way to support these youngsters and provide them with the tools they'll need to succeed.

A number of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students attend Boyle Street, and the centre works to make sure that its courses are culturally relevant. It's a school that's also a leader, Madam Speaker, in regard to developing policy to support all students, including those in the LGBTQ community. In that policy work teachers are actually involved and working very closely with the students, and it has a very positive effect on their learning and retention rates and graduation rates.

Certainly, as I travel around the province, we see examples of private schools that provide for students with severe special needs. You know, we value every step of the way the provision that these schools make for the children that they are responsible for. There are lots of great examples out there.

I say from beginning to end that we reaffirm that the needs of our 659,000 students, probably more as we speak, are paramount, and I look for the capacity, the stability, and the security that our fine schools do provide. Always we're working to adapt, and always we're looking to improve. But, certainly, everyone must hear my words and understand our affirmation of funding in support for different forms of schools as long as the quality and the standard that we expect from those schools does not waiver. I think that is a message that everyone should make sure they do understand.

Now, I've also spoken to my public school boards, which includes Catholic school boards, and challenged them, you know, to look to make sure that they provide alternative programming as well. I know Edmonton public has set a very high standard for offering alternative programming in their schools, and I think that it paid off very well in regard to the choices that parents have across the city. I know that the evolution of alternative programming is at different places and times around the province, but the more that we can challenge school boards to offer different choices, then certainly that is very helpful for the children and for students and parents and families, to have that level of high-quality choice available to them.

Madam Speaker, it's always a balancing. We know that it was not easy, by any means, to find those dollars to fund education, but this caucus, our cabinet, and our Premier reaffirm to me time and time again that we invest in education every step of the way during difficult economic circumstances or not because that's just who we are as Albertans, that's who we are as a community, and we certainly cannot waiver from that position. So you can watch us and look at the budgets – two budgets in six months – that reaffirm that commitment, and moving forward, we will continue to do so as well. I've heard very strong and positive reaction from our partners in education – the school boards, parents, students, teachers – and I certainly am grateful for that input.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon on the amendment, followed by Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think we're all a little shocked at what has happened in this Chamber today. I would speak to the amendment – and I will be speaking to that amendment – but I want to start addressing it in this fashion. I believe that today, now more than ever, in Alberta we need educational choice and we need flexibility to choose and to allow parents to choose the educational choice and delivery method for their children.

I don't know if you've looked up the Treasury Board and Finance statistics with regard to immigration into this province, but I have. This province has consistently captured double-digit shares of Canada's immigrant population since 2009. Alberta has been attracting a large number of immigrants. As a matter of fact, we've been the destination of choice for immigrants into this country, Alberta.

It's because of that that we all recognize in this House we're a multicultural province and that we need to have this discussion about what educational choice will look like, and this amendment speaks to that educational choice. We in this province represent every language, religion, colour, political persuasion that you can think of. What ties us together isn't an ethnic sense of nationalism; it's a civic sense of nationalism. Albertans are tied together by our commitment to democracy, to the ideas of freedom and of equality, of personal conscience, and the right to religious freedom. It is these democratic values that draw us together, and it's probably why I'm so concerned about this amendment to the motion.

You see, I believe that Albertans are committed to these values. It's these values that tie us together, and they're the key to being in community in Alberta. Of all of the values that we uphold in this province, freedom is one of the greatest. We have a clear understanding and commitment as a province to a balanced understanding of freedom, a responsible freedom that understands that every citizen must be free to speak to their conscience, to raise their family, to pursue their own faith, and to do so within the balance of community. I don't believe that this amendment to this motion speaks to that.

It's a delicate balance that we have in this province, but we've exercised that balance in innumerable ways, and we've done it very successfully. We've encouraged all Albertans into a social compact that will allow for freedom, bound by a commitment to live in community in such a fashion that we respect all of our individual rights, including the rights of parents to decide how their children will be educated in this province. Not the state, not with any recommendation or guidance or final say by the state as to what we can or should not be able to have, but in a reasonable fashion to meet the needs of the parents and the students as they see fit in this province.

The Wildrose Party will support the motion, but we will not be supporting this amendment because we do not believe that this amendment fits with that vision of education, with the rights that we believe we should all have as Albertans. We believe that our system of education must reflect the historical respect for diversity and for parental rights that we have created in this province. There are many ways to teach and there are many different communities that we have, and we expect our education system to be able to serve all of those communities, in all of their diversity.

It should be no surprise that we must craft an education system that will reflect the diversity of this province. We need an education system that will continue to serve a multicultural province, one that respects parental rights and choice and one that will be flexible enough to serve the different communities within this province, and this amendment attacks that. One thing that the PC government almost always did well was to encourage respect of parental choice in education, and we cannot let that principle erode. I believe that this amendment attacks that principle.

Alberta is a model of educational diversity in Canada and around the world, and we must support that vision of education, Madam Speaker. We have a diverse system with public schools, Catholic schools, home education, charter schools, alternative programs, independent schools, and all of it is driven by parental choice, not by the state. Taken together, they meet the needs of Canada's diverse community. Alberta has been a world leader in supporting educational choice within school boards and according to the priorities of the parents and the interests of the children, and that is what we need here. Not this amendment.

Indeed, Alberta's publicly funded system, I believe, is amazing in its diversity. The Fraser Institute has spoken to that, saying, "Generally speaking, Alberta offers the greatest degree of school choice in Canada." This needs to be maintained. We need to maintain an education system that has been able to meet the needs of all of our diverse communities, and that is why I want to be able to speak against this amendment, Madam Speaker.

We learned this early on in Canadian history. If nobody else across the aisle has learned it, we've learned it in the rest of Canada. Faced with a nation that was divided by French and English politics, in a nation that was being divided, we saw it happen in 1890 in Manitoba, Madam Speaker, when the English Protestant school system was going to be imposed on a French Catholic population. Out of this controversy was established what we call in our Canadian history the Laurier-Greenway compromise, a compromise that said that where numbers warrant, where there is significant interest by the parents to have a particular style of education – in this case in Manitoba, a French Catholic education – they would be able to have that. This was not driven by the state. It was the antithesis of that. It was the state recognizing that educational decisions are made by the parents, not by the state.

While the government currently says that they will support choice in education, what we have now is a question as to whether or not they actually do. The Minister of Education has stated quite clearly, Madam Speaker:

I think it's a bit duplicitous that we actually direct public funds to a private school, but that's a discussion for another day.

I guess we're having it today.

Why spend $10,000, $20,000, $30,000 on a private school when you probably get a better education in the public school down the street?

Madam Speaker, to quote the Premier: "Our caucus is steadfastly opposed to private schooling and particularly steadfastly opposed to public dollars supporting private schooling."

So what this amendment speaks to cannot be held in isolation. It must be taken in the context of the things that have been said prior by this government and by the members of this government. It was with great interest that I was waiting to listen today to see what the members from the opposite side of the House would say. I guess we have got a very clear statement. They believe that it is not the parents. Rather, in this motion we see that it says: "where they offer alternatives not available in the public system."

Mr. Barnes: Who decides that?

Mr. Smith: That, I guess, is the job of some bureaucrat or somebody in government.

This amendment assumes that the public system has a priority. The very nature of this amendment attacks the very concept of the idea of parental choice. This motion is actually about freedom, the freedom of parents to decide, not the state, not the government.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster if there's time.

Mr. Malkinson: Madam Speaker, I'll pass for the moment. Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, I see this afternoon's proceedings as being a tremendous lost opportunity. It disappoints me. Really, what we wanted to have this afternoon was a discussion about a principle that, as the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon has articulated, has long been something that has guided education in this province, and that is parental choice.

There have been concerns since the election of this government on the part of many parents across our province that in some ways those choices or that ability to choose would be eroded. Now, the Education minister, to his credit, has stated in question period that that is not his intent. He has said not equivocally in terms of going forward, but he has certainly said for the time being that those choices would still be made available. But for parents across the province the ability to have that choice is something that they need to have affirmed to them, and this motion gave government members the opportunity to do that.

In fact, because it's a private member's motion and because it's a free vote, if there are some members of government caucus that don't agree with the statement, they could vote against the motion. I think that given the diversity of the province of Alberta there would be some who would applaud them on making that decision to vote against the motion because they have a fundamental disagreement with the notion of parental choice. I will tell you that on behalf of parents who make choices that are alternate to public education we make them with the greatest of care, Madam Speaker. I can assure you of that and that we are concerned that members of this government do not necessarily honour that ability to make that choice.

Now, I spoke out in this Legislature in October 2012, and I'm quoting here from Hansard. At that time the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood was speaking to government Bill 3. We were speaking that night about choice in education, and I'm going to quote. I'm going to go back a little bit in his quote because what we were talking about were some of the changes that had been made when Bill 3, the Education Act, was reintroduced. He's referring to basically some of the information we received from groups like charter school parents and home-school parents. The hon. member said: "I think it's deplorable. I think that it is pandering to fringe groups in our education system, and the vast majority of students who participate in the public school system will suffer as a result." Specifically, just to get the full context of the debate, he was referring to home-schoolers.

I saw it as recently as Monday night at the Alberta School Boards Association, when I had a school board trustee come up to me and say: "You know what the problem with our public school system is? It's those home-schoolers. It's those parents that make decisions to home-school their kids." I looked at that trustee and said: well, you probably picked the wrong guy to say that to. My wife and I were blessed with two sons, and they were home-schooled K to 12. The one is currently completing a master's degree in theology, having finished a bachelor of arts degree in applied arts and philosophy. The other one has a bachelor of arts degree from the University of Calgary. I think they've turned out okay.

We made those choices, Madam Speaker, specifically because when my wife told a public school teacher, who was a friend of ours, that our oldest son had taught himself to read and that he was reading at a grade 9 level by the time he got to the age of three, that public school teacher told my wife: you know, I used to really enjoy teaching students like Roland, but now they're just a problem. That's what we were told, that our son, if he went to public school, would be a problem, a problem in the class of a teacher whom we respected for her ability and her passion for teaching. After that, after many tears were shed, my wife and I made the decision that we would home-school our children. There have been times when we wondered if that was the right decision, but we made that decision.

My problem with this amendment, Madam Speaker, is that I have a problem with the phrase "commitment to allowing parents the choice . . . for their children, including home, charter, and private education programs in such instances where they offer alternatives not available in the public system." Parental choice becomes conditional. It becomes conditional upon proving – and I'm not sure to whom or how – that those alternatives are not available in the public system. What would we have had to do? Would we have had to subpoena that teacher to appear in front of some sort of tribunal in order to get permission to home-school our sons? That's what we were told.

You may not want to believe that. That's fine. That's your prerogative. But my wife and I were told that our gifted son would be a problem in public school, so we chose an alternative. We didn't want to create a problem for a teacher or for a group of students, and we home-schooled that child. We home-schooled both of our sons, and throughout it was not just our choice as parents; it was their choice. Every year we sat down with them and said: "Do you want to continue on this path of home-schooling, or do you want to attend public school? That option is available to you." And every single year they chose to be home-schooled.

That choice is available in Alberta. That choice is funded in Alberta. Alberta and British Columbia are the only two provinces that actually fund home-schooling. In some European countries it's illegal. It's illegal to home-school in Germany. It's illegal to home-school in Sweden. And it's stunning to me that this amendment would move us closer to a situation where you have to prove to someone – we don't know who; we don't know how – that a certain course or type of education is not available in the public system. That's what the amendment says.

Instead of having a debate, as the original motion would have had, talking specifically about affirming parental choice and all of the variety of choice and allowing hon. members to speak to that either in favour or opposed – that's what private member's motions are for. It's a free vote. You can vote opposite to the person sitting next to you. That's okay. That's fine. But instead of having that, we have this amendment that fundamentally changes this motion because now it makes parental choice conditional. It makes parental choice only an option where the parents can prove that the choice they want to make is not available in the public system.

Madam Speaker, that fundamentally changes what we're talking about here. I think, quite frankly, it sends a shiver down the spine of every parent in this province who chooses to educate their children in a manner that is not in keeping with what is preferred by that side of the House, and that indeed is a sad day for this province. If parental choice is removed from parents in Alberta, if the opportunity guaranteed by the United Nations that parents shall be the primary deciders of how their children shall be educated, removing it from parents and handing it over to the state, handing it over to somebody who decides whether the conditions in this amendment are in fact being satisfied, that will send a shiver down the spine of every home-school parent, charter school parent, private school parent in the province.

It didn't have to be that way. We could have debated the original motion, and we could have had a split in all caucuses for that matter, because some, perhaps, wouldn't have supported the motion in all the caucuses. Instead, we have this amendment that has fundamentally changed it and has fundamentally changed it into a situation where parents will only have the opportunity to choose these nonapproved courses, these nonapproved streams of education that have always been available purely on the choice of the parent because they now have to prove that that's not available in the public education system.

Madam Speaker, that's a sad, sad statement, and I can only think that observers of this debate today will be very disappointed in that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't know where to start. It's been quite the afternoon. You know, we've seen things this afternoon that we might never see in this Assembly again. That's certainly my hope. But the big challenge that we face is understanding who is in charge of the education of our children, and that's what we were doing this afternoon.

In fact, today my children happen to be in the gallery, and if you can believe it, Madam Speaker, they're at school. They are currently learning. I would imagine that some day I'll describe exactly what transpired this afternoon, and they will be surprised at what happened. They'll be surprised that the government moved an amendment that at the end of the day, should it be passed, would take away parental choice, would potentially expose those who choose to educate their children in alternative manners to not have that same choice.

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to the standing orders it's now 6 p.m. and we do have to adjourn the House for the afternoon. The House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, April 19, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect each in our own way. Hon. members, today marks the centennial of the equal suffrage amendment. One hundred years ago this act gave most Albertan women the right to vote in provincial elections and was a vital step in the continuing evolution of democracy in Alberta and, in fact, across Canada. This was a pivotal stepping stone in the lengthy fight for equality amongst all citizens of our province. Let us remember that the drive for equality around this world of ours is still something that we must all dedicate our efforts towards.

Thank you. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Speaker's Rulings Admissibility of Amendments

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would like to address the situation that arose in the Assembly yesterday afternoon during the debate on Motion 504. While I consider that this matter is concluded, I do think it is important to clarify the events that transpired for the information of all.

During the debate on Motion 504 a confidential document containing advice from the table officers for the Speaker was inadvertently delivered to the leader of the third party. For those members who may not be aware, table officers anticipate issues that may be arising in the Assembly, and they routinely advise the Speaker on those matters. Yesterday was no different except that the advice went mistakenly to the leader of the third party. For clarity, the draft ruling that the leader received addressed the admissibility of an amendment to Motion 504. I want to assure members that I had not seen the amendment before it was introduced in the Assembly.

With respect to the decision let me be clear that I did listen and will always listen to the arguments very carefully in any decisions on rulings in this Assembly, but the decisions in the Assembly are mine and mine alone.

Finally, my ruling on the admissibility of the amendment stands in debate on Motion 504, and the proposed amendment will continue on May 2, 2016.

As members are aware, there are a lot of notes and documents that are delivered by pages in this Assembly. Sometimes members receive documents not intended for them.

I hope this assists the Assembly in getting clarity on the events that took place and that we might together move forward in a more constructive content and desire, which we all share.

The hon. member of the opposition.

Point of Clarification

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order, Standing Order 13(2), "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I appreciate your comments this morning. Just seeking some further clarification with respect to the ruling, and I recognize that the ruling was yours and yours alone.

Having said that, we have a long-standing tradition in the Chamber of allowing private members' motions to be debated without amendment. There are a few occasions in the past where amendments have been made when working in conjunction with the mover of the motion. While I appreciate the extension of an olive branch from the Government House Leader to the third party, that was proposed by another private member, it does cause some concern as to whether or not the effectiveness of private members' motions will continue if they can be amended at the whim of the Government House Leader or another member of the Chamber.

I'm just curious to know if you're able to provide additional comment with respect to your ruling around: are private members' motions going to be allowed to be amended, particularly in light of the fact that the member who introduced the motion certainly – they would no longer have been his words. From time to time members will wait three or four or five years in order to propose a private member's motion, and if the motion was passed, it certainly wouldn't have reflected the words of the member who proposed the motion. So it's troubling to me. As you know, the role of the Speaker is to defend the voice of the minority, and in this case it would have drastically changed that.

My question with respect to your ruling and seeking some clarification under 13(2) is: was the long-standing tradition of the Assembly taken into consideration with the ruling?

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the point of order raised by the Opposition House Leader. There have been numerous occasions in the past where private members' motions have been amended. I will give you some examples and share them with the House.

Back on May 5, 2008, there was a motion that was amended by the PC caucus. A motion on April 2, 2007, Motion 503, was a Liberal motion that was amended by the PCs at the time. There are a number of examples, which I'm happy to table in this House. I just want to clarify for the House that this is a practice that has occurred many times in the past. This has been done. Motions can be amended.

Even in Beauchesne's parliamentary practice, in 569, "(1) A motion may be amended by: (a) leaving out certain words; (b) leaving out certain words in order to insert other words; (c) inserting or adding other words." That's under amendments in Beauchesne's.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important, number one, that we look at precedent in the past in your decision on this and that motions have been amended on numerous occasions. They may be amended in the future. What I also want to reiterate at this point in time is that the Government House Leader did reach across the aisle to the Member for Calgary-Hays and indicated that we intend to withdraw our amendment on this motion, extending an olive branch to members of the Assembly. But I do want to ensure that the House is aware that this is a normal practice, amending motions, and it is within the ability and authority of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. You know, I rise because as a private member we have very, very, very few tools to present our ideas and to represent our constituents and the interests of Albertans. I just want to be very clear that although Beauchesne's 569 read in the literal sense . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, would you mind directing your comments with respect to Standing Order 13(2).

Mr. Clark: Yes. To the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do want to further my hon. colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and his request for further clarification under 13(2) from yourself.

As a private member we do have very few tools, and while 569 read literally, I believe, could be interpreted to allow a government private member or any private member to propose an amendment, the amendments, as I understand it, that have been the tradition of this House have been friendly amendments that have been proposed by one side or the other and accepted by the mover of the amendment. It's important, I think, that we remember the traditions of this House, and I'm very curious and interested to hear your comments under 13(2) on this particular matter given the fact that we have very little . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you.

I did address the 13(2) issue yesterday in the sequence of events that took place, but let me make some additional remarks. I did listen to it very carefully. I think the deputy House leader yesterday identified the points that had been raised with respect to precedent. I am pleased to hear that the Government House Leader had discussions with the opposition with respect to these moves. If there's anything that I've learned and understood in this House, it's that context has a great deal to do with the decisions that are made and that when one sometimes applies a broad practice and presumes there's one answer, there are usually several.

I can tell the House that in this capacity I take considerable weight and emphasis about the responsibility, as the members have identified, to recognize the rights and the opportunities of the opposition to raise matters because of the number of votes with a majority government. I do and will continue to do my best efforts to preserve that principle. I would therefore encourage the caucuses to reach out on these matters and approach these matters, particularly around those bills that we discussed yesterday afternoon, that part of our week. As the opposition members have all said, that is an opportunity for private members. Accordingly, please treat those times respectfully and address the points that are raised.

I have nonetheless made the decision with respect to 13(2). I did in fact cite in my decision several statements from Beauchesne's, and I would therefore submit that those reasons stand.

With the permission of the House, I would now go to Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 9

An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and move second reading of Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences.

This bill makes amendments to make the enforcement of provincial laws and municipal bylaws more effective, efficient, and proportionate. The bill has two main components. First, it changes the enforcement mechanism for minor provincial and municipal offences. Second, it allows for the increased use of e-tickets.

I'll address the first issue first. Currently if a person is ticketed for a minor, non motor vehicle related infraction, like failing to pay a transit fare or failing to shovel snow, and does not attend court or pay the ticket in time, the court will issue a warrant for that person's arrest. If the person comes to the attention of police again and they cannot pay at that time, they will be sent to jail. This method of enforcement is disproportionate, resource intensive, and ineffective.

Mr. Speaker, in 2011 Barry Stewart died in the old Edmonton Remand Centre in a tragic incident that could have been prevented. A comprehensive fatality inquiry report was completed to look into this incident. The review indicated that Barry Stewart had been placed in the remand centre to serve a five-day sentence arising from his failure to pay fines for being intoxicated in a public place, trespassing, failure to appear, and jaywalking. With this legislation in place, individuals with overdue fines from minor infractions will not face jail time. Barry Stewart's tragic death I think is a poignant reminder of how important it is to keep people who don't belong in jail, who don't present a danger to the public out of jail.

Currently people are being sent to jail not because they've committed an offence where jail is the appropriate penalty but because they can't afford to pay fines. Mr. Speaker, this amounts to criminalizing poverty, and it does not serve anyone in Alberta. Jail is an incredibly expensive method of dealing with individuals, and it should be reserved for instances in which the person presents an actual danger to the public. It should not be used to criminalize those who have been unfortunate enough to find themselves struggling with mental health or addiction and find themselves living on the streets with insufficient money to pay tickets, some of which are often issued for violations like loitering, which essentially amounts to, you know, standing around where you're not meant to be. But if you have no private space to go to, if you are homeless, sometimes you will find yourself out on the street. It's, I think, deeply unfair to ticket these people for being homeless and then to ultimately send them to jail.

Of course, there should be consequences when someone violates a municipal bylaw or provincial offence, and there will continue to be. With these amendments if a fine is not paid voluntarily, it will be enforced through civil enforcement mechanisms. The main enforcement mechanism will be a restriction on motor vehicle registry services. This is very similar to what we do now with traffic tickets and parking tickets. If a person doesn't pay and they don't respond by the date in question, then when they go to register their vehicle, they'll be unable to register their vehicle and will be asked to pay. For those people who don't own vehicles or who refuse to pay their fines, other enforcement mechanisms will be available. These include filing writs against real estate or personal property and garnisheeing wages. You can also garnishee bank accounts or income tax refunds and GST rebates. In the case of the latter two, this will be done through the Canada Revenue Agency set-off program.

With these amendments, Mr. Speaker, our government and social agencies will be in a better position to work with individuals who are coping with poverty so that these individuals don't become trapped in an endless cycle of poverty and incarceration. Bill 9 will help reduce the criminalization of poverty.

In addition, using warrants to enforce fines for minor infractions is ineffective. The number of outstanding warrants in Alberta continues to grow each year, with warrants for minor infractions being a major contributor. Currently we have close to 187,000 outstanding warrants in Alberta, and half of those warrants are for relatively minor provincial and municipal infractions. Issuing and enforcing these warrants is resource intensive for the police. In addition, it's estimated that court staff alone spend more than 9,000 hours annually processing warrants for minor infractions. Law enforcement agencies also spend many hours each year entering these warrants into their system and transporting and processing the individuals they arrest.

The cost of using these police resources – and they really are resources. You know, police officers are highly trained people. These are resources that are best targeted for what they're intended to do, which is to deal with sort of criminal matters. Using these police resources on minor infractions instead of more serious infractions is deeply concerning. This proposed legislation will help address this issue, and it will allow police officers, who are highly trained individuals, to focus on what's most important for them. These amendments will make this enforcement more efficient, more effective, and more fair for the individuals who come into contact with the system.

Mr. Speaker, the other set of amendments in this legislation will enable the expansion of what we call e-tickets in Alberta. E-tickets are violation tickets that are filed and processed electronically rather than in paper form. These are already used for photoradar offences, which account for about 60 per cent of all tickets in the province. The proposed amendments will enable the use of e-tickets for offences where the ticket is issued directly to an individual, a process which other provinces, including Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Nova Scotia, have already implemented.

Currently when an officer issues a ticket at the roadside, the ticket is handwritten on a preprinted form. After the ticket is issued, the officer must bring the court and police copies back to be entered into the law enforcement data system. The court copy must then be physically transported to the court or clerk's file and entered into the court information system. Currently if a summons ticket is issued, an officer is required to take the ticket before a commissioner for oaths and swear that they have reasonable grounds to believe that the person they issued the ticket to committed the offence. Under the new system they will be deemed to have sworn. The standard required for charging will remain the same, but the administrative step of swearing the ticket will be removed.

These amendments will enable the officer to enter the necessary information about the offender and the offence into a laptop, print a paper copy of the summons ticket in their cruiser, and give that to the alleged offender. The electronic ticket in the laptop will be sent automatically to the law enforcement system and to the court information system, so paper copies will not need to be transported and clerks will not need to use their time doing data entry. By eliminating the need to file paper tickets with the court, processing times will be quicker, administration costs will be lower, and the opportunity for simple data entry errors will be reduced.

I would like to highlight that using e-tickets does not change the standard for charging someone with an offence, nor does it create new opportunities to issue tickets. The standard for charging will remain the same, and the offences with which one is charged will remain the same. All that will change is that the information will be entered once and transmitted electronically instead of having to be entered on separate occasions.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, these amendments have been discussed for the past decade, and many people have been waiting on the government to make these changes. I'm proud that not even a year into my role I'm able to bring this bill forward to work towards modernizing the enforcement of provincial offences. I think that at this time, when we are so short on resources, these sorts of initiatives, which will ensure that people's time, court clerks and police, is used efficiently and effectively to ensure that we aren't, you know, enforcing warrants for issues we don't need to be enforcing and ensure that time is not being used for data entry which could be used in another way, are really critical because at this time the government faces significant financial pressures. I think it's in the interest of all Albertans to ensure that we are using resources most effectively.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think it remains important to note that for a very long time community groups have been calling for some of these amendments. They have been asking to change the system so that people don't enter the cycle of incarceration, so that a youth who may be struggling, who may have left home early for whatever reason they have, who gets on a C-Train and doesn't pay for the C-Train doesn't find themselves in jail being exposed to people who are far more entrenched in a criminal lifestyle, that we maybe don't want them to be exposed to. You know, once someone enters the jail system, they can find themselves sort of moving into a lifestyle that will keep them rotating in and out of jail for years. This doesn't serve anyone. It's not in the interest of the individual in question, it's not in the interest of Albertans, and it certainly isn't in the interest of ensuring that we're targeting funds effectively.

I would respectfully urge all my colleagues in this House to support this bill. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today on Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. There are a few elements of this bill that I'd like to speak to, and I would like to pose a few questions to the government so that we can get a better understanding of exactly how this legislation will affect Albertans. I think it is important to discuss some of the finer points now rather than have the teeth of this bill decided behind closed doors through regulations.

I would like to say that I am in favour of the policies that make it easier for men and women in our provincial law enforcement agencies to do their job. I am hopeful that if carried out properly, Bill 9 is a step in the right direction for the administration of our justice system.

This bill can really be understood as two different amendments to the judicial process. The first seeks to fix our current system, which requires the issuance of warrants for minor offences and which has developed an astounding delinquency rate and a disproportionate response from our legal system. The second component is the replacement of an officer's obligation to have another officer swear on the ticket for the day. This legislation takes away this extra and onerous step and allows for the e-ticketing process.

Wildrose acknowledges that the current formula for minor offences is not working for the taxpayer, for the convicted individual, or for the justice system or society as a whole. Right now there is a backlog of about 90,000 outstanding warrants, of which 16 per cent are over five years old. Clearly, there needs to be a better system of bringing people to justice. The current process of paper ticketing has also proven to be cumbersome since tickets can take a long time to issue in the field and are more prone to clerical errors. E-ticketing presents a unique opportunity for police departments to reduce administration time for police officers while increasing the accuracy of the tickets being issued.

When it comes to e-ticketing, I think that our province should be drawing on the success of the RCMP programs in Manitoba, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, and right here in Alberta. Through these programs police departments were able to create savings both in their departments' bottom lines and, more importantly, by saving the time of their police officers in the field. If you ask any officer across the province, they will tell you that their time is better spent monitoring the community than doing administrative work.

Reports claim that through e-ticketing the issuance of provincial offence tickets would go from a total processing time, which includes the writing and swearing of the ticket, of 15 minutes down to three. If we extrapolate those savings to more than 7,000 police officers serving in Alberta, we feel that there's a real reason to anticipate some real savings to our judicial system. Eliminating administrative barriers to proper policing is exactly the type of red tape reduction that Wildrose has advocated for across government.

There are other savings that the NDP has promised with this legislation. Despite this government's unwillingness to find efficiencies in the daily operations of the bureaucracy, we will be waiting with a watchful eye to see savings that will come from the government's promised reduction of 9,000 hours per year of ticket processing time for judicial clerks. We'll be watching very closely because the government's most recent budget has estimated ticket processing to actually be $2 million more in this upcoming year. Fewer hours, more efficiency, but somehow more spending. Strange, I know, and concerning.

While e-ticketing may seem like the best route for many streams of law enforcement, I think it must remain optional for municipalities to decide whether or not this system is right for their local policing needs. These folks know what works best for them, and we should be doing everything possible to empower our local decision-making. One size fits all is not always the right direction for this government, for its municipalities, and its citizens.

10:30

At face value this bill does seem to resolve a problem that should not exist in Alberta. I am certain that we all can agree that a mom or a dad who forgot to pay their jaywalking ticket should not be arrested and jailed the next time they get pulled over for a broken tail light. Unfortunately, that could happen with the law in its current form. While this is bad enough for a person being arrested, it is also draining on government resources. When someone is convicted of a provincial offence like jaywalking, court clerks must process the issuance of a warrant. Then a police officer must arrest, process, transport, and jail someone for forgetting to pay that jaywalking ticket. This is a tremendous waste of taxpayers' money, and certainly it was not the intent of the original law.

Let me be clear. In no way am I advocating or condoning that people either (a) commit a provincial offence or (b), after being convicted, are delinquent about their punishment. I believe that we have these laws in place for a good reason, and that is public safety. People should have to pay their fine and be accountable for their actions. However, being arrested and jailed for forgetting to pay a jaywalking ticket seems unreasonable, and it's time to do away with an absurd process like this.

What is being discussed here is the enforcement mechanism through which we can ensure the most efficient use of public dollars in bringing people to justice. The enforcement being proposed here seems perfectly reasonable. The collection tool will mirror what happens to individuals who do not pay their traffic tickets, not that anyone in this House would know anything about that situation. Let me explain. If you have an unpaid traffic ticket, when you go to renew your driver's licence or registration, you have to pay the ticket in order to get your paperwork renewed.

The proposed legislation reads the same but has vague enough language which has left me needing further clarification. This is one of the points that I was hoping that we could discuss and nail down in the House rather than leaving it to the regulation phase of this legislation. The proposed bill reads:

57 . . . the Registrar may,

- (d) . . . refuse to perform that function or service or to issue, renew or otherwise deal with any motor vehicle document or other document until the fine or penalty is paid.

Does this mean that a registry can refuse any type of service until a ticket is paid? Since the bill also applies to municipal bylaw infractions, does this mean that a person would not be able to get a new health care card until they pay their ticket for, let's say, not shovelling their sidewalks? This seems to undermine the common-sense solution that this government is painting this bill to be. Again, let's narrow this down here in the House so that members know what they're voting for.

On a note of clarity, I would like to discuss now this government's plan on dealing with repeat offenders. I am not speaking about the poorest members of our society who fall into what some have referred to as the revolving door at Alberta's prisons. These people are imprisoned on warrants for ETS fare jumping or having a dog without a licence. Eventually they are let out of prison, and due to their living conditions they are likely to repeat and go back to prison. Again, this does not seem to make sense. What I am speaking about are the people who may still not have the access that they need for registries. Is the door going to be wide open for them to trespass or be drunk in public over and over again, with no reprisal for their actions? It seems like there is a hole in this government's legislation that doesn't account for those who can afford to pay tickets, then don't, and then have no real need to access the registry. I am curious to hear the government's plan on how they are going to tighten this loophole.

I look forward to hearing the government's response to some of the ideas and questions I've brought forward today. I believe them to be legitimate concerns and in need of clarification.

With that, I say thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to discussing this issue further in Committee of the Whole.

The Speaker: I've been requested to revert to some introductions. Is there is an agreement for consent to introduce two guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Please proceed, hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this morning to introduce one of the women that has joined our Assembly today to mark the 100th anniversary of some women receiving the right to vote in Alberta. As everyone knows, each of us was provided with the opportunity to invite one person to join us for the celebrations today, and ours from Lethbridge-West is Dillon Hargreaves. Dillon is a trans activist in Lethbridge with the Trans Equality Society of Alberta and an active member of the Outreach Alberta society. She has a very bright political mind, and I expect continued municipal and provincial involvement from her. If Dillon would stand and receive the traditional warm welcome from the folks in our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you to the Assembly I, too, would like to introduce my guest, Kristin Krein. Kristin, if you'd stand. Kristin may be described as a ferocious fairness activist, a passionate social justice advocate, a staunch ally, an effective community builder. She is a friend to both progressives and the marginalized that they seek to assist. Kristin's work is infused with the ideals of feminism, inclusiveness, and equity for all. This is evidenced through her tireless charitable and volunteer organizing activity, which continues to date, all while she pursues an academic degree at the University of Lethbridge. Kristin is truly an amazing woman, and I am proud to know her and call her my friend. I would ask that Kristin receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences (continued)

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. This bill represents an innovative and fair way to help address the growing pressure on Alberta's justice system while protecting vulnerable Albertans from a cycle of incarceration and poverty, thus reducing the criminalization of poverty. Chris Hay, the executive director of the John Howard Society of Alberta, has been quoted as saying:

At the John Howard Society we see many people who are caught up in a cycle of poverty and incarceration and often their stories started with unpaid fines and other minor administration of justice issues. We truly feel that these amendments will help to break this cycle, ultimately saving taxpayers money while at the same time enhancing community safety.

This bill will free up police, court, and correctional resources to focus on serious crime while still holding those who commit minor infractions to account. This reinforces our government's commitment to improve the safety of our communities.

Given that the indirect cost associated with incarcerating individuals for minor infractions is approximately $800,000, these amendments reinforce our government's commitment to responsible management of public finances. The electronic filing of tickets will create efficiencies and reduce errors and costs, freeing up resources in the justice system. It will allow law enforcement to focus more of their time on our streets, protecting Albertans. Chief Knecht, the Edmonton Police Service chief, has said:

The introduction of Bill 9 will allow police to free up officers and civilian staff to focus on predators and serious criminal offenders. As a result of modernized technology and this new approach, a significant reduction in administrative processes and paperwork is expected.

Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences, proposes amendments to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and the Traffic Safety Act that will streamline and simplify how our provincial laws and bylaws are managed. The bill introduces two main amendments. First, it changes the enforcement mechanisms for minor provincial and municipal offences. Second, it allows increased use of e-tickets. These amendments will help protect vulnerable Albertans while making the enforcement of provincial laws and municipal bylaws effective, efficient, and balanced. If passed, these amendments will end Alberta's outdated process of jailing individuals as a tool to enforce tickets for minor infractions and will reduce inefficiencies of the current model.

When Albertans, especially vulnerable Albertans, are unable to pay their initial fines and do not attend court, the court issues a warrant for their arrest. The fact is that vulnerable people are more likely to be issued tickets for minor infractions such as not paying for transit and are more likely to be arrested for failure to pay or appear in court. Thus, landing in jail further perpetuates a cycle of incarceration and poverty, which does not create safer communities. This method of enforcement is disproportionate, resource intensive, and ineffective. Therefore, these amendments provide a needed step towards ending the revolving door of poverty and incarceration.

Given our government's continued commitment to protecting all of Alberta, including vulnerable Albertans, if passed, these amendments will end the practice of punishing individuals for being unable to afford their fines. As the minister has mentioned, in 2011, for example, Barry Stewart was serving a five-day sentence due to his failure to pay fines for being intoxicated in a public place, trespassing, failure to appear, and jaywalking. During his stay at the old Edmonton Remand Centre Barry Stewart died in a tragic incident that could have been prevented. Significantly, Mr. Stewart was jailed for his inability to afford his tickets, not because jail was the appropriate response for his offences. Thus, if passed, this bill will end the practice of issuing warrants for people who have not paid their fines for minor infractions, a practice that contributes to criminalizing poverty.

As mentioned, the current model of using jail as a tool to enforce payment is ineffective and outdated. Moreover, the results of this practice are neither positive nor beneficial to Alberta taxpayers or to the broader community. Given that the indirect cost associated with incarcerating individuals for minor infractions is approximately $800,000, these amendments reinforce our government's commitment to responsible management of public finances.

The proposed changes will also help the province defer costs by creating efficiencies that free up significant time for judiciary, court staff, police, and corrections officers. This will allow police officers and court staff to give time to more serious offences and offenders. Doing so will create safer communities in Alberta. Additionally, the province will benefit from more effective collection of fines and penalties that are payable to the province.

The main enforcement mechanism will be the restriction of motor vehicle registry services. In other words, these amendments will replace arrest and jail with civil measures such as motor vehicle registry service restrictions for people who have not paid tickets for minor infractions such as not paying a transit fare. For those people who don't own vehicles or refuse to pay their fines, other enforcement mechanisms will be available such as filing writs against property and garnishing bank accounts, wages, income tax refunds, and GST rebates.

In addition, evidence shows that warrants as a tool to enforce fines for minor infractions are not effective. Every year the number of outstanding warrants increases. Currently there are about 187,000 outstanding warrants, half of which are for minor infractions. Each year court staff spend more than 9,000 hours processing warrants for minor infractions, making this model ineffective and resource intensive. We will not actually see savings. The clerks are drowning in work. What we will get back is the ship righting itself. We can't lessen transfers to municipal police either. They'll just get more time.

The second amendment to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act is enabling the expansion of e-tickets in Alberta. The electronic filing of tickets will streamline the ticketing process by allowing police to file tickets electronically with the court. The electronic filing of tickets will create efficiencies and reduce errors and costs to free up resources in the justice system. Currently when an officer issues a ticket, the ticket is handwritten on a preprinted form. After the ticket is issued, the officer must bring the court and police copies back to the detachment to be entered into the law enforcement data system.

For a summons ticket the officer must take the court copy before a commissioner for oaths and swear or affirm that they have reasonable grounds for issuing the ticket. The commissioner for oaths signs, and the ticket must be physically transported to the court, where the clerks file and enter them into the court information system. This process is time consuming, inefficient, and is ultimately hurting taxpayers and communities.

If passed, e-tickets will allow law enforcement to focus more of their time on the streets, thus protecting Albertans. Moreover, filing tickets electronically with the court reduces errors, improves service to Albertans by reducing filing times, lowers costs, and significantly improves ticket processing efficiencies by eliminating redundant data entry.

It is noteworthy to highlight that this amendment will not create new opportunities for police officers to issue tickets, nor will it change the standard for charging someone with an offence. Officers will still be required to have reasonable grounds to believe that an offence was committed in order to issue a violation ticket. However, it will reduce the number of ticket booklets that need to be printed, saving taxpayers money on printing and storage costs. It will also eliminate redundant data entry on the part of law enforcement and court staff, freeing them to attend to more important matters.

I encourage all members to support Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

I would recognize the Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am absolutely ecstatic to stand here in support of Bill 9, which is An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. I've got a whole bunch of stuff here. I don't have anything, you know, prewritten; however, I do want to address quite a few things that I have heard, some mistruths. I think there are a lot of assumptions that have been made of what police officers do. I happen to have a lot of experience in this particular field as far as the judicial administrative law side of things. I want to start by really saying that the most important thing here, which makes me so pleased, is that the police and, essentially, society can now start focusing on the root causes of why people are actually falling into the justice system.

If I was to bring everybody back to the early 2000s – and I'll obviously address my own personal experience in this. Back in the early 2000s the only mechanisms for the police in Calgary, just to let everybody know – essentially, when we received enormous pressure from the public to deal with a lot of the homeless or the vulnerable folks that were in the downtown area, the only mechanisms we really had were to write a ticket or find a way to incarcerate that individual. We had no social services that were really available to the victims and those who were most vulnerable.

I'm very proud to say that I was part of a movement, part of, really, a paradigm shift in thinking which was started by former Chief Rick Hanson, which focused on the root causes of why people were actually falling into the justice system. The instructions from Chief Hanson were essentially, you know: let's deal with that person who is intoxicated at a social level; let's not write him a ticket. In fact, those were his orders: do not write them a ticket so that that person finds their way into jail because that's not going to deal with their addictions problem and that will not deal with any mental health issues. In fact, that ultimately puts a huge cost on the justice system itself. When we look at it from the time that that individual, whether it be mental health or addictions problems, touches the system via the officers, via the courts, the promise to appear, and all this sort of stuff, which eventually reaches the point where they're in jail, we're talking numbers that are very, very large. I wish I had those numbers for you.

I want to dispel a couple of things that I heard. In regard to a jaywalking ticket I must say for my friends in the Official Opposition that, no, we don't write – sorry. I'm not a policeman anymore. I've got to remember that, right? The police don't write tickets to a mom who's jaywalking across the street. I'm not going to use that as an absolute. I'm sure there might be that odd occasion where maybe a police officer did that. The ticket, which is a pink ticket, a part 2, is written in what's called the public interest.

If, hypothetically, we stopped that person who had just jaywalked across the street, typically that is a part 3, which is just a yellow ticket. It's a fine of usually about $25 or so, give or take. I think, actually, fines went up 30 per cent, so it's probably higher than that now. However, if I ran that individual and I deemed in my judgment that there's a concern that he or she is not going to show up to court or he or she is, you know, a perpetual offender, who's just going to continue to reoffend, then I would write that ticket in what's called the part 2, which is sworn to and could potentially go to warrant. Now, I will say that. That ticket then goes to warrant.

After it goes to warrant, then the officer, if that person is located again, arrests that person. The person is not typically brought to jail. The person is typically released on what's called a promise to appear. The officer can do that from the vehicle right there on the spot. Then what happens is that if that individual again fails to show up to court, the option for the administration of justice is to possibly release that person on a promise to appear if they so choose. My recommendation is that that person would then stand in front of a justice of the peace for release. Obviously, the person would stand there and then be released by a justice of the peace, which would apply a little bit more incentive for that individual to deal with said ticket. If again that person fails to deal with that, then the ticket usually goes in some variation to what's called a form 21 warrant, or the pay-or-stay warrant, and then that person can be incarcerated. Then a $25 fine is basically – we say that's a day in jail, but a day in jail is really the arrest and then said release.

I just don't want the narrative to be out there that, you know, people who fail to shovel the walks or fail to obey the law by jaywalking across the street are given tickets and then rushed to jail. You're dealing with a person that is just not dealing with this, is clearly not dealing with this. The practice of, at least, the officers that worked for me and, I can say, my own personal practice was that – and I always hated writing tickets; I've got to say that – the tickets I wrote were usually to people that were either deserving of it or really, really bad guys.

You know, I want to touch another thing, too, and to say that there's a history to this. There's a history to this bill. It was actually on March 19, 2012, when the hon. David Xiao had a motion, and I'll read that motion to you. Motion 504 said:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore options for reducing the number of arrest warrants issued and offenders incarcerated for the repeated nonpayment of fines for minor provincial and municipal bylaw offences, with the goal of increasing the efficiency of the criminal justice system and reducing the cost to taxpayers of sanctioning minor offences.

That's awesome.

I know that you guys are probably wondering what may have happened to that particular motion. Well, again, no disrespect to my friends in the Official Opposition. I know it's new; it's 2016. But this is not something that the Wildrose has been advocating for a long, long time. In fact, it was the Wildrose that were the biggest opposition to this particular motion.

Just to also educate folks, the private members, at least, on the government side, on the reason why this was shot down, it was brought forward by a PC member but was ultimately shot down by not only pressure from the Official Opposition at the time but also within their own party itself. On March 19, 2012, the hon. Member for Calgary-Nose Hill stated: "Quite frankly, I don't know how we would do it if we didn't just go out there and ultimately arrest people. How else are you going to bring the offenders to justice?" So, you know, we had a situation where, obviously, in 2012 there was a clear majority, but there was disagreement with the private member that brought this forward.

Now, I personally in 2012 knew the Justice minister at the time. This is something that I have been advocating for quite some time, again, with my experience in the judicial administrative law portion of the Calgary Police Service because I saw that revolving-door justice system. I saw the vulnerable people that were coming in and out, and I saw the costs. I always look at things – I'm still a conservative at heart, right? I saw the costs to the justice system, to police as well as the prosecutors as well as defence as well as the judges that were having to deal with this. That certainly was, obviously, a massive and significant concern for me.

I would also like to talk about long-term care beds. I want to stay on topic, but I believe that there's going to be significant money that is going to be saved by doing all of this. You know, like my friend from Calgary-Mountain View, I would like to advocate for long-term care beds because we really need to focus on the root causes of a lot of this addiction that is going on. Recovery beds only deal with the immediate crisis but do not affect the long-term crisis, so that's something I certainly want to advocate for.

You know, Bill 9 will not just save money. I think Bill 9 will also provide a paradigm shift throughout Alberta, which, hopefully – and I'm glad to hear the Edmonton police chief talk about this as well because I know this is something that we've been doing in Calgary, and we would like this to be done throughout Alberta. I want to see the RCMP do this. I want to see Red Deer and Lethbridge and Medicine Hat do this. I want them to focus on ways of reducing not only the costs to the justice system but also freeing up the officers to deal with more serious problems.

You know, I can tell you right now that when I call 911 or any of my friends call 911 or my family calls 911, I want that officer to come now, not say, "I'm sorry; there's a delay," or "I'm sorry; we have a whole bunch of people that are stuck down in the arrest processing area," because they're dealing with these tickets, which are not really what the police should be dealing with.

In conclusion, I'm happy to answer any questions from anybody. I'm very passionate about this, and I'm very happy that the government is bringing this forward. I am absolutely in support of Bill 9, and I look forward to a hearty debate in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the previous speaker for his comments. Knowing that he was a police officer and has quite a bit of experience in this, it's great for him to validate the effectiveness of this bill and the necessity of this bill.

I wanted to rise to speak to this, Madam Speaker, because I have a personal connection with many young people as I was a teacher at Inner City high school. I can tell you countless stories of students of mine who, because they were either born into poverty or living on the streets, would jump onto the LRT or jump onto a bus to get to school, didn't have any money, and would get a ticket. Of course, over time that ticket would turn into a warrant, and eventually they would get picked up, put into the system. As the Minister of Justice explained, really, it became a revolving door, and suddenly they had a criminal past. You know, part of the challenge as well and what would often happen inside prison is that youth who don't display criminal behaviours are now in touch with those that do, and they suddenly get pulled even further in a certain direction.

I can tell you that I also saw that when I was a corrections officer at the Edmonton Young Offender Centre. I worked there for a number of years many, many years ago, and I can tell you that it was very sad to see, especially, you know, young kids that would get incarcerated. Often if they spent a significant amount of time in EYOC around others that had already turned to a life of committing criminal acts, it influenced others. Had they not been incarcerated, that may have had a different outcome.

I think this bill is long overdue. You know, there are many different angles that we can support in this bill. I mean, number one, again, this is the right thing to do. Consequences should be appropriate to the level of crime or to the misdeed or misconduct. Again, not that riding the bus for free should be condoned or, you know, is appropriate, but at the same time, incarcerating a young person for not paying a ticket: I don't know if the punishment suits the crime.

From the point of view of doing the right thing, too, the fact is that this will save our justice system, taxpayers, Albertans many, many dollars as far as not incarcerating. You know, we used to say, when I taught at Inner City high school, that the cost to put a young person through a year of school was about $18,000. The cost to incarcerate a person for a year is about $85,000. So which one makes more sense where appropriate? There's a huge cost savings.

As the Justice minister talked about, you know, what we don't want to do is to criminalize poverty. I think that because there hasn't been a way for our officers, our law professionals to have alternative measures, tickets automatically become warrants, which then turn into incarceration. I don't think that that is the right way forward.

Quite frankly, the Minister of Justice has had a number of conversations – I know this for a fact – with police in Edmonton and Calgary and around the province, and they have been asking for it. As the member across the way affirms, he has many friends in the police service who speak first-hand as far as the need for this change. We need to deploy and use our police services most effectively and as efficiently as possible. I would rather see our justice system and police services investigating serious crimes and helping to keep, you know, our province and Albertans safe as opposed to being tied up in countless hours of paperwork for minor, minor offences. Again, there is a much more appropriate way to deal with that.

I just really wanted to highlight, Madam Speaker, that this bill is a win for all of the students that I used to teach at Inner City high school and those that are currently there. This bill will be welcomed by many, many people, many young people who now aren't going to be incarcerated for minor offences. There are much more appropriate ways to deal with minor offences.

I am extremely proud of the Justice minister for bringing this bill forward and proud to stand in this House and support Bill 9, and I encourage all members of the House to do so.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize, first of all, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills, followed by Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences, which amends the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and the Traffic Safety Act. I'm glad to see that the bill has the potential to save taxpayers money. Wildrose is in favour of freeing up time and resources currently spent on minor offenders. Minor infractions such as jaywalking, evading pay-to-ride tickets, drinking in public, and trespassing could have resulted in short jail sentences. Making changes to save money and keep thousands of people out of the province's justice system is a wise decision. I hope that under this current legislation streamlining the red tape in enforcement of provincial offences will allow law enforcement officers to focus on protecting Albertans from dangerous criminals.

Wildrose will be watching closely to see that this NDP government properly utilizes the extra funds that will be saved by this measure and puts them toward prevention and support for prosecution of more serious offences. Right now it costs the government a total of $73,000 a year to feed and clothe just over 2,000 people who were incarcerated for minor offences. From 2014 to 2015 about 2,000 people were jailed for not paying provincial and bylaw fines of $1,000 or less. With an average of three days in jail, the cost on the system is over $800,000. This does not include the cost of other criminal justice resources such as prosecutors, court clerks, and judges. This change will save court clerks about 9,000 hours of work per year, freeing them up to deal with more serious criminal warrants.

Currently if a person is convicted of a minor infraction and does not attend court or pay the fine by the due date, a warrant is put out for that person's arrest. Right now in Alberta there are over 90,000 outstanding warrants that have been issued for these minor infractions.

There are some concerns that I have with the amendments, that should be looked at more closely, like enforcement of these minor infractions through restriction of motor vehicle registry services until fines are paid. Will Albertans who do not own a vehicle be held to the same accountability as those who will have to pay their fines before registering? I'm also concerned that the government's plan to bring repeat offenders to justice isn't quite adequately laid out. We should get some clarification there. Some things still need to be taken into consideration. Take, for instance, the person who cannot afford to pay their fines. What if they don't own property, own a vehicle, and don't do their taxes? Are they going to be forgiven on those?

However, on the positive side, this bill will allow the province to use civil enforcement measures with remaining offenders rather than arrest and jail time to address these minor legal infractions. These types of fines are typically $1,000 or less. I personally know a person that was picked up on a speeding ticket and then found that they had a $10 left-turn violation from about two years back and nearly spent the night in the Remand Centre for a $10 fine. It was just a matter of minutes before that person's parents came down and paid the $10 fine and kept him out of the hoosegow, which would have been a terrible experience.

A lot of the time vulnerable people end up in jail for something as small as not paying for transit or for similar fines. These are usually people who cannot afford day-to-day luxuries. Wildrose wants to work towards safer communities, and one of the ways to achieve that is by stopping the revolving door of poverty and incarceration. Once a person gets caught up in the system, it becomes harder for them to actually, literally, get out of the system. The cost is very high any way you look at it.

The cost to one inmate was tragic. He died in the Edmonton Remand Centre when another cellmate killed him. He was fined for jaywalking and riding the LRT without proof of payment. He couldn't pay his fine and had to spend five days in jail, where he lost his life. That itself is a tragic, criminal offence. This is just one tragic example, one too many.

The bill is a good idea, and it appears on its surface to correct the problem. However, we want to be completely sure to talk to Albertans and front-line workers to make sure that this is the best strategy. Wildrose will be watching closely to see that police resources are indeed freed up and that our law enforcement system becomes more effective at fighting dangerous crime.

E-ticketing should free up time and resources for law enforcement. It will allow officers to file tickets electronically, something that has been tried in other places and that we hope will be helpful with our law enforcement. We are hoping that this will streamline the ticket process and reduce mistakes and eliminate police wasting hours on re-entering data for police and court staff.

Wildrose is committed to safety for all Albertans, and we will continue to fight for strong communities and efficient governing. We will continue to monitor the outcome of this piece of legislation to see if it will better catch offenders and hold them more accountable through other means. We are hopeful that this will break the cycle and save taxpayers money while improving safety in the community. Police will be better utilized on the streets for more serious matters and crimes and will not be spending valuable time on ticketing and court dates.

Wildrose is in support of this bill, and we hope that the government will also acknowledge the need to use this to its full advantage and further support our law enforcement workers as they strive to protect our communities and punish serious offenders.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll call on Calgary-Mountain View, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Justice minister for bringing forward this bill to modernize enforcement of provincial offences. It's truly a progressive decision that is long overdue and helps to shift our focus from a punitive system to a restorative justice system. I mean, the primary issue is not even saving money; the primary issue is people and caring for people and rehabilitating people.

The kind of stories that we've heard today are extremely moving. Certainly, the mental health and addictions review that I was involved in last year highlighted the cycle, the revolving door, the recurrence, a pattern of people that – far from benefiting from a system that incarcerates them or punishes them, it actually adds to their burden, adds to their problems, adds to their breakdowns, and makes more likely their failure to be rehabilitated, to get back to any kind of productive and satisfying quality of life.

The bill proposes to amend both the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and the Traffic Safety Act by putting an end to warrants and jail time for minor infractions and modernizing the way that tickets are processed. We are in an electronic age. Anything we can do to reduce paper and reduce time is obviously going to be a win-win for our system.

The moves are not only expected to save money, to free up police, court, and correctional resources and focus more time on serious crimes; they'll keep thousands of vulnerable people out of the provincial justice system. I must say that this is a win-win-win when one looks at the opportunities that present themselves for rehabilitation, the cost savings to all of our social supports systems when they're appropriately used instead of institutionalizing and incarcerating people. And the third win is a better policing service. They have more resources, and they focus where their own training leads them and where they can feel a greater satisfaction in helping to create a safer society.

The minister justly said that this will reduce the criminalization of poverty, and we could add mental illness and addictions, which are part and parcel of much of the poverty in our communities. The opportunity, then, for connecting with wraparound services in the community, the opportunity for dealing with cause, as the hon. Member for Calgary-West mentioned, are really a tremendous step away from a system that has been so backward in thinking about the place of rehabilitation, housing, supports for people who have many challenges in life, many of them from traumas, from inadequate social supports throughout their lives, mental illness, and indeed addictions. It's a welcome shift, which I'll certainly be supporting.

I know that the details and how we're going to regulate and monitor and identify where this approach will in some cases be abused have to be there. But the overarching question here is: are we using our resources to enhance people's lives, to strengthen our productivity and our economy, to use our highly paid and highly trained police force appropriately? We have not been. This is an opportunity to make sure we start to do that.

I don't want to draw this out, Madam Speaker. I think the arguments have been well stated, and it looks like there is all-party support for this very sensible and long overdue bill. I can just say that I'm proud of being part of the session that brings this important change to Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's a pleasure to rise in this House and speak and debate on matters. I really want to thank the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for introducing Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences.

The primary objective of this bill, as was stated by the minister, is to protect vulnerable Albertans from a cycle of incarceration and poverty, thus reducing the criminalization of poverty. In the debate so far we haven't mentioned a key issue, and that is the rate of incarceration of indigenous people here in our province and across Canada, which, I believe, this bill will address in a significant way.

Just to bring it to the attention of the members of this House, it's widely known that the indigenous population is overrepresented in provincial and territorial correctional services. I'll remind the members of this House that while indigenous people represent 3 per cent of the Canadian adult population, they account for nearly one-quarter – that's 24 per cent – of admissions in correctional services. Even more concerning is that – I mean, 24 per cent is just the number in general – if you break it down and you look at indigenous females, they account for 36 per cent when compared to the overall population. This is truly concerning.

I'm really happy to see that members from the opposition, from the third party, and other parties are in agreement on Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. You know, we've discussed at length that the cost associated with incarcerating individuals for minor infractions is approximately $800,000 and that these amendments reinforce our government's commitment towards responsible management of public finances. The electronic filing of tickets will create efficiencies and reduce errors and costs to free up resources in the justice system.

I wanted to stress that if passed, these amendments will end Alberta's outdated process of jailing individuals as a tool to enforce tickets for minor infractions and reduce inefficiencies of the current model. When Albertans, especially vulnerable Albertans, are unable to pay their initial fines and do not attend court, the court issues a warrant for their arrest. The fact is that vulnerable people are more likely to be issued tickets for minor infractions such as not paying for transit and are more likely to be arrested for failure to pay or appear in court, thus landing them in jail. It further perpetuates a cycle of incarceration and poverty, which does not create safer communities, which should be our overall objective. This method of enforcement is disproportionate. It's resource intensive and ineffective. Therefore, these amendments provide a needed step towards ending the revolving door of poverty and incarceration, as stressed by others.

If passed, these amendments will end the practice of punishing individuals for being unable to afford their fines. As mentioned, the current model of using jail as a tool to enforce payment is inefficient and outdated. Moreover, the results of this practice are neither positive nor beneficial to Albertan taxpayers or the broader community in Alberta. Given that the indirect costs associated with incarcerating individuals for minor infractions is approximately $800,000, these amendments reinforce our government's commitment towards responsible management of public finances. The proposed changes will also help the province defer costs by creating efficiencies that free up significant time for the judiciary, court staff, police, and correctional officers.

For those people who don't own vehicles or refuse to pay their fines, other enforcement mechanisms will be available such as filing writs against property and garnisheeing bank accounts, wages, income tax refunds, and GST rebates. In addition, evidence shows that using warrants as a tool to enforce fines for minor infractions is not effective. Every year the number of outstanding warrants increases here in Alberta. Currently there are about 187,000 outstanding warrants, half of which are for minor infractions. Every year court staff spend more than 9,000 hours processing warrants for minor infractions, making this model inefficient and resource intensive.

The second amendment to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act is enabling the expansion of e-tickets in Alberta, as has been presented. The electronic filing of tickets will streamline the ticketing process by allowing police to file tickets electronically with the courts, and the electronic filing of tickets will create efficiencies and reduce errors and costs to free up resources in the justice system. Currently when an officer issues a ticket, the ticket is handwritten on a preprinted form. After the ticket is issued, the officer must bring the court and police copies back to the detachment to be entered into the law enforcement data system. This process is time consuming, inefficient, and ultimately hurts the taxpayers and our communities.

If passed, e-tickets will allow law enforcement to focus more of their time on the streets, thus protecting Albertans. It is noteworthy to highlight that this amendment will not create new opportunities for police officers to issue tickets, nor will it change the standard for charging someone with an offence. Officers will still be required to have reasonable grounds to believe that an offence was committed in order to issue a violation ticket. However, it will reduce the number of ticket booklets that need to be printed, saving taxpayer money on printing and storage costs.

Again, I wanted to stress Edmonton police chief Rod Knecht as a stakeholder, and I quote him:

The introduction of Bill 9 will allow police to free up officers and civilian staff to focus on predators and serious criminal offenders.

As a result of modernized technology and this new approach, a significant reduction in administrative processes and paperwork is expected.

A segment of the population that we haven't discussed – I mean, it has been mentioned by members of the third party – are those with mental health issues. From my own experience and being a community organizer and someone who has dedicated some time to working with homeless people, advocating on behalf of homeless people, especially with the connections that I have at Boyle Street, we know that a large portion of the people who are homeless are people who have mental health issues.

I've seen it first-hand, where – and I'm not saying anything bad about the Edmonton police, but they're having to deal with a homeless person and trying to do their very best in order to address the issue that, you know, the person is on the street. Sometimes it's presumed that they're intoxicated, but really, no, they're someone that has mental health issues, and it's not an issue of intoxication. But the police still need to deal with this individual, and it's a concern how they have to deal with them and then have to issue a ticket.

I'm really glad to hear from members from the third party. I believe that it was the Member for Calgary-West who brought up the issue of mental health. It's also a significant concern for members on this side of the House when dealing with this particular issue, and we feel that this bill addresses a lot of the root causes, as the Member for Calgary-West stipulated.

Again, I really want to congratulate the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for introducing this bill. I think that it'll go a long way to address a lot of the issues that are being experienced by homeless people on the streets as well as people with mental health issues and – again I'll stress it – the indigenous population. I want to remind the members that, you know, indigenous people represent 3 per cent of the adult population in Canada, and to know that overall they represent 24 per cent of those admitted in correctional institutions is a serious matter. It's a matter that even many grassroots indigenous community organizers have brought to my attention. The fact that indigenous women represent 36 per cent of those admitted in correctional facilities is even a more grave concern.

I'm really hoping that this bill is the beginning of being able to address these very serious concerns that we have and being able to address the root causes of these segments of the population so that we can have a more compassionate approach, and I think that this bill goes in that line. This is perhaps the first step in addressing some of these issues, by first being able to reduce the criminalization of poverty, here in Alberta at least, and being able to take a deeper look at some of these serious concerns that I've brought up in the House.

Again, I really congratulate the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for bringing forward this bill, and I'm really happy to see that there's wide support amongst many of the members of the House. I would encourage all members of the House not only to vote in favour of this bill but actually, you know, when we have an opportunity to discuss it further in Committee of the Whole, to go and share it with their constituents as well, to really get out there and talk about the positive impacts that this bill will have here in Alberta if it's passed. We can really share with our constituents, share with the population of Alberta that we're on the right track.

Yes, I agree that the argument of reducing the cost to taxpayers is a good argument. I mean, as government we're here to address the issue of costs – it's important – but this bill is not just that. This bill goes much further than that. You know, we are able to address these very serious concerns that I've brought up, and it's all connected. All these factors are connected: saving costs, being more compassionate with members of our communities that are considered vulnerable Albertans. We're taking a huge step towards the decriminalization of poverty.

I want to encourage all members to vote in favour of this bill at second reading, and I look forward to discussing it.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I've actually really enjoyed the debate this morning. I think this is one of the finest moments of this Legislature, when we can see that all members of this Legislature really recognize what social justice is all about. I think this is the situation, and I really want to commend the Member for Calgary-West. I think his comments were right on. They certainly replicated the comments of people that I know in law enforcement. They have long recognized that there needs to be a streamlining of this process and a fairness applied to this process, that I think that this bill does. I do want to thank the minister for putting this bill together. I think that, as has been said many times, it is long overdue, but I really think the minister deserves a lot of credit for expediting these changes.

One of the real pleasures of being the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud is that I get to represent the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General at the graduation ceremonies at the training centre, which is located in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. I've been joined there by the Sergeant-at-Arms on occasion and by other colleagues from this caucus. There are several types of law enforcement that are graduated from that training centre. I'm very proud of the training centre itself. It is a world-class facility, and I've learned a lot about the complexity of being a peace officer or a correctional services officer as well as a sheriff. Indeed, I don't think the members of this House need to be reminded about the fact that our safety as MLAs and the safety of the Executive Council is done by the sheriffs, and I'm very appreciative of that.

I make a point in my remarks when I'm at the training centre graduations to say how proud I am of the individuals that are in corrections or are peace officers or are transit police or wildlife officers or, if I haven't mentioned them, corrections officers. They are a tremendous resource to this province, and they need to be given the freedom to do their job.

I want to turn to one other factor. One of the first visitors to my constituency office was a constituent who works as a psychiatric nurse at the Royal Alexandra hospital, and that individual has come to my office on more than one occasion bringing up this very cause. He mentioned to me that he has clients, as he calls them, that need to travel to the Royal Alexandra hospital mental health facility from places distant, and they often don't have resources to pay for the LRT fare or to buy a bus ticket, and on occasion some of his clients have actually been incarcerated and spent time in jail for fare jumping. This bill will help to reduce the chances of that happening, and I think that for that single reason this bill deserves support.

You know, I'm not the youngest member of this Legislature. My schooling goes back a long way, and it actually goes back to a time when the book that now you will all know as Les Misérables was written. I don't go back to Victor Hugo's time, but the book is called Jean Valjean. If you recall, what happened to Jean Valjean was that he was incarcerated and put to hard labour by Louis XVIII or Louis XVI, something like that – it was before the French Revolution – for the crime of stealing a loaf of bread. In my mind, the crime of fare jumping is probably equivalent to the crime of stealing a loaf of bread. It took the French Revolution to get changes to the French laws that led to that sort of thing. I think it's only taken us 10 months to make the changes in this province that are going to do that.

With those comments, I would actually ask that the debate be adjourned, Madam Speaker.

Bill 7 Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate April 13: Ms Ganley]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to speak on behalf of Bill 7, Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016. Under the current wording of the act a commission cannot be appointed earlier than July 2017. If the commission is not appointed before then, there will not be sufficient time for new electoral boundaries to be set prior to the next election, in 2019. It is integral to note that the last commission was appointed in 2009, and we have had two elections since. The last provincial election was one year earlier than scheduled; thus, the boundary reform should be one year earlier as well.

The Chief Electoral Officer, Glen Resler, has requested a change in the legislation. Mr. Resler indicates that since the next general election will probably be between March 1 and May 31, 2019, as per the fixed election period set out in the Election Act, Elections Alberta must be ready for that election. Plus, I'm sure constituency associations and candidates want sufficient time to plan and campaign for the election as well. With boundary changes there may need to be new founding meetings for some of those electoral districts and their district associations.

Alberta's population has grown significantly since the last election. It's gone from 3.7 million to 4.1 million people, and most of that has been in urban areas. Also, there are First Nation reserves which are fast growing regarding population increases, and this needs to be factored into the new boundaries. Getting the census and data will take time. The Electoral Boundaries Commission needs time to hold public hearings and write an initial report. This report will set out the proposed electoral boundaries. Then there need to be additional public hearings which will be held to review the initial report. After the representations the commission will then provide a final report. The recommendations of the final report will be presented to the Legislative Assembly for consideration, and the bill will go through the readings and debates and, when it is passed, will need royal assent.

Once that is done, Elections Alberta must provide maps, polling books, polling areas, and lists of voters. All of this takes time, and it is sensible to start reasonably early to finish by, say, January 1, 2019, if not earlier. In fact, electoral district associations I'm sure would appreciate having more than two or three months – I'm sure it would be more like one or two years – so the sooner they can get started, the sooner that can be done.

The commission needs time to consider appropriate factors in making those boundaries. For instance, the commission must consider the requirement for effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But along with equal representation rural factors of sparsity and density of population must be factored into the boundaries because some of the constituencies have a very large area but may be below critical mass in regard to the number of voters. The commission needs to look at common community interests, trading areas, and overlapping jurisdictions. Some counties, of which I have one in my constituency, may have three MLAs for that one county, and they may prefer to change that.

In my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose we have two First Nations reservations, but just across the road are two more Cree Nations, which have been placed in another constituency, whose principal town is over one hour away. First Nations populations have been growing rapidly and could dramatically change the population size of some constituencies. These factors need to be considered and consulted upon. Likewise, in Edmonton and Calgary communities should not be divided, and there is the aspect of continuing urban sprawl and new urban development into rural areas. Where will these new communities be placed? Consideration, consultation, and time are needed to deal with these complex issues. Changing roads and travel systems need to be examined to see if geographical features have changed and if they have impacted the complexion of the existing constituencies.

Most importantly, it is desirable to have clear, common-sense, understandable boundaries which meet Albertans' Charter rights to vote, and their vote includes the guarantee of effective representation. This is fundamental to democracy.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I urge everyone to support the democratic Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016, to have time to get it right and give Albertans the opportunity to participate in this democratic process. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker on my list is Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016. There are two major amendments happening here in this bill. The first seeks to accelerate the date of the appointment of a new Electoral Boundaries Commission, to have the commission appointed by October 31, 2016. This will start the commission ahead of the original schedule and complete its work in May 2017. This means that the new boundaries will be up and in place for the next election. Political parties will go out and create new constituency associations, and then the fun of fundraising and nominating candidates can begin.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The second amendment stands to change the population data which the commission uses for the purposes of its work. This allows the more up-to-date and accurate municipal information to be used in some cases.

Now, Madam Speaker, it's interesting to note that if the last Premier had looked in the mirror and realized an early election was a bad idea, we wouldn't be debating this bill today. In fact, we would probably be in the middle of an election right now. The law as it is could have remained in place. The clock would tick, the stars would align as per the current law, and this boundary review would happen in 2019. But we are here, and the boundary review has to either be moved up or moved back, and the government has decided to move it up.

What we need to ensure is that this process is fair to Albertans. That includes my constituents in Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and those who are in even bigger ridings, where their ability to be represented equally comes into question if the ridings get too large. Now, my constituency of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock is a pretty standard size for a rural constituency, but that still poses challenges. I travel over two hours from one end of my riding to the other to get to different events. I feel that if it was much larger, it would get very difficult to have constituency and town hall meetings as folks already often have to drive over an hour to make a meeting. You also have to think of those winter driving conditions. It can often be a challenge to provide that effective representation in these geographically larger ridings, and I know I have colleagues here who already have a tougher time than I do.

I'm pleased that this bill does not try to alter the overall parameters that the commission can work with, but I'd also suggest that there should be a goal of maintaining historical boundaries as much as possible. If we can avoid it, we don't want smaller municipalities getting swapped to a neighbouring constituency where they have no history or don't really belong. I know that there are a lot of folks out there worried that rural Alberta is going to lose seats in this redistribution, but I have faith in the commission to follow the law as established and not try to gerrymander the constituencies like some jurisdictions in the United States have done.

In general, Madam Speaker, I support the beginning of this process and will be watching to see how the rest unfolds. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there anybody wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to speak in support of Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016. This bill reminds me of a year ago when the whole issue of electoral boundaries and where I should be door-knocking was full front on my mind. It also reminds me that in three years all of us will once again be carefully looking at riding boundaries as we prepare our door-knocking and re-election campaigns.

First of all, election campaigns are important because they're a good way to remind all of us of the cornerstone of democracy, a guarantee of effective representation, which is what this bill is all about. This amendment in this bill was necessary due to the previous government's early election call. The last electoral boundaries review occurred in 2009. Since that time the population of Alberta has grown considerably, and the growth has occurred unevenly in the province. It is important that all Albertans, wherever they live, feel that their vote counts and that they have a guarantee of effective representation. This bill importantly clarifies the Electoral Boundaries Commission's authority to consider recent information respecting population growth that is not collected on a province-wide basis such as municipal census information. This would be used along with the federal census or recent province-wide census.

I have spent a considerable part of my career working with census information, helping municipalities, nonprofits, and communities plan for programs, housing, and services. I know how population changes occur in neighbourhoods as housing changes and neighbourhoods move from single family to aging seniors. In Edmonton due to shifting demographics, school boards are currently engaged in planning in long-established neighbourhoods where there are excess school spaces. Municipalities develop new subdivisions as in my own riding of Sherwood Park. Rural families move from farms to nearby villages and then to the nearby town to access services. Albertans also move where jobs are, resulting in a very fluid population.

Alberta's population has grown by half a million since the last time the provincial electoral boundaries were redrawn to reflect population growth. From my own personal experience in working with the last federal census, especially in rural communities, I know that due to the concerted federal government's decision to no longer make the long-form census mandatory for the 2011 census, that data is not accurate. Thanks to the current federal Liberal government for having reversed that decision and ensuring that the 2016 federal census will be accurate. In the meantime, however, it is important that any decision based on population in Alberta uses all the available information, including municipal and county censuses. I applaud the government for making the amendment in this bill to allow consideration of additional population censuses, thereby ensuring that the decision on boundaries this time will be based on the most accurate population data available.

I am often reminded that every action may have unintended consequences. This bill is needed because the former government called the election a year earlier, and if the bill is not amended, it will not leave enough time for the new electoral boundaries to be established before the next general election. I personally want to ensure that every Albertan has the opportunity to know that their vote will count in the next provincial election, that every Albertan knows that their voice is important when they exercise their responsibilities as citizens and vote in the election.

The general rule is that the population of a proposed electoral division must not be more than 25 per cent above nor more than 25 per cent below the average population of all the proposed electoral divisions. This act provides for exceptions provided that the criteria set out in the act are met. In a maximum of four electoral divisions the percentage of population deviation can be as high as 50 per cent provided specific criteria are met. An important criterion is the requirement for effective representation as guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is an important criterion.

I was interested in how my own riding of Sherwood Park has changed over the years. Thanks to the work of the Legislature Library staff I was able to obtain a good history of electoral riding boundaries. In the 1905 election my riding was called Strathcona. In 1913 it was called South Edmonton. In 1921 it was called Edmonton, where five members were elected to represent three amalgamated constituencies. In 1926 it was called Leduc; from 1930 to 1971, Clover Bar; in 1975, Edmonton-Ottewell. In 1979 it was back to Clover Bar; in 1982, Edmonton-Sherwood Park; from 1986 to 1989, Sherwood Park; in 1993, Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan; and since 1997, Sherwood Park, the riding that I am now proud to represent. This is a good example of how population changes allow for different electoral divisions. In 2008 there were 28,349 electors in my riding and in 2010, 32,159.

I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote for Bill 7 and ensure that boundaries that guarantee effective representation are established before the next provincial election, which is anticipated between March 1 and May 31, 2019.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak?

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to adjourn debate on Bill 7.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time, I move to adjourn the House until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 19, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.
I would recognize the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Statement by a Member

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would like to thank you for inviting me back into the House today. That's very gracious. Yesterday was a day that I hope not to repeat any time soon for a number of reasons. At about 5 p.m. yesterday I was recognized to introduce my Motion 504, asking government to reaffirm parents' ability to choose for their children home-schooling, charter schools, private schools, francophone schools, separate schools, and public schools, something I feel strongly about. Not against the rules of this House but surely against tradition a member chose to introduce an amendment to the motion which, if carried, would entirely change the intent of Motion 504. That was when things in this House began to go off the rails.

As the amendment from the government side's member was distributed, I received not only the amendment but, in the same handful of paper, a copy of a ruling on a point of order not yet made, a ruling that in the course of the discussion became the actual ruling. I became convinced, rightly or wrongly, that all was not in order. At the conclusion of the ruling I stood and refused to take my seat though you, Mr. Speaker, asked me to do so several times. Eventually you asked the Sergeant-at-Arms to escort me from the House. I would like to acknowledge that when you did that, when you asked me to be removed from the House after I did not obey your request to sit down several times, you were correctly discharging your duties and acting within the scope of your authority. I recognize that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
I think it's time for us to move forward.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a distinguished guest, Mr. Josef Beck, consul general of the Federal Republic of Germany, visiting Alberta to build on the important relationship we share. Accompanying the consul general today is Mr. Harald Kuckertz, honorary consul of the Federal Republic of Germany in Edmonton. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker.

Germany is a very valuable partner to Alberta. We collaborate in many areas such as research through the esteemed Helmholtz Association of German Research Centres and numerous ties between our academic institutions. Germany is a customer for Alberta-produced energy and agricultural products while Alberta benefits from imports of German-made precision instruments, machinery, and metals. We know that there are many opportunities to increase trade between Germany and Alberta, especially as Canada and Europe work to expand access to each other's markets, and I look forward to seeing our trade partnership with Germany grow.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to welcome Mr. Beck to Alberta, and I ask him and Mr. Kuckertz to now stand and accept the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce two amazing women who are mentors in my political career and dear friends as well. They are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask them to rise now as I introduce them: Heather Klimchuk, our former MLA for Edmonton-Glenora from 2008 to 2015, our Minister of Service Alberta, of Culture, of Human Services, our Deputy Government House Leader, and a wonderful, amazing symbol for all of us in the Legislature – truly happy to have her here today – and, beside her, Genia Leskiw, the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake from 2008 to 2015, the first woman to represent her riding, which is a fantastic achievement, and who as a former schoolteacher always kept us in line in the Legislature. She will always be known to all of us so fondly as Momma G. I would welcome these women to our Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students, teachers, and parents from l'école St. Joseph school from my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne. Twenty-five students are with us today to learn about the Alberta Legislature. They are accompanied by Mrs. Jennifer Jones Shaver, Mrs. Zenovia Wiwchar Crawford, Mrs. Debbie Davio, Mrs. Shauna Despins, and Mr. Terrence Corke. I would like the group of parents, students, and teachers to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a school group from the MLA for Red Deer-North's constituency. The students come from Gateway Christian school, and they are with their teachers, Klaaske deKoning and Mr. Jesse Bourne, and parent helpers Cathey Monteith, Gina Thomsen, Andrea Samson, and Tracie Simpson. I would like to ask the students to rise and receive the customary welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there other school groups to be introduced today?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a lovely young woman that I've known for quite some time, one of the kindest, most compassionate young women I know, who is currently in animal sciences at the university, hopes to apply to vet school soon, and will be interning at a wildlife rehabilitation centre this summer. I'd ask Madeleine, or Madeleine when she's in trouble, my daughter, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request if I can introduce my guest in the next few minutes because she's in transit right now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Joy Hurst, the president of the Edmonton branch of the Canadian Federation of University Women, CFUW. Joy has been involved in helping to arrange the CFUW activity today for our celebration of the 100th anniversary of women's suffrage in Alberta. When she's not working on a CFUW project, Joy works as corporate lead in patient relations at Covenant Health Canada and has been a vital part in the health care system for many years. Joy, please stand now, wherever you may be, so that we may give you the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: She may not in fact be here yet.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to introduce to you and through you guests from the Cement Association of Canada. The Cement Association of Canada is the voice of Canada's cement manufacturers. The industry provides a reliable domestic supply of cement required to build Canada's communities and critical infrastructure, and the CAC is committed to the environmentally responsible manufacturing of cement and concrete products, including support for economy-wide carbon pricing. Joining us here today are Michael McSweeney, president and CEO of the Cement Association of Canada; Justin Arnott, director of markets and technical affairs, western region, Calgary; and Ken Carrusca, vice-president, environment and marketing, from Vancouver. I ask that my colleagues in this Chamber join me in extending our guests, if they may rise, the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a retired MLA, Genia Leskiw. She served two terms within our riding, and it is great that she was able to join us today as one of my guests for the women of suffrage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you Ms Michelle Brewer visiting us today, a resident of Edmonton-Centre, a former instructor at MacEwan University, and founder of the You Can't Keep a Good Woman Down film festival, which debuted in March of this year as part of International Women's Day. I'd like to ask Michelle to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the members of the organization Through the Eyes of the Children. Their project began with a 2014 trip to Ukraine. It was founded to form an educational bridge between 13 schools in Ukraine and Canada and now as well Uganda. Three hundred students from Lacombe participate in this endeavour. I would like them to stand as I read their names: founder, Dr. Leighton Nischuk; Mr. Warren Kreway; Mr. Chase Bailey; and Mr. Blake Core. Please join me in giving them the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff from the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Every day I witness the passion and commitment of our Culture and Tourism team, members of the Alberta public service, who deliver programs and services that contribute to making our province such a great place to live and to visit. They are Jennifer Babcock, Michelle Baronian, Sarah Boyer, Karin Buchanan, Devyn Caldwell, Danielle Fleming, Julie Helwig, Sean MacQueen, Aimée Shaw, Roney Simon Mathews, and Kaja Verret Holding. I would ask them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today on the 100th anniversary of women's suffrage and introduce to you and through you one of Calgary-Bow's female community leaders, Jacqui Esler. She is the acting board director of the Bowness business revitalization zone, or BRZ, and can be found on any given day out in the community on behalf of all small businesses in Bowness, some of whom have been a part of the community since the 1950s. The main goal of the BRZ, in Jacqui's own words, is to help make Main Street Bowness a safe, attractive, and prosperous place to own a business and to shop. Jacqui Esler's hard work and dedication to our community is a fine example of women's capacity to be leaders and advocates in our communities, and I'm so proud to be introducing her here today. If Jacqui could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other members' visitors? The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly eight women who helped organize today's event to commemorate the 100th anniversary of women finally having the right to vote here in Alberta. These guests are Gail Gravelines, Lea Craig, Michelle Brewer, Beatrice Ghattuba, Sinem Senol, Kristy Jackson, Susanne Goshko, and Janis Irwin. I'd ask these women, along with all women and girls who are in our gallery today as visitors or guests, to please rise to commemorate this historic day and receive the warmest welcome of our Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I think we have another guest.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just handed this note to be sure to include a woman in the public gallery, Karen Leibovici, for introduction to all of us as part of this wonderful celebration and remembrance for the vote for women 100 years ago today. So, Karen, if you are up in the public gallery, please stand, and we'll give you a special welcome in the House.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Women's Suffrage Centennial

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today because people who sat in this room 100 years ago voted to let me do so. Today marks 100 years since the passing of the Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act, the long title of the law that allowed women the vote in Alberta elections. It was a long struggle, as they tend to be for those seeking equality. It was more than a matter of passing a law but of changing opinions of women's place in this world. Today the place for women is in this House. It is through the grit and determination of the women before me that I can be here. Women made change happen in Alberta in 1916, and we are making it happen today.

Extending the vote to Alberta women opened a path for women to run for office, and it took just a year for Louise McKinney, followed shortly by Roberta MacAdams, to win their seats in this House in 1917. They were the first women to do so in Alberta, in Canada, and in the entire British Empire. We applaud their courage and efforts, and we remember that the law extended only as far as granting the vote to women who were property-owning citizens of the Empire. It was a great victory but an incomplete one. The fight for equality continued as women and men of different cultural and religious backgrounds sought the vote, and it was finally extended to Canada's indigenous people in 1960. We can do better.

Today I stood for a photo with women from across Alberta and women in this Legislature, women of different experiences, gender identities, sexual orientations, cultural backgrounds, and economic statuses. These are women who are leaders in their communities, and they are women who continue to strive for better outcomes and equal treatment. Looking around this House, I see not only a gender-balanced government bench but one that exceeds gender balance, and I see elected representation that looks a lot more like Alberta. It is my hope that in 100 years Albertans will look to our time to see that we did not squander the gains made toward equality but furthered them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to rise today to mark the 100th anniversary of suffrage in Alberta and to stand where Louise McKinney, the first woman to be elected to this Assembly, once pointed out that "the purpose of a woman's life is just the same as . . . a man's life: that she may make the best possible contribution to the generation in which she is living."

We owe the rights that we currently enjoy – the right to vote, the right to hold public office, and the right to own land – to brave trailblazers of every political stripe, who knew that they could make a difference in their society. We've come far in just 100 years, but we must remember that early suffragettes were setting precedent in an often hostile environment. Even in Alberta, the proud home of the Famous Five, who worked so hard to show our country that women had a right to vote and to be recognized as persons under the law, even here these women faced incredible barriers, and they overcame them. It is so important to note that women won the vote. They were not given it or granted it. Women and men fighting for equality won it in the same way any campaign is ultimately won or lost, with hard work and perseverance.

The work of Louise McKinney, the Famous Five, and countless others adds strength to my voice here today. I firmly believe that we in this Assembly stand united in a desire to have more women run for public office and to identify and remove barriers that women in our political system still face today. We have the opportunity to investigate and respond to the realities of women of all income levels, backgrounds, and circumstances. We can keep shining a light on everyday sexism that women encounter in our own country and also stay alert to the women around the world who still fight to achieve basic rights.

To those who paved the way in 1916: thank you. To our leaders today: thank you. Let's keep working together with courage and respect and determination.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the House to allow a speaker from the third party and the other leaders to speak if they so wish.

The Speaker: Both of the other leaders?

Mr. Carlier: Yes. Absolutely.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to stand here in the Alberta Legislature and join in a celebration of 100 years of voting rights for women. My thanks to you and to everyone who stood up and spoke on this historic and wonderful occasion.

It was February of 1916 when our then Lieutenant Governor Robert Brett stated that "equality should in Alberta be fixed by law." Bravo. Hard to believe that this was 100 years ago. So much has happened since then, much of it happening right here in Alberta. Prairie women are a hardy bunch, as I'm sure all women in here can attest to. Western provinces were the first to grant women the right to vote. When Alberta women took to the polls for the first time in 1917, Louise McKinney and Roberta MacAdams became the first two women ever elected in Alberta.

Now fast-forward to May of 2015, when only two women were re-elected in this Legislature, myself and our Premier. This time, however, there were a lot more new female politicians, ready to make their mark in the history of this Legislature. As I said earlier, despite our sometimes high-intensity exchanges in this House, I never tire of seeing so many amazing women gathered in this Chamber to guide our province forward.

We have very big shoes to fill as we fight for policy and legislation that will continue to make women's lives easier, the shoes of the Famous Five: Emily Murphy, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, and Irene Parlby. I think about these courageous women and how their efforts have spawned a generation of political activism, and I promise to continue that work with my dynamic female colleagues and some pretty great guys, too.

I will stand tall with the women who despite threats, harassment, and intimidation still get out there every day to push the limits, to protect single moms like me, new moms like the Member for Calgary-Varsity and our minister responsible for the status of women, women diverse in their sexual orientation and their ethnicity, women with a vision of how to make life better in Alberta. And we are doing it just like women did 100 years ago, one vote at a time.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I quote Audre Lorde: "I am not free while any woman is unfree, even when her shackles are very different from my own.” One hundred years ago, much like today, women were the cornerstone of Alberta society. However, until this day in 1916 they were denied the most basic of democratic rights, the vote. This was finally changed by the passage of the Equal Suffrage Statutory Law Amendment Act. It would be easy to look at the distant date – April 19, 1916 – and say that that’s ancient history. After all, a hundred years is a long time. If we did, though, we’d be deceiving ourselves.

While we here in Alberta can be proud that Louise McKinney was the first elected woman anywhere in the British Empire, serving this Legislature between 1917 and 1921, one merely has to look at today’s membership of Canadian Legislative Assemblies and Parliament to realize that despite it being 2016, equality in electoral matters is yet to be achieved. Nor can we forget that First Nations waited another 44 years to have the vote, nor that our wives and daughters and mothers still earn 70 per cent of what their male counterparts earn for the same work, nor that many women face a near impossible work balance of family and career, nor that safety of person is still a luxury denied to many, many women in this society.

So while we celebrate the achievements of those who tirelessly lobbied this House to include them in democratic society, we look to the future, when proportional representation is the norm in most countries. It will enable more people to be engaged and more people to influence the nature and balance of a government. We still wait for that day in Alberta. We must also recognize the long road ahead and commit, each and every one, to making the dreams of those early suffragettes a reality for all our citizens.

Perhaps Nellie McClung stated the dream best when she said: “I am a believer in women, in their ability to do things and in their influence and power. Women set the standards for the world, and it is for us, women in Canada, to set the standards high.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred years since most women were granted the right to vote, 100 years since most women could fully participate in democracy, 100 years since most women could share their voices and opinions by selecting those who represented them within government, but even more remarkable, only one year after women were granted the right to vote, the first women in the entire British Commonwealth were elected here in Alberta.

I am proud to be a descendant of a remarkable woman who ran for elected office, my grandmother, whose name was Alberta Clark. That’s true. [interjections] Exactly. Vote for Alberta. Absolutely. She ran as a Liberal in Calgary in 1952, and she used to tell me: it’s not as easy to be a Liberal in Alberta as you might think. I tend to agree.

In 100 years, of course, we have come a long way, but we have very far to go. It wasn’t until 1960 that indigenous women and, in fact, all indigenous people were finally given the right to vote. And inequality persists today. I’m sure many of you read the article yesterday by Calgary MP Michelle Rempel, who wrote about the sexism and sexual harassment she and her staff have faced working in the political world in Ottawa and beyond.

While legal barriers have been broken down, institutional and societal barriers to women in politics remain. As long as women are looked down upon, degraded, insulted, harassed, and assaulted, we have very little legitimacy in stating that there is true equality in politics. It may be 2016, but in some areas not much has changed. Certainly, not enough has changed.

The fight for equality continues, and I commit to continue to being an ally for women in all walks of life, for LGBTQ-plus individuals, and for those who are marginalized within our province. I commit to speaking up when someone makes a rude comment, a joke, or contributes to everyday sexism. I commit to confronting these barriers and addressing sexism in politics when it happens. I commit to working alongside women to further the cause that was started by women such as the Famous Five and support the women in my life in their advocacy. I ask each and every Member of this Legislative Assembly to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty’s Official Opposition.

Property Taxes

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Calgarians are hurting, families are barely scraping by, many wonder where their next paycheck will come from. Unfortunately, this NDP government is only making things worse for Albertans. Yesterday we learned that Calgarians are in line for a 10 per cent property tax hike because this NDP government wants a larger take of their salary. That means that most families will be out another $126 this year to pay for this NDP government’s spending addiction, and that’s on top of the carbon tax that will raise the price of everything for everyone. Why is the Premier raising taxes on the 76,000 Albertans that are out of work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To begin with, I reject much of the premise in that question, much of the reason for that being that it’s greatly inaccurate. What I will say is that this government very clearly committed to ensuring that education funding follows enrolment and increases on a predictable basis of 2 per cent each year. We did that because we understood that we need to invest in our education system, not starve it like the folks over there would like to do. Now, three years ago the previous government established a formula. We didn’t change it. We didn’t tell anybody we would. This shouldn’t be a surprise for anybody.

Mr. Jean: No, but you dramatically increased taxes for Albertans.

Calgary has been decimated over the past year. Home prices have dropped by almost 4 per cent, and home sales are down 11 per cent. So it’s hard to believe the minister could be so out of touch with this reality, where she blamed the government’s need to increase Calgarians’ taxes on, quote, an increase in the market values of homes. End quote. Nobody is buying these excuses. Albertans are already feeling the pain. This NDP government is just making things much worse. Did the Premier really think that Calgarians would buy that excuse for raising their taxes when the value of their homes continuously drops?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the opposition take a bit of time to do their own research instead of believing everything that they read in the paper. Now, the residential education property tax is based on the assessed value of homes. The rate was $2.50 per $1,000 in 2015 and has been reduced by this government to $2.48 per $1,000 in 2016. The fact of the matter is that assessed values of homes have actually increased in some cases, so there is an overall increase, but it all relates to a formula that was established under the previous government with respect to the percentage of property tax that goes towards education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Hogwash.

The NDP's higher tax agenda on Albertans doesn't stop there. The new carbon tax will actually force Calgary to raise its property tax by another half of a percentage point. That's more money out of the pockets of hard-working taxpayers. We will see that effect in every single community across this province because of this NDP government's carbon tax. Higher property taxes, higher bus fees, more expensive groceries, higher prices at the pump, all at a time when Albertans simply can't afford these higher taxes. What does the Premier have to say to all those who will now be poorer while government has not had it so good ever?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first thing that I will say is that notwithstanding all the Chicken Little-esque declarations coming over from that side of the House, the fact of the matter is this. All in, the tax regime in Alberta is still the lowest in the country, and that has not changed. We are maintaining that while we are investing in significant efforts to diversify our economy and to create jobs and to invest in the future, something that those folks over there wouldn't do. They would slash billions of dollars from our budget, put people out of work, and leave us worse prepared.

The Speaker: Thank you
The hon. leader.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: We know that this NDP carbon tax will cost Alberta families at least a thousand dollars a year in direct and indirect costs, but what we didn't know until Friday was how the Premier expected Albertans to cope with increased fuel costs as a result of her policies. Her pitch to those who can barely make ends meet now and certainly can't afford to pay more at the pump was simply: change your car. What a brilliant idea. When faced with job losses and bills that pile up, just take on more debt. Why not? After all, our NDP government is doing that. Does the Premier perhaps have a better suggestion to those Albertans worried that they simply can't afford her higher tax agenda?

Ms Notley: Well, the first thing I would suggest is that those people get their information from someone other than the Official Opposition because these guys are making it up as they go along. Just yesterday they put out a chart that defied basic addition and subtraction, and they extracted it from a report where the author said: they're using it wrong, and they don't know what they're talking about. So the one thing Albertans can definitely do is not take advice from the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this Premier just hit the typical family in Alberta with at least a thousand dollars in new costs per year, a tax on everything for everyone. Her answer to Albertans who are worried about another tax taking money is to laugh and to say: buy a new, fuel-efficient car. This is while the Premier travels the province in a large, GHG, gas-guzzling Suburban, and her ministers do exactly the same. What an example. How does the Premier expect Albertans to afford a new fleet of Teslas or Smart cars when her policies in this budget are working so hard to drive investment and prosperity right out of our province?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we based our plan on research and facts, and the fact of the matter is that the average family will pay roughly $500 a year more than they would have previously. What that means, then, is that 60 per cent of Albertans will receive a rebate of roughly that amount of money. That's something that, interestingly, is not ever discussed by the Official Opposition, yet that's the way these things will work. In the meantime people can over time make choices to reduce their emissions. That's the way it works in every other jurisdiction with the carbon price, and that's the way we can change our emissions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this isn't the first time that this Premier and her government have been tone deaf to the pain of Albertans. Her Energy minister said that energy workers should move to B.C. to get a job. The Premier has since revised the message with a progressive jobs plan that simply asks Albertans to stay and apply for EI. Now when faced with higher gas prices, what the Premier is suggesting to Albertans is: change your car. Albertans want to know: once they return from picking up a new Prius, if they can't afford the groceries, will the Premier's next suggestion be to let them eat cake?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I hate to confuse the opposition with numbers and with facts, but here is something that's worth thinking about. In the last six months the price of gas in Edmonton has gone up 30 cents. When fully implemented, our carbon levy will be roughly 6 cents per litre. Interestingly, despite the Chicken Little-ism that's going on from over there, the economy did not drop dead with the price of gas going up and down. Quite frankly, it will not drop dead when we implement our carbon levy. However, what it will do is fund the diversification, the renewable energy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Care System Manager Sick Leave

Mr. Barnes: Wildrose has been vocal in this House about mismanagement and waste in AHS and its bloated management ranks. The NDP government's response is to claim that these redundant and expensive managerial positions are crucial. Now it has been revealed that hundreds of AHS managers are collecting full pay while on sick leave. When the four-month maximum is up, they are magically better and return to work. This is just wrong, and it hurts those that are truly in need of leave. My question to the minister is this: what are you going to do about it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's very troubling that the member opposite wants to find cost savings by compelling sick people to go to work in our hospitals. We're committed to improving health by finding efficiencies but absolutely not at the expense of patient safety. I can come to work with the flu. I don't want a nurse working in an ER or in an isolated immunosuppressed area to be doing the same.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please sit down.
Proceed.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Clearly, this Health minister is more interested in protecting entitled AHS managers than actually improving our wasteful and ineffective health system. It makes me sick to know that under this government's watch wait times for cancer surgeries are climbing while millions are spent on a system that rewards AHS managers for deception. Again to the Health minister: will you fix the broken system, that rewards waste and abuse at Albertans' expense?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: Now, we are all very clearly understanding that the Official Opposition struggles with math, but let me explain the facts. Over the last year the use of sick days in AHS has gone down, and it's below the average of health authorities across western Canada. Certainly, we are going to make sure that when people do get their cancer surgeries, they don't have somebody operating on them who's sick and expelling germs all over the place. These are managers, unit managers often in nursing units in acute-care health facilities, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, if a 1 per cent improvement is good enough for the minister, the management problem starts at the very top.

The Health minister's answers again confirm what we already knew, that this NDP government is more interested in allowing a broken sick-leave system to continue than ensuring better results. It's time for a reality check. In the real world abusing a sick-leave system would be stopped, not encouraged. In the real world hard-working Albertans don't get a third of the year off with full pay each and every year. Will the minister implement real accountability and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: In the real world somebody would not stand up and accuse somebody of being fraudulent. In the real world AHS employees have documentation from a physician if they're not able to perform their duties. Are you saying that the employees are fraudulent, that the doctors are fraudulent? I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; that side of the House is trying to create a bunch of spin and disrespect. These are dedicated front-line health workers, including unit nurse managers in hospitals. That is inappropriate, and he should apologize.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Budget 2016

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 is setting records as a disappointment to many Albertans. The Alberta chambers call it "simply irresponsible." They asked the government to "do no harm" to Alberta businesses, "reduce the cost burden on business, contain spending, [and] borrow responsibly." Government told small business that they would be sheltered from the cost of the carbon levy. The government has failed on all accounts. To the Minister of Finance: did you ignore the chambers' advice because you focused on the optics of the budget for yourselves rather than on the economy for Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of chambers of commerce, and I was just at one this morning up in Fort Saskatchewan, talking with them, and I'm going to see other chambers. They have been supportive of the things we're doing around small-business tax cuts, around investor tax credits, around capital investment tax credits. We are doing those things. I was at the Calgary Chamber of commerce on Monday, and they said: we commend the government for its leadership in establishing Alberta's first investor tax credit program to help equity capital flow. They are supportive.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That little piece there that they actually did like was recommended by the PCs.

Yesterday the minister of economic development said that his government was told by the chambers of commerce that there are a number of initiatives to help the economy move, and the minister suggested that his government adopted those initiatives. Clearly, based on what is stated in a release from the Alberta chambers, which I will table today, that cannot be true. To the minister of economic development: what's keeping you from telling Albertans the truth about how business and their chambers feel?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, you know, first of all, again I reject the premise of this. It is almost laughable in this House that a party that was in power for 40 years, that failed to reduce small-business tax, to bring in an investor tax credit or a capital investment tax credit is now trying to take credit for something that we did. The Finance minister, the Premier, myself, and members of cabinet as well as members of our caucus have been out consulting with business and industry across this province. We've been listening to them. We have taken their feedback, and now we're implementing measures that will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Every business I know would prefer the policies before May 5 compared with what's here now.

Last week the Premier flippantly disregarded Albertans' concerns with the carbon tax and suggested that Albertans should just change the cars they have. To the Premier: how are middle-income Albertans going to afford that when they're paying your carbon tax on food, shelter, clothing, consumer goods, vacations, and other costs not rebated back as a result of your regressive carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What middle-income and low-income Albertans will get is a rebate that would effectively cover the cost of the carbon levy based on estimates that we put together. The second point that the member outlined: as I've said before, there are no facts to back up that assertion. The third point, I would suggest, in terms of what I said last week is simply this. All Albertans, as they can afford it, as they have the opportunity, as they gain access to the other programs that are put off the carbon levy, the efficiency programs, the grant programs, can make choices to reduce . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Wildfire Season

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fire season has started early in our province, with some 37 fires currently burning. Overnight the hamlet of Duffield in Parkland county was evacuated along with residents of nearby acreages. The hamlet of Tomahawk was also evacuated as well as portions of the Paul First Nation. The residents of nearby Clear Lake are currently on evacuation standby. My question today is to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. What steps is your ministry taking to protect the residents of Parkland county from wildfire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert for the question. While Parkland county is outside the forest protection area, the ministry is always ready to assist municipalities to protect residents. The department has sent four eight-person crews to help the county as well as a fire behaviour officer and one helicopter. All fires currently burning are human caused. While we are ready to assist where we can, I'd like to urge all Albertans to take necessary steps to minimize wildfires.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the ministry has started wildfire season early, to the same minister: what steps have you taken to minimize the likelihood of wildfires?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again to the member for the question. It is important to note the unpredictability when it comes to Alberta's wildfire season. It is difficult to predict weather patterns two weeks from now, let alone a full season ahead. Nevertheless, the trend is for a drier, warmer spring. To address this, I moved the start of the fire season ahead by a month to allow the department to plan early and have resources in place. The government has also invested in the FireSmart program and the Flat Top Complex to reduce the risk of wildfires and their impact on municipalities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my constituents value the important work of firefighters to fight these wildfires, again to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: would you please explain to the Assembly the variance between last year's budget and the one announced last week?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, let me be clear that safety is paramount and that this government will put the resources in place to ensure it remains so. Fire seasons are unpredictable, therefore difficult to budget. There's a base funding level to maintain equipment and personnel. The cost of actually fighting the fires is drawn from emergency funding, which is to reflect in the following year's budget estimates forecast in our actuals. This was the past practice of previous Alberta governments and is the present practice of governments across Canada. Last year's budget differed, however. It was introduced on October 27, so the cost was reflected in the budget rather than the following year's forecast.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Our caucus is steadfastly opposed to private schooling and particularly steadfastly opposed to public dollars supporting private schooling." That quote comes from our current Premier. Albertans are worried that this radical government has a hidden agenda to defund all but public school systems and destroy the Alberta tradition of honouring parental choice in education. To the Premier: is your caucus still steadfastly opposed to public dollars supporting independent, Catholic, charter, and home-school programs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, since the time that I became the Minister of Education, I've made it very clear that we are funding all forms of education. Not only that, but we're funding for enrolment and enrolment growth for education across the province, which has allowed for significant growth. So you can talk about these things all you want, but you can actually walk the walk and put the money there, which we've done. Then you can see what we're actually supporting.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday this government attempted to radically change the education system by tabling an amendment to Motion 504 that would have undermined parental choice in education and given that if this amendment was passed, the motion would have encouraged the minister to assume full responsibility for all decisions about what programs can be offered and funded outside of the public system, can the minister commit to funding all education options at their current levels until the end of this term, or is his hidden agenda of eliminating parental choice not so hidden anymore?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting for people looking for conspiracies under any rock, right?

What you can see from us is that I've said very clearly that we are funding all forms of education. To suggest otherwise is to inflame and to get people upset for absolutely no good reason. We have home-schooling in this province. We have private schools in the province, charters, and public, and together they form one of the best education systems not only in North America but around the world.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister has waffled in his support for Catholic school education, reneged on his commitments to charter schools by disallowing ReThink charter school in Calgary, and engaged in clawbacks to home education programs run by independent school authorities and given that just yesterday he attempted to violate article 26 of the universal declaration of human rights and undermine parental rights in education, what other items from his hidden agenda will the Minister of Education be implementing?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, when people choose to fan the flames of disinformation, when they choose to put out information that simply gets people upset when it's simply not true, you know, that smoke smells like people just trying to cause trouble when we are trying to run an education system. We put that money into place. We fund for not just current levels, but we fund for enrolment and growth as well, and for anybody to stand in the way of that, that is simply trying to cause chaos for no good reason.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Government Spending

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government spending is a serious concern to my constituents. They work hard to do their part separating the wants from the needs. All they ask is that this government does the same. Yet this government will increase total spending by 4.3 per cent on average over the next three years, placing the burden for their mistakes on future generations. To the Minister of Finance: why did you not show the same restraint as my constituents and constrain spending to a more manageable level?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I'm not sure where the numbers are coming from that the hon. member is using, but in the budget fiscal plan that I look at, it's constraining spending to about 2 per cent per year in the three years going forward. That is less than population plus inflation growth, far less than this side of the House had in terms of their spending year over year over year. We're bending the curve; they didn't.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That number comes from your jobs plan, hon. minister.

Given that this government has acknowledged that the province is in a difficult fiscal state and given that the debt-servicing costs will be 300 per cent from 2014 to 2017 and given that this actually has the potential to be worse as the government is overly optimistic about WTI prices over the next three years, to the Minister of Finance: if WTI does not hit your unreasonable targets, how much debt is your government willing to rack up and heap upon the backs of Albertans?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the hon. member's question. You know, I think I stood in the House yesterday and talked about what our debt-servicing costs would be. They would be 2.4 per cent. If we look at B.C., if we look at Ontario, respectively those numbers are 5.5 per cent and 9 per cent. We are doing a good job here, and we'll continue to do it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think for this government the sky is the limit.

Given that the government continually blames oil prices for the immense deficit and given that even if resource revenues were the same this year as they were in 2014-2015, a year which produced $1 billion surplus, we would still have a $3 billion deficit, again to the minister: will you stop blaming low oil prices and admit that your government is unable and unwilling to show even the slightest intention to constrain spending?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, the Alberta jobs plan in Budget 2016 invests in this province. In 1993 disinvestment happened over here. They cut programs and services. We won't do that. We will invest $34.5 billion in building this province so people can get back to work, Mr. Speaker. That's what we need: jobs, not the kind of rhetoric over here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Pipeline Construction

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada has a long history of unity-building pipeline projects, and despite what the members opposite like to say, several projects were approved in the last 10 years, including Enbridge's line 9 reversal; Kinder Morgan's anchor loop to Trans Mountain, a pipeline that reaches tidewater; Keystone; and the Alberta Clipper. Today as antipipeline, anti-Alberta movements are on the rise, these same companies are being stonewalled. NDP members and staff have been involved in anti-Alberta movements and have politicized pipelines. To the minister: when will this NDP government apologize to Albertans for its role in delaying these job-creating projects?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. Again, as I've said many times, we're working very hard for pipelines in all directions. We understand some in the old system have some permits, but they still have conditions they have to meet. We're working hard with our energy companies to help them meet those conditions.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, given that the environment minister fed her radical socialist friends ideas for a book on protesting pipelines and given that the Member for Calgary-East, the Education minister, and our Premier have themselves joined in antipipeline rallies, it's a bit rich to ask Albertans to trust that this government really wants to get to yes, as it claims, or that it wasn't involved in politicizing the pipeline approval process. To the minister: when will her government finally realize that Canada's regulatory processes are robust and defend the integrity of their findings?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we are working constantly with our ministers across the way. I'm very proud of the work the Premier has been doing with her fellow Premiers across the country. We work with AER. We work with the NEB. We're working with everyone to assure people that pipelines are safe and they will continue to be safe.

Mrs. Aheer: Given that when the federal government announced it was working on a new regulatory framework, the CEO and president of the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association pointed out that the broader implication of this was that the NEB is broken and given that Canada and Alberta already have the strictest regulatory process in the world and that developing a new framework will delay approvals on key job-creating pipeline projects, why has the Energy minister refused to stand up for pipelines and the jobs that they create by publicly defending the integrity of our system?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what's not helping the construction of pipelines east and west. It's the rhetoric coming out of the Official Opposition, that is making problems where problems don't exist and, quite frankly, actually slowing down the process. The Minister of Energy has been a champion of pipelines, both Energy East and the west. Our government recognizes the need to get pipelines built. There are a number of things that we are doing to make this happen, not only dialoguing with the federal government, but it's because we've also introduced the most robust climate leadership plan in the country that we will get the social licence to get pipelines approved and our product to tidewater.

The Speaker: The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just last fall this government was adamant that their previous jobs plan would somehow create 27,000 jobs at a cost of $178 million. That's the math. There was never any evidence to back up that claim or jobs created, for that matter. Now, at $250 million, they're claiming 100,000 jobs will be created by their shiny, new jobs plan sometime next year, I might add. Will the government table evidence on how and where these jobs will actually be created, or should we stay tuned for failed jobs plan number three next year?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm quite proud of the fact, and so are industry and business, that our government listened to the feedback they were giving. They told us that the incentive program that was initially designed would not meet the goals and objectives that we designed it for. But I'll tell you what hasn't changed: our commitment to working with the private sector, the job creators, to give them the tools they need to get Albertans working, to get them back to work, to diversify the economy, which, quite frankly, is something that the Official Opposition doesn't believe in.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I teach my children that when we make mistakes, we correct them. This government needs to remember that important truism. Given that the Finance minister's own budget estimates that unemployment will hit a staggering 8 per cent this year and given that the 2017 start date for the government's investor tax credit is cold comfort for those Albertans who have been without work, jobs, for several months already, rather than making things worse, what is this government doing so that Alberta businesses are better prepared and positioned to create jobs now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm quite proud of the work the Finance minister has done and the Premier has done as far as working with the private sector to create a robust jobs plan. What we did was actually increase our budget up to $250 million. We are investing $34 billion over five years to build roads, schools, bridges, and hospitals, which is going to create employment for Albertans. We introduced a $500 million petrochemical diversification program, $10 million to restore the STEP program, the $90 million investor tax credit. We're investing in a capital investment tax credit. We have a series of initiatives that are going to get . . .

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that small businesses need to actually make a profit in order for the new small-business tax cut to have any meaningful effect and given that both personal and business insolvencies have increased by over 30 per cent in Alberta from 2014 to 2015, will the government back away from their job-killing policies like the carbon tax and the electricity scheme until full economic impact studies are done?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is a very serious thing what many businesses and Alberta families are going through right now with the incredible low price of oil, that is having an impact on every Albertan across this province. I can you tell you that is exactly why our government is acting and why we've introduced the Alberta jobs plan, which is a very robust plan with a suite of initiatives to help Albertans. What I can tell you is that for far too long we've remained overreliant on one resource, on a single commodity, on a single buyer, and that has had a significant impact. Our government is working to diversify the economy and get Albertans working.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-North West.

Health Care and Education Funding

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard a lot of self-congratulations from this government about how their budget stabilizes front-line services in health care and education. Budgets for those ministries are certainly robust, but like all plans the devil is in the details. One health care executive I met at a breakfast this morning told me: we don't have a budget problem so much as an allocation problem. To the Health minister: how are you working to ensure that the dollars allocated for health care are going to the areas where they are most needed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Wanting to reduce the expenditures from what we've seen historically being about 6 per cent down to 3 per cent this year is a great challenge, but it's something that we're certainly up to the task. Part of that is making sure that we have ongoing dialogue and that we're making sure that we're allocating to the right areas. We're focusing on community initiatives like addressing midwifery wait-lists by expanding by 400 courses of care every year over four years. That's a significant increase. We meet regularly with Alberta Health Services. I was at that same breakfast and happy to meet with some of the stakeholders to address their concerns in person.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that front-line workers can often provide the best guidance on areas of neglect and wastefulness, again to the Health minister: what does that dialogue with front-line workers look like, and because they're watching, when we ask them, will they tell us that they've been consulted by your government?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I've met many times with folks at ACCA, one of the organizations that cohosted this morning. The work that they're doing to make sure that our seniors have the respect and dignity that they deserve as well as others who might have disabilities, who need supports to age in their community is certainly an important priority for our government. We are regularly in dialogue with front-line stakeholders, with local community leaders, and, of course, one of our biggest partners, being Alberta Health Services, which has the responsibility of delivering the actual front-line care. I met with them yesterday, and I'll be meeting with them again today.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, to our Minister of Finance: given that the cumulative deficit over the next three years is a jaw-dropping $28.9 billion and given that no substantial new forms of revenue are being sought out, are you prepared to tell front-line workers in health care and education that their long-term job security fears are unwarranted?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, for the long term this government is committed to continuing to fund education, health services, human services. We are going to make sure that the people who are doing front-line work are not put at risk as the previous government would have done and as the opposition would do.

Investor Tax Credit

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we all know that small businesses are some of the biggest job creators in our economy. Over the past few months I've spoken to many business owners throughout my constituency who are ready and able to help put Albertans back to work, and they've been looking to this government for support. Yesterday the Minister of Economic Development and Trade announced an investor tax credit for small business and start-up businesses. Can the minister tell the House what this new tax credit is and how it will benefit Alberta companies?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta investor tax credit will provide a $90 million tax credit over two years to support local small and medium-sized businesses. It will provide a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to Alberta companies in sectors such as information technology, clean tech, health tech, interactive digital media, game products, postproduction visual effects, and digital animation sectors. We will work with members of the business community and stakeholders over the summer to develop an effective program, and we're open to looking at additional, nontraditional sectors once consultation is complete.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the current challenging economic realities we're facing, can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade explain to my constituents why he thinks this is the right program for Alberta at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the very relevant question. You know, quite frankly, Alberta has been lagging in capital activity compared to other Canadian jurisdictions. This limits growth in commercialization potential of local small and medium-sized businesses. British Columbia, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, and a number of U.S. states have an investor tax credit. In Alberta investors have typically invested in the oil and gas sector. The province has talent and ideas outside of that sector which also need capital support in order to grow, so this will help level the playing field amongst other jurisdictions that offer investor tax credits.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Minister. Mr. Speaker, given that we need to be providing businesses with as many different supports as possible, again to the same minister: how will this tax credit work with other existing government job programs in Alberta that could help businesses in my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta investor tax credit is part of the Alberta jobs plan, which will provide $250 million in new funding through a series of initiatives that will go a long way to help build a strong, diversified, and resilient economy. It will complement existing Alberta programs and supports for small to medium-sized businesses without overcrowding the system. I'll remind the House again that the Finance minister and the Premier announced a small business tax cut, something that small businesses are applauding throughout the province. Our government is committed to working with small and medium-sized businesses to keep Albertans working.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Métis Settlements Consultation Policy

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 6 this year the NDP government announced a new Métis settlements consultation policy. Establishing this policy is important and will hopefully help improve the relationship of Alberta's government with Alberta's Métis. The government doesn't have a very good record of effective consultation in other areas, however. Can the minister please explain how exactly this consultation policy will improve co-operation when it comes to land and natural resource management?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are very proud of the fact that on April 4 we were able to bring to this House the new consultation policy that was put together with our government and the Métis settlements. We have been working with the Métis settlements to ensure that they have a true voice in terms of the development that is going on in this province and all of the development that is going on around them on their traditional lands. We'll continue to work with them to ensure their participation in our success.

Mr. Hanson: Given that the Métis settlements and all Albertans will benefit from having open communication and consultation with industry and given that Alberta has Canada's largest population of Métis, can the same minister please explain whether and in what ways this process will help Métis settlements in Alberta participate more fully in the economy and what he is hearing from project proponents on this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been working with each of the individual settlements on particular projects in their areas, and we've been working very carefully with the general settlement council, who have been a participant fully in this consultation process. We have been having our technicians work with their technicians to make sure that they are involved in all of the options available for support for business growth and for involvement in industry as well as in the leadership plan that's coming forward.

Mr. Hanson: Given that I think we can all agree that consultation and conversation is important and given that reaching a consensus and taking meaningful steps forward is even more important, with respect to consulting and conversing with the federal government, can the minister tell this Assembly how he plans to co-ordinate with the federal government to improve delivery of health and education services for Alberta's Métis people and indeed all of Alberta's indigenous people?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I'm glad that they're paying attention to the good work that we're doing over on this side of the House because indeed we have. I'm very happy to say that the Minister of Education and myself met with the federal minister of indigenous relations earlier in the spring. We are continuing to work on a number of areas to bring them to a tripartite table, so we're involving all First Nations, all Métis people, and all the indigenous community in consultations in our work with the federal government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Workers' Compensation Review

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans were intrigued when the Labour minister recently announced that an independent panel would conduct a comprehensive review of the Workers' Compensation Board. Now, they were intrigued because on December 7 I had asked the Premier why WCB, a system that she so vociferously attacked while in opposition, was now being made compulsory for farm employers and employees. The Premier said, "We are in the process of trying to do a fulsome consultative review of how we can improve the service provided by WCB." To the Labour minister: if a fulsome consultative review is already in process, why is it necessary to start another one?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely crucial that Albertans feel confident that the Workers' Compensation Board provides fair compensation and meaningful rehabilitation. I announced the launch of our WCB review, where we have appointed a three-person panel that will represent the workers, management as well as a neutral chair. The last review of the Workers' Compensation Board was done more than 15 years ago, making this due time to take a look at this system and make sure that it was reviewed properly.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, when the Labour minister speaks of things that Albertans don't have confidence in, it's just once again an example of something the Premier wrecked the confidence in in the first place. Let me restate the question more specifically. Given that the Premier assured this Assembly that the flaws she saw in WCB were already being addressed and given that a fulsome consultative review was in process already last December, to the Labour minister: who exactly was consulted during that review? Is it complete? If so, when will the results of that review be made public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The review that was launched this year is going to be taking approximately one year for that panel to bring forward recommendations into 2017. The panel is going to examine WCB's system of governance and effectiveness, the principles of compensation, the policies of WCB, including those related to privacy, confidentiality, and transparency.

This is part of our government's commitment to review all agencies, boards, and commissions.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, twice I've asked and twice I've not gotten the answer, so I'm going to try a different approach. Given that the Premier attempted to mollify farmers and ranchers four months ago by saying, "We have engaged in a review of agencies, boards, and commissions, and the Workers' Compensation Board is part of that," and given that the Labour minister has now determined there is a need for a new review, a simple question: was there in fact a WCB review underway on December 7? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A fulsome review of agencies, boards, and commissions has begun under this government. For the Workers' Compensation Board, which is a very large system that impacts hundreds of thousands of workers, we have determined that we need to take a closer look at the details. We are going to be looking at the governance and effectiveness, the principles of compensation using a three-person panel to take a closer look at a system that has not been fully reviewed in over 15 years. This is part of good governance, to make sure that we have a system that is working effectively for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that April 17 to 23 is National Organ and Tissue Donation Awareness Week and given that more than 600 Albertans are waiting for an organ transplant, with many more waiting for tissue donation, what is the Minister of Health doing to improve the rate of organ donation in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This certainly is a crucial conversation for this House and, I'd say, all Alberta houses. Only four years ago Alberta had some of the lowest rates of deceased organ donation in the country, sitting at 9.9 deceased donors per 1,000,000 population. We have some good news, though. Today the rate is at 13.6, and that's because 230,000 Albertans took the time to register online. Unfortunately, Alberta still has 600 people waiting for organ transplants. There's much more work to do. I hope all hon. members and all Albertans take the time to register.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the update. In addition to registering as organ donors and given the need to continue increasing organ donation rates to ensure Albertans have access to life-saving organs and tissue, are there other ways Albertans can support organ and tissue donations here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there is a green ribbon campaign that's about public awareness. Again I'd like to remind everyone to please register if you haven't already done so. We're actually going to have a clinic here tomorrow where people can take the time to register on their way into the House, so please stop by. If you are a registered donor, I want to remind you to please take the time to talk about that with your loved ones so that they can support your choice if that tragic time does come. It certainly is still up to the family in the end. Alberta organ and tissue donation agency also has a mandate to educate Albertans using public awareness campaigns like the green ribbon.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you share any information about new initiatives that the agency is working on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a new update around the Alberta organ and tissue donation agency that's just been launched, and that's the deceased donor patient potential audit next month. This is the first audit of its kind in the province. What's happening is that 16 hospitals from across the province will be used to help identify if any potential donors were missed in those specific facilities so that we can have an understanding of how improvements can be made and how we can reach out to families to increase opportunities. This audit is a crucial step for the agency, and the results will be used to create targeted education programs for professionals and for the public.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Continuing Care Facility in Bassano

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended a breakfast on insights into continuing care and seniors' housing with the Minister of Health along with members of the Newell Foundation from my constituency. The Newell Foundation is trying to build a multi-use seniors' continuing care facility in Bassano. Having the AHS new acute-care facility integrated into the Newell project will save taxpayers $5 million over a stand-alone facility. Can the minister commit that part of the $365 million in continuing care listed in the capital plan is slated for the Bassano project?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for trying to get an announcement in the middle of question period. Good on you for asking. We'll continue to work with partners from across the province, to work with our Infrastructure minister to move forward on the sunshine list commitments and to work with all partners, like the Newell Foundation, through ACCA and ASCHA as well.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh, I'm looking forward to an announcement, but you can't blame a guy for trying for his constituents.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that AHS controls the land that the Bassano project will reside on and that the Newell Foundation could get to work on many parts of the project in anticipation of AHS coming through with the acute-care component, can the minister commit to expediting the land transfer and give a firm date so that another construction season is not missed?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it was yesterday and probably last week, too, where were hearing the Finance critic from the Official Opposition talk about: if we only spent at rates like our neighbours in B.C., which would mean cutting – I think his number was $8 billion – from our budget. Certainly, that would impact our ability to deliver on operational funding as well as our ability to deliver on capital funding. Instead, we have a government that's committed to moving forward, making sure we have the right infrastructure in the right place, and I'm very proud of that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I only prepared two questions in the hope that I'd get a real answer, but in the event of a non answer, I'm going to have to try again. We are asking for restraint in the government, but out of the current capital budget allotments we're asking that our constituencies receive our fair share of funding that's already been committed. We're asking: will the minister commit to expediting a land transfer, which won't cost the government a penny?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very proud of the fact that I am the Health minister for all Albertans. Some of the announcements we've made very recently were in ridings that your party represents; for example, the dialysis announcement in Lac La Biche. I think that's something that we can all be very proud of. Certainly, we are continuing to work with partners throughout the province in all ridings. We think it's important that we have access to good information and make good decisions. I'll be very happy to follow up yet again with the Newell Foundation.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to acknowledge some visitors that are in the House today. Is there an agreement on the matter?

Introduction of Guests (continued)

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a highly accomplished and dynamic constituent of mine from Calgary-Glenmore, Karen Lee. Karen Lee is a retired clinical trial and management consultant. She has lived in England for 11 years, where she taught part-time at Cranfield University business school north of London. At present she is a clinical psychologist and a published author. Karen's latest book is called The Full Catastrophe: A Memoir. I'm very pleased that she is here with us today. I would ask Karen to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Women's Suffrage Centennial

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the risk of sounding repetitious, I am also speaking about this proud occasion of it being the 100th anniversary of women's right to vote in our province.

Imagine what life would have been like for a woman living in Alberta in the last part of the 19th century. By 1900 municipal voting privileges for propertied women were general throughout Canada, but most 19th-century Canadians, women as well as men, believed that the sexes had been assigned to separate spheres by natural and divine laws that overrode mere man-made laws. This stood squarely in the way of achieving votes for all women as a democratic right. Rather than being discouraged, though, the women of these times began to organize and attract supporters to their cause.

Groups like the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Edmonton Women's Business Club, the United Farmers of Alberta, and its women's auxiliary all supported the suffrage movement. Nellie McClung, Irene Parlby, Henrietta Muir Edwards, Louise McKinney, and Emily Murphy were the suffrage movement's main leaders. They argued that granting women the right to vote was a matter of legal right and that political decision-making would be improved by the participation of women.

On February 27, 1915, the leaders organized an informal sit-in at the Legislature. When the MLAs arrived for the day's session, they found their seats filled by women who read petitions and speeches calling for female enfranchisement. Premier Sifton would only promise that the government would take the matter into consideration.

Canada's suffrage campaigns were peaceable and urbane. They used humour, reason, and quiet . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I would remind the House that we try to limit the conversation during members' statements.

Private Members' Business

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise to talk about the importance of democracy and to ask all members to protect it in this Assembly.

Yesterday we had a serious issue over a private member's motion. The government chose to play politics and moved an amendment that fundamentally changed the intent of the motion. The Speaker allowed the amendment, which might be the correct ruling on a technical level but leads us down a very dangerous path.

This Assembly has a long-standing tradition of allowing debate on motions to proceed without amendment unless the mover agrees. Yesterday's ruling was inconsistent with past rulings, in particular a 1999 ruling that pointed out that allowing amendments to private members' motions would do a great disservice to members who "may only get one chance in every three or four or five years" to put forward a motion on a topic that matters to them. We have now overturned that ruling and opened the door to where it is very likely that every single future private member's motion will be amended or subject to potential amendments.

Allowing a private member's motion to be changed and remain in the name of the original mover is a clear example of the tyranny of the majority. It is my hope that government members will be much more respectful of the traditions of this Assembly. Yesterday the government played politics with private members' business, and then in fixing it, they made a mess. The government made it clear that private members' business will actually be government political games business, controlled by the Government House Leader. What will flow from this is a further damage to our democracy.

As a leader in this House I hope that we can all work together to ensure democracy is respected, Albertans' voices are heard, and that you, Mr. Speaker, can continue to fulfill your role in defending the rights of the minority.

Private Members' Business

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, with the exception of the Premier and cabinet, all other members of this Assembly are private members who share in a long-standing tradition to sponsor motions and bills on issues of importance to them and their constituents. These opportunities are very rare. It is done on a purely random draw, and it's not unusual for members to be drawn only once or even not at all. Private members matter.

In 2007 Speaker Kowalski stated that "the work and the advocacy of private members [is] to be paramount in the Assembly." Retiring members giving their farewell address often state that their sponsorship of a private member's bill was their proudest moment as a legislator. The three hours of private members' business yesterday saw those principles, those rare opportunities both honoured and trampled. For two hours we had great debate on the benefits of tourism in our province. Members from all sides participated in a spirit of respect. But that all changed at 5 o'clock. The Member for Calgary-Hays introduced the motion to affirm parental choice in education. An amendment that had not been shared with the mover and did not have his support was introduced. This amendment effectively denied the Member for Calgary-Hays his potentially only opportunity to introduce and debate his motion during the term of this Legislature.

Now, as I learned yesterday, private members' motions can be amended, but it is very rare, and it has always been done with the knowledge and consent of the mover. Sadly, both Deputy Government House Leaders either overlooked or purposely neglected to note this when they argued that these amendments are commonplace. This point, however, was raised by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who was there and witnessed it happen along with the Member for Edmonton-Calder, today's Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker, the 68 private members and their constituents deserve to have their limited opportunities to raise issues respected by all members of this Assembly and especially by those in government, that hold the majority. But at 5 o'clock yesterday that didn't happen. It was a sad day for democracy in Alberta.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) so we can complete the daily Routine.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Investor Tax Credit

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spent over 20 years in the technology field, and I'm very excited about new opportunities available to investors as a result of the investor tax credit announced yesterday by the minister of economic development and the potential upside for tech development in Alberta. Early-stage investment opens up opportunities for growth and sustainability, and this new initiative makes a 30 per cent tax credit available for investment in local small and medium businesses in key areas of the provincial economy.

Alberta has been at a disadvantage nationally as one of the only jurisdictions without an incentive for venture capital investment. There are some very successful programs across the country like in British Columbia, which sees a $2 return in tax revenue for every $1 of VC tax credit. Access to capital for start-ups promotes their success. This tax credit will mean that Alberta can retain more talented technology professionals. I personally know of a number of talented people in the field of technology that have left Alberta for opportunities outside of the province, including my daughter, who works for a start-up in the United Kingdom.

A large part of the global economy is knowledge based. Keeping our knowledge workers and attracting new talent enhances our economy and will lead to an increase in non resource-based growth, and it's about time that Alberta joined this market in larger numbers. Venture capital investment is vital to innovation. Traditional investment institutions are not in the business of risk, and while investment in technology has made some people very wealthy – we think about Facebook, Amazon, and PayPal – it's also an inherently risky prospect. The investment tax credit acknowledges this risk by offering a healthy tax credit to venture capital investors who take this risk on. I'm excited about the economic and social benefits the province will reap as a result of this investor tax credit program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Dickinsfield Amity House ESL Book Project

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about an amazing book and story sharing project by the Dickinsfield Amity House ESL classes in my beautiful riding of Edmonton-Decore. It all started with a question: "Who reserves the right to create unrest, cause wars, and destroy the lives of people? Who has the right to endanger the survival of our children? Will it ever stop?" These questions were asked by the students. From this and a series of discussions in their classes the students were invited to speak about their experiences of war in their home countries. These students come from all over the world: countries in Africa, Iraq, Mexico, the Philippines, and many more.

As a result of these conversations the unique book project And War Shall Be No More was born. It's a collection of stories from these ESL students with the help of 16 volunteers, including students and professors from King's University who tutored and supported them not only through the challenge of putting their thoughts into English but also remaining beside them while they relived those traumatic experiences. I'm very proud to announce that the official launch of And War Shall Be No More is on May 12 at Glengarry Hall from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., where some of the students will be sharing their stories. I've had the honour of meeting some of these students, and each and every one of them has an amazing story to tell.

Finally, I would like to conclude with a quote from their teacher, Louisa Bruinsma, who is in the gallery here today: if there is any recurring theme of hope in these accounts, it is in the sigh of relief from each of these students that they could come to Canada, a place where they feel safe; perhaps we should honour their courage by working towards a future where all humanity can live together in peace and war will be no more.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Parental Choice in Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During my teaching career I was proud of being a public school teacher. I honoured the fact that students and parents are at the heart of our education system. The Alberta education system has always been about meeting the needs of students through a variety of authentic choices in educational models supported by government.

As a public school teacher I believed that I could provide a top-notch education to any child who entered my classroom, but I also understood that just as each child was a unique individual, I and my public school may not always be the right choice for that particular child. Where a child would go to school and which educational option was the most appropriate would be decided by the parent. This was a parental right. I was not the parent. It was not my call to decide if a public school or an independent school or a charter school or a home-school experience would best meet the unique needs of that child. To interfere in that decision was crossing a line into territory that I had no right to be in.

Yesterday this government crossed the line. Yesterday the government introduced an amendment that attacks parental choice in education. Through this ill-founded amendment Albertans would only be allowed an educational alternative outside of the public system if the Minister of Education determined that the public system did not provide that alternative. This proposal attacks parental decision-making rights and assumes a power that no minister or government should have. This government needs to remember that it is a servant of the people, not their master, and that this government does not have the right to undermine parents' ability to make authentic educational choices for their children. This government is trespassing onto parental territory, and like all trespassers it either needs to remove itself or be ushered off the territory.

Speaking plainly, this government needs to reaffirm its commitment to the long-standing tradition of authentic parental choice in education and not to its hidden agenda of restricting parental rights.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings for you today. First, I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a document posted online yesterday by one Nicholas Rivers refuting the ability to use his study on the effects of the British Columbia carbon tax on the economy in Alberta.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to table the requisite number of copies of another document, authored by the same person, entitled The Case for a Carbon Tax in Canada, that lays out an argument for aggressive action on climate change.

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of a document referenced earlier today by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade that contains 15 examples of instances where motions other than government motions were amended in this Assembly.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I made reference today to a document, that I will now table, from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, and it's entitled Alberta Jobs Plan Spells Pain for Job Creators and Passes the Buck Down the Line.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of Mr. Ceci, President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, erratum for page 124 of the Budget 2016 fiscal plan, which was tabled on April 14, 2016.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was a point of order raised today at I believe about 10 minutes after 2. Does the Deputy Government House Leader wish to speak to that point of order?

Reflections on Nonmembers

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period today, at or about 2:10 p.m., the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat accused AHS staff members of deceit. That's not only in contradiction of Standing Order 23(j) and (l), perhaps others, but it also contravenes Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms at page 151, section 493(4), which states:

The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply.

O'Brien and Bosc on pages 616 and 617 states:

The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander, but from any slur directly or indirectly implied.

On June 25, Mr. Speaker, you yourself cautioned members, stating:

Members must remember that when they refer to people outside of the Assembly, those individuals have no ability to respond to the allegations that may have been made in here.

Your predecessor, Mr. Speaker, in 2012 made similar cautions; for example, on November 26.

We should not be referring to people who are not here and not able to defend themselves.

After having said all that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the member retract his statement and apologize to our hard-working public servants at AHS.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I missed the citation that the Deputy Government House Leader used. However, I'm happy to respond on a couple of particular areas here in the Chamber.

There has been much debate about who exactly can and cannot defend themselves and who is considered absent and who is not, and there is certainly a large school of thought that believes that that particular precedent is speaking specifically about members and former members. But more important than that position, Mr. Speaker, is that my hon. colleague never once identified an individual. It certainly would be difficult to bring in the over 50 managers a year that take 16 weeks of sick leave. It certainly would be difficult to bring the hundreds of managers at AHS here to the Chamber to have them defend themselves. If the hon. member may have identified one individual, perhaps there would be a point of order here, but nothing could be further from the truth about what happened today.

Furthermore, in 2014 the former CEO of AHS acknowledged that a policy surrounding sick leave needed to be revisited as it was costing the system $190 million a year. They set in place a policy whereby managers would monitor sick leave to identify any trends or irregularities. Now it seems, according to the CTV report, that it's the managers who are actually the ones that are using up to four months of sick leave a year. This particular project was part of major cost containment measures that the former Premier ordered in light of a massive drop in oil prices. Whether or not there is an abuse of sick days is certainly a matter of debate and definitely – most definitely – one worth investigating.

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, are there specific references that you might draw my attention to with respect to Beauchesne's?

Mr. Cooper: The only one that I will make is from the standing orders, where it speaks specifically to individuals, none of which were identified today.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the point of order raised earlier today?

Hon. members, I would just make a general observation. I will tell you that I'm going to defer a decision on this until a later date, but I have noted, as was cited and as I've tried to mention several times, that it seems to me that the language and use of words may not be intended but is certainly pushing the envelope in terms of trying to maintain decorum in this place. However, I'll defer my judgment on that decision until a future date.

I do have a request before we go to Orders of the Day. We have another guest to introduce. I need unanimous consent to recognize Introduction of Guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this moment to introduce Dr. Mary Valentich to the House. She has had a 50-year career as a social worker and a social work educator. One of her many accomplishments is that she is the founding member of not one but two rape crisis centres, one in Ottawa and one in Calgary. She has over 50 referral articles, chapters, and is the writer of three books. She is currently a professor emerita at the University of Calgary. She embodies the ideals of feminism and social justice, and considering what we've been talking about in the House on this day, I believe she is an inspiration for us all. I would hope that she would stand and accept the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:
Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 14: Mr. Cooper]

Mr. Fildebrandt: Spendthrift, hopeless, extreme, ideological, reckless: these are some of the words that came to mind when I read the NDP's 2016 budget. But the word that stuck with me the most was irresponsible: irresponsible with our public services, irresponsible with our tax dollars, irresponsible with our future.

This budget is yet another extremely irresponsible budget in a long line of preceding irresponsible budgets that refused to do what needs to be done. Those previous irresponsible budgets kicked the can down the road for the next Minister of Finance or the next government to deal with. This is Alberta's ninth consolidated consecutive deficit. The operational deficit stands at $10.4 billion. Looking at the change in net financial assets, which includes capital spending, this year's consolidated deficit will exceed $14 billion. Even after accounting for inflation, this far exceeds the worst deficit run under Premier Getty, which was $4 billion, in 1986.

This deficit would be irresponsible if it was taken in isolation, but it is even more irresponsible when taken within its full context. We have run a deficit on a consolidated basis every single year since 2008, and every single year since 2008 our government, under four PC Premiers and one NDP Premier, has made misleading and even false claims that the budget was either balanced or would be balanced just a few years from now if we would only trust them. Instead, between 2008 and this budget's projections for 2018 the net financial assets of our province – in English, the net value of our government – will have declined by an almost criminal $65 billion. From $17 billion in the sustainability fund and no debt in 2008 we have spent our way into a hole that will leave us with a debt that will soon exceed $58 billion. This is irresponsible. This is driven by a decade of reckless, poorly-thought-out, and often wasteful overspending.

The operating expenditures in our budget right now on a per capita basis are projected to cost us $1,000 more than Quebec, $2,000 per capita more than British Columbia, and now $3,000 more than Ontario. Quebec, fuelled by $9 billion in equalization, offers all kinds of services that Alberta does not but somehow still manages to spend less. That's right. This government spends more than even Quebec on operations. Ontario has been run for 12 years by one of the most irresponsible Liberal governments in the country – and that's saying something, Mr. Speaker – and it still spends far less than Alberta's government.

But British Columbia is our best comparator, being an energy- and resource-based economy with significant population growth and some of the most expensive terrain on which to build capital projects and roughly the same population density as Alberta. British Columbia also has similarly high private-sector salaries and wages, especially in Vancouver, where the cost of living is significantly higher than most Alberta cities'. But British Columbia provides a high level of social services, higher than Alberta's when you look at wait times and other key metrics, and they do it at $2,000 less per capita. Put another way, British Columbia manages to provide a similar level of government services for $8,000 less per household than Alberta can. That's $8 billion every year that we spend on operations just to get what B.C. gets. Folks, if that's not a sign of a serious spending problem, I don't know what is.

I made a full-time job before I was elected out of trying to convince the previous government to take this problem seriously. I did my best to explain that Alberta would be best served if we returned to the conservative principles that built this province and made us a beacon of prosperity and freedom, principles held by great Premiers like Ernest Manning, Peter Lougheed, and Ralph Klein. I did my best to warn them that unless they got spending under control now, our savings would run out, our debt would grow, that all of the hard work, pain, and difficult decisions made in the 1990s would be for naught, and that this province would have gone through an extremely difficult period of time only to squander that legacy. And that legacy has collapsed. Both the former Premier and the current Premier believed that the cost of this should be borne by the Albertans who pay their taxes, go to work, and create jobs.

But as far as this government said it would go during the election, it has gone much farther. This government promised to balance the budget by 2019. It has now entirely jettisoned any commitment whatsoever to balancing the budget before any child born today reaches their eighth birthday. An eight-year plan that just waits for revenues to catch up with annual spending increases is not a plan.

This NDP government has gone much farther than it said it would on taxes. They have imposed a massive new $3 billion carbon tax on businesses and individual taxpayers. With the Leaper federal NDP operatives running this government, from their own chief of staff to the Premier on down, they have decided to attack the single largest job creator and wealth creator in the province, and in so doing, they will cost the average family thousands of dollars a year. Try as they might to buy Albertans off with their own money, these government cheques will not compensate most families for the true cost of the ND PST carbon tax. They will not account for the increased costs of electricity, groceries, and everyday consumer goods. It isn't done fairly as it would appear that two single people sharing a space will get more of a rebate than a married couple.

The response that this government gives to concerned Albertans who don't think that they can afford this tax is: buy a new car. It's pretty rich for anyone in this House to be lecturing Albertans on gas when most of our gas is paid for. This is the kind of champagne socialist attitude that has distanced the NDP's modern hardline activist movement from its once proud working-class labour movement. The NDP, whose actions reveal that it is no longer the party of everyday blue-collar workers, shows its true colours by fighting for the antipipeline dreams of ivory tower environmentalists and acting as though everyone working for the government is anointed to sainthood while everyday working Albertans see their wages rolled back and their jobs lost.

Alberta deserves a government that works for all Albertans, not just for the Leap Manifesto brain trust of the NDP and those working for the government. We value our public servants. Many of them do critical work for Albertans, but we are deceiving ourselves and Albertans if we act as though each and every person working for the government, insofar as their private-sector counterparts are in difficult circumstances, deserves raises no matter what and they are entitled to pay increases and growing staff ranks no matter how many jobs are bled in the private sector. This is irresponsible.

It is also irresponsible to ignore advice just because that advice is coming from the Official Opposition. The opposition spent hours during the last budget debate warning the Minister of Finance that his resource revenue projections were grossly overoptimistic. They remember it. We warned him that his touted new debt ceiling was powerless. They remember it.

On November 17, 2015, I said in the House with respect to Bill 4 at the time:

This bill has no checks or balances being put into place to ensure that we do not exceed a debt limit of 15 per cent. There are no consequences whatsoever for exceeding the proposed 15 per cent debt ceiling. There is nothing to stop the minister from ordering his staff to exceed that debt ceiling.

I hope that the minister remembers that.

We warned the NDP until we were blue in the face that their 15 per cent soft debt ceiling was wholly inadequate. Just as Premier Redford replaced Premier Klein's strict and prudent restrictions on government borrowing with a flimsy debt ceiling, this Premier has replaced Premier Redford's lax restrictions on borrowing with what amounts to a debt skylight, and already this government has smashed through that skylight with a record level of debt between now and the next election.

We repeatedly warned the minister that this debt ceiling would be inadequate, but the minister said on the 3rd of November, 2015: "I believe that this 15 per cent [debt] limit will not be breached. In the three-year plan that's before you here, I think it takes us up to about 9.5 or 10 per cent of debt to GDP, so there's lots of cushion." Some cushion, Mr. Speaker. Now, just four months, 12 days, and 15 hours later the minister is claiming that he couldn't see any of this coming.

On the same day in 2015 the minister said: "We don't come anywhere close to the 15 per cent. So I don't see where there's going to be an issue like you [the Wildrose] do." Mr. Speaker, I would be embarrassed if I passed legislation promising that I wouldn't do something with much fanfare and then, just a few months later, had to repeal my own law because I didn't listen to what I was being told by the opposition. That is irresponsible.

The Finance minister said, again on October 29, 2015: "15 per cent debt to GDP is a prudent benchmark for limiting government debt. With this cap in place, Albertans can be assured that the government's borrowing will not get out of hand." Famous last words.

Speaking of irresponsibility, that eight-year-old that I was speaking of earlier is my niece Lucy. Lucy was born earlier this month, and she already has $4,625 of debt to the provincial government alone to her name. By the next election my niece Lucy, when she's three years old, will owe almost $14,000. By the time the Minister of Finance might balance the budget, by 2024, assuming he drops his borrowing by a billion dollars a year, eight-year-old Lucy will owe $25,000 to her name, still 10 years from being old enough to vote for a representative in the government. If we follow the reckless path this government is laying out in its budget, after eight years of NDP government Lucy will have $25,000 of debt to her name that she does not deserve. That is not just irresponsible; that is immoral, Mr. Speaker. That is intergenerational theft, and the minister should be ashamed of it.

If we believe in the principle of no taxation without representation, then we should not be so wantonly burdening future generations not represented in this House with this kind of deficit. Mr. Speaker, I believe that today's deficits are tomorrow's taxes, and the Premier has alluded to that, with the threat of a provincial sales tax hanging over our heads. One day those generations not yet in this House will have to make a decision about the generations that will come after them. They will have to decide either to be short-sighted and greedy and enjoy the instant gratification that comes with other people's money, or they will be responsible stewards of the greatest, strongest, freest, and most prosperous land in the world. I know what kind of representative I am, and that's why I will oppose this budget.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to speak in favour of Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016. Through the government there are many delegated agencies, boards, and commissions that act as regulators and provide oversight on specific sectors and services that Albertans rely on. Albertans expect that these delegated organizations answer to the Alberta government and do the job that they were designated to do on behalf of Albertans. Given that the government is put into power by the will of the people, if an organization is in a position where they could act unethically, improperly, the expectation by the people is that this organization would have to answer to and be reviewed by the ministry responsible.

I've heard from my constituents, who expect their government to hold these organizations accountable because we are accountable to our constituents. Accountability and oversight, Mr. Speaker, are the standards which Albertans live by. We see this direct oversight through boards like AHS and various elected and appointed boards of governors. One issue that currently exists under the current Fair Trading Act is the lack of oversight for organizations delegated responsibilities. The current legislation limits the mechanisms available to the ministry to provide proper oversight of organizations that protect the rights of consumers whenever oversight is needed.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that Alberta consumers have confidence that the Alberta government can hold designated agencies, boards, and commissions accountable to the people of Alberta. That is why the proposed amendments to the Fair Trading Act are critical for protection of Alberta consumers. The mechanisms used to strengthen government oversight of delegated regulatory organizations are about good governance and public accountability given that the current legislation does not provide the Alberta government authority to verify organizations' practices. The oversight mechanisms will ensure that delegated regulatory organizations are held to high standards and that these organizations can be held accountable in ways that Albertans have come to expect. This bill represents our government's commitment to protecting Alberta consumers. Albertans expect and deserve these protections whenever a delegated regulatory organization exists and a consumer is involved.

I am happy that we will now have varieties of options available to remedy any problems that may arise. Given that these amendments are tailored to deal with any problems that may arise for Alberta consumers and given that the bill allows our government to continue to stand up for consumers, I am extremely happy and proud to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. Any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, promises to bring good governance and public accountability to delegated regulatory organizations under the Fair Trading Act and will ensure that these organizations are properly regulating their industries. The Fair Trading Act is unique in that it does not provide the minister ultimate authority over delegated authorities created under the act. This bill will ensure that any delegated authorities under the Fair Trading Act follow an existing precedent. My caucus and I support that change.

Bill 8, when passed, will allow the minister to order a review of a delegated authority, to issue orders related to such a review, to dismiss board members or employees if any order is not complied with, and to appoint a representative of the minister to oversee the management of the organization and/or its compensation fund. While there are a number of delegated authorities in Alberta, including the College of Physicians & Surgeons, the Real Estate Council of Alberta, and the Alberta Funeral Services Regulatory Board, among others, the only such delegated authority under the Fair Trading Act is the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, or AMVIC.

I'm quoting their website here. AMVIC is Alberta's automotive industry regulator. AMVIC is an independent delegated authority and is . . . incorporated under the Alberta Societies Act as a not-for-profit organization for the purpose of administering motor vehicle industry regulations as outlined in the Fair Trading Act.

AMVIC is governed by a 13-member board consisting of six directors appointed from the general public by the Minister of Service Alberta, five directors appointed by the industry association, and two members nominated from the industry at large. AMVIC's status as a delegated authority is uniquely Albertan. No other province regulates their entire automotive industry through a delegated authority.

While AMVIC has for the majority of its life successfully regulated the automotive industry in Alberta, it has in recent years had progressively more serious allegations levelled against it, and its ability to maintain consumer and industry confidence has been questioned. Wildrose was among the first to raise concerns around the operation of AMVIC. While the government shouldn't make a habit of pulling arm's-length organizations under the government's wing, we do hope this measure allows AMVIC to function more effectively for the consumers it was created to protect. Wildrose is very disappointed in the previous government's failure to adequately equip AMVIC for success, and Albertans can count on us to be watching very carefully to see that this move actually solves the problems with AMVIC.

While Wildrose is committed to the principles of the free market, we know that the key to successful industry is consumer confidence and trust. Consumers deserve to know that they are protected by a properly functioning regulatory body, and we believe the proposed legislation does just that. Albertans understand that the former government used this government's agencies, boards, and commissions to reward their friends and donors. It was wrong then, and it's still wrong today. Wildrose will continue to watch these organizations closely to ensure that such practices do not continue under government's watch.

In my role as shadow minister for Service Alberta I have had the opportunity to meet with a wide range of stakeholders, including automobile industry and consumer stakeholder groups. It may surprise many in this House that I include myself in that group. This may be a rare example of the NDP government actually presenting legislation that's in line with what Albertans really want. The Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta is in favour. So are the Auctioneers' Association of Alberta and the Recreation Vehicle Dealers Association of Alberta given that this bill simply sets oversight of AMVIC on equal footing with other delegated authorities and because it will benefit the automotive industry to have increased consumer confidence.

Wildrose recognizes that efficient government is important to all Albertans and that there needs to be a balance between providing effective oversight and micromanaging arm's-length agencies, boards, and commissions. We recognize that this is a positive move considering AMVIC's unique status and its scandal-ridden history. However, a word of warning to the members opposite: Albertans are paying attention, and so are we. We would advise the NDP to take a lesson from history and resist the ideological temptation to keep growing a government that is already so large that it can often take weeks and months to get back to Albertans.

Again, we support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill? Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to be able to rise from time to time and add my voice to some of the debate that goes on within the House here. It's certainly a privilege to be able to rise and speak today on Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, consumers have an expectation that when they're making major purchases such as a car, which, as everybody knows, is probably the second-largest purchase outside of a home that a consumer will make, they will be protected should a problem or an issue arise. I think it's safe to say that this government is committed to ensuring that consumer protection is maintained at the highest of levels.

Wherever an outside agency is acting as a delegate of the government, Albertans deserve to know that they will be fully protected, and they want to know that these delegated organizations are ultimately accountable to government as well. Mr. Speaker, the changes being proposed in Bill 8 will ensure that this indeed is the case and will serve as another way in which this government is continuing to stand up for Alberta consumers. For this I'm happy to provide my support to Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, and I certainly appreciate the members opposite supporting this bill as well.

Just so we're clear, the focus of Bill 8 is on ensuring that delegated regulatory organizations, or DROs, as the acronym goes, under the Fair Trading Act are held to a high standard and that they can be accountable and meet the expectations of the public. The minister would then have a variety of options available for remedying any problems that may come up at these DROs.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to note that every other DRO in all other pieces of legislation has this same type of oversight already in it. There's certainly nothing new that's being done here, with this piece of legislation merely duplicating what already occurs everywhere else, so I'm sure that my fellow members will agree that we have an interest in government having the appropriate oversight of all delegated regulatory organizations.

Now, although there is only one DRO currently under the Fair Trading Act – and it is an important one – going forward, this bill will also allow for any new DROs created under this act in the future to automatically fall under the same proposed oversight language, just like every other DRO, thus achieving what we're currently trying to do, to provide some oversight in this act.

Mr. Speaker, I guess just to sum up really quickly what I've been talking about here, Bill 8 will provide mechanisms to ensure that consumer protection is always maintained at the highest levels, that delegated regulatory organizations have the same oversight provisions already in place in other acts, and that they can be held accountable when those standards are not being met. Ultimately, everyone in the province is a consumer, and ensuring a fair marketplace for all Albertans is something, I think, we all have an interest in here.

Again, I'm happy to offer my support for Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, and I would certainly urge all of my colleagues here in the House to support this bill. I do look forward to hearing some more views from other members in this House and what their thoughts are going forward while we debate this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 8? Standing Order 29(2)(a) does apply now. The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Sorry; is this . . .

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ellis: No. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any under 29(2)(a)?

Go ahead, Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really proud to stand up in support of Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act. You know, I can tell you that after the last election, when I was assigned the role as the PC critic for Service Alberta, I actually received a lot of complaints from people that certainly had concerns with AMVIC. What I did do at that time – of course, as an investigator I wanted to investigate what the history was in regard to AMVIC and what the previous government had done.

Fortunately, I did have our good friend Mr. Manmeet Bhullar as a guide, who was, obviously, the Service Alberta minister during quite a time of, we'll say, controversy. I will pass on the words that Mr. Bhullar had explained to me, which were that when he got into the role of Service Alberta, many of the bureaucrats were not happy with him because he wanted to essentially change everything, and part of that change had to do with AMVIC. Sadly, prior to his arrival AMVIC had grown into this snowball, and it seemed as though there was no way of stopping it. It was really, you know, a W5 report that kind of put AMVIC in line. Manmeet tried in his brief role with Service Alberta to certainly put people in a position that would try to make a positive difference in AMVIC but sadly to no avail. A lot of political infighting would occur in that particular organization and, obviously, Manmeet moved on to other things within the government itself. AMVIC was able at the time to hold off any, let's say, offence from Mr. Bhullar, who tried to do his best in a very challenging, challenging role.

To give you also a little bit of background here, in 2014 the then PC Service Alberta minister Doug Griffiths suggested that AMVIC had become inconsistent, arbitrary, and at times punitive in relation to the enforcement of responsibilities. The Service Alberta operational review of investigative practices, which was dated April 29, 2015, made 16 recommendations that fall under the following main topics, right? Eight recommendations were related to clarifying and making adjustments to policies or ensuring policies were followed, specifically relating to undertaking policies in the Peace Officer Act and regulations. There were three recommendations related to improving the quality of investigations as reflected in investigation reports. There were two recommendations related to improving operations, simplifying the charge approval process, and clarifying the complaint handling process; one recommendation related to ensuring that investigations were completed independently from the adjudication process; one recommendation related to ensuring that AMVIC followed through on Service Alberta's recommendations; and one recommendation related to improving staff morale.

Recently AMVIC stated that they are pleased with the progress of the implementation of these principles, and a report on the status of these recommendations, of course, highlights the excellent work, to a certain degree, that AMVIC had been doing.

Also, in early March of 2015 a leaked document outlined the government's concerns, at the time the PC government's concerns, again with AMVIC in a letter written by the then minister, Stephen Khan. He raised several concerns such as misuse of administrative enforcement tools; investigations and hearings that have not been reached in a manner that is fair, impartial, and open; and high staff turnover rate with low morale among the investigators.

Additionally, an April 2015 internal draft of the Service Alberta review of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council expressed serious concerns about the welfare of the council's staff under the administration of the executive director at the time. This is a quote: the executive director acts as a tyrant and a dictator who interprets any question or decision, direction or process as disobedience and responds with intimidation. This, of course, is what Service Alberta investigators say that they were told by several staff, according to the review.

In a June 2015 class-action lawsuit against AMVIC for negligence the claim was that AMVIC failed to regulate the business practices within the auto industry and alleges that Service Alberta failed to oversee AMVIC. This is a key reason why this government is providing more ministerial oversight through Bill 8. The allegations related to the failure of Treadz, a Red Deer based auto consignment company. The lawsuit claims Treadz failed to pay the owners of vehicles and sold and failed on promises, and there was a lot of, of course, neglect.

Of course, now we are here in the current situation. I'm very pleased that the Service Alberta minister has listened to the concerns of people who have had significant issues with AMVIC, and here we have before us Bill 8. I'll quote our Service Alberta minister: because of how the previous government created the act, the minister has little power, if none, actually, to take action on behalf of Albertans when a regulator is not doing its job.

So, you know, although I'm not a significant fan of more power or having control, certainly I believe that it's important to listen to Albertans, and I believe in this particular case this is a bill that is listening to Albertans who have a concern with this specific area, which is called AMVIC. I believe that this government in collaboration with the opposition will do the right thing for all Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers for Bill 8? No one wishing to speak?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move to adjourn debate on Bill 8.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move second reading of Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

As I mentioned at the bill's introduction, Bill 10 makes legislative amendments in several different areas, including the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, and several Alberta tax statutes. These amendments will provide flexibility to allow government to address current economic and fiscal challenges and will protect the integrity of our provincial tax system and provide greater clarity and consistency in our financial legislation.

Mr. Speaker, let me take a few minutes to review the key elements of this legislation. As I announced with Budget 2016 last Thursday, this bill repeals section 3 of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, or FPTA. As members are no doubt aware, this section limits the government's debt to nominal GDP to 15 per cent. When this amendment to the FPTA was contemplated, our economic forecast and those from the private sector were very different. As it has now become clear, we are in a critical moment in Alberta's history. Oil prices have dropped by over two-thirds, from $105 per barrel in 2014 to less than $30 a barrel in January. As a result, the unemployment rate has risen dramatically, and we are forecasting an almost 90 per cent drop in nonrenewable resource revenue.

Mr. Speaker, as I outlined in my Budget Address, Albertans are confronted with a choice that will have profound consequences for generations to come. When oil prices have declined in the past, Alberta governments responded by making reckless and extreme cuts to public services, firing thousands of teachers and nurses and cutting supports for seniors. Some suggest that we should turn the clock back and do the same thing again today.

As Budget 2016 makes crystal clear, our government is taking a different approach, a better approach. Instead of slashing and burning, we are choosing to protect the health care of Albertans, that they have demanded, and the education system that our children rely on. Instead of sitting on our hands, we are moving forward with our capital plan, which addresses decades of inaction, and we'll rebuild the critical infrastructure that Albertans rely on. Mr. Speaker, instead of doing nothing, we are partnering with Alberta businesses to drive economic growth and diversification. Budget 2016, the Alberta jobs plan, will create the conditions for 100,000 new jobs right across this province. It is the right approach to address the most severe economic shock our province has experienced in generations and one that I was proud to unveil last Thursday, Budget 2016.

Mr. Speaker, as members are well aware, much has changed since Budget 2015 was developed and released last year. Back in August and September 2015 the private-sector forecasters told us that oil would average $61 per barrel in 2016-2017. As I made clear last Thursday, the same forecasters are now saying that oil will average $42 per barrel this fiscal year. Simply put, the economic outlook has changed dramatically over the last six months. All Albertans recognize this. This is why as part of Budget 2016 we have included a risk adjustment in our oil forecast to recognize the extreme volatility in our resource revenues. In these challenging times as a government we have chosen to respond by investing in jobs and protecting the vital services Albertans rely on.

Mr. Speaker, if the government had chosen to follow the advice of the Official Opposition to not exceed 7 per cent of debt to nominal GDP, we would have had to cut over $8 billion from Budget 2016. That would have been the wrong decision. It would have made a bad situation even worse. An $8 billion cut is more than the entire Ministry of Education. An $8 billion cut is more than the combined budgets of the ministries of Advanced Education and Municipal Affairs. An $8 billion cut is virtually the entirety of our capital plan for this fiscal year, which was designed to put Albertans back to work while providing the required infrastructure that Alberta businesses need to grow and thrive. Put another way, even if we close the Alberta Energy Regulator and the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission and we cancelled the investment and investor tax credits, wound down the biofuels initiative, and suspended all monies for public security in the Ministry of Justice, we would still be roughly $7 billion short of the Official Opposition's debt limit.

Mr. Speaker, I only raise this proposal for the $8 billion in cuts made by the Official Opposition in December to illustrate the choice we face, and it's an important choice. Budget 2016 has made this government's position clear on how we should respond to this economic shock. The title says it all. With the Alberta jobs plan we spur the creation of 100,000 jobs, protect core public services, and partner with business to drive innovation and diversify our economy.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the change that I just identified, there are a few other elements of Bill 10 which I should quickly highlight for members of this Chamber. Bill 10 proposes a change to the Financial Administration Act, specifically to section 42.1, which requires that loans made pursuant to express statutory authority be tabled before the Assembly. The current wording of this legislation could be interpreted to apply to corporations and individuals. Under this exceedingly strict interpretation it's possible that several kinds of loans to individuals would have to be tabled in the Assembly, including loans made to individual seniors under the Seniors' Property Tax Deferral Act and loans made to seniors under the proposed Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree that making such loans public is not desirable and was not likely the original intent of the act, which was passed 20 years ago. Our government has no desire to see the personal information of grandmothers and grandfathers or students tabled in this House because this bill has not kept pace with the times and it was not explicit enough. Therefore, as a remedy Bill 10 proposes a $500,000 threshold. Loans made to individuals below that threshold would not have to be tabled in the Assembly. The tabling requirement for loans made to corporations, of course, will still apply.

Mr. Speaker, this bill also makes changes to the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act. As you may recall, the program was created in 2005, our centennial, and was designed to encourage parents to open up registered education savings plans. The program failed to support the very people it was meant to help. Bill 10 will give legal authority for the program's closure, with any application received after July 31, 2015, no longer eligible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me highlight for members that the bill also proposes minor technical amendments to various Alberta tax statutes. The amendments are designed to ensure continued consistency between Alberta and federal tax regimes, clarify or correct technical deficiencies, repeal expired provisions, standardize administrative policies across Alberta tax statutes, and to make other technical changes needed to maintain current policy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this proposed bill covers amendments in several different areas: the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, and several tax statutes. These amendments will provide flexibility to allow government to address current economic and fiscal challenges, and they will also protect the integrity of our provincial tax system. More importantly, changes in this bill will enable the government to respond to this once-in-a-generation economic challenge and establish the conditions to put 100,000 people to work through the Alberta jobs plan.

I ask all members of the House to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really hope that the Minister of Finance will be here to take questions from the Official Opposition. It really would be a shame if the Minister of Finance didn't do his job to stand in this House and answer questions from the Official Opposition about a bill that will tear up the debt ceiling in this province. If the Minister of Finance weren't here to engage in questions and answers under 29(2)(a), it would be extremely disappointing.

The Speaker: Hon. member, 29(2)(a) does not apply as I understand it with respect to the mover of the motion, nor will it apply to you, sir. So please proceed with your question rather than making reference to the other side of the House.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly would be a shame if the Minister of Finance weren't to participate in the debate in a back and forth . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I think he was participating. Could you please proceed.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm getting to it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, also known as the Unlimited Debt to Infinity and Beyond Act. Some could say that this is the start of a provincial sales tax implementation act.

There is some housekeeping in this bill. The final wind-down of the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act. It was intended to provide a way for parents to save for their child's college or university education through RESPs. Since its inception the program has paid out close to $132 million. While the grant amounts are not large, they are meant to get parents started, and the effect of compound interest has made the program significant. It's too bad it's not affordable for many anymore.

There's also some harmonization going on in this bill, measures like aligning the federal Income Tax Act so that Alberta companies can report their earnings in U.S. dollars, Australian dollars, British pounds sterling, or euros.

As the law is written now, all of the loans the government makes are supposed to be tabled. I don't think that seniors getting deferrals for property taxes or for their home renovations want that kind of information out in the public, nor do students want to see their names in print that they took out loans, so the government has not been reporting these loans. Bill 10 makes changes to reasonably fix this problem. All corporate loans will still be reported. The only individual loans that will be reported are over $500,000.

Dividend tax credit. The dividend tax credit is adjusted down to reflect the change in the small-business tax rate from 3 to 2 per cent. This is generally a positive thing and good housekeeping for individuals who take their income from their small business as a dividend.

That's the housekeeping in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, it doesn't stop there. The kicker in this bill is the elimination of the debt ceiling. Only four months and 12 days ago the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board passed Bill 4 in this House. It would be a positive thing if he were to debate its repealing today. I would certainly invite the Minister of Finance to get up and debate it, only Bill 4 brought in a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit as Alberta's debt ceiling. That was a high ceiling in and of itself considering that we had a debt ceiling of zero just a few years ago. That's where Wildrose likes it. What good is the law if you're just going to break it and keep changing the law? Not even five months later year 3 of the new budget has a 15.5 debt-to-GDP ratio, so the minister will just want the law changed so he can break through the debt ceiling.

We are now on track to have a $58 billion debt in just three years, Mr. Speaker. Bill 10 will allow us to break even that. Less than 24 hours after the budget was released last week the Dominion Bond Rating Service had already downgraded Alberta from a triple-A to a double-A rating. I don't know how the members on that side can look their constituents in the eyes and tell them that they are being responsible with future generations' money. I spoke about my niece Lucy just a few months ago in the budget debate. I don't know how they can look someone that age in the eye and say: we will saddle you with $25,000 of debt before you can even vote on how we should be spending your money. It's shameful. Not even 24 hours after their budget the bankers were demanding higher interest rates.

The budget estimates the population at 4,247,000. That works out to $13,563.93 owed by every single man, woman, and child in Alberta to the bankers who bought the bonds that create this debt, bonds that evoke images of being tied up, ropes and chains. And Albertans are tied up here. That debt over the next three years could build over 3,000 new schools, or it could repave the entire provincial highway network, or it could build 38 Calgary South Health Campuses. Say that 10 times fast, Mr. Speaker. How much of this debt is going to capital builds? We need to know this. We need to know how much could have otherwise gone, instead of to interest payments, to schools and ring roads around our cities.

Much is also going to pay for operating costs now, a whole new low for this government. The day-to-day government salaries will be funded by debt, those, too, of teachers, nurses, and AHS managers, those managers who suspiciously take four months of sick leave and then show up at work the day that their sick leave runs out . . .

Ms Hoffman: After their chemo is done?

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . when the average Canadian in the private sector only takes about 9.1 days a year in sick leave. We know that the Minister of Health is a bit sensitive on the topic.

In Alberta a portion of the teachers' pension plan is also paid for by taxpayers.

Is it wrong to pull Albertans into a debt spiral? Interest payments on the debt will be the biggest expense in the government after health, education, and social services before the next election. That means that this government will spend more servicing its debt than protecting our environment or keeping our streets safe.

We warned the Minister of Finance that his numbers were off. I heard nothing but excuses from the Minister of Finance, who I challenge to get up out of his seat and debate this in the House here. We heard nothing but excuses from the Minister of Finance, saying: we couldn't see it coming, Mr. Speaker; we couldn't see it coming; we had no idea this would happen. There are miles of Hansard transcripts in this House where we warned the minister day after day that his revenue projections were grossly optimistic.

Nobody was projecting that oil prices would recover the way that the minister was. Certainly, the Official Opposition sounded the alarm day after day after day when we debated Bill 4 and the previous budget, and the minister refused to listen. Perhaps the minister wasn't in his chair at the time to hear. We warned the minister, and he refused to listen. Perhaps he wasn't anywhere near.

Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Carlier: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order has been raised. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member across the way is referencing the hon. Minister of Finance, speaking disrespectfully and referencing that he has not been in the House. He's done that several times, earlier as well, in contradiction to 23(h), (i), (j).

The Speaker: Is there a specific standing order that you can point to? I, too, was looking for that. I think I would be asking for more detail. I will be looking at Beauchesne's and others with respect to that.

I need to remind all of the House, please, that it's certainly been the practice and my understanding that you do not make reference or allude to the fact of whether or not a member is in the House. That's been my understanding.

On a couple of occasions in the last few minutes, hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, you made suggestions that might have led that way. I want to caution you that you not do that in the future, and I apply that to all members of the House.

Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly didn't mean to allude to the minister not being in the House. I wanted to just encourage the minister to rise from his chair and speak to the issue at hand, the bill he is sponsoring.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: We warned the Minister of Finance repeatedly. We told him over and over and over that it was his responsibility to budget responsibly and that his oil projections were wildly off. And now he stands in this House and has nothing but excuses. He claims that nobody told him. There are miles of transcripts of Hansard where we told him over and over and over again. And just in case he was wrong about his oil revenue projection, we said that we don't trust your 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit, that that needs to be a hard limit, that there need to be consequences if you break your own laws. We proposed that there be fines for cabinet ministers if they break their own debt-to-GDP limit. Well, it seems we were getting to the crux of the matter.

We proposed a referendum if governments wanted to raise the debt limit in the future. The government opposed it again. Either they intended to repeal their own bill or they weren't paying attention to the facts. The Wildrose has consistently pointed out that this government has not been budgeting realistically. And every time they blow their budget, they come back here and they complain. They complain with excuses, and they shirk their responsibility, which is why I encourage the minister to stand up and explain his actions about why he could not listen to the Official Opposition with regard to his revenue projections.

That's why I encourage the Minister of Finance to stand up in this House and defend his ignoring the repeated warnings about exceeding the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit he has put in place. That was only four months, 12 days, and 15 hours ago, give or take,

Mr. Speaker. On October 27, 2015, the minister said of the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit: "This act will limit Alberta government borrowing to 15 per cent of GDP, half the average of other provinces. That will provide enough room to allow our government to play its economic role without tipping into overdependence on debt."

The suggestion in the minister's own statement seems to be that going beyond 15 per cent would mean an overdependence on debt. For once I agree with the minister. And here we are today, blowing straight through a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit in just a few years, beginning with the current account deficit of $14 billion this year alone.

Now, we know that the leaders over there inherited a 44-year-old dynasty that was spending far above the national average and far above our neighbours in cost-high British Columbia or over in Liberal Ontario, but are Albertans really to believe that there wasn't significant waste to be found?

Just yesterday CTV Calgary broke a story about scores of AHS managers going out on sick leave for months at a time. As soon as the sick leave was used up, they were back on the job. Mr. Speaker, the average private-sector worker in Canada takes 9.1 days of sick leave a year. AHS managers taking four months raises some real questions. It must be a very unhealthy workplace. No wonder we have wait times and people are not getting services that they need.

Some of them – and I'm only saying some managers, not all managers and certainly not all employees at AHS, who are doing great work – are worried about using up all their sick leave instead of serving Albertans. When the government says that it refuses to exercise any fiscal restraint whatsoever for the sake of helping Albertans and then has to turn around and tax those Albertans to cover up the cost of its short-sighted borrowing habits, it hurts the very people that they want to help.

I will conclude this part of the debate by telling a metaphor about finances. Alberta's finances remind me of going to a party where there's lots of promotional alcohol provided. It's a great party. Everyone can partake to their heart's content. But eventually the free stuff runs out. The party is over till someone finds that hidden bottle of moonshine: don't stop the party. Ladies and gentlemen, the party is over. We have run out of money. It's time for us to get serious. The minister is not serious; he has nothing but excuses. It is his responsibility to stand up in this House right now and explain his actions and debate the Official Opposition on this bill.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the government's Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. What this bill seeks to accomplish is nothing but a reckless disregard for future generations. This government is looking to get rid of their 15 per cent debt ceiling only a few short months after enacting such a bill. Alberta's debt will be $58 billion by the next election. This government is simply passing down irresponsible governance and bad decision-making to future generations. My colleague for Strathmore-Brooks talked about a young child getting to their eighth birthday as we see where we'll be at with $58 billion.

We know what large-scale debt entails. We know that it has deep and problematic implications not only for Albertans today but for future generations. Frankly, doing this to the next generation just seems to be immoral. By designating the next generation as the ones responsible for paying off the debt, this government is willingly depriving them of the advantages Albertans so recently had, and it's absolutely clear that they do not have a plan for that debt.

One year ago, during the election in 2015, this government claimed that, sure, they'll borrow and, of course, yes, they'll spend but that they will balance the books by 2018. Sure enough, they borrowed. Sure enough, they spent. Speaking here in October, the Finance minister claimed, "We will get back to balance in 2019-2020, and if the economy picks up, we'll get there sooner." They kept borrowing, and they kept spending. Last week, Mr. Speaker, they revealed that the books won't be balanced until 2024, and they continue to borrow and continue to spend.

It's clear that there's no plan to balance the books, not a real one, but they do have a plan to rack up debt, and now Alberta's credit is being downgraded, a development that has troubling consequences, to say the least. I was somewhat astonished to see just last week, regarding the Dominion Bond Rating Service's lowering of Alberta's credit rating, that the Premier said, and I quote: there's, frankly, nothing we could have done to avoid it. End quote.

But this credit downgrade is no surprise. DBRS warned this government as far back as January that their high borrowing agenda would lead to trouble. I read from the report, and I'll quote that: DBRS believes that the fiscal response is unlikely to be adequate to maintain credit metrics consistent with the triple-A rating, in particular maintaining a DBRS adjusted debt burden below 15 per cent of gross domestic product; debt is now expected to exceed 15 per cent of the gross domestic product as early as 2016-17. End quote.

Our caucus pressed the government to try and rein in spending, and repeatedly we were disregarded. The government could have tried a moderate budget, protecting front-line services while reining in spending, to show creditors that there is still some semblance of fiscal competence, fiscal responsibility. Instead, this government chose to present a budget that showed only disregard for the Albertans tasked with paying it down. Not even a day had passed after the budget was released last week and DBRS had already downgraded Alberta from triple-A to a double-A rating. It doesn't sound like much, but this is the first step to what? An A-minus rating? A B rating? Each incremental step that the rating is lowered means that a subsequent rise in the cost of borrowing is imminent. That's just a fact.

Albertans should be concerned with the mounting debt and the cost of it. Simply put, it's cheaper to borrow when the province has a strong credit rating than to borrow when it does not have a strong credit rating. Anyone who's ever borrowed money knows that a bad credit rating means higher interest rates. In Alberta's case it means that we're racking up debt faster, with larger interest payments. It means that taxpayers, everyday Albertans, everyday Albertans' families, are on the hook for more.

This government is now on track for $2 billion in annual interest payments on their debt. That's $2 billion not going to schools, $2 billion not going to infrastructure, $2 billion that could have gone to solving the numerous issues we talk about in this House every day regarding health care. Two billion dollars in annual interest payments means that thousands of families work and pay taxes in a given year just to pay off the government's debt interest year after year. That's shameful, Mr. Speaker.

I'm not going to try and give a history lesson here today, but I do want to speak about the past, as closely as I remember it, as far as debt and debt ceilings and the like have progressed. Now, remember that this is from memory, so please don't hold me to account if I miss something by a year or two or something like that. I'm not trying to offend or re-create 100 per cent accurately but just to recall, to bring some sort of understanding as to what we've done in the past.

My reflective cognizance of the era of the Alberta government in the mid-80s to early '90s is that a global oil glut saw the price of oil fall dramatically. Now, the price tumbled something like 60 per cent. The economy was already in a world-wide recession. The overproduction of oil just deepened that downturn. I was just a young man starting my farming career. Interest rates were abysmal, as I recall. For someone trying to begin that lifestyle and borrowing a lot of money – well, $100,000 was a lot of money to a young fellow like me – 18 per cent interest was unbearable. Investing money would have been genius if a fellow had any money to invest. There were some, of course, who had been around for years and years and had some money to invest. They did very well. Their retirement was secure. But folks that were the same age as I was, that were trying to get their careers started, probably all remember some of those '80s years. Times were tough.

But all that aside, the government of the day found itself in a deficit. Several more deficits followed, and Alberta ended up having a total debt of something like $15 billion by the early '90s. The number itself isn't that important in this context, just that Alberta had managed to indeed run up a rather large deficit for the times.

The next Premier – and everyone here knows who we're talking about. It doesn't matter whether you believe that it was done correctly or incorrectly, depending on your political stripe, but the next Premier managed to get the debt under control. He managed to get the deficit under control, and he managed to see the books balanced in Alberta. That was 10 short years ago. It was a very proud moment for Alberta. We were all there, and I'm sure we all felt the same pride. Then a debt retirement act was introduced, which required the government to pay off debt until it was zero. After that, strict controls were put into government to stop them from borrowing except for some pretty small, specific things such as borrowing for municipal capital on the government's credit rating.

The era that followed brought in reasonable but modest, small changes to allow for something like P3s or something to that effect and other small amounts of legitimate borrowing. The next Premier, that came along in the era following that, kind of wiped out all that legislation that I just talked about and allowed the government to borrow for capital, to significantly borrow for capital. But the interest payable, as I recall, again couldn't exceed a certain portion of the government's revenues. It was really just a different way of doing a debt ceiling. As much as it went against what had happened only a few short years before that, all of a sudden it was okay for the government to borrow again.

Then the current government came in and did something that I really never thought would actually come to fruition. This government created a number and created legislation that allowed borrowing for anything, capital and/or operations, and that number wasn't to exceed 15 per cent of the gross domestic product.

Our Finance critic, my colleague from Strathmore-Brooks, expressed on more than one occasion in this House and directly to the government that there was no reason to believe that this government wouldn't test that number in the very near future. He's already talked about the discussions that he's had, and the speeches that he made reference those very points. The Finance minister called him a fearmongerer. Well, lo and behold, I'll take the Member for Strathmore-Brooks' comments to be the word: four months, 12 days, and I can't remember how many hours.

The Finance minister tabled a piece of legislation that took away the debt ceiling and has no cap on borrowing in legislation today. In other words, the NDP government can borrow any amount of money that they see fit, do whatever they want to do with it, and at the end of the day the Alberta taxpayer is on the hook. So the Wildrose fearmongerers, those feared folks on the right, turned out to be exactly right because this Alberta government cannot see its way clear to explore any kind of spending control whatsoever. You know, a deficit is a choice, and the government that sits in power today made the choice to put Alberta into the deepest throes of debt in this province's history, now without a ceiling to stop them from borrowing as much as they see fit.

When this government began discussions about both of the budgets that they have introduced, they made it clear that we had to get off of the royalty roller coaster, we had to diversify. The budget that was introduced on April 14 and the discussions that took place before and some since have revolved around the price of oil rising in order to see Alberta be able to start to use less borrowed money. Nowhere in the budget presented do we see a significant plan to diversify the revenues of this province, as we were told had to happen, certainly nothing that is significant enough to replace or even come close to substituting for the revenues required to service the proposed expenses of the government.

Rather than a balanced approach to a provincial budget that would address spending along with the limited income available because of the world price of oil, we now see no limit, no cap, no boundary that would define the largest amount of debt that is to be tolerated in the province of Alberta, and certainly no plan to pay this money back, short of annual interest payments, and no discussion of any consequence that would see some form of an interest in decreasing . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Listening to the remarks of the hon. Member for Little Bow, you know, I just had a couple of comments and a question. He mentioned that we don't have a diversification plan. I would note that our budget actually mentions many things that would result in a diversification plan. It involves investing in our petrochemical industry. It involves having AIMCo invest half a billion dollars in Alberta businesses with growth potential, in whatever industry those may be in. It involves ATB increasing its loans to small and medium-sized businesses as well as our investor tax credit and our capital investment tax credit.

Now, the hon. member also spoke a lot about a reckless disregard for future generations and talked about the fact that our plan includes some debt. Well, I'd like to ask the hon. member: where is his plan? We have made a clear choice that we want to support jobs, we want to support families, and we want to diversify our energy industry. To stay under the suggested debt limits that the opposition has often put forward, I would ask the hon. member: which schools would he cut, which children would he leave in overcrowded schools with overworked teachers, which hospital maintenance would he defer, and what long-term care beds for our seniors would he cut? So I would ask the member: where is his plan, and what would he cut?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I do have right in front of me what I said when I talked about the revenues of this province. The hon. member took the liberty to change what I said, so I'm going to repeat it if that's all right. Nowhere in the budget presented do we see a significant plan to diversify the revenues of this province, as we were told had to happen, certainly nothing that is significant enough to replace or even come close to substituting the revenues required to service the proposed expenses of this government.

What I hear on this side is that we need to diversify and get away from the royalty roller coaster. It continues and continues. I was looking forward to seeing what we were going to be doing. I was really looking forward to seeing what the diversification was going to be that would replace or even significantly become noteworthy or newsworthy for a revenue source that was going to replace the oil that we sell in this province. That's what Alberta is all about. Alberta is about – let me think, now. I'm going to try to remember this thing. Alberta is about: rope calves, drill oil – what's the other one?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Eat cow.

Mr. Schneider: Eat cow.

You know, if it was my job, if I was sitting on that side of the House, I would make the decisions that you talked about. I would put them on paper, and I would present them, just as you have. But it isn't my job to determine how Alberta is going to spend its money or whether they're going to get enough income or any of the things you talked about. Those are the government's choices. They've made the choice. They've found a deficit number that they're happy with, and this is what the people that are just being born – eight years from now all the comments that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks made are all true. We are facing the biggest debt in Alberta's history, and it doesn't seem to bother anybody near as much as it does me or some of the people on this side of the House.

I wish I'd had the chance to come and sit in your meetings and discuss how you wanted to approach this budget, how you wanted to see diversification of income, and if you wanted to see how we could find some cuts. I'd have been happy to be a part of that. Nobody invited me. I simply wasn't involved, so it's impossible for me to answer those questions, Madam Speaker.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. Under 29(2)(a) I'm also interested in knowing – the Leader of the Official Opposition supported five consecutive deficit budgets when he was in Ottawa, so clearly there are opportunities where I imagine he . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker on my list is the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to speak to Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, or as we already have heard it called, to infinity and beyond.

Anyway, even though Christmas is barely over, I'm beginning to feel like the Grinch. I don't feel as though I'm stealing Christmas day after day when I come to work here in the Assembly. The reason I'm feeling Grinchy is that every time the government comes up with a bill, they're giving away any hope of future prosperity for our province. Dr. Seuss would have been really proud of that. You know, he liked the Grinch. He liked to show how he did that, took presents away.

Frankly, we're taking away future gifts for our children when we're looking at the $2 billion that we're going to have to pay back just in interest payments. This is an outstanding number to me. How many hospitals could we build? How many roads could we build? How many schools? What are we taking away, Madam Speaker, from the future generations, from my kids and from my grandchildren and everybody else's kids and grandchildren? I think it's irresponsible, in my opinion, to go down that route and be able to take these gifts that we've been given in this province and change it to having to give this money to banks. I'm very much against this borrowing that we're looking at, of up to $58 billion.

You know, while promising shiny, new things like massive infrastructure projects, unbelievable capital projects, new roads and bridges, and higher minimum wages, this government does not seem to understand that the cost related to these promises is going to bankrupt this province. I have to say that again. It's going to bankrupt this province.

We've gone from where in 2004, which the Member for Little Bow just alluded to, we were debt free. We were completely paid in full. I remember seeing that sign, Paid in Full, and now we're not. We're going to be looking at, again, $58 billion or higher. This government seems to have the attitude that they can simply spend their way through the worst economic slump we have seen in decades and that someone else will pick up the tab.

Kind of like having a credit card, but you give it somebody else to deal with after you go on a spending spree. That's irresponsible. Sometime in the future, somehow, it's got to be paid for. Sort of like having a massive Christmas shopping spree, using maxed-out credit cards to pay these bills, every kind of credit card you can get your hands on, whether it be MasterCard or Visa. Go to all of the different stores, Walmart. Max them all out. Well, being the Grinch that I am, I'm looking at the end result of this uncontrolled spending spree, and I'm terrified that the full cost of this ill-funded economic plan is going to leave my children and grandchildren to pay it off.

The worst part of all of this, Madam Speaker, is that the government knows they can't pay for all of these promises, so they are demanding that Albertans pay for them and future Albertans pay for them, not just Albertans today but future Albertans. They have increased taxes on almost every part of our lives. They've increased taxes on businesses, they've driven out job creators, and they now are going to tax regular Albertans out of their ability to enjoy a comfortable standard of living.

Under this government's ill-founded economic policy we saw yesterday that an average Calgarian home will see an increase in their existing property bill of about $170. This province will take about $126 of that $170. That's just over 74 per cent of it. Madam Speaker, that's an awful lot of money that is being taken out of Calgary by this province, you know, using a tax as a property tax at a time when, I think, Calgarians and Albertans can least afford it.

So many Albertans are out of work and underemployed and having to take less of a paycheque, a lower paycheque, rather than a raise in their paycheque. That $170 is money that's going to be lost, that won't be circulated in the economy, that won't go for, say, somebody going out for a meal or somebody buying some new kind of a gadget, that could put money back and circulate it in our economy, money that would do so much more. Because when the money goes back into circulation, what you get is employment, employment at places that sell these things, whether it be restaurants or whether it be stores. These jobs will be lost because people will not have that $170. Like the carbon tax or the sin tax of last fall, this is yet another case of the government indirectly raising costs on families. It seems like their hand is in your pocket everywhere you turn. We're seeing it on everything lately, it seems.

Again we have more money being taken out of our pockets through gasoline taxes once they go to the pump. It was 9 cents a litre, and now it's going to be up to – I'm trying to remember what it's going to be up to.

An Hon. Member: I heard 6.

Mr. Taylor: An additional 6 cents?

Dr. Starke: Six point seven.

Mr. Taylor: Six point seven. Thank you.

An additional 6.7 cents: when you're talking about all the millions of litres, that's an awful lot of money that's going to be coming out of the pockets of Albertans and going into the government's coffers.

An Hon. Member: Out of the economy.

Mr. Taylor: Out of the economy.

Who can spend it better? I think Albertans should have a better chance of being able to spend it and seeing how their money should be spent.

Despite all these cost hikes for families we are somehow blowing through the debt limit that the government decided on last fall. That brings us to Bill 10. This is perhaps one of the most ill-conceived pieces of legislation this government has come up with. This bill removes any hint of fiscal control. It seems that the lid is off. Again, like, to infinity and beyond: where's it going to stop? This government intends to continue their spending spree and their reckless spending habits, and this is why they have tabled Bill 10. With this bill they can just break open the maxed-out credit cards and carry on with their Christmas spending spree, leaving the worry about budgets to others. The Grinch in me sure doesn't like that.

Their lack of concern for fiscal management is, according to them, actually a virtue as they attempt to prime the economy by creating jobs. But at what cost? Albertans need assurances that this government will get their spending under control. If this NDP government can't control the spending and work within the parameters of coming close to balancing the budget, how do we as Albertans know that in four years this debt number won't be the predicted $58 billion but something higher than that? Will it be $60 billion, $65 billion, $70 billion, $75 billion, or $100 billion in debt? There's no cap. There's no reason or rationale to stop this spending from going up from the $58 billion to $100 billion because there's nothing to stop that, Mr. Speaker.

Perhaps the minister could tell us if he will hit $100 billion in debt by 2024. Is that what the projected budget beyond this will be, beyond $100 billion? Mr. Speaker, I don't know where this will go. I don't want to become the most highly in debt subsovereign government in the world, and we're going down that road. If we look at it per capita, we're trying to compete with Ontario, and we're getting there quite quickly.

Contrary to what our Prime Minister said – you know, our Prime Minister said that budgets balance themselves – budgets really don't balance themselves. That's a fact. We as legislators and, apparently, the opposition as Grinches must do the hard work to ensure that the budgets are balanced so our children, our grandchildren will have the competitive Alberta that we have come to love and expect, the competitive Alberta that – you know, we could hold our heads up proudly and say: we're Albertans; we have the Alberta advantage. But where has that Alberta advantage gone? It seems to be slipping out of our hands like sand slipping out of my fingers.

When this government puts Alberta in debt to the tune of somewhere close to $60 billion, this has huge implications for Alberta, Albertans, and postsecondary institutions. If I look at the cost to service debt alone, the $2 billion, and put this into capital projects that they have planned for this year, which is $438 million, I can see that this is over four times the capital projects, all the capital projects that we wanted to put in in this province for our postsecondary institutions. That's four of those. We could have done four times as much this year as what was planned for this year, but that's going to be gone. That's going to be erased because we're paying debt, and that's irresponsible to our postsecondary institutions.

This goes across the board with all the different aspects of this province, again, the roads, the schools, the hospitals. The hospital in Wainwright, Mr. Speaker: it's projected to be $240 million to have a brand new hospital facility placed in our town. That $2 billion would provide us with eight of those hospitals. The size of hospital that we want, a regional hospital for our area: we could have eight of those dotting this province each and every year. That's what we're losing just based on what we're spending, the $2 billion, to service that debt.

This means that we have lost the potential to build new postsecondary institutions, brand new ones – they could be done – just because we're going to have to service the debt with that $2 billion.

The number seems to be, you know, just beyond belief. I had a person tell me before that if you took – they used the analogy of: what does a billion dollars look like? Well, if you looked at a million dollars and then you went and converted that to seconds, it would have been two years ago, but if you went to a billion dollars, you're going back around the time of Christ. So $2 billion: I'm not even sure where that puts us, the time of Ezekiel or something. I'm not sure, but it takes us back into the Old Testament. Ezekiel talked about prophecy, and I'll tell you: this is a prophecy that it looks like we're coming up against.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The four horsemen.

Mr. Taylor: Well, that's Revelation, but I get your analogy about the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse.

This government, this NDP government, wants to become friends with big banks. Big banks seem to be their big buddies now. Obviously, it must be because they keep giving money to the big banks through interest and loans. In fact, every time we do this, we have to have a credit downgrading.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was certainly intrigued by your speech on Bill 10 here. You seem to be very concerned about the debt-to-GDP ratio, and I note that on December 22 of last year your party had put forward a plan to hold debt to GDP at 7 per cent. I'm a little bit concerned that another member of your party has said that it's not the opposition's job to give any details to their plans. However, I'm going to try anyway. I was wondering if the member still stands by that plan of 7 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio and, if so, which services that his constituents rely on he would cut himself.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I really can't speak to what the Member for Strathmore-Brooks was exactly referring to and speak to what his words are or what he wants to articulate about this, but I am definitely concerned about the debt-to-GDP ratio. The more debt that we take on, the fewer projects, the fewer things that we can do, and it definitely does concern me. We need to make sure that we are looking at moving towards balancing our books, and balancing our books is the ultimate end goal. Nowhere in this do I see that we are going anywhere towards a balanced budget in the next four years. There's nowhere in there that I see a balanced budget coming into this, so I'm very concerned about what's happening here.

I'm sorry. I cannot comment on what the Member for Strathmore-Brooks would want to say, so I will sit down and say thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schneider: Yeah, 29(2)(a). I'd just like the member to be able to get back to his speech. I know that he had spent some time on it. I guess I can just ask: what would happen to them or what would they be experiencing, the folks that are going to have to end up paying this $56 billion? This is the proposed number, $56 billion or $58 billion. It's all big numbers. What's life going to be like for those folks? If you have better information there that you'd like to share, I'd love to hear it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Little Bow. Thank you for asking me to continue on with these words that I had from the speech, from where I left off.

Although I advocate for capital projects, I believe that these capital projects should be on a planned, systematic, transparent, measurable priority list with a rationale for each project. The PC and the NDP governments have spent Alberta into an unbelievable, deep financial hole at times. Rather than reduce spending to try to balance the budgets, the NDP have chosen to keep increasing spending and take on massive debt. The government is amending the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit that they imposed last fall because Budget 2016 proposes a 15.5 per cent debt ratio. This government has done the unthinkable, and instead of slowing down their uncontrolled spending spree, they have chosen to remove the cap entirely.

In this way, they will remove all semblance of control and will incur approximately $58 billion in debt before Albertans have a chance to vote them out. Our children and grandchildren will have to find ways to pay back this debt because this government won't make the tough decisions now. They have control of the books. They know what's going on. That was their complaint when they took over the government. They needed to wait until November before they came out with a budget because they wanted to make sure that they did it right. All I see is that we're going backwards, and we're late on this last budget.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to start off. I'm going to be speaking in support of this bill, which, I'd imagine, would not be a shock to anyone in this House.

What this bill does is – there's already been some discussion on the various parts of it. One of the things I'm happy with is that everybody seems to be onboard with the fact of, you know, changing the FAA, where we're going to be raising the limit for individuals who are having a loan from the government to $500,000 to protect the personal privacy of those who have a student loan or are going to gain a loan from various other programs that we're implementing. The same goes for us winding down the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act and our various tax changes that we need to do just to clean up our tax code in order to bring it in line with our federal counterparts. One of the reasons why we're doing that, of course, is for an ease of accounting for businesses, which I know is something the members opposite are always very fond of making sure that we in government do, everything as efficient as possible.

There is also, of course, the one where we are removing the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio, which is something that's required because we've had a once-in-a-generation downturn, that no one could have predicted. That is what has changed since we were last in this House debating a debt-to-GDP level. It's one of those things where if it ends up being 15.5 per cent, Alberta's debt-to-GDP ratio would be roughly half the weighted average of other provinces.

What would that give us? I notice that the members opposite are very enthusiastic about using colourful words about our budget. They're saying that it's a to infinity and beyond budget. Well, I would say that it's going to be an infinity to wait times for surgery if they had their way. In order to cut back to the 7 per cent debt-to-GDP limit that the opposition had previously proposed – since the opposition had mentioned that it is not their job to come up with specifics, that is sort of the number I'm working with – to stay under that, we'd have to take $8 billion out of that budget, which, as noted by the minister, is more than the entire budget of Education, it's more than the entire budget of Municipal Affairs, and it's almost all of this year's capital plan, which would leave one to wonder: what would they cut?

I'm going to digress from that. Oftentimes, you know, the opposition has said to us: you need to cut; you've got to do your part to make sure that government is running as efficiently as possible. Mr. Speaker, we have been doing a lot of that, actually. We have dissolved or amalgamated 36 agencies, boards, and commissions, which is going to save approximately $33 million over three years. That is looking into government and finding ways to cut costs.

Instead of taking a panicked approach, we are slowing down some of our platform commitments to make sure we can roll them out in a fiscally responsible manner. In addition to these, we have also taken careful measures to bring down the cost of government. We have frozen management salaries at government agencies, boards, and commissions and also commenced a review of the salary rates of all of these agencies. Cabinet ministers, MLAs such as myself as well as political staff will not see a salary increase for the entirety of this Legislature. The same is true for managers in the public service for two years.

Also, Mr. Speaker, our projected growth and overall spending for the next three years is going to be on average 2.5 per cent for health care. I will note that previously the rate of growth in health care was around 6 per cent, which, since health care is the biggest part of our budget, created some serious pressures on our budget. By bringing this down, it allows Albertans to have a sustainable public health care system that they can rely on so that doctors and nurses are there when Albertans need health care.

One of the other things we're getting out of this is that we are going to be supporting Alberta families. One of the things we're doing is that starting this summer families are going to be getting a new Alberta child benefit. What that means, Mr. Speaker, is that a low-income single parent with two children would receive just over $3,000 a year in benefits. This would help 3,800 children, who will be better off because of the policies that are in our budget that are there for Albertans.

We've also called on the federal government to expand employment insurance to those in the Edmonton and surrounding areas who have been hurt by this economic downturn.

Also, we are going to be investing $50 million to help apprentices complete their training and finish off their work experience requirements so they can get into the workforce. Second, we're going to be spending $10 million on the training for work program, which targets a broad range of Albertans who are underrepresented in the workforce, including women, indigenous peoples, newcomers to help them secure employment in high-demand jobs.

Now, second, Mr. Speaker, which is something that I believe we've already talked about in the course of our conversations so far, is that we have a concrete plan to invest in infrastructure. We're going to be spending $34 billion to upgrade with new roads, transit, schools, and hospitals. This is a plan that increases investment 15 per cent compared to what the previous government would do, an additional $4.5 billion in new investment over five years. Previous governments, for example, were very fond of announcing schools without having funding for them, and that is something that this government will not continue.

When we talk of education for our kids, Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that there is a school for them, that there's a teacher for them, and that there's proper funding for each and every one of those children. We think that that's good for Albertans. It's a way to move Alberta forward and not backwards to the cuts of the '90s, which members of the opposition are often so fond of thinking back to as being a glorious time in Alberta's history, which I think many of us would disagree with because those times involved cutting back on schools. It involved literally blowing up a hospital, and I don't see how that benefits Albertans.

Also, Mr. Speaker, our plan involves diversifying our energy industry and energy markets. That was another thing that the hon. members across the way had spoken about. Part of that is our carbon levy. What that levy does is that it allows every cent of it to be reinvested in the form of a rebate back to lower income Albertans, and it also involves us to help diversify our economy by investing in energy efficiency programs, investing in alternative energy sources such as wind, solar, geothermal, and possibly other energy sources that we have yet to think of. All of that is reinvested into Alberta. I also note that our carbon levy, for those in our agricultural industries, does not apply to dyed diesel or dyed gasoline, which I think is definitely a help to our farmers.

Fourthly, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to supporting Alberta business, we have most definitely listened to Albertans' job-creating business community. In October we announced that the Alberta Treasury Branches is going to be spending $1.5 billion to support lending to small and medium-sized businesses in every region of this province. Also, I'm pleased to note that ATB announced that it has increased loans to small and medium-sized businesses in the fourth quarter by $335 million. That's $335 million to small and medium-sized businesses to expand and to ride out this downturn.

We've also announced two tax credits, Mr. Speaker. I have to note that last weekend after we released our budget, I had a chance to talk to many people I know who live in my riding of Calgary-Currie and who I've worked with in the past who are frankly quite excited about this investor tax credit. It allows for investments and new start-up companies in the IT sector and other areas, and it's to encourage growth that is outside of the oil and gas sector. Increasing these sectors allows us to, when we have downturns like this, not have such a drop in our other business tax revenues because we would have a diversified economy in that sense.

Also, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade is often very fond of talking about our $500 million in royalty credits towards business that are investing in petrochemical facilities. They use methane or propane to produce higher value products such as methanol and plastics. This is the type of thing that we talked about and I talked about during the election campaign. When it talks to doing value-added for our petrochemical products here in Alberta, that means jobs in this province, that means tax revenue for us to pay for the things that Albertans rely on, things like hospitals and things like schools.

I will note, Mr. Speaker, that during the Budget Address by the Finance minister we decided that we were going to help small businesses by lowering the small-business tax rate from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. I will note that that is something that has been applauded on both sides of this House. I think it is an excellent example of how we are listening to the business community and supporting businesses, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we are making a decisive choice to invest in the things that Albertans rely on, things like hospitals, things like schools, things like roads and other infrastructure. I believe that this is the way forward for Alberta and that it's a responsible way forward. I believe it is for the benefit of all Albertans, and I will proudly stand behind it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks; 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I always enjoy my entertaining interactions with the Member for Calgary-Currie. He's normally wearing orange; I see he's in republican red today, trying to make Alberta great again.

I thank him for mentioning the small-business tax rate. This is something that the Wildrose and indeed all members of the opposition have supported for some time. Unfortunately, the Member for Calgary-Currie and the members on the opposite side didn't support it in October when the Official Opposition moved a motion to do the exact same thing. I'm curious and wonder why the Member for Calgary-Currie thinks that lowering the small-business tax rate from 3 per cent to 2 per cent is a good idea in April but it was a bad idea in October. Perhaps it was because it just came from the wrong people.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also curious. The Member for Calgary-Currie talked about the deep, brutal cuts they're making to agencies, boards, and commissions. They said that they're going to save $30 million. Well, that's nice. I like saving $30 million. But in the context of the overall consolidated deficit they're running this year, $14 billion on a consolidated level, net change in financial assets, that savings of $30 million, the only savings they could manage to find, amounts to about 2.1 per cent of the deficit for just this year. It's a pretty small start, especially when spending goes up every year. You know, I love it when elected people can say, "We're cutting spending" but actually somehow manage to increase spending. It's like: well, I cut the soda out and I bought a case of pop, but I am somehow cutting spending. I'm interested to know if the Member for Calgary-Currie believes that $30 million in cuts out of a $14 billion deficit, amounting to just over 2 per cent of the deficit for a single year, is very significant.

The member also talked about how tough they're being on freezing salaries for senior management in the government. That's a nice start. Unfortunately, though, public-sector compensation costs are skyrocketing in the province. They're continuing to hire more people to work for government. They're refusing to renegotiate salaries. This government, at a time when people are losing jobs by the thousands across Alberta – downtown Calgary is emptying out. At a time when people are bleeding jobs in the private sector, I'm interested to know why the Member for Calgary-Currie feels that it's appropriate for the government to hire hundreds of new bureaucrats, not front-line service providers but bureaucrats.

I'm wondering why they felt that it was necessary to give a significant pay hike to officers of the Legislature, why they voted for that but now move to freeze it. They're talking about freezing salaries for a select number of people – that's a good thing – MLAs, senior managers in the government, but they don't talk about it for their union bosses, who really run the government. They haven't asked Kevin Davey, former AUPE negotiator, to demand salary freezes from the AUPE. I'm not sure which side he's negotiating on anymore. But I'd be interested to know what the Member for Calgary-Currie thinks and if the member has asked Kevin Davey, formerly of AUPE, to make tough concessions of the AUPE.

The Speaker: Why don't you ask and allow the hon. member to answer your several questions?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I would love to hear his answers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I've got the list of questions here. The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks mentioned that apparently this government had voted in support of raising wages for members of the Legislature. I'm assuming he means us.

Mr. Fildebrandt: No. Unions.

Mr. Malkinson: Sorry?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Not us. Unions.

Mr. Malkinson: Okay. I may have misunderstood that question, then.

Anyway, moving on, the freeze or the reduction for ABCs, as mentioned, at 21 per cent is just an example of a first step. I also mentioned that we froze wages all across government for managers, for political staff, for MLAs. Basically, you know, in a nutshell, we froze wages in government for everyone we could that didn't have a current union contract in place, and one of the reasons why we didn't go after those union contracts, Mr. Speaker, is because . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to stand before we begin debate on the budget. Let me be clear – and this may come as a shock – that Wildrose does not like everything about this budget.

An Hon. Member: Shocking.

Mr. Hanson: Shocking. I just wanted to be clear.

We did see that the government took our proposal to drop the small-business tax, but with the carbon tax that small drop is completely negated except for non carbon-intensive small business with a lot of profit.

In our 10-point savings plan we advocated some reductions to the bureaucracy through attrition while maintaining front-line services. The government has found a way to hire 250 more bureaucrats and a bunch of AHS managers over the last year instead. Clearly, this government has a problem with listening. This government has a chronic spending addiction, and removing the debt limit is the ultimate enabler.

In November the Wildrose Finance and Treasury Board critic, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, recapped the history of Alberta's fiscal situation. We heard him warn the government about their risky ideology and reckless fiscal plan and what it would do. The government didn't listen. It's not just that the government turned a blind eye and a deaf ear to our warnings. The government flat out refused to listen to logic and reason and offered up poor platitudes instead. We warned the government in question period. We warned the government through the media. We warned the government in debate. We warned the government by submitting logical, no-nonsense amendments, and the government again decided to close their ears.

Let me remind you of what the Minister of Finance said to our repeated warnings last year. On October 27:

This act [the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act] will limit Alberta government borrowing to 15 per cent of GDP . . . That will provide enough room to allow our government to play its economic role without tipping into overdependence on debt.

On October 29:

The bottom line . . . is that a 15 per cent debt to GDP is a prudent benchmark for limiting government debt. With this cap in place, Albertans can be assured that the government's borrowing will not get out of hand.

On November 3:

I believe that this 15 per cent limit will not be breached . . . I think it takes us up to about 9.5 or 10 per cent of debt to GDP, so there's lots of cushion.

. . . the ability to get to balance, as we've predicted in the five-year projections, will mean that we can start to aggressively pay down the debt, which will mean that we don't come anywhere close to the 15 per cent. So I don't see where there's going to be an issue like you do.

He was referring to us on this side of the House.

On December 2:

We are going to stick to 15 per cent of GDP. That is sound. That is the lowest in the country. That is a debt cap that is calculated to help us get to where we need to go.

When I look at Bill 10, page 5, section 3 presently reads:

3(1) For a fiscal year, Crown debt shall not exceed 15% of GDP for Alberta.

Yet in this document that we have today, section 3 is repealed just like that. Well, clearly, that was a lot of hogwash. Clearly, Wildrose was right and is right to be concerned. Clearly, the government needs to learn to listen to common-sense arguments and stop putting their reckless fiscal plans and risky ideology into place on the backs of everyday Albertans. When it comes to finances, this government refuses to listen. This government refuses to learn. They are irresponsible, and they cannot be trusted to do what is best for Albertans.

This government's fiscal irresponsibility is making things worse. The NDP ideology and budget are making things worse by driving investment into the ground, chasing jobs out of Alberta, and raising taxes on all Albertans. Whether it's increased corporate taxes or their $3 billion carbon tax on everything, everybody is being made to pay more. The government hiked personal, corporate, and sin taxes last year and have hiked more fees in this budget.

Don't be fooled by their promise that this carbon tax is revenue neutral. Don't be fooled by the idea that this carbon tax is just about the environment. Just last week Wildrose clearly showed that this carbon tax will affect every Albertan. It's not just that the cost of your fuel will increase. Your heating bills will increase as well. Your grocery bills will increase. Your electricity bills will increase. The tax that will be charged will not just be swallowed up by business. It will be passed on to you and me in every sector on every item we buy.

The NDP's smoke-and-mirror rebates aren't going to give back to most families what they spend, but the government would like you to believe that. They're pretending that the average gas use and the average home-heating bill are all you will pay for. According to the Premier Albertans shouldn't worry. She says that this carbon tax is a levy you can control how much you pay on. Well, that sounds great. But wait; she goes on to say that if you change the car you have, if you do energy efficiency stuff – the word "stuff" is actually a quote – in your home, you can pay less.

Well, this is just another example of how the Premier and the government are not listening to Albertans and are completely out of touch with the current reality. Tens of thousands of people have lost their jobs. These people are fighting to put food on the table, and the Premier wants them to buy a new car and upgrade their appliances. Awesome. However, what Albertans know and what this government is about to find out is that you can't take on more debt and expect the old debt to disappear. You can't take your poor credit score to the bank and expect to get good interest rates.

When Albertans are hurting, this Premier casually states that Albertans can fix the problem themselves. When Albertans are struggling, this government adds to their burden. Five billion dollars of government debt is not enough. Ten billion dollars of debt is not enough. Fifty billion dollars of debt is not enough. That's another $2,000 a year in debt repayment for each family, and that's before our credit rating was downgraded, making better interest rates a thing of the past. Additionally, with more and more money going toward debt-servicing costs, that will mean less and less money for social programs and infrastructure, less money for hurting, struggling Albertans, less money for those who need it most. We're looking at an average increase of 41.8 per cent per year in debt-servicing costs. This year alone we are looking at nearly $1 billion in debt-servicing costs.

Let me put that into perspective for you. That's more than has been budgeted for the majority of ministries. That's more than Agriculture and Forestry is budgeted to receive, more than Environment and Parks, more than the Infrastructure ministry, more than Service Alberta. The NDP government's budget is only making things worse. As it sits right now, we would need oil to be at least $122 a barrel to get us back in the black. That's probably not going to happen. Let me remind you that the price of oil is currently at $42. This deficit is obscene. This budget is irresponsible, and it's yet another example of the NDP putting ideology before anything else.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago the NDP promised to balance the budget in 2018. Five months ago they said that it wouldn't happen until 2020. Last week they admitted that a balanced budget in 2024 is merely a goal. Let's be honest: 2024 is simply a year that was pulled out of a hat. There is no evidence to support that idea. Furthermore, there are more budgets to come, and I suspect that a balanced budget projection will just keep getting pushed back with each one.

History is clear. When socialist governments come into power – and we know that the members opposite support a lot of those governments – they leave behind a mess, and the next government has to wipe it up. But it's not just the next government that will have to wipe up the mess that this government is creating. It's the next generation.

If the government won't listen to logic and reason, perhaps it will listen to this. At some point this government is going to have to learn to draw the line. They cannot continue borrowing and spending with no regard for taxpayers and future taxpayers. At this current rate of borrowing it won't be just grade 4 students who will be lucky if the province has a balanced spreadsheet by the time they vote. It'll be kindergarten kids. It's the children of today and tomorrow who will be paying the price. This government is robbing them of their future at a time when the whole world is supposed to lie before them. These children are saddled with debt before they've even made a dollar.

The seniors who built this province built it to be something great, and they worked hard to leave the province in good shape for their children and grandchildren. They budgeted hard; they knew what they could afford and what they couldn't. They made sacrifices so that future generations would not need to make as many. How does this government repay them? By increasing their costs when they're on limited income. This government, in effect, has told them that their sacrifice, their scrimping, their saving weren't enough. This government is going to take seniors' last pennies and tax their grandchildren on top of it. Mr. Speaker, this government is making it more than just a practice to spend recklessly and irresponsibly. They're making it a way of life. Their poor decisions no longer just affect Albertans today. This government's poor decisions will affect Albertans of tomorrow. Albertans are worried and anxious because this ideological government is taking risks and making mistakes.

Wildrose will stand up for Albertans. Wildrose will provide strong leadership and give Albertans the hope they need. We need an efficient government, not one that is bloated and breaking trust with Albertans. Thank you.

At this point, sir, if you would indulge me, I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 7 Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. Bilous]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to rise today to speak on Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016. Now, of course, this is a bill that we probably would not even be reviewing if it weren't for the snap election that we saw last year about this time, that was called by the former Premier in what I felt was his own self-interest. For the curiosity of the members across the way, there are actually two weeks left on the law to call the election, so we all would probably be right now pulling our signs out of the barns or, in your cases, printing them, but every single one of us knows that that's not the case. That's why we're here in this Assembly today, and we'll leave it to the pundits to debate whether or not it was a good decision to call that election because it's history now.

When we break down Bill 7, Mr. Speaker, we see that the proposed legislation makes two changes to the law. The first change is significant because it moves the timeline of the Electoral Boundaries Commission appointment date up to October 31 of this year. This advancement puts the commission appointment roughly about a year or two ahead of schedule. The last commission was appointed only seven years ago, making this proposal fall a little bit outside of the traditional eight- to 10-year timeline of the Electoral Boundaries Commission's regular appointment.

Now, with that said, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is understandable that the government would like to appoint a commission and get the process started early, while we are not close to the next election. My caucus also recognizes that by appointing the commission ahead of schedule, it allows for all parties to establish constituency associations and begin the process of building support in the new ridings.

The second proposed amendment changes the data that will be available to the commission when they are appointed. This amendment presents a double-edged sword, Mr. Speaker. On the one hand, the government should always be striving for the best results, and one would think that using the most accurate data would allow for the best results, but as we all know, different municipalities have different capabilities in our province when it comes to deploying resources towards a regular census. Larger municipalities are able to organize door-knocking census teams, online portals, and even pay for advertisement in local media. A lot of our smaller municipalities have a much harder time collecting data at the same rate as the larger municipalities, and they cannot conduct a census every two years while many of Alberta's largest municipalities can. The only concern I have here is that when the commission is collecting population data, the smaller areas may not be represented in the same way.

On the same note, I have some questions about the commission's timeline and the data that will be used, the most up-to-date population data. The city of Edmonton is currently conducting its census and will stop taking submissions by the end of this month, with results coming back by the end of this year. Maybe the commission will use this as the most up-to-date information. However, the federal government is beginning its census on May 2, and Stats Canada will begin rolling out its results in 2017, with the population and dwelling counts being published as early as February 8, 2017.

My question is: due to the commission's early appointment, will it be rushing to use larger municipality census numbers from this year, or will it be waiting for the federal government's province-wide population survey in February? Whichever set of data is used by the commission, the most important part of its work is the commitment to effective representation.

I would like to echo what the Supreme Court of Canada ruled in 1991, when it reviewed provincial boundaries in Saskatchewan. The right to vote comprises many factors, which include representation by population but must also take in other considerations. Factors like geography, community history, community interests, and minority representation may need to be taken into account to ensure that the Legislative Assembly effectively represents all Albertans. The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act already compels the commission to make considerations based on those factors. In the act it is under the section area, and the Wildrose is glad to see that these provisions have not been changed.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that the commission's work is of the utmost importance to the maintenance of a fair and equitable democracy. While serving on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, I have been able to learn a great deal about the electoral process. I firmly believe that a fair, open, and transparent process is in the best interests of all Albertans. I will be supporting Bill 7 in second reading, and I believe my caucus will as well, but we will have several questions that we would like to hear more about from the government during Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays under section 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: No, not under 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on Bill 7, the electoral boundary adjustments. I'll be brief, but there's a principle here that I sincerely hope the members of the House will consider and that it will be included in some form or fashion that's appropriate to whomever is on the commission.

Currently amongst Canadian jurisdictions, as I understand it, Alberta has one of the widest variances in population allowed between the highest and the lowest, as high as 25 per cent, and I understand there are other jurisdictions, many of them, where the variance is as low as 5 per cent. I understand the principle, Mr. Speaker, of democracy – it's an important one – the fact that every vote has equal weight, but the reason for the variance in Alberta has a great deal to do with the realities in our geography and the actual layout of the province. The ridings get so big in rural Alberta that if you try to make the population per Member of the Legislative Assembly exactly the same, it will be very hard for very many Albertans in rural Alberta to get any time with their MLA.

There is precedent for this, folks. The precedent, as I understand it, comes from way back in Britain with the word “riding.” The source of the word, as I understand it, was approximately the distance that a person could ride on a horse in a day, a very important principle that should not be forgotten. Now, I appreciate that most of the MLAs here don't ride horses to see their constituents.

Dr. Starke: We might go back to it with the carbon tax.

Mr. McIver: With the carbon tax it could become a more attractive option than it is today. That is correct.

On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker – and I really want to make this point, which is why I stuck around to get on my feet – there are two principles at work here. One is equal representation, which is an important principle, and we should take that seriously. The other principle is accessibility to your elected representative. If you can't get to your elected representative or your elected representative can't get to you, you are not being represented. There's a lot of rural Alberta that is depending on this House and the upcoming commission to keep that in mind. It's an important principle.

I don't have any trouble explaining it to my constituents in Calgary. Some of them might look me in the eye and say: well, Ric, that's not as good for us as it is for people in rural Alberta. But there's an element of fairness that has to be considered. MLAs have to be able to get to their constituents; constituents have to be able to get to their MLAs. It's not too hard to figure out in looking at a map of the ridings.

I know that in my particular riding, Calgary-Hays, while I haven't done it in one trip, I've surely door-knocked it many times. By my estimation, I believe I could walk from the two farthest points in my constituency in about two and a half hours, walking as fast as I can. There are constituencies in Alberta that it would be hard to drive across, from one side to the other, in two and a half hours and in some cases two and a half days. [interjections] Thank you. So I'm hearing some support for that.

I would just as a caution, I hope, ask that people consider the two principles when we go ahead with this. One is equal representation, which I'll again acknowledge is a very important principle and perhaps the most important. But the other principle, that should never be forgotten, is the principle of accessibility to your elected official because leaving Albertans without any effective representation by virtue of geographic exclusion is something that we should caution against. In my view, it is a big reason for the fact that the variance is allowed as high in Alberta as it is, because we understand that people need to get to see their MLA when they need them.

So there it is. That's my speech. I think it's short. Mr. Speaker, maybe it's my own sense of urgency, but I think it's important, too, and I respectfully hope that members of the House will take this under consideration and seriously, I hope, as the debate continues here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Questions for the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)?

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief because I certainly support Bill 7, and I think that absolutely we do need to redraw electoral boundaries for all the reasons that have been enumerated in this House.

I want to pick up on and offer some support for parts of what the Member for Calgary-Hays has talked about but offer a different perspective, recognizing that it's the 21st century. One of the things that always struck me as odd: in the city of Calgary there are 25 MLAs; there are 14 city councillors in the city of Calgary. As much as I love each and every one of my colleagues – and it's wonderful to see them at events – there are times when there are upwards of two dozen of us at the same event, and I always wondered if that made any sense.

What I would like to just put out into the discussion is: are there other ways of ensuring that rural Albertans are effectively represented aside from having the number of MLAs that we have? Is there a possibility of actually reducing the number of MLAs in this province? Alberta has more MLAs per capita than our friends in British Columbia, substantially more.

Is there an opportunity to perhaps significantly enhance the budget for constituencies in rural Alberta? I find it striking, actually, how little difference there is between the constituency budgets for myself and for some of our rural colleagues. I find that actually remarkable. I think that rural MLAs ought to be funded to a point of having two good, proper offices, with staff full-time in both locations, perhaps even more than that for some of the larger constituencies. Does that introduce with technology, with Skype, with online access an opportunity to provide that representation?

I know that the work of an MLA is never done. I know that the work that we do is essentially infinite – it can't all be done – and we all have to make those choices. I recognize that I represent an inner-city, urban constituency, and that represents an entirely different set of challenges than it does to represent rural constituents, time to physically drive around being not the least of that.

I just wanted to put that out into the discussion as something, as the committee goes forward, for all of us to consider, you know, not just the cost for each MLA – that's certainly part of it – but is there an opportunity for us here to perhaps be more effective? I have to say that there's been more than one occasion where multiple members from both sides have risen to say basically the same thing so we've got something in Hansard, so we can distribute that to stakeholders, and I wonder if, in fact, that's always the best use of our time, if perhaps this House would operate more effectively if there were somewhat fewer of us. I'll put that out there. That's something that's been brought to me by my constituents and by my party members, and I wanted to put that out there.

Having said that, I certainly enthusiastically support Bill 7, and I can hardly wait, Mr. Speaker, for the hallway conversations with my MLA colleagues, particularly those from rural Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find the conversation of interest to me, particularly the last comments from the Member for Calgary-Elbow, because I have one of the largest constituencies in Alberta. I have over 22 communities, and I travel a lot of miles every month. I'm just wondering: is it the opinion of the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, would he therefore think that we should have fewer members in the major cities? Is that the direction you're going, hon. member?

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Yeah. I mean, I think that the Supreme Court has been very clear about what the difference is. So the short answer is: yes, I think we actually should have fewer MLAs in the cities. We do need to consider maintaining proportionality between urban and rural.

You know, whenever bills like this come up, when we do redraw electoral boundaries, it gives us an opportunity to have that conversation. In fact, the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee also could consider this question, and perhaps that's something I'll bring up at that committee as well. It would mean fewer constituencies throughout the whole province. I think that's the job the commission has before it, to make sure that we maintain effective representation, not necessarily equal representation. I don't think that's desirable or attainable in any way. But I think that if we reduce, it should be on a proportional basis, perhaps starting with just a smaller number. Even going back down to 83 from 87: I wonder if that's an opportunity.

It also shows Albertans that we're willing to economize in challenging economic times and to frankly do more with less in this province. I think that's an opportunity for us to show some leadership by example. That's certainly a perspective that I've heard and something that I hope we can entertain as part of the process, all the while making sure that we consider all of the different impacts of that, positive and negative. I stand to be corrected if this turns out to not be such a great idea, but I do think that it's something we should consider.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Seeing none, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest especially to the members for Calgary-Hays and Calgary-Elbow, their comments on the rural MLAs and their support for the rural MLAs. As one of those rural MLAs I don't have the largest district in the province, but I have well over 50 communities in my district. Many of those are summer villages, which I'm very proud of. I, you know, enjoy the support.

I'm looking forward to the commission's report. The Electoral Boundaries Commission has the opportunity to review the boundaries, you know, every few years. I'm looking forward to the report and perhaps looking for that support for the rural MLAs and for rural communities, that are so important.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is there anyone else who would like to speak to Bill 7?

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 8

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. Carlier]

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've had, you know, a lot of discussion around the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, this afternoon. I don't have anything really to add to what we've already heard from both sides of the House.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Carlier: Yes, please. Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

The Speaker: Deputy Government House Leader, go ahead.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We listened to very good debate from both sides of the House this afternoon. I believe we've done some very good work. I would move that we adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:48 p.m.]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we reflect today, each in our own way, let's think about the future. What kind of a future do we look forward to, and what can we in this room do to make that future possible? Let us use the wisdom from those before us, our elders to inspire us and to reach new possibilities and to encourage each of us, in everything that we say and do, to come together for the greater, common good.

Please be seated.

Reflections on Nonmembers

The Speaker: Hon. members, a point of order was raised in the House yesterday, and I'd like to deal with that now. I listened to the arguments yesterday, and I also have sought the advice of the table officers with respect to this matter. The piece of paper that I'm reading but will only be referencing part of has got "confidential" stamped on the top of it.

Yesterday during Oral Question Period the Government House Leader raised a point of order concerning certain comments made by the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. I listened carefully to the arguments from both the Deputy Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader. I reviewed the Hansard transcript of the exchange.

I must tell you that I was unable to find that a point of order has occurred. In response to the citations raised by the Deputy Government House Leader that allegations were made against persons who are outside of the House and unable to respond, I would note that the member's statement did not make reference by name to specific individuals, which is a part of the precedent.

My concluding comments are that there is no point of order; however – however – it seems to me that all of us in this 29th Legislature have a choice. The choice is to push the boundaries of disrespect and negativity or to choose to reach out and to speak to each other and about each other as we would want to speak about and how we would want to see one of our loved ones treated or someone who was not in this House. This matter has breached the edges of those boundaries on a continuous basis, and I want to again remind you: act as if you respect this institution as being something sacred.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the House to speak to government's Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. There's no minimizing the impact that the collapse in the global oil prices is having on our families, workers, entrepreneurs, investors, and communities. But while Alberta's economy has experienced a major setback, I know that this is something that we can and will recover from. That's why our government's number one priority is to help Alberta get through this downturn and position the province for future prosperity. Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, will give the government additional tools to carry out its Alberta jobs plan to do just that. We cannot control the global price of oil, but we can control how we respond. It's clear that Albertans need an economy that is resilient to energy price swings, captures the full value of our resources, and offers prosperous futures for our children.

Now, Mr. Speaker, members on the opposite side of the House believe that a solution to this economic crisis is to turn back the clock. They propose reckless and extreme cuts that will make a bad situation worse, billions of dollars in cuts to front-line services; firing thousands of teachers and nurses; cutting supports for seniors; and abandoning the most vulnerable; no new schools, hospitals, or roads; and no plan to open up new markets. Well, our government is not going to repeat those mistakes. Our government will not turn back the clock on Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we have set out a strong Alberta jobs plan that will support families and communities, invest in infrastructure, diversify our energy industry and energy markets, and support Alberta businesses. Each of these pillars is based on the right policies, that will help us build a more resilient economy so that it generates and sustains good, stable jobs and attracts renewed investment.

Let me give you a few examples of how we are doing just that. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is known for its healthy small-business landscape and entrepreneurial spirit; 95 per cent of all businesses in the province are small businesses. Together they are responsible for 28 per cent of Alberta's GDP as well as 35 per cent of all private-sector employment in the province.

Alberta is also fortunate to have vast energy resources, a thriving agricultural sector, a vibrant high-tech sector, and forward-thinking companies but also the expertise, strategies, innovative technologies, and growth that potential investors and partners are looking for. Yet Alberta has consistently lagged behind other Canadian provinces in terms of venture capital dollars, especially outside of the oil and gas industry. That's why among the best things we can do to set the province on the path to recovery is to encourage investors to fund Alberta-based start-ups with two new tax credits that will support Alberta businesses to grow and create jobs.

The first is the Alberta investor tax credit. It will offer a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to local small and medium-sized companies. This will foster a more diversified economy in Alberta, encouraging new investors to Alberta companies such as information technology, clean technology, health technology, interactive digital media and game products, and postproduction visual effects and digital animation sectors. Mr. Speaker, this investor tax credit will provide $90 million to eligible investors over two years, boosting funding when it's most needed.

The second tax credit we'll be introducing is the capital investment tax credit. This tax credit will provide credits for the first-time acquisition of new or used property or spending in value-added agriculture, tourism infrastructure, culture, manufacturing, and processing industries. Mr. Speaker, I will have more to say on this $75 million investment tax credit in the coming days.

Mr. Speaker, another example of the Alberta jobs plan at work is $10 million in new funding through Alberta Innovates to Innovate Calgary, TEC Edmonton, and regional commercialization organizations to support innovation and job creation. We have great assets in our province, with two of the best university-based business incubators in the world, but they are already at capacity. In challenging economic times people tend to seek new opportunities, to explore starting their own businesses, and to innovate, so a government that is committed to providing economic opportunities to Alberta families must strengthen supports for new businesses.

Our government also is laying out an aggressive plan to support job creators and workers in a more diverse and dynamic economy. That includes strong partners in the agriculture, forestry, and tourism sectors. That's why the government is committing $35 million to attract and support new businesses and pursue regional economic development initiatives. Working closely with our regional and community partners, we will develop economic development action plans that target local business retention, expansion, and attraction. The regional economic development program will complement the community economic development program, that is focused on funding smaller, niche, community-level economic development projects that individual municipalities wish to undertake.

Mr. Speaker, it is the resilience that we have shown together, like in our current economic downturn, that defines us as Albertans. We don't just see the challenge; we see the opportunity that can exist within that challenge. Alberta's endlessly innovative spirit should never be underestimated. We believe that the many steps that we laid out in the Alberta jobs plan will help to create jobs and strengthen our economy, and Bill 1 will provide the government with additional tools to do just that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought that today the minister was going to talk about Bill 1, but he was talking about the budget.

I would like to read two sentences to the House, one from Bill 1 and the other one from the piece of legislation that governs a minister's duties. First, "A Minister may establish or operate any programs . . ." and second, "The Minister may establish programs that focus on supporting working people." Working people, Mr. Speaker. Now, I'm not sure if anyone here thinks there is a difference between these two sentences, but for those who think there is a difference, I want to know: who thinks the difference is so great that taxpayers' money needs to be spent in order to issue legislation that defines this difference?

The first sentence I read out is from the Government Organization Act, which details the duties of all ministers. The second sentence is from Bill 1. One says that the minister can establish programs that support working people while the other says that a minister can establish any program relating to his or her portfolio. I'm quite sure that the word "any," in reference to your program, includes programs that support working people.

In fact, why does this bill not support the nonworking people? Shouldn't this government be concerned about getting people who are unemployed back to work? I can understand that supporting working people is important, but when I talk to people in my riding and they ask what this government is doing to get people back to work, what am I supposed to tell them? Am I to tell them that this government is passing a bill that is helping those who are already working and just ask them to wait for their turn? Am I supposed to tell them that the first bill this government passed in a time of economic crisis is to help those who have jobs instead of those who do not have jobs?

Let me go back and read these two sentences again. "A Minister may establish . . . any programs," and "The Minister may establish programs that focus on supporting working people." Since there is almost no difference between section 2 of Bill 1 and the Government Organization Act, I was going to submit an amendment. For my first amendment I was going to propose the removal of section 2 due to its repeating established legislation.

But then I read a little further into Bill 1 and saw this sentence. "The Minister may establish any panels or committees the Minister considers necessary to provide advice." I thought this sentence also looked very similar to section 7(1) of the Government Organization Act, which reads, "A Minister may establish any . . . [panels or] committees . . . the Minister considers necessary or desirable to act in an advisory or administrative capacity." Both say that the minister can create panels and committees to help advise the minister. Other than a few wording changes in the definition of advice there are no new powers granted by this section to this minister.

I wanted to propose amendments that remove all sections that are already stated in the Government Organization Act. Here is the issue I ran into with this bill. Not only is section 2 copied from this act, but so are section 5 and section 3. The problem is that removing the sections of this bill that are very similar to sections in the Government Organization Act would take out so many sections that the amendments were out of order. To me, this says a lot about the substance or lack of substance of Bill 1.

I could be way off base, and the minister really did not know that he was already allowed to do what is listed in this bill. So I dug around a little bit more and found something that the minister published with his signature on it that is almost identical in wording to Bill 1. Less than a week ago we received the budget, and in the budget we had the estimates, and in these estimates was the minister's portfolio, which has the desired outcomes of his ministry. In fact, Bill 1's section 2(b) is written out on page 27, line 1.a of the minister's estimates. Section 2(c) is on page 27, line 1.4; and 2(g) is on page 28, lines 2.2 and 2.3. These are just the parts that are identical. In the previous budget these phrases are similarly repeated. I could explain how section 2(a) and (d) are similar to his estimates, but I'm sure the minister knows that they are very similar.

Then if we go to the budget overview, page 4, we see the minister handing out money. Actions fulfilling section 2(b) and (c) are already in motion. How is this possible if Bill 1 has not passed, unless the minister had these powers already? Not only does the legislation exist that is identical to this bill, but there are two documents signed by the minister and two signed by the Premier that are almost identical to this bill.

Last month I simply asked the minister in this House, line by line, if he had the powers listed in Bill 1. I asked the minister if he had the powers listed in section 2, the ability to "create partnerships that support entrepreneurship" and "help businesses to grow and succeed." The minister's response startled me. He said, and I quote: absolutely. Why did the minister put forward this bill when he knows full well that he has the powers listed in it already? I thought: maybe he only knew that he only had some powers, not all. Quoting Bill 1, I asked if the minister had the power to "help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment" and "increase the development and [production] of Alberta innovations." I expected him to say that he did not have the ability to do any of these and that that's why he created Bill 1, but the minister said that he absolutely has the powers and abilities listed in Bill 1.

My question is: why is this government wasting our time with the legislation that outlines powers the minister already has? Why is this government not focused on creating jobs instead of writing out and working on the minister's job description? I'm not against the powers of the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. These powers need to be used for creating jobs and making Alberta stronger. I'm not saying that these powers or any minister's powers should be stripped from them. What I'm saying is that I'm against wasting the Legislature's time by outlining a minister's existing powers in the form of a bill. I am against this bill for the fact that nothing new will be accomplished through passing this bill.

The province finds itself in a very serious situation today, with devastating job losses and a serious economic downturn. The people of Alberta need real solutions, not a statement of intent. I hope that the minister will have more to add to what he has published so far to encourage job creation, but unfortunately I'm not holding my breath. I will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Oh, excuse me. My apologies. Just with respect to 29(2)(a), it does not apply in this situation, to the first speaker. I'm sorry. After the next speaker 29(2)(a) applies.

Calgary-Bow, I have a request for you to speak.

If not, Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on this government's Bill 1. Within the time that I'm allotted to speak now, I could read the whole thing about four times, yet it is the government's Bill 1. This is interesting, as my esteemed colleague pointed out, well, as he was on his feet just a minute ago. I'm hard pressed to think of a single thing in this bill that will change a single thing should the House pass it.

It's, essentially, as has been said, a job description for a minister that's been in his job for several months. It includes things like, "The Minister must annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing . . . any new programs under section 2," which essentially is code for: the minister should show up at cabinet meetings and answer questions. Well, all ministers show up at cabinet meetings and answer questions. That's what they do. That's kind of the nature of being a minister, yet somehow there's a section in this legislation that requires it.

It talks about establishing "panels or committees the Minister considers necessary." I believe that all ministers can do this without a piece of legislation being required.

And it talks about: "The Minister may . . . establish an investor tax credit program or a capital investment tax program" to introduce in the Legislature. Well, the government has beat themselves to the punch. We didn't do it. Congratulations; you beat yourself to the punch by introducing those things in the budget before introducing them in Bill 1, so that's already done.

Clearly, we're hard pressed in the House to think of any way, big or small, good or bad, old or new, that this will change Alberta should the Legislative Assembly pass this bill. It truly is a Seinfeld bill, a bill about nothing.

Happily, it does actually create one job, the one job that the government can lay claim to, the job of the minister of job creation. We're glad to have him. He's an hon. member of this Assembly, and I'm sure that he's going to do the best that he can in the role that he's been assigned. But in his comments, interestingly enough, when the minister stood up himself, Mr. Speaker, to defend and promote his very own Bill 1 – let me remind you; that's the same number as the jobs created, by the way – the minister actually talked very little about his bill. That's what I find really amazing. He talked mostly about the budget, which pre-empts Bill 1 in several ways. What this Bill 1 says that the minister can do has already been done in the budget, or at least the government has already put it on the table to do it in the budget, with the government thereby scooping itself.

The minister went down different paths, all of which are interesting. He talked about reckless and extreme cuts to jobs. I know that the minister was talking about reckless and extreme cuts to jobs in the public sector. What I wish he would spend more time thinking about is the government's policies, that they've put in place since they've been in government, which actually have created reckless and extreme cuts to jobs in the private sector.

The minister talked about turning back the clock. Well, Mr. Speaker, those reckless and extreme job cuts in the private sector are really going a long ways towards turning back the clock to before Alberta was an energy superpower, before Alberta had the best economy in Canada, before Alberta had one of the best qualities of life in the free world, before Alberta had one of the best education systems in the world. The minister, I would suggest, should be more careful about the words he uses because they may echo back in a very, very unfortunate way, particularly as it pertains to this bill.

"Stable jobs," he said. "Renewed investments." I'm wondering how much investment will be renewed in the coal industry under this government's policies. We already know that there have been tens of billions of jobs that have left Alberta in the oil and gas industry under this government's policies. So, yeah, we do need renewed investment. One of the biggest reasons that we need renewed investment is because the current government's policies have driven the investment that we used to take for granted out the door as fast as they possibly could. Yes, indeed, we do need renewed investment. That's a good thing. It's unfortunate that one of the big reasons is the current government's policies.

The minister talked in his opening remarks about the small-business landscape and healthy small businesses. Well, I tabled in the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce document talking about how the government's jobs plan, the budget, actually makes it harder to create jobs in Alberta, more expensive and less profitable for small business.

On top of that, businesses across this province, the restaurants' association, many chambers of commerce, and business groups have almost universally – not universally; you will find one or two people who disagree. But for the most part they're dead set against this government's minimum wage policy to artificially drive up the minimum wage to $15 an hour in a very accelerated way, killing jobs. We hear many, many examples where small businesses have actually had to lay off people that were making minimum wage because now they can only afford three instead of four or two instead of three. This is before the government has gone all the way to $15, so this is only the beginning of the harm from the poor policies that are negatively affecting small business, Mr. Speaker.

The whole point – the whole point – of a job-creating ministry, one would think, is to create jobs. You know what, Mr. Speaker? I'm going to take a positive tone here for a minute and say: I'm sure that along the way this ministry will create some jobs.

An Hon. Member: One.

Mr. McIver: So far it's created one.

But the problem is, Mr. Speaker, that the number of jobs that this ministry and this minister – and I know that he will apply himself to creating jobs. The problem is that the policies that his government has put in place have already killed and taken away and reduced and driven out so many jobs that he's not starting at zero and working up; he's starting at about minus 20,000 to 30,000 and working up and hoping to get to zero. And because I love Alberta and because I know the minister loves Alberta, I'm sure that he and I both wish that he can succeed in replacing all of the jobs that the policies of the current government have driven out and caused to go away and the hiring that this government's policies have stopped and the jobs that will never happen now because of the multibillions of dollars of investment that have been driven out due to uncertainty in the royalty revenues and the threats to turn the Energy Regulator upside down and the corporate tax increases and the income tax. I'm out of breath talking about the bad policies that this government has put into place and how much they truly, truly harm business and jobs.

We do wish the minister well in being able to repair all that damage. I honestly think that despite his best efforts, he won't be able to. But I will give him credit, for I'm sure the people of Alberta will get the minister's best efforts. Unfortunately, he's hobbled by the government that he belongs to and the policies that have put him so far below zero before he even starts that he has a Herculean task just to try to get back to breaking even, an unenviable task. I would say that in terms of turning back the clock, I think there are a lot of Albertans that would like to turn back the clock to when there was a different government here, when unemployment was well below 5 per cent, a rate that people considered full employment, when our biggest problem was not helping the people in Alberta that were already here to get to work. The problem was getting more people in for all of the jobs that didn't have enough people to fill them. There's a place that Albertans would like to turn the clock back to.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair, because you know what? A part of this is because of the lower energy prices, and we won't blame the government for that because that is not their fault. Unfortunately, everything that has happened since – not everything but the vast majority of policy changes that have happened since are the government's fault, and it's making a bad situation worse as it continues.

So as I look through this bill, Mr. Speaker, I look for ways that this is going to make it better, and there are some nice words here: "increase access to capital," "help businesses to grow and succeed." Well, if the government had taken the last 11 months off instead of raising corporate taxes and threatening to turn upside down the Energy Regulator – and the government tries to get it right, I think. I remember I was in the room where they announced their royalty review, where they were going to leave royalties where they are despite the fact that the Premier and the many ministers on the front bench of the government were saying for years that Albertans were not getting their fair share and that the royalties needed to go up and that all of that was going to help. Then after some study with some smart people – and there's one thing that the government did right. They had a pretty smart panel talk about the royalty review. Good work. That panel actually advised the government not to raise royalties. That also was good work, and I would congratulate the government on that.

The problem is that they can't stand success. On the very same day that they announced they weren't going to raise the royalties, they added the words "right now," which, of course, sends a shiver through the spine of anybody considering investing in Alberta's energy sector. One would hope – at least, I was hoping, and I know lots of people in the energy industry energy that were hoping – that the Finance minister or the Premier of the day would have issued a clarification of their remarks by saying: "No, no. We've done our work. This is where it's going to stay. We feel confident this is the right decision, so don't be afraid to invest here." But, no. That clarification never occurred.

To double down on that lack of clarification in the jobs plan, that the minister in his introduction to the bill referenced several times, there is a section where it actually uses the phrase – wait for it – modernize the royalties. Modernize. Now, what does modernize mean, Mr. Speaker? There are 87 members of this House, and 87 of us may all have a slightly different definition of what modernize means. Here's what I'm afraid that it means, and here's what I'm afraid it will mean for many people that would invest their money in Alberta. When the energy prices go up, the royalties will go up, so even if you do put your money at risk to create jobs, to make an investment, to extract Alberta's resources, to create tax revenue, to build roads, schools, hospitals, seniors' housing, and to provide social services, you will be rewarded with having whatever profit you might be able to earn after taking all that risk – you will be rewarded by this government modernizing the royalty regime. In other words, we're going to let you just barely survive until you make money, and then we're going to take that away from you, too. That's what I fear modernizing the royalty regime means.

Mr. Speaker, that takes us back to the title of the bill, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. Of course, we know Alberta's economy can always be diversified. Every jurisdiction in the world's economy can be more diversified. We also know that Alberta's economy has become very much more diversified over the last few years. In fact, our party tabled a document that showed that I think in 1984 Alberta's gross GDP was worth about $64 billion, and 30 years later Alberta's gross domestic product was worth north of $600 billion, about a sixfold increase over 30 years.

Now, you say: okay; well, that's good, but that doesn't indicate the economy has been diversified. If that was the only information we had, I would agree with that, except that the very same piece of paper indicates that the oil and gas sector back in 1984 accounted for 36 per cent of Alberta's economy, and 30 years later it dropped down to 25 per cent of Alberta's economy. So what does that mean, Mr. Speaker? That means that Alberta's economy has been severely diversified during those 30 years. Could it be diversified more? Absolutely. Should we join with the government in looking for ways to diversify it more now? Absolutely. And we will.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) for the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to refer to the member's comment about the Chambers of Commerce. Now, I had a little experience with the chamber of commerce in my community of Lethbridge. When the minimum wage came out, they talked about how much it was going to cost. In fact, the chair of the chamber of commerce was a little aggressive with me about what was happening to a particular business in Lethbridge because of the increase in the minimum wage. I thought I should do some follow-up because I want to support things that are going to move the economy forward, not hold it back.

I was familiar with the business, and I followed up. The chair of the chamber of commerce had told me that it was going to cost $86,000 for this business in one year because of this increase. Okay. So $86,000 is 86,000 hours since there's an increase of $1. I went out, and I thought: I need to find out how many employees are there. To get to 86,000, you'd need about 41 full-time employees working 40 hours a week, and that was not the case. In fact, I got the correct figures and went back to the chamber of commerce, and she said: no, no, no; I think that was over the next few years. I said: but you told me it was over one year.

I think when we're talking about any improvement to our economy, everybody needs to be onboard, in particular the Chambers of Commerce, because we're trying to move our economy forward at a time where the bottom has dropped out of the price of oil, and that was the main pillar of our economy for many, many, many years.

My question to you is: what has the Chambers of Commerce said to you about this?

9:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. member for that question and applaud her for the work she just said that she did to investigate a claim that somebody made. I think she deserves credit for making that effort, and she certainly has my applause.

I think what she's talking about is that when it comes to these things, we need to try to do our best to get our facts straight, and I think the hon. member does a good job of pointing that out. I thank the hon. member for that. I know the hon. member is sincere, and I know that she faces people in Lethbridge and takes the heat because she and I were at a mayors and reeves meeting a couple of weeks ago, and she took considerable heat when they complained that nobody from the government's front bench would return the calls from mayors and reeves. She said that she would get to the bottom of it, and based on the diligence that she indicated that she placed on this other issue this morning, I have no doubt that any ministers that the mayors and reeves of southern Alberta are waiting to hear from, that hon. member will be on them like crazy to make sure that they get them those answers. I have tremendous faith that the hon. member will do that.

But it does not solve the problem. The hon. member asked the question: so what does the Chambers of Commerce say? What I hear from chambers of commerce – and, again for the hon. member, I tabled a letter in the House yesterday from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce talking about how the jobs plan is actually going to make it worse for creating jobs instead of better. What I hear from chambers of commerce is that the artificial increase to the minimum wage will drive up costs at an unnaturally fast pace, cause small businesses to have price increases. If those price increases put the small businesses at risk of having their sales volume go down, this means they'll need fewer staff to fill fewer orders caused by having a price increase. That's what I've heard. That's the risk.

Listen. I've never doubted that the government has the best interests of people in mind, but the fact is that even for those people on minimum wage, their money will not go as far due to the price increases at those places caused by the minimum wage. So there's the dichotomy, Mr. Speaker. It's not as simple as ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to have the introduction of a visitor today. Is there agreement on that?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to have run into Calgary ward 2 city councillor, Joe Magliocca, and his communications and community liaison, Greg Hartzler, on the steps of the Legislature this morning as we walked in. Mr. Magliocca, Mr. Hartzler, and I had a nice discussion and a tour of the Legislative Assembly. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Joe Magliocca and Greg Hartzler, and I would ask the members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to finally be able to rise today and speak to numerous concerns that I have about this government's Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. My main concerns are that the bill does neither of these things and that, frankly, this government's credibility on job creation is deeply amiss. This bill, allegedly pertaining to job creation, has withered on the Order Paper for over a month. The last shiny job creation program this NDP government introduced languished in the twilight zone for about four months, and that's after it was supposed to be rolled out. Nine other government bills that came after this have curiously taken greater precedence where this government's priorities are concerned.

In the autumn budget this government was adamant that its previous jobs plan would somehow create 27,000 jobs at a cost of $178 million over two years. There was never any evidence to back this up, nor were there any jobs created. Well, that's not true. There was one job created. But the government doubled down. The previous labour minister had this to say about the failed job scheme. Quote, certainly, I think that a lot of businesses are really excited about this and that it will help. End quote. The other day I heard the minister say, and I'm paraphrasing: after consulting with businesses and hearing that this plan wasn't going to work, we decided to pivot. Translated: we didn't do a proper economic impact study, so after the fact we are realizing our folly.

What were businesses really saying? The Calgary Chamber of commerce said this:

... no definitive answer as to whether these types of grants actually incent hiring and encourage job creation. In fact, some studies indicate that these incentives simply shuffle the workforce around, encouraging the laying-off of some employees, and the rehiring of new employees.

That failed job scheme was the only job-creation component of the last budget, and the Finance minister defended it saying, quote: it's good for business; it's good for the people who perhaps otherwise could have been left out. End quote.

As we all know, the government recently conceded that it wouldn't work. Now at a $250 million price tag over two years they're claiming 100,000 jobs will be created with their new budget's job plan. Again, there's no evidence that the alleged job-creation initiative in the budget will do any such thing. When it comes to job creation, the sad reality is that throughout one whole year in office this government has failed to create a single job and has failed Albertans who are struggling.

Bill 1 itself is an illusion of a bill, the appearance of a government doing something on job creation in a suffering economy without actually doing anything specific. I want to preface further comments on this bill by noting the gravity of the situation before I continue, a situation that this legislation addresses so inadequately. As other members have quoted in this place, the average unemployment rate in February was 7.9 per cent, a 20-year high, Mr. Speaker. Calgary, often deemed western Canada's economic hub, had an unemployment rate of 8.4 per cent in February, higher than most cities in Atlantic Canada.

The government's own budget predicts that this year Alberta will average an unemployment rate of 8 per cent. That's an increase, Mr. Speaker, in unemployment. Let's do some quick math here. Quick question: how can you expect to add 100,000 jobs when your own budget predicts increased unemployment? Quite frankly, the numbers don't add up.

Most damning is that in the last quarter of 2015 more people left Alberta than actually came here. And recently Statistics Canada released a survey of employment, payroll, and hours which showed the largest earnings drop in 20 years between January 2015 and January 2016. The average Albertan's weekly wage, for those fortunate to have been spared from the mass firings thus far, has declined by over 4 per cent. Week after week, more news of mass layoffs. The job situation is only getting worse, and Bill 1 merely adds insult to injury.

Frankly, given the economic climate, it's very distressing to see the vacuous nature of Bill 1. It is for all intents and purposes redundant in its current form. It does nothing but reinforce that in the worst economy in a generation, Albertans shouldn't look to this government for positive solutions.

Bill 1 allegedly gives the minister the ability to create programs and bring in regulations to implement said programs, which any minister can already do within their existing powers. I would direct members to review section 8 of the Government Organization Act. It reads:

8(1) A Minister may establish or operate any programs and services the Minister considers desirable in order to carry out matters under the Minister's administration.

(2) A Minister may institute inquiries into and collect information and statistics relating to any matter under the Minister's administration.

So any argument that this bill is enabling framework legislation is just a parody. Instead of wasting everyone's time with this sham of a bill, it remains entirely unclear why the government isn't actually acting on something specific for job creation. You would think that Albertans deserve at least that from this government. Why not instead take the time to evaluate what provincial government barriers are currently impeding job creation in this province and act to solve them?

Perhaps this all derives from a growing pains problem. It has, after all, not been one year since this government was elected. Perhaps the new government was unaware that a mere mandate letter from the Premier to the minister could have sufficed instead of this aimless bill. We know that the Premier didn't formally issue mandate letters to her ministers. Perhaps this legislation was a remedy to that in this case. If so, I do hope that this session sees something more productive than a series of legislative items outlining what ministers should do.

Now, I would think that a great deal of members on the government benches are embarrassed by the paltry piece of legislation known as Bill 1. If those members' constituency offices are hearing concerns from Albertans about the economic situation with the same frequency as my office, then, yes, those members should be embarrassed by this legislation. The government can save itself and its members a great deal of embarrassment by tabling whatever economic assessment or advice they received, whether from their own officials or outside groups that asked for this piece of legislation.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business dismissed this bill as the mere skeleton of a job-creation framework, a damning indictment. If the government has an assessment from another group that looks at this bill otherwise, they should probably make that public somewhere. Between this paltry excuse for action on job creation and this same government's failed job incentive scheme, it's clear that they need to start going elsewhere for advice.

The sorry state of jobs in the economy right now is not a mere set of talking points that the Premier's issue-management staff needs to periodically update. It's a very real problem, Mr. Speaker, that threatens the future of this province and the livelihoods of thousands and thousands of Albertans and their families, our children, and our grandchildren. There is a real dark side to the continued decline of Alberta's employment rate. A growing unemployment rate means that there are families who have been making ends meet by reaching into their savings month after month. It means that there are families worried about how to make their next mortgage payment at the end of the month because there is no new job in sight. When it comes to specifics about this job for a month, this government only offered that Albertans should wait for the budget for details. At the end of the day it's just not enough for those who need it the most.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give you an example of someone in my riding. He called me up, distressed, concerned about what was going on. He said: I'm 51 years old, and I've worked in the oil patch most of my life. He said: the price of oil has tanked. We've seen this before, but he said: Mr. Hunter, we have seen that there is a problem that is a lot more than the issue of low oil, and I want to give you an example of that. He said: when you get laid off in the oil patch, I would come back into my rural community; I have lots of friends, neighbours, and they're always looking for an extra hand. But he said: because of Bill 6, I can't even find a job in the rural community; I can't even find a job so that I can feed my family in this downturn in this economy. What happens is that now the people, his neighbours, who would normally hire him on a part-time job don't want to hire him because they don't want to have the full weight of WCB and OH and S come down on them. They won't hire him.

This is fully on the government's shoulders. This man, who wants to provide a decent living for his family to provide for their needs, the dignity that he deserves as a provider for his family: he's been robbed of that, Mr. Speaker. Quite frankly, this government is doing nothing to help him.

Aside from being a cynical communications opportunity, this bill does nothing for Albertans most adversely affected by the rapid economic decline. This bill as presented looks to be a product of the most well-meaning student asking: why don't we just legislate job creation? Again, I invite the government to table whatever document or advice they received that said that this bill is what the economic situation so desperately needs. I would love to see this information. I would love to be able to vet this information. We haven't seen anything that would help us understand where the government is coming up with these numbers.

What this government actually needs to be doing is removing barriers to job creation in this province. It also needs to make sure that it instills confidence. Business confidence, small-business confidence, is at an all-time low, Mr. Speaker. This is in part due to low oil prices, but it is also in large measure a result of an NDP government. Businesses do not believe the NDP government will have their backs. That is why this government needs to assure small businesses that they do have their backs. That includes both the barriers they have put up and the barriers their predecessors have put up throughout the previous decades.

Recently KPMG released the results of their 2016 competitive alternative study, which showed that Calgary was ranked dead last for business competitiveness in Canada. Second last in Canada was Edmonton. Our two largest cities, once seen as the economic hub of the west, are now ranked dead last for competitiveness. Quebec City, Charlottetown, Gatineau, Winnipeg all ranked higher than cities in Alberta. It seems surreal to say that, to see how far Alberta has fallen in recent years, especially now.

There are solutions, thankfully. Last month our caucus put forward 12 solid recommendations to help stop the devastating bleeding of jobs in Alberta's economy. We're glad to see that this government was willing to implement at least one of them. These are common-sense solutions that the government can implement. We recommend that they take a look at the other 11. These would reduce regulatory red tape and lift the burden off small businesses so that hiring new workers is not such a burdensome task in this economy. There are common-sense recommendations there, too, like utilizing federal training funds and programs more efficiently. That wouldn't cost the government a penny.

There's a lot that this government could be doing. It's a shame that they've opted to do nothing but put forward Bill 1 instead. Albertans shouldn't have to go elsewhere to find jobs. They shouldn't be asked to go to B.C. They shouldn't be asked to go on EI to be able to make ends meet. They should have the dignity of being able to provide for their families because of a robust economy. This can be done. We admonish the government to go forward with proper, well-studied, well-vetted ideas rather than their idealistic ideas. If this government has any sense of priorities . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Drever: Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 1.
[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10 Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. Hanson]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak on Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. This is a really interesting combination of changes that the government is attempting to make in legislation. There are several pieces of it that I think are important for me to touch on in my remarks this morning.

10:00

The government is discontinuing the Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, which is an important piece but probably one of the smaller pieces, one of the ones that will probably affect the fewest Albertans compared to some of the other changes to the legislation.

It appears that the government is going to align Alberta's personal income tax rate on taxable dividends with federal regulations. That section by itself, lowering the personal income tax, is a good thing.

Also, it gives some clarification about who is a distributor of fuel taxes, one who does so in Alberta, and it adds the Deputy Solicitor General to the list of individuals to be provided notice if a party wishes a judicial review of an authorization to the minister to issue a certificate stating an amount owed in fuel taxes, penalties, interest, and other amounts. That would be section 6 of the act.

It allows Alberta corporations to use different currencies to prepare and file reports, thus, hopefully, reducing administrative costs. That's another good piece, so I would compliment the government on that particular section of this legislation.

But, Mr. Speaker, it all pales – it all pales – when one considers the biggest and most negative piece of this legislation. It's all a detail when you consider that the government is going to remove the GDP-linked debt ceiling in section 5, the ceiling in the budget that the government laid on the table very few days ago, less than a week ago, that debt limit. If you are to believe the government's documents – and Albertans ought to be able to believe the government's documents – they say that the debt ceiling would not be breached in the next three years. Yet today, three years ahead of the schedule that the government set itself and laid on the table less than a week ago, the government has said that it's going to take the cap off that debt ceiling, and if this legislation passes, Bill 10, the sky for Alberta debt truly will become the limit.

In fact, the only thing that might keep this government from reaching the sky with the debt is the world's bankers because I don't see any indication that anybody on the government's front bench or the government caucus as a whole is willing to pull on the reins to even slow down this train that's going to run over the future of Alberta children and grandchildren because they will be paying debt that this government accumulates for decades and decades.

Mr. Bilous: Pretty graphic way to put it.

Mr. McIver: The minister, the jobs minister, just chirped to me that that was an extreme description, and it is an extreme description. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it's also accurate, and that's the painful part. You know what? Sometimes it can be political business to embellish what's going on a little bit for your side of the political argument. I would suggest that many of us have been guilty of that on all sides of the House from time to time . . .

Mr. Cooper: Including them.

Mr. McIver: . . . including the government side, including the opposition side, including our side. But in this particular case no embellishment is required, Mr. Speaker. The government has said that they're going to take Albertans down a road where we're going to find ourselves three years from now in almost $60 billion in debt. That's on the backs of 4.3 to 4.4 million Albertans. If you work out the debt that every child, every adult, every person in Alberta, every senior citizen is going to be responsible for, it's a number much bigger than it ought to be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here's the thing . . .

An Hon. Member: You're making me uncomfortable, asking him to . . .

Mr. McIver: No. I could do the calculations. I just don't have a calculator in front of me, and it's always a bad idea, hon. member, to give numbers in the House if they're not going to be accurate, so I choose not to do that. That's something the government could probably take a lesson from.

Mr. Speaker, here's the thing. The government has said themselves that they're not going to breach the 15 per cent GDP debt limit, which is way too high in the first place, but they're still going to breach it in three years, and now they need to take that limit off this year. It does lead to: what does the government actually expect to happen? Do they have spending plans way beyond what they've actually disclosed so far in their budget legislation and other legislation? Or is the government recognizing that their policies are going to damage Alberta's economy so much that the GDP is going to shrink that much, that they're going to breach the debt ceiling not because they borrow more but because they shrink the economy so small? There is a problem. To shrink the economy small enough that the government would be afraid of breaching that 15 per cent GDP is a very, very damning indictment of what the government believes is the harm that they could do to this economy.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? I don't know which it is. I don't know. Maybe they think they're going to shrink the economy and they're going to borrow a lot more than they've said because there's room in this for both of those things to be the government's inspiration to take the ceiling off the debt.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans can't live their lives like this. They can't go out and say: we are going to keep using our credit card, and we are going to ignore those pesky bills that come every month because we don't really like opening those envelopes, and we surely don't like paying the piper. Albertans know that if they were to do that, there are bankers that would create some common sense if we don't apply some ourselves, and at some point – it'll take a little longer because, as this government likes to say, they have the strongest balance sheet in the country after the previous government. You're welcome. That previous government, to be clear, was not perfect, but the government acknowledges on a regular basis what a strong balance sheet they inherited from that imperfect previous government.

Mr. Speaker, they are taking their strong balance sheet that they're now in control of down a very rocky road and a path to a very negative future. Here's the thing. We don't know whether they're doing this because they plan to spend way more than they've disclosed or whether they think the economy is going to get way worse than they've admitted. But what we do know – again, I don't need to embellish this at all – is that to just pay the annual interest at the end of three years will be about $2 billion a year.

Now, Mr. Speaker, $2 billion will buy a lot of things every year. Our government came under some criticism, rightly so, for not having the Calgary cancer centre built yet. It's something we had planned. We hadn't got it done yet. This government says that they're going to do it, but here's the interesting thing. At the end of the three years, when this government is far enough in debt that the interest payments are $2 billion a year, they won't have built the cancer centre. They say that it won't be open till 2024, yet Albertans will pay so much interest every single year that you could build one and a half cancer centres on that interest every single year, just for an example.

They like to brag about, you know, building $34 billion of infrastructure, and you know what, Mr. Speaker? Building infrastructure is a good idea, so I'll compliment the government on that. But it's a good idea if you have a plan to pay back the money that you're spending to build the infrastructure, and in this area the government falls not a little short; they fall a hundred per cent short because they have zero per cent of a plan to pay it back – zero per cent of a plan to pay it back – and that's in their documents. You can't make this stuff up.

As they say, sometimes this stuff writes itself. Only with this stuff we were helped because this stuff was written by the government, and they actually put in black and white that they're going to take the people of Alberta into debt about $60 billion a year with $2 billion-a-year interest payments with zero per cent of a plan to pay it back.

So $2 billion: that's not one year, Mr. Speaker; that's every year. What will $2 billion a year buy? I don't know. It could buy one and a half cancer centres every year. It could buy, depending on the size of the school, 50 to 100 schools every year. It could buy enough interchanges to solve a lot of traffic problems around this province. It could probably, if not in the first year, house every homeless person in Alberta every year or every second year and provide housing for them. The $2 billion a year can make a big difference, and that's $2 billion a year that this government is going to saddle Albertans with. You know what? The government might even be able to make an argument that Albertans could swallow if they said: it's just for a little while because we have a plan to pay it back over 10 or 20 years, and it's all going to be okay, Alberta.

Mr. Rodney: Do they have that?

Mr. McIver: They don't have that plan. They don't have any plan.

Mr. Cooper: One job and no plan.

Mr. McIver: One job and no plan. That is a huge problem and one that I can't get past, Mr. Speaker. You know, I pointed out two or three parts of this that actually could be good things in this legislation, and then the government dropped this big, ugly section of legislation that is so harmful for the future of Alberta, so harmful for all of our children and all of our grandchildren, so harmful for the successful future of Alberta that you just can't get past it. What I'm hearing from Albertans that are understanding and hearing what's in this government's budget is that they can't get past it. They are afraid, and that's why they say: what can you do to move this government out because we can't afford what they're going to leave us behind?

Unfortunately, one must vote carefully because when they elect us, on all sides of the House, we're here for four years unless we make a mistake and call an election a year early. I thought I would throw that in before somebody else does. But you are, generally speaking, stuck with your Member of the Legislative Assembly for four years, whether they do a good job or a bad one. So is the case for all 87 of us.

Unfortunately, what this government is telegraphing by taking the cap off the debt ceiling is that when they get the next chance to go to the polls and make a decision that is in their best interest, they will already be under water by almost $60 billion. They will already be on the hook for $2 billion of interest payments that do not even take a piece off the debt that's already there. They'll be paying, again, enough interest every year to build one and a half cancer centres, 50 to 100 schools, a whole bunch of interchanges, a countless number of seniors' housing, a countless amount of support for those that might need care for mental illness or health or addictions or things that this government says that they care about. They're hobbling Alberta's ability to give that care by not going about the things that they want to do in a careful way.

Unfortunately, the story's even that bad when you give the government full credit. Building some of the infrastructure that they say they're going to build is probably a good thing. Building, you know, the schools, the roads, the seniors' housing, the hospitals that they talked about: this is a good thing. But at the end of the three years we won't have a cancer centre in Calgary yet, but we will have a $2 billion interest payment every year that would more than build that cancer centre. We will have a lot of new schools, and that's a good thing because I'm not sure after that point how many we're going to be able to afford to build.

What's really scary, Mr. Speaker, is the government keeps talking about how much better the debt situation in Alberta is than compared to places like Ontario, as if they're comfortable taking us up to those levels.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the hon. member? Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was definitely interested, in listening to the hon. member's discussion, in his thoughts on Bill 10. I was struck by this sense that investing in our infrastructure is just money out of the budget without really recognizing that those are Albertan jobs that we're creating by investing in that infrastructure. I was wondering – and I'm sincerely hoping that I get a good answer on this – can the hon. member tell me which Albertan jobs he would not create if he was in government?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually grateful for the question, the question about creating jobs from infrastructure. I think what I said here just a second ago – so I don't have any trouble repeating it – is that building infrastructure can be a good thing as long as you have a plan to pay the money back. So I would say to the hon. member that I acknowledge that building infrastructure will create some jobs, and that is a good thing.

What I'm afraid of is that the jobs that will be created will come to a grinding halt sometime between five and 10 years from now, when the money runs out, when the government has borrowed on Albertans' credit card to the limit so that they can't borrow any more and the interest payments are not palatable to Albertans.

Frankly, this is what the construction industry is worried about, too, they tell me. They're happy to have those jobs created, building roads and infrastructure that the government is going to do. They are, so the government can feel good about that. What they should feel a lot less good about, to the hon. member, is that the industry is afraid that there's going to be no work for a few years, five or 10 years from now, when the government finds itself in such a deep debt hole.

Again, we're only talking about three years from now, when there's a $2 billion a year interest payment. At that point that will be $2 billion a year less in construction jobs. Now that this government has taken the limit off, how many jobs will it cost Alberta when they raise that to $3 billion and $4 billion? There's the problem, Mr. Speaker.

If the government actually said, "Okay; we're going to borrow our brains out; we think we need to catch up on some things, and here's our plan to pay it back, and we think we're being responsible," then they might be able to sell that to people that care about money. But they're not saying that. They're saying: let's take the lid off how much we borrow, let's have no plan to pay it back, and let's pretend this can go on forever. See, that's when jobs get cut.

That is an NDP legacy in other provinces. Bob Rae comes to mind, who spent his brains out in Ontario. I grew up in Ontario. I have friends that live there, and I have friends that work in the public sector there. For the first year and a half that the NDP government was there, they said: "This is great. We get everything we want. There's no problem, and life is good." Then they were presented with Rae days. At first they said: "Oh, great. Every Friday off or every second Friday off. Isn't this great?" Then they said: "Wait a minute. We don't get paid for that Friday, so now my income just dropped by 10 per cent. But wait a minute. I've got a car payment and a mortgage and kids to put in sports and kids to put in dance lessons and piano lessons, and now I don't have enough money to pay for that." So now living in an NDP world isn't nearly as much fun as it was 18 months ago.

That, Mr. Speaker, is where this government is taking Alberta. It may take a little longer than Ontario simply because the balance sheet this government started with was a lot better than the NDP government started with, probably, in Ontario at the time. My family still lives there, and many people there still say that the economy has never really recovered in Ontario since they had an NDP government. It never really has fully recovered and may never fully recover.

That is what we need to try to avoid in Alberta. That is why I appeal to the government to save future jobs. Yes, if you spend your brains out in years 1, 2, and 3, there will be people working, spending that money, but those people are going to need a job in years 4, 5, 6, and 11, 12, and 13. When they don't need a job anymore, their kids will need a job and their grandkids will need a job. Under this government's fiscal plan there will be a lot fewer jobs to go around.

Even for the jobs the government doesn't create, with the tax burden on businesses they will be less competitive. Most of the world's economy is international . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will start by talking about the Alberta centennial education savings plan. You know, with respect to the Member for Calgary-Hays saying that it's not terribly widely used, it is certainly used. We have been fortunate to take advantage of that program as we save for our daughters' education, and I would suggest that many Albertans do take advantage of that.

It's unfortunate to see that that plan is ending. It seems to have come without warning that that's gone. It sort of comes as a surprise to me that that's no longer something Albertans can avail themselves of, and that it's retroactive back to March 31 of 2015 is also troubling. I know that will come as a surprise to many. It's that death-by-a-thousand-cuts problem. In and of itself it's not the most egregious thing this government has ever done, but it's certainly a big concern and something, I know, that parents will have a concern about.

We know that education, in particular postsecondary education, is a real key to economic diversification in this province. Every barrier that can be reduced, every opportunity for parents to save for their children's education is important, so I think it's noteworthy that that is now no longer something the government of Alberta will provide as an incentive and an encouragement to parents to save for their children's education.

But I will spend most of my time talking about the debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent. This is something, I know you will all recall, that I've asked about many times in this House because I have a real concern about the impact of future credit-rating downgrades. When we have a government that is willing to borrow such tremendous amounts of money, the impact of a downgrade, even a couple of basis points of increased interest cost, has a tremendous impact on our ability to fund ongoing operations of this government.

In fact, it won't likely be this government that will be funding those ongoing operations, but it will be future governments having to do that and deal with that. It really will tie our hands and constrain our ability to operate the government going forward because so much money will be taken up by debt service. When you have a cap and then remove the cap, it sends the wrong signal to the very credit-rating agencies that determine how much we in Alberta will be paying for interest on the debt.

This also seems to me to be the easy choice. Instead of putting in limits, it's just, well – you know what? – the sense that money is infinite. "We'll just borrow all the money that we need and not worry about it. At some point down the road we'll be able to . . ." We don't even think about how we're going to pay it back. It's like the person that moves out of the house for the first time and doesn't realize that they need to pay back the credit card, that at some point that interest payment starts to catch up to you. But it's actually worse than that because in this scenario it's not really even their credit card. It's Albertans' credit card. It's not even mom and dad's credit card. It is your and our and all Albertans' children's credit card that you're borrowing this money on.

Now, I want to be very clear. I don't have any problem – in fact, I'm encouraged by it – with borrowing money responsibly for capital. Capital investment leaves us with an asset. It has ongoing, enduring value to Albertans. It creates jobs in a very difficult economic time. I have no trouble with that whatsoever. To me, that is responsible borrowing, akin to taking out a mortgage on a home. That's something Albertans do every day.

But when you're borrowing money on your credit card at such a huge rate – it's not a few hundred million dollars. It's not even a couple of billion dollars. We're talking $4 billion, $5 billion, $6 billion annually in operating borrowing. That's a huge number. A huge number. More than 10 per cent of the entire budget will be borrowed just for day-to-day operations. That's why a debt-to-GDP cap of 15 per cent is so important.

You know, what's equally troubling is the number of different plans this government has presented through the campaign and through their time as government to balance the budget. Their first plan in the campaign was to balance in 2017. They realized there was an error in their document – it happens – and then it went to 2018. Then in the fall of 2015 it was 2019. [interjection] You've got it. You know what their fourth plan is? The fourth plan is no plan at all: 2024. What in the world could happen between now and 2024? Well, everything can happen. [interjections] So forecasting out that far is no plan at all, which is why it's so important to have debt-to-GDP caps such as we had.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's stay focused.

Mr. Clark: I'm going to quote the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board from October 29, 2015. That's 174 days ago, not quite six months. He said that this sets firm limits on borrowing and spending growth. This is a key part of our overall fiscal plan and, coupled with the budget and strategic plan presented earlier this week, represents the principles upon which our government will operate.

That sounds like a good idea. Let's have some principles. How long do those principles last? Well, until they're not convenient anymore. What other principles are we going to abandon? What other constraints are we going to have on spending?

Now, I want to be really clear that I'm not advocating for massive cuts to the public service. Alberta's public servants do a tremendous service to the people of Alberta. They're an important part of what drives tremendous quality of life in this province. But surely to goodness we can do better. Surely we can find some efficiencies within the public service. Surely we can find ways of doing more with less, because I can tell you, based on the conversations I've had with my constituents and with Albertans all around the province, so many Albertans are hurting right now. So many people have lost their jobs. So many people have taken wage rollbacks, are working shortened weeks just so they can pay the bills, and Albertans continue to give money to charity, to donate to food banks, to help their neighbours. All around this province people are doing more with less.

The only place where there isn't a sense of scarcity is within the provincial government. That doesn't mean we need to hack and slash and cut and fire nurses and teachers. It means we need to work with Alberta's tremendous public servants and find a way of doing more with less, to create a sense of urgency. There is no sense of urgency. There is no sense of scarcity, that anything is wrong. To the previous member's comments, we're going to fall off a cliff at some point. At some point this all comes home to roost, and this government may find that that's sooner than they think.

Now, I'd like to quote further from our friend the hon. Minister of Finance as he introduced Bill 4 last session. "The debt cap provides sufficient flexibility to the government as it implements its financial plan while maintaining a manageable limit on the amount of debt government can take on." For your information, Madam Speaker, two of three credit-rating agencies that rate the province report net debt to GDP as a measure of their credit reports. The Dominion Bond Rating Service states that a triple-A rated province should have a debt-to-GDP ratio of less than 15 percent. I agree.

I have tremendous respect for the Minister of Finance – I really do – but he was right when he said that back in October 2015. So why all of a sudden, when it's no longer convenient, do we simply remove the cap? Why not put in a new cap? What is the logical limit? This will take Alberta far beyond our provincial neighbour in Saskatchewan in terms of debt to GDP.

This government loves to talk about how wonderful Alberta's balance sheet is, and it is. We do have a strong balance sheet. We're very fortunate in that. Some of it's good luck, and some of it was reasonable management – mostly good luck – but regardless of why, it's important that we maintain that and not just for some principle or some high-minded idea. From a dollars-and-cents, bottom-line perspective, it really matters because it costs us more, and that money goes out purely to debt service. Debt service is interest that goes to the banks instead of going to Albertans. That's a significant cost.

We need a limit of some kind. If you can't hit 15, why not 17? Why not 20? Pick a number. This will take us beyond our neighbours in Saskatchewan, so Alberta will no longer have the strongest balance sheet in Canada, and the speed at which that's happened is breathtaking. We hear repeatedly that it's not the government's fault that oil prices dropped. It's not. It's not, but there are things this government can and should do to keep a lid on how bad things get.

I'm going to end with one final quote from the Premier from November 3, 2015. In response to a question I asked about this very topic, she said:

It's very important to understand that this government is in the position of having the lowest debt to GDP of any province in the country now and also five years from now, and the best way to make sure we stay that way is to pass our legislation that this minister will be introducing.

She was speaking of Bill 4.

What's changed? What has changed so dramatically in the last six months that all of a sudden this government needs to exceed this 15 per cent debt-to-GDP cap, that both the Minister of Finance and the Premier have promoted as being so key to their overall economic agenda? What has changed so radically? Things haven't changed that much. This government needs to understand the fiscal situation that we're in, and it's not a great situation to be in. There's no question. It's incredibly challenging. But it's important that you step up and find ways of doing more with less, of putting rules in place that you choose to follow. If you're not going to have a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP cap, what are you going to have?

The Premier herself has said that today and five years from now we're going to have the lowest debt to GDP in Canada. Well, that's not true as of right now. Our friends in Saskatchewan have a lower debt to GDP. How high is this going to go? Where's the limit? What's the ceiling? Are we going to be as bad as Ontario? Are we going to get to be as bad as Quebec? Will debt to GDP exceed half?

That's a huge problem, my friends, when we're talking about borrowing more than $50 billion.

So my challenge to the government is to find ways of continuing to deliver top-quality service to Albertans. Engage the public service. Ask them their opinion. Ask them for ideas and advice. Listen to those ideas. Make some hard decisions. Have some hard conversations. It isn't easy – it really isn't – but this government, more than any, can truly engage with the public service and ask them for ways of finding efficiencies within the system, of spending less money. If we don't, ultimately it could lead to significant public-sector cuts down the road. We could just be forestalling significant cuts.

So I have tremendous concern. There's certainly no way I can support Bill 10.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, with some concerns. Obviously, some good things in this bill, but like all omnibus bills, it raises real questions about the difficulties an opposition party would have in supporting one part and not the other. You have to reject the whole bill if you reject anything in the omnibus. I think it's unfortunate they've combined the removal of the debt cap with issues around the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, the Financial Administration Act, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, and the Fuel Tax Act. It makes it very difficult to vote in a fashion that would discriminate between some of the things, most of which I can support, given our financial situation, and some of which I can't.

Most significantly, the bill repeals the provincial debt cap, which the government originally set at 15 per cent, and does not establish a new cap.

Under the Financial Administration Act it specifically exempts the government from having to table any loan agreement which involves a loan to an individual of less than $500,000. Where's that coming from? Why would we be less transparent than in the past about loans to individuals of less than $500,000? I don't get that. I'm looking for some answers on that one, and I'll waive judgment on that until I hear more.

Some of the areas have been alluded to before. The act restricts eligibility for the education savings plan grants or RESPs to children born between January 1, 2005, and March 31, 2015, and repeals the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act effective July of this year. The winding down of this savings plan was actually started by the PC administration before they left office, so the government has opted not to reverse that decision. I understand; we're in difficult financial times.

Under the Alberta Corporate Tax Act this provides greater clarity around Alberta's calculation of corporate taxable income, which parallels the federal calculation. That's a reasonable thing to do, to try and harmonize with what we're doing at the federal level.

Under the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act it decreases the dividend tax credit rate for noneligible dividends from 3.08 per cent to 2.2 per cent in 2017. The government is keeping more money for itself by making the dividend tax credit less generous. I understand that. I can accept that.

But, again, under the Financial Administration Act, which requires the government to table before the House the particulars of any loan agreement it enters into or shares of any capital stock in a corporation it acquires, it specifically exempts the government from having to table any loan agreement which involves a loan to an individual of less than $500,000. Explain why you would want to be less transparent than in the past. I don't get that.

The big issue, of course, which has been so much discussed this morning, is repealing the provincial debt cap. It looks like we don't want to be disciplined about our borrowing. On the face of it, at least without putting another debt cap in place, it looks like we don't support fiscal discipline and putting limits. I can understand that these are extraordinary times, and it does mean that extraordinary measures are necessary. It doesn't mean that we can simply ignore guidelines, limits, caps.

In summary, Madam Speaker, this omnibus bill contains many noncontroversial amendments focused on improving clarity and consistency, and I'd be more than happy to support these if they were packaged together in a separate bill. However, as the bill also includes amendments to the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act that will allow the province to spiral into higher and higher debt, I cannot offer my support. Without a debt cap, how can Albertans have confidence that the government isn't dooming an entire generation into a black hole? What if oil prices remain low and are the new norm? There's a huge gap between government spending and revenues that can't be filled by wishful thinking.

In this regard the Member for Calgary-Elbow indicated that there are some ways to show much more commitment to reducing our expenses on the government side, and I for one would be willing to take a 5 per cent cut. I think many in our position would be. I think many in the public service would be willing to take a 5 per cent cut. Not only would it be an important symbolic gesture, but it would actually start to move us towards what I think demonstrates a personal commitment as well as a government commitment to bearing some of the burdens of this downturn.

Not only does the bill contain nothing in the way of a debt cap, but it also does not offer a debt repayment plan, and that's been alluded to before. If the province is not going to cap its borrowing, it should at least have a plan for paying off the debt. We need to have some assurances, whether it's through bonds or fees or new rental arrangements, user fees. What exactly are the areas that we should be considering in trying to recoup our lost revenue?

And have an adult conversation about how much debt we're prepared to pass on to the next generation. I believe that my generation, the baby boomers, have not been paying their way for the last 30 years. We have left a tremendous amount of social, economic, and environmental debt to the next generation. Let's not add unnecessarily. Let's not continue to pass on this huge debt to future generations. We need to start paying more of our way as we go.

I'm also somewhat concerned about the proposed amendment that aims to exempt the government from having to table before this House any loan agreements which involve a loan to an individual of less than $500,000. We need more clarity around that, and I hope the minister will provide some of that.

Those are my remarks. Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Hon. minister, go ahead.

Ms Larivee: Thank you. While I do not profess to be the originator of this bill – and, certainly, I will pass on the questions to them to answer some of those questions in more detail – I did want to specify and clarify that the loans to individuals under $500,000 is to actually accommodate current practice. We do not disclose to this House the loans that we make to students on a regular basis as part of student loans. In the way that it's currently written, technically we actually are obligated to do so. In the interests of respecting the privacy of the many individuals that get those loans, that is one of those practices. Another example that would be captured by that is the loan program to seniors for their houses. That would also be captured in that. This is very specific to individuals with very private situations, where it would be completely inappropriate to violate the privacy of Albertans.

The Alberta centennial education savings plan: that was a recognition that the plan did not actually end up supporting those who are less fortunate and need assistance with their education. It actually ended up with people who were quite affluent taking advantage of that opportunity. Recognizing it completely failed to accomplish what it had intended to set out, we will continue to ensure that students have access to quality postsecondary education at a reasonable price and are taking many actions to do that. This was not the best way to go. So we're happy to continue with that process.

I just wanted to answer those two questions for you, and I will pass on your remaining questions.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the question and the comments. Indeed, I can understand why students and seniors and their borrowing from the government isn't appropriate to be made public, but we're talking about $500,000 as the limit. That seems excessive. We could exempt students and seniors and those particular loan programs from being made public. I don't understand why you would keep from this Assembly, at least, those who are borrowing $499,000 from this government. For what purposes, and for what benefits?

I mean, that's a huge amount of money to be loaning without any transparency. I guess I would ask for a little clarity on why that limit was made so high. From a political point of view, it just doesn't smell right. I would like to know whether the government is considering changing that. Has that been the case for a number of years? What, if any, concerns have been raised about this, either within government or outside of government? If there's no accountability for loans of up to $500,000 – and by accountability I mean that we need to know as legislators where that money is going, that public money – then I think we've got a problem.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 10, a bill that certainly will have some significant debate in this Chamber as we proceed, particularly because it sets the province on the most dangerous course we have been on for decades. While the current government might not like the previous government – and, certainly, the previous government did a lot of things very poorly. They started the car on this road to significant debt, the beginnings of changing the rules around legislation that required fiscal responsibility in our province. They were also responsible for laying the foundation that was such an important part of the Alberta advantage, particularly when it came to the retirement of our debt, particularly when it came to legislation that made it illegal for debt financing and also illegal for the financing of operational expenditures.

But over the last number of years, including the end of the 44-year reign of the previous government, there was a slow deterioration of those laws, where quite regularly the government of the day would come to the House and say: we just need to make a small, little adjustment to these rules and laws; we know we promised that we would never do that and we know that Albertans expect better of us, but we just need to make a slight alteration because of the economic realities. And there we were, heading down that path. Then we changed some additional laws, that ultimately gave the government even more ability to borrow and finance. Now we've seen an absolute acceleration that is beyond the pale. It is really dangerous, dangerous, dangerous territory.

I think that the previous government does carry a lot of burden when it comes to getting us to this spot, but that burden is nothing compared to what this government, Madam Speaker, is preparing to place at the feet of our province, preparing to place at the feet of our children and our grandchildren. It is, if nothing else, reckless. Some would describe it as dangerous. We certainly should all be taking pause as we consider Bill 10.

A very short time ago in this very Chamber the government, this NDP government – and I know they like to blame the former government for a lot – said one thing, and today they are doing another, the exact opposite of what they promised to do. I think that is a significant concern not only with respect to this issue, but it also should be a concern to all of us about: what other issues have they spoken to, promised, yet are not willing to hold up their end of the bargain?

I know that I have been speaking with people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills since the budget came out, and they've been asking me very similar questions. Oftentimes the language isn't as parliamentary, but that's because they're hurting. They're concerned about the future of our province. Sometimes that manifests itself in a way with words that we wouldn't want to use in this Chamber, but it speaks to the passion of Albertans. It speaks to the passion that the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have for the future of our province. They hope to have a province that is just as great as the province they've experienced, that provides the same sorts of opportunities of hope, of personal freedoms, the opportunity for success, the opportunity for the entrepreneurial spirit to flourish in the province. What Bill 10 does is that it puts our province's future at risk. It puts that spirit of entrepreneurialism, that independent drive of Albertans at risk because of what it can mean in terms of the weight of government coming down on people in the future.

I'd like us to just take a little trip down memory lane. Predominantly in October and November of 2015 members of this Chamber, certainly on that side of the House, rose to speak specifically about debt limits, about the future of our province and how this government was going to ensure that it didn't put our province's financial picture at risk. It promised it wouldn't put our credit rating at risk, and it promised it would manage debt accordingly. I think it's good to be reminded of the exact words that this government spoke. On November 3, 2015, the Minister of Finance: "I believe that this 15 per cent limit will not be breached. In the three-year plan that's before [us] here, I think it takes us up to about 9.5 or 10 per cent of debt to GDP, so there's lots of cushion."

Now, just a few months later, we're in a position where that cushion has been absolutely lambasted. The air is right out of it, and we are charging forward. The challenge, Madam Speaker, as you know – and we'll see that here shortly – is that the Finance minister on those days boasted: don't worry; the 15 per cent debt limit is very reasonable, particularly when you compare it to other jurisdictions. He used all sorts of other ridiculous arguments at the time, much of which we debated fiercely here. The challenge is that having a debt limit is a very reasonable thing to do. Blasting through that debt limit like you don't care about the law that you just passed is irresponsible, and that is exactly where we are.

I recall rising in this House, speaking specifically about what we see happening in the United States of America, where every couple of years or months they're up against the debt limit, and they just go ahead and raise it and raise it and raise it. Yet they continue to have one, and there has to be debate about it. The fact that they change it is ridiculous, horrible, but the fact that they have the accountability and have to have the discussion is exponentially better than what we're seeing with this government across the aisle.

Putting absolutely no limit on the depths to which we can spend says to the Alberta people that we don't need to be accountable to the Assembly, that we don't need to be accountable to the Chamber, and, as an extension, that we don't need to be accountable to the people of Alberta. What this law does is that it allows the government to spend for eternity without the requirement of real, robust debate, and that debate, Madam Speaker, provides accountability, provides transparency. It provides the people of Alberta with a voice in this place. It is a shame that less than a year after a government that was elected on a campaign of change, on a campaign of doing things differently, they, in fact – and I never thought I would say this in the Chamber – are worse than the previous government when it comes to transparency in this Chamber around debt financing and when it comes to transparency around the finances of our future.

It went on, Madam Speaker, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, the Finance minister, when he was addressing concerns in this Chamber about the issues that we were raising around the credit rating. He more than assured us on numerous occasions that this government had been speaking with credit-rating organizations and that everything was going to be okay, that they were relatively okay with the 15 per cent debt to GDP and that those credit-rating agencies at the time had said that the credit rating of Alberta would remain strong.

Now, four days after this bill passed, we received our first credit downgrade. Just prior to that, when speaking about the debt-to-GDP ratio – and I'm quoting from Hansard from November 3 as well, the Minister of Finance.

I'm not saying that they look at that overall or in absence of the other criteria, but they do look at that one, so we plan to stay true to the plan that we've identified and manage the growth of the province's programs and services within the budget that we've identified. I'll be meeting with and talking with the rating agency representatives directly and telling them about not only our plan but our desire to stay within . . .

My question to the Finance minister today would be: what exact plan are you taking to the credit-rating organizations, when you so proudly stood in this House and talked about this plan, this plan that barely stood for six months?

What's worse than the initial downgrade – that took four days, I believe it was – is that the most recent downgrade was announced the day after this government introduced a budget that puts us on a very, very dangerous course for the future, with no plan. Zero plan. While we strongly disagreed with the plan that was presented in November, that had a 15 per cent debt-to-GDP limit, we were starting down this road – the exact same things that we said would happen are happening today. While we strongly disagreed with that plan, at least there was a plan.

On October 27 . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I was listening with great intent to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. He was talking about our debt limit and saying that our debt limit is going to be a problem. I will note that his side of the House provides no solution. It's very easy to talk about this. It's very easy to tweet. But it is quite hard to figure out what would be cut from that in order to meet that. What services that Albertans depend on would he or his members cut in order to get there?

Now, it's hard for me, of course, to criticize any one particular thing they would cut because they have put no plan forward. The best I have, Madam Speaker, is that back in December the Official Opposition put out a plan saying that they would keep debt to GDP at 7 per cent. I don't know if that is still their policy because that's the only point they've put forward. I don't know whether they're going to be throwing lifelines to Albertans or throwing anvils.

My question for the hon. member: is he going to be proposing an alternative to the debt-to-GDP limit, or is the 7 per cent the Wildrose presented back in December still their policy?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm glad that the hon. member has realized that governing is hard. You have to make hard choices, and it's something that this side of the House is willing to do to provide leadership to the province. I look forward to being able to do that, to making hard choices.

I find it a little disingenuous to say that the opposition has no plan because just recently we made a number of recommendations to this Chamber with a number of savings. Let me be clear – and you can clap for this when I'm done – that this government is not responsible for the price of oil. But you are responsible for not making the situation worse, and that's exactly what you've been doing.

Let me tell you that while you may be investing in infrastructure – and it's an important thing to do – the challenge is that when we are paying $2 billion every single year moving forward, Madam Speaker, that is going to put future generations of our province and future jobs of our province at significant risk. There must be a balance, and you, members of the government, have not found that balance.

Mr. Barnes: They haven't even looked for it.

Mr. Cooper: That's exactly right. They haven't even looked for it.

There are massive amounts of waste inside the bureaucracy of this government, and while I will acknowledge that it is not $10 billion of waste, there are significant amounts of savings that can be found. This government refuses to acknowledge that that is a possibility. There is a significant amount of savings that can be found with respect to public-sector employees. There is a significant amount of savings that can be found around waste. There is a significant amount of savings that can be found with respect to spending in the province as we compare it to what we spend over the national average per capita.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, followed by Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Gotfried: On 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is finished, hon. member.

Mr. Gotfried: Oh. I'm sorry.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you wish to speak to the bill?

Mr. Gotfried: Yes. I will, then, briefly as well. Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, much has been said today about this bill – and it deeply concerns me – about the level of debt that this government is taking not the province but Albertans into. I think that's something of significance for people across this province and, sadly, for those that aren't even born yet, which is a big concern for me.

I've looked at some of the numbers on this. If we hit somewhere in the neighbourhood of a $58 billion debt by 2019 as these numbers indicate, that would actually reflect over $13,000 per man, woman, and child at that date, at a projected population of about 4.4 million people. With the average household size of 2.6 people, that would be $34,000 per average household in Alberta.

Mr. Rodney: How much?

Mr. Gotfried: That's $34,000.

Mr. Rodney: Wow. Per household?

Mr. Gotfried: For an average-sized household in this province.

Let's put these numbers in perspective here. A household is now going to take on, without their explicit approval, $34,000 of additional debt when some of them are having trouble servicing their mortgages, making their car payments, putting their kids into hockey, having some money saved for the kids' education, and, God forbid, saving for their own retirements. It's deeply concerning, Madam Speaker.

That's not even taking into account – and this is perhaps another sad thing – that the federal debt is currently at $36,000 per Canadian, not per household. On the current numbers, again, 2.6 people per household, that's $93,600 of federal debt. Add that to this provincial debt that we're going to take on, and that is $127,600 per Alberta household, Madam Speaker. I would suggest that that's more than any responsible individual would take on, and this government is doing it on behalf of those individuals and households.

I've done a little bit of math here as well for interest because sometimes we need to show the numbers to the people that we're taking these actions for.

Mr. Rodney: What do the numbers say?

Mr. Gotfried: I'll tell you what the numbers are. Let's look at the households first. Maybe that's an easy way to look at it. It's $34,000 by the end of 2019. Let's take an average interest rate of about 6 per cent just to be fair. It could be lower; it could be higher. Even if we say to Albertans, "You know what; we're not in a hurry here, but we have a plan; we have a plan that we're going to give you 30 years to pay this back because we're going to be fair to you and we're going to let you pay this off; we want to make sure that we have a plan, because it's not our plan; it's actually your plan as Albertans, your plan because we've borrowed irresponsibly on your behalf," that monthly payment for 30 years would be $203.85. Or if you want to annualize that just to make it even a little bit more impactful for the average household, who is struggling to save for their child's education, their own retirement, and maybe to pay down their own debt, their own mortgage, any other personal debt they may have – and, sadly, during this economy we're going to see more of that and, sadly, more bankruptcies to come – that's $2,446.20 per year for 30 years.

Mr. Rodney: Per family?

Mr. Gotfried: Per family.

The total amount we're going to have to pay back on that $34,000, total payments, is over $73,000, double what we've borrowed, Madam Speaker. And that's a sad reflection, of course, during this time period of this increased debt. Guess what's going to happen to our credit rating in this province? We've already seen it downgraded. Where are we going to end up? Are we going to end up with a C minus? C minus isn't good enough for this province.

You want to look at some individual numbers? In 2019 some people that aren't even born yet, Madam Speaker – and I'm going to be a little bit more fair here. It's $13,181 per each one of those 4.4 million Albertans. I'll be generous – I said 6 per cent for the household because that's over a longer period of time – with an interest rate of 5 per cent. Let's hope that we're lucky enough to enjoy such low rates in the years ahead, but I would suggest that in my lifetime the average is probably more around 8 per cent. So $13,181 at 5 per cent, a 25-year amortization period on that. We'll try and pay it off a little bit faster here. We'll accelerate things. Certainly, we wouldn't want to overburden individual Albertans. Somebody not even born yet, Madam Speaker, after 2019 is going to have a monthly payment of $77.05. That's great, isn't it?

That could go towards educational savings. Gosh. If it started the day you were born that your parents put away $77.05 for you, you'd have a lot of money for that education, Madam Speaker. You'd have a lot of money for your retirement way down the road. Nobody is ever thinking about that at the time. They're thinking about their education. They're thinking about the hockey games. They're thinking about the hockey equipment. They're thinking about the dance lessons. They're thinking about living a good life. That's $924.60 per year per individual.

That's a lot of money, Madam Speaker, and it's irresponsible for us to spend that without their permission. They're not even born yet. Total interest, total payments on that: we're going to pay about $10,000 interest on that over those 25 years, and total payment on $13,000 is going to be over $23,000. I would suggest that these are irresponsible moves for us to take in this Chamber on behalf of Albertans. It's just not good enough.

I agree with what's been said here earlier. There are many arguments for us to invest in infrastructure – we know that – in health, education, creating some jobs in the short term, but not on the backs of the Albertans of not only of today but of the future, who will have no choice and no say in this. Madam Speaker, I'm concerned that those individuals, those new Albertans, those young Albertans, will turn around when most of this House is in retirement and tell us: "I'm sorry. We have no money for you seniors. We have no money for youth, to educate them. We have no money to ensure the health and well-being of Albertans because you spent that on our behalf, without our permission, five years ago, 10 years ago, 20 years ago." It's deeply concerning.

I consider myself a pretty anal Virgo. I had to look at these numbers, Madam Speaker, because to me, these numbers count. These numbers are the future of Albertans, the future debt of Albertans. We're making these moves in this House, I would submit again, irresponsibly on their behalf, without their express permission. I have to believe that these are well intentioned, that the same members on the other side are doing this because they believe it is the right thing to do. But I think they need to look into their hearts and their souls and be honest with Albertans about what these numbers mean for us going into the future and how those children that are not born yet today are going to feel in 25 years when some of the members here, not all, will be approaching retirement age and wonder themselves: "Is this responsible for me to do on their behalf."

What's it going to mean to me in the future when I need the support of future generations?"

Madam Speaker, this bill deeply concerns me. I will not be supporting it, and I am very saddened by the implications of it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd actually like to just comment a bit more on what the hon. member to my left here spoke a little bit about. I think it's important to state. He talked a little bit about the cost to service, basically, this debt that Albertan families are going to have to deal with. I want to kind of add a little bit more to that. First of all, I want to state that a little over 11 months ago this government was actually in a net positive position, which put families in a net positive position of about $39,000. A net positive position going to a net negative position of about $55,000 in 11 months kind of shows over a $100,000 change in net position in 11 months. If that doesn't make Albertans concerned, I don't know what will. As an Albertan it makes me concerned.

Let's take a look at our financial position. The reason why I think it's important to look at this financial position is because we're not on an island. We're part of a country. We're part of a global economy. Unfortunately, what we've seen, even as my colleague to the left of me said, is that we are part of Canada, and Canada's debt has skyrocketed as well. One thing he didn't mention there as a cost that will have to be added to us as Albertans is the cost of unfunded liability, which some have placed at close to $10 trillion in Canada. This is a cost that at some point we will have to bear.

When we go down the rabbit hole that I see us going down of, as the minister likes to put it, pivoting to do something else, what we're doing is that we're putting ourselves on much shakier ground. Really, what that does, the trickle-down effect, is that it actually disincentivizes business and international businesses from coming here. One of the best ways of being able to diversify an economy, in my opinion, is to be able to make ourselves so competitive comparable to other jurisdictions that other businesses throughout the world want to come here. We were in a position of being able to do that. That's why we saw such explosive growth in Alberta. This is the reason why we were able to see people coming from all over Canada and all over the world to Alberta, because there were jobs and there were opportunities. That is the greatest thing we can offer to Albertans.

Unfortunately, the past government deviated from the plan of an Alberta advantage, and we're seeing this deviation from that Alberta advantage being exacerbated by this government. It is a dangerous precedent. For all the rhetoric and all the talk of wanting to diversify an economy, the best way to diversify an economy is to incentivize businesses to come here and set up shop. The government will have no understanding and no ability to determine what the invisible hand knows. So for them to arrogantly, in my opinion, state that they know how to fix this thing is folly.

The way forward is for us to be able to put ourselves in a position where we do not have to download taxes, download costs onto businesses and individuals and families, so these individuals, families, and businesses can thrive. Any time a government is not able to curtail their spending, they have to increase taxes, and those taxes are downloaded onto the people that make a society thrive. Take a look at any society in the world. Those societies that incentivize small businesses thrive. I don't mean incentivize by saying, "Hey, you can have this tax break, or you can do this or have some kind of a grant," by picking winners and losers. I'm talking about being able to have a government get out of the way of people doing business. If they do that, those countries are the ones that thrive the best.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Now, I'd like to talk specifically about this bill. It has been mentioned that this is an omnibus bill. Unfortunately, I am only able to talk about one issue, and that is this debt ceiling. This legislation as presented speaks to this government's total predilection for debt and deficits. It speaks to this government's complete inability to manage our province's finances.

Now, this government likes to trumpet that they have a mandate from the people of Alberta for reckless expenditures, but not a single person in Alberta voted for debt and deficits of the magnitude that this government is looking to embrace. I say this because the word "debt" did not once appear in this government's 2015 election platform. The word "deficit" appeared only once, on page 24, where they outlined a plan to return to a surplus in Alberta's finances by 2018, which is completely off the books now. It was under a large bolded headline that read: Balancing the Books. So this government has a mandate from Albertans to balance the books before the next election. When is that going to come back to the dialogue in this House?

They do not have a mandate from Albertans to squander the province's finances. They certainly do not have a mandate from Albertans to put in a sky-high debt ceiling and then blow right through it in the first year and replace it with a licence to spend borrowed money without restraint. Broken promises and perceived dishonesty on fiscal matters do not bode well for provincial governments, as can be evidenced by what happened in Manitoba. They had the NDP there experience a crushing defeat because they didn't learn this one lesson. I guess that means that I can congratulate this government on being the last of the NDP governments in Canada.

Now, I've heard it stated that in comparison to other jurisdictions in Canada, we're doing, actually, pretty well. Mr. Speaker, we compete on a global level for investment money, not just nationally. That's how you diversify an economy. You create an environment that attracts businesses. But we can't just attract businesses from other jurisdictions in Canada; we're attracting businesses from all over the world. So if we make comparisons, we need to be able to do it right. We need to compare it with other jurisdictions throughout the world. Are we competitive in terms of what we add to the cost of doing business in Alberta versus what is added in other jurisdictions? I would have to say that I do not believe we are.

What we have seen in recent years through successive Premiers and governments is that Alberta has a chronic spending addiction. Removing the debt limit removes the last remaining barrier against that spending addiction. It was only a few months ago that this same government introduced the debt limit they are seeking to get rid of with Bill 10. Now, we have really traversed far down the rabbit hole in this situation. There was a time when it was illegal to deficit spend in Alberta. From that time until now successive governments have dismantled the checks and balances that showed Albertans that we recognize where the tax dollar comes from and that we respect that. We are now in a situation where we have dismantled the deficit spending on capital, that was done back in the Stelmach years, and now we're dismantling the deficit spending on operational.

The Premier stood in this place and defended her government's 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio limit. She said that it was "an exceptionally responsible, careful way forward." Months ago my caucus colleagues warned the government that their increased 15 per cent debt limit was itself too high, that spending needed to be reined in. Today the government is back, admitting that it has indeed lost control and needs to urgently abandon its responsible debt limit. The facts are already troubling. On a per capita basis for operations Alberta already spends at least $8 billion more on government than British Columbia or Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, it is deeply problematic to take on massive, unlimited amounts of debt to pay for such an inefficient government. It would seem far more prudent to find efficiencies in government rather than just vote away a debt limit and keep going. Fifteen per cent is already too high for a government that had a zero debt-to-GDP ratio only a few years ago. At the existing 15 per cent debt limit this government could get to about $55 billion. Even at low interest rates it costs $2,000 each year per family just to cover that payment. That's not enough for this government, is it? Getting rid of that debt limit is just completely irresponsible.

This government had numerous opportunities to show creditors that they were serious about reining in their expenditures. One such opportunity was last week with the budget. By taking some initiative, by looking for efficiencies, this government had an opportunity to show creditors that it had some semblance of responsibility. Instead, this government chose to pursue an unprecedented deficit. Perhaps members on the government benches don't realize this, but a credit downgrade impacts Alberta's ability to borrow money on the markets. The result is that investors see Alberta as a riskier bet and, as in the case with banking on a smaller scale, demand increasingly higher returns to lend money to the government of Alberta.

I'll go back to the beginning comments I made. We went from a net positive position, where the money we had in the bank was actually making this government money and that money was then able to be spent in terms of the programs that Albertans need and want, to a position where instead of actually using that interest money that we were receiving, we now pay interest to the banks. That is dead money to us. That is no longer able to be used to provide help for those people who are in need, for health, for education, for seniors' services, the things that we hold dear in this province.

With each successive credit downgrade investors see more risk, and the government of Alberta is left with fewer options for borrowing. Accordingly, it is in our province's long-term interest that Alberta look to improve its credit rating. As both my colleagues from Strathmore-Brooks and Little Bow pointed out yesterday, this government was warned by a major credit agency, DBRS, just this past January that Alberta's credit rating was at risk of a downgrade at the current rate of fiscal unrestraint. Predictably, the government seemed to ignore this warning. Regrettably, Alberta's credit rating declined as a result.

One of the great failures of this government is that they judge their own legislation and policy solely by stated intention, not by any actual results or the evidence upon which it was planned. To hear those on the government benches say that any disagreement with this high-spending budget plan is akin to deep, lasting cuts to front-line services – that's blatantly false, Mr. Speaker. It's a desperate, straw-man fallacy approach to dodge tough questions about our province's finances, and they know it, tough questions that this government seems so woefully unprepared to answer. A lot of Albertans are struggling to make mortgage payments right now in a failing economy. I don't know if any members on the government benches can adequately explain to them why they are taking the province to over $50 billion in debt before the next election.

If the government wants to make this a discussion about front-line workers, the $2 billion in annual interest payments on debt is $2 billion that can't be spent on front-line workers, period. The problem with the long-term descent into debt and deficits is that it comes with escalating interest rates and declining credit ratings. This means that year after year there is a growing draw upon our provincial finances, one that takes away the ability to invest in front-line services and other key government expenditures. Furthermore, severe debt and deficits eviscerate the government's ability to provide tax relief to Albertans who need it most. Long-term debt and crippling interest payments deprive a future government of the ability to invest in its postsecondary education obligations or matters of labour retention or labour market programming. The long-term economic impact of eliminating the debt ceiling is consequential, but it is also a deep moral issue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the member: I've enjoyed your discussion here, and I'd like to hear a little bit more, your thoughts about how the debt interest is going to affect Albertans.

Mr. Hunter: I'd like to thank the member for the question. You know, obviously, it's been stated that going from a net positive position, where the money we had saved, about $12 billion, I believe, when this government took over, to a net negative position, where we actually will be spending – well, actually, when we spend up to $55 billion, it will be $2 billion of interest. So what happens with any business when you change your net position so drastically is that you have to cut programs that you would normally have offered. It is a foregone conclusion. It is the stark reality of the bottom line of your financial sheet.

If this government really believes what they say, that the social programs, the education programs, and the health care programs that we hold so dear in this province are so important to the members opposite, then I implore you to think about the long-term ramifications of unrestrained debt and deficit spending. I believe that if you really took a look at this, not just looked at the speaking notes, you would see that this puts our front-line workers, our front-line teachers, our front-line health professionals at risk. From my perspective and from my colleagues on this side's perspective, that is folly and something that I do not believe is in the best interests of jobs for our fellow Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'd like to mention to the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner that when it comes to being a good place to invest, there is more to a province when it comes to investment and a place to do good business than just being a low-tax jurisdiction. I would like to point out that Alberta is still the lowest taxed jurisdiction to do business in in all of Canada, and our budget is investing in quality of life and infrastructure to help maintain that.

Now, my question for the member is not about the 12-point plan that your side has. It's about the specific bill we are talking about. When it comes to debt-to-GDP ratio, my question for the member, my only question, is: what is your plan for Alberta's debt-to-GDP ratio? Is it still 7 per cent as per your December 22 credit downgrade action plan, and if not, why not?

Mr. Hunter: Well, this is the second time this question was asked. I thought that the first answer given by our colleague was fairly robust and fairly informative. They might want to listen a little more carefully the next time someone answers their question.

The Member for Calgary-Currie needs to remember that the position from this side of the House is to offer good ideas for the governing side of the House to implement. Like I said earlier today, you know, we offered 12 great ideas about how to be able to curtail spending, how to be able to incentivize business and incentivize job creation, and only one of those – only one of those – ideas was actually implemented. We appreciate that. We applaud the government for doing that, but it's not enough. This is why we gave them 12 good ideas.

This is something that I would adamantly . . .

The Speaker: On that note, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, appreciate the opportunity to rise and talk about Bill 10, the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. A lot of great points, great discussion from the opposition side of the House and the Official Opposition, so much so that in some ways it's a bit hard to add to. One of the things that was running through my mind as it came to the debt ceiling and what 4.1 million Albertans think the debt ceiling should be and the relevance and the importance of yet another law: of course, I remember the previous government's commitment to not run deficits. That law was totally disregarded, totally ripped up.

The relevance I can think of is back to Premier Getty. I believe that when the government under Premier Getty hit $22 billion, $23 billion in debt, Albertans said: that's enough. That brought in, of course, the Klein area and significant conservative change, change that some in the province disagreed with, but it is hard to disagree with the years of the Alberta advantage and the years of opportunity that it created for Albertans and Albertan families.

Why were Albertans so upset about, let's say, $23 billion worth of debt created by the former government? In addition to all of the points that this side of the House has said in the last hour, hour and a half, what I haven't heard is how the borrower loses control over their destiny, loses options. My colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner just mentioned $2 billion in interest by 2019. How many front-line workers, teachers, doctors, nurses, good service personnel would that be? It would be thousands. How many schools would that be? My calculation is that it would be about 80 schools a year. Two billion dollars? That's a couple of good regional hospitals. Instead, we'll be paying debt to Canadians, pension funds, foreigners, banks. We'll be making rich people and rich corporations even richer.

I was looking at the budget the other day – and parts of this debate have turned into a discussion on the budget, so I hope and think it's relevant – and spending is up $11 billion in just the last two years. When you go talk to people in Cypress-Medicine Hat who are working fewer hours, who are not working, who are certainly not increasing their spending by 20 per cent over two years, active, hard-working Albertans in the private-sector economy who are the ones that are going to have to pay this back through higher taxes, through more productivity, through longer hours, through fewer options, through spending less time with their family, you know, maybe their options will be, as others have said on this side, withdrawing from the workforce, not investing, not sharing in our broad economy, not giving the NDP government the opportunity to tax them even more.

I think I read somewhere, too, in the budget documents how our net financial position has plummeted. It was in '05 or '06 when we were $32 billion to the positive – $32 billion to the positive – far and away the richest jurisdiction in Canada. The number that the MLA from the third caucus, Calgary-Fish Creek, was just talking about, $19,000 per family: that wasn't debt. That was in assets; that was in wealth. But that was in 2005 or 2006. It's estimated now that in another year or so it will actually be a complete reversal; our net financial position will be $32 billion in the hole. Every man, woman, and child and every family in Alberta will feel the burden of that and will feel the loss of options, the loss of control over their destiny.

We look at jurisdictions around us, our neighbours to the east and to the west in Canada who have done so much better, keeping spending in line, keeping deficits as a percentage of GDP or based on per capita, so much more in line that it will give them the opportunity to attract investment and to attract jobs and growth. My colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner was absolutely right that excessive spending, excessive per capita spending, not looking for efficiencies, and running big deficits not only burdens the next generation, but it scares investment in business away. Would you locate a business in Alberta, running a $10.5 billion deficit, which is obviously seen as just a future tax, when we've seen taxes rise so much, when there are so many other jurisdictions with their spending in line who look for efficiencies and have competitive taxation?

Then, of course, you know, the other thing that hurts business confidence and hurts jobs – and it breaks my heart when I drive through Cypress-Medicine Hat and see all the empty warehouses and the lack of job growth – the other thing that this uncertainty does is that it scares business away because they don't know. In talking to stakeholders up here, they have no idea how the carbon tax is going to be played out, they have no idea how the gas emissions tax is going to be, they have no idea what the long-term corporate taxation will do, and they have no idea what that will do to their ability to attract employees and to return equity to their shareholders.

Alberta Venture, a good Alberta publication, had out an article on April 19. Here's the headline: "Alberta Businesses 'Surprised' by Announcement on Investor Tax Credit."

Alberta Chambers of Commerce says it was under the impression it would be consulted before any details of the Investor Tax Credit, including which industries would benefit, were announced.

The April 19 article, by Elizabeth Hames, goes on to say:

That caught Alberta's business community off guard.

Mr. Speaker, clearly another glaring example of where this 11-month government absolutely failed to consult. After 11 months it's clear that they've had the time. It's clear that they're not interested in consulting; it's about ideology.

Albertans spoke to Don Getty's $23 billion debt ceiling and forced change for, say, fiscal conservative change and an outlook and an approach. The far side, the government side, of the House constantly talks about how it was wrong, how it wasn't rightly handled even though, as I mentioned, I believe it led to years and years of opportunity for Alberta families and Alberta communities. If the government is not going to consult on what their taxation policy should be, what their debt ceiling policy should be, Albertans will tell them. Albertans will tell us loud and clear. Wherever I go in Cypress-Medicine Hat and around Alberta, I hear it. Albertans are scared of what this debt is going to do to their children, to their communities, how the burden of the interest is going to take away their options. It's going to take away their opportunity.

So I would ask the government to look for efficiencies. Make sure that the tax dollars you take from hard-working Albertans are put to maximum use. As many on this side have already talked about the rules and regulations and the abrupt, fast implementation of things like minimum wage – I think it took 15 years to go from $5 to $10, and now it's going to go from $10 to $15 in just three – the change that that could have, the unintended consequences that that could have on our good, solid businesses, I would ask the government to consult. I ask the government, I ask that side of the House to consult and ensure that Albertans retain the opportunity to choose their own future, to have opportunities on their own, and to continue to make Alberta the best province in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions for the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have one question for the hon. member. I asked this of a member from their front bench, a member from their backbench, and now another member from their front bench. Since we're debating debt to GDP, my one question is: since this bill is about the debt-to-GDP ratio, is it your position that this government's debt-to-GDP ratio should be 7 per cent as per your December 22 plan? My question is: yes or no?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you very much to the member for the question. I appreciate your diligence. I mean, on this side of the House we've talked about several things that your party has continued to label us with in error, and one of them is front-line workers. We have stood up many, many times and every time have talked about our commitment, our desire to protect front-line workers. We don't mean just for a week or a month or a year. We mean so that those services are there for Albertans for many years to come.

The Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair.

Mr. Barnes: Sorry. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize.

You know, again, we have a situation where this debt, this interest, this inefficient spending is going to cause debt expenses and a debt ratio that – the hardship for future Albertans and future families will be huge. I think of the service problems that we have now. I think now of the complaints in Cypress-Medicine Hat, when people phone me and say that they can't get to a doctor, that it's three years for a hip, so they've come up with $25,000 to head to Montana and pay a clinic down there instead. These are the kinds of things that you're taking from Albertans. These are the kinds of things that – as opposed to talking about the number, let's talk about the hardship.

In this House a couple of weeks ago I talked about one of my friends in Cypress-Medicine Hat, Mr. Speaker, who, fortunately, is still working as much as he used to. He's in the oil and gas business. He's a mechanic on compressors. He's taking exactly the same wage that he took two years ago, but because of the increase in taxes provincially and federally, he's now taking home $800 a month less. What did he used to do with that $800? He used to run a business on the side. He used to employ people. He used to put money back into the economy. He's decided that because of the shortage, this taking from him, he's no longer in a position to do that. It's too risky. That money is not circulating in the economy anymore. He takes care of his parents. He pays money monthly to take care of his parents. Thank goodness this government and other governments didn't take that opportunity away from him.

Mr. Speaker, I was at the oil field service meeting last night, where I heard that partly because of the change in oil and gas, partly because of the policies from this government, $50 billion less on an annual basis is being invested in Alberta. That's $50 billion. So it's back to the policies and the ideas that this side of the House has been talking about to bring some of that job-creating investment back to Alberta, back to building the types of communities where our children can find private jobs, where our children that can find private jobs can earn money to pay taxes to pay for the public services that we all need and cherish, especially as they relate to the front-line workers.

I would encourage this government, rather than spending blindly and adding $11 billion in spending over two years, to look for efficiencies wherever we can, whether it's cutting bureaucracy, cutting corporate welfare, looking for more value out of our Alberta infrastructure spending.

11:50

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here today to discuss Bill 10, a bill that shows us once again that this government doesn't seem to care much about Alberta's economic future. Once again we find ourselves discussing the NDP moving the debt ceiling. Mere months ago the Minister of Finance brought in Bill 4 and a 15 per cent limit on the debt-to-GDP ratio. Now with this bill we'll be seeing a rate of 15.5 per cent before the end of this government's term. We may as well write our debt ceiling laws on glass so they're easier for this Finance minister to break. Let's face it; if there's no plan for a limit, then the plan is to fail. We are well on our way to having a $58 billion debt in three short years. That's billion.

It's entirely distasteful for this government to smugly proclaim that we can easily afford such a burdening debt-to-GDP ratio because ours is the lowest in Canada. That's akin to being the best swimmer on the Titanic. This isn't a race to the bottom. This isn't a race to complete failure. The fact is that chronic deficits and debt are not conducive to a robust economy. We are already struggling with massive job losses and an economic downturn, and now this government wants to saddle future generations with more debt. The more we borrow, the further behind we get. I believe it was a British politician, Daniel Hannan, who stated, "You cannot spend your way out of recession or borrow your way out of debt." This government would be well advised to listen to that sage advice.

A deficit budget, in fact, a budget where we are borrowing billions every year simply to run day-to-day government, means that we are already borrowing more than government is making. When borrowing costs go up, the government has to look at more revenue streams such as taxes or, as they like to refer to them, levies. Borrowing costs are tied to our credit rating, which under this NDP government has been downgraded from its triple-A status. These increased costs have further burdened already hurting Albertans.

Why isn't this government looking for ways to cut costs, find efficiencies, and run a more efficient, more responsive government, you know, besides fudging the wildfires line item? The previous government outspent our neighbours in B.C. and was well above the national average for government spending. Surely there is waste to be found. When did fiscal restraint become a taboo phrase? Why are you downloading your out-of-control spending onto average Albertans?

The MLA for Calgary-Currie says that the government is listening. After all, they did amalgamate or dissolve 36 of the ABCs. He states that it will save $33 million over three years, or $11 million a year. While laudable, those numbers pale in comparison to the projected debt of $58 billion in those same three years. I believe that's one one-thousandth of that debt. Claiming that another careful measure is to freeze wages of those members of government earning six figures will provide cold comfort to those Edmontonians whose EI benefits will run out at the end of the year.

Many of the examples of programs and benefits that the member lauds are simply picking winners and losers. They simply won't benefit the majority of Albertans, who are being hurt by this government's policies. No one is suggesting that this government can control the world oil prices, but its bad decisions, reckless policies, and poor fiscal restraint cause more harm than its well-intentioned but poorly-thought-out programs may help. Helping apprentices finish their training is laudable, but at the end of it they need jobs. What we will have is a highly trained workforce with no place to apply their trade or, worse, a trained workforce that can seek out opportunities in B.C. or Saskatchewan or elsewhere.

While the member made valid critiques of the failed former government for announcing projects such as schools without funding them properly, is it that much different from announcing projects while spending money that we simply don't have?

That member also went on at length about his government's carbon tax and how it doesn't apply to dyed gas or dyed diesel. Well, unfortunately, the truckers and others that ship our agriproducts will be subject to those diesel taxes, and they will pass on those costs to the customer, in this case farmers, by raising the price of the goods they ship.

In another I-told-you-so moment Wildrose warned the government months ago that its numbers were way off and that it was at risk of blowing through that glass debt ceiling. What happened to the government assertion that they wouldn't tip into the overdependence on debt? The minister stated that no one predicted this economic situation, but it was crystal clear to many of us that your spending habits would catch up with you. It was also pretty clear to the numerous credit-rating agencies and financial commentators. DBRS called it when they pointed out the lack of spending restraint of this government.

This government's spending is out of control, and it's passing the buck to the next generation through its bad policies and poor economic choices. That's what this boils down to: choice. This government sees no problem with throwing fiscal restraint out the window. They're choosing to burden others with the consequences of their actions. Interest payments on debt will soon become the government's biggest expense next to the departments of Health and Education and the delivery of social services. That means that there will be less money for seniors' or children's programs just in servicing our debt. The interest will even surpass the amount of money that we spend on transportation. That's unacceptable.

We in the opposition are constantly asking for this government to be responsible with Albertans' money, to show some restraint, and to prioritize spending. However, they choose to misinterpret that as us asking for more money. We don't need to spend more money; we just need to be responsible with the money that is spent.

We believe that raising taxes isn't the solution. We have said that we won't raise them. We ran on that principle. It is possible to maintain our excellent front-line service delivery and to get on track to balancing the government's books without hiking taxes. High taxes send the wrong message to everyone about Alberta. They mean less money in your pocket every month. And when Albertans are already struggling to make ends meet in this downturn, higher taxes can mean having to make hard choices just to get by. It means that everything costs more: gas, electricity, groceries. It means that practically everything that you purchase today will cost more in the near future as taxes go up once more.

That doesn't even include the government's carbon tax. Let's not fool ourselves. When it touches almost everything that a typical family spends money on, it's not a levy; it's a tax. This tax will cost the typical family nearly $1,000 a year, and it's coming soon to punish all Alberta families.

The fiscal plan presented to us in last week's budget as a whole is irresponsible, and passing on the kind of debt that this bill allows to our future generations is immoral and absolutely unacceptable. I encourage all members to reflect for a moment on what this bill proposes. It proposes an outrageous retraction of an already irresponsible debt limit four months after putting it in place. In just four months we've already blown through the debt limit that was passed. We can do better, and I encourage everyone here to vote against this bill.

I want to point out a couple of things. Recently – I believe it was on April 18 – the minister of environment used these words. She used the word “wrong.” She used the words “economizing with the truth.” She used the phrase “misrepresenting reality.” She said, “grabbing numbers out of thin air.” She used the words “intellectually lazy.” She even used the word “slovenly,” which isn't used that often, but she did use it. She used the analogy “like throwing spaghetti at the wall.” And she also said, “There's a noun to describe what they are doing; it starts with an L and ends with an E.” Now, Mr. Speaker, to your credit you suggested that this was treading on thin ice, being unparliamentary language, and I agree.

I also want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that on April 12 the Premier used the word “lies” in this House, on the record, in Hansard. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Mr. Loewen: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to go to the jobs plan. The minister said here that the last government didn't understand this . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I stand to interrupt.

I must advise that our time has lapsed, and we will adjourn until this afternoon at 1:30.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 20, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise here today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly the wonderful students, teachers, and parent helpers from the fabulous C.W. Perry school in Airdrie. This is actually the second half of the grade 6 classes; there are almost 200 students in total. I will introduce the teachers and the helpers, who will rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly: Mr. Rob Saïpe, Ms Tracey Bishop, Mrs. Regina Dollimount, Mrs. Pamela Burke, Ms Donahue, Ms Annette Freeman, Mr. Kyle Kilback, Mrs. Stephanie Viner, Mr. Lance Drozda, Ms Jen Barton, and Mrs. Sandy Schuck. Please rise, students as well, and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 26 guests, some of the brightest young minds in Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, from the John D. Bracco school. They are joined today by Ms Dalyce McElhinney, Ms Julie Lawrence, and Mrs. Salam Seifeddine. I will ask our visitors to please rise, and I would ask all members of the Assembly to help welcome them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups for introduction today?

Hearing none, the hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you three very distinguished guests from my constituency of Sherwood Park. Roxanne Carr is the mayor of Strathcona county. She was first elected in 2007 as a councillor and is serving her first term as mayor. I would like to add that it was a pleasure for me to be staff at Strathcona county under Mayor Carr's leadership. Mayor Carr is a community leader, a team builder, and she works every day to ensure that Strathcona county is the best place it can be for our constituents. Paul Smith is the deputy mayor of Strathcona county and the councillor for ward 5. Paul is a strong advocate for building community and diversified economic growth, passions our government shares as well. I especially appreciate his support for local agricultural projects. Pam Cholak is the stakeholder relations manager for the Industrial Heartland, which I will be speaking more to in my member's statement today. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour today to stand and introduce to you and through you to the House the latest addition to our caucus, Mr. Harmon Moon. Harmon, you can stand up and let people take a good look at you. Harmon is a MacEwan University public relations program student and doing a professional practicum with us. He'll be with us for the summer months. He has a bachelor of arts in history. We're so pleased he can be part of our team. Let's give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today, and I'd like to introduce to you and through you Rory Koopmans. Rory was recently featured by the Stony Plain Reporter and the Spruce Grove Examiner for his noble and loving efforts to have a new school named after his late mother, June Koopmans. June was a public school teacher in Edmonton and rural Alberta. I'd ask that Rory rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Manitoba Provincial Election

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, yesterday Manitobans voted for jobs when they voted against the NDP and for our fellow conservatives. This is good news for Alberta. Premier Pallister is a former colleague of our leader and a great friend to our province and our party. His election bodes well for interprovincial trade, the New West Partnership, and unclogging an obstacle to pipeline expansion. He is an ethical and principled conservative who will work hard to undo the damage that the NDP has done to his province.

Indeed, the good people of Manitoba have suffered long enough. Higher taxes, higher debt, higher power bills, and year after year of relying on equalization to make ends meet: this is the familiar NDP story that we've seen play out in every other province that has experimented with the NDP and their naïve ideology. Anyone from B.C., Ontario, Nova Scotia, or Saskatchewan can tell you about life under the NDP. They can tell you about have-not economics. They can tell you about record debt and record deficit. They can tell you about Bingogate and Rae days. This is the story of a party that is unfit to govern a modern economy focused on jobs and growth and prosperity, instead choosing to champion special-interest groups like big union bosses and pampered elites.

Albertans are already itching for their turn to follow our friends to the east and the west and tell the NDP to take a leap. They've already raised taxes, increased spending, and introduced a radical $3 billion carbon tax that they never campaigned on. The Manitoba NDP's unemployment program has already been busy hiring Greg Selinger's former staff as they scurry off the sinking ship. To quote Brian Pallister last night: the sunset was bright orange. Yesterday our friend Brian Pallister took down the second-last NDP government in Canada, and in 2019 Albertans will finish the job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Alberta's Industrial Heartland

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to you about the importance of the successful partnership between my constituency of Sherwood Park and Alberta's Industrial Heartland. I am happy to share Alberta's Industrial Heartland with the MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, the MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, and the MLA for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta's Industrial Heartland is Canada's largest hydrocarbon processing hub for value-added manufacturing. Over 40 companies provide fuels, fertilizers, power, petrochemicals, and more to provincial and global consumers. Thirty billion dollars are currently invested in Industrial Heartland projects ranging from petroleum refining and bitumen upgrading to natural gas fractionation and processing and fertilizer production. A further $14 billion is being invested in current construction projects, including Redwater's North West refinery, which will be Canada's first bitumen refinery built in the last 30 years. Projects like this contribute to over 25,000 well-paying jobs, either directly in operations or indirectly through construction and servicing. Alberta's Industrial Heartland is critical to building a diversified energy future in our province, and it is critical to keeping my constituents working.

Mr. Speaker, the Industrial Heartland generates $1.5 billion in local spending. The economic development fuelled in our heartland benefits not only my Sherwood Park constituency, but it's of great benefit to our entire province. I am proud to be a member of a government that recognizes the importance of Alberta's energy advantage while remaining committed to energy diversification through initiatives like the petrochemical diversification program, that will create mortgage-paying jobs for Albertans. The heartland industries also contribute to charitable programs in the community.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Alberta Street News

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak about Alberta Street News. Street papers were a movement that began in the early 1990s. The first paper came to Edmonton as Spare Change. Street papers provide an opportunity for income earning by people who for various reasons are not able to sustain more conventional employment and a place where the voices and stories of people from the economic and social margins can be presented. I am sure many of us have purchased a paper at times in our communities from one of these vendors. Over the years scores of women and men have been given the dignity of earning income by their own efforts rather than depending on social services entirely. They have developed supporters and friends in their relationships with customers.

Mr. Speaker, Linda Dumont became involved with street papers in Edmonton, first as a woman living in poverty and raising a family, as a vendor, selling the paper on the street to earn money, and later she began to write. In 2003 she founded Edmonton Street News. She has kept the paper going since then, sometimes on a shoestring, covering some of the costs by working as a yoga instructor or personal care provider when necessary. A few years ago the paper expanded to Calgary, and the name changed to Alberta Street News.

The basic business model of the paper is that vendors purchase papers for 50 cents each from Linda and then sell them by donation at street locations. Over the years the paper has provided thousands of readers with stories that were not found elsewhere. It has also published the creative work – art and poetry – of many.

With almost no advertising, the paper has always teetered on the edge of survival, and Linda deserves commendation no matter what its fate may be. The Premier has been a supporter of the paper over the years, including spending an afternoon with a vendor, selling the paper in her own constituency.

Mr. Speaker, I think the work of Linda deserves our commendation and a loud accolade today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Nepal Earthquake Anniversary

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Imagine some of the most beautiful landscapes on the planet, with industrious, creative citizens who have a spotless record of selflessness. Picture these beautiful people being rocked by a devastating catastrophe that killed almost 9,000 men, women, and children and injured more than twice that many, turning entire villages into dust in seconds. That's what happened one year ago, when a horrific earthquake struck the majestic mountain kingdom of Nepal.

Countless huge aftershocks have followed to this day, and hundreds of thousands of people are still living in temporary shelters. An inspirational Albertan volunteering in Nepal, our friend Elsie James, wrote to me a few weeks ago to say that the trauma and damage is still very much in your face and that the reality is as fresh as yesterday. Last Saturday's quake scored much higher on the emotional scale for many and brought back many difficult memories, not to mention the daily power blackouts, border closures, fewer tourists, failed businesses, a lack of essential commodities, and no transit to jobs or schools. Let's pray that political and nonpolitical will work together, putting aside individual wants in their desire for unity, to rebuild. Mr. Speaker, sound advice for us all.

In response to this tragedy, our PC caucus issued a news release. In it I was honoured to offer a perspective of our fallen friend, the hon. Manmeet Bhullar, who stated:

Nepalese workers and their families who came here on work permits have no permanent home to return to . . . Alberta is now the only home they have. Let's give these hard-working families some hope right now by allowing them to stay in Alberta as permanent residents.

Perhaps the government can give us an update on Meeta's suggestion.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, as we together try to build the best Alberta possible, please let's remember to be good Sherpas for our friends and neighbours who are in dire straits around the world.

Namaste, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Women's Suffrage Centennial

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to make a different statement today, but after participating in yesterday's events on the steps of the Legislature, I wanted to instead expand on comments made by my colleague from Edmonton-Centre.

Yesterday we celebrated an incredibly important event in this province, the 100th anniversary of allowing women the vote. Yet in 1916 this was considered a risky ideological experiment. Women were supposed to stay at home, washing dishes. Women were supposed to stay home and bake pies for their menfolk. Women had no rights unless they were granted those by their husbands or fathers.

But there was a group of women activists who refused to accept this idea. They put forth the risky ideological concept that women were actually persons. In 1913 a group of these idealistic women marched on the Legislature, only to be mocked by the Premier. Their ideas were dismissed as risky ideology that would break up homes and leave children being raised by servants, that allowing women to vote and be elected would damage the economy and kill jobs. Those against suffrage argued that it was dangerous to change a system that already worked very well. Thankfully, there were those in government in 1916 who were willing to entertain the risky ideology of giving women the vote.

Last May Alberta voters, men and women, voted for a government with a new ideology. They wanted a government that would do things differently. You know, I've heard that the definition of insanity is doing the same thing over and over again and hoping for a different result. We're not going to do that. We're not going to turn the clock back and repeat past mistakes. We're not going to slash and burn and blow up hospitals. Instead, we're going to invest in the province and its people, rebuild and diversify the economy. We're going to promote social justice and an inclusive environment for all, and we're going to continue to advance equality for women.

I'm proud to be part of a government that is willing to engage in what those in the opposition want to call risky ideological experiments. Progress is impossible without change, and all change involves an element of risk. Unless we're willing to embrace change and do things differently, we will be unable to grow and prosper as a province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Canada's Office of Religious Freedom

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today to speak about an issue that affects our country's ability to be able to protect human rights across the globe. In late March the federal government struck down a motion to continue funding the office of religious freedom. This decision went through despite pleas from religious leaders in Christian, Jewish, Sikh, and Muslim faiths. For those of you that are unfamiliar with the work that's been done by the office of religious freedom, it was tasked with protecting and advocating on behalf of religious minorities, opposing religious hatred and intolerance, and promoting Canadian values of pluralism and tolerance abroad. Now more than ever it is critical for Canada to continue to be a world leader in fighting against religious persecution.

One of the greatest strengths of our province and of our country is our freedom of thought. Unfortunately, there are many places around the world that do not enjoy the liberties that we experience today. I am proud to be from a country that stands up for those who cannot stand up for themselves, and I believe that it is our responsibility to protect marginalized and persecuted people whenever we can. Over the past three years the office of religious freedom did just that. Around the globe this office has created partnerships to protect our planet's most vulnerable. I have written to the Minister of Foreign Affairs asking that his government reverse their misguided decision to close this office. I encourage other members here today to make their voices heard to the federal government in support of religious freedom.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

Bill 205

Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I am humbled and honoured to request leave to introduce Bill 205, the Pharmacy and Drug (Pharmaceutical Equipment Control) Amendment Act, 2016.

The bill amends the Pharmacy and Drug Act to regulate pill presses, devices used to illegally manufacture deadly street drugs such as fentanyl. Fentanyl is killing Albertans at an alarming rate, with 272 Albertans dying last year from an overdose, the highest number of deaths in Canadian provinces. Bill 205 will give police the authority to seize pill presses from manufacturers who are using the machines to produce tens of thousands of deadly tablets. In passing Bill 205, Alberta will become the first Canadian jurisdiction to regulate pill presses. Most importantly, we will save lives by helping police control the manufacture and, inevitably, the distribution of the potent pills. I look forward to a fulsome debate on this crucially important bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 205 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. member, when the Speaker is standing, would you please remain seated until the Speaker is seated. You also left the House and walked in front of me and the speaker. I'd appreciate it if in the future you did not do that.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate my friend and former colleague Mr. Brian Pallister, the new Premier of Manitoba, on his election victory last night. It's a lesson that voters won't tolerate governments that are less than honest about their plans for tax hikes or who hide the full impact of those tax hikes from the electorate. That's what happened in Manitoba. Albertans see this happening right here with the NDP's carbon tax, that they didn't campaign on and that we now have at a cost of a thousand dollars a year. Alberta families won't see rebates for rising consumer costs as a result of the carbon tax. Why won't the Premier just simply be honest with Albertans on the full cost that her tax increases will have?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the opportunity to respond to the question. As I have said in answer to this question a number of times already, the Official Opposition's numbers with respect to the cost of the carbon levy to average families is incorrect. That's the first thing. So it doesn't help the debate when the opposition chooses to torque it up by doubling their estimates based on no facts. It really doesn't help. This is an important issue that Albertans want to discuss. They want us to make progress on it. They want us to make progress on reducing emissions. They want us to make progress on the diversification that the carbon levy will support and fund . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The NDP is simply making life more expensive for Albertans. Business taxes are up. Personal taxes are up. So are costs for gas, electricity, and heat. Now, crying into a beer: it would be good, but it won't help because that costs more, too. Don't even think that you can avoid it on the weekend at the museum or camping because, yes, those costs are up as well. Not even a thousand-dollar-a-year carbon tax was enough because the Premier is taking more of your property taxes now. Yes, that's right. It's another surprise tax hike, hitting every single household in Alberta. When confronted with a choice, this government will always raise your taxes. Why won't the Premier just admit . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. leader.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the member opposite began his question by congratulating – I share in that congratulations – the new Premier of Manitoba, but let me just read from that Premier's platform. They plan to “work with the federal government and other jurisdictions” to introduce a climate action plan that introduces “carbon pricing that fosters emissions reduction.” Again, is it a spend day, a cut day, a come day, a go day? I don't know.

Mr. Jean: An example of a Conservative government being honest. Amazing.

It's obvious this government is only making things worse. They're not being honest with Albertans. The NDP could have made the choice to reduce spending this year to get our budget back on the path to balance, to save Albertans from tax hikes, and protect services for future generations, but now she's softening the ground for a sales tax, saying: not now, maybe later. Manitobans have seen this script before and have rejected it. This is what happens when governments can't reduce spending. Premier, how can Albertans trust you, because . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have said at every opportunity when asked about this issue, our government ran in the last election on the very clear assertion that we would not introduce a sales tax. I said that during the election, I have said it since, and I have committed over and over that that will not happen. I would suggest that the members opposite just simply ought to listen to the truth and accept it when they get something that they like.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: You simply weren't honest. You didn't campaign on the carbon tax.

Wildfire Management

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, I was the MP for Slave Lake when a disastrous fire almost wiped out that town. Albertans, rightly, take forest fires very seriously. That's why they are absolutely shocked to see that this NDP government is playing chicken with Mother Nature. Despite the very dry winter and the early wildfire season this government chose to make things worse by gutting the budget for fighting fires and limiting contracts of those who do fight fires. This is the only real cut in this budget. Has the Premier found a way to mandate fewer fires, or is this just the government's new policy, to let Alberta burn?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as the minister explained yesterday, the fact of the matter is that resources that are allocated to firefighting will be maintained, and every single resource that we require to fight fires in this province this summer will be expended. All we are doing is managing and projecting the budget on the same basis, the same assumptions that had been done previously. If the demand is greater, we will meet the demand.

Mr. Jean: That's simply not true, Mr. Speaker. This year's wildfire budget of $86 million is $400 million lower than last year. Four hundred million dollars. It is $200 million lower than the average over the last 10 years and $100 million lower than even the lowest year. Fighting fires seems to be the only line item in this budget to take a hit with the NDP. Albertans want to know: was there a significant change in fire management policy, or is the Premier simply gambling on a 400 per cent reduction in forest fires?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member opposite look at the difference between the budget projection and the budget actuals and understand the conceptual difference between the two. It is quite true that firefighting expenditures last year were higher. They were also higher than what was originally budgeted for because you budget with a base level, and then you add if necessary. That's exactly what will happen this year if we need to. That's exactly what's happened in the past. It is unfortunate that they're not able to tell the difference between projected and actual.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, they cut the base of funding.

Even though the average wildfire season is 143 days long, this minister told firefighting contractors to set their contract terms at 93 days. As a result, air tankers and other firefighting contractors are leaving the province and won't be here when we need them, and we will. This foolish policy will leave our forests, energy infrastructure, towns, and the very lives of Albertans at risk. If we have a bad fire season like last year, how does the Premier expect to fight these fires when her policies have forced all the necessary people and equipment to leave Alberta?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the exaggeration is really hurting their credibility, and I would suggest that they think about that. As of this morning we have ready to fight new wildfires 654 firefighters, 67 helicopters, 85 pieces of heavy equipment, and six air tanker groups. We have contracts in place with those air tankers, and I am sure that we will have contracts in place for as long as we need them. To be clear, every resource will be expended that is needed. That is what we have committed to.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Care System Manager Sick Leave

Mr. Barnes: When we questioned the Health minister about potential abuses of a very generous sick leave policy for AHS managers, she absurdly claimed that we were forcing sick people to go to work at hospitals. But the data is clear. The longest list of entries is from Calgary's administrative building. The second longest is from Edmonton's downtown office tower, far away from the front lines. Is the minister at all concerned about the hundreds of upper level managers and bureaucrats far exceeding the Alberta average for sick time while earning full pay?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister will, I'm sure, answer the remaining questions, but I really must take this opportunity to say once again that the outrageous statement by the member opposite suggesting that hard-working employees of AHS are somehow engaging in fraudulent behaviour is outrageous.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Ms Notley: It is slanderous, and he should be in this Legislature today apologizing.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, just a year ago AHS believed the excessive sick leave was such a serious problem that they instituted a program to curb it, and it's still a problem. Before getting elected, the NDP opposition was harshly critical of waste and, as the Government House Leader said, the systemic inefficiencies that have plagued AHS from the beginning. Now that the Health minister has her chance to run the system, is she incapable of admitting that waste exists, or is she just incapable of fixing it?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I was on the radio this morning with the member opposite, certainly, the radio host asked: do you have any evidence to back up your claims that people are being fraudulent? And the member opposite said: anecdotal evidence. That's another word for gossip. If he wants to talk evidence, I've got evidence. The average sick leave for non-union Canadian workers last year in Canada was seven days. In Alberta Health Services it was six and a half. The use of sick days at AHS is lower on average than any other health authority across western Canada, including smaller jurisdictions. I'm sorry. Enough making up facts and accusations. Time for the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that we're talking about high-level bureaucrats taking weeks of paid sick leave and Albertans work hard to pay for a health system that should be there when they need it, Albertans have told us that they expect their health system to be accountable, efficient, and well run. They are tired of having more of their hard-earned dollars soaked up by a bureaucratic and top-heavy system instead of getting to the front lines. The same old mismanagement has to end. Since the buck stops with the minister, what is she going to do to restore accountability and tackle the widespread inefficiency happening under her watch?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's continue with more truths. AHS workers can be asked for a sick note for missing as little as one single day. The member opposite said it was four months. Not true. The supervisors have discretion to allow for longer periods of time, to a maximum of 10 days. Again, four months: not true. Non-union employees, which are being referred to, include intensive care unit managers, food service supervisors, clinical practice leads, and nurse practitioners. These people work first hand, front lines. The member opposite should apologize. It's clear that he doesn't understand health care.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Budget 2016

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 remains a disappointment. As another layer is peeled away, taxpayers realize this budget will cost them a lot. Mayors, reeves, and councillors work hard to lessen the impact on their citizens, but they're just finding out that the NDP government budgeted for an increase in the education tax. To the Finance minister: without a carbon tax rebate to help Albertans pay increased property taxes, and higher food, clothing, and consumer goods costs, how can you say that families will be sheltered from your carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, when it comes to the education property tax, we need to be clear. We were clear with all Albertans, including municipalities, that the budget for education and particularly schooling would be increased by 2 per cent plus enrolment. We used the same formula that was introduced by that member's party in 2013, the 32 per cent formula.

The distribution of that tax was done also using the exact same formula. So, yes, that has resulted in changes, but this is all stuff that we were very clear was going to happen, and it was using the formulas that were in place all along.

Mr. McIver: Well, the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton are less happy than the Premier.

Alberta's coal industry employs 7,000 people and supports government programs and services through the royalties and taxes it pays. The government would rather lock billions of dollars of value in the ground and lay off industry workers than invest in technology that would provide a future for the industry, using clean technology, like Saskatchewan, and market it globally. To the Minister of Finance: since we know from your budget jobs plan that it subtracts 7,000 coal jobs from Alberta, can you be just as exact in telling us where 7,000 new jobs will be added for these same Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, you know, the hon. member would prefer that we throw good money after bad with more investments in carbon capture and storage. Alberta has done its fair share on carbon capture and storage, and now we're going to actually diversify the economy and invest in renewables. Many of the world's largest financial institutions already know that coal is yesterday's news. The New York Times, numerous banks stated that they wanted to transition from dirty coal to clean, renewable energy. This is yesterday's political party peddling for us yesterday's news.

Mr. McIver: Speaking of yesterday's political party, as we look across the prairies to Manitoba, we find hope and opportunity. In Alberta we'll have to wait three more years. The next government can quickly eliminate some of the NDP's damaging policies, but the debt Albertans are saddled with won't go away so easily. We know the Finance minister was wrong about Alberta's credit rating. We know Albertans brace for a budget jobs plan that will cost taxpayers money without creating many jobs. To the Minister of Finance: how many years will it take for industry to replace the tens of thousands of jobs your government has chased out of Alberta with your damaging public policies?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The proposition put forward here actually is not close to the truth. We will be building the economy by investing over $34 billion for capital investments over five years, the biggest capital flow that's going to take place. We're going to diversify the economy, and we're going to see a hundred thousand jobs as a result of the environment that we provide for private-sector employers to bring those jobs back that they did not diversify.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Care System Employee Sick Leave

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Alberta Liberals released statistics on sick leave at Alberta Health Services through FOIP which show that the number of United Nurses of Alberta members, AUPE auxiliary, and Health Sciences Association of Alberta members on long-term disability has doubled or more in the last three years, and so have the costs. This is a clear and troubling symptom of serious issues within the Alberta Health Services culture. Two weeks ago I asked the Minister of Health if she would commit to surveying Alberta Health Services employees to better understand the issues and the culture. To the minister: will you now commit to that survey and make public the result?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: It is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to commend the member on his concern for the health and safety of our health care workers. It's a shame we can't say the same about our Official Opposition. We know that the use of sick days by both union and non-union employees at AHS is below the national average and the average for western Canada as well. Certainly, we are in the process of developing an updated survey. This happens usually every two years. The tender is out right now, and I'll be happy to discuss further details in later questions.

Dr. Swann: Our rates may be comparable, Mr. Speaker, but they've doubled or tripled in the last three years. I think that bears some serious investigation. Given that information on sick leave, though, is only tracked by union designation, not profession, and these unions represent thousands of employees in many different professions, will Alberta Health Services ensure that data are now collected by profession so we can actually identify what the problems are in each of the professions instead of a whole union reporting its data?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. I do commend the member for acknowledging that employees that have long-term disabilities have legitimate health concerns that have been assessed and identified by physicians. Yes, the number of nurses that have been assessed for long-term disability did grow substantially during the previous government, and that trend did continue for the first year of this government. It's a cause for concern, and it underlines the need for us to provide stability and improve patient care by finding efficiencies. We will certainly have conversations with the staff groups that represent those workers and discuss how best to use the information.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the minister comment on how the ballooning numbers of absent staff have affected access and quality of care in our health system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, when somebody calls in sick, somebody does cover off that shift for the person who's ill. Our number one driver is to make sure that patients are safe and that they are well staffed. Obviously, when somebody is away sick, there is a need for bringing in additional staff to cover off those shifts. In terms of citizens' safety and well-being – the question was around health care outcomes – that is not something that we should have to be overly concerned about. We are always making sure that we have our shifts covered.

2:10 Gender Equality Initiatives

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I continue to hear from constituents who are so glad that we created a stand-alone Ministry of Status of Women. Yet, at the same time, these constituents remind me that Alberta still ranks very low on the gender equity indicators, and we need to take concrete action to change this. To the Minister of Status of Women: what new investments is the government making in this budget to support women throughout the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Yesterday many of us celebrated the 100th anniversary of the first women in our province getting the right to vote. We know that our government, our economy, and our province are stronger when women are part of the decision-making. A hundred years ago Alberta took a major step toward equality, but as the member mentioned, until women earn the same wages as men for the same work, until women can walk down the street at night without fearing for their safety, we've still got work to do. That's why Status of Women is working to support women in getting good jobs, increase the number of women in leadership positions, and end violence against women and girls.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the representation of women in leadership positions is still severely lacking throughout the province, again to the Minister of Status of Women: what is your ministry doing to ensure a more equal representation of women in senior leadership roles in both the public and private sectors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's women are smart and hard working, so it just doesn't make sense that there are so few of them represented in leadership roles in our province. We're not interested in perpetuating the old boys' club of a hundred years ago. We want to get the best person for the job every time. We will work to identify, recruit, and train talented women for leadership positions in the civil service. We will be working to make child care more accessible and affordable as our government finances permit, which will make it easier for women to succeed in the workplace.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that women are also underrepresented on our province's agencies, boards, and commissions, again to the same minister: what are you doing to ensure that we are increasing the representation of women on our province's ABCs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an excellent question. When it comes to getting more women in leadership positions, it's up to the government to lead by example. I'm proud to be part of the first gender-balanced cabinet in Canada. We know that when women are at the table, they bring a different perspective. As a result the decisions will be better for all Albertans. In our business plan we are setting targets to increase the percentage of women on Alberta's agencies, boards, and commissions to 50 per cent by the end of our mandate. It's time that Alberta's government looked more like the people it represents.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, under the Finance minister's watch we are running a deficit of $10.4 billion on the operational side and over $14 billion on a consolidated basis. This is the largest deficit in Alberta's history by far. The minister has repeatedly blamed low oil prices for all of the ills of the government's balance sheet meltdown, but we know that his big-spending predecessors couldn't even balance the budget at $100 oil. Can the minister tell us at what price oil would need to be before the record-spending budget this year could be balanced?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to take a question from the shadowy Finance critic across here. What I can say is that we've built $40 into our budget this year, and we have a price cushion in there, taking it down to $36. In doing that and with the investments we have planned in this province as well as the diversification initiatives that will help create the conditions for 100,000 jobs in this province, we will get to balance in year 2024. That's my goal.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the minister sat on the budget cushion.

Oil prices would need to exceed $120 a barrel for the budget to be balanced this year under the NDP's spending plan. The government's excuses just don't hold water. It's obvious that we have a chronic spending problem in this province. Will the minister admit that we should at least be able to balance the budget this year if oil was $100 a barrel?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. The failed neo-liberal policies put forward by this side of the House all the time got us into this mess. We will balance the budget when the economy improves when we diversify this economy, which wasn't done under previous governments.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Shadowy answers from the minister, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Wildrose repeatedly warned the minister during the last budget debate that his revenue projections were grossly optimistic and that he would hit his debt limit and that this massive debt plan would mean an expensive downgrade to our credit rating and given that the Wildrose was, unfortunately, correct and we are now concerned about the effects that an eventual $100 billion debt would have, in the hypothetical universe where the minister is still in charge and the budget balances itself in 2024, how much debt could Albertans be looking at in 2024?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. The three-year fiscal plan we talk about has an accumulated debt limit there. We are talking about trying to take measures that will help us in these difficult economic times. We'll invest in jobs, we'll diversify our economy, and we will get back to balance when the economy improves and when we invest in this province.

The Speaker: Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm afraid I've been scooped once again.

Forestry is one of Alberta's top renewable export industries, known for being a reliable and sustainable employer through good times and bad. As oil prices remain low and we lean on forestry and agriculture to further diversify Alberta's economy and create new jobs, we need to support the growth by reducing risk. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: in a year that will continue to see record-breaking drought conditions, why did your government think it was good idea to cut wildfire management funding by $400 million?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are tremendously proud of the excellent work of the fire crews who have been assisting with local communities this week. Certainly, we continue to make the commitment. The Premier restated that today, that we absolutely – absolutely – will ensure that the money that needs to be spent to protect the communities and forests will be done. We've continued to commit to baseline funding, but we will add in emergency funds if needed, the exact same funding structure from right across this country with other provinces.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this year will most likely be a bad one for wildfires in Alberta and given that you cut specific funding for wildfire management, to the minister: how will you protect the livelihoods of Alberta's forestry industry producers if you won't fund disaster relief specifically for them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. Certainly, being from Slave Lake, I get it. I get what fires are about. I dealt with it. I watched my community deal with it. I watch them continue to recover. I can say that this government is committed to making sure that that does not happen. We are committed to protecting Albertans. This is about safety, and we will continue to be committed to safety.

Mr. Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's air tanker contracts have been reduced from 123 days to 93 days this year and given that these tankers will leave Alberta when they are hired elsewhere with solid budgets for wildfire management, to the minister: who be left to fight Alberta's wildfires this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks again for the question. The main period for fighting forest fires is mid-May to mid-August, and last year 96 per cent of wildfires were in these three months. We have air tanker contracts in place for this time, but having said that, if we need additional support, we'll extend the contract. We have relationships with other provinces, with other agencies, right across there, and we are fully committed that if Albertans need support in terms of fighting fires across this province, they will have it.

The Speaker: Hon. members on the government side, during the second response you were hitting the tables, and I couldn't clearly hear the second response that the minister was giving. I want you to be conscious of that in the future.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Education Funding Formula

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By law parents are their children's guardians and the decision-makers when it comes to their education. This government tried to pass an amendment to a motion to allow the Minister of Education to deny the parental right to educational choice based on his interpretation of whether or not that choice was available in the public system. To the Minister of Education: will the government admit that this was a poorly thought out amendment, or does it really believe that the minister and the public education system should be the government's twin gatekeepers, chosen to override parental choice in education in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Speaker. Clearly, every child in Alberta deserves a world-class education that enriches their life and prepares them for a career in a diverse economy. Budget 2016 maintains the stable funding for key public services that were introduced in 2015. As you can see from our budget, the current funding formulas are moving forward. That's the funding formula that we're using to fund all schools – including private, charter, and home-schools – moving forward in this year's budget.

Mr. Smith: I'm not sure how that answers the question, Mr. Speaker.

Given that some education stakeholders want to defund independent schools and they consider that more than $155 million in the budget for independent schools is up for grabs and given that a recent report concludes that independent schools saved taxpayers about $750 million in the past five years and since parental choice is a fundamental component of our education system, will the Minister of Education send a clear message that this funding is not up for grabs and that he will protect parental rights and the public purse?

Ms Hoffman: It's just that I'm so good at reading minds, Mr. Speaker, that I answered the question in my first response.

But to say it again, as you can see from the budget, the current funding formulas are in place for the next school year as well. We're moving forward with the exact same funding formulas that we have for public, for Catholic, for francophone, for private, charter, and home-schooling. Our government supports the critical role that parents play in their child's education. The proof is in the budget.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister did not approve the ReThink charter school application because he thinks the Calgary public system already offers a similar alternative and since that decision is consistent with the intent of the amendment to Motion 504, but given that this minister is quoted on the AHEA website as saying that he will withdraw this amendment, will this minister confirm for Albertans that his government will withdraw the amendment, clear up the confusion between his words and his actions, and revisit his decision regarding the ReThink charter school application?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the application was received by the minister's office, and the minister has taken the act and the legislation that governs it very seriously as he moved forward in reviewing that application. I understand that there's a desire that it be reviewed, but at this time the minister's decision clearly stands that he is planning on moving forward. He's made a decision on that. Certainly, what was said by the minister about the amendment stands true.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Government Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

A... challenge is gasoline price. At any given time we pay on average 20 cents more per litre than the rest of the province. Not only does that impact our personal travel costs, but the increased costs of transporting goods and services is passed on to us in higher prices for everything.

That was the NDP Member for Peace River. With the new carbon tax we know that the NDP will just make everything worse for everyone in northern Alberta. To the Premier: can she please explain to the Member for Peace River and to all northern Albertans why she is raising the price of everything when we already pay so much more?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, you know, of course, our climate leadership plan will help create a modern and diversified economy, protect our environment, and improve access to new markets, which is exactly what we need. Unlike our government, the opposition continues to deny the science of climate change, to ignore the science, and pretend that one of our biggest challenges just doesn't exist.

Mr. Speaker, we have a very robust rebate program for lower and middle-income individuals. We will be making investments in communities, remote communities, municipalities, and others through the climate leadership plan. These are all initiatives that...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: It's too bad those rebates won't match how much extra it's going to cost.

Given that late last week I received word from a resident of the Minister of Energy's constituency that he had just closed down his oil field trucking business and laid off 35 people, some of which were owner/operators that won't show up on the unemployment statistics, can the Premier explain how higher taxes and sitting quietly on tanker bans on our west coast will help these Albertans who are now out of work?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan will ensure that we are diversifying the economy and ensure that we are positioned to compete as a province in the industries of tomorrow with investments in renewables, in energy efficiency, which are good construction jobs. There will be a number of new investments in the economy. They are investments that the Official Opposition rejects. There will be a number of new investments in oil and gas innovation and so on. Those are initiatives that the Official Opposition rejects.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, given that I have asked the Health minister multiple questions on the Grande Prairie regional hospital and seeing as the people in Peace Country deserve a straight answer to their concerns, I will ask this question again: is there any new information on the completion date and any scope-of-care reductions on the Grande Prairie hospital, and can we get a definitive answer to this question?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As is evidenced from times in the past where I have reached out personally over the phone to give a modified timeline, I certainly did that. If we do have any updates – I'll ask for one today – that are different from the information I've provided to you and the community previously, we'll certainly follow up with you and . . .

Mr. Loewen: What about the House? Provide the House.

Ms Hoffman: Sure. I can provide the House as well.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Legal Aid and Petition on Chestermere City Council

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, Legal Aid is a critical service to Albertans, and a 16 per cent increase in its budget over the past three years indicates that. But last fall's funding increase also raised lawyer fees to $92 per hour. To the Justice minister: will this year's $2.5 million increase provide more service, or will it just give lawyers a raise?

The Speaker: The hon. Justice minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, our government is incredibly supportive of Legal Aid, which is why they received increases last year and again this year despite the difficult economic times. You know, the budget last year wasn't actually tied to the interim measures we did with Legal Aid. We worked with them to increase some of the tariff rates, and that was because Legal Aid was unable to retain lawyers to represent clients in those matters, so we needed to do something about that, and we did.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Minister of Justice announced a comprehensive review of Legal Aid last fall and given that this review includes a governance model that would see the department hire its own legal aid lawyers and given that the current funding of almost $70 million could fund 200 to 250 in-house lawyers dedicated to legal aid, again to the Justice minister: what has the review recommended regarding hiring lawyers versus contracting them, and will you commit today to make this review public?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, that review of Legal Aid is still underway. As is our policy with most programs, we like to review things as we're going along to make sure that they are meeting the objectives we set out for them to meet. One of the things we're looking at is the governance model. Another thing we're looking at is the delivery model, whether or not it's more effective to use tariff lawyers or to use staff lawyers. You know, I'm not going to make the decision in advance of having the information, but when we get that information back, then we will make a decision.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Municipal Affairs minister received a petition signed by almost one-third of the electors of the city of Chestermere on March 24 and given that the people of Chestermere who signed the petition are asking for an inquiry into the affairs of their municipality and given that a due process is occurring to verify the petition as per the Municipal Government Act, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when can the citizens of Chestermere expect to hear that you are calling an inquiry as per their request?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, I have great respect for the autonomy of municipalities, and when the people who elected them are asking me for their assistance in ensuring that they are accountable, I'm happy to help them with that. We are continuing to follow – the processes are in place to review that petition. As you are aware, it does take a while to go through those very many names and to verify them all. However, as soon as that process is complete, I look forward to providing that information to the people who submitted the petition.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would be remiss to not remind you that the supplementary questions should be tied back to the main. In the last instance that was not the case, and I'd ask that you do that in the future.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is taking action on reducing climate change by implementing the climate leadership plan. The opposition has been putting very misleading information on the record and to the public. They have cited non Alberta-specific data from years past when, in fact, the author of the study they cite actually repudiated the use of his work. Can the minister of environment put the real facts on the record with respect to the carbon levy and the climate leadership adjustment rebates?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, today I had the opportunity to visit the home of Ammanuel and Naomi Abera, whose family will be benefiting from the carbon rebate. It was a pleasure to share with them how the rebate will work, and I would like to share the information with the Chamber. The rebates are designed to offset the average cost of a carbon levy for low- and middle-income households and will be dependent on a family's net income. Rebate cheques will be issued beginning January 2017. A couple earning up to $95,000 per year will receive $300. Parents will receive an additional $30 per child up to a maximum of four children. Cheques will be delivered based on the amount of the cheque and on a schedule similar to the GST rebate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
First supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Minister. To the same minister: why is a carbon levy an important component of the climate leadership plan? Why is it important to take action on climate change now, when Albertans are struggling?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and to underline to this House that climate change is one of the biggest collective threats facing the planet, and it's real. We're taking action so that we can have a resilient economy and a resilient environment. You know, Alberta is on the front lines of severe and catastrophic weather that is only getting worse because of climate change, which is real. The Insurance Bureau of Canada reported that insurers paid out $3.5 billion in 2013 due to record-breaking catastrophic climate events, $1.8 billion in Alberta alone. Climate change is real, so we are taking action.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that British Columbia has had a carbon levy in place since 2008 and given that many constituents have asked me if B.C. has seen a reduction in emissions, can the same minister tell me the results of the carbon levy in B.C.?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the member is quite right that there has been carbon pricing since 2008 in British Columbia. As of 2014 fuel use in that province dropped by 16 per cent. Over the same period fuel use rose by 3 per cent in the rest of Canada, and energy-related greenhouse gas emissions in B.C. dropped by 6 per cent overall. Those are the types of results we anticipate we will see here in Alberta. That must be why the Leader of the Official Opposition also supports a price on carbon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's $3 billion carbon tax is going to raise the price on everything for everyone, including our postsecondary institutions. It will cost more to heat and light dorms, teaching areas, and cafeterias. This government's compensation for the tuition freeze fails to fully cover revenues lost, because the carbon tax means operating costs will rise. To the minister: how are postsecondary institutions supposed to cope with a potentially disastrous combination?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've been very clear that a portion of the levy will be reinvested into the economy, and that is how we are going to ensure we've got a made-in-Alberta solution. We must take action on climate change. There is no solution that would have us do nothing, as the Official Opposition would have us do. That is not an option. We will ensure that our economy is resilient and that we are recycling those revenues back into efficiency throughout the economy.

Mr. Taylor: Given that building Alberta's knowledge infrastructure is a key part of maintaining our competitive edge as a province, especially in these difficult economic times, and given that the combination of increasing costs and frozen revenues lands our postsecondary institutions between a rock and a hard place, will the Minister of Education please make it clear to Albertans that he does not expect and has not heard about any pending layoffs at postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting. Apparently, we need to build more knowledge infrastructure so that the member opposite knows the difference between the Minister of Education and the Minister of Advanced Education.

Given that there was some false information, which is not a surprise, of course, given the information that we've had from his questions – the amount that the government is giving to postsecondary education is in fact going up under our government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, until I call you, okay? Second supplemental.

Mr. Taylor: I guess I didn't really get an answer, but given that there will be no layoffs or internal adjustments to compensate for rising costs of the new carbon tax and frozen revenues, there may be a need for the government to provide public postsecondary institutions with extra funds again. Can the minister tell the Assembly where these extra funds will come from, if they'll be offset by savings elsewhere or borrowed or raised through new tax hikes on Edmonton, Calgary, or all Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we have already made the commitment. There will be $2.2 billion of investment in green infrastructure and a further $45 million in energy efficiency programs. We fully expect that there will be municipalities, hospitals, schools, and others availing themselves of those programs. Of course, the Leader of the Official Opposition is not only offside the largest employers in his own riding on the economy-wide carbon pricing; this Official Opposition also wants to stop us from investing in families, in efficiency, in diversification, renewables, innovation in the oil and gas sector. They'd rather do something else. They haven't said what. They haven't been honest about it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
I believe we are at Calgary-Lougheed.

Indigenous Relations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans can be proud that the late Premier Don Getty's Metis Settlements Act was three decades ahead of this week's ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada. Now, back in September 2015 a ministerial order was signed involving three Métis settlements in a joint business venture. To the Minister of Indigenous Relations: your predecessor was to appoint an inspector to review progress on the order's directions, and the long-awaited inspector was due to be named over a month ago. Can you please assure the three Métis settlements and all Albertans that the inspector is on the job and executing all of their duties?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. I'm very happy to report that we have undergone a round of hiring, first an initial round of hiring, in which we were unsatisfied with the results, and a second round of hiring, in which we proactively engaged a number of companies in order to provide bids on the position of inspector. The inspector has indeed been hired and is undertaking the task as we speak.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the Métis settlements and their communities have indeed waited for six months for an inspector to even start a review and given that it's only fair for every interested community member as well as each of the three Métis settlements to resolve these issues as quickly as possible and given that the issues involved in the business arrangement could provide pivotal future direction for other Métis settlements, to the minister: can you provide a definitive timeline for the inspector to complete the review and report on it publicly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. Of course, this is a task that I'd say requires an in-depth examination of the history of the joint venture agreement. We have asked the company involved to do so in a very prudent manner, and we expect them to do so. We will expect that result to come out when it is appropriate for it to come out, not on our timeline.

Mr. Rodney: Given that last October the Premier appointed 10 Albertans to the Premier's Advisory Committee on the Economy and given that when I asked in this very House why Alberta's indigenous community was not represented on the committee, the Premier agreed that there should be a role for indigenous leaders but wanted an opportunity meet with them "a bit more" first, Premier, have you had enough time to meet with these indigenous leaders to determine the role that they can play on your Advisory Committee on the Economy as well as on other agencies, boards, and commissions?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question because I think it's very timely. One of the pieces of work that I have engaged in since I became Minister of Indigenous Relations is to ask exactly the level of representation that has been on the boards and committees. It turns out that the previous government has failed dismally in every possible way to appoint an appropriate number of people from indigenous communities on the agencies, boards, and committees. We have started an internal mechanism of getting references from all of the indigenous communities and bringing forward people to stand for all of these committees, and we'll do so.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Job Creation and Municipal Funding

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Mr. Speaker, municipalities are satisfied with many aspects of the new budget, the Alberta jobs plan. Given that strengthening local economies is a great way to support job creation, can the Minister of Municipal Affairs explain how municipalities, their economies, and their residents are being supported in the Alberta jobs plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, municipalities are so essential to providing support to Albertans, and I'm very proud of the support we've provided to municipalities in order for them to do so. Our government recognizes that it is very important to have core infrastructure for healthy communities, and that is why we're moving forward and supporting the infrastructure that municipalities need through our $34 billion capital plan. We're investing more than $34 billion in necessary roads, schools, transit, and other public infrastructure to provide communities with the facilities they need while helping keep thousands of Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that municipal leaders were frustrated to see that the planned increase of $50 million in the municipal sustainability initiative was cancelled and given that many municipalities in Alberta have infrastructure deficits, to the same minister: why was the reduction made when municipalities so badly need the money to complete local projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, the fact is that that small reduction happened, but we continue to move forward by supporting the infrastructure municipalities need, to build a more resilient and diversified economy for the Alberta families we all serve. Considering the decrease in revenue we had following the collapse in oil prices, we maintained tremendously strong support for municipalities in the Alberta jobs plan. In fact, we continue to be the highest funder of municipalities across all provinces in the country, unlike any other provincial government in Canada.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that both Mayor Nenshi of Calgary and Mayor Iveson of Edmonton along with the AUMA stated last week that they believe MSI needs to be more stable and predictable so they can plan for any increases or decreases, how is the minister working to ensure that municipalities have the stable, long-term, predictable funding that they deserve?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Our government certainly recognizes the importance of stable, long-term, predictable funding for communities right across Alberta. The MSI agreements are actually set to expire in the next 12 months, and we are already talking to our municipal partners about what we can do to renegotiate. Again, no provincial government provides more support to municipalities than this government, and we will continue to work with our partners and continue to provide strong support to our municipal partners.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with the Routine.

The Speaker: Members, we had, I believe, two points of order today.

The first one was at approximately 2 o'clock. The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a point of order under section 23(h) of the standing orders, "makes allegations against another Member," and (i), "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." Shortly after 2 o'clock the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was on his feet asking a question with respect to sick leave of AHS managers. In the response to the question the Premier, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, rose and made an accusation that was wildly untrue. What she said was – and, unfortunately, I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I am paraphrasing from memory – that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said that members of AHS had acted fraudulently. Never at any point in time, be it inside or outside of this House, did the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat say that employees, managers of AHS had acted fraudulently.

Now, there was a point of order on a very similar question yesterday, where there was discussion around the use of the word “deception,” but that is significantly different than making an accusation that the member had said that AHS employees had acted fraudulently. I think it's reasonable that the member stand and withdraw those comments because certainly those types of comments are not going to create order in this place, and the accusation that she made was not anywhere close to the truth.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the point of order raised by the hon. Official Opposition House Leader, I strongly disagree with his interpretation of the facts. Now, if we actually go back to what the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat said on April 19, it is this:

Clearly, this Health minister is more interested in protecting entitled AHS managers than actually improving our wasteful and ineffective health system. It makes me sick to know that under this government's watch wait times for cancer surgeries are climbing while millions are spent on a system that rewards AHS managers for deception. Again to the Health minister: will you fix the broken system, that rewards waste and abuse at Albertans' expense?

Mr. Speaker, clearly, what the hon. member is saying is that people are abusing the system, that they are deceiving the government and they're deceiving AHS, and that means that they are guilty of fraud. It's very clear – it's very clear – and in my view there's an absolute straight line between the member's statements and an allegation of fraud. If you go back to April 13, the hon. Official Opposition Finance critic stood up and said on another matter but directly related, “There's plenty of evidence of fraud.” So it's been said on the other side more than once.

It's very clear that the Premier's interpretation is a reasonable conclusion that one could draw. There's no doubt in my mind that the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat was making allegations of fraud in this House, and he has no evidence to prove those allegations in any way. I would respectfully argue that there is, in fact, a difference between members, but there is certainly no point of order.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what we are discussing here is the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, and the question is: did he accuse Alberta Health Services employees of fraud? That is the question. That is what the hon. Premier said. That's the question that's before us. All this other stuff that's being brought forward by the Government House Leader is irrelevant. I was sitting beside the member, and he did not accuse anybody of fraud. That is what the Premier accused him of doing, which is not true.

The Speaker: I note the particular sensitivity of this kind of matter. I was intending in every way that I would make best efforts to in fact give an immediate response to points of order when they were raised. However, with the nature of this one, I again will exercise my option to report on it tomorrow.

I believe there was a second point of order.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to your ruling.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cooper: I rise now under Standing Order 23(j), “uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder,” and in fact we could even use (i) here, “imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member.”

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just reference House of Commons Procedure and Practice, chapter 13, a very small section here on page 618 on unparliamentary language.

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly [prohibited]. Personal attacks, insults and obscenities are not in order.

Then on page 619 it speaks specifically to whether there is a catch-all list of parliamentary language.

The codification of unparliamentary language has proven impractical as it is the context in which words or phrases are used that the Chair must consider when deciding whether or not they should be withdrawn.

In this case the Member for Calgary-Fort – some will refer to him as the Minister of Finance – called the Member for Strathmore-Brooks the shadowy Minister of Finance. Whether it was the shadowy Minister of Finance, the shadowy critic, whatever he used, it all remains the same. The word “shadowy” implies many things, which is exactly why it should be considered unparliamentary in this case and why the member should withdraw it. It can be said that it implies criminality, that it raises questions of the member's ethics, that it implies dark places and things that lurk in the night. [interjections] There are a number of implications with the use of the word “shadowy” that do not create order in this House, as we can see from the other side, so I respectfully request that the minister withdraw the comments and refrain from using them in the future.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the point of order made by the hon. Official Opposition House Leader, it does seem that he's sort of arguing a different side of the case than he argued in the last point of order. In other words, in the first case he's arguing that unless you say exactly the word, in that case “fraud,” you can't infer that from the context. Now he's saying that in the context it could be meant to infer that something is criminal or so on. So he's arguing against interpreting words in the first case, and he's arguing for interpreting words in this case.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, in this particular Assembly of ours I've learned that you've got to know when to hold them and you've got to know when to fold them, so on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I withdraw the words and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Orders of the Day Government Motions

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 19: Mr. Westhead]

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity today to stand in front of the government and respond to the government's very first – very first – complete budget. It's only taken about 12 months. You'll no doubt be surprised that I don't really believe in the vision that they have put out for the province and, instead, fundamentally believe that the vision of this government is going to create a tremendous amount of hardship for Albertans, for Alberta families. I think it's going to be very difficult, and it, frankly, puts our long-term prosperity at risk. Alberta has had a tremendous history of allowing people to benefit from their hard work and have one of the best qualities of life in the world, and I see that this budget clearly puts us down a road of not being able to enjoy that anymore. That's the situation.

We were hoping, Mr. Speaker – we remain very hopeful – to see a very reasonable path back to balance, back to balanced books, a reasonable path, actually, to set out how they would possibly get back to balance. We were hoping to see our government turn away from an approach on the economy that can only be described as ideological no matter what the situation is, no matter how impractical it appears. For the people that are unemployed in Alberta, for the people that are unemployed in Calgary or Leduc or Nisku, for those people it's completely impractical and impractical, and this ideological bent to do whatever it is to put forward their thoughts is simply not good for Alberta. It simply will, as it goes from legislative to budget, hurt Albertans and hurt Alberta families.

We were hoping for some recognition about debt, and I think most Albertans recognize that debt is not good. Debt can be good and can be necessary, and sometimes it is necessary, but for certain, Mr. Speaker, here we have a situation where the debt levels are rising to such an amount that Albertans will not be able to pay for what they want to pay for, which is ballet lessons or hockey lessons or, frankly, the opportunity to put food on the table or have a new vehicle, as the Premier has suggested that they should do, find a fuel-efficient vehicle. They will have to pay their money towards interest that this government is racking up because they have no control and no interest at all in where they can save money.

We saw today that the only cut they brought forward was to fight forest fires, to play some number games with the budget when they know it's not even a close air of reality to what will be spent on forest fires here in Alberta this year, significantly less in this year, significantly less than any amount needed in the last 10 years. Why would they do that? Because they're hiding all the money they're putting into different ideological programs and ignoring the things that Albertans need: fighting fires. I saw what the Slave Lake fire did to the community of Slave Lake, and I'm shocked that an NDP member from Slave Lake would not voice her opinion to cabinet about this. Seeing what happened as a result of not enough assets to take care of our communities is simply negligence.

We were also hoping, Mr. Speaker, to see some way that this government was going to move forward and help Alberta families that are sitting around their kitchen tables saying: what in the world is going on with this government? We've had 100,000 job losses. There are over 100,000 people in Alberta that are out of work, and what's the government's answer? A $5,000 job-subsidy plan that didn't create any jobs whatsoever except the minister's. Of course, in January they bragged about that program being one of the three great achievements of this NDP government in the eight months previous, and what did they do after that great achievement came out in the news? They cancelled the program because they had nothing to brag about. Nothing. And that's what this job plan that this NDP government has brought in is. It's nothing. Nothing to help Albertans. They call it a jobs plan. I call it a no jobs whatsoever plan. The amount of debt they've racked up, $58 billion, and the insignificant, paltry sum they've put towards any type of job-creation program should be absolutely embarrassing.

Mr. Speaker, while the members are making fun on the other side, people are losing their jobs, and they don't have enough money, and what happens? They're still laughing. This is a serious issue. People cannot afford – even though you have these plush jobs where you make hundreds of thousands of dollars per year on the backs of taxpayers, people are unemployed in this province. People cannot find jobs. It's embarrassing that you would take that as so trivial as to laugh. Totally embarrassing. In our belief, this budget simply fails Albertans completely, and it racks up more debt than we've ever seen. It has the biggest deficit this province will ever see as long as the NDP leave quickly. This is not helping Alberta families. This is not helping the moms and dads that want a better quality of life for their kids. The future is Alberta.

The future in Canada is Alberta families, and we need to support those families, whether it's when they don't have a job, so we fight with the federal government and make sure that they cover people that can't be covered in the current federal program on EI. They should stand up. I can't even hear them, and I'm sitting across from them. Stand up and talk to the federal government about supporting the jobs in Nisku, about supporting the families in Nisku and Leduc that don't have a job. What about all those families that can't get EI? You ever think about that? There are a lot of people, business owners that have closed their businesses, people that are unemployed because they don't have enough weeks and don't qualify because this federal government is so out of touch with Albertans.

It's time this NDP government woke up and supported the families in Alberta with real job-creation programs, not taxes that, frankly, will have to be paid by Alberta's families, by Alberta's children and moms and dads. They will do without because you have these grandiose schemes of how you're going to fix GHG emissions, although we're less than any state in the United States. It's embarrassing that you would think that we in Alberta can lead the world so significantly that we're going to damage our own economy. Now, I have no problem and I agree with you that we need to do something about climate change. We need to do something lockstep with the rest of the world, certainly with North America, but we need to do it together because what you're doing is that you're wrecking our economy to benefit nobody because we have such an insignificant amount of GHG emissions compared to anywhere else in North America.

Now, I know, Mr. Speaker, that they're not really listening to me except when they laugh, and I find that troubling because I don't think unemployment is a laughing matter for the families that are unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to start with the numbers. Last week we released a 10-point plan. You know, we were trying to help the government. We've been trying for a year to help this government. They reject our help. But we put forward a 10-point plan of practical recommendations to save Alberta's future, to make sure that we don't have these huge interest payments. Two billion dollars in three years we'll be paying in interest. Two billion dollars.

Now, I've never had a billion dollars. I don't think anybody in this place has had a billion dollars. But we're going to have to pay back a billion dollars, $2 billion. By the time this government is done, I would say that it's going to be a lot more, but let's just deal with what we know. Two billion dollars. That's $58,000 for every household in Alberta. That $58,000 is what you just put on the mortgages. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't you that did that; it was them that did that. That $58,000 is added to the mortgage. When you consider how much houses have fallen in value in Alberta, what does this mean, this extra $58,000? Albertans are taking a big hit from this government to fill their ideological purposes that, frankly, are not supporting Alberta families.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that 10-point plan put forward some practical solutions, and I was really hoping, especially in relation to the WCB holiday, that this government would take us up on it. It was simple: ideas on how to save $2 billion without losing one job. The WCB surplus right now is far beyond what they're required to hold in their bank account, billions of dollars sitting in a bank account doing nothing, that the government has access to. Yet you ignore our proposal when that $1.5 billion to $2 billion could help Alberta families stay employed. It was overtaxation. Businesses in Alberta paid it. I'm suggesting, we're suggesting that when you hire a new employee, you pay $1 a year for WCB. That's a good idea. I think employers would like that. It's their money anyway. It encourages them to hire people. But not even a whisper of saying: "Yeah. We'll look at that. How about that? That was a good idea." That's $2 billion of savings and not one penny saved, not one option taken up.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's clear I'm a fiscal conservative. My track record is clear. I believe that we should be better managers for Alberta families because the future is Alberta families and it's their money. It's not yours. It's not mine. It's not anybody's in this House unless we pay taxes. Some of us do, but it's a paltry sum compared to what Alberta families put in. We need to move towards a path of sustainability and balanced books. We need to turn around because we're going the wrong way. It's a road map, and you can see that that way is debt, debt, interest payments, low quality of life, and this way is balanced books instead of interest payments on hospitals, on all this debt we borrow, on all these buildings we do, which are necessary.

Let's just save a little bit, Mr. Speaker, so we don't have debt, so we don't have interest payments, because when we start paying interest, those payments can't be made to schools. They can't hire teachers because there's not an indefinite amount of money.

We saw a credit downgrade. Did anybody notice a credit downgrade in this place, Mr. Speaker? I noticed it. I've never seen a credit downgrade 24 hours after a budget before. That was pretty impressive. I would say that the NDP set a record on that. I've never seen that before. A full point down. A full point. What did it mean to the Minister of Finance? Aha. That doesn't matter. That doesn't matter. It's not going to affect anything.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it does affect things. When you have good credit, you get to borrow at a cheaper rate, which means that interest payments don't go towards those things we want and need. I want nurses. I want more teachers in Alberta. We deserve it. Alberta deserves it because we've worked hard for it. I don't want to pay interest for nothing, to big banks somewhere else. Sometimes I hear: "Oh, it's just interest. It's just interest. It's zero per cent, .5." It's $2 billion a year, $58,000 per household, $2,000 just to pay interest to every household. Every household in Alberta, a million of them – a million of them – has to pay $2,000 a year starting in three years just to pay for the interest payments at the low interest rates we get. Those payments will go up.

I find it shocking that nobody seems to care over there. Along with the carbon tax that's $3,000 that you're taking out when Albertans are unemployed, when Albertans are hurting, when they don't even know if they're going to have a job tomorrow, when they're going to the food bank. The demand for food banks has doubled. These are real issues.

I've worked soup kitchens. I've worked for nonprofits. Nobody in this place has a monopoly on caring for other people; we just think we get at it a different way. I'm just suggesting that maybe in the future and maybe in the past look at some of our proposals. They're proposals that are good for Alberta. Maybe they're not perfect, but work with us. We're here to help. We're getting very nervous at the direction you're going, and, frankly, Albertans are, and you all know that. I hear it everywhere. I drive this province constantly, and I hear it in Tim Hortons. I hear it everywhere. Albertans are not pleased with the direction you're going.

I'm suggesting this: just consider the opposition proposals, yes, even from the third party and the fourth and the fifth. Consider our ideas. We were elected by Albertans. We represent Albertans, maybe not the same ones as you, but we do, and we're all in this together, and we need to work together to make Alberta better in the future and presently. We can't do that if you stick your head in the sand and don't listen. You put the blinders on, and you think you know everything. You don't. Neither do we, but working together for Albertans we can come up with some good ideas that will save Alberta, the future, which is so important.

One idea, Mr. Speaker, was a hiring freeze. They have 200,000 civil servants. We're not suggesting a hiring freeze for all civil servants, but we have 26,000 bureaucrats that work straight for the government and about 5,000 or 5,500 managers. Now, those aren't essential services. Why don't we just freeze those salaries right now and freeze the hiring right now? Through attrition, which is 8 to 10 per cent in all these departments a year, 8 to 10 per cent of the people turn over. They either retire or they quit and move. Why not just say for, you know, a year or two years: we're not going to hire any more people in those positions, but what we will do is that we'll hire from within. We'll reorganize from within. There'll be a mandate for the departments to reorganize instead of hiring new people, and within two years we're going to be at the same level, in essence, as British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you know this, but can you imagine that Alberta is 20 per cent more expensive than British Columbia? We have relatively the same population. That's on the population base. We spend about $10,800 per person for government services. It's going up. It's going way up. The Friendly Giant would say: way, way up. B.C. can do it for $8,800. Now, I wouldn't call B.C., British Columbia, the most capitalistic, free-market place in Canada. In fact, I think most Canadians would agree that it's not that. But how in the world can they have the same constitutional obligations, the same obligations to their people, yet do it 20 per cent less expensively?

I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker. It's because we operate the most expensive government in Canada, and these folks over here, the NDP government, are making it much more expensive. They talk about looking at empirical evidence and looking at the facts. Well, the facts clearly indicate that the NDP are going in the wrong direction. The facts clearly indicate that we have the most expensive government in Canada, and it's getting way, way more expensive. Who's paying for it? Alberta's families. They're paying for it through the unemployment line, through the food bank. They're paying for it, and they're going to continue to pay for it.

Four years. Mr. Speaker, this NDP government is going to cost us a lot more than four years. It's going to cost Albertans a lot of quality of life, and the biggest issue is that they're not even considering other options or even taking any input from anybody else in this Chamber. That is shameful, absolutely shameful.

Well, I think those things would be a good first step, just a wage freeze and a hiring freeze. Mr. Speaker, there's no question that we need more nurses, we need more doctors, we need more hospitals, we need better services. I want that. I really want that. I want our government service to be the best in the world, and it's not. I want our government service to be competitive. I don't want it to be the cheapest because I don't think that works well. I want it to give a return on investment to Albertans. I want to be proud of it. I'm proud of our nurses. I'm proud of our teachers. I'm proud that our teachers could operate, frankly, under that government for so long and be effective. I mean, we did go from number one in the world in education to number five or six in Canada, so they didn't do that good a job. In fact – well, I won't get into that right now. I'll wait until after May. But I'm surprised our teachers and nurses did as well as they did under that government's watch. I'm shocked that they feel at all like they want to go into work under this government's watch, truly.

Yes, there would be some tough decisions, Mr. Speaker. There's no question. There always have to be tough decisions when you decide who gets the priority. We also agree that there would be some programs that would have to be reviewed or reformed, but we need to make those decisions today because we're going so far down that way – and we need to go that way – that it's going to take a lot longer to get there.

Now, everybody knows what it's like to get in a car and go on a road trip, and I will assure you, Mr. Speaker, that that road trip we're going on right now is going to cost a lot, billions upon billions upon billions. You know, everybody says "billions" like it doesn't matter. It does matter. Every single penny of that billion dollars has to be made up by somebody, and it's not going to be made up by these folks because, frankly, they don't know what they're doing. It's going to be made up by Alberta families that pay taxes, that work hard, that want a better lifestyle, that want that money to go not towards government bureaucrats and, frankly, this NDP government. They want it to go to the things that their children want and need and that they want and need: a holiday, dance recitals, those things that everyday people want. That's what we're here for.

We're not here for ideological reasons. We're here to serve the people of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I can't say it enough. I'm not here for big banks. Now, I will never be here for big banks. I'm not here for big oil either. I work for Albertans, and I'm proud of it. So when people bring up companies in my riding, I'm okay with that because I don't work for the companies in my riding. I've made it clear every single year, every single day that I've worked for the people of Alberta, and I've done that for more than 10 years now. I don't work for them. I don't work for big oil. I work for the people of Alberta, and I'm proud of it.

What we're seeing from this NDP government is a failure to recognize this fiscal reality. Other jurisdictions have. In fact, Manitoba recognized it last night in a big way. Mr. Speaker, it's so obvious. I said that they don't know what they're doing, but I don't want to criticize, and I don't like throwing insults. I really want to work with them, and I find some of this discussion today not very – I'm not very happy about it. I don't think that's helpful. I think we're here together to serve Albertans, and I think we should do it in a respectful manner.

Just five months ago, Mr. Speaker, this government came in, and they said: "We're going to change the cap, the debt-to-GDP ratio, on borrowing. We're going to change the cap. It's not going to be 3 per cent or whatever the former government did. It's going to be 15 per cent. You know what? We're going to raise it just so we have more borrowing capacity, so we can borrow for important programs." Well, five months later they got rid of the cap. So why was it so important five months ago to set a cap at 15 per cent when today the cap is unlimited? You won. You have an NDP government. You can borrow all the money you want.

Mr. Fildebrandt: To infinity and beyond.

Mr. Jean: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To infinity and beyond. Frankly, that's scary.

Three hundred billion dollars, Mr. Speaker, $300 billion. Let me tell you where that number comes from. It comes from the start, the NDP government in Ontario, with the Liberals finishing it off. Today that's what Ontario owes, $300 billion. That's the path you're going on. Do you know how much money that is per month in interest? One billion dollars. You know, $1 billion: that's a lot of money. That's $1,000 for every household in Alberta, if it was in Alberta, $1,000 for every household in Alberta per month just to go towards interest payments. That's where we're going. I see it. It's right over there. It's not very far away, and truly we need to come closer, over here. We need to start.

The fact that after five months they would change their own law because they don't want to break it after they just made the law clearly indicates that they don't know what they're doing. And now they say: "Let's go to infinity and beyond on borrowing capacity. Let's borrow as much as we need because – you know what? – it's just paperwork." It's not paperwork, Mr. Speaker. First comes higher interest costs, then comes more unemployment. Then guess what businesses do. They move. That's what they do. That's what they're doing in Ontario.

When you have hydro costs that are outrageous, you have to move because you're not competitive. I'm going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that based upon all of my meetings with every single company in Alberta that deals with electricity: 200, 300 per cent. I'm not fearmongering; I'm telling you what the experts are telling me. Now, if you're manufacturing things in Alberta and your electricity input costs go up 300 per cent when you're already paying thousands of dollars to make these products and sell them in Alberta or elsewhere, guess what you're going to do? You're going to move.

Mr. Speaker, they can say: "Oh, this is just going to be passed on. It's going to be recycled, this carbon tax is going to be recycled in the economy." Yeah. Let's make math really simple. Let's take $3 billion and divide it by how many households there are in Alberta, 1 million households. Now, I'm no genius at math, but I can tell you that that's $3,000, right? It's pretty shocking when you think about it.

Now, the target that they released to get our finances back to black – I just wanted to point this out – is, frankly, unrealistic: 2024. It must be nice to be able to make plans that you're not going to participate in enforcing. Does this government really think that based upon the track they're going, because they're way down there, that track is going to bring them back to any kind of power or any kind of election? Do you think they're going to be back here, Mr. Speaker? It's nice to pass on jobs to other people. Well, that's what they're doing because they have no intention of doing anything but putting in their ideological positions – the carbon tax, the levies, the GHG – putting coal out, all these 6,000, 7,000 people out of work. By the way, I don't know if you know it, but I found out that coal workers make about $92,000 a year. Those are good jobs: 6,000, 7,000 Albertans unemployed with one stroke of the pen from this government. Wow. Talk about heartless.

Now, I'm hoping that after my great speech today and after all the members of the Wildrose caucus have an opportunity to address the NDP government today, they'll listen to us, and they'll say:

"You know what? I'm going to listen from now on. I'm going to listen the next time the Wildrose comes forward with a 12-point job action plan." Yes, that's right, Mr. Speaker. We also did that about a month ago. We came up with 12 great, common-sense ideas to create jobs in Alberta. How many of those ideas were picked up by the government? One.

Now I have to give them a compliment. Here you go; this is it. I do compliment them for reducing the small-business tax from 3 per cent to 2 per cent. See, Mr. Speaker? I can say nice things, too, and I will. When I see some good things from this government, I'm going to say that there are good things. That was a good thing. That creates employment. It's unfortunate, though, that this carbon tax is going to wipe out by at least 10 times anything that that small-business tax cut would have done: $3 billion compared to, I believe, $150 million is what one point off will do. There's no comparison. Businesses are going to be paying more. So this small-business tax cut, frankly, is just smoke and mirrors. That's all it is, just trying to change the channel, trying to appear balanced.

They're not balanced. This is an ideological agenda to bring in tax, tax, and more tax. I find that troubling because, ultimately, Albertans pay that. You know, I can understand that when you need to make changes and you need to modify your position on certain things, you have to bring in some taxes. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if you know it, but I'm not going to raise your taxes. I don't like taxes because somebody has to pay those taxes, and it's not these folks over here. It's Alberta families. It's moms and dads. The kids will go without.

We are set to be $58 billion in debt by the time of the next election. A $2 billion price tag per year just to cover the interest payments: that, to me, is outrageous, especially for a population of 4 million people. Mr. Speaker, just to equate it to what it means – and I'm hoping that all of the NDP government members are listening, no matter where they are – in two years, three years interest payments will be the largest government payment except for health, which is $20 billion, education, and social services.

What does that mean? Well, it means that more money will go towards interest payments than justice, keeping criminals off the street. More money will go towards interest payments. Now, I would like more money to go to justice in this province to make sure that we keep criminals off our streets, to make sure that – you know what? – Legal Aid has the opportunity to represent those people that deserve to be represented because people deserve a lawyer. People deserve justice, fair treatment, the rule of law, democracy. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I love democracy.

Seniors – you know, Mr. Speaker, seniors brought me here, in part – and agriculture: spending more money on interest payments than we are on seniors and agriculture. That's so shameful, and all we need to do is take a few pennies out of every dollar this government spends, a few pennies. We are spending more money in three years on interest payments than on seniors. Doesn't that make you shocked? It shocked me when I crunched the numbers. Agriculture, our second largest industry: we're going to be paying more on interest payments than we do for all of the agriculture department in Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Infrastructure department: more money than the Infrastructure department, not more money than they invest but more money than it costs for them to manage that. More money for interest payments than for Transportation, the entire transport department, that deals with every roadway, everything to do with transportation in this province. We're spending more money on interest payments.

All the government has to do is find a couple of cents in every dollar. I think all of us can do that. I'm prepared to do that. Are you?

Mr. Nixon: Albertans want us to do it.

Mr. Jean: Albertans want us to do that. They need us to do that.

Credit downgrades are coming. Oops. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I missed that by three days. I predicted it three months ago, but more are coming. This is not the end of it, folks. More credit downgrades are coming.

Interest payments will be higher. They have never been lower than they are today. As long as I've been alive – and I remember paying 18 per cent, Mr. Speaker, back in the '80s. I remember what the Trudeau Liberal government did to Alberta. It's doing it again – it's just a different first name – and you guys are going along for the ride. It's time to stand up for Alberta families. It's time to fight for Albertans. I cannot believe that nobody on that side sees interest payments as a challenge. Just when our economy needed a boost, what did we find that the NDP government has done? Raised taxes on everything for everybody.

I'm going to skip ahead, Mr. Speaker. I only plan to talk for 90 minutes today, but I want to talk a little bit about the $3 billion carbon tax because I keep hearing it and people talk about the $3 billion carbon tax. They say: 500 bucks; it's just going to cost 500 bucks. Well, I don't think 500 bucks is just. I think 500 bucks is a lot of money. Three billion dollars is a lot of money, but when you divide that $3 billion, as I said earlier, by a million homes, you come up with $3,000. Now, that's per year. So that is what the typical family will be paying, less the large emitters, which are about, I think, $600 to $750 million of that $3 billion.

They talk about: you know, you're going to get a full rebate. Well, full, in this case, does not mean the full amount you paid in. What full means, Mr. Speaker, is $300. Now, that's per individual, but if you're a couple, you can have $500. If you're roommates, you can get $600. That's a little bit of a penalty on being married. And, of course, if you have kids, you get about 35 bucks or so up to a maximum.

Mr. Speaker, they haven't costed how much it's going to cost families on average for everything that's transported, for instance, because, you know, when you raise gas taxes – and we're going to see an 11-cent difference from a year ago to today through this government, an 11-cent increase just from this government. When you look at that, Mr. Speaker, and you're a trucking company – and I've talked to some trucking companies – you say: "5 per cent at least. My rates are going up 5 per cent." Why? Because – guess what, folks? – the input cost for fuel is a huge cost for trucking. How many things come to Alberta without using trucks? Oh, you're right: the things that come by plane, which use a lot more fuel and cost a lot more. Everything coming to Alberta will go up 5 per cent or pretty darn close. That's the reality. You didn't consider that.

You didn't consider the cost of food going up, the cost of shelter going up, and now you're adding more taxes. Increased taxes for Calgary. They're not happy. They're not. I'm not talking about the property taxes that you're going to put on the backs of all Calgarians and Edmontonians and everybody that lives in a house. I'm talking about the fuel costs. I heard this morning that fuel costs for a fleet in Calgary could be $6 million or $7 million just for your carbon tax to the city of Calgary. Are they getting a rebate? Are they getting any help from this government? No, because this government expects Calgarians to pay for their ideological agenda. That's not right. It's wrong.

A full rebate, Mr. Speaker, does not come anywhere close to the thousand dollars per family. Actually, basically calculating it grossly, on the big numbers, it comes out to $3,000 per family, so by saying it's at least a thousand dollars, we are not out to lunch at all. I don't know where the government thinks the other $2,500 per family is coming from, because $3 billion is the number. We know that this is going to cost families a lot of money. For those who make under $50,000 and qualify, the tax rebate program – it's not a levy; it's a tax, folks – completely ignores the impact of higher power prices, higher power bills and skyrocketing costs to consumer goods.

I'm not fearmongering. Those are the facts. You cannot tax your way into prosperity. You cannot do that. You can't tax your way to a situation where you have better jobs, except for these folks. Mr. Speaker, this tax is not a fair tax because right now it's going far beyond what our obligation is as world citizens, far beyond our obligation as Canadian citizens, as Alberta citizens. It goes too far. Should something be done? Yes. Should this be done? Not now. Don't punish us when we're down on the ground. Don't kick us when we're down. This government seems to think that's the proper motive to do it and the proper thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard time and time again: oh, it's a levy. Well, that's not a levy; that's a tax. You know, you can clearly put lipstick on a pig, but you still have a pig. And you can put lipstick on a carbon tax, but you still have a pig. You can dress this carbon tax up as friendly and as fun as you want, but it's still a tax, and it's not a carbon tax because it's not revenue neutral. I say this: you can put lipstick on a carbon tax, you can dress it up, but all you have is a PST in disguise. That's what this is.

You can come back later, as you have, and say: no, no, wait; we're spending it on infrastructure. Well, you haven't even named what it is. That's not a carbon tax. A carbon tax is revenue neutral. Everybody knows that. It's revenue neutral. You can put lipstick on it, but this carbon tax is not revenue neutral. It's just a tax grab. It's just a cash cow grab. It's just the government looking to make excuses to get more money into their pockets from Alberta families so they can spend it on their pet projects. Shocking. Absolutely shocking. When people are in an unemployment line, when people are in a soup line, when food bank demands have doubled, what do these people say? Oh, green infrastructure. I think people are little bit more concerned about putting food on the table for their kids, being able to afford hockey for their kids, going on that holiday with their family. That's what they care about right now.

We're already the greenest, most environmentally sound province in Canada. We do oil sands and oil and gas extraction better than anybody else in the world. I invite you to my home, like I did the Liberal caucus in Ottawa and the NDP caucus. Guess how many of them came? Zero. You don't want to see the truth. What you want to see is your ideological agenda enforced and executed on the backs of Alberta families because you think you have the answer while people are in unemployment lines and soup lines. You should be ashamed of yourselves, ashamed of yourselves for backing up a cabinet that doesn't understand the realities of what's going on in Alberta right now.

Mr. Speaker, I did go through half my speech by putting the pages forward, and I know you're getting a little tired of me. I can tell. I have been watching you for a while. You're not? Okay. Good. I'll keep going. Do you mind if I flip back a couple of pages?

Mr. Speaker, the other thing that I'm so concerned about is coal. We have 200 years of coal here in Alberta. What does this transition money do for the coal plants that are being shut down, for the communities that are going to be shut down, for the families that are going to be out of work? Seven thousand jobs gone like that. I don't think that's the right way to go. We have told these coal companies to come to Alberta and to set up shop here. We have had Albertans working for those companies and said, "Listen; we're going to close them down gradually; we're going to have some clean-coal technology," which I think is the way to go. New technology, I think, solves the problem, and I frankly think this government should invest in some of that.

Look at what's happening in Saskatchewan. We have clean-coal technology there that's almost – almost – as close as clean-burning natural gas. The United States: I had an opportunity to talk to somebody from the U.S. the other day, and they told me that they had lots of plants that are very close to natural gas. So why are you closing it down when it's already getting cleaner? It's because you're ideological. It's because you think you have to make yourself feel better or to make those NDP friends of yours from right across this country feel wonderful. It doesn't make Albertans feel wonderful. It doesn't make Albertans feel wonderful. [interjection] I hear from the other side some chirping about evidence. Well, I'm happy to sit down and go through the evidence with any of you. I'm happy to talk to you and talk to the coal companies in Alberta and the families that are going to be out of work. I'm happy to hear that. Happy to do that.

You know what? Mr. Speaker, there's no doubt that it is a large amount of money, and you'll notice if you look at the details that most of the money is going to be paid after they're gone, after Albertans have done the big boot. That will happen. That's what happens to all ideological governments. Ask Bob Rae.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Ask Selinger.

Mr. Jean: Ask Selinger.

I'm concerned that you don't want to govern, that you just want to impose your ideological agenda. I heard from the third party – and I thought it was very funny; I have to say that – that most of Selinger's NDP workers will probably come to Alberta because there are job openings here. In fact, 247 new civil servants were hired by this government over the last 11 months, just since 60,000, 70,000, 80,000, 90,000, 100,000 Albertans are unemployed. You add more to the public sector? Well, guess what? Guess what, guys, people? Albertans are moving out of Alberta. We have a net migration out of Alberta, and it's not the low oil price, Mr. Speaker, because they're going to Saskatchewan and B.C. to work in the oil sector, where they don't have an NDP government. That's where it is.

I have to say – and I know they're convinced by my arguments; I know they're going to turn around – that $196 million in transition funding for the coal industry, Mr. Speaker, in those communities doesn't even come close to covering the wages or the social costs, not even close. These people relied on this government, the previous government, and we are obligated to follow through with previous governments, unfortunately, and the contractual obligations you create for us. I think you should have done it differently. I think it's a transitional thing, and we need to do things in step with the rest of Canada, with the rest of North America because we have such an insignificant amount of GHG emissions compared to the rest of North America. It's true.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, Madam Speaker, Wildrose believes in a different vision, a vision that is much bigger and, frankly, longer term, a vision where we see that the heritage fund and the interest from, not to, the heritage fund – payments not to but from – supports those deficits we might need in the future when oil prices go down. I see a vision that is bright and beautiful, where people are employed and they have a selection of jobs they want, where they get training support from the government for new jobs and new opportunities, where the government supports AHS workers so AHS workers want to come to work, where they don't take four months off because they're sick and tired of AHS or the people within it. I know. I sat there for four months. It was terrible. AHS workers don't like AHS. They're not happy with the status quo and how things are. I'm not either, and I sure hope you aren't, but today I heard the Minister of Health support the status quo at AHS. Well, the Premier, the Minister of Education, and the Minister of Economic Development and Trade for years have all been saying that AHS is broken and we have to fix it. They get into power: "AHS is perfect; we're going to protect it."

That's not what people voted for. You said that they voted for health care and they voted for you. Well, then do something about it. We have some of the longest wait times in Canada, and we spend more money on our health care than anybody else in Canada. Folks, it doesn't match. Something's wrong with AHS when people don't want to come to work. We want public servants to want to work for us, to be proud to work for Albertans because we're proud of them when they give Albertans a good return on investment, when they want to work, when they're willing to work, and when they show up for work.

Madam Speaker, we're just looking for a few pennies: 3 cents on every dollar, 4 cents on every dollar if we can find it. No job losses. Why can't we see this government even consider that? Ideology. They're too set on their agenda to destroy this province, and I just don't understand.

When I talk to families, when I talk to Albertans, they tell me that they're sitting around their kitchen table and going through their budgets. When dad got laid off, they had to make changes. Mom is still working; she has to get a second job. They have to make changes in their own lives. Why in the world wouldn't we think that we have to make changes in the public service, the 200,000 workers in Alberta that are making on average $80,000 to $100,000? The cost is, I think, $102,000 per public servant. I'm not one hundred per cent sure of that, but I'm pretty positive I read that a few months ago. Why would we not say, "Let's just find some efficiencies"? When people quit or when people move out of the province, let's just not rehire them for now, until our province starts growing again: instead of people moving out, people moving in.

An Hon. Member: That'll help morale.

Mr. Jean: It would help morale, Madam Speaker. It would.

People that don't know what they're talking about should go check out AHS. I sat there for a long time, Madam Speaker, and watched first-hand. I saw and I had people come to me and tell me that morale is terrible. I mean, I heard that somebody on the other side obviously went for a new job because they weren't happy where they were. It happens, and that's the way it works. Every family in Alberta is forced to make these decisions. Why does this government think they don't have to do it for them? They are here for the people of Alberta, not for themselves. So work for the people of Alberta, not for yourselves.

Well, Madam Speaker, I received a tug on my coattails telling me that it's probably time, and I don't blame you because I'm not going to change my speech much. I do believe that government can do better than what this government is doing. I believe government can do better than what the previous government did. That's why I got involved in politics. [some applause] Thank you for the clap from the NDP. I do believe government can do better, and I don't think we should ever stop doing better. Albertans expect us to do better.

Alberta will get through this, Madam Speaker, but it's going to cost a lot. It's going to hurt a lot, and I don't want to see any more pain out there. I want to support Alberta families. I want to help Albertans. I commit to you today that the Wildrose opposition, our party, will not stop. We will fight every single day for the priorities of Albertans: to keep their tax bill low, to make sure they get all the services from health care, from education, from social services, from justice, from infrastructure, from transport, from all those things that these people on the other side laugh about and think is a joke, the $50 billion that they take out of the pockets of taxpayers without any interest in finding efficiencies. I promise Wildrose will stand up and fight for the priorities of Albertans every single day throughout Alberta. We won't stop.

I know you're going to be surprised with this, Madam Speaker, as everybody on the other side is going to be surprised, but I'm not going to support this budget. Wildrose will not support a budget that puts pain on the people of Alberta and keeps them unemployed. We will support programs that keep people working, that invest in the things they need, but this government is not doing that. That's why in three years we will work hard to win the hearts and minds of Albertans so that they will put a real fiscal conservative government in power in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'd just like to make a brief comment that it is the tradition of budget speeches not to heckle the speaker on strict budget speeches. We afforded the Minister of Finance a room that was silent as a mouse on this side. We never heckled him once. When I spoke, when the Leader of the Opposition spoke, and when the leader of the third party speaks, I expect that we would be accorded the same respect during the tradition of budget addresses.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and talk on Motion 13, regarding the budget of this year. So much to say. So much to say. I guess where I have to start is that Budget '16 continues to be a disappointment to Albertans. It's a budget, unfortunately, focused on optics rather than on the economy. Each day as Albertans learn more about this budget, they find out that their families will pay a lot more and receive a lot less. Why do I say that? Well, there are many reasons.

The government talks about slash-and-burns, but they're the only ones talking about slashing and burning. One would ask themselves: why is that? I think that's because they need to distract from the very unfortunate effect on Albertans that their budget will have. It's going to be harmful to Alberta families. It's going to cost them more money. It's going to make it harder for Alberta families to stay in their homes. It's going to make it harder for seniors to stay in their homes. It's going to be harder for those families with kids to afford sports and music lessons and tutoring and vacations and clothes and running shoes and all those other things that make life work for families with kids. It's going to hurt almost every single thing that this government claims it was going to help. They got it wrong, Madam Speaker. They didn't get it a little bit wrong; they got it really wrong.

Now, we Progressive Conservatives feel like we led the conversation going into this budget in terms of making recommendations to the government. We made recommendations for the government to decrease spending without laying off workers. We tabled the Engage document, that asks some very important questions – open for discussion to government members, other opposition members, all Albertans – on things that we can do better for Alberta. Heck, we even, as part of that, issued the $4 billion challenge on how the government might be able to reduce some of the borrowing they're going to do this and every year. Think about that.

Right now the government with this budget is going to put Alberta into an almost $60 billion hole by the time the next election comes around. If the government was to use the Progressive Conservatives' $4 billion challenge and find at least $4 billion a year in savings, well, it would still be really bad where we would land, but it would be $12 billion less; $45 billion instead of $57 billion is a lot. While that's still too deep a hole to climb out of, it would be a lot less deep hole, and government only needs to take the advice that we handed to them.

Heck, we even gave them four ideas that could save a billion and a half dollars without cutting front-line services, without laying off a single teacher, a single nurse, a single doctor. The government laughed at it when we talked about it in here. They completely dismissed it.

We also presented to the government an idea, which is really obvious, about dealing with emergency rooms. We know from government documents, from AHS documents, that, according to AHS, 90 per cent of emergency room visits are not emergencies. We also know from AHS that the annual budget for emergency rooms is about $3.2 billion. If you figure 90 per cent of that is the top end – and I know it's lower than that, but the fact is that 90 per cent of the visits aren't emergencies, so start there at $2.7 billion, $2.8 billion. We're not saying that you can save $2.7 billion. We are saying that the $2.7 billion currently spent providing the most expensive care possible, which is emergency room care, could be used to provide the care needed in a much more appropriate and a much more cost-effective setting.

You know, Madam Speaker, we didn't even say to the government that it's easy. We just said that this is such a big win. They need to put their effort into it, set their minds to it, talk to the staff, talk to the doctors, the nurses, the patients, the EMS people that come out of those emergency rooms and say: "How can we make this better? How can we deliver that $2.8 billion worth of service in a way that you might be able to save another billion and a half?" While we don't think it's automatic and we don't think it's easy, we think it's doable. It just takes a commitment from the government working with others to make it happen.

So far the government has scoffed at it and dismissed it as if it did not matter. That truly is a shame. That is one of the many indicators we have that this government isn't ready for prime time in terms of delivering good value to Albertans, in terms of caring for Albertans, in terms of looking after their health care and looking after their wellness because we gave, respectfully, a $4 billion challenge, and then we kind of showed them how to win that challenge. We showed them at least $3 billion out of the $4 billion that they could save without cutting front-line services.

Then we challenged them to work with the 220,000 Albertans that now get paid out of the public purse through this province directly or indirectly, and we said, "Let's get their advice," because they're experts. The doctors are experts, the teachers are experts, the nurses are experts, the people driving the snowplows on the highways are experts because they know things about their job that the rest of us don't know. The people who keep maintaining the buildings, keeping the furnaces going, keeping the boilers going, the people fixing the broken windows, cutting the grass: each of them know things about their jobs where they could be done more efficiently if we would just take the time to listen to them. That's all we've asked, and so far we haven't heard any positive noise back out of this government.

As long as the government continues to ignore advice, they are back with the two extremes that they always talk about. It's either increase spending or slash and burn. Well, good for the government. They didn't slash and burn, but by gosh they sure are increasing spending, and they are making no efforts whatsoever to contain that. The government needs to actually have thoughts in their head, Madam Speaker, that are not extreme, that actually take the more reasoned middle road, that say that if we work with people, if we put our minds to the task at hand to meet the $4 billion challenge, who knows? The government may be able to find more than $4 billion in savings without cutting front-line services. No slashing, no burning, just common sense, just working with people, just listening to government employees, just gathering the knowledge that is already there and employing it in such a way that not only will the taxpayers gain by having to supply the government with less money, but the employees would have greater job satisfaction.

We all go home from our job at the end of the day and say: I did the best I can. The same is true of about 220,000 employees that are paid out of the public purse provincially. Not one of them goes home to their family and says: I did the worst job I could do today; I really messed things up, and I'm proud of it. Nobody says that. Nobody says that. They all go home and say: I did the best I could. Some of them say: "I had a great day. I accomplished this or that. I made things better. I served Albertans. I maybe saved somebody's life. I maybe made the road safer. I maybe made the park safer. I maybe made the campground more fun for Albertans to go to next summer." Or sometimes they say: "You know, the system's getting in my way. The government and the managers won't listen to me. I have some ideas on how to save money. I have ideas on how I could maintain six campgrounds a day instead of four, whatever the number happens to be, because I know my job and I know how to do it better if only someone would listen."

That's what the Progressive Conservative caucus has said to government. Please make that effort. Please listen. Don't leave these things on the table. Don't just not leave the money on the table, but don't leave the job satisfaction for those 220,000 Albertans that toil every day on behalf of the taxpayers – do not leave them hanging.

In fairness to the government, this is a job that'll never be done. There is no finish line. There never has been, and there never will be because in any machine as big as this province, that employs 220,000 people and spends around $50 billion a year, there's always something changing, always something to be maintained, fixed, improved, always bad habits or waste that creeps in here and there that needs to be looked at and looked for ways to root out. That day will never end. It'll never all be rooted out, and I'm okay with that because things are happening. I'm okay with it as long as we're doing the best we can and making the effort, and that's what our Progressive Conservative caucus has asked this government to do. So far what we've heard is crickets. It's not a good thing.

On budget day the Finance minister said that the province's credit rating would not suffer a downgrade. He said, and I quote: they will see that we are sticking to our plan. Unquote. However, their plan is precisely why Alberta was downgraded. Heck, the people that set credit ratings: they only slept once before they downgraded. Within 24 hours, less than a day, after this government dropped on the table their absolutely disastrous budget, what they call a jobs plan, though I'll come to that later in my comments, the world financial community rejected it soundly and lowered Alberta's credit rating. That is ominous for Alberta because a small increase in borrowing rates right now will make a horrendous difference to this government.

You know, obviously, I don't know exactly what it's going to take, but here's what I do know. Historically credit interest rates are at if not an all-time low, very close to it. The reason why that is important and why the government should think about that when they're trashing Alberta's credit rating is because right now it will have a bigger effect. There are times in history where the interest rate averages 6 or 8 per cent, and it's just simple math. The fact is that if the interest rate on borrowing goes up by 1 per cent and it starts out at 8, well, that's damaging and hard to take and quite painful. But if the government is borrowing now at 2 or 3 per cent and the interest rate goes up by 1 per cent, that is crushing. That is crushing.

The government's budget documents say that three years from now the government of Alberta will be paying $2 billion a year in interest rates without even servicing the principal on the loan. If the interest rate is up by 3 to 4 per cent, then all of a sudden that $2 billion won't do it. It might take two and a half billion dollars. That is a potential negative effect of ruining the province's credit rating, a credit rating that the previous government, the Progressive Conservative government, protected jealously. The previous government, while imperfect, made some mistakes along the way – but I can tell you that for the last 15 years they were governing, they had a triple-A credit rating and during that time did not borrow for operations because we learned and protected the value of that triple-A credit rating.

This government didn't waste any time in having it downgraded twice in the first year of their existence, and Albertans will pay the price, our children and our grandchildren. I'm just making what I think is a pretty safe assumption, that even government members love their children and grandchildren. I'm sure they do. I'm sure they do.

An Hon. Member: I don't.

Mr. McIver: One said, "I don't," but I think that person was trying to be funny. I don't believe them when they said that.

Madam Speaker, they will be saddled with debt that they will pay the rest of their lives. It's going to be painful, and this government is inflicting that pain, inflicting that debt on their children and grandchildren. If there's one thing that this government should be more ashamed about than anything else in this budget, it is the pain that they are inflicting on kids that aren't born yet that will have to pay this debt that they have no plan whatsoever in their budget to pay for.

As we peel away the layers of the budget, we can see that it's going to cost people a lot more. Mayors, reeves, and councillors have taken the government to task, starting with the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary. I was at an AUMA breakfast three weeks ago, and what was said was that for the municipalities there, they estimated that the carbon tax was going to cost each of those municipalities on average 3 and a half to 4 per cent on their property tax rate for their municipality. Madam Speaker, that's not revenue neutral. That's revenue negative for Alberta families, revenue negative for Alberta children. That is the legacy of the budget that this NDP government is inflicting upon Albertans.

Now, municipalities have said that this government demonstrated in its budget that it did not deliver stable funding.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Speaker. I think that the member needs to continue his dialogue there in regard to negative funding. I'd appreciate it if he'd continue that.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. With the time remaining, I'll go as fast as I can to talk about the negative effect. Let's just go to the government's budget documents here. If you look at page 96 in the fiscal plan, under the section entitled Economic Outlook, the government continually talks about how the rebate on their carbon tax is going to be good for Alberta families and how they're going to break even. Balderdash. Nonsense. Not a chance.

But we're going to take the government's word on something. There's the truth, there's the whole truth, and there's nothing but the truth. I'm going to give the government credit for telling the truth, but I'm surely not going to give them credit for telling the whole truth. The truth on page 96 – I'm going to take their word for it – is that the average family uses 4,500 litres of gas in a year and 135 gigajoules of natural gas. When you figure it, on a high point right now gasoline costs a dollar a litre, so it's $4,500 a year for Alberta families. I don't know about you, but I think my utility bill is $200 a month. Let's call it $400 just to be fair. Let's call it another $4,800 a year, 12 months. So there's about $10,000 a year of the average Alberta family that's going to get rebated the extra costs on the carbon tax. How many of those families of four live on $10,000? Not very many. So on all the other expenditures it's not covered. Alberta families are not breaking even. They're getting the heck kicked out of them. They are losing big time. If a family has $50,000 after taxes to spend and they get rebated back on the first $10,000, that's $40,000 more that the carbon tax isn't rebated on. Families are getting it between the teeth.

Now, the Official Opposition is more right than the government because they say that it'll be a thousand dollars a year that it costs families, and the government says that it'll be $500 because that's what they're rebating. But the fact is, with all due respect to the Official Opposition, that I think they're wrong, too. I think they're low with that number. I think they're low with that number because there's no rebate on what people pay for food, which arrives on a truck; clothing, which arrives on a truck; their electricity bill, which will be taxed. Entertainment, travel, all the other things that people have, will cost more.

This government is killing family budgets, not protecting them. They're saddling us with a $2 billion budget and a $2 billion annual interest payment that doesn't even touch the principal three years from now. And, by the way, the Calgary cancer centre is not scheduled to be built till 2024. That $2 billion could build a cancer centre every year. Every year Albertans will pay for one and not get it after this government is done. That's no good for families. The $2 billion in interest would pay for 50 to 100 schools, depending upon the size of the school, and they're going to pay for that every year after this NDP government is done, and they're not going to get that either.

To the hon. member, when I talk about it being negative for families, I can't imagine a budget scenario being more net negative for Alberta families than the budget scenario presented by this government in this House in this session, and they should be ashamed. I can tell you that the fact that they're killing Alberta's triple-A credit rating, the fact that they've taken the lid off borrowing – again, I will say that taking the lid off borrowing, even though the government's own said that it doesn't need to be done for three years, means that either they're planning on spending a lot more money than they've admitted or they're planning on the economy getting a lot worse than they admitted in the next three years in shrinking the GDP, which is why they've got to take the lid off.

I think that probably a combination of the two is the way it's going to turn out, Madam Speaker. That's part of the net negative to Alberta families, too: more tax burden, less economy to pay for it with. This government is doing less with more when all of Albertans are doing more with less. They are completely out of sync with Albertans. They're attacking our major industries, our energy industry, through Bill 6 our agriculture industry. They are going to make the tourist industry more expensive with the carbon tax. They're out of touch with Albertans, and they're making it worse instead of better. That is the unfortunate fact of what this particular government has burdened Albertans with, not for a short period of time but for a long period of time.

The next government – and I'm glad to see that yesterday Manitoba replaced an NDP government with a Progressive Conservative government. That was a very good idea.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is done.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Speaker. Very pleased to speak to Motion 13. All Albertans know that we're facing difficult times, with unemployment rates approaching all-time highs and revenues approaching all-time lows. Many of the factors causing these extremes are beyond our immediate control: price of oil, lack of national infrastructure such as pipelines, and short-sighted policies of the recent Alberta government. The future, though, is firmly in the hands of the NDP government now, at least for the next three years, and the choices it's making.

Tying our economic well-being to one industry over many decades without convincing environmental standards; averaging $10 billion less in revenue every year, less than the lowest taxing province in the country for the past decade; neglecting the social supports of our most vulnerable people, including First Nations: we have all enjoyed this, quote, Alberta advantage, which, unfortunately, was a delusion. Well described in children's stories as the golden goose or the king with no clothes, we've been living beyond the means of our province and of our planet. The proof is in the pudding.

We now have a naïve government, young and idealistic, who are, for the first time in my memory, making necessary and meaningful change. The past government couldn't make the changes necessary when oil was at $100 a barrel. They couldn't do it during the recessions of the '80s and '90s, when they followed an austerity plan that we are still recovering from today. So let's work together to make this difficult time as short as possible and stop the partisan blame game, which does not serve the public interest. We cannot continue to increase services and protect the environment and build an economy and not pay more than we've been paying for the last 30 years.

To be fair, I do not envy the ministers and the Premier in these difficult times, steering Alberta through an unprecedented time, in my memory. Nonetheless, leadership and vision are the definitive roles of government, and Albertans deserve the best efforts of this no longer new NDP administration. The release of the 2016 budget leaves me with some serious questions about the vision the NDP has for our province.

This is not to say that I disagree with every element of the budget. There's funding, albeit qualified, for affordable housing, an item sorely neglected by the previous PC administration for at least four years. There is a cut to small-business taxes and an investment tax credit, policies we have very strong support for. There's also commitment to the environment, a new provincial park in southwestern Alberta that will help promote tourism. This place is the destination for recreation and film industry and tourism, obviously. It will, all of this, along with the carbon tax, help us get off our carbon addiction. There are alternatives. The rest of the world is moving on, and we have to move on, too. These are all issues the Liberals believe in and have pushed government to introduce, so I am thankful that this government is making some of these difficult decisions.

My concern lies not with some of the specifics but with the long-term vision, again, and the necessary leadership, which seems to be lacking in this document. I would start with the most dramatic number, a $10.4 billion deficit just this year. The number itself should give us serious pause. We must have an adult conversation about how we can and will share fairly in the suffering and the opportunities created in this time with the right combination of borrowing, finding savings – our public services included – and paying for our important goods and services that keep people off the streets, out of depression, out of jail, and out of hospitals. Understandably, given the remarkable drop in provincial revenues and the decision not to drastically cut government services – but this doesn't mean we shouldn't look to reduce public service costs. That is a real, sore bone of contention in the public today, that we are protecting one sector and not another. I'm not saying that we have to be draconian, but we do have to look fairly at incomes and stability across the communities.

What is unacceptable is the lack of any reasonable plan to repay debt or return to balanced spending. The year 2024 has been put forward but without evidence. It's an arbitrary shot in the dark. The government are taking a wait-and-pray position, primarily for oil prices, as past governments have done with Alberta's future. Should the price of oil remain low, we face a staggering potential for over $50 billion in debt at the end of their term. This budget offers no contingency for prolonged low oil price and very little vision for an Alberta in the grips of a perennially low cost of crude. Virtually every economist and most political commentaries have rightly pointed at the gaping hole in our revenues. Whether or not oil prices rise, we have to start paying our way. We have a structural deficit based on a history of using oil royalties for 20 to 35 per cent of our budget. We must start paying more as a society if we want safe, healthy, generous, peaceful, stable communities where everyone has their basic needs met.

It does appear to me that we along with others in some ways are suggesting a consideration of not only public-sector cuts, a provincial sales tax, evidence-based cuts to various aspects of government services, and a new look at fees and other forms of revenue, including health care premiums – all of these need to be considered – but I would say that all of us, including the elected MLAs, have to look at how we can contribute to reducing our take in this province. We have to build a sense of solidarity, not an us-versus-them culture, and, I would say, a culture that has been aided and abetted by the Official Opposition in these debates. It's not us versus them; it's all of us together finding constructive ways to go forward, not alienate and divide. I find the situation particularly distressing as there are savings to be made in Alberta if we manage our expenses more readily. They're not easy. They require difficult choices and strong leadership, but they're there.

First and foremost, Alberta Health Services: clearly, a lot of money not being well spent. Primary care not serving people as well as it must and cuts to the primary care networks have not served to develop the innovation and adaptations that are needed in primary care services. There's a lack of evaluation to provide check and balance in the health system to improve care. Testings and investigations are significantly overused. Medications are too often used, resulting in the wrong solution; complications, especially in the elderly; and the potential for problems of dependency and addictions, that we're seeing more and more of. The lack of community care is overwhelming our emergency rooms and hospitals when people are best cared for in the community.

These are millions and millions of dollars of savings that are not and have not yet been addressed. Study after study, not least the recent report of the mental health and addictions committee, have suggested that the money needs to go into early intervention, into high-risk families, and into prevention programs that would prevent so much suffering and a lot of health care costs. The government, in changing from the status quo budgets of the Progressive Conservatives, had an opportunity to support team-based community care, and to be fair, there is some allocated for this but nowhere near the emphasis that's needed.

The budget states that the government is suddenly going to find $300 million in savings in 2018. This is what they call bending the cost curve. However, there's nothing in the line items to tell us exactly how.

Glad to see capital spending on housing for the at-risk population after four years of no spending. Money designated for affordable housing directed at repair and maintenance: these are essential if we're going to keep people safe and secure.

I'm fully aware that this budget has incredible limitations and there's little fiscal operating room. It would seem, though, that having made the hard choice to not drastically cut government spending, the government has then made no further hard decisions. It's time to look again at government services. The status quo is not going to help Albertans in the long run. We cannot run up debt with no plan to pay it off, and we cannot keep spending on entrenched systems like those of Alberta Health Services in the same manner.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Anyone wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in response to the budget. When I first saw the budget last Thursday, I was literally speechless, and those of you who know me know that that is rare. That's a rare thing. I was a little like Nell, absolutely gobsmacked by the scale and frequency of deficits. I understand we are in a very difficult financial position, but a $10.4 billion deficit this year, a $10.1 billion deficit next year, an $8 billion deficit the year after that, and on and on and on with absolutely no plan beyond crossing your fingers and hoping perhaps oil revenues go up or something magical happens to eventually find our way back to balance. It's beyond troubling.

While some may be angry about this, my instinct was concern, was worry for the future, worry for our viability, worry for what happens if you're wrong. What happens if it gets worse? What happens if we end up just a few years from now with $50 billion in debt and continued declines in oil prices and continued economic challenges for our province. What then? What happens then?

As I said earlier today, it feels like the person who moves out of the house for the first time and doesn't realize they need to pay back the Visa bill. But the Visa bill always comes due, and interest always accrues. We've got a government that has no ability to manage their debt load, no willingness or ability to manage debt costs. Our credit-rating downgrade was a direct result of the complete lack of a plan to come anywhere close to balance and the abdication of any plan to cap debt costs at a reasonable level.

The plan for the 15 per cent debt-to-GDP ratio lasted less than six months. Now this year we're going to have a debt-to-GDP ratio in excess of 9 per cent, next year in excess of 13, the year after that in excess of 15. And where does it go from there? Well, we only have three years forecast. I can't even begin to imagine how high that gets. That takes Alberta out of having the best balance sheet in Canada by having the lowest debt-to-GDP ratio in the country. Our friends in Saskatchewan under Premier Brad Wall have that distinction, and good for them. They are in a far stronger financial position than Alberta finds ourselves in as a direct result of the choices this government makes. Of course, you don't control the price of oil. Of course not. But this government does control your response to that.

Now, there are some things I do like about the budget, and I think they're worth mentioning. It's always nice when you see some of your own ideas and some of your own party's policies implemented in a budget. The small-business tax cut and the investor tax credit are two core Alberta Party policies, so it's good to see those happening. I think they're good for Alberta, and I congratulate the government for putting those in.

The increase to postsecondary education funding I think is a good idea. A nod to mental health funding: although I don't think it is sufficient, it's a start down that path. Funding enrolment growth for K to 12 I think is a good move.

Continued investment for infrastructure: this is where I think responsible borrowing has a part to play. I think it's okay to borrow money for infrastructure because we have an asset at the end of the day, but you need to have a plan to pay it back. If you're borrowing for operations, as this government is doing, and not just a little bit – borrowing just to keep the lights on, borrowing for pens and pencils, for office furniture, just to operate the government – and you're doing that at massive levels with no plan to even not borrow for operations in the foreseeable future, we've put ourselves in a big hole.

I believe that the funding for affordable housing and seniors' housing is absolutely welcome as well, long overdue and necessary as part of that infrastructure investment.

On the whole I feel this government is on the wrong track, that they're setting Alberta up to fail, setting us up for even more difficult choices in the future, either significant public-sector cuts or big tax increases or potentially both. It's a huge risk. I don't want this government to fail. I do not want the ND government to fail – I really don't – because if this government fails, Alberta fails. That's not good. That's not what I'm here for. That's not what I'm cheering for.

I really worry that if you stay on this path, you will fail, and Alberta is not going to be as well off. And that's all Albertans, including vulnerable Albertans, not only business owners, not only those who have lost their jobs, but vulnerable Albertans. Where does the money come from to pay for important services to support vulnerable Albertans? It's an important question that I really urge this government to ask themselves. Where does the money come from? How does that happen? You keep plucking the golden goose, eventually that's not going to happen. Eventually it's going to be gone.

There are options. There are options and choices between massive cuts and between massive deficits. There is a middle way. There is a better way of doing this, which, my friends, is why we have proposed and presented our second shadow budget, which I'm going to talk about now, the Alberta Party shadow budget. And I would hasten to add that we're the only opposition party in this Assembly to present a shadow budget because I think it's important. I think it's important that those of us on this side remember that our job is not just to oppose the government. Our job is to propose ideas.

Now, our friends in the PC caucus have their Engage document. It's a good document. There are lots of really interesting ideas in there. I don't agree with all of it, but there are a lot of interesting ideas, and they've continued the conversation. That's a good thing.

Our friends in Wildrose have some bullet point, general ideas of kind of vague things they might do, but I would challenge the Official Opposition to put some numbers to that. That's important. That is important. When we're talking about the budget, Albertans need to know how would we on this side of the House, how would we as opposition solve these problems, and they need to know in detail.

That's what the Alberta Party shadow budget does. Our shadow budget balances in four years. We accommodate population growth and preserve front-line services. We use more conservative revenue forecasts than the government, especially on nonrenewable resource revenues. In two years from now this budget, Budget 2016, assumes that oil will be at $64 a barrel and that the dollar will be at 74 cents. Of course, as we know, the lower the dollar, the more money we return. Ours, on the other hand, assumes that in two years' time oil will only be at $56 a barrel and that the dollar will be around 78 cents. Again, more conservative revenue forecasts, yet we're still able to balance in four years and accommodate population growth, not decimate front-line services.

We do that by freezing public-sector salaries. That seems only fair. At a time when our neighbours are losing their jobs or they're being asked to take salary rollbacks or reduced work hours, we ask the tremendous public servants in the province of Alberta to get paid the same next year as they got paid last year. I think that's fair. I think that's fair, and it's going to help us get a long way towards some sanity in this budget.

We need to engage public servants in a genuine way, most particularly in the health care system. There are tremendous people in this province, many countless hundreds of whom I've talked with, who have great ideas on how we can manage costs and improve service delivery, truly, truly do more for less, but they're not listened to. There is a toxic culture within Alberta Health Services. It is a huge challenge to be overcome.

This government needs to commit to that, not nibble around the edges but make real, true change, real culture change within the public service and truly, genuinely listen to the great people who provide those services every single day. Yes, that means front-line direct service providers who interact with Albertans, but it also means management. There are a lot of tremendous people in the management layers of Alberta Health Services, in particular, but also all throughout the public service.

We need to empower those people. We need to take smart risks within the public service. We need to create a free market for good ideas within Alberta's public service. Any time we hear, "Well, we don't do it like that around here because we just don't," that's the wrong answer. Why do we do it that way? Can't we do it better? Challenge ourselves, challenge our public servants to continually improve.

That's how we're going to find more for less. That's how we're going to steward Albertans' tax dollars and ensure that Albertans get the services they deserve at a reasonable cost coupled with a priority-based budgeting exercise to ensure highest priority projects are completed first. This is going to result in bringing per capita spending in line with the national average within three years. That's a reasonable target. That's a reasonable plan that will not result in massive public service cuts but will also ensure that we are not burdened with unsustainable levels of debt down the road.

If we make Alberta's carbon tax revenue neutral, ultimately work toward making it revenue neutral by cutting personal tax, by cutting small-business tax, by cutting the large corporate tax rate just 1 per cent and using the proceeds of the carbon tax, what we do is that we create a frame for innovation. We have a disincentive for what we don't want. We don't want carbon emissions. Let's make it more expensive for people to burn carbon – that's the purpose of a carbon tax – so people burn less of it and people and individuals innovate and find ways of doing less. That's a good idea. That's what a carbon tax should be. But let's reward people for the things we do want. We want an attractive investment climate in this province. We want people to keep more of their hard-earned money, the money they've earned through their honest efforts. So let's cut personal and business taxes and offset that with the carbon tax.

That's not what I've heard from this government, and I have a tremendous problem with that. There are opportunities, there are choices, and there is a middle way and a better way than massive public service cuts, than massive unsustainable debt and deficits. That's what the Alberta Party stands for, and that's why I have a big challenge with this budget.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd be interested to hear, in light of your comments about wage freezes and that sort of thing, if you could touch a little bit more on the reduction of our triple-A credit rating, how you see that as a priority for you and how you see us tackling that problem.

Mr. Clark: Thank you. That's a great question. I think that if we were to go to credit-rating agencies with a credible plan to get back to balance sometime before a vague 2024, that's what they asked for. The debt-to-GDP ratio of 15 per cent is one of many factors that they consider. It's an important one, but it's not the only one. What they see is a government that's profligate, that just seems to think that money is absolutely infinite.

In terms of the impact – you asked about the impact – I've asked repeatedly in this House whether the Minister of Finance has done the calculation for what the impact of a potential credit-rating downgrade is. Now, I suspect that somewhere in Treasury Board and Finance that exists, but the minister, for whatever reason, has chosen not to share that with us. If he hasn't done that work, that's troubling. Even a few basis points, even a few hundredths of a per cent multiplied by tens of billions of dollars is tens or hundreds of millions of dollars. So we're already facing $2 billion in debt service costs alone two years from now. Where is that going to go beyond the three-year plan? We don't know.

Those numbers start to get very frightening, and that's billions of dollars that are not being spent on programs. That's what credit-rating agencies look at, our capacity to pay back our debt, and that creates a spiral, which could very well be a huge problem for this province. And I repeat that question: what if we're wrong? What if this government is wrong? What if it's even worse? That's frightening. So I really encourage this government to think hard about that and about what the impact of that and implications of that could be, not just for us in this generation but for future generations.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I was also interested in the hon. member talking about the carbon tax and, particularly, the rebates and what improvements he thinks that the government might be able to make to the way that they have determined and decided to lay that plan out for Alberta families.

Mr. Clark: I'm on the record as being in favour of a carbon tax. We've done our own climate plan that includes a consumer-based carbon tax. The objective of a carbon tax is to make carbon more expensive. That should be the objective. It should not be just to simply transfer wealth.

I think that perhaps the lowest income quarter of Albertans should be entitled to a rebate. I think those people genuinely would suffer under the carbon tax. But I think the carbon tax should be paid by more Albertans. That may not be the most popular view, frankly, amongst Albertans. But if the carbon tax is set out to do what the government says it's supposed to do, which is to actually reduce our carbon emissions – and, by the way, we've had absolutely no meaningful estimates of what the carbon emission reduction will actually be, and we haven't seen any plan to tie together a climate strategy with important things like market access for our province – and we haven't seen any progress on that file, then Albertans are rightly wondering: what's the point of a carbon tax? Is it just another cash grab from the government?

I think the carbon tax needs to be very clear. Like our friends in B.C. do, lay out in the budget very specifically the incoming from the carbon tax and the associated cuts and direct investments in innovation that that money's being used for, so it's not just seen as a cash grab by government. That's why Albertans are so concerned, especially at a very difficult time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other member wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move to adjourn debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you can't adjourn debate as you've already spoken to the motion.

I need someone who hasn't yet spoken. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 9

An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences

[Adjourned debate April 19: Dr. Turner]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? I will recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. The way the law works now is that when a person gets a ticket for something like jaywalking and that person does not pay their ticket, a warrant is issued for their arrest. Not only does this practice contribute to the criminalization of poverty, but it also has serious implications on another specific group of people, victims of domestic violence. For example, let's say that a person who was ticketed for these minor infractions just happens to be someone in a domestic violence situation. The perpetrator of the violence prevents the victim from appearing in court, and an arrest warrant is issued. Now the problem is twofold. The victim is unable to report the DV situation because they will be arrested, possibly leaving vulnerable children in the custody of the perpetrator. Therefore, the victims do not report the domestic violence. It is a vicious cycle.

Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences, will allow victims of domestic violence the ability to report these issues and escape. I've spoken to many in DV situations who've said that they stay because of the fact that there is a warrant hanging over their heads and they need to protect their children. This will give them the ability to report and flee.

[The Speaker in the chair]

In addition to protecting vulnerable Albertans, these changes will put our government and social agencies in a better position to help them. I believe that this is an innovative and fair way to help address the growing pressures on our justice system while protecting vulnerable Albertans from a cycle of incarceration and poverty. These amendments will end the practice of issuing warrants for people who have not paid their fines for minor infractions, a practice that contributes to criminalizing poverty, and these changes will allow police officers and court staff to focus on more serious offences and offenders.

This is a common-sense bill, and I'd encourage all members in this House to join me in supporting these important legislative changes that will help so many people. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite from Red Deer-South talked about the criminalization of people who are given warrants. I was wondering if she could explain to me the fact of a summary conviction or a Criminal Code offence and the different requirements, therefore, of the issuance of a warrant.

Ms Miller: What it does is that it enables the people in domestic violence situations to flee from their perpetrators. The way it is now with any outstanding warrants is that the people are unable because they've got this hanging over their heads. I've spoken to police officers, and I've spoken to people in DV situations. They've been told – they've talked anonymously to police officers – that if they report the situation, they will be arrested. This way they will not be arrested because there will not be a warrant issued for minor infractions. Nothing major: jaywalking, parking tickets, that type of thing.

The Speaker: Any other questions? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I'd like to say that I appreciated the hon. member's remarks. There's just one element of this that I've thought about for some time. Really, ever since I was chair at the Calgary housing company, when I was on city council, this came to mind.

I have great regard for the idea of not issuing an arrest warrant for people committing minor offences. The only point where that becomes a bit of an issue for me is that for some of those people that repeatedly commit minor offences, there's an underlying issue. If somebody doesn't put their hands on them, not to punish them but, rather, to help them, while they're committing minor offences, it sometimes leaves them on the street long enough that things escalate till they commit major offences or, worse, are victims of major offences. Assaults, beatings, even murder: these are all things that we would hate to see happen to somebody who has a mental illness problem or an addiction problem.

Have you thought about: if there's no arrest warrant, how does society put their hands on these people, not so much to punish them but, rather, to deliver to them the help that they need before the minor offences escalate into something that's harder to fix? I don't know if you put any thought into that or not.

Ms Miller: Okay. When there's no warrant issued, it frees up not only the justice system but the mental health areas because the people aren't – what's the word I'm looking for? – forced to go into programs. They're voluntarily going into programs. I spoke to some people at the mental health office in Red Deer, and people who are forced to attend treatment for different issues are quite often no-shows, whereas if a person is going under voluntary conditions, they are more likely to attend.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

I would recognize the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak today to Bill 9, An Act to Modernize Enforcement of Provincial Offences. I want to begin by saying that I will be supporting Bill 9 in second reading. As one of the hon. members from the third party explained yesterday, there was a motion that was brought forward in 2012 by a member of the government of the day, but the motion ultimately failed to receive that government's support. I am hopeful that Bill 9 will not succumb to the same fate.

I will be supporting this bill because I believe that this type of legislation is exactly what the government should be trying to pursue, red-tape reduction that saves money in administration and puts more resources into our front-line services. The introduction of both amendments in this bill will increase efficiencies by reducing filing times, eliminating redundant administrative procedures like duplicate data entry, and ultimately decreasing the expenditure of Albertans' tax dollars. By clearing up administrative barriers, law enforcement officers can do what they do best, protect our communities and bring justice to real criminals. Currently the system of issuing warrants for minor offences is chewing through law enforcement resources, and it is time to put an end to the unnecessary expenditure of government money.

Hard-working Albertans are having warrants issued for their arrest. In some cases they are being jailed for a day. As was pointed out previously, this can often just mean that the individual is apprehended, taken to the nearest prison, processed, forced to pay their fine, and then released. This does nothing to make our communities safer. In fact, one could argue that it does the opposite due to the fact that this process takes an officer off the street. It also wastes a significant amount of the police services' time and wastes correction officers' time.

We must also consider that it places otherwise law-abiding citizens in a dangerous situation. Jail is a scary place to go, in part because of that danger. As some of my hon. colleagues have already mentioned, an individual lost their life while in prison for a minor offence. While correction officers work steadfastly to minimize these risks, they are still present, and it is unreasonable to think that someone should be exposed to that environment for the tardy payment of a minor offence.

I want to be clear that minor offences are still offences. We should not be paving the way for scofflaws to take advantage of our system, nor would I argue that police turn a blind eye to what are considered minor offences. It is necessary for our police officers and municipal bylaw officers to enforce all aspects of the law. However, bringing justice to those who are responsible for causing serious harm should be our focus and our top priority.

I have been hearing from Albertans across the province and in my constituency that they are worried about the increase in criminal activity. Thefts and fraud are on the rise, and we need to take action so that our men and women in uniform are able to address the most serious threats to our communities. Decreasing ticket processing time is a great step toward helping our police officers. It helps our police officers decrease paper-pushing and lets them do their job.

Much can be said about the benefits of the e-ticketing process, but there may still be the need for some smaller communities to take a little bit of time to adopt this new process. I am glad that this bill has the provision for municipalities and police forces to opt in to the e-ticketing program as they best see fit. I imagine that the start-up costs for this program may be a barrier to some police forces immediately adopting the technology and providing training to their officers, so there needs to be an allowance for smaller law enforcement agencies to adjust their budgets and build a plan for the new technology.

Also, I think that, like any new process, it sometimes takes one group to lead on implementation. They then share best practices with other partners in the field. I believe that was the purpose of the pilot programs that the RCMP conducted in some parts of Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and New Brunswick. Now I think that with police forces in Alberta's larger municipalities signalling that they will be the leaders in e-ticketing implementation, there will be some real benefit for other parts of the province that may take a little bit more time to get there. And there is nothing to suggest that the process may not go the other way around, with larger police forces following suit with their smaller counterparts. Either way, Mr. Speaker, empowering local decision-making will lead to better legislation and better results for Albertans.

In closing, I would like to reiterate how important it is for members of this House to be cognizant of the outstanding difficulty, the degree of professionalism that law enforcement officers provide around Alberta. Often they are the unsung heroes that keep our communities safe, so I would like to take this opportunity to thank them for their great work and support any initiatives that make it easier for them to do their jobs and spend less of Alberta taxpayers' hard-earned tax dollars.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who would like to speak to Bill 9? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been appreciative of my fellow members' comments here in the House. I think that there are many elements of this bill that will actually be a plus. Surely, any time that we can be more efficient with the way that we handle the justice system and more sensitive to people that have not committed major offences insofar as finding it unnecessary to throw them in jail – of course, as has been recounted before in this House and even referenced here today, there have been examples where people have died in jail by being assaulted there after committing what is otherwise considered a very minor offence, having paid the heaviest of prices as a result because of the violence that can occur in a situation where people are incarcerated.

I thank the government for being thoughtful about raising some of these issues. I will sit down now and look forward to further debate from my colleagues.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

My apologies to the previous member. I neglected 29(2)(a).

Anything for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you. I understood that people want to maybe ask me some questions under 29(2)(a). But you know what? I'd like to transition a bit. I think I've already mentioned that I'm absolutely in support of this bill and, of course, ensuring that we do not have this revolving door . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just need to clarify. It was just pointed out to me. Were you speaking under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Ellis: No.

The Speaker: You've already spoken. I'm advised that you've already spoken.

Mr. Ellis: Oh, that's what I thought. Okay. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: Well, sir, I'll speak to 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: All right.

Mr. Ellis: I'm sorry. I've been running around.

I will ask a question to the hon. Member for Calgary . . .

An Hon. Member: The one who last spoke.

Mr. Ellis: Pardon me? Oh, the one that last spoke.

Well, I'll ask somebody a question. How about that? I just got here.

Mr. Cooper: Have you been on the south lawn of the Legislature?

Mr. Ellis: No.

I will ask somebody, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this bill. Calgary-Hays. Sir, in your experience in city council, certainly, you had close ties and relationships with the Calgary Police Service at that time. You were certainly aware, sitting on the Calgary Police Commission, of the number of tickets that were issued and, of course, the stats. Can you maybe touch a little bit in regard to the recidivism that was going on and maybe specifically touch in regard to the arrest processing area, that dealt with the amount of flow going through there and, maybe, what positive impact that could have in regard to finances, actually, with a reduction of people going through that system?

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, would you like to answer the question under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just say that during my time on city council, which actually did include two years on the police commission, I touched on these issues. At that time I can tell you that one of the things that irritated the police service the most was what they used to call the catch-and-release system, where they would arrest people, put them in jail, and they would be out on the street doing the same thing again and then get arrested and be back in jail again. This continual cycle would go over and over and over again. It was expensive. I don't think it served society very well. I don't think it served the police very well or the courts or the justice system, and at the end of the day it didn't actually serve the people that were the subjects of the arrests very well either.

That's largely because in these cases most often there was an underlying issue of mental health, addiction, some other issue which never got solved, which is why while this legislation is good – and I intend to support it – one thing I think we need to think about as we go forward, too, is a mechanism for people who find themselves in this situation of being arrested over and over and over again or indeed being charged with minor offences repeatedly and repeatedly, even if we're not going to issue warrants for that anymore. I think we haven't really done our job as legislators and representatives of society until we can get better at getting people the help they need once they're in the system.

I say "in the system" in the broadest sense. If they're getting repeated minor offence tickets, if they're repeatedly arrested, if they're repeatedly incarcerated, somehow I can't help but feel that not only would it save money but also serve society a lot better and probably make it safer if we were – and I appreciate that what makes it difficult is people's personal rights, that you can't make people get better if they have an addiction problem. You can't make people, lots of times, accept help if they have a mental illness problem. It's not just a matter of what you can make people do – although to some degree making them get help is a good thing – but, rather, getting better at convincing them to accept help when they touch on the justice system.

While this legislation is good, I think we have to think about a methodology that would be legal and not offend people's human rights and their legal rights so that we could deliver unto them the type of help that they would need to make their lives better and make them less subject to committing offences, being arrested, and all the rest of that. While this legislation is very good – and in my remarks now I would be happy if no one took what I'm saying as criticism of the legislation, because it is not. All I'm saying is that I think that we have some other things to think about, too, beyond what's in the legislation.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members of the House who would like to speak to Bill 9?

Mr. Westhead: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

Bill 10

Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

[Debate adjourned April 20: Mr. Loewen speaking]

The Speaker: I do not have a list of names with respect to speaking to Bill 10.

The Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll get our act together. I rise today to address Bill 10. With this bill the Finance minister has asked this House to relieve this government of its obligation to protect Albertans by managing the province's debt level, a task the NDP apparently deemed too onerous. When will this government stop making things worse? The news that Alberta's credit rating has again been downgraded wasn't enough for the NDP. This NDP government seems determined to show not only that it cannot manage Albertans' tax dollars but that it also has no interest in attempting to manage the province's finances within reasonable limits.

Credit-rating agencies are already taking actions based on their deep concerns for Alberta's financial position. DBRS downgraded Alberta's credit rating last Friday because this government made such irresponsible budget choices. Reputable credit-rating agencies like DBRS are concerned that the elimination of the debt ceiling removes an important self-imposed constraint on the level of Alberta's debt burden. Independent economists have commented that the recent DBRS downgrade is probably the first of more to come after this budget, though it's not the first to come under this government's watch because Standard & Poor's already dropped the triple-A credit rating in December.

What economists have found more alarming than this budget's deficit is the fact that the NDP has no credible plan to get Alberta out of it. Even if one fails to find the current debt level alarming, the true problem is the utter lack of direction and leadership Albertans are seeing from the NDP. This government has no plan to get us out of debt, and it is so far from having a plan that it is asking the members of this House to watch as it throws its weight around and obliterates the only and already generous limitation of how much debt it can rack up.

On the same day of the DBRS downgrade Moody's warned the province's Finance minister again that Alberta's credit rating was under threat due to increasing debt load. Our significant upcoming deficit and rising debt levels are considered credit negative for the province.

Is the government removing the debt ceiling because it knows that the debt level necessary in order to survive the duration of their current term would alarm Albertans? It is unbelievable that the only action this government is willing to take on debt is to remove the ceiling on it. Fifteen per cent is the absolute maximum debt level for a jurisdiction seeking a triple-A credit rating. This is not an allowable limit for an economy that is classified as resource dependent like Alberta's. This limit, just set a few short months ago, was already beyond what the province's debt level should be. Now we have the Finance minister requesting that the limit he himself put in place just a few months ago be removed altogether. Talk about poor planning.

This government has no regard for the obligation that this House has to protect the next generation of Albertans from the financial consequences of living in a debt-strangled province. Make no mistake; what we're debating today is a moral issue. This debt bill will be passed on to the next generation of Albertans. Our children, our grandchildren will be paying for the operating expenses for services that none of them voted for. As this government continues with massive deficit budgeting, the province is falling further and further down into the spiral of dependence on debt financing.

In its defence the NDP came to this office after previous governments had presented about seven straight deficit budgets, but unfortunately they are only stepping up the deficits instead of trying to correct them. We're saddling future generations with an ever-increasing risk that the Alberta they grow up in, the Alberta they try to raise a family in, the Alberta they will one day come to buy a house in is a high-tax jurisdiction that is not attractive to invest in. Their Alberta will have a weakened economic outlook if this House continues to refuse to acknowledge the risks associated with persistent debt spending. If the members of this House make the wrong decision today and support this bill in its current form, they're making a decision to risk a future with higher and higher taxes.

This government has put us on a path that will ensure that the interest rates on the province's debt will not be lower forever. But let me put that in context. Even with a low interest rate, on a big number it's a lot of money. By the next election the government will be spending $2 billion a year to bankers just for interest. That's $2,000 per family that will go to paying the interest alone on the government's debt. This just goes to show how a rise in interest rates and this level of debt will seriously weaken Alberta's financial position. Debt comes with serious liabilities, especially when, as is the case with this government's fiscal plan, there's no plan to pay off the principal.

Many Albertans are already struggling to achieve financial milestones like owning a home, paying off student loans, or finding gainful employment. It was recently reported that one-third of Canadians find themselves $200 a month away from financial disaster. Higher taxes get in the way of Albertans' aspirations to achieve these financial milestones.

If Alberta doesn't get its debt under control, the calls for increased taxation will surely follow. Right now it's becoming increasingly clear that this government would like little more than to soften the staunch opposition of Albertans to introducing a PST. It seems like lifting the debt ceiling and spending without any restraint may be the NDP's strategy for softening this ground.

Social change is coming. Demographics in Canada are changing. My baby boomer generation is entering into retirement. With this, a massive influx of individuals will be collecting from the system far more than they are contributing to it. They've already made their contributions. This government needs to signal to Albertans that it has its priorities straight. These pending demographic changes will have a significant and long-lasting impact on our society. Alberta needs to be in a strong position to weather these financial changes.

We hear all the time from the government that it believes it was elected with a mandate that entitles it to take a number of risky actions. We're now finding that the NDP misled Albertans during the May 2015 general election campaign, promising first to eliminate the budget deficit within two years and then three and then, after being elected, within four, and in less than a year admitting that there was no intention of eliminating the deficit within its term or the next one. Maybe by 2024, the Finance minister recently said with a shrug. It's no wonder that Alberta's creditors are so nervous.

This NDP government has demonstrated a history of disregarding the importance of a province's financial responsibilities and breaking the trust with Albertans. The current debt limit is already large. It is an option for the NDP government to propose a simple raise in the debt ceiling, yet it has chosen not to do so. Wildrose shares the concerns of the province's creditors, not exactly knowing what this means for our province. Debt seems to be this government's only solution. It refuses to manage government bloat or say no to the demands of pay raises for its public-sector unions. Now it's refusing to commit itself to any constraints on debt.

Bill 10 is akin to removing the requirement to be honest and transparent with Albertans about the extent of the province's debt. Without a debt ceiling the NDP are hoping to avoid having to raise that ceiling again when in a few months it becomes clear that its hopeful revenue projections and inability to look inward and find efficiencies requires more and more debt. Having to raise the limit would only force the attention back to the government's financial mismanagement, and it is quite clear that they're hoping to avoid having a larger spotlight shed on its absolute incompetence.

Bill 10 gives this government licence to inflict untold levels of debt on our children and our grandchildren. I'll not be supporting this irresponsible piece of legislation. I encourage everyone here to vote against it and commit to working together to make sure that we stay under our current debt ceiling and avoid hanging a millstone of debt around the necks of future generations.

Thank you.

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate April 20: Ms Drever]

The Speaker: Calgary-Bow, any wish to speak to Bill 1?

Ms Drever: No.

The Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 1, promoting job creation? Mr. Smith. Oh, I'm sorry. Mr. Clark. It's late. It's been a bad week. The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It has been quite a week.

Rising to speak to Bill 1, finally getting the opportunity to do so, and surprisingly so, that it has taken this long for what would presumably be the flagship bill for this government to reach the floor of the Assembly for debate. Finally, it has, and here we are. I was tremendously disappointed when I saw the contents of the bill, or the lack of content for this bill, and how thin it is. It is absolutely remarkable that this is the very best the government can come up with for their flagship bill. It is just enabling legislation, but even if that were all it was, even that wouldn't be enough. It doesn't enable anything that the minister is not already able to do. It's truly odd, actually, why we have a bill here before us in the Assembly that really does so little.

What does this bill do that the minister cannot already do? If I was to look at the bill, it says that the minister can create committees. That's something that you can always do. Increase access to capital: I'm not sure what that means. That's already been done by this government in Budget 2015. Help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment: well, that's actually the role of the Minister of Labour, I would assume. I would hope that's the role of all the government. That's certainly the role of the Minister of Advanced Education. But what does that actually mean? Increase the development and adoption of Alberta innovations: how, exactly? Through what mechanism?

None of these things don't already exist in the Alberta Competitiveness Act, the Access to the Future Act, the Post-secondary Learning Act, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation Act, the Government Organization Act. All of these powers that are reportedly granted by Bill 1 already exist. What's going to change by passing Bill 1, and, conversely, what's going to change by not passing Bill 1? The answer is: nothing at all.

I would describe this bill as singularly unambitious and unimaginative for a Bill 1, the flagship bill. Bill 1 is supposed to be the thing that you should take to the doorsteps of your constituencies and you should use as your cornerstone for your re-election campaign in three years' time. You should be able to go to Albertans and say: we did these things. But this bill does nothing that you can't already do, so it's odd that we are here.

It doesn't enable any tax incentives. I've spoken numerous times about my support for the investor tax credit, but of course that happens through Treasury Board and through the budget, and the annual reporting of the minister is only to Executive Council. I would hope that that happens anyway through cabinet meetings. Curiously, that reporting from the minister is not to the public, so the public has less insight. We have less transparency, less idea of what the minister is up to than we may otherwise have. It was an opportunity, perhaps, to codify the requirement to file some form of meaningful annual report, more than just numbers but activity that the minister is doing.

What I wonder is if this bill really somehow opens up the minister or creates a legislative framework, if it actually does in fact do anything, to enable the minister to pick winners and losers. That's always a huge concern of mine when we have a role, a Minister for Economic Development and Trade. It's always a worry when the government seems hell-bent on economic diversification. I'm sure we would all agree in this House that some more economic activity of any kind in the province would be absolutely welcome, but on what, exactly, the role of government is in achieving that I think there is some debate, some disagreement, and some difference of opinion. I think most of us on this side of the House would agree that that job should fall to entrepreneurs, and Alberta has many still, fortunately, entrepreneurs who can drive economic development of this province, and ultimately economic development leads to economic diversification.

It makes me wonder if there's another shoe to drop. Is there something else coming? Or is this the bill – as they say, a camel is a horse made by committee. Was there a committee somewhere that had some, perhaps, disagreement about what this bill could or should be? Are there amendments coming at committee from the government that will actually put some powers, will actually put some things in this bill that would allow the minister to do something that he or the other members of the Crown can't already do? It really is confusing. I am really, genuinely confused, and as I'm often not at a loss for words, I'm also not usually confused. Perhaps some of the activity on the south lawn of the Legislature is contributing to my confusion right now, but I don't think so. I was equally confused when I first read the bill.

Given that, I don't think I can support the bill, but frankly if I do or don't, I'm not sure it makes any difference at all because the bill does absolutely nothing. In expressing those concerns here at second reading, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to seeing, perhaps, some amendments from the government at committee that will put some meat on the bones of this bill because right now it is truly the Seinfeld bill. It is about nothing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: On 29(2)(a), yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wonder if the hon. member, the independent member for Calgary-Elbow, would offer some comment on what actually is my favourite portion of the bill, section 4, the reports section, where it says, "The Minister must annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2." I'm just a little curious to know if you would be willing to elaborate on the extensive reporting program that the Premier may or may not require of cabinet ministers.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. You know, as leader of the Alberta Party opposition, proudly so, this is a topic to which I give a great deal of thought. I do wonder. You know, given the tradition of government in this province and in other provinces and in our country to not only give ministers of the Crown mandate letters but to publish those mandate letters, publicly share those with Albertans so we know what each minister should be working on and we can all hold them to account and also, equally important, that they know what they're working on, I think it is curious that this government has chosen not to do that. Instead, here we have something that sounds remarkably like a bit of a homework assignment and perhaps even a bit of a sword of Damocles hanging over the head of each minister. Annually or more frequently if the Premier directs: I just wonder under what scenario the Premier would direct such a report more frequently.

You know, in all seriousness, do those reports ever see the light of day? Do they ever get tabled in this Assembly for Albertans to review them so that we can judge for ourselves if the minister is meeting his objectives as so very vaguely laid out here in this bill? I think the reporting piece, especially for a new ministry and especially for a ministry that has such a broad and, frankly, vague definition, is important.

You know, there's one piece I will take an opportunity to talk about here now that I'm talking about this ministry and others reporting. I spent some time with some folks in the economic development community in Calgary earlier this week, and they had some good things to say about the minister. I think that's important to relate because I think the minister himself has been well received within the economic development community, certainly by folks I talked with in Calgary. That's worth noting.

But I come back to my main point about this bill: what is the point of the bill? It's unclear to me why this bill exists and unclear what will change in the lives of ordinary Albertans once this bill receives royal assent and why the government has chosen their flagship bill to be something that, frankly, does nothing. It's just a fluff piece that I suppose has some marketing content they can spend some of their $750,000 advertising budget on.

I hope, hon. member, that that answers your question. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions to the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?
Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to be able to stand and address this House and be able to have a little discussion about Bill 1, the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. You know, I can remember – this is a few years ago, I'll grant, and maybe some of you were still a twinkle in your parents' eyes when this was occurring to me – actually being in high school. [interjections] Yeah, a long time ago. [interjections] Okay. A long, long, long time ago. [interjections] Okay. Enough. Enough.

An Hon. Member: What were the Beatles like?

Mr. Smith: I remember the Beatles.

Now, I can remember sitting in my social studies classroom with my social studies teacher at Jasper Place composite high school, and we were looking at that time at the Russian Revolution, and he was talking about a story that I guess has historical relevance.

There's this old Russian story set in the time of Czar Catherine the Great. The story goes, Mr. Speaker, that a governor of the territory of Crimea, a man by the name of Grigori Potemkin, in order to stay in Catherine the Great's good books and in order to keep his job had to impress the monarch with the prosperity of the region over which he had governorship. So as this monarch went on her royal progress down I believe it's the Dnieper River, he had a series of crew members dress up as peasants and move ahead of the ship as it was going down the river, and they would set up fake buildings along the side of the river to augment the villages that were there. They did this in order to make the villages appear to be prosperous. He had the individuals of his crew dress up in costumes, and they would walk around the villages and would make these villages appear to be bustling havens of industrial and economic activity, all to try to ensure that Catherine the Great would continue to see him in a positive light. These villages along this royal progress would say a lot about what Russia was under her leadership.

Now, these Potemkin villages and this story became famous because it highlighted, Mr. Speaker, what lengths sometimes we as politicians will go to in order to sometimes paint a false picture of what an economy could be like or what certain political events might mean.

I may be stretching it a little bit but, hopefully, not too much. I think that I would make the analogy – and all analogies break down – that this story could highlight perhaps some of the problems that we in the opposition see with this bill. I think that it would appear that Bill 1, as we will find out, was designed to give the appearance that there is progress, that the government was protecting and promoting and encouraging the Alberta economy, without there actually being any real progress.

The author of this Potemkin bill would like Albertans to believe that this government is productive and producing jobs and that the government is the root of that prosperity, but I think, like many of the members who have already spoken before me, we question just whether this bill actually will result in the things that the minister or this government would claim it will do. This government wants to appear to be busy, this government wants people to believe that progress is being made, but in reality all they seem to be able to do is present a bill that gives power to a minister to do things that the minister already has the power to do. Perhaps in a 20th-century context this bill is all show and no go.

Let's dig into this bill and expose it for what it really is. This bill has a lot of verbiage but not a lot of substance. It does not provide new authority or powers to the minister that the minister does not already possess. Section 8 of the Government Organization Act reads:

8(1) A Minister may establish or operate any programs and services the Minister considers desirable in order to carry out matters under the Minister's administration.

(2) A Minister may institute inquiries into and collect information and statistics relating to any matter under the Minister's administration.

In other words, once becoming a minister, you have the ability to operate and to ensure that your ministry is a productive ministry. You don't have to ask permission to do the things that you would have in the course of being appointed a minister.

In Bill 1 we see Potemkin at work when it wants to create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and have a focus on innovation. It sounds great except that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade already has the power to do this. The Ministry of Economic Development and Trade doesn't need Bill 1 in order to support the creation of new businesses or to help companies become innovative. By virtue of the Government Organization Act the minister has all the power that he needs to do this already. Bill 1 is that fake village designed to make it look like the government is working hard.

Bill 1 gives the power to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade to increase access to capital, help businesses to grow and succeed, help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment. Once again, it sounds great, but what did you think the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade was going to do? I would hazard a guess that every province in Confederation has its version of a Ministry of Economic Development and Trade. I would also lay money that they all try to increase access to capital, that they all try to help businesses grow and succeed, that they all try to help working people upgrade their skill and secure employment, and I would bet that none of these ministries in the other provinces thought to pass a Bill 1, that a Bill 1 equivalent was necessary in order to do their job. Who would have thought that the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade would have to have a Bill 1 in order to help communities and regions build on their economic strengths and support economic development? No, this is a bill that tries to set up a series of fake villages. It might make the governing party look pretty good, but that's about it.

If this bill is going to be worthy of support, there needs to be something in it worthy of supporting. Let's start by thinking about section 4 of the bill so that when reports on the success of growing business in Alberta are released publicly, Albertans can know that their tax money and the efforts of this government are being spent wisely and efficiently and are actually resulting from the goals of Bill 1.

Let's take the goals that are stated in this bill, and rather than making them so broad and general as to be meaningless, let's make them a little more specific. Let's place some specific goals and targets into this bill that would move the economy in a sound and practical job-growing direction by providing businesses with fewer taxes and more capital to invest in business growth. That's not something that is limited to any side of any House. I'm sure that every political party can take a look at those kinds of goals and targets and can put some specific goals and targets there so that they can actually grow the economy.

I guess, then, that at the end of the day I'm going to have a hard time supporting Bill 1. [interjections] I know. Sorry, guys. I guess my social studies teacher in Jasper Place composite high school, a great public school with a great social studies teacher, was able to instill in me that sometimes you have to look below the surface, that you have to look at the content and see if it will actually do what it's supposed to do.

I will be voting against this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a) are there any questions to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon?

Hearing and seeing none, I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 1. It's an interesting time that we live in here. I guess I'll start off by saying that I do believe that the minister of economic development is well intentioned. I've seen him. He's worked hard. He's been to China to promote Alberta, and I give him credit for doing that. But the best of intentions don't create jobs; good plans do, and good policy does. I would suggest that a positive business environment achieves those results and more.

The minister has talked about being nimble. We'd like to maybe see nimble and quick, as the saying may go. Being nimble is not good enough, and Albertans need quick as well. If we don't do this in a timely manner, we will not get Albertans back to work, and that concerns me. Now, past governments have been deeply chastised for not diversifying the economy enough, but many Albertans do not realize that if we actually took the 25 per cent of our GDP away which is attributable to the energy sector, the remaining resulting number would be $271 billion. That number would still rank the nonenergy economy of Alberta as the third-largest GDP in Canada, ahead of British Columbia, who has chastised us for lacking vision and diversification in our own economy.

I think that's a key number. We went from 34 per cent, as mentioned by my esteemed hon. colleague from Calgary-Hays, to 25 per cent, and in doing so, the other 75 per cent still represents the third-largest economy in our country. Can we do better? Absolutely, we can. We hope this government will, and we can promise that future governments will as well.

You know, a bill giving the minister powers he already has is a bit hollow and a bit empty. In the words of our friend George Costanza, this is a bill about nothing. You know, it's been said before that it's a bill about nothing. It's kind of hard to debate it, but we're doing our best here, and we're going to try and put forward some of the reasons why we feel it's a bill about nothing.

In the bill it talks about creating partnerships. Well, we have great partnerships already, the Alberta Enterprise Group and many others. Increasing capital: well, that's already been done as well through ATB, through AIMCo, through AEG and others.

We talk about growing and succeeding. I would suggest that in this market we actually need to first figure out how to survive and retain the jobs that we already have, which this government seems not particularly focused on because we seem to lose jobs every day through the actions and policies of this government by not having a positive business environment that people have confidence and trust in.

We say that we're going to help communities across the province. Well, we already have that in place. We have great economic development groups across this province. I met with them up in Kananaskis just a few weeks ago with the minister, and we have passionate, knowledgeable people in their own backyards who know what's best for them, who know what the opportunities are for them to focus on their assets. The core sectors of agriculture, forestry, tourism: there are many active groups and strong advocacy groups within those that can tell us what they need to do. We need to facilitate them and to provide them with the environment to succeed and to move forward and with some of the tools to do that.

You said that you're going to support export development, but there are no clear plans in place. A trip to China: great. What are we going to do with that trip to China? What actions are we going to take to facilitate that export promotion? What about things like coal, that we are large exporters of? We're just going to shut it down. We're not going to be innovative. We're not going to introduce new technologies. We're not going to take a resource that we have that would be the envy of most of this world and use it to the best advantage and maybe innovate and take some technology with it so that we can actually do more good than shutting down the 18 coal plants here in Alberta. Maybe we can help build 180 and cut back the emissions by 10 per cent – there's your 18 right there – and double that and triple that and quadruple that, and we'll actually have a greater impact on what's happening in terms of climate change in this world.

There are regulations noted in here: “[may] give effect to a program.” Wow. That's a strong plan. I'm really running for that one. That's really something great. Then we're going to hand that to his ministry, and we're going to say: go and execute this great plan. We're going to give it to his hard-working staff, innovative people, hard-working people with lots of experience. Mr. Speaker, it's hard to execute a hollow plan. I've never seen that. I've been in business for many, many years, and the only success I've seen is from good plans, good plans with commitment and foresight and strong ideologies that support them.

We see the investor tax credit. It's already in the budget. A bill about nothing: what are we going to do with that? Scrap the bill. Get on with the investor tax credit. Let's go.

The minister is supposed to report to the Premier and Executive Council. Wow. That's a cozy little group to report to. The minister must report to Albertans. That's who we're here for. That's who we're trying to create jobs for. That's who we're trying to support to build a stronger economy. Ultimately, that's who we should report to. That's not part of this bill. We're going to keep it pretty cozy, behind closed doors with the Premier and the Executive Council.

You talk about committees and panels. Wow. More committees and panels. You know what? Just have a dialogue with business. The minister has said before that he wants to be nimble because he wants to work with industry. Well, get out there, have those conversations, and hear what they have to say. There are groups out there. There's Petroleum Services Association of Canada, there's CAPP, there's the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, there's the Energy Pipeline Association, there's the Independent Power Producers Society of Alberta, there's the Coal Association of Canada, and many, many more. Calgary Economic Development, Economic Development Edmonton, and similar groups across this province, in every municipality and in every county: let's work with them. Let's work strongly with them, and let them tell us what's best for their community and how we can help them to achieve that.

You know, we said in our Engage document: to make Alberta the most business-friendly jurisdiction not just in Canada but in North America. That is what Alberta was recognized for before this government took over, the Alberta advantage. An advantageous tax system, investment attraction initiatives, entrepreneurial support: that's what we need to make this happen. It's not happening in this bill, Mr. Speaker. To me, it sounds like the Alberta advantage is, sadly, with this government's support becoming something new, a new regime and a new brand. Wow. Rebranding is always a good thing, throwing lots of the babies out with the bathwater. I think we could call that the Alberta disadvantage.

Mr. Speaker, as we lose jobs, we also lose talented people, we chase away investment, and we handicap, perhaps even decimate, the bright future of not just those people in Alberta today but future generations. Many people have moved to this province not for themselves. In fact, many have sacrificed themselves for future generations because this has been the land of opportunity. I dare say that we seem to be moving away from that.

We've talked about export development, robust market access strategies. That's what we need to follow – agriculture, forestry, tourism, and, obviously, energy – to get to market. Right now we need that diversification in agriculture, forestry, and tourism. Let's get out there and identify those markets, those existing markets. Let's leverage and enhance those markets by supporting them, by getting out there and selling with them to other parts of this world who are demanding our products.

God forbid, let's look for new markets. If we can grow the ones we have and we can find some new ones that are demanding our products, we will be able to expand and add value to those industries. Let's give those people the tools and enhance the skills that they require to achieve growth in those areas and support this economy through its tough times.

Mr. Speaker, where are the plans? More importantly, where are the plans in this bill to allow the minister's very experienced and able staff – and I've had the pleasure of working with many of those staff in my various careers over the past 25 years. They have good staff. They have experienced staff. They have staff around the world knowledgeable about the key markets for us. They're in Canada. They're here working with industry. They're in the overseas offices, that he oversees as well. They're there. They're ready to work for Albertans.

In this bill as well it talks about measuring success. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker, but how do you measure success of a bill about nothing? This doesn't serve the best interests of Albertans. I challenge anyone to try and measure something that has no substance to it. This in no way serves the best interests of Albertans. All we're seeing is that Bill 1 so far has been about one job.

By this government's record, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance, who's claimed I think a couple of times today or made reference to 100,000 jobs that we're going to create, if he's following his esteemed colleague's record of creating one job for 27,000 jobs promised, we can look forward to the creation of 3.7 jobs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I'm just enjoying the debate so much that . . .

The Speaker: Are you under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: No, no. On the bill.

I'm just enjoying the debate so much that I thought that we could continue. I know that there are a number of folks on this side of the House that are pleased to rise and speak to Bill 1, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to a large number of members on the other side of the House adding important comments to the important piece of legislation that we have before us.

I'd just like to point out a couple of things. While I agree with a lot of the things that the third party is saying here today about just how insignificant this piece of legislation is, I just would like to take a brief moment, just a brief moment, to point out that it's quite possible that members on the Premier's team and in cabinet learned a little about pieces of legislation just like this from the third party because they, too, certainly engaged in such activities, with lofty names and extensive communication efforts to talk about the importance of something that they were doing, but when it came down to the nuts and bolts of delivering upon that, sometimes the results were very similar to the results of Bill 1.

In fact, unfortunately, I don't have the day and the Hansard in front of me, but I recall the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, when she was the leader of the then fourth party, speaking in this House about a certain piece of legislation, and she said on that particular day that this legislation was more about an exercise in communications than it was an exercise in legislation. So I'm a bit surprised that while in opposition she was so keen to rally against the very thing that we're seeing here today.

Good evidence of it not being everything that they tried to communicate to the Alberta people is the very fact that this bill was introduced on the very first day of the legislative session, which is over a month ago now in calendar dates, and it's been sitting much on the back burner. My guess is that there are even members on that side of the Chamber that are asking the very question: why is it that we introduced this piece of legislation? My guess is that there are members on that side of the Chamber that aren't very excited about this piece of legislation because they know what we know, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade does not need this piece of legislation to execute the duties that he has been entrusted with.

One of the very, very first observations that I had, Mr. Speaker, about Bill 1 on that first day of session – in fact, in my hands today is the copy that was delivered to my desk, and I kept it because there's something that was unique about it. This particular piece of legislation that was delivered to my desk is a piece of legislation that at that time had never gone to the print shop. I can assume that because a piece of legislation that has gone to the print shop is significantly smaller in size, it's been hole-punched, and it's stapled appropriately. This particular piece of legislation that was presented before the House on that day has merely been photocopied and stapled together by a few staffers in the Premier's office. One can only speculate that it's been done like that because this bill was put together in such a hasty manner that they didn't even have time to send it to the print shop before it was introduced in this Chamber.

It's disappointing. It's disappointing that they wouldn't have taken the time over what was a significant break between the first session and this one to actually put together a real plan. Just a few short weeks prior to the opening of the session, it's my guess that they realized: "Oh, my goodness, we don't have anything ready. We've got to try to put something together when it comes to job creation and diversifying the economy." So they looked at what the minister's job description was, slapped it down on a piece of paper, printed it through the photocopier, and delivered it on day 1 of the session.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve and expect better. I've got to tell you that when this government was elected, I was hopeful. I was hopeful that they had a desire to do things differently. [interjections] They might think it's funny, but I actually genuinely hoped that this government would do things differently than the previous government. But what we have is a communications exercise introduced on the first day of this session that's very similar to other communication exercises that the previous government did. This is the exact type of legislation that the Premier used to rally against and say that this House's time is more important, that the legislation that we're debating is more important than getting the government's message out. But that's, unfortunately, all that Bill 1 does. It is an effort of the government to get their message out.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at 1:30.

Pursuant to the Budget 2016 main estimates schedule a legislative policy committee will convene tomorrow morning for consideration of the main estimates. Alberta's Economic Future will consider the estimates for Agriculture and Forestry in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 21, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect each in our own way. Today, hon. members, the Commonwealth is celebrating the 90th birthday of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. Let us recognize the Queen's dedication and service to our province and to our country and indeed to the Commonwealth. Her Majesty can be seen as a wise elder of the Commonwealth and an inspiration to all public servants, exemplifying the commitment to the greater good.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 32 students from my constituency – the jewel in the crown on this day of Queen Elizabeth's birthday – of east-central Alberta, and that is from St. Jerome's school in Vermilion. They are here with their leaders Mr. Ted Wheat, who was a former client of my clinic, as well as Brittany Partington and Jocelyn Fillier-Holmes. As an anecdotal note I will also point out to the Education and Infrastructure ministers that St. Jerome's school is one of the ones that is being renovated under the school build, and it's on time and on budget. I see that my guests have stood up, and I'd like all members of the Assembly to join in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really excited today to have a school group from my fabulous constituency of Peace River. They travelled by bus eight hours from La Crête to be here with us, and I'm excited to have them here. There is a group of about 40 students and parent helpers. They're from Ridgeview Central school. The teachers are Karie Becker and Jaclyn Cottrell, with parents helpers Twila Olson, Donna Reissner, Margie Driedger, Karen Wiebe, Eva Wiebe, Billy Martens, Steven Thiessen, and Ray Wiebe. I'd ask that they would all stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my absolute pleasure to stand before you and introduce to you and through you from the very picturesque constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills students and parents from Ashmont elementary school with teachers Mrs. Jennine Poirier, Mrs. Carol Kam, Mrs. Sandy Podloski, and Mrs. Andrea Weinmeier. I'd like to congratulate the school on the announcement that they will be getting a new school, and we'll be watching that very closely to see if it comes in on budget and on time. So if they'd all please stand and accept the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you four staff people from my constituency office in the fabulous, amazing, wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. I have here my official constituency office manager, Rob Pearson, who's been working with the NDP caucus in one fashion or another since long before I was even elected – I'm seeing nine or eight years there, 10 years, a long time anyway – and we owe much to him. Along with him is Kayla Halliday, our placement student from Grant MacEwan; beside her is Jack Garnier, our constituency office comanager, whom I'm very pleased to have had start with us a few months ago; and then my constituency office caseworker, the fabulous Kirsten Goa. I'm hoping that all four of them can rise and that the Assembly can join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure, Minister of Transportation, and Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly an old friend of mine. John Geiger was the Edmonton Journal's civic affairs columnist when I was first elected to Edmonton city council. He went on to editorial positions with the National Post and the Globe and Mail, and he is now the chief executive officer of the Royal Canadian Geographical Society. John is the bestselling author of Franklin's Lost Ship: The Historic Discovery of H.M.S. Erebus and six other books of nonfiction. John was a member of the University of Alberta team that discovered the Franklin ship. He is in Alberta bringing awareness to the project to transform the vacant building at 50 Sussex Drive into Canada's centre for geography and exploration. He's in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask John now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very important group of agriculture stakeholders. The United Nations declared 2016 as the International Year of Pulses, which is why it's important that we highlight the work of the Alberta pulse growers. This group of growers are helping feed millions of people around the globe, people who rely on food packed with nutrients, grown in our province. As I say your names, please rise: Allison Ammeter, D'Arcy Hilgartner, Don Shepert, Leanne Fischbuch, Rachel Peterson, Nevin Rosaasen, Jenn Walker, and Jolene Watson. We also have representatives of a few value-added pulse manufacturers here with us today: Caryll and Norm Carruthers, owners of Mountain Meadows Food Processing, NoNuts Peabutter; Maureen Obrigewitch and son Davis from Souptacular; Vivian Johnson, retail account manager for Kinnikinnick Foods. Mr. Speaker, I would now ask my colleagues to give these pulse producers and processors the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly a very good friend of mine, Giri Puligandla. He's the kind of friend who has your back when you need it most. Giri is the director of planning and research with Homeward Trust Edmonton. His areas of responsibility include service systems planning, stakeholder engagement, program design and evaluation, data management and analysis, and research. Prior to joining Homeward Trust in 2011, Giri held leadership and executive roles in several Edmonton-based nonprofit organizations, working in the areas of mental health, housing and homelessness, family caregiving, and community development. I'd ask him to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Alfred Nikolai and Oryssia Lennie from Habitat for Humanity Edmonton. Alfred Nikolai has been president and CEO since 2005, overseeing the growth of the Edmonton affiliate to be the largest in Canada. Oryssia Lennie has been with Habitat for Humanity Edmonton's board of directors since 2012 and is now serving as the chair of the board. I had the pleasure of joining Oryssia and Alfred at the sixth annual Habitat Day luncheon yesterday, celebrating Habitat for Humanity's work in the capital region and its partnership with the home builder community. This year marks the 25th anniversary of Habitat for Humanity Edmonton giving a hand up to hard-working families across northern Alberta. Thank you to the builder community, staff, and volunteers of Habitat for Humanity. Your generosity and dedication make a real difference in the lives of Albertans. I'd ask that Alfred Nikolai and Oryssia Lennie please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a special privilege for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly eight bright, political, dynamic, civic-minded, Liberal women, plus one husband. The group has for years regularly hosted the Liberal women's breakfasts. You can join them to discuss issues of the day just by contacting them. I'm pleased to welcome them on their first visit to the Legislature. If they would please rise when I introduce them: Irene Hunter; Liz Acheson; Rose Marie Tremblay; Joyce Assen; Dixie Mackintosh; Ruth Hunter; Sandi Hollas; Karen Sevcik, current president of the Alberta Liberal Party; and last but not least, John. Where are you, John? Let's give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and indeed a great privilege to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a strong supporter and advocate for Edmonton's vulnerable and homeless, Linda Dumont. Linda started Edmonton Street News, now Alberta Street News, in 2003 but has worked with street papers in Edmonton since 1993, when she began as a vendor and studied journalism as well. Alberta Street News provides a way for those unable to hold conventional jobs to make some money selling papers. Today Linda lives with her two daughters and two grandchildren, volunteers with House of Refuge, and supports herself as a yoga instructor. She is a published poet and talented painter as well as an articulate antipoverty activist. I'd ask her to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Kurtis Ewanchuk. Kurtis is the head of the Aspen Centre for Integral Living, located in the Sturgeon watershed. He is an incredibly intelligent and passionate person, concerned with a truly staggering variety of subjects relevant to our region. Kurtis has been practising land-based applied ecology since his return to Alberta a decade ago, and he's a master gardener, permaculture designer, yoga teacher, and ISA arborist. The Aspen Centre for Integral Living will be hosting the 2016 Northern Alberta Permaculture Convergence in the fall. If I could ask Mr. Ewanchuk to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this assembly Nick Dira. Nick was paralyzed last year, and while doctors said that he would never walk again, dedicated and intensive physiotherapy has resulted in his first steps just weeks ago. I ask that all members join me in congratulating him on his progress, his courage, and his strength and welcome him to this House. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday during Oral Question Period the Official Opposition House Leader raised a point of order concerning certain comments made by the Premier in response to a question from the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat. Yesterday I heard the arguments from both the Deputy Government House Leader and the Official Opposition House Leader, and I chose to defer my ruling.

During the arguments raised, the Official Opposition House Leader took issue with the Premier's statement that the member had suggested certain activity was fraudulent. I would note that the Hansard transcripts from yesterday did not indicate the use of that term by members of the opposition. However, in an unrelated matter to Alberta Health Services it had been used at an earlier event. Although I do not find this to be a point of order but more a difference of opinion, I would ask members to be cautious in the language they use when they are characterizing statements of other members. Moreover, it is a long-standing tradition that statements by members respecting themselves and within their knowledge must be accepted.

Now that we have the explanations and we understand the events that brought us here, I will accept it and expect that members will avoid repeating that kind of language that led to this point of order.

Hon. members, I want to provide my ruling at this point in the proceedings so as to avoid a repeat of the exchange from yesterday and, in fact, the day before and would ask that you all keep it in mind as we proceed in the agenda today.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

International Year of Pulses

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization launched the International Year of Pulses 2016. This is significant for our province and for our country because Canada is the world's largest producer and exporter of dry peas and lentils, shipping to more than 150 countries around the world.

Alberta pulse producers are helping feed millions of people around the globe. It is estimated that over 800 million people suffer from acute or chronic undernourishment. Experts say that the rising tide of health problems is linked to poor diet. The International Year of Pulses aims to demonstrate the integral role these nutrient-dense foods have in addressing global food security and malnutrition issues. By observing the International Year of Pulses, we are sharing the good news about pulses with more consumers, and as more consumers eat more pulses, Alberta farmers can reap the reward of increased market access.

Earlier today we had a group of producers and product developers who provided tasty samples in the lower rotunda. I hope you had time to sample and try the snacks that they brought to us and that you will help promote these Alberta-made products.

The Alberta Pulse Growers Commission is marking this important year with exciting activities, including food and product samplings. This commission represents over 5,000 growers of field peas, dry beans, lentils, chickpeas, fava beans, and soybeans in Alberta. The growers group has created an attractive series of activities to tell the stories of pulses. One of these activities is the pulse pledge. To take the pulse pledge one commits to eating pulses once a week for 10 weeks. Just so you know, eating pulses helps reduce your carbon footprint, and they are also great for your health. We should also congratulate the Alberta Pulse Growers Commission for their efforts to shine the light on pulses.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I would ask unanimous consent for other guests to be introduced.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Jean: Albertans know that this NDP budget is only making things worse, especially when it comes to jobs and the economy. A dramatic increase to the minimum wage and a new carbon tax will hurt young and low-income Albertans and extremely limit businesses' ability to hire. Not-for-profits and charities are worried about their rising overhead costs during a time when over 100,000 Albertans are out of work. Why is the Premier so rigid on a 2018 timeline to implement a 50 per cent increase to minimum wage when it will just make life harder for Alberta families?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Alberta families that I'm thinking of are the ones who work full-time at very difficult jobs and which deserve the respect of everybody in this Assembly, who do that to raise their families and feed their families, and after working 40 or 50 or 60 hours a week still have to stop at the food bank on their way home to feed their families because right now our minimum wage does not come close to providing a living wage. Quite frankly, that's not the Alberta that I want to be a part of.

Mr. Jean: I thank the NDP for taking Wildrose's idea for a small-business tax cut, but then the NDP turned around and made things much, much worse with an expensive new carbon tax. The Edmonton and Calgary chambers of commerce are warning that the impact of this minimum wage hike will make it much harder to hire and for workers to join the workforce. Caring for our vulnerable is a core Alberta value, but creating higher unemployment simply doesn't help anybody. Can the Premier tell Albertans about any economic studies that show how a 50 per cent spike to minimum wage will create jobs?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Labour will be engaging in consultations in the weeks to come to talk about this. When they do, there will be additional information that is provided to speak to the very issue of the fact that when you put more money into the pockets of low-income people, it immediately recycles into the economy, and it actually creates jobs. It doesn't detract from them. You know what else doesn't detract from jobs? Getting rid of poverty and allowing people to support their families.

Mr. Jean: Since she wasn't prepared to answer, Mr. Speaker, I will answer. The only analysis on this minimum wage hike that we have seen came from this government's own experts, and they say that it will lead to, quote, significant job loss. End quote. That's not a jobs plan; that's making things worse for Alberta families. This hike, combined with the carbon tax and other tax increases, is doing significant damage to Alberta's economy. Over 100,000 Albertans are out of work, and they are tired of this NDP government's experiments. Premier: will you please consider and back down from these rushed and poorly thought out experiments, that will only hurt Alberta families?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite would love for us to continue to grow the level of inequality in this province. They would love for us to walk by those people who are unable to feed their families, who are unable to pay their rent, who are unable to secure affordable housing. That's what they would like us to do, and they'd like us to make sure that we do that while we continue to get a D minus rating based on a record that they support, where we take no action to deal with climate change or greenhouse gas emissions. That's not good governance, and that is not what we're going to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member. Second main question.

Nonprofit Organizations and the Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Albertans are feeling that the social costs of rising unemployment and plummeting wages are the responsibility of this government. The NDP carbon tax will cost families $1,000 per year. The cost of everything for everyone in Alberta will be more expensive. While the Premier is offering pennies back to some few Albertans on every dollar taken, not-for-profits and charities aren't listed as getting any rebates or exemptions. They get no help as they see their overhead costs rise through the roof. Why is this Premier ramming through a carbon tax that hurts charities and not-for-profits when they're already struggling under this government's actions?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I think it's pretty fair to say that the vast majority of charities and nonprofits would struggle if $8 billion were taken out of our budget this year. That's what we're not going to do. I will not take advice from them about how to support charities and nonprofits.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, charities and nonprofits need fuel and gas to run. They have to pay for expenses like food and shelter. Under the NDP all of this will be much more expensive for them. Here in Edmonton Hope Mission runs a 24/7 rescue van, that runs on fuel, to help those suffering on the streets. STARS and HALO ambulances require aviation fuel to provide crucial life-saving ambulance service to those in Alberta that need it most. This carbon tax looks like a new tax on charities. Why is the Premier punishing the not-for-profit charities, whose work supports vulnerable Albertans every day, when they need it the most, right now?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to supporting vulnerable Albertans every day. We are doing that by providing stability, by supporting public services, by providing those important front-line public services that those folks over there would have us cut by 20 per cent. You know, it's just a little rich coming from those people over there. We are going to move forward on responsible climate action in order to enhance our ability to get our products to market, to support economic diversification, and to do the right thing on the environment.

Mr. Jean: Ignoring the facts as usual.

Alberta charities are the people on the front lines assisting those impacted most by this economic crisis that the province is facing and that was brought on by the NDP government. Meals on Wheels provides home-delivered food services to those in need. Those wheels don't run on solar panels; they run on gas. And now those costs are going way up. When winter comes, homeless shelters will face higher heating costs to provide emergency relief to those in Alberta that are most vulnerable. The carbon tax will make life more difficult for these charities trying to help. Did the Premier not even consider how her plan would hurt these charities on the ground?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, to be clear, the economic crisis that this province is facing is caused by the drop in the international price of oil. I appreciate that the folks over there like to sort of fudge things a little bit, but that's what's going on here in Alberta.

Secondly, let's talk a little bit about Meals on Wheels. Meals on Wheels receives funding from FCSS. FCSS got a significant increase in funding as a result of a decision made by this government. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Third main question, hon. member.

Mr. Jean: Members of the government are wasting the only time we have during the day, Mr. Speaker, to hold this government accountable.

W-18 Use

Mr. Jean: Yesterday we found out that almost nine pounds of the lethal compound W-18 were recently seized in the Edmonton area. W-18 is an opiate that is 100 times stronger than fentanyl, the drug that killed one Albertan almost every single day last year. If W-18 goes into circulation among Alberta's addicts, it could result in hundreds and hundreds of deaths. What steps is this government taking to educate young Albertans and make them aware that this is the most deadly drug that they will ever face?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. Official Opposition leader for the question. You know, we've been out on this a couple of times already, speaking about this drug to the public. We're taking steps to immediately address the fact that this drug is coming into our system. One of the things we have done in this budget is to increase funding to ALERT, who actually did that seizure of W-18, to make sure that those front-line workers are in place to take care of these sorts of problems.

Another step we've taken is to ensure that funding is in place for mental health services and for human services to ensure that vulnerable people aren't falling into these situations.

Mr. Jean: W-18 has no actual uses other than killing people. It is currently not illegal, but hopefully the federal government may soon act and make it so. The police stated that it is so deadly that if the bag that were found were to be launched into the middle of this room, all of us would probably die. This could be the most dangerous street drug that will ever hit Alberta. What steps is the government taking to make sure the drug dealers aren't turning this deadly compound into a street drug, and how will the government educate Albertans on this, which is so, so important to our young people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, W-18 is very lethal; it's very toxic. That's one of the reasons why within just a few hours of finding out that it was actually seized in Alberta, by the federal testing, we sent a letter immediately to the federal Health minister to make sure that this does go on schedule.

I also want to assure everyone that both ministers in my ministry will be out talking to our communities, and I encourage all members during the constituency break to do the same. This is incredibly toxic and deadly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: I'm very pleased to hear the government is aware of this.

This past Tuesday health officials wrote to their emergency department leaders saying that, quote: they may be seeing increasing numbers of overdoses and deaths linked to W-18. End quote. We know that the medical examiner's office is going through its files right now to make sure that it didn't miss any W-18 overdose deaths. Our health system is very concerned, though. Wildrose put out a 10-point plan to deal with fentanyl. Honestly, some of those proposals could work in this current situation. When will this government be announcing a detailed plan to prevent a W-18 crisis from developing any further in Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, we are very concerned about any illicit opioid use. That's one of the reasons why in the mental health review there was a specific opioid reduction strategy that was already under way. We also have a fentanyl response team that meets regularly with leaders from all across the province, both in health and in law enforcement, as well as community organizations, to make sure that we're getting this information out to our communities.

As well, as I'm sure members are aware, we've increased access to naloxone kits, which is the antidote to both fentanyl and, hopefully, W-18. The amount required might need to be even more significant because, again, this drug is just so toxic and lethal. It can also be cut into any narcotic, so please be careful.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 remains a big disappointment, and so are some of the answers given in QP this week. Let's review. Yesterday our Member for Calgary-West asked the Municipal Affairs minister about a petition from the people of Chestermere. The minister said that she respects their autonomy at the municipality and promised to send a note to the petitioners. What they really want to know is: once the petition is verified, will the minister launch an investigation and commit to making the results of that investigation public?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to clarify that what I said was that the process was that after reviewing all the signatures to the petition and determining whether the petition was sufficient or not, I would send a letter in response to the petition to the people who initiated it. At that point if it is indeed sufficient, then we will, you know, proceed with normal process and do the investigation upon request.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Finance minister in question period yesterday said in Hansard: "The three-year fiscal plan we talk about has an accumulated debt limit there." The same minister sponsored Bill 10, removing that debt limit. Let's give the minister a second chance to correct the record. Here's a chance to clear it up, Minister. Did you not know your file, or did you just plain give the wrong answer yesterday?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Finance I can assure the hon. member that our Minister of Finance knows the files. He has produced one of the best budgets in some of the most difficult economic conditions we have ever seen. [interjections] We're very proud of the work that he's doing.

The Speaker: I don't know what he said. I couldn't hear it.

Mr. McIver: Wrong answer it is.

The environment minister yesterday said that a couple with children earning $95,000 receives $420 in carbon tax rebates. Page 95 of the budget says that rebates are only on natural gas and gasoline. Since $95,000 yields $50,000 in take-home pay, and gasoline and natural gas can only cost $10,000 a year, then $40,000 of that family's take-home pay is not protected by the rebate. Now that we know how little of a family's take-home pay is protected, how can the Premier say that she has anybody's back?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll just go back to basics on this one. I think we might need a little remedial budget time here. Putting a price on carbon pollution rewards Alberta families, businesses, and communities that make choices to reduce their emissions. Six in 10 Alberta households will receive a rebate that covers the average cost of the carbon levy they pay. Low-income consumers, including many seniors, typically use less energy than average, meaning their rebate could more than cover the carbon cost they pay, resulting in more money in their pockets. All Albertans who reduce their emissions will also reduce their actual costs below the average. Add that to the direct savings on . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Elbow.

Postsecondary Board of Governor Appointments

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Advanced Education rose in this House to talk about the appointment of board of governor positions throughout the postsecondary sector. Now, while I agree diversity is very important, I also believe that most current board members are dedicated community servants working for little pay and offer deep experience that is of tremendous benefit to our province. Recently I was told that a letter was sent to the board of the University of Calgary informing them that none of the current board member appointments would be renewed when their terms end. To the minister: is that true?

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for the question. It is, of course, true that we are looking at all of our appointments to our boards in postsecondaries across the sector. We have a very open and transparent process for receiving those applications and reviewing the board member applications, and we will make sure that the best people who represent the communities that they serve and have the right skills will be appointed to the board, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Clark: I'll take that as a yes, Mr. Speaker.

The past government's track record may not have been perfect, but I believe that the vast, vast majority of appointments were merit based. Removing all board members means that Alberta's postsecondary institutions lose valuable institutional knowledge and the expertise and experience required to govern large and complex organizations. Again to the Minister of Advanced Education: if you thought the PCs populated the boards with their friends, by replacing all of those appointments, aren't you just populating the boards with your friends?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, I can assure the member that if I only had my own friends to choose from, there would no board appointments that I'd be able to make.

It strikes me as odd, Mr. Speaker, that we talk about merit-based appointments, yet approximately 80 per cent of our board members on postsecondary education boards are men over the age of 65. It seems to me that if we're going to have people who reflect the communities that they serve, we would have more women and we would have people from ethnic communities. Those people need to be better represented on the boards.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I do absolutely agree that diversity is important.

I want to know if this purge is going on at all institutions or just the University of Calgary. Once more to the minister: have other postsecondary institutions been informed that their board of governors will not be renewed, and if so, which ones?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are working with our boards and our postsecondary institutions across the province to make sure that we have board appointments made in a timely fashion. We are working together with administration in the existing boards to select candidates, and they are helping us out in that process. Our process is open and transparent. Anybody is welcome to apply, and we are reviewing them based on the criteria that are set out in the applications.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Alberta Law Enforcement Response Teams

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our current fiscal times we know that departments within the government have had to make hard decisions. Given that we still need to reduce serious crime in Alberta and given our government's commitment to creating safer communities for all Albertans, to the Minister of Justice: can you talk about the increased funding for the Alberta law enforcement response teams and why our government is investing in this organization?

2:10

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. Well, this government knows what valuable work ALERT does in ensuring that there's an integrated law enforcement team that can respond to issues in this province. One of the issues has been highlighted today, which is the emerging issue of W-18. Fentanyl is a similar issue, and they are doing fantastic work with that. We think that it's absolutely critical that we be investing in these front-line services. We've been hearing from stakeholders that they feel the same way, so we've made that investment.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard from my constituents about how much they value the work that ALERT does and given ALERT's specific integrated approach to serious crime, can the minister explain how ALERT's approach helps law enforcement connect across Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Well, of course, we know that crime doesn't stop at the borders of cities, so that's why ALERT doesn't stop at the borders of cities either. It allows services to place members together in one unit so that they can be integrated, so that they can share information, so that we're sure that the intelligence is flowing to the right places so that they can combat and dismantle these complex organized crime institutions, that would otherwise prey on our vulnerable citizens.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that you have transferred 40 sheriffs from the safe communities and neighbourhoods units back under the Justice and Solicitor General department, can you explain the reason for this transfer and how this impacts the work ALERT does?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I want to stress that this will maintain the same number of front-line positions in ALERT, so the safer communities and neighbourhoods, or SCAN, organization and the surveillance sheriffs will continue to do their important work. They'll just do it directly under the Ministry of Justice and Solicitor General. The transfer of these positions will allow ALERT to use its budget to focus on its core mandate, which is dismantling organized crime. We think that this will work a little bit better for everyone going forward. I think the critical point here is to ensure that the same number of bodies will be on the front lines.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Tax Policy

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For Calgarians, living under this NDP government is anything but priceless. Thanks to the NDP, the typical Calgary family will be paying an extra $136 for the increase in property taxes, a thousand for the carbon tax, $200 for the gas tax. That means that just going about your daily life will cost you $1,336 plus an extra $2,000 for debt repayment. When will this government stop hurting Calgary families that are simply trying to deal with being unemployed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. We need to clarify a couple of things here. First of all, our budget is moving Alberta forward. Our budget is investing in infrastructure, it's investing in families, it's investing in education, it's investing in health care, many of the things that the party over there would not invest in and, in fact, would cut, although we're not quite sure of their numbers yet because I think they're still working on a shadow budget. But one doesn't know.

Mr. Panda: Given that this government can't seem to help itself when it comes to throwing new taxes at everyday Albertans and given that the NDP government's budget is centred around making things worse for Alberta families, including Calgarians who are unemployed, I'm sure the NDP government will get tired of overtaxing Albertans with a carbon tax and move on to other sources of revenue on the backs of Calgary taxpayers. Will this government come clean and tell us their timeline for introducing the ND PST?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, we have said it before; we'll say it again for the hon. members opposite. There will be no PST during the term of this government.

You know, you would think that an Official Opposition worth its salt would be able to find some real issues instead of making them up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Panda: This NDP government did not campaign on a $58 billion debt or a $3 billion carbon tax. Given that the Premier has said that she won't rule out future talks on PST, saying that, quote, in the long term is this a conversation we need to have; I think it is, how can Albertans trust this Premier? A tax is a tax is a tax. Will the NDP commit to not bringing any other tax, levy, assessment cess, or duty that hurts Albertans?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, this government is doing I think an excellent job with the budget in very, very challenging times. The hon. members opposite know – they know – that the price of oil has resulted in an enormous drop in the revenues of this government. We will not be bringing in a PST. We brought forward the budget. That's the direction we're taking. Had the previous government taken advice and diversified the economy, Alberta would not be in this position.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Job Creation

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has embraced Dr. Dodge's recommendations for economic stimulus. Infrastructure spends can be cost-effective and impactful if effectively implemented during a downturn. However, given the epic failure of the much-touted one-job plan and now the bill about nothing, it would appear this government is relying solely on deficit-funded infrastructure to create unsustainable, short-term employment. To the Minister of Infrastructure: specifically, how many of the 27,000 jobs promised to Albertans will be directly or indirectly created by the infrastructure plan?

The Speaker: The Infrastructure minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The current expenditures that are under discussion in the Assembly, relative to an increase of 15 per cent over the previous government's capital spending, will produce at least 10,000 new jobs. It will also preserve many more jobs that might otherwise be lost.

Mr. Gotfried: So 16,999 to go.

Mr. Speaker, given that agriculture, forestry, and tourism are key sectors that need your support in order to successfully expand and diversify the economy and given that development and implementation of concrete strategies and tactics are integral to maintaining and growing markets, to the minister of economic development: what specific initiatives, if any, are you currently – and I mean today – already driving forward in order to support and stimulate export growth and market expansion?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the important question. Just this morning I was in Calgary, actually at the Glenmore Fabricators facility, announcing our $75 million capital investment tax credit, which, quite frankly, is going to result in thousands of jobs. We anticipate about $700 million worth of investment coming in. This is going to have a significant impact on communities throughout the province, quite frankly. That is one initiative. Earlier this week I announced the investor tax credit. We have the Infrastructure minister with his $34 billion . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that announcements and action are two separate things with this government.

Given that Alberta's nonenergy GDP, at $271 billion, still ranks as Canada's third-largest economy and given that this government seems intent on purposefully damaging our key economic engine to make the nonenergy slices of the pie appear artificially more successful, again to the same minister: what specific initiatives are you driving forward to diversify the economy, what indicators are you measuring, and where can Albertans view the results?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Listen, there's one party in this House that made a whole bunch of announcements that they couldn't back up, and it's quite clear where that came from. Quite frankly, we're not only committing; we have an Alberta jobs plan, and we are acting.

To the member's question, he will be able to look at my ministry's website as far as tracking outcomes, but I can tell the member: not only are we investing in jobs and supporting our job creators here in the province, but we're also working at getting a pipeline both east and west, something that the previous government failed to do.

Paramedics' Professional Governance

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta College of Paramedics is set to be imminently moved from being legislated under the Health Disciplines Act to the Health Professions Act. While this eventual move is appropriate, many paramedics are very worried about the approaching deadline, especially in light of recent issues facing the college. Paramedics have expressed concerns to me over such things as excessive membership fees and the difficulty that those with PTSD have in returning to work, serious issues that are still outstanding today. Has the minister also heard these concerns, and what steps is she taking to address them?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the important question. We have been working in partnership, since the day I got on the job, to make sure that we're moving forward with updating the Health Professions Act. Certainly, 28 years is far too long in an environment that's so dynamic, like health care, and where new professions are continuing to evolve. There will be changes being brought forward, both through the Assembly and through other means, to address not just paramedics but other health professionals, and certainly I meet regularly with their college as well as with the organizations that represent their members on the labour side as well.

Thank you.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that the role of the regulatory college is to protect safety and the interests of the public and given that the best practice is to keep regulatory functions of a college separate from the functions that are directed at the economic or social well-being of members of the profession, can the minister assure this House that she is committed to keeping the college and professional association clearly separated during their transition to the Health Professions Act?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta we have a number of different associations where the college and the association are actually in one, and I've learned a lot about that, specifically on the health side. Education has a similar set-up through the ATA as well. Certainly, there's no intention through changes in the HPA for us to be impacting the current model, and if we were ever thinking about making changes to the association and the college side with any organization, we'd certainly have conversations with them and their members.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there are still outstanding issues surrounding the Alberta College of Paramedics, including formal complaints that are yet unresolved, and given that many of the college's membership are very, very concerned about the implications of this transition, will the minister consider conducting an independent review to resolve these concerns prior to moving them under the Health Professions Act?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The work that's been happening around the Health Professions Act has been happening for years. Actually, in my very first meeting with the college I said, "Name your top two priorities," and number one was moving forward with changes to the Health Professions Act. I appreciate that there's a desire to resolve concerns around complaints. There's certainly a fair process for doing that. But I think that if we were to extend the time for the transition to the Health Professions Act, it would be disrespectful to both the college as well as to the professionals who want to be seen as part of that organization moving forward. Certainly, due process will be followed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Education Property Tax in Cold Lake

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wood Buffalo-Cold Lake region has the highest unemployment rate in Alberta, at almost 10 per cent. It also has the highest vacancy rates, at 22.3 per cent. Many families have been worried about making ends meet for months already. Now Cold Lake residents are hearing that the province's part of the property tax will jump up 15 per cent this year. These higher taxes will make a bad situation worse. Cold Lake wants to know: how can the Premier justify hiking taxes on those bearing the brunt of this recession?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that this government is tremendously concerned about the number of Albertans who are struggling due to the drop in the price of oil, and we certainly would not disrespect them by increasing that. Education property taxes have accounted for 32 per cent of education funding. It did in 2013, '14, '15, and will again in 2016. In fact, because Alberta has been growing and property values have gone up, we were actually able to reduce the mill rate for this year.

Mr. Cyr: Given that Cold Lake has seen school enrolment increase by only 1.9 per cent this year, not 15 per cent, and given that Cold Lake's mayor, Craig Copeland, and the rest of the city council know that times are tough this year and wanted to hold the line on municipal property taxes, why did the NDP choose to hike taxes and put families at risk of losing their homes instead of finding savings within the bloated government to cover the increase in the Education budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, it's a difficult circumstance in Cold Lake and many other areas in the province, but it's important to understand that, in fact, the rate in regard to education taxes has not changed, nor has it changed from 2013.

We're looking for ways by which we can help people. Certainly, the way that I can in Education is to make sure that we fund our schools properly, not making drastic cuts to teachers and to school boards and so forth. Certainly, school boards around the province have been very appreciative of that, as have parents and families and teachers and students.

Mr. Cyr: Given that this government has made zero effort to find efficiencies to avoid overtaxing Albertans and given that in spite of all the layoffs and closures and uncertainty that they're facing, the people in my riding are keeping their heads held up high, and since they all want to stop the increase in taxes, what steps will the government take to lower taxes for Cold Lake, which has seen double-digit increases to the education tax over the last five years?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I want to state that there is no policy change here. There was no increase in this whatsoever. For every thousand dollars of assessed value that an individual has, last year an individual had to pay $2.50 in education property tax, and this year they will pay $2.48. We stand strong with the people of Alberta who are struggling. We care for them. We're doing our very best to get jobs to them, to get them back in action, to stimulate this. There's not a policy decision that would not be in their best interests.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Municipal Funding and Tax Collection

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 has raised many concerns across this province. One concern that affects all Albertans is this government's decision to cut funding to municipalities while also passing on forced tax increases, which are then passed on to local taxpayers. To the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. The city of Edmonton alone will receive $20 million less in MSI funding, which they are counting on for neighbourhood renewal. Why did you pull the rug out from underneath our capital city, Minister?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government certainly recognizes the importance of infrastructure to municipalities, which is what MSI is designed for, which is why we're moving forward with a $34.5 billion capital plan, which Edmonton gets a substantial portion of. We are maintaining strong supports for municipalities despite a 20 per cent drop in the revenues, which we did not pass on to municipalities. We are very proud of the support we provide to our municipal leaders across the province and proud of our investments in Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has decided to end the practice of charging provincially owned buildings like postsecondary institutions their share of education tax and given that these facilities are located across this province from Olds to Lethbridge to Grande Prairie, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: why are you increasing the taxes for business owners in any city with a provincially owned building at a time when they can least afford it?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you. Our government is very proud of our relationship with municipalities and of the investments that we've made in their communities. The previous government made the decision to cut these taxes, and we were not able to reverse every cut that's been made previously. Certainly, the opposition, you know, that party, was the one who cut them, and we aren't able to reverse every one.

Mr. Gill: Thank you for not giving me an answer.

Mr. Speaker, given that municipalities operate buses, police cars, fire trucks, and other work vehicles and given that in the city of Calgary our Mayor Nenshi has stated that the carbon tax will cost the city $2.7 million next year, then rising to $6.5 million, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: if Calgary alone will pay this much, how much money will the carbon tax cost other municipalities across this province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we were very clear in the budget papers that 6 in 10 Albertan households will of course receive a rebate of their carbon levy costs. However, the remainder of those investments will be made in municipalities, will be made in indigenous communities, will be made in small business and other undertakings, ensuring that we have robust investments in energy efficiency plus $2.2 billion in green infrastructure like public transit.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Transportation Alternatives

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend I attended a conference on active transportation, and I was reminded of the importance of encouraging more Albertans to cycle, both for the benefits to their physical and mental health and because it can help them save money and achieve the goals of our climate leadership plan. However, if we want to increase the number of cyclists on the road, we need to modernize our policies and regulations related to cycling. To the Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation: what is your department doing to increase the availability, accessibility, and safety of alternative transportation methods like cycling?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, hon. member, for the question. My department is in fact preparing a long-term transportation strategy for review. This will cover all forms of transportation, including active transportation modes. We're looking at a number of goals, including reducing emissions, which cycling certainly does, reducing congestion, and ensuring sustainability and affordability. The bicycle is an excellent vehicle to get to all of those goals.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that I was happy to hear that a steering committee has been appointed to help create an Alberta bicycle design guide to offer municipalities guidance and support in developing cycling infrastructure, again to the Minister of Transportation: will the public have an opportunity to provide input on these new policies that may help increase bicycle ridership?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the purpose of the Alberta bicycle facility design guide will be to provide information, guidance, and engineering details to designers and city planners – [interjections] do I really have to be heckled about bicycles? – to promote uniformity in planning, design, and operation of cycling facilities. As the guide is developed, there will be direct consultation with stakeholders, including bicycle associations and municipalities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that municipalities will be the ones that are tasked with implementing these policies and building local transportation infrastructure such as the bike lanes which will be passing by my office soon, again to the same minister: what supports are available to municipalities to help increase the development of these transportation networks throughout the province?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, support for transportation and transit options for Albertans allows them to choose ways so they can get to work, school, medical appointments, the grocery store, and so on. Our government is engaging with Albertans about future transit investments. We've just opened the third call for applications to GreenTRIP funding in February. There is $130 million to fulfill the Calgary Regional Partnership's $800 million allocation and $285 million for other municipalities outside the capital region.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Seniors and the Carbon Levy

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has been fairly clear that the purpose of her $3 billion carbon tax is to alter the energy consumption behaviours of Albertans that she considers to be incorrect. In Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we are home to a greater population of older folks than the average. As many of our seniors are on fixed incomes and cannot afford new cars or furnaces and don't want to go into debt to do it, can the minister of seniors please enlighten us with regard to what specific behaviours she considers to be incorrect, and how does she expect seniors to alter those behaviours?

Ms Phillips: Well, of course, Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan contains within it a rebate to 6 in 10 households, and certainly low-income seniors would fall within that rebate. All Albertans, regardless of where they live, if their net income is below a certain amount, will receive the rebate.

Now, the balance of the revenues will be invested in a whole bunch of undertakings that the Official Opposition opposes; for example, clean tech in oil and gas, new jobs in renewables and in efficiency, Mr. Speaker. Those are the economies of tomorrow that the Official Opposition . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that over the past week we've heard a lot about the wonders of the carbon tax rebate program and given that some of the government members would have you believe that this rebate covers 100 per cent of the increased costs – the rebate won't come close – did the minister of seniors conduct a comprehensive economic analysis to determine the full cost to our seniors?

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, the approach that this government took in developing the climate leadership plan was to examine evidence from economists that is real, in addition to climate change being real, Mr. Speaker. You know, that's why we landed the rebates exactly where we did, based on average use, and the balance of the investments will be made in clean tech, in oil and gas, in diversification, and in other initiatives that we know work to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions and diversify the economy.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that the Rocky View handibus is a charity in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that transports seniors to important health care appointments and drives over 550,000 kilometres a year to do that and that this NDP carbon tax will increase the cost to that charity by $6,000 per year in extra fuel alone, can the minister please update this House: why is she downloading the costs onto seniors and charities?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, first of all, we do have a robust rebate program in place. Certainly, 6 in 10 households will be receiving one regardless of whether one lives in a lodge or a nursing home or in an apartment or a townhouse or a single detached house. In addition, there will be $645 million invested in various energy efficiency undertakings, not just for individuals but also for organizations, nonprofits, charities, and others. Those are investments that the Official Opposition rejects. Those are investments that would never be made under their sit on their hands and do nothing about climate change policy.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Farm and Ranch Worker Regulation Consultation

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In March I raised a concern that rural Albertans were not being included in the conversation around Bill 6. I asked the agriculture minister why meetings weren't taking place in rural Alberta and why meetings were taking place while seeding and calving were occurring. The minister of agriculture promised me they would be going out and talking to Albertans. Well, we FOIPed the feedback on Bill 6, and it wasn't pretty. To the minister of agriculture: are you now ready to start listening?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you for the question. I think it was a question. You know, information from the survey – there were a lot of options we looked at. We've landed on the option we think made the most sense, made the most sense for the industry, the most sense for the workers. Going forward, I'm looking forward to the consultation process getting started. We are listening to those producers and the workers, knowing that these are busy times. A lot are finishing up their calving season now, and a lot have already started the season because of the warm spring that we've had. I'm looking forward to the consultation process, making sure that we start them when most are available.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: With respect, your listening skills aren't better here than they are out there.

Given that the concern of the farm and ranch workers is that they haven't been consulted at all by this government and given all their worries about this legislation and the yet to be seen regulations, which they say will have a significant negative impact on their lives, again to the minister of agriculture, and I hope you're listening: what steps will you be taking to repair the relationship with Alberta farmers, that has been so damaged by this process?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. I would disagree that the relationship has been so damaged. We've had very good conversations with producers. The producers themselves have formed an ag coalition, where I've had very robust conversations with them. I would like to remind the member that this legislation that we're looking forward to, the recommendations from producers, the legislation itself with the recommendations for the regulations, is to help workers. It's important to remember that the legislation is to help the workers and farmers and ranchers in co-operation with the farmers and ranchers themselves that were able to know the industry and able to get that important information.

Thank you.

Ms Jansen: Okay. Madam Speaker, given that in March I asked that question about the consultations that you were doing on Bill 6 and you had an opportunity to observe the process and see the farmers' and ranchers' feedback and the concern that rural Alberta has, it seems that your government has turned a deaf ear to their concerns. We have seen this in the FOIP documents. Again to the minister of agriculture: how are you going to incorporate the feedback from these concerned Albertans, and are you listening at all?

2:40

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm going to assume that she's talking about the occupational health and safety recommendations that we're going to be looking at for the consultations that have yet to take place. I'm really looking forward to that input. We're going to have upwards of 72 different members – interested workers, experts in the industry, farmers and ranchers – on those technical working groups. I'm looking forward to the recommendations, recommendations that we're going to use to shape the actual legislation as we go forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Leninade

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Last weekend a new candy store opened up in my hometown. As I perused the shelves of colourful goodies, I came across a section of drinks. Instantly I knew exactly what I was going to buy. It was a bottle of Leninade, spelled after comrade Lenin, of course. Now, as I am always one for being cordial, I thought that this might make the perfect gift for our dear Premier. I picked up the bottle and read the front. The Drink for the Masses, it said, and A Taste Worth Standing in Line For. Seriously, how could I not taste-test this drink after such a proletariat description? After all, the members across the aisle have been drinking a similar orange drink for years, and they're still grinning.

My first sip revealed a smooth, bubbly, effervescent taste, almost saying, "I'm really trying hard to impress you," so I imbibed some more. However, halfway through the bottle I noticed a distinct, unpleasant aftertaste. I turned the bottle around and read, "Our 5-Year Plan: Drink a bottle a day for five years and become a Hero of Socialist Flavour." I thought: oh, I get it. It's an acquired taste. You have to drink the orange brew for a long time before you can actually appreciate the true value. Well, Madam Speaker, I am proud to say that I put that bottle down knowing full well that the second half was going to be about the same as the first, hard to stomach with a bitter aftertaste.

It doesn't take a Russian rocket scientist to realize that this NDP government has embarked on a scheme that is unsustainable and unpalatable, and not surprisingly Albertans are waking up to this realization of what the orange crush really means: high debt, loss of jobs, and loss of hope.

Madam Premier, I'm deeply sorry for drinking your drink, and I promise I'll never do it again. In fact, I plan on telling Albertans to stay away from your special brand of orange drink for the next three years.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Homelessness Initiatives

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Homelessness is a complex social problem that occurs at the intersection of systemic and personal challenges and is compounded by a lack of social supports delivered at the right time in the right place to the right person. I want to take this opportunity to advocate for the continued support of Alberta's 10-year plan to end homelessness. As the hon. Member for Calgary-North West talked about last week, despite what we agree is unfounded criticism of the plan's effectiveness, we know that the 10-year plan is working. Calgary has housed 7,000 people who would otherwise be homeless. Street homelessness in Edmonton has decreased 31 per cent since the start of their 10-year plan. But the plan is not complete, and it needs the support of this government and all members to see it through.

Ending homelessness is not about never ever seeing someone homeless again. Life is not fair. Destabilization due to the death of a loved one, job loss, mental health issues, addiction, or fleeing domestic violence, unfortunately, will happen. The purpose of the 10-year plan is to react quickly to homelessness when it does happen. This means valuing people and building a responsive system that gets people into safe, appropriate, and affordable housing with immediate supports and a secure place from which to start working on issues. This will make the experience of homelessness about days and weeks, not months and years. While I support this government's commitment to invest in housing, I urge the government to include permanent supportive housing as part of that plan.

Another important tool is data. Good data makes for good decisions. One of the biggest challenges facing the 10-year plan is creating a common set of data about who is homeless and what services they are accessing. I'm hoping this government will use their influence as a funder to compel common data collection across agencies serving at-risk populations. Simply put, data sharing should be a condition to receive funding.

A lot of great work is happening in our communities, and there is a tremendous amount of expertise within the organizations that make up the 7 Cities on Housing and Homelessness. I encourage the government to listen closely to them as we work together to end homelessness.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer-North Constituency Acknowledgement

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Fellow members, today marks day 353 since Albertans made the decision to end a tired, old government of 40-plus years. Collectively we have effected changes demonstrating fiscal responsibility, diversity, sustainability, and leadership that speak to the needs and resilience of Alberta.

Today I wish to speak to how our government has recognized the importance of my constituency of Red Deer-North. In June the Indigenous Relations ministry rekindled hope and connection by participating in Walking with Our Sisters in memory of murdered and missing aboriginal women. In September the Finance ministry consulted Red Deerian stakeholders regarding budget feedback. Doors were opened as well as eyes and ears. Thank you to Municipal Affairs for the funding supports that enhance the capacity of the Red Deer Airport, which is creating jobs and spurring economic development. Thank you to the Health ministry for the obstetrics expansion and the upgraded detox beds and to Advanced Education for a generous investment in Red Deer College. The Infrastructure ministry has made significant GreenTRIP investment, enhancing our transit groundwork and a $100 million investment through the Alberta jobs plan for our Gaetz Avenue interchange.

Our government spoke to stimulating the economy and creating jobs by expanding infrastructure. I am proud to speak to these commitments kept. As Red Deer prepares to host the Canada Winter Games in 2019, this venture meets the immediate needs of Red Deerians during our challenging economic situation. It sustains future growth while enriching our tourism industry. On day 353 I am delighted by the progress I am able to speak to within Red Deer.

Thank you to the ministries for visiting my community, for acknowledging the opportunity it embodies, and for opening the doors to our needs. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Aspen Centre Permaculture Demonstration Site

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege today to rise and discuss an important and diverse enterprise in my constituency of Stony Plain. Kurtis Ewanchuk, whom I had the pleasure of introducing earlier, is the head of the Aspen Centre for Integral Living. The Aspen Centre for Integral Living is a permaculture demonstration site located in the Sturgeon watershed in the North Saskatchewan basin. The goal of the centre is to "contribute to our community and ecology through resilience building and permaculture education, demonstration and community development." The Aspen centre includes many members and participants from Stony Plain and Parkland county. This is a critical initiative for Albertans.

Permaculture is the conscious design and maintenance of agriculturally productive ecosystems which have the diversity, stability, and resilience of natural ecosystems. It is the harmonious integration of landscape and people providing their food, energy, shelter, and other material and nonmaterial needs in a sustainable way. This organization makes me very excited and proud about the future of our ecology and the possibilities this approach offers. As the Aspen centre states, we are “solutions-oriented and [positivistic] about the challenges we are faced with as a society,” and we choose “to take that responsibility for ourselves and the needs of our community without delay.”

For nine years the Aspen Centre for Integral Living has been educating residents about sustainable living, reforestation, watershed preservation and restoration, and sustainable infrastructure in a hands-on, experiential way. In September the Aspen centre will be hosting the 2016 Northern Alberta Permaculture Convergence. This annual gathering provides an opportunity for experiential learning of sustainable living. It is not enough to know our ecology is at risk. We need to grow our knowledge and skills base of how to take care of our land and our people. This offers a path of regenerative ecological design, forward planning, and working with natural patterns instead of against them.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Airdrie Home & Lifestyle Show

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to talk about the Airdrie Home & Lifestyle Show, happening this weekend. This annual event features over 200 exhibitors aimed at providing unique consumer products which are community, home, and lifestyle focused.

It is the perfect opportunity for families and friends to come together, to shop locally, and to see some of the amazing entrepreneurial ventures taking place in our community. This well-attended community event also features local not-for-profit community groups. It is a perfect occasion for you and your family to find out what programs are available in the Airdrie community for children, youth, families, and seniors and to learn about local volunteer opportunities.

This is not your typical trade show, Madam Speaker. There are so many fantastic events that families can come and enjoy. This year's 2016 Airdrie Home & Lifestyle Show offers science experiments, art exhibits, reptile shows, fashion shows, dance recitals, and a robotics demonstration.

Madam Speaker, this is an event I have attended almost every year since I was a child, and I encourage everyone who is in the area to come on out. The event is to be held at Genesis Place on East Lake Boulevard. Admission is only five bucks, and kids under 12 get in for free with an adult. You can find a link on my Facebook page with more details.

Madam Speaker, Airdrie is a fantastic place to live and raise a family. I want to thank the Airdrie Chamber of Commerce for what I'm sure will be another successful event. I hope you can make it out.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 1

Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act

[Debate adjourned April 20: Mr. Cooper speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak at second reading of Bill 1, the government's flagship bill of this sitting, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. I'd like to first discuss this bill briefly in terms of what it actually looks like on paper, and then I'll move on to a frank discussion of what this bill truly does.

This is an eight-page bill, of which five pages are either blank or the cover page, so it only contains three pages of any substance. In terms of true content, even these three pages include a formatted title, a definition of what a minister is, and a page of preamble. It is important to note that the preamble is not technically part of the law. It is, quite simply, flowery political verbiage, which fits into the government of the day's ideological rhetoric.

Again, going back to the overview of its contents, the five sections of the job-creation plan all refer to the minister and take no real legislative action. The closest thing that they have to any reasonable measures is contained on page 2, section 2, which reads:

The Minister may establish programs that . . .

- (a) create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and a focus on innovation,
- (b) increase access to capital,
- (c) help businesses to grow and succeed,
- (d) help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment,
- (e) help communities and regions build on their economic strengths,
- (f) increase the development and adoption of Alberta innovations, and
- (g) support export development.

Unfortunately, even these politically charged buzz phrases are not entrenched. Section 2 in full passage states that "the Minister may establish programs that focus on supporting working people and job creators, attracting investment and diversifying Alberta's economy," and so on and so on.

Madam Speaker, in essence the minister may implement programs that do any of those seven things but, then again, the minister may not. This type of rhetorical language is an extremely disappointing example of poor legislation, unless it is simply a means for the NDP to create legislation to help push their ideological agenda. This leads me to the next part of my discussion, which is the intent of this bill.

Madam Speaker, in essence, what we are debating here is a mandate letter, which does create one job, and that's the minister's. At a time when businesses, entire industries, and families alike are facing economic hardship and are worried about how to make ends meet, this government is focusing on who they think is most important: itself. This bill shows that the government is more interested in making its members feel important than creating real legislation that creates real jobs. If the NDP was really concerned about jobs, then it would not be taking more money from businesses and individuals during a recession to pay for their expensive political promises instead of trying to finance them through savings within a government that's one of the most expensive in this country. This government is continuing down a very risky spending path, one leading to higher taxes, government charges on everything, and a growing deficit. Madam Speaker, soon we'll be spending more than $2 billion a year on interest payments to the banks instead of on schools, hospitals, and the roads that we need. To quote my hon. colleague from Strathmore-Brooks, "This isn't just bad financial management; this is morally repugnant."

The Premier claims to repudiate her own party's Communist Manifesto, that will kill jobs in the oil and gas sector during a time of major recession, but then she creates a bill that is aimed at helping Alberta through tough times but that ignores this important job-creating sector. It doesn't create a single job for Albertans who need it most.

Generally, Madam Speaker, past governments have used things such as mandate letters to achieve the exact same ends this bill does. Mandate letters are usually formally published documents from the Premier to the ministers which give them the general direction in which they are to operate. Effectively, this government is using Bill 1 as a mandate letter. This sets a precedent that I'm not sure this government wants to follow. Going forward, maybe the solution is to forward all mandate letters to the Legislature for review. In that way, we can help moderate this government's radical ideological agenda. Maybe this would give us enough opportunity to convince them to focus on bringing back the Alberta advantage instead of their job-killing carbon tax.

Madam Speaker, Albertans and this Official Opposition are deeply concerned by this empty shell of a bill. It does nothing to explain how the NDP will avoid creating another wasteful program like the failed job subsidy program, which they finally cancelled after it created zero jobs. Bill 1 doesn't do anything new or specific. Ministers can already create programs. This bill assigns no powers to the minister that he and other ministers don't already have, and it doesn't allow for much public accountability.

According to section 4 the minister must report on progress at least once a year to the Executive Council but then has no obligation to make those reports public. I will also note that the wording of section 4 puts a substantial obligation on not only the minister but directly ties the Premier to this bill. Section 4 presently reads: "The Minister must annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2.” This places an onus on the Premier directly to ensure that this empty job bill translates into real jobs. A failure in this respect is a direct reflection on not only the minister and cabinet but directly on the Premier. I hope this government recognizes that. Albertans will, and the blame will be directed right to the top, to the Premier.

Albertans are already worried and anxious about the future. There is nothing in this bill to reassure them. Rather, it just underscores the fact that this government doesn’t have a real plan to promote job creation or diversify the economy. Albertans want a government that will fight for them in these difficult economic times, not one that will waste time and taxpayer dollars on this skeleton of a bill. Wildrose has released a 12-point jobs action plan that does propose solutions such as reducing small-business taxes and providing tax relief to families and stability for our energy sector.

Madam Speaker, highlights of the Wildrose jobs action plan include providing a 1 per cent cut to the small-business tax, which we’re glad to see our government take our advice on; reducing WCB premiums by 50 per cent for the first 100 employees in each business and eliminating premiums for new hires until the WCB’s assets are drawn down to 114 per cent of their liabilities; cutting red tape by 20 per cent by 2019 and implementing a one-for-one rule on the introduction of new regulations; cancelling the NDP’s $3 billion carbon tax until a full economic impact analysis is conducted; and enhancing opportunities for apprentices to work on provincial builds so they can finish their training. If this bill was focused on proper principles, it would have included some of these points. They would have legislated change instead of flowery talking points that are merely insulting to the tens of thousands of Albertans who are out of work.

Madam Speaker, Bill 1, the minister’s mandate letter, represents a missed opportunity to propose constructive solutions. It contains no indication of what the NDP will actually do for Albertans, and for that reason I will not be supporting this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise and address Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. On the surface and by reading the title, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, you might think that this is a bill worthy of consideration. It would make you want to read on and see what this bill contains. It was really quite a short read, and I found this bill really lacks any real content or original ideas. In fact, I’d call it vacuous, and as of yet we haven’t heard the minister provide a compelling reason for it other than as a big talking point on jobs to distract from the government’s bad policies.

Madam Speaker, this bill, in my opinion, is quite unnecessary. Let me show you a few examples from the bill itself. On page 2, if you care to follow along, under the heading Establishment of Programs:

- (a) create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and a focus on innovation.

The Ministry of Economic Development and Trade looks after this already, or at least I hope they do.

- (b) increase access to capital.

Again, they already do this. I think they brag about doing it through the ATB, so why the bill?

- (c) help businesses to grow and succeed.

You know, I’m beginning to see a trend here. Guess who is already responsible for helping the businesses grow and succeed? Yes, it’s the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade.

Let me quickly skip to points (e) and (f).

- (e) help communities and regions build on their economic strengths,
- (f) increase the development and adoption of Alberta innovations.

Yes, folks, you guessed it. The Ministry of Economic Development and Trade is already empowered to do this on this front, too.

Let’s go back to (d).

- (d) help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment.

Yet again we have ministries that already look after this. In this case it’s looked after by different ministries – the Ministry of Human Services, the Ministry of Labour – so hopefully the sharing of responsibilities with a third ministry as well as the federal government won’t mean that too many cooks are in the kitchen to effectively get anything done.

Finally, we come to the last of the government’s points under Establishment of Programs. That would be

- (g) support export development.

The Premier herself would normally be looking after this as she’s the one who heads up the ministry of international and intergovernmental relations. It would be interesting to hear if international trade has entirely moved from the IIR department or if there’s a hybrid going on.

Madam Speaker, as I read through the document, I wondered if there was anyone consulting appropriate ministers and getting feedback from them on what they were already doing, but what would be even more interesting is if the Minister of Economic Development and Trade could provide some feedback to us on all these jobs that he’s already doing and he’s responsible for.

Let me give this government a little tip. Now that Albertans have had a chance to see how this government works, they’re becoming less and less convinced that this government has the right ideas to govern this province. Twice they tried to win a by-election in Calgary and twice failed. In fact, the vote count is getting worse, not better. Albertans want to see actions that create jobs, real jobs, not bills that really don’t mean anything.

This province is hurting, and Albertans are afraid. This bill, if you want to call it that, does nothing to alleviate their fears. I’ve gone out to my constituents, both at their homes and businesses, whether it be a farm, a tire shop, a restaurant, and so on, and I’ve gone to many of these constituency meetings – you know, they all have elected us – and they’re all very concerned. In fact, they are growing increasingly cynical of any bill that this government wants to put forward, especially a bill regarding jobs, jobs that seem to be bleeding out of this province each and every day. I hear almost every day someone tell me that they are looking at closing up shop and leaving for Saskatchewan or British Columbia. In fact, a fairly large player in the Provost area did just that. He’s had enough. He said – and I quote – that he couldn’t wait out another three years of this NDP government. Those were his words, not mine. He closed up shop and is in the process right now of moving out.

What I don’t think this government understands is that these are high-paying jobs for folks who hire high-paid workers. Now they cannot see any benefit in staying here in Alberta, so none of them will be staying here and paying taxes. Every time this happens, this government loses a portion of not just the tax base but the economic spinoffs of each and every job. These employers helped Alberta generate the highest per capita income and business tax in all of Canada despite our low tax rates. All the workers that worked under them are now gone. Businesses have lost confidence in this government. Twenty per cent higher corporate taxes, a $3 billion carbon tax, 50 per cent higher personal income tax: doesn't this government understand that there are consequences to their actions? If you tax people 50 per cent more and they leave, you don't have 50 per cent more; 50 per cent more of nothing is still nothing. So far what I'm seeing is not a job-creation program but a job-killing program.

Please take another look at our 12-point jobs plan and steal from us. I welcome you to do that. It's okay. Alberta needs good ideas, wherever they come from, and, you know, we're here to help.

An Hon. Member: Call it a tax.

Mr. Taylor: Call it a tax, yeah.

Where's the transparency in this bill; you know, the common-sense public reporting on jobs program? I ask this because if you look at page 3, section 4, reports, states: "The Minister must annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2." But where in this section of this bill does it say how this reporting will be done and how Albertans are supposed to find out about the results? There is no requirement for public reporting, and in fact the Executive Council is under no obligation to release these reports. Further to that, reporting, as I read it, could be done verbally to the Executive Council. Albertans don't want voice mode. Again I ask: where's the transparency and detail that Albertans expect?

My other concern is that with the passing of this skeleton of a bill, we'd be responsible for whatever meat the government now throws in with the bones regardless of how rancid it smells. This government has in the past, and very freshly in the minds of Albertans, hammered through bills without engaging Albertans, bills like Bill 6 last year, of course. Bill 6 was rammed through with time allocation, and the government went on to suggest to Albertans to trust them to fill in the details over the next 12 months or so. This bill has similarities in that it has accountability measures in it but to Executive Council and not to the stakeholders, Albertans, and, like with Bill 6, Albertans are expected to trust this government to fill in the details later.

I would strongly suggest that to improve this bill, the government needs to build in transparency. Reports to the Executive Council need to be publicly released and available on a quarterly basis so that Albertans know the status of each strategic area. That would at least put a little piece of significance in this bill. But, regardless, this minister and this government should feel pretty silly for rolling this out as their flagship bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the bill while the reality is that I cannot support it. I have to ask the question: why do we create legislation in this House? We create legislation to fill the holes in our legal system, which really means to meet the real needs of society. We create legislation, for instance, to regulate aspects of our lives, to give authority to others. We create legislation to prescribe solutions to problems, to provide funds for necessary services. We legislate to sanction, to grant, to declare, to restrict. In these kinds of ways, we create real solutions to real problems.

Now, if we were to take a minute and look back to the very first session of this Legislature, in 1906, we would see 35 bills come forward that do all of these things. We have laws for coroners, public service, sheriffs, police, clerks, firefighters, doctors, farmers, and the list goes on. These bills filled a hole, a real need. They satisfied that need for a new province. They provided real regulation for real problems. But this bill creates nothing, and it especially doesn't create real jobs.

I commend the first MLAs for the time and the effort they put into ensuring that our province prospered. I commend the first MLAs for ensuring that Albertans, for instance, can do their jobs because the law provides for and supports the basic institution of our province's needs. Many of those first 35 bills legislated departments. Alberta's first MLAs knew that our ministries needed to be well established so that they had the ability to do their jobs. Without those first bills, those ministries would not have been able to function. Those original bills defined the way our service industry works. They defined the respect that workers deserve so that they can have the authority to do their jobs. Just as our service industry was defined by those bills, so our ministries were defined and so were ministers given authority. They were actually groundbreaking rules.

Over one hundred years later the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade puts forward Bill 1, in 2016, and I have to ask: what does this bill do that was missing? What need does it meet? We have piles and piles of legislation that governs all of the ministries and the ministers and the civil servants and even our neighbours. It outlines the responsibilities, their duties, their abilities, their powers. This House is supposed to pass legislation that fills holes where legislation does not exist to meet real needs. This bill doesn't fill any hole. It doesn't meet any real needs. Necessary bills are ones that grant powers or otherwise empower a person or ministers.

Now, the 100-year anniversary of women's suffrage was celebrated this week. It was a celebration of a significant milestone in a long fight for universal suffrage. It was a celebration of respecting women as equals. Albertans' first MLAs passed legislation that commanded the respect of many people and was a historical moment in history. Bill 1 is not going to be remembered as a great moment in history. It will be forgotten immediately.

The governments that have occupied these seats have done great things in our past. They passed historic bills and made major changes. There have been bills that have changed our health care system and our education system and bills that govern our resources and provide for the care of vulnerable people.

What I can't quite understand is how Bill 1 fits into that category. Every other minister is able to do everything listed in this bill already. In fact, section 8(1) of the Government Organization Act reads: "A Minister may establish or operate any programs and services the Minister considers desirable in order to carry out matters under the Minister's administration." So why does the Minister of Economic Development and Trade believe he lacks this very ability, that is clearly given to him right there?

This truly is a verbiage bill, a vacuous verbiage bill. It doesn't meet any needs. It doesn't fill any holes in our system. It does not grant more respect to the minister. Mr. Speaker, I want the minister to know that the moment he was sworn into office, he already had the respect, the powers, the authorities, and the abilities listed in Bill 1. There is no reason for the minister to think that he doesn't have the respect he feels he is lacking in Bill 1. There is no reason for Bill 1. We, quite frankly, don't need it. We don't need legislation to fill holes in our system where holes don't exist. We do need legislation respecting the authority of this House that will further Alberta's proud history, from providing for women's suffrage to protecting the vulnerable to providing life-saving front-line services. Now it's come to this, a job description in the form of legislation.

The members opposite have come to present bills that do absolutely nothing beneficial for anyone. This bill doesn't do anything beneficial for the minister, as has been proven by my colleagues. The minister already has every single power listed in this bill. This bill doesn't do anything beneficial for the people of Alberta since no new powers or mandates are granted by this bill. This bill does not show respect for the people that have come before us. A bill that respects the House and that respects Albertans would be one that is needed and that is necessary. This bill is neither. Therefore, it's not in the tradition of the great legislation of this House, and I cannot support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to get up this afternoon and talk about Bill 1. Good afternoon, everyone. As we sit in here and debate this matter today, I'm often reminded of the nice weather we have outside and sometimes why we sit in this Chamber to do the work that we do. I think this is an occasion when I wonder about that more than the average day on a Thursday afternoon. Bill 1 seems to be one, as some of my colleagues have noted, that is a bit redundant. It's a bit of a duplication of things that seem to be already permitted and already in order. It seems to be something that is totally unnecessary.

I'd just like to say that, you know, I was kind of interested to get a chance to speak about this. I wasn't sure if the government forgot it was still on the Order Paper, actually. It's been delayed for some time. In any case, here we are. Really, with such a bold, exciting name I was hoping to see something more valuable in this. It says: Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. I mean, it seemed like something we could really get our grip on. Unfortunately, after looking at it, it became clear that it was just a bunch of, perhaps, creative writing. It's not a very substantive plan for employment or economic growth or a chance to help our jobs sector.

While the number of Albertans out of work continues to soar, at least the government could claim that this bill did create one job, I suppose, and it was that of my friend the economic development minister, who I've served with now for a few years. But when you get down to the meat of the bill, though, actually, we're talking about a bill that's long on ambition, from what I can see, and short on substance. As thin and vague and meaningless as this bill is when it comes to economic growth and job creation, I would argue that one thing the bill actually does set out to accomplish is that it outlines clearly the roles and duties of my friend of these years, the minister. But it's really completely pointless. I mean, in fact, the power supposedly invested in the minister by this bill already exists, as was clearly pointed out by the previous speakers. This adds nothing new and nothing he didn't already have before.

You know, one of the other speakers mentioned it, and it's already in the Government Organization Act, which reads, "A Minister may establish or operate any programs and services the Minister considers desirable in order to carry out matters under the Minister's administration." That's fairly clear, I think, what he can already do. It also goes on to say, "A Minister may institute inquiries into and collect information and statistics relating to any matter under the Minister's administration." Those are the things that the act already has in place, yet this bill talks about a lot of things that I think we'll show you in a moment are redundant to what I've just read.

I mean, the first one is (a) in the provisions here: "create partnerships that support entrepreneurship and a focus on innovation." Well, that's already the responsibility of that ministry. "Increase access to capital." Again, it's already the responsibility of that ministry. "Help businesses to grow and succeed." Already, again, a responsibility of that ministry. "Help working people upgrade their skills and secure employment." That's actually already done through the Ministry of Human Services and the Ministry of Labour. "Help communities and regions build on their economic strengths." Again a responsibility of this ministry. "Increase the development and adoption of Alberta innovations." Again, already the same ministry, the same responsibility. "Support export development." Already the responsibility, actually, of the ministry of international and intergovernmental relations. So one has to wonder why this bill has been put into place.

Presumably, if there was something substantive and critically important in this bill, why wouldn't we have discussed it a week ago instead of letting it sit around on the Order Paper? If the minister needed it to authorize his standard work functions, then I'm not entirely sure what he's been doing up until now. I know he's had a wonderful trip overseas and has toured some fabulous countries, but I sincerely hope that the government's idea of job creation isn't that.

It's become clear that this NDP government is more committed to optics, really, than results, from what I've seen so far. It's more important for them to be seen to be acting than it is to actually act and, even more importantly, to achieve success.

The reality is that since this government has taken charge, they've only made a bad situation worse as economic conditions seem to decline. With a host of new tax and spending measures, that we've all been debating about, this decline has only been made more steep, more pronounced, more severe. Government measures have discouraged investments and choked our economic growth. In short, government actions have gone completely against the high-minded rhetoric that this bill seems to present. Perhaps it's for that reason that the government has seemed to decline putting any firm accountability metrics into this legislation. The reporting requirements are flimsy where they exist at all. Results do not have to be reported to the public but only internally. One would think that if this were truly the bill to accomplish all that they've claimed, they'd be very open and transparent with the results and performance measuring.

One might think that this government more than anyone, actually, would be happy to shout their successes from the roof of this building or clap like they did the other day, several times, during their budget process. But as we've seen so far too often, when the results aren't expected, accountability measures seem to get stripped. We've heard scant little about expected economic growth, frankly, Madam Speaker. We've heard nothing about fiscal multipliers and the value these massive new spending measures and subsidies will actually provide. The government won't quantify what they deem to be a success beyond boasts of yet more spending.

What will all this accomplish? A small piece of paper passed in this House is not what Alberta needs and deserves. I remember having that bill. I don't have it with me here today. It's very thin. It only has a few pages. We actually need something more substantive. We need a government to keep its eye on fiscal sustainability and long-term stability. Both of these things have been undermined by misguided taxation policy and an agenda centred around destabilizing deficit and debt. This is not how you create employment and job growth, people. Not even the puffed-up language of Bill 1 can compensate for the very real damage that massive new taxes, credit downgrades, ballooning interest payments, and economic instability have brought.

Here's the bill someone just passed me, and I note that we have one, two, three, and a blank set of pages in the back. So it's actually only three pages, Madam Speaker. Only three pages. All the things that I've already talked about in my previous conversation with regard to all of these things existing in the ministry make up most of this. There's nothing more.

Anyway, as I said earlier, I congratulate the minister for sitting down and writing himself up a nice set of guidelines and his own mandate, I suppose. Since there's very little substance here, we on this side of the House will be happy to offer up a bit of advice on how you could do it well. Nonetheless, as we've seen what we've seen here today and heard what we've heard from all the other speakers on the duplicity of what's in this document, it's our opinion that this is a total waste of time, a total waste of debate time, a total waste of procedure. It already exists. For that reason, I myself and my caucus will not be supporting this unnecessary bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

3:30

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to share my concerns on Bill 1 with the Assembly. I think my colleagues have done an excellent job of showcasing how unnecessary this bill is. It seems to me that this Assembly's time could have been put towards purposes that actually help Albertans if the Premier had simply written a mandate letter for this minister. It's quite clear that the Minister of Economic Development and Trade already has the ability to do all the things that are outlined in this bill, not only because it's clearly outlined in the Government Organization Act but because the minister already has dedicated taxpayer dollars to various corporate welfare schemes. We've seen solar subsidies and tech fund investments already, without this bill.

Today I'd like to go a step beyond some of these valid criticisms and talk about the ideas around government-driven economic diversification. It isn't exactly clear that this government actually understands what economic diversification really looks like in the real world beyond its use as a buzzword, Madam Speaker, or a talking point for this government. There have been some interesting numbers released over the past few weeks about the levels of diversity in Alberta's economy, and if any of the hon. members on the other side had taken the opportunity to study these numbers, they may have had cause to do some soul-searching because these numbers show that what the government has been saying about Alberta's economy is simply false.

Now, I know that my colleagues across the aisle would never purposely try to mislead Albertans, so I'd like to take a moment to explain just how successfully our economy has already been able to diversify without government interference. Between 1985, Madam Speaker, and 2014 our beloved province saw significant changes in the distribution of gross domestic product sources. To be clear, this is what measures economic diversity in our province. Let's keep in mind that the energy industry was in a slump in 1985 and had record activity in 2014, so these totals will be even more impressive in 2016.

As Alberta's total GDP grew from $67.6 billion in 1985 to $364.5 billion in 2014, there was a shift in the percentages of economic distribution between industries. In 1985 energy accounted for 31.6 per cent of Alberta's GDP, when we were at the lower end, and then by 2014, with oil at $100 a barrel, it accounted for only 25.5 per cent of our province's GDP. That's more than a 10 per cent drop in the reliance on our energy industry. Between these years there was significant growth in industries like construction, retail and wholesale, tourism and consumer services, finance and real estate, business and consumer services, and manufacturing.

The increase in economic diversity didn't happen because governments handed out grants and subsidies and chose winners and losers. In fact, many of the former government's attempts to manufacture diversification in the '80s failed. I have in the past walked this House through a series of failed economic diversification projects, but let's have a refresher. Madam Speaker, failed government-driven economic diversification projects from the era include NovAtel, the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader, Millar Western Pulp Ltd., Gainers, magnesium company of Canada, Prince Rupert Grain terminal, Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries, Chembiomed, Canadian Commercial Bank, Northern Lite Canola, and General Systems Research.

The fact is that history shows that diversification happens most effectively when the government stops trying to force it. It was strong, broad-based economic incentives like low taxes, an openness to investors, and a philosophy of self-reliance that made room for the industrious spirit of Albertans to thrive in all sectors. We owe the level of economic diversification and the significant amounts of growth that we've seen in Alberta over the last few decades to the hard-working economic drivers in the private sector. The previous government didn't diversify. They got out of the way, though, so that Albertans could do the business of diversifying.

The problem is that this government can't seem to grasp the fact that diversification can happen without government. The truth is that when the members over there claim that our economy hasn't diversified, do you understand that in recent decades you're more than wrong? You're discrediting every single Albertan who had vision and foresight and the Albertans who took risks in order to help our economy and make significant progress in diversifying. Frankly, I don't think that the Albertans who worked so hard and took such massive risks to get us here deserve this government's disdain.

Now, there's no question that there is more room for more diversity in our economy. The NDP government, however, fails to understand how economic diversity is successfully achieved and what factors must coincide with diversification in order for diversity to actually benefit Albertans. It's not enough to see the economy diversify; we need to see the economy grow as well – right? – like we did in 1985, despite the fact that oil prices were low, and in 2014.

Punishing the oil and gas industry by taxing it, by threatening to hike royalties, then taxing it again, and then increasing the regulatory burden: all of this forces industry to shrink and forces businesses to cut jobs, leaving Albertans out of work. This government's actions are certainly causing the energy industry to shrink relative to the rest of Alberta's economy. On paper the other segments of the economy look relatively large as a result, but it's important to note that attacking one industry, Madam Speaker, does not automatically make other ones stronger. In fact, on the contrary, many other industries are spinoffs of these industries that rely on business from oil and gas and those who work in it. At the end of the day even though other industries look relatively larger, they're operating in weaker economic development.

One of the most important things for the welfare of our society is a strong, growing GDP. The source of the growth is less important than the growth itself. All Albertans are better off when the economy is stronger – I think we can all agree on that – and when economic activity is high.

Recently this government made the catastrophic decision to punish our primary industry, oil and gas, with an unnecessary royalty review, which was followed by the Premier telling reporters that now was not the time to raise royalties. Unfortunately, that kind of open-ended answer is cold comfort to would-be investors in Alberta. That kind of answer signals that changes may still be on the table down the road and that the current regulatory system could really change at any time.

This government also decided to increase the oil and gas industry's regulatory burden and costs with its infamous climate action plan. It made it harder for junior companies to attract capital investment, by raising corporate and personal taxes. That's not how to diversify an economy.

A government can best aid in economic diversification through introducing measures and maintaining systems that allow the economy as a whole to grow in whatever direction the market forces attract investors. If we are truly dedicated to economic diversification, we cannot be punishing some sectors and growing others. Alberta needs broad-based macroeconomic policies that stimulate economy-wide growth. If we provide Albertans with a strong fiscal framework that recognizes that we're not just competing with the rest of Canada but with the world, Alberta entrepreneurs will move forward to diversify the economy as they always have. Unfortunately, the government is mismanaging the economy so badly that private investors are nervous.

There are advantages, from the perspective of a private investor, to Alberta's current market. If it weren't for the risky economic experiments and high-tax agenda, this would actually be a good time to make long-term investments in Alberta. The province's factors of production inputs are more competitive now with the rest of Canada than they've generally been. We have access to capital that has been made easier. Interest rates are low, and they encourage borrowing. Construction costs are lower as the labour market has more hard-working Albertans available. We have an immense amount of technical expertise in this province just waiting. Energy prices are low for now.

The reason that we're not seeing a significant level of private investment in the province right now is because no producer believes that this government has a plan for stable, long-term economic success. Investors know, Madam Speaker, that the policy that the NDP is now pursuing will result in Alberta being a weaker financial jurisdiction in the long run and that significant tax increases will be required to manage the massive amount of debt that the province is projecting. And to take on this kind of interest – the interest rates are going to rise. They inevitably do. The government is not creating the economic conditions to allow job-creating industries to thrive. These policies aren't just harming private investment; they'll eventually even harm the companies that are now receiving the handouts.

Prices need to fall in a recession so families and businesses are able to maintain their purchasing power. This government's tax increases are keeping the cost of raising a family and of running a business artificially high. Investors are nervous because of policies like the coal phase-out, changes to the SGR, which led to the mass PPA cancellations, and 30 per cent commitment to the renewables that will inevitably drive up the price of power. Why build a factory in a jurisdiction that is moments away from a huge increase in the cost of electricity?

Look at what happened in Ontario after a severely mismanaged green revolution. Industry fled en masse, and the businesses were forced to close because they couldn't afford their power bills. Why would any private investor build in a jurisdiction where that is about to happen? How is any industry, Madam Speaker, expected to survive this disaster, that will raise costs for absolutely everyone in this province, especially our job-creating industries?

So as we consider Bill 1, which claims to promote job creation and diversification and acts as part of this government's misguided plan to forcibly diversify our economy, I urge my fellow members to keep in mind that the best step forward for this government would be a change in their ideological anti-industry and anti-investment economic policies. Only when the government stops making things worse with forced economic diversification, an empty jobs bill, will things start to get better.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments under 29(2)(a)? Go ahead, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View had to know this was coming when she includes the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader in her list of failed projects or projects that demonstrate that economic diversification that is catalyzed by government is a failure. I guess my question to the hon. member is: could she quote the socioeconomic study or the wraparound fiscal study that indicates that indeed when one considers the entire economic stimulation to Lloydminster and area and all forms of taxation revenue that have been generated by the upgrader – how does she, then, conclude that the Husky upgrader is a failure?

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you for the question. As we move forward at this point, if you look at the history of it, Alberta's initial investment in this was $305 million, which would have come from the Alberta investment division of the heritage fund, which the province would receive at some point 24 per cent in participating interest. Then they spent $404 million on capital costs and then spent a further $19.3 million in operating costs, not seeing the losses associated with this. I think eventually they received $32 million four years later. Saskatchewan sold its shares to Husky for $310 million, thus recouping the province's investment.

An Hon. Member: How much did we collect in taxes when the jobs were created?

Mrs. Aheer: Taxes? In jobs that we're creating right now? That's a very good question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair, please.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thanks. Not on 29(2)(a). I'd actually like to speak on this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: We still have a few minutes on 29(2)(a), so are there any other questions or comments?

Seeing none, then I will recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, thank you. I actually hadn't intended on speaking today, and perhaps the members opposite and perhaps some of the members in the Official Opposition will be dismayed to learn that I have decided to speak on this. This is debate that we have here in the Chamber, and I think from time to time it is important that we actually listen to each other and respond to comments that are made by other hon. members.

I do have to respond because I'm going to suggest, with great respect to my honourable colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View, that while she makes commentary about the Lloydminster upgrader and no doubt quotes from Dr. Morton's paper, which is flawed in many ways, the Lloydminster upgrader – and I can say this with a great deal of confidence because I was there. I was on city council in 1988 when Premier Getty and Premier Devine and Bill McKnight and Don Mazankowski and Bob Blair from Husky announced the Lloydminster biprovincial upgrader. And I will tell you that that is a day that transformed the city of Lloydminster.

Prior to 1986 and especially, it was noted, in 1986, Lloydminster was largely dependent on agriculture and oil, but the heavy oil that was being produced in Lloydminster was simply heavy oil and did not get any upgrading whatsoever. It was shipped, or it was transformed into road-building asphalt. We had a very large asphalt plant, and actually Lloydminster asphalt went all over the place, as did shingles. We had a Dominion tar and paper shingle factory in Lloydminster as well, and we produced a lot of shingles.

Now, in 1988, our MPs Bill McKnight and Don Mazankowski as well as the Premiers that I mentioned, Grant Devine and Don Getty, whatever else you may think of the legacy of these four leaders, had the courage to put together a plan and a partnership with Husky to build an upgrader on the Alberta-Saskatchewan border. Actually, technically speaking, it's just on the Saskatchewan side. This upgrader transformed Lloydminster, because what it did is it meant that we were not as susceptible to the boom-and-bust cycles that happened within our society.

I'm not a real big fan necessarily of government involvement in a lot of things, but I will tell you that the upgrader is a good example of places where judicious expenditure and judicious investment by government are the smart things to do. I will tell you, having been in business in Lloydminster since 1983 – and Lloydminster is still my home town – that if you were to ask people on the streets of Lloydminster, "Is the upgrader a good thing for Lloydminster or a bad thing?" resoundingly you will get the answer that the upgrader is a good thing for Lloydminster. Resoundingly.

The hon. member made the comment about what the province of Alberta got when it sold its roughly 25 per cent share in the upgrader compared to the province of Saskatchewan. This will delight my friends on the other side, but I would like to say that that would be an example of what I would call knee-jerk government policy reaction. That was that in the '90s a decision was made that the government should not be in the business of being in business, which I actually agree with, but the decision on when to get out of the business was: immediately. We basically sold our share of the upgrader at a fire-sale price. The province of Saskatchewan hung on for a little while longer, and they got a much better price. So on that part of it – and I'll be fully critical of the government of the time, which was a Progressive Conservative government – we didn't always get it right.

But I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that for all of the criticism – for all of the criticism – of the folks here who would like to know what the burden of governing is like but, hopefully, will never find out, Lloydminster is a very different place because of decisions that were made in 1988.

In 1992 the upgrader was completed. In addition, in 1990, thanks again to a forward-thinking and progressive government, Lakeland College, which had always been centred in the town of Vermilion, opened a second campus in the city of Lloydminster. And as a result of that – and I remember the day of that opening very well because whenever I look over at the Minister of Service Alberta, I think of it. She often brings her young son Patrick into the Chamber, and I had my one-week old son in a Snuggli at the grand opening of Lakeland College's Lloydminster campus on the 10th of May, 1990. So I don't have any trouble remembering that date.

An Hon. Member: Aw.

Dr. Starke: Aw. Yeah.

I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that between the upgrader providing stability to our oil economy – and I will tell you that our service sector is taking a dramatic hit, and it's hugely important to Lloydminster, so all I can say is: thank God we've got the upgrader there, and thank God that the stable jobs are there for many citizens of Lloydminster. We've gone from a facility that upgrades heavy oil and 46,000 barrels a day to synthetic crude oil and over 110,000 barrels a day.

3:50

The upgrader has been good for Lloydminster. Lakeland College has been very good for Lloydminster. Because of those strategic investments Lloydminster today is so much more than it was in 1983, when I first came there. Lloydminster has more than doubled in size. Lloydminster has a strong and robust economy. Lloydminster has one of the highest per capita and average incomes, one of the highest average education levels. It is regularly in the top-10 list of communities in terms of entrepreneurial activity and in terms of friendliness to new business start-ups. Somewhat curiously and embarrassingly, it was the number two city for Ashley Madison clients, when that was released. I have no idea if there's any correlation there whatsoever, Madam Speaker. Hopefully not.

I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that I am very proud of our city. I consider the upgrader to be an integral cog in that development.

Now, speaking perhaps somewhat more specifically to my hon. friend across the way, to his bill, the flagship bill, as it's stated, I do have to agree with my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View that this is largely a bill that is a job description. It is very disappointing to consider that this is a Bill 1. I mean, I will definitely agree that the Bill 1 flowing out from the last throne speech, the act that changed how we do election financing in this province, was a much more weighty bill and, I think, created a much more profound change in our province. I will tell you that this one doesn't quite measure up to that standard.

I would also point out, because my hon. friend is so fond of saying it so frequently, about the failure to economically diversify our province. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View did an excellent job of explaining how our GDP has become more diversified. Dr. Trevor Tombe of the University of Calgary has pointed out that in terms of employment and workforce Alberta has the most diversified economy in Canada. There are different measurements that you can use.

We can always tell when the government has run out of things to say – and it happens often – because they immediately resort to: because the previous government failed to diversify the economy. So when you hear that, folks, it means that they can't think of anything else to say and they're falling back on their talking points. It's probably tab one in your minister's binder, and it's probably on the insert as well. When you run out of all other things to say, there may be a teleprompter running it over there.

In point of fact, Madam Speaker, there is one thing that is true, and that is that in terms of diversification we are too dependent on oil and gas, nonrenewable resource revenue – I would agree with that – and we do have to work to develop other streams of revenue for government. That's different from saying that your economy isn't sufficiently diversified. Our economy is diversified.

I definitely agree with the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View when she says – and I've said this to the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade – that it is insulting to Albertans who have worked in the sectors like tourism, like construction, like service sectors that have grown much faster than the oil and gas sector over that period of time. My worry is that his definition of diversification will be that the rest of the pie looks like it's getting bigger. But that's only because the wedge that is oil and gas is in fact getting smaller. Minister, that's not diversification; that is simply redistribution of economic activity within our economy, and that is not what, hopefully, you're trying to accomplish in your ministry.

This bill is largely useless. This bill does not need to even be introduced. The hon. minister can already do pretty much everything that is outlined and mandated in this bill, or we would think so if we actually had mandate letters, which the Premier promised us back last June and we have yet to see. So, Madam Speaker, I'm against Bill 1. I had to set the record straight on my city of Lloydminster.

I thank you for your attention.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Chestermere Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. I would like to thank the hon. member for standing up. I just wanted to suggest also that the jobs and what's going on in Lloydminster right now – and I'm so grateful that the people of this area, their jobs are secure and that they're doing well. Congratulations on being considered the second-best in the province. That's fantastic.

Dr. Starke: Country.

Mrs. Aheer: In the country. I'm sorry. I apologize.

What we're wanting to acknowledge here is not so much what's happening now, because we've had private investment come in, and we've had a lot of changes that have happened that have helped to incorporate the situation, to bring it to where you are at this point presently. So it's wonderful to see that the private sector has helped to see this process succeed.

The whole point of bringing up the past was to help this government understand the problems of the past, not to stay there but to understand so that when you're moving forward, you don't fall into similar problems. It's not about blaming what has happened in the past – we've moved beyond that – but if you continue as a government to create and go forward with decisions that are going to create problems similar to what has happened in the past, that's why these things need to be brought up and perhaps reiterated. It brings up a lot of emotion for people that have been here in the past. I understand that.

You're right. I haven't governed before, and I actually do hope that I get the opportunity to do that one day. Having said that, I hope also on behalf of myself and my caucus that we'll actually learn from the past and create better decisions as a result of the mistakes in the past and not redo the things that have been done in the past.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to comment, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster?

Dr. Starke: Well, Madam Speaker, just very briefly. I appreciate the hon. member's comments. I think they are certainly well taken. I would agree.

You know, I'll say one thing, and this is perhaps a cautionary tale for all of us. Governments are made of people, and people are human, and humans make mistakes. You can't show me a government anywhere that has been in government for 11 months, for four years, eight years, 12 years, or 40 years that hasn't made mistakes along the way. You know, I think that one of the things that we should all do as human beings is to acknowledge that we are imperfect and that there are things that we do with the best of intentions that don't work out well. We are not gifted with clairvoyance. We are not gifted with the ability to know what's going to happen in the future. We do things with the best of intentions, and sometimes they don't work out well. Without defending some of the decisions of the past which clearly in hindsight have been shown to be mistakes, I think that what we need to do always is to draw on the lessons of the past – I agree – but always be looking forward and always be looking for what is the potential.

You know, I'll just give you one example. The government in the 1970s made significant investment in developing our oil sands, investment through AOSTRA, investment in developing the technologies that would allow for the extraction of bitumen from our massive oil sands reserves. That was a strategic and costly investment, made at a time where the extraction costs were extremely high and the returns were extremely low. I will suggest – friends may not agree – that without government that doesn't happen. That doesn't happen. If you leave it up strictly to the private sector, it probably doesn't happen.

I know that the laissez-faire, right-wing, hands off everything folks don't want to believe that, but there is a role. It's hard sometimes to judge what that role should be, and that's perhaps where you have the nuanced differences between the different political thoughts and ideologies. But I will say that for myself personally I do believe that there is a role for government to play. Certainly, I think that there is a role for government to play in terms of the delivery of critical, essential services in our society. I've never said otherwise.

I think that, you know, in doing that and going forward, we do acknowledge that we as human beings are imperfect, that we do make mistakes but that overall we try to do the best we can. I think that we try to do the best we can today. I believe that they tried to do the best they could over the last 110 years in this province, and I certainly hope that we try to do the best we can for the years going forward.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: You've got 15 seconds. Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you again to the member. I would thank you for calling me the right people. I sure appreciate that. That was very, very kind of you. I would also like to reiterate – and the last time I spoke about this, I actually did speak to the successes as well. You are correct; there have been successes as well. That's not what this is about, and I couldn't agree with you more that this is about moving forward and not laying blame in the past and, hopefully, learning in the future about where dollars need to be spent, how they're to be spent, and about the future of the province and all of the people, including our great-grandchildren one day, who will hopefully benefit from programs and from what we do right now in this space.

I would like to reiterate from my past speech where I was quite distinctive in also speaking about the successes. This province is all of ours, and there's no way that you can build on anything only ever reiterating the failures.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Speaker: I had the hon. Member for Little Bow next.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to the government's Bill 1, the alleged job creation and diversification act. Now, this government professes a concern on Alberta's job situation, and they're right to. When my caucus colleagues and I hear from Albertans about the economy, here's what we hear.

We hear that Albertans are struggling to make ends meet. You know, I'm not just talking about the Albertans that may have lost their jobs in the oil and gas industry, which has seen probably some of the biggest amounts of layoffs in a generation. I'm talking about qualified, well-trained Albertans who for months upon months have been unable to find work. They're concerned about their mortgage payments. They're concerned about their car payments. They're concerned about providing for their families. In the cities there's an increase in office space vacancy and a decrease in jobs available. In rural Alberta jobs are very hard to come by.

I'm not saying that this government has caused the downturn, but the actions they have taken since coming into office are not making things regarding jobs and the creation of jobs any better. And these problems are entirely not helped by this proposed legislation because the legislation, as has been said by most of the members on this side of the House today, does nothing. All it does is reaffirm abilities that the minister already had under the Government Organization Act.

If I were the minister or any member of the government benches, I'd be embarrassed to tell my constituents that this is what their government is doing for job creation. As history has shown us, some governments run away from their record, but I don't think there's a previous precedent for a newly elected government running away from their own Bill 1.

Since introducing this empty shell of a bill, this government has let it sit on the Order Paper and wither. Nine other government bills were introduced after this one. Some of them have already gone through the process and are now a matter of law. But this bill sat at first reading like an abandoned car in a farmer's back 40. Finally, for a brief, rare moment in time, yesterday they opened it up for debate, only to quickly move to adjourn debate and move on to Bill 10.

From the government only the minister of economic development has stood to give a speech on this bill. He said: "Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, will give the government additional tools to carry out its Alberta jobs plan to do just that." Good grief, Madam Speaker. Has the minister read the bill? Since being appointed to this portfolio, has anyone adequately conveyed to him what his existing responsibilities are? That was his one substantive comment referring to the actual contents of the bill, and frankly it wasn't an accurate assessment.

Section 2 of the bill gives him the ability to establish programs. Section 3 of the bill gives him the ability to establish regulations for those programs. Frankly, that's about it. These are existing ministerial powers. It is disingenuous to keep pretending that this bill is helping to create jobs. It is insulting to struggling Albertans to say that this government is taking action.

Imagine the time and the effort that had to be put into this bill. Don't get me wrong; the document doesn't really contain an overabundance of verbiage. It's not a very wordy document. I think we've all heard in speeches given here in this House today about the lack of info in this document. But how many people did it take to actually write this bill? I honestly don't know, but there must have been assistants and deputy ministers of ministries that have to direct staff. Parliamentary Counsel had to have had something to do with it, I'm sure. Just how much money would it take to get this tiny document to this House if we were to follow it from the idea stage to where it is today, all to get a bill here when ministries on the government side already have a mandate to move forward with its intent?

This bill is positioned as doing something on job creation, but that's all it does, just like the series of job plans that this government has put forward. Regrettably, when you cut down past this government's hollow assurances in question period and their communications exercises, you end up with no action on job creation.

Over the course of one year in office all this government has done for the job situation is to tell Albertans that they should apply for employment insurance. One year in office, and that's all they've really done. Of course, the principal aim of Canada's employment insurance is that it's there for Canadians when they're out of work and when they're looking for work, but that's not a job strategy.

This morning Statistics Canada released new employment insurance numbers for February. In Alberta there were 65,100 employment insurance beneficiaries in February, a 2.4 per cent increase from January. It's the continuation of an upward trend that began in 2014: more EI recipients in Calgary, more employment insurance recipients in Edmonton, more EI recipients across the entire province. In the 12 months leading up to February, the number of Albertans receiving EI benefits increased by nearly 80 per cent. That's an astonishing statistic, Madam Speaker. And all the while it seems that the government is only making it harder for small businesses to create jobs.

The government's new carbon tax makes everything more expensive, including the cost of doing business. The government's continued minimum wage hike, an evidence-free excursion pushed only by ideology and borrowed from the American left, will likely further hurt job creation. In fact, it eliminates training wages and makes it even harder for young Albertans to enter the labour force.

Worse, this government is determined to copy Ontario's knee-jerk shutdown of coal-fired plants, which has led to exorbitant increases in electricity costs for that province. Just last year the Ontario Chamber of Commerce released a devastating report entitled Empowering Ontario, showing that one in 20 Ontario businesses expect to shut their doors by 2020 because of escalating electricity costs while 40 per cent say that they've already delayed or outright cancelled business decisions as the result of electrical costs. In copying that Ontario model, this government is inviting those same negative effects to come on over. You don't ease pain by putting salt in an open wound.

Now, from February to March there was a slight increase in Alberta's employment numbers. A lot of that increase was employment in the wholesale sector, but the wholesale numbers for Alberta, released by StatsCan yesterday, show clouds on the horizon for the area as well. Looking at yesterday's number, ATB economist Nick Ford wrote: "Unfortunately, it's likely that wholesalers in our province could experience another period of decline this year."

4:10

The reality is that Bill 1 is only the latest government action that actually does nothing to help businesses create jobs. Some Albertans have been without jobs for several months. The government's inability to move forward on job creation is troubling. They put forward their job-creation plan in the last budget, introduced here just this past autumn. At $178 million over two years it was the only job-creation measure in the first budget. It seems that the government never bothered to do any proper study as to whether this would actually create jobs. At least, they certainly never released one.

Just recently, after almost a year, they conceded that that jobs plan won't work. For one year they've been leading Albertans on, and now they've presented a new jobs plan. In one way the new package of items under the new jobs plan is startlingly similar to the last jobs plan. There's no indication or any study showing how this will actually create jobs.

Sadly, these measures don't even start any time soon. One of them, the capital investment tax credit, for which details were announced today, is to come into effect in 2017. Tough luck for someone who's already been unemployed for six months. Same with the Alberta investor tax credit. Applications will begin being accepted in January 2017. If you're already unemployed, that's quite a wait.

Madam Speaker, given the economic uncertainty and given what so many Albertans have been going through for months, this government's inaction could be considered shameful. They're not cutting red tape for business. They're increasing red tape for business. They're not knocking down barriers to job creation. It appears that they're putting them up. Bill 1 – let's be honest – does nothing.

Yesterday, speaking to Bill 1, the minister of economic development said: "Our government's number one priority is to help Alberta get through this downturn and position the province for future prosperity." Well, for one year now words haven't been good enough.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much. I appreciate the member's comments. I think many of them are misinformed. However, I do have a question for the member. He talked about cutting red tape. You know, you talk about buzzwords, and the other side loves to attack us on using buzzwords. However, I'm in favour of streamlining, making doing business easier in Alberta, and helping our companies. So I would love to ask the member if he could name one or two pieces of red tape or regulations that are interfering or affecting businesses or inhibiting them from doing business in our province?

Mr. Schneider: How about one? Environmental applications take months and months and . . .

An Hon. Member: Waste-water projects.

Mr. Schneider: Oh, my goodness, yes. Waste-water projects: there's another good one.

You should reduce this by 20 per cent. I'm just going to read the Wildrose 12 points. I'm not going to read the 12 points. I'm going to read the red-tape one.

Excessive regulation is an obstacle to growth in all industries, and costs small businesses four times more than larger businesses. During an economic downturn, it becomes increasingly important to remove [the] red tape . . .

Is it that hard to believe that that's a fact?

The NDP government is one of the only governments in Canada . . .

Actually, it's the only government in Canada now.

. . . that never mentions red tape as a concern.

Is there no red tape? Like, I need to be informed. If there isn't any, tell me that there isn't.

Its platform and statements only talk about adding new regulations to Alberta businesses. This ideological stance in favour of government having ever more control over business, rather than letting business begin and create more business, has to end.

An Hon. Member: Are you going to table that?

Mr. Schneider: You bet.

Signaling that Alberta will be a business-friendly place is critical to attracting private sector investment and jobs.

That's the best I can do, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Madam Speaker, I represent a lot of farmers in the Strathmore-Brooks area. A lot of the feedlots, especially in the Strathmore area, have come to me and talked about the implementation of Bill 6 and the mountains of red tape that it is going to mean for farmers and ranchers in my area. Now, I know that the Member for Little Bow is a proud farmer from a next-door, neighbouring constituency. He was even sowing fields during the campaign. I was actually very angry at him for not being out campaigning when he was planting, but he's a proud farmer. I've heard all sorts of complaints about the extreme red tape that is burdening the farmers and ranchers in my constituency around feedlots, around support to agriculture, and around the huge paper burden that's being placed on farmers in my constituency and across rural Alberta. As a proud farmer I'm hoping that maybe the Member for Little Bow can talk about the heavy burdens that farmers and ranchers are facing with red tape in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the question. There's an organization – and most people on that side won't have ever heard of it – called the NRCB, which is the Natural Resources Conservation Board, that actually steps in when there is any discussion about confined feedlots, feeding of any description. The red tape there is what I would call spectacular. If we were measuring red tape in something that would shoot rockets off, it's spectacular.

I'll give you some more here. We should save government and business time and money by streamlining our business reporting requirements so businesses only have to report changes to government and don't have to process the same thing year after year. We should follow through on good initiatives already begun like extending the one-business, one-number principle government-wide instead of just in Service Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to speak today to Bill 1, the minister's job description. I'm not sure why we have to talk about this bill, an act to give the minister instructions that he had to make public his mandate letter, which the Premier promised to disclose but has thus far failed to do.

It's an interesting bill. Bill 1 is normally symbolic, as the government put it, a flagship bill. You want to really put some meat on the bones. I was proud of Bill 1 in the spring Legislature, where the government, the Official Opposition, the fourth party, and the fifth party all supported banning corporate and union donations in the province. That was a bill with some real meat on the bones. That was a flagship bill that actually meant something. This is a bill that really just gives the minister a job description. You know, it's his one-job plan. It is a minister who's only managed to create a single job, and that is his job, a job lacking security, I might say.

Madam Speaker, I don't know why this is being put forward in the form of legislation. This could come forward in the form of a motion. This really is little more than a motion to do nice things. Everybody likes economic diversification, everybody likes economic development, and that's all this bill is. It's saying that we like these things, that the minister should do these things. That should come forward in the form of a motion, not a piece of legislation.

You know why? Because I think we have enough laws in this province. Every time we pass a law, we're making our books bigger and bigger and bigger. Sometimes these are good laws, but sometimes we get into a nasty habit in this place, Madam Speaker, when we pass laws just to act like we're doing something but are not actually doing something. You know, it's like when something goes wrong and someone says: there should be a law about this. We would like a more diversified economy; therefore, there should be a law saying that we want a more diversified economy. We get into a lot of trouble when we do this, when we think that we are so all-powerful, that the government is so competent and capable that we can wave our magic wand and just diversify the economy because we passed a bill saying that it shall be so. "On the eighth day he commanded that the economy shall be diversified, and it was so, and voters looked at it and said that this was good." Can I get an amen from the government? [interjections] O mercy, Madam Speaker. O mercy for the poor taxpayers of this province.

Madam Speaker, I'll say this much. This bill does nothing, which is better than most of the laws we've passed so far. As much of a waste of time as this piece of legislation is, it is possibly one of the least harmful pieces of legislation we've debated, and I thank the hon. members on the government side for making sure that we're not actually making it worse. This is a bill that just discusses nice things, that waves our magic wand and by fiat – by fiat – coaxes economic development out of the sky like manna from the diversification gods. This bill is talking about nice things, but it does nothing, and because it does nothing, it's actually probably one of the better bills that they've put forward.

Let's talk about economic diversification. Everybody wants to diversify the economy. Let's look at the lessons of history, Madam Speaker. In the mid-1980s both Alberta and Newfoundland and Labrador were in a relatively similar case. We had economies that were largely reliant upon a single resource industry for our GDP, for our economic development, and both the Alberta government and the government of Newfoundland and Labrador were looking at ways to diversify revenue streams. At that time, the mid-1990s, if I'm not mistaken, it was the Brian Peckford government. I think they were PCs. They came forward with a plan, actually brought to them by a Calgary businessman at the time, to diversify the Newfoundland economy away from the cod fishery, which they were overreliant on. They decided that Newfoundland would diversify their economy. They would become the cucumber capital of Canada. Newfoundland would diversify its economy and its revenue stream, and they would make cucumbers.

There were a few problems with this plan, Madam Speaker. As the Member for Little Bow, who is a farmer, knows, to grow things, you require sunshine and soil. Newfoundland has neither. But only politicians on the eighth day could pronounce: so it shall be so. And that's what the politicians, with good intentions of trying to diversify the economy in Newfoundland, commanded, that it shall be so. They said: we're going to make cucumbers, and we don't care what the circumstances are. So they entered into a giant corporate welfare scheme to build big, monstrous greenhouses across Newfoundland.

Problem one was sunshine; problem two was soil. Through science they thought they could try to get around it with greenhouses. They tried. But it was a government-supported business. The cucumbers came out a little bit sickly, so they had to try again, and they got bailed out with even more taxpayers' money.

They were determined, against the nature of the cucumber, to force it to grow. They would force this cucumber to grow against its will and instincts in Newfoundland. Eventually they overcame nature. They grew cucumbers in Newfoundland.

Then they came to their ultimate problem. People in Newfoundland don't really like to eat cucumbers. But governments that think they know better than the market decided that they could create a market. They would force Newfoundlanders to eat cucumbers. So they had to subsidize them. They had to subsidize them well below market prices, Madam Speaker. They still didn't want to eat them. Newfoundlanders are a rather carnivorous people, if you've ever met one.

They refused to eat these government cucumbers, so the government of Newfoundland started dumping them into other maritime provinces, where cucumbers were more acceptable to the local tastes. What happened? Well, the local cucumber markets . . . [interjections] I'm sure that I'm giving the members of the NDP bad ideas. I'm not sure that I should continue to talk about cucumbers, Madam Speaker. I am terrified that the NDP are now going to start a government cauliflower business, because that's the boom business, isn't it?

Madam Speaker, the government of Newfoundland started dumping these cucumbers into the other maritime provinces, and they got into a cucumber trade war, further devaluing the price of cucumbers on the market. What happened? The government went bust. At the end of the day, all of the cucumbers they produced cost the taxpayers, approximating from memory here, about $25 million in 1980s dollars, a huge sum for a province with a relatively small population. That worked out to about $25 to $28 of taxpayers' dollars per cucumber.

An Hon. Member: It was quite a pickle.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I appreciate the contribution from the other side, Madam Speaker. It put taxpayers in quite a pickle.

At the same time as this was going on in Newfoundland, the government of Alberta was similarly engaging in corporate welfare practices, believing that politicians here could engage in economic experiments to force things against market conditions, in mostly slightly less amusing circumstances than forcing cucumbers to grow against their will. So we ended up doing this. We wasted billions of dollars in taxpayer-funded schemes in the economy here at a total loss to the taxpayer.

What did we do? Well, one of Alberta's great Premiers, Ralph Klein, got the government out of the business of business. We sold off our money-losing government enterprises. Instead, what did we do? We created the Alberta advantage in its place. We balanced the budget, we paid off the debt, we cut business taxes, we cut income taxes, and we made Alberta the most diversified economy in Canada. This is what made us the most prosperous place in North America, and that is why I am so proud to be the only party in this House that still defends the Alberta advantage, Madam Speaker.

In 1985 about 35 per cent of our much smaller GDP was based on the oil and gas sector. Around 2014 25 per cent of our economy was reliant on oil and gas, and that was in a massively expanded economy, a much larger economy, a bigger pie, a much bigger pie. Now, when the government talks about diversifying, what they're talking about is having a smaller slice of that pie be oil and gas. Now, if you want to have a smaller slice of it, it's okay if you're growing the overall pie, as long as that slice as an absolute share of GDP is not shrinking. But their actions are trying to diversify the economy by shrinking that slice of the pie, by killing our oil and gas industry with an unnecessary royalty review, with an unnecessary carbon tax, that has done nothing to advance the oil and gas industry in this province.

As the oil and gas part of this pie gets smaller, other parts are going to get bigger, probably government, with the government directly intervening into the economy to pick winners and losers. Well, we tried that in the 1980s in Alberta, Madam Speaker, and it didn't work very well. Newfoundland and Labrador tried it in the 1980s, and it didn't work very well. I am terrified that the NDP will begin the department of cucumbers and Brussels sprouts soon in this government.

The NDP are very confident in themselves that they have the business acumen to make investments with people's money. Well, I'll tell you this, Madam Speaker: nobody can direct capital more effectively, to its best possible outcome, than the people whose money it actually is. As much as the one-job minister across from me thinks that he has the business acumen, the sheer will to make businesses do things that they do not want to do, against market conditions, by subsidizing them or coaxing them, as much as he may want to do these things, he can never do them as well as the people who put their money on the line with real skin in the game.

Madam Speaker, we've seen this before. We have lessons that we thought we learned. We thought we learned these lessons from the 1980s. We thought that politicians got the message. There was a point in this province when all the parties in this House agreed that government should not be in the business of business, and one by one . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, as fascinating as the discussion has been, but clearly we need a break. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until Monday, May 2.

[The Assembly adjourned at 4:30 p.m. to Monday, May 2, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 2, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Let each of us in our own way reflect. Hon. members, I'd like to take this opportunity to reflect upon April 28, which occurred last Thursday and is a day when people across Canada stop to remember those workers who were killed, injured, or disabled in any number of work-related situations, including our emergency services. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we allow ourselves to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered and are suffering through tragedies, and to reach out to their families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Welcome back, hon. members. It's a beautiful day out there. Please be seated.

The Clerk: Introduction of Guests.

The Speaker: I think I have a visitor, hon. Clerk.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly 80 students who are here today as participants in Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. Offered annually since 2003, this program strives to further develop the interest in and understanding of our parliamentary system among Alberta youth. These high school students arrived on Sunday and since then have been participating in a variety of activities. They've toured the Legislature, attended workshops about parliamentary history and procedure, and they were able to network with Legislative Assembly staff to learn about the work they do in supporting the members of this Assembly. Today they're observing question period, and tomorrow they'll debate a resolution in this very Chamber, which will be presided over by yourself, Mr. Speaker. During this debate the students will be given a unique perspective on the work done by the members of this Assembly, and following the debate the students will visit MLA offices and attend a lunch with MLAs. I would ask that all of our MLA for a Day participants, who are seated in both the members' and public galleries, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. MLA students for a day, I must point out to you – you will learn, as many of my peers are learning – that it wasn't the Clerk who screwed up; it was me.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I would recognize the Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 30 students from the McKernan jazz band, which you heard during the lunch hour here in the Legislature building. The band is comprised of students in grades 8 and 9 who have been playing for two to three years in the school music program. They are here today to celebrate Music Monday, a national event that began in 2005 and has grown to be the world's largest single event dedicated to raising awareness for music education. These students provide evidence that music education is alive and well in Alberta schools, and we believe that it is a valuable component of a well-rounded education. They are accompanied by their teacher, Carol Thurgood, and by parent volunteers. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Baraza of Kivu Association who are joining us today in the gallery. Gerard Mutabazi Amani, Kamengele Kyalumba Kam, Cloti Katana Nsimire, Amanda Songolo, and Justine Maman Katana work in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to help newcomers from Kivutias and across Africa master English while celebrating their Swahili language and culture, set up sport and recreation opportunities, and, most importantly, work with other community organizations to build understanding that leads to co-operation. Their dedication reminds us that no matter who we are or where we are from, in Alberta we can be proud of our roots and give back to our hometowns and cities. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you an Edmonton preschooler who loves to play with trucks and cars and construction vehicles and may actually have his favourite white truck here with him today. It's not really a surprise that three-year-old Isaac wants to be a doctor when he grows up given the amount of time he has spent in the hospital. Diagnosed with a cow's milk protein allergy, he suffered from gastrointestinal infections, requiring long stays in the hospital and a specialized diet. Isaac is joined by his parents, Lisa and Ira Caskenette, whose tireless efforts advocating for provincial coverage of the medically necessary formula that Isaac required have been heard, and now other children like him who require Neocate will be able to access this formula under provincial coverage. I would ask Isaac and his parents, Lisa and Ira, to please rise and remain standing.

Also joining us today are Natalie Trinh and her six-month-old daughter, Eleanor. Like Isaac, Eleanor has been through a lot in her young life. Despite her health challenges, she is an easygoing, happy baby who always keeps her older brother and sister entertained. But there were some anxious days and nights when Eleanor was only days old and was in and out of the neonatal intensive care unit, also suffering from an allergy to cow's milk protein. Now, after being put on specialized formula, she is doing much better, and she really is one tough little girl. I ask Natalie Trinh and baby Eleanor to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly an honour to rise today, the day after May Day, to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several local leaders in the labour movement. First of all, we have Doug O'Halloran, president of my former union, UFCW local 401, whose support, I know, many members in this House are thankful for. Also joining us are Mike Scott, president of CUPE local 30; Ramon Antipan, former president of CUPW; Quinn Benders, VP of NASA; Lindsay Baranowski, treasurer of NASA; Heather Smith, president of UNA; Jane Sustrik, first VP of UNA; Siobhan Vipond, secretary-treasurer of the AFL; Elisabeth Ballermann, president of HSAA; and Mike Parker, VP of HSAA. These folks work hard every day to ensure that all workers in this province have the best possible conditions and representation. I would now ask if it's possible for them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to rise today and introduce an inspirational Albertan who, I'm very proud to say, happens to be a fine constituent of Calgary-Lougheed. Jill Drader is an entrepreneur who, as a journeyman tile setter and stoneworker, is an incredible role model for women in the trades and for every other Albertan, as a matter of fact. Jill encourages other women to consider careers in the skilled trades through her women in workboots digital research project and her consultancy practice, Steel Toe Stiletto. The entrepreneurial trades program she developed is now a five-credit high school course which gives students business and entrepreneurial training alongside their trades training. Her new venture is recovery transformation, a series of workshops and retreats for women in recovery like Jill herself, who has more than a decade without alcohol in her life. At this time I'll ask Jill to stand to receive the hearty welcome of this Assembly. It's an honour to know you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House a very special guest who is working in my Calgary constituency office for the summer. Josip Tomic is keenly interested in politics, and after working for Elections Canada during the fall election, he reached out to my office, and we are happy to have him onboard. Joe is also a learner at Bow Valley College in the business administration career program. His inclusion in courses and on campus is facilitated by an initiative on campus called inclusive postsecondary education, a partnership between Inclusion Alberta and Bow Valley College. Joe is here today with his parents, Bore and Slavica Tomic, as well as Caitlin Wray, a representative from Inclusion Alberta. My guests are seated in the public gallery. I ask the parents as well as Caitlin to please stand up. Joe, if you can give a nice warm wave, we'd appreciate that. Joe is up in the corner there. Thank you very much. Can we please give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce a small but mighty school group from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They are from the Shepherd home-school. They are some of the finest constituents in all of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Today we are joined by one of the top teachers in all of the province, Sarah Shepherd, and her children Aravis, Aiyla, Kira, and Graydon. If you'd please rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests for introductions today? Calgary-Hays has a guest.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, Adriana LaGrange. I would ask all members to join me in giving her the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

National Day of Mourning

North American Occupational Safety and Health Week

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is North American Occupational Safety and Health Week. It is dedicated to promoting awareness of the importance of safe and healthy workplaces. Safety on the job is a crucial issue for this government and for all Albertans. This week is a reminder of that fact, as was last week. Last Thursday we marked the National Day of Mourning, a day to remember workers killed or injured in work-related incidents. Workers' Compensation Board numbers show 125 work-related fatalities in 2015. Many more workers suffered injuries and illnesses. A single workplace death touches so many lives. Families, friends, and co-workers are left heartbroken.

Unfortunately, last week we also received tragic news of two separate workplace fatalities in our province, two more families whose loved ones never came home at the end of the day, more communities struggling to come to terms with loss. In this House – and I consider this House one of my communities – we also experienced a devastating loss. Mr. Speaker, Manmeet Singh Bhullar was 35 years old when he was killed on November 23 of last year. Manmeet was on his way to work when he stopped to help a fellow Albertan in a winter storm. It was an act of kindness that exemplified Manmeet's dedication to Albertans. But beyond the loss that this House felt and that our province felt as well for a well-respected public servant, Manmeet was a husband, a son, a brother, and a friend. Our thoughts are with his family, and our thoughts are with all Albertans affected by workplace deaths and tragedy.

While we remember those we lost, we honour their memory by making an even stronger commitment to safer workplaces. I believe that employers, workers, labour groups, industry organizations, and government all have a role to play in helping workers get home safely at the end of the day. During North American Occupational Safety and Health Week and all year long I encourage all Albertans to be mindful of workplace safety. Know your rights and responsibilities so that you can keep yourself and those around you safe and healthy. The Alberta government will continue to make sure employers are taking all necessary precautions to keep workers safe. We will work to create safe, fair, and healthy workplaces across this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the annual National Day of Mourning, observed this past April 28. This day recognizes the meaningful lives and memories of those who have lost their lives in the course of their work. Last year 125 Albertans never came home from work, their lives cut short far too soon. These are not mere statistics. Each life has an inherent value. Each person had hopes and aspirations. Each of those lives represents someone's parent, child, spouse, sibling, or friend, someone who said goodbye in the morning not knowing that that goodbye would be their last. Today our thoughts and prayers are with the families and loved ones who mourn their loss on a daily basis and whose hearts will never fully be whole again.

Each of us here experienced such a loss when our former colleague Manmeet Singh Bhullar suddenly and tragically died this past November. To this day words do not adequately convey the sadness that I know all members here feel over his loss. We must also be mindful of those Albertans who survived workplace accidents but to this day are suffering the consequence of serious injuries that occurred in their workplace. Twenty-six years ago, one month after I married my beautiful bride, I suffered a workplace accident that almost killed me. Still to this day I suffer from chronic back pain, a constant reminder that it takes only one slip-up to potentially alter one's life.

In recent years many employers and industries have worked in partnership to improve workplace safety and to improve on-site education and workplace practices. They should be commended for these efforts. We know that campaigns for safer workplace practices can achieve meaningful, life-saving results. In the late 1970s nearly every year approximately 10 Albertans died from unsafe excavations and trench work. This was just in one area of work in construction. The result of public outcry and public education campaigns was that these trench and excavation deaths were eliminated by 1985. These workplace education efforts need to be continued.

Everybody who leaves for work each day should be able to feel that they can return home safely to their loved ones. As we remember the victims of workplace accidents, those who lost their lives and those severely injured, we are reminded of the importance of ensuring that as a province we remain committed to the highest standards when it comes to keeping each of us safe.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent from the House to permit a member of the third party as well as the two independents to respond to the ministerial statement.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day when Albertans head off to work to earn a living and perform the jobs that keep our province and our economy moving forward, they have the right to expect that they will return home safely. Tragically, last year 125 workers did not make it home to their families, including our own Manmeet Bhullar, who was killed in a motor vehicle incident on the number 2 highway. Manmeet was an advocate, and as an MLA accomplished more in his short years than some of us ever will. We miss him today and always will.

Mr. Speaker, each of the 125 people has their own unique stories and their own distinctive attributes that contribute to a great Alberta. The Progressive Conservative caucus expresses condolences to the families, friends, colleagues, and loved ones of those Alberta workers who did not return safely home from work. I recall when I was Transportation minister how shaken I was when one of our own workers was killed while on duty for Alberta.

Government must listen to all employers – farmers, ranchers, and all others – employees; and those other interested parties to make sure that when we're setting policy that we truly create a safe work environment in Alberta. While some people live to work and others work to live, they all deserve to get home safely, and we all share in that responsibility. Employees, employers, committees, organizations, and also government have a vital role to play. Government must ensure that reasonable regulations are in place to make sure that employees are safe.

The Progressive Conservative caucus today remembers those whose lives were lost or permanently altered as a result of workplace incidents. We will continue to work with our colleagues in government along with all stakeholders, employers, employees, and all Albertans to ensure that Albertans get home safely at the end of their working day.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On this National Day of Mourning we take a moment to remember those who have been injured, disabled, or lost their lives while on the job. Sadly, workplace injuries and deaths continue to affect too many Albertans across the province. As the minister mentioned, in 2015 there were 125 Albertans lost to workplace injury and illness. Virtually every one of these deaths was preventable. They tear away a spouse, a sibling, a parent, and friends. Just last week we learned of two more workers who lost their lives in separate job site incidents. Our thoughts and prayers go out to them and their loved ones. A day of mourning reminds us that Albertans have a right to a safe work environment and that we must continue to strive together to ensure those rights.

Last December Alberta finally passed Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. This legislation now protects over 10,000 formerly exempt Albertans and provides them with the same security enjoyed by all other occupations in Canada. These rights, granted to agribusiness employees in all other Canadian provinces, have been long overdue. Despite friction in the early stages, I know these changes will create long-term benefit for both employers and employees.

A healthy work environment is not only physically healthy but also mentally healthy. Today marks the beginning of Mental Health Week, and we must remember that the consequences of mental illness and addictions can be every bit as tragic as those of physical illness. So as we remember those workers lost on the job and strive for such tragedies to be eliminated, let us also commit ourselves to creating conditions supportive of mental health in the workplace. Bullying, sexual harassment, gender bias, and stigma must be stopped. By continuing to improve the health and safety of workers in Alberta, we continue to honour those who lost their lives while on the job.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we mark North American Occupational Safety and Health Week, a week dedicated to promoting awareness of the importance of safe and healthy practices in our workplaces, I reflect on the lives of the 125 Albertans killed on the job last year, their families, and the many more who were hurt on the job. One workplace death is too many, and creating a culture of safety on the job is paramount.

I reflect on my own time working in the oil and gas industry and watching the safety culture evolve and grow in importance. It's not perfect, and there is still work to do, but it's heartening to see safety taken so seriously in one of Alberta's riskiest industries. Alberta occupational health and safety does important work promoting workplace safety, and I'd like to thank each and every worker and student in the field for their contribution to safer workplaces.

On the National Day of Mourning last Thursday I thought about everyone who lost their life on the job, I thought about the families they left behind, and I also reflected on the life of our colleague and friend Manmeet Singh Bhullar, who was killed working and serving Albertans. We often feel safe in this Chamber, far safer than those who are working jobs with high levels of risk every day, and my thoughts remain with Manmeet's family and with all the families and loved ones of those who have suffered workplace injury or death in Alberta. My thoughts are also with those who worry every day about their loved ones on job sites, who fear hearing devastating news each time there's a workplace accident. Many Albertans put themselves in danger each day in order to do their jobs, and we in this House must make a strong commitment to their health, well-being, and safety.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Jean: Last Tuesday the Finance minister vowed to win back Alberta's triple-A credit rating. Looks like it didn't turn out so well, though. Here's the Finance minister summing up his trip. Quote: unfortunately, it did not result in a change. End quote. It's hard to believe that $58 billion in debt didn't convince credit agencies to change their minds about Alberta. The fact is, though, that this government is making families in Alberta poorer through a new carbon tax and dangerous levels of borrowing. Premier, families are being forced to pinch pennies on every single dollar they earn. Why isn't this government doing the same?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that when you have an unprecedented drop in the price of commodities such that you lose billions of dollars in revenue, you can make a choice. You can download that deficit onto the backs of people, or you can move forward in the way we are right now.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has a very selective memory. You know, for 10 years in Ottawa the member opposite voted for a deficit budget in 2009, 2011, 2012, including the biggest deficit budget in the history of the country. So why – why? – was it okay then, but now what he wants to do is to make Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Of course, while the Premier was travelling to Washington to talk about her brand new carbon tax plan, that's going to punish Albertans, Albertans here are wondering how they're going to afford it. A typical family will be out at least a thousand dollars a year. Charities get zero relief from this tax, a tax that will make it more expensive to take care of our most vulnerable citizens. Schools will see millions of dollars taken out of the classroom to pay for her new NDP tax. To the Premier: why should ordinary Albertans have to be punished with the high cost of this new tax at a time they simply can't afford it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is an absolutely growing consensus that the best way to deal with climate change is by putting a price on carbon, first of all. Secondly, it's interesting that the member opposite talks about schools because you know what I always tell the member opposite? Every school I go to, you know who wants us to take action on climate change more than anybody else? The kids. You know why? They are tired of folks like those ones over there engaging in climate change denial and putting their futures at risk. We will not do that.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, our children are the same people that won't be able to pay back the debt they're borrowing.

The fact is that Albertans are suffering right now, and the NDP policies are making things way worse. One energy worker feels so alienated by this government that he's marching hundreds of kilometres along the highway from Falher to Edmonton. Jason Dubrule hasn't been called in to work for over two and a half months. That means no EI and not enough money to even pay his mortgage payments. Can the Premier please explain how new taxes and credit downgrades will help any Albertans get their jobs back and earn a decent living?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I can say very definitely is that firing teachers and nurses and taking billions of dollars out of our economy is not the way to protect people's jobs nor to lay the groundwork for the future. It absolutely isn't. Albertans want a government that's going to invest in them, that's going to invest in job creation and economic stimulation, and that is what we are doing.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition. Second main question.

Fentanyl Use Prevention

Mr. Jean: Albertans are very worried about the alarming impact of fentanyl in our communities. Families are being torn apart, and this drug is killing people every single day. Too often those who need treatment are not able to access it. B.C. has already declared a public state of emergency, where the death toll is predicted to hit 800 per year, over two per day. Here in Alberta, where deaths far outstripped our neighbours in 2015, public health officials have been blasting this government for failing again to respond to this crisis. These lives lost aren't just statistics. We need a real prevention strategy. When will Albertans see one from this government?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government shares the tremendous concern about the impact of fentanyl and drugs even more toxic than that on our communities and in particular our young people. It's for that reason that our Health minister has taken a number of steps to move forward on this. We've moved forward in terms of opening clinics that provide addictions treatment. We've moved forward in terms of making the antidote more available. We've moved forward, working with the federal government, to ensure that it doesn't require prescriptions. And then, of course, we've engaged in additional funding to ALERT to ensure . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Concern is great, but action is needed. Moms, dads, grandparents are all watching their families suffer because of this very dangerous drug. They were promised six months ago by this government a draft treatment strategy to handle the crisis. Today: zero. We're still waiting. A state of emergency in B.C. means they are able to collect real-time information so they can be better equipped to help high-risk communities. It's not an answer to the crisis, but it's another tool, and it'll help more than anything that you've done. Can the Premier explain why her government believes a state-of-emergency call would not help those people suffering from this bad, bad drug?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, I think I have to reject the original premise of the member opposite's question. The fact of the matter is that our minister has been taking a great deal of action on this issue. To carry on from where I was before, we've increased funding to ALERT in order to combat the criminal elements that distribute and enhance the presence of this drug in our communities. We are working with indigenous communities, ensuring that opiate-dependency treatment as well as the antidote are more widely available. As I say, we are opening new beds in order to deal with the issue there. We will continue to work hard on it because we know it is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this is a crisis. A Calgary mom recently opened up about the shocking impact of this awful drug. Her son has been using fentanyl for four years and is in and out of treatment. She tried to find space in a detox centre in Calgary but found that it was routinely full so spent tens of thousands of dollars in order to get her son treatment. Wildrose has released several recommendations that could help prevent these tragedies and improve mental health care. What can the Premier tell this mom about what they're doing to try to make things better? Simply nothing has been done that's doing anything to help.

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, in fact, what we are doing is that we've made a commitment as a government to improve and enhance mental health services and addiction treatment services throughout the province. We've already opened up more beds. To be clear, these are beds that would not have been opened if the billions of dollars of cuts that were proposed by those two opposition parties had gone forward. That's just the reality of it. That being said, we are working on finding more services to deliver to more people because we know it's a growing issue and that we need to do better in terms of providing services to vulnerable communities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the NDP campaigned for office one year ago, they ran on a platform of more openness and transparency and changing the way things are done. However, looking back on the past year, a track record of blurring ethical lines and refusing to disclose key information has formed under the watch of this Premier. How can Albertans trust this government when they tout their ABC sunshine list one day while at the same time they have not updated the sunshine list for government workers?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that that list is typically updated every June, and it will be updated again as it should be. Indeed, the member opposite will be very pleased to see the additional information that is provided in June along with the new legislation that we're bringing in with respect to the compensation levels, that I suspect many people will be calling for once that list is disclosed.

Mr. Nixon: This problem goes deeper than refusing to update the government sunshine list since taking office, a list that should be updated every December and June. The NDP government has been on a hiring spree for political staffers. All sorts of NDP politicals have joined the Premier's and ministers' offices, over 20 positions. When will this government show transparency and respect for taxpayer dollars and disclose the contracts of political staffers?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the salaries of people employed in my office as well as all other people that earn over a certain amount are disclosed. That information is disclosed. Now what's happening under our government is that those people who work for the agencies, boards, and commissions, that actually spend over 50 per cent of this government's budget: they, too, will be disclosed. That's something that we ran on, and that's something that we're moving ahead on.

Mr. Nixon: No, they have not been, Madam Premier.

When the NDP government hired the supposedly impartial reviewer of Legislature media access as a director of media planning, it raised serious questions. Journalists provided unfiltered commentary to Ms Boyd in confidence and on the understanding that her position was a short-term contract to draft an independent report. While the review was under way, it appears Ms Boyd was interviewing for the media planning job with the NDP. Now that she has been hired by the NDP, will she be using journalists' words against them?

Ms Notley: Oh, Mr. Speaker, there's just so much about that question that's wrong. I just don't have enough time in the 45 seconds in terms of the inaccurate facts within it. First of all, the person that the member refers to – I want to say that it's very nice that the member is asking questions on behalf of Mr. Levant. I think it's great that they keep that close relationship.

Also, I'd like to say that the staff person referenced was hired by the public service. It had nothing to do with our office. And you know what, Mr. Speaker? She happens to be a very, very qualified person for the job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Government Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 remains a disappointment. Ministers leaving town hasn't made it better. The Premier was in Washington, DC, to promote her carbon tax, which was curious timing when Washington is preoccupied with presidential elections. In Kananaskis the Premier also struck out. To the Premier: since your trip to DC yielded no results and showed no influence, what can you tell Albertans that you will now do differently to support jobs and the economy?

Ms Notley: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, I really need to take issue again with the premise of that question. Let me begin. In Washington it was really quite exciting to be able to meet with the President's chief adviser on the environment and to have that person come to the meeting fully briefed on our climate change plan and then spend time asking us how exactly we managed to do it and to talk about the elements of it and to find out what parts of it they could learn from. It was extremely rewarding to have them confirm, in fact, that the deal between the Prime Minister and the President was premised in part on the very plan that our government introduced.

Mr. McIver: Well, I didn't hear any results there, Mr. Speaker.

Albertans deserve a government that will respect their hard-earned tax dollars and show leadership by responsibly managing debt. As Albertans tighten their belts during this economic downturn, it's worrisome that our government refuses to do the same. Last week the Finance minister went to meet with Moody's right after Moody's downgraded Alberta's credit rating. Clearly, the minister missed the boat, was too late, wasted his trip, and had no influence. To the Finance minister: since Moody's made up their mind before you got there, why did you go, what have you learned from this obvious mistake, and what will you now do differently?

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's important when you go to meet bond-rating agencies that you explain the Alberta story, that you explain why we're doing what we're doing, what the stimulus will achieve. I explained all of that. I also met with many, many other people outside the bond agency and told them the Alberta story. They're very pleased to know that we're going to stimulate the economy, we're not firing people, and we're going to diversify. That's what they learned.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's story used to include a triple-A credit rating. It now includes a triple downgrading. Quite a hat trick, Minister. The Finance minister said that their fiscal plan would address the risk. The financial agencies blame the risk on this government's refusal to rein in spending and their elimination of the debt ceiling. The PC caucus and Albertans have suggested ways to reduce spending without laying off workers. To the minister: why do you continue to threaten to fire teachers and nurses when there are so many other ways to control spending and debt?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's really quite clear that the opposition leader and his colleague are offside with Albertans. Albertans want a government that will invest in them, that will invest in the economy and will invest in diversification. Folks over there aren't interested in diversification. But I'll tell you what's really interesting is that it now seems they're offside with their supporters because their supporters are really into diversification in terms of parties and leadership.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the start of Mental Health Week, and the Premier knew I'd be here to hold her feet to the fire after our report, tabled December 23. In February this year the government released Valuing Mental Health with 32 recommendations on improving addictions and mental health care in Alberta, six of which the province identified. I've heard very little progress on even these six issues, let alone the 26 others recommended. Given that primary care reform was again identified as a long-standing need with an expanded role of the PCN . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I will actually clarify that we've actually opened a number of the beds that were committed in the first six priority recommendations from the mental health review.

I'm also very proud that our government has committed more than $20 billion to help Albertans get the right care at the right time in the right place with the right provider. We promised Albertans that we would provide stable funding for the services that they depend on, and that will continue to be there for them. We're taking a very close look at the PCN model to see how we can build on the strengths of this model, and we'll have more to share on this very soon.

Dr. Swann: Well, given that the number one priority recognized by the report was harmonizing responsibilities between Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services and given that the mental health review was told repeatedly that unclear direction and tensions between Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services have affected timely decisions and quality of care, what assurances can the minister give us that Alberta Health will stick to direction setting and Alberta Health Services will lead the delivery of services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. This government is dedicated to ensuring that the mental health review will get the resources and support that it needs to carry out its recommendations, unlike past reports that simply collected dust. Alberta Health has been active in putting together a crossministry team to advise and act on the recommendations of the review. The team also includes many community partners and stakeholders, including representatives from our indigenous communities. Their experience with the mental health system was so valuable in this review. I look forward to meeting with the team in very short order and updating the member on its activities.

Dr. Swann: A little shy on details, but in light of the government's own report and also that of the Child and Youth Advocate, can the minister tell us what progress has been made to the promised collaborative addictions and mental health planning with First Nations and Métis communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. We were very saddened with the report on the tragedies that have occurred in some of our First Nations communities. Suicide prevention is most effective when targeted efforts are combined with broader strategies to tackle the social determinants of health and mental health challenges. This is a principle recognized and emphasized in the mental health review. Through the aboriginal youth and communities empowerment strategy AHS provides funding to First Nations communities to deliver suicide prevention programs targeted at youth and building resilience. AHS has developed a three-year plan to consolidate suicide prevention efforts across its continuum of care.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for St. Albert.

Midwifery Services

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many of my constituents in St. Albert who are advocating quite frequently for increased accessibility to midwifery services. They've told me that families should have the right to choose their caregivers. We need to ensure that we're supporting families to make those choices. To the Associate Minister of Health: how are we supporting the expansion of cost-effective midwifery services for women in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the work this government has done to support the birth choices of women, including midwifery, and we intend to keep building on that. In Budget 2016 we've committed $11 million in increased funding over the next three years. Using the current model, that means an additional 400 courses of care this year and each year after that. By 2019 that means almost 4,000 midwife-attended births in our province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that midwifery services follow a course-of-care model which promotes cost effectiveness, to the same minister: what are the estimated cost savings for women who choose midwifery care?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member has indicated, midwives are funded per course of care, which incorporates prenatal care, birth in a hospital, birth centre, or at home, all the way to six weeks post birth. It's difficult to compare the cost for a birth with a midwife versus birth with an obstetrician as risk, delivery, and location all impact costs. Certainly, for low-risk deliveries in comparable settings the savings can be significant. However, we see the greatest impact in the well-being of moms and their babies. We remain committed to the principle that cost should not be a barrier to women's choices around birth.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The feedback I've received about Budget 2016 from my constituents and the Alberta Association of Midwives has been very positive. Given the increased calls for midwifery services and the anticipated increase in midwife graduates, what are the strategies in place to ensure that Albertans have access to midwives should they choose to utilize them?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very important to this government that all Albertans receive the right care at the right time in the right place from the right provider, and that includes midwives. We want to ensure that women outside the Edmonton and Calgary areas such as those in St. Albert and more remote communities have access to their chosen care. We are encouraging AHS to work very closely with the Alberta Association of Midwives to ensure that the increased courses of care are allocated to where they are needed in the province when women need them.

Industrial Property Taxes

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, over the weekend there were a number of articles written discussing potential changes to how linear assessment is distributed amongst both urban and rural municipalities, which have created great concern amongst all of them. At the March AAMD and C convention the minister said: "There will be no redistribution of linear assessment from rural Alberta to Calgary, Edmonton, or any other city. Linear dollars will stay in rural communities serving rural Albertans." Will the minister confirm that her comments to the AAMD and C members at the convention remain accurate today, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The short answer is absolutely yes. Without any kind of barrier I will back up that information. I have no control on what speculation certain authors of editorials may choose to do, whatever rabbit hole they want to go down. However, the quotes that I made in that article remain completely consistent with AAMD and C. What he chose to add to that was out of my control.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that beyond the linear segment machinery and equipment property are also key components within commercial and industrial properties where manufacturing or processing occurs and represents a significant portion of property taxes collected by municipalities, municipalities still deserve to know, though: is the minister also considering changes to how machinery and equipment taxes are distributed to them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have made it very, very clear to everyone who has asked questions about this that our objective is to keep rural Alberta healthy and strong and to ensure that the services rural Albertans need are both accessible to them and sustainable long term. Nothing within the MGA review will jeopardize that objective. Certainly, the decision and information regarding the actions we will be taking on the MGA review are forthcoming. I look forward to working with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given as we can all see here in the House today – and I asked about machinery and equipment tax specifically – that there's still a high level of uncertainty that has been created about potential changes to how linear and machinery and equipment property taxes will be distributed and despite what you've said, is there a plan for how these changes will be put in place, and if so, when can we expect to learn exactly what the plan is?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I look forward so greatly to introducing the legislation following the MGA review very shortly, later this month. I'm also looking forward – you know, again, the fact is that it will only be in draft form – to working with all Albertans, to engaging with them fully prior to that to ensure, you know, that it'll be a modern piece of legislation and that it will improve things for all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Petition on Chestermere City Council

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's now been more than 30 days since residents of Chestermere handed the Minister of Municipal Affairs a petition signed by 5,400 electors asking for an inquiry into the affairs of their municipality. According to the Municipal Government Act a petition signed by 20 per cent of electors is deemed acceptable. The organizers of this petition collected almost 30 per cent of the voters' signatures. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The deadline has come and gone for verifying the petition. When are you going to call the inquiry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we take the concerns of Chestermere residents seriously and want to ensure that trust and integrity are maintained at the local level. I designated a staff member to verify the sufficiency of the petition and prepare a report. I am currently reviewing the report, and once I've made a decision on the next steps, the municipality and the petition representatives and the public will be notified. I will take the time that's needed to consider all the available options so I can ensure that the residents of Chestermere are served by an orderly and accountable local government.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in politics perception is reality and given that in a case like this one it is clear that a large segment of the population of Chestermere has lost confidence in their municipal government and given that it's only fair to both citizens and council members to clear the air on the many issues of concern in Chestermere, again to the same minister: will you commit to launching an investigation into the affairs of the municipality regardless of the outcome of the verification process, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We want Albertans to have confidence in their municipal governments, that their governments are working with their best interests in mind. That is why the petition process exists, so that residents can ask for an audit or inquiry into their local governments. As I stated, I will take the time that's needed to consider all the available options so I can ensure that the residents of Chestermere are served by an orderly and accountable local government.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that the problems in Chestermere were allowed to brew for so many months that citizens felt the need to take measures into their own hands and force the minister's hand on an inquiry and given that the minister clearly did not understand the magnitude of the problems in Chestermere when she first began hearing about them and given that the minister is still relatively new to this position and no doubt is learning all the time, to the same minister: what lessons have you learned from this situation for dealing with a similar problem in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly have great respect for the tremendous leadership that municipal leaders show across this province, and built into the MGA is also great respect for those leaders. I work within the processes we have to both support those leaders but also show respect to the residents who have concerns, to find the right balance. Again, I'm taking the time I need to go forward with the right action that is the best choice for both the residents and for the leadership.

Farm Inspector Safety Standards

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the people are still confused about Bill 6. On March 1 a constituent contacted me about an issue he is having as he attempts in good faith to comply with Bill 6. He was selected for a crop insurance inspection. He requested that the inspector watch a short safety video, have a WCB compliance letter, and wear fall-arrest equipment before climbing up grain bins. The company refused and threatened to deny his insurance coverage for two years. Why are farmers now being punished for following the laws this government created?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. I can't speak on a particular policy or review about a private insurance company. I think that would be highly inappropriate. What I know is appropriate is that WCB measures we've taken and placed for farm and ranch workers are working. They're working for the workers; they're working for the ranchers and the farmers to this date. I'm looking forward to have the opportunity to implement the recommendations on the OHS standards themselves.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the insurance agency in question is the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, a Crown corporation serving farmers subject to Bill 6, they should be subject to the same rules and regulations and given that I have a letter, which I will table, from AFSC saying that they are exempt from employment standards, do not have to comply, that the legislation applies to farm workers and not them, yet wearing fall-arrest protection is mandated by OH and S, I ask: why is this government agency saying that they do not have to comply with Bill 6 on farms when farmers do?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. You know, I feel that he's talking about a particular incident that I would absolutely like to know more about, and I would more than welcome having a direct conversation with him so that we can find out exactly about the issue.

Mr. Orr: Given that I have another letter from AFSC, which I will table, saying that the government's own inspectors are indeed covered by WCB, it seems they are simply refusing to comply with farm safety standards mandated in Bill 6. Clearly, government inspectors do not have to play by the same rules farmers do on the same farm work sites. Since farms face the risk of fines and loss of livelihood, does the minister think this double standard is okay, and what are farmers supposed to do now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I can't respond on something that he has in his hand that I have not yet seen but absolutely would commit my office and my ministry to work with the member and with his constituents on this issue. I'd hope to learn more and be able to have a response.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Midwifery Services (continued)

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've actually got a real question about when this government told Alberta midwives and expectant mothers again and again that there would be good news for them in the budget. The St. Albert Community Midwives centre will still be forced to close because the Health minister's promise of a bold move in support of midwives turned out to be nothing but smoke and mirrors. Why did the Minister of Health choose to break Albertans' trust with their empty budget promises by refusing to eliminate the cap on midwife funding?

Ms Payne: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that answers my question about whether or not it's a cut day or a spend day for health. We are very pleased with the announcement that we made on budget day. Eleven million dollars over three years is a huge impact for additional funding for midwifery services in our province. We are working with our partners in the Alberta Association of Midwives in ways that we can fast deliver those additional funding dollars to increase the number of courses of care available in that funding envelope.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has failed to address the demand for midwife care and given that the current strategy will force Alberta's midwives to leave the province, making the job situation worse, and given that midwife births save money and could help rein in your spending, how can the minister justify the rhetoric and the lack of real action to allow Alberta midwives to stay here so we can cut costs and give families choice in safe childbirth alternatives?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We were very pleased that the Alberta Association of Midwives joined us here on budget day and spoke in favour of the increased investment that our government is making in midwifery care. Under the current funding model that new investment means almost 4,000 more midwife-attended births in this province over the next three years. Beyond that, we meet with midwives and advocacy groups on a regular basis. We know there is strong interest in improving the funding model here in our province so that this new investment can support as many courses of care as possible.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering midwifery is not equally funded compared to other health services in our province and given that choice in childbirth is an issue that should be of paramount importance for a government that claims to care about women, to the Minister of Status of Women: is this the status that women in our province should expect from your government, limited choice and no say?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government is absolutely committed to women's choice and to providing the services that are needed, including women's health care and choice in childbirth. We're working forward as our finances permit to ensure that women have choice in childbirth, and our partners have been happy with the advances that we've made in our government, advances in choice and funding that our opposition would not have made. Today seems to be cut a blank cheque day, but, sir, we're having to move forward in this economic climate, supporting women's choices, and we're happy with the advancements that we've made.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Infrastructure Project Prioritization

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government promised Albertans an infrastructure sunshine list in the 2015 election as well as in committees and in this Assembly time and again. The Minister of Infrastructure said, "This government certainly wants to let the sunshine in." My question to the minister: when will you publish the full infrastructure sunshine list you promised, not just the school list that our government created in the first place?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm a little surprised by the question as the list that was published in conjunction with the capital plan includes projects from all areas. These are projects that are supporting the services and the delivery of those services that Albertans need and that have been assessed by departments and found to be desirable projects but for which we currently do not have the funding available. That was the basis on which the projects are there. There is a lot more on that list.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that page 53 of your capital plan states that not all projects will be funded and that "this list is not all-encompassing, there are many worthy projects in Alberta that are not reflected here," to the Minister of Infrastructure: where can Albertans find a full list of all worthy capital projects, and why are there no dollar figures attached to the projects that need funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. The answer to that question is simply that these are projects that have been evaluated at the departmental level and have met the criteria but for which there is not currently funding available. We will not publish lists of projects, as desirable as they may sound, that we have not done a proper evaluation on nor have we done an evaluation of the potential costs.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has clarified that "when we talked about infrastructure spending and clarity and transparency in the election, we were talking exactly about coming up with clear, accountable criteria that Albertans could evaluate and see and weigh," to the Premier: where are clear, accountability criteria for infrastructure spending that Albertans can see and weigh?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, I'm beginning to wonder if the hon. member has actually read the section of the capital plan dealing with the unfunded capital projects because it's very clear what the criteria are. They are laid out in that section. I just suggest the hon. member should read it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Wildfire Management

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few weeks we have already seen some pretty threatening wildfires across the province, including in the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry's own constituency. People are concerned because communities in my own constituency as well as others in northern and central Alberta face similar ongoing threats from wildfire. To the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry: what support is the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry providing to communities who face the threat of wildfire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and Member for the question. Our government and my ministry will always do what we need to do to fight wildfires in this province. My ministry supports rural municipalities like towns, villages, and counties outside the forest protection area upon request by providing resources that help these fires, from trained firefighters to air tankers to heavy equipment. Inside the forest protection area I'm incredibly proud of the hard work that our firefighters are doing as we bring wildfires under control and protect our towns and cities. Agriculture and Forestry has 740 firefighters, 88 helicopters, and 88 pieces of heavy equipment ready to fight new wildfires.

The Speaker: Thank you, minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we've had a warm, dry spring and given that wildfires like the one last week present real and frightening threats to Alberta communities, again to the minister of agriculture: what supports will the government have in place should the fire season be extended later into the summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that it's scary for families who live close to these fires. We've faced this here in Alberta before. That's why it's so cruel for the opposition to fearmonger by suggesting that we would do anything less than everything necessary to fight these fires. [interjections] We're seeing a trend toward drier, warmer springs, and as such we have front-loaded the fire season to increase preparedness earlier. If we need the tankers longer, we have arrangements and agreements in place to ensure that the resources will be there when we need them. The hon. member very correctly points out how dry and hot the conditions are this time of year and how important it is for people to be very careful.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that I was unable to hear part of your answer, and, people watching at home, it's because of the opposition. Given that communities can be threatened and damaged by wildfire and given that it can take years for communities to rebuild from these natural disasters, this time to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what is your ministry doing to ensure that Alberta's forest communities have access to the resources they need should there be damage incurred by wildfire?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that as someone who has lived through a wildfire that tore through my town of Slave Lake, I am confident that we have the resources in place, and I would not state that if I was not absolutely confident that if there's a fire somewhere that is threatening the lives of Albertans, we will have someone there to take care of it. If by chance there is a fire, the municipal wildfire assistance grant is there to help communities with the extraordinary response to a wildfire and to support the FireSmart programs, which help prevent and reduce future wildfires. I will continue to work closely with the minister of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Elk Population

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's farmers and ranchers have been trying to bring the issue of unsustainable elk populations to the government's attention for years. Two hundred elk were introduced to the Suffield military base in the 1990s with the understanding that the number would not exceed 800. They have since grown to several thousand. Down south we joke that there are more elk than gophers, but the damage they can do is real. What is the Minister of Environment and Parks doing to reduce these elk populations to sustainable levels?

2:40

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I know it's an important issue for his constituents and throughout southern Alberta. Certainly, we increased last year the number of elk hunting permits, and we are examining how we will do so again this year, increasing those numbers so that we can bring those populations under control. In addition, the areas in which they can be hunted are also being examined. I will have more to say about that in the coming days and weeks.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the cull numbers are nowhere near the reproduction numbers and given that elk in such massive numbers can destroy crops, break fences, and damage productive lands and seeing as the herds are now moving from more remote areas to the Trans-Canada highway, where the risk to the public safety was witnessed this weekend with a taxicab collision, are the ministers of agriculture and Transportation concerned with these economic damages and safety risks, and are they also pushing for a much quicker resolution to this problem?

The Speaker: The minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. It certainly is an important regional issue, and that's why the Department of Environment and Parks through fish and wildlife is examining the numbers, and we are increasing those numbers. We'll have more to say about that very soon. We understand that it is a pressing issue for landowners and for those travelling on the Trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that there could be now more than 12,000 of them and many constructive proposals have come forth from the farming, ranching, and hunting communities as well as concerned local residents and given that such proposals, including a hunt that would thin the number of elk while donating meat to the province's food banks, have not received traction from this government, why has the ministry been so slow to react when affected Albertans have repeatedly asked for a prompt solution, offered their assistance, and require a definitive resolution for the sake of their communities, their families, and their livelihoods?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we understand the tremendous impact of the elk herds in and around Suffield, who have now begun to move. We know that they are growing, and that is why the Department of Environment and Parks through fish and wildlife is examining the numbers and examining the counts, and we are working with our partners in the fish and wildlife sector and the hunting community, resident hunters as well as others, to ensure that we are taking the appropriate action. We'll have more to say in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Energy Policies

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The former PC government unequivocally supported Northern Gateway given ongoing confidence in Enbridge's ability to work through hurdles with both B.C. and the respective indigenous communities. During the election the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated, and I quote: Gateway is not the right decision; it's not going to go ahead. However, recently and thankfully she conveniently changed her tune. To the Premier: why the irresponsible delay in not standing up for Albertans from the outset by supporting Enbridge and getting products to market, securing much-needed investment, and protecting and creating jobs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. At the onset, the Premier has not changed her response whatsoever. Our government is committed to working with our partners in both directions to get pipelines built. Quite frankly, when it comes to Northern Gateway, there are a number of issues and considerations that need to be given, so the Premier has said on numerous occasions that it is unlikely that that project will go through because of conditions that have been set by other governments.

The Speaker: Hon. members, out of respect for the other members who have asked the question, please listen to the responses. I along with several others have indicated today that I cannot hear the answer, so respect your other members, and listen to the answer that's being given.

First supplemental.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess this one wasn't in voice mode. I guess we'll check with Hansard and see where they made the error.

Given that the Premier has refused to condemn the inequities of the west coast tanker ban and given that the minister of economic development finally woke up just 10 days ago to seek clarification from Ottawa on the same tanker ban, to the minister of economic development: why did you wait so long to address this critical issue, and why is your government not defending Alberta's best interests by fiercely condemning this hypocritical ban?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the member's preamble is quite confusing. I'm not sure what the heck he's asking. Quite frankly, our government has had the same position from day one, which is that we support and recognize that we need to get our product to tidewater. Unfortunately, the previous government in 40 years couldn't get it done, and the Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was in Ottawa, couldn't get it done. Our government has chosen to have the most robust climate leadership plan in the country, and quite frankly the President of the United States has acknowledged it. We are working to get pipelines built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has a history of making rash, irresponsible, negative statements about programs and projects that are in Albertans' best interests and given that the bitumen royalty in kind program and oil royalty rates are two of these examples, to the minister of economic development: if you're wrong about Northern Gateway, BRIK, and oil royalties, how can Albertans have faith in you and your colleagues' ability to make responsible, objective, and balanced policy decisions in representing their best interests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'm a little confused where the member is going with this. I will say that the Minister of Energy, the Premier, and myself have been working collaboratively with our partners and our counterparts both east and west, including the federal government. The Premier has had a number of conversations with the Prime Minister on the importance of getting our product to tidewater. It is absolutely critical, and we will work with our counterparts, unlike other parties, that prefer to pick arguments over social media, or the third party, that failed to get it done in 40 years.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

May Day

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and recognize an important day in history, and that day is May Day. May Day is a celebration in the labour movement marking May 1, 1886, when more than 300,000 workers in 13,000 businesses across the United States walked off their jobs in the fight to have an eight-hour workday.

Mr. Speaker, since Albertans and Canadians now enjoy the eight-hour workday thanks to the efforts of the labour movement, might I suggest that some of my colleagues across the way be just a little bit more grateful for just a few of the important benefits that many Albertans, including their own constituents, enjoy courtesy of the labour movement, small things like the minimum wage or a 40-hour workweek. How about overtime pay, occupational health and safety, paid vacation as well as maternity leave? What about workers' compensation and retirement savings plans? Let's not forget things like employment insurance, collective bargaining, and dental plans, and we certainly shouldn't forget the smallest little one that there is, public health care.

So, Mr. Speaker, if you enjoy these types of benefits and want to keep ideological agendas from taking them away, you might want to have a union backing you up. To my sisters and brothers in the labour movement who are here today in the gallery, thank you for the work that you have done for unionized workers and all workers across Alberta and for the work that you will be performing in the future. Happy May Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

2:50 Government Accountability

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Baseball season is back, and while that's good news for fans of the game, Albertans are getting a little sick and tired of this government trying to slide one past them. The members opposite have been in power now for a year, but the people of our great province are still waiting for the change they promised to deliver. So far NDP change looks a lot like the same unethical behaviour that got the old government thrown out. You'd think that this new government would have learned a thing or two from the mistakes of the past, but so far everything they've done is right out of a recycled playbook.

Let's take a look at the instant replay. They've rewarded their failed candidates with high-profile patronage jobs, they've filled senior ranks of government with friends and party insiders, and they've hauled in a squad of anti-Alberta activists to leech off hard-working Alberta families. If you thought that was strike 3, think again. Now we've learned that this government has failed to update the government sunshine list since coming to office, and they haven't updated the list of political staff salaries for a whole six months – foul ball, Mr. Speaker – all this despite the fact that they've been very busy signing up a long list of players from far left field to long-term, high-paying contracts in government. This isn't a changeup; it's a sinker.

This government deceived the people of our province when they promised to improve accountability and strengthen democracy, and Albertans deserve better. This government has already developed a habit of blurring ethical baselines, and Alberta families can no longer trust them to act in their best interests. Truthfully, it's not the job of Albertans to play umpire. This government has proven it cannot be trusted to manage our province. We've all seen this pitch before, one too many times. Now it's time to sit back, keep our elbow up, and watch the ball because in 2019 this government is going, going, gone.

Government Policies

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, in talking with Albertans across our province, voters sheepishly admit to supporting this government with hope for positive, responsible change, but now they see damaging dogmatic ideology lurking behind the orange cloak while their hopes have been irrevocably dashed as Alberta heads for even tougher times than global economics alone could have wrought on our great province.

I am proud of our entrepreneurial spirit and pioneering way of life and an innovative, can-do stubbornness and pride with humility that carries our brand across this country and around the world. But this alone will not bring the success we previously enjoyed, and herein lies the renowned prairie work ethic that supports our determination to succeed in a community-driven way that shares wealth and the Alberta advantage with our most vulnerable citizens.

And I'm encouraged by our western heritage, that has built an embracing, inclusive society that takes care of those less fortunate while welcoming and celebrating people, ideas, dreams, hopes, and diversity in all its forms, creating, building, and supporting better communities for all. This is the Alberta I love.

Mr. Speaker, this week I heard schoolchildren asking about the fate of our energy sector with youthful but insightful concerns for the livelihoods of their parents, family, friends, and neighbours, young adults fearing the legacy of fiscal irresponsibility and uncertainty for their own futures, the dampening of the spirit of which I've spoken, and the stark realization of having taken so much for granted in their young lives. Seniors share their concerns for the financial burden that will be borne by their children and grandchildren while lamenting the slow and painful death of the Alberta advantage, that brought so many economic refugees to our province from other NDP provinces.

This is not the Alberta that I know and love. Albertans are saddened by the attack on intangible qualities that have driven such tangible results for us as a strong, proud, resilient, passionate, and dynamic province. Mr. Speaker, let's remember the spirit, the proud history, and hopeful dreams for a bright future that we are responsible for in this Chamber and that each vote we make can support . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Kingsland Terrace Continuing Care Centre

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today in this House to talk about the opening of a new continuing care centre, Kingsland Terrace, in the community of Kingsland in my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. I was very pleased to join the hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing on April 29 for this wonderful inauguration ceremony.

Kingsland Terrace has 24 specialized beds to support young adults suffering from multiple sclerosis and brain injuries. This facility is the end result of the collaboration between the Intercare Group and the government of Alberta. Kingsland is the second facility owned by the Intercare Group, after the Chinook Care Centre in Calgary-Glenmore. Mr. Speaker, I'm very happy to see that we now have a new care home available for our citizens in Calgary-Glenmore.

Kingsland Terrace is a unique facility with an innovative living environment that is designed to provide a new style of residential supported living for residents of Calgary. The facility has a wonderful team of qualified care and support services staff, who are always ready to assist by ensuring that residents have all the needed resources and amenities and experience a comfortable and respectful stay.

The Intercare Group has multiple long-term care and supported living homes all over Calgary. Southwood Care Centre and Brentwood Care Centre have been providing excellent support to the community for the past several years. The Intercare Corporate Group is an Alberta-based organization providing health and life enrichment services in continuing care centres since 1992. The group has received full accreditation with exemplary standing by Accreditation Canada.

I commend the excellent work that the Intercare Group is doing in the community by offering choice, supporting growth, and honouring those needing services with dignity. I would like to thank the Intercare Group for making such a big difference in our society and congratulate them on their further growth through Kingsland Terrace.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) to extend the Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Josephburg Agricultural Society

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to stand today and recognize the efforts of the Josephburg Agricultural Society, located in the beautiful constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and in particular the efforts of the Josephburg Presents Committee, under the leadership of Diane Smith.

Ag societies address many challenges facing rural Alberta, and one of those is ensuring access to top-notch musical entertainment and culture from across Canada. This committee gathers together every year to procure both new and seasoned talent brought in by the Arts Touring Alliance of Alberta. They curate a sold-out season of music at the Moyer Rec Centre in the small hamlet of Josephburg, but really the people that attend are drawn from the surrounding communities of Strathcona, Lamont, Fort Saskatchewan, and Bruderheim, to name a few.

This past season my husband and I enjoyed some wonderful acts, including the Wardens, who sing about their experiences as real park wardens in Banff national park; Christine Tassan and les Imposteures, a talented francophone artist hailing from Quebec; the Rodeo Riders, a musical comedy trio covering artists such as Roy Rogers, Hank Williams, and even AC/DC; Tim Hus, who brings good old-fashioned country and true Alberta folk storytelling to the stage; and finally, a very familiar name to Canadians, Tom Jackson, who has used his music here and abroad as a vehicle for social change.

Every night there is a small army of volunteers that ensure the night seems effortless. Diane Smith's husband, Ralph, MCs the event and gives us his best jokes; Virginia Differenz and Doug Maschmeyer head up the 50-50 sales; Doug and Joanne Heckbert manage the door and merchandise booths; Chuck and Debbie Gerow manage the bar, so it's good that there are two of them; and, of course, many others, too many to be named, without whom the evening wouldn't be possible.

This next 2016-17 season will mark their 40th year of bringing diverse musical experiences to rural Alberta, and I look forward to hosting a few of you this fall at my table to enjoy dinner and a show.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Urgent Health Care in Sylvan Lake

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, the current government has no problem skipping consultation and taking action on policies that hurt Albertans, but when it comes to addressing a community priority and a common-sense cost-saving measure like the Sylvan Lake urgent care centre, all the Minister of Health could say was that she was having, quote, conversations about it.

Well, this weekend Susan Samson, chair of the Sylvan Lake and area urgent care committee, voiced her frustration at this government's refusal to act in a letter to the editor in the Edmonton Journal. She said:

Summer is almost here and Sylvan Lake and area is ready to welcome you back to its pristine lake, water recreation pursuits, great dining, shopping and special events.

But please note, in the second largest community in central Alberta, and the second busiest provincial park which sees over 750,000 visitors annually, we have no hospital, urgent care or ambulatory care available for you.

So when you come to see us in Sylvan Lake and you're worried about what you will do if a loved one gets sick or injured while playing with us, bring your own doctor with you. If you are outraged, like we are, write the health minister.

And it gets worse. On June 1 the after-hours physicians-on-call service in Sylvan Lake will cease. After serving as a stopgap measure for Sylvan Lake for many years, the 2,000 to 3,000 patients it served will now have to seek care at the overloaded Red Deer emergency room 30 kilometres away.

Mr. Speaker, this government spent $2.3 million advertising its last two budgets and its climate plan, yet it won't invest in cost-efficient measures that save lives. I'd like to invite the Health minister to a rally in Sylvan Lake on May 25 to experience for herself the frustration of a community that her department has ignored for years and to hear their response to her childish jingle about the right services in the right place at the right time. The right services are 24/7 urgent care, the right place is Sylvan Lake, and the right time is right now, thank you very much.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Bill 11

Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Alberta Research and Innovation Amendment Act, 2016.

The intent is to increase alignment and effectiveness within the innovation system by consolidating the four Alberta Innovates corporations into one because being globally competitive in innovation means being smart about your strengths and pooling your resources, know-how, and expertise together to develop solutions. This integration will better connect Alberta's drivers of economic growth with the advice and expertise they need to move to the next level. The improvements we're proposing reflect the input of several expert reviews and input from stakeholders.

I would encourage all members to support the bill on first reading and look forward to the coming debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a letter signed by the manager of on-farm inspections for AFSC stating that they are covered by workers' compensation. It's not a real compliance letter, but anyway.

The second one is from the acting manager of insurance solutions for AFSC in which they state some of what I said earlier, and I present it.

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask your permission to read and table a brief . . .

The Speaker: Very brief.

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . very brief letter from Alberta Prairie Meats. On behalf of my staff and myself, we are honored to contribute these steaks to help you fulfill your commitment to eat beef for a week!

Alberta is home to the greatest beef in the world. When we start with quality animals, we do everything on our part to deliver that quality all the way home to your plate! Our industry achieves this through humane handling and by providing the least amount of stress possible to our livestock. It's not because it's mandated by any special interest group, it's just good business!

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to table five copies of this letter from Alberta Prairie Meats in my constituency, in Duchess.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the required number of copies of an article from the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta. The article is entitled Private Schools Save the Public Purse Millions Each Year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Adoptions of Children

- Q1. Mr. Cooper asked that the following question be accepted.
How many adoptions of children up to the age of 18 years were finalized in each year from January 1, 2009, to December 31, 2015, and of those how many were children in permanent care of the government prior to being adopted?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to discuss this very important question. Just in case there's any concern from the minister, in the spirit of full disclosure I might say that I have a very close personal connection to the importance of adoption here in this province and, certainly, right in my own home. One of the reasons I move the question is that there are so many great things that can be done around this issue of adoption, and it is my pleasure to be able to rise in the House today and speak to exactly that. The government plays a very important role in the adoption process. The government plays a very important role in the success of adoptions.

Mr. Speaker, before we hear from the minister and allow him to propose an amendment – as I understand it, they have some desire to make some changes around this question – let me just very briefly say that I wish we lived in a world where there was no need for adoption. I wish that for every family in Alberta that had children there were never circumstances in their lives that created turmoil or tragedy or disruption inside the family. But, unfortunately, that is not the world that we live in. As legislators we have a very important responsibility, a responsibility to ensure that there are appropriate supports for those who are engaging in growing their families through adoption, that there are the appropriate supports for those who may be choosing to put their children or child up for adoption, and that there are appropriate supports for those in our province who may choose to sign a permanent guardianship order.

With adoption comes great joy and great sadness, so I think it's a very important issue and one that I am pleased to speak about today. We all have a responsibility in this House to the families in this province, to the children of the province, and it's important that we understand whether the number of adoptions is increasing or is decreasing. It's important that we have real firm data for the House to have conversations around these important issues. It's important that we have some points of reference to see if the government is moving in the right direction or in the wrong direction.

It's my hope that the minister will in fact provide the information to this Chamber so that all of us can help to be responsible to all of those who engage in the adoption process. There is nothing more important for the health of children than stable, loving, caring, permanent homes, and I agree with the minister that the best place for that to happen, first, is with biologicals. Unfortunately, it doesn't always end that way, so I hope that the minister can shed some light on how well we're doing as a province.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for asking this question and raising this important issue. As the member stated, the best way to raise children is to have them in a safe, stable, and permanent house. In that regard, let me begin by saying that the work that our foster parents and adoptive parents do is incredibly important, and all of them, including my honourable colleague, deserve our thanks and respect for taking on this important role in the lives of the children who need this.

However, I would like to propose that Written Question 1 be amended as follows, and I will explain the reason for this amendment.

How many adoptions of children up to the age of 18 years were finalized in each of the fiscal years from 2008-09 to 2014-15, and from April 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, and of those, how many were children in permanent care of the government prior to being adopted?

So covering April 1, 2008, to March 31, 2015, and the first three quarters of 2015-16.

The rationale for this request is that the child intervention program areas pull numbers related to private and international adoptions by fiscal year only and cannot retrieve the data by calendar year. The information that our department will be providing will be for a slightly longer period of time in that it will reflect numbers back to April 1, 2008, rather than beginning from January 1, 2009.

If accepted as amended, the materials can be provided within a few days of notice of approval of the amended question. I hope that this amendment is satisfactory to my colleague.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: To speak to the amendment, the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. minister. I will say that while from time to time question period can be a little raucous in this House, there are lots of times when we can all work well together. I'd like to thank the minister's staff for reaching out to my office on Friday and having a small discussion around this amendment. I appreciate what the minister is doing here in an effort to try and get the best available information on this very important topic.

So I thank you, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment.

The Speaker: Other members who wish to speak to the proposed amendment? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker, but I did want to rise and get on the record that I am in favour of this. I think this is an important question. I'm glad the hon. member that raised it and the minister are getting along. I think the hon. member that's raising this is to be admired for his role in adoptions. It's something that I think should be encouraged by this House because I think there's a special place in heaven for people that adopt kids.

I'm very happy to stand up and support the amendment, that sounds like it's got the support of the minister and the government. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other members on the proposed amendment?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Are there any other points with respect to the main motion?

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to close debate.

[Written Question 1 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Funding

Q4. Mr. Smith asked that the following question be accepted.

From April 1, 2012, to March 31, 2015, how much less did the government spend as a result of students being enrolled in private schools instead of public or separate schools?

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the simplest of terms what this question is really all about is the differential between the funding that students receive in independent schools, at either somewhere around 60 or 70 per cent of the instructional grants, in relation to those that are given to public school authorities. I'd like the Ministry of Education and the minister to add up the differentials and to provide the information as a starting point.

But in many ways the question goes much further. If you add in the other funding categories for which independent schools are not eligible, how much are you really saving? Indeed, could the school boards even house the students that are enrolled in independent school programs if those programs were defunded and all students transferred to the public system?

This question cannot really be understood outside of the wider discussion that underlies this issue, Mr. Speaker. That question is: should the government support Albertans having access to a wide range of delivery methods when it comes to education? As it presently stands, we have many models of delivering education in Alberta. We have public systems, separate systems, charter, home-schooling, and independent schools. There seems to be a considerable amount of talk in today's education as to whether we should fund all of the various styles and delivery methods of education. Some of the major stakeholders in the public system of education have stated that they believe that any educational delivery model outside of a system of public and separate education should not receive taxpayers' dollars.

Indeed, we know that even within this government there are many MLAs and members of Executive Council that would support the defunding of all but a system of public and separate education. Reported in the Calgary Herald July 31, 2008:

NDP Leader Brian Mason also blasted the funding increase for private schools.

An Hon. Member: Name.

Mr. Smith: My apology to the hon. member.

He said people who want to opt out of the public system and put their children in private schools should have to pay for them. "We don't think taxpayers' money should be financing private schools. I think it's inappropriate."

Quoting the Premier from Hansard on October 28, 2013:

Our caucus is steadfastly opposed to private schooling and particularly steadfastly opposed to public dollars supporting private schooling. We're happy for people to choose to go to private schools, but if they do so, that should be their financial choice and not that of other taxpayers. That same thing applies generally to the notion of allocating public resources to what is otherwise a private, for-profit effort. . . . That's, of course, an opportunity to increase the proliferation of public funding of private schools, which, I would argue, is a bad thing.

Many that support this position will argue that only public education has to take all students; therefore, only public systems should receive taxpayers' dollars. They say that public education systems take all students, rich and poor, from every culture, language, and religion, and that only public education will provide an education where students can mix and break down artificial barriers. Some will argue that the default educational delivery system must be the public system of education and that if parents want another alternative, then they must pay for it themselves. As a supporter of public education I believe there is some merit to these arguments, but I would also argue that a decision on any issue is always stronger when both sides of the question are explored and when actions are taken that balance the rights of the individuals involved.

I also believe that competition between systems makes each system stronger. Those that disagree with having only a public system of education recognize that decisions about a diversity of educational delivery systems must start with the discussion about the principles and the rights that underlie education and that educational diversity must spring from an understanding of the educational rights that Albertans have. This nation was built, Mr. Speaker, upon a recognition of linguistic and religious diversity, and from the very foundation of our nation we have recognized in law the right to publicly fund educational diversity.

Educational diversity was needed to recognize the reality that French and English populations would need to have that diversity if they were to live together in the same nation. We built this diversity into our system of law, and we've recognized it by making education a provincial issue. We recognize it in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms under section 29. In the 1890s the precedent was set that where numbers warrant would determine what options of educational delivery would be provided for parents by the taxpayers.

In Alberta we've built into law the recognition of parental rights, which will play a huge role in the right to educational choice and public funding of that educational choice. We have the Alberta Bill of Rights which says, "The right of parents to make informed decisions respecting the education of their children." This sentiment is supported in the preamble of the Education Act and is also supported in the School Act.

In Alberta the precedent of where numbers warrant has been guiding the hand behind what educational options would be available to parents. Albertans have seen the wisdom of these guiding principles, and we've understood that together they have allowed one of the most diverse populations in the world the opportunity to educate their students in such a fashion as to provide each student with a world-class education through the many different educational delivery models.

The decision to have a diversity of educational delivery models is not and should not be determined by a dollars-and-cents argument. This is an issue that must be decided by balancing the educational rights of Albertans, and those rights are not up for sale.

All of this is to lay a foundation for why we are discussing the question at hand today. What would the increased operational costs be if every student in Alberta received full funding at the rate currently set for the public school system? Only public and separate schools in Alberta receive full funding across the board in Alberta. Independent schools do not receive full funding from the government of Alberta. At most, they receive 70 per cent of the per-student instructional grant, but they do not receive targeted funding for provincial initiatives such as small-school-by-necessity funding or transportation or capital or regional collaborative services delivery. The independent schools only receive portions of other funding such as plant operations and maintenance or northern allowance funding. So Albertans actually save money when Alberta students choose an alternative delivery method other than public schools.

Mark Milke reports that independent schools have saved the government $750 million over the last five years, as referenced in the parents for choice website and the AISCA newsletter from March 2016. This is what private sources have estimated. If we are to put the argument to rest as to whether or not educational diversity saves or costs Albertans, then we need the government to answer this question from their own figures.

Will this minister and this government provide clarity for Albertans by answering this written question? Will you help Albertans to better understand how much it would have cost Albertan taxpayers if all of the students educated in Alberta outside of the public and separate systems received the same level of funding? The answer to this question will help to bring clarity not only to the question at hand but could also help to address the wider issue of whether or not there should be diversity in the model of educational delivery.

From the theoretical, legal underpinnings of our education system to the very practical consideration of accommodating students, Mr. Speaker, this written question needs to be addressed. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his words. I guess perhaps I should have worked in the spirit of my hon. colleague here and looked for a way to make some alteration in regard to this question, but perhaps the member can ask it again in some slightly different way.

These are some issues that we have from the ministry that make this a little bit too complicated as it is worded. There's no simple method to determine if more or less funding is required by government as a result of students being enrolled in private schools as students are funded differently and depending on a variety of needs. In fact, there are many different sorts of levels of funding of students in private schools. Accredited funded private schools, for example, receive partial provincial funding to meet educational standards. Students at these schools write provincial tests, and they're taught Alberta programs of study by certified Alberta teachers. Some private schools receive 60 per cent base instruction; some private schools receive 70 per cent. Then, Mr. Speaker, you have the early childhood services, ECS programs, that are run by private schools and are funded at 100 per cent of the public school rate. So you can see what sort of a tangle it is in regard to all of these different categories, and there's more.

In addition, private schools do not receive capital funding or funding for each of the differential grants, as the hon. member pointed out, in regard to transportation, class size, small schools by necessity, for example, all of those envelopes. So if the government was not providing funding for students enrolled in private schools, some current private school students might be still enrolled in private schools as well while others might be attending public, separate, or charter schools instead.

About 3 per cent, Mr. Speaker, of the total Education budget goes to support private schools and ECS operators. The total amount of funding provided by Alberta Education to private schools was $216 million for 2013, $221 million for '14, and $240 million for the '14-15 school year.

So perhaps if we had a clarification on this question in some way, I could tackle it better. I can't take it as it was described.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I need some guidance from the table. At this stage it's a rejection? Yes.

Are there others speakers to the question?

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government won't reject this question. I think it's an important one. While I accept part of the minister's premise that it's not a single calculation in order to come up with a number, it doesn't have to be that many calculations. I think the government could without too much effort actually provide a pretty good estimate, if not an exact number, to answer the question using averages on the information that we know. Of course, if you're going to grind it down to every single student and their individual transportation grant and depending upon whether kids are both in a public school or a private school or a different school, I suppose you could make it sound insurmountable.

Respectfully, Mr. Speaker, it would actually be less work for the government just to answer the question than it would be for them to make it sound insurmountable to answer the question. So I would be hopeful that the government would choose, in the best way they can, to answer the question.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this particular question, a good question. While the minister would like to have us believe that this task is insurmountable, the point is that the minister has all the data. The minister knows how much he pays per student. He knows how many students there are. He knows the difference between all of the formulas. The department is the only one with all the data. Now, my hon. colleague spoke about some private research work that has been done, good research work, but if we want to be certain that the government is making the best possible choice, all they have to do is provide the information, that information that they have.

I have to say that it's a little disappointing that this government is building a track record on saying one thing and doing another. Now here we are again, on another Monday, just seven days removed from the last Monday, when we were talking about choice in education, and it appears that the government is keeping important information out of the public domain. They have the ability to provide us with how much money this delivery model is saving Albertans. What this government seemingly will have everyone believe is that private education, home-school education, independent education is this horrible, oppressive cost to the government, yet the government and the ministry are well positioned to provide the exact number that in fact this choice saves the department.

Mr. Speaker, if this choice was removed, while certainly there would be a number of people who'd continue to educate their children in whatever way they've chosen, some would then be forced to engage in the public system. As a result, if this government thinks that they have a school shortage today, that school shortage would be magnified exponentially if there was a massive influx because of a reduction in funding. In fact, all the good people who choose to use other forms of education for their children, a very strong case can be made that they are in fact saving the department money. Yet the government likes to say that public education is the – I'll rephrase that. That was unfair of me to say.

The government is saying one thing about how they support choice in education, but it appears that another is true. Trying to prevent real data, the data that they have, from educating Albertans on how much choice in education actually saves Albertans is more than a little disappointing. The minister has been around this place a long time, and he knows – in fact, I have been in the gallery on days that he has debated written questions. Some similar arguments about the government keeping information from Albertans have been used from that side of the House when they were in opposition, and now today it's Chicken Little, the sky is falling, and we're horrible people. That is what we've just heard from the minister. So it's a little bit . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order. Mr. Speaker, the minister in his off-the-record comments here did not refer to the Official Opposition as horrible people. I just wish to set the record straight.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please.

Mr. Cooper: In the spirit of co-operation, that has an opportunity this afternoon, I'll happily withdraw my comments around horrible people.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: But we have heard the minister making comment about being Chicken Little, and some would imply that, you know, Chicken Little, perhaps a case could be made that he was talking about the sky falling and how horrible things were.

My point remains the same. The minister has the information. They are putting together a nice little track record about saying one thing about supporting choice in education and doing another. They have the information, yet they refuse to provide it to Albertans, and I think that's a shame.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to question 4?

Hearing none, I would call the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we presented this question to the government and to the minister, we believed that it would bring some clarity to the people of Alberta. We've been having a lot of discussion about the efficacy of diversity of educational delivery models. We've been hearing from some stakeholders that perhaps it would be a good idea to get rid of the public funding of various models of educational delivery.

The Wildrose Party wants to make it clear that we would not support that. We believe that parental choice is an important concept in our system of education, that it's important that those educational models be funded fairly within our system of education in this province. We would suggest that arguments that are used that would suggest that educational diversity and delivery are a burden to the taxpayer would not hold a lot of water, so to speak. We would argue that at the very least what we could do is to go back into the public records, go back into the ministry's records, and to search out just what it costs Albertans to have a diverse system of educational delivery.

An Hon. Member: Of choice.

Mr. Smith: Of choice.

Now, we know that education is an expensive proposition in this province . . .

Mr. Cooper: A worthwhile investment.

Mr. Smith: Absolutely, it's a worthwhile investment.

. . . and we know that it's a life-changing investment in the lives of young Albertans. I think that there are enough teachers in this Legislature who have worked with children to see that education can change a life, open doors, allow kids to be able to engage in a society to the maximum of their ability. Not all children are the same, and not all educational delivery models are the same, and they can meet the needs of these children in ways that will absolutely either open or close doors.

We know that – and the minister is absolutely correct – schools will receive different funding, and different models of education will receive different levels of funding. The minister is absolutely correct: it can become a very convoluted and difficult thing to try to figure out exactly how those models of education should and are being funded, with targeted funding and various levels of funding, depending on whether you're a home-educated student or whether we're talking about an independent school or a charter school. But there is one thing that they all have in common if you are an alternative system outside of the public or the separate system, that they do not receive full funding in comparison to the public or the separate systems.

We know this, at least in broad general terms, that if all of the students that were home educated, educated in independent schools, charter schools, that if all of those students went into a public or a separate system, it would cost significantly more. We know, as I've alluded to already, that there are private studies that seem to say this, that seem to show us clearly that educational diversity of delivery models actually saves the taxpayers money. So it's a little bit of a mystery for people in the opposition and for many Albertans when we hear people say things like: well, taxpayers' money shouldn't be financing private schools.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Student Information Initiative

Q6. Mr. Smith asked that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years from 2010-11 to 2014-15 and from April 1, 2015, to February 29, 2016, what was the cost to school boards to develop or to purchase software to implement the provincial approach to student information initiative?

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Somehow you switched.

Information management, Madam Speaker, is a fundamental component of the work that we do in government and in all of its facets, especially in education. Indeed, the results-based budgeting final report, released in November 2015, highlighted the importance of those systems that are in place to ensure that the government is able to meet expected outcomes in a timely and an efficient manner. We know that in many ways in this government and for the people that we serve, information and the sharing of information is absolutely critical if we are to function in a timely and efficient manner. One of the key findings of this report reads:

The current decentralized model used for government information technology investments results in duplication, inconsistent investment and asset management and an inability to fully realize benefits of new technologies and future trends.

As I said, the sharing of information is absolutely critical, and it is extremely critical in the idea of education. While this finding relates to government in a large context, it's crossministry information dissemination which has serious implications for the ability to manage in this case student information on the one hand and to ensure that personal information at the same time remains confidential for each of the students.

Now, the recommendation that follows this finding is important for education. It has implications for the provincial approach to student information, or PASI. They suggest to "develop a new corporate applications model and a new investment management approach that incorporates central oversight of funding, prioritization and reporting models." Now, that's couched in all sorts of business model language and -ese, but it really does have some pretty important implications for crossministry initiatives in which the Ministry of Education obviously participates.

For instance, we have something like the regional collaborative service delivery initiative, which is a regional partnership among school authorities, Alberta Health Services, Human Services, and other community stakeholders. The RCSD uses the resources already in place but tries to use them more effectively by having ministry personnel working together. This can include but is not limited to existing mental health supports to speech and language therapy and occupational therapy, all of which are important in education. RCSD partners and collaborates on a regional level to help meet the identified needs of children, youth, and their families. The intention of the RCSD approach is that children, youth, and families will have access to the existing enhanced supports, but they'll get it at the right time and in their home or in their school or in their community, so it's someplace that's local.

I've heard nothing but positive reports of this service delivery model, but I am wondering about the information management systems that underpin the work of the RCSD. How are these collaborative efforts managed between AHS and Education? How do they keep track of the students who receive services under this model? How do they track the ministry expenses when they participate in this initiative, and how are funding commitments allocated and tracked? Most importantly, I would like to know how they track individual students who receive supports through this initiative and how parents know that their child's needs are being met.

Are students receiving proper screening and assessments? Is there the funding for that? Are they receiving that screening and assessment in time to get the proper supports in place to ensure success? Are they receiving proper interventions? Are the interventions successful? Are teachers, school administrators, specialists able to track the progress as a result of the interventions? Are parents kept appropriately involved in the process? What data is being gathered as a result of the crossministry initiative? What can we learn from that data, and how can we use it to make decisions that will benefit the students' welfare into the future?

More generally, in the report we read that enterprise and ministry support services provide vital support to the delivery of all government programs and services. This support is provided through internal policy and decision-making capacity, strategic planning, contracted service management and operations in accommodations and facilities, financial services, human resource services, information management, information technology, contact centres and other corporate services . . .

Outcomes for this line of business are to:

- improve stakeholder access to government information, programs and services.

We know that the school boards and the other educational services need to have access to this information.

How well is the money being spent on PASI? Is it allowing them to get that? They need to - manage and leverage government information as a strategic resource.

They need to be able to ensure accountability. The system has to - ensure accountability and effective management of resources, investments and risks.

Does it

- enable productivity of government employees; and
- provide effective and easy-to-access processes.

Madam Speaker, the provincial approach to student information, or PASI, took years to develop, and it cost the government a lot of money, but I've never been able to find out a definitive amount. What did it actually cost, and has that money been used effectively and wisely with this system?

It was developed, and then it was turned over to the school boards to implement. Some school boards have developed their own software, and some have purchased software developed by software manufacturers to meet the functionality that is sometimes needed by the government. The entire process and the resulting software applications were not always suitable for some small school jurisdictions. In fact, the system was in some cases too cumbersome and too expensive, and the administrative burden of implementing PASI was beyond the capacity of many independent schools and private ECS operators.

This question is important in light of the results-based budgeting report. How much have school authorities spent on developing and implementing PASI? Was the result of that investment a platform that allows for information sharing between ministries in a manner that will support both the students and at the same time protect their privacy? Will PASI meet the outcomes of this line of business as outlined in the report, or will school authorities now have to go back to the drawing board to start afresh as the government moves to implement the key recommendations of this report?

The final question, Madam Speaker, is: how much was spent, and were these funds well used? Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his question. You know, actually, the many questions he asked within his explanation around this question are really good, right? I think that they are things that are worth pursuing in regard to us finding efficiencies around IT systems not just in Education but that crossministry collaboration that we talked about a lot and are working towards implementing throughout Human Services, Health, Advanced Education, and, of course, Education. So within those parameters there are lots of things that are definitely worth pursuing.

So within your own specific question here, though – and again it's something that we could work to probably clarify over time. Our school authorities operate autonomously with respect to the purchase and the use of different information systems.

Vendor systems may include a broad range of functionality, and school authorities select the student information system that best meets their needs. Each school board has tracking of that IT system and the costs associated with that and efficiencies, but it's not brought together through Alberta Education. Many school authorities have agreed to their time with Alberta Ed to support design and testing requirements, to develop the provincial approach to student information, PASI.

Some school authorities have invested time to work directly with their CIS vendor to test pilot PASI-integrated features to ensure that CIS meets their requirements. PASI integration represents only one component of the capabilities of a larger, global student information management system, that you'll see in all of our school boards, charter schools, private schools, and so forth throughout the province. You know, many CIS vendors have successfully enhanced their systems to be PASI integrated so that they can promote and market their software to Alberta school authorities. We're seeing all of these things, but the short version of it, Madam Speaker, is that those decisions, as many decisions are in education, are choices that elected representative school boards make across the province. So that's where that information does lie, right?

Moving forward, you know, I certainly see the utility and certainly school boards would see the utility of us looking for ways to save money because that's what they, of course, are meant to do, provide quality and be careful with the public dollars, but over time that's, of course, what I'm always trying to pursue in my ministry.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the question? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the question. It sounds like the question is going to be rejected, which is a bit of a shame. I recognize that there are some unique challenges with the autonomy of school boards, but it sounds to me like the problem that we have here this afternoon is twofold. It sounds like my hon. colleague didn't word the question right, and perhaps we could have had a bit of co-operation to get to the heart of what the member was trying to accomplish. The goal of what the member was trying to do with the question – and I wouldn't speak for him – in conversations and in the debate this afternoon was to try and get more information.

One of the roles as a private member and certainly as a member of the opposition is to try and shed light on issues or expenditures or challenges that the province faces so that we can all have access to more information. The more information that we can all have, the better we all are when it comes to making informed decisions. It's very, very difficult for even the minister's department to judge the success or not of a program without all of the information.

I know, in speaking with a number of school board trustees in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills just recently, that the department has asked for new measures when it comes to reporting their finances through to the minister's office. I know that a lot of school board trustees have raised some significant concerns about the time that it's going to take and a relationship between school boards and the department or the minister's office. Here we had an opportunity where he could have just asked. He has asked for lots of other things but hasn't asked in this case. Our goal and the member's goal is to try and do our best to be able to judge results of programs. This particular question didn't cast judgment on the program but merely endeavored to try and get some standards from which to work. If we don't have both the objectives and the results – and a big portion of that is the costs – it's very difficult to determine whether or not that was a good investment.

Make no mistake. There are a number of different factors at play here when it comes to people who have spent money on this particular initiative. You know, it would have been great if the minister had provided an amendment to speak to the information that he had specifically, particularly around costs that the department incurred, because it at least is a data point on which we could begin to have a more robust discussion around this particular program.

To reject the question out of hand and say, "Well, listen; school boards are autonomous," which we appreciate over here – the minister does have the ability to ask questions. He could have been very co-operative in nature and not directive in nature and said: hey, we're looking to try and get the best idea on how much we spent. Instead, what we have is the minister just making the decision to reject the question, saying that it's a little bit too tricky and not trying to take the next step and provide information on an issue that's important.

We and, I believe, all members of the Assembly have a desire to get the best available information with which to judge programs, to make decisions. Because we are in a time when there are significant pressures in all dollars we spend, we all have a responsibility to ensure that the government is spending those resources as effectively and as appropriately as possible. To just reject this question I don't think speaks to the importance of the resources that have been spent, as I said, even in the form of providing the very hard data that the minister has available to him today in the form of what his department spent on this particular initiative. I hope that it's not a trend that we see moving forward.

I know that my hon. colleague has asked a couple of questions here to the Department of Education. Fortunately, about half of them, I believe, are going to be answered, so I will say thank you to the minister for that because when the government does the right thing and provides the information that the opposition feels is reasonable and appropriate to legislate from, we should be appreciative of that. We're not going to see eye to eye on all things; on few things it is more likely than not. But I do appreciate the fact that the minister has answered a couple of the questions that my hon. colleague has asked. It is a little disheartening that the last two questions we've debated here are going to be rejected.

I hope that on a go-forward basis we can work a little bit more collaboratively to make sure that we're asking the right questions. I know that members on this side of the Assembly, where possible, are happy to work together to try and get the information that all Albertans may want to have access to.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the question?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close.

4:20

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to start by suggesting that when you begin a new job, there are times when you do have to learn, and sometimes you turn to the veterans in that job. You ask for their advice, and you watch how they do their job, and as you begin to progress in your job, hopefully, you learn. This member of the Legislature is trying to do that as we speak.

I know that there are times when I have done a great deal of learning from some of the veterans in my caucus, and I have learned a lot from individuals even to the left of me about how this . . .

An Hon. Member: I'm to the right.

Mr. Smith: Oh, you're to the right.

I know that as I progress through these ideas of trying to get information that would help education and the students of Alberta, there are times when I've been in my classroom and I have had to say to the kids that the right question is indeed important to ask.

In my defence I would also perhaps suggest that when we asked this question, it was a starting point. It's a starting point to begin to get a better understanding of just how effective the PASI student information initiative has been. Let's start by asking some of the really obvious questions. Let's start by knowing – and I know the minister understands this very clearly – that we are in the information business in this Legislature and in this government and that the sharing of information is critical. If we're going to be able to govern well, we have to get a clear picture of how things come together and why decisions are being made the way they are being made.

In education it's no different. Perhaps we start by first asking what it's costing the school boards to purchase this information system and whether it's a wise use of those funds. I believe that in an economic climate like we're in today, where we've got too few resources and very much need, we have to make some tough choices sometimes. Because we know that we don't want to negatively affect and impact the classroom directly, we have to look in education at other areas, but it's perhaps pretty difficult in education because so much of those resources are poured into teachers and poured into classroom supports.

So where do we look? Well, perhaps PASI is one of them. So we use those resources hopefully wisely, but we have to ask the question: what do they cost? We know that in life we make better judgments when we have better information, so if we're going to find out if this is an appropriate system, it means, then, that we need to make sure that we've got the information, and it starts by asking: what is it costing school boards, and is it a wise use of their funds?

I guess it is a little disappointing. As my colleague has said, to reject this and decide to not walk down this path is disappointing because it could help by ensuring that there are resources being spent in appropriate places in education. We don't know just yet how much money has been poured into this. So how can we start asking the other questions if, first, we don't know what those are?

It would have been nice – I guess maybe I shouldn't prejudge. Maybe the rest of the House here will in fact support this request. I would ask this House and this minister to consider that this is one way that we can pursue, perhaps, some wise stewardship of resources without affecting classroom teachers directly or class counts. It would allow us to be able to at least have the conversation.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent from the Assembly that in the event of a recorded vote being requested for any of the written questions or motions for returns now standing on the Order Paper, the bells be shortened to one-minute intervals.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Ministry Legislation Plans

- M18. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the most recent three-year legislation plan for each ministry.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Approximately one year ago Albertans chose a new direction for the province. This Thursday will be the one-year anniversary of the election of this government. At that time Albertans were hoping for a new, open, transparent form of government. The question that's before the House, in many respects, is going to reveal how much has changed from the previous government to this government. This question, the motion for a return, speaks to the direction and the ongoing direction of the new government and whether or not they're going to do things differently and provide this House and all Albertans a bit of a road map moving forward over the next period of time. In this particular question I had the opportunity to ask for three years of the most recent legislative plan for each ministry. It doesn't mean exactly the pieces of legislation but a plan that each ministry has for potential areas of need inside the department when it comes to legislating, when it comes to the Legislature.

The government has an opportunity to provide a sense to the opposition and to Albertans of exactly what the needs are going to be over the next number of years. That's not to say that those needs won't change. That's not to say that the plan provided, or hopefully provided, today isn't a flexible one, but it will give Albertans a general sense of what the needs of the ministry are and will also provide the opportunity for Albertans to discern the direction that this government is likely to take.

I might just add that should the question be rejected because of the timeline, three years, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as the mover of this motion for a return I'd be more than happy to accept an amendment around shortening that timeline to 12 months, 24 months, whatever the government might see fit. But it is a bit of a line-in-the-sand day. I know that the previous government, some would say, acted under a lot of secrecy and discussion, with lots of decisions solely around the cabinet table, not opening up all of those things but deciding amongst a small group of people. This is an opportunity for the government to provide a sense.

I also recognize that there may be some of those things that are too sensitive to provide, and I might just add that I would be willing to have some discussion around some of those things that, in fact, might be too sensitive and might prevent the government from wanting to answer this question today.

In light of the time – and I'd love to hear from the government on their plan for this question; I have a sneaking suspicion that they're not very keen to answer it – on behalf of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and all Albertans, that are really looking for some guidance and direction on where the government is going over a longer period of time than just a legislative session, I sure hope that they will have the desire to share that information with all of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I hate to disappoint the hon. Official Opposition House Leader on this point, I know he had a sense that we might be rejecting it. Might I suggest that he probably drafted a question that he knew would be rejected because this speaks to the heart, goes to the heart of cabinet confidentiality. That is, I think, the core of it. These are internal working documents of Executive Council, and as such they are privileged and subject to the protections related to cabinet confidences. Moreover, these plans are very fluid, and they change very often, depending on any number of circumstances, and there is no formal process for their approval. They are often generated at the departmental level, and they may not reflect the priorities of the ministers or of the government, and they do not necessarily reflect decisions made by ministers or the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker, there's another real concern, that releasing this information could certainly jeopardize and prejudice consultations with stakeholders. I think we have learned in the year that we've been the government that it is important to consult with stakeholders, and to publish lists of legislation before that's been done is not fair to them and makes the work of the government that much more difficult. Some departments may not use the same time frame as others. I appreciate that the members opposite would like to seek information about our legislation plans, but there is an outline of the plans of the government that is provided, and that is contained in the Speech from the Throne. Until we have finalized the legislation and approved it to come forward, any lists are potentially more speculative than anything else.

With respect to that, I don't think there's a lot of value in bringing forward these very flexible plans and releasing them, particularly because they contain decisions that have been made in cabinet and, as such, are privileged.

I urge all hon. members to reject the Official Opposition House Leader's motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce some guests of one of the members.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Assembly for allowing the introduction at this point. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, Adriana LaGrange, as well as past president Tony Sykora. I would ask them to stand, and I would ask members to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

5:00

The Speaker: I have another request. Is that right?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly

Mr. John Tomkinson. John is a pilot and an air traffic controller who moved to Wetaskiwin in 2006 with his wife and his young family. Since then he's become involved in many ministries with the Sacred Heart parish. Mr. Tomkinson is the chair of the St. Thomas Aquinas Catholic school board and was motivated to seek the position because of his great interest in protecting and advancing the delivery of education centred on the Catholic faith. John is also the vice-president of the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association, and his volunteer experience includes speaking at community and men's groups' retreats and conferences about God's impact on his life. John is a proud father of eight children. May I ask Mr. Tomkinson to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I hesitate to interrupt the House, but the time limit for consideration of this item has concluded.

Motions Other than Government Motions

Educational Delivery Choices

504. Mr. McIver moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to affirm its commitment to allowing parents the choice of educational delivery for their children, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, or public education programs.

Ms Luff moved that Motion 504 be amended as follows:

- (a) by striking out "affirm" and substituting "support public education, including francophone and separate schools, while affirming";
- (b) by adding "and" after "charter,";
- (c) by striking out "francophone, separate, or public";
- (d) by adding "in such instances where they offer alternatives not available in the public system" after "programs".

[Debate adjourned on the amendment April 18: Mr. Cooper speaking]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent for two motions. The first is to seek unanimous consent such that the amendment to Motion 504, which is currently on the floor, be withdrawn.

I will just also mention the second one because they go together: seeking unanimous consent that the time spent on Motion 504 on April 18 be taken out of debate time and thus not count towards the time limit set out for motions other than government motions under Standing Order 8(3), with the understanding that at 5:55 today the mover be given five minutes to close debate unless the motion is voted on sooner.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm advised by the table that there are two motions contained within that. The first motion is to give unanimous consent for the amendment to be withdrawn.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The second is for a total of 55 minutes of debate. Do I correctly understand that?

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and that is with the understanding that the speaking list would not start over again.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise. It's nice when the House can work together to get out of a bit of a jam that we found ourselves in not 14 days ago. It is an important discussion, and it's one that we've had a little bit of an opportunity to speak about just this afternoon around this very fundamental discussion around choice in education and who is responsible for educating their children and the government reaffirming their long-standing position on choice in education.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a very good history on this particular file of being respectful of the ways that parents might like to engage in the education system. This particular motion affirmed, hopefully with the government's support – and only time will tell. Sometimes the House has a way of taking unique twists and turns. It's my hope that all members of the Assembly will support the motion that the Assembly urge the government to affirm its commitment to allowing parents the choice of education delivery for their children, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, or public education programs. This is a long-standing tradition inside the Alberta context.

We learned earlier today from my hon. colleague about a number of the good reasons why choice is critically important. First and foremost, as a parent and, I might add, in the name of full disclosure for the hon. Minister of Human Services, I also am an active participant in educating our children. I am so honoured that my wife takes the primary role in educating our children at home no matter where we are in the province. It's something that has been very important to us.

Mr. Speaker, you might have a hard time believing this, but I actually love my wife and children more than I love politics, so in order for us to be able to find a way to spend time together, to be investing in a way that works well for my family, investing into my children's lives on a pretty daily basis, we've made this choice to educate our children at home. For us, we are what's called fully aligned with the provincial curriculum. We teach what is taught in many schools all across this province. We hold our children to those standards, and that is an important choice that we've made in our family.

Now, it's not a choice that everyone should make, does make, but each of us lives in a jurisdiction where we have that opportunity, and it is a very, very important opportunity that we have. Just earlier today I had the opportunity of introducing a number of students from the Shepherd home-school, and I only say that because that is their last name. With the presence of my two children that are home-schooled and the four Shepherd children, a very good case could be made that those two families alone are saving the public education school system tens of thousands of dollars every year. The choice that we've made, in my opinion, is actually helping public education. My children do not require the confines of a school building.

With those seven children that were here, when you count my three and their four, that's almost half of a classroom or at least a third of a classroom in today's time, maybe a quarter, depending on where you live. The point is that the choice that we've made not only is great for our family, but in my opinion it's also great for the province. We all have a role to play in making our province great. The way that parents choose to engage in the education system is part of that. Let me be clear. I believe that the choices in our education system, be they public, private, separate, independent, home, francophone, help strengthen our education system. They help make the whole system stronger and better.

Our education system is something to be proud of because it fulfills a very, very important role of laying down the path for the future of our province. Just like we have the pleasure of welcoming school students and other students to our Legislature, they are going to be responsible for the future of our province. Now, it's my hope that we as a Legislature can continue to create an environment that sets them up for the most success, that supports their parents, that supports an environment where children and students have the opportunity to flourish. That's exactly what choice does.

We've seen in many, many situations that choice and competition raise the tide for all boats. Because there are charter schools, because there are independent schools, because there are the separate and Catholic school systems, we have an environment that creates the desire amongst many to be better, to provide the best possible education. I think it's important that we continue to support these choices.

We've seen a number of different schools right across the province, particularly charter schools, that have a significant wait-list. I know that my hon. colleague has been advocating on behalf of choice and advocating on behalf of charter schools and the inclusion of the additional spots that have been legislated for charter schools because these choices are important. It's my hope that today we can see an actual commitment from the government that they, too, support choice.

We've heard the minister on numerous occasions talking about supporting choice, but there are lots of people and, it's my belief, some members of the NDP caucus that are concerned about choice.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I believe your time has expired.

Mr. Cooper: My guess is that it hasn't because I'm on the main motion, not the amendment. Am I okay?

Okay. I'm just getting to the best part, about the government having an opportunity to do what's right. Last week we saw the government meddling inside the business of private members and creating uncertainty amongst those that choice is of critical importance. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that members on this side of the House will rise every single day to defend choice, to defend parents, and to defend families right across this province.

For that, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to support this motion, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to do the same.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon. member who brought forward this Motion 504. I'm very proud to rise today and speak in favour of the motion. I think that, you know, again, I've made it very clear from the beginning, as I assumed the Ministry of Education responsibility, that it's very important for us to provide stability and security amongst our 659,000 students and almost 1,600 schools and 61 school boards and many private schools and charter schools and home-schooling. We have just this whole universe of different ways by which we can access a very high quality of education here in the province of Alberta.

I know that from the beginning it's very important to reassure people that those mechanisms are in place, that we provide a high level of education that is regulated through legislation, through the School Act, through our school boards and so forth. The expectation is always there to deliver something that is the very best for our kids. Of course, what else are we here for other than to make sure that we provide a very secure and high-quality education for our children here in the province of Alberta?

Again, I've always said that you can judge me on my actions and our government's actions in regard to funding education. We had a very difficult budget this last go-round, but at the end of the day in caucus and in cabinet people said to me: you know, what are we really here for in the first place? Albertans look for a way to make sure that we make an investment in education through thick and through thin. It's been a little bit thin, Mr. Speaker, over these last few months, but I think that we reflected the desires of the vast majority of Albertans, who said: let's make a sacrifice to make sure that we're funding education even during an economic downturn like we're facing here today. I'm very proud of that.

That funding extends to all forms of education, using the envelopes and the mechanisms that we've had in place here in the province of Alberta for a long time. Every step of the way, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's very important for people to know that they can invest in the education system into which they've put their children and have the security to know that it's there for the future as well. I recognize that.

Certainly, I spent the last week travelling around the province just to kind of get a sense of where people are at in regard to education, and the results were very good. People were very happy to see that we made those choices around funding for enrolment, for education regardless of what system their children might be in or even in home-schooling as well. The results and the feedback that I received, Mr. Speaker, were very encouraging, and I learned, certainly, a lot about how people are willing to make that sacrifice.

We know that we need the positions as well. We had an earlier discussion here about different forms of education and trying to quantify the savings that you might make through private education and so forth. The general math around that is clear. I mean, of course, if you're funding at 60 per cent, then you're saving 40 per cent, right? If you're funding at 70 per cent, then you save 30. That is self-evident, certainly.

Many of our private institutions as well provide a very specialized form of education for people with severe special needs, which we will fund 100 per cent – 100 per cent – plus that extra special-needs funding that those students require.

In regard to the charter schools, again, looking to always evaluate every step of the way that there's high-quality education being served, new applications coming in, extensions coming into our department, if anything, Mr. Speaker, over the last year we've endeavoured to try to make that more of an independent process that uses a set criteria that would lessen the likelihood of, you know, people trying to jump the queue or something like that or otherwise making an evaluation on anything but what the independent ministry and the regulations would allow.

Yeah, I'm very proud of the education system that, first of all, produced me, K to 12, and then, you know, educated my own children. I worked as a teacher for 20 years. You know, it's not a question, Mr. Speaker, of trying to just defend education but, rather, to strengthen it in all ways. I think that as we all work together with the best of intentions to do that, we will always be successful in strengthening education. Certainly, I know that it's very difficult to suggest that anybody would have anything but those best intentions in mind as they help us with legislation here.

I thank the hon. member for his motion. Again, I do recognize that I always have to keep repeating messaging around all of the things that we do. I mean, we can't just say it once – we're going to say it every day – and, you know, I say it very often. Again, the best way to measure a government is to judge them on their actions. My feedback from independent schools associations, charters, and so forth is again, "Thank you for funding," as we have, "our public, separate, and francophone schools for enrolment." It's definitely a big deal out there, and I've given them the reassurance that they can start planning on a longer basis, that we will continue to do that so that they can make long-term plans for their budgets and so forth, which I think is very productive as well.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the education that we provide here in this province. I'm proud of the commitments, even during difficult economic circumstances, that I know most Albertans want, and I look to the Legislature here in all ways to support that endeavour as I would expect them to do so.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Well, thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I've been really looking forward to making this speech for exactly two weeks, as a matter of fact, as you know. I would really like to start by thanking my hon. member the MLA for Calgary-Hays. I think that the whole province has stood up and taken notice. This is a very insightful motion that he's spearheading. What he's really trying to do, along with so many other students and parents across this province, is simply to reaffirm the government's commitment to one of the most fundamental strengths of Alberta's education system, and that, of course, is the variety of choice that is offered to each and every child and parent in this incredible province of ours.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I won't ever forget many years ago what I read in Maclean's magazine. By the way, whether you do or don't like Maclean's magazine, whether you do or don't think it's too far to the left, it doesn't matter. They admitted that Alberta had built the best educational system by far in this country precisely because of the choice that other members have already referred to. I can appreciate that, not only as someone who's been through the system – the Education minister had mentioned that he had been through the system as well – not only in my current role as an advocate for advanced education, not only in being a parent of two who are in the school system at the moment but also as a former educator, like some of the other folks in this House. My humble career did span over a decade. I worked in three countries, from kindergarten to university, in many different facets of educational delivery, some of the best years of my life. I will treasure forever the students, the parents, the members of the community that I met, the incredible gains that were had. I never actually referred to myself as a teacher but as a facilitator. I learned incredible amounts.

I got a bit of grief from some of the teachers that I used to teach with a few years ago for, well, a number of things, as you might expect. One of them was for a bumper sticker on my car. It simply stated: don't let school get in the way of your education. They kind of thought that maybe I was taking a swipe at my own public school system. Of course, I wasn't. Incredible things happen within that public school, within the bricks and mortar, but I made a great effort, with a lot of help from parents and some teachers and many students, to take them far beyond the walls of that school to learn in ways that go beyond what we can find in a traditional classroom. I can tell you that the gains were absolutely invaluable, and to this day students tell me how it changed their life and their communities, close and far, around the world.

Maybe that started when I was earning my bachelor of education after degree, when I had a professor who did not put his own kids in the public school system. That's right. He was a professor at an educational institution, a university, the college of education, teaching students how to be teachers, and he was saying that he did not send his own kids to school. You can imagine how unpopular he might be amongst his colleagues. He asked us as students at that time: I'm guessing a whole bunch of you are wondering why you should listen to a word I say, let alone whether or not my kids are social misfits or academic laggards; I dare you to call them. So I did. I was the only one in the whole class. I talked to them, and I could not believe that the list of accomplishments on the social side of things for each one of the kids that he had was as long as one arm, and what they had done academically and beyond was as long as the other arm.

So the fact is, Mr. Speaker – it's been proven through these examples and so many more right across Alberta – that not all children have the same needs, and that's why it's important to offer these different modes of education. Some choose francophone education because of cultural or identity needs, and our system is set up to protect rights that are enshrined in the Constitution. Some children require different or enhanced educational programs that are more tailored to their and their family's educational goals, and our system does make that happen. We've got 13 operational charter schools across the province, as an example, including in my home constituency of Calgary-Lougheed. I am absolutely blown away every time I meet those students, whether it's in the school or beyond, by what they've done in the school and beyond.

Now, some children achieve their best choice in educational environments through home or even blended options. Our system has that ability for parents to assume direct responsibility for the education of their children and their work as partners within school boards. You know, if you don't want to take my word for it, please take the word as written by Mahala. She wrote in to me after she saw what happened here two weeks ago. She writes:

I am a grade 12 . . . student who would like to speak to supporting this choice in education. Even though I am graduating this year, your decision . . . will have an effect on so many children's intellectual, creative, and emotional well-being. I care about that.

I was in a public school setting until the second half of Grade 5, when my family and I made the decision to homeschool. I will be honest with you and say that by October of my grade 5 year, I was suddenly struggling to learn math, failing to comprehend science, and losing my love of learning. My family and I looked at all of the options available in Alberta, and decided to try . . . the Alberta curriculum through . . . [a] homeschooling centre, which also allowed us the opportunity to travel and later learn online. You guessed it . . . I started homeschooling and my grades skyrocketed. In this method of schooling I was able to learn in my own style and understand my own habits. If I had a passion for something, I could explore it fully. If I didn't understand something, I could look [into and] research it, find mentors, and learn.

It may be hard for you to understand my personal journey, Mr. Speaker, but let me give you some highlighted examples of what I have accomplished, thanks to homeschooling in Alberta. I created my own clean water filtration system, volunteered at a Calgary clean water organization, created my own student group to create awareness on water issues, won the University of Calgary's faculty women's club award for outstanding science fair achievement, and competed in a National level science fair, all before the age of 14. Last year, I was named one of Alberta's Top 30 under 30 by the Alberta Council for Global Cooperation for my continued work in water sanitation and awareness. This year alone, I have been named class valedictorian, and I was asked to guest speak at The Centre for Global Education's event.

She hasn't even finished grade 12 yet, Mr. Speaker.

She goes on:

I relayed my experiences and advice to over 1 000 motivated students via a continent-wide interactive webinar. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that there is very little opportunity in a school setting for kids to work on special projects and express ideas beyond the curriculum?

I now know that had I been within the bricks and mortar school setting, most of my ideas and interests would have been assimilated into the conformities of a unified learning style. It is important for everyone to recognize that not every child or adult learns in the same way. We are all different individuals. What I love about Alberta is that we accept and encourage diversity. The idea of tearing away a learning opportunity to express one's interests and ideals goes against the values of Albertans. Collectivizing the school system would only create a weaker province.

She goes on, Mr. Speaker:

I was looking up examples of learning conformity on a global scale when I realized that this has actually happened before . . . in Canada. Decades ago, government tried to create a uniform schooling system. This resulted in the assimilation and near eradication of a culture. This is an issue we are still having to address and reconcile today, and, in this age of diversity and acceptance, I find it hard to believe that government would make the same mistake. I am, of course, referencing the residential schools. We are taught in the Alberta curriculum how horrible this conformity was, and how our government is now taking steps forward to encourage diversity. Let this government not make the same mistakes and assume that every child is the same, nor learns the same. My 18 years of life has taught me to learn from my mistakes, adapt to change, and embrace new forms of learning. It is my hope that the Alberta government does the same and chooses to take steps forward in educational opportunities, rather than backward.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that Mahala is being, actually, extremely shy and humble. She's done far more things on the world stage than what she listed, both as a person learning and as an educator, before even achieving the age of majority. She would claim, and her parents would, too, that it's precisely because she is home-schooled.

Mr. Speaker, I truly wish that we were allotted much more time. I've had many dozens of letters along these lines. I have one, two, three, four, five pages I'd like to read to you, but I have 20 seconds left, so I will end with this. We have one of the most globally renowned K to 12 systems. Motion 504 will tell Albertans that this government is serious about upholding the system we have and is serious about providing diversity in the delivery of education.

I urge all members to support this motion and the strong, diverse, innovative system upon which Alberta's education is built. [A timer sounded] There's my time, and I thank you for it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak on this motion. I'd like to start off by saying that I am proud of our government for making education a priority even in these difficult economic times. We are committed to providing students with a quality education that enriches their lives and prepares them for a career in a diversified economy. Our government supports the rights of parents when it comes to making choices about their child's education.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I will note, Madam Speaker, that one of the first actions our government took was to reverse the cuts to education made by the previous government and to restore essential funding in order to ensure that our students and teachers continue to learn and work in a world-class system. I will note that there was an investment of $103 million that went directly to support teachers and students, directly to the classroom. This led to the hiring of 740 additional teachers. We are continuing this support in Budget 2016.

I will also note, Madam Speaker, that the government paid $151 million to support 94 private schools and $83 million to 13 charter schools during the 2015-16 fiscal year, and I will note that private schools that teach the Alberta curriculum receive at least 60 per cent of the amount of funding that the public schools receive for each student.

Since we are talking about choice, I thought I'd take a moment to chat about some of the choice in education that's available in my riding of Calgary-Currie. I had a chance recently to tour the Westbrook outreach school in Calgary-Currie, which is a school run by the CBE for students who can't attend regular school during regular hours for a variety of reasons. I met students there who were going to this school because they were working full-time to support a parent in need. I met students who were working because they were supporting a child, as these students are teenage parents, and many other students who are in this program for multiple other reasons. This is a program that combines distance and in-person learning. When I was there, I had a chance to meet a variety of bright, engaged students who care about their community. This is just an example of an innovative program that the public system can deliver and shows that they can, too, be innovative.

Now, Madam Speaker, also in my riding is a charter school, the Calgary Arts Academy. The Calgary Arts Academy emphasizes creativity and collaboration in their program, which, I will note, is the basis of entrepreneurship. I also had a chance to debate in that school during the election as it was one of the schools that hosted an all-candidates' debate during the previous election. It was great to be able to engage with such a diverse and engaged set of students. It's part of what makes Calgary-Currie a great community.

I also note that there is a private school in my riding known as Quest School. Now, Quest School is a very unique institution as it specializes in services for students who need assistance. These are students who are disabled in one way or another and have special educational needs. It brings teachers and instructional assistants and therapists and parents together in one location to create a unique educational plan for each of these high-needs students.

I also have many Catholic schools in my riding, including Holy Name, which is a French immersion school. It's part of the Catholic school district. I will note that both of my CA's young children go to this school, and I hear great things about it and hope to be able to visit it soon.

Now, I note that this motion is about choice. I also note that it speaks a lot about parental choice. I'm going to take a moment to talk to those parents in my riding. I want to say to them that I am proud that our government is making education a priority. I have met with parents who have kids in private, public, charter schools and even parents that home-school their kids in my riding. All of them, Madam Speaker, know that stability in education is key, and the funding that we have provided allows us to protect the services that Albertans rely on. What we won't do is propose massive cuts to education that would mean firing hundreds of teachers and crowding students into classrooms.

I know the opposition says that they've never quite said exactly that, but that is a matter for debate as often the things that they would propose in their reductions and spending would have to result in that, and that is not a road this government will go down.

Now, speaking to parents, I know that some parents in my riding were disappointed that the Westgate charter school was not approved by our government. It has been said on many occasions that the minister is forced to implement the regulations established by the previous government. Those regulations state that a charter school application could only be approved in an instance where proposed programs are not available in the public school system as well as a variety of other regulations. Our minister has been clear that he felt that that particular school did not meet the standards of the regulations.

I know, Madam Speaker, that those parents were disappointed. To those parents let it be known that I and this government will always stand up in support of parents working to have the best possible education for their children. That is why we are fully funding school enrolment, which the past government did not. That is why we have put actual money into building actual new schools, which the mover of this motion and the previous government did not. That is why we walk the walk on education, and all the former government has to show for itself is this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me the time to speak to this motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm a big believer in public education. My children are in public education. In fact, I've just recently been texting briefly with my daughter in grade 3. Today in school she built a 60-centimetre-tall building out of papier mâché in science class. She's very proud of that, and I'm also very proud of her. I don't know what it says about today when the most meaningful conversations we have are via text. I worry a little bit about that.

I also am a product of public education. Say what you will about that. Public education is not perfect, nor should it be the absolute only choice. Although I am very much a believer in the public education system in this province – and I think it is a fine system and deserves strong support and deserves investment and that it is the solution for the vast majority of students in this province – it is not and should not be the only choice for parents.

In particular, I want to spend some time talking about charter schools. There are a couple of charter schools in Calgary-Elbow. What I really like about them is the nature of them being public schools. They're accessible, they come without tuition, they are nondiscriminatory, and they address specific educational needs. They allow for innovation within our framework of public education. I think it's interesting to note how students have thrived in charter schools but also how many, many of the charter school programs that we see have been emulated in the public system. I think that's exactly the kind of innovation that charter schools were meant to bring about.

Now, it's not been perfect. I will acknowledge that the relationship between the public system and the charter system has been perhaps strained, but I look at that as an opportunity for charter schools and public schools to find ways of working together and truly sharing that innovation that was intended at the outset.

On the private school side I think this is an issue that requires some nuance. As the Minister of Education alluded to earlier, certain private schools are funded up to 100 per cent per-student funding, especially when we're dealing with students with special needs, whereas the majority will receive 70 per cent of the per-student funding envelope. But not all private schools are created equal, and I would encourage the government to look at the B.C. model, which has some more nuance and distinction within and between different private schools. Those that do provide services for students with special needs, I think, should be considered in all cases for 100 per cent funding. There are others that truly represent educational choice, but that is a choice that parents are making that perhaps should not be funded quite to the full 70 per cent range.

So it's something that as we consider this motion, I absolutely support parental choice in education, but I think perhaps we need to consider the level of funding for private schools in certain cases and look at some of the criteria for private schools.

I will absolutely be voting in favour of Motion 504. I think parents and students deserve that choice in education, and I think it's very important to say that choice in education does not need to diminish the availability or the quality of Alberta's public education system. I think it can be additive when we have choices and can allow students and parents to choose the educational option that makes the most sense for them and also, in the best case, can encourage the public system to continue innovating and continue to meet the needs of students.

I've spent a lot of time in public schools in constituency weeks and beyond where there are amazing programs – culinary programs, science-based programs, all-girls or all-boys programs, traditional programs – within the public system. I think the choice that we're talking about here absolutely must include the choices that are available within the public system. I think that's a very positive thing.

I'll conclude just by saying that our system certainly isn't perfect, but it would be diminished for not having educational choice, so I will support this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to the motion, which I likewise will be supporting. We've had long discussions over the years with our members, and it's been a resolution back and forth on the floor in some of our party gatherings. It's certainly a contentious issue.

I share the views, to a large extent, of the Member for Calgary-Elbow that we desperately need choice and we desperately need innovation. These are hotbeds of innovation and experimentation. There are also critical areas of unmet need. I'm thinking of the autism area, I'm thinking of First Nations, and I'm thinking of some of the schools that specialize in helping families and students with special needs – the Calgary Academy comes to mind – and learning disabilities that are uniquely placed to provide supports and success for some of these young people, the Alternative high in Calgary. Those are the ones I know to some extent. The fact that they are receiving 3 per cent of the budget for education is a significant acknowledgement that it's not a huge part of our public system.

At the same time, if there are, I guess, what I would call exclusive criteria, if there are elite opportunities that are only afforded to those with substantial income and special interests, I think they do merit looking at from the point of view of whether public funding should be enhancing those elite activities. And I'm thinking of athletics and art in some cases.

The position of our caucus and our party has been that, ultimately, we want to move innovation and the essential supports for all young people and their families into the public system, incorporating the best of what's there and ensuring that all students have access to at least the fundamentals, whether they're disabled or whether they have specific learning problems, that those be part and parcel of our public system and that over time integrating back into the public system would allow them to have full public funding. That would be the incentive for them to return or, actually, not to return but, in some cases, to come into the public system. There would be a greater accessibility for some of these areas, there would be innovation, and it would be a win-win for both the public system and the choices issue, which I think we all value.

With that in mind, I guess, I'm kind of indicating that while there are indications for funding for special schools, especially where there are unique needs, then I can see that we need to provide support for that to ensure that especially those who are marginalized get the support they need. On the other hand, where we have made innovation in some of the charter schools and, we understand, some new opportunities, we want them to be included into the public system. We can consider full public funding for those subject to some years of transitioning back into the public system and meeting the inclusion criteria, the issues around normalizing some of their programming, and with the incentive that they would be fully funded by following the full school curriculum and standards, that make them more accessible in the public system.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize Drayton Valley-Devon, followed by Sherwood Park if there's time.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I realize the time is fast approaching, so I'll try and make my remarks maybe a little more abbreviated than I would have liked to. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for sharing that letter with us from that young lady. Impressive.

I guess what I would argue and suggest today, Madam Speaker, is that whatever education system we have in place, it needs to be one that is flexible enough to be able to meet the needs of Alberta students. I would argue that that means we need to embrace the educational principles and values that we have got in this province, that are enshrined in law, and that we need to recognize the diversity that is in this province when it comes to the people of this province and, therefore, the need for educational diversity within this province.

We spent quite a bit of time talking about the amendment, and with that opportunity we talked a little bit about the large numbers of immigrants that were coming into Alberta and the need for diversity in our education because of that. Other colleagues in this House have spoken to the needs of a diverse population and autism and other educational needs that are going to need diversity in education.

I believe that we do need to get down to some basic principles, though, what we believe we want our society to be like. One of the things that I think is one of our huge strengths in Alberta is that we're not divided by race or language or religion. We don't identify through those things solely; rather, we have a civic sense of nationalism. That civic sense of nationalism has brought us to combine and to unite around a set of values and principles, and one of those is the value of freedom, the freedom to choose how we're going to raise our kids, the value of freedom of religion, how we're going to raise our families in the faith values that we choose to have. I believe that whatever education system we have, it needs to be surrounded and encompassed by a mature understanding of freedom, a freedom that allows us to be able to speak our conscience, to raise our family, to pursue our faith, but to do so within the context of a community.

Now, I guess that's one of the things that I would – and I think maybe it's quibbling here a little bit with your motion there, but you say: "allowing" parents. It's "allowing parents the choice of educational delivery for their children." I'm not sure that I would use that word only because I believe that it's the parents' choice, that it comes from the parents first and not from the state. But maybe that's just quibbling.

The Wildrose Party and this member are going to be very glad to support this motion and to support it because we believe in that vision of Alberta and that vision of education, a vision that will allow for public schools and Catholic schools, a vision that will allow for home education and charter schools and alternative programs and independent schools all in order to meet the educational needs of our children. You know, these are important values, so I was very pleased to hear members from the government side and the hon. Minister of Education stand up today and support this vision of education and of diversity and the funding for that.

Now, in all of those things – don't get me wrong. As a former public school teacher I see the value in a public system of education, and Alberta has an amazing public system that challenges and engages students. I've seen the excellence that public education can provide for students as they engage in their learning, but I also want to recognize that the other streams of education, the diversity of education that we have, also can produce excellence. While I'm proud of the great work that we've done in a public system of education, whether that's separate or whether that's public, I absolutely recognize and believe that we should continue to fund the excellence that occurs in all of our educational delivery models. One size does not fit all, it's been said, and I believe that in Alberta we have an educational delivery system that's very diverse, and it's one of our strengths.

So as we pursue a vision of education, I guess I would just leave with these comments. I would urge all of us in this House to support Motion 504 because we should not be unnecessarily restricting Albertans' educational options. Rather, where parents and students want an educational option, where there's enough demand for that educational option, where constitutionally we are directed to provide that educational option, where the educational option can be delivered in a manner where learning occurs in a safe and caring environment, then the government, I believe, has an obligation to both pay for and to allow and provide for that educational option.

This motion calls us to stay committed to these objectives and to these values. It will receive my support today. Thank you very much.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I like to request unanimous consent of the House to go to one-minute bells if I may.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise to support the motion. Our government supports the rights of parents when it comes to making choices about their child's education. As a former school trustee it's always a pleasure for me to meet trustees, educators, teachers, and parents involved in education. This week is Education Week, and I feel fortunate to be able to celebrate the week with a few schools in my constituency. I think it's very fitting that MLA for a Day is during this week.

In my constituency parents have a large number of choices for their children. We have schools such as Woodbridge school, that is part of the Elk Island public board; St. Theresa, which is in Elk Island Catholic board; New Horizons, which is a charter school for gifted children. This fall they will be joined by the Sherwood Park École francophone, who will share space with New Horizons charter school. Francophone parents who live in the Fort Saskatchewan and Strathcona county areas now have the possibility of sending their children to a school where they will be taught in French. The school will be named after Senator Claudette Tardif and her husband, Denis. Both have contributed greatly to the support for francophone school boards in Alberta. There is also a large number of parents who home-school their children and who belong to a number of different home-school boards.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to the unanimous consent granted earlier this afternoon, I will now turn to the Member for Calgary-Hays to close debate.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just to review here, we are debating Motion 504, which I first moved two weeks ago, and I'd like to read it again into the record.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to affirm its commitment to allowing parents the choice of educational delivery for their children, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, or public education programs.

Madam Speaker, it's consistent with the United Nations charter, article 26, section (3), that reads: "Parents have a prior right to choose the kind of education that shall be given to their children."

The purpose of the motion is to have the government confirm what they're already doing. I'm asking the government to give parents the assurance that choice will remain in education, assurance that education will not go backwards in Alberta and that students can continue to benefit from the many options of educational delivery currently available. Alberta has one of the best education systems in the world, and the PC caucus encourages this government to keep it that way.

Choice in education, including home, charter, private, francophone, separate, or public education programs, is about meeting the needs and interests of children, the most important people that we're talking about here, so that they can reach their full potential. Everybody should have equality of opportunity. They don't always have equality of results, but education fit to each child is going to give each child as close as you can get to that equality of opportunity. All children deserve that, Madam Speaker. The choice for parents is to decide which school is best for them. I have to say that I have experience in my life in most of these choices: in private schools, charter schools, separate schools, and public schools. They all have their place. They all belong. They all look after children. This motion encourages the government to ensure stable and permanent access to that choice in education.

I thank the government for withdrawing their amendment. I think that is a victory today for Alberta children and parents. Sometimes, Madam Speaker, some of these people need to fight for what is right. I think this is a case where that happened. My grandchildren will benefit. I believe everybody's children and grandchildren will benefit not only now but in generations to come. Parents and only parents are best to decide for their children. Of course, when their children are looked after by someone else, the one that tucks them into bed at night is probably the one that loves them the most and is most suited to make these decisions about how they're educated.

I have to say that there's been an outpouring of support from parents across Alberta on this particular motion. There are lessons to be learned about this whole process, and this will be talked about for a long time, but that does not diminish the importance of what we're going to do today. The minister said that he's proud of the education system. I agree with the minister. This is important because kids matter.

Albertans have created a system that is largely better than other provinces' in Canada because Albertans told their government that sometimes their kids need better choices. Sometimes their kids need extra services. The hon. Liberal member talked about special-needs kids or kids that might have autism. Sometimes they need special care. Sometimes kids are actually smarter than other kids, and they need special care for that so that they can reach their highest potential. That is what choice does. It provides kids with a good experience. It provides them with the best chance to reach their full potential as human beings.

Now, I am glad the government has decided to support parental choice, or at least that's my understanding, and I thank them for that. Madam Speaker, this is something so fundamental – so very fundamental – to the future of Alberta. Of course, it can't be forgotten that it's essential that all Alberta schools regardless of the type are safe, caring, welcoming places for all students regardless of who those students are: race, creed, colour, religion, sexual orientation, whatever.

Madam Speaker, I would encourage all members of the House to support this motion, and should you do so, you'll have my heartfelt thanks and, more importantly, those of the parents.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried unanimously]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 6:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 3, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us reflect. Let's reflect on the power of knowledge and the impact we have on each other. Let us encourage one another to not be afraid to make mistakes. Let us also commend one another for their opinions, their ideas, and their thoughts, for as a community we are stronger when we work together. Let us remember that what we can achieve together far exceeds what we might do as individuals.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I would just take this opportunity to ask the members to particularly be conscious of the amount of time during introductions, and I would appreciate that members abide by that.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Chief Tony Alexis, the grand chief of Treaty 6, seated in the Speaker's gallery. When he was just 25 years of age, Chief Tony Alexis was first elected to the council for his nation, and he was elected chief of the Alexis Nakota Sioux Nation in 2013 and appointed grand chief in 2015 of the Confederacy of Treaty Six First Nations. Grand Chief Alexis has recently returned from Rome, where he met with Pope Francis. Grand Chief Alexis practises a traditional way of life, taught by his father, which motivates the people he represents, advocates and promotes indigenous heritage and ongoing treaty dialogue with all governments. Grand Chief Alexis enjoys serving his people and community, specializing in business and policy development. With Grand Chief Alexis today we have Beatrice Carpentier, the CEO for Treaty 6, and Jerry Saddleback, grand chief liaison. If you could all stand and enjoy the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 36 very bright and energetic students from one of the best schools in the great riding of Edmonton-Whitemud. This is the Monsignor William Irwin school, that I've had the pleasure to visit several times. We have 36 students, and they're joined by their teacher, Mr. Nick Freeman. I would ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Alberta and Africa's Great Lakes Foundation who are joining us today in the gallery: Francky BigomoKerolli Katana, Sara Raguz, Clotilde Nsimine, Justine Maman Katana, Sophie Uzoma, and Rosalie Rosie. Together they work in my riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to help newcomers from across Africa do several things: master English while celebrating their mother languages and cultures, learn how to use public transportation, access immigration services, and find libraries, schools, and other services. But, most importantly, they help them get good jobs to earn a good living for themselves and their families. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, it is my sincere pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the president and CEO of the Alberta Forest Products Association. Last Sunday my beautiful wife, Michèle, and I planted trees at Hawrelak park in Edmonton as we highlight Alberta Forest Week. Today the AFPA and its partners have distributed seedlings to each and every Member of this Legislative Assembly, inviting all of us to be part of the important work of forest stewardship. I would like to ask Paul Whittaker to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several guests representing 20 Vic Management Incorporated, or the administration team of Londonderry Mall, located in my constituency of Edmonton-Decore. Londonderry has long been the shopping destination for the surrounding area since opening in 1972 and recently embarked on a striking $130 million renovation, which includes full renovation of all common areas and the addition of exciting new retailers and full-service dining experiences, all of which will help to continue creating economic growth and diversification in northeast Edmonton. Joining us today are Nancy Jarnevic, Jordon Adams, and Olga McGonigal. If I could have you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests? The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly Councillor Fabian North Peigan from the Piikani band in the southern parts of the province, who is here today with his council and Chief Stanley Grier. If Fabian could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Chartier Restaurant in Beaumont

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak about a unique and beautiful local restaurant, Chartier, which is a true jewel in the heart of the town of Beaumont. Chartier brings to Beaumont a rustic, warm feeling through its delicious French-Canadian cuisine. Its interior is uniquely decorated. You'll find a blend of eclectic flea market fare, mismatched chairs, plates, cutlery, beer mugs from me, reclaimed barn wood, and warm Edison light bulbs hanging from a ceiling and wrapped around large beams, that creates a warm, inviting, homey atmosphere which draws you in as you walk down Main Street Beaumont.

On entering, you are either greeted by the fantastic and friendly restaurant staff or by the pleasant and welcoming owners, Darren and Sylvia Cheverie. It feels like being invited into a family member's home. Once you are in, you are immersed in delicious smells that will delight your senses. Some of their bestselling, in-demand dishes are pork jowl cakes, Montreal smoked meat carpaccio, and flank steak, all brought to you by the fantastic chef, Steve Brochu.

Mr. Speaker, what makes this restaurant even more unique is that the owners, a couple, raised $107,975 for this dream project through crowdfunding, a mercurial form of fundraising typically used for projects like start-ups in tech or other types of unique entrepreneurship ideas. Chartier is here today partly due to the 550 people who graciously donated to the compelling Kickstarter campaign. But I think it was Darren and Sylvia's passion for wanting to bring a truly special food experience to their hometown that made Chartier a reality.

Darren and Sylvia have shown once more that Albertans are enterprising entrepreneurs. They are the heart and soul of this new jewel in Beaumont, and we are truly better off for having them and Chartier warming the centre of our beautiful little town. I want to wish them continued success and all the best in the future and welcome everyone to come and visit this fantastic place. Bring your family and have nice French cuisine.

Thank you.

Charities

Mrs. Pitt: I beam with pride when I say that I'm an Albertan. Albertans are generous in spirit, independent, and always willing to help a neighbour. In my own community of Airdrie I know the deep and meaningful impact that volunteer organizations and charities have. When an individual faces adversity, there are a tremendous number of organizations in Alberta to lend a helping hand.

Charities like the Mustard Seed, Calgary Dream Centre, Inn from the Cold, and the Zebra centre rely on donations to run their invaluable services. Of course, with the economic downturn, many Albertans won't have as much money left in their pockets at the end of the month to donate. Starting in early 2017, Albertans will have even less, with the typical family expected to be an additional $1,000 out of pocket each year because of the NDP government's risky carbon tax. When you consider that Albertans donate a median of $420, charitable donations are sure to decrease because of the carbon tax and NDP ideology.

To make matters even worse, the NDP government has also turned its back on the hard-working charities in communities across Alberta and has decided that they will be subject to the carbon tax, too. Many of these charities are on fixed budgets, with little overhead or room to spare at the end of the year. These well-meaning charities will now have to choose between providing meals to the homeless and keeping the building warm enough during an Alberta winter. Organizations that deliver meals to vulnerable individuals will see a sharp spike in the cost of gas for their volunteers. Through no fault of their own, charities will be paying the price for NDP ideology.

The NDP government needs to commit that nonprofit organizations that work tirelessly each and every day to help Albertans when they are down will be exempt from the risky and ideological carbon tax, plain and simple.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Alberta Beef

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise in this Assembly and stand up for Alberta beef. Alberta and Canadian beef ranks among the best in the world. I can attest to that first-hand because I raised cattle most of my life.

Beef producers adhere to strict antibiotic guidelines as set out by Health Canada. In Canada no cattle may be slaughtered for processing until a specified, standardized amount of time has passed since the animal has finished a course of antibiotics, which means that no cattle are processed that contain antibiotic residue. Antibiotic treatment of sick cows limits the extent of their sickness and suffering. Let's be clear. It is the humane thing to do to treat a sick cow so they can get better instead of letting the animal suffer.

The Canadian beef industry uses a comprehensive traceability system. We are able to trace an animal throughout its life cycle, which is essential for tracing animal health emergencies that may arise.

The hormone and steroid levels of beef from cattle raised with hormone implants are less than one nanogram, different than cattle raised without hormone implants, and there are thousands of times more steroids in the bun than in the beef. Also, Canada beef is regularly tested for BSE, and we continue to increase sample testing size every year.

Our producers take tremendous pride in their product. Cattle are grain fed and given space and freedom to roam, which is why Alberta beef is the best tasting. Canadian law ensures that cattle are handled and slaughtered humanely. If beef producers weren't raising their cattle with the care and attention that they are, Alberta beef would not be top rank in the world for flavour. It's because of that care and attention that our beef tastes so amazing. Alberta beef has the highest certification, and I proudly choose Alberta beef every time.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Sexually Transmitted Infections

Mr. Connolly: Mr. Speaker, last week I took the opportunity to do what many young people need to do more often: yes, I got an STI test. Getting tested for STIs, also known as sexually transmitted infections, is an important part of comprehensive health care. In Alberta some of the highest rates and increases in STIs are in young people aged 15 to 24. According to information from Alberta Health Services the number of cases of gonorrhea in 2015 is up 80 per cent from 2014, and cases of infectious syphilis in 2015 doubled from 2014. Syphilis rates have risen most notably in MSM, or men who have sex with men, and gonorrhea rates have increased in young indigenous females.

It's important that we break the stigma associated with getting tested for STIs. Health care professionals don't perform STI tests to judge you; they are there to make sure that you are the healthiest you can be.

But it's not just youth who are at risk, Mr. Speaker. Any Albertan who is sexually active is at risk of contracting a sexually transmitted infection. The good news is that many STIs can be treated and cured but only if you are aware that you are infected. If you are having sex, thinking about having sex, single, partnered, married, straight, gay, bisexual, pansexual, cisgendered, transgendered, or gender queer, you need to know how to avoid contracting an STI and what to do if you have one. It's important to take a holistic approach to health. Albertans should know how to avoid contracting an STI and what to do if they have one. Fortunately, there are plenty of clinics across the province where Albertans of all ages, Mr. Speaker, can get an STI test for free. There are also community organizations doing great work to help fight stigma, raise awareness, and even offer free testing such as the Calgary Sexual Health Centre and the Pride Centre of Edmonton.

I would strongly encourage every sexually active Albertan and member of this Chamber to get tested. If anyone would like any more information about STIs or STI testing, I would invite them to visit Alberta Health Services' new website sexgerms.com.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Constituency Week in Calgary-Bow

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Returning to my riding of Calgary-Bow last week reminded me of the dynamic role that we as MLAs have been asked to fulfill by the people.

Over the course of the constituency week I met with stakeholders big and small, constituents, and neighbours in boardrooms and living rooms, from the small group of roommates who have made it their goal to have a place at their table for whoever may need to share a meal, like the House of Commons in Bowness, or Marilyn Gunn and the countless volunteers of the Community Kitchen program, which aims to feed with dignity and provides a connection for those who may be isolated, like seniors or new Canadians. This program serves a number of seniors in my constituency, and it was very nice to meet the people behind it.

I met the folks of the southern Rockies Alberta Environment and Parks office, where they work 24 hours a day to keep our forests healthy, available, and safe for the many Albertans who enjoy them. I also met with teachers from a number of schools to hear directly from them about their concerns and their hopes for the future. It was easy to see the commitment and genuine love these teachers have for their students and the role that they play in so many of their lives.

Constituency week is a reminder to me of the countless hours of time and effort that people pour into our communities. While the work that they do may differ from group to group, the intention is always the same: to give back, to lift up, and to nurture our communities with support.

I am truly inspired by the people I get to meet every day, and I would like to say thank you to every constituent in Calgary-Bow for the opportunity to be here on your behalf. As we approach the end of year 1 and the beginning of the next year, I recommit my promise to listen, to learn, and to work hard on your behalf.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Red Tape

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like a snare, red tape is a trap to the good citizens and businesses of Red Deer and area. It's an offence under the Wildlife Act to use snares in Red Deer and Alberta, and it should also be an offence to use red tap to entangle Alberta's good citizens. Indeed, this has some of them seeing red. Red tape has trapped our good citizens. But the government, like every poacher caught red-handed, claims no knowledge of red-tape entrapment, so let me present some evidence.

Bill 6 is a shining example of creating more red tape for farmers and ranchers. Without our help, small family farms would have been tangled in this trap forever.

School boards were caught on April 4. They used to produce quarterly and annual audited reports to Education. Now, suddenly, the minister has the boards in a stranglehold of red tape and requires monthly statements. Boards have to hire new employees to untangle themselves from this red-ink snare.

Lacombe county recently sent a letter to the government, crying out to be released from red tape. Road project approvals for simple routine maintenance take months and months to get approved.

A business in my riding of Lacombe-Ponoka had to request help regarding costly delays to a major project due to waterway assessments becoming entangled in more red-tape delays.

Meanwhile guide outfitters tell me that they are subject to three different interpretations for permits to ship trophy hunters' trophies for tourist expeditions.

We should save government and business time and money by reducing the amount of red tape that is hurting Alberta's businesses and families. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business recently gave Alberta a D on our red-tape report card. Unacceptable. This government could help Albertans by reducing the amount of red tape. Instead, they are intent on making everything worse, strangling the advantages that make us the greatest place in the world to live, work, and raise a family to the point of extinction.

Thank you.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: First of all, Mr. Speaker, our thoughts and prayers go out to the families affected by forest fires across the province.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, at the Ritchie Brothers auction last week a record was set for energy companies selling off their machinery. Almost 60 per cent of all purchases went outside of Alberta. It's just the latest sign that things aren't working in Alberta like they should and like they did. Getting Alberta working again requires a plan to attract investment and create jobs. Instead, the Premier has talked Alberta down, brought in a carbon tax, and raised taxes on just about everything else for all Albertans. When can Albertans expect a real job-creation plan instead of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you know, our government is very concerned about job loss, and we're very concerned about doing whatever we can to stimulate the economy in this province during this very, very difficult economic shock. That's why our budget invests in infrastructure, something that very clearly will create and preserve jobs and something which is in direct opposition to what the folks over there would do. That's why our government invested in a 1 per cent small-business tax cut in order to support small business and innovators. That's why our government has put forward significant amounts of financing authority for innovators and new and emerging businesses in order to give them the support they need, both . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP are moving ahead with a budget that takes money away from Albertans at a time when they just can't afford it.

In Calgary Enmax is renewing a grant program to social agencies to help at-risk families cover their utility bills as a result of this government. Distress Centre Calgary has had demand increase 59 per cent in 2015 over the previous year. This carbon tax will only make things much worse, making utilities and everything else more expensive. How will taxing families and taxing charities make things any better for Alberta's most vulnerable citizens?

Ms Notley: Well, actually, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to Alberta's most vulnerable citizens and most vulnerable groups, the rebate that is planned through our carbon levy program within the climate leadership plan will result in more money being in the pockets of low-income Albertans because they actually use less greenhouse gas emissions than wealthy ones. In fact, it will support those very families that the member opposite claims to be so concerned about.

Mr. Jean: The family rebate, Mr. Speaker, is far less than the family will be taxed. The Premier knows that, and she should be honest with Albertans.

The fact is that the NDP did not do their homework on this carbon tax. Charities that help Albertans recover from addiction or other family tragedies spend a lot of their resources on shelter, on gas, on heating. Those undergoing rehabilitation need a warm bed, but this carbon tax would mean less resources to spend on those things at a time when charities need them the most. How can the Premier stand behind this tax, a tax that makes life much more difficult for all Alberta charities and Alberta's most vulnerable?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. The minister of environment just finished three hours of estimates. It would have been very helpful if the members opposite might have actually asked her questions about the climate leadership plan, at which point they might have received some facts in response, which might have ensured that the questions asked were not so hyperbolic and so engaged in fearmongering and so unaware of what our program actually is going to achieve.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker. We will support Albertans, we will support charities, we will invest in energy efficiency, we will diversify the economy, and we will do that by acknowledging the need to act on climate change.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the NDP is punishing charities and Alberta's most vulnerable.

Fentanyl Use

Mr. Jean: Fentanyl abuse touches every type of family and impacts communities in every corner of our great province. The deadly drug wraps individuals up in addiction, tearing apart families, ruining careers, and almost 500 times since 2012 has resulted in overdoses and deaths of Albertans. This morning I met with staff at the Boyle Street community centre and Streetworks to discuss ways to combat the fentanyl crisis and to learn more about their efforts to improve safety. Will the Premier now declare, today, a public health emergency to better equip the government and social agencies across this province . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we do believe that the members opposite are sincere in their desire to help with the challenge of opiate addiction and the fentanyl crisis, but I believe that they could contribute more if they did a bit more research. The fact of the matter is that the powers to declare a provincial emergency in B.C. are different and used for different things than they would be under our legislation here in Alberta. In B.C. they need it in order to co-ordinate communication between a number of different regional health authorities, which isn't a problem here. Well, you know what it does here? It gives the medical health officer the power to quarantine people, seize private property, enter into private homes, and conscript Albertans. That's not what we need . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: News flash, Mr. Speaker: legislation is controlled by this NDP government, and they can change it.

In March of this year Health Canada changed the status of naloxone to a nonprescription drug to save more lives. Social agencies that distribute the drug would benefit greatly from removal of the requirement for a prescription on this drug. Yesterday the Premier said that her government is working with the federal government to ensure naloxone doesn't require prescriptions, but the ball is in her court. She has control. Will the Premier today set a firm timeline of when naloxone will be available without a prescription, which will save many Alberta lives?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I thank the member opposite for his concern around this issue. We are working diligently to get this matter in front of cabinet so that we can move on our piece of this issue along with the federal government to make sure that naloxone is more available. In the meantime we have distributed more than 9,000 naloxone kits throughout 600 locations in the province. We've expanded access to dependency treatment and detox. We take this issue very seriously. The fact of the matter is that we've actually acted on almost every item in their plan except the ones that don't make sense.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the cabinet is here today. The Premier can make that decision today. We need it today.

Two-thirds of fentanyl overdoses in Calgary occur in suburban communities, meaning that this is not a problem that only affects vulnerable people in the inner city. Fentanyl is sold as OxyContin, heroin, Xanax, and is a lace in cocaine and is getting into the hands of many who don't simply fit the typical profile of an addict. It's affecting all Albertans. When two grains of sand worth of fentanyl is lethal, we must educate on how deadly this drug is. We need more than stories or news or bus buys. How will the Premier improve her government's awareness campaign and save the lives of Albertans?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, just recently our government approved a further expenditure for public education on the dangers of fentanyl because we know that that's an important part of any kind of public education plan. In addition, we've increased funding to ALERT. We have also increased, as I said, treatment. We've increased access to naloxone. We've increased distribution centres around the province. And we will continue to do this work. We're all very concerned about this issue, and our government is taking action.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Wildfire Management

Mr. Jean: In Fort McMurray neighbours, friends, and oil sands workers have either had to leave their homes or watch as fires burn very closely to them on the border of our city. Albertans are worried that the NDP doesn't know what a serious threat these wildfires are. We are down from 22 tankers in 2014 to only 16 today. Cutting back contracts from 123 days to 93 days is scaring bidders and Albertans away and could shrink our tanker fleet even further. It means that all of these contracts will expire by early August with less resources. How can the Premier possibly defend these types of decisions, putting our communities in Alberta at risk?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have to defend those types of decisions because we didn't make those types of decisions. The member opposite once again has his facts wrong. We have the resources that we need. They are in place in Fort McMurray. I get briefed at least twice a day. We are very concerned about this issue, and every single resource that is needed to fight that fire will be dedicated, no holds barred.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, they cut the budget for fighting forest fires. They did it. Nobody else did it. They need to take responsibility.

This is serious. It's only May, and we can't just hope for wet weather to come around and to help. We need to get these decisions right. In February a tender was issued for a water-skimming air tanker group. On April 29 this government cancelled the tender. All water-skimming aircraft currently contracted are from Abbotsford, B.C., based Conair. Can the Premier please explain right now to Albertans why this contract was scrapped and why we are settling for slower, short-range, smaller, and less capacity water tanker aircraft?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the member opposite a number of different times, the overall number of resources that will be dedicated to fighting fires is exactly the same as they were before, and in fact they could go up if the need goes up. The fact of the matter is that this is about budgeting, how we profile the budget. But we've made it very clear and all the contractors know full well that when we need them, they need to be there. They are there. They are being hired. Every resource that is required is being dedicated to this fire, and the members opposite should stop the fearmongering.

Mr. Jean: This is not fearmongering, Mr. Speaker. You can't cut $400 million from wildfire management and say that you're serious about fighting these fires. As a Member of Parliament I saw the Slave Lake fire and the result of it first-hand on the ground. Today Fort McMurray has seen these same types of fires on our borders. We have fewer tankers today than two years ago. Bids for new water-skimming air tankers are being scrapped by this government. It's clear that this government has made many mistakes, some even regarding fighting fires and leading up to this wildfire season. Will the Premier today reverse these terrible decisions so we can make sure that our communities and Albertans are safe?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, I will simply say that the member opposite is wrong in almost everything in that previous question. We did not cut $400 million from the firefighting budget. I urge them to learn how to read a budget because, really, it would be very helpful. We have the same number of tankers, and we have access to the same number of tankers and all the same amount of equipment that we had before, and we will use that and more, if necessary, because we are concerned about getting the job done in Fort McMurray. We are not interested in engaging in political grandstanding and fearmongering.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Budget 2016

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2016 continues to be a disappointment. This NDP government has a track record of ignoring Albertans while pretending they listen. Ipsos-Reid, who does listen and reports on Albertans' opinions, this morning released a poll severely critical of this government. When asked if the NDP is presenting the best plan for long-term prosperity, 67 per cent of Albertans disagreed and 42 per cent strongly disagreed. To the Premier: in the face of this overwhelming rejection will you now admit that you have never listened to Albertans in the first place?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are listening to Albertans, and we know that this economy is what they are most concerned about. What we are doing will diversify the economy. It'll invest in the economy when private investment is pulled back. We will build this economy and protect the services that this opposition would cut and this one would cut more.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the segue. Ipsos-Reid this morning also reported that the majority of Albertans do not believe that the NDP plan will diversify the economy. Given that the majority of Albertans do not believe your plan will diversify the economy and you now know they have no faith in the budget you put forward, will you now go back to the drawing board and create a plan that actually works for Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what Albertans will start to receive soon is the Alberta child benefit. That will lift children out of poverty. They believe in doing the best for our province and the children that are in poverty. We are diversifying the economy. There will be investments across the economy. That is what Albertans believe. They also believe in infrastructure development, which this government will be doing.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, what Albertans will start to receive soon is a carbon tax bill.

Before this NDP government there was hope, and now there is none. The Ipsos-Reid poll also indicates that 65 per cent of Albertans say that the NDP economic plan will cripple future generations with debt. NDP policies have already hurt the present, so it's time to protect the future. To the Premier: for the sake of our children and grandchildren and knowing that Albertans are not only not with you but want something different, will you please listen now and restore the hope that your policies have destroyed up to this point?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, there's a growing consensus that the best way to deal with climate change is to put a price on carbon. People that the Leader of the Opposition knows well – Brian Pallister, Patrick Brown, Christy Clark, Preston Manning, and even Brad Wall – say that the carbon price is worth considering. That's what we're going to do. People believe that it's the best way to fight climate change. We're doing that, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Employment Insurance Program Changes

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am deeply concerned about people in my constituency who have lost their jobs because of the drop in the price of oil and are still in need of an income to care for their families. The federal government's changes earlier this year to employment insurance were definitely welcome, but they didn't go far enough for my constituents, and they still do not include the Edmonton region. I'd like to ask the Minister of Labour what she and our government are doing to convince the federal government that it needs to do the right thing and include the Edmonton area in these EI changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, we were pleased that Ottawa listened to our call to make changes to the employment insurance program. However, we were very disappointed that the Edmonton region was not included. So as well as speaking out publicly about that, I have written to the minister of employment, workforce, and labour, and in that letter I asked her to revisit the government's decision. I know that our Premier also made the case very strongly when she met with the federal cabinet last week. This is a very important issue to us because it affects families who are facing real hardship through no fault of their own.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many residents of the Edmonton region are feeling real hardship and given that they have paid into EI and should be able to get benefits when they need them and just want a hand up, again to the same minister: are there any signs that the federal government may change its policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I made the case to the minister of employment, workforce, and labour that changes should come immediately, I also asked her to make sure that any changes associated with unemployment statistics be made in real time. Last week the federal minister indicated to media that Edmonton is one of several regions that could see changes depending on changes in workforce reports, labour force reports. While I would like to see the changes made right away, I see this as encouraging news for Edmonton families.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the most up-to-date data can help businesses and other agencies in my constituency plan ahead, I would like to then ask the minister: when will the next labour force report be released?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The next labour market report will be released this Friday, and we will be looking for any changes in numbers that would make the case that the Edmonton region should be included and that workers who have been laid off during this downturn should be included in the enhanced employment insurance changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy and Education Costs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards have begun estimating how much the punishing carbon tax will cost them. CBE estimates $1 million; Calgary Catholic, $350,000; Edmonton public, $1.8 million; Black Gold, $131,000. These school boards alone are facing millions in extra costs, and they don't know who's going to pay. To the minister: when you thought about who would pick up the carbon tax tab, did you envision punishing parents with extra fees, leaving students with fewer teachers and aides, or downloading the cost onto taxpayers by reversing your stance on exempting school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thanks, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. In fact, when we looked at the climate leadership plan, the very first place we looked was with our children to make sure that they see the vision, the education for us to move forward on a coherent plan for the future. The children are watching us now, and we want to make sure that they know that we are doing something about the carbon future and reducing our pollution.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister's budget doesn't account for the carbon tax, school boards, which have only so many options to deal with such a huge drain on their limited resources, face a big problem. Given that the full cost of the carbon tax on individual school boards will become evident when they submit their budgets in June, does the minister plan to help school boards with borrowed taxpayer money or supplementary supply funds, or will he simply leave school boards and parents on the hook for his government's bad planning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, as we discussed in budget estimates this morning, this province will be making a substantial number of investments in energy efficiency, and that will come about as a result of our co-operative consultation with schools, municipalities, with indigenous communities, with hospitals, the postsecondary sector, and the charitable sector. We are finally undertaking an energy efficiency strategy in this province as a result of the carbon levy, something that the other two parties reject.

2:10

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I heard a single idea about how schools with be helped.

Given that this carbon tax is a tax on everything and everyone and given that it will go far beyond transportation costs and will also affect power bills and heating costs for school boards like the CBE, which is now trying to figure out whether to increase fees, cut services, or face millions in budget deficits, has the minister done any studies or consultations that could let school boards, taxpayers, parents, and kids know how much this worrisome carbon tax will cost in dollars, in quality of education, and in reduced extra-curricular activities?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, in addition to energy efficiency investments, in the budget estimates, which the hon. member will know because he has reviewed them, I'm sure, in great detail, there will be $2.2 billion in new green infrastructure investments so that we can ensure that we are making our economy carbon resilient, including schools. We will undertake a detailed consultation with many different sectors over the next few months as we design our efficiency and other infrastructure investment programs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Alberta Beef

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week Albertans witnessed a different brand of cattle stampede. Debate surrounded the decision of a major restaurant chain to source its beef from a Kansas supplier rather than its current Alberta supplier. Clearly, businesses are free to procure from any source that reflects their marketing strategy, but Alberta beef producers were dismayed by the silence from the agriculture minister during the debate. To the minister: what measures are you taking to demonstrate your confidence in the humane rearing, safety, and wholesomeness of Alberta beef?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Nobody produces better beef in this world than Alberta producers. We know, everyone in this House knows, and Albertans know. I think eventually Earls will know as well that the best beef they can find is going to be in Alberta. Going forward, we are going to be able to work with producers, ranchers, and everyone else to find those little niche markets that are out there that we can take advantage of, that producers can take advantage of to grow their industry across the province, across the nation, and across the world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I have to describe that as rare support where it should be well done.

He wants to consign Alberta producers to niche markets, yet Alberta beef is one of our proudest items for export. Having any question on our beef market could jeopardize our share of the world trade. What is the minister doing to combat the unfounded concerns and misconceptions about the wholesomeness and safety of beef products? Why are you not effectively combatting them, and what are you doing to ensure that our foreign beef customers are getting factual, science-based information to substantiate the quality of Alberta beef?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Quite frankly, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and myself are championing Alberta beef; we have and will continue to. Recently I was in Asia, where I was promoting Alberta beef to not just a number of different food chains but looking at opportunities to increase the amount of beef we export to Asia. There is significant room to increase our capacity, and we are using our international offices to ensure that they get the message that Alberta beef is not just the safest and the highest quality but that it's also the best-tasting beef in the world.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the verisimilitude of both of these ministers is staggering.

The entire Earls decision hinged on a certification program that calls for practices that are already widely followed by Alberta beef producers. Given that consumer demand for verification of production practices is likely to continue to increase, what action is the minister of agriculture taking, working with Alberta producers, to establish a made-in-Canada certification program to address consumer concerns and reinforce confidence in Alberta beef?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We help fund the Canadian Roundtable for Sustainable Beef, an ongoing project that all of us should be proud of; we have called for a swift certification process for beef so that those consumers choosing our beef know that in Alberta they've got the best product possible. I think that Canadians right across, from coast to coast to coast, know that Alberta products are the best and will continue to be so while maintaining our certification around the globe, which is bigger.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Carbon Levy and Seniors

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most seniors live on fixed incomes. They budget carefully to make sure that their limited savings and pensions can cover the cost of food, basic living, and transportation. Seniors will be one of the hardest hit demographics when the NDP's massive carbon tax raises the price of everything. The government's cost estimates don't take into account or blatantly ignore that food will cost more and power bills will go up. Seniors are worried about these extra costs. Will the Minister of Finance come clean with seniors about how much this carbon tax will cost them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. You know, we have had information available on carbon pricing. The Minister of Energy and the minister of environment have both had serious discussions with people all across the province about how much it will cost. We know that 60 per cent of Albertans will be rebated. Seniors will be amongst those that receive the full rebate for the carbon pricing.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the maximum rebate on the carbon tax isn't even enough to cover the government's own lowball estimate of what the carbon tax will cost and given the fact that increased costs won't be offset by an increase to the federal pensions or to the Alberta seniors' benefit, how does this government expect low-income and fixed-income seniors to afford to maintain their quality of life while paying for this punishing carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Thank you for the question. Of course, the direct cost for the average family, including heating, gasoline, will be $340 in 2017 and $500 in 2018. That's for a family of four. Certainly, the rebates will be given for folks who are earning less than $106,000 per year as a net family income. The fact of the matter is that low-income seniors will receive the same rebate, based on average use, as anyone else regardless of where they live. Many low-income seniors will in fact come out ahead as a result of this. In addition to that, they will be able to avail themselves . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government seems to think a lot of their rebate program even though they'll be taking more money out of seniors' pockets than they will get back and given that these inadequate rebates will only be paid out once, twice, or four times per year depending on income levels, how does the minister expect our fixed- and low-income seniors to wait months for this government to return their own money, which they would otherwise have had to pay for their prescriptions, food, and rent?

Ms Phillips: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition is wrong in almost everything they say. First of all, the first cheques will appear in January, even before folks start to pay the carbon levy, because we wanted to make sure that no one would be unduly affected by this. In addition, two-thirds of Albertans will receive that rebate, and that is based on average use. Many, many seniors are far below the average, so they will end up with a little extra money in their pockets. At the end of the day, we are very confident that these efficiency programs . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I'll just begin by saying that the Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert looks very good in a Brooks Bandits jersey today.

Emergency Management Funding

Mr. Fildebrandt: Every year in Alberta somewhere there is a natural disaster, whether it is wildfires, tornadoes, flood, hail, or drought, but rather than budget and plan for this, the government always seems to need to come back for an emergency spending bill every single year. The wildfire budget is $200 million lower this year than the average actually spent over the last decade and $100 million lower than the lowest of those years. Why is the minister not budgeting for spending that we know will take place?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member might recall that last year the budget came out – we had a late budget because of the election – on October 27. You might notice it in there. You know, it's something they haven't caught yet, but they haven't perhaps read the estimates. It took me a couple of minutes to understand it as well. That $200 million that was allocated for emergency funding in the budget last year was because of a late budget. This year is a normal cycle. Much like all the other provinces, like Alberta has done for 10 years, the emergency funding will be there to fight the fires, to fight drought when we need it.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's very clear that the minister still doesn't understand it, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the province always ends up spending hundreds of millions of dollars a year on emergencies without actually budgeting for them, it's an old trick to be able to blame the deficit on disasters at year-end even though we know that the money will be spent. This is not optional or discretionary spending, so we may as well just budget for it. The annual ritual of supplementary supply for emergency spending is like asking for a payday loan to cover off your overdraft. If the government is so confident that they have budgeted responsibly for disasters, will they commit to not bringing forward a supplementary supply bill later this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of utmost importance, obviously, is to keep Albertans and their communities safe. We're committed to doing that. Emergency funding will be there when and if we need it. Funding like this has been done in Alberta for the past 10 years. It's done in most provinces this way. It's proven effective, and we'll continue to do so, making sure that the number one priority is protecting Albertans when and if they need it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The minister thanks me for the question; I would like to thank him for an answer.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Flat Top Complex response to the Slave Lake fire was estimated to cost about $500 million and that when the former government accepted the recommendations but only allocated $18 million, the now Premier said in the Edmonton Sun on September 26, 2013, "That's not accepting the recommendations, that's paying lip service," will the Premier now admit that she, too, is paying lip service to the Flat Top Complex and the rest of the disaster response budget by hiding the true cost and not properly budgeting for anticipated disasters?

The Speaker: The minister of forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The Flat Top Complex recommendations were made from the Slave Lake fires. Since then there have been 250 more firefighters hired every year from that, so in those short few years we're up to over 700 firefighters. Those men and women: their boots are laced; they're ready to fight. We also will have 80 more trained by Sunday. We're going to have 22 air tankers. We have 88 helicopters and 126 lookouts operational. We also have 88 pieces of heavy equipment. To think otherwise, I think, is irresponsible. Our firefighters are out there. Our resources in humans and equipment are there, ready to fight.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Indigenous Relations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 18, 2015, I asked the Premier about her government's professed commitment to implementing the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and the recommendations of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission report. Both of these initiatives by their very nature involve co-ordination of many provincial ministries. The Premier agreed that this poses serious challenges, but way back then she assured this House that her government would move forward on both of these in the next few months. To the Premier: now that it's been almost a year, can you please tell us what the strategy is exactly for implementing both of these pivotal sets of recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of indigenous affairs.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. We are very proud of the fact that we started this government by saying that we were going to define a new relationship with the indigenous people in this province, and indeed we have. I have lots of important things to report. We adopted the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, and we asked all of the treaty organizations, all of the Métis organizations, and the Women's Institutes to contribute to a discussion, first by starting with an internal review and then by bringing all that together. That has arrived, and we have put that into a full package, which is now distributed back.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the Premier directed her ministers to start co-ordinating a crossministerial plan to implement UNDRIP and that in a letter she told her ministers to have the results of this comprehensive strategy ready for implementation by February 1 and given that we've all seen that so far it's been photo ops and agreements for future agreements and given that in the past few months you've changed the timeline eight times regarding balancing the budget, to the Premier: you're not going to do the same thing with UNDRIP and TRC, are you? In other words, what's your government's newest timeline for implementing these crucial recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I love the question because it betrays the fact that they clearly don't understand the process of consultation with indigenous communities. The very point of having a consultation with indigenous communities is to sit down at the table with them and talk to them until they themselves have decided that they have been consulted with. The opposition, when they were in the government, continually found themselves in the place of making a decision ahead of time, shipping it out to the community, and saying: this is what you're doing. We're not doing that because we truly want to consult.

Mr. Rodney: On this very day check out Ipsos-Reid. The majority of Albertans definitely disagree with you, sir.

Given that the critical aspect of any government's plan for addressing recommendations of historic documents like UNDRIP and the TRC report involves setting benchmarks and given that if there's going to be any real action or accountability, this government has to provide mechanisms for monitoring progress on each goal, to the minister: what specific timelines and performance measures are available that will allow Albertans to hold this government accountable for its promises to its indigenous peoples?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question. I'd like to point out the fact that we are working with the indigenous community, and our promises to the indigenous community are to consult with the indigenous community, and we are indeed doing so. I am very proud of the fact that the Minister of Education and I signed the Kitaskinaw agreement earlier this year. I'm very proud of the fact that we have involved every indigenous community in the UNDRIP program. I'm very proud of the fact that we have a consultation agreement with the settlement Métis, which that government never did. I'm also proud of the fact that we have consultation agreements going on with the nonsettlement Métis. We have a number of...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In an open letter to the cabinet on July 7, 2015, the Premier asked ministers to conduct a review, including budget implications, of the government's policies, programs, and legislation that may require changes based on the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. So for a second time you can explain to the opposition: what is the status of this work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the very timely question. I'm very proud of the fact that we've been in the consultation process with the indigenous community, and one of the things that we have done in this consultation process is that we have ensured that not only the outcomes of the consultation process but the process itself are actually consultation. Sometimes it is hard for people to understand that actually sitting down with the community and asking them the question "How do you want to go about the consultation process?" needs to be done before you actually engage in the consultation process. Understanding that kind of process is our forte.

The Speaker: Thank you again, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. I am glad to hear that the internal review is complete.

Again to the same minister: given that respect and consultation with indigenous peoples on decisions that impact them are key parts of renewing relationships, how are you engaging indigenous peoples on the implementation of the UN declaration?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are very happy to be able to say that over the last year we've engaged in a number of activities with the indigenous community, including, of course, my participation with the Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women conference in Manitoba, where Alberta has taken the lead in the socioeconomic forum to work with the community to actually change circumstances for the women in the community. We're also proud of the fact that we've signed the Kitaskinaw agreement with the tribal councils, and we also have completed the Métis settlement consultation agreement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to hear that the government intends to engage fully with the indigenous leaders, and welcome to the leaders that are here already.

To the same minister. It has almost been a year since the government committed to the implementation of the UN declaration. Is there anything concrete you can share with us to demonstrate progress in this commitment?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I am very happy to stand today to talk about the fact that we have recently signed the protocol agreement for the Treaty 8 indigenous communities, which constitute 24 of the 48 indigenous communities in the province, because in that protocol we have set up a series of tables so that the members of the community can meet with all of the ministers that you see here.

They will be sitting at the table, meeting face to face with chiefs, again something that never happened with the previous government. [interjections]

The Speaker: It seems, hon. members, that spring has sprung.
The hon. Member for Highwood.

Clinical Information Systems

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's change gears here a little bit. Alberta's clinical information system is badly in need of updating. The current system is over 30 years old and lacks the ability to share information across various platforms. Patients are often left having to explain their health stories to different professionals over and over again. This can lead to mistakes and needless duplication. Wildrose has called for upgrades to the clinical information system for years. You know what? It's refreshing to hear that I think this government is finally taking our advice and bringing our health care system into the 21st century. Will the minister confirm that this upgrade is in fact taking place, and if so, when?

2:30

Ms Payne: Thank you to the member for the question. We haven't yet had a chance to talk about our Health estimates, so I guess we'll talk a little bit more about that there. We are indeed committing funding in Budget 2016 for the implementation and upgrade of the CIS. Actually, it's an ongoing process, and the work is beginning immediately.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, thank you. Given that this particular upgrade has been long promised by successive governments but has always been scrapped, the government can forgive Albertans if they're not willing to take their word at this time.

Was an RFP issued and/or awarded for this project? If so, when? When can we expect the initial introduction of the system?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As I noted, the upgrades for CIS are included in Budget 2016. As soon as we get that budget through the House, we can begin spending that money.

I would also like to note that, unlike previous governments, we make a decision, and we commit to it. We put the money in, and we move forward.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there's no denying that our health care system is in dire need of an upgrade, at a price tag of $400 million you owe it to Albertans to ensure that this upgrade is done right. Will the minister confirm that a detailed cost-benefit analysis was completed and a market assessment was undertaken, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. A detailed market analysis, the tender process as well as a number of cost-containing measures are all part of the bid process that we will be undertaking as part of this implementation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Carbon Levy

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary school board is deeply concerned about the effects the NDP's carbon tax is going to have on them and the families they serve. The cost of operating schools is going up. It's going way up, and they're worried that they're going to bear the brunt of the increase and that this supposedly revenue-neutral tax is being passed down to families. To the Minister of Education. These folks are worried. Are you willing to sit down with them and have a conversation about how to get through this?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks very much for the question. Certainly, it's very important that we work together with all of our school boards to ensure that the impacts of our climate leadership plan are dealt with in a reasonable and equitable sort of manner. We know as well, of course, as I mentioned before, that it's very important for us to use this as a teaching moment. We know that parents and teachers and school boards want to work through this in a mechanism by which we can increase energy efficiency and, of course, to teach kids about that responsibility.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that nonprofits like the YWCA, with whom I also spoke, are facing astronomical new bills for heating and running their facilities – they've got 19 of them in Calgary – to the Minister of Finance: are you willing to sit down with them and try to figure out a solution to their pain?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, the climate leadership plan that we have put forward is far-reaching. It will improve Alberta. It'll give us social licence. We want all of those charities, nonprofits, and organizations such as schools to know that their new energy-efficiency program will have $645 million in it and that they can access that as long as we reduce the use of carbon going forward.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, these folks have to pay their bills now. They need answers now. You're talking about things that are happening in the future. To the minister of environment: are you willing to sit down with these stakeholders and help them through their pain?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks and climate change.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My office has been in communication with charity organizations about the climate leadership plan. As we design our energy-efficiency programming, there will be a number of targeted stakeholder engagements, in particular with school boards, not-for-profits, housing authorities, and municipalities, to ensure that we are directing those energy efficiency efforts in the right place. There will be a number, hundreds of millions, in fact, of investments in energy efficiency. As we invest in efficiency, we bring down our emissions and, therefore, our costs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Seniors' Lodges

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. More than 9,000 Albertans are living in seniors' lodges. Although these lodges provide needed services to low- and moderate-income seniors, the state of some of these lodges is not the best, so despite the hard work of the dedicated staff that work there, seniors are not always living in the best conditions. Many of the lodges are old, the rooms are small, and many seniors, including those with mobility challenges, are sometimes forced to shower or bathe in communal washrooms. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what strategies are in place to improve the conditions in seniors' lodges?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We know that seniors' lodges are the cornerstones of many of Alberta's rural communities. Ensuring that these lodges are not only preserved but also improved means Alberta seniors can stay in home communities near their loved ones. I'm pleased to say that this government is investing more than $196 million in seniors' housing through Budget 2016. The lodges will be built to upgrade them to modern standards that include larger rooms, full in-suite washrooms, and modern fire suppression and safety systems. This funding is in addition to the nearly $400 million already committed to 38 lodge projects throughout Alberta.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I am pleased to hear about the seniors' lodge upgrades and renewal, can the minister explain why the majority of Alberta's lodge projects are in rural communities given that urban centres have larger populations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Approximately 70 per cent of the lodge units are in smaller centres – that is correct – not in the larger centres. Rural lodges are vital to small communities. They provide homes to older residents who want to stay in their towns and villages where they live and are close to their loved ones and their community. By investing in rural lodges, we are giving seniors the chance to age in the community, in their home communities, where they're supported by friends and family. There are seniors' lodges in 115 communities across Alberta, and that includes some of the bigger centres also: Edmonton, Red Deer, Lloydminster, and Calgary.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister as well. Given that many of these lodges are more than 40 years old and given that this can put elderly residents, especially those with mobility issues, at risk, what is the ministry doing to reduce this risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the member points out, many of the lodges were built long before 1990, when the sprinklers became mandatory under the Alberta building codes. We've allocated $60 million through Budget 2016 to complete the fire and safety system upgrades in 6,600 seniors' lodges and continuing care units across Alberta. We plan to invest $30 million this year, which will accelerate the timelines, and we are making good progress. I am confident that we will reach our goal of making more than 100 facilities safer for our seniors by 2018.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Springbank Reservoir Flood Mitigation Project

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of Springbank are worried about the government's plans to go full steam ahead with flood mitigation plans that would have disastrous effects on their community. By diverting the Elbow River to the reservoir at Springbank, the government would flood an area where people live, work, and have a history. There's no question that flood mitigation is of utmost importance, but can the environment minister please explain her plan for consulting affected landowners and ensuring that she's not protecting some Albertans at the expense of others?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to tell the hon. member and the House that there has been extensive consultation. Thirty or more meetings have been held, going back to 2014. They are ongoing. A number of stakeholder meetings are planned going forward. We've consulted, and the previous government, when it made plans, also did some consultation. I'll give them credit for that. To claim that there's been a lack of consultation just flies in the face of the facts.

Mrs. Aheer: I think the people of Springbank would disagree with you.

Given that the government seems to have retained the same company to do the environmental impact assessment and the design and engineering of the project and assuming that this company will have a strong incentive to return favourable impact assessment because otherwise they'll miss out on millions of dollars for this engineering and design, how can the residents of Springbank trust that this government will manage that apparent conflict of interest and consult with them in good faith?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is just casting aspersions not only on the good name and reputation of the firm that's been engaged but on the entire process. There is extensive consultation. Of course, we're hiring a company and we're going to pay them for doing the work, but they're going to provide us with the accurate and up-to-date information that is needed in order to ensure that this project is environmentally sound as well as protecting – and the member should remember this – hundreds of thousands of people downstream, including in the city of Calgary. Those people need protection, and the hon. member is forgetting that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, everyone needs protection. Let's be clear about that.

Given that some of my constituents have lived on the land of Springbank for generations and given that the ranch and farm there is part of Alberta's natural heritage and would be washed away if or when a flood event happened and the Springbank plans go through, what does the environment minister have to say to the families in my riding who will lose their homes as a result of her government's plan?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member and her constituents that we are negotiating on a very fair basis, and we'll continue to do that with all of the landowners to acquire the land for this project, which is needed in order to protect hundreds of thousands of Calgarians and other Albertans downstream of the Elbow River. If the hon. member would like to see a repetition of the flood that took place in Calgary a few years ago, she should just stand up and say so.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Bill 12

Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave today to introduce a bill, being the Aboriginal Consultation Levy Repeal Act.

Developed and passed by the previous government, Bill 22 intended to establish a levy on industry as a way to increase funding available to First Nations and potentially other indigenous communities to engage in consultation activities. Many First Nations felt they were not adequately consulted on the development or passing of the bill and were vocal in the opposition toward it. One of our government's platform commitments, the repeal of Bill 22 is an important step in renewing the consultation process to make sure it responds to the evolving needs of First Nations, industry, and other stakeholders.

As you know, our government committed to a renewed partnership with indigenous people, and we intend to follow through on that commitment. We have heard loud and clear from First Nations that the current consultation policy does not meet the needs of their communities or respect First Nations constitutionally protected treaty rights, which is why my ministry is reaching out to First Nations in conducting a comprehensive review with the aim of reviewing Alberta's consultation policy.

Budget 2016 includes $750,000 to engage meaningfully with First Nations and Métis to enhance the consultation process. Part of that funding will support the renewal of the First Nations consultation policy. We look forward to working together with indigenous peoples and industry. We will help to shape the future direction of consultation in this province.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it appears that the daily Routine is now concluded. A legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates for Education in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 2:45 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 4, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Please bow your heads.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. As we sit in this Chamber today, we know that our fellow Albertans from Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo are victims of one of the most devastating natural disasters in our history. We know that their lives will remain ever changed as a result of this disaster. Two of our own fellow members are victims of this event, one of whom has lost his home and a lifetime of memories with it. Let each of us demonstrate through our words and actions that compassion is the critical element of leadership. Let us also remind ourselves that this Earth we live upon is more powerful than we are.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three special grade 6 classes from the constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The three classes are from River Valley elementary school in Sundre. That actually is the school that my children attend, both the ones that have graduated and the ones that are still in school, so I'm excited to welcome them to the Assembly today. I would ask that Mr. Walton's, Ms Tarnoczi's, and Ms Cheung's classes all stand in the Assembly. They have a list of a lot of chaperones that are with them today. I know I will not try your patience by trying to name all of them; it is quite a list. Many of them are friends and neighbours. Instead, I will just ask that all of my colleagues give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups today for introductions?

Hearing none, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Learning Centre Literacy Association, who are joining us today in the members' gallery. Jawda Tobak, Pat Sharun, Angeliki Gkournelou, Alyssa McPhail, Denis Lapierre, Sarah Robinson, and Nikolaos Lazos work at the Abbottsfield mall offering free programs for adults in Edmonton who want to improve their reading, writing, math, and computer skills. Together they remind us that in Alberta we want everyone to reach their full potential and have opportunities to give back to their neighbourhoods and hometowns. I'd ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introduction today? The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you an old friend, Dr. Thomas Marois, who is now a senior lecturer in development studies at the University of London. However, his BA and his MA were earned at the University of Alberta, and certainly his undergraduate years were spent hanging around with the minister of environment, drinking beer at the Power Plant. I ask him, my old friend of 20 years, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to seek unanimous consent from the Assembly that following the responses to ministerial statements the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Fort McMurray Wildfire

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, I rise today with a heavy heart to provide this House with an update on the wildfire that has devastated the community of Fort McMurray. To all the residents of Fort McMurray: I want to say clearly that all Albertans are behind you, I believe all Canadians are behind you, and certainly this government is behind you.

As a colleague and fellow Albertan I think I can speak for all of us in this House when I say that our thoughts and hearts are with the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and, of course, the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin. As someone who, unfortunately, knows firsthand how hard and scary it is to leave behind your home and your community, my heart rests so deeply with all of those from Fort McMurray in these early days and will continue to do so in the many days, weeks, months, and years to come.

Please know that we continue to do absolutely everything we can to keep Albertans safe and to stop this fire. I want to thank the incredibly dedicated front-line emergency responders, who are working under tremendously difficult circumstances to ensure everybody's safety and to suppress the fire. I want to thank Albertans for the tremendous outpouring of support, including the continued donations to the Canadian Red Cross, the sharing of firefighting resources from across the province, and our industry partners who are both sharing firefighting resources and also providing places for many of the evacuees to stay.

With that said, I will now provide an update on the current status of the situation in Fort McMurray. Our focus at this time remains centred on ensuring the safety of people, that the residents of Fort McMurray have safely evacuated the area and are able to find secure lodging with friends or family at one of the reception centres or in the home of one of the many individual Albertans who have opened their doors at this time of crisis. Also, we are focused on ensuring the safety of the first responders who have made that choice and commitment to stay there and to deal with the difficulty that they are enduring.

All of the urban Fort McMurray area continues to be under a mandatory evacuation. Upwards of 80,000 people are affected. Reception centres have been set up at Noralta Lodge, Anzac Recreation Centre, Lac La Biche, Fort MacKay, and Northlands recreation centre. As I rise in this House, thousands of evacuees are heading to Edmonton, where we are working with partners to establish reception centres in the city. I implore all Albertans who are displaced by the fire to register with evacuation centres so local authorities can ensure that everyone is accounted for and safe. Evacuees can call 1.888.350.6070 to register.

I am tremendously thankful that there have been no casualties and only a few minor injuries reported so far.

Mr. Speaker, emergencies of this magnitude require co-ordination between many levels of government and community partnerships. The response has been what we expect from Albertans, wholehearted and strong. But we are still in the throes of an intense crisis, and our fire crews are working around the clock to reduce the threat of fire to people, homes, and infrastructure.

The fire conditions today, unfortunately, remain extremely challenging. Our government is working closely with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo to ensure the evacuation of homes and neighbourhoods is orderly and safe. The fire is actively burning in residential areas in Fort McMurray, with significant structural loss. At this time we estimate that around 1,600 homes have been lost. I know that the Leader of the Opposition is one of those affected, and my thoughts are with him and his family, as they are with every person who has been evacuated.

As devastating as this fire has been already, we must prepare ourselves for more bad news in the hours and days ahead. This fire is unrelenting, and firefighters are facing extreme fire conditions and rapidly changing fire behaviour this afternoon. The fire situation remains dynamic and current temperatures and wind present extreme conditions. Since the fire began, every single resource that needed to be at this fire has been there and will continue to be there. With 88 firefighters from regions around the province joining the fight overnight, there are approximately 250 firefighters currently battling this fire. We also have 12 pieces of heavy equipment and 12 helicopters engaging in suppression efforts at the Fort McMurray fire. There are currently two air tanker groups and nine air tankers in the air, although this number changes hourly as our firefighters adjust to conditions. We are currently utilizing as many aircraft as is logistically possible and safe to fight this fire.

Crossgovernment efforts are being closely co-ordinated out of the Alberta Emergency Management Agency Provincial Operations Centre, and ministries are supporting emergency response efforts and addressing the needs of evacuated residents in a number of ways. Alberta Agriculture and Forestry is supporting ongoing fire-suppression efforts. Alberta Environment and Parks is providing support to evacuees that have gone to provincial campgrounds, and they are waiving the fees for them. Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services are providing medical support to evacuees who are presenting to reception centres. All patients at the Northern Lights regional health centre were safely evacuated and are being transferred to appropriate health care facilities. All evacuated acute-care patients and continuing care clients will be flown to health care facilities in the Edmonton zone, where they will receive the care that they need. Alberta Human Services emergency social services are co-ordinating support to respond to the needs of evacuees and are resourcing the staff for reception centres. Alberta Transportation is monitoring road and visibility conditions and supporting traffic management where required.

Mr. Speaker, our government has also called in the support of our federal government through the Department of National Defence, and they stand at the ready to offer any logistical support we need. They have already dispatched helicopters to provide logistical support in the region.

As well, multiple communities across northern and central Alberta are dispatching structural firefighting equipment and assets to the region, including, I'm proud to say, a sprinkler trailer from Slave Lake. Industry partners have offered the use of work camps to house evacuees, and Fort McMurray First Nation, Gregoire First Nation, and Fort McKay First Nation have all opened their doors to evacuees.

I'm also pleased to confirm that our government has already approved emergency funding of $2 million to the Red Cross to provide direct support to the evacuees. It is very important that evacuees sign into a reception centre or call the Red Cross to register. Doing so will greatly assist our ongoing efforts to account for evacuees and help ensure we are able to provide proper supports for evacuees going forward. Albertans want to help; that is our nature. We're encouraging anyone who wants to donate to the evacuation and relief efforts to please contact the Red Cross.

Please know that without doubt this government is fully committed to supporting the people and community of Fort McMurray now and in the months and years to come to respond to this threat today and in the days to come and to assist you to recover once it is safe again to return home.

As someone who has been through this, I want the people of Fort McMurray to know that I will be there with you, Albertans will be there with you, and we will all pull together in this time of need. All Albertans are behind you now when you are displaced from your homes, all Albertans will be there to help you rebuild, and as Albertans we will come together and see your recovery through.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be assured that we are all working together and we will do what it takes today, tomorrow, and in the weeks to come to rebuild and to persevere. That is the Alberta way.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon, all. Today I first want to thank the minister and the Premier for their work to keep all Albertans informed on the terrible fires that have struck Fort McMurray. I want to pass on my thanks from the Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, and the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo for the full co-operation from the government as they continue their work in Fort McMurray to help residents.

Our entire caucus remains dedicated to monitoring the situation and helping in any way that we can. I would like to echo comments made already today to all Albertans. The very best way to offer assistance at this time is through cash donations to the Red Cross. Mr. Speaker, words cannot express our feelings of total devastation. Like all Albertans, we watched horrified as the fires crossed into the city borders yesterday afternoon. This fire has torn up tens of thousands of families from their homes. The weight of the challenges ahead is extraordinary. I ask for all Albertans' thoughts and prayers to be with those whose lives have been forever changed. We ask for all Albertans to pass their thoughts and prayers on for the safety of all responders. We urge anyone still in the city to evacuate but stay safe.

Today's pain is a pain Albertans have too often experienced over the past several years. It was just three years ago when the banks of the rivers in southern Alberta burst, forcing many to evacuate their homes as they saw everything they owned submerge under the angry waters. Like many others in this House, I saw the anxiety, worry, and sadness this put on all those impacted. It's the same challenges we saw after the fires in Slave Lake in 2011.

But during these times of tremendous difficulties we also saw the spark of the character of Alberta. Alberta did not become the great province it is today without facing adversity. Our people are resilient, compassionate, and caring. Albertans have already shown this character in spades. Energy companies have opened their camps.

Homes from Lac La Biche to Bonnyville to here in Edmonton are already opening their doors. The people of Fort McMurray are a strong people. We know Albertans will band together. We know we will rebuild. It is that spirit that made our province the best place in the world.

As cowgirl poet Doris Daley once put it: “We knew drought and [we knew] fire and heartache, we knew fat and we knew bone. But we were silver lining people and we never rode alone.”

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow a representative of the third party as well as the two independent members to respond to the ministerial statement.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The member for the third party, Calgary-Hays.

1:50

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour on behalf of our Progressive Conservative caucus to reply to the minister's address. Interestingly and perhaps fittingly, today is International Firefighters' Day. It is times like this that even in this competitive place we must put our differences aside and work together to make sure that government is doing all it can to help the victims of the fire.

The town of Slave Lake has literally risen from the ashes of a huge fire in 2011, the source of our Municipal Affairs minister. Municipalities across Alberta are largely but not completely recovered from the massive flooding in 2013. What is common through all of this, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta can-do spirit of getting things done, working together, and helping one another in a time of great need.

In the last 24 hours we've heard devastating stories of the destruction caused by this fire. Thousands of people are affected by this disaster, including some hon. members of this Assembly who are personally impacted. On behalf of our caucus, our thoughts, prayers, and best wishes are with those members.

The brave residents of Fort McMurray, who on a moment's notice had to flee their homes, now have time to count not only their losses but the blessings of having no deaths reported so far from this tragic event. First responders are working around the clock to keep people safe from danger. Firefighters and rescue workers have left their own cities and communities, in many cases, to come and help the citizens of Fort McMurray and area. Albertans across the province right now are opening their homes and businesses to help evacuees. Residents have provided jerry cans of gasoline to help people stranded. Others are delivering water and food for people and for their pets. There are offers to keep livestock safe and to transport them to where they can be cared for until their farm and ranch homes are back online. In the days and weeks ahead there may be more challenges, but there will no doubt be more stories like these, highlighting the caring and generous nature of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we must also care for the unseen damage done. Some victims of the fire will bear invisible scars in the form of PTSD or mental stress. We must provide help for those losses as well.

Our thoughts and prayers are with everyone affected by the fires. We are deeply concerned with the well-being of those displaced from their homes, and we are proud and supportive of the great work done by everyone helping right now.

Mr. Speaker, several members of our caucus team have experience with previous Alberta major events, and we offer that experience should the government require it. Today all of us in this Legislature are on one team. Our PC caucus wishes the government only good results in caring for the people of Fort McMurray and surrounding area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, on behalf of the Liberal caucus I want to thank the Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs for their words and their commitment to this great tragedy. Today all Albertans, all Canadians stand together with the people of Fort McMurray, including the many brave emergency workers who continue to labour on. The events unfolding in Fort McMurray are a profound tragedy, and it would seem that the only ray of sunshine through the smoke is that through these extraordinary efforts of the emergency management teams and EMS workers and the people of Fort McMurray, no one to date has had any fatalities.

My thoughts and prayers go out to all those who've lost so much and had to leave their homes behind with no certainty that there will be a home to return to. I'm certain that once the fire is out and the process of rebuilding begins, there will be much discussion about costs and what can be learned from this, our third major disaster in Alberta in five years.

Along with the physical and financial loss is unmeasurable emotional trauma, often more difficult and more lasting than the physical and financial recovery. I'm aware, too, that there's counselling available in the emergency reception centres, which I applaud. I know that the Health minister and the Premier are both committed to all the support that will be needed both now, when people are in shock and mourning, and a year from now, when the trauma and memories can still be overwhelming. I know I speak for all the members here when I say that the rebuilding of healthy lives is every bit as important as the rebuilding of homes and roads and schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had a difficult time writing this today. As we learn more about the tragic events unfolding in Fort McMurray, I've had a hard time keeping my focus, as I imagine all of us have. I'm especially thankful that so far no one has lost their life in this tragic event. I'm also thankful for the bravery – the tremendous bravery – of first responders as they run toward danger while others seek safety. And I'm thankful for but I'm not surprised by the outpouring of support from Albertans because that's who we are; that is who we are as Albertans.

Of course, it saddens me deeply to see the loss of so much property, so many memories, and so much of the city of Fort McMurray. I worry that the worst may in fact be yet to come. I hope everyone remains safe, in particular first responders from around Alberta and around the country.

Watching those shocking images of people fleeing the fires, having spent a lot of time working in Fort McMurray, I, of course, was struck by the devastation, watching family homes burn, watching familiar landmarks go up in smoke. I think of the Leader of the Official Opposition and his family, who lost their home, and I want him and all of his colleagues in the Wildrose caucus to know that my thoughts are with the Leader of the Official Opposition and his family. I offer my unconditional support to you, to him, to his family, and to the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo as well.

I offer that same support to the government. I commend you for your swift response to the crisis and also your very good work keeping Albertans safe and keeping them informed.

Today our entire province in addition, of course, to this House stands united in support of our friends in and around Fort McMurray. Albertans are strong, but never are we stronger than in the face of a crisis. In times of crisis we put our differences aside here. I echo the sentiments of all of my colleagues. I offer my thoughts to the people in Fort McMurray and the hopes that everyone continues to be safe.

Now, I, too, have lived through a natural disaster. My most vivid memories are not of what was lost in the flood but of the tremendous outpouring of support from Albertans. I will never forget the images of hundreds of Edmonton police and firefighters streaming down highway 2, coming to help. I'll never forget the day complete strangers showed up by the thousands to help. And I'll never forget the support of neighbours who abandoned their own homes to help others who they thought were worse off. That's who we are as Albertans. That's what we do in this province.

I want the people of Fort McMurray to know that we're there for you. We're there for you today, we'll be there for you tomorrow, and we will be there for you as long as you need us to be until the city of Fort McMurray is rebuilt. We are Albertans. Even in the face of overwhelming devastation, we are strong, and we are united.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the daily Routine is now concluded.

A legislative policy committee will convene this afternoon for consideration of the main estimates. Families and Communities will consider the estimates of Service Alberta in the Grassland Room.

[The Assembly adjourned at 1:59 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 59.01(5)(b)]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 5, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Let each of us reflect in our own way. Today we reflect upon Holocaust Remembrance Day, or Yom ha-Shoah. Today we commemorate the victims of genocide by honouring those lost lives. Let us reflect on the importance of tolerance, respect, and appreciation for all faiths and cultures so there will never be a time in our province that any person does not feel safe to practise their religious beliefs.

I would ask that you join me in a moment of silence to remember all those whose lives were taken unfairly and unjustly.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the students and teachers of l'école Citadelle in Legal, Alberta. One of 19 schools of the north central francophone school division, l'école Citadelle is a K to 9 school. Today's grade 6 class is accompanied by their teacher, Chris Page, and parent chaperones Joanne Pelletier, Dawn de Champlain, Danielle Tardif-Cyr, and Marie-Josée Trudel. I would ask that the class please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 32 students from Viking school, appropriately located in the town of Viking, which is, by Odin's beard, the hammer of Thor of all communities in the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster. These students are here with their teachers: Mrs. Sandra Carter, Mrs. Dianne Kolybaba, and Mrs. Trudy Josephson. We had a wonderful discussion as we were having pictures taken. They're very keenly interested in the ongoing saga, if you like, of what happens here in the Legislature, and they're particularly keenly interested in watching the NDP members who sit on this side of the House, which we have dubbed the Valhalla section. I'd now ask all of my colleagues here in the Legislature to rise and give them the warm traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who have school groups to introduce?

Then the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you the 25 representatives of the child well-being initiative. They are women of the United Church of Canada who have been relentlessly working to raise awareness about child poverty in Alberta. Today every MLA has the opportunity to receive a poverty doll, hand made, with prayers for kids. They ask that you please keep your doll in your office to remind you of the basic needs of Alberta's young citizens and that that must be a priority for this government. Today marks the fourth time they have travelled from throughout the province to the Legislature to share their message with all of us. I ask this incredible group to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special people I met about a year and a half ago at the beginning of my journey here to this Legislature. This group of dedicated volunteers ran my campaign, co-ordinated volunteers, door-knocked, helped with organizing, and provided much-needed emotional support. I didn't write those last words. I have these amazing volunteers to thank for where I am sitting today, and to be honest, I'm forever grateful for their support. Joining us today are Gary and Lars Hansen, Ben McDonald, Rhonda Whitten, Johanna Flipsen, Kim Slomnicki, and Colleen Copley. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Frances Amery, a teacher at Campus Pre-school, a co-operative preschool in my constituency of Calgary-Klein that is celebrating its 50th anniversary this year, which I'll be talking more about in my member's statement today. I ask that Frances now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Lillian Stewart, Sandra Burgess, and David Jensen from the child well-being initiative in Calgary. About 10 years ago Lillian saw a woman with a baby on the street on a cold winter night in downtown Calgary. After she saw them, she vowed to do something about it, and the initiative to fight against child poverty was born with the collaboration of Sharon Prenevost and some other women. I would like to thank Lillian, Sandra, and David for their hard work towards eradicating child poverty. I'm very pleased that they are here today with us and would request all three individuals to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly Lynne Fair from my constituency of Strathmore-Brooks. Lynne is also involved with the child well-being initiative. I ask that you and all members of the Assembly give her the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a King's University student, Erin Vandenberg. Erin is committed to social justice and public service, and I feel very fortunate that Erin has chosen to work for me during the summer. Erin, would you please rise to receive the customary welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly four amazing women from my constituency. Apart from being part of the child well-being initiative group that is here today, I have worked with these women on a number of other volunteer issues in my community via the Canadian Federation of University Women and through our shared place of worship with the justice, peace, and social action committee. They are Sharon Prenevost, Mary Shillington, Debora Lebeau, and Sheila Braund. I am honoured to work with them and call them friends. I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Wildfire Update

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take an opportunity to share some new information on the wildfires that are currently burning in our province. As you know, fire conditions continue to be extreme across much of the province, with rapidly changing fire behaviour. A fire weather advisory is in effect for the northern regions of the province. Overnight we had 18 new starts, with seven of the fires deemed out of control, including new starts near Slave Lake and High Level. We expect that the fire in Fort McMurray will continue to grow today due to these weather conditions.

At this point, based on the fire activity, our primary goal is to keep the wildfire out of homes and to protect the infrastructure, such as hospitals, key transportation routes, and other critical infrastructure, that'll make it easier for people to return to their community. In the meantime the fire will burn in the forested areas, thankfully away from the community. To be clear, at this time no amount of air support or wildfire fighter support will stop this fire right now because of the extreme fire conditions. At this point it will continue to burn until we see some significant rain. In the meantime, again, we are focused on safety and protecting that core infrastructure.

Weather continues to be a major factor. Cooler temperatures are forecast for today, with lower humidity of 25 to 35 per cent. However, we still expect significant fire behaviour due to increased winds, forecasted to be between 30 to 50 kilometres per hour.

Province-wide there are currently more than 1,300 firefighters on the front lines being aided by 145 helicopters, 138 pieces of heavy equipment, and 22 air tankers. There are currently more than a hundred additional firefighters heading to our province to assist with our efforts. The firefighting efforts are currently focused, again, on protecting the critical infrastructure and residences within Fort McMurray.

The Canadian military is ready to help as well and has sent in helicopters and a C-130 Hercules aircraft. We have additional equipment coming from out of the province, including four air tankers from Quebec that are scheduled to arrive on scene today.

The Canada Task Force 2 military emergency support arrived in Fort McMurray yesterday at 10 p.m. This includes 20 command staff and 20 support staff, providing much-needed support to the emergency staff, who have been working tremendously hard, out of Wood Buffalo.

We are co-ordinating closely with industry to begin moving evacuees from the camps north of Fort McMurray by air. Ultimately, we would like to move people out by way of ground transportation, although safety remains the first priority, and we will not do that until it is safe to do so.

Three emergency fuel stations are operating in safety rest areas on highway 63, located approximately 60 kilometres south of Fort McMurray, 100 kilometres south at Mariana Lake, and approximately 165 kilometres south of Fort McMurray. Quantities of fuel are limited and will be restricted to motorists who need fuel to get them to the nearest fuel centre.

The reception centre at the Anzac Recreation Centre was vacated due to a mandatory evacuation order. The registered evacuees there have self-evacuated or have been moved by bus to the Northlands centre here in Edmonton. The regional operations centre located in Anzac has been moved back up to its former location near the Fort McMurray airport, which we consider great news at this time.

We continue our efforts to ensure that Albertans are evacuated safely from all areas with mandatory evacuation orders. We are responding in a co-ordinated manner with emergency response workers to ensure we get people out quickly and safely. Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, our priority is ensuring Albertans are safe, including our first responders, as fire conditions remain extreme.

Yesterday our Premier visited the Fort McMurray region to view the fire and the devastation. She also visited the emergency operation centre and met with local officials there. The Premier also took time to meet volunteers and evacuees at evacuation centres in Anzac and heard from all of them about the particular challenges that they're facing at this time.

We have enacted a provincial state of emergency within the municipality of Wood Buffalo and continue to work with municipalities, organizations, and businesses to support evacuated residents. The powers granted under the state of emergency allow us to put the necessary actions into place. It also allows the province to evacuate people from the affected areas. It allows us to restore essential facilities and the distribution of essential supplies like food, clothing, fuel, equipment, and medical supplies. The state of emergency allows the province to control or prohibit travel to and from the area and to co-ordinate emergency medical and social services and put our own provincial emergency plan into action.

States of local emergency continue to be in effect for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and the Athabasca Chipewyan First Nation.

The focus of the Provincial Operations Centre is the stabilization of the Fort McMurray situation and the planning for eventual re-entry into the community. Albertans affected by wildfires should follow the instructions of emergency officials and stay tuned to local media for information and updates as they develop. I encourage all Albertans to follow Alberta emergency alert online or to download the smart phone app to stay informed on emergencies in their areas. Albertans can find the most up-to-date information about this situation at alberta.ca.

Once again we stress that at this time the mandatory evacuation remains in place, and residents of Fort McMurray are not to return to their homes at this time.

Anyone who wants to contribute to assist the displaced residents is encouraged to donate to the Canadian Red Cross at redcross.ca or 1.800.418.1111. Our government has provided $2 million to the Red Cross so that their efforts can begin immediately, and we have also committed to matching donations from individual Albertans, who have been so tremendously generous already.

Evacuees are encouraged to contact Red Cross themselves at 1.888.350.6070 to register their location. This will ensure that officials know how to reach evacuees to verify that they got out safely, to help with family reunification, and to make sure they have the supports that they need at this time. Evacuees should also register at a reception centre even if they are not planning to stay there. This will help ensure that our government can get them the supports they need going forward.

For those evacuees with pets I can tell you that many of the reception centres are accepting evacuees and their pets if their pets are in a crate and have food. A number of organizations are providing assistance with food, crates, as well as kennel space.

I would also like to add that mental health support is available by calling Alberta's 24-hour mental health helpline at 1.877.303.2642. Mental health staff are either in place or in transit to a variety of the reception centres right across this province to provide that necessary support.

For those needing to travel highway 63, the highway is open to southbound traffic only. Northbound traffic is restricted to emergency vehicles and other essential travel at the junction of highway 881. There are traffic controls in place at both highway 63 and highway 881, with priority being given to emergency responders. More information and regular updates are available from Alberta's 511 service.

Those Albertans with questions or in need of information can call the government of Alberta's emergency information line at 310.4455. This line is open seven days a week, from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

Our government is grateful for the responsive support offered and provided by the federal government as well. I'm very thankful for the commitment Minister Ralph Goodale made today to work with us in terms of supporting people with income support, with rebuilding businesses within the region, and, in general, restoring Fort McMurray to functionality and helping them to rebuild. I thank the federal government very much for their commitment to working hard with us on that. All Canadians are standing with Alberta today.

1:50

Our government is also grateful to the energy industry, who have supported this region and this province and its people in good times and now in this crisis. I'm thankful to all of the other Alberta companies who have been tremendously generous in terms of donations to provide supports to the evacuees.

And I'm so very thankful to Albertans. I mean, Alberta's true advantage always has been and always will be our people, and we're seeing that displayed time and time again throughout this crisis. Albertans have stepped up to provide money, to provide time and have opened their own doors to these people in times of need.

Lastly, I cannot thank enough the first responders who are in Fort McMurray and responding to all of the other fires right across this province, who continue to do the opposite of what many of us would do and march right into those fires, right into those disasters, ready to take on those challenges in order to protect the things that matter to us. Thank you so much to all of the first responders. We are there with you. We are behind you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a heavy heart today that I rise. Our entire caucus has been touched by the goodwill and generosity shown toward our colleagues the Leader of the Opposition and the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and, more importantly, to their constituents, whose lives have been thrown into an unimaginable sense of chaos. For other at-risk areas of the province, including High Level and Slave Lake, I want to extend our thoughts and prayers to all those who are impacted.

It is when Albertans are challenged that Albertans show their true spirit, their compassion, their good sense, their industriousness.

This evacuation has been a testament to all of those qualities, and I'm sure that every member of this place will salute the individuals, the volunteers, and the uncountable acts of kindness and generosity that helped 80,000 people get out of harm's way.

It's times like today that it's easy to be lost in a sense of despair that is associated with such tragedies. And while all we can do is hope and pray for the wet weather to arrive, the warm temperatures remain. While this senseless fire remains heavy on our hearts, it's hard not to be inspired by the miraculous evacuation of this beautiful city on the banks of the Athabasca and the work of first responders.

Police officers and EMS workers oversaw the biggest evacuation of a wildfire in our province's history. To date they remain working around the clock as they continued to oversee expanded evacuations even as late as last night. Firefighters in Fort McMurray for days have been heroically battling this blaze, doing all that they can to hold it at bay. Over a thousand firefighters are currently fighting this blaze, and it is with a deep sense of pride to have seen firefighters gather all across our province to come together to help our brothers and sisters in need. If I can, Mr. Speaker, just for a moment, give a very special thank you to the firefighters from the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills responding to this situation in Fort McMurray, helping to contain the spread of this fire.

I have no doubt that in a few weeks, when the scars and burns begin to heal, we will hear the truly inspiring stories that many of these men and women have experienced. We will hear how they put their lives on the line to the best of their ability to keep people safe and try to protect our region. As the long days and sleepless nights persist, I ask that all Albertans and members of this Assembly continue to pray for the safety of all involved and our first responders.

Today will be a sombre day not fit for bluster. Our caucus will ask the Premier and her ministers for an update on the fire situation in Alberta. These questions that we will ask have been sent to the government earlier today, and we hope it will give Albertans the opportunity to get answers to the questions that they are all asking us.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Wildfire Update

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, today is a somber day not fit for politics or bluster. Our thoughts and prayers are with all those affected. I'm going to ask the Premier for an update on the fire situation in Alberta. So that everyone is aware, in the spirit of collaboration these questions were provided to the government earlier today so that we may provide complete answers to the people of Alberta. Can the Premier update the Assembly on the state of the wildfire situation in Fort McMurray and throughout Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I previously stated, public safety remains the key priority as wildfires continue to burn in several areas of the province. The situation in the Fort McMurray area is, obviously, of primary concern. A provincially declared state of emergency is in effect for the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo. With residents safely evacuated, provincial fire crews continue their efforts to reduce the threat to property and infrastructure. Fire conditions remain extreme, with 18 new fire starts yesterday, a total of 49 wildfires burning, with seven considered out of control, 12 being held, 23 under control, and seven turned over to the responsible municipal parties to manage.

Mr. Barnes: The incredible first responders, who have without hesitation gone towards the emergency, have the full support of all members of this House. I know that the first responders are doing their utmost to control this wildfire and the other fires in our province. News that both B.C. and Manitoba only have enough resources to work in their own provinces has raised questions from Albertans, however. Can the government confirm that our province has adequate resources should other wildfires start spreading our resources thin?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have a wide variety of support, and we have access to a number of resources from right across the country and, in fact, beyond. We actually have more air support than we could use in Fort McMurray at this point in time and are using that across the province for other wildfires. We also have an abundance of wildfire fighters available in order to do that. Without doubt, we have more than enough resources to deal with the fire, but should we need any more, we have the relationships built in to access as many as we need in the future.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: All Albertans and I feel confident in saying that all Canadians are rallying behind the individuals and families who have been devastated by these wildfires. The regional municipality of Wood Buffalo must be commended for their professionalism in evacuating residents and keeping order. However, Albertans are concerned about their neighbours and have asked us why the decision was made by the government to wait until 3 p.m. yesterday to declare a state of emergency. Can the government provide the reasons behind this decision?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was absolutely a local state of emergency in place, which gave the municipalities the powers they needed to address that situation. What our provincial state of emergency did was to give the province the ability to take responsibility for the co-ordination of that event. Of course, we've been working with them continuously from the beginning, but with a variety of other fires coming across and with the majority of Fort McMurray's residents dispersed throughout the province and with concerns that the support in Fort McMurray was becoming exhausted, we decided it was the appropriate time to step in to help, and they agreed with us.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon. Today my questions will all be for the Minister of Municipal Affairs, again, in her capacity as the minister in charge of emergencies. Minister, yesterday the government declared a provincial state of emergency in Fort McMurray. Will you kindly highlight the differences, the key ones, and tell Albertans what additional resources, tools, and powers come with this provincial state of emergency and how they will help fight the fires there and deal with this situation?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We've enacted a provincial state of emergency in the regional municipality, which is in effect for 28 days unless renewed by this House. Examples of the power this gives include putting an emergency plan into operation; evacuating people from the affected areas; controlling or prohibiting travel to or from the area; restoring essential facilities and distributing essential supplies like food, clothing, fuel, equipment, medical supplies; and co-ordinating emergency medical, welfare, and other essential services. The most important fact is that this allows us to step in and control it on a provincial basis to co-ordinate resources across the province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, again, Mr. Speaker. In many parts of Alberta residents are justifiably afraid of fire conditions. They are worried about their homes, their jobs, their livelihoods, and their livestock, of course. The trepidation is real, Minister, and felt widely across this province, and we're only into the fifth day of May in a fire season that probably could go into September. What can the minister tell Albertans about added precautions this government is taking throughout the province to reassure them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, our priority is ensuring that Albertans are safe as fire conditions remain extreme. We've brought in resources from out of province, and people are working 24/7 on emergency response and supporting Albertans who have been evacuated from their homes. We're working with partners, including municipalities, organizations like the Red Cross, and businesses, to support evacuated residents and fight these devastating fires. We're doing everything we can while we continue to monitor. We can't control the weather or the dry conditions, but we can do what it takes to keep Albertans safe. I will continue to hold daily briefings as required so Albertans are aware of the situation.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Well, Alberta is tinder dry right now across the province. Almost the entire north half is listed as extreme on the fire danger scale, and the rest of the province isn't much better, yet no overall fire ban on the entire province has been announced. Minister, what directives are being communicated to local municipalities throughout Alberta in terms of a heightened state of alert requirement or a complete province-wide fire ban? Has the government considered any action along those lines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, there are fire restrictions right across the fire protection areas in this province. It is incredibly tinder dry, and we are all working together and proud of the relationships we have with emergency workers from right across this province, working together to ensure that we're prepared for any state that might continue. I urge all Albertans to ensure that they take no action that potentially could start a fire at a time when fires can get out of control so very quickly.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Services for Fort McMurray Residents

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, at a time of such devastation and sadness I was encouraged to hear that all patients and long-term care residents of the Northern Lights hospital have been evacuated. This is testament to the great efforts of the dedicated staff working on the ground to get the job done safely, and we owe them our deepest gratitude. Can the minister inform this House of the status of these evacuated patients, particularly to which facilities they have been moved and the steps being taken to ensure the capacity exists to accommodate them?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for this question. In addition to the work of the AHS staff in Fort McMurray, this operation required a great deal of co-ordination with several other facilities, including the Alex, Grey Nuns, Leduc community hospital, Sturgeon, University of Alberta, the Misericordia, Edmonton General continuing care, Jubilee Lodge Nursing Home, Salem Manor Nursing Home, Extensicare Leduc, CapitalCare Lynnwood, and Hardisty Care Centre. I would like to acknowledge that every patient was safely transported from the fire zone to safety and is currently receiving the care they need, and I would thank every person who contributed to that effort.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, I understand that a number of companies operating locally have stepped up to offer assistance for those with medical needs. The story of WestJet planes using Suncor's airstrip to evacuate patients, including Fort McMurray's newborns, is truly inspiring. With the immediate safety of lives in hospitals and seniors' facilities secured, Albertans' attention turns to the state of local health and seniors' infrastructure. Could the minister please update Albertans on the condition of health and seniors' facilities, especially the Northern Lights hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The best information that we have at this time is that the Northern Lights regional health centre has not sustained any structural damage so far, but the effects of the smoke are not known at this time. We unfortunately do not have detailed information on other specific structures, and the situation within Fort McMurray remains very changeable. I share the member's concern for residents' homes, including seniors' homes. We know that firefighters and crews are working around the clock to protect the city.

Mr. Barnes: This fire has taken an incredible toll on the residents of Fort McMurray and their families. Often that toll is not outwardly visible but manifests itself through mental anguish and stress. Evacuees and their loved ones have suffered loss, uncertainty, and tremendous emotional strain, and let us not forget the first responders, who subject themselves to immense pressures. Please, could the minister let all know what mental health supports are available at this time and how to best gain access to them.

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for his very important question. Everyone who has been in and around the Fort McMurray area is under tremendous strain. Absolutely these events have an impact on staff and front-line responders, and there are supports available around the clock. Any person can access the mental health therapists at the reception areas throughout the province. Front-line staff can also contact the AHS emergency and family assistance program or the critical incident stress management and peer support program. Many municipal fire departments also operate their own critical incident management programs. I would encourage any Albertan to reach out to the mental health helpline at any time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Support for Wildfire Evacuees and First Responders

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While Fort McMurray is still under siege, the bravery and compassion demonstrated daily by Albertans is a source of inspiration for all of us. The PC caucus is committed to working with government and all parties in the House to ensure that Albertans get the information they need. Today is Children's Mental Health Day, and we recognize that there are frightened kids currently at reception centres. To the Health minister: while food, shelter, and water are clearly provided at the centres, are other necessities such as crisis counselling, mental health support, and emotional trauma care also available for those kids?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the very important question. We know that the people that are in reception areas or those that are staying with family and friends are under incredible stress right now, and their mental health is a priority. We have mental health professionals on scene at each of the reception areas, both in the north and in the Edmonton area, and we are ramping up the number of counsellors available. As the Assembly can well imagine, there are tens of thousands of Albertans who have escaped a truly terrifying event, and not everyone will ask for help immediately. Their needs will continue to present over the coming days, weeks, and months. Again, I encourage anyone to contact the mental health line.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we know that with the fire coming, family and friends often had to evacuate their homes on short notice and leave their communities without being fully prepared and head for the several reception centres that were prepared. We also know that these centres are located quite far apart in many cases, meaning that friends and family may not be together after getting to those centres. To the Municipal Affairs minister: what measures are in place to help connect family members and friends that could be safe but separated in very distant reception centres?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for a very important question. It is certainly an important priority for our government to get families reunified as quickly as it is safe to do so. Each reception area has a registration desk where evacuees can register their name and location with staff. Alberta Red Cross is also helping to co-ordinate family reunification by urging people to phone the toll-free number to register: 1.888.350.6070. It's important that all evacuees phone this number to register, whether they're staying at reception centres, with family or friends, in campgrounds or hotels, to ensure that officials know how to reach people and can verify that everyone got out safely. Facebook also has activated its Facebook safety check page, where people can sign in.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are extremely proud of our firefighters, our first responders, and the many workers at emergency operations centres. All of these people have stepped up from across the province and in many cases have driven towards the fire to help, and some of these people may have lost their homes themselves. To the Health minister: where can our firefighters, first responders, and members working in the EOCs go to ensure that they receive the mental health care supports they might need and the emotional support they might need after working long hours on the job protecting other Albertans?

2:10

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. Absolutely these events have a huge impact, and we are so grateful for the work that our first responders are doing. I would encourage all first responders to contact the AHS emergency family assistance program or the critical incident stress management and peer support program as well as any other supports available through their local municipality. Again, any Albertan is urged to contact the mental health helpline, which is 1.877.303.2642.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Fort McMurray Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My thoughts again go out to the people in Fort McMurray, and my thanks to the first responders, many of whom have lost their own homes but continue to work around the clock to protect their neighbours. Thank you also to firefighters from around the country, including Canada's military, and to our friends from around the world, including Mexico, who have sent resources to Alberta.

My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I recognize that the crisis is not yet over, but when it is, what steps have been taken to ensure that the right resources will be available for the people of Fort McMurray to help them with their recovery?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, Alberta is here. It's a key priority for us to support one another, to work with one another, which is why we have the disaster recovery program within our government, which will assist the municipality to restore function to some of the key issues to deal with the response costs but also to help the Fort McMurray residents with any noninsurable costs associated with restoring basic functioning to their community and themselves.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. There have been challenges with the disaster recovery program in the past. Can you assure the people of Fort McMurray that the DRP will be there for them when they need it?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Improving the DRP program has been one of my key priorities since becoming Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'm proud of the work we've done. We've greatly improved the process by having a one-on-one caseworker for people. With the Chestermere process we've heard nothing but great things about how the new program is working for them, and I assure the people of Fort McMurray that we will ensure that they have a positive experience through the DRP program.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the minister. Now, both individuals and businesses have rallied to support the people of Fort McMurray. Most importantly, Red Cross Alberta is accepting cash donations, which our provincial and federal governments have generously matched. In addition, there are many, many businesses and organizations who stepped up, and I'll name just a very few: the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, the Edmonton Humane Society, Guru Nanak Sikh society, the Al-Rashid mosque, Earls, Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta, Edmonton's Food Bank, Children's Autism Services of Edmonton, U-Haul, ATB, Telus, Rogers, and many, many more. Airbnb has waived fees so residences available to evacuees can post their listings for free. What other service providers is the government aware of, and are you able to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the end of the question was kind of cut off, so I didn't quite get it. However, I certainly recognize the incredible generosity of individual Albertans but also of our business community. As I spoke to in my statement, there are a number of businesses and organizations right across the province who have, you know, stepped up with their hearts wide open and offered tremendous generosity to the evacuees. For that I'm tremendously grateful. I look forward to continuing to work with them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Fort McMurray Disaster Relief and Recovery

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also rise today to ask about the devastating fires that have ravaged Fort McMurray. Given that this situation remains critical and thousands of Albertans have been displaced from their homes, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what co-ordinated effort is the government of Alberta undertaking to ensure temporary shelter and assistance for those Albertans who have been forced from their homes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a significant natural disaster that has displaced tens of thousands of Albertans. A provincial state of emergency has been declared, and all areas of government have been mobilized and are actively providing supports to displaced Albertans in a number of ways. From AHS to Environment and Parks to Human Services to the Ministry of Finance efforts are being co-ordinated to ensure that evacuated Albertans get the support they need at this critical time. We will continue to work across government and with municipalities, organizations, businesses, and all levels of government to support evacuated Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a disaster like this strikes, Albertans and Canadians come together to help the community in need. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what types of supports are other municipalities, provinces, and the government of Canada offering, and how can individual Albertans help Fort McMurrans affected by the fire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans from across the province are coming together because that is what we do. We support each other in times of need. Alberta's municipalities are providing shelter and tending to evacuated Albertans as well as providing firefighting resources to help us fight this fire and keep people safe. The federal government has committed to working with us to deal with issues such as income supports for those who've lost their livelihood, business recovery in the area, infrastructure requirements, housing and health issues, and disaster financial assistance. In a recent announcement this morning they would also fast-track employment insurance benefits for all workers affected by the fire.

Individual Albertans are encouraged to donate to the Alberta Red Cross, where our government is . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that combatting disasters is not only about response but is also about recovery, to the same minister: what can the minister share with the House today regarding supports for the long-term recovery of Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can speak to that at two levels. The first is that our priority right now is ensuring that Albertans are safe, but we are there for you now, and we will be there to help you rebuild, and we will be there to see the recovery through. On the other hand, I speak as someone who has been there and through that in Slave Lake: you can do it. Your community will be rebuilt. Alberta will rally around and be behind you. You know, in the end your community will be strengthened by the way you have worked together in this experience.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Fort McMurray Energy Industries

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is the beating heart of our energy sector. Our people are strong, resilient, innovative, and compassionate towards their neighbours. We know that many energy companies that run projects in and around Fort McMurray have opened up their work camps for those evacuating the horror of this terrible fire. The safety measures and fast reaction of industry helped the mass exodus from Fort McMurray. Can the Energy minister please share with Albertans how many evacuees are currently being housed in these work camps and how long they're expected to stay there?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. First of all, I want to thank our energy people for housing not just themselves but the others. While I don't know the exact numbers, we do know that thousands of people were evacuated to the north of Fort McMurray, and we are grateful, again, for them housing these folks. We are working, you know, as part of the overall group moving these individuals, as the Minister of Municipal Affairs said, to move some of these folks south when it's safe. Again I have to commend all our industry people for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Well, we know there is no shortage of energy-related projects, obviously, around Fort McMurray. With the safety of all people in mind, will the Energy minister please share with Albertans the current projects that may be at risk or if there is any damage to any of the existing projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. We know there are devastating losses in the Fort McMurray area, and there is much work to be done in the coming months to rebuild. The priority now for all our energy folks is to make sure that their families and their workers are safe and evacuated. They're working with minimum staff right now in many of the areas. Right now it's inappropriate for me – honestly, I can't speculate on the existing damage. But to date I have not heard of any damage.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seeing as many of these energy companies are a key part of the efforts being made to care for the evacuees and given that many of the facilities have obviously either had to slow or shut down production, is the minister able to share with Albertans any idea of the economic impact of this fire for our energy sector in terms of production and wage losses?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. At this point I really can't, and it's inappropriate to speculate on the costs. As I say, currently they're working very hard to make sure that their families are safe, their workers are safe, and they're working hard to house others at this time. What I can say is that they've adjusted their production as much as they can and are working with minimum staff so other workers can be evacuated safely. We're grateful for those tremendous efforts that they're putting in right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

2:20 Health Services for Wildfire Evacuees

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are intended to help provide important information for the betterment of evacuees who are suffering from acute and chronic health ailments. Obviously, evacuees from Fort McMurray would require health care services in new and different ways. To the Associate Minister of Health: how can individuals in northern and remote evacuation camps access primary and acute health care services in a manner that best meets their needs?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. We know that these events can have profound and long-lasting consequences for people's physical and mental health. Currently AHS has teams at reception areas in Fort MacKay, Lac La Biche, Noralta Lodge, Firebag, and at Northlands in Edmonton. EMS staff are working around the clock on these teams, supported by nurses, two physicians, and mental health professionals. We're also grateful for the support and assistance provided by the Treaty 8 command centre and reception area in Edmonton. There are four AHS staff on-site there today. At Northlands we have specialized nurses, mental health therapists, a respiratory therapist, a home OT living occupational therapist, and two pharmacists.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you. Minister, given that the treatment of chronic conditions typically relies on prescription medications and given that many residents may not have their medications with them due to the urgency of the evacuation, can you please tell us what's being done to ensure that these individuals can quickly secure access to the drugs that they need, that are vital for their well-being, in fact, without increasing out-of-pocket expenditures at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for his question. Certainly, many Albertans who evacuated will not have their prescription medications with them, or they may be running short. We're also aware that some people may not have identification or any means to pay. AHS is triaging needs at the northern reception areas and shipping pharmacy out of Edmonton. Medical staff at these sites are assessing patients and administering medication. Where community pharmacies are available, AHS pharmacists are providing bridging prescriptions, and we have two pharmacists on-site at Northlands. Any evacuee accessing an AHS pharmacy will not face out-of-pocket expenses for required medications.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the demand for health care services could easily increase with the influx of evacuees in various parts of the province, can you please tell us what's being done to ensure that all health care facilities are prepared to meet the increasing demand for surgeries, ER beds, dialysis procedures, MRIs, and medical equipment such as insulin pumps and blood glucose monitors that evacuees may not be able to secure before they fled their homes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. There's no doubt that losing access to a regional hospital and displacing tens of thousands of people is a challenging situation. Every single acute care and continuing care patient from Fort McMurray is in an appropriate facility in the Edmonton zone. Northern Alberta renal services has identified 11 dialysis patients from the area, and 10 of them have checked in and been connected with services, and they are following up with family members to connect the remaining patient. We are very fortunate that we are not currently facing a situation with a large number of injuries; however, as more people arrive in the Edmonton zone, the demand for health care services will also rise. The rescheduling of surgeries is an example of how all of our facilities will work to meet the demand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

School Accommodation of Wildfire-affected Students

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are about 12,000 evacuees signed in at the Bold Center in Lac La Biche, and many of these people will be accommodated at local hotels and private homes in nearby communities, including St. Paul, Bonnyville, and Athabasca. Among the evacuees are many students, who may need to be accommodated in local schools to ensure that they are able to finish the year on time. To the Minister of Education: who should parents contact if they have questions about registering their students in local schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you. Thanks so much for the question as well. Indeed, we know that we probably have more than 12,000 students that have been displaced from the Fort McMurray area and are moving to many different places across the province. To those families, to those students: everyone should know that they are free to register and attend school at any of the school boards in which they have been located. This is an important thing, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that parents know that they can have that continuity, wherever they happen to have moved to, to attend a school. School boards will be happy to accommodate for that, and those are the people that they should be in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the number of students that need to be accommodated as a result of the fire and given that many classrooms across the province already are at capacity and since no one wants to see students from Fort McMurray lose any time in school, will the minister describe any specific supports that have been or will be made available to school boards and schools to ensure that there are enough teachers to work with students, resources for the students, and room to accommodate them in schools?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is very important. Each of our school boards now has a difficult circumstance that we will support through the Ministry of Education. This is a chance for all of us to step up to make sure that kids get to finish their school year. We will have to employ some extraordinary measures to make sure that there are school spaces available for all of the displaced students, but I think that at the end of the day, that's what we will end up doing, raising the bar to ensure that we get this job done.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the provincial achievement tests and the diploma exams will be starting very shortly and given that exams are administered by individual school boards and since there are provisions to accommodate students if they are unable to write the exams due to unique circumstances, will the minister tell us what alternative arrangements are being made to ensure that students will be able to write these exams under the authority of different school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again a very important question. Certainly, for the students from the affected areas in grade 6 and grade 9 the provincial achievement exams will be cancelled unless they would choose to write the provincial achievement exams in the new schools, if they've chosen to attend those schools.

In regard to the diplomas I'm just working through a process to ensure that we employ the best practices that might have occurred in the past so that students might have a choice to write those diplomas, or we'll have alternative writing dates for the students from those affected areas.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Support for Wildfire-affected Vulnerable Albertans

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My thoughts are with those that are displaced in Fort McMurray right now from the wildfires. As families, friends, and neighbours band together to offer their support, we must also remember the vulnerable members of our community. Children and youth in government care will be wondering what comes next for them. Can the Minister of Human Services explain what is being done to support kids in care right now, where they will go next, and how other at-risk youth can access help and services if they need them?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. Our Human Services staff in the northeast region have shown tremendous dedication and strength in continuing to care for and support their clients, both children and families, while also trying to manage their personal lives. We are drawing on our regional resources and workers across the province to support children and youth. Our children and youth in care have been accounted for and relocated to appropriate settings to meet their needs.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that youth are not the only ones that rely on assistance for their well-being and given that many persons with developmental disabilities may be in need of extra support now as they are removed from existing networks and accommodations, can the minister please tell this Assembly what supports are in place for these vulnerable Albertans as the situation evolves, what supports they can expect as they face challenges in the weeks and months to come, and how they can access them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, again. All disability clients and their caregivers have been accounted for, and caseworkers continue to be in contact as they relocate them from where they are. We also continue to reach out to families with FSCD supports to know where they are and what additional support they might need. If persons with developmental disabilities, their families, and advocates need any support, I encourage them to contact or visit any PDD branch or disability service at Human Services.

2:30

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. Given that seniors may be among those with reduced mobility and specialized needs during their displacement, can the minister please tell this Assembly how Fort McMurray seniors were evacuated, what their situation is now, and what her plan is to ensure that their supports are in place in the mid-term if they need to be resettled?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. There is one seniors' lodge in Fort McMurray. Some of the seniors at that lodge met with family members on the day of the evacuation and went with those family members, with their support. Thirty seniors were evacuated by bus to Lac La Biche, where 13 of them were reunited with family members there and are now with family members. The remaining 17 will be in the Eagle Hill Lodge and the Eagle View Lodge, where the foundation has graciously offered to house these seniors for as long as is needed. We continue to monitor the situation and want to, certainly, thank the foundation for their help in this.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Fort McMurray Oil Sands Industry Wildfire Recovery

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we all know, Fort McMurray is the oil capital not only of Alberta but of Canada. The operations in and around this area are integral economic drivers for this province. Unfortunately, companies which operate in the area have been negatively affected by low oil prices, and the wildfire which has devastated Fort McMurray could degrade the situation. To the hon. Minister of Energy: is there any indication of the extent to which this devastating fire will impact oil sands operations in the Fort McMurray area?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As I mentioned previously, it's a little bit premature to speculate right now. I can tell you, though, that the AER has activated their emergency response centre and is conducting assessments with each of the facilities. As you may be aware, each facility has an emergency management plan that they have done. Right now that's where they're at. They're working with the AER and making sure that their workers and their workers' families are taken care of. Perhaps next week we'll know more.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. minister. Given that our oil sands operators employ thousands of Albertans and given that in our time of need they opened their camps to residents of the Wood Buffalo region displaced by the fire, these companies can be called true corporate citizens. To the hon. Minister of Energy: how will the government be working with these companies to resume their activities and get the affected Albertans back to work once the fire has been effectively contained?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that important question. Again, I want to personally thank the companies, who have just been stellar at stepping up to help not just themselves but the residents. It's been very heartwarming as an Albertan. I know my sense of gratitude is shared by everyone here in the House. I understand that the industry operators are currently developing plans to address such questions. Everything is so fluid right now; it's hour by hour. As I mentioned, the camps where some of the citizens are: there will be an effort to move them south when it's safe. They've been very clear to me that the priority is safety right now.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. minister. Given that the companies which operate in this area have contributed a significant amount of money to the provincial treasury through direct taxation and oil royalties and given that, more than that, they are committed community partners who give back to Alberta at every turn in an effort to make our province better, again to the hon. Minister of Energy: with how much these companies have contributed to Alberta, will you extend an olive branch and offer your support and resources in any way deemed appropriate?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. In fact, I've been in contact daily with many of the CEOs and presidents of the companies. They've been very good at updating me on where they're at. Right now, again, their focus is on the safety of their staff and safety of their property. My office is continuing to be an open link for conversation with them. I've asked them, if there are any sticking points along the way, to please contact me.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Northern Lights Regional Health Centre Evacuation

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the Albertans in harm's way in Fort McMurray this week were 105 patients at the Northern Lights regional health centre. Can the Associate Minister of Health tell the Assembly about the success of all of the evacuation efforts?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you. I want to acknowledge the skill, professionalism, and courage of the AHS employees at the Northern Lights health centre. When ordered to evacuate, they transported 73 acute-care patients and 32 continuing care patients to safety in less than two hours' time, including nine newborn babies and their moms. These health care workers did their jobs under extraordinary pressure while their own families and homes were under evacuation order. We're also grateful to WestJet for providing an aircraft that was able to meet these patients, family members, and staff and bring them safely to health care facilities in the Edmonton zone.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you tell the Assembly where these patients with very diverse needs were taken to?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. In addition to the work of the AHS staff in Fort McMurray, there was a great deal of co-operation and co-ordination with several other facilities. Patients have been transported to hospitals such as the Alex, Grey Nuns, the Leduc community hospital, Sturgeon, University of Alberta, and the list goes on and on, including the Jubilee Lodge Nursing Home and Extendicare Leduc. Again I would like to acknowledge that every patient was safely transported from the fire zone to safety and is currently receiving the exact level of care that they need.

I'd also like to update the House that we continue to have information that the centre has not suffered structural damage.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the associate minister for the update. I understand that the Fort McMurray treatment centre was also required to evacuate. To the same minister: was this evacuation as successful as the Northern Lights regional health centre's?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the treatment centre was evacuated as early as Sunday. All 12 clients were initially relocated into the downtown core of Fort McMurray, and when that area, too, came under mandatory evacuation order, those clients were transported to the Edmonton area and are all safe and continuing to receive the treatment that they need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Oil Sands Industry Wildfire Response and Recovery

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former manager in the energy sector I spent many years on projects and living in camps in Fort McMurray. Fort McMurray is the economic engine not only for our province but for our country, and my heart aches for my friends and former colleagues who have had to evacuate the region. I know that energy workers are critical to the success of the energy sector and the overall economy. Can the minister in charge update this House on the status of energy workers who have been evacuated from Fort McMurray?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, nonessential workers have been evacuated with their families to various parts of the province. Some have gone home, you know, if they live south. There's minimal staff in some facilities keeping the facilities open, and I have to reiterate that these are people who are doing this even though they've lost their own homes, potentially, or are separated from their families. Many of our industry workers are trained in emergency preparedness, and they're doing just exactly that. And I have to say that a lot of the companies are working with each other as well. I'm very proud of them all.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the energy industry for putting people before profits and opening up their camps to the evacuees. Given that, hopefully, many people will eventually be able to go back to their homes in Fort McMurray, when they're back and resume their jobs to start production again, will the minister give examples as to how they will remove red tape and help the energy industry ramp up production to the previous levels?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. As I mentioned, we're working with all of the industry. The AER has launched their emergency centre, and they work with each industry on their plan. We will continue in the days – as I mentioned, I have staff up there working, staff with the emergency centre. This is a long-term thing for us to do, to work with them. And I have assured all of the presidents and CEOs: if they run into any needless red tape, please contact me.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, many new Canadians call Fort McMurray home because of the prosperous job opportunities. Given that they are facing immense challenges and barriers right now, because for them losing their home is losing a life and their memories, what is the government doing to help new immigrants overcome these difficulties and get them back on their feet in this time of crisis?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that question. We are working with all evacuees who need our support for basic needs right now, providing mental health supports, shelter supports, anything that they need. I'm very proud that our Premier and some of our emergency people were there yesterday talking to people who have been evacuated, finding out exactly what they need. Again, I'm very proud of our industry, who are taking care of their workers plus other people in the community. They're doing a stellar job.

Wildfire-affected Animals

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Albertans were saddened by the deaths of two Fort McMurray evacuees yesterday, but considering the ferocity of the fires and the scope of the evacuation, it is an incredible testament to our emergency workers that more lives were not lost. In the urgent rush to flee the rapidly advancing wall of flames, many residents were forced to abandon their homes, leaving treasured possessions and, tragically, beloved family pets behind. It is unknown how many domestic animals may have perished. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: I know that you covered this in the ministerial statement, but could you reiterate what arrangements are being made to provide emergency shelter for family pets who were among the evacuees?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We all know how pets can be a source of comfort in these very difficult times, and we understand the challenge it is for families to lose their pets, who many consider family members. I can tell this House that reception centres are accepting evacuees and their pets if the pets are in a crate and have food. A number of organizations are providing assistance with food and crates as well as kennel space. The Alberta Veterinary Medical Association has offered medical care, and most clinics are offering boarding for evacuated animals in Boyle, Lac La Biche, Slave Lake, Athabasca, Westlock, Morinville, and throughout the Edmonton area. Albertans can find more information on the government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, in addition to household pets, cattle, horses, and other farm animals also had to be evacuated from the wildfire areas. Given that it will be several days or even weeks before these animals can return home and given the logistical difficulties of housing these animals at evacuation centres designed for humans and not for animals, can the minister of agriculture advise Albertans what options are available to farmers and ranchers to find temporary lodging for their animals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Of course, first and foremost, what people instinctively do is to get their animals to safety, and then the larger challenge is to find a facility that will provide appropriate shelter, food, and water. We are hearing of many generous farmers and facilities like Lakeland College that are willing to take horses and other livestock. Also, the Alberta Equestrian Federation Society is taking names from people who are willing to host horses. Agriculture and Forestry will continue to monitor the impact of the current wildfires on farms and livestock and will continue to work with industry associations and municipalities to take the further actions needed to protect our producers and their animals.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Minister.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The devastating wildfires also have a significant impact on nondomestic animals. Now, given that the large-scale fires caused devastating habitat destruction and widespread displacement of a variety of species whose forest home has now been destroyed, to the Minister of Environment and Parks: what measures are being undertaken to monitor the impact of these fires on the wild animal populations in the Fort McMurray region?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, as the member opposite mentioned, we recognize the importance of our wildlife population to the biodiversity of our province and understand that fires have various impacts on wildlife and, of course, on the exercise of traditional land use by indigenous peoples in this province. The situation in Fort McMurray is changing very, very quickly, but there are a few actions we have planned for. We will be working with the local government to ensure garbage and food are properly disposed of so we can minimize human-wildlife conflict, and second, we will conduct a wildlife survey to monitor wildlife and take the necessary management actions to preserve habitat going forward. We will start conducting this work only when it is safe to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Fort McMurray and Area Justice System Supports

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Justice. All of our thoughts and prayers are with the people of Fort McMurray, including our front-line personnel, who are dealing with the devastating circumstances of the wildfires. How is your ministry helping with the current crisis?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Of course, all Albertans are standing with the people of Fort McMurray right now, and my ministry and myself are in constant contact with the RCMP to ensure that they have everything they need to do their important jobs there. We're very thankful and proud of the hundreds of emergency personnel, including RCMP, who have helped with the evacuation and those who continue to put their lives on the line while patrolling the Fort McMurray area.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how is the government ensuring appropriate policing resources are available to assist with the Fort McMurray situation?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. As I've mentioned, we have been in contact with the deputy commissioner for the RCMP. I've also given the RCMP additional authority to deploy personnel and resources from all parts of Alberta and from neighbouring provinces and territories as necessary to help ensure the emergency in Fort McMurray is taken care of. In addition, we've ensured that Alberta peace officers have the necessary tools to help the RCMP in the evolving situation, and we've heard from the deputy commissioner that these sheriffs have been very helpful in their operations.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Justice: since you've been in contact with the RCMP, what is their message to residents of Fort McMurray at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Right now it's vital to follow the directions of police and emergency services personnel. This is for the safety of all Albertans. This includes both evacuating when told to do so and not returning to your home until you are told it's safe to do so. Again, we're extremely grateful to all of our front-line officers, and we thank them for their work. We know this is a stressful time for everyone in the province and particularly for those residents who have been evacuated, but we ask them to continue to follow the directions of the emergency personnel for everyone's safety.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 15 seconds we will proceed to Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Emergency Preparedness Week

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in recognition of Emergency Preparedness Week, an event that takes place in communities across Canada every year to remind us of the importance of planning and preparation. There has been no greater reminder of the need to be prepared than the devastation that has affected the province this week.

I live 700 kilometres away from Fort McMurray in Hinton, and my heart is torn. I think all those who live in West Yellowhead feel similar pain and empathy for our fellow Albertans. I believe all Albertans, whether you live in Hinton, Camrose, Drumheller, or wherever, now will pull together to help our neighbours in need.

It is not remiss of me that this is Alberta's third large-scale disaster in less than five years. We had the Slave Lake fire in 2011, the devastating floods in 2013, and now the unforgiving inferno in 2016. We sometimes believe that because we are a landlocked province away from fault lines and other geographical hazards, we are protected from natural disasters, when in fact Alberta has the misfortune of being one of the most prone regions to natural disasters.

2:50

We must be prepared. Emergency preparedness is a shared responsibility for all of us and is essential for strong and resilient communities. Planning ahead can significantly reduce the impact of an emergency or disaster. At the provincial level we are taking action, Mr. Speaker, to ensure Albertans are informed when a disaster strikes. I encourage all Albertans to download the Alberta emergency alert smart phone app to receive alerts so they have the information in real time about pending emergencies or disasters.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mental Health Services in Northern Alberta

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. This week is Mental Health Week, and May 7 is Child and Youth Mental Health Day. Mr. Speaker, 1 in 5 Canadians will suffer from mental illness. Look around you. That means that within this room about 20 of us will have this struggle. That's a sobering fact. With the downturn in the economy, the stress on Albertans has never been higher. What makes this all the more troubling is the lack of structure and information on local resources that provide help to those who so desperately need it. I speak to this as someone with personal experience as I sought help for years for a family member. Everyone tried their best to help us, but no one knew all the different avenues available.

Mr. Speaker, in Grande Prairie the regional hospital is currently under construction. It will have its mental health wing remain closed until an unknown date. This is unfortunate because there are considerably fewer mental health care services in the Peace Country than in other parts of Alberta. In schools, for instance, the mental health capacity building in schools initiative seems to be nonexistent in Grande Prairie or Valleyview. Grande Prairie is the largest city in northwest Alberta and doesn't have this initiative, leaving a huge hole in the south Peace Country. Many families simply cannot take on the additional financial, emotional, and geographical burden of travelling to the capital region for help, as my family has done.

Mental health issues need resources to help the families that are suffering as well. Mental health issues come with an enormous price tag. These issues are compounded when not dealt with in a timely manner. The price tag is both financial and societal. A key recommendation from our mental health review calls for a consolidation of community mental health services and addictions services. It seems as though it would be simple to even just organize the existing programs, but it isn't happening.

Mr. Speaker, I urge everyone to recognize that it isn't a weakness to ask for help. It doesn't make you any less of a person.

Thank you.

Women's Empowerment

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, when I look at the front bench of this caucus, I look around me in all directions, and I see strong, inspirational women. It is a phenomenal achievement that we have near gender parity in this government caucus, and I am proud to be part of a government that looks like the Albertans we represent.

But how did we get here? Why is it that in 2016 this parity is an outlier? Why is it that having women occupy senior positions is so exceptional? Mr. Speaker, the talent and skills demonstrated by the women I am privileged to call colleagues are indeed remarkable. However, they did not appear overnight. The reason why we have these remarkable women in government today is because they knew it could be done.

But they deserve allies. We have a responsibility to encourage, to empower, and to embolden the young women and girls in our lives. There are too many women in my life who, when asked if they want to step up to leadership positions, respond that they feel unqualified or that they don't know how. Mr. Speaker, it is not okay that half of our population gets paid less for the same work. It is not okay that they are systematically cut out of positions of power, led by the momentum of generations of gender inequality. Women shouldn't be the only ones fighting for equality because equality benefits all of us. We all have young women and girls in our lives, and they can be or do anything they want with their lives if we take an interest in achieving and in seeing women succeed.

Mr. Speaker, it is time we quit believing women only belong in stereotypical roles. It is time we end the grip on power we men have taken for granted, and it is time that we place more value on the content of character than on the biology we were born with. It is possible. This government is living proof of it. We can be better. It is my commitment – and I encourage all of my colleagues in this House to join me in doing the same – to continue to support our women and girls.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May is Motorcycle Safety Awareness Month, a month that celebrates and brings recognition to motorcycle riders. As a rider – and I know there are many members on both sides of this House who ride – we know first-hand how important it is to be diligent about safety at all times on the road. A motorcyclist is estimated to be at a higher risk of injury and fatal accidents than any other motor vehicle operator.

So, drivers, please take care of the following to ensure that you and others can share the road in a safe manner. Don't engage in distracted driving. It's illegal, and it can result in tragic consequences for all users. Share the roads, because a motorcycle has the exact same right as any other motorist. Vehicle size doesn't matter. And be cautious while following a motorcycle. Riders can stop and start very quickly. Riders can also take care of themselves by obeying all traffic laws, wearing a DOT-compliant helmet, and making sure they're not riding distracted or impaired, because we know that as many as a third of all motorcycle accidents occur while under the impairment of alcohol. Make sure you turn on your signals, use lane positioning, and take a motorcycle safety course.

Take care of yourself, riders, because we know that whether it's May or in all months, drivers want to share the road safely with motorcycles and that we want to be able to enjoy those roads together so that we can cruise and feel the wind in our hair, Mr. Speaker. Riders, be mindful of the hazards. Cautious driving will allow us to enjoy these roads for a long, long time to come. Please, be safe this month; be safe all months.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Campus Pre-school 50th Anniversary

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise today to speak about the 50th anniversary of Campus Pre-school, located right in Calgary's greatest constituency, Calgary-Klein. Campus co-operative preschool was established in 1965 by mothers from the Faculty Women's Club at the University of Calgary who wished to "continue studies . . . and at the same time provide their children with opportunities for creative and intellectual development in a group situation."

Today Campus Pre-school, as it's known, is currently Calgary's longest running parent co-operative preschool and has moved from the U of C to Capitol Hill community centre. Campus Pre-school is run today much like it was 50 years ago, with a focus on assisting in the total development of each child in a stimulating and play-based environment. Additionally, the co-operative aspect remains intact, with parents rotating as volunteers every six weeks to help keep costs down while at the same time being involved integrally with their child's education.

With the school's growth, gradually full-time teachers were hired. The school now has four outstanding full-time teachers, including Frances Amery, Mary Aubie, Heidi Dick, and Rebecca Gerritsen.

Mr. Speaker, Campus Pre-school has become such an institution that there are students attending today who have parents who were alumni of the preschool. It has become a preschool for the generations. As such, the school has received many parents' choice awards over the years and is a pillar of the local community. And I can attest to the fact that the school has been a wonderful part of my daughter Mehna's development.

Happy 50th anniversary to Campus Pre-school. I look forward to attending the 50th anniversary afternoon tea and social on May 14 at Capitol Hill community centre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just asking for unanimous consent of the House to continue the daily Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

United Church Women's Child Well-being Initiative

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to rise today and share with you and the Assembly a little more information about the child well-being initiative, which is led by a group of United Church women working to eradicate child poverty in our province. These remarkable women believe that our children are our future and that we as adults in this province have a responsibility to ensure that children do not live in poverty.

Since too many Albertan children come from food-insecure households, this group advocates for a universal program to feed schoolchildren.

Some of the things that the child well-being initiative identifies as necessary for children to not just survive but to thrive are three meals a day based on the Canada food guide; safe, accessible water; adequate, affordable, safe housing; enough clothes for the different seasons; preventative and curative physical and mental health services, including child mental health professionals, annual medical checkups, dental and vision care and required prescriptions, adequate rest and play.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, as you heard during the introduction of this incredible group this afternoon, they have brought for each of us a doll to keep in our office to remind us that the children of Alberta should be kept at the forefront of our minds when we consider the legislation we put forward. My sincerest thank you to the women of the child well-being initiative for reminding us of our responsibility.

Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much for that, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on Monday, May 9, written questions 12, 13, and 14 will be accepted and written question 11 will be dealt with.

Also on Monday, May 9, motions for returns 34 and 35 will be dealt with.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On April 14 I tabled this spring's estimates calendar. Today I am tabling a revised spring 2016 main budget estimates schedule based on a request from Municipal Affairs officials that they have additional time to prepare because of their extremely busy workload at the moment due to their preoccupation with the wildfire situation. I have five copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise today pursuant to section 28(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act to table five copies of the Ethics Commissioner's report dated May 4, 2016, regarding allegations involving a former member.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 7

Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is my honour to rise to speak about the amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act. The proposed amendments in Bill 7 would authorize the early appointment of an Electoral Boundaries Commission, on or before October 31, 2016, which is earlier than currently allowed by the act, and clarify the commission's authority to consider recent information respecting population that is not collected on a province-wide basis such as municipal population information. This information would be used along with the federal decennial census of population or a more recent province-wide census.

In conclusion, Madam Chair, I ask for your support of these important amendments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this time I would like to move an amendment to Bill 7, and I have the requisite number of copies for the pages to distribute in the House.

The Deputy Chair: We'll just wait a few minutes while they're handed out.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, before speaking directly to the amendment, I'll just preface with my comments on the overall bill in general. I would concur with the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose in his comments with regard to the need to make adjustments to the time frame for the appointment of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and I actually would like to commend the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General for appointing the Electoral Boundaries Commission and moving ahead with this process.

As we know, electoral law requires that all constituencies become reorganized when new electoral boundaries are set. In the interest of democracy and in the interest of moving forward, it is very helpful, especially to constituencies that experience significant changes in the electoral boundaries, to have those boundaries set far enough in advance of a provincial election so that the adjustments and the necessary reorganization of constituency associations may go ahead in a way that is well organized and with plenty of opportunity before the election.

My amendment – I hope that by now most members have seen a copy of it – deals specifically with the area that the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose mentioned, and that was the use of additional census information that is perhaps more recent than the federal decennial census information or a province-wide census. I'll just read it into the record. I move that Bill 7, Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016, be amended in section 3 in the proposed section 12 as follows: by striking out subsections (4) and (5) and substituting subsection (4) in subsection (3) and by striking out subsection (5).

Specifically, Madam Chair, what I am proposing to change is the elimination of the use of the additional census information, and the reasoning for this is very fundamental in terms of how electoral boundaries and how census information is collected. A census is essentially a snapshot in time. Truthfully, the information in a census becomes dated the day after the census is taken, and we realize this. It is a snapshot in time of the province's population, and the methodology for collecting the information is standardized across the province. It is, in fact, the same for all parts of the province, right across from one end of the province to the other. That, to me, makes it fundamentally fair to have the entire province considered in the same way.

Now, I realize that the intent of subsection (5) in the act that is being proposed is to allow the Electoral Boundaries Commission the leeway to use more recent census data; for example, census data that is compiled by municipalities. That's, to me, a fundamental issue because we know and I know from my experience in municipal government that municipalities quite often conduct at their own expense additional census operations in order to have the most up-to-date census numbers possible, especially if those municipalities are growing rapidly.

The rationale behind this is really quite simple. Many of the grants that municipalities receive, either from the provincial or the federal government, are done on a per capita basis. These municipalities know very well exactly what the number is that the population has to grow to cover the cost of doing the census. If the amount that they stand to gain from an additional number of residents is greater than the cost of doing the census, then it makes good sense for them to do that. I don't have any problem with municipalities choosing to do that. Clearly, the municipalities that are most apt to do that are ones that are growing rapidly and ones that, you know, for example, are larger because they have more to gain by doing this. My issue, though, Madam Chair, is that doing this provides a more recent snapshot of certain parts of the province than of others.

The other thing that cannot be standardized is the methodology. Many of the municipal censuses use different methodology, whether it's through different types of enumeration or different types of data collection; therefore, the type of data collection that is done in a municipal census is not always necessarily consistent with the data collection that is done in a federal or a provincial census that is province-wide. I think it is extremely important that a standard methodology and a standard set of data is applied across the province, is fairly applied to all areas of the province so the electoral boundaries can be drawn up on that basis.

I understand the desire of the Electoral Boundaries Commission or, for example, the Chief Electoral Officer to have more recent data. You know, in some ways I applaud them for their diligence and their desire to have the most up-to-date data they possibly can have, but my problem is that if that up-to-date data is only available for some parts of the province and is not available across the province, for all areas of the province, then, to me, that constitutes an unfairness to those parts of the province that do not have the financial resources to update their census on an annual or every-other-year basis. It, in fact, puts at a disadvantage those parts of the province where there simply isn't the degree of population growth to mandate having another census.

I will tell you, Madam Chair, that I have had some conversations, once again, with rural municipal leaders. They are concerned about this particular clause because they personally feel that this puts rural Alberta at a disadvantage. I don't think I need to remind this government that they already have a significant image problem in rural Alberta. The fact is that there are more and more things that are being done by this government that pile onto that image. When I told some of the municipal leaders that I deal with on a regular basis that this is being proposed within this bill, they said: there's another; there they go again. They're saying that each of these measures, straw after straw after straw that is put on the camel's back, is going to damage rural Alberta.

In the interest of fairness and the interest of the integrity of the data that is collected by a census in order to provide information to the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the purpose of drawing up electoral boundaries, I respectfully submit, Madam Chair, that that data should always be the most recent data that has been consistently gathered on a province-wide basis, whether that be through the federal or through the provincial census, and that we should not have a patchwork quilt of census information that may well have been collected at different times by different methodologies and therefore puts at a disadvantage those areas of the province that are unable to conduct a census on a more frequent basis.

That is the reason for my amendment. I would ask all members of the House to consider it and to vote in favour. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.
The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to the amendment. I appreciate the sentiment behind the amendment as proposed by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I also would like to thank him for providing that amendment. I think we saw it a couple of hours ago, so we had some time to consider it, which is very much appreciated. I do, however, have to disagree with his analysis.

I think, by way of history, it's important to clarify a couple of things. First off, this amendment is what's called a clarifying amendment. Currently it's the case that the act indicates that the commission can use other, more recent data. It's just not very specific about what it is, so this amendment would simply clarify the ability of the commission to use this information. In fact, in the 2009-10 redrawing of the boundaries this information was used by the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I think another thing that's really critical to note is that Alberta as a jurisdiction has one of the largest variances. We allow a 25 per cent variance in our margins. What this does is that it tends to allow wider variances between jurisdictions, so it tends to mean that in certain areas, usually rural areas, there are fewer people voting for each elected member. Again, in Alberta this is bigger than in other places, and that has been left the same. That was the case previously, and that will be the case after this passes.

The difficulty with using the decennial census information is that it has a disproportionate impact with respect to different regions in Alberta. It creates sort of a deep unfairness with respect to certain areas. Particularly, they tend to be areas that are rapidly growing. Just by way of example, since the last federal census was conducted, in 2011, Edmonton has increased by 12.4 per cent, or about 105,000 people, and Calgary has increased by 13.3 per cent, or about 150,000 people. That's a significant increase in that time period, those estimates.

The result of this is that, you know, even though we're expecting federal census data to start rolling out in about a year, this won't be soon enough to allow the commission to consider it. This would create sort of a deep unfairness to places that are rapidly growing because having old information considered in their case has a disproportionate effect relative to places that are not growing as rapidly. This, combined with the fact that we have the sort of higher allowable variance, would create some, I think, unintended consequences.

Some other things I think are worth noting. I had the opportunity, fortunately, to speak with the Chief Electoral Officer on this matter. He is supportive of the inclusion of municipal census data, of allowing the commission to consider municipal census data. He also indicated a couple of important things, I think, to note about the process. One of them is that for municipalities without current data, they're asked to give input to the commission. So if municipalities have grown and they're not taking census data, that input can be considered in other ways by the commission. In addition, municipalities also have a tendency to update mapping, so they can submit mapping that shows new subdivisions. That material is taken into account also.

This is simply to say that the Electoral Boundaries Commission considers more than just the numbers. Municipalities who don't have those numbers are still able to give input. In addition, a significant number of municipalities actually do do this work. Thirty-seven municipalities completed censuses in 2014, and 42 municipalities completed censuses in 2015, so it isn't just the large cities.

Overall, I think there are a number of reasons to see that this census information will actually create greater fairness. You know, input is allowed from all areas, so if there are concerns about certain municipalities and their methodology, there's no reason why that input couldn't be received by the commission. Really, what they're asking is just for express statutory authority to consider that information which they have already been considering in the past and information which is more up to date, which creates greater fairness for faster growing parts of the province.

As a result of that and as a result of the support of the Chief Electoral Officer, who, I believe, Madam Chair, in this instance would be considered the expert on what data is relevant and what data is best considered by the commission, I would urge all members to vote against the amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.

Are there any other speakers on amendment A1? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's great to rise today and speak to the amendment. I will be speaking in favour of the amendment. I think that the amendment provides some clarity when it comes to what data should and shouldn't be used. In fact, by the comments from the Solicitor General, perhaps we need to have an even more robust conversation around what should and should not be used. She'd mentioned that it is a clarifying amendment and a little bit more prescriptive in nature when it comes to what data they could or could not use. But for the purposes of debate today, I think that I'll stick to the discussion around the municipal census and some of the challenges that it faces.

Just mere moments ago we heard that last year there were 30 communities that provided a municipal census. Well, if I'm not mistaken, there are close to 200 municipalities inside this great province of ours. I know for certain that there are 107 towns. So to say that many communities do it, it's certainly a low percentage of communities that provide a municipal census.

The other information that I think is important is that if we look at communities like my home community of Carstairs, Carstairs has grown significantly over the past number of years, but through my experience on municipal council I know that they don't consistently or, in fact, at all do a municipal census. So the real risk here is that smaller communities, that don't have the additional resources to do municipal censuses, are, in fact, at a disadvantage. This particular amendment would provide some certainty and fairness across all of Alberta when it comes to the data that is available. Now, while I recognize that there are certainly some fast-growing areas of the province and that there are some unique circumstances that we need to take in, both growing and shrinking remain a challenge.

The other sort of interesting thought or question that I have is that it's my understanding that the federal census would be available in the early part of next year, in February, as I understand it to be true. Now, the larger census data will take quite some time to be released, but it's my understanding that just the actual numbers in terms of population will be out as early as the first part of next year. In fact, given the comments that the hon. member has made about it not being just the census data that they consider, perhaps the commission could go about considering other data until the first part of next year, when they have the actual census data, the most up-to-date information, which would be a true snapshot of our entire province.

My other slight concern about using the municipal census data is that I believe it's possible – and I don't have a specific example – that each municipality's process is slightly different. So it's possible that some municipalities would count nonvoters in their numbers, and others would only count those who are eligible to vote in a municipal or a provincial election. As a result it can skew the accuracy of that information. It's one of the reasons why I think it's important that we have a national standard, a province-wide standard, that levels the playing field for all Albertans and all Albertan communities and to make sure that we strike the right balance and that the commission has all of the information – the best information, the most reliable, the most consistent information – to make the best available decisions for all parts of the province, be it cities, towns, or rural municipalities.

It's for those reasons that I stand today to speak in favour of the amendment, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Any additional speakers?

Ms McKittrick: Madam Chair, I've listened to the arguments pro and in favour of this amendment. I find that what the legislation proposes is to give the commissioner access to a number of different tools. Some are censuses from municipalities or other tools that he might find appropriate to get the most accurate number of persons who live in each riding across Alberta. As we stated previously, what is really important about this bill is that we are seeking ways to make sure that everyone, every Albertan, has a fair chance to exercise their democratic right and that their vote counts.

I would like to urge all members to vote against this amendment and to continue to allow the commissioner to use census data as he or she feels appropriate, as stated in this bill.

I would like to call for the vote on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to exercise the opportunity to respond to a few of the points that have been made in the course of debate, so with the forbearance of the House, I would like to just say a few words. The minister is absolutely correct in stating that this is a clarifying amendment to clarify something that was done previously, the last time the Electoral Boundaries Commission was struck. You know, I'll be very honest with you. Just because it was there before doesn't mean it was necessarily good. I would suggest that that side of the House would be very familiar with that argument. I looked at this, and quite frankly I do have an issue with it.

I appreciate that the minister went and obtained commentary and input from the Chief Electoral Officer. As I was saying, actually, to the minister before the House convened this afternoon, I have tremendous respect for the Chief Electoral Officer. Many members of this Assembly will not know that the Chief Electoral Officer is actually relatively newly appointed to his position – last year's election was the first election that he presided over – but prior to serving as our Chief Electoral Officer, he served in the Ethics Commissioner's office. I will tell you that in his service as Ethics Commissioner I found him to be extremely conscientious and fastidious. He absolutely followed, you know, things to a T and was very good to work with. I found him extremely helpful, and I also found that he had an extremely high level of pride in the work that was done in the Ethics Commissioner's office.

I came to know the Chief Electoral Officer a little bit more during the brief time that I served on the Legislative Offices Committee when he made his presentation to our committee with regard to his annual budget. You know, I found that his presentation was very well put together, and it certainly reflected, at least to me, the interest of the Chief Electoral Officer in getting data that was the most recent possible. While I respect that and I understand his desire to have that, there's a fundamental problem with that, and the fundamental problem is that it's unfair. The fundamental problem is that we've got data coming in at different times and we've got data coming in that is taken with different methodologies, and that is fundamentally unfair. The data has to be collected at a time and in a way that is consistent province-wide. That is the only way to be fair.

Not wishing to cast aspersions on any municipality, but we know that one of the reasons municipalities conduct censuses on a more frequent basis is specifically in order to access a higher level of funding on per capita grants. Now, I don't blame municipalities for doing that. I think, you know, quite frankly, that's a good strategy. But part of what they also do is that they advertise heavily to encourage every single member of the municipality to make sure that they are counted. They say very specifically – they certainly don't try to hide it – that the reason they want everybody to sign up is because it means that they will maximize their per capita grants.

I don't blame them for doing that. You know, I don't say that there's anything negative about doing that, but the problem is that you've got, then, on the one hand, this census that has collected data in a different way, using a different process, in fact under the premise of maximizing the numbers for the purpose of the grants, and then you have the provincial or the federal decennial censuses, which are to provide an accurate snapshot of the community, and that is always the incentive to citizens to co-operate with the process. So I have a fundamental problem when we are using data that is collected at a different time and – make no mistake – is collected in a different way for different reasons when we should be using the same criteria province-wide for the establishment of electoral boundaries.

Now, as an aside, I will say that with the minister's comments with regard to the plus or minus 25 per cent variance, I am very glad to see that there is no consideration in changing that. I think, quite frankly, that's very important. I think, as we have all experienced in the Legislature, different members in different parts of the province have very differing types of responsibilities that they have to take care of.

You know, I'll give you an example. I'm into what I now call graduation season. In my constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster in the next two months I will attend nine high school graduations and two university convocations. A lot of my rural colleagues will tell you that they even have more than that. I speak with some of my urban colleagues, and they say: I don't have one high school in my constituency. Not to mention the fact – and we've talked about this before – that in terms of the sheer size of the jurisdictions, I consider myself lucky that I can drive right across my constituency in the rather short time of two and a half hours. I know, for example, that the hon. Member for Peace River is fortunate that High Level is her hometown, but the former Member for Peace River could drive from his home in Peace River to the Legislature in less time than it took him to drive from the farthest outposts of his own constituency. That may just boggle people's minds, but that's the truth. From Peace River to some of the communities in his own constituency was a longer distance than to drive from Peace River to Edmonton. I think these are the kinds of things that are important in consideration.

In specific regard to this amendment, I think it is critically important that we use data that is consistent. I think it's also critically important that that data be province-wide. I think it's also critically important that that data be collected at the same time.

Specifically with regard to the upcoming Electoral Boundaries Commission, they are going to be able to work with the federal census that is being taken right now. As my colleague the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills mentioned, that data will be available early in 2017, and it is certainly my hope that it is the main consideration or that it forms the main body of data that is used for the drawing of the new electoral boundaries. But I am deeply concerned about the electoral boundaries if they consider more recent municipal censuses that are specifically taken with the specific and express purpose of maximizing the population of rapidly growing jurisdictions. I think that that, quite frankly, Madam Chair, is fundamentally unfair, it's fundamentally wrong, and it certainly doesn't pass any kind of a scientific or statistical analysis.

You know, notwithstanding that I greatly respect the comments of the Chief Electoral Officer and his desire for the utmost accuracy, sometimes the fundamental principle has to be fairness, and in this situation I think that fundamentally that means we should use a province-wide census that applies the same methodology at the same time right across the province.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Where you stand may determine where you – no. I've got that wrong. Where you live may determine where you stand, I think, in this case.

Madam Chair, I've had the opportunity on several occasions as the former leader of the Alberta New Democrats to appear before the Electoral Boundaries Commission, twice before the provincial Electoral Boundaries Commission and once before the federal Electoral Boundaries Commission. At all times they were very interested in the most up-to-date census information that they could obtain – and that was regardless of whether or not it was province-wide census data or municipal census data – because they want to make sure that they have the best information possible by which to apportion the boundaries of the various constituencies.

Now, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has said that it's important that we collect the data. The problem, as he partly defined it, is that we're collecting data at different times – and I'll deal with that because I think that's his main point – but also that there's a problem if you collect the data in a different way. But all censuses, Madam Chair, whether they're a municipal census or a provincial census or a federal census, have to follow the determination of population regulation and the census manual, so it's not correct to say that municipal censuses collect the data in a fundamentally different way. They actually follow the same methodology for counting people.

Then I want to deal with his main point, which is that all of the data that's used has to be collected at the same time or it's not fair. That's an a priori assumption that the hon. member is making, but there are other factors. And you can see the point to it. You can see why it might produce unfairness. But he ignores at the same time the argument that information collected at the same time that is seriously out of date is also fundamentally unfair, and this is, in fact, the case, I think, that has been made by the hon. Justice minister when she talked about the very rapid growth that's taken place since the last federal censuses, which are 10 years apart, in Edmonton and Calgary. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has admitted that it is primarily those municipalities that are growing the fastest that have an incentive to do their own census.

I think that if you reduce the argument, you'll find that, in fact, if we use data that's 10 years old, which can occur if this amendment is passed, then you're very likely going to disadvantage rapidly growing parts of the province and provide a relative advantage to those areas that are growing more slowly. Now, in general but not entirely, the most rapid growth is taking place in the large cities, and the least rapid growth or, in fact, potential reductions in population may be occurring in rural areas. So if you reduce the argument, it's really an argument about providing advantage for rural areas by using, in some cases, outdated data, and that's not fair. That's not the balance that we seek to achieve.

We want to make sure that the census data is the very best and latest data, and in my view that will provide far greater fairness than the simple conclusion that all data must be collected at the same time or it's not fair. I don't believe that that stands, Madam Chair, and I believe that we should defeat this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 8

Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. A pleasure to be able to rise again and show my support for Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016. I think our discussions so far have been very, very positive across the board. There's certainly, I think, a consensus from all the speakers that we move forward to ensure that consumers can count on the government to make sure that there is a very high level of protection when consumers are looking at making major purchases and, of course, that whenever there are any outside agencies that are operating on behalf of the government, those agencies are held to the highest levels and are also accountable to government at the same time.

I think any of the proposed changes that are being made right now in Bill 8 will ensure that this is the case, that these agencies will be accountable to the government. When we're talking about delegated regulatory organizations, or DROs, what we found is that in every other piece of legislation that we have, there is that certain level of accountability to government that they have. Currently under the Fair Trading Act the one DRO that we have doesn't quite have that language there, so this will strengthen that and ensure that they have that high level of accountability to us.

I think, going forward, again, the discussion that's occurred in the House so far has been very, very positive, and I think we should be able to move on with this. I certainly encourage all of my colleagues across the House to support this, and I look forward to any other comments that we might have on this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016. Once passed, Bill 8 will allow the minister to oversee and review delegated authority, issue orders related to such a review, dismiss board members or employees if an order is not complied with, and appoint a representative of the minister to oversee the management of the organization and/or its compensation fund.

Wildrose has long had concerns with the operation of AMVIC, and it's now our hope that following the passage of this bill, the minister will act quickly to conduct a review of the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council. We do hope this measure allows AMVIC to function more effectively for the consumers it was created to protect.

Many of our concerns stem from a 2014 operational review conducted by Service Alberta. In mid-July 2014 the Minister of Service Alberta directed the department to conduct an operational review related to AMVIC's handling of complaint and investigation resolution practices. The operational review was conducted by the department beginning in August and through to October. I don't have time to go over all the details, but I'd like to take this opportunity to highlight a couple of findings that I think emphasize the higher level issues facing AMVIC.

The investigation found that AMVIC management had been operating in contravention of the Peace Officer Act for in excess of a year. Management had failed to properly notify Justice and Solicitor General that four of the peace officers listed as employed by AMVIC no longer worked there, which they were required to do within 30 days of termination of employment. Service Alberta found that AMVIC's memorandum of understanding with the Edmonton Police Service had expired 17 months earlier and had never been updated, nor had Edmonton police ever been contacted regarding the expiration of the MOU.

The potential consequences of this significant oversight were that the Edmonton police were no longer under the obligation to provide critical police-related services to AMVIC peace officers, which include prisoner acceptance and housing, conducting judicial interim release hearings on behalf of AMVIC, provisions of the Identification of Criminals Act, processing for Criminal Code charges laid by AMVIC peace officers, and entering the arrest warrants into the CPIC database. As you can see, this wasn't a small oversight.

However, I believe that the most damning revelations of the report relate to the relationship between AMVIC management and staff. If the public is to have any confidence in an organization, be it government, private business, or in this case a delegated regulatory authority, the organization must display that it has confidence in itself and the members that make up that organization. One of the biggest indicators of an organization experiencing low internal confidence is the voluntary staff turnover rate. This is where an employee voluntarily leaves their organization and is not terminated or laid off.

According to the Conference Board of Canada:

The average voluntary turnover rate over the past three documented years [2010 to '13] is 7.13% and based upon the relative stability of the Canadian workforce during that period, the 2013-2014 statistical rate is quite likely similar to the three year average.

Let's compare that to the number of voluntary staff turnover at AMVIC. According to the operational review conducted in the fall of 2014, the voluntary staff turnover rate at AMVIC in the prior two years was 55.2 per cent, and if you include AMVIC staff that disclosed during their interview that they were, “actively involved in seeking other employment,” that rate jumps to 76.3 per cent. This would place AMVIC’s voluntary staff turnover rate at seven and a half to 10 times more than the national average.

The operational review states:

Based upon the staff comments received during the interview process and the atypical voluntary staff turnover rate, it is evident that the majority of AMVIC staff have exhausted their faith, trust and confidence relating to the management aptitudes of the AMVIC Executive Director. No organization can grow or advance itself during extended periods of high employee turnover.

If the employees of AMVIC no longer have any confidence in the ability of the organization to fulfill its regulatory mandate and to protect consumers, how can the general public have faith in the organization? It is imperative that consumers have confidence in the system that oversees and regulates what is likely the second-largest purchase an individual will ever make, and that’s the purchase of a vehicle.

So I’m happy to stand with both the members in government and my opposition colleagues in full support of this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Minister of Service Alberta and of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is a pleasure to rise today and add to the debate at Committee of the Whole on Bill 8, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016. As I’ve mentioned before, the Fair Trading Act is Alberta’s key piece of consumer protection legislation. The proposed amendments will provide government with the appropriate tools to ensure organizations that government delegates to regulate an industry are doing their job by protecting consumers. At the end of the day when Albertans make a purchase like buying a car, they need to know that their rights as consumers are protected.

To assist in this debate I would like to provide specific detail on each of the amendments outlined in the bill. These amendments create powers that are similar to those under other legislation such as the Real Estate Act and the Municipal Government Act.

The bill begins by granting the minister broad powers to review the conduct and operation of a delegated regulatory organization or any fund administered by that organization. This authority includes the ability to compel the attendance of witnesses and production of documents similar to a commissioner under the Public Inquiries Act.

Once a written report is produced, the minister will be able to direct a delegated regulatory organization to take appropriate remedial action and to set a procedure for doing so. If this order is not followed in a timely fashion, the minister may then make further orders to terminate, suspend, or replace individuals in the organization and, if appropriate, appoint a person to take over the functions and duties of the organization. If these actions were to be taken, affected parties will be given at least 20 days’ notice and a fair opportunity to raise concerns in writing.

With that said, the bill also recognizes that in some circumstances immediate ministerial action is necessary to protect consumers. In those circumstances the minister will have the authority to take any of the actions that were just discussed without first ordering a review or providing notice to affected parties. However, even if these kinds of expedited actions are taken, an affected board or individual is not deprived of their right to be heard. Indeed, the bill contemplates that those affected by an order are authorized to request that the minister vary that order.

The bill ends by clarifying that delegated regulatory organizations will be responsible for the costs and expenses arising from participating in the review or complying with an order unless the minister directs otherwise.

I look forward to any additional debate on this bill, and I’ll be prepared to answer any further questions. However, I am and have been and continue to be encouraged by the debate on this bill and extend thanks to all members of this House for their comments and their support at Committee of the Whole.

Thank you very much.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 9, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect each in our own way. If you would bow your heads. The events in our province these past several days serve to remind us of both our weaknesses and our strengths. In spite of our technology and our wealth we recognize that sometimes we are vulnerable to the power of nature. The events also serve as a reminder of the strength our fellow Canadians show and give us through their compassion, their caring, and their support. It is our strength gained by our collective action as Canadians that will ultimately guide us through this very difficult time in our province.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark, and I invite all participants to sing in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me today to welcome one of the first classes that I've had the pleasure of introducing in this House in my 12 years in the Legislature, the most politically active class I've ever known. It happens to have two of my grandsons in it. I don't know why they're so interested in politics. I hasten to add that this group has also raised $5,000 in the last week for Fort McMurray. I'd like to introduce my two grandsons Koen Archuleta and Kace Archuleta. Please stand and be recognized. They're already famous. In the case of Koen it's for his style and his dancing. Kace is famous for his competitive sports.

I'd also like to introduce teachers and support staff: the principal, Sandra Trumper; the educational assistant, Mavis Clark; their teacher, Anne MacQuarrie; and parents and helpers Katharina Doyle, Susan Cress, Megan Stoddart, and Robyn Wanner. All the students of the grade 6 class from Sunnyside school please stand up.

The Speaker: Welcome.

If the House would indulge me, the $5,000 was only achieved by means of a co-operative venture. I'd also like to particularly introduce my daughter Robyn and my grandson Xavier, who is in the same class.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a grade 6 class from John Barnett school in the Edmonton-Manning constituency. With them today is Ms Peggy Wright, one of our dear friends and also a social justice advocate within our community, as well as parents Christine Waggoner, Brittney Rosborough, Pattie Sidlick. If I could ask all the students to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the staff, the parents, and the students of the grade 6 class at Blessed Sacrament school in my hometown of Wainwright. You know, the reason I'm really pleased and excited to introduce them is that this school was one of the schools that I taught in way back when, when I used to teach, back in 1994, in fact. So I hold this school close and dear to my heart. Would the people rise as I call out their names: Mr. Martel, Mrs. Degenhardt, Mrs. Laferriere, Mr. Morris, and the grade 6 class, please. Would the Assembly help me in welcoming them with the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today to introduce to you and through you the NDP caucus director of outreach, Garrett Spelliscy. Garrett brought his mom, Nancy Spelliscy, with him today in honour of Mother's Day. I would ask my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce a home-school group from the awesome constituency of Airdrie. The only thing that would make them more awesome is if they were, of course, from the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They are some very good friends of ours, and they are seated in the gallery: Julia Schoenroth, Cara Schoenroth, Everett Schoenroth, Allayna Schoenroth, and Saydee Schoenroth. They are fabulous community members. In fact, Julia is the lead organizer of a home-school group, that meets every Wednesday morning at the Crossfield Baptist church, called Classical Conversations, where 11 home-schooling families with 66 children come together and join in fellowship. I invite you to welcome them here to the Assembly today.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests for today? The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a couple of special people with the John Barnett school group. Most may know her as the nice lunch lady, but I know her as my beautiful sister Christine Renaud Waggoner and her daughter Beth Waggoner. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Update

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to provide an update on the wildfire situation in northeastern Alberta.

Our hearts go out to the residents evacuated by the wildfires. Fort McMurray, Anzac, Gregoire Lake Estates, and Fort McMurray First Nation remain under mandatory evacuation orders. Our focus remains centred on ensuring the safety of people, that they're safely evacuated, and that they receive the services that they need.

There is some welcome news today, Mr. Speaker. There was no significant growth of the fire overnight. It currently stands at 162,000 hectares. Fire conditions remain extreme, although the weather is beginning to give us a reprieve. The current forecast indicates a high of 11 degrees Celsius today, 40 per cent humidity. Winds will remain a factor at 20 kilometres per hour toward the northwest, gusting up to 40 kilometres per hour. Heavy smoke remains a concern, and we are monitoring air quality closely to ensure our first responders are safe. There are more than 500 firefighters bravely battling the blaze along with 20 helicopters, 15 air tankers, and many pieces of heavy equipment.

All evacuees are urged to register with the Red Cross no matter where you are. Please visit redcross.ca to register if you haven't already. As of this morning approximately 40,000 households have registered with the Red Cross. This will ensure that evacuees have access to the assistance that they need. There are currently 12 reception centres open within Alberta. As always, the best place to go for the most up-to-date information is emergency.alberta.ca.

As you know, the Premier, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and Mayor Melissa Blake are in Fort McMurray today to inspect the damage and to meet with the emergency management experts on the ground. Some media will also have access, supported by emergency services. Please note that it is still unsafe for anyone who is not a first responder to be inside the barricades. There will be some dramatic damage coming up this afternoon, and mental health supports are available for anyone who needs them. Co-ordinated damage assessments are happening today, and we are ensuring that vital emergency services and utilities are back online and operating safely as soon as possible.

It's important to note that there is no date yet when residents can return, but it will not be in the coming days. There will be a great deal of work to be done to make sure that our city is safe, for the health of the people, to live in again. Emergency services are working around the clock to begin the work needed to make this city safe again, but it will take time. I understand that this is difficult to hear, but the safety of Fort McMurray residents must remain our top priority.

The response to this massive wildfire from Albertans and Canadians has been incredible. The generosity continues to pour into the Red Cross, with donations of $54 million so far. The Premier will meet with industry leaders tomorrow, and we are in daily communication with industry throughout the Provincial Operations Centre. They have played an integral role in our emergency response efforts so far, especially with their assistance in housing and evacuating thousands of people who fled to the north of Fort McMurray. We've already begun operations about what will be required to revamp their operations and get them back up.

Government of Alberta ministries are supporting emergency response efforts to address the needs of evacuated residents in a number of ways. Cabinet has authorized $200 million in immediate disaster recovery program funding, and we will revise this number as needed. Our government will provide emergency financial assistance for evacuees in the form of preloaded debit cards. Adults will receive $1,250 and another $500 for every dependant. We are working hard to begin distributing the assistance, hopefully, by mid this week. Due to the scale and the logistics of this issue we will be asking people who are not in immediate need, who do not need to claim these funds right away, to please hold off. This will allow us to ensure that those who need it most can have it first. We will be releasing further details on how these cards will be distributed when that becomes available.

We will be hosting several town hall teleconference meetings over the next week to answer questions directly from the affected residents. These town hall events will be an opportunity to discuss the challenges facing our province and specifically the residents of Fort McMurray. We will be reaching out to evacuees to participate, and invitees will have a chance to ask questions throughout the calls. There will be several town hall teleconference events, and I encourage every Fort McMurray resident to take advantage of the opportunities to listen and to participate. These calls will happen tonight, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings of this week. Evacuees should register with the Red Cross to ensure that they receive the details of these calls.

If evacuees left behind documents such as drivers' licences or ID cards, new cards can be issued free of charge at a registry agent.

Alberta Agriculture and Forestry continues to work closely with the RCMP and the SPCA to address reports from evacuees asking for help with the pets that they had to leave behind when they fled so quickly. The SPCA has begun transporting pets to Edmonton, with about 200 arriving late yesterday. They will contact pet owners who have registered with them in the coming days. Alberta Health Services has mental health support staff at the evacuation reception centres in Lac La Biche, here at Northlands, SAIT, University of Calgary, Ambrose University in Calgary, St. Paul, and the Suncor Firebag site north of Fort McMurray. A government-wide wildfire recovery task force has been established to help with the recovery from this devastating wildfire.

Mr. Speaker, we know that this is a very difficult time for many Albertans, especially given that there are so many unknowns. I want to thank all of the first responders, everyone who has donated, and everyone who has offered to help the evacuees. We will continue to support you now and in the weeks and months ahead, and I know that the Premier will have further updates from the ground in Fort McMurray later this afternoon.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in this House to recognize all the amazing people from across this province – those from Fort McMurray, first of all; those in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, which I have the great privilege to represent; our friends, families, and neighbours in Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills – and, indeed, all of those across the country who have stood up in a time of desperate urgency to do what needs to be done without a thought to cost or inconvenience. In the midst of tragedy they have shown just what Albertans are made of, and it is hard stuff indeed, save for one part, their hearts.

I think it's impossible to overstate the contribution of first responders who have overseen the largest fire evacuation in Alberta's history under incredibly difficult conditions. It is the amazing work and expertise of first responders, their planning, and the swift and competent action of emergency services that made this possible.

I would like to thank all the unsung heroes in this emergency as well. It is amazing and inspiring how people can be when they see a clear and urgent need and they have the means to help. Without the selfless actions of so many who stood up without waiting to be asked, I have no doubt that things would have turned out much, much worse. During this time I've had the privilege of meeting and speaking with hundreds of evacuees, and for the vast majority of them I think the most apt description would be grace under pressure.

I know I can safely speak for all the volunteers along the way when I say that our doing our own bit to help is no burden at all but an honour that we will treasure for the rest of our lives. I'm honoured beyond words to represent such incredible people as those you will find in all the communities along the way that saw the need to help and did so without question. To all of the individuals and organizations supporting your fellow Albertans through this tragedy: thank you; you make us all proud.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Fort McMurray and Area Wildfire Relief

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The resiliency of our province in facing fires over the past week has had me more proud to be an Albertan than I was before. Families, communities, charities, and businesses from across the province have opened their arms, looking for ways to help those who have been touched by this crisis. The influx of donations is truly heartening. I was proud to be a part of a fundraiser last Friday that raised $15,000 for the Red Cross. This story isn't unique. All across our great province and across Canada the people are doing the same.

First responders continue to work tirelessly to protect communities and restrain this wildfire. When tens of thousands are fleeing Fort McMurray, these brave men and women ran towards the disaster. Without their help, expertise, and calm resolve I can't imagine where we would be today, and my thoughts and prayers and profound thanks go out to them. I was particularly touched this weekend to see the first responders taking time to brighten the days of mothers yesterday by handing out flowers. Stories like these show that in our times of greatest need Albertans are at their best.

I continue to be inspired by all those who are offering a hug, encouraging words, and a shoulder to cry on during this crisis, including the two Wildrose MLAs from Fort McMurray. Their leadership is exemplary.

Tens of thousands have lost so much but continue to be a source of strength, resilience, and pride. No one is alone as we go through this journey together. So many of my former colleagues in the energy sector do not know what tomorrow will bring, but we'll face it together head-on. We will rebuild, and we'll continue to provide a helping hand to those who need it most.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Fort McMurray Home Reconstruction

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last number of days sympathies have rolled in for the people of Fort McMurray from across Alberta, Canada, and indeed the world. For tens of thousands of men, women, and children who were forced to flee their homes, these words have provided peace during some of their darkest days. But with true Alberta spirit these families are eager to get back and rebuild their homes and live bigger, better, and stronger. To the Premier: what will the process be to inspect and assess homes in Fort McMurray for possible rehabilitation, and what is your anticipated timeline for this to happen, please?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our priority is, of course, ensuring that all Albertans are safe. Our fire crews have been working hard to save the downtown and as much as possible of the residential neighbourhoods. I'm so proud of the firefighters and the first responders for their excellent work in battling this fire; we all are. We know that they are doing everything they can to ensure that they have the necessary resources to address this effort.

In terms of giving a timeline, it really is going to be an evidence-based decision. I'm not going to stand in this House and give a deadline. Unfortunately, it won't be in the immediate, short-term, coming days. We need to make sure that the air is safe, the water is safe, the power is on, and the buildings are safe.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I know it's early, but residents want to start planning for the future now. Following the 2013 flooding that devastated parts of southern Alberta, the government issued sole-source contracts to accelerate the inspection and demolition of homes that were beyond repair. It's important for this government to procure resources now to begin reconstruction efforts given the long road to recovery ahead for these families. To the Premier again: has this government begun the process of awarding inspection and/or demolition contracts, and if so, what procurement methods are being used to do this, please?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that evacuees want to go home, and we want that for them, too, but we will not put them at risk in the short term. Right now the city is not safe for people. The water is not drinkable. There are limited supplies, and much of the city is without power. These things need to be addressed and dealt with before we can move forward with other steps around remediation. But I want to be very clear that it will not be safe in the coming days. When it is safe, we will make sure that we let everyone know. But please know that it is important that the mandatory evacuation is still in place, and that's because it's not safe.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, thank you. This government should be doing everything it can to expedite the return of affected Albertans to their homes. Insurance companies are already encouraging fire victims to begin the claims process as soon as they are able. Residents are eager to put on their tool belts and rebuild their communities. Following the 2013 floods, again, permits were required for any repairs but only after approvals were given by inspectors. Despite what was just said by the minister, can the Premier or the minister please provide details as to, firstly, how property owners should proceed to apply to begin the inspection and approval process, and ...

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We know that people want to get home; we want them to be able to go home, too. At this point it's premature to be able to draw those steps. We still need to make sure that emergency housing is in place. We need to move forward with short-term housing. It will take time. This is a disaster of extensive magnitude, and it is absolutely not safe to begin planning those steps for individuals at this point. Government is doing everything to get the right resources lined up, including getting emergency relief funds into the hands of the families to address their short-term needs. I know we want to think long-term, but at this point we aren't able to share those messages publicly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.
The Member for Airdrie.

Emergency Funding for Wildfire Evacuees

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, the amount of time that the people of Fort McMurray had to flee their homes was as little as 30 seconds. During this time many were unable to gather up precious mementos, let alone their wallets. Now, six days after the mandatory evacuation was issued, many continue to not have identification, cash, credit or debit cards. With over $55 million being donated to the Red Cross by generous Canadians who want to help, people are concerned about the delay in getting the funds to the evacuees and want to know how this money is being used. How can we ensure that this money is getting to where it is needed most?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. The generosity of Albertans, of Canadians, of people from around the world in going to redcross.ca and making contributions is something we are all incredibly proud of. In terms of getting those resources into the hands of those who need them most, certainly, the evacuation centres have been one of the central hubs. As well we are encouraging people to register on redcross.ca so that we know that they are safe and so we can get those transitional funds into their hands. We are hopeful that we will be able to begin doing that mid-week, so in the next couple of days. Certainly, this is something that we should be proud of, our generosity, and making sure that we get . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Mrs. Pitt: As Albertans, unfortunately, know, this is not the first natural disaster that our province has had to face. During the 2013 floods in southern Alberta it took five days for the previous government to begin to issue emergency funding debit cards. By this time Wednesday, when the week rolls around and details of the plan are announced, a full eight days will have passed since the people of Fort McMurray were forced to flee their homes. This discrepancy is leading to questions of why the NDP government is taking longer to allocate these much-needed funds. To the minister: why the delay for these crucial cards?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have certainly been working very quickly. Our public service has worked around the clock, and we are very grateful for their dedication. We know that the number of evacuees in this situation is extreme; 80,000 individuals is a very large number. We want to make sure that it's rolled out in a way that provides accountability and also easy access for those who most need the funds. We're hopeful that the money will be able to make its way into their hands in the coming days.

Again, the donations of clothes, of other necessities have been very much appreciated.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's most vulnerable are who I am particularly worried about during this crisis. Even if they were able to bring along their wallets when fleeing their houses, it doesn't mean that there is money in the bank account or that they had insurance for where they lived. As you can imagine, these individuals are being forced to make heart-wrenching decisions about how to carry on while faced with this hardship. Will the minister accelerate the process for the provision of emergency funds to not leave these vulnerable Albertans in the lurch?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, everyone is working as quickly as is physically possible to get these resources into the hands of those who most need them. In terms of addressing the needs of the most vulnerable, as I mentioned in my introductory update, if you do not need the resources immediately, please wait so those who are most in need have access to the funds as quickly as possible. Addressing the needs of everyone is certainly a priority for us. Again, register with redcross.ca so we can assess needs and help to address them in a timely fashion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Fort McMurray Energy Industry Wildfire Recovery

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These fires are having a real human impact for the people of Fort McMurray and right across the province. It's a reminder of how grateful we are to Fort McMurray and our energy sector for the prosperity provided not just to Alberta but to all of Canada. People know production has been cut by a million barrels a day, and people want to rebuild their neighbourhoods and their town as the economic engine of Canada. What timelines can the Premier give for when these people can get back home, back to work, and what resources will be there for them?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we know, Fort McMurray was already facing a once-in-a-generation economic slump due to the decline in the price of oil. Of course, this fire is compounding the pain faced by Alberta families and businesses, especially those in Fort McMurray. The challenges that we face are significant, but the people of Fort McMurray are tough and resilient, and Albertans are behind them. We will stand with them every step of the way as they continue to rebuild. Tomorrow the Minister of Energy and the Premier will be meeting with industry to discuss next steps.

Mrs. Aheer: We know the economic impact of these fires is already being felt far and wide here in Alberta and across Canada. This fire has meant for the people of Fort McMurray and across Alberta even worse news. We're already hearing stories of workers and contractors in all parts of the province losing work connected to the production losses in the oil sands. Albertans expect their government to have a plan to aggressively attract investment back to Alberta once Fort McMurray is back up and running. Does the government have a plan, and if so, when can Albertans expect that announcement?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Certainly, ensuring safety, as I've mentioned earlier, is the top priority for those who live in the community and those who work there as well. Initial reports about the damage to oil sands facilities have actually been quite encouraging – it has been very minimal – but we want to hear from the experts about the impact of the fire as well.

We have a cabinet task force that's already at work to determine how we can get the community rebuilt, to recover and emerge stronger than ever, Mr. Speaker. We will learn from the work that has happened in recent recovery efforts both in Slave Lake and for the Calgary flood, but we're certainly working with families, with individuals, and with industry to try to get things back up as quickly as possible.

Mrs. Aheer: Postmedia today tells a story of Tenille Tellman, a self-employed contractor who did not pay employment insurance and doesn't qualify for benefits. Right now she's with a family in Medicine Hat. We want to make sure that people like Tenille not only can survive but are provided assurances that Fort McMurray will be stronger than ever once the fires stop. What is the province doing to make sure that people like Tenille are taken care of and that Fort McMurray will get the full support from all levels of government to bounce back?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, you've heard a great deal from the provincial and federal governments, but also I need to commend our municipalities from across Alberta for really stepping up to help during this difficult time of transition. It's truly exceptional and a heartwarming example of the good citizenship that our municipalities show to one another. We have a great sense of gratitude, as do all members of this Assembly. Of course, the priority is to ensure safety but also to get people back up and working as quickly as possible. We will continue to convey what the infrastructure needs are to our federal partners as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Minimum Wage

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week in estimates the Labour minister agreed that she knew that there are about equal numbers of research studies that don't support an increased minimum wage and of those studies that do. Of course, a minimum wage policy with a 50-50 chance of destroying jobs for up to 300,000 Albertans, including many in the Fort McMurray area, is something that Albertans would be concerned about. To the Labour minister: why did you choose to pay attention to the evidence saying that a $15 minimum wage was good and ignore the evidence saying that it's not good, particularly at this time, when all of Alberta . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has been clear in supporting a phase-in of a $15 minimum wage. The opposition does like to speculate about some of the data around minimum wage, but here in Alberta nearly 1 in 3 who access the food bank are working people according to those who run the food banks in Canada. Why are they going to the food bank? Because they're using their income to pay rent, telephone, transportation, and other essentials of living, and this is wrong. We believe that all Albertans should be able to support their families without having to go to the food bank.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.
