Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, December 1, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Today is World AIDS Day, which gives us an opportunity to raise awareness, improve education, fight prejudice, and unite in the fight against HIV. Let us continue to support people who are living with HIV and remember and commemorate those people who have lost their lives in the battle.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Chair: We are currently on amendment A2. Any speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, for allowing me to rise and speak today in favour of my colleague's fine amendment to Bill 25.

Mrs. Pitt: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yao: Thank you.

This amendment seeks to eliminate the secondary 10-megatonne cap that would constrain upgrading done right here in Alberta. Of course, much has already been said about how ridiculous it is to limit our excellent, gold-standard energy extraction here by putting artificial constraints on the upper limit of production. We know that our locally operating producers are safe, they are reliable, and they are very respectful of world-class environmental standards. The oil sands are truly a marvel of engineering and skilled trades and labour and efficient management.

You know what? On that note, I saw Rex Murphy speak up in Fort McMurray very recently, and he compared the oil sands to the national railway. It was a massive feat of engineering to build, and it took people from British Columbia all the way to the Maritimes and everywhere in between. It was an effort that required all Canadians to work on and endeavour. For some reason it doesn't get the same recognition as the national railway, and that is unfortunate, but it accomplished the same feats. It brought all of Canada together, and it provided us with something that really boosted our economy.

It's absurd to be talking about more limits at a time when our economy needs to be unleashed – that much is already known – but then we've come to the matter of this little 10-megatonne side cap on upgrading. This 10-megatonne cap is every bit as absurd and perhaps even more so. You guys have to realize that we're talking about limiting the opportunity to take this product, that has already been taken from the ground – it's already extracted – and upgrade it here in this province, in this country.

Value-added production to the energy sector used to one of the few areas that even the NDP would support. I seem to recall watching many previous elections and debates, going back to the days when the current Infrastructure minister was the NDP leader, and there was always this theme that we needed to be doing more value-added production here in Alberta.

Now, I don't know if perhaps some of the more ecoradical elements have since seized control of this party across the way, but this 10-megatonne cap on upgrading strikes directly at this, and it truly does not make sense after taking the product from the ground. It is going to be consumed. We know that. It's not going back into the ground. This product will be taken and upgraded elsewhere. It is the ultimate carbon leakage policy. It creates conditions that will see our product taken to other jurisdictions, jurisdictions that are not always as stellar as ours – certainly, China would be a prime example of that – and it will be upgraded there, perhaps in conditions that are not as stringent.

Of course, we could also talk about how essential it is for the transportation of our product to upgrade it to a state that is easier to flow through a pipeline. There are companies here – right here in Alberta – that made tremendous strides in processing our raw product. It cannot be overstated how much this upgrading adds to the efficiency of existing pipeline infrastructure because the more upgraded you can get, the less supplemental products you have to add to get it to flow nicely. You see, this bitumen, when we're pulling it up from the ground, is a thick, thick product. As it is, we mix it with a lot of water to make it truly flow. We have to add a lot of solvents and a lot of other ingredients that make it more fluid, less viscous. But you need to spend money to buy those solvents, and they do use up capacity in the line.

Upgrading is about increasing the energy density per barrel shipped. It is about moving our product easier and more efficiently. It is also about a spinoff industry. It's easy to be tempted into thinking that the success of our oil industry is in the amount of royalties collected by the provincial government, but that's a very narrow way of looking at things. The strength of our energy industry has always been the tremendous economic activity that it generates in the private sector.

That spinoff activity is what is directly at stake with this 10-megatonne cap. These upgrading enterprises employ skilled trades, labour, engineers, chemists and on and on. They require the services of fabricators, oil service companies, suppliers, quality inspectors and more, and all of these groups are based right across this province. Not all of this is built in Fort McMurray or Cold Lake or Grande Prairie. A lot of this is developed right here, right around Edmonton, throughout our province here. There is no conceivable reason why this should be done in any other jurisdiction, by people other than Albertans. We have the expertise to do it here, the standards here, and we do it better than anyone. If the market has determined that there is a need for upgrading here, whether it is because it is more efficient or cost-effective or because it is needed to increase the energy density of our exports, there is no good reason it should not be done here.

We should also keep in mind that when we upgrade our raw products, we are essentially removing some of the heavier carbon products. These hydrocarbons that industrial processes sort out and remove have other applications, including asphalt, for instance. I'm sure I don't need to explain why something like asphalt would be important in Alberta, where there are tens of thousands of kilometres of paved roads.

I think I've touched on a couple of overarching themes here: first, the importance of keeping upgrading in Alberta to prevent further carbon leakage over and above what the NDP's policies will already cause; secondly, to keep spinoff benefits here, where market forces have deemed it economical to do so.

I've also mentioned that upgrading is about capacity. It's about using existing pipeline capacity more efficiently by creating a more fluid, energy-dense, and easier to transport product. Caps and other measures that limit production are diametrically opposed to increased export capacity. In fact, even the vocal anti-oil members of the NDP's oil sands advisory group know that. They know that building pipeline capacity when you have hard caps in place is contradictory.

Here's a perfect case in point. OSAG member Tzepporah Berman took to Facebook immediately after the Kinder Morgan decision to argue that Trudeau's linking of the approval to Alberta's cap is "disingenuous." This is a woman that is on the government payroll right now. She argues that we do not need the increased capacity because the long-term goal of capping and limiting production makes pipelines unnecessary. Ms Berman, in fact, claims that she has studied the numbers for hours and cannot find a need for the Kinder Morgan expansion. Just to clarify, she's on the government payroll. I suppose that, if nothing else, there's a certain consistency among the NDP's ecoradical wing. They know that a policy of increased pipeline capacity to ship our product abroad is wholly incompatible with the limiting policies here at home.

In closing, of all the policies crafted by this government to limit our energy development, this is perhaps one of the most bizarre and inappropriate. If I might provide a different comparison: our lumber industry. You know, right now we're selling a lot of raw lumber to Asia and whatnot, and I appreciate that. I appreciate the fact that they want our lumber. But the unfortunate thing is that here in Canada and Alberta we don't create a finished product with this. We don't make that furniture in a factory into that stuff we buy at IKEA. We're selling the raw product. This secondary 10-megatonne cap would be like if Alberta did have the factories to build finished wood products, putting a limit on that and saying: you know what; you can only use 10 per cent of your lumber to build chairs and other finished products, and the rest you've got to ship out as entire logs. That's a really sad thing here.

I urge you to vote in favour of this amendment that would at least make this bill slightly more palatable by eliminating the secondary 10-megatonne upgrading cap. It will only benefit us all.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this amendment. We have some issues with Bill 25 that this amendment can repair. In addition, this amendment actually is in keeping with statements made by the hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

As I mentioned last night but not all the members may have heard, on January 17 of this year the minister was quoted as saying, "The value-added (sector) really does mean high-paying, quality jobs that stay here in the province. If we have a choice between shipping raw resources or shipping a more upgraded or value-added product, we'll take the latter." We'll take the latter: this is what the NDP's own minister has stated, that he would prefer to see the high-paying, high-quality jobs in the value-added component of our bitumen. We have an amendment before the House right now that actually allows that to happen.

Just to reiterate a little bit, we already have a 100-megatonne cap. It only makes sense to maximize all of the value-added possible beneath that 100-megatonne umbrella. Putting a 10-megatonne cap on emissions from upgrading is actually counterproductive.

In addition, what we're going to have happen here is that this bill is going to stifle investment in innovation as new entrants have absolutely no certainty that emissions-limit space is going to be available to them once their technology is brought to market. Given that they are not going to have that certainty here in this jurisdiction, it only makes sense that they will take that technology someplace else. We have to make space for new entrants. We have to make space for new innovators, new companies coming into the market beneath that 100-megatonne umbrella, and we should not be limiting that innovation, that value-add by this 10-megatonne cap on upgrading.

Now, if we go to the executive summary entitled Alberta at a Crossroads, that was commissioned by this government right here, and we look at some of the recommendations that were made by the panel, the very first recommendation has the following statement under the heading Guiding Principles for Alberta's Royalty Framework. Point 3: "Supports downstream value-added industries. The framework encourages investment in activities and technological advancements that add value to Alberta energy resources such as upgrading" and a list of other items.

In the recommendations from the royalty review, in the statements made by the hon. minister of economic development and jobs, people are recognizing upgrading as a significant factor in the ability to value-add, to build jobs, to increase GDP, to improve even the amount of revenue coming into the government, which, Lord knows, this government needs. It only makes sense, I think, that this amendment be passed because it does these very things.

Furthermore, again from the royalty review report, recommendation 4:

Seize opportunities to enhance value-added processing.

Recommendation in brief:

- Develop a value-added natural gas strategy for Alberta.
- Examine opportunities to accelerate the development and commercialization of partial upgrading and alternative value-creation technologies for bitumen.

Here again the royalty review panel recognizes the enormous value in promoting value-add.

They go on to say:

Our abundant resources and infrastructure offer a strong case for expansion of value-added industries that use natural gas as a feedstock, including the conversion of bitumen to lighter products, petrochemicals, fertilizers and consumer products.

Our Panel recommends that Alberta develop a strategy to seize the opportunity presented by our shale gas resources and literally "bring the market to Alberta" by strategically setting the stage for the establishment of more downstream industries here in the province. Over time, we can reduce the longstanding competitive disadvantage that Alberta has faced by being located far from markets. This approach involves a long-term strategic plan that would span a number of decades but would ultimately diversify Alberta's industries with downstream uses for our hydrocarbons, offering more employment and economic stability. Our Panel recommends the Government of Alberta enlist the advice of experts to examine many questions that need to be addressed in determining Alberta's potential in this area.

Partial upgrading of bitumen offers another opportunity unique to Alberta's resources. It removes various proportions of the heaviest fraction of the bitumen barrel, allowing the partially upgraded bitumen to flow in a pipeline with little or no diluent.

This, in effect, increases the capacity of export pipelines . . .

Get this.

. . . by as much as 30%.

The panel recognized that using the innovative technologies specific to upgrading could increase the current pipeline capacity by 30 per cent. It's almost like having another pipeline without having to go through all of the hassle of getting the approval for a pipeline. Simply take upgrading, apply it to that bitumen, and less diluent is needed. Therefore, that oil can flow in that pipeline without the assistance of diluent, increasing the capacity of the pipeline. Increased capacity is increased jobs. Increased jobs is increased taxes.

I'll go on.

Our Panel recommends that the Government of Alberta, as a significant owner of bitumen through in-kind royalties, provide financial support to accelerate the commercialization of partial upgrading technologies.

In Summary:

Our recommendations, including the implementation of a Modernized Royalty Framework for Alberta, address the new realities that we face in getting value for our oil and gas resources in a highly competitive world. It's a world where a return to higher prices is not a given, because global competitors (in particular the United States) are fighting for our markets. From the research and input we received, it became clear to our Panel that our recommendations had to encourage innovation on many fronts – to reduce costs, to enhance efficiency, to improve environmental performance, and to attract investment to the province.

There we have it from the experts themselves, the royalty panel, who looked into this in detail, and here they are making a very strong and very clear case that upgrading provides an enormous potential, a potential that we must not limit through a 10-megatonne cap.

Some other statements made by the panel in setting the context:

Low prices may be a powerful attraction for "value-adding."

We hear this government complaining all the time about how low oil prices are, in their opinion, the only reason Alberta's economy is hurting. Well, then, what we need to do is really go after every value-add opportunity possible. The panel says:

Going beyond simple upgrading, refineries and petrochemical plants use oil and natural gas as feedstocks. These feedstocks represent a very high portion of the overall cost of the facilities, so refineries and petrochemical plants are attracted to places with abundant, cheap supplies of oil and gas. While low prices will limit the amount of value in our resources that can be collected through royalties, our Panel believes they could facilitate an expansion of processing capacity in the province, thereby creating additional jobs and sources of tax revenue for Alberta.

So here we have the experts saying what we've been saying for some time. When you've got low prices like this, use it to your advantage because it creates an opportunity for someone – and the value-add chain is that someone – and upgrading and partial upgrading is a significant player in that value-add package. It's something we need to strongly promote and not limit through a 10-megatonne cap.

Furthermore, from the panel again:

Our traditional sense of upgrading and refining is bounded by the processing of bitumen into Synthetic Crude Oil or refining it into transportation fuels. While the economics have not been kind to those activities, it is more the renaissance of U.S. light unconventional oil production in startling quantities that now makes traditional upgrading a challenging prospect.

However, our Panel has identified two other areas which we believe have significant promise and may deliver the benefits Albertans aspire to – that is, to add value to the products we extract here in the province.

Both of these opportunities are in keeping with Alberta's long history of taking strategic actions to maximize the benefits Albertans can derive from our province's natural resources. Ever since the Province obtained ownership of its natural resources in 1930, government has played an active role in encouraging value-added processing of oil and natural gas.

Over and over again the panel is coming to the same conclusion in their remarks, that we have an opportunity in this province, because of the resources we've been blessed with, to take it beyond just shipping raw, unprocessed product.

You know, Canada for generations – I remember that when we were studying history in grade school, Canada was known as carriers of water and hewers of wood. In the day when I was working in the lumber industry, we were shipping logs off the coast of British Columbia to Japan except that the logs never made it to Japan. The Japanese had plywood plants just outside the international limit, and they would gather the logs out there in the ocean, process them into plywood, put it on another boat, and ship it right back to us as finished product. We were giving away our logs and then paying a premium for plywood. This was back in the '60s and the '70s.

Well, fortunately, the government clued in, and we started seeing some plywood plants built. We were not benefiting from the value-add at all. Here we have another scenario where we've got an opportunity. We can take this low price of oil right now and turn that into an opportunity, an opportunity to upgrade, to attract investment. It's a sustainable investment. It's going to significantly improve the job situation here, significantly improve the tax revenue picture as well, and put some of our hundreds of thousands of men and women from the patch back to work into things that they understand and know, good-paying jobs.

I strongly urge each and every member in this House to support this amendment. It is very worth while. It provides everything that we're going to, you know – it's an attempt, rather, to fix this bill, that has a terrible component in it, where it's limiting Alberta, limiting development, limiting investment, limiting jobs. Well, let's not do that. Let's not limit ourselves like that.

I would promote this amendment strongly. I hope that everyone will please vote for it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to stand and speak in support of this amendment also. I think we've heard a lot about the desire to have more value-added products right here in Alberta. Of course, there are many benefits to having value-added products right here in Alberta, having that value added here. Of course, one of the biggest things is jobs. Right off the bat, you know, we're sitting with a hundred thousand fewer jobs here in Alberta, not including the loss of contractors and the contractors that are underemployed.

We have a government here that's promised to create a hundred thousand jobs. Obviously, they've got a 200,000-job deficit in what they've got planned and what is the reality today. Now, we sit here with a bill, Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. It has a 10-megatonne cap on upgrading. Now, upgrading is a process that could take place right here in Alberta, and that will create jobs right here in Alberta, Madam Chair. I can't understand the reasoning behind a cap on jobs, really. It really is a cap on jobs. So we have a problem here with a bill like this, that is capping jobs.

Now, another thing: upgrading technology is used to increase the quality of our oil sands products. It also helps it flow down pipelines. It increases the value of our raw product, and it increases its ability to flow down pipelines. Another thing it does is that you can flow more oil down existing pipelines.

Now, obviously, there is a great desire here in Alberta to have more pipelines to new markets. Recently we've seen the federal government approve the expansion and replacement of two existing pipelines, one going to the U.S. and the other one going to the B.C. coast in the south. That's great. Increased capacity flowing out of Alberta is good. But, Madam Chair, if we're capping upgrading which can increase the amount of oil to flow out of Alberta, we're actually capping pipelines, the ability for pipelines to take our product out of our province to market. So not only are we capping jobs, but we're capping pipeline capacity.

Now, some of these pipelines are designed to take our bitumen away, our oil away, but also they have to return the diluent. So there's waste here as well, a waste factor, where these companies are spending extra money to transport two products, one one way, out of Alberta, one back, just so they can get their oil to flow down these pipelines. This upgrading would reduce that need. We'd have fewer products having to be trucked or pipelined back to Alberta because this process would replace that.

Right now we ship our bitumen mixed with condensate. Of course, that adds volume to our bitumen, which means less product gets into the pipeline. Of course, then, what do you do with this condensate afterwards? Now, there is a rising demand for diluent, and that's led to a condensate shortage in western Canada. The oil sands companies use approximately 350,000 barrels per day of this. One barrel of dilbit, or diluted bitumen, is made up of three parts bitumen, one part condensate. That means that the pipeline capacity is not being used efficiently. It's being used to flow something that isn't needed at the end. It's only there to allow the oil to flow.

Now, another factor here is that this oil is going to have to be upgraded somewhere. That's a no-brainer. It has to happen. So why can't this happen in Alberta? I don't understand why it can't happen right here in Alberta. By putting a cap on this, companies will sit and look at this and decide: okay; do I want to invest any more money in upgrading in Alberta when there's a cap on emissions? Probably not, because they don't have an opportunity to fully expand their business to where they might want to take it. Madam Chair, I mean, it's a cap on jobs, a cap on pipelines. It has to be done somewhere. Companies, of course, are forced now to make a decision: do we invest here in something like this or not?

This is a very classic example, a very common-sense, classic example of carbon leakage. We're going to restrict the ability for this to be upgraded here, knowing full well that this is going to have to be upgraded somewhere else, quite possibly and most likely in a jurisdiction that doesn't have the environmental standards we have here or even the social standards: taking care of its people, employees, work standards, things like this. This makes no sense at all.

Now, we have significant bottlenecking in pipelines resulting from congestion, and we're trying to get our oil to the markets. We only have limited capacity right now. That's why we want pipelines. That's why we want pipelines in every direction. It's because we need to get the oil to market. There's no need to cap the opportunity to transfer our oil to the end market. We're lacking in capacity.

We know that members of the government caucus protest pipelines. We know they've hired antipipeline activists that are still actively campaigning against pipelines. Can you believe it, Madam Chair? This government suggests that they support pipelines. Meanwhile they hire anti-oil activists that are still to this day actively campaigning against pipelines – does that make sense? – paid for by Albertan taxpayers' money. They're going to sit here and suggest that this cap on upgrading is somehow helpful. It's not helpful. It's damaging. This 10-megatonne cap on upgrading could put Alberta in a position where we are unable to effectively transport our product to markets.

Madam Chair, the end result of this process, the process of upgrading, is refinery-ready synthetic crude oil shipped without diluent. That's what the end result of this process is. It allows us to create a product from our raw product that's refinery ready and can be shipped without diluent. Diluent is expensive, it has to be taken care of at the other end of the transport, and there's a shortage of it. If you have a government that's apparently against pipelines, because they hire people that are against pipelines, then why would they be putting in a bill like this to cap a process that would reduce the need for a pipeline to transport the diluent back? I don't know. Maybe somebody could tell me, but I don't know. There seem to be lots of comments flowing back and forth, but I don't see anybody standing up to talk.

Clear and simple, upgrading means jobs. Upgrading means pipeline capacity, getting our product to market. That's what upgrading means, and a cap on that is a cap on jobs, a cap on pipeline capacity.

It also means one hundred per cent carbon leakage. What doesn't happen here will happen somewhere else. Now, we're the most environmentally regulated petrochemical jurisdiction in the world, and we're proud of that. We should be proud of that. We should be the most environmentally safe jurisdiction in the world. We should be, and we are. Sending our product to be upgraded somewhere else is the classic definition of carbon leakage. That's what it is: carbon leakage. This process is going to happen somewhere else regardless, and it's going to happen somewhere where the environmental regulations aren't as safe or restrictive as ours.

Now, this upgrading needs to be led by the market, by private investment. And it can be if you remove the cap. Like I said, these companies are going to have to make a decision: am I going to invest in Alberta in upgrading? It's a big investment. The returns on it, I'm sure, are very tight. But it makes less sense when they realize that they're up against a cap.

The government keeps talking about value-added, so this is a contradiction of their very own statements. What if the private sector sees the ability to create upgrading opportunities beyond the cap? Now we've even more severely hampered the ability of the private sector to become involved in responsible production. The government preaches on and on about value-added. They preach about jobs. This creates a problem with investor confidence, and global competitiveness will slow down an economically viable value-added upgrading that already exists here, that could be expanded. Now, our energy sector has the ability to innovate, and they have the ability to create new and more efficient ways to produce, to upgrade, to create markets, but this 10-megatonne cap on upgrading emissions doesn't help that. It hinders it.

Now, there are multiple reasons, of course, why we want pipelines. We need to get our product to market. We need to get more of our product to the markets and to new markets. By doing so, that increases the value of our product. If you have more competition for the purchase of your product, you'll get full value for it. If you only have one market to sell it to, you're going to get less. This cap, that reduces the opportunity for our product to flow, not only restricts the opportunity to sell volume but the price we get for it in return.

Now, in the Wildrose we believe in pipelines to get our product to market, to increase its value, to increase the amount that we can get to the market. It's not about politics. It's about jobs; it's about our economy; it's about social programs that we pay for with the taxes that we get from this product. None of the government programs can survive without a strong economy, without tax dollars coming in. That's why we need things like value-added production right here in Alberta. That's why we need upgrading here. We need upgrading here so that we can create jobs, so that we can have a strong economy, so that we can get our product to market.

We must allow the industry the ability to be competitive and create an environment for investment and an environment to be innovative. This cap on upgrading is extremely short-sighted. It doesn't show any leadership. It doesn't help emissions on a world-wide scale because it's going to happen somewhere anyway. Shouldn't we be concerned about all emissions? This attacks our prosperity.

The government would need to be able to predict where long-term market demand lies and what technological advancements are pending to decide whether the economics support this cap, but I'm going to suggest that this government has not done any sort of study on this. I don't know that we've seen a study that this government has done, either an economic study, any kind of cost analysis, any kind of return-on-investment study, any kind of environmental study, to see what results their legislation is going to have.

Mr. Nixon: We saw one on minimum wage that leaked.

Mr. Loewen: Oh, that's right. We did see one, but it was leaked.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, I'd like to thank the members for speaking about this amendment. I'd like to read a few little things here. Karen Mahon: there will be mass protests; there will be lawsuits; this will become a hotly contested issue in the coming B.C. election, and this pipeline will never be built. Now, let me see. What else do I have? Ms Tzeporah Berman: I don't support this pipeline; I am going to do hard work to develop policy recommendations in the boardrooms, and if it comes to it, I am going to stand on blockades. These two folks are on the OSAG panel. They are paid for by Albertan dollars but are vehemently opposed to pipelines.

Now, the interesting part of that is that we're talking about the 10-megatonne cap on upgrading. Last night I went over some of the aspects of upgrading and the necessity for upgrading. As it's been said previous to me today, we have had members of the government, when they were sitting in opposition, fighting for upgrading, and the reason is because it gives us more control over our market. When we upgrade, we have flow through pipelines.

Now, if we're looking at the 100-megatonne cap, we're already capping production, so this cap, just to reiterate, is going to stop us from being able to upgrade in our province, where we do it better, where we can control the environmental. So much amazing innovation and technology has come from our folks here in this province in order to do better because, believe it or not, they actually care about that. They actually care about the footprint. They actually care about making sure that they are reasonably and responsibly developing our products and putting them into a pipeline and getting them to the global market, which is why I thought the government was excited about pipelines. It was to get to tidewater, no? But now you want to put a cap on actually putting products in a pipeline.

If you look at some of the other comments that were made by these OSAG panel folks, they're talking about limiting capacity.

That's completely counterintuitive and contradictory to what this government said yesterday.

Upgrading technology is used, actually, to increase the quality of our oil sands products, and by doing so, we will be able to save money on the value-added side of things. We're actually going to be able to create jobs here in Alberta. This cap is not just a cap on production. It's not just a cap on upgrading. You're capping jobs.

Again, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade talks continuously, and rightly so, about creating jobs in this province, about who those job creators are. There are all sorts of things that are coming out from government about job creation. Well, here's a real easy fix. How about not capping a sector that actually creates jobs? Just a thought. How about actually looking at the sector that is part of the fabric of what made this province great in the first place and not capping that either on the side of the 100-megatonne cap or – I mean, this 10-megatonne cap on upgrading is ludicrous. I would love to have somebody on that side of the House stand up and tell me my why. In fact, I'd love to know where the number 10 came from. Why 10? Whose idea was that? I'd love to know, and I'd love to have that conversation if somebody could tell me why.

I mean, upgrading is intensive. We are breaking down large molecules. This is an incredible, miraculous development. Again, the government talks all the time about made in Alberta. Well, there you have it. Why are you capping a made-in-Alberta energy sector job-creating industry? Why? Somebody please stand up and tell me why.

You know, there are many, many, many interests outside of this province that are laughing at us and applauding this government for keeping our oil in the ground. Now we're going to add to that. Now they're going to also clap because you're going to keep it out of the pipeline too. Well, that's intelligent. Let's think about this. You're going to cap production, and you're going cap capacity. Really? How does that work? It's interesting. There are competitors everywhere globally that are going to be so unbelievably grateful to this government for stopping production here because, as the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky said, we are going to leak jobs, and we are going to leak production elsewhere.

Is that really what this government wants? Really? Yes. Okay. Good. You're nodding. That's wonderful. At least you're being truthful to Albertans that that's what you want. Somebody stand up and say no, then. Tell me, then. Somebody on that side stand up and say: no, we don't want to leak jobs; we don't want to leak our products to other jurisdictions that are actually going to produce when we don't. I'd love for you to say that you don't want to do that. Please do.

An Hon. Member: We don't want to leak jobs.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah. You can have your turn. I would love to hear that. And I'd like you to tell me: if that's the truth, then why are you capping production? It seems a little counterintuitive. You are giving our piece of the market to somebody else, and on top of that you're giving it to markets that do not do it as well as we do. Produce here. Market here. Bring the jobs here. Be on the side of Albertans. Stop the capacity caps. Stop the production caps. You have every bit of power to do that. You have every ability to do that. So why not do it? Remove the caps. See how things are going to go with the pipelines and allow the industry to do what it needs to do. Do you know that even with the pipelines that have been approved, we still don't have enough capacity? We need all five of those pipelines. I'm sure you know that.

I'm telling you right now that it doesn't make sense to Albertans that you're saying that you're in favour of pipelines but that you would be reducing capacity into those pipelines, that you're actually stopping that.

There was another interesting point that was brought up here. We talk about the private sector. What if the private sector was interested in investing in this? Right? When the Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure was on this side, he talked about that, not even about the private sector necessarily but about creating upgrading jobs in this province. If the private sector is interested and the government has said that it's going to need $10.6 billion of investment, why would you stop investment from coming into the province? Albertans are looking to you to make good decisions. This is bad policy. It's policy that doesn't make any sense. It's counterintuitive to production.

We have all been saying here in this House, even on the government side, that we are the most environmentally responsible. We've heard that come out of the government side in the last few months. Thank goodness for that. That's wonderful. But you've got to back those words up with actions. That's the only part of the climate leadership action plan that is actually happening, the actions part, but it has no changes in climate. There are no emissions changes with this at all. None. So that's gone. Where is the leadership? I'd like to know that. And no plan. None. How are you rolling this one out? That's going to be interesting to see. I'm going to be interested to watch how that happens.

Canadian oil is the best, most ethically and environmentally produced in the world. And you, the government, are hiring people on panels to actively campaign against our oil in this province, actively campaign against our industries, our people, the people you represent. How is that okay in anybody's world? You are actively hiring people to actively campaign in our province against our sector.

You know, people like Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon: don't you think that they maybe should be removed from the panel? They've said their two bits. The funny thing is that the panel is not even going to give us any information until after this legislation is rammed through.

Mr. Nixon: Who put them on the panel?

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah, that would be interesting. I'd love to know who put them on the panel.

If you think about that, if you just think about that one little aspect, then the other interesting part is that you have all of these anti oil sands activists coming online right now and tweeting and facebooking about all of the things that they're going to do to stop the good work that's been done. Why is the government not actively standing up for Albertans and going: "Whoa, whoa, whoa. You know what? We brought these people, a diverse group, onto this panel to have a discussion, but these guys are actually going against the people that voted us to represent them."

Can you honestly tell me that Tzaporah Berman and Karen Mahon represent your interests? Please stand up, then, and tell me that they represent your interests. Say it to Albertans. Say it to Albertans, by all means. You appointed her, so stand up and defend her. Defend Karen Mahon and defend Tzaporah Berman and what they're saying. Please do. It would be wonderful if you can do that because then maybe Albertans will understand. The average Albertan is looking at these tweets and looking at this Facebook stuff and they're just shaking their head. They know how you feel. Do something proactive: remove those folks and bring somebody else on that actually understands Alberta and understands what we're trying to accomplish here. That's not too much to ask. I think that's a very reasonable request. They've had their opportunity, and they have stepped out and put their ideas forward about what they felt, and it's counterintuitive and contrary to the Alberta way of life, to what we're trying to accomplish here. If you actually are wanting to change emissions, if you're actually wanting to change the footprint, there are ways to do that, but you have to be involved with the innovators. Like, honestly.

If you have good reasons why these folks should be there and that they're doing their job representing Albertans, please stand up and defend them because I cannot, for the life of me, come up with any good reasons why those two should be on that panel, especially if they're not willing to at least give good feedback as to what it is that we can do better. There have been no releases of that. Actually, everything that has come out from them is anti oil sands, keeping it in the ground, that we are Mordor, that we have dirty oil, that we are going to kill animals along the route, that Albertans don't care about their earth, air, and water. Really? Is that how you want to be represented?

You are the voice of Albertans and a petroleum-producing jurisdiction. You are the voice. You're the government. Your voice, going forward, is that you don't support Alberta industry, the energy sector, and you would rather side with environmental activists who want to keep our products in the ground. I don't understand. I can't reconcile that. I would love to hear how it is that you defend these two that are actively campaigning against Canadian oil. You know, like, really, it would do so much service and give so much credibility for the government to be able to do that or at least reappoint other people that might actually have that ability to be able to bring the environmental aspects together with what is better for Alberta.

You keep talking about balance, right? This feels very unbalanced to me. It's a very unbalanced panel, so bring balance. You have the ability to do that. You are the government. You are, and you have the ability to do that. It takes strength, and it takes leadership, so do that.

Remove this cap. Remove both of the caps, actually. Removing that 10-megatonne cap would show that you're listening to Albertans, that you're listening about the importance of this industry, that you're listening to how much capacity we actually need and what it means to actually get those products into the pipeline and what it means to upgrade here in our province instead of leaking jobs and carbon into other jurisdictions, where we cannot keep an eye on what's going on, especially not with our incredible regulatory process. If we're doing it here, the government has every opportunity to be able to monitor and watch that and actually be the cheerleaders of this industry, actually be the ones that say: "Look, here is what we are planning to do. Here's the leadership plan we're going to do with our folks in this province under our auspices of what we're trying to accomplish."

Instead, you're literally, with these policies, allowing other jurisdictions to come in and produce where we're not. I don't know how you reconcile that, especially when we all know we do it better here. Alberta is the place. Honestly, everybody should be, like, just jumping for joy, loud and proud about how well we do it here, and bringing those folks in and embracing investors to come into our province and embracing those people to come in and have faith with what we can accomplish here together, but you are actively pushing these folks away.

I mean, that's in my discussions. I have the privilege of being part of this portfolio, so I talk to a lot of people in this sector. I know the government keeps talking about the large corporations that have stood up with you, and that's fine. But there are a lot of folks that work for those corporations – regular, average, everyday Albertans like the rest of us – that are very concerned about the policies of this government because, at the end of the day, no matter what the corporation is saying, when there's attrition within those companies because they're not able to create capacity and they're not able to create jobs, guess who gets the axe? It's the workers.

You know, the truth is that every time a policy comes in that caps prosperity, you're looking at destroying jobs. It's completely related. I know that the government doesn't want to destroy jobs, but you're actually going to do that with jobs in this province by destroying the industry with really terrible policy.

We're asking you to take a look at this. Please don't ram this through. These are really, really reasonable requests, and the thing is if you can take the time to look at it and look at what it's actually going to cost in the long term, by 2025 to 2040, and the billions and billions of dollars that you're going to take away from Albertans, from our children, all of our grandchildren, infrastructure, everything else that is going to build this province in the future, even moving toward other types of alternative energies. All of these industries are interested in all of those things, so why are you capping their prosperity and their availability to do that? Shouldn't we be rewarding good behaviour? I mean, I don't know. That would be my thought.

Did you know that there's a rising demand for diluent? That has led to a condensate shortage in western Canada, and the oil sands companies use approximately 350,000 barrels per day. I said this yesterday. One barrel of dilbit, or diluted bitumen, is made up of three parts of bitumen and one part condensate, so you're actually lowering your ability to utilize all of your pipeline capacity. If you realize that by limiting upgrading, you're relying on condensate, that also means upgrading jobs are going to get moved elsewhere. That's what we're talking about with the jobs leakage. If we're upgrading here, that means less of that goes into the pipeline, and you have more product actually going into the pipeline, and you can take credit for being job creators, which would be wonderful. It adds so much to the credibility of the government to understand that this is so short-sighted. We don't have enough capacity here at all, and upgrading jobs could increase, like, the energy density, and they improve pipeline use. These are all really, really good things, but you're going to cap that.

Did you know, too, that the bill exempts experiments, potentially, and not proven techniques? Like, even the proven techniques are energy intensive, you know? But they actually increase the energy density of products that are shipped and actually end up reducing overall emissions. Isn't that interesting? Why would you want to cap that? At the end of the day, the payout is not what you think it looks like on paper.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on amendment A2.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. We have actually quite an interesting situation occurring here in this House today. We have a number of members on the government side of the House that are refusing to speak in support of their government's own position on a number of fronts. It's creating a credibility problem again for this government.

We haven't had anyone on the other side of this House stand to justify the appointment of three panel members to OSAG who are actively to this very day promoting a leave-it-in-the-ground agenda, promoting the stoppage of construction on pipelines. So three of the members that this government appointed working actively, yet not one of the members on the other side of this House this morning is standing in any attempt to justify those appointments.

The second credibility problem we have is that this panel, albeit stacked somewhat with antipipeline activists – this government is trying to pass Bill 25 without even hearing from OSAG. We have yet to receive a report. It's a complete waste of taxpayers' money, and it certainly gives evidence to the theory out there that the OSAG panel was really nothing more than window dressing. Yet we have no one on the other side standing up today to get their words into Hansard, on the record, justifying ignoring the reality that we haven't heard from OSAG. There's been no justification from the other side whatsoever why we should pass Bill 25 now and not wait for a report from this OSAG panel.

Credibility problem number three: no one on the other side here is willing to stand in this House to get on the record to justify contradicting the words of their very own Minister of Economic Development and Trade, who specifically said on January 17 of this year that "the value-added (sector) really does mean high-paying, quality jobs that stay in the province. If we have a choice between shipping raw resources or shipping a more upgraded or value-added product, we'll take the latter." Those are the words of this Minister of Economic Development and Trade, yet no one on the other side of this House has stood to get on the record any kind of justification for contradicting those words through this 10-megatonne cap.

Credibility problem number four: no one on the other side of this House has stood in this House to get on the record to justify contradicting the royalty review panel's own recommendations regarding upgrading. I read into the record the words of that panel. Albertans paid for that panel. The government said that this was going to be the panel of experts to guide the government in its policy direction regarding resource development in this province. Here we have a bill before us that contradicts the very words of that panel, yet not one person on the other side of this House has the backbone or intestinal fortitude to stand up and justify why you're ignoring the recommendations of the royalty panel, that the taxpayers of Alberta paid good money for.

Over and over again in this debate on this particular amendment we have heard nobody from the other side willing to stand up and get on the record. We've heard a lot of chirping, a lot of empty-headed chirping, but we have had no one stand up, Madam Chair, with the guts to defend their position, where they are contradicting the royalty review panel; contradicting the words of their own minister; contradicting plain sense, common sense; refusing to wait for the OSAG report; and refusing to justify having three antipipeline activists on the OSAG panel to begin with.

Madam Chair, this government and this caucus over here have no credibility with the good people of Alberta. They've been watching. They are not ignorant people. They know full well what's going on. This government and that caucus say one thing one day and another thing the next. They run from crisis to crisis to crisis of their own creating, trying to solve this crisis and that crisis, when, in fact, it is this government and this caucus that are putting the holes in the dike and trying to plug it with all their fingers and toes. They can't keep up to the damage that they themselves are doing.

Madam Chair, this is a perfectly wonderful amendment that is an honest-to-goodness attempt to solve a problem that this government has created. Out of one side of their mouth they're saying: we believe in value-add. But their actions speak louder than their words. They introduce a bill that is absolutely contradictory to the concept of value-add by putting a 10-megatonne cap on upgrading, and they are not heeding a perfectly good amendment.

I believe that we have heard a great deal about the value of this amendment. We have heard nothing from the other side but chirping. I believe, Madam Chair, it's time to call the question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to take the opportunity to rise in the House today and speak against this amendment. I want to take the opportunity right now to reiterate that the oil sands industry came to us and they asked for this 100-megatonne cap. They asked for this 100-megatonne cap because they knew that in order to get pipelines, we need to act on climate change. The 100-megatonne limit . . . [interjections] I'll wait, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Luff: Thank you. The 100-megatonne limit in addition to the 10-megatonne cap on upgrading shows that Alberta is serious about limiting their emissions. I think it's absolutely clear from comments by the Prime Minister yesterday and from interactions between our government and Ottawa at a host of levels that Ottawa's willingness for the first time in decades to approve new pipelines to move products from Alberta to offshore markets and increasing value for Alberta and Alberta companies . . . [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, Calgary-East has the floor. Please.

Ms Luff: . . . was significantly based on the climate leadership plan.

I've heard this quote before but will say it again. This is from the Prime Minister of Canada.

Let me say this definitively: We could not have approved this project without [the Premier of Alberta] and Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan – a plan that commits to pricing carbon and capping oilsands emissions at 100 megatonnes per year.

It's abundantly clear that this cap is one of the reasons that we got pipelines to tidewater, and if you oppose the 100-megatonne cap, you are functionally opposing pipelines, and you are functionally opposing our ability to have jobs here in Alberta. [interjections]

Mr. Westhead: Point of order, Madam Chair.

The Chair: A point of order has been raised.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Westhead: Yes, Madam Chair. Thank you very much. I just rise on a point of order under 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I want to point out the fact that it's pretty rich that the opposition, who just asked for us to get up and explain our point of view – and the Member for Calgary-East is doing that – don't seem to be listening, so I would suggest that maybe they should be quiet and actually listen to what we have to say if they've asked us to do that.

Mr. Hanson: I hesitate to rise to even respond to that ridiculous point of order. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah. Madam Chair, I believe that stating that members of the opposition side of this House oppose pipelines is language likely to cause disorder.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the point of order?

Hon. members, when I sit here in the middle and I listen to both sides, I try to find a balance. As you are well aware, I do try to give a fair amount of leeway in the give-and-take, back and forth. I did notice, though, an escalation when the latest member tried to speak. You did, as the hon. member pointed out, request that somebody from this side speak, so let's try to find a better balance and tone it down just a little bit. Show respect on both sides. I'd appreciate that.

Debate Continued

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will continue to make my points, and if it gets so loud that folks in the House can't hear what I have to say, then perhaps they can read it in Hansard later.

All right. My point so far is that without this cap, we wouldn't have been able to have the success that we had two days ago in getting pipelines to tidewater.

Now, in terms of the 10-megatonne cap, when the oil industry came to us and asked for a 100-megatonne cap, they didn't say anything about having extra room for upgrading. Because we do want to incent upgrading, we chose to include this extra 10-megatonne exemption specifically for that purpose. This wasn't something that was included in the original proposal, but we chose to include it because we wanted to add incentive for upgrading.

Now, I was at a U of C breakfast just the other day, where – I'm paraphrasing – a preeminent professor stated that the foremost challenge of this century is climate change and decoupling energy production from carbon production. The members opposite continuously say that we're capping production, capping capacity when, in fact, what we're doing is that we're capping emissions. Capping production and capping emissions are not the same thing.

We've seen continuously all over the world right now that for the first time economic growth is becoming decoupled from emissions growth. For a long time emissions growth meant economic growth and vice versa, but we're seeing a point in the world where that's not the same anymore, where we're realizing that we can't continue to grow our emissions and continue to grow our economies. If we want the world to be how we want it to be and if we want to move forward, we really have to make sure that we're decoupling those two things.

Now, I'm sure that you speak with the same folks that we do, and the sector people and scientists I speak with are confident that we can continue to grow our industry while reducing our emissions. The way the opposition is arguing sounds to me like they don't believe in the ability of our industry to innovate. This cap, the 10-megatonne cap, incents upgrading while at the same time incents innovation. If you believe that we have to do our part to reduce emissions, if you believe in the innovative capabilities of our sector, if you believe in pipelines that just got approved, I would suggest that you vote down this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A2 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:21 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, we gave the hon. members on the other side an opportunity to deal with their credibility problem, and they chose to deal with their credibility problem by having a rather famous pipeline activist stand up and try to give us some NDP logic, which kind of goes like this: we realized the 100-megatonne cap would hurt upgrading, so we put another cap on upgrading. That's quite logical, isn't it? It does nothing whatsoever to answer their credibility problem about having three panel members on OSAG opposing pipelines, not waiting for the OSAG report, not answering the contradiction of their own Minister of Economic Development and Trade, and not answering the justification for contradicting the royalty review panel.

However, not one to give up easily . . .

Mr. Schneider: Never let it be said.

Mr. MacIntyre: Never let it be said that I gave up easily. . . . I have another amendment that I would like to offer.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. In the world of carbon pricing, carbon taxing, dealing with carbon all over the globe, there are governments and organizations that have been wrestling with this issue. It would appear that around the world there are two predominant methods by which some governments are choosing to deal with this issue. One of them is carbon taxation, which, until this point, has been this government's weapon of choice. In other places in the world they use a system known as cap and trade. As I was reading through Bill 25 and getting into the fine print of it and the details of it, I started noticing some remarkable similarities to a set-up that will no doubt lead to something very similar to cap and trade.

Now, in the world, governments have been choosing either carbon taxation or cap and trade or nothing, and some of them have chosen to undo some of those experiments because of the horrific damage they've done to their economy and to their competitive advantage in a globalized economy such as Australia and France. We just got word yesterday that France is in fact scrapping their carbon tax. Yeah. Good job, Australia, or, rather: good on you, mate. [interjection] Is that how they do it down there? You would know.

Madam Chair, here we have a government whose weapon of choice has been carbon taxation, but now in Bill 25, not satisfied with carbon taxation, we're also going to have cap and trade. I'm not aware of another jurisdiction where they hammered their economy with both, but here it is. There is very clearly a cap-and-trade mechanism built into Bill 25. It's going to require either a system where the government will issue permits by allocating them – we're talking about the remaining 32 megatonnes of emissions in the 100-megatonne limit. So the government is either going to issue permits by allocating them or perhaps by selling them, but whether we see allocation or selling of these emissions allocations, it is riddled with a series of very different potential risks to our economy if it's handled incorrectly. I will say at the outset that if you're going to compound our economic situation with carbon taxation and a cap-and-trade mechanism in any sector of our economy, you have compounded the problem.

As I see it, there are three serious pitfalls to the scheme mentioned in Bill 25 – I'm going to call it cap and trade even though it isn't called that – and that is the politicized permit allocation system. In some jurisdictions around the world – I can think of, you know, off the top, Germany and the system that they had in place – it became so politicized that it eventually led to corruption charges. Even in jurisdictions where they haven't gone that far, the politicization of the permit allocations is huge. I'm not just talking about politicians politicizing it but corporations using their allocation as a lever in order to manipulate the market, in order to manipulate smaller corporations and manipulate their ability to continue to work, to continue to expand, and, in this particular case, to manipulate their ability to develop the leases that they've already paid for. There is a very real risk of the politicization of the cap and the trading of allocations between developers.

Then there is the issue of economic strangulation between the haves and the have-nots. When you have corporations in the patch up there, in the oil sands leases, who have yet to develop their leases, those who have allocation hold a hammer. They really hold a hammer. And it being the nature of business, often dog eat dog, I have no doubt whatsoever that we could see things like, you know, economic strangulation.

In addition, under the heading of economic strangulation there are many, many subheadings. For example, the very fact that we're going to be allocating emissions does directly impact development. While the hon. member across the way tried to divorce those two, when you're talking about a window of only 32 megatonnes, there is a direct connection. There is a proportional connection between emissions and development. It's a very real potential for economic strangulation not only of the businesses involved but of our economy provincially.

Then there is energy price volatility that can happen with cap-and-trade schemes, where we've capped emissions, we've damaged our economy, and now we've got energy price volatility or price volatility within the components of our energy sector.

In 2009 the United States was considering a cap-and-trade bill – and it was named Waxman-Markey – which, like the Ontario plan, counted on giving away most carbon permits to energy producers. At the time U.S. budget director Peter Orszag observed that giving away emission permits would enable politicians to game the system, playing favourites with freely allocated permits. In Orszag's words, giving away permits "would represent the largest corporate welfare program that has ever been enacted in the history of the United States."

It was claimed that households, particularly poorer ones, would not feel the pain of the new regime because the government was going to give them some of the money paid in by better-off households and help them improve their energy efficiency. Well, that really transforms an emissions control initiative into a wealth transfer initiative.

Now, Harvard economist Gregory Mankiw stated:

Economists recognize that a cap-and-trade system [with free permit allocation] is equivalent to a tax on carbon emissions with the tax revenue rebated to existing carbon emitters . . . That is, Cap-and-trade = Carbon tax + Corporate welfare.

Here in Alberta, with a carbon tax already killing jobs and causing an economic retraction, this government in this bill is going to add insult to injury, adding a GDP-shrinking cap-and-trade system to a GDP-shrinking carbon tax. Again we see a serious lack of understanding and a very real need for much more study before this legislation becomes law.

Another economist, a specialist in cap-and-trade systems, Ian Parry, commented, "Freely allocated tradable emission permits may actually hurt the poor the most, as they transfer income to shareholders via scarcity rents created at the expense of higher prices." Now, I should point out that the Ontario government made the choice to politically allocate the permits rather than using an auction approach, tripping right into the pitfall that I just mentioned a moment ago.

On the subject of economic strangulation this government is already taking Alberta down that road. Economic strangulation is exactly the result of stranding leases in the oil sands, stranding assets in the power industry, trashing assets in the greenhouse industry, destroying local economies in Hanna, Keephills, and Forestburg. That is economic strangulation happening right now, and a cap-and-trade system is going to add to it.

The third pitfall listed by the cap-and-trade specialist is, of course, price volatility. Now, given the government's plan under Bill 27 we are most certainly headed for volatility, upward and with debt. As we've already noted, that simply means that Albertans pay and pay and pay. In short, Madam Chair, there are way too many unanswered questions about this issue. Of specific concern: this section piles a cap-and-trade system upon Albertans in addition to a carbon tax, and that is simply unacceptable. It is simply unacceptable to empower the cabinet to create a profoundly harmful cap-and-trade system on our already overburdened people without fulsome debate in this House, without hearing from Albertans in legislative committees.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment, which is, regarding Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, to amend section 3 by striking out clause (h)(ii). Now, when I read this portion of Bill 25, in section 3 it says:

Without limiting the authority of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations in respect of this Act under the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations . . .

And it goes on to list these regulations. Now, the Lieutenant Governor in Council is the cabinet of the government. It's not an individual or anything like that or any other group other than the cabinet of the government. So what this regulation does is that it allows the government cabinet to make the following regulations.

Now, in particular we're talking about (h), which says:

establishing and governing mechanisms to keep greenhouse gas emissions from oil sands sites within the limit established by section 2(1), including, without limitation, regulations . . .

And then it goes on to list a couple. But if we look back to section 2(1), it says:

Subject to subsection (2), the greenhouse gas emissions limit for all oil sands sites combined is 100 megatonnes in any year.

So what it's doing is that it's allowing the government cabinet to make regulations in regard to the 100-megatonne cap of oil sands emissions.

I'll read what it says under h(ii). It says:

establishing a system of greenhouse gas emission allowances and governing the purchase, auction, trading or retirement of greenhouse gas emission allowances or any other matter related to a system of greenhouse gas emission allowances.

Obviously, this bill here is a cap, a 100-megatonne cap, and here we have an opportunity for the government cabinet, without coming back to this Legislature, to go into these parts where it says, "purchase, auction, trading or retirement of greenhouse gas emission allowances." So it's very clear, with the word "trading" in there, that both cap and trade are allowed under this bill. Now, I think that's alarming because, as the previous speaker mentioned, there are no jurisdictions that do both. Most do none, but nobody does both.

Ontario's cap-and-trade program will cost the province's consumers and businesses $8 billion in its first year of operation . . .

Some Hon. Members: How much?

Mr. Loewen: Eight billion dollars in its first year.

. . . and get minimal greenhouse gas reductions. That's what the Ontario Auditor General reported, so that wasn't some think tank that may have or may be accused of having some agenda. This is the Auditor General: $8 billion in the first year. And I think what's most alarming is the minimal greenhouse gas reductions, which is why we quite often in this House ask the government for some sort of cost analysis. I'm pretty sure that if the people of Ontario had had a chance to vote on this or have any kind of discussion on this and it was suggested that they would pay $8 billion and get next to nothing, they would probably say no. I'm pretty sure about that.

Now, it says that households will pay an average of $156 next year in added costs for gasoline and natural gas, rising to $210 plus another $75 that year in indirect costs. Madam Chair, we sit here and talk about the effects of these bills that this government is bringing forward, and over and over again we see that in other jurisdictions they just didn't work. They were expensive and didn't work.

It says that the government also earmarked $1.32 billion out of the expected $8 billion in projected cap-and-trade revenue to help offset the cost of residential and business electricity bills, but it doesn't say how. Does that sound familiar, Madam Chair? I think so. There are all sorts of plans and all sorts of talk but no real description of exactly what's going to happen. It goes on to say that the impact will likely be marginal. It says that even with a subsidy the average household electricity bill is projected to increase 23 per cent. Again here we hear the word "subsidy." This government is talking about subsidies, but it's still going to cost.

Now, it goes on to say, "Such increased electricity costs may make natural gas, which is responsible for significantly more greenhouse-gas emissions than cleaner energy sources like solar, hydro, nuclear and wind, an even more economical option." Yes, natural gas: where have we heard that before? Yes, in the Wildrose plan to use more natural gas.

This carbon-pricing scheme will likely achieve fewer than 20 per cent of the emission reductions the government wants to see. So here they are. They made this big plan costing billions of dollars, and what they plan to reduce – this was only going accomplish 20 per cent of that.

Madam Chair, I could go on and we could go on on this, but I think it's safe to say that this type of language in this bill is not helpful. It adds a potential to hurt the economy even more here in Alberta, to hurt Albertans more, to cost Albertans more. Again, we have no analysis to discover what the end result might be as far as the reduction of emissions. I know the government likes to talk about science. The science is clear. Well, where's the science in a cap-and-trade system in Alberta? Where's the science on how much it'll reduce? What will it help? How much will it cost?

Madam Chair, I'm going to suggest that all members of this House support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise, and – I'm sure it will come as a big surprise to the opposition – I cannot support this amendment. I find it a bit interesting that the opposition is so keen to talk about increasing production, gaining access to markets. Those are all noble goals, and I'm sure every party in this Chamber can agree on that. I find it fascinating that the opposition refuses to listen to our federal counterparts. When the Prime Minister approved two pipelines this week... [interjections] I'm being asked to clarify how many pipelines, so I'll repeat that: two pipelines. The Prime Minister specifically mentioned this bill. He said that this emissions limit is the reason that he could justify two pipelines. I can't support this because we need to continue on with our climate leadership plan because that is the reason that we can get pipelines built.

For the hon. members, I urge everybody to oppose this amendment and support the climate leadership plan. Let's get moving on with pipelines.

Thanks.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers to the amendment?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A3 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11 a.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act.

There are a few points that I want to make, Madam Speaker. There's been some great debate over the past couple of weeks here in the House. First of all, I'll begin by mentioning a few thank yous. I'd be remiss if I didn't start by thanking my ministry staff, who have worked so diligently on this bill to ensure that it captures not just the essence of what business and industry have been asking for, but what makes me so proud of this bill is the fact that this is a made-in-Alberta solution. We looked to other jurisdictions like British Columbia, which has enjoyed an investor tax credit for decades, which has left Alberta and Alberta businesses at a disadvantage, quite frankly. We looked to them as far as some of their best practices with theirs, but we've also looked to other jurisdictions.

I know the hon. Member for Sherwood Park is a strong advocate of co-operatives and, as well, community economic development corporations. The jurisdiction of Nova Scotia enjoys a tax credit for businesses that provide social benefits, not just businesses that are completely or solely driven by profit. I'm quite proud that we're opening up opportunities for communities, for businesses that are not just for-profit but also provide either social or community benefits.

You know, this bill has been on quite a journey as far as the number of consultations and conversations that not just myself but my colleagues throughout government have had in their communities with business leaders and industry leaders, again identifying: what are the ways and tools that government can provide to help spur investment?

This bill, should it pass final reading today, will do a number of things, Madam Speaker. First of all, this is a great tool to diversify our economy. These two tax credits will not just incent investment into Alberta companies, but they also will incent investment into companies which may traditionally have struggled to get the capital that they need to grow, to expand, to hire more people. You know, this has been a tool that we've seen work extremely well in other provinces, in other jurisdictions. Not only will it help companies to grow; these two tax credits will also help create thousands of good-paying jobs and also foster innovation. Again, many sectors outside of traditional oil and gas are looking to expand or looking to grow but are struggling, especially in industries that may not have physical assets that they can borrow from.

The investor tax credit really provides an incentive for Albertans to invest in Alberta-based businesses by derisking the investment. Providing a 30 per cent refundable tax credit is a great way to incent Albertans to invest in their own backyard. We know that we have incredible businesses, incredible companies, entrepreneurs here in our province. They just need sometimes the support of their neighbours and investors, and this tax credit will do just that.

The other thing that I'm quite proud of with this bill is that we have not only the community economic development corporations, but these tax credits are available to individual investors. They're also available to venture capital corporations, so groups of investors also would be eligible or will be eligible for this tax credit, which I think is significant. That has definitely come from many business leaders, especially in Calgary, who have asked for this to ensure that it's not just for individuals or for community economic development corporations or funds but also for venture capital funds.

Madam Speaker, you know, this is a bill that very much is part of our Alberta jobs plan. This bill is just one more tool and one more way that our government is supporting the business community within the province. This is a great tool to diversify our economy and, again, to provide opportunities for Albertans to participate in companies right here in Alberta. Ninety-five per cent of businesses in our province are small businesses. We know that small businesses are the backbone of our economy, and this bill will really provide them with the tools they need to grow and expand. Quite frankly, the time to do this was probably decades ago, but the next best time is today.

I'm quite proud of the work that my colleagues and our friends in business and industry have done on this bill. It's also a testament to the fact that, you know, our government is in continuous dialogues and conversation with the business community and identifying ways that we can support them. We recognize that with the international price of oil being where it is for as long as it's been, it's had a significant impact on workers and families and communities across this province, so this will definitely help create jobs, help companies get back up on their feet. I'm quite looking forward to sharing with Albertans when we see not only the uptake but also the outcomes of these two tax credits. For the most part, right now I've been focusing on the investor tax credit.

The capital investment tax credit. In fact, I was just over at the Alberta Chambers of Commerce the other day talking about the fact that initially we were looking at a minimum of $10 million of capital investment. Over the summer, in consultations with business and industry, they said: "You know what? That bar is a little bit too high. You're going to cut out a lot of different sectors and companies who may not have access to $10 million to invest in a capital project." So they asked for it to be lowered to a million. We listened. That's exactly what we've done.

We've also opened it up to where there is a set of criteria. This is what companies have asked for. They want to know in advance: "Are we going to qualify? What are the criteria? How will we be ranked?" Then we're going to go one step further, Madam Speaker, and make sure that we work with companies that apply that maybe don't qualify in the first window and encourage them to apply in the second window.

Again, this capital investment tax credit is cross-sector, so this will be applicable, you know, to any industry that deals with manufacturing or processing. We're talking about agriculture, agrifood, our forestry sector, our tourism sector, our clean tech sector, even our energy sector. This is exactly the tool that we need to use. This is one tool in our tool box of the Alberta jobs plan, which I'm quite proud of.

I look forward to the debate here in third reading and want to thank all of my colleagues on all sides of the House for their input and debate thus far. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Yeah, another positive step for Alberta. I think this government has been listening. Small and medium-sized businesses have been calling for this for years. This investor tax credit will offer a 30 per cent tax credit for investments in Alberta small businesses between April of last year and 2019. It'll have a budget of $90 million over these three years and will be provided on a first-come, first-served basis and will be available for investments in companies that are engaged substantially in development or commercialization of proprietary technology, interactive digital media, and video postproduction as well as tourism. Additionally, the capital investment tax credit will offer a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit. That's progress on both levels.

I think the Conference Board of Canada was pretty clear back in 2013 in saying that Alberta lagged way behind other jurisdictions in this area and gave Alberta a grade of D in this regard, near last in terms of venture capital investment. Presently six provinces have some form of tax incentive for those who invest in local small businesses, so we're approaching the B.C. program, which is considered the gold standard by business groups. It provides a tax credit equal to 30 per cent of investments made into eligible small businesses. Research out of UBC found that between 2001 and 2008 $250 million worth of tax credits helped attract 10 times that value in equity investments, creating more than 4,000 jobs.

So the only concern might be that it's going to be, perhaps, short lived. It's a two-year time frame, but I can understand that we need to see how it works, what the impact of it is, and presumably there will be some modifications before this gets significant change.

I think the only other concern is what has always been expressed with respect to government handing out money, and that is that we don't pick winners and losers, that we actually allow the market to decide where the proven track record is. The examples of the past have come back to haunt us even now with continued challenges, so we do need to be very careful about what the criteria are. Obviously, all of us will be waiting with bated breath to see the follow-ups, the outcomes, the results. I think it's a positive step forward given those caveats, but we need to see an honest reporting of what works, what doesn't work, where we invested successfully, and where we have lessons to learn.

There's no silver bullet, but this is progress, and I certainly will be on behalf of the Liberal caucus supporting this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance, followed by Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Ceci: With regard to 29(2)(a), is it?

The Deputy Speaker: No. Standing Order 29(2)(a) doesn't come into effect until after whoever speaks now.

Mr. Ceci: Oh, okay.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Then I'll hear from Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This morning I rise to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Bill 30 is not perfect, but it's the first step in the right direction, so I would like to compliment the minister and his team on bringing this bill to give at least some relief to the businesses in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, the Official Opposition and other opposition parties in this House tried to make this bill better by bringing in reasonable amendments with respect to clarity about the scope of funding, accountability, and measuring the effectiveness of the program, to put in some metrics. I'm a bit disappointed because the minister, who is titled to be the minister that gets it, unfortunately, didn't get our common-sense amendments for whatever reason. As I said, I do give him credit where it is due, and I appreciate them working hard to bring this bill forward.

I just wanted to give some constructive feedback. Going back to the process of how this bill was developed, they say that they consulted people, but selective consultation is not fully helpful. I want to bring up some of those points, and if the government wants to use it as constructive feedback, that's up to them.

Madam Speaker, if I'm permitted to use common man's language and analogy, it's like sucking and blowing because, on one hand, we are driving out investments with risky economic policies, and on the other hand this government is saying: oh, we need to give relief to businesses. Businesses want overall certainty by reducing overall taxes and creating an economic environment where businesses can bring investments here and grow the economy and create jobs.

Now, this bill is titled Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. One way of diversification is upgrading our bitumen here to refinery-ready synthetic crude, which would help us free up pipeline space and which would get us a premium price for our product. There are so many reasons I can give why we should be doing it, but one single reason we should remember is that in the past the NDP were saying that we should do more upgrading here in Alberta and that we shouldn't be shipping jobs south of the border, which they conveniently forget now.

Then the ministry is talking about creating a competitive environment here as opposed to our neighbouring provinces, but there are reasons why businesses are going away. It's not just the world oil price. It's beyond that. We get that. We don't hold the government to account for the world market price, but we do hold them accountable for their policies, which are not helping stabilize the economy.

Madam Speaker, I'll put this in context, and I'll give you some background on this. The minister promised that the funds in the Alberta investor tax credit will go to proprietary technology research, development, or commercialization; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; and tourism. None of this was initially in the bill. Then we consulted many stakeholders, and we tried to amend the bill based on their input. Those sectors we included in our amendment but that it was not limited to were agriculture, agrifood, or agribusiness; transportation and logistics; financial services; and manufacturing or processing. But the NDP voted against adding these sectors to the legislation.

The minister says: trust me. It doesn't work like that in business. The minister says: the credit will be broad; just trust me. Well, I think the government knows that investors don't really trust anything other than what's written in the bill, and it's too bad they aren't giving them that certainty by establishing a minimum set of industries. By having that minimum set of industries, at least they'd know they're eligible to apply. There is no confusion. But now no one knows.

Madam Speaker, it's really strange that the NDP's own Member for Leduc-Beaumont got the Legislature's Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future to focus only on how to grow and diversify the agrifood and agribusiness sectors in this province and that the scope of the study be focused on value-added production and small-business opportunities and local food production and promotion, which is a great initiative. I support that, and I look forward to working with him on that. To grow the economy through agrifood processing is a great way to diversify. We all agree on that, yet the minister's announcement left out agrifood entirely from the investor tax credit.

Then on November 23, last month, the Member for Edmonton-Centre – not the minister, the private Member for Edmonton-Centre – stated something very different in this House during the debate on this bill. I'll quote what he said.

It's our intention that this legislation be as broad as possible to provide the greatest benefit to investors, job creators, and their employees. Our proposed Alberta investor tax credit would be applicable across sectors and would offer a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to Alberta companies doing research, development, or commercialization of new technology, new products, or new processes in sectors including but not limited to renewable energy, manufacturing or processing, agriculture, agribusiness and agrifood, transportation and logistics, financial services, and the creative industries.

That was his quote.

Yes, Bill 30 is broad and gives broad, sweeping decision-making powers to the minister of the day, but if the statement from the Member for Edmonton-Centre is true, this is a lot different than what is written on the government's fact sheet on the government's website, which says:

Eligibility will be limited to Alberta investors who pay taxes in Alberta and invest in small and medium-sized Alberta businesses in sectors such as information technology, clean technology, health technology, interactive digital media and game products, and post-production, visual effects and digital animation.

That's what it says on the website.

Madam Speaker, this communications issue causes mistrust of the NDP government, and it's not the first time. We saw that during Bill 6. Thousands of farmers came here protesting because they were not consulted and they were not communicated with properly. So that's another focus area for the government to look at.

I'll give you another example. The list given in this House by the Member for Edmonton-Centre leaves out some of the industries in the ministry's press release. What are the film production, postproduction, or digital animation studio people supposed to think now? You know, they're included in some; they're not included in other announcements. Lots of confusion, Madam Speaker.

In addition to this, stakeholders like the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce are concerned about the winners-and-losers aspect of this bill. They gave me that feedback. They actually sent me a letter. I'll submit that this afternoon.

That being said, Madam Speaker, Alberta's small-business community needs help to grow in these tough economic times. We agree on that with the government. We are all on the same page that businesses need to grow and they need some help. Alberta is facing an unprecedented jobs and economic crisis. I was not here in the '80s, but I'm told that this one is much worse than that. It's a much deeper and broader recession, depression, whatever you want to call it. Proprietary research and commercialization are a challenge in every sector, and the more research and commercialization Alberta does, the better off we all will be. The creation of the register of venture capital corporations, VCCs, is a plausible way to promote these corporations to others seeking investment.

According to Alberta economic development, over the last 10 years Alberta has consistently lagged behind British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec in terms of venture capital dollars. This lack of venture capital has limited the growth and commercialization potential of small and medium-sized businesses in Alberta. With so many other provinces and American states offering successful investor tax credit programs, Alberta needs to compete. That's the situation. Every one of our neighbouring provinces in Canada and the states along the Canada-U.S.A. border: they're all competing for the same capital. Alberta's technology sector asked for this tax credit, and have it they shall.

The AITC could allow studios to be built for postproduction of the films that are being made in Alberta now, unless they were dropped when the list in the House was given. That's the concern that they expressed when I met with some of them. They are on the list one day; they are not on the list the next day. There is confusion. Digital animation like from BioWare, where we all attended recently, will help spur more growth in Edmonton's video gaming industry. I had the opportunity, Madam Speaker, to attend an event this week hosted by BioWare, who is very interested in this AITC. I saw many members from the government there, and they also interacted with them, which is good. That would help them in updating this bill if they wish. I met with someone from postproduction as well, as I said before, in Calgary recently. He emphasized how this could help create stable, full-time jobs. Although there are not many, at least there will be some jobs.

Productivity is a big problem in manufacturing, Madam Speaker, and the CITC will help Alberta's 9,000 manufacturers compete with foreign industries. That's another good aspect of this investment tax credit program. Alberta's investors need some kind of good news finally. They need some kind of good news given all the bad news they keep getting from this government and also because of the economy.

For the reasons I explained, Madam Speaker, although I'm quite disappointed that the minister didn't accept reasonable amendments from us, it's still the first step in the right direction, and that's why I'm going to support Bill 30, and I encourage all my colleagues on this side of the House to support this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect if anyone has questions or comments for the previous speaker. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes, it's an honour to speak to this bill regarding investment tax credit presented by the minister of economic development. I want to ask my colleague a question because of his experience in the energy industry. How does he feel these investment dollars can spur investment? It's my understanding that these dollars are pretax dollars and that they allow people to incentivize their investment. I just wanted my previous colleague to enlighten us further, from his life experiences, on how that can benefit the economy and, therefore, society as a whole.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thanks to the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. It's a good question. With respect to the energy sector, for the type of work we do here in the oil sands program, there isn't enough money from this program for major players in the oil sands. Some of the service companies: if they want to use this money for manufacturing processes or for innovation, for research and development, they can utilize this. As I said before, the intention of this bill is really good, but the problem is that we can't selectively choose programs like this and think that with Band-Aids like these, we can prop up the economy. They may be a temporary relief, but in the long term we have to create business conditions where we can have a higher impact in terms of job creation.

When the minister talks about diversification, there are many opportunities in building on our strengths. Particularly, you know, we have cheap natural gas here; we have bitumen. If investors really have confidence in this government, if they feel that stability, they can actually invest billions of dollars based on the strengths we have in the energy sector.

You know, the companies I worked with before: many of them actually got involved in backward integration. For example, if you have crude oil here, you can extract ethylene from that through upgrading and refining, and you can use that ethylene to polymerize and make polyethylene, polypropylene. Similarly, you can make many other polyester intermediates; for example, PTA and other stuff to produce textiles. You can make linear alkylbenzene, LAB, which can be used for soaps and other chemicals. Some of that is happening in the Industrial Heartland, in that area, but if this government creates industrial infrastructure in the northwest of Alberta – recently I was there. If we could connect Fort Mac to Peace River, in that corridor they can actually have some ancillary industries.

Coming back to this program, I don't think there is enough money for all of them, but something is better than nothing. That's another concern I have. When I travelled during the summer and spring, I met with many chambers of commerce and economic developments and mayors and local leaders. First of all, they don't know what programs exist. We have to do a better job of communicating with these people that these funds are available. That's why we brought in amendments to clarify the scope – who can actually apply and who can benefit from these programs – because in most cases, first, they didn't know that these programs exist, and then by the time they figure it out, there's a long process to apply for this funding, and when all this is done, by the time they say okay, the fund is exhausted now; there's no money left. That's not helpful. We could do a better job through the department, or we can take help from others.

Ms Babcock: Madam Speaker, I'm honoured to stand up today and support this bill. I think it's a very important initiative here in Alberta, that brings us up to the standards of our counterparts in other jurisdictions. There were some valuable amendments brought forward, and I'm glad to see that we have accepted a few that will make this bill better. I believe in using all the tools in our tool box to improve the lives of Albertans. We know that small businesses are the pillars of our communities, and especially our rural communities will benefit by incenting this investment in our small and medium-sized businesses.

Madam Speaker, no longer can we depend solely on petroleum products, which have driven our economy in good times and created hardships in bad. During an upward cycle everyone wants a piece of Alberta, but when the price of petroleum products drops, everybody heads for the hills. Albertans need and deserve better than this. That is why this bill is aiming to encourage investment and growth in industries that Alberta has not traditionally sought: research, development, and commercialization of proprietary technologies, products, and processes; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; and tourism. Those are important industries for us to support. On the CITC side, manufacturing or processing and tourism infrastructure: those are going to help incent this investment in our rural communities, where we would like more people to be able to invest.

Madam Speaker, we can't continue to embark on the same path of boom and bust that has been the history of this province. Challenging times call for creative solutions, and Bill 30 will provide solutions that will make Alberta more competitive. Bill 30 will allow the government to establish the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. Together these tax credits will drive innovation, diversify our economy, and create new jobs here in our province. There must be 75 per cent of wages and salaries – or 50 per cent for exporting companies – to employees who regularly report to work here in Alberta. They must have 80 per cent of their assets in Alberta to qualify for this program, the Alberta investor tax credit.

The CITC will encourage large-scale capital projects by offering a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5 million, which is expected to incent $10 million to $40 million worth of exports province-wide. Due to these challenging economic times and the global drop in the price of oil here and around the world we see lower cash flow, which can be boosted by investor confidence and timely investment decisions. Because the capital investment tax credit is not sector specific, it will be available to companies across the province. Industries such as manufacturing, processing, and tourism that are making investments need to be supported here in Alberta.

The activities identified have strong potential for growth in this current economic environment and over the long term. This includes much of the oil and gas supply chain as well as industries that have the potential to grow in the future. Through the short-term nature of the CITC we have the opportunity to re-evaluate the program as the economic situation evolves. By continuing to promote diversification of our economy, supporting our employers and industry, and enabling entrepreneurs and job creators as well as encouraging investment here in Alberta, we are demonstrating meaningful action on the economy all over Alberta for all of our people.

This bill is very broad, Madam Speaker. Any company engaged in development or commercialization can qualify for the AITC, including sectors that traditionally are not included in this type of bill. The evaluation will be ongoing, and it will be focusing on the outputs of the program, including process efficiency to identify approaches for implementation enhancement and course correction. After the program is over, there will be an independent outcome evaluation conducted upon the program's completion. It will examine the program in terms of its success and incenting policy goals of investment, diversification, and job creation.

One of the things that I really love about this bill, Madam Speaker – I'm a community builder, and I believe that whether our community is the people in our parties, whether it's the people that we have in our homes, whether it's the people in our towns, whether it's the people in our province, we are communities. This bill enables the government to establish community economic development corporations. I think that's so important, that we're not just investing money into Alberta; we are investing into our social licence here in Alberta. For-profit investment funds that invest equity in locally owned businesses recognized for their positive social, economic, and environmental returns to communities – these are the places that we go as a family, these are the places where we meet our community members, and these are the kinds of places that I want to see more of in our communities.

The department will be engaged in targeted stakeholder consultations to ensure that the program is designed to be successful, and the CITC's portion of the program is going to be implemented, hopefully, by next summer if this bill passes third reading. The registration process for the AITC will be announced pending the passage of this act. Madam Speaker, these tax credits offer the right support for Alberta businesses at the right time. Introducing these measures now, when businesses are facing challenging times, will make Alberta more competitive in retaining and retraining, so we are creating much-needed jobs. Together these tax credits provide significant support to Alberta businesses when they need it most and when we need them most.

Madam Speaker, I would encourage all of my colleagues on all sides of this House to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for this. The member's comments there were excellent. I'm looking on page 30 of the bill under division 2, where it talks about a community economic development corporation. I was pleased to hear the minister, as he introduced the bill here, talking about derisking the investment. I was wondering if the member could explain to us how she feels that this type of an investment or the assistance would derisk an investment, whether it be community and/or even private, because further on in the legislation it talks about: "The small business must meet any other prescribed requirements for registration." I was wondering if the member could enlighten us on how those benefits would be derisking Albertan taxpayer dollars.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, it's a very important derisking tool that we can have in our tool box. As you know, in using one tool, if you have a hammer, it doesn't work for everything. Sometimes you need a screwdriver. So let's use this as a tool. Derisking our small and medium businesses means that people are more willing to invest and more able to invest because they know that the tax credits are there at the end of the day for them.

Part of that, for me, Madam Speaker, is being able to invest in our small and rural businesses and having people that are willing to come into our rural communities, which should be important to everyone in this House, being able to diversify in those economies in our small towns, in our villages, where people aren't always staying because they don't have the opportunity. The more often that we can get people to come to our small towns and our villages and our rural communities – it is more important for us to be able to make them stay and give them the tools they need to stay. A derisking tool for our small businesses, especially in our rural communities, is one of the most important things that we can do for them and be able to help them know that we will have this available to them and that that investment has less potential to be lost.

Investment is important. We know that investment is coming back here in Alberta, but we know that it's been challenging times for our small and medium businesses. We know that the global drop in the price of oil has impacted every business in Alberta, and we need to do everything we can and use every tool we have to help incent the investment.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak at third reading in favour of Bill 30. I think an investor tax credit is seeing Alberta catch up with other jurisdictions. It's good for Alberta entrepreneurs, and it's good for Alberta.

I also want to acknowledge and give credit to the government for realizing that an investor tax credit makes a lot more sense than their original job-creation grant program. That, I think, is something we don't often see from a government that ran on a certain platform. They've discovered that something may have looked good in a campaign platform that doesn't actually make sense in practice. Any time that happens, a government making a good decision based on good data, I think we ought to recognize that and acknowledge them for doing that.

I also appreciate the minister's willingness to accept reasonable and thoughtful amendments from a couple of different opposition parties, myself included. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek had presented several amendments that were accepted, and I sincerely hope that those amendments have made the bill better.

Sadly, life is not perfect. We didn't get all the amendments that we would have liked to see approved. One of the most important amendments that I would have liked to see would be defining which sectors are included in the investor tax credit in particular. The wording in the bill as it stands now and as it appears will be passed into law is very vague and gives, really, all of the power to the minister to define the eligible areas.

We have a news release from the government here that talks about allowing investment in small and medium Alberta businesses "in sectors such as information technology, clean technology, health technology, interactive digital media and game products, and post-production, visual effects and digital animation." That seems like a reasonable area. I would like to see more in the way of agriculture, agrifood. The world of agriculture is a tremendously technically advanced area and certainly could benefit from some investment as well.

My concern is that we don't know what those parameters will be to determine those industries, and it has been left vague and left up to the minister to choose. Now, the minister assures us that these are the areas, broadly speaking, that will be included, and of course we have to take him at his word on that. I would have liked, though, to see that actually enshrined in the legislation so investors and Alberta entrepreneurs and businesses could know what exactly is included.

I think it would be better if this bill is as broad as possible, if the tax credit is as broad as possible, and I also think that bigger is better. I would like to see more money, frankly, applied to investor tax credits. On one level $30 million a year sounds like a lot of money – and I think it will be leveraged to create tens of millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars in investment in Alberta business; a very good thing – but I think I'd like to see that be even larger than it is.

Also, while there is a reporting provision in the bill, the specifics of when the minister will report, how often the minister will report, have not been amended into the bill. We tried to put that in, and that was not accepted. I think it's very important that we have proper reporting so that we know if, in fact, this is a success. If it is a success, how many jobs have been created? How many millions of dollars have been invested in Alberta that may not have otherwise been? Or conversely, if it's not working, are there monies being invested that, frankly, were going to be invested anyway and now we as taxpayers have simply subsidized that? Now, I don't think that's likely to happen to a large extent. Other programs like this in other provinces have shown to be quite effective, but if we don't measure, we can't manage and we don't know. I think that's an important role for us here in this Assembly, and I would know that in the minister's office it's an important role for them as well. Once we have that data, we can then decide whether or not the $30 million a year allocated is an appropriate amount, if it should have been more or, frankly, could be less.

With all of those concerns aside, I still will happily support this bill. I think it's good for Alberta. I think it moves us forward. Again, credit to the minister for taking this approach. I really look forward to seeing positive results for Alberta business and Alberta entrepreneurs and Alberta jobs.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Just a quick question: in reference to Bill 30 and the timing of it, I was wondering if the member could enlighten us on his opportunities to consult with people in his constituency, businesses, and maybe chambers of commerce on this?

Mr. Clark: Yeah. I've had an opportunity to talk to a lot of stakeholders on this. Calgary-Elbow is very fortunate to have a high number of entrepreneurs. I've talked with stakeholders on this, of course, and chambers of commerce. I've been actively engaged with them, and I give a lot of credit to the Alberta chambers of commerce, to Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Calgary in particular, for being very active on this file. They, in fact, were a real driver for the move towards an investor tax credit, away from the job-creation grant. Credit to them for their hard work in advocating and credit to the minister for listening to that advocacy.

I think they are probably not perfectly happy with the outcome. I would have liked to see this broadened, perhaps the numbers a little higher, and some definition in terms of the specific sectors that will be included. I think that would be a fair statement.

I've also talked with stakeholders here in Edmonton. One company in particular that I know of in the geothermal industry is very keen to take advantage of this program and has already started that work by engaging with the ministry and trying to find out what the application process will look like for them. It has already allowed them to attract some capital that perhaps they may not have otherwise been able to attract in an area that I think is a growing one and something that I would hope could be part of diversifying Alberta's economy.

Interestingly, Alberta's economy, really, is already quite diverse. We have the highest level of diversity measured by job type, career type, anywhere in the country. The challenge that we face in this House and with our provincial budget is not perhaps an economic diversification challenge but a revenue diversification challenge, with a lot of revenue concentrated from one source and overreliance on that nonrenewable resource revenue to fund ongoing operations and a lack of discipline in really reining that in.

That said, the objective, to add to Alberta's economic base through targeted tax incentives, is a good one. I know that my constituents in Calgary-Elbow will certainly take advantage of it, and I hope that constituents from all 87 constituencies will be able to take advantage of that as well.

On the consultation side I've certainly heard from chambers of commerce that they are pleased in general. Probably this didn't go exactly where they would have liked to have seen it go, but at the end of the day I think that, on the whole, it is a good thing.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Member for Calgary-Elbow alluded to the limits with regard to being possibly hurdles that restrict the ability for this to expand and do even more good in the investment climate in Alberta. The limits: I'd like to hear some of his thoughts on how those limits force the government to pick and choose and how that can be dangerous as opposed to regular market forces being able to drive what's going to be successful or not successful. So if he could maybe share some of his thoughts on that.

Mr. Clark: Happily. You know, one of the things I like about the general structure of the bill is that the intent seems to be to pick winners and losers by sector, so there are sectors that can benefit from this tax credit and sectors that cannot. That's a step better than picking winners and losers along an individual business level, so I think that's a good thing.

Where I'm concerned – and I think we'd all agree – is with someone who opens up a fast-food franchise, for example. They probably ought not be eligible for an investor tax credit. I think that's something that we wouldn't say is meaningful economic diversification. But a traditional oil and gas company that perhaps spins off a new technology that is an environmental technology that allows for enhanced oil recovery with less carbon footprint: is that diversification? Is that eligible for the tax credit? I don't know. Is that green technology, or is that oil and gas? I don't know. You know, that's something that the minister is going to have to grapple with. That's why I would have liked to have seen the definition in the bill, so that we know. There's too much that happens in government that's by regulation.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill in third reading? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I see we have a limited amount of time left this morning, but I do wish to speak to Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act. Bill 30 strikes closer to the mark as opposed to the other NDP job-creation proposals that we've seen in the last 18 months. It's been over 18 months since the NDP came into power without a competent policy to promote job creation. They had to scrap the previous job-creation initiatives, and we in the Official Opposition hope this one can be effective.

I do believe that tax credits have been effective in the past on certain initiatives. There are some dangers with them also with regard to the government picking and choosing winners and losers, so we have to be aware of that danger. This tax credit, if it works, won't do nearly enough to cancel out all of the other poor policies that we've seen the NDP put in place and roadblocks in the business environment that we're working with in Alberta at this time, policies such as a carbon tax and tax increases on both businesses and individuals. We see dramatic minimum wage increases, suing Alberta . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 1, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Chief of Staff to the Speaker Bev Alenius

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could have your indulgence for just a moment. Someone who has dedicated a lifelong career to this Assembly, Mrs. Bev Alenius, in the Speaker's office as chief of staff, is seated in my gallery yet again for another day. Beverly has made the decision to retire after a truly remarkable career of some 43 years. She began her career with the government of Alberta and found and worked her way into that neutral and austere office of the Speaker. In almost 20 years of being in the Speaker's office, Bev has proved herself a loyal, dedicated, and passionate person with a unique and witty sense of humour, which I'm sure some of you, like me, may have suffered the wrath of.

I want to sincerely thank her for her dedicated service. Bev has served with three Speakers and numerous Legislatures, with some being various shades of blue and the last with some little slight shade of orange. Bev was neutral to colour. I know I speak for all of you when I say that we could not have done our jobs without her support and guidance.

On behalf of all of the members I want to congratulate you, Beverly, for your retirement and thank you for your public service. [Standing ovation] Thank you very much.

Now, I heard a word used this morning which helped to describe yesterday's events in the House, and the word was "buoyant." I'm sure we will have a buoyant and positive ride on the river today.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ms Caroline Saunders, the consul general of the United Kingdom. Ms Saunders is a career diplomat with diverse experience overseas. It's a great pleasure to host her here today on her first official visit to Edmonton. The United Kingdom is one of Alberta's oldest friends and allies, and I'm pleased to say that our jurisdictions continue to benefit from a very robust trade and investment relationship. The consul general's visit is a great opportunity for us to strengthen our established ties while exploring new areas of co-operation in a variety of sectors such as clean energy, low-carbon solutions, health care, agrifood, and more. Our esteemed guest is seated in your gallery. I see that she has risen. I ask all members to join me in giving her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. It's a pleasure to meet you.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, I would like to recognize approximately 100 constituency assistants in the gallery today from across Alberta. These fabulous people are key to the democratic process in Alberta. They allow us as members to provide nonpartisan services to our constituents. They are often the first point of contact in our communities. Their jobs are demanding and difficult, and we would like to take a moment to thank them for their dedication to all Albertans. This group is here today to participate in the annual winter constituency employee learning and development seminar, which was developed specifically for their unique roles, with the requirements that they have in mind. We're pleased to be holding this seminar in Edmonton so that following their professional development sessions, they were able to come to the Chamber and join us and see the democratic process unfold. Among this group of wonderful people are your assistants from Medicine Hat, David and Laura; my assistant from Peace River, Ada; and Page, who is from Edmonton-Manning and supports our Deputy Chair of Committees. Could I please have all of them rise to get the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome to all of you. That, I think, was a vote of thanks and appreciation.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Dianne Balon, who is with the Alberta Blue Cross. Dianne's career with Blue Cross spans over 30 years, and she is currently vice-president, government. Alberta Blue Cross is familiar to most people for its role as a benefit provider, but I want us to remember that they also oversee programs aimed at promoting health and wellness for all Albertans. For that work and partnership I commend Dianne and her colleagues at Blue Cross. I ask that Dianne please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Rotary Club of Edmonton Northeast. These folks celebrated their 50th anniversary this past February. The face of the club has changed considerably over the past 50 years, but much has remained the same. The Rotary Club of Edmonton Northeast is still known as the friendly club and as champions for children. This year they made a very generous, significant donation to the Beverly memorial cenotaph. This donation played a major part in ensuring that the oldest cenotaph in Alberta received much-needed renovations. Today the club members come from all over the capital region but are very committed to northeast Edmonton.

I'm going to ask my guests to rise as I say their names, and I'll try to do this as quickly as possible as the list is significant. Loie Unwin, Pieter Zeeuwen, Brenda Tyson, Shirley Lowe, Garry Sigmund, Christine Downey, Elaine Grant, Sean Draper. Mr. Speaker, one of our very own pages is also a member of northeast Rotary, and that's David Draper. John Younie, Amanda Slugoski, Jan Preece, Darrell Holowaychuk, Dave Birkenhagen, Kelly Baker, Shirley Smith, and Lautaro Amiune. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Advanced Education minister I have the pleasure of leading the finest department in the public service of the government of Alberta. I'm pleased to introduce 21 of the public servants from that department who are visiting us today. These are all people who work to ensure our higher education system is one of the best in the country, and I welcome them from the apprenticeship and student aid division, advanced learning and community partnerships, strategic and corporate services as well as the deputy minister's office and the ministerial correspondence unit. They work in a variety of roles from administrative duties to co-ordinating policy and protection of critical information. As a former public servant myself I know the tremendous pride they take in their work on behalf of all Albertans.

Today we have visiting with us Francis Marte, Raeesa Merali, Iona Neumeier, Launa LeBeau, Fahim Hassan, Diane Wishart, Sandra Poole, Michelle Ranger, Deb Ridley, Chris Winton, Cindy Holowach, Carolyn Fewkes, Guy Germaine, Kerri Hill, Melissa Kean, Corey Bodnarek, Claire Tunney, Carmen Diep, Sue Gadag, Taylor Wynn, and Evan Richet. I'd ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions for you today. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three individuals from a not-for-profit called HomeFront. I'll be speaking about HomeFront later today in my member's statement. With us today we have Lauretta Enders, board chair; Maggie MacKillop, executive director; Tracy Neumann, director of development and communications. I would also like to introduce Staff Sergeant Rob Davidson from the domestic conflict unit with the Calgary Police Service. These individuals were instrumental in helping me craft my private member's bill, the Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015. I greatly appreciate their support and all the work that they do to help victims of domestic violence. Please join me in welcoming them, and let them please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to introduce to you and through you my wonderful constituency staff from the magnificent constituency of Calgary Bow. Harrison Clark studied clinical massage therapy at the West Coast College of Massage Therapy in Victoria, B.C., and now is happy to be back in his hometown of Calgary, Alberta. Heather Erlen studied a double major in women's studies and political science at the University of Calgary and also works with the constituency office of Calgary-Acadia. Harrison and Heather are invaluable not only to me but also to the constituents of Calgary-Bow. I would like them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A distinct pleasure for me to introduce to you and to the House an extraordinary group, with two representatives of the group, Parents Empowering Parents. This society was founded as a result of the crystal methamphetamine crisis that plagued the province in 2005. In 2006 their work and the work of this Legislature made Alberta the envy of other provinces when the protection of children act was unanimously brought into law. Their society is now on the front lines of our opioid epidemic, and they are working hard to present solutions for individuals, families, and this government. With us today are the vice-chair, board of directors, Mr. Craig Wehner, and the executive director, Larena Greig. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my great honour to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my part-time constituency assistant, Arie deValois. I am so proud and thankful to have him as part of our team. He is a person who is understanding and truly empathetic to the situations brought to us by our constituents and whose patience is greater than that of Job. I ask Arie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Woollard: Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my cousin Valerie Tootosis Bull. Valerie was born and raised in Medicine Hat, Alberta, and she was the first member of our family to earn both a bachelor's and a master's degree from the University of Alberta. Subsequently Valerie was a dedicated and inspiring teacher for many years, teaching in different First Nations schools such as Stand Off and Maskwacis and, finally, in Little Pine, Saskatchewan. Valerie worked tirelessly to promote literacy in her students and always enthusiastically supported students in recognizing, celebrating, and being proud of their culture and heritage. If Valerie and her granddaughter Kakike could please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly half of my constituency assistance team, Jocelyn Saskiw from Athabasca. Jocelyn is primarily responsible for handling my events planning and co-ordinating my schedules. Quite literally, without her assistance I wouldn't know whether I was coming or going. Due to her passion and dedicated work our constituency is very well served. I'm hoping she's in the House here. If she is, if she could please rise and receive the customary warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of staff and parishioners from Annunciation Catholic church. My guests here today are Father John Louis; Sharon Smith, fundraiser lead for the annual Annunciation gala; Paul Cavaliere, chair of the parish pastoral council; and Julien Bilodeau and Bob Smith, both co-chairs of the Annunciation fundraising committee. These very active and engaged members of Annunciation church in my constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark do a great deal to serve their congregation and families in our community. I look forward to speaking to some of this work in my member's statement later today. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce two young men – well, they're a little older now – that I met while I was the executive director of Lo-Se-Ca Foundation. I've known these two gentlemen for many years, and I'm so proud that I've been able to be part of their lives. I'd ask them to stand: Scott Vodola, Dan Huising, and their staff Aminata. Dan Huising, by the way, was my climbing partner on Kilimanjaro. Please give them the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you two of my staff from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills constituency. These two ladies keep things flowing smoothly in my constituency and do all the paperwork. That saves me a whole bunch of time. Also, I'll take this opportunity to introduce my lovely wife, Donna, who's also up in the stands. If Sharon Christensen and Nancy Pratch-Wiebe and Donna would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you Mr. and Mrs. Steve and Cheryl Christie. Steve served for four years on the AUMA board – and included with that is vice-president of cities under a half million – and many other provincial committees. Steve is currently the chair of the Red Deer waste-water commission. He was first elected to town council in 2004 and as mayor in 2010. He's currently in his second term as mayor of the city of Lacombe. His lovely wife, Cheryl, a very efficient wife, is also my constituency office assistant. I think I'm the third or maybe the fourth MLA that she's worked for over the years, so she knows how to manage an office and sometimes me as well. Anyway, will you please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through Shauna McHarg, Nick Dira, and Ali Abraham. You may remember that Nick suffered a spinal cord injury last year, and I'm sorry to report that despite having a great attitude and tremendous perseverance, he is still having difficulties accessing the system through AHS as well as his own health files. He has run into numerous AHS roadblocks despite working with a health advocate. I will be tabling this later. For now please wave and please accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is the greatest introduction that I will ever make in this House. It is my honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my family: Molly, Brady, and my husband, Kent. Now, they're both here today, missing a little school, but they have learned some things, and they're here to witness the live question period. They do watch us online quite a bit, and they even pound on the tables, usually only when the Official Opposition does something right. They have great respect for us all.

Now, my daughter, Molly, is in grade 3, and she's very successfully reading chapter books – we actually couldn't get her away from one last night – and this year she joined the swim club. She's trying to beat my 22-year-old record for girls' 50-metre backstroke, and she's got two more years to do it, but I'll be very proud when she's the one that replaces me on that board. Molly also has the gift of debate, and I think she just might be the future representative for Airdrie. Please pray for me in her teenage years.

Brady is in grade 1, and he is a sight word machine, very brilliant and working hard. Just this last weekend he was awarded the heart-and-hustle award at his hockey game. Now, he might have it in his back pocket, Mr. Speaker. We've caught him sleeping with it, brushing his teeth with it. He's got it everywhere. So we're very, very proud of him. I'm happy to report that Brady is a very good negotiator, which adds much to our family dynamic.

Lastly, my lovely husband, Kent. We've been married for 10 years, and he is a proud electrician who has recently actually developed our basement. Words of advice: don't let an electrician actually develop his own basement because it is brighter than the sun in there. Now, Mr. Pitt is the glue that keeps our family together, and I'm so grateful. Now I just need him to pay attention to us during the Roughrider games.

Thank you very much for being here today. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I have requests for a couple of other introductions. I would seek the guidance of the House.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes?

The Speaker: Could we have unanimous consent to go beyond 1:50 for some more introductions?

Mr. Mason: If you would like me to move that, Mr. Speaker, I will now do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my constituency assistant, Nina Karimi. Nina is, of course, instrumental in providing the constituents of Calgary's greatest constituency, Calgary-Klein, with top-notch provincial representation. What's also equally as important is that she's really able to keep me in line. Nina, I'd like you to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise and introduce to you and through you two members of our office up in Fort McMurray. They are the brains of the organization. Without them I could not function. Laila Goodridge and Carol Christian, if you'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House. Both of these folks have worked very hard as we've been inundated by concerned citizens that dealt with the fire. Ms Christian also lost her home in the great fire, and she continues to persevere. I thank them both for that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, if there are no additional introductions – Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Sorry, Mr. Speaker. However, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly one of my constituency assistants. She runs my office in Vulcan. She also keeps me in line, and that's what I let her do. Her name is Lisa Ludwig, and if she would please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Rate

Mr. Jean: It seems the NDP's desire to raise carbon taxes has no end. Here's what the Premier said: "We have never outlined that $30 was where it was going to stop." The Premier sure talked a tough game about opposing increases a couple of weeks ago, but now there's no limit to where this government is willing to go to make Albertans pay to heat their homes, drive their cars, or pay for groceries. How much money does the Premier think Albertans need to pay in carbon taxes before enough is enough?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier. [some applause] We might need to give a little extra time to the clock after.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's very clear that Alberta's climate leadership plan played a critical role in the decision that is going to help Albertans that we heard about last Tuesday. It is really unfortunate the partisan games that the opposition is playing again today. Almost a year ago the Leader of the Opposition asked, "Can the Premier give us one single example of a pipeline – any pipeline – that is closer to construction or approval as a result of her quiet diplomacy?" The answer is yes, but the problem is that I have to give him two.

Mr. Jean: I'm sure that the 100,000-plus Albertans that are unemployed find that comforting.

The Premier said that she consulted the power industry about jacking up the carbon tax, but like just about everything the government says these days, that's not true. Enmax, the company that the government is suing, says that that's complete nonsense. They know that this is going to hit consumers extremely hard, but the NDP doesn't seem to care at all. They don't care that it will make Alberta less competitive, and they don't care that it will hurt Alberta families a lot. How can you justify this massive tax increase to the millions of Albertans who will be much poorer as a result of it?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I understand today that the member opposite outlined what they would do differently. Let me just review to make sure I have it clear. First, they'd burden Albertans with the power company market losses of up to about $2 billion. Then they would subject consumers to a 900 per cent increase in electricity bill volatility. Then they'd stop $10 billion of private investment into renewables. Then they'd replace a made-in-Alberta climate plan with a made-in-Ottawa plan, and then they'd deny the need to act on climate change. But you know what else they forgot? Number six, they'd make sure we undid the Kinder Morgan approval.

Mr. Jean: Under the NDP's plan it actually means that families will be forking out $2,500 a year in extra taxes to pay for tens of billions of dollars in corporate welfare handouts and green slush funds for this government. Parents will be seeing busing fees jacked up for their kids, municipalities will be dinged big time – and that means higher property taxes for all Albertans – charities will be picked dry by the millions, businesses will be forced to pass their losses on to consumers, and families will be crushed by the weight of all of this NDP legislation. This will hurt people's lives. Why won't the Premier put an end to this ridiculous NDP carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite seemed to fail to notice that the federal government is moving ahead with pricing carbon, so we have two choices. We can go forward with our made-in-Alberta climate change plan, that is a result of extensive consultation with industry, with communities, with stakeholders, because that's what Albertans need and want, or we can hand the whole thing over to Ottawa, cover our ears, and shout angry tweets out east. But you know what? That doesn't help Albertans. We're going to do the right thing.

Electricity System

Mr. Jean: It's very clear that the NDP cares more about impressing elites than doing the right thing by Alberta's working families. When Ottawa says, "Jump," the NDP says, "How high?" as they go up. Our shutdown of coal is becoming a multibillion-dollar boondoggle. The cost of shutting down coal: $1.4 billion. The cost to cover NDP-made losses in the power system: over $500 million, and it won't stop there. They've made a complete mess of the whole power system in Alberta. When will the Premier put an end to this mess that she's created?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite really doesn't get it. What this government is doing is that we are putting an end to price volatility. We are protecting consumers. We are moving forward on phasing out coal in order to protect the health and safety of Albertans, and we are injecting stability into our economy, which is allowing more investors to come back in. You know what? I'm quoting investors when I say that. Our government had a lot of heavy lifting to do, and we got to work, we got it done, and I'm very proud of that.

Mr. Jean: The NDP raised prices on power companies, and Albertans will pay for that. Now this government is asking taxpayers to bail them out. It's this government that kick-started dramatic losses in our Balancing Pool by raising taxes. They only have themselves to blame, and Albertans know it. The government continues to be in litigation against Calgary-owned Enmax, a lawsuit that is simply a lose-lose for Calgarians. Will the Premier then take the easy step of reversing the carbon tax increases on our power companies and end this ridiculous lawsuit? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, we are going to move forward on the plan that we have put in place, that we know is going to get results for Albertans. We inherited an electricity system that was broken. We inherited an electricity system that was about to increase costs dramatically for consumers. The members opposite want us to retain a system that would have the upper price go up 900 per cent. It is jaw-dropping that they continue to advocate for this approach. We're standing up for Alberta consumers, and we're proud of that.

Mr. Jean: By shutting down coal power, this government is taking billions of dollars of generation offline. With their new changes the NDP has created a $25 billion gap in our system and through new legislation and new regulations will leave taxpayers vulnerable to pick up a big part of that tab. This is billions of dollars the government is experimenting with, and it's causing serious uncertainty in Alberta. Has the Premier done any assessment about how much money taxpayers are on the hook for under her new NDP plan?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, but I'll say it yet again, what we knew is that under the plan that we inherited, Alberta consumers were looking forward to a 900 per cent increase in the volatility of their electricity bills. Ignoring that for the sake of maintaining a risky, failed ideological experience is not good governance. We decided to go for good governance, and we're very proud of that.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, for two weeks we've been asking questions about Serenity and children in care in Alberta, and the answers have in no way been satisfactory. By now the minister should have some detailed talking points in his binder in front of him, and I will ask him a simple question, which Albertans are hoping he can answer with some detail. Will the minister tell us of two or three specific things that his ministry does differently now so that Albertans can be reassured that this government has actually learned something from the tragic death of Serenity?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I certainly recognize that it's a deeply concerning issue for everyone in this House, for me. I met Serenity's grandmother at the door of the Legislature steps last night. I can tell the member that the Premier has asked me to establish a committee, which will include members from across the aisle. We will look into this issue, and we will make sure that we have enough safeguards in place that we can prevent similar incidents from happening in the future.

Mr. Jean: The lack of answers, any action, and specifics is very disturbing.

Let's try another minister on the same matter. Last week I asked the minister how many cases had been delayed for two years because of the mess at the office of the Chief Medical Examiner. I didn't get an answer. The Human Services website actually says that 13 children who died in care over two years shockingly had their cause of death listed as pending. Can the Justice minister please explain why five child deaths in 2014 and eight from 2015 still don't have autopsy reports or causes of death specified? Why?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Nothing could be more tragic than the death of a child, particularly in care. We take these things very seriously. I obviously can't speak to the specifics of any one case, but we can look into those and get back to him. The office of the Chief Medical Examiner does take these cases seriously. In some instances, as is the case here, the RCMP may ask us to withhold the report. In other instances we may be awaiting a specialist medical report. So there are a number of factors that can play into these things.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, eight questions, not one real answer.

The care of vulnerable children is one of those issues that Albertans would have thought the NDP government could actually get right. I expected that it would have been one of those places where we would have seen some real progress. Instead, we have a Human Services minister who simply doesn't get it, and we have a Justice minister that only continues to make excuses for the mess that is the coroner's office. Is the Premier proud of the performance of these two ministers on the one issue that Albertans might have actually expected this NDP government to have gotten right?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government is working very hard to improve the work that we do to support vulnerable children across our province, and we have done a number of significant things. We introduced a child tax benefit, which pulled about 300,000 children out of poverty. We've introduced a school nutrition program. We've increased funding to children's intervention services by $37 million. We increased funding to the children's advocate so that the transparency that the members opposite are looking for could be assured and grown. We have taken specific action. We will take more action. We are convinced of this, and the members opposite . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Hon. members, if we could stay at buoyant and not explosive, it would be really helpful.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our Premier once told Prime Minister Trudeau that a $50 carbon tax was too steep for Alberta's economy. Then she told the CBC, "We don't think it's economically responsible to commit moving to $50 a tonne when the province of Alberta is struggling as much it is right now." This week the Premier folded like an umbrella on the issue and agreed to the $50 tax. To the Premier: why didn't you stand up to Alberta like Peter Lougheed instead of throwing us under the bus like Bob Rae?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would not stand up "to" Alberta. I would stand up for Alberta, and that's exactly what I'm doing.

You see, here's the thing. The federal government has the authority to put a $50 carbon tax in place, so we can either accept their rules or we can implement our rules. We have put in place our rules. We said that this was something that we could move on should we get progress on pipelines. On Tuesday we got progress on two pipelines, and I know that Alberta is ready to move forward by being a responsible energy producer, getting the best price for our product . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Alberta taxpayers and corporations are used as pawns for political posturing by the NDP. The government's own figures say that moving to $50 will raise $4 billion a year. That's $20 billion over five years. Agreeing to this much higher carbon tax when Alberta hasn't even started recovering from the recession is destabilizing. The Premier has even suggested that there's no ceiling. Surely the Premier can't mean that. To the Premier: what is your upper limit for a carbon tax that Albertans will be forced to pay?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly recommend that the member opposite read, oh, the TD Bank report on carbon pricing, read the recommendations that were made public last week by CEOs from across Canada on the value to our economy of finally moving forward on carbon pricing, or read any of the many other reports that actually suggest that if it is done carefully, that is exactly the most effective way to reduce carbon while at the same time supporting economic diversification. That is what we're going to do. It is the responsible way to go, and the price that the member across the way is talking about doesn't come into effect until five or six years from now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier initially announced that $20 or $30 would be fine enough on carbon. Now she's happy to accept Prime Minister Trudeau's $50 price tag. Oddly enough, the Finance minister has been unable to articulate a debt repayment plan even though interest payments from this government's debt will be $3 billion a year before the next election. That's the government numbers. To the Premier: is an unlimited price on carbon your way of paying for the out-of-control spending of your government?

Ms Notley: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the member opposite read our climate leadership plan, and he will see exactly what it is that we are paying for. We are paying for transitioning our economy to a more progressive energy-producing province, to more renewables, to more diversification. That's what it does, and that gets results. You know, over there we have Team Do Nothing for 44 Years, Team Angry, and Team Get Results right here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am a proud Albertan, and I will never cheer against the province that I love. The approval of two pipelines is great news, and I will give the government their due. But lost in all the celebration is the fact that this government is making the same mistakes as governments before it. Alberta remains on the resource revenue roller coaster, with no meaningful plan to get off. We don't have an economic diversification problem; we have a government revenue diversification problem. To the Premier: do you have any plan to get off the resource revenue roller coaster, or will you simply cross your fingers and hope that the price of oil goes up?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm not quite sure exactly what the member opposite is asking for, but we have laid out a clear and careful plan forward for the people of Alberta. As we all know, our government was left with an economy that was deeply vulnerable to the drop in the price of oil. As a result, there were two different approaches you could take: you could cut services, or you could cut more services. What we decided to do was support Albertans, have their back, and map out a careful plan to balance, which is exactly what we're doing, and we're doing it while we're supporting Alberta families, Alberta businesses, and Alberta's future.

Mr. Clark: Your careful plan to balance relies on the price of oil going up and nothing more.

It is pretty clear that the NDs think the previous government must have managed finances pretty well because they haven't found any real savings since taking office. Now, the Alberta Party knows that it is possible to find at least $2 billion in savings without firing teachers, nurses, or other front-line workers. Every sector in Alberta has to do more with less, Mr. Speaker, every sector except the provincial government. Again to the Premier: will you commit to working with the great people in Alberta's public service to find real savings without sacrificing front-line . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to report to the member opposite that under the great leadership of our Minister of Finance that's exactly what we are doing. We are getting off the roller coaster, we are not tying our spending to the price of oil, and we are carefully bringing our spending into line while protecting important public services, while protecting Alberta businesses, while protecting Albertans, and that's what we will continue to do.

Mr. Clark: A plan to maybe, possibly balance the budget by 2024 is no plan at all, Mr. Speaker.

The budget needs to not only be balanced, however. We need to actually get to surplus to pay back the debt that the NDP have accumulated. Now, the Alberta Party has a plan to eliminate Alberta's deficit while getting Alberta off the resource revenue roller coaster. It starts with capping the amount of resource revenue that we would use for operational expenses and allocating the rest to debt repayment and to the heritage fund. To the Minister of Finance: will you accept this plan of capping the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue we assume we're going to use . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question. You know, what this Minister of Finance will do is that I'll continue to move forward with the plan we had been elected on, the plan that we are moving forward with. That plan controls spending, diversifies our economy, and invests in capital infrastructure throughout this province. That plan is the right plan. Their plan would have brutally cut the services. Their plan would have cut more. I don't think the Alberta Party plan has a great deal to teach us on this side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ranchers in southeastern Alberta have been going through an incredibly stressful time since the case of bovine TB was detected in a cow slaughtered in the U.S. Some of these ranchers get one paycheque a year for their calf crop. It happens during the fall calf run. This means the CFIA quarantine of these cattle could not come at a worse time for these producers. It has caused substantial hardship and stress for the ranchers that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to helping producers through this tough time. I've been very committed to ensuring that our government is doing what we can to support our farming families. I raised the issue with the federal agriculture minister in October and again when we were together in China a few weeks ago. I ensured that officials from my department have met with producers in the region to provide an update and address concerns related to finances, mental health, and the status of investigation. I've been in close contact with beef producers, who understand what they need in terms of resources and responses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Given that these ranchers likely did not plan for the extra feed and yardage for these calves this late into the fall and given these extraordinary costs to producers already in a tough cattle market, to the same minister: will there be any financial supports for these producers?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to helping producers through this tough time. Producers know that both the federal and provincial governments are stepping up with support. We'll continue to work with Alberta Beef Producers and individual ranchers to take steps to ease their financial burden. Alberta Beef Producers have said that our commitment is a bright spot in what's been a very gloomy fall and that they appreciate the steps we've taken to ease the financial burden on producers. We will work to ensure AgriRecovery funds flow as simply and quickly as possible. We will continue to listen to beef producers and affected parties.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've heard from this minister that Alberta beef is in high demand across the world, including developing markets in Asia. Given that exports are vital to our beef producers, again to the same minister: what is the government doing to assure markets that Alberta beef is safe, healthy, and the best tasting in the world?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government supports our farming families and is incredibly proud of the beef industry in this province and the product we export to the world. We do not anticipate any market disruptions as a result of this situation. Isolated cases of bovine TB are periodically reported in Alberta and other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta beef continues to be the best in the world. We all know that. I will continue to be a proud advocate to ensure that our beef is able to reach the consumers that want it. While members on the other side deride us for going on trade missions, I will always be proud of our beef and will continue to open markets abroad so that our farm families can continue to prosper.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP have bitten off more than they could chew when it comes to the electricity file. Now, to make matters worse, they are legislating from crisis to crisis in an attempt to cover up mistakes. The NDP are lending the Balancing Pool hundreds of millions of dollars to cover losses from cancelled power purchase arrangements, but these losses could go on for years, so the bill has no limit. I'll give the Minister of Energy a chance to not be completely irresponsible. Just how much is this mistake of yours going to cost Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. You know, our government inherited a volatile electricity system, and from the get-go in deregulation things weren't set up properly. The Balancing Pool was created but was not given the ability to borrow money, and it was not given the ability to stretch it out over time, and that's the legislation we've brought forth to give the Balancing Pool some tools to manage this situation.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, I've got breaking news for the minister. It doesn't matter if it's a ratepayer or a taxpayer that's footing this bill for your mistakes. It's all the same hard-working Albertans.

Given that the NDP like to use a make-policy-now, pay-for-mistakes-later approach and given that this is likely to be just the first big cost coming our way on account of the NDP's mishandling of the electricity file, has the Minister of Energy done any sort of economic study of the total cost her government's electricity plan is going to cost Albertans, and will she publicly release it?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. You know, doing nothing was going to cost Albertans a lot. It was going to cost over $8 a month on their utility bills and over $300,000 on small utility bills. We are going to settle the other PPAs. When we do have all those figures in place, we absolutely will be releasing those figures.

Mr. MacIntyre: This is just another tumbling domino in the series of changes that have had to be made since the NDP foolishly raised the carbon tax on specified gas emitters. Given that another domino is the ongoing battle with Enmax because the NDP didn't know their file and given that the NDP have yet to confirm they won't make their lawsuit go away by forcing legislation, can this Minister of Energy clarify: are you set to turn Alberta into a banana republic by enacting retroactive legislation? Yes or no?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question. You know, we've come up with several announcements over the last week which tell the province about our plan. What we aren't going to do is follow a five-point plan that is going to lead to the creation of no more pipelines ever.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Drywall Tariff

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In September this year the federal government imposed a tariff on drywall being imported from the United States to western Canada. This was based on eastern Canadian drywall companies lobbying the federal government to ensure that western Canada paid more for its drywall. Overnight the price of drywall went up in Alberta. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what are you doing to work with the federal government to get these tariffs lifted and ensure that Alberta builders have access to affordable drywall?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the very pertinent question. First of all, I want to begin by saying that, like all Albertans, I'm concerned about the potential impact of this trade dispute on the costs for families, especially those rebuilding from the Fort McMurray wildfire. However, the local industry here in Alberta and across Canada has suggested that their competitors in the U.S. are not dealing fairly, and governments have an obligation to follow up on that. So our interest is in ensuring that both producers and consumers have access to an impartial system where competing claims can be . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that even during this period of economic hardship Albertans are still building new homes and given that the rebuild of Fort McMurray will require great amounts of building supplies, to the minister: if this government is not successful in having the tariffs removed, how will this affect the cost of building new homes in Alberta?

Mr. Bilous: Again, Mr. Speaker, you know, we recognize that this is a very unfortunate situation. We have two different interests going on here. The federal government has an obligation when a claim has been made that there's been an unfair dumping of gypsum into the Canadian economy, so that's where they initially imposed the tariff. I can tell you that they are trying to fast-track hearings and trying to get to a resolution very quickly.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the federal government is working to not have the U.S. government put tariffs on softwood lumber from Canada and given that the federal government put tariffs on U.S. drywall coming into western Canada, to the same minister: will you stand up for the forest and construction industries in Alberta and work with the federal government to be fair with our major trading partner?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, both the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry and myself have been working very diligently on the softwood lumber file, and I've been in regular conversation with my federal counterpart, Minister Freeland, on this issue and also on the softwood lumber issue. I just want to say that, first of all, there's nothing contradictory between pursuing a remedy for softwood lumber and issuing antidumping tariffs on drywall. Both are about ensuring that Alberta businesses and consumers have fair, equal, and undistorted opportunity in markets here and internationally.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy and Education Costs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards are using their reserve funds to provide inclusive learning environments, and I know at least one that has had to lay off education assistants because their reserve funds have run out, so students with special learning needs are being left without critical supports that they need. Now the government with its carbon tax is making the situation much worse. Can the minister please explain to Albertans how taking money from educational priorities like inclusion by imposing a carbon tax on schools is going to help address the needs of Alberta students?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Schools are a very, very good and appropriate place to work on the climate leadership plan because, of course, not only are we building a way by which we can help to diversify our economy, increase efficiencies in the public institutions which we own such as schools, but we are teaching important lessons. You know, I was just at a couple of school boards in the last couple of days. They're very pleased to both work on renovations around their energy use and provide the important lessons that our children need.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if those lessons are at the expense of inclusion.

Given that Edmonton public reports that the carbon tax will take $1.2 million this year and another $1.8 million next year out of funding that could have gone towards inclusion and given that one school board reported to me that they receive approximately $3 million per year in inclusion funding yet spend closer to $7 million to address special needs, can the minister explain to the school boards across the province how they will be able to continue to support all children when the carbon tax robs them of millions of dollars that should be going to our students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, school boards are very happy to work with us in order to work with our climate leadership plan, and they have been doing so already. To connect one program with another is entirely spurious, and it does not speak to the way that either the school boards or Education operate. It's maybe the way the opposition's logic operates, but it certainly has no bearing in reality in my schools.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that the congregated learning disabilities program in Calgary for students with special learning needs is shutting down in part because of transportation and since those students will be transferred to regular classrooms in larger schools throughout the city as satellite programs and given that these students will no longer have the safety and security found in a responsive and flexible learning environment that can adapt to their changing needs, is the Minister of Education willing to meet with these parents and explain why their children's education must be sacrificed to the ideological NDP carbon tax.

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, if this is a trend, where the opposition is going to try to attach anything that happens to be going on to the climate leadership plan, it's going to be very, very long until the Christmas break. We're working very hard for responsible decisions for our school boards. They're working together. Certainly, I'm aware of that specific question, but to even suggest that it somehow is tied to a carbon price is not only misleading, but I think it does a disservice to the way the opposition should be operating in a responsible manner.

Renewable Energy Contracts

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, a solar power company proposed in my riding illuminated some disconcerting information. This company indicated that it can produce electricity at a whopping 15.4 cents per kilowatt hour whereas the Balancing Pool is currently buying electricity at around 1.2 to 1.6 cents. I learned that this government is offering to subsidize this company at a rate of 11.4 cents per kilowatt hour or else it could not be viable on its own. Will the minister please explain how increasing the cost of electricity to taxpayers by an astonishing 863 per cent is actually in the best interests of Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm actually not entirely sure at all what the hon. member is talking about. However, what we can say is that, of course, the government of Alberta put out a request for proposals to procure our government electricity that is currently being procured via wind. We put out a proposal to see what the competitive market might offer us in terms of solar. We've made no decisions on that matter. What I will say with respect to the economic benefits of renewables in rural areas is that a 300-megawatt project, for example, will create 300 jobs and 1.5 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has trumpeted the notion that companies like Enmax were engaged in contracts that were not in the best interests of Albertans and given that this government now is proposing to guarantee loans for unviable green-energy products and given that I was informed that these contracts will be for 20 years, will the minister confirm to Albertans how long these contracts will be that they are saddling Albertans with?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, it really depends on what the hon. member is inquiring about. First of all, we have said, on advice from the ISO, that we shall in fact move forward with a contract for differences of competitive procurement model for our utility-scale renewables that will make up 30 per cent of Alberta's energy for electricity, and the other 70 per cent will be natural gas, which will be procured in a capacity market situation, which we are now consulting with industry on. As for the other request for proposals that we indicated, we asked the market how much they would be able to provide to the government of Alberta in terms of our ongoing electricity . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Hunter: Only the NDP government would ask those guys what they want.

Mr. Speaker, given that projects of this nature have been colossal failures in other jurisdictions – for example, the Solyndra solar project in the United States, that left taxpayers on the hook for $535 million in government guarantees – and given that someone needs to pay for the cleanup of these epic boondoggles, to the minister: who in Alberta will be liable for the cleanup costs should these unviable companies go under? The landowner who leased the land, the municipalities, or the taxpayer?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, only the Wildrose, the Party of No, would stand up in this House and, first of all, indicate that we don't want a market-based solution to bring renewables into this province, that we want to slam the door on those jobs, not even just Alberta-wide but in his own riding. It is shocking that they would want to slam the door on the renewables revenues for the municipalities, for the local landowners, for the entire regional economy, both in southern Alberta and in northern Alberta. This side of the House is going to create jobs and look forward to the economy of tomorrow. [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you.

You may have passed the buoyant stage.

The Member for Calgary-West.

Phoenix Sex Offender Treatment Program

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Phoenix program for treating sex offenders is world renowned. While rehabilitating sex offenders may not be politically popular, ensuring the safety of citizens is popular, and it's the job of government. The Phoenix program helps to prevent these offenders from recommitting crimes when they are released, yet we have learned that AHS is planning to end this critically important preventative program. To the Health minister. You said that the decision about the Phoenix program took you by surprise because you don't – and I quote – make decisions about specific programs. Minister, what is your stance today on cancelling this program?

Thank you.

Ms Hoffman: The assertion that the member opposite tried to share here couldn't be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. Our top priority is the safety of our communities. I understand that the Phoenix program has been very successful, and if there are ways to strengthen or improve the program, I think that we deserve the opportunity to have that review and determine how it might be able to move forward in an even better way. The program has been very successful, and it will continue to be very successful.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has confirmed that public safety is a very high priority and given that the offenders accepted into the Phoenix program are motivated to learn skills to help them function in society and given that if they are not treated, they will be back on our streets without the tools to avoid reoffending, which puts the public, including children, at risk, again to the Health minister: since you were not initially aware of AHS's plan to cancel the Phoenix program, what are you doing to ensure that the Health minister always knows about these kinds of decisions?

Ms Hoffman: Let me be very clear. The member opposite knows nothing about the program or its future. There was a very clear point in time, at the end of the current program, to do a review and find ways to improve it. The determination on how the program is going to move forward hasn't been determined yet because AHS is in the midst of doing the review. The program will continue to exist, it will be here, and if there are ways that it can be even better and serve more people and protect an even greater population, I think we owe it to them to give them the opportunity to do that exploration. But the assertion the member opposite makes couldn't be further from the truth.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that cancelling an effective treatment program for sex offenders in a secure facility like Alberta Hospital seriously compromises public safety and given that Alberta's Solicitor General should have been aware of the plans of AHS to cancel the program, to the Solicitor General: when did you hear of the threat to the Phoenix program, and what actions did you take to stop this plan upon learning of it?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, as the hon. Minister of Health has now said twice, there never was a plan to cancel the program. There is no plan to cancel the program. The program is very effective. We intend to continue the program. I never learned of it because there was no such plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Door-to-door Sales

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard horror stories from constituents, especially seniors, who got a knock on their door and were misled into signing expensive furnace leases by unscrupulous salespeople. Now I'm hearing how pleased they are that this government introduced a plan to ban door-to-door sales of household energy products. My own mother may now be able to remove the sign she has posted on her front door prohibiting long-term energy contractors from ringing her doorbell. To the Minister of Service Alberta: who does the ban cover, and what motivated this decision? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I certainly listen when Albertans raise concerns about consumer protection. I find it disheartening to hear that the opposition is heckling such that they don't find this an important issue. Since 2010 well over 1,000 Albertans have complained about aggressive, unsolicited door-to-door energy sales. After alarming spikes in complaints this year alone, we took action. We banned unsolicited door-to-door sales of furnaces, natural gas and electricity energy contracts . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've also got independent contractors and installers in my riding, who go into homes to conduct their business, to the same minister: how will the government's ban on door-to-door energy sales impact these small businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thanks to the member for the question. I am still deeply concerned that the opposition is laughing at this issue. I am proud to be part of a government that is committed to protecting Alberta's families from unsolicited, high-pressure sales tactics, but we still want to encourage good business practices. Albertans can still invite contractors and salespeople into their homes to discuss and sign a contract, certainly. In fact, many successful energy companies do not . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, if I could have my time back.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, with respect, I decide the time.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that since the government introduced the ban on door-to-door energy sales, I've heard complaints about other kinds of door-to-door sales, again to the same minister: will the government be banning door-to-door sales on other products?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue. I'm pleased that ATCO, Enmax, and EPCOR all joined the RCMP, the Better Business Bureau, and seniors' groups because vulnerable seniors have been the target of this particular misleading practice. I'm proud of our ban on these misleading practices. We are committed to taking action and to continue listening to Albertans. If there are other concerns about other kinds of door-to-door sales, we would be happy to hear those concerns. I encourage any Albertan who has experienced misleading or aggressive sales at their door to contact my office, and certainly I hope . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Carbon Levy Rate (continued)

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imagine Albertans' surprise to learn that one of this government's orders of business was to implement a carbon tax. This is interesting as at no time was this part of their election platform. In the retail industry this is known as a bait and switch, and it's considered a reprehensible way of doing business. Now we find out that $30 a tonne was never the ceiling. They are now using a sliding scale, and the top end is currently to be $50 a tonne. To the Energy minister: why are you and your colleagues enacting crippling legislation that will hurt most the very communities you were elected to represent?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, our carbon pricing policy architecture is designed to ensure that we have rebates and so on. If the federal government does move forward with their plan, it will reach $50 per tonne by 2022.

Now, of course, we have five steps from the opposition, unveiled earlier today. Step one, of course, no climate leadership plan, meaning no pipelines. Slam the door on that. Step two, have a plan imposed on us by Ottawa. Step three, continue with $300 million in health care costs and pollute the air while not supporting the natural gas industry. Step four, make sure you slam the door on billions in renewables. Step five, don't . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: No answer to why they're entering into crippling legislation.

Things are bad in northern Alberta, Mr. Speaker, and they're getting worse. Given that the Member for Peace River made a member's statement expressing concern around northern Alberta travel issues and given that she expressed concern that those communities pay nearly 20 cents more a litre for gasoline and given that this $50 a tonne tax will cost families an additional $2,500 a year when implemented, how do you propose that these northern towns, one of which quoted over $125,000 in tax increases – that's for a school division – and these counties and especially the rural school boards, who are suffering from high transportation costs, absorb the millions of dollars of increased . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, if the hon. member would like to consult the budget, we have put $2.2 billion of reinvestment into communities over the next five years. We have moved forward with a very robust rebate program covering 65 per cent of Albertans, 60 per cent with a full rebate. Those cheques will be issued in January. In addition, we are making sure that we're moving forward with a thoughtful plan to reinvest in technology and so on to make our oil and gas industry resilient for the carbon-constrained future, and all the while that whole climate leadership plan is getting us two pipelines.

Mr. Loewen: No answer on how these school boards are going to absorb these costs.

Mr. Speaker, given that no one gives like Albertans – we donate more to charities per capita than any other province – and given that charities primarily rely on our goodwill through fundraisers and donations and given that the increased cost of heating, gasoline, and other expenses, estimated by one Peace Country nonprofit to be as high as $75,000, will greatly diminish the great work that these good people will be able to do, to the minister: how do you propose that we help the thousands and thousands of Alberta's most vulnerable, that may be turned away due to lack of funding stolen away by what amounts to an ideological sin tax on charities that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Phillips: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the opposition or the folks who would like us to not move forward with energy infrastructure would like to slam the door on a carbon-constrained future, would deny the science behind it and all of the new opportunities. I mean, that's just not how we're doing business on this side of the House. We have moved forward with a round-table for nonprofits to ensure that we've got the right investments of our energy efficiency dollars, which are numbering some $645 million over the next five years, making sure those are properly invested. We've got the right programs in place for nonprofits. We have stabilized funding to schools, which the other side of the House would have cut by billions . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Calgary-Lougheed.

Indigenous Peoples' Health

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the recently released aboriginal peoples survey one-third of Canadians did not report excellent or very good health, but alarmingly that figure rose to 50 per cent for First Nations people living off-reserve. Chronic conditions, including high blood pressure, arthritis, asthma, mood disorders, and diabetes, affect almost two-thirds of off-reserve First Nations people. To the Premier: when will indigenous Albertans enjoy levels of health and wellness that are comparable to Albertans in the general population?

The Speaker: The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for what I think is an excellent question because it really reveals the fact that the government of this province and the government of Canada have failed to address the issues of the indigenous community for, well, essentially a hundred years in this province. We have finally come along to address some of the structural issues that are causing these problems, and we are doing so not only on-reserve but off-reserve by increasing child tax credits, by having school programs, and by working very closely with the First Nations communities to make true differences in their communities.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the same study found that off-reserve First Nations females were significantly more likely than males to report having one or more chronic conditions and given that poor health outcomes are linked to smoking, incompleteness of high school education, unemployment, low household income, and other unmet health needs, to the minister: what is the government doing – please be specific for Albertans, sir – to strengthen Alberta's nonprofit agencies that provide support for women to address these very factors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I want to identify that we've done a number of things specifically for women in the indigenous community. This year for the very first time we gave core funding to the Institute for the Advancement of Aboriginal Women, something that was never done by the previous government. We've also increased the amount of money being given to the friendship centres, which work with the women. We've been working across the board in every one of our ministries to institute the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples to ensure that there are changes in our curriculum, in our health programs, and in our employment programs, all of which changed the structural indicators.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the Child and Youth Advocate recommends making mental health programs more accessible in First Nations communities and given that the advocate also recommends that Alberta's mental health services incorporate cultural components in treatment strategies for young people and that Human Services, Education, and Health require professionals to have adequate training about the history of indigenous peoples, to the Minister of Advanced Education: sir, what steps are you taking to ensure that educational opportunities to achieve these competencies are available to Alberta's current and future professionals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we continue to support the work of Advanced Education by providing predictable, sustainable funding, which we've done in two consecutive budgets, with 2 per cent increases each year. Of course, we continue to make sure that all Albertans have opportunities to achieve high-quality, affordable education by keeping tuition costs low through a third year of a tuition freeze. We continue to work with the presidents of the universities and colleges to look at the issues of access for all Albertans, particularly the rural and indigenous people of this province, and we continue to find ways to improve the system.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Official Opposition Policies

Ms McPherson: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a brand new party, the Party of No. On a day when Albertans were breathing a sigh of relief, when surely we could all be united in feeling just a little bit more hopeful, the Party of No made an appearance. To the news that two pipelines were approved, the Party of No said that they wouldn't get built. To the news that respect and consultation with diverse voices led to cabinet approval, the Party of No said that consultation should end. To the news that approval wouldn't have come without climate leadership, the Party of No demanded that we scrap the climate leadership plan.

But that's what we've come to expect from the Party of No. No to the climate leadership plan. No to any climate change plan even if it gets us a pipeline. No to letting people speak their minds even if we disagree with them. No to investing in front-line health care instead of privatizing. No to new child care spaces. No to farm safety. No to ensuring that all kids feel safe in school. No to corporations paying their fair share, and the only thing that a flat tax flattens is nurses and teachers. And last week they said no to banning scam artists who target the elderly.

The Leader of the Opposition has gone so far as to say that he would get rid of every piece of legislation, every piece of regulation, every single thing this government has done. Mr. Speaker, you know you might be taking your job too literally when you vow to repeal the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. So I guess we shouldn't be surprised when even just for one day the Party of No can't put Albertans before their pride and rally behind these pipeline projects and what they'll do for our province.

But no matter, Mr. Speaker. The opposition can keep being the Party of No. With this government and with this team, Team Get Things Done, we will keep moving Alberta forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Bovine Tuberculosis Quarantine

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fifty Alberta ranchers continue to face an uncertain future due to the bovine tuberculosis quarantine in east-central Alberta. The poor communication exhibited by government agencies has left ranchers with more questions than answers. Government officials assure us that timely communication is the standard while producers are adamant that they are being left out of the loop. This must be fixed ASAP. With no long-term and only partial measures being proposed to compensate for over 10,000 head of cattle currently under orders to be destroyed, producers are left wondering what the future holds for them and their livelihoods.

While the source of the outbreak is still unknown, we have learned that it is of a strain previously unknown in Alberta. That is cold comfort to those affected, and the lack of answers compounds the problem. Every rancher in Alberta knows that they, too, could have been the victim of poor government policy, and unfortunately good people's lives are disrupted because of that.

Additionally, we know that the CFIA plans to set up a high-risk quarantine feedlot for the affected ranchers. That will alleviate some concerns, but it would further ease them if the ranchers had a firm idea of not only the timeline but accurate details for setting this feedlot up. This government needs to make sure that they have a plan to ensure that the CFIA follows through with their proposals, and I look forward to timely, comprehensive updates from our agriculture minister as well.

This unfortunate incident has been going on for over two months now, Mr. Speaker, and we have been fighting to get answers and results for our affected constituents. We will continue to do so until this crisis has passed. With 50 premises currently under quarantine, people's futures are at stake. It is our responsibility here in this House to ensure that these operations remain financially viable for generations to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Annunciation Catholic Church in Edmonton

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very grateful to have opportunities in Edmonton-Meadowlark to build relationships and engage with many of the exceptional members of the Annunciation Catholic church, a few of which I had the pleasure of introducing today. Annunciation church has a fascinating history as part of the Roman Catholic archdiocese of Edmonton. It is one parish among 125 that stretch from the Rocky Mountains in the west to the Saskatchewan border in the east and from Olds in the south to Mayerthorpe in the north, covering over 80,000 square kilometres.

The parish in Edmonton-Meadowlark was established in 1959, officially opening in 1963. Today, serving a congregation of about 2,000 families, the mission statement of the Annunciation Catholic church includes being a welcoming, multicultural parish that connects people with their faith. Their recent sponsorship of a Syrian refugee family set to arrive in Edmonton later this winter is just one example of the initiatives that Annunciation takes part in to help support families and our community. I was honoured to be a guest at their recent gala, held on October 21 at the Hotel MacDonald, to raise funds for this Syrian family of four. The decision to provide this support was very timely as 2016 was declared to be the Year of Mercy for the Catholic Church by Pope Francis.

Annunciation church serves the community in many ways, whether it's providing for those in need through their weekly emergency food bank, collaborating with other churches in the food for good gardening project, or providing community support to charitable organizations such as the Bissell Centre, the Marian Centre, and the Canadian Wheelchair Foundation. I have great respect and deep appreciation for the members of Annunciation and their commitment to bringing their values to life through acts of benevolence. Their dedication, compassion, and collective generosity to our community truly make it a better place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

HomeFront Services for Domestic Violence Victims

Drever: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to the accomplishments and dedicated work of HomeFront, a not-for-profit organization in Calgary whose mission is to "create a safe community by eliminating domestic violence through direct client services, justice coordination and facilitated community action." For 16 years this Calgary-based agency has confronted the cycle of domestic violence in the home. HomeFront utilizes a unique model of integrated services that work alongside police, justice, child and family services, probation, treatment, and community agencies. This model has proven to be very successful and has gained attention across Canada and around the world.

Helping nearly 6,000 families a year, HomeFront can celebrate the fact that 83 per cent of families who receive their outreach intervention see an end to domestic violence in their homes, and 75 per cent of charged files are resolved in docket court, with only 25 per cent advancing to trial. Simply put, Mr. Speaker, HomeFront's approach to domestic violence saves lives and has consistently proven to be a valuable model of service that is necessary in helping break the cycle of family violence.

While crafting my private member's bill, Bill 204, Residential Tenancies (Safer Spaces for Victims of Domestic Violence) Amendment Act, 2015, HomeFront CEO Maggie MacKillop and Staff Sergeant Rob Davidson, head of the domestic conflict unit of the Calgary police department, were instrumental in bringing the voices of Albertans that were directly impacted by family violence to the legislation. I am greatly appreciative of their support and their efforts to curb the epidemic of family and domestic violence in this province.

Thank you.

Racism

Mr. Dang: “Hey, white person.” “Tired of political correctness? Questioning when immigration will stop?” “Tired of antiwhite propaganda?” “It’s only racist when white people do it.” These messages were plastered across Edmonton for the world to see. These messages were what passed for public discourse. Mr. Speaker, a former MP and current PC leadership candidate stated: “Our national railways would not have been built if we had been governed by ‘social licence’ rather than rule of law.” These are racist statements. I have a fairly thick skin, but one of the messages that I’ve received on social media stung a bit more than the rest. It read loosely: grow a bleeping brain and some ethics, you dumb chink.

When we hear politicians talk about screening people for barbaric cultural practices and screening for anti-Canadian values, we all suffer. When we let ourselves forget that this hate and vitriol affects real people, we all suffer. We cannot sit idly by and comfort ourselves by saying that this is nothing more than a fringe minority. We cannot sit idly by and believe that we have nothing to be worried about. Because we should be worried, Mr. Speaker. We should be worried and know that this type of politics is not just coming to Alberta and Canada, that this kind of politics is already here.

Mr. Speaker, for all hon. members in this House, for every single Albertan who believes in equality: speak out, make noise, and make a difference. This can’t wait.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Judicial Appointments

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we received news that the inquiry committee of the Canadian Judicial Council made the recommendation to remove Justice Robin Camp from the federal bench. This develops from a tragic ongoing story that involves the sexual assault case of a 19-year-old woman who was subjected to language where Justice Camp repeatedly referred to her as “the accused” and asked, “Why couldn’t you just keep your knees together?” and “Why didn’t you just sink your bottom down into the basin so he couldn’t penetrate you?”

The inquiry determined that Justice Robin Camp demonstrated “antipathy towards laws designed to protect vulnerable witnesses, promote equality, and bring integrity to sexual assault trials” and “relied on discredited myths and stereotypes about women and victim-blaming.” Albertans must have confidence in the judicial system. The mere perception that sexual violence is excused or explained by blaming victims undermines a safe, free, democratic society and could further disempower victims from coming forward with these sorts of allegations.

I should know. This fall on the steps of my city hall in Fort Saskatchewan, as part of the White Ribbon Fort Saskatchewan campaign, I decided to share my own story of being raped, how I didn’t want to tell anyone for fear of judgment, slut shaming. Like many women, I believed it was my fault. I share this story in the House because the women in my home constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville need to know that they are not alone, that I believe you.

I stand with a government who gets it, who is increasing diversity in all areas of government, including the judicial bench, so that Albertans can see themselves in those that interpret and apply our laws and have confidence in them. Mr. Speaker, Albertans need to know that our justices are qualified. I do not want to hear again a quote that says: my colleagues knew my knowledge of Canadian law was very minimal; it was nonexistent. Albertans need to know that our government is committed to supporting survivors and ending victim blaming or excusing it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I am seeking unanimous consent to waive section 7(7) to go past 3 o’clock.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Member for Cypress- Medicine Hat to table a letter that was sent to the Minister of Health. I have the requisite copies.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Calgary-West I’ve got five copies of a report from the Red Deer Advocate talking about how trial lawyers were concerned that the Phoenix program was going to be unfunded and shut down.

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We’ve heard in this House recently some accusations of inaccessibility, and I’m happy to table a letter in this House – it’s from the Strathmore Standard – in which the mayor quotes about just how accessible and impressed he’s been with this government’s engagement, particularly on the issue of the hospital improvements in this riding that have been long awaited.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I’m rising today to table five copies of the letters sent out to all Members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly by the Credit Union Central Alberta, which I referred to in my Bill 32 speech on November 30, 2016. The letter notes that the Alberta government consulted with the credit unions and that the proposed changes to the Credit Union Act are keeping in line with what credit unions need to enhance the competitiveness and sustainability of Alberta credit unions while providing further benefits to Albertans and the provincial economy.

The Speaker: The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-Foothills I table a letter from the Lethbridge Chamber of Commerce that he referred to in the House this morning in the Bill 30 debate.

The Speaker: The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies to table of a letter sent to myself from the town of Vegreville by Mayor Myron Hayduk. It is a letter that just details a further request for advocacy on behalf of Vegreville and the immigration, refugee, citizenship case processing centre, asking the federal government to reverse their decision.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we may be at points of order.

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today. Given that it's Thursday afternoon and the first day of December, I felt a wave of the Christmas season come over, so I thought perhaps it would be best if I just withdrew the point of order.

The Speaker: On behalf of all members of the House season's greetings to you, sir.

Mr. Cooper: And a Merry Christmas to you, sir.

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: The supplementary message is that the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required by the Legislative Assembly for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates on behalf of the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance. When supplementary estimates are tabled, section 4(5) of the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act requires that an update to the consolidated fiscal plan be tabled. The quarterly fiscal update tabled this past Monday provides the larger context for requests for additional spending authority from the general revenue fund.

Mr. Speaker, these supplementary supply estimates will provide additional funding for support to the Legislative Assembly for the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. When passed, the estimates will authorize an approximate increase of $1.5 million in expense funding.

Government Motions

27. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

The Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to Motion 27?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to what is a very important motion. I rarely have the opportunity to rise and say something nice about the government, but when I do, I think it's warranted. Oftentimes in this House we see supplementary supplies ranging in the hundreds of millions of...

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I could interject just a second. We have copies of the motion that are being circulated.

Mr. Cooper: I would love to see it.

The Speaker: I'm corrected. They will stand.

Hon. member, please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: I was just about to praise you and I almost stopped myself, but thank you.

Often we see this in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Today we see one for a significantly smaller sum. I know that the opposition has supported the use of these resources for the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I hope that the boundaries commission doesn't make any significant changes to the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills because my colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and I have agreed that we would arm-wrestle to see what happened after that, and we all know what will happen if it came to that.

I might just say that I look forward to safe passage of the supplementary supply estimates.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion 27?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate?

[Government Motion 27 carried]

28. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 61(2) the Committee of Supply shall be called to consider the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for three hours on Monday, December 5, 2016, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

[Government Motion 28 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 30

Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act

[Debate adjourned December 1: Mr. van Dijken speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, I will continue from where I left off. This is the first policy that has received some positive feedback from economic development groups and chambers across the province although they are not pleased at the final result because there is confusion over how narrow the Alberta investor tax credit appears and who is eligible. But we need to create jobs. It's a very serious issue facing our province, and we need to try and generate growth, investment, and jobs. The Nisku industrial park, just south of Edmonton, the largest industrial park north of Texas, is looking like a ghost town these days.

The capital investment tax credit is meant for large capital investments, the kind that hopefully could bring some life and productivity to manufacturing areas like Nisku. I know that the minister hopes to encourage up to $700 million of new investment in Alberta with this tax credit. The capital investment tax credit offers a 10 per cent nonrefundable tax credit of up to $5 million to Alberta companies involved in manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure on a minimum capital investment of $1 million. That means that somewhere between 14 and 70 businesses will be assisted in creating jobs.

With a budget of $70 million over two years, I can see this program becoming very popular and therefore oversubscribed. This is a concern moving forward as to who is going to be chosen to be able to qualify for this tax credit. Now, I know that an additional $5 million is dedicated in the capital investment tax credit to Culture and Tourism to develop supports for Alberta's cultural industries. I will be watching very closely to see which cultural industries are funded. These are nonrefundable tax credits, not grants or loans or loan guarantees, and this, in my mind, is the next best way to help business over a major income tax cut.

Now, the Alberta investor tax credit is meant to bring investors and small businesses together. This is a 30 per cent tax credit for share investments made in small Alberta corporate businesses between April 14, 2016, and December 31, 2019. Again, I too can see this program, with a budget of $90 million over three years, becoming oversubscribed.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that during Committee of the Whole we heard from a number of the members from the governing party that spoke with great excitement about the prospect of receiving a return of $1.98 on every dollar refunded under this program. One thing we should take into consideration is that if the government truly believes in a tax credit program to drive investment, diversification, and growth in this province and if the 98-cent return is considered acceptable, why are we putting limits on the program? If the programs have been proven to generate growth, to generate diversification, and to generate investment and the return is acceptable, it would make sense to then expand the program and make it available to all those that would be willing to invest in the province of Alberta and in processing and manufacturing.

The maximum amount that can be raised by an eligible business is $5 million directly through investors or $10 million through Alberta venture capital corporations in every two-year period. The maximum tax credit for an individual other than a trust will be $60,000 per year, meaning qualified investments of $200,000 per year. The Alberta investor tax credit is available for investments in companies that are engaged substantially in proprietary technology research, development, or commercialization; interactive digital media development; video postproduction; digital animation; or tourism; or so says the minister's fact sheets.

Another government member has suggested that things like agrifood and agribusiness will also be included here. I would note that this is definitely a way where we have the opportunity with the renewable products that we produce in this province to gain, diversify, and value-add on those products and create even more growth and investment in the province, and this is a good thing. So to include agribusiness in this program would be very much advisable, I believe.

I can only hope that the minister knows what his government members are saying on his behalf because he rejected our attempt to confirm that all these sectors are covered. But he has assured us that it will be broad enough to include those key sectors, so we will hold him accountable to that.

With that understanding, Mr. Speaker, I urge support of this bill and trust that we will be able to measure the growth of the economy as a result of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) of the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the motion? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to raise just a couple of issues. I am in support of the bill generally, of course, because it does reduce taxes for Albertans, and that's always good. I guess I do just think that Albertans need to also realize, though, that there's a bit of sleight of hand here in some ways. Even the title of the bill, I guess, is a bit of a shift of understanding. We're calling this a bill to invest in a diversified Alberta economy.

We've heard the members across the way say a number of times that we shouldn't be relying on a one-market economy, as if this is a one-pony show in Alberta. I would suggest that they either don't understand the nature of Alberta's economy or that's a deliberate misrepresentation because the Alberta economy is, in fact, much, much more diversified now than it has been in our past. I would encourage the government members opposite to actually read the government's own report on that, the 2015 report on the economy, in which it's very clearly pointed out that, in fact, the oil and gas sector in 1985 was 36 per cent of our GDP. Listening to the government members, you would think that it's higher than that now or maybe, at the very least, only marginally lower.

The reality is that the oil and gas sector in Alberta now is no longer 36 per cent of our GDP, but in fact it is half of that. As a percentage of our GDP it has declined by 50 per cent. So to say that we are in an economy in Alberta that is overly reliant on one industry, that we have this one-market economy, that we need to diversify as if it has never been happening is absolutely not a clear statement. If any other sector of our economy were to decline by 50 per cent, we would be extremely alarmed. Here we're saying that now that oil and gas is only 18 per cent of our entire GDP, somehow we rely on a one-market economy, that we need to diversify, as if we haven't been, as if we aren't — there's just not a correct representation of the facts there.

The other areas that are strong — and I guess you could ask: "Where did the other 18 per cent of what used to be 36 per cent for oil and gas go? What is it?" Well, business and commercial has grown, finance and real estate has grown 15 per cent, and construction is 12 per cent. These are things that have grown tremendously, and to say that we are overly reliant on only one industry when we have several industries that are actually very close to it and it's only 18 per cent of the total is just simply a misrepresentation of reality.

I do understand, though, that if you have the goal to keep oil in the ground and you want policies that cap the oil sands and you want to tax everything in order to somehow change behaviour and suppress our best income, then it makes a nice storyline — don't ruin a good story with the facts — but it's just not a right representation.

The other part of this that I think is important is that these other growth industries will in fact contract if oil and gas declines even lower than the current 18 per cent that it is because, truthfully, it is the big wages of oil and gas that have supported the growth in those other industries. It's oil and gas that have provided the capital and the liquidity that have fostered the very diversification that we've been looking for.

Take the construction industry, for instance. I don't have detailed numbers, but if you took the growth caused by oil and gas out of construction, construction would not have grown as it has.

Finance and real estate. The same Alberta government 2015 economic report states very clearly that the reason the financial sector has grown in Alberta is because of the oil and gas investment. So if we are bound and determined to diversify oil and gas into nonexistence, then finance and real estate will suffer substantially and will go down, as the report indicates.

Same thing with business and commercial. Much of that has been driven by both the wages and the capital and the liquidity that oil and gas have provided.

Prior to the oil and gas boom in Alberta, Alberta, quite frankly, was a very poor province, and our growth in these other areas was very, very minimal. So to try and say that somehow we're a one-pony show in Alberta, that we haven't been diversifying and we're not diversified I think is entirely a misrepresentation to the citizens of Alberta.

Another aspect of this is the implication that somehow we need to have investment in other industries in Alberta. I find that fascinating because we, in fact, have almost the highest per capita investment in this province already. The three highest areas in the country for investment are Newfoundland and Labrador, first of all; Alberta, second; and Saskatchewan, third. Now, where does that money come from? It comes from the oil and gas industry.

We can go ahead and diversify down to zero our oil and gas industry, and we will discover that we have extremely reduced per capita investment in our province. Are we now having to create some sort of artificial means of investing in our province? I think investment is great, but to give the implication that there's been no investment is entirely incorrect, again. The sector where Canada can compete in our world, where it is and was receiving great levels of investment, is exactly the one where we're trying to destroy here. Are we trying to incentivize non-profitable sectors? Is that what this is about? So often government programs to create business end up becoming ways in which smart business guys game the government and walk away with piles of money.

Every country has niche advantages. We need to take advantage of our niches. By the very money that we're depreciating now, we have been able to grow, to diversify, to expand in other areas. The truth is that oil and gas is the one that has helped us in these other areas, and now we have policies that impede our most successful wealth-creating industry in the nation, I would say, not just Alberta.

Some of you may be familiar with the StrengthsFinder book and inventory assessment of personal strengths. The point of that whole thing, that's been fairly popular over the last few years, is that you need to find out what your strengths are as an individual and focus on your strengths in order to succeed. Here I find that we are not focusing on our strengths; we're trying to focus on our weaknesses and somehow pull ourselves up by our bootstraps while we ignore our strength, our strongest industry. Canada's Olympic team concentrates on improving athletes' strengths, not trying to make them into something that they aren't. We need to improve our economic strengths, not withdraw from our best opportunities to succeed.

I support the bill, but I find a lot of it disingenuous, and the communication to Alberta I don't think is fair or realistic.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have another opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 30 today. Overall, this bill has met many of our expectations in terms of economic stimulation. Investor and capital tax credits can be extremely effective tools when appropriately applied. Further, we are pleased and in fact thankful for the minister and his team's thoughtful consideration of our amendments and in particular his support of three of our motions for amendment, a rare and appreciated hat trick that we will savour but not become accustomed to. Our caucus always endeavours to offer productive solutions when the opportunity arises, as do our colleagues beside us as well, and I thank the minister for recognizing our constructive intent, supporting these three amendments, and embracing the spirit of developing the best possible legislation for all Albertans in as nonpartisan a way as possible.

While it has been mentioned time and time again during debate on this bill, we need to look no further than British Columbia to see the positive impact investor tax credits can have on the government when they take a hands-off approach and allow the market to determine where capital and investment dollars will flow. This is perhaps an area where we could have been grateful for more consideration of a few more of our amendments, but, alas, we will not be greedy, if only on behalf of struggling Albertans who are desperate for capital and investment flow in the areas of creation of economic activity and jobs – a very desperate situation for us here in Alberta, indeed.

Our caucus's sentiments are such that we believe that if both of these programs were opened up with greater latitude and more clearly prescribed within the legislation, it would increase the effectiveness of the proposed tax credits and the potential for broader cross-industry uptake and hence an even greater diversification of investment and much-needed job creation.

I do appreciate the minister's best intentions in that he has noted that he will exercise the discretion afforded him within the bill to ensure the program is as successful as possible. We look forward to seeing that discretion in action as he addresses potential applicants from diverse sectors and across Alberta: urban, suburban, and rural. I am encouraged through his actions and collaborative spirit that the minister's heart is in the right place with this legislation, and I have no doubt he will work extremely hard to ensure private industry turns these tax credits into real economic growth and mortgage-paying jobs.

As much as we trust that the minister has the best intentions, we would have liked to see a more formal reporting structure within this bill. Accountability and transparency are key whenever hard-earned tax dollars are being spent, and we would have liked to see a formal public report published each year and presented to this Assembly to ensure the program is working as intended and that dollars are being allocated as efficiently and as effectively as possible.

The minister has committed to ongoing communications with this Legislature and with Albertans around the impact of this program, so we look forward to being kept apprised to provide further positive input from our caucus and to giving kudos as kudos may be due.

We intend to hold him to his word on transparency. It is not that we do not trust his or the government's best intentions on this legislation; it is just that disclosure and analysis of hard data allows for transparent and unbiased review and reflection for all of us in this House in search of the best possible outcomes.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would once again like to express our caucus's support for this bill. No, it's not perfect, and we would have liked to have seen a few more changes, a few more acceptances of some well-thought-out amendments, but this is a solid step in the right direction, and we appreciate and applaud the work by the minister and his hard-working staff on this legislation and the programs contained within it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Seeing none, are there other members who would like to speak to the motion? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to rise in support of this legislation and thank the government for it. I'll try not to repeat too much of what my colleague just said, but I will say that this is important. As someone who made his living as an entrepreneur for over a decade before I first got elected, I know how much this might mean to a lot of businesspeople.

I'll say, Mr. Speaker, that one of the sayings that I and some of my friends who are also entrepreneurs used to have in the day is that everybody has the right to lose their life's savings in their own business, and I stand by that. But, of course, nobody goes into a business with the intention of losing their life's savings. They go into business with the intention to make the world better, to make a good living, to row their own boat, to set their own course, to maybe create something new that hasn't been created before. These are the aspirations that really make Alberta and Canada and the world better: people that put themselves out there at their own risk.

In many cases people that do that, of course, will put a mortgage on their very home, talk to their husband, their wife, or whomever they live with and agree to put the biggest asset that they have or a portion of it on the line to start that new business because sometimes you just need help. I will say that this bill that the government has brought forward may provide help for entrepreneurs to either get started or get to the next step. I want to thank the government for providing the one vehicle where that may well happen.

I think we really need to appreciate those people that go into business. My experience is that they're not greedy, they're not selfish. They're hard-working people. You know what? Lots of people go into business, Mr. Speaker, because they can't get a job, so they essentially buy themselves a job. They decide they're going to provide a service, whether it's a personal service in the construction business, sales and marketing business, whatever it happens to be. These are people making their way in the world, the same as people with jobs, only they have more on the line. In many cases, instead of having one boss, as people often do if they have a job, they have many bosses. Every one of their customers is their boss. If they have money borrowed from the bank, the banker is their boss. Even their suppliers are sometimes their boss because the suppliers can choose to supply them or not.

When you get to the point where some of these entrepreneurs have a chance to be successful with support from programs like this legislation puts in place, I'll be proud to sit down and vote for it in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. I hope that the minister will be diligent in trying to make sure that the money gets to the right place to create success. I hope he is diligent in reviewing the legislation on a regular basis to make sure that it doesn't need to be improved or tweaked or upgraded or even cut back in some areas based on the experience that Albertan companies have. Based on the good work that the minister and his staff have done until now, I am prepared to give him that chance and wish him all the best and indeed Albertans all the best that involve themselves with the results of the legislation that we're talking about here today.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members who wish to speak to the motion?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to move closure.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my comments fairly brief as I think we've had some fairly robust discussion on this bill in the House. What I want to indicate is how extremely proud I am of this piece of legislation, not just myself but also our government. It sounds as though we're going to have support from all parties in the House, which is fantastic.

I want to begin by thanking all of my cosponsors. These are government MLAs who have worked hard to provide not just feedback and input as well but to bring together input and feedback from organizations, businesses, entrepreneurs that they've met with. I'll give a shout-out to the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, the MLA for Stony Plain, for Calgary-Glenmore, for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

As well, a very big thank you – I appreciate, you know, hearing members thank the ministry staff for all of their hard work on bringing together a program like this. It took an incredible number of hours. You know, I often say that Economic Development and Trade is the best ministry and has some of the best civil servants although I'm sure my colleagues would argue that each of their ministries, in fact, have the best. I know that they've worked very, very hard on this.

Last but not least, really the most important group to thank are the very people who helped us design this bill, which are the small-business owners, the entrepreneurs, industry leaders, chambers of commerce, venture capitalists, economic development associations across the province as well as municipalities that provided input. Again, you know, a very significant piece of legislation which I'm confident will help our small businesses grow. It will help build on our strengths.

You know, on the topic of diversification, those that have heard me speak around the province know that when I talk about diversification, I talk about building on our strengths, and Alberta has a significant number of strengths. Some of our industries outside of oil and gas may not have been given the attention that they deserve, and this bill will help them to grow.

We know that there have been significant supports in the past for certain segments of the oil and gas sector although I'm proud to say that this does apply to companies that are looking to innovative, creative solutions, new technologies that apply to the oil and gas sector. This fits hand in glove with our climate leadership plan and with the direction that our government is taking the province, to invest more in renewables and find innovative solutions to drive down our greenhouse gas emissions and really be the clean energy hub or clean energy producers of the world. This bill really embodies our government's commitment to supporting small businesses, to supporting entrepreneurs around the province and working with our industry leaders.

The last point I'll make: I appreciate that some members of the House have said that they thought the program should have more money. Others have talked about how maybe it's too much, how long the program is. I feel that this is a great start. I am going to be monitoring these two tax credits very carefully over the next couple of years, and again, if the program has as much success as we believe it will, then I will be championing a 2.0 in a couple of years from now and looking at either extending it or tweaking it or whatever we need to do.

I think this definitely will give Alberta and Alberta enterprises and entrepreneurs a real leg up. It will support them. I know industry and entrepreneurs are excited. So without further ado, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and be hopeful that we will pass this today, and then we can share this with Alberta businesses and get them back on their feet.

Thank you very much.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Government House Leader I move second reading of Bill 33, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, as I think all members of the Assembly know, miscellaneous statutes typically reflect provisions that are very straightforward and noncontentious. This bill has been circulated to the opposition parties, and I believe that there is consensus on all of the clauses of the bill. I would encourage all members to please give their support to Bill 33 and its provisions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing that I love more than moving a few commas, punctuation, and just overall grammar, so I, too, was thrilled to review the clauses of the bill and, as the Deputy Government House Leader mentioned, did have the opportunity to review the bill prior. There certainly are no objections on behalf of this side of the House, so I look forward to a quick passage as well.

The Speaker: Are there any other members?

Mr. McIver: Well, very briefly, without repeating every word the hon. official government House official, the Leader of the Official Opposition or the House leader of the Official Opposition said, I just want to say – I'm not sure what I just said, but thank you to the previous speaker. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the government side for sharing this with us. When there's something that's in many cases housekeeping and other things overdue, long-term things that we all agree on, it's actually a nicer way to do business in a co-operative fashion. There. I've taken up enough time. I think I just said thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who would like to speak to second reading of Bill 33?

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 33

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2)

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I'd like to continue my ongoing impassioned support for the bill.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill?
You're ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 33 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 33.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur on the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing as information I've received recently is that roads in southern Alberta are actually not in very good shape and seeing as how we've had a very, very productive week with robust conversation, we want to ensure that all members of the Assembly get back to their homes and families safely. For those reasons, I move that we adjourn until Monday, December 5, at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:46 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to Thursday, December 1, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us reflect or pray, each in our own way. On December 3 it was International Day of Persons with Disabilities. Let us take a moment in this Assembly to recognize the accomplishments and significant contributions of people with disabilities to this province. Their diligence, their courage, their perseverance ought to serve as a model for all of us on the need for recognition of all persons.

Mr. Halvar De La Cluyse Jonson
August 14, 1941, to December 2, 2016

The Speaker: Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service that we all understand.

Halvar De La Cluyse Jonson was with us from August 14, 1941, to December 2, 2016. Mr. Halvar Jonson was first elected as the Member for Ponoka in 1982 and was re-elected five additional times in the constituency of Ponoka-Rimbey, serving for a total of 22 years.

Over those years Mr. Jonson served as Deputy Chair of Committees from 1989 to 1992, Minister of Education from 1992 to 1996, Minister of Health from 1996 to 1999, minister of health and wellness from 1999 to 2000, minister of the environment from 2000 to 2001, and minister of international and intergovernmental relations from 2001 to 2004. In 2006 the brain injury ward of Alberta Hospital Ponoka was renamed the Halvar Jonson Centre for Brain Injury in his honour and for his long-standing community and public service.

Let us each take a moment of silence to reflect on Mr. Jonson as you may have known him.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. I invite all participants to sing in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our collective admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome on your behalf members of the Jonson family, who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your names and remain standing until all are introduced: Tamara Jonson Shepherd, daughter of Halvar Jonson; Trent Jonson, son of Mr. Jonson; and the important people, grandchildren of Mr. Jonson, Solomon Shepherd, Cyrus Shepherd, and Sloane Shepherd. On our collective behalf thank you for your service to the province.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: I believe that you have a guest, President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got a couple of guest groups to introduce. The first that I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly are 15 hard-working Treasury Board and Finance staff members. These TBF staff join us from a variety of business areas and professional backgrounds. They keep everything running smoothly in my department. I cannot thank them enough for the work they have done and their expertise in getting the job done. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I may have jumped too quickly. Were there visitors or just guests today?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the public gallery we have 24 students, a teacher, and three parents from the nicest riding in Edmonton, Edmonton-Whitemud. The students are from Earl Buxton school. They're accompanied by their teacher, Laura Wenger, and their chaperones, Ruth Olson, Joel Gehman, and Maged Sabry. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Finance, you had additional guests?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. For the introduction of some special guests it's my pleasure to introduce to everyone a couple of groups of guests. They're the people accompanying them and then the actual guests they have with them. It looks like it's from a crosscultural background. Ms Shelly, Mr. Rob, Ms Andrea, Miss Belinda, Miss Stephanie, Mrs. Inna are the chaperones; and then Karina, Kimberley, Danielle, Sarah, Lois, Jessica, Lan, Travis, Darlene, Christine, and John. If they'd all stand up, we'll give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislative Assembly five guests from Canadians for a Civil Society who are visiting the Legislature today in recognition of Human Rights Day. First of all, Dr. Kristopher Wells, who is an assistant professor in the Faculty of Education and faculty director for the Institute for Sexual Minority Studies and Services at the University of Alberta; Doug Stollery, who is the chancellor of the University of Alberta and is currently serving as a member of the legal team challenging certain discriminatory criminal laws in Jamaica; Dr. Mona Nashman-Smith, who is the principal and CEO at the Edmonton Islamic Academy and who led the development of the Global Women's Leadership Forum and through her work in international education received the most excellent order of the British Empire from Queen Elizabeth II; Judge Robert Philp, QC, who is the chief commissioner of the Alberta Human Rights Commission; and Charan Khehra, who is a director for Canadians for a Civil Society and the proud cofounder of Daughters Day, which celebrates the lives and achievements of all women. I see they have all risen, and I would ask that they receive the warm welcome of this Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of medical students who are here from both the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary. This morning I had the pleasure of meeting with Amy Li, Kieran Steer, and Adom Bondzi-Simpson. They are all going to be fantastic doctors one day. Just for your information, since 2009 students from the faculties of medicine at the U of A and U of C have held annual advocacy days here at the Legislature. Today the primary topic that we spoke about was their hopes for greater integration and intervention of mental health supports in primary care through complementary health practitioners, including psychologists. These leaders make me very excited about the future of our physician workforce. I ask that Amy, Kieran, Adom, and the nine colleagues that they're here with today please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. I believe they're behind me.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll complement those that the minister has introduced. This is Alberta medical student political action day. Even the medical school has learned about advocacy.

It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some remarkable medical students from the universities of Calgary and Alberta, talking with MLAs in support of the Alberta medical students action day and focusing on the need for greater intervention and primary care as well as addictions support and the need for stronger curriculum in medical school to enable family doctors to take on some of these challenging cases. I can only hope that their efforts are as successful as last year, when they were here to advocate for improved vaccination rates, Mr. Speaker.

With us today are Sina Marzoughi, Joshua Nash, Kieran Steer, and Amy Li. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane. I believe you have some brief introductions.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Stephen Legault. As program director of Crown, Alberta and Northwest Territories and founding member of the Yellowstone to Yukon Conservation Initiative Stephen has advanced protections for some of the most ecologically important mountain landscapes in North America, including the Castle watershed. Stephen and Y2Y are valued partners in our government's work to conserve wild spaces and were instrumental in helping me craft Motion 511, regarding managing and conserving public lands to ensure Alberta's water future is secure. I'd like to ask Mr. Legault to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, there is a long list of guests that I have here today. I'm going to encourage brevity.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of individuals from an organization called Diversity magazine. Joining us here in the gallery today are Frankline Agbor, Gisèle Ndoungo, Albert Fernando, Jud Dudley, Mary Thomas, Ibraheem Kolawole, and Monika Siepietowska. Diversity magazine was the fantastic idea of Frankline Agbor in December 2014. The purpose of the publication is to highlight inspiring activities of various ethnic communities in Edmonton, of which Edmonton-Decore has many. I would like my guests to please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Cynthia Lazarenko and Beryl Scott. Cynthia is a former social worker and a strong advocate for the rights of seniors. Beryl is a retired registered nurse with 40 plus years of service and a vice-president of the Canadian Multicultural Education Foundation. I would ask that my guests rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three sets of introductions today, but I will be efficient. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Barb Burgemeister, who is here today from Hanna. She is receiving the 2016 Stars of Alberta award. She will be one of six recipients of this award this year for her work at the Hanna Food Bank and the Center Street Thrift Store as well as the community garden. Through you I extend the congratulations of this entire House to her and ask that she receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you today Charlotte Preston and Richard Preston along with their grandchildren Chance Scott and Colby Scott. They hail from the Hanna area. If you ever meet anybody from Hanna, just ask if they know the Prestons. I assure you that they will. Richard is currently a councillor in Hanna and was a long-time employee of Sheerness power. Colby and Chance are great hockey players and have excellent 4-H projects that I always enjoy seeing when they send me pictures. I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Last, Mr. Speaker, with the Preston family is Charlene Preston, who is my senior constituency assistant in the great riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. She used to work for the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler until she was stolen by the former Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I'm happy to say that right after the election in 2015 I managed to convince her that Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is the greatest place in Alberta to live. I would ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three local community advocates: Leo Campos-Aldunez, an adult educator, community animator, and media consultant who provides leadership and support to nonprofit organizations; Paula Kirman, who is well known for both her photography and her work in human rights, reconciliation, and peace with the Edmonton Coalition against War and Racism and the Edmonton Interfaith Centre for Education and Action; and Brenda Requier, who was diagnosed with MS 23 years ago and has been a strong advocate for the health care needs of persons with multiple sclerosis. I would ask that all three guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Government House Leader with a request for unanimous consent? I have a list of other guests.

Mr. Mason: You read my mind, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Colleen Ring and Curt Clement. Colleen is a long-time social justice and peace advocate, and in 1995 she introduced the Random Acts of Kindness Week initiative to Canada. Curt is a vice-president with KPMG, and he supports various community organizations and serves on the board of directors of the YMCA of Northern Alberta. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make. First, I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Paul Finkleman. Paul is the only Calgary recipient of this year's 2016 Stars of Alberta award. Paul has been active for decades as a volunteer, from organizing Calgary's first Earth Day activities as a high school student in the '70s to being the president of the Weaselhead preservation society. I would ask that Paul please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we mark Human Rights Day, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you some extraordinary members of Canadians for a Civil Society. I'll ask that they rise as I say their names. Ruby Littlechild is a strong advocate for indigenous inclusion in the economy and empowerment of women. Amrita Gill is an educator in the area of immigration and settlement and played a key role in co-ordinating the 2015 Daughters Day. Carrie-Lynn Rusznak is vice-president of the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees and chair of the Human Rights Committee. She is a strong advocate for human rights and increased participation of women. I'd ask that everyone please extend the warm welcome of the House.

1:50

The Speaker: Welcome.

My apologies, Member for Calgary-Glenmore. I believe you had some other introductions.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Amrita Mishra and Vasant Chotai. Dr. Mishra is a sociologist by training and public policy analyst by vocation and is currently a project director at the Indo-Canadian Women's Association. Vasant is the vice-president of Canadians for a Civil Society and a director of Public Interest Alberta. I would now ask if my guests could rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Renée Vaugois, the executive director of the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. She is also the president of Alberta Hate Crimes Committee and a director for Women in International Security Canada. She has spearheaded many initiatives to strengthen community-based human rights advocacy and systemic change, including a coalition of individuals and organizations under the banner of racism free Edmonton. I ask my colleagues to join me in welcoming Ms Renée Vaugois here in the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the executive director of CPAWS, northern Alberta, Alison Ronson, and 60 grade 3 students from Elmwood elementary school and their three teachers and several parent chaperones. These students have been studying wildlife, and they joined us today to present a postcard campaign asking the government to continue their work preserving caribou herds. Minister Eggen and I were happy to see their hard work earlier today. Please extend to these special guests the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly, and I'll ask them to rise.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly advocates and family members of the residents of the Good Samaritan Mountain View Centre in Hinton. They are here today in support of long-term care spaces in Hinton. Please rise and remain standing as I call out your names: Lynda Jonson, Ron Jonson, Jim Chell, Marilyn Carling, and Brendalee Raketti. Can you please join me in welcoming my guests so that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introduction today? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Sandra Azocar, executive director of Friends of Medicare, and Joel French, executive director of Public Interest Alberta. They've been working with bloodwatch.org to support the voluntary blood and plasma system in Alberta and across Canada. Can the Legislature please provide them with the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour of Human Rights Day I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Dr. Shyamala Nagendran. Dr. Nagendran is a professor specializing in computing sciences in informatics on medical education. She passionately supports women's education and is a mentor to many. She serves on the boards of the YMCA of Northern Alberta, Visions Global Empowerment, and Lifelong Learners Association. On top of this, she is the founder of Natya-Size Fitness/Wellness Club, the club's focus being holistic health and wellness. Dr. Nagendran is seated in the public gallery, and I see that she's standing, and I ask now that she receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Child Protective Services Review

Mr. Jean: Children in care in Alberta are being very badly served by this government. For weeks we have been asking questions, and we get platitudes but no real answers. Now the NDP has announced an all-party committee. I will remind everyone that the previous PC minister struck a special panel to review these same matters, and they reported back in the spring of 2015. It appears nothing at all has changed under this government. Will the minister commit today that he will appear before the all-party committee and actually give answers to questions on what has changed since Serenity's death?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. I recognize that it's a very important issue for all members of this House and all Albertans, and the Premier has asked me to move forward with a committee with members from all sides of the House. We are working on the terms of reference, and I will have more to share within a matter of days. We will work with everyone to make sure that we get this right.

Mr. Jean: Every piece of information we have suggests that what happened to Serenity broke all sorts of Human Services' policies and rules. We know kids in care are supposed to get a visit every single quarter. But, outrageously, indigenous children are more than one and a half times as likely to have gaps of seven months or more between face-to-face contact with their caseworkers. In Serenity's case it was 11 months of negligence that led to her death. Will the Premier commit that Human Services' executives, managers, and caseworkers will appear before the committee to explain how things went so tragically wrong?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. I share the devastation that all Albertans are feeling on this issue. Once we have the committee, we will make sure that we look into all aspects of intervention and make sure that we put enough safeguards in place so that we can avoid similar incidents happening in the future. It will be a thorough look at the intervention system in the case before us.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean: This issue matters to Albertans, and it used to matter to the NDP, but now when we ask the minister what has improved, we get no actual answers, and we get the indigenous affairs minister ranting about right wingers as if he hasn't been part of the government for over 19 months. If things need to be changed, the minister needs to change them. That's his job. Will the Premier guarantee that any and all front-line workers or managers in children's services that want to speak to the all-party committee will be given full whistle-blower protection at the committee?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We take this matter incredibly seriously. That's one of the reasons why we've implemented a number of efforts to make sure that not only do we protect the children who are in care, but we provide supports to families to enable them to care for their own children in the safest way possible. We are going to continue to work with members of all parties in this House to make sure that we get this right. This is a matter far more significant than political games or partisan attacks, and that's why we're working with all parties, to make sure we can move forward collaboratively.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Political games, Mr. Speaker? This was disclosed by a reporter because nobody came clean with the facts.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Rare Diseases

Mr. Jean: In early November I asked the Premier questions related to drug coverage for an Alberta teen, Haley Chisholm, who suffers from a very rare kidney disease. At the time the Premier committed that she would have the minister look into the matter and get back to me with respect to the particulars. It's been over a month, and Haley continues to wait for answers about receiving funding. To the Premier: what is the answer for Haley about this drug, that would improve Haley's quality of life and potentially extend it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. In terms of this specific case we respect the privacy of individuals, and I will not be discussing specific medical conditions in this House. But I can assure all members that this matter is one that is in the best hands of medical professionals. Doctors and other qualified health professionals should be making questions and determinations about the best mode of treatment, not political individuals. That's why we're making sure that medical professionals have the ability to make the best determinations when it comes to medical conditions.

Mr. Jean: The Premier previously stated: "Our regulations are designed so that health care professionals are making decisions about what is in the best health outcome for people." That's not the case for Haley, who continues to see her quality of life decline. Now, speaking of medical professionals, Haley's doctor has clearly stated that this drug is the best course of treatment for Haley's extreme, rare kidney disease. Will the Premier commit to following the advice of the health professional who knows Haley's case best and fund this drug?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out to Haley and her family at this very difficult time, as it does to other Albertans who are hoping to have opportunities to access potential treatments that may be of benefit to them. There is a very special panel that is set up to determine the best medical course when it comes to these types of special applications. I commend the physician for doing what he believes is in the best interest, and I respect the panels, that are full of health professionals, to make the best determination when it comes to moving forward.

Mr. Jean: The current regulations that surround the short-term exceptional drug treatment program have meant nothing but roadblocks for Haley's family. The Chisholms chose to come forward, and I'm very thankful that they did because they shone light on this program and the shortcomings of the program as it currently stands. I sincerely hope that Haley will receive the funding that she needs for this drug. But what about other families like the Chisholms, who have met so many obstacles in the system and continue to meet those obstacles? Will the Premier commit to reviewing the exceptional drug treatment program regulations? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I stand by the fact that medical professionals, not politicians, are in the best position to be able to make determinations about how to move forward. This is a very sensitive case, as are the others that have been referred to in this question. It's important that we give support to our medical professionals when determining the best course of action rather than trying to make political attacks. I know that I'm not in the best position to be able to make a determination, and it's important to make sure that doctors have the ability along with other health professionals to make the best course-of-care decisions. I feel for Haley and for all others who are in this position, and I trust our physician community to make the best determinations.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Jean: Seven billion dollars: is that the final price tag for incompetent NDP policies on our electricity grid? Let's see. The cost to kill coal jobs, $1.4 billion; subsidies for new power, up to $8 billion; raising taxes and forcing losses in the Balancing Pool, add another billion dollars. What does this mean for the average Alberta household? Well, higher power bills and higher taxes to pay for subsidies and a stunning amount of government borrowing. Will the Premier confirm how many billions of dollars taxpayers will be on the hook for, or has she simply not done her homework?

Ms Hoffman: What I will confirm is that the Official Opposition is lobbying for a 900 per cent increase, potentially, to power bills for Alberta consumers. [interjections] That certainly is not in the best interests of Albertans, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm incredibly proud of the work that our department and our lead minister have done on making sure that we can have stable, predictable, reliable, and as affordable as possible electricity for Albertans. [interjections] I won't back down from standing up for ordinary Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to remind you that this is the season of festive celebrations and that we want to be kind to each other. So please remember that. Think of that Christmas tree.

The hon. member.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. And it's also a place where the NDP make the rules and make the laws that add these taxes to Albertans. First, the NDP raised taxes. Those tax increases caused massive losses for power companies. These companies used the law and gave their contracts back to the Balancing Pool. The Balancing Pool is now losing hundreds of millions of dollars directly because of an incredible level of incompetence from this government. Now the government wants to give themselves a blank cheque to cover their losses. That's at least $500 million today and will lead to higher power costs for Albertans for the next decade. Will the Premier admit, finally, that she's made a mistake . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member may not be aware, but there is a plan to move a phase-out of coal across Canada. Instead of standing by and saying, "Ottawa, you solve our problems for us," we have a government that isn't afraid to tackle difficult issues. We're moving forward with leadership, and – guess what? – being good leaders is not only good for us at home, but it's good for us in terms of getting our products to tidewater. Last week there were two pipelines approved, and it's been made very clear that that wouldn't have happened if it weren't for the climate leadership of this government.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, unemployment is at 9 per cent; 74,000 full-time jobs vanished in the past year under this government and their policies. But the NDP continues a lawsuit against Enmax that could lead to 4 per cent property tax increases to Calgarians. They are asking taxpayers to fork over $7 billion for changes and experiments, NDP experiments, in our electricity grid. To top it off, the carbon tax comes into effect in just 26 days. How can the NDP justify asking Albertans at this time to pay $2,500 a year to help fund the NDP's multibillion-dollar boondoggle?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member's questions are all over the place today, and I'll tell you where he was on Saturday. He was leading a rally that called for the personal and private information of Albertans to be hacked into – that's not leadership – and also for our Premier, who's working today to address very valid concerns with regard to our access to tidewater, to be locked up. That's shameful, and I really wish the Leader of the Official Opposition would do more justice to Albertans in standing up for Albertans.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Child Protective Services Review

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This House did valuable work on November 21 when it held an emergency debate to discuss the deaths of children in care. The appalling death of four-year-old Serenity brings all members together to encourage a lasting solution to these tragedies. I would thank the government for accepting my recommendation to establish the all-member committee. To the Human Services minister: will you make sure that the committee's terms of reference have a broad scope of authority so it's able to root out systemic problems with the child intervention system?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I would begin by thanking the member for bringing up that suggestion. That's certainly a very heartbreaking issue, and all Albertans share that devastation. I'm deeply concerned about this issue. I will make sure that when we set up the committee, it looks into all aspects surrounding this case so that we can have enough safeguards in place that we can avoid similar incidents happening in the future. We are absolutely committed to making sure that children get the support . . .

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the yes.

The relentless work of the Child and Youth Advocate in investigating deaths of children in care has prompted, amongst other things, the formation of this committee. I'd like to take the opportunity to thank Mr. Graff and his staff for the valuable work, which, undoubtedly, takes a personal toll. The involvement of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate will be critical in the committee's review of the child intervention system. To the minister: will the committee have the ability to invite expert witnesses, including Mr. Graff, to get the best information possible to make the best decisions for children?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Again I can assure the House and all Albertans that this issue is the most concerning one. It's a priority for our government and it's a priority for me that we get this right, so I will make sure that we have the committee set up in a way that can work and that can identify opportunities that we can provide to our children going forward and make sure that similar incidents don't happen.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like two yeses, so we'll continue.

The Standing Committee on Legislative Offices is in the midst now of reviewing the Child and Youth Advocate Act, with oral presentations beginning in mid-January. As the standing committee is looking at updating the four-year-old act, its review offers a window of opportunity for the minister's committee in case it has changes to recommend to that act. In the spirit of timeliness, Minister, do you foresee this committee meeting in the next month so that its work can coincide with the standing committee's review of the Child and Youth Advocate Act and add to it if possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The standing committee is an all-party committee, and they set their own schedule, but I will make sure that whatever work the committee I establish does, it doesn't replicate the work of other committees and other initiatives across the GOA so that instead of replicating, we are learning from past reviews what's available and making sure that we get that done in a timely manner so that we have changes that we can implement as soon as possible.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View

Addiction and Mental Health Strategy

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June of 2015, shortly after taking office, the Premier announced a review of mental health and addictions here in Alberta. She recognized that the current system was not good enough and announced that her government would act on the matter. The committee reported the Valuing Mental Health report one year ago. Hundreds of front-line workers and families who participated and continue to participate and offer input are still waiting for an update on the 26 remaining recommendations to fix our inconsistent and fragmented mental health and addictions system. To the associate minister: what progress has been made beyond the six initiatives?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would thank the member not just for his question but for his tireless advocacy on this issue as well as his service on the review committee. Our government recognizes that mental health and addiction treatment are a priority not just for Health but across ministries and within the community as well. We've been working very closely with community leaders and service agencies on the implementation of the report, and we'll have more to report in the coming weeks.

Dr. Swann: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been almost 12 months. I think we're expecting more timely reporting.

Given that the panel itself identified primary care and primary care network reform as essential for these health providers in order for them to play a stronger role in addiction and mental health, what reforms have occurred in primary care?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for his question. The role of the primary care networks and primary health more broadly within our health system is a very critical one, and we've been working very closely with the PCN leads not just around how we're incorporating mental health services but also how we can include interdisciplinary teams throughout the system and throughout our province so that Albertans know that they are getting the best quality care that they can and so that we're able to make the best use of the resources available.

Dr. Swann: Again, Mr. Speaker, we're looking for progress. Can the minister provide evidence of progress? Given that the opioid crisis continues unabated, now over one death per day in Alberta, and a wide range of professionals need to know how this crisis is changing, when will we see public reporting monthly to assess ER wait times, ER visits, wait times for treatments, naloxone use, and deaths so we can assess whether things are getting worse or better?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is data that our department is tracking through the chief medical officer of health. I'm pleased to update the House that as of October 31 over 7,200 naloxone kits have been distributed to Albertans through nearly 900 registered sites, which include local pharmacies and university campuses. We know that because of this we are seeing a decline so far in the number of overdoses but also that patients are able to access life-saving medical interventions because that naloxone dose is able to reverse . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Public Transit in Calgary and Area

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's widely known that investment in transit helps to create jobs, protects the environment, and gives additional options in mobility to the public. I know that many Albertans and residents in Calgary-Northern Hills currently struggle to find efficient public transit options in their communities, whether smaller towns or north-central Calgary. Can the Minister of Transportation tell us what investments the government is making in public transit?

Mr. Mason: Thank you for that question, hon. member. I'm very pleased to say that this weekend I announced nearly $250 million in provincial support for public transit in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, from Medicine Hat to Fort McMurray. Thanks to the partnership and collaboration of all orders of government the announcement included more than $500 million total for transit projects in our province. Transit is increasingly becoming the way that people can get to work, can get to appointments, can visit their family in an affordable and environmentally responsible way. We're glad to support it.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kleinstaubert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that enhanced public transit can help municipalities with land-use planning by easing pressure to continually expand road networks and parking lots, which is especially important to growing urban areas, to the same minister: how is the government investing in transit in Calgary to support efficient transit-oriented urban planning?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the provincial funding for transit announced this past weekend includes more than $147 million for the city of Calgary. I'm very proud of that. These public transportation investments will stimulate economic growth, transit-oriented development, and an environment for innovation like electric vehicle technology. Our government is committed to major infrastructure spending to meet the needs of all Albertans and Calgarians as well, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Kleinstaubert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary region has long been an economic centre in western Canada and given that Airdrie is a rapidly growing part of that future, again to the same minister: how is the government investing in transit in that community?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, Mr. Speaker. This member is on the ball. On Saturday we announced that Airdrie will see new transit investment of more than $9 million, and more than $6 million of that will be from our government. This will support design work for construction of a north transit terminal, which is expected to include an off-street platform for customers, parking for up to 200 vehicles, and amenities such as heated shelters and on-site security cameras. We'll also support a new mobile fare payment system and an integrated transit system alert. Airdrie is on our map.

The Speaker: Thank you. Such enthusiasm.

Provincial Borrowing

Mr. Fildebrandt: In June 2015 the government repealed Alberta's already weak debt control legislation with a cap of 10 per cent on GDP, allowing the government to once again borrow for operations. Just months later they repealed their very own legislation, leaving no limit whatsoever on their ability to borrow. Now the government intends to borrow money to fund their incompetent management of the electricity Balancing Pool. We are literally borrowing to keep the lights on. Will the minister tell us how much additional debt the government will accrue for their electricity debacle?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to borrowing, I want to say that the amount of debt that we're going to be taking on I think I tabled with the fiscal plan. It's about 10 per cent debt to GDP by the end of this fiscal plan – that's where we'll be – which is the lowest of any province in this country. The second lowest is Saskatchewan. They're behind us. We are the lowest, and that's what we'll be keeping with, the fiscal plan that we tabled.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Not answering the question, as usual.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the original $30-a-tonne carbon tax was going to cost taxpayers $3 billion, with the funds going to the green slush fund, the government is now increasing the tax to $50 a tonne, costing taxpayers $5 billion. Last week we asked the minister if he had a plan to balance the budget before his 95th birthday. His only response was to accuse the opposition of wanting to throw children out onto the street, and still he didn't answer the question as to how we'd balance the budget. So I'll ask a simple question: does the government intend to put any of the carbon tax revenue against the deficit?

Mr. Ceci: We've been extremely clear with that. We are not using any of those monies. You know, the monies that the carbon levy will bring in are going to be going back into the pockets of Albertans through a rebate, they're going back to Albertans with innovation across this province, and they're going back to companies, who will become more efficient. Agencies, nonprofits, everybody will use that money. It's not going to the deficit.

Mr. Fildebrandt: They're going to use the money to stuff the pockets of corporate slush funds, Mr. Speaker.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the government is borrowing $14 billion a year right now with no plan to stop, the revenue from the expanding carbon tax must look awfully appetizing to the minister right about now. This is concerning because the government has said that its $3 billion carbon tax was never a ceiling. Albertans want to know: is the new $5 billion carbon tax a hard ceiling, a soft ceiling, or a trampoline?

Mr. Ceci: I just want to reiterate for everyone that the carbon levy monies will not be going against the deficit. It will not go to pay off the debt. It is going to diversify this economy, something that that side is not focused on. They're focused on boom and bust. They're focused on backward-looking policies. They're not focused on the future like we are. They're focused on everything that Albertans don't want.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, as Albertans are merrily turning on Christmas lights for their last carbon tax free holiday season, many are wondering just how much more power will cost once they finish singing Auld Lang Syne. The government has unleashed a veritable blizzard of power-related announcements in recent days, and Albertans are wondering just what size of shovel they will need to dig out from the avalanche of increased NDP costs. To the Energy minister: including loans to the Balancing Pool and subsidies to renewable energy generators, what is your best estimate of the additional cost of implementing all facets of the NDP power plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there is no carbon levy on electricity. What there is, however, is a series of rebates to lower and middle-income folks for their use of transportation fuels and heating fuels and a variety of programs that Albertans can avail themselves of – some $650 million worth of efficiency programs – that will apply to reducing transportation fuel use, heating fuel in homes, and electricity use. In addition, the renewables contracts will be dealt with through a competitive procurement process.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that there are many contributors to the overall price tag and given that this complicates the exact amount that Alberta taxpayers will end up shelling out, to the Energy minister. Let's just look at one phase of the cost. Given that considerable subsidies will be required to bring the increase to the 30 per cent target for renewable energy set by this government, what is the government's best estimate of the total cost of subsidies for renewables between now and 2030?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are undertaking a competitive auction process as recommended by the Alberta Electric System Operator. We are in the middle of that process right now. What we do know is that renewables are now competitive with natural gas. However, they do have different economics to them. With natural gas coming on, we'll be looking at the capacity market, as the minister explained to the public a couple of weeks ago, and for the renewables we will do a contract-for-differences model because we know that this is the lowest cost procurement for both types of power.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, Albertans would like to know what the cost is. Given that this NDP government is trying to encourage new renewable energy production, which we support, and given that Alberta already has over 10 per cent of its existing generation from renewable sources, including wind and solar, and given that the government has yet to indicate to existing generators of renewable energy as to whether existing infrastructure will be eligible for subsidies, to the Energy minister: can you clarify? Will companies who already have existing renewable generation infrastructure be eligible for subsidies on both existing as well as newly constructed renewable infrastructure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As for overall costs, whether it's the rebates, the investments in efficiency infrastructure, renewables, or technology, those were contained within the budget that we passed earlier this year. As for existing renewables, that is part of the conversation with the capacity market and part of the consultations that the minister announced for the 30 per cent goal. That competitive procurement process and that contract-for-differences model apply to new generation.

Thank you.

Municipal Tax Maximum Ratio

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, the Legislature has been debating Bill 21 and last week passed it at Committee of the Whole. Currently Bill 21 is clear. Certain municipalities that exceed the new 5 to 1 tax ratio can continue to exceed that ratio until such time as the municipality may decide to lower it. But then last week a new government discussion guide indicated that all municipalities may now be expected to conform to the new 5 to 1 ratio at some unspecified time. To the minister: if this change was under consideration, why was it not included in the government's amendment to Bill 21?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm incredibly proud of the fact that the discussion around Bill 21 has been incredibly open and transparent, and we will continue that. The fact that concerns came up during the consultation that perhaps we needed to have a conversation around gradually bringing the outliers into compliance: that conversation needed to happen with all the people affected by that. Rather than putting something into the legislation based on that conversation, without talking to everyone, we put it in the discussion guide so we can continue to have conversations about what the best interest of Alberta is going forward.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, given that the uncertainty the government has now created by reconsidering the grandfathering clause around the 5 to 1 ratio is creating concern in those communities that are exceeding it and given that the residents of Fort McMurray that have suffered unprecedented devastation from this summer's wild-fire are now being faced with the prospect that their property taxes will make their living situation completely untenable, to the minister: what are you doing to ensure that the residents of Fort McMurray and the other nonconforming municipalities do not receive a devastating property tax increase in the near future as a result of this uncertainty?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, the importance of consultation on this issue cannot be overemphasized. We will work with the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo to help them achieve the ratio in a way that is reasonable and responsible. Currently there is no timeframe in the legislation as to when municipalities would have to comply. We're looking forward to hearing the feedback from Wood Buffalo residents and all Albertans on the tax ratio ratio. I promised the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo that I would stand with them after the fire, and I have not stepped back from them. I was with them then, I'm with them now, and I will be in the future.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, despite what we just heard, given that the 19 municipalities and their residents that currently exceed the 5 to 1 ratio thought they had a commitment from the government that would see their property taxes remain affordable over the long term and given that now these same communities are discovering that all is not what it appears and that the government is considering imposing the 5 to 1 ratio on municipalities even before it's completely passed Bill 21, to the minister: is this a fair way to treat our municipal partners, or is it just current government practice?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the idea that somehow this was a big surprise: this came up, there were many questions across many of the sessions across the province, and it was my responsibility to take that feedback, that came from multiple sources, and to engage with the people of Alberta on this issue. We will work with all of those communities. We look forward to hearing the feedback from those municipalities and all Albertans on the linked tax ratio from our discussion guide that we released last month.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the work I do in engaging with municipalities, and I look forward to the conversations we'll have to come forward with a reasonable, responsible way to move forward for all Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Sylvan Lake urgent care centre issue, which is a community priority and a common-sense, cost-saving measure, is still waiting for a public commitment from the Minister of Health. The government has had the final proposal on urgent care for Sylvan Lake since September 30. We've been made aware of some voice mode indications that the government may be moving forward on this, but my constituents would like a firm answer. To the Minister of Health. The good folks of Sylvan Lake are waiting for an answer on urgent care. Can the minister confirm for us today that she has approved their proposal?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud of the fact that I'm speaking with the community, and we continue to work in partnership. After some productive meetings over the summer we were pleased to see Alberta Health Services participate in a local joint task force with community leaders and health care providers on: what are the needs for the Sylvan Lake area? We received that feedback at the end of September. We've asked AHS to look into how they can best deliver after-hours care and the community's needs to be addressed as we move forward in partnership. I look forward to continuing to have ongoing dialogue with the community as we roll out next steps.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, Minister, summer is coming, and Sylvan Lakers and the tourists that enjoy it as their summertime destination would like some answers.

Given that the cost of urgent care in Sylvan Lake is significantly lower than what this government spends in their advertising of rotten policies and given that this urgent care centre is a common-sense, cost-saving measure supported by the community, including partial financial support, will we see this urgent care facility financed and rolled out in the next budget?

Ms Hoffman: Today summer feels pretty far away, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that it was pretty chilly this morning when I warmed up my car, but I'm glad to hear the optimism from the other side of the House.

I'm glad that the opposition has raised this question in the past. It's given us an opportunity to reflect on some of the back and forth that they keep talking about today. It's about spending money. I am really committed to making sure we find a way to best serve the needs of the local community whereas the Official Opposition continues to push for privatization, outsourcing, and cutting services as well as laying off nurses, Mr. Speaker. That's not the government we have today, and I'm proud of that.

Mr. MacIntyre: Given the speed with which this government moves, we need to start now for something in the summer.

While my constituents are being asked to go without this desperately needed urgent care centre, they're also observing a general neglect of health services in central Alberta. Given that Red Deer cardiac catheterization has been overlooked, the Didsbury hospital is facing service reductions, and response times for ambulances across central Alberta are abysmal, Minister, Albertans are tired of the rhetoric. They want committed timelines. When will central Alberta finally be prioritized by this government as the right place for the right care at the right time?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I have to say that I agree with one thing that the member opposite just said. I'm tired of the rhetoric from that member and that caucus when it comes to our priorities, Mr. Speaker. We have worked diligently with the communities, communities across Alberta, to make sure that we have the right rollout. We are happy to sit down. I've toured many of these communities and met with local leaders first-hand, and they themselves are very pleased that we're sitting down and focused on solving problems whereas the members opposite keep throwing mud. We'll get results.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've talked to chicken producers, and they're telling me that natural gas is one of their biggest costs. Now, because of the carbon tax starting in January, when the tax is fully implemented, the costs for natural gas to heat their barns in the winter will almost double. To the minister: does this government expect Albertans to pay more for chicken, turkey, and eggs, or do they just expect producers to have to eat this huge loss?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I personally have listened to the farming community – farmers, ranchers, producers, processors – right across the province. We have taken a stand, taken a leadership role on varied aspects; for instance, being able to exclude marked fuel from the carbon levy as well as having a climate leadership plan for producers specifically on intensive livestock operations, greenhouses, and other farming operations right across the province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that natural gas is a huge part of the expense of producing fertilizer and given that the carbon tax is going to almost double the costs of natural gas and given that the price of fertilizer is going to take a huge jump and given that grain producers don't get to set the price at which they sell their product – they're just price takers – to the minister: does this government just expect grain producers to eat this huge loss?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we are in active engagement with many of our energy-intensive, trade-exposed industries right now, working out a set of output-based allocations that work for all industries, including the fertilizer sector. I had the pleasure of meeting with them last week. We are examining ways that we can both set levels that encourage the best performance and the best-in-class across the continent to ensure that we don't open up our trade-exposed industries to competition from areas where we don't see carbon pricing such as the United States and, finally, ensure that we've got . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also, given that the price of natural gas is going to jump and given that beef producers have to heat huge shops to keep their feeding equipment in and given that this will create a loss for beef producers as well, to the minister: has this government really done a thorough analysis of how this carbon tax is going to affect our second-largest industry in Alberta, agriculture?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and for the member's question. It's important to note that we have had the opportunity to listen and talk to producers from right across the province. That's why we've had the opportunity to hear them and implement different programs that are going to help them with the carbon levy. Farmers know that climate change is real, and they're willing – not only willing – able to do their part, and do so. We're proud that this government has taken plans, taken programs that will prioritize agriculture as we go forward in this climate future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Service Dogs

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service dogs are vital supports for people with disabilities, and today there are only approximately 80 to 100 active, licensed service dogs in Alberta. Given that service dogs enable people with disabilities to live in their communities and successfully navigate the challenges of daily life, to the Minister of Human Services: what is the government doing to increase access to much-needed and life-saving service dogs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government has heard from veterans advocates and members of the disability community across the province who have called for more service dogs to be available. The service dogs qualifications regulation expires March 31, '17, and prior to this expiration we are exploring potential changes to the regulation to increase Albertans' access to qualified service dogs. We are committed to upholding the safety of persons requiring service dogs while ensuring they receive the supports they need.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's service dog legislation is very restrictive in terms of approved accrediting and testing bodies for service dogs and handlers compared to other jurisdictions, to the same minister: what is the government doing to expand Alberta's service dog community and expand the scope of accreditation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. Given the important role service dogs play in the lives of those they serve, we want to work with people who use service dogs and who are involved in training to make sure that we have high standards while increasing the number of service dog teams. Service dogs that successfully complete a training program by an institution accredited by ADI have qualifications under the current legislation. As we review these regulations, we will be exploring ways to expand access to service dogs through the testing and accreditation system, and I look forward to sharing more details.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that Alberta is home to many skilled and educated people who use service dogs in order to navigate life, to the same minister: what is the government doing to create inclusive environments for people with disabilities who choose and are able to use service dogs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. I want to assure the member and all Albertans that we will take a thoughtful, thorough approach as we explore potential changes to the legislation, and qualified service dogs will continue to meet high standards to protect the health and safety of the public. Under the existing legislation a number of qualified service dogs can apply for a government identification card that can be shown when their right of access is denied or questioned. As we explore changes to the regulations, we will make sure that we work to improve the public . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Deaths of Children in Care

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In April of this year the NDP unveiled their business plan for Human Services. This included an overview and the key strategies by which this minister intends to govern. In their overview they blame the low price of oil and the economic downturn for most major problems. Shockingly, their key strategies failed to even mention the crisis situation with children dying in our foster care system. Given the seriousness of the situation, why is safety of children in care not explicitly listed as a priority while children continue to die in the province's care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Children dying in our care is certainly the most concerning issue facing my ministry and facing our province, and that was the reason that even despite the falling oil prices, we increased the funding for Human Services – and we increased by $37 million – so that we are able to support the children in our care. That wouldn't happen under their plan.

Mrs. Pitt: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. Nixon: Given that the tragic death of Serenity has served as a major wake-up call for all of us in this Assembly and for all Albertans and given that there are many more tragic stories just like this, with incidents of children enduring physical and sexual abuse while in care and, in the most drastic cases, sometimes death in care, and since the Minister of Human Services was asked last week, he should have an answer today: what specific actions has the minister taken to protect children in care since the Child and Youth Advocate and the Auditor General released their reports?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a deeply concerning issue. We have taken action. We have added $37 million to child intervention so that we are able to support our intervention staff, and we have developed a new kinship assessment tool after the death of the child in question so that we are able to support our kinship care providers. We are absolutely committed to making sure that our children have the right supports and they have resources to thrive in our province.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Nixon: Given that we have heard no details on the NDP government's plan to prevent the tragedy that happened to Serenity from happening again and given that there have already been many reports and round-tables on this very topic with clear direction about what needs to change and since the minister has said that he's accepting the recommendations from the Child and Youth Advocate and the Auditor General, why haven't these changes been implemented, and how much longer do Alberta's children have to wait for this minister to take action?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I said, it's an important issue, and we are taking action. That's why we have increased funding for the child intervention system. But I want the member and everyone to know that the causes of these issues are complex. They relate to poverty, they relate to addiction, they relate to the devastating impact of residential schools, and that's why the Minister of Indigenous Relations is working with indigenous communities so we can be there for our indigenous communities and we can get this right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Renewable Energy Strategy

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is aggressively phasing out coal in favour of as yet undetermined taxpayer subsidies on renewables. Renewables, when executed appropriately, provide a positive green addition to the energy grid. However, outside of hydro, renewables do not provide a reliable round-the-clock baseload. Coal conversions to natural gas are a good way to add relatively efficient baseload, but these plants may not be as environmentally friendly as new builds. To the Minister of Energy: what is your government doing to incent new natural gas plant investment to ensure long-term grid stability?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. The hon. member cites one of the reasons that we announced last week a capacity market. We need to ensure that Alberta's electricity market will provide our power needs in the future. We made this decision to move to a capacity market based on advice that we received from the ISO. In fact, more than three years ago the ISO was looking into this, and they advised us that the capacity market was the best way to balance a stable grid with renewable electricity.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that the aforementioned coal to natural gas transition requires a significant amount of capital investment and given that the only capital committed thus far is government – or should I say “taxpayer” – money and given that investor confidence in Alberta is at an all-time low following the government's repeated disregard for signed contracts and threats of retroactive legislation, again to the minister: why would anyone invest significant capital in Alberta when your government has repeatedly demonstrated contempt for those very same investors?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the ISO being consulted, we consulted with industry, electricity companies. We did research across North America and discovered that Alberta was an outlier and, in fact, the only other jurisdiction is Texas that had an energy-only market. So we made the decision to move into the capacity market, and investors told us immediately upon announcement that they were prepared to invest in Alberta.

Mr. Gotfried: Trust is paramount, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government is heavily subsidizing new renewables with taxpayer dollars and given that despite this government's statements to the contrary there are already significant renewable assets in Alberta and given that this government is doing absolutely nothing for the sustainability of these existing renewables, making them uncompetitive and unviable compared to new renewables, again to the minister. It seems your government is trying to take credit for all renewables by excluding pioneering investors. Why aren't you supporting these producers in continued viability of existing renewable assets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, our electricity grid has not seen a major final investment decision since 2009. Jurisdictions around the world are moving to a capacity market, and so are we. That is why the ISO's independent operators said in this report that Alberta's wholesale market is not attractive to investors. Dawn Farrell, CEO of TransAlta, said that this decision was necessary. She went on to say that the fact that we have this capacity market enables us to convert some of our coal plants to gas, keeping our markets working, keeping those communities strong.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Energy Industry Diversification

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Today I was pleased to be at the announcement when the government announced two projects that will benefit from the petrochemicals diversification program. Good news for Alberta. One of these projects, the Inter Pipeline project, will receive up to $200 million in royalty credits to build a $1.85 billion facility and will directly benefit my constituents in Sherwood Park and those in Alberta's Industrial Heartland by creating full-time jobs during the construction phase and for operations once the project is online. To the minister . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Our government has been clear that the $500 million to the two projects will not be expended until the projects are built. The incentives were enough to create these projects and have the companies consider Alberta as opposed to the Gulf coast. We need to take our diversification plans seriously now because we need jobs in Alberta. During peak construction there will be 4,000 jobs and 1,400 direct and indirect jobs once they are running.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the program received 16 applications from investors locally and globally but was only able to approve two, to the same minister: what will happen to the 14 applications that government did not accept?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. These applications show that companies here and across the globe want to invest in Alberta. There were many good proposals, and between my ministry and the Ministry of Economic Development and Trade we'll be working with those companies and seeing if there are other options that they can avail themselves of. They will also have the opportunity to speak to the economic diversification advisory committee.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the current economic challenges that my constituents and all Albertans are facing, what other steps is this government taking to diversify Alberta's energy industry?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the questions. This is the first announcement today of energy diversification in Alberta. We created the energy diversification advisory committee to work with Albertans on how to do just that, and there will be opportunities for industry, investors, and everyday Albertans to engage with this committee. The committee is based on a group of business, labour, and First Nations leaders, and on October 18 Deborah Yedlin from the Calgary Herald said that this committee has the experience to get the job done.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know that some of you may want to get out and wrap presents for each other, so in 30 seconds we will move to Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Human Rights Day

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. International Human Rights Day, celebrated on December 10 of every year, commemorates the day in 1948 when the General Assembly of the United Nations adopted the universal declaration of human rights.

It's one thing to talk about human rights, and it's another to work diligently towards making sure that these rights are observed. Far too often the social rights enshrined in the declaration are ignored, but this government, of which I'm proud to be a part, is ensuring that we put these fundamental rights front and centre in our work as we move Alberta forward. A fine example is the building of a permanent dialysis unit in Lac La Biche, and we're working with communities to do the same.

Additionally, our government is investing $1.2 billion in affordable housing capital projects over the next five years, like the Parkdale project here in Edmonton, that will provide affordable homes for 70 families.

This government is protecting the right of everyone to work and the right to education by providing funding for enrolment, hiring a thousand teachers, 250 support staff, and making schools the number one employer in many small towns during this current economic downturn. Because education doesn't end when you become an adult, we've frozen tuition fees as well.

These may seem like talking points, Mr. Speaker, but each one of these examples describes the changing reality of Albertans, the people we are here to serve, due to this government's action. As legislators we share an enormous responsibility to ensure that every Albertan is treated with respect and dignity. Ultimately, we must accept our true duty as members of the Legislature, to clear away systemic barriers that keep Albertans from living up to their full potential, so that everyone who calls Alberta home may have access to the same opportunities. Mr. Speaker, I'll be the first one to state that we are far from being done, but we have made considerable progress.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Charity at Christmas

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Christmas is fast approaching, the time when we remember the birth of Jesus, born in Bethlehem to a young couple who did not have a place to stay when they were forced to register for a census, by the way, so they could be taxed.

On the weekend I, a left-footed Baptist not known for his ability to dance, participated in Shakin' n Drayton, a twist on Dancing with the Stars, to help raise funds for Humans Helping Humans. Humans Helping Humans is a typical response by the people of Drayton Valley. This amazing group raises money and builds houses for those who would not likely have a chance at home ownership. On the weekend eight dance couples and hundreds of citizens and volunteers raised approximately $65,000 for Humans Helping Humans. This is from a community where businesses have been shutting down, hotels have been empty, people have been laid off or are working only part-time.

About a month ago I attended the CT4DV gala, sponsored by the Drayton Valley health foundation. This group has worked hard for a CT scanner over the past four or five years, and in that time they have raised over $1 million for a scanner and renovations to the hospital.

The people in my constituency have never let the roadblocks of life stop them from supporting their community and taking care of those that are less fortunate. Across the constituency, whether it was the chili fundraiser for the John Maland high school band program or the opening of the Devon Christian school playground, the people in the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency dig deep into their pockets to help their neighbours.

A wise pastor of mine once said: in this life we only take turns; sometimes you help me in my distress, and at other times I help you. So during this Christmas let me encourage all of us to look outside of ourselves and see how we can help the people in our community. You never know the impact of your generosity, just as a certain innkeeper had no idea how a young homeless couple ready to give birth would change the world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Social Work

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The beauty of our political system is that we draw people from all spectrums of our society not only in terms of political ideology but in work and life experience, and having the chance to have these people influence decisions that our government can effect in these specific fields is a rare opportunity indeed.

If I might give an example, I experienced a career spanning two decades in emergency services. When the government's report on the Fort McMurray fire is released, I guarantee you that I will be drawing on every resource that I have to evaluate that report and make recommendations that will ensure that this will never happen again.

Our society is dealing with increased hard-drug use, so much so that we're going to allow safe needle injection sites. We have a high percentage of indigenous women who live in poverty and are involved in the sex trade. There are mothers and children involved in abusive relationships. We have a high proportion of seniors living in poverty. There are people with developmental disabilities and substance abuse issues who are living in the streets. And we had a child die after a year of neglect and abuse.

In our society there is one career that is the toughest job of them all. These folks are tasked with helping the people in these brutal conditions. They are tasked with taking care of our most vulnerable. They are social workers. A social workers has to deal with people in their lowest, saddest of times, and the fix is never a quick fix. It's a long and arduous process that sometimes never resolves. I have no doubt that the negative exposure of this job weighs very heavily on those that take on this profession.

I have high hopes that our people, my brothers and sisters across the way in this Legislature, will consider using their vast cumulative experience in social work to at least investigate the possibilities as to how we can do better, how we can unshackle those that are tasked with this very tough job. I have no doubt that we will hear about impediments like confidentiality, privacy, personal freedoms, professional code, underfunded, overworked, laws, and courts, but, Mr. Speaker, we have to try.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Human Rights

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The universal declaration of human rights is about that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. Everyone has a right to life, liberty, and security. Unfortunately, with all our advanced education and awareness there are still some in this world who do not believe in these fundamental values. Horrific human rights violations continue around the world across the spectrum of race, colour, sexual preference, religion, gender, and political views.

In Alberta our understanding of basic rights might be different than the horrors such as the 1984 genocide of New Delhi Sikhs, the Rwandan genocide of 1990, the Bosnian genocide of 1995, and Darfur in 2003. We should all look up to leaders like Nelson Mandela, Mother Teresa, Martin Luther King Jr., the Dalai Lama, Calipah Mirza Masroor Ahmad, and Sardar Jaswant Singh Khalsa, who fought for human rights. We can all learn from their teachings.

The citizens of our province were recently enlightened and outraged by the personal stories of residential school survivors, who survived our own nation's attempt at cultural genocide. We still don't live in a perfect world because shocking racial incidents continue to occur in Alberta daily. I am proud to note, however, that more and more citizens feel empowered to confront it when it arises. For example, when racial slurs were hurled at an African-American who was simply walking down an Edmonton street, a movement sprung up in Alberta called Make It Awkward. This campaign formed the basis of a community backlash when antiturban posters were slapped up at a local campus. In a smart twist to Make it Awkward citizens were invited to rock a turban. The wildly popular event turned racism on its head.

Because Albertans are doing their part to combat discrimination, misogyny, and bullying, it is especially incumbent on us as legislators to play a public role for these efforts. That is the commitment we can all make . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on Standing Order 7(7) to ask for unanimous consent of the House to extend the daily Routine past 3 p.m.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Hon. members, you will note that there are many, many words that need to be heard in this House, and it is with some trepidation that I interrupt the thoughts that are being shared. Again, I remind you to stay within the two-minute time limit.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Pipeline Approval

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week was a good week for Albertans. You wouldn't know it, though, listening to the opposition. Last week two pipelines got approved. That announcement represents thousands of good-paying, family-supporting jobs for Albertans, or at least that's what it represents to most of us. To the opposition two pipelines meant failure.

In the announcement of the decision the Prime Minister said that the pipeline approvals were due to our Premier's leadership. The next day the Leader of the Opposition picks up the phone to a columnist to say that – and I quote – she didn't do any of the hard work. The federal cabinet even stated, clear as day, that were it not for the climate leadership plan, they could not have approved the pipelines. Right on cue the Leader of the Opposition heads to a rally to dismantle that very climate leadership plan. Then at the rally to scrap the plan that got us the two pipeline approvals, people start chanting: lock her up. What is the response from the Leader of the Opposition? Crickets. Sometimes silence can be deafening, and sometimes it's defining.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that conservatives like the Alberta Prosperity Fund believe pipeline approvals under an NDP government are a doomsday scenario, but it's anyone's guess why the opposition can't put Albertans' needs ahead of their own desire for power.

Today with the Premier in B.C. fighting for pipelines, I know that I'm standing on the right side of this House: the side that gets things done, the side that works with others, and the side that's moving Alberta forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Poppy Cultivation and Processing

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in my riding of Little Bow active pharmaceutical ingredients labs incorporated is a southern Alberta company which has spent nine years pursuing a commercial poppy cultivation and processing industry. Poppy possesses molecules that provide an important pharmaceutical value in the management of pain and treatment of addiction.

Earlier this year the federal government specifically banned the cultivation of culinary varieties of poppies in Canada despite providing over $1 million in support to poppy research. Recently API Labs asked the Canadian government to permit this cultivation, with no success. API offers a new crop to diversify and strengthen our economy and ultimately create an export success that could mimic Canada's success in canola. If API Labs Inc. were to receive approval by 2023, it's seed sales would be 14,000 tonnes, a value of $25.1 million. It would mean the creation of many new jobs and more diverse opportunities for local farmers.

API is on the cusp of making a critical decision on the construction of a multimillion-dollar processing plant. A federal ministerial exemption would allow this investment to proceed. However, regulatory delays put this investment at risk, and the viability of the company is in jeopardy. It is unclear why the government of Canada prohibits this industry when the other G7 countries, including the United Kingdom and Australia, commercially cultivate poppies on an annual basis.

I hope every member of the House can picture what three simple initials, API, can come to represent to Albertans. The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that this company is close to bringing significant value-added economic benefits to Alberta. I hope that this provincial government will support companies like API and continue to advocate on their behalf to the federal government. This government needs to work hard during this downturn to stand up for Alberta businesses.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to table five copies of a petition sponsored by Friends of Medicare and CUPE Alberta. No Paid Plasma is a province-wide campaign calling for prohibiting the operating and/or opening of any private paid blood and/or plasma donor clinics.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with the Gaming and Liquor Act I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of the 2015-16 Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission annual report. In addition to ensuring high social responsibility standards, over $855 million earned from liquor was transferred into the GRF, and $1.5 billion in gaming revenue went into the lottery fund to support thousands of community initiatives and charities. Lastly, Alberta consumers continue to enjoy unparalleled choice in the liquor market, with nearly 22,000 products now available for sale. That's 22,000 beer, liquor, and wine products.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a memo from the Chief Medical Examiner to myself in response to questions raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition on December 1, 2016, which I undertook to look into. I have the requisite number of copies.

The Speaker: I think we have two points of order. Is that correct? First of all, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order Oral Questions

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be as brief as I can. I'm rising on a point of order under Beauchesne's section 408(1)(a), page 120, for those following along at home. In reference to members asking oral questions, 408(1) says:

Such questions should:

- (a) be asked . . . in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer.

I couldn't help but notice that the hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills and subsequently, in fact, the Member for Sherwood Park were asking questions that are colloquially known as puffballs. These ones were puffier than most.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, if I look at section 409(5) of Beauchesne's:

The matter ought to be of some urgency. There must be some present value in seeking the information during the Question Period rather than through the Order Paper or through correspondence with the Minister or the department.

If you'll indulge me, 410(5):

The primary purpose of the Question Period is seeking information and calling the Government to account.

Those questions were the furthest thing from that. Both questions were the subject of information that was released publicly by the government. In the case of the question from the Member for Calgary-Northern Hills that information was released, pretty much verbatim in the question that he asked, in a beautiful news release on Saturday, and the question from the Member for Sherwood Park was released barely hours ago.

Finally, I'll just end with page 501 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009. There are four guidelines, following principles established by Speaker Bosley in 1986. The first is:

Time [in this House] is scarce and should, therefore, be used as profitably as possible by as many as possible.

And perhaps even more important, the third point:

While there may be other purposes and ambitions involved in Question Period, its primary purpose must be the seeking of information from the government and calling the government to account for its actions.

With that, I would ask that perhaps you would encourage members on the government side to ask questions that legitimately hold their own government to account, Mr. Speaker. I think it would increase the perception of Albertans of the work that we do in this House. In all sincerity, it's very important that there are other means and other ways, especially for government members, to seek that information. One, perhaps, would be writing a letter to the minister, and I have found that that's very effective. Ministers are very good about responding to letters. But there are other ways of getting that information out there rather than valuable time in question period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the member opposite pointed out that one of the main purposes of asking questions is to derive information. That is exactly what both members, when they were asking the ministers respectively their questions, were looking at, getting further information. I find it quite shocking that the Member for Calgary-Elbow finds that Infrastructure spending announcements are not very important. You know, it's quite shocking to hear that the member finds that they have no value. I think Albertans would argue oppositely.

But, Mr. Speaker, the reason that I rise is that this is not a point of order. Question period is used to either hold the government to account or, also, to derive information. That's exactly what the two members asking questions were doing, asking further information than what was announced previous to this afternoon. With that, I think there are numerous examples of questions that derive information. The members opposite can call them what they want, but Albertans have a right to know not only what's going on but what's going on in different ministries. That's the purpose of Oral Question Period.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I too have noticed on occasion in this House that – I think the phrase that the hon. member used was “puffballs.” That has occasionally happened in this House. If one looks up closely, I am sure that you will see some feathers still stuck to the ceiling. I do, however – well, I also noted the minister's enthusiasm with his answer today, which was significant.

But, respectfully, hon. member, I'm not sure that this is a point of order. I would just ask – I know that the government backbenchers will reframe their questions so they have much more substance to them.

The hon. member.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. Thank you. I rise on behalf of the Member for Airdrie to speak to a point of order today. For a point of reference for you, my good Mr. Speaker, I will be referencing 23(h) and (i). During question period the Minister of Human Services made an allegation against this side of the House that we ran on a platform of cutting and that we would have cut the budget for child and family services. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is a wild allegation against this side of the House that clearly created disorder amongst my hon. colleague from Airdrie, who felt so concerned about such an allegation that she rose in her place to call a point of order. That the member had been alleging that we would have in fact cut that budget is categorically untrue.

Now, I know that there has been some dispute of the facts because the only side of the House that's doing any cutting to child and family services is that side, but it still remains the same that this sort of allegation creates disorder and ought to be withdrawn and apologized for.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to point out to the Opposition House Leader that 23(h) is “[making] allegations against another Member.” The minister did not make any allegations against a member of the House. The minister merely pointed out that in last year's platform the Official Opposition had proposed slashing $2 billion from the operating budget and a further $9 billion over the course of five years from capital spending. What the minister was saying was that it would not have happened under their plan due to all the cuts.

I find it fascinating that during Human Services' budget estimates the Member for Airdrie called the importance of investing in front-line services for families a waste of money, so I find it interesting that today this is a point of order. Again, this is not a point of order. This is merely ...

The Speaker: Thank you. I wish you'd have got to that last statement sooner.

Hon. members, both of you must have read different Blues than I have because you both introduced new information. The Blues that I have: I would not consider it a point of order here; it was a difference of opinion.

I believe we are at Orders of the Day.

Orders of the Day

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Legal Aid and Self-represented Litigants

M25. Mr. Cyr moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any studies or briefing notes prepared for the government between January 1, 2012, and February 29, 2016, regarding legal aid or self-represented litigants in Alberta.

[Debated adjourned November 28: Miranda speaking]

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. I'll continue on where Minister Miranda left off. He was speaking on behalf of our colleague the hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: We have a point of order? Is that right?

Mr. Rodney: He was just using names.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Opposition House Leader, did you say: point of order?

Mr. Cooper: No, it was not me.

The Speaker: Minister of Finance, please proceed.

Mr. Ceci: I apologize.

I rise to speak on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. I want to start by thanking the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for recognizing the government's investment in legal aid. As the member noted, our government has made significant investments, increasing Legal Aid's budget by 20 per cent since we were formed as a government 19 months ago. That's a commitment to access to justice that the previous, Conservative government simply failed to provide.

Last week the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake also mentioned that he had heard – he didn't cite where he had heard it – that you have to go several times before being accepted by Legal Aid. While some cases may be more complicated than others, it is not typical for an individual to have to apply multiple times to be accepted. In fact, in working with Legal Aid, we've actually reduced some of the inefficiency around applications. Prior to last year, courts were seeing climbing Rowbotham applications, applications where an individual had been rejected by Legal Aid for coverage. This was taking up court resources. By increasing the financial eligibility guidelines and bringing in an appeals process within Legal Aid, we've been able to provide more coverage at the start to take these applications out of the courts. That saves resources for Albertans and allows the courts to focus on serious matters.

That said, as we noted last week, we will have to reject the motion as it is overbroad, which could result in inadvertently waiving privilege and, where related to self-represented litigants, could involve important advice on security that needs to remain confidential. But we will happily table several studies on legal aid that may be useful to the member.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Is there another member who wishes to speak to Motion for a Return 25?

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It saddens me to hear that we can't bring forward copies of the studies or briefing notes. I do understand that the government has concerns about being overbroad. When this has happened, they have made amendments or adjustments to the motion for a return, but in this case they just decided to outright reject it.

I will say, though, that it's encouraging to hear that the Minister of Finance has said that he's going to have the Minister of Justice put forward some of the studies that have been put forward. I thank the minister for that. It is something, and I'm glad to hear that.

But in the end what we're trying to do is say that – and I heard the minister say that they've added a whole bunch of resources to legal aid. My concern here is that what we're not clear on is exactly how these resources should have been applied. A briefing or a study is a good route, to be able to go that route. I'm not sure if the studies that the Minister of Justice will be tabling are all going to be public studies that we would have had access to anyway, but I am hopeful as I put more requests for information for legal aid, because this is something that I am impassioned on. Once I go through the studies, I will be more focused in my requests. I want to make sure that our most vulnerable have access to being able to defend themselves in the courts. Right now I've heard the minister saying that they're bringing down the number of requests. Without any information on my side to be able to verify that, again I will accept that the minister has information that is clear to that answer that he's given.

Again, I'm very saddened to hear that they're rejecting it, but I am glad to see that the ministry is at least making an effort to get something to my office. So thank you, Minister.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 25 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:18 p.m.]

[Motion for a Return 25 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Bill 6 Draft Document

M28. Mr. Strankman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the three-column document used in the drafting of Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and speak about the motion that I had submitted for a return. Simply, what I was trying to do was achieve more information for the electorate of Alberta going forward. I simply and wholeheartedly believe that it's important that Albertans affected by this legislation understand the rationale behind how and why the bill was developed. I think it's important that internal legislative communications be presented to Albertans in an open fashion.

Many Albertans believe that the presentation of this legislation was flawed from the very beginning. At one point we saw significant numbers, well beyond 1,500, on the steps of the Legislature, and we had seen several demonstrations against the legislation throughout the province in many forms. Albertans were passionate about the government moving forward with what they believed was quite probably more of a labour bill than a bill for agriculture. So it's with that in mind, Mr. Speaker, that I was asking the question: was this always intended as an agriculture safety bill, that morphed into a labour relations and employment standards bill? That's part of the rationale behind the questioning, trying to learn about what was concerning Albertans and primarily constituents that I represent.

Mr. Speaker, given the confusion last year when concerned Albertans who wanted information were shunted back and forth between the ministry of jobs, skills, training, and labour and the ministry of agriculture, providing us the documents used to develop the bill, I believe, is crucial so that we have the opportunity to view this internal rationale so that Albertans, including those of us in opposition, can understand the presentation of it.

There were numerous instances where the government's own web pages changed and contradicted previous positions throughout the process. Now, I'm willing to be compassionate to miscommunication and misrepresentation of potentially proper information, but in this case it deals with business acumen for agriculture, the second-largest industry in the province. As I said earlier in my preamble, we saw a massive number of demonstrations against the legislation throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve answers from a government that passes legislation and then determines the regulations. That was one of the frustrations that we saw demonstrated by Albertans coming forward. They had no knowledge or understanding of the regulations that were going to be encompassed in the legislation. It's a process that should be properly adhered to as government brings forward legislation in the House.

So I'd like to hear the government's response to that. I understand that the request has been simply rejected. I'd be anxious to hear the government's response to our submission.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This motion for a return asks for a copy of the three-column document in relation to the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. The three-column document used in the drafting of Bill 6 is a document of cabinet. Cabinet confidentiality prohibits us from sharing cabinet documents with anyone who is not a member of cabinet.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any members who wish to speak to the motion?

Seeing and hearing none, closing comments?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I heard the member speak in that regard, but it is also an instance of obfuscation by the government to allow further education and understanding of what the rationale for their legislation is. Through this whole process, demonstrated to by thousands of Albertans, there's no methodology coming forward for the rationale for the legislation. Even though we may have chosen the exact words that the minister is relying upon to refuse our request, I think it's incumbent upon a government compassionate to Albertans to help them understand the rationale for their legislation.

[Motion for a Return 28 lost]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Bill 6 Correspondence

M29. Mr. Strankman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of all correspondence relating to the change in responsibility for the regulations for Bill 6, Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, from the Ministry of Jobs, Skills, Training and Labour to the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was simply waiting for Hansard here. It's imperative that we try and record some of our conversations for the Assembly.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am adamant about proof of an open and transparent government. Initially the bill was presented as a labour bill and then was transferred to the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry. I believe it opens numerous acts, and the public needs to understand, again, the rationale for the presentation of what some initially believed to be a labour bill rather than an agriculture bill.

During the opening days of the public consultations they were shunted back and forth between the jobs, skills, training, and labour and the Agriculture and Forestry ministries, and that caused a lot of confusion amongst Albertans. In fact, the initial presentations in the community of Grande Prairie were done by the jobs, skills, training, and labour people, and then they were moved over to agriculture. So it bodes some confusion within the departments, and I'm anxious to try and provide information to Albertans.

While Bill 6 was described as legislation supporting agricultural safety, the published table topics included elements of labour and employment standards, and as we go forward with the round-table discussions, I understand that those discussions have been somewhat stymied or stalled or actually not even coming forward. So it's difficult to understand if this is still being dealt with in a labour fashion or an agricultural fashion and not brought forward.

The government claims that they are taking the time, Mr. Speaker, to get this bill right. It's unequivocal that Albertans and Alberta agriculture folks, many of them who have volunteered their own time and such to represent their organizations, came together with an agricultural coalition of many of these agricultural organizations to turn out for the round-tables that were to be promoted. But the government only allowed something less than one-third of the number of chairs that were available at the table to actually be represented by agricultural organizations. It's frustrating.

These organizations, these occupational health and safety round-tables, have not even finished meeting, and Albertans are wondering where the regulations are for this bill. As mentioned with Motion for a Return 28, there were numerous instances where the government's own web pages changed and contradicted previous positions throughout the process.

Mr. Speaker, we're simply trying to get at, again sounding repetitive, the rationale for the government bringing forward a bill with regulations that haven't even been written yet without consequence. We saw in the final days of our 28th Session people and members and members of the government talking about fierce reactions from Albertans – and it was very emotional in the final days – that this government didn't understand how they had to relate to the constituents that they serve.

Mr. Speaker, given the government's opposition to amendments and, seemingly, taking this bill through the House, we aren't surprised that there's been little information given up from the freedom of information requests that we've made as well, the opposition, and even the media. We've learned that the media made serious requests to learn the information as well. So I'm anxious to hear what the government member has to say in response to this motion for a return that would appear to have been flatly rejected. Can we continue on with that discussion?

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act repealed exemptions for paid agricultural workers from existing protection and compensation legislation. The government is currently consulting with a broad cross-section of stakeholders regarding changes to the occupational health and safety standards. Consultations have concluded for employment standards and labour relations.

Mr. Speaker, the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act in no way made changes to the minister responsible for these important worker protection laws. The Minister of Labour is the minister responsible for the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the Employment Standards Code, and the Labour Relations Code. This has not changed; therefore, copies of all correspondence the member requests do not exist. Because these records do not exist, we're rejecting this motion for a return.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion for a Return 29. While I appreciate the Finance minister's comments, we are very, very familiar with what Bill 6 did. I appreciate the recap, but we have a pretty good working understanding of exactly what it did, and we're not looking for that. What we are looking for is access to information.

Mr. Ceci: It doesn't exist.

Mr. Cooper: I hear the minister saying, "It doesn't exist" – and that wouldn't surprise me – which is the exact problem, that the information doesn't exist or there was no correspondence relating to the change in responsibility because they don't even know how it happened. There was a significant amount of confusion in the government of the time, and it appears that there still is confusion with respect to who did what and how it was done. I think that Albertans should be very concerned and particularly those in rural Alberta should be very, very concerned that there was apparently no correspondence or communication related to the change in responsibility for the regulations for Bill 6.

We clearly saw the minister of jobs, skills, labour, and training at the time going around the province speaking about this. That ministry was definitely the one responsible. I know that my hon. colleague from Drumheller-Stettler had personal correspondence – albeit I believe it was in voice mode, a phone call – between himself and the minister of agriculture’s staff speaking about the minister’s taking over that rollout. Clearly, he was informed somehow that he would then be leading this file, and now we’re being told by the minister that there is no correspondence.

Some might say that that’s difficult to believe because this is a very significant file – a very significant file – that, you’ll remember, Mr. Speaker, created a significant debate in this House both day and night. You’ll remember literally thousands of people on the steps of the Legislature, concerned about the future of agriculture. You’ll remember an amendment that was proposed in this House that was longer than the legislation. The reason why those things happened was because Albertans from pillar to post, from corner to corner expressed significant concern about the direction of this government. Somewhat to their credit, they introduced the amendment. They also rolled out a consultation process that, I’m sure you would agree, probably should have taken place prior to the passing of that legislation.

But this wasn’t just a moving of one small issue from one department to another. This wasn’t a scheduling error. This wasn’t a small communication piece between the ministers of agriculture and of Labour; this was a massive undertaking, that the government engaged in. And it’s only reasonable, Mr. Speaker, that those same people that came and rallied at the Legislature and expressed concern should be able to have access to the information, that is their information, about how and why that happened, about how and why it was in one department and then it was in another.

If it never actually changed, why did the lead spokesman become the minister of agriculture? Why is it that the minister of agriculture is the one responsible for the rollout of the tables? Frankly, it’s a little unfortunate that we didn’t realize way back when we asked this question about the ongoing efforts of this government and require them to table some of the work that’s taking place in that consultation work that’s currently ongoing.

I know that in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Mr. Speaker, there are members of the community that are on those tables and have expressed some significant concerns about how the government is still handling this file. Now, there are multiple people from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on those tables. Some are more positive than others with respect to the direction that it’s going, so I want to be fair with my comments. But the challenge that we face is that this government continually, week in and week out – the opposition comes and says, “Please allow Albertans to understand what’s going on inside the government,” and we hear the Minister of Finance saying that that correspondence doesn’t exist.

Well, it is a challenge. It is a stretch to believe that there was no correspondence around this issue, and it seems to me – it’s my guess, Mr. Speaker, that the government’s effort is to use the wording of the question to not actually answer the intent of the question. It’s more than a bit disappointing that this government chooses to not provide information to the thousands of Albertans that would have liked to know what happened way back last December. We must be very close to the one-year anniversary of that. To say that I’m disappointed would be an understatement. To say that I’m surprised – well, very little surprises me about this government’s lack of desire for openness and transparency nowadays.

So I will be supporting this question. I encourage all members of the Assembly, particularly folks like the Member for Leduc-Beaumont, who, during that period of time, I remember advocating on behalf of his constituents and expressing some of the same sort of concerns – here’s an opportunity for him to vote in favour of this question because I know that there are folks in Leduc-Beaumont that would like to understand how these sorts of things took place and why that happened. I encourage all members, all private members to support this very important information. It is virtually impossible for it to not exist.

The Speaker: Are there other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 29?

Seeing and hearing no one, the Member for Drumheller-Stettler to close debate.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I can tell by the riveting attention by the members of government that this is first and foremost on their minds. So I’m looking for a robust debate or a robust turnout by voters to learn more information about what government does going forward.

Mr. Speaker, there are still staunch beliefs in rural Alberta that this legislation going forward, Bill 6, which my member for the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talks about, was a partisan piece of legislation simply trying to increase the government’s political base, and unionizing workers was part of that mandate. However that may go, whether that is or isn’t accurate, I know that there is a lot of concern.

Also, following up on the comments made by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the emotions, as you might recall, Mr. Speaker, in the last days of the fall session, particularly as exhibited by the Minister of Energy at that point in time, were very extensive. The Minister of Energy had great concerns, bringing forward that Albertans were voicing their opinions inappropriately, possibly, at some point in time. With that, my compatriot from Leduc-Beaumont also was subject to some of that vitriol of, you know, people bringing forward their opinions. It’s part of the democratic process that we’re allowed to achieve here and come forward.

I’m anxious to have the vote go forward on this motion for a return. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 29 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:59 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Gotfried	Strankman

[Motion for a Return 29 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Government Opposition House Leader.

Bill 8 Draft Document

M30. Mr. Cooper moved on behalf of Mr. Smith that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the three-column document used in the drafting of Bill 8, Public Education Collective Bargaining Act.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion for a Return 30.

I'd just like to provide a little bit of background on the question with respect to the three-column document and how we sort of got here. Bill 8 introduced a new model of collective bargaining between school boards, teachers, and the Alberta government. Until the passing of Bill 8 the history of collective bargaining in education in Alberta had been based on a model of local bargaining. Each school board would enter into bargaining with their local ATA and through negotiations arrive at a locally bargained agreement. Each school division would have the ability to negotiate a unique agreement surrounding wages, benefits, and local issues like professional development.

Prior to 1994 school boards had the power to requisition tax dollars by setting a local levy on municipal property taxes in order to pay for the negotiated settlements with teachers, aides, et cetera, and to fund their other costs of providing an education in their school divisions. This created a problem, that school divisions with a strong tax base could requisition more funds, and therefore some school divisions could provide more funding for education than could some others. With local bargaining some school divisions sometimes suffered when wealthier school boards would settle early, and with a collective agreement that was seen by some as too generous, this would place the poorer school divisions in a bit of a bind.

In the 1990s the then Premier tried to control government spending, and he recognized the inequity of the bargaining process of the day, so he moved to change the process by taking the money requisitioned through the property tax levies and pooling it into the government coffers and then distributed the money back to school boards using a per-student funding formula. This new process ensured a more equitable distribution of the education dollars back to school boards and at that time had an overwhelming support of divisions and teachers.

The problem that was created by the 1994 process revolving around bargaining: now, once the government has set their budgets and decided on the increase or decrease to the Education budget, this allocation of funds pretty much decided the range of monies that a school board had to negotiate within. From a school board's perspective, many felt that they were placed in an untenable position. They were able to negotiate in good faith, yet the largest negotiation piece, teachers' salaries, had already been decided by the government's budgeting process.

Teachers at the ATA were often unhappy with the new process for two reasons. Firstly, the decision on wages had already been decided in the budget before the local bargaining had even begun. Second, they were unable to bargain directly with the government, who was the direct funder. The result of these issues was a breakdown in the bargaining process.

It is because of this history that the Wildrose understood the desire of the present Minister of Education to address this bargaining model. Bill 8 formalized a province-wide two-table bargaining system, where there are now local and provincial bargaining tables. The provincial table now addresses broad issues in common to all boards while the local table addresses issues that were best dealt with between the individual school boards and the ATA. The intent of having the provincial table is to ensure consistency across the province with respect to the big-picture issues in education such as wages and benefits. The intent of having the local table is to allow for flexibility for school boards to address issues that directly affect schools, teachers, and students.

Bill 8 established an employer bargaining association, the Teachers' Employer Bargaining Association, or TEBA, to emerge in contract negotiations for school boards. Both central and local negotiated agreements must be ratified by the parties involved through their collective agreement.

Mr. Speaker, our request is to review the three-column document. It's well known that when the ministry begins preparing to draft a piece of legislation, a three-column document is used to help bring clarity to the creation of the bill. A three-column document is an instrument used to help plan and focus the preparation of the bill. A three-column document outlines the current legislation in one column. A second column outlines the proposed changes that will be incorporated into the new bill, and a third column provides the rationale or perhaps the goals that the government hopes to achieve by passing the bill into law. We have seen a fairly similar three-column document released recently with respect to MGA consultations on Bill 21.

We are in the middle of the most important set of negotiations, the government and school boards, represented by the TEBA, and the ATA, that represents the teachers. As the negotiations proceed, we will need to judge the effectiveness of the new negotiating model. Has the two-tiered system of negotiation been effective? Has the two-tiered system of negotiation been fair to stakeholders? Has the new negotiation model arrived at a contract that is fair for the taxpayers? Has the new model of negotiation successfully achieved the goals set out in the rationale? Is this what the government wanted to achieve?

Having the three-column document would provide a level of clarity and transparency that would ensure all Albertans would be able to see if the new model of negotiations should continue under the terms of the current legislation or whether the Legislature should consider amending Bill 8 in order to better achieve the intended purpose of the bill as expressed in the three-column document.

The Ministry of Education is planning on spending $7.9 billion in the 2016-17 Education budget. The Minister of Education is responsible for the second-largest expenditure of public funds in the 2016-17 budget. The teachers' salaries make up the single largest portion of public funds within the Education budget, almost $2.4 billion. When we start talking about these incredibly large sums of money, it is prudent to make sure that the new model of bargaining is achieving the goals of that legislation. Was it achieving what it set out to do?

By providing the three-column document and comparing the rationale to the results of the new bargaining model, Albertans will be better served as a result of transparency that occurs when a three-column document is available for all to see. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the government's prompt delivery of the three-column document.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Motion for a Return 30. What I can tell members opposite is that my response will be fairly prompt. I'd like to thank the member opposite as well for Motion for a Return 30, respecting Bill 8, the Public Education Collective Bargaining Act. Three-column documents which are used in the drafting of government bills are privileged and confidential to cabinet and Executive Council. I'm pretty confident that members opposite are aware of this. Cabinet privilege is a substantive rule of law with roots in the Constitution, and as such it's my responsibility to ask this Assembly to reject the motion for a return.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to Motion for a Return 30?

Seeing and hearing none, I will call on the Opposition House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a bit of a shame that the Deputy Government House Leader has chosen to use cabinet confidentiality as an excuse. He knows that members of this Chamber, through the long-standing traditions of House of Commons Procedure and Practice – and I know that I've raised this on a number of occasions here in the House with respect to the ability of the Legislature to summon documents and produce papers. A three-column document: it is a historical document. It doesn't reveal any secrets that would be important to the security or the safety of Alberta. Merely, it would provide information to this side of the House.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I know that I've said this over the last number of weeks, but it's not just about that this side of the House gets the information. It is about Albertans that want to understand how this government works and why they do what they do and what their actual motives are or aren't. I see no reason why the government wouldn't want to clearly communicate why. I don't see a reason why the government would not want to reach out and set the record straight. I hear from time to time members of this side of the House or the public make the suggestion that the government's intent is one thing, and the government's response is: oh, no, no, no; honest, that's not our intent. Well, providing information just like this, that we're asking for, would be proof positive of what their intention is. So it is more than a little disappointing that they've chosen not to provide this information, and I hope that they will reconsider in the future.

[Motion for a Return 30 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Public Trustee Review Documents

M32. Mr. Cooper moved on behalf of Mrs. Pitt that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Minister of Human Services to improve the management of the Public Trustee common fund as well as the reporting processes of the Public Trustee, as referenced in a government news release issued February 10, 2016.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today with respect to Motion for a Return 32 and move this on behalf of my colleague. I think that the Public Trustee provides a very, very important service to many Albertans. I think that it's reasonable that we find out exactly what is included in the review that clearly took place. The government issued a press release on February 10, 2016. It seems reasonable that members of the public would be able to receive the information that was put together for that review so that we could have a sense of exactly what transpired there.

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member. In February of 2016 the Auditor General made two recommendations resulting from the conclusions of the December 2015 audit of the office of the public guardian and trustee. The recommendations related to surplus management, and they related to results reporting. The office of the public guardian and trustee agreed to those recommendations and has undertaken work to improve those two areas.

They are working with Aon Hewitt, an independent consultant, along with the Investment Advisory Committee to discuss these issues. Once a decision is made with respect to reporting, that will be public reporting. So that information will be public, how we report the OPGT's progress. The second thing, surplus: we certainly do report what the surplus is at, and if there will be any changes to that surplus, that will be reported publicly.

However, the hon. colleague for Airdrie has requested confidential and privileged documentation. Those internal documents provide advice to government; hence, I'm not in a position to release those documents. But I can assure the member and all Albertans that the changes that will be made as a result of our review will follow and will be public in terms of reporting surplus management. Therefore, I must reject this motion for a return requested by the MLA for Airdrie.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who would like to speak to Motion for a Return 32?

[Motion for a Return 32 lost]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Adoption Regulations

510. Ms Luff moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to review section 85(1) of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and section 25(2)(d)(iii) of adoption regulation AR 187/2004 with a view to removing the prohibition on prospective adoptive parents that currently prevents them from advertising and publishing a profile.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise to speak to my motion, Motion 510. This is an issue that has been brought to my attention by several prospective adoptive parents in my constituency and, actually, around Alberta. These are people who have been trying to adopt in Alberta for some time and have been frustrated by the legislative provision that prevents Albertans who wish to adopt from publishing an online profile.

There are several websites out there now that allow couples seeking to adopt babies to post profiles of themselves, which can make it easier to find connections between birth parents and adoptive parents. This is a process that's allowed in several provinces: B.C., Manitoba, Ontario, and the Yukon. It can be frustrating for people here in Alberta to look elsewhere and see that people are able to post these profiles. It could make the adoption process less cumbersome and expensive, and folks here in Alberta aren't able to do this.

The people that I've spoken with make the case that everything is done online these days and that this piece of legislation is out of date. The only way for a prospective birth mother to make a connection is to reach out to an adoption agency, most likely by a phone call, and then go into an office to view copies of paper profiles. This can be an intimidating and time-consuming process, and having the ability to look at profiles online could make the process easier. Adoption is a wonderful thing that the government should be encouraging, so we should be looking to remove barriers wherever that's possible.

The people I have spoken to cite an opportunity to post a profile as something that could reduce discrimination due to age or income and something that provides hope to prospective adoptive parents. One parent that I spoke to said that as an adoptive parent, having the ability to post your profile online would be so helpful. It can be viewed by a birth mother or father in privacy across the province and can be shown easily to friends and family. Every method of getting the word out can count. Having an adoptive parent profile online increases awareness for open adoption for families, birth parents, and adoptive parents. It increases communication, knowledge, and would reduce wait times for many families. For those adoptive parents who are concerned about their privacy, it's no more public than paper profile copies we create for these agencies. There are settings or options where, if you don't want your profile shown online, it won't be shown.

One other constituent that I spoke to said the following:

I called all the private agencies in Calgary and as soon as I told them our ages the energy went down on the other [side] of the phone. My heart broke, and I felt like saying we have so much to offer a little one. There has to be [another] way other than going out of country to adopt which can be . . . 20,000-60,000 . . . [This] is why I have told you my story, can this law be changed. Many other provinces have recognized that this law was based on the past and that our society has changed as a whole which has become more informed. Can you please speak for us and help us expand our amazing little family?

I've heard many stories like this from people across the province who are waiting, who are waiting to expand their families and to be able to accept new children into their lives.

I'm very happy to be able to bring this issue to the Legislature today because I know that adoption has touched many lives. I myself am an adopted child, and I find that there is still a lot of stigma and misconception that can surround this issue. When I tell people that I'm adopted, I often get questions. They want to ask me all of these questions, and it's always preceded with: are you okay talking about this? There's some assumption that being adopted means that, you know, you weren't wanted or you were abandoned. But I always tell them: no, that's not true, and yes, I'm happy to talk about it. I'm happy to talk about it because adoption is really one of the greatest acts of love that somebody can be involved in.

My mom got cancer shortly after she was married, and she had to have a hysterectomy, which made it impossible for her to have children. An adoption provided her and my father with the ability to have a family. I'm adopted, and my brother is adopted, too. I was adopted in B.C. and my brother was adopted from Bolivia, so we have this wonderful family of different roots. We get along fabulously, and it's really been a fantastic experience. My brother and I, from as far back as we can remember, always knew that we were adopted. We never felt out of place, and we always felt loved and wanted.

As an adult I've had the opportunity to get to know my birth mom, which has been a really great experience as she's a pretty amazing woman in her own right. To choose to have a baby and to give it away to others is one of the bravest and most loving things that somebody can do. In getting to know my birth mom, I've discovered that politics are, in fact, genetic. It wasn't something that I talked about growing up with my family, but my birth mom was apparently out door-knocking for the NDP in the 1980 federal election, when I was in the womb. So, clearly, there's something that goes on there.

I've also found out through talking to her that options were pretty limited in terms of choice at the time. She was provided with some profiles to look at, and the main thing that she said that she looked for in a prospective adoptive family was signs of feminism, so that's pretty fantastic also.

I can imagine how different that might have been today, being able to be in contact with prospective adoptive parents and being able to ask them questions. You know, children these days have the opportunity to be in contact with their birth parents and their families growing up so that you have all of that richness and love that comes with that. Adoption is a very different thing these days than it was when I was adopted. I can imagine that my life might have been different had I had the opportunity to know my birth parents growing up.

Since adoption is modernizing, we should be looking to modernize our laws as well. Adoption agencies are also open to this opportunity. They say that more and more birth parents are reaching out by e-mail and text and that being able to provide them with online profiles in the comfort of their own home would help to improve this process.

Now, all of this being said, what I'm asking for is a review of the legislation, and I want there to be lots of input from adoptive parents, adopted children, social workers, and people who work in adoptive agencies to make sure that whatever changes do come to this legislation, we get it right. I certainly see where limits and safeguards have to be in place that ensure the safety and well-being of children, and I think some of my colleagues who have more experience in this area will be speaking to this. Where special-needs children are concerned, for instance, it's crucial to ensure that prospective families are well suited and prepared so that any match made can be a permanent one.

In any review of this legislation I think there needs to be careful consideration of where online advertising works, where it's appropriate, and where it might not be. Overall, however, I feel that adoption is a wonderful thing, and we need to modernize this legislation to be more responsive to the needs of families.

I'm looking forward to more debate on this motion. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I continue to feel privileged to hear so much from the members in this House, these kinds of stories.

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a few days, I understand, in a political career that you'll look back upon with real pleasure in the sense that good things have happened. There are a lot of days in the work that we do that aren't joyous occasions and sometimes can be very frustrating, and oftentimes we don't see eye to eye on issues in this place. So on a day like today I just want to say thank you so much. Thank you to the member for bringing this very important issue forward.

Mr. Speaker, in the name of full disclosure, you know that I have a particular passion for adoption. You know that I have three children. Each of them has a very special place in my heart, and two of them came to our family through adoption. Each one just brings such great joy. Around this issue of adoption there's often such joy and such pain, and it's just so important that we all use our voices to elevate the cause of adoption. So I want to thank the member for doing that today.

Many people in this House will know that recently, in conjunction with my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View, who I know is going to have the opportunity to chat a little bit about it, we made an announcement of our intention in the upcoming session, or after prorogation, of introducing a private member's bill that will reflect much of what is reflected in this motion. It's my hope that we'll be able to work collaboratively through the review process that the member has hopefully initiated today and that the government acts upon it and that we'll be able to deliver a piece of legislation that does just that, that addresses some of her concerns with ensuring that we advertise where appropriate and we don't otherwise and that the removal of the prohibition on advertising around adoption is done in a way that reflects all stakeholders.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, more important than what the motion does today, assuming that there is broad support for it, with respect to actually removing the prohibition or reviewing the legislation around removing the prohibition on adoption profiles is that it allows us an opportunity to speak about this very important issue around adoption. While this motion has a wonderful intent, this certainly isn't going to solve all of the problems around adoption, nor will the piece of private member's legislation that we intend to introduce in the spring, but it will really initiate a conversation about ways that we can talk about this critically important issue and talk about it in a way that reduces stigma, talk about it in a way that celebrates birth parents, talk about it in a way that minimizes the shame of pregnancy loss, and talk about it in a way that really builds up our families and builds up communities. That's so important to the future of our province.

Mr. Speaker, you've heard me speak about strong families creating strong communities and strong communities building a strong family, and that's really what adoption is about. It's about building strong families no matter what the face of that family is, but about building a strong family.

The department and adoption professionals all across this province – and I've spoken to lots of them – have identified some key concerns and needs that they have. I think it's wonderful that we have the opportunity to speak about that, things about breaking down stigma, things about breaking down the stereotypes that come along with adoption, things about breaking down the silos that exist between the Department of Human Services and the wonderful adoption professionals that exist in our province through private agencies, finding ways to have these organizations communicate better so that the adoption community can expand, because at the heart of all adoption professionals, be it in the department or private, is this unquenchable desire to make the best available decision for the needs of a child. There's no place better for a child than in the most ideal scenario, with their biological family, but where that's not possible, in a family that's going to be theirs forever.

So with everything that we can do, whether it's better training for front-line department workers with the available options around adoption or better training for them to work more collaboratively with the department, today is really the start of a conversation with respect to working together and championing a cause that's so critically important to our future.

I'm proud to be able to rise today and speak about that. I look forward to the passing of this motion and look forward to speaking about this during private members' business, hopefully in the spring.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to the motion brought forward by my colleague the MLA for Calgary-East. I would like to begin by acknowledging the critically important role that adoptive families play in promoting the health, safety, happiness, and well-being of so many of Alberta's children. I have had the opportunity to meet with several adoptive parents in my role as Minister of Human Services. I also have heard from prospective adoptive families, many of whom are very excited to nurture a child and provide for their well-being and healthy development. I appreciate the members advocating for these families and for raising this important issue for debate in the Legislature.

I would also like to acknowledge the advocacy of the Official Opposition members, in particular my friend the MLA from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I know this is an issue that many members and many Albertans feel passionately about. Our government shares a deep concern for this issue, and we are always looking for ways to improve core supports and programs, including the adoption system, in our province. We will continue to listen to all parties as well as families and business partners and all relevant groups as we consider this issue.

Adoption is an important part of supporting strong families and building resilient communities. I want all members of this House and all Albertans to know that we are committed to ensuring that when children are no longer safe in their own homes or when a parent wishes to voluntarily put their child up for adoption, that those children have safe, loving, nurturing homes to grow up in. We will continue to support adoptive families and prospective adoptive parents. Part of this work includes removing barriers to adoption when removing those barriers is in the best interests of children and their families. It is critical that the adoption process provides children with the best outcome and meets the needs of families.

Choosing an adoptive family is a significant decision for any birth parent, and we should work to strengthen and support their decision-making when we can. We recognize that online advertising may support options for birth parents; however, we know that any decision regarding the well-being of children must be taken only after careful consideration and examination. Every case is different, and we need to look at these cases on a case-by-case basis.

There are several approaches to this issue across jurisdictions in Canada regarding online advertising for potential adoptive parents, and my ministry will be looking to see what can be learned from the debate today in the House and from these different approaches as we explore how we best support children and families with respect to the adoption process. We have flagged this issue for examination when the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act is reviewed next.

In the meantime I support this motion from my colleague. I appreciate this opportunity to hear more from the members on this issue, and I look forward to the debate today.

As well, I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-East for sharing her story with us today. Thank you very much for bringing forward this motion, and thank you, everyone, for sharing your views on this important issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd also like to start out by thanking the Member for Calgary-East for sharing her story. It just gives such tremendous perspective, and it's greatly appreciated, so thank you for sharing that with us. It's wonderful.

Also, thank you to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for your story. Because I have the privilege of knowing your beautiful family, it makes me extremely proud to be able to rise and speak to supporting this motion and, hopefully, moving forward further on the legislation through a private member's bill.

Eventually this motion is going to review section 85(1) of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act and section 25(2)(d)(iii) of adoption regulation AR 187/2004 with a view to removing the prohibition on prospective adoptive parents that currently prevents them from advertising and publishing a profile. As has been said, many of the Members of the Legislative Assembly know that the Wildrose on November 18 released recommendations to guide new legislation modernizing the adoption system in Alberta as well, which is very in line with the member's motion, the fact that the first recommendation we made was directly in line with this motion before the House today, updating current advertising legislation to reflect the use of modern technologies, especially allowing prospective adoptive families to be able to post profiles online.

The legislation protects children from being posted in advertisements on private websites, but what has happened is that it has unintentionally prevented Albertans from posting potential adoptive parents' profiles online. This is something that has probably led to less than ideal outcomes in these situations. What we're seeing is that other provinces in Canada have already allowed for this practice of posting potential adoptive parents' profiles, and it's received great success, so we would like to be able to catch up to that.

We've also recommended, on top of that, to implement mandatory visits by adoption professionals for adoptive families to ensure that they are aware that there are so many community resources that are available to them. We want to make sure that along with making sure that these profiles are updated and available, we're also making sure that we're following through with that. I had an opportunity to speak, actually, with Albertans as well on our second recommendation, on the importance of ensuring through regulations that this proper support is available to new and adoptive parents. It's just going to make the whole process flow better.

It's also our belief that a mandatory visit by adoption professionals for all types of adoptions, including direct-placement adoptions, would certainly ensure that the adoptive families are equipped with all of the important tools to raise their children. Currently a person can actually place a child for adoption through direct placement, but a home visit is not required at this point. The main purpose of the visit, obviously, would be to ensure that the adoptive parents are fully informed of all resources available through the adoption process. Through extensive consultation we believe that having a trained worker provide a list of available community resources is that next important step to making sure that the adoption process is lasting and successful for adoptive parents and for these children to find their forever homes.

The third recommendation from our plan on modernizing Alberta's adoption framework is to also strengthen the public health postnatal services, which, again, I think, falls very much in line with this motion. It removes the mandatory use of child and family services when a birth parent expresses interest in adoption. What that means is that we can help those front-line workers with expertise in the field. We can make changes to improve the adoption process for the parents, children, and the birth families, and then what will happen is that the strong communities and families can rally around these folks. We can do more to make the system responsive to modern needs of the adopted child, the guardian, and the birth families.

I'm so honoured – so honoured – to be able to rise and to have the opportunity to talk with all members about this important issue in the House today and to discuss the changes, the motion that the member has brought forward as well as some of the points that we'll be bringing forward on modernizing adoptions. It will provide a foundation for the private member's bill that will be presented during the next legislative session. I'm so hopeful that all members of the legislative body will obviously support this very positive motion and this common-sense initiative and, by doing so, in the same way will support upcoming legislation that will help to modernize these policies.

Thank you so much.

5:30

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak in support of this motion, conversation that I would like to have just around some of the potential options that could be discussed when the review occurs around adoption. Obviously, I was a child protection worker before I was elected. I actually worked as a kinship support worker for a while doing home assessments and placing children with kinship families, so I have worked through permanency, looking at PGAs, permanent guardianship agreements, and permanent guardianship orders through adoption. I've worked my way through the process with families in different capacities. As well, I have some personal experience with my extended family around international adoptions as well as adoptions within Alberta.

In saying that, I do have some cautions around online profiling. It's not that I'm against it. I believe that an adoptive family should have as much opportunity to be able to connect with biological families and to be able to have those conversations, but there is a process that has to come along with that. I hear the Official Opposition talking about: why does children's services need to be involved, and is there a way that we can look at modernizing the legislation so that that doesn't happen?

I mean, there is capacity for direct placements, where there is limited involvement with children's services. But part of the reason why children's services is involved on more occasions than not is the fact that it is ultimately the government's responsibility to ensure that children are safe, that we are doing all of the assessments that are required to ensure that the home is safe, that the family that they're being placed with is appropriate, and that all of those needs are being met.

So when we look at adoption websites and see biological families reaching out to adoptive families, my only caution is that there's a potential for vulnerable parents who may not have the cognitive capacity to understand what the adoption process looks like or really understand what adoption means in the context of permanency and the fact that, you know, it isn't an option to place a child for a short term and then want to have them back at some point. So it sets up the biological family as well as potentially the adoptive family to have an extremely hard and painful experience when either the biological family, you know, starts going through the process of adoption and then changes their mind or the child is placed with the adoptive family permanently and their forever home is set up and they are experiencing all of these positive things, and then all of a sudden the biological family comes back and says: well, I've changed my mind.

It's extremely important that children's services help with that process so that they can, you know, provide the counselling that's required for the biological parents. We can ensure that the biological parents understand when their child is going to be adopted that it is a forever home and that they can't come back in a year or six months and say, "Well, I've changed my mind; I would like my baby back" or young adult or, you know, any child, really. I mean, it's not just babies that get adopted. There are lots of different ages.

The other piece of that as well is that there is potential for supports through children's services. So if we're talking about the supports for a permanency program, which is financial plus emotional support for adoptive families or families with PGAs – if a child goes through the children's services system and has a permanent guardianship order and then becomes adopted, the government still has a responsibility to support that adoptive family. By choice; it's voluntary. I mean, it's not a requirement that we would go in and see that family, but there is that capacity to provide that additional support for counselling, for special equipment, if required, if the child has a special need, and talk about sibling counselling. I mean, there are a variety of different things that can be supported not only for the child but for the adoptive family.

These are important things, definitely, I think, as we move forward and we review the legislation, that we look at the motion that is before us today. Those are things to consider. How do we do those things so that we're ensuring that we're protecting both the biological family as well as the adoptive family and the little person in between while still promoting a very important, long-term, forever home for children? Again, I have personal experience. I know how important this is. I also know the struggles that come with it through the process, so I just want to make sure that when we are doing it, we're doing it in a way that we're supporting more adoptive families and allowing this opportunity to occur but also making sure that everybody is safe.

I do support the motion. I just have some cautionary statements.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand today and thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this motion forward. I have a friend in my town of Bonnyville who, when I first was elected, said that this is a problem for him and his wife. His name is Curtis. I asked him to write me an e-mail, and I'd like to read the e-mail really quickly into the record because I think it's important to show that this reinforces where Calgary-East is going with this.

It says, "Good morning" to the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

My wife and I are currently going through the process of adopting a child in Alberta. We are working with Adoption Options and we are now on the waiting list for a child. The wait for a child is approximately 2 - 3 years and the wait is completely out of our control as we have to await a birth parent [or parents] to select us.

Something that surprised my wife and I when we were going through the approval process is that we found out that waiting adoptive parents are not allowed to make it known on social media that we are looking to adopt a child nor are we allowed to announce that we are on the "approved list." This to us seemed archaic, and runs counter to other provinces/territories (namely BC, Ontario and Yukon) in Canada where these provinces/territories allow adoptive parents to make such announcements on social media. This puts potential adoptive parents in Alberta at a disadvantage to other prospective adoptive parents in other parts of the country. Often birth parents in Alberta will end up connecting with prospective adoptive parents in other provinces simply because they have online profiles.

Per the below email, it appears some of your fellow [Wildrose] MLAs [from Airdrie and High River] are already aware of this situation and as our MLA [I am] asking if you can also look into this and see if there is any way that this regulation can be altered [or] updated. Given how much society now utilizes social media, it would be beneficial to be able to use that tool to get the word out for potential adoptive parents.

I've included a link to the CBC news articles about this issue for your review [and] reference.

This article was Alberta Adoption Publicity Ban Challenged.

Thank you for your time and look forward to talking with you again.

From Curtis.

This is reinforcing exactly the concern that the Member for Calgary-East has brought forward. I take great pride in the fact that one of my constituents also identified this as being a concern and that we are actually moving forward, it appears, as a group to correct, possibly, this unfortunate circumstance that is revolving around adoptive parents.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the time that you've given me to speak. I look forward to seeing the vote today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to this motion. I have heard from many of my own constituents in Lethbridge-West on this matter, and I am very pleased that the government has heard them. In particular, I am pleased that the Member for Calgary-East has been able to bring forward this motion on the matter of the online profiles given that it is something that prospective families in southern Alberta have been asking for for some time. It's always very gratifying when government can be responsive to some of these issues that have been happening for some time.

Now, certainly, issues related to adoption go back many years. My own older sister was born in 1967 to my parents, who were not married. Not really by choice that sister of mine, who I didn't know for the first 20 years of my life, was put up for adoption. Life has changed a lot in the almost 50 years – she's not going to like that I just indicated that she's almost 50. But there it is, Mr. Speaker; the math doesn't lie. You know, what that has really taught me is, first of all, that personality is very much genetic. I apologize to the members across the way, but, yes, there are two of us. The friendship as an adult that I have been able to form with my older sister, who is from both of my parents – what an honour it was to get to know her as an adult and certainly for my parents as well and for my dad, before he passed away, to get to know his own other grandchildren. What it really underlined for me is that adoption, in many of the first instances, is a women's issue because anyone can adopt a child, but only women, at least so far, can have babies.

So on the side of the folks who are moving forward with adoption as a choice, we need to make sure that these laws keep pace for them as well. I don't believe, Mr. Speaker, that in 1967 they supported my mother very well. A lot has changed so much for birth parents and for the better, but we know that we can make those changes work even more for families. I think the ability to look at these laws is important, the legislation, so that we can ensure that family reflects where we're at as a society. Family is defined broadly, and the more broadly it is defined, essentially, the more love we have access to in this world. I have certainly learned that about my own family, and as a New Democrat what I desire for myself, I wish for all.

I think it's important to remember, too, that adoption is also an LGBT issue because so many same-sex couples now move forward with adoption as a choice, and it's important that we make sure that we have those choices and, again, that family is defined as broadly as possible.

Finally, I believe that it's important for us to get it right on adoption because adoption is an important part of reconciliation and moving forward with intact families for indigenous peoples, Mr. Speaker. What we know about the tragedy of children in care, what we know about the foster system, what we know about many of these issues is that a large number of these children are indigenous. Having a family, no matter who that family is, is so important, and the legislation that we put around these issues is so important to that.

Now, I support this motion on the part of the Member for Calgary-East. I believe that these are very delicate matters, Mr.

Speaker, and as with all things related to family and to choice, whether it's in vitro fertilization, whether it's reproductive freedoms, whether it's adoption laws, we must proceed carefully, understanding the very human impacts of our actions as legislators, but we can and we should start with this matter of the online profiles. I know that I have heard it loud and clear from my own constituents. We should make sure that we do it right, and we should make sure that in this province family is defined by love, it is defined by caring, and it is defined by ensuring that we have the broadest interpretation possible of what it means to grow up in a family.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise and to support this motion, brought forward by my colleague the MLA for Calgary-East, to facilitate finding forever homes for children who need one. Speaking about adoption is not easy. For many, be it the birth mothers and fathers, their family, the child of the adoptive parents, this brings forth strong emotions and often painful memories and ongoing pain. I would like to acknowledge this as we discuss the motion today.

Mr. Speaker, as an adoptive parent I am thankful for my two boys' birth parents, who put the boys as babies in an orphanage so that they could have a loving home that they could not provide. My husband and I did not select adoption as an easy solution. After years of monthly disappointments we realized that if we wanted children, we needed to consider adoption. Infertility is a devastating illness, an emotionally and physically draining monthly occurrence. By the time couples consider adoption, they often have had expensive in vitro procedures, drugs, and operations. They also most often have drained their savings. The birth of nephews and nieces, friends' children, and babies generally is an emotional minefield. I know that pain, and I understand the importance of facilitating putting together birth parents and prospective adoptive parents.

As intense as the pain of infertility, for birth parents there's a pain of a different kind. I want to honour birth parents and the difficult decisions that they make when they decide to seek an adoptive family for their child: thank you. I am glad that laws and policies have now made it possible for birth parents to keep in touch with the adoptive parents and their child and sometimes to be actively involved in their life through an open adoption.

Mr. Speaker, my husband and I did seek to adopt a child through a private agency in Canada, but as this proved to be a wait of a number of years, we ended up adopting in Thailand, where we worked for a number of years, adopting two toddlers through the government's social service department. We took our boys back to the orphanage when they were teenagers, and we were thankful for them to meet some of their original caretakers but also, most importantly, to witness the difficult decision that a mother made to entrust her child to the government orphanage.

The intent of this motion is to support local adoptive parents in matching children with parents with appropriate measures. Currently Albertan adoptive families are not able to advertise online, and we need to modernize this to facilitate adoption and to ensure that children have a forever home. Choosing an adoptive family is an important choice for birth parents, and online advertising allows access to options. Both sides face so many hurdles as it is, and making the connection process as straightforward as possible is going to go a long way. Adoptive families go through a thorough home study before adoptions are finalized, so any online profile is not the final word or knowledge of the prospective adoptive parent.

Posting a profile online is more the beginning of a conversation that facilitates finding a home for a child.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to vote on this motion that urges the government to review the relevant sections of the mentioned legislation and, through consultation with stakeholders, to remove the prohibition on online posting by prospective adoptive families.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Seeing and hearing no other members who wish to speak to the motion, I would give the opportunity to Calgary-East to close.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was wonderful tonight, one of these rare nights that we get in the House where both sides agree on an issue. It's always nice to be here on those nights.

Adoption really is something that has touched so many lives. I think that talking about it more and removing barriers and educating people is something that is really worth our time here in the Legislature, both to talk about how great adoption can be as well as how heart-wrenching and painful it can be to be a waiting adoptive family. I do thank the Member for Sherwood Park for sharing her story from the other side, myself as an adopted child and hers as an adoptive parent.

I also want to thank the folks who took the time to come forward and share their stories with me. This is what can happen when concerned citizens get out and talk to their MLAs about issues. So I thank the folks who brought this to me, particularly April Boettcher, who first brought this to my attention, and also Valerie Bielenda, who is here in the gallery tonight with her husband, Mark, and her mom, Noelle, to watch the debate.

So I just want to take this opportunity to say thank you to all the people who brought this forward for the opportunity to talk about how wonderful adoption can be. I guess I should thank both my moms, also, for, you know, helping me get to where I am today and my dad, too, and my brother and everyone who made our family as wonderful and loving as my family was growing up.

I would encourage everyone to support this motion. I think everyone is on board. Let's do what we can to reduce barriers to families and people who are waiting to welcome babies and children with love into their families right now.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 510 carried unanimously]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising because I think we've had some very positive, robust discussion this afternoon, and seeing the time, I will move that the House stand adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:52 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Monday, December 5, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

Committee of Supply

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Hon. members, before we begin this evening's consideration of supplementary supply, I would just like to review briefly the standing orders governing the speaking rotation. As provided for in Standing Order 59.02, the rotation in Standing Order 59.01(6) is deemed to apply, which is as follows:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may make opening comments not to exceed 10 minutes,
- (b) for the hour that follows, members of the Official Opposition and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (c) for the next 20 minutes, the members of the third party, if any, and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (d.1) for the next 20 minutes, the members of any other party represented in the Assembly or any independent Members and the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak,
- (e) for the next 20 minutes, private members of the Government caucus and the Minister or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, may speak, and
- (f) for the time remaining, to the extent possible, the rotation outlined in clauses (b) to (e) shall apply with the speaking times set at 5 minutes as provided in Standing Order 59.02(1)(c).

During the first rotation speaking times are limited to 10 minutes. Once the first rotation is complete, speaking times are reduced to five minutes. Provided that the chair has been notified, a minister and a private member may combine their speaking times, with both taking and yielding the floor during the combined period.

Finally, as provided for in Government Motion 28, approved by the Assembly on December 1, 2016, the time allotted for consideration is three hours.

Supplementary Supply Estimates 2016-17 General Revenue Fund

The Chair: I will now recognize the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to move the estimates.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I would like to move the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund. When passed, these estimates will authorize a single funding request of $1,451,000 to support the Legislative Assembly to provide administrative and other support for the activity of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. This is the amount requested by the Speaker as recommended by the Standing Committee on Members' Services at its meeting on September 26, 2016.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. If it's okay with you, I'll combine my time with the minister. I'd just like to rise briefly. As a member of the Members' Services Committee we had some very good discussions around this while, at the end of the day, I think it may have been advantageous to wait for the Electoral Boundaries Commission until the following election given the close proximity that we've had in a couple of elections being a little bit closer to each other. We had some discussion around that particular issue, among others, the very fact that the committee has recommended that we move forward on the commission and that the commission has been now appointed.

I might just add that I think it speaks to the quality of the folks in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that the government saw fit to appoint a member of the community in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills as well as did the Leader of the Official Opposition in consultation with the third party and through the Speaker, another member to the commission.

Given that that is well and truly on its way and that the Members' Services Committee has recommended this to the Assembly – and, Madam Chair, you'll know that I have a passion for respecting committees of this Assembly – as such, I'll look forward to supporting the estimates.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? I'll recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, very much. I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board for bringing this forward. I do have a few questions, though, as relate to the amount that was presented, and perhaps he could expand upon it a little bit. I am somewhat concerned or at least require some additional explanation as to the amount that has been allocated, some $1.451 million dollars, for the work of the boundaries commission. There is no question that the work the boundaries commission will be doing is extremely important. It's part of our democratic process. I think that it's also important to note – and I'm sure that the minister is aware of this – that these activities are causing some concern and are certainly causing some nervousness, especially in areas of rural Alberta, where population growth has not been as robust as it has been in urban Alberta or, more specifically, in some of the suburban areas of Alberta.

Indeed, Madam Chair, some of the greatest degree of population growth in our province has occurred on the outskirts of our larger urban centres, to the extent that some of our existing constituencies in those areas have a population that is, in some cases, 30 or 40 per cent greater than the arithmetic mean of the average number of electors. Of course, we know that the Electoral Boundaries Commission will have to take these differences into account.

The other end of the scale is also a very great concern, and that is that we do have some of our constituencies that are relatively sparsely populated, whose populations are not growing to the same extent and for whom representation is indeed a real challenge. Madam Chair, I mean, I know that, for example, the constituency of Peace River, that you represent, is one of those constituencies that has a huge geographic area to cover, many, many communities that you need to interact with, and that's not unlike a lot of other communities in rural Alberta whose populations are not growing. So, you know, there is concern, and I'm sure that the minister is aware of that. I'm sure that the Minister of Justice is aware of it as is the minister responsible for democratic renewal. These are portfolios that will all interact with the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I would appreciate, perhaps, some additional information from the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board as to how the $1.451 million was arrived at. How does this compare to the allocation for previous Electoral Boundaries Commissions?

I guess part of the reason why I ask that question is that not too long ago, about two years ago, I was involved in another cross-Alberta committee, that functioned for about six months' time and was conducting the rural health services review. We had seven committee members that travelled across the province. We also had administrative secretariat support from the Department of Health. We met with over 100 municipalities as we travelled across the province. We advertised our meetings. We had a considerable amount of conversation and discussion. I know that the total price tag of doing that process was approximately $200,000. That's certainly a large sum of money, but I think it was money that was well spent, especially if the recommendations are acted upon, you know, as we go forward.

So I am very interested in hearing from the Finance minister on how the $1.451 million was arrived at and if he could perhaps give additional information to the Chamber as to how that compares to the allocation for previous Electoral Boundaries Commissions.

Thank you.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Chair. It's just an honour to rise as the deputy chair of Members' Services to provide some information on the questions of the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. As he noted, there is a difference between the cost of the previous commission, which was actually $1.2 million. I'm just going to provide a little bit of the information as to what led to that, of course, noting that the previous Electoral Boundaries Commission was in 2009-10, so there is an increase. There are several things that have contributed to this. One, the number of households in Alberta has increased; therefore, the number of houses to reach through advertising has also increased. The householder document providing information on the commission is generally sent to each Alberta home. The postage costs have also substantially increased from 2009. The cost of advertising has also increased considerably since 2009-10.

This one brings a different part, which is that the commission must also purchase two new maps plotters to do its work, so there are some technical purchases that need to be made.

In addition, the commission has traditionally travelled to a number of communities in Alberta to hold public meetings. This is something that they're going to continue doing, and one of the things that reduced their costs in that was the charter planes as well. Adding those travel costs has also increased their overall costs. In certain situations they need to fly into communities to complete the work more expeditiously, and this does increase that. Those charter air services costs didn't happen in 2009-10, so there's a discrepancy in travel costs there.

That provides a little bit of an overview of the changes between the last one and this current one. I'm happy to answer any more questions if you have any.

The Chair: Any other comments, questions?

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah. Just to follow up a little bit on the previous line of questioning, I was thinking in the same direction. Maybe if you could just add a tiny bit for us there. Was the $1.2 million budgeted last time adequate? Was it all spent, or was there excess?

And I guess my second question would be: could you give us an indication, maybe, of the top three expenses that will make up the $1.451 million?

Thank you.

The Chair: Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you. I don't have that information at my fingertips, but, you know, what we do know is that there is the increase, and those increases are mainly due to the costs of charters and postage.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes, Madam Chair. You know, forgive me. I'm not trying to belabour the point a little bit, but just something the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park said sort of stuck out to me, and that is that you mentioned that there was a purchase of two additional map plotters for the work of the committee. I have no doubt that the committee will absolutely be plotting out maps and be requiring that, but I guess I'm puzzled as to whether, for something that is going to be a very finite period of time, perhaps six months to a year that this commission is actually going to be in effect, in fact, purchasing new pieces of equipment that after a year – I question where that equipment then goes. By the next time the Electoral Boundaries Commission is constituted, for the next set of electoral boundaries, I'm going to assume that plotter technology will be such that the plotters that are purchased for this round will probably be obsolete and will have to be replaced again.

I guess there are two questions that I would have. First of all, what is the cost of these two plotters? Secondly, was it looked into in terms of either renting or perhaps leasing these plotters from a firm that has them in regular usage and could perhaps spare them? I would suggest – if I'm not correct, I'd be surprised – that there are a lot of surveying firms around the province that are currently less busy than they typically have been in the past, and they may well have exactly the equipment that the boundaries commission is needing and looking for and would be happy to make those plotters available to the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

I'm just questioning: is this the best way of, you know, keeping an eye on things? I recognize that everything else that you mentioned – with regard to an increase in postage, absolutely, that's gone up. Increased number of households: yes, that, too. I'm going to assume – I could be wrong on this – that there is also going to be a robust effort to reach out to Albertans using platforms other than direct mail, which, as we know, is something that we become more and more reliant upon as we do communications out there, although I certainly hope it doesn't turn into a 4 and a half million dollar exercise.

But I would like to ask specifically with regard to these two pieces of capital purchase that you mentioned because it just strikes me that, you know, perhaps that's an area – and maybe it's a very small amount of funds. That could be. I've never bought a map plotter in my life, so I really don't know what these things are worth, but I can imagine that they aren't cheap. Perhaps we could just have more information as to what these plotters cost and why they're being purchased. Was leasing considered, and if it was, why was that option rejected?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to provide a little bit more information, I did mention the map plotters. In fact, they did have one from the previous commission. Of course, they use them quite a bit, and because they are aged, they are looking to replace them, and some of them are failing. The cost for the two new plotters is $54,000. They would be able to use them in the next one as well.

In addition to that, some of the other questions of the figures that we are wanting, too: actually, those figures were presented during Members' Services Committee when this went through Members' Services. Again, I almost want to say that some of the discussion on how we are approving the budget was actually discussed within the Members' Services Committee. That's why this is being brought forward after having been approved through Members' Services.

That being said, I just wanted to make sure that the number was out there, that the map plotters do cost about $54,000. I don't have the information on the lease, if that was looked into as an option, but I know that this information was presented to Members' Services as a line item that is increasing.

The Chair: I should just point out that the process we're following for this supplementary supply is a little bit unique in that the request is coming from the Legislative Assembly to the House, which is why the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park is a designate on behalf of the Members' Services Committee, and it's a fairly straightforward, single request. The timing is a little bit more fluid, and I've been, in who I'm recognizing, just a little more generous.

Any other members wishing to speak?

Then I shall put the following question.

Vote on Supplementary Supply Estimates 2016-17 General Revenue Fund

Agreed to:

Support to the Legislative Assembly

Expense $1,451,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The Committee of Supply shall now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again. The following resolution related to the 2016-17 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, has been approved.

Support to the Legislative Assembly: expense, $1,451,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

I did want to alert hon. members that Standing Order 61(3) provides that immediately upon concurring on the report of the Committee of Supply, we do revert to Introduction of Bills.

Introduction of Bills

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 37

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2)

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 37, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2). Thank you to the members opposite for their questions to clarify the substance of the act and what it'll be spent on. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to this Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 32

Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, I'd just like to declare that I have a pecuniary interest or at least that my spouse does as she sits on the board of directors of a major credit union here in the province and therefore request that I may recuse myself from discussion and have that recorded in the Orders of the Day.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the Credit Union Amendment Act, 2016. As I've mentioned before, the credit union system is a vital part of the Alberta economy; $24 billion in assets are under management across the system. It is incredible, then, that this act has not been renewed, reviewed in at least 20 years and possibly 30 years. This bill is about modernization. It's about bringing the credit union system into the 21st century. It is about cutting red tape from the system and making it easier to do business. The legislation will modernize the system by providing additional business powers to credit unions and clarifying membership rules, which will make it easier for credit unions to lend to small and medium-sized enterprises.

The changes to the act have been well received by the credit unions themselves, who have been waiting for a long time for many of these changes. Graham Wetter, the CEO of Credit Union Central of Alberta, stated in a letter received by our government, quote, I would like to take this opportunity to express our industry's support for Bill 32. End quote. Further, he goes on to say, "Bill 32 . . . will serve to further enhance the competitiveness and sustainability of Alberta credit unions, which in turn will provide further benefits to Albertans . . . and the provincial economy." Mr. Wetter praises the government for engaging with and consulting credit unions when developing this proposed legislation.

I am proud of this work and firmly believe that it ensures the resilience and viability of the credit union system and that of Alberta families and businesses as a result. Credit unions are an important part of our communities. They are local-minded and play leading roles at the local level. They are innovative and develop many key products that would never be dreamed of by the banking system.

One that sticks out for me is the partnership between First Calgary Financial and the Calgary nonprofit Momentum, which provides an alternative product to the payday loans that many people get involved with. First Calgary's product provides access to credit at well below the triple digits charged by payday lending companies. This allows First Calgary members to access credit quickly and easily without the fear of spiralling into unending cycles of debt. This is innovative.

I ask that all members stand with the credit unions and their endorsement and provide their support for this bill.

At this time, Madam Chair, I'd like to propose an amendment. I propose a minor amendment to the bill as follows: section 3 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

Section 37 is amended by adding the following after subsection (6):

- (6.1) Where a bylaw under section 45(4)(j) does not provide for access to the list of members, or does not provide for reasonable access to it as referred to in subsection (3), the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations
  - (a) establishing the right of a member to direct the credit union to distribute to all members the information specified by that member and to direct the method of distribution, and
  - (b) with respect to any such direction, establishing the rights and obligations of the credit union, including the right to impose on the member a reasonable charge for distribution.

Madam Chair, I'd consider this a clarifying amendment. It simply seeks to clarify the authority which a credit union has to recover reasonable costs from a member. It clarifies the purview government has to regulate the distribution of credit union member lists and how credit unions distribute information at the request of the member.

At this time I'd like to move this amendment and encourage my colleagues to support this amendment as well as the whole bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

I have two copies of the amendment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1. We're going to take a moment to give members a chance to have a copy of it, have it circulated.

I believe we're ready to continue. Did you have any further comments, hon. Minister of Finance?

Go ahead, hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A1. I'd like to thank the member for bringing it. I always have some reservations when it comes to the government putting itself in a situation where it needs to amend its own legislation. Previously and even mere moments ago the Minister of Finance stood up and praised the completeness and the awesomeness of the bill, you know, went on record with the letter that he spoke about. In fact, I had the opportunity to receive the same letter.

Last week I rose in the House and spoke at some length about the great work that the Mountain View Credit Union does in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and also expressed their support that they'd provided in the form of their chief officer and their discussion around the bill.

It sometimes is concerning that the government would need to amend its own legislation a mere three or four days after introduction, particularly when the government has said such glowing things about their own legislation. I have read through the amendment now, but I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance might just provide some context as to what happened, why it was that, you know, they introduced the bill and now they believe that they need some clarification with respect to this amendment. Like, I get what it's going to do, but how did we wind up here? Is this the only amendment that he's anticipating needing for this particular bill?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the questions. Yes, it is, with regard to the number of amendments. This is all I'm contemplating. If you look at 3, section 37 in terms of the original in the bill and then look at this amendment, the amendment is more expletive. [interjections] No. That's not the right word – explanatory in terms of the kinds of direction that we're taking, working with credit unions, recognizing that many credit unions already have provisions in their bylaws. Those provisions in their bylaws we are acknowledging, but we are also indicating to members who wish to utilize this provision in any credit union that they're a member of that they have to underwrite these costs.

We're being more explanatory, we're being clearer with regard to who bears the costs of this engagement with members of credit unions, and we're recognizing that the bylaws in place, where they're reasonable, where they're already taking place for members in credit unions, that those would be of course acceptable. The previous unamended part that was in the original bill took too heavy a hand at trying to address these things. The amendment is more about working together with credit unions, and that's probably the way credit unions work best: they work for their members, and we're trying to work with the credit unions.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments with respect to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am proud to have a credit union within two of my communities, the Lakeland Credit Union. It's a credit union that I actually served on the board of until I was elected. I sat as the finance chair, and I actually have a humorous story to share.

An Hon. Member: From accountants?

Mr. Cyr: I know. I know. I had two committees that I could be a part of – actually all of the committees, but two of them that I was interested in. One was the audit committee, and one was the finance committee. I was like: "Well, you know what? I do audits all the time. I think I want to move on to something a little different, so I am going to join the finance committee." It makes sense. [interjections] Right. So I went in, and I find out that my duty on the finance committee is to be in charge of the audit, so what they meant was governance, more or less, with the audit committee. In the end, I ended up doing a lot of the finance and working very closely with Shirley, Pierre, Garth, Amber, and Ronda.

You know, the fact is that the staff at the Lakeland Credit Union are wonderful. They're people that I got to know very well, as well as the board members, and I'd like to get them recognized because what we need to understand is that credit unions are member driven, very similar to political parties – very similar to political parties – and it is decisions that are being made by the members at AGMs that actually influence the direction of a credit union. I'd like to say that in my case here, working with Charmaine, Judy, Mitch, Wayne, Kelsey – I didn't work with Chantal, and I didn't work with Lionel or Dean or Denis, but I did work with a few others that I really did enjoy working with.

You know what? The fact is that when it comes to credit unions, at the time when I decided that becoming a director was something that I had some interest in because in the end I wanted to be a part of my community, and what better way to be a part of your community than joining as a director to hear exactly how to help? The one thing I will say about our local credit union: what it's well known for is its contributions back to the community, its donations back to the community, giving back to the community, volunteering with the community. That is something that attracted me to the credit union.

Now, here it is that I sat on the finance committee. I was able to work with the staff and work out what the dividends should be along with the board, and, you know, through that I had a really good understanding of exactly how credit unions work.

I also will say that the one thing about credit unions is that they actually have their own training program. You go through CUDA training – I don't remember what the acronym stands for off the top of my head, but I'm sure I can probably guess what it is – and here it is that they put you through a series of courses to prepare you for running a credit union.

Now, why is this important? Credit unions were started in our community because they just couldn't get financing or be able to build up within our community. On January 25, 1940, for instance, is where they actually did their creating of the Lakeland Credit Union. It wasn't called that way back then, but it is now. We actually had our 75th anniversary, which was quite remarkable, and I'll tell you that it gives me great pride.

Now, I will tell you that when I first started as a businessman in Cold Lake, it comes down to that when you're starting to work with some of the larger banks, it is more difficult to get a loan so that you can get a building and get going. In my case it was the credit union that was the only one that was willing to take a chance, and the members were able to put their consideration behind me, which is why it is so important that we move something forward that adds to the ability for credit unions to be able to compete on a provincial level. We need to make sure they're competitive because if they lose that I guess not competitive advantage but being able to compete at a provincial level, this is bad for all of us.

Now, I will tell you that when it comes to our local credit union, I went and I reached out to our CEO right now, and I said, "What do you think about this specific act that's being brought forward?" My CEO said, "This is something that we can get behind." You know what? Just because the two largest credit unions say that this is good doesn't necessarily mean that it's good for all credit unions.

Now, he was able to go forward and say: "Scott, you know what? This is good for us. This is something that I believe is good for our credit union and good for our communities." And you know what? It's that stakeholder outreach. I had heard our Finance minister doing the same thing with credit unions. We actually had them up in the gallery and at first reading, coming forward. That's something, I've got to say, that is good to hear, that we actually have some stakeholder outreach when it comes to our credit unions because they're such an important part of our finance system.

Now, to get back to our story here, where I was going through and trying to find a loan but wasn't able to with the major banks. I was looking to start a business. We didn't quite fit that one little narrow gap that they have. You know what? I'm not putting the banks down or the ATB. I will tell you that our banks in Bonnyville-Cold Lake are all wonderful. ATB: wonderful. But in the end, it was the member-driven credit union that was able to give me the flexibility I needed to get that loan and start my small business. This is something that is important to recognize: small businesses are what employ Albertans. So giving them the ability to compete is good for all of us, and I commend the Finance minister for moving this forward.

The fact that we have a piece of legislation that is helpful for the credit unions and has done the stakeholder outreach is a positive thing, in my books. We have seen in the past where this government hasn't done its due diligence when it comes to stakeholder outreach, and that truly is a shame. I will say that when it comes to being able to work with the stakeholders and being able to create a piece of legislation that everybody can agree on, that truly is a piece of legislation that will be good for all Albertans. We need to reinforce that this, as far as I'm concerned – and I've read through this legislation – is good for Albertans. We need to reinforce this.

I encourage everybody to move this legislation forward to make sure that in the end we are reinforcing all businesses within Alberta, and I would like to encourage everybody to support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to make comments or questions or amendments with respect to Bill 32? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. This will be brief. I'm going to agree with the former speaker's comments, but I'm going to come at it from a slightly different way. I had the opportunity to talk to a couple of people I know that are in the banking business about whether they had any complaints about this – and I mean the chartered banks – and they didn't seem to have any particular concerns. So while this is in accord with what the previous speaker says, it comes at it from a different angle, not whether the credit unions liked it but whether the noncredit unions hated it. I didn't hear a lot of hate. There has been no hate from the banks on this. I don't speak for all the banks and would never pretend to, but a couple of people that I know that are in that business that I talked to didn't express any strong dislike for the legislation.

I suppose the people who are the biggest competitors and I think clearly aware of it are not jumping up and down. There's a reasonable chance that the legislation is good. Consequently, I think there's a pretty good chance that I'll be supporting it. We've heard from previous speakers that the credit unions think it's good, and we haven't heard anybody stand up in this House and say that anybody from the banks have said that it's bad. So when you add that together, maybe you've got something good here.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Yeah. I wanted to, first of all, thank the members opposite who spoke in support of credit unions, especially the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who really emphasized that the power of credit unions is that they are owned locally by members, with members' involvement, and they benefit that community. I think that's a very important part of who credit unions are and why the act needed to be modernized to actually make credit unions even more of a force in the community.

I think the bill, with the amendment that has just been introduced by the Finance minister, is really going to encourage member involvement through governance because they'll be able to access the membership for a fee, as was pointed out in the amendment. Very often what happens in the credit union system is that to keep the credit union system truly as member owned, then you really need to make sure that members have a chance to get involved in the governance and really feel the participation. So I think the amendment is going to clarify how information can be shared to members, and I think that is important.

I also think this bill is really going to be important to our communities and will support communities, as was so well explained by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, because it's going to give credit unions more choice to have businesses as members and to serve those businesses and to also provide options around having insurance brokers in separate facilities.

I think the support for this bill by members throughout the House is really good news for our communities, and also, for me, it's good news for the locally owned credit union system, where all the profits and all the benefits stay within Alberta to strengthen our communities.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the bill?
Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 32 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Bill 36

An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety. This bill is very much a compromise that the NDP and the Minister of Transportation have come forward with in order to find the right balance for Alberta, for all of Alberta.

For the most part, I think the hon. minister has gotten this right. Rural Albertans who like the quiet enjoyment of their property will continue to enjoy that right. It also recognizes that fish and wildlife officers, Alberta sheriffs, and the RCMP would have much difficulty coming onto a private property to issue a ticket or an enforcement action for not wearing a helmet.

Bill 36 also recognizes the right to self-government for First Nations and Métis settlements, and I do hope local laws within those jurisdictions will be updated on the reserves and settlements to adopt this new standard. It is very much about protection of all people throughout Alberta.

Madam Chair, Bill 36 will allow the minister to make regulations to allow exceptions to the law. That being said, with considerations given to rural Alberta already in the bill, I do believe that one group was missed in this bill. Hunting and trapping are a vibrant part of rural life. Hunting and trapping allow people, including nonreserve indigenous people, to exercise traditional land-use rights. Some hunters and trappers have mobility issues and require the use of off-highway vehicles to check their trapline and track and hunt animals. When engaged in hunting and trapping, hunters and trappers travel at relatively slow speeds. They are not travelling at very high speeds when they're engaged in tracking animals. The wearing of a helmet while hunting will affect the hearing and the sightlines as hunters and trappers try and track their animals. It dulls the senses and makes the activity more difficult, and I would suggest it also makes it less enjoyable.

When an animal is identified, the added time to remove a helmet can spook that game animal, and therefore the hunt resumes, frustrating and trying the patience of the hunter. If a hunter is trying to use a hunting rifle or a crossbow while wearing a helmet, the sights will not be correct, disproportionately affecting the targeting, aim, and accuracy.

I would let the House know that the province of Manitoba has an exemption for the wearing of helmets for hunters and trappers in their provincial law. We have an active outdoorsmen community here in Alberta and even members of this Assembly like the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, the Leader of the Official Opposition, who has a trapline that he is engaged with.

On that note, I wish to move an amendment, and I have copies here, Madam Chair.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: I didn't keep one for myself, Madam Chair, so I'll wait till I get one so that I can read it into the record. Sorry about that.

I move that Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety, be amended in section 3, in the proposed section 128.1, by adding the following after subsection (4):

(5) Subsection (2) does not apply to a person travelling to engage in hunting or trapping within the meaning of the Wildlife Act.

I think it's important, Madam Chair, to recognize that hunters and trappers are most often travelling at very slow speeds when tracking animals and that a helmet can affect their ability to properly track and to properly take down their game. With the added time to take off the helmet and possibly spook the animal away, if they try and use their firearm while wearing a helmet, it can quite often result in injured game rather than actually properly taking down the game.

So I encourage the House to consider this. We see in the province of Manitoba that this has become an exemption there, and I would suggest that it is quite reasonable and very easy to encompass within our bill here.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to respond to the four justifications given by the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock. One of the justifications for this amendment was that hunters and trappers would be travelling at a slow speed when tracking animals. That may be true, that there would be some moments of slow travel, but there's no research to indicate that it would always be slow. It may be slow, but there could just as likely be times when they're going fast, and speed is a factor here. We would not say that going slow could be guaranteed at all times. Therefore, that justification is not valid. Also, under the Wildlife Act, section 33, a person is not allowed to carry a loaded firearm or to discharge a weapon from an OHV or any other vehicle. They would have to get off the vehicle, so it's irrelevant whether they're travelling to that point fast or slow.

The second justification was that hearing and sightlines would be a problem in tracking animals, but both the CSA and DOT standards for helmets do exist, and they can be purchased. So the consumer actually has a choice in the kind of helmet that they have, and that choice could be for hunting, and the visibility could be adjusted for that specific need.

The third justification is that there may be a spooking of the game by removing the helmet. But how did they get there? They got there by an ATV or a quad or something that's probably much noisier than removing a helmet, so it is unlikely that the time that a person would have to take to remove the helmet would spook the game any more than they've already been spooked by the arrival of the hunter. I guess, just to go on, the OHVs are intrusive by their size, by their noise, and the hunters have to get there. If they're walking, of course, they wouldn't need a helmet, but if they're on the OHV, not important.

Then the fourth justification: targeting, aiming, and accuracy. Well, again, I'll refer back to the Wildlife Act, section 33. The person is not allowed to carry a loaded firearm or discharge from the vehicle. So they would have to be off anyway, and that leads me to believe that the helmet requirement should be there on the vehicle. They should not use that as an excuse for taking it off and riding without it.

Now, it is important to note that any exemption would only apply to those recreational hunting or trapping. Currently in Alberta workers employed by provincially regulated commercial hunting, fishing, and trapping organizations, the professional hunters, are required already to wear an OHV helmet under the Alberta occupational health and safety laws. It already exists for the hunters, and we should not make that exemption.

Now, I do appreciate the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock looking at this important legislation. Safety for Albertans remains the minister's primary concern, and we believe that the proposed amendment does not improve safety for OHV users. Bill 36 has taken into account extensive consultation with the public, and that public did include hunters, trappers, and the industry shareholders.

At this point I would like to simply say that we are not supporting the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just speaking to the first item that I outlined earlier, with regard to hunters and trappers travelling at relatively slow speeds, the member opposite brought forward that there's no real documentation to suggest that they will be.

One thing: we were unable to find if there was any documentation that there were injuries happening within the recreational hunting and trapping industry. I'm not sure if he was able to come across any statistics that would suggest that there are incidents of injury to hunters and trappers that we need to be concerned with. We did ask that of the library in Transportation, and we could not get any definitive answer that there were any registered injuries for those types of individuals. So if the member opposite could allude to whether or not they were able to find any documentation with regard to those people.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yes. Just to respond to that, no, we do not have any research either indicating what the average speed would be. However, it could be fast. So because it could be fast or it could be slow, regardless of the research we are saying no to the exemption.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thanks, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. This is really about establishing a culture of safety. Whether or not older people, including hunters and trappers, are fine operating their vehicles, we're setting a standard for kids, for young people.

A culture of safety starts with adults modelling behaviour that says: my head, my body, my machine; the people around me matter, and I'm going to do everything I can to prevent injury and death and cost to the health system. A minor inconvenience or a minor cost like a helmet or even age restrictions would be, to me, no-brainers, if I can use that term, if we're really trying to establish a culture of health and safety and model it for our kids. That's precisely what needs to happen if we're actually going to get to less injuries.

There's been a 30 per cent increase in injury rates from ATVs over the last 10 years. That's just involving children. I'm most concerned about children. A 30 per cent increase over 10 years in children's injury rates associated with ATVs suggests that we need to do more. My view would be similar to that across the building here, to say, "Let's do everything we can to set standards that are not the worst in Canada," which they are in Alberta today. The Canadian Paediatric Society has rated Alberta the very lowest standards of ATV safety anywhere in the country, and it's reflected in some of the statistics.

It may not be specifically statistically relevant to say that hunters and trappers are not injured any more frequently whether they wear helmets or not, because they're going slower or faster. We don't know the data. That's the fact of the matter. What we do know is that a culture of safety is established by the adults in a society, what's important is visible, and when children see adults taking care of themselves, taking care of their vehicles, taking care of their speeds, acting responsibly, wearing helmets, children grow with that culture.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I appreciate the comments from the previous speaker. While I agree with his comments, I'm not sure they necessarily apply very directly to this particular amendment because children of a young age I don't think are allowed to hunt, certainly not by themselves.

You know what? This amendment actually deals with an interesting choice, in my view, Madam Chair. At the point of somebody getting off their ATV because they see an animal, which is the greater risk? Is the greater risk from what they do on their ATV, or is the greater risk from using their firearm a little bit faster because they have to take a helmet off as compared to if they didn't?

Of course, they're going to say: well, you should never hurry. I think that's a fair comment, but in the real world lots of times when people are hunting, they're out sometimes for hours or days, and then they see an animal that they legally have a tag for, that they're allowed to take. Of course, if they've been out for hours and they haven't seen that animal until now and the animal may be headed for the bush where they can't see it anymore, they're in a hurry. That's not an excuse ever to not be safe, and I'm not going to make an excuse for anybody to not be safe. But the fact is that what this amendment weighs, in my view, is the safety difference between the risk from being on the ATV as compared to the risk in handling your firearm just a little bit faster because you've got to get a helmet off.

I think it's a reasonable amendment. I understand some of the other arguments. The only one I probably didn't understand is on fast and slow because I don't think legally there's really a definition of fast or slow. What's fast for me might be slow for you, Madam Chair, or slow for other members of this House or vice versa. I'm not sure that any fast or slow argument particularly carries a lot of weight but, rather, what's safer. I think that's what we're really talking about here, and I think it's a legitimate thing for us to think about, whether the risk is greater from riding the ATV without a helmet or the risk is greater from having to be that little bit faster with your firearm because you're taking the helmet off. I think that's something that members of the House could legitimately think about before they vote on this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to rise and speak about this because I have talked to a number of different hunters and members of fish and game associations in my constituency. There are different arguments to be made when it comes to wearing a helmet, whether they think it's just best practice or they think that it's something that should actually be instituted as legislation in the province. I think that we do need to remember that Alberta is the last to bring in this sort of legislation, so we are lagging behind.

It is an important conversation to have to see, you know, what should be left up to the individual and what responsibility and leadership the province should be taking. Really, I mean, all of the different validators on this piece of legislation – it's not the province that's taking the leadership; it's people like the woman who actually suffered the brain injury that support this. It's different, incredibly important stakeholders that see the importance. You know, they're waiting for the province to do something. They're waiting for us to get onboard to make this change.

I can table this later, but there is an article from Field & Stream magazine from 2012. Field & Stream magazine recommends using a helmet because it reduces the risk of fatality. Their quote is that helmets “reduce the risk of fatalities . . . by 42 percent” and that it reduces the risk of “non-fatal head injury by 64 percent.”

When we're talking about taking care of Albertans, as legislators in this House we need to think about what the costs are to society when people are hurt or injured or, even worse, tragically killed. We bear the costs not just as all Albertans but as communities. If we have someone that is injured and can't work anymore, we bear that cost as a society. We bear those health costs. If we have someone that is lost that is the breadwinner in a family, we all bear that cost. While it is always tragic to lose a person for any reason, in any circumstance, the thing that we can do that can substantially protect the public good and protect public safety I think is something that is of import to each one of us in this House.

I understand that there is a question of personal choice, and I think that that's been left in this piece of legislation where the minister is not asking for this to be applied to private lands. However, we all need to take responsibility for each other when we are out on public property, and this is a means of doing so through the use of helmets. That's why I am rising to speak against the amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to compliment the government on the way that they have constructed this bill. I think that they got it about right. Please don't take that as a half-hearted compliment. It's a sincere one. It seems on the one hand a straightforward issue, but on the other hand there is more than one thing to think about.

I know that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View harassed me incessantly on this issue when I was Transportation minister, and I know that he was sincere and honest when he was harassing me. I think he knows that I was sincere when I said: “You know what? We're talking to the folks from the Alberta associations of off-road vehicles, the responsible groups, on doing this.” Of course, as time went on, my colleague from Grande Prairie was the Transportation minister, and I think that had things gone differently for us in the election last year, he may have brought forward a piece of legislation that's pretty similar to what's before us today.

So I am in favour of it, Madam Chair, but my concern or my caution, if you will, is that no one should think that this is going to solve all the problems and prevent all the deaths. If you look at the statistics that are available on ATV deaths today, there is a good percentage of them from head injuries, but in a good percentage of those the riders were wearing helmets, and that didn't keep them alive. There's a good percentage of those. There's no doubt that there will be a lot of circumstances, a lot of places where it either saves an injury or saves a life, and that's a positive thing, but I wouldn't want anybody to think that it will be a cure-all.

I say this advisedly. I'm a motorcycle rider, which I understand isn't the same as an ATV. I've been down to the States, riding in states where you're not required to wear a helmet, and I always wear mine. My personal bias has always been that anybody that doesn't wear a helmet on a motorcycle doesn't actually need one. [interjections] It took a minute, didn't it? I know. That's why I choose to do that. It's just a risk that I choose not to take. Other people choose to take it; I choose not to.

The other issue that this bill doesn't address – and that's not really a shortcoming in the bill but, rather, something to be considered down the way – is that a lot of those deaths on ATVs, whether it's from a head injury or not, whether the person killed or injured dies or not, whether they were wearing a helmet or not, what's not addressed in this bill and probably shouldn't be in this bill but is something that we ought to think about is how many people killed and injured on ATVs were impaired, a serious consideration because, obviously, someone who's impaired, whether they're wearing a helmet or not, is more likely to have a mishap or a crash, whatever you want to call it. I don't call it an accident because if you're impaired, it's not an accident. You took an unreasonable risk, and you paid for it. As one member across the way says, that's true, but society in many cases pays for that risk, too. When somebody needs long-term care and a family is without a breadwinner and a child is without a mother or a father, then those are other concerns as well.

While I think the government has done a good job of putting together this piece of legislation, the one issue that really hangs out there with red flashing lights for me is the issue of the impaired operation of ATVs. I'm not sure what legislatively I'd recommend on that, but that's something worthy of our thoughts as we go forward because a large percentage of the deaths and injuries, helmet or not, head injury or not, are attached to people operating these machines that ought not be because of their state of impairment.

The Chair: Any other questions or comments or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question? Oh, in that corner, Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Yeah. Sorry I'm so far away.

Madam Chair, I'd just like to summarize. I will be short, just four or five minutes. I rise in support of Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety. First, I would personally like to express my condolences to the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti and his family. On behalf of all my colleagues and everybody in the Assembly our sincerest sympathies. Even though a helmet was worn in that tragic fatality and as much fun as off-highway vehicling might be, it was a severe reminder that it can be risky and dangerous. We must participate with safety in mind. Helmets, even though they don't eliminate all, do reduce the risk of injury.

There is a history of need for this legislation and a history of desire to amend and update the Traffic Safety Act. In my previous career over the last two decades various school groups would come in and talk about safety to the students for all-terrain vehicles, quads, snowmobiles, and they would also come in with petitions for the adults to sign to promote and advocate for changes in the law. They would tell us stories of injury and death, and they would indicate that they are advocating for updated legislation.

Possibly members in this Assembly personally know people who have been severely injured or affected by off-highway vehicle mishaps and deaths, or they've read newspaper articles of the carnage that can happen when there are accidents. But, then again, you may have read the article last week where the heading was Alberta Government Deserves Credit for Taking Action on Helmets. It's been a long time in coming. As a result, there have been calls for the government to require helmets for people who ride off-highway vehicles. Up to this point municipalities have been responsible, and they could choose to create laws if they wanted. The result was that some municipalities did, and some did not. Laws from municipalities were varied and inconsistent. Now the provincial government, we, have the chance for a standard approach on helmets on public lands province-wide.

Why do people want helmet laws, and why do we need safety regulations? As the members for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and Calgary-Currie have stated – and I want to reiterate this for the record and for emphasis – approximately 19 people are killed while operating off-highway vehicles every year. Seventy-four of 185 people between 2002 and 2013 died from head injuries sustained while riding ATVs, one form of OHVs. Eighty per cent of those head injuries involved individuals that were not wearing helmets. Nearly 6,000 off-highway vehicle related visits to the emergency room occur every year. Just last year, 2015, more than 1,000 children were injured as a result of off-highway vehicle activities.

With these medical and safety concerns it is incumbent upon us to investigate and consult Albertans. Public and stakeholder engagements were held in September of this year. The result was that Albertans clearly supported safety. Albertans clearly support and recommend change. The Minister of Transportation has positively responded to that data and consultations, and now we have before us Bill 36. It respects the values and Alberta tradition of off-highway vehicle use, it respects individual choice for use on private property, and it respects choice during farm and ranch operations by a farmer or farm worker on private property.

It adds Alberta to the list of the rest of Canada as one of the jurisdictions with some type of OHV helmet law. I was always curious as to why we had to be the last. It takes action to keep Albertans safe, and it will save health care costs, reduce injuries and deaths. In fact, the costs per year tally about $50 million, but that $50 million is nothing compared to the grief that individuals and families have when there's a death.

Therefore, I'd like to close in supporting this legislation, and I call upon all members to support this bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Dr. Swann: I'm assuming that we haven't closed or adjourned at this time.

Well, I'm pleased to speak in support of what I've heard across the floor. This is a first step in what I hope we could extend further around age limits. About 18 per cent of the deaths from ATVs are under the age of 16. There's good physiological and psychological and other cultural data in the country to show that children under the age of 16 aren't physically or psychologically able to handle the power and the weight that is associated with an all-terrain vehicle. Almost all other provinces in Canada have age 16 as the limit for driving an ATV. In fact, 14 is the age limit in many provinces for being a passenger on an ATV. So I'm hopeful that we could also consider some of these age limits if we're really serious about trying to reduce injuries and deaths in children.

A thousand injuries in children in a year: I mean, that's phenomenal. Or was it a thousand in a year that you quoted? I didn't have that data. But our own injury control and prevention centre has some data up until 2013. I've been pushing them to give me more data since 2013, but suffice it to say that the rate has increased by 31 per cent in Canada between 2001 and 2010. A 30 per cent increase: surely, we need to look at some ways to reduce that carnage.

I know that there are other measures being taken, including licensing. Why would we allow people to drive a motorized vehicle at significant speeds without a licence, without proof of training, without some sense that they know what they're doing? We don't do that with motorbikes. We don't do that with motor vehicles.

Again, it may seem like overkill to some, but what is our culture about if not moving towards higher levels of safety and prevention? Part of the criticism I've had of our health care system for many years is that we spend 3 per cent of our budget, almost $20 billion, on prevention. No wonder our hospitals are overflowing. No wonder that in our emergency rooms you have to wait six to eight to 10 hours to get seen. It's because so many opportunities for prevention are being ignored, and this is one of them.

We need to develop a stronger culture of prevention in this province. It's perhaps the last vestige of frontierism and free enterprise, I guess, and free will and individual choice. We were the last ones, I think, in Canada to bring in seat belts, and that was a fight. But now I think we've all accepted that there is something besides individual freedom that's also important, and that's social responsibility, the cost to society.

Those two areas, I think, I wanted to highlight. I would still hope to be able to bring forward a couple of amendments tomorrow, one on age restrictions and one on licensing and requirements for training.

So I'll adjourn debate, with your permission, Madam Chair.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 32 and rise and report progress on Bill 36.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Sweet: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 32. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 36. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34 Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you. I am pleased tonight to rise to move second reading of Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016.

Over the last two weeks our government has taken bold steps to modernize Alberta's electricity system, a modernization that was long overdue. We announced a series of measures that will ensure reliable electricity in Alberta and stable prices for consumers. We have announced, first, a four-year, 6.8 cent per kilowatt hour cap on electricity rates for consumers on the regulated rate option. Second is a plan to transition to a capacity market which offers a tried and tested solution to the energy price spikes that were built into the energy-only market we inherited. Third, we've come to agreements with companies to phase out coal by 2030 and also to settle the PPA disputes. We've also announced a ban on the door-to-door sale of energy products.

As you can see, it has been a busy fortnight for this government on the electricity file and an important two weeks for protecting electricity consumers. Taken together, these actions will address the price volatility that has been a symbol of our electricity system past but not future. These changes set the stage for a more reliable system and one that is more attractive to investors. What's more, they will provide consumers with steady, more reasonable electricity costs, and most importantly it puts consumers first. Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, is the next step in our package of efforts to protect consumers. It would allow the Balancing Pool to borrow money in order to manage its funding obligations.

Before I outline the specifics of our action, let me provide a refresher to members of the House about the Balancing Pool and the financial situation it faces. This context is important to understand why I'm proposing this legislation. The Balancing Pool was created in 1999 to deal with the government's deregulation experiment; specifically, government's relinquishing of the public's interest in stable, contracted electricity rates.

As we all know too well, the PPAs were created with sweetheart provisions that the buyers could use to get out of all losses, even those caused by volatility of the energy market that deregulation brought us. This was, after all, the deregulation craze of the Enron era that Alberta's government was only too happy to jump on board with, taking Alberta consumers along for the bumpy ride. But the government failed to provide the necessary tools for the Balancing Pool to manage the potential losses from this roller coaster. Its primary duties were to manage the PPAs it holds in a commercial manner. This worked fine so long as power prices kept spiking every few months, as was built into the design of the energy market.

The return of the PPAs by the companies that held them has increased the amount of generation capacity that the Balancing Pool is responsible for. But with our prolonged period of low prices and the return of the PPAs, the Balancing Pool cannot sell the electricity generated by these assets for enough money to cover its expenses. As with all our efforts, we chose to draw a line in the sand between this old system and our new approach. In the face of raucous opposition from across the aisle we chose to stand up for consumers.

Some others would have us continue on a system that no longer works for consumers or investors. They would have us incur the PPA costs and pass them on to consumers. But we chose to take action to defend consumers. As a result, we have protected Albertans by getting PPA buyers to shoulder more of the PPA business losses than they first wanted to. We are doing this by entering into reasonable settlement agreements with PPA buyers, something we have accomplished already with three of the four PPA buyers. These are agreements that strike a sensible balance to protect consumers while moving forward with our electricity transition.

Given the low market prices the Balancing Pool still faces deficits. This is a problem as the Balancing Pool was not designed to turn a profit or a loss. It is required to ensure that its accounts net to zero over its life cycle, returning the money in times of surplus and charging money in times of deficit. It was intended to do this by setting an annual consumer allocation of costs or surpluses to consumers.

When the Balancing Pool was running a surplus under the oft-high prices of the energy-only market system, it made sense for it to manage these costs, but the tools provided to the Balancing Pool when it was established are no longer sufficient for it to properly manage the impact on consumers now, certainly not when the costs required to meet their financial obligations are at today's levels. One reason for this is that the life cycle of the Balancing Pool was not clear. While the PPAs all expire in 2020, the period over which any remaining costs could be recovered from consumers was never set. Some assumed that the end date would be December 31, 2020, when the PPAs end.

The bottom line is that without any changes to the Balancing Pool's rules, consumers were facing a large and abrupt change to pay these obligations off by 2020. This is not fair to Albertans and not consistent with our commitment of a stable and affordable electricity system.

Our government, with this proposed legislation and supporting regulations, is now providing the Balancing Pool with the flexibility and tools it needs to cover its financial obligations in a way that does not adversely affect consumers. Without legislation and policy changes, the Balancing Pool would have to apply a substantial monthly consumer charge to residential and industrial bills to cover its costs through to 2020. Bill 34, however, would allow the Balancing Pool to borrow money from the province or a lender to manage its funding obligations. In conjunction with amendments to the Balancing Pool regulations, this provides the tools to minimize costs to consumers. Together these changes would allow the Balancing Pool to smooth the price volatility, helping to ensure that consumers' electricity costs are reasonable and stable.

An important change to the regulations is clarifying the end date for the Balancing Pool. Providing a clear end date of 2030 provides a longer period of time over which consumer costs can be spread. This allows for the impact on consumers to be better managed.

Currently the average residential consumer receives a Balancing Pool credit of $1.95 on their monthly bill. Without this legislation, the Balancing Pool would not only have to remove that credit but apply a charge of $8.40 per month beginning January 1, 2017. This works out to $100 per average consumer. Similar charges would apply annually until the end of 2020. Bill 34, along with the supporting regulations, would reduce this charge to just 67 cents for the average consumer. Savings for heavy industrial users would be even more significant.

As members can see, our government is committed to protecting Alberta's electricity consumers. Madam Speaker, this plan, which involves providing a loan for the Balancing Pool, extending the operations of the Balancing Pool, and setting the initial consumer charge of 67 cents per month, is a structured plan that puts Albertans first. It follows the two-step approach that we are taking to protect consumers on this file, first, by defending consumers against undue costs by entering into reasonable settlements with PPA buyers and, second, by taking action here to provide the tools to the Balancing Pool to manage their finances under the current market conditions. It provides stability and reasonable costs to consumers while allowing the Balancing Pool to meet its obligations. This is why I encourage all members to support Bill 34.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this bill, a critically important bill not only for us but for our children, I would say. This is a bill that arose as a result of the out-of-court settlements that the government has reached with some of the power purchase agreement companies. Settlements with TransCanada, for example, and AltaGas are tentative, and the government apparently is still negotiating with one of the parties, Enmax.

Under the terms of those settlements the companies will each pay the Balancing Pool an agreed-upon sum of about $39 million in the case of capital, and in exchange they will be permitted to return their money-losing electricity contracts to the Balancing Pool. As a result of that, we have all recognized, I think, that this will result in all of us paying the true cost of electricity. I guess one of the philosophical questions that we're wrestling with here is whether we allow people to experience the true costs of electricity or whether we protect them from the true costs by capping the costs and giving the false impression that we are paying our way rather than passing on what could be up to $500 million to our children and our grandchildren to pay for the way we're making decisions today.

I guess I have some practical and some very philosophical resistance to this. Maybe it's because I'm not opposed to market signals, to cost signals, and that the public, you and I, should really see the true cost of our electricity and adjust our lives accordingly, either try to find ways to reduce our use or find ways of developing new technologies, investing in new technologies.

I'll have another recommendation in relation to another bill, that perhaps an innovative way for all of us to participate would be a public offering on renewables, that we could all invest, as citizens of Alberta, in renewable energy in this province. We could all share in the risks or the benefits and move our province forward and be part of the solution instead of waiting for the big investors to come in when it may not be the right time for many of them. They may not see the opportunities that we as Albertans must start to take hold of and must start to take responsibility for, I guess.

So I have some real difficulty in simply hiding the true price of electricity from consumers. It is going to cost more, and I for one have difficulty suggesting that we should allow the Balancing Pool to borrow whatever it needs to protect, I guess you'd say, consumers from the true price. I would call it paternalism at its worst, to decide for the people of Alberta: "You can't handle the price of electricity, so we're going to give you some kind of a Santa Claus approach to the costs. And oh, yes, eventually you'll have to pay for it, but it'll be much more in terms of interest payments by the time 2030 comes around."

If we're not there yet, then it'll again be falling more and more on future generations, when we're already asking future generations to take on a heck of a lot of debt and other expenses related to environmental concerns, obviously, some of the social deficits, some of the infrastructure. And, to be fair, the infrastructure investments that we're taking on, I support fully.

But the idea of giving the Balancing Pool the power to do all of this simply to give the impression and to protect people – if there are people that are vulnerable and can't pay their power bills, let's give them rebates. Let's give them the supports they need to keep the lights on. There's no question that some people will not be able to handle increased rates, but keeping it to 67 cents extra in a month: that's a false kind of message, to me, to be giving to all of us, that everything is cool; electricity isn't changing much; don't be concerned about the carbon levy, which I support; don't be concerned about the new charges, the borrowing that's going into the Balancing Pool; we're going to cover it for you. As if we as government can cover anything that isn't paid for by taxes.

The irony, of course, is that the government itself triggered the return of these unprofitable power purchase agreements to the Balancing Pool by announcing the changes without being fully aware of what the impact might be as a result of the contracts that were there and that, it's my understanding, a full level of research would have shown to be a problem and a potential out for the power people. The fact that we're now settling out of court kind of confirms that, that the government realizes it's not going to win and has gone back and paid these folks with out-of-court settlements.

I guess I would question the notion that we can't have clear market signals for people and that we have to hide the true cost from people, and I would question the right of this government to pass along even more debt to future generations and to take on more interest payments simply because we can, because you're in a majority position and you can make that decision. I don't think that's in our current best interests, and I don't think it's in our future generations' interests to not start to pay our way as we go.

The government has taken a number of steps to ensure low prices and system stability. This is all in the name of system stability. Well, at what cost, I guess I have to ask. Stable prices at what cost? It looks a lot like political opportunism when you look at it in that light, if you're not really thinking about the longer term and the importance of market signals for all of us. We all make decisions on the basis of price. Well, if the price is being hidden from us, we stop using common sense and we stop making longer term, better decisions in our own personal lives.

I think those are the main issues, that have been said before by others, but I needed to say them as well. While the aim of Bill 34 is laudable on one level, the reality is that there is no free lunch. There is no free lunch. Eventually we're all – and I'm particularly concerned about our children – going to have to pay it. For that reason, I'll be voting against this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I must say in response to the hon. minister's narrative that we just heard that it was an amusing work of fiction. I think it's called historical reconstructionism.

Anyway, I rise today, Madam Speaker, to outline my concerns regarding Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. The bill before the House is as short as it is irresponsible. This bill outlines that "the President of Treasury Board, Minister of Finance may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, make loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee the obligations of the Balancing Pool." No checks, no accountability, no public forum required to explain the minister's request for the funding, just a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool for an undisclosed and unlimited amount of money thus far.

Now, let's be clear. The Balancing Pool already has built-in mechanisms to cover their losses. They can put a rate rider for Balancing Pool allocations on consumers' bills. Now, for the benefit of the Energy minister, who, unsurprisingly, doesn't understand all the existing options in the electricity market, rate riders are temporary charges or refunds that apply when the actual costs incurred by a regulated transmission or distribution utility differ from the rates that were approved based on cost forecasts. These riders must be approved by the appropriate regulatory authority. Rate riders are designed to collect or reimburse a specific amount over a period of time, and consumers see them as credits or debits on their monthly bills.

Now, the Balancing Pool allocation rider is value owed to consumers from the regulated generating assets covered by power purchase agreements. I should make a note here that Albertans were paid something in the order of $2 billion in the initial PPA offerings and another billion since that time on these rate riders, so something in the order of $3 billion has come back to us. Customers, the consumers, have benefited by receiving this allocation but remain responsible for any outstanding risks associated with these generating plants, and for convenience the Balancing Pool allocations are flowed through to consumers as part of the provincial transmission tariff.

Let's have a little review for clarity. Rate riders must be approved by the appropriate regulatory authority. That would be a check on the system. That means that experts in the electricity market, a market that the minister has demonstrated some lack of aptitude for, are the ones tasked with reviewing or approving rate riders. That means that these are consumer expenses that are needed, not just in the opinion of the Balancing Pool, a formerly independent body that has recently seen its board members resign en masse amongst allegations of an unacceptable level of political interference by this government, but that these are expenses needed, in the opinion of experts outside the Balancing Pool, who must review this request. With this legislation in place, offering a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool, and with the pending replacement of Balancing Pool members, certain to be filled by NDP cronies, in my opinion, we have no doubt that any mindfulness for the bottom lines of Alberta families and businesses will soon be lost by the Balancing Pool. That is why I will stand up again and again defending the interests of Albertans, interests that do not now or ever include writing a blank cheque with taxpayers' money.

Here is another great part about rate riders. Customers see them as credits or debits on their monthly bills. That is what transparency looks like, Madam Speaker. As the hon. member previous mentioned, it is important that our customers, or our ratepayers, understand the full cost of electricity. Now, I know it's been a long time since the NDP were concerned with the requirements of running a transparent government, but during the election that provided them with their current mandate, that was a big issue for Albertans. It was one of the reasons that the third party was reduced to a handful of seats. It was the reason for the overwhelming swing in votes in the last election. This issue of transparency is huge to Albertans, and since this government was elected, it seems like they've almost forgotten how to spell the word. We don't see a lot of transparency.

The government has made a huge mistake due to either gross ineptitude or what some would call misleading Albertans. Now, your internal estimates for the mistake put the estimated monthly rate rider at less than $1, but independent estimates put together by Dr. Andrew Leach and PhD candidate in economics Trevor Tombe put these costs just above $2 per consumer per month. Given that the option to put forward the rate rider already exists and that all available estimates place the costs of this rate rider at just a few dollars, Albertans are left wondering: why are we passing this bill? It's entirely unnecessary.

The Balancing Pool has a mechanism for recovering these costs already, and now instead of following through with the system put in place for events just like this, we are being asked to remove some needed checks and balances that protect Albertans, one of them being transparency and understanding the true cost of government policies. What is the government hiding when we're only talking about a few dollars a month here? There is no sensible reason not to proceed with the existing mechanism at the pool's disposal, especially given that it's going to place the cost to consumers at just a few dollars. What is being planned in the future that would require such a wide-sweeping, irresponsible change that doesn't have a limit on the amount of money the government can backstop the Balancing Pool for? What is the government really afraid of here? This government has a terrible track record on the electricity file, and the one thing that is clear to Albertans is that they cannot be trusted.

Another important point of review is that customers benefit by receiving this allocation but remain responsible for any outstanding risks associated with these generating plants. Now, this is probably the most significant fact that the NDP prefer to ignore when talking about the PPA mess they've made, the debacle that they created that put us in the position where the NDP is asking this House to pass this senseless bill today. For years Albertans have been the benefactors of low electricity costs from our energy-only market, and more importantly Albertans received, as I mentioned, $3 billion in credits from the Balancing Pool after the transition to our deregulated market over 15 years ago. Now, that $3 billion in rate rider credits greatly exceeds the estimated losses for the Balancing Pool today over this PPA mess they've made, and estimates so far have come in around that $500 million or $600 million range.

The truth is, Madam Speaker, that our energy-only market was working just fine until the NDP got their fingers in it in July 2015. It was working in the best interests of consumers. The AESO was an arm's-length, independent body. The Balancing Pool was an arm's-length, independent body. The Market Surveillance Administrator was doing its job just fine as the electricity police, policing all of the participants in the system and catching them when they were doing wrong, as we have seen repeatedly from the MSA.

In other words, the system really wasn't broken. Did it need some fine-tuning? Absolutely, it did. Was it really that volatile? For the consumers it was not volatile, Madam Speaker. Consumers all the way along could have locked down their electricity rates simply by getting a contract with any of the many retail providers across this province, completely eliminating the volatility that this government claims was so bad that they had to take step after step after step to bring our deregulated energy market into a fully regulated, government-run, government-controlled market.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have as a reality that the volatility that the government claims was on the backs of retailers was actually on the wholesale side of things. The volatility was in the Balancing Pool. It wasn't on the retail side at all. The volatility that the government is throwing up as some sort of a big, bad, scary thing and that that's why they had to get their fingers involved was on the wholesale side. That was not for the retailers' sake. That was for a few corporations' sake who didn't like the low prices. So for whatever reason we have an NDP government climbing in the sack with corporations, probably for the first time ever in socialist history. I don't know. But, you know, as they say, politics makes very strange bedfellows, and we're seeing some of those shenanigans going on here in this bill.

Low power prices are the cornerstone of economic growth in Alberta; 78 per cent of our grid is used to serve industrial and commercial purposes. That means that power prices are key – they are absolutely key – input for our job creators.

We have an Energy minister standing up in the House on puffball questions and telling us that no investment has been made since 2009. One, that is absolutely not true. Enmax, the company this government is suing, presumably because the coal phase-out didn't do enough to create uncertainty in the electric markets for the NDP's liking, broke ground on Shepard in 2013. They didn't make any meaningful financial commitment to Shepard until well after 2010, long after the economic downturn this minister claims was the reason for stuff.

Two, Alberta has a huge reserve margin. No new investment has been needed because of that large reserve margin. It's approximately 31 per cent. You cannot create an artificial need for renewables investment and then sue power generators, phase out coal, and then blame the market for not supplying you with the energy that you need.

Three, we have companies citing regulatory uncertainty caused by this government as the reason why they have pulled planned investments into Sundance 7 and Genesee 4 and 5, two projects planned well after the 2008 financial collapse. So this claim on the part of the government telling us that no investment has been made since 2009: I can't use the L word, so I will say that they've been economical with the truth. How's that? Acceptable.

It is unreasonable, absolutely unreasonable, for this government to create uncertainty to the extent that it has and then call out the market, as if the lack of money for their renewables scheme is in any way the fault of the free market. Try being less radical, and that investment will come.

Madam Speaker, I have grandchildren, and I fully intend to use my time as a legislator to make sure that they are left better off and not worse. This bill does not accomplish that, and it will never accomplish that. Not only this bill, but it appears to me that bill after bill after bill, especially money bills put forward by this socialist government, are impacting not only us and our children but our grandchildren. Generational theft, I believe, is the appropriate description.

This government is borrowing to keep the lights on, literally borrowing to keep the lights on in this province, and you want me to vote in favour of proving it with an unneeded blank cheque? I cannot do that. I will not do that. I will stand against this Bill 34 and bills like it for the sake of children, grandchildren, and the future of our province.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Questions or comments? No?

All right. Seeing no one under 29(2)(a), I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I've been listening to the brief debate and the couple of speakers who have gone before me, and I continue to be partly baffled and, I have to say, disappointed in the rhetoric from both sides. You know, the minister stands up and talks about the risky deregulation experiment; the sweetheart provisions, which, by the way, are still up before the courts with at least one of the lawsuits that the government has filed against PPA holders; deregulation through the, quote, Enron craze – craze; we don't want crazes; my goodness, that's pretty scary – and talking about borrowing money to fund operations. Well, that sounds benign. Who wouldn't want to fund one's operations? That sounds pretty good.

I understand and have been told from those who've been in the House somewhat longer than me that occasionally politics has been known to break out in this place. It's a sad truth, and I've learned it. I've learned it not just here tonight, but I've learned it at other times. You know, that part I find profoundly frustrating because, really, what we're talking about here is pretty important stuff. What we're talking about is a government that is again asking this House to approve literally a blank cheque. That is the kind of deal that I would love to get in my personal or business life. That would be great, being backstopped by the powerhouse Alberta government.

The massive changes that have been wrought by this government in the past 10 days or so to the electricity market make your head spin. You know, I've endeavoured to follow along as best I can, and I'm sure most of the members of this House, I'll assume, have been reading this stuff as closely as I have as well. It's complex stuff, but what it comes down to is a government that is committed to a minimum of $7 billion in costs to Albertans. One way or the other, Albertans pay those costs. Seven billion dollars. My goodness, it could be more than that. It could be a lot more than that.

All right. My first question to the government is: of that $7 billion, where does the money come from? The answer to that question seems to be: don't worry; it comes from the carbon tax on large emitters, the specified gas emitters regulation. Okay. Let's unpack that a bit. Where does the SGER payment come from? Well, that comes from big companies. Problem solved. That's great. Big companies pay the carbon tax on large emitters because they're large emitters. No big deal. Who pays the big companies? Uh-oh. Madam Speaker, we pay the big companies. Albertans. Ultimately, all of this money flows from Albertans through our power bills, through the gas pump to those companies, which then remit a portion of that in either the specified gas emitters regulation or carbon tax payments.

So this money is not an unlimited pool of money. This is a mistake that I see this government making over and over again, overreaching, taking what is a pretty good idea – I've been on the record previously and I will get on the record again supporting the principle of renewable energy and bringing that onto the grid, supporting the principle of expanding gas-fired power in this province, of getting the province of Alberta off coal-fired electricity for a number of reasons. We want a cleaner environment. We want cleaner air, less NOx and SOx in our environment. We want to reduce our carbon emissions. I think that we have a connection between pipeline approvals and our action on climate change, and I think that's a good thing. We want those things.

But you've taken a good idea, and you've taken it way too far and made massive, massive changes that so few people in this province actually understand. It's so complex and so technical and so interconnected that it's very difficult to get your head around all of the things that are happening here. This bill comes across — perhaps this is the record for the shortest government bill in the history of government bills. I don't know. Certainly, as we're dealing with one of the largest bills, if not the largest, Bill 21, the municipal government amendment act, and Bill 34 in the same session, perhaps that's some sort of record in terms of range of size of legislation.

It feels like an afterthought. This bill feels like: "Oh, right. We've kind of bankrupted the Balancing Pool, so does anyone have any ideas? Oh, right. Well, what we'll do is that we'll just authorize some borrowing from the Balancing Pool. How much? How much borrowing should we authorize from the Balancing Pool? We don't know. We have no idea. What we'll do is go to the House, create a money bill, and we'll just ask for unlimited backstop." Right? To answer the question from the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, it's not a good idea. No. No. It's a terrible idea, in fact, so I've got some real concerns.

Now, why is the Balancing Pool out of money in the first place? Well, it's part of this raft of massive policy change that's been brought by this government. One of the most fundamental mistakes this government made right at the outset was not understanding the "or more unprofitable" clause, not doing the homework to know it was there in the first place, not listening to administration, who clearly told them that it was there, and then, once they knew about it, blindly proceeding anyway.

Once that happened, they were committed, and then they doubled down on a, frankly, dumb idea. I don't know if that's unparliamentary; if it is, I withdraw it, and if not, I keep it in the record. They doubled down on this idea, and instead of accepting back the PPAs — what would have happened had they done that? Well, the Balancing Pool would have been able to run them as economically as possible, and by some analyses that would be, at the absolute worst, a $600 million cost, which sounds like a lot of money, and it is. I'm not denying that that's a lot of money. But if they were allowed to run those PPAs economically, then there's a good chance that that number could have come down.

The other thing that would have happened is that at least two of those PPAs would have been cancelled. Then what would have happened? Then the generators would have said: "You know what? There's no market for our generation facility." Those coal-fired plants very likely would have been taken offline. Guess what would have happened then? Alberta's carbon emissions would have dropped; NOx and SOx emissions would have dropped.

This government tells us constantly that they are trying to get Alberta off coal. Why, my friends, would they have not done that in the immediate term? Because they need the money. They need the money. That's this government's dirty little secret. They need the money from all those coal-fired plants, all the way through 2020 at least, to generate money into the carbon levy, if that's what you'd like to call it, to fund all of the changes that they want to bring to the system. It's scandalous, actually, because it is fundamentally environmentally irresponsible. This government has kept coal-fired plants humming to fund their electricity plan.

I do just want to correct the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I hesitate to do this, but I think you'll like the correction. I think you referenced $2 billion and then another additional billion that the PPAs had returned to Albertans. It is, in fact, $4.4 billion that power purchase agreements have returned to Albertans. So the debate and the discussion around the energy-only versus capacity market is not a simple debate and discussion. There is something to be said for the fact that Alberta is one of only a couple of energy-only jurisdictions in North America, if not the world, and that maybe some changes were needed there. But, frankly, there's so much change going on all at once that it's very difficult to get your head around that. So again we're being asked to approve unlimited borrowing to no end. The questions I have are: how deep is that hole? How big is this debt going to get? Where is the money going to come from? What's that going to cost Albertans? How many more hundreds of thousands, millions, tens of millions of dollars is that going to cost in debt servicing?

The biggest issue of all, I think, is that this government has not done an adequate job of explaining to Albertans why all of this is necessary. Now, I believe climate change is real and human caused. I believe we ought to do something about it. I believe we need more wind power and solar and geothermal and hydro and biomass and renewables of all kinds. I believe those things because I think they're fundamentally the right things to do. But this government, sadly, has not done a good enough job of explaining to Albertans what's in it for them to go down this path. As a result and as we see in the polling numbers, Albertans are not happy with the carbon tax, and Albertans are not happy with the changes in renewable electricity. That's something that has got to be a big concern to this government. You've not done a good enough job, and then turning around and asking for literally a blank cheque to backstop your changes, changes you brought about through some grand plan, which is still unclear to me how it all hangs together, you're causing even greater anxiety amongst Albertans.

So I would really, in the best interests of this government and ultimately in the best interests of this province, ask you to please take it back about a half-step, think really hard about the what's-in-it-for-me question for Albertans. I would really encourage the Minister of Energy to work with her staff in however we pull together our talking points and to tone down the rhetoric. I think that'll help all sides of the House tone down our rhetoric, and we can hopefully have a thoughtful conversation about how we're going to manage Alberta's electricity sector going forward.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you hon. member.

Are there any hon. members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Speaker, after hearing the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Member for Calgary-Elbow, for the first time ever in my life I'm so scared now. They're talking about billions and billions of dollars. What we're hearing here is that this government is addicted to tax and spend, and they could justify anything, so they're asking us to write blank cheques. What is next? Are they going to ask us to let them print money so then there is no limit on anything? I think it won't be too long before we see that, that they want us to let them print money so they can spend endlessly and irresponsibly.

Bill 34 is just another in a long list of bills that the NDP have brought forward tinkering, meddling, interfering, and messing with Alberta's electrical system. The NDP have a reputation, Madam

Speaker, of sticking their finger where it doesn't belong. Sooner or later they'll be like that little boy who tries to stick a fork in an electrical socket. We all did that when we were young.

Mr. Yao: But the NDP are notorious for that.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. So they're going to get shocked soon. They're really going to get shocked. They have to wake up before they get an electric shock.

When 4 out of 5 members of the board of directors of the Balancing Pool resign, you know that the NDP is doing something wrong here. There are many, many advance warnings for them to tell that they are making a lot of mistakes, but they're not getting the message. The Balancing Pool was independent. It was at arm's length from the government of the day. The minister did not get involved with the day-to-day decision-making.

The Balancing Pool was established in 1999 by the government of Alberta to help manage the transition to competition in Alberta's electric industry. I'm just going to talk about the responsibilities and the current obligations in the Electric Utilities Act and the Balancing Pool regulations that are gone. I'm not going to go into the statistics because the Member for Calgary-Elbow has already tried to educate us on that risky path we're on.

Let me talk about these legislative duties as per the Electric Utilities Act and Balancing Pool regulations:

- To manage generation assets in a commercial manner, specifically any Power Purchase Arrangements . . . held by the Balancing Pool that include the right to exchange electric energy and ancillary services, and any arrangements or agreements derived from these assets;
- To hold the Hydro PPA and manage associated payments;
- To forecast revenues and expenses (incorporating estimates of Pool price and potential expenses related to risk backstop activities) and allocate the forecast surplus or deficiency to consumers through a Consumer Allocation or charge;
- To participate in appropriate regulatory, dispute resolution and other proceedings and processes to protect the interests of the Balancing Pool and the value of its assets; and
- To manage risks prudently in all aspects of its operations.

Those are the obligations and responsibilities under the original Electric Utilities Act and Balancing Pool regulations.

Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, along with the other misguided government policy have together wreaked havoc on our electricity market and damaged the Balancing Pool. This pool of money, used to pay the PPAs, was in balance and had enough coming in and enough going out. Now that the PPAs have been cancelled and lawsuits from companies like Enmax endure, the Balancing Pool is not bringing in enough money and will run out of the $700 million surplus it had unless this Bill 34, another money bill, is passed. That's the actual purpose of this Bill 34.

At the rate the Balancing Pool burns through money now, it will be broke and unable to pay its obligations in the new year. Bill 34 is a backdoor way to funnel government of Alberta money, which is ultimately taxpayers' money. Like the Member for Calgary-Elbow explained, it's all taxpayers' money or taxpayers' debt because the government is in deficit now. They'll funnel government money into the pool to help it meet its payment obligations. That sounds like a nice idea, only the truth is that Bill 34 is to paper over and cover up the mistakes and hide the true cost of the electricity from people's monthly electricity bills.

Bill 34 will ensure that there is no consumer allocation, which is a line on people's electricity bills. The NDP is out there pulling the wool over the eyes of Albertans. They are just trying to, you know, mislead people and hide the actual costs on their electricity bills. As long as Albertans do not see the power prices going up, the NDP believes that all is well, that there won't be any rallies on the steps of the Legislature. That's what they're trying to avoid. The taxpayer will pay for it with mounting debt. One way or another taxpayers are going to pay, Madam Speaker.

I can tell you that the bankers loaning Alberta billions of dollars are looking at this province and counting their profits already. They think that the NDP is a good partner for them because they can make tons of money out of Alberta as long as the NDP is the government. Money, money everywhere, Madam Speaker, and it will all end in higher taxes in the long run to pay for it. Somehow we have to pay for it. Those higher taxes to cover the interest payments, they could have gone to building schools and hospitals and other social services. Also, we could have used that to build infrastructure, pave roads, and keep waste water out of rivers. But now we won't be using that money for any development projects or anything. We'll be using that money to pay higher taxes because of this government's irresponsible governance.

Really, the most disappointing element of all of this is that it is an unforeseen error. It's one thing to borrow for operational spending, as the NDP has us doing today – it's the first time in the history of Alberta that we are borrowing money to pay for operational costs, and that is unsustainable and damaging enough to our future. Madam Speaker, my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake mentioned that future generations will be mortgaged by this government. However, it is even worse when we are putting our future in jeopardy to pay for the mistakes of this NDP government.

Today we are discussing writing a blank cheque, that future generations will have to pay back, to cover totally unnecessary mistakes. This is not acceptable. Worst of all, Madam Speaker, there will be no limit on the amount of debt the Balancing Pool can borrow off our falling double-A credit rating in this province. We have seen many credit downgrades, and it's not helping because the borrowing rate will go up, and we'll end up paying higher interest, to infinity and beyond, as Buzz Lightyear would say. I sure hope we're not going into infinite debt. I'm hoping.

Connolly: Infinity and beyond.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. I'm hoping.

Now, I'm told that the Balancing Pool will have 14 years to pay back the money, but we don't know if they can. Whether 14 years is enough or not, we don't even know. We don't know if electricity prices will rebound so that the Balancing Pool can make the money back to pay off the debt.

The NDP needs to end their tinkering and toying with Alberta's electricity system. It needs to stop now. I call on all those backbenchers that were heckling to make a difference by voting down Bill 34. One mistake begets another which begets another, and it's the taxpayers being soaked all the way, Madam Speaker.

I ask all of us to act responsibly and stop the debt accumulation for the sake of future generations, our children and their children. Stop the higher taxes to pay the debt interest. They make one mistake, and they bring in another bill to pay for the mistake of the other bill, and it goes on and on and on. Stop the dishonest billing.

Madam Speaker, I implore all members of this House to vote against the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I always listen with great interest when the Member for Calgary-Foothills speaks. I do have a question for the member. Given your long history in business, you know, in many different levels of business, I imagine you've gone through negotiations, perhaps even been involved in a lawsuit or two. One of the real concerns that I have is that this government has overplayed its hand or perhaps not played its hand tremendously well by coming to settlements with some of the defendants in the lawsuit but not coming to settlements with all of them at the same time. So I guess the question is: in your experience does this leave the province of Alberta and, by extension, the people of Alberta at more risk or less? Is the province of Alberta now, in the PPA lawsuit with Enmax, in a stronger bargaining position or a weaker bargaining position? And are we potentially at even greater risk than we would have been prior? I'd be really interested in your insights on that.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Elbow. Yeah, he's right. In my long career in the energy industry we had a few lawsuits, that I had to deal with, but not this kind of lawsuit. Here the questions are basically about the sanctity of the contract. Will we be in a strong position to negotiate with Enmax? I don't think so. You know, some of Enmax's power plants have a good environmental record and all, and they're owned by a set of Albertans, Calgarians, who own Enmax. Enmax has been very accountable to the taxpayers in Calgary, where I and the Member for Calgary-Elbow live. They have very sound management, so they have their ducks in a row. They know how to fight this lawsuit.

I don't think the government is in a position to win that unless they really arm-twist other levels of government and make some behind-the-scenes deals. I don't know how that works. It could work, potentially, because they are a senior level of government and Enmax is owned by a junior level of government, so there are ways to deal with that. But it's not fair, and it's going to send the wrong signals to other investors in Alberta.

I mean, today the ministers were saying, actually, that international investors are looking at Alberta, to invest here, after their announcement about the petrochemical diversification program results. They were pumped up, and they were saying that investors from all across the world are coming here to invest. That's not really so because they are scared about these tactics, you know, of taking those businesses to court and disregarding the written contracts. A written contract is a contract. From my past experience it's the sanctity of the contract. No one should tinker with that. That will be dangerous, and that creates lots of uncertainty in the minds of the businesses.

Coming back to the question that the hon. member asked, like him, I also like renewables and all that, but this is not the way to implement it. You know, it's not just this bill. Bill 34 is necessitated because of the other mistakes they made, so they are trying to now cover up those by bringing in Bill 34. That's why I said before: what is coming next? Are they going to just procure a money-printing machine and start printing money here? I don't know.

But my take on this whole thing is that government should negotiate with the people who had these PPAs signed before. I mean, they can talk about an Enron clause and all that, so they're looking backwards, but now we have to look forward and make sure that we negotiate with them in good faith and settle those lawsuits in an amicable way and in a way that we don't scare other investors.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I recognize any other members to speak, just a reminder that we are in second reading, not Committee of the Whole, so if we could please not switch chairs and not move around House, that would be appreciated. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, this is a surprise. The aspect of the blank cheque is concerning, to say the least. This utilities act – since taking power in 2015, the government has done a whole lot to make mistake after mistake on this file. Just weeks, actually, after being elected, the NDP made the expensive and poorly informed change in law – change in law – to raise the SGERs levy without checking for the legal implications, without determining if this would negatively impact their existing contractual obligations to the electricity generators. By raising the SGERs levy, the NDP set off a series of events that would result in a mass return of the PPAs. We've heard all of this before, a mass return of the PPAs to the Balancing Pool.

You know, the reason that we are here debating this is because it is an irresponsible piece of legislation. There is so much evidence – it's significant – pointing to the fact that this government knew. They knew about the risk of the mass PPA cancellations, and the NDP claimed to not know about the risks of the PPA terminations until mid-March of 2016. Some would say that that's patently untrue. Despite ample warning, including public submissions to the climate action panel by Capital Power and TransCanada, that the minister claimed inside this House to have read, the NDP is still claiming that they didn't know until March 2016. It is way too late to go back now.

There have been extensive FOIPs obtained and released by the Wildrose clearly showing that in November 2015 a briefing was prepared, and it outlined the potential impacts on Alberta's coal-powered companies. Because of the NDP government's climate change policies, a document explicitly mentioned PPAs. Again, the NDP are still claiming that they didn't know until March 2016. Again I say that it's way too late to go back now. Despite extensive lobbying on behalf of Enmax and other power companies involved in this PPA debacle, the NDP are still claiming that they didn't know until March 2016. It's repeated again that it's too late to go back now.

Now, Madam Speaker, Albertans are starting to see the pattern that this government is falling into: deny, deny, deny, then legislate; cover it up. The pattern certainly does not fit with any level of accountability that this government was elected on.

On the 9th of December 2015 Enmax notified senior bureaucrats and political staff that they were considering terminating the Battle River 5 PPA under article 4.3(j). We've heard that a few times. Enmax alleges that they directly informed Grant Sprague, Deputy Minister of Energy; James E. Allen, the assistant deputy minister of electricity and sustainable energy; and Allison Hansen, senior policy adviser to the Minister of Energy. An e-mail was sent from the Minister of Energy's chief of staff to an issues manager in the Premier's office stating, "Attached is a draft briefing note that has yet to be finalized but I believe provides the context that you need for question period . . . Should something arise."

The thing that no one seems to understand and that, quite frankly, no one in Alberta believes is that a minister made responsible for the energy file could read their electricity 101 briefing and see that PPAs could be terminated if made unprofitable and not ask any questions even without the word "more" in front of unprofitable. If anything – if anything – the absence of the term "more," Madam Speaker, makes the ability of these companies to terminate their PPAs due to contractual violations way broader. Had the minister asked one question, just one – we know through FOIP that the minister's staff had already been briefed by Enmax and knew all about just how much trouble this government was getting us into. And I mean us, all of Alberta. Congratulations. This is nothing short of gross incompetence, at best, and, some would say, misleading Albertans, at worst. The reality is that the minister responsible for that file and the Premier have issues managers that watch for evolving situations in the energy industry.

I have here an interesting article published on January 18, 2016: Enmax Terminates “Unprofitable” Coal-fired Electricity Contract. This is from Darcy Henton.

City-owned Enmax has terminated its contract to buy electricity from the coal-fired Battle River power plant, saying historically low . . . prices and . . .

Well, isn't this interesting.

. . . the NDP hike in the carbon tax for heavy carbon emitters has made the deal unprofitable.

Very interesting, isn't it?

Madam Speaker, Darcy Henton goes on to say:

With low power prices in the wholesale market and changes to the Specified Gas Emitters Regulation announced in June 2015, the Battle River PPA (Power Purchase Arrangement) became unprofitable for Enmax . . .

Based on these market conditions, Enmax made the business decision to exercise its right under the PPA to terminate the agreement, effective Jan. 1.

It goes on to say:

The contract will be returned to Alberta's Balancing Pool – a government-created agency which sells power from electrical generation contracts that were not sold at auctions when the province deregulated the electricity market 15 years ago.

It continues, explaining that profits and losses in the Balancing Pool are allocated to power consumers on their monthly power bills.

It's very transparent.

Since 2006, it has refunded consumers more than $2 billion,

As the hon. member mentioned, it's $4.4 billion.

The article goes on to say:

Enmax said the Balancing Pool will make decisions on the future of the PPA, but in the interim the utility has agreed to continue to dispatch power from the facility.

Hmm.

The Alberta Utilities Commission said the transfer did not require regulatory approval.

Alberta Energy spokesman Chris Bourdeau said the Balancing Pool may hold the PPA, resell it or terminate it. But if it opts for termination, it must consult – consult – with consumer representatives and the energy minister about the reasonableness of the termination.

Now, it goes on. It becomes even more interesting.

The Balancing Pool must also give the owner of the Battle River facility, ATCO Power, six months' notice of its intention to terminate and pay ATCO “an amount equal to the remaining closing net book value of the generating unit.”

It continues on to say that if the agency terminates the PPA, ATCO would then make a business decision to operate the unit or decommission it.

Industry watchers said in this article that it's [extremely] difficult to assess how the move will impact consumers, something that this government has not taken into consideration, the consumers. They keep saying that they have the consumers' backs. This proves otherwise.

You know, Jim Wachowich of the Alberta Consumers Coalition said that he doesn't know what it means in the grand scheme of things. They've never seen anything like this before.

Then

electricity consultant David Gray, formerly executive director of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, said the transfer of the agreement to the Balancing Pool means the money sitting in the pool to be allocated to consumers . . .

So that's the money for consumers.

. . . “will be drained” if it continues an unprofitable contract.

That's consumers' dollars, just to restate.

“It will be unprofitable if power prices stay low,” he said.

To be clear,

“The proposed carbon tax will exacerbate that.”

Pembina Institute's Ben Thibault was also fearful Enmax's move could ultimately cost consumers.

“The Balancing Pool will be picking up a liability,” he said.

“If the market price is lower than the contract price, then in theory, at least, at the very least,

this would impact on consumers.”

However, another electricity consultant, Rick Cowburn, who sat on Alberta's retail power market review in 2012, doesn't think there will be any major short-term ramifications from the move.

Interestingly, we know, of course, that this claim from Rick Cowburn is not the case. The Balancing Pool cannot cover this liability.

The Battle River Generating Station has been operating since 1956 about 200 kilometres southeast of Edmonton on the banks of the Battle River.

And this is published information.

Units 1 and 2 were retired and dismantled in 2000. PPAs for Unit 3, which went into service in 1969, and Unit 4, which went into service in 1975, expired in 2013. Under federal regulations, Unit 3 is slated for shutdown in 2019 and Unit 4 in 2025, according to a Pembina Institute report.

Unit 5, which went into service in 1981, has a PPA that expires in 2020 and is slated for shutdown in 2029 . . . But the province's existing $15-per-tonne carbon levy on coal plants increased to $20 a tonne this year, and rises to $30 in 2017.

I mean, this article is very telling. That article was dated January 18, 2016, and quite clearly outlines Enmax's more unprofitable claim, but here we are today, and the NDP is still claiming that they didn't know until March of 2016 and it's too late to go back now. This is unfathomable to Albertans, that the Energy minister or any minister, for that matter, could have been that unaware of the PPA situation. It is unbelievable that stories like this, when published in a major newspaper last January, didn't strike enough of a nerve with the Energy minister that she felt it appropriate to go on and at least ask a few more questions.

It's also evident that her staff had already been briefed by Enmax and that they actually knew what was going on. That's worse actually. And the evidence is undeniable. The incompetence shown on our province's Energy file is unjustifiable. This government was elected on a mandate of increasing accountability and transparency. They have failed Albertans. The longer the NDP government continues down the road of changing the story and being less truthful about the facts surrounding PPAs, the more taxpayer dollars are going to be wasted on this mess. What the government is doing to Albertans in this House is appalling. But the best case alternative to what they're doing is just that the government is inept, and that, quite frankly, scares me. Our province is in the hands of leaders who refuse to do their homework before implementing their radical, ideological agenda, and now we have this bill.

Convention would have it that when an error like this is made in the Balancing Pool, they would be permitted to put on a rate rider. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake gave us a very good description about the rate rider, and this covers Albertans' losses. It is so interesting to me and the rest of my caucus and on the Opposition side here that we are here today passing a bill that is entirely unnecessary. The government is claiming that the rate rider would be minimal, just over $1 a month actually. In fact, Andrew Leach put out a report estimating that this rate rider could be just over $2.

So why is this bill needed? I would love somebody to explain this to me. It makes absolutely no sense. Of course, Andrew Leach was tasked with reviewing submissions that clearly outlined the risks of PPA cancellations, so maybe he's even wrong about the cost of this, for the rate rider. Anything is possible. But I would love somebody to explain this. Albertans are left wondering what this government is hiding in this unnecessary blank cheque to the Balancing Pool if the cost...

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks to my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View for her impassioned words. One of the things that you said reminded me of something I heard a week or so ago. You said that, quite frankly, this scares me. I had breakfast a week or so ago with some oil and gas executives, and they said: quite frankly, this scares me, the fact that the Alberta government would back out of binding contracts, would break and sue their own people. And they said in response, partly because electricity is a bigger component of their operations than the cost of labour is, that what they've decided to do is stay out of Alberta. When they have an opportunity to buy an oil or gas field that straddles Alberta and Saskatchewan or straddles Alberta and B.C., they ensure that they sell the Alberta side off before they start.

So I'd like to hear your thoughts on what this type of thing has done to destroy business confidence, has done to raise the costs of our wealth providers, and has done to drive opportunity out of Alberta. On another side, while you're at it, you know, quite frankly, this scares me for the next generation. This government in their inability to control spending is already billions of dollars over. Debt repayment and interest are going to greatly reduce services in the future. My goodness, our children are going to have huge repayments.

If you could touch on those two, I would appreciate it.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the comments. I think one of the things that we've been talking about in this House extensively is what it looks like to any investors coming into our province. We can go back to so many parts of not only this bill but other bills right now as well with regard not only to torn-up contracts but the nature by which these contracts were torn up and how the government is actually blaming companies that have set prices that made us much more competitive for companies to come in and produce here.

As you said, we are energy intensive, so for companies to want to be able to produce here – and they had that ability to do that with our low costs for electricity. If you consider that along with the increasing rates of what's going to happen either with the carbon tax or through the SGERs right now and then on top of that you add in the instability of not knowing whether or not, if you decided to have a contract here – will that be honoured? We don't know, and we can't even say on behalf of the government whether or not they would be able to do that because the justification is that they know better than we do. The justification is that they are going to make a decision to go to a capacity market that supposedly stabilizes electricity.

All the while the taxpayer now has another added component to that cost. So we have the ratepayer, and then on top of that they also become the taxpayer in this whole decision. So we don't even know what that's going to cost Albertans at the end of the day, Madam Speaker. We don't know, and that's why it's terrifying, because they don't know.

How is it that you attract investment when you can't guarantee that the contracts that you've set in stone, even for companies within Alberta – they don't matter. You're just willy-nilly able to tear them up because either you don't understand it, you didn't read the briefing, or you didn't do your outreach and consultation appropriately. So as an investor if you were looking to do this or if you're an oil and gas company now and you have the option of where to choose to do business, you're certainly going to look at jurisdictions that lay out very clearly for you what your responsibilities are as far as that goes. Quite frankly, nobody would know what they were walking into here at this point in time.

The puzzle pieces of these bills coming together are terrifying. It is not just one aspect; it's the cumulative aspect of all of these things coming together. Capping production, capping upgrading, keeping things in the ground and out of the pipeline, tearing up contracts: I mean, the list goes on and on and on. If I was one of those companies, I'd certainly be looking elsewhere as well, to be truthful, and it's a shame because we all love this province so much – everybody in this House does – and there is so much talent and tech here to be able to do all of the things that this government professes that it wants to do.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. I find it interesting that the Minister of Energy in her opening statements identified several milestones of the last 18 months. These milestones clearly show the NDP's mishandling of the electricity file.

I can point to some of the things that the NDP government is downloading on this file onto the backs of Alberta taxpayers: the cost of an early shutdown of coal generation, $1.36 billion onto the backs of the Alberta taxpayers; capping of the consumer cost of electricity with the balance of the actual price of the electricity being downloaded onto the backs of the Alberta taxpayer. Now, instead of letting the Balancing Pool function normally – the Balancing Pool does already have built-in mechanisms to cover their losses. They can put a rate rider in for Balancing Pool allocations on consumers' bills. It's very easily done and was designed to manage the system quite capably.

This government decides that now we are going to take on more debt, put more on the credit card and more onto the back of the Alberta taxpayer. I'm concerned that this is the path we're going down, and every time the NDP puts in policy that creates a consequence they never foresaw or they just arrogantly went forward in the way they're doing it, they try to hide it on the back of the Alberta taxpayer. I'm concerned that this is just the beginning of what we will see more and more of, NDP mistakes and bad policy that drive up, in this case, electricity prices, and then they try to hide it from our power bills by shifting it onto the back of the Alberta taxpayers through taxpayer debt. We should all be concerned with the way this file is being handled and all the debt that's being racked up. Sooner or later the Alberta taxpayer gets stuck with that bill.

This is the latest and greatest in a long line of NDP bills making radical changes based on ideology – ideology – to the province's electricity system in the hopes of fighting climate change. Bill 34 is about covering the cost of the power purchase agreements debacle, that this government created when it raised the price of the specified gas emitters regulation levy only a few weeks into their mandate, and they did this without properly doing their homework on the consequences of such a decision. Raising the specified gas emitters regulation levy resulted in power purchase agreements across this province acting on their contractual right to return their assets to the Balancing Pool and, thus, the current debt that the Balancing Pool needs to be bailed out of. The fight over the power purchase agreements from Enmax, TransAlta, Capital Power, Canadian Utilities, and ATCO has resulted in these power producers deciding to take their ball and go home. The result: 4 out of 5 members of the board of the Balancing Pool have resigned.

The NDP are currently suing Alberta-owned companies because the NDP did not know their own laws, that have been publicly known for over 15 years. No one forced this government to make a rash change to the specified gas emitters regulation levy just weeks into gaining power. The NDP should have gone back on this change, but, no, the NDP are holding true to form and not turning around. It is full pedal to the metal on that electric car accelerator. Rather than launching a lawsuit to cover up the poor planning done to date by the NDP government on the electricity file, they should be sitting down with energy companies to find a collaborative pathway towards a sustainable electricity market that works for everyone. It's not unreasonable for Albertans to expect their government to work together with industry to find a sustainable solution.

This government cannot ignore the terms of a binding contract. This lawsuit shows the NDP government's blatant disregard for covenants, business sense, and a lack of respect for taxpayer dollars and knowledge of how our electricity system actually works. Investor confidence in the electricity sector is extremely important to Albertans. As this government continues to pursue their plan of phasing out coal and reaching 30 per cent renewables by 2030, goodness knows, we need investor confidence in order to actually accomplish those goals. We need to be able to attract companies here without having to attract them with unnecessary subsidization just to get them to invest.

The government is losing this case in the court of public opinion, and they are trying to divert attention from the consequences of their own ill-considered tax increases. The result is that Enmax, a Calgary-owned power company, possibly may never pay a dividend to the city of Calgary again. This also will be downloaded, in this case, onto the back of the Calgary taxpayer as higher property taxes. But the NDP government had to interfere with an arm's-length body, and it has resulted in disastrous consequences.

Bill 34 is entirely unnecessary as the Balancing Pool already has the power through the use of an approved rate rider to recover its losses. But in the NDP world view we are now capping everyone's electricity bill in order to prevent the Balancing Pool's consumer allocation charges from showing up on people's bills, a way to hide the actual costs of the mismanagement of this file right from the very beginning. These are $1 to $3 charges. They are negligible, and there is no reason to get rid of accountability and write a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool. The Balancing Pool has the ability to charge a levy already.

It is entirely unclear why it is necessary to write a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool, but it is worrying. Albertans believe that the costs are far higher than the government is letting on. By writing a blank cheque, the debt that the Balancing Pool could take on is unlimited. There is no upper ceiling to this. It's just a matter of the minister deciding that there's a need to have a loan to the Balancing Pool and approaching the Finance minister: we'll get 'er done. No limits.

The debt that the Balancing Pool has to take on to keep the lights on literally is going to cause consequences to the province's balance sheet, more debt on the back of Alberta taxpayers. Meanwhile we also have Bill 27, which allows the minister to financially backstop the construction of renewable electrical generation of private-sector businesses: even more debt. The NDP plans to keep that debt on the public books in the name of ideology and not pass it on to consumers on their power bills, essentially putting it, again, on the back of the Alberta taxpayer. Economics do not matter to this government, it appears. In the NDP world view they are doing what they are doing to accomplish their goals, and all Albertans will be paying for it. This is the NDP showing another side of their antibusines agenda.

I encourage all members to vote this down at second reading and prevent the government from racking up even more debt and putting this onto the back of the Alberta taxpayer.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the . . . [interjection] Oh, 29(2)(a). My apologies. Any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any members wishing to speak?

Mr. Cooper: Sorry. I was busy talking to the minister.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure – a pleasure – to do one of my favourite things in this Assembly. I might as well just cut right to it. I know that members on the other side of the House are waiting with bated breath as to what might be coming next, procedural zigging and zagging, shall we say? I would like to propose an amendment. [interjections] Thank you. Thank you. It's nice that my mom has joined us in the Assembly this evening to cheer me on like that.

I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

I know that members are shocked and awed at such an unexpected turn of events, you might say, a little to-ing and fro-ing.

You know, this bill is not lengthy. This bill is unreasonable. The bill can be found in about – I haven't done the actual counting, but I think that it's about eight to 12 sentences, I believe. One might ask the question: well, the bill is so small; what could we possibly talk about in committee? Well, if there's one thing that I'm certain of . . . [interjections] The hour is late, and comments that are being made would give an indication that the hour might be late.

One thing I'm certain of is that there is a significant number of people that would like to be able to provide feedback on some of the concerns around this particular piece of legislation. My colleagues this evening have outlined a wide range of challenges, a wide range of concerns, significant problems that this government has created. Now they're trying to find workarounds and other opportunities to fix a problem that, let's be clear, Madam Speaker, was created by this government.

What this particular amendment does: I know that you're very familiar with it, but for the thousands of people watching at home – and by thousands I mean dozens or maybe a handful. I am certain of this: they would like to have the bill referred to committee so that extensive discussion, including stakeholder feedback, including expert testimony – like, you know, at the end of the day it might be a positive for the Minister of Energy to be able to bring some of the officials that have provided her such guidance on Bill 34 so that they might be able to defend the position of the government, and Albertans would have a better understanding and a more robust grasp of exactly why we need to give a totally blank cheque to the Balancing Pool to potentially borrow hundreds of millions, billions, multiple billions of dollars, all on the back of what some day will wind up on the taxpayer.

I won't go on and on, much to the delight of the minister. I think that I have spoken about the need for referral motions, the need for government to utilize committees in a fashion that is helpful to the Assembly as well as helpful to Albertans as well as helpful to the legislative process. I know the minister of economic development has moved these very types of motions on numerous occasions in his very storied political career. So I can only imagine that he'll be rising in his place in just a few moments to support this, and we can move through this amendment quite quickly. But for now I will leave it at that and encourage all members of the Assembly to go ahead and support such a strong amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, would anybody like to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's been an interesting evening. The words that come to mind are: petulance, envy, jealousy. I've been sitting here listening to this discussion, and I'm sorry, but that's the impression that I'm getting over here on this side. The other side is actually quite envious of the fact that this government, through its climate leadership action plan, has actually achieved two pipelines – two pipelines – that we would not have achieved without acquisition of social licence, a concept that is completely foreign to those folks on the other side. Social licence has been very positive for this province. Our Premier has been a leader, and she has demonstrated to the world that Albertans are capable of stewarding their resources, and we are finally getting credit for that.

I'm speaking against the referral motion. I'm speaking against it largely because the rest of the world expects that Alberta is going to get on with its climate leadership.

I mean, there's been a lot of quoting of various articles here, but one that came out just a few days ago says: Flipping the Switch to New Electricity System Makes Sense for Alberta. Makes sense. This was in the Edmonton Journal, and similar headlines were in the Globe and Mail, in the Calgary Herald, in the Vancouver papers, where we do need to get some social licence so that we can get the Kinder Morgan pipeline completed. You know, I'm also pleased that it's even made papers like the New York Times and the Guardian from London, England. Social licence is an important concept, and this bill is essential as part of the integrated work that this Legislature has to do to achieve that social licence along with the renewables bill and other bills.

I was disappointed in the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's comment that this was a senseless bill. Flipping the Switch to New Electricity System Makes Sense for Alberta: a direct contradiction to that member. He says that this is a senseless bill. We've got this great system that has been working so well. It's been working so well that our consumers in this province have been hit by massive changes in their month-to-month electricity bills. Those that hadn't basically bought into the contracts, which were actually costing consumers a lot of money, were subject to very massive changes in the regulated rate option.

I don't know if the members over there really care about consumers. It sounds from the discussion here tonight that they don't. Why wouldn't we protect farmers and residential owners and not-for-profits and make sure that they are going to know for the time being what the cap is on their rates?

There were other people quoted by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View from stuff that was written about a year ago, including David Gray, who just last week said on Facebook that this change to a capacity market is the wisest thing that this province could have done. The Pembina Institute says that putting it all together is a good idea.

You know, I do want to quote from Flipping the Switch to New Electricity Makes Sense for Alberta. "The elephant in the room was Alberta's broken electricity market. The province had the most volatile electricity market in the world. Financiers were reluctant to lend money to Alberta projects." This is one of the things that we're going to fix with the capacity market. The capacity market is basically making sure that we Albertans have a stable supply of power, that companies are going to compete with each other to provide that. The companies are going to guarantee that, and we're basically going to benefit from that.

The Dominion Bond Rating Service – again, I think it's a fairly credible resource – says that we are not getting in bed with the corporations. In fact, companies like Capital Power and TransAlta and AltaGas are going to have to compete with each other. Dominion Bond Rating Service actually says that they're most likely to get into wind and renewables and will be adding to the resources that we've got in this province. The capacity market also ensures that we aren't going to be at the vagaries of economic withdrawal.

I'm surprised that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake loves that system that allowed these corporate giants to basically shut off their power plants at will, jacking the price up well over the 15 cents, maybe sometimes to 99 cents a gigajoule. He's happy with that. He must love these corporate guys. Economic withdrawal is going to be impossible in the capacity market. The capacity market is what we're all excited about here, and it's the basis for the need of this bill.

You know, the other thing that the opposition, I think, forgets about is that this is 2016. By 2030 the federal government has mandated that we've got to be out of coal-fired electricity generation. What is their solution to that? They want to put their heads in the sand and say: well, we've got to basically maybe do a constitutional exemption then and not follow what the feds are telling us. Nonsense. Nonsense. There was also a comment about: well, this is like a nanny state. Why wouldn't we want to protect consumers? Why wouldn't we want to make sure that the individual homeowner, who does not have elastic demand for their electricity rates, is protected and put a cap on it? It doesn't say that we're going to be up at the cap, but they're not going to pay anything more than the 6.8 cents. [interjections] You know, they're chirping over there, Madam Speaker, and I think you really should put a stop to it.

Who is going to pay for it are the companies. We're going to make sure, through the capacity market, that the various private companies are the ones that are going to be bearing the burden of providing electricity to this province in a safe and reliable, efficient manner.

"Settling three of the four PPAs is just the cherry on top," is the quote from Flipping the Switch to New Electricity System Makes Sense for Alberta. "The government has (mostly) settled a thorny issue that could have potentially held up" the reform of the electricity market. "We're better off for it," is the final statement there.

So, Madam Speaker, I would implore all members of this House to reject the referral motion. Let's get on with this bill.

With that, Madam Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

10:40                    Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect of this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: You're surprised. I know you're surprised that I would stand to speak to this bill.

Madam Chair, when we're talking about legislation, especially something that is as intrusive as this particular piece of legislation is – and I believe that we have at least begun to try to establish the very real need for some amendments to Bill 27. In its current form it is woefully inadequate and needs a tonne of help.

I was somewhat amused by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud's statements a little while ago regarding economic withholding. It's interesting to note, Madam Chair, that the economic withholding that the hon. member was talking about was caught by the MSA, the Market Surveillance Administrator. It is the very same administrator that Bill 27 is attempting to shut down when it comes to renewable projects. I thought it rather amusing that here we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud extolling the virtues of the MSA in catching producers doing naughty things like economic withholding, and at the same time the hon. member is supporting a bill, Bill 27, that effectively denies the MSA the right to even consider complaints against renewable projects. I find it a significant inconsistency, hypocrisy, name it what you want, deception. I don't know quite what to call it, but it's skulduggery. That's what it is.

You can't have it both ways. You cannot extol the virtues of the MSA on one hand and then try to gut the MSA on the other. Either the MSA is a good organization that does good work and they should be investigating everything, or they shouldn't. The fact of the matter is that we need the MSA, and when it comes to renewables, we're going to need the MSA even more, especially given some of the nonsense that went on and is still going on in Ontario.

Secondly, the hon. member tried to tie suing Enmax to wining two pipelines, which is just really overreaching there. That's a stretch.

Further, we've got in this particular bill some places where we can attempt to make improvements if the government will consider making improvements. So at this moment in time I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 27.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I have to apologize. I believe that we're still on amendment A5, which was the amendment that you moved, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: It's which?

The Deputy Chair: Amendment A5.

Mr. MacIntyre: Great. Then we will carry on because I'm still on topic. It's on the MSA.

The Deputy Chair: I apologize. It was my mistake for not reminding everyone that we are on A5.

Mr. MacIntyre: I certainly forgive you, Madam Chair. I realize it's late, and we're all getting older. That might be unparliamentary.

Okay. Here we are, Madam Chair. We're talking about the Market Surveillance Administrator and the value of that organization in policing. It is a reality that had the MSA not been doing their job, TransAlta would have gotten away with a $56 million bit of skulduggery last year. That was only one of a series of such things, but it was the biggest. The other issues the MSA has caught have been in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. I believe that this was one of the larger bits of economic withholding and nonsense that went on. Of course, the MSA did their job and did it in a stellar fashion, and they protected Albertans.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was talking about protecting Albertans and protecting consumers. Well, that is the function of the MSA. That is their job, to make sure that everybody is playing by the rules. Yet here we have the hon. member on the one hand extolling the virtues of the MSA and on the other hand in Bill 27 totally removing the MSA's ability to do their job when it comes to renewables. All the other parts of our utility system: yes, the MSA can still investigate. But when it comes to renewables, for some strange reason this government does not want the MSA poking their nose into the renewables situation.

That, of course, does not speak to transparency very well, something this government campaigned on. Neither does it speak to accountability, something this government campaigned on. On the transparency issue and on the accountability issue so far when it comes to the renewables world, this government gets a failing grade because the very agency that is mandated to protect Alberta consumers is being told: you can't do that when it comes to renewables. Somehow renewables are protected.

When this subject was brought up, the minister suggested that, well, there is going to be ministerial oversight. Well, guess what? That didn't bring a lot of comfort to the good people of Alberta because now we have a politician providing the policing and the ministerial oversight. The good people of Alberta just turfed a party out of power because of the political oversight of politicians who ended up not doing a very good job of policing themselves.

Now, here we are. An arm's-length agency, MSA, that is supposed to be devoid of political interference, is being interfered with. Then we also have the Balancing Pool, that was supposed to be arm's length. There wasn't supposed to be political interference there, yet the political interference has been so intense that we now have 4 out of 5 board members resigning. Then we have AESO, Alberta Electric System Operator, that is supposed to be at arm's length, nonpolitical, that exists and has a mandate to be dealing at arm's length and managing our electricity system at arm's length to keep it free from political interference, and what do we see? Bill 27 and to some extent Bill 34 are getting right into the inner workings of what were supposed to be arm's-length agencies responsible for utilities in our province. Every single one of them is being interfered with.

I will submit to you, Madam Chair, that if there was ever a time when we needed the Market Surveillance Administrator, it is now. If there was ever an issue where we needed the Market Surveillance Administrator, it is on the subject of renewables. If there was ever a time when we needed the MSA to be looking into things, it is when this government, who has not demonstrated adequate understanding of our electricity system, is meddling with this. We need the MSA and what they can do. They are a market surveillance administrator. They are the watchdog, and we are going to need that watchdog.

We have already had situations here with regard to renewables where the minister told us that the renewables industry told her that they needed this and this and this in order to come to our province to invest, a shopping list, and it sounds like the minister has granted them their shopping list. Do we know that that was in the best interests of Albertans? No, we don't. We don't know because we have not been permitted to bring this bill to committee and invite those same people to come to a standing committee of this Legislature and explain their wish list, to invite all sides in this. We have not had that discussion, yet the minister seems just quite fine with doing things behind closed doors, talking to the renewables industry, the big multinational corporations who have a vested interest in making sure that this government ensures their profits regardless of the impact on Albertans.

Let's remember that this government can claim that they're going to be attracting 10 and a half billion dollars to $20 billion worth of investment into this province, but that investment is going to come into this province, and we're ultimately going to be paying that money. It doesn't just come in here to us, and we get that money. That's not how that works. They're going to come, they're going to build renewables, and we're going to end up paying for it. Yet there are discussions taking place in the minister's office with renewables corporations who came here with a shopping list, and part of that shopping list is a guaranteed return on their investment, and the only way that's going to happen is that either our prices for electricity go up or this government forcibly keeps electricity prices low and hides what we're going to have to pay in debt and taxation.

Ultimately the taxpayer and ratepayer are going to be on the hook for whatever this government does. Though this government, strangely enough, was charging earlier this year that the PPA holders entered into some sort of nefarious deal with Enron, the fact of the matter is that what we've already seen is some very creative Enron accounting on the part of this government. Even in Bill 34 they're attempting to shift an expense column from one place to another place, and that was what Enron got taken to court for by the Securities and Exchange Commission, attempting to hide the real financial health of their corporation, just like this government is attempting to hide the real financial cost of their mismanagement of the electricity file.

They're attempting to cloud the eyes of Albertans to the fact that in July 2015 this government made their first mistake in increasing the carbon tax under the specified gas emitters regulation. Rather than admitting their mistake, they doubled down and sued Enmax when Enmax got permission from the Balancing Pool to return their PPA because of a change in law.

But that wasn't enough, no. The government had to double down again, Bill 27, and double down again, Bill 34. It's been one mismanagement mistake after another: another crisis, crisis management, trying to solve this problem, creating another problem and solving that problem, they think, but creating another problem. It's been crisis management from the get-go, and this government hasn't had the humility to go back to the very first mistake they made, in July 2015, and start unwinding all of the things they did wrong. The interesting thing is, Madam Chair, that the industry was more than willing to sit down and find a solution that was amenable to all parties, and this government refused to sit down with them. Instead, they chose litigation. Then, on top of that, once this government realized their court case was an absolute sham, they decided: "Well, we will retroactively legislate the PPAs out of existence then. We'll go back 16 years and legislate it away and solve the problem."

The heavy-handedness with which this government has handled this file on account of their own mismanagement is astounding. It is absolutely, profoundly irresponsible. This government has been running roughshod over Albertans time and time again, and we're seeing it now. They're trying to hide their mistakes with things like Bill 34. They're trying to hide future mistakes by putting blinders on the Market Surveillance Administrator so the administrator cannot so much as entertain a complaint against a renewables project development. This government campaigned on transparency and accountability, but they are going the same route as we have seen with almost every socialist government around the world. They are less transparent, more secretive. They've been radical in their policies, dictatorial in their style of dealing with people. They do not accept sound amendments over and over again. Now we've got a situation where this government wants to blind the Market Surveillance Administrator, commonly known as the electricity police. The electricity police. This government doesn't want anyone to know what's really going on in the world of renewables, and that's why they're trying to blind the MSA.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. MacIntyre: It is shameful.

Now, I would hope that this government will reconsider. I hope that this government will seriously reconsider this amendment, that they will empower the MSA rather than pull the plug, so to speak, on the MSA. That's a good one, pulling the plug, yeah?

An Hon. Member: Ha, ha.

Mr. MacIntyre: Ha, ha.

So at the end of the day, Madam Chair, I think it's going to be very important, very important to Albertans, very important to the people in this Legislature that an organization like the MSA be given the power to surveil the system. We are begging for problems. We are begging for serious things to go amiss, just like we have seen in the past. We need the MSA very badly. I would hope that all members will support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing no other members, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: I know you're shocked that I . . .

An Hon. Member: You're organized now, is that right?

Mr. MacIntyre: Hey. We got it. We're ready to go.

Well, next up I would like to take this opportunity to give the House another opportunity to accept an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be referred to as A6. Please go ahead.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment is to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 3(2) by striking out "may establish" and substituting "shall establish and make public".

Now, one of the things that I believe is very important for the government to do is to be very concrete in the things which pertain to our utility system by substituting "shall establish and make public," "shall" being a word that is a requirement. It's mandatory. We believe that it is important that the government establish and then make public these things. Again, it comes back to transparency, and it comes back to accountability. Being that we are a democracy, I believe that it is very valuable that we have a system in place where we are creating an environment of trust for the people of Alberta.

Now, when it comes to ministerial direction, objectives, criteria for programs and proposals, this is how it currently is worded in section 3(2) of the act.

The Minister may establish

- (a) renewable electricity program objectives that promote specific goals, including environmental, social or economic goals.

Now, the word "may" is not compulsory. In other words, the minister may or may not establish renewable electricity program objectives. Look, you cannot manage what you do not measure. I've said that before. We have a situation here where the minister is being given permission under this bill to maybe or maybe not establish program objectives. Well, if you don't set objectives, if you don't set goals, I guarantee you'll hit them. You will. If your goal is nothing, if your objective doesn't exist, you're going to get there. That's just a fact. It seems to me that it is only responsible of a responsible government that you do set program objectives. That's why the amendment reads that we want to strike out "may establish" and substitute "shall establish."

Now, it isn't good enough that the minister shall establish electricity program objectives that promote specific goals. I realize this government really doesn't like specific goals, including environmental goals. How about that for a novel idea, setting some specific environmental goals? How about some specific social goals? How about some specific economic goals? How about we make it so that the minister must do that, shall do that, and make it public? Not good enough to just create these goals. Make them public. Let the good people of Alberta know what the goal is. How on earth can we get somewhere when we don't even know what the goal is?

It makes no sense at all to have a bill before this House that's going to become law but the law says: the minister may or may not do such and such a thing. If they feel like it that day, they will. Well, that's not really good enough. We're talking about a multibillion-dollar ministry here, a multibillion-dollar renewables program, and the government says that the minister might or might not establish goals.

Then we have:

except that the objectives that part (b) refers to are optional. So why in the world do we even have part (b) here? If the minister may or may not establish such goals, then part (b), to have specific evaluation criteria to be used by ISO in developing a proposal for a renewable electricity program and in implementing a renewable electricity program to meet the objectives, makes no sense whatsoever.

Now, it's interesting to note that renewable electricity programs are not going to be overseen by the Market Surveillance Administrator. I come right back to the MSA again. So the minister may or may not establish goals and objectives, but one thing we know that is certain, the one thing we do know out of Bill 27 that is absolutely certain because they just voted that down, is that they don't want the MSA watching. That, we know, is a certainty.

Mr. Cyr: And they're going to spend money.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes. The other certainty is that it's going to cost us billions of dollars. Unless this amendment goes through, the other certainty, Madam Chair, is that the minister may or may not even establish specific environmental goals, specific social goals, specific economic goals, and specific program objectives. This is, frankly, lazy. It's just lazy that a minister of the Crown isn't going to have to create goals; hence this amendment.

This amendment makes sure that the minister has a very clear job description. I do remember a problem with this government and job descriptions before. That would have been Bill 1. Bill 1. I remember the job description Bill 1 problem the government had, that the minister had to be mandated to do his job. Now I'm simply following in that same vein, making sure that the minister knows what the job is, that the minister shall establish specific goals. This is a job description. Take it as a job description amendment. That ought to fit okay with the NDP world view.

Madam Chair, in short, this is another attempt to make an improvement to a really bad piece of legislation. I am hoping that every member in this House will agree with me that the minister needs to have clearly established program goals, fully fleshed out, with economic, with social, with environmental goals clearly, clearly fleshed out and stated and that they will be made public.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. As fascinating as this amendment has been thus far, I will leave comments to another day and move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, and good evening, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. Madam Speaker, I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official record of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have a certain feeling, so I'm going to move a motion for unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that tonight there's been a great amount of robust debate and exchange of ideas. Seeing the time, I move we adjourn until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

[The voice vote indicated that motion to adjourn carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:10 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning. It will be a long day today.

Let us pray or reflect, each in our own way. Today is the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women in Canada. This day marks the anniversary of the 14 young women who were killed at l'école Polytechnique de Montréal simply for being a woman. Let each of us reflect on all of the women and girls for whom violence is a daily reality. We as elected officials have a responsibility to continue to speak up against this violence and work to ensure that all women – our wives, our daughters, our mothers – feel safe in their workplace and in their homes.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 21 Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is truly an honour to rise today to move third reading of Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act.

Bill 21 would amend the Municipal Government Act to make it a more responsive piece of legislation that gives municipalities and businesses the tools they need to build strong communities and a more resilient, diversified future for Alberta's families. A key focus of the act is on working together, growing together, and making Alberta better together.

Instead of duplicating costly services, the revised MGA would require municipalities to come together through municipal partnerships to find new and innovative ways to integrate services, manage growth, and use land to become better environmental stewards. It would also give municipalities new tools to build better, more complete communities by enabling inclusionary housing and expanding off-site levies to include community recreation facilities, fire halls, police stations, and libraries.

Supporting Alberta business is one of the four key pillars of the Alberta jobs plan, and the modernized MGA would support this initiative by empowering municipalities to create a more flexible property tax framework between small and large businesses and by linking nonresidential and residential tax rates.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would also enhance municipal accountability by expanding the mandate of the Alberta Ombudsman to create an additional accountability mechanism for municipalities and another resource for Albertans to have their local concerns addressed in a fair, efficient, and transparent manner.

We are very proud of how robust, transparent, and accessible our consultation has been on the MGA. Over the summer my team and I travelled all across the province to meet with Albertans, hear their thoughts, and gather their feedback on the bill. More than 2,400 Albertans attended 21 different sessions in communities, both large and small. We also received over 2,300 survey responses and 122 written submissions from municipalities, businesses, industry, civil society groups, and members of the public. It has been a privilege to discuss the future of our municipalities with thousands of Albertans, people who care about their communities and who serve them in so many significant ways.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank everyone who took the time to provide their input so that together we can get this important piece of legislation right. It's because of their thoughts and feedback that a number of amendments were proposed to this bill during Committee of the Whole. These amendments would make the policies proposed in Bill 21 even stronger and more effective.

Colleagues, as you know, the last major review of the MGA was completed more than two decades ago and does not reflect the new economic realities, changes in technology, or evolving municipal roles and relationships. It is time to move forward and provide municipalities with robust, forward-looking legislation so that they can meet the changing needs of Albertans. I would ask all hon. members for their support in moving Bill 21 through third reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Good morning, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak in third reading of Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. I'll be starting out by reading into the record a lot of stuff that we've talked about, as the minister did allude to already.

I'll start with the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. As she said earlier last week, the municipalities outside the growth management board areas must adopt an ICF within two years, with an additional year for arbitration should municipalities fail to find agreement. We believe that these will include regional land-use planning mechanisms and cover the planning, delivery, and funding of regional services. This will be a big change for a lot of municipalities, and we do have some concerns.

One of the other more controversial aspects of Bill 21 is the centralized industrial assessment. The government has decided to take over assessment responsibilities for all designated industrial property and will now be responsible for issuing assessments to municipalities, which will maintain the ability to set the mill rates. Once again, this was a controversial issue that was raised by municipalities, but it's proceeding as such anyway.

Bill 21 also allows municipalities to split nonresidential property classes into subclasses, which will have differing mill rates. We don't have a lot of concern about that. They are going to be probably addressed in regulations. Of course, regulations are not dealt with by the House, so we are looking forward to seeing how that turns out. However, the class rates must comply with the maximum link of 5 to 1, and we have a lot of serious worries about that 5 to 1 ratio situation. We're going to be discussing that here in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Another topic was the Alberta Ombudsman, which was mentioned by the minister just now. It is being given the authority to investigate complaints against municipalities, apparently as a way of increasing oversight. Although there is a system in place for that sort of thing, Mr. Speaker, apparently we're going to be continuing on with this. We'll be monitoring this constantly to ensure that this is being conducted fairly and properly. We may have some questions to raise in the House as it unfolds.

Another controversial topic was the expanding scope of off-site levies. Municipalities will be able to now levy charges on developers for extra things that they haven't done before such as recreation facilities and fire halls and police stations and libraries. Just recently we saw in a new document, released by the government about a week and a half ago, that they're going to even dig deeper into that with adjacent infrastructure and provincial infrastructure, it appears. So we have some concerns there.

There's also the ability to grant municipalities the ability to include inclusionary housing provisions for new developments. This new legislation will, again, probably be fairly controversial, especially with the speculative industry in the housing industry, and developers have expressed their concerns to us. We'll continue to advocate for them on that end of the scale.

They'll also be able to establish controlled for-profit corporations. This, again, is something where the controls are kind of being lifted off. We have some concerns about that. We won't know what changes will be in the regulations, but there's certainly stuff that we think should be monitored more carefully than just having a complete open door on that topic.

Last week I spoke on another important issue, and I think it deserves a second if not a third mention, and that was the growth management boards that are being proposed for the city of Calgary region. As I'm sure everyone here is well aware, the Capital Region Board is currently the only mandatory growth board legislated by the MGA. Changes with the passage of Bill 21 will increase the number of growth management boards in the province. We'll now have two, and that will be the greater Calgary area that will now be included with getting a mandatory growth board.

Although it's not officially known yet which municipalities will be included in the membership, it's likely to number around 17 or more perhaps – we don't know – and that would be, more or less, 14 urban municipalities and three rurals from what we can gather. It could be four. We really are worried about these details. We don't know what details are going to be included. We've had a call from one of the urban centres even as late as this morning with regard to how this board is going to be made up, one of the major urban centres, I might acknowledge. So we need to look at this very carefully. We haven't been able to get a lot of information.

I want to underline that we're strong believers in regional collaboration. Again, as I've said in the past couple of weeks on this bill, as a former municipal councillor I do understand the importance of regional collaboration and regional co-operation in how communities will grow and govern themselves in the future, but there are still those questions that I mentioned the other day. I've just alluded to them, but I just want to enumerate them again, Mr. Speaker. Which municipalities will be members? Will any member municipality actually hold a veto? What type of voting will be used? What type of structure? Will member municipalities be able to abstain from voting? Is there a dispute resolution process, and if not, why not? And what is the mandate and scope of these growth boards?

As I've said, Mr. Speaker, those are extremely important questions. This is a big change. A lot of the municipalities in the Calgary region will suddenly be impacted in a very unique way. They are actually going to have some of their current authorities no longer being in place. This is going to be a drastic change for them. They need to know these answers so that they can at least get comfortable with what is being intended.

I remain, as I've said before in the past few days, extremely skeptical on how this is going to go. When Premier Klein cancelled the planning commissions years ago and moved towards increased local autonomy, it was decided then that they could have intermunicipal development plans and local municipal development plans, and they were encouraged then to talk to each other. As I said the other day – and I'll say it again – although I know that there are some people on the other side that may not agree with this, for the most part I think it's gone quite well.

We have seen these two great cities in Alberta grow in leaps and bounds. They did so in the Edmonton area before the Capital Region Board was formed, and they've been doing so quite nicely down in the Calgary region. Certainly, there have been some squabbles and issues that have been dealt with, but for the most part it has been a very successful past two and a half decades in terms of regional growth.

Again, I'd like to say that this is a drastic step. This is going to be a very big change. And I don't think that there's really good, solid evidence for this to go ahead without perhaps a little bit more of an interim kind of a change or something else that would be not quite as large of a planning model change.

You know, there are good, solid planning principles that respect local autonomy, and I believe in them. I believe that we can have them and we can promote regional co-operation and collaboration. That's the best way forward. I think it should be left as a voluntary membership system, not mandated as mandatory. Municipalities should have the choice to join or resign from the partnership at their discretion.

I'd like to close my comments on the growth management boards, Mr. Speaker, by repeating what I said during my speech at Committee of the Whole because I think it's so important that it deserves to be on the record twice if not more.

I think that the municipalities should be able to define their region. Let the participating municipalities determine which municipalities will be part of the regional partnership. Municipalities should be able to remain independent, and their ability to make decisions in the best interests of their municipalities should remain intact, not be taken away.

I think that there should be a nonhierarchical governance model. The regional structure should not create another level of government.

I think that there should be voting equity, where each municipality has one equal vote.

I think that there should be a consensus of decision, and I think that where there are major decisions that require a vote, that is approached on the basis of reaching a good overall consensus.

I think that there should be a user-pay cost-sharing model, where for the most part the cost of delivering a regional service is borne in proportion to the use of that service.

I think that there should be transparency in a region, that the operation of the governance of the regional entity is, essentially, easily observable and understood.

I think that there should be accountability of individual municipalities. If a municipality chooses to become a member of a regional service partnership, that municipality must be accountable, first and foremost, to its community for the value of that service.

And I think that there should be allowance for the opting out of programs should they choose that to be in the best interests of their municipality and their people.

Mr. Speaker, now I'd like to change direction a little bit and move into the issue of linking residential and nonresidential property tax rates. We've talked about this in the past few days and as late as yesterday. The proposal would limit the amount a municipality could charge a nonresidential property to no more than five times the lowest residential tax rate.

Presently only 19 municipalities in the entire province exceed that proposed ratio, but for those communities the proposal raises some legitimate concerns that a significant increase in residential property taxes from having to meet the ratio would result in home ownership being completely untenable in some of these communities, and certainly Fort McMurray is a prime example of that. The law will allow nonconforming municipalities, those that exceed the ratio, to maintain their current tax ratios, though they will not be allowed to go higher. I think that's fair and a balanced approach that balances local taxpayers with property tax stability for Alberta businesses.

There is currently no timeline by which nonconforming municipalities will have to come into compliance, and we are very supportive of the grandfathering measure that that talks about. The government, though, has left the door open to bringing in some sort of deadline by which nonconforming municipalities will have to come into compliance with the 5 to 1 ratio, but they have committed to further consultations, thankfully, specifically with those municipalities that exceed the ratio. We will be watching closely to ensure that they hold robust consultations. That is a good thing.

Apparently, the government received much feedback over the summer on issues that were unrelated to the proposed amendments in Bill 21 albeit important issues. While we were working on Committee of the Whole debates on the 5 to 1 ratio, suddenly the government released last week a new discussion guide and survey to gather feedback on a number of issues and specifically on the 5 to 1 ratio. We did not see that. It was not in the bill. It was not in the amendments they had brought forward, and suddenly they've released this, and now they're saying, Mr. Speaker, that they are moving towards making this mandatory and thinking about having some feedback received on that new change. It doesn't hardly seem fair that we were debating a bill and talking about a lot of things and suddenly they at the last minute pull the rug on the whole idea and then say that they're going to talk about imposing it later on.

Nonetheless, a few of the proposed issues in the discussion guide beyond that are the ability for municipalities to enter into ICFs with neighbouring indigenous communities. They're going to be talking about strengthening the minister's authority to enforce municipal orders. They're going to be talking about providing for municipalities to create a bylaw allowing for parental leave for municipal councillors. They're going to be talking about improved notification of amalgamation and annexation requests to include local authorities that operate or provide services in the affected municipalities such as school boards. They're also going to be talking about apparently requiring municipalities to enter into joint-use agreements with school boards within their municipal boundaries, although I know some of those types of things already occur. They're going to expand the scope of off-site levies, I note now, suddenly including intermunicipal levies for infrastructure that provide benefits across municipal boundaries, a new thing that we were not aware of.

Clarifying details around the proposed conservation reserve sounds like a fine idea. Provide municipalities stability to levy a specific tax bylaw on intensive agricultural operations. We have seen some of these concerns in the past, and frankly I am glad that we are going to be discussing that.

They're also talking about clarifying the details around a municipality's right to access assessment information related to designated industrial properties that will now be centrally assessed by the province. Certainly, with the amount of industry that we have in some areas of the province, that is something that most municipalities are going to be concerned about.

There's a lot more in the discussion guide that's coming up, and I look forward to talking to municipal stakeholders. We're going to be calling out for feedback on those, Mr. Speaker.

If there's one thing, though, that's become apparent during the course of this review, it's that the Municipal Government Act is a living document, as has been said, and it requires ongoing dialogue to ensure that we are creating an environment where our municipalities can thrive. I look forward to meeting with municipalities, as the minister and her staff are doing, to garner the feedback and hear what their concerns may be.

Finally, in closing, Bill 21 isn't perfect from our standpoint, Mr. Speaker, but overall I believe it struck the right balance. For that reason I will be supporting Bill 21 at third reading, with some reservations, of course, and I encourage all of my hon. colleagues to do the same.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would speak to third reading of Bill 21? The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fort McMurray is a community that continues to demonstrate its resolve in what has been its most challenging year. Neither the price of oil nor the wildfires are enough to dampen the spirits or the strength of our community. Now more than ever Fort McMurray needs the province to be a partner who will work with, listen to, and understand them.

We have heard the Minister of Municipal Affairs espouse at length about her MGA consultations and her willingness to work with, listen to, and understand Alberta's communities. I personally spoke with the minister prior to sending out a message to my community emphasizing a grandfather clause that the minister had continually referred to all summer long. This clause would allow the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo and communities like it to maintain its ratio of nonresidential to residential tax revenues. This is an important feature of our community that has allowed our homeowners to have reasonable property tax rates and allowed our community to develop recreational complexes, road infrastructure, and schools. Unfortunately, there are concerns that we will not be able to maintain this system, that has worked so well for the people and businesses in Fort McMurray.

As we discovered this last weekend, the minister stated that the nonconforming municipalities must address these issues in an undetermined period of time, which means that this government could be downloading thousands of dollars of taxes onto the backs of the people of Fort McMurray. First came the carbon tax, then the emissions cap, and now the NDP is fixated on raising homeowners' tax bills by 260 per cent. They're happy to reap the benefits that my community provides them but kneecap the way that we provide it.

This tax structure that is in Fort McMurray evolved because municipalities had to make decisions to address unique local challenges and issues. To understand why Fort McMurray is in this situation is to understand how the previous government demonstrated a lack of support to my community. The PCs didn't invest in our region's infrastructure till too late while supporting oil sands growth. For years the previous government failed to twin highway 63, arguably one of the most dangerous roads in the province. For years the PCs refused to rezone Crown land for the development of real estate, and that drove the local housing market right up through the roof. It was then that our municipality rightly took steps to ensure the viability of our community.

I thought that perhaps this NDP government would be more pragmatic after it took them eight months to recognize that our resource industry is important. So, Minister, I ask that you continue conversations with Wood Buffalo's mayor and council and that your government will not force through punishing tax increases for Fort McMurray's homeowners and that you emphasize the message that you gave us all year long. A one-size-fits-all policy does not work, plain and simple. There needs to be a provision that recognizes unique revenue structures that municipalities like the RMWB have put in place.

As the minister well knows, the people in my community are going through an unparalleled upheaval, and what they need and what they're asking for is the ability to maintain a level of continuity so that we can rebuild in a responsible, efficient, and sustainable manner. Engage the people of Fort McMurray, and you will find that you have a collaborative partner that has unparalleled experience and knowledge.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there members who wish to speak to the motion from the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

Seeing and hearing none, hon. minister, would you like the opportunity to close debate?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to take this opportunity once again to say thank you to the amazing team in Municipal Affairs, who have spent years assisting with the consultation piece as well as creating wonderful ideas in terms of legislation and providing support to me in ensuring that we had the very best piece of legislation possible.

I also want to thank the opposition for their support of this bill, recognizing that, you know, I'm proud of the work that I did, consulting with so many thousands of Albertans on this. I really do feel that it's a good piece of legislation, so I'm thankful for the support on that.

Mostly, I did just want to take a moment to also remember the challenges that the community of Fort McMurray is going through right now. It was a challenging time back in May. It was truly my privilege to be there with them at that time, and I cannot say enough how committed I continue to be to the well-being of that community, that I certainly promised to be with them then. I promise to be with them now, and I promise to make sure that they will have the tools they need to be successful and grow in the future.

I certainly look forward to ongoing conversations in the future with Albertans from right across this province regarding possible future changes to this legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has moved third reading of Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Drysdale: Madam Chair, I have an amendment I'd like to present. Would you like me to wait until you get it? Probably.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of my colleague from Calgary-South East I would like to move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows:

- A. Section 3 is amended by adding "Subject to section 3.1," before "without limiting the authority";
- B. By adding the following after section 3:
3.1 Before the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations under section 3, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall consult with the public with respect to the content of proposed regulations under section 3 and make public a report of the finding of such consultation.

You know, I'll speak to it now if that's all right. Thank you, Madam Chair.

I rise today to propose an amendment to Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. This act, an act that we have discussed at length in this House, is a piece of legislation that has the potential to greatly impact many, many Albertans. We know that the energy industry has played a major role in shaping the province and indeed helping to create and build the Alberta advantage. It is important to a great many Albertans that we support the industry that has been the primary source of prosperity for so many.

I think this legislation could be greatly improved if we give more Albertans the chance to provide their feedback on the actions being taken because one major issue with this bill is that there is so much that isn't contained in the text of the bill, which means that we're being asked to pass a bill, to pass legislation, when we aren't even able to say confidently what the impact of the bill is going to be. There's so much latitude being given to the government to change the impacts of this bill through regulations, so the bill that we're debating in this House does not give us the full picture.

The amendment I'm proposing today would not solve all the issues with this bill, not by a long shot, but I believe that it will address one major shortcoming. I believe that it'll address the problem of regulations being developed with no input from anyone but those in the NDP inner circle. We really want to see input from the affected parties. We want to see input from industry, from Alberta workers, and from environmental groups. We need that variety of experience, the depth of opinion to ensure that these regulations are going to be in the best interest of all Albertans.

This amendment would enshrine the idea within this act. It would require that when the government begins developing the regulations, it would actually have to consult with these stakeholders and interested parties. They would need to bring their ideas out into the light of day and share them with the public before they go ahead with changes. Hopefully, this will help them to do their homework so that they don't have to go back to the drawing board every time their ideas spark a massive backlash from Albertans.

So I ask all members of the Assembly to join me in supporting this amendment, and I hope the government takes this opportunity to apply these principles of transparent and accountable government in making regulations around this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Just to clarify, hon. member, you are moving this amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Drysdale: That's correct, yeah.

The Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it is vitally important that public consultation take place on everything that we do. We have legislative committees that were originally designed to be part of this Westminster parliamentary system, with which we are sometimes feeling like we're saddled. We have these different avenues for the public, the people of Alberta, to come and talk to us about the very things that we are doing in this room, that impact their lives so profoundly.

When we have something like a bill like this, that is so far-reaching, so broad in scope that it is going to actually impact generationally – it's not just for now, and it's not just for next year. Because of the nature of this bill we are going to see its impact for generations. It is going to impact our development in the north. It is going to impact jobs. It is going to impact new companies coming to this province. Given the significant impact that this bill is going to bring upon our province, I think it is only appropriate that the government of the day take the time to really consult with the public.

Now, I'm going to point out again that the oil sands advisory group was supposed to be a body that this government put together to advise it on these very issues. Although I could go on at length – and maybe I will – about certain appointees that are on this panel, nevertheless, Madam Chair, the reality is that the taxpayers are paying for a panel. The taxpayers are paying for a panel that this government says is a panel of experts that's going to advise this government on the pathway forward for the future, yet I see no report. I see no report. Has anyone seen a report from OSAG in this place? No. It's not here. Yet this government is in an all-fired hurry to get Bill 25 through this House and out before Christmas.

Well, for a government that campaigned on transparency, for a government that claims to have learned from the lessons of the previous administration, that was turfed out of office because they would not listen to Albertans, it just seems to me rather odd that this government isn't even waiting for a report from their own panel unless, of course – unless, of course – the outcome of that report has already been predetermined even before they have filed the report; unless, of course, that panel is nothing more than window dressing; unless, of course, that panel is nothing more than a rubber stamp on a predetermined outcome.

I would hope that that is not the case. I'm sure Albertans are hoping that that is not the case. I'm quite sure Albertans are hoping that this government is going to act in an honourable way and not give the OSAG panel what the outcome ought to be but, rather, wait – wait – upon the panel for their report to come to us.

This amendment that we have before us gives the government an opportunity to demonstrate some accountability and some transparency and some genuine consultative attitude in that it asks the government, "Before the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations under section 3, [they will] consult the public." We're supposed to be a democracy, and that means government by the people, for the people, and of the people. There are three parts to that. Leave any one of those parts out, and you don't have a right to claim you're being a democracy. We are of the people – we've got that covered off – but it's supposed to be government for the people. This government hasn't done so well in that regard.

This amendment is simply asking the government to consult with the very people of Alberta who pay the bill, consult with the very people who are going to be impacted by Bill 25, consult with them before the Lieutenant Governor in Council goes and makes regulations because, as we have seen, there is a pattern from this government where time and time again, in bill after bill the details in the regulations are not known to this House. Yet it is on those details – as they say so often, the devil is in the details – that the government comes in with sweeping, often vague generalizations in a bill, and when the opposition or the press or stakeholders ask the government regarding specifics, we are all given a similar phrase: stay tuned.

That, frankly, is disrespectful to the people of Alberta. They have a right in this democracy to know what this government is about to do to them, a right to know fully what this government is about to do to them. This particular amendment is not in any way constraining the Lieutenant Governor in Council. It is simply saying: talk to Albertans before you go and make some sort of arbitrary policy decision or regulation here, talk to Albertans, talk to the specialists out there, talk to the very people that you are going to impact, potentially adversely.

Again I will state that this government has a pattern. They have a record of doing things, and then the people of Alberta respond negatively. They responded negatively to Bill 6. They're responding negatively to the carbon tax. Again and again it's over the same issue. You did not talk to Albertans. A government in a democracy needs to be very good at communicating, and part of that is listening. Elected persons in a democracy are to listen and represent the will of the majority of their people. That is definitely not happening with this government.

I wholeheartedly support this amendment. I wholeheartedly encourage every democratically elected person in this room to support this amendment. This is a very excellent way for this government to demonstrate that they are interested in listening to Albertans, and I would suggest that if the government votes this amendment down, as they have so many others, they're sending a very strong signal to Albertans again that they're not interested in what Albertans have to say. They're not even interested in what their own OSAG panel has to say.

The politicians, who are not experts in much and especially not in something to do with Bill 25, have come up with a bill, Bill 25, and they need to listen to everyday Albertans, hundreds of thousands of whom are the experts in the patch, hundreds of thousands of whom are the experts in the oil sands field, hundreds of thousands of whom are the experts out there. They're the ones with the boots on the ground, dealing with this stuff. They're the ones engineering these things, and it's their jobs that are being impacted, their futures that are being impacted by Bill 25. It only makes sense to provide an opportunity at every step of the way for those people to have some sort of input into what the government is going to do to them. That's really what this amendment is all about. I encourage everyone to support it. I will be standing in support of it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to continue to speak a little bit about what the hon. member brought up and also in support of this amendment. There are a few things. You know, as government and opposition we have a lot of opportunities to wade heavily into the weeds of all of these issues, and there's many a night where I know we sit personally looking at a lot of this information, trying to wade through it, and trying to understand it, and we have access to a lot more than the average Albertan, even in opposition. We have a small but mighty team, but, boy, they sure work hard trying to get us updated on a lot of this information.

I know that when I'm out explaining what's going on, obviously I have a specific direction that I believe is appropriate for the way that this province should go, and, granted, I have access to a lot more information than a lot of people, too. So the reason that myself and my caucus would have for wanting to make sure that accountability comes in is because we're actually getting asked those questions every day.

If you consider that average Albertans, the ones who aren't marinating in this the way that we are, are reading about OSAG panels and then they're going to read about what the government is saying about wanting to bring together all sorts of different people to have a discussion on a panel to bring legitimacy to the decisions but then the opposition, rightfully so, in my opinion, is pointing out that that panel isn't actually going to bring forward information necessary to legitimize the decisions of the government – that conflict could so easily be resolved by government, actually. In fact, it would take away any ability for us to stand up here and talk about it at all. It's interesting to me. I mean, that's one little tiny thing.

If you consider just an average person walking around out on the street: you're reading about the OSAG panel, and you're reading about environmental activists that are on there that are not willing to actually contribute information to everyday Albertans who are struggling right now trying to understand how to move forward – right? – how to put food on the table, how to talk to their grandfather, who is 60, who hasn't got a job in oil field services right now, or talk to their dad, that was a pipefitter or in oil field services, that all of a sudden has changed his job to something else that's probably far out of the scope of his education or expertise, or even just watching the slow and steady and very sad move of people out of this province to other jurisdictions.

Even the average investor – and in Alberta we have a lot of people who invest not just elsewhere but who are heavily invested even in our province, lots of average, everyday people. Everyone is taking a look at those portfolios and wondering if they can actually keep that money here in the province that they love. Can you imagine being an Albertan, having invested in this province, having faith in what it is that brought this province to, I mean, a very, very good state of life for people and also a very ethical and thoughtful group of people? Those of us in this province who have invested time, hours, energy, and everything into something, into the oil sands, into the oil sector, into the gas sector, into the energy sector all of sudden being told that everything that we've done under the regulatory process that was there – and may I also remind the House that we were the first province that actually had a price on carbon for anybody. So imagine all of that for the average Albertan out on the street every single day looking at that. And that's just the OSAG panel. That's just that.

What the member is asking for in his amendment, again, will help bring legitimacy and credibility to policies that this government is trying to bring forward.

Again, I really believe the government has the power and the ability to be able to align those two things a little bit closer together to at least bring forward panel discussions. Also, may I remind the government that the government didn't pay for that panel; Albertans did. That panel answers to Albertans, not you. That panel is paid for by Albertans, not you. What a privilege to have the ability to use taxpayer dollars towards something that you truly believe in. Well, stand up for yourselves, and bring forward needed information that Albertans shouldn't have to demand. It's the responsibility of government to do that and to bring that forward, especially when you promised them information that could help bring things together. That's the responsibility of government.

Then if you add on top of that the PPAs – and, again, for an average Albertan looking at that, I'm sure that they never thought that the words "OSAG panel" and "PPAs" would be dinner talk around their tables. Thank goodness they are.

I want to thank the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake for bringing so much of that information to light and shining a light on it. Even if we disagree in this House and even if we disagree out on the street, thank goodness we live in a country where we can actually do that. Thank goodness. But if he hadn't shone the light on that, the discussion would never have happened, and Albertans would not be allowed to bring forward needed pressure to this government to do the right thing.

It's been one mistake after another, and all of a sudden there's this shemuzzle of puzzle pieces that are not making sense. How is it that those of us who are speaking to Albertans every day are justifying that and those losses and the inability of the government to be able to explain how power is going to work for people or about the subsidies that are going to be there in order to compensate for this very, very big move that the government is making?

Again I'd like to restate for the record that we are – the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, especially, made his living with renewables. He's written textbooks on alternative energy. We are onside. But the discussion isn't about whether or not to do renewables. The discussion is about how we get there. Our outcomes are similar, but the policy that's being created on how we get there: that's what's different. What we're asking for is not unreasonable. We're asking the government to apologize to electricity companies or take back what they've done. But we've gone too far to do that. They can't reverse what they've done at this point. Instead, what we're asking for, then, is that in the future, with more decisions, which I'm sure this government will make, there's accountability in place not just for this government but for future governments as well.

Everybody is going to have issues. Everybody is going to make policy that doesn't make everybody happy. It happens. But when you add accountability and you add credibility to that by making sure that those consultations are firmly in that space, even if you're making an unpopular decision, you've really done the work to be able to justify that. That's so important, and I really feel like that's been forgotten in these discussions. It's not about one consultation or two. I'm sure everybody in this House has had more than an earful about the direction, good or bad. It depends on who you're speaking to, and it also depends on where they lie in the line of how this policy should come online.

Let me say for the record as well that Albertans care about their environment, and they care about their earth, air, and water. Please don't forget that. When we're talking about this, Madam Chair, please, please give Albertans their due respect that they do care about these things. Even though our paths towards policy and the end result might be slightly different, that does not in any way make us climate change deniers on this side or mean that we are speaking against any environmental changes that may need to come down.

As it's been pointed out to us, there are many large corporations that have stood up with the government – and, you know, with all due respect, I understand why – because there is work that needs to be done, for sure. There are thousands and thousands and thousands and thousands of people that work for those fellows, that work for those people, those people who work in those companies, regular, everyday people that are actually going to be impacted by the policies that are being put through by this government in their homes, in their own other businesses, their children's businesses, the schools, the charities they support. What about those guys? What about all of the other smaller companies as well, Madam Chair? What about those folks? Those are the fabric of what has made up this province. That's the economic engine.

If you're looking for diversity – and, I mean, we talk about diversification all the time, too. Just last week I had the absolute privilege of meeting with a group at the Schulich School of Engineering. Did you know that they have a process whereby they can upgrade underground? They actually take the coking materials – right? – and they actually take it underground. They blast it underground, and they're able to use less than one and a half barrels of water in a SAGD process and have an immense amount of recovery of product coming up. Did you also know, Madam Chair, that millions and millions of taxpayer dollars, Alberta and federal, have actually already been put into this program? It's already there, and it's been shelved. But isn't that a great solution to some of the problems that we've all been talking about in terms of recovery, right? We try and offer some solutions. I would love the opportunity to bring some of these folks or give them the opportunity to come and talk to the government about their opportunities. These are shelved pieces of diversification.

The dollars have already been spent there, Madam Chair, already. There are Alberta taxpayer dollars already in this diversification, and that's one of probably hundreds and hundreds and hundreds. There's absolutely no way, even in the 19 months that I've been here, that I could possibly talk to every single one of those people. Literally, like, I have 10 or 15 e-mails a week about ideas in diversification.

There's another group that has fibre-optic technology that can be placed in with pipelines and especially with the two pipelines, right? We have a right-of-way being built, and we have line 3, which is being fixed up. There is technology to lay fibre optics along with pipelines that can tell, like, to several metres about breaches in pipelines right away. You could literally feel the press of a hand or the movement of walking if you wanted it to be that sensitive. Brilliant, brilliant technology. I can't believe that these are made-in-Alberta solutions that actually exist here already. I literally go into these meetings – as you all know, this is not my background, not by a long shot. I'm the farthest thing from an expert in this House, for sure, especially in this portfolio, but I have a desire to learn, and I have a desire to listen, and I have a desire to listen to the experts that actually live here, the ones that have actually worked in this field, the ones that actually know this information, so you can imagine from my eyes going into that situation and seeing those things.

Well, we do have experts amongst us that could look at this innovation and this diversification and weed out what works and what doesn't, but at least let's look at it. We have opportunities here. That's a solution. It's a wonderful solution to the fear of pipeline breaks, breaches, weather, all of those things.

Think about, just for a minute, the miracle of being able to bring oil out of sand. That's incredible. If you had talked about it 50 years ago, you know, and when people first started talking about this – my father is a chemical engineer, and I remember us talking about this, and it was such an interesting thought, interesting table talk around our house. Then when it actually was feasible and then to be able to actually find out how to pull this immense resource out of our ground – it's incredible.

The other incredible thing is the environmental research that has come along with that as the process has gotten better, as innovation has gotten better.

These sorts of amendments, these accountability amendments, Madam Chair, are specifically there to protect all people, making sure that government policy is doing what it's saying it's going to do. I would certainly want that, and I would certainly hope that if government is willing to put in accountability measures now, it shows that that homework is done. It shows to Albertans that it's a thoughtful process, and it moves away from ideology. It moves into common-sense practicality, from model to form, from paper into model, all of these important steps that are imperative for everybody, especially for us in here to understand but also to be able to take home with us to our constituents.

You know, the constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View is a really diverse constituency, and it hugs the entire outside of Calgary. We have everything from, you know, oil sands workers to farmers, executives downtown in oil field services, all sorts of different technologies, not just oil and gas but many sectors and spinoff sectors as a result of oil and gas. Then in the city of Chestermere and little places like Langdon we have these little communities that have sprung up and become beautiful, viable communities as a result of this industry, beautiful little bedroom communities that have sprung up as a result of being able to work in the field to be able to bring these products out of the ground and then spring up these little communities that have, you know, coffee shops and businesses and restaurants and all of these things that are spinoffs as a result of this incredible industry that we have.

So when we're asking for accountability, we're not only asking for it of the government but also of ourselves, for everybody that's in this House, so that we can breathe easier knowing that the government cares about Albertans and that they're willing to give that information, that they're willing to stand up for their policy and say: this is why and this is how we're going to measure it, and this is what we're going to do to show you that what we're doing is right and that this is our policy. Like I said, that bears so well for any future governments that may come into this House because that would be the expectation of any government, I would think.

I think, too, that when a person is willing to take responsibility for their policies and what they are going forward, that really, really brings forward an air of collaboration which means, then, that in the spirit of what the environment minister had mentioned about the OSAG panel, bringing forward a whole bunch of different people to work within this group collaboratively – well, let's say that that's the right thing to do on that panel. Well, why wouldn't you want to do that in this House as well, right? You have a panel. Granted, it's not going to report in time because this legislation will – I could stand here and talk about it probably until next Tuesday quite easily, but we all know that this is going to be through before Christmas, right? So where's the collaboration?

You know, we are always told that we should look for solutions. Well, the solutions are in collaboration. The solutions are in actually listening to each other, right? The solutions are in listening to the sector, and the solutions lie in being able to take advice even if it's not the advice you want to hear, even if it goes against what you initially had, what compelled you to put policy together in the first place, and acknowledge the missteps, make amends, and go forward.

We make amendments here in order to try and make legislation better, and agreeing to some of those amendments is the government's way to show collaboration with the opposition parties. There just hasn't been a whole lot of that, so whatever solutions we could bring forward like some of these innovative styles, like at least stepping back from this just a little bit.

I mean, if the federal carbon tax is going to come in in 2018, why not take a step back for a moment and allow us the opportunity to do some metrics, to do some cost-benefit analysis and see how this is going to impact everyday Albertans, not just us, not just our policies, not just our relative ideologies but actual Albertans and their families and the sector? Why are we attacking this sector?

Madam Chair, I highly, highly recommend that the House vote in favour of this amendment, and I would like to thank the member for bringing this amendment forward. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak to this amendment. I think that it's actually quite a brilliant amendment because it addresses something that I think is wrong with our Westminster system, and that is that we pass a bill and then we create the regulations. Those regulations aren't really vetted by this House. They're not vetted by Albertans. It's just what you get. I think that that's one of the concerns that I have with the system that we have in place right now and maybe something that frustrates Albertans.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, in bringing this forward, I think addresses one of the systemic problems that we have with our program and what we're trying to do here. I really like that he's trying to address that by saying that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall consult the public with respect to the content of proposed regulations." Again, this whole idea that we pass a bill, that we identify whether the bill should be passed or not, and then we get into the details – as my hon. colleague has said, the devil is in the details. Knowing that, I think that this addresses the fundamental problem with the way that we do pass bills in this House in that we don't really understand or know what those regulations are going to be. We don't know what the details are going to be.

So I'm very intrigued by this, and I hope that the members opposite recognize that this is an opportunity for all of us to be able, again, to step back from the desire to be able to pass this bill because we think that it's right or wrong and take a look at how it will affect Albertans and how it will affect the people who are in the industry in the trenches – the businesses, the small businesses – and then be able to have that report open and transparent for Albertans to be able to say: well, this is the outcome or this is how the effect of these regulations and how they're developed is going to affect this sector.

You know, I have to say that I'm surprised that there hasn't been an amendment coming forward to change the name of this bill to something like The NDP's Approach to Keeping the Oil in the Ground without Saying that They Want to Keep the Oil in the Ground.

An Hon. Member: I think it's too long.

Mr. Hunter: Yeah, it is a little too long, and I think that it probably wouldn't sell.

In reality, when the Leap Manifesto group said, "We want to keep it in the ground," I was actually very happy to see this Premier stand up and say: "No, no. That's not what we believe." In reality, Madam Chair, this bill is saying exactly the same thing: we just want to keep it in the ground. It's just not saying: we want to keep it in the ground. So the bill itself I'm opposed to because of that very fact.

We have for some strange reason been blessed with that kind of a resource in our province. We should be focusing on how to be able to extract it efficiently and effectively, in an environmentally friendly way. We should be focusing on the technology part of it because that technology has made leaps and bounds. I'm not in the industry, to tell you the truth, Madam Chair, but I've been able to read lots about the industry, and it's exciting to see the kind of technology and innovations that they've made in that industry. We have this resource, yet this bill that we have before us, Bill 25, is saying that we want to keep it in the ground. That's what it says.

You know, we've talked about consultation with Albertans, consultation with people in the industry. The problem is that when you consult with them, you may get an answer that you don't like, and perhaps that's the reason why we're really not getting this consultation. Is there an economic impact study? If there is, we'd love to see it. How is this going to affect the industry? How is it going to affect jobs? People in our province are hurting right now. How is it going to affect them?

I am pleased to stand in support of this amendment, and I hope that all of my colleagues, on both sides of the House, will do so as well. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak against this amendment to Bill 25, that was moved on behalf of the Member for Calgary-South East. I think that the motivation behind this amendment is one of fear on the part of opposition that the oils sands advisory group will have a preordained outcome and that it won't provide advice that has been freely arrived at through robust debate, and nothing could actually be further from the truth.

Critically, when the climate leadership plan was released last year, our government made a commitment to the health of Albertans, their economy, and their environment. As the Minister of Environment and Parks has outlined, this legislation puts a 100-megatonne limit on Alberta's production. Critically, Madam Chair, this limit was established by a diverse group of stakeholders from Alberta's oil sands industry as well as national and Alberta-based environmental nonprofit organizations.

This legislation provides a framework for the oil sands advisory group to engage with stakeholders and the public on the regulatory details for the implementation of this limit. Let's be clear on this. While this legislation establishes the limit, the details regarding the application and implementation through regulations will be left to the experts in the oil sands industry after they engage and consult with industry and the public. The outcome will not be preordained.

On one hand, the opposition argues that the membership makeup of the OSAG has got extremists on either end of the spectrum and won't be able to reach consensus. On the other hand, they argue that the OSAG is simply going to rubber-stamp a government preapproved wish list. They can't have it both ways. The makeup of the OSAG was designed specifically to ensure that there was a robust debate and that all spectrums of the arguments would be considered so that government receives a very carefully and robustly debated analysis of the issues at hand.

What we're looking at is to ensure that our resources are protected long term. This government is looking long term to ensure that we actually are able to get our oil sands to market. The results of this type of consultation and very considered response to those who might oppose the development of our oil sands has been evidenced very, very recently in the fact that we had two pipelines approved as a result of very, very significant efforts on the part of our government and our Premier to discuss in a very reasoned way what requirements there will be in order to gain public approval for pipelines to be built.

One of the things that was required was that we put a 100-megatonne limit on Alberta's production in order that there is some knowledge in the world of the environmental side that we really respect the fact that the environment has to be considered.

By the same token, this lack of trust for the OSAG is unwarranted. We're looking long term at being able to extract this resource, develop it. Moreover, the limit will be linked to the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act in order to maintain consistency with the existing greenhouse gas regulatory framework. This linkage to the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act is critical as it is the existing legislative framework in place to manage greenhouse gas emissions, which sets out the intensity-based reduction targets for all large emitters in the province.

Madam Chair, let me make something perfectly clear. This limit on oil sands emissions will promote the long-term sustainability of Alberta's economy. This limit along with the new output-based allocation approach on carbon pricing will help drive innovation and reduce emissions per barrel while still allowing for production growth and development of the oil sands resource, including moving our product through two pipelines, which, hopefully, will be built as they have been approved to be.

Innovation, Madam Chair, also facilitates job protection and job creation. We will reinvest in new, innovative emissions-reducing technologies here at home to ensure that Alberta is successful and that jobs are protected and created. Our government is extremely proud given that the energy sector has significantly contributed to both provincial and national revenues. I'm proud that when our Premier presented Alberta's climate leadership plan at last year's United Nations climate negotiations in Paris, it received positive international recognition. It's also a step forward in protecting the long-term investments in the industry.

Let's be frank: carbon is an input cost. Not surprisingly, oil producers have asked our government and previous administrations to provide them with a carbon and climate framework so they can make decisions about long-term investments, and that's what this government is all about, the long-term investment, the long-term future, something that's very difficult for governments to plan for because most governments focus on a short four-year cycle. We know that in order to protect Alberta's interests, protect that resource, ensure that we can actually get that to tidewater, sell our product, sell our oil overseas at the best possible price, we do have to make changes to gain the public approval that will allow those pipelines to be built and that price to be achieved.

This is leadership, Madam Chair. Albertans should not be susceptible to a boom-and-bust economy that has many of Alberta's families and communities in difficulty, and that's one of the reasons I rise to oppose this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Mr. Hunter: Just one more point, Madam Chair. I appreciate what the hon. member was saying, but the problem with this bill, in saying that we're going to keep it in the ground, is that other jurisdictions are ramping up production. We are actually saying that we're going to restrict our ability to increase our production while every other jurisdiction in the world is ramping up their production. We live in the same world. If we're going to have this social licence, this ability to actually say that we've gained social licence because of this, in reality we breathe the same air. They're ramping up production. We're decreasing production. How are we actually helping Albertans with gainful employment? This is the problem.

The members opposite don't seem to understand that, in reality, we're shackling our abilities. This is restriction of supply – that's all it is – and when you restrict supply, you create a higher equilibrium price. It's simple economics, and these guys don't seem to understand that. I want them to make sure they understand that this is a restriction of supply when everybody else is increasing supply in the world market. This is the reason why this is fundamentally wrong. This whole bill is fundamentally wrong, and this is not the idea of being able to gain access to foreign markets. Foreign markets would love to get our product. We just need the ability to get it there.

I actually do applaud the government for being able to get those two pipelines approved. I would like to say that on the record, that I do approve of them doing that, and I'm grateful that they were able to work hard to do that. I would also like to say that if there's anything we can do as the opposition to help them get them built, we will do everything we can to do that. Everything we can. We have been very supportive. We've said it on the record. We are very supportive of the government building pipelines to all tidewater, and we want to make sure that they realize that, but this approach that they have is going to restrict supply. Simple. If they don't understand that, getting it to tidewater isn't really going to help us as much.

These are the things that I wanted to point out, and I appreciate the opportunity to be able to just make that clarity. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's important for us to continue to wrestle with this issue. The issue for Alberta today is whether we lead or whether we follow. It's been probably 50 years since we began hearing about some of the impacts of increasing carbon in the environment and the growing evidence that temperatures were associated with it, that extreme weather events and changes and floods and droughts and these sort of issues were coming forward.

It's difficult to make change, especially when you're a leader. It does mean that you take some hits. As the Stern report said 10 years ago, a very voluminous discussion, the best experts in the world on climate science: we can spend 2 per cent of our GDP on trying to mitigate and reduce greenhouse gases now, or our children will pay 20 per cent of our GDP dealing with greenhouse gases. That was 10 years ago. Even former Bank of Canada chief Mark Carney said that we're going to have to leave something in the ground, or we will not achieve any control over the climate.

Of course, leadership means not being necessarily fully competitive with other jurisdictions. That's what leadership means in this context. We do have to pay. If Alberta is not willing to pay a little bit, who is willing to pay?

Mr. MacIntyre: No one else is.

Dr. Swann: Right. So are we going to accept that we can't be leaders? Are we going to say that we can't be leaders?

I want to applaud the government for the exemptions that it has put in place. Cogeneration is going to be exempt, and that's coming from the oil sands. All cogeneration is exempt. There's a limit of 10 megatonnes. Exceptions for new methods that result in low emissions such as experimental projects in primary production which extract bitumen through drilling without the use of heat or steam: these are stimuli for new technologies in the oil sands. That's going to take us to a new level.

Can the environment take ever-increasing levels of carbon? No. There's a cap that has to go on that, and the cap is associated with a 1.5- to 2-degree increase that's projected in our climate temperature. We're at 400 parts per million now. Some say 350 or 375 was kind of associated with that 1.5- to 2-degree increase in our temperature over the next hundred years. That carbon, that greenhouse gas is staying up there for 100 to 150 years. We're not going to turn things around in the next hundred years regardless of how dramatically we change things here, but we have to start. We have to show leadership. This will actually stimulate new technologies. It will stimulate new business. It will stimulate a new economy.

As much as I have concerns about how this is going forward, I have to say that I can't support this amendment because it's not recognizing the need that leadership always presents. Not all of the population is ready to go along. If you ask people if they want an increased tax, they will say: no, thank you. Actually, what is needed is strong leadership and a willingness to put a cap on what we're doing to show not only Canada but the world that Alberta, the most privileged, the most wealthy, the most well-resourced place on the planet, recognizes its responsibility to show some leadership. Yeah, it's going to cost us something. We need to make provisions for people who are transitioning from coal. We need to provide new technologies and jobs and opportunities for them; we need to financially support them if they are in distress. That's what a good government does.

We have to make sure that we stimulate with research and technology not only better ways of extracting our main resources, which are fossil fuels, but research the new technologies around geothermal and solar and wind that could help us actually make the transition and show the world that we're not dragging our feet, that we're not staying back in the fossil fuel age of a hundred years ago. We're recognizing that there are limits. We're acknowledging with the rest of the climate science and the rest of the international community that we have to put a cap on what the planet can take. The planet cannot continue to take increases every year. Yes, leadership does mean that we're sticking our necks out.

Mr. Hunter: Other jurisdictions are increasing.

Dr. Swann: Yeah, they may be increasing. Well, are we just going to follow that blindly right over the edge of the cliff and leave our children to deal with the crisis? I'm saying that it's time to show leadership. It's time to show leadership.

I spoke against the unlimited borrowing of the Power Pool. I speak for this bill. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A4? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. It seems to me that in this discussion there is a philosophical issue that has surfaced, and that is: who leads? The last time I checked, the good people of Alberta seemed to think they should be leading. Last time I checked, the people who in this province cast their ballots every now and then when there's an election seem to be under some misconception that they're in charge when, in fact, this government and the hon. member seem to think that they can be ignored.

The real leaders in the province of Alberta are Albertans, and that needs to be established in everything that happens in this House. When any government ignores those people – even totalitarian governments that ignore the people eventually come down. Any governments and political parties that do not listen to the people ultimately suffer the wrath of the voters on election day, and they are reduced to seven or eight seats, reduced or held to a single seat, or completely lose their seats, as has happened many times. As the saying goes, Canadians don't elect governments; they unelect governments.

Now, we have leaders in this province, and their names are the Albertan people. They're the people who are supposed to be leading, and contrary to what the hon. member just said, if the good people of Alberta really don't want to be taxed, then we should not tax them. They are adamantly opposed to the carbon tax. They are adamantly opposed to a number of the taxes that this province has been saddled with.

We have news releases coming out that Alberta's ranking as a place to invest in oil and gas, which used to be, like, in the top three consistently, has now plunged to the basement, and it has to do with government policies. It does not have anything to do with the price of oil. Just next door, in Regina and Saskatoon those oil companies and gas companies are very busy. They're posting job increases, not just part-time jobs. They're posting significant job increases, and I will say that some of those new jobs are for people from the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I know there are some young guys that are heading on over to Saskatchewan. We are down to the 43rd position out of 96 oil and gas jurisdictions in the world. That's how far our province has fallen as a result of this government not listening to the leaders in the province, the people.

We are getting further and further away every week from being a genuine democracy in this province. We have a government that isn't listening again. Here we have an amendment giving an opportunity for this government to start reversing that trend and start listening to Albertans, and the government sounds like they are not interested, which is no great surprise. Nevertheless, it is our place as Her Majesty's Official Opposition to point out where the government is going amiss, and we will continue to do that faithfully because the leaders in this province, Albertans, expect us to do this.

I wholeheartedly support this amendment for the multiple reasons that others have stated and that I have stated, and I would hope that everyone in this House would consider it. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.
The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In honour of the memorial event occurring in the Federal building this afternoon, I would like to move that we rise and resume at 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:45 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. It's very cold outside. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a group of entrepreneurs and community leaders who are part of the vibrant constituency I represent, Edmonton-Glenora. Here with us today we have Marie-Laure Polydore, who is the executive director of the Inglewood Business Improvement Area, along with board members Marc Tellier and Denise Beaupre as well as Dan Barsotti. The Inglewood BIA is seeing a surge in growth. It really is one of Edmonton's hidden treasures, with 118 businesses now part of this thriving shopping area. I want to encourage all of my colleagues to spend their money here while they're in Edmonton and all Albertans as well. I ask that our guests from the Inglewood BIA please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I have three introductions to do today. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly my friend and former colleague at the Edmonton parole office and now professor of the criminal justice program at Grant MacEwan University, Tim Williams. If you would please rise, Tim, and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

For my second and third introductions, Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured to stand and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a long-time friend and colleague, Stan Stapleton, the president of the Union of Solicitor General Employees, my former union, and a fellow Newfoundlander, Nancy Peckford, a well-known political name in Newfoundland, who is currently USGE's director of policy, projects, and media relations and works with Equal Voice. They are here in Edmonton this week to meet with me as a former member and local president and, in particular, to meet with USGE members at Edmonton Institution in light of the sexual harassment allegations which came to light recently at the institution. Today is certainly the perfect day for them to be here in this Legislature as I will read my statement.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have an introduction to make?

Ms Fitzpatrick: Yes. I ask Nancy and Stan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some of the outstanding members of the Women's Committee from UFCW local 401. The committee members are here today to listen to my member's statement about their shoe drive. Joining us here in the gallery, led by Sheena Thomson, the co-chair of the provincial Women's Committee, are Heather Pocock, Colleen Ewen, Charmaine St. Germain, Petra Garbe, Starla Valentini, Sue Michael, and Sandy Novak. I would ask them now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you a group of Liberal stalwarts here in Edmonton. These men and women are committed to and passionate about the issues facing our province today. At our recent policy convention in Calgary many of them were involved in the policies on small-business protection, community assistance, pipelines, transparent government, and LGBTQ issues. They're hopeful these policies will one day end up on the floor of this House, and they've come to see the Legislature in action. Would they stand as I introduce their names: Kerrie Johnston, Dylan Chevalier, Nichole Batienko, Greg Reid, and Eric Fadden. I don't think Dan Cochrane is with us today. Please give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Of course, I would remind all of us as we move forward – I think I might have said the same thing yesterday – about brevity, brevity with respect to the introductions, hon. members.

Members' Statements

Violence against Women

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, 28 years ago the lives of 14 young women were taken simply because they were women, women who had chosen to study engineering at l'école Polytechnique de Montréal. The perpetrator apparently felt he was entitled to be in that program and that women were not. There are over 1,200 murdered and missing indigenous women whose cases have not yet been resolved. Public threats, abusive language have been flung at our Premier, some of my colleagues, and myself. Even here in the Legislature disrespect is seen. I see the statistics on the number of women and children here in our province running for their lives. I am sick at heart. This really is a national tragedy, in fact an international tragedy. This is epidemic, and we have to take action.

I have identified and speak to the things which I believe are critical in changing this path. From my own experience, I know that when we speak to and treat one another with respect; when we value all that each person has to offer; when we call abuse, bullying, harassment, demeaning behaviour what it is; when men stand up and call on those who are behaving in this manner to stop; when women will not tolerate being disrespected, demeaned, or not valued for everything that they bring to a relationship – I have taken a stance against violence, and I have both in word and action participated in the United Nations 16-day campaign. We can all choose to be part of the solution, or we can continue to be part of the problem. Are you standing up to stop violence against women through your words and action? Yes or no?

Unemployment

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, Calgary's unemployment rate now stands at 10.3 per cent. In Alberta as a whole unemployment stands at a whopping 9 per cent. Albertans are not used to this many people being out of work. Over 13,000 people lost work just last month. That is 74,000 full-time jobs lost since last November. In September weekly earnings dropped to $1,100 and are down 1.7 per cent year over year. These are Albertans. These are family members, friends, and neighbours, but all they see are damaging NDP policies making things worse. The carbon tax will make them poorer, it will damage local businesses, and it takes money away from the charities. These NDP policies are cold and uncaring towards the tens of thousands of Calgarians suffering today.

When I tour Alberta and speak to Albertans, it's clear that the cap on production will contribute to layoffs across the province. Since January 2016 Calgary's working-age population has increased by over 16,000 residents, and the labour market cannot keep up. Calgary's growing population is putting pressure on its unemployment rate. The NDP is setting up Calgary's economy for low wages and higher unemployment in the long term.

An unemployed couple in their early 50s living in Calgary-Foothills went looking for retraining. Alberta Works referred them to a third-party agency, and when they got there, Mr. Speaker, the agency told them that in order to get retraining, they must have a job first or be an immigrant of two years or less or need English as a second language or other roadblocks. We must do better to ease . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Renewable Energy Initiatives in Wetaskiwin-Camrose

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose is taking a positive, progressive leadership stance on environmental stewardship with the use of renewable energy. For example, at the local hardware store constituent Ken Koob has bought all the solar panels and equipment he needs to utilize solar energy in his apartment. City councillors Bill Sears in Camrose and Bert Horvey in Wetaskiwin have had solar panels installed on their homes to show green energy leadership before any residential rebates are in place. The city of Camrose's Recreation Centre has the second-largest installation of solar panels in Alberta. The Lougheed performing arts centre on the U of A Augustana campus has installed LED lights in their new theatre and is the first in Canada to use photovoltaic cells not on but in their exterior walls. The county of Camrose uses biomass to heat their administrative centre.

The city of Wetaskiwin uses geothermal heating for city hall, has an electric car charging station, uses solar panels on the drill hall and swimming pool, and has replaced every street light with LED lighting. Both Montana and Louis Bull Cree nations have installed solar panels on their administrative buildings. Dairy farmers Susan and Evan Schuurman have taken part in the farm solar panel program, as have hundreds of Albertan farmers. Parkland Fertilizers installed 300 solar panels when they built their new buildings. Bruce Ganske and the Solar Energy Society of Alberta are looking to open up a school in Wetaskiwin to certify solar panel installers. Entrepreneur Greg Arend's company, Solar Harvest, exemplifies the future found in the renewable energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, progressive leadership is happening at the grassroots level. It is happening in my constituency and across Alberta. I am very proud of my constituency. Renewable energy will produce enough energy and grow despite the naysayers. The renewable energy future is happening now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Support for Victims of Gender-based Violence

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. December 6 is the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. We remember this day because 14 female engineering students were murdered at l'école Polytechnique in Montreal on December 6, 1989. This was clearly an act of gender-based violence.

Today we also commemorate the missing and murdered aboriginal women, trans women, and each and every woman across the world whose lives have been harmed or lost to gender-based violence.

Mr. Speaker, it is astounding that in the 21st century there are some in society that can't figure out that violence and intimidation of any kind toward women is simply not acceptable. Until we solve this, women and children that are forced to flee this violence need our help.

Last year the United Food and Commercial Workers local 401 started a shoe drive by collecting gently worn and new women's and children's shoes because often they are fleeing with merely the clothes on their backs. They collected 35 pairs of shoes last year in Edmonton, but we all know that there are far more women and children fleeing violence than that.

My office and those of my colleagues in collaboration with UFCW local 401 are again collecting gently worn and new women's and children's shoes. You can arrange a drop-off of your donations by calling any one of our Edmonton offices. Until everyone realizes that violence against women is not acceptable, the least we can do is to help them walk away from it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Women's Political Participation

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in the Alberta Legislature we have 33 per cent women sitting in our House; 97 per cent of those members sit on the government side. This is something that I am, of course, very proud of. But this is not the case even here in Canada, where only four of 13 jurisdictions have achieved the minimum 30 per cent participation of women as outlined in the 2011 UN resolution on women's political participation.

In Alberta we have much to be proud of, not only with our female legislators but also with three open LGBTQ members and ethnic minorities represented. We have almost reached parity as a caucus but not quite as a Legislature.

There is still much work to be done. I believe in using all tools available to achieve a successful result. Studies from MIT and Carnegie Mellon, among others, point to some diversity being good, to more women being important, and that to encourage this is imperative. In this way, supporting women and minorities may be a tool in the tool box to encourage participation of marginalized groups, but it cannot be the only tool implemented. It does not accomplish enough. Today less than 19 per cent of legislators world-wide are women, and it's much lower for minority ethnic groups.

Mentorship, pairing younger women with experienced women leaders, I believe, is one of the best strategies to encourage female participation in our legislative system. This type of role modelling can make the difference for our daughters, teaching them that being assertive does not mean you are not feminine, that it takes strength to show emotion, and that you can be respected as a person while rejecting misogyny. We must show our sons that this is the norm.

Mr. Speaker, let us work toward a structure and a society where neither gender nor ethnicity are determinants of success. Thank you.

National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women

Mrs. Pitt: On this day 27 years ago 14 women were killed and 14 others were injured at l'école Polytechnique in Montreal. Armed with a rifle, he entered into an engineering classroom, pointing his rifle at the women in the class, and said: you're all a bunch of feminists; I hate feminists. In his suicide note he blamed feminists for ruining his life, saying that he believed women had no place in engineering because they would take jobs from men.

Today, on this most sombre anniversary, it is important that we reflect on the events of that day and the lives of the victims and take a stand against senseless, gender-based violence. Even today, in 2016, it remains a reality that women and girls are still victims of gender-based physical and psychological attacks.

I know that here in Canada and Alberta there are many important conversations taking place and much important work being done, for example, supporting women's shelters and transition houses for those fleeing domestic violence. I am proud to say that in my constituency of Airdrie a dedicated group of volunteers known as Airdrie P.O.W.E.R. has set out to fill the need and provide these shelters. There is something I know we all recognize as progress.

Today and every December 6 Canadians remember the 14 victims and recognize the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women because there is still a need to ensure our daughters, sisters, mothers, and friends can live in an Alberta without tolerance for any type of violence.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the appropriate time I intend to move the following notice of Standing Order 42. The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to propose the following motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly:

1. Appoint a select special child intervention review committee to review the safety and security of children in government care by examining Alberta's child intervention system and related systems, including but not limited to the Department of Human Services and the Department of Indigenous Relations, and the committee will further review the recommendations for the child intervention system made over the past five years and may for the purpose of systemic improvement inquire into specific cases;
2. The committee shall be chaired by the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, or Deputy Chair of Committees and consist of seven members from the government members' caucus, three members from the Official Opposition, two members from the third party, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, with the names of all members to be submitted to the Clerk by no later than December 15, 2016;
3. In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultations with all interested Albertans;
4. In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field and may compel the appearance of witnesses with specific and relevant knowledge on matters being investigated;

5. The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
6. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair;
7. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature;
8. The committee must ensure that any and all front-line workers and managers in children services and any delegates or contractors for children services that wish to speak to the all-party committee are given full whistle-blower protections;
9. The committee must submit its report within one year after commencing its review;
10. When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting, or if the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Student Assessment

Mr. Jean: Education is the one part of what government does that if it is done well, everything else the government does gets easier. If the government screws up the education file, everything else gets harder in the long run. The previous government and this government have been screwing up education here in Alberta. We used to be the best in class in Canada and world class. The new PISA results are out, and Alberta is less than average in math in Canada and failing with respect to the rest of the world. Will the Premier admit that the obsession with fads in the Education ministry is actually harming this generation of Alberta's students?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The results that were released today were the 2015 results, and we share the concern that has been highlighted through these scores. That's one of the reasons why there was action taken today, actually – this sounds a little bit like it could have been a caucus question – to make sure that we're moving forward on providing the right supports to ensure that Albertans have the very best support when it comes to moving forward in a concrete way with math and literacy skills. Numeracy and literacy are areas that we're absolutely committed to strengthening as we move forward.

Mr. Jean: In math Alberta used to be world class, but over the last decade our scores have been steadily dropping. Our PISA math results show that we have fallen behind British Columbia and Quebec, both of which have rejected the discovery math fad that has so harmed our elementary school students. Standardized tests like PISA allow us to measure what works and what doesn't work, like how we teach math, but this government and its ally the ATA don't like standardized testing. Alberta parents, on the other hand: they recognize the value of testing and want it to continue. Will the Premier commit that this government will not do away with standardized testing in Alberta? Yes or no.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I'm getting pretty fed up of the fact-free question-asking in this House. The fact is that we are absolutely committed to making sure that parents, teachers, and students have the best information to be able to assess their growth, their areas for improvement, and move forward with progress. Today some of the changes we announced are reinstating a written portion for the math diploma exam, something that we think is very important and that it was a mistake because of past budget cuts to take that portion out. We think that's a valuable tool. Creating a no-calculator portion for the math grade 9 provincial achievement test – I wish the Official Opposition would stop being so barrel half empty . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.

Mr. Jean: We're thinking about the kids, Mr. Speaker, and that's important, and for some reason the educrats in the Education ministry decided we needed to teach basic math in a new way. The PISA national and international test scores show that the new math experiment was simply a failure, but the ATA today called for the government to stop participating in the PISA tests. The ATA rejects all standardized testing, and the NDP has put them in charge of rewriting Alberta's curriculum. Will the Premier assure Albertans that the ATA won't be allowed to kill standardized testing, which allows Alberta moms and dads to assess our education system here in Alberta, what's best for the kids?

Ms Hoffman: I noticed that the Leader of the Official Opposition tripped on the words coming out of his mouth, because he knows they're not true, Mr. Speaker. We're working to create bursary programs to support preservice teachers and help strengthen their knowledge and skills and confidence in teaching math. Investing in education, the funding we had to provide in Budget 2015 and '16, which I believe the members opposite voted against, means that we'll be able to support 1,100 new teachers and protect more than 800 teaching assistants and hire almost 260 more. You want to talk about moving forward in a thoughtful, reasoned approach, hiring staff, and supporting those staff to make sure kids get the best start in life.

The Speaker: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.
Second main question.

Child Protective Services Review

Mr. Jean: For weeks all opposition parties in this House have been uniting and asking questions about improving our child intervention system, following the death of young Serenity in care. I'm thankful that it appears that ministers of this government also want to take action. That's a good thing. When you were asked by the leader of the third party to form an all-party committee, you actually agreed. Today the Wildrose is presenting terms of reference to create that special select committee. To the Premier: will you be directing your caucus to provide unanimous consent to this motion? Yes or no?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, obviously, this was a very, very serious and sad tragedy that's affected all of us here and all of us in the province of Alberta. The government is very serious about doing something about that, and the Premier has made that clear. We're working very hard to do the work necessary in order to create a committee that represents this House, that can actually find out what we can do better.

Mr. Jean: I have a world of respect for the front-line social workers assisting children in care. Many of them have high caseloads and are trying to navigate a very broken system. The system clearly broke down when it came to Serenity. In the 11 months before her death there were no visits from any child intervention workers at all. We can't fix a broken system if we don't know exactly what's wrong. Will the Premier commit to providing full whistle-blower protection status for any and all workers appearing before an all-party committee? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said in the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question – and I thank him very much for it – we're very much interested in resolving these questions to improve the services that we provide and to protect children in care. No child in care should be put in a place where their health or their safety or their very lives are jeopardized, and this government is committed to making sure that we fix this so that doesn't happen.

Mr. Jean: We're asking for action, Mr. Speaker, and all we hear is platitudes.

Our failure of children in care spreads further than just the actual child intervention system. We have seen a troubling lack of information and a lack of answers from the office of the Chief Medical Examiner when it comes to young Serenity's death. We have also seen the office of the Child and Youth Advocate not receiving all files while conducting this investigation. Unacceptable. Will the Premier ensure that an all-party committee would be able to compel testimony from all witnesses related to the safety and security of children in care in Alberta? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier has been clear in this House that because of an ongoing RCMP investigation not all the information was released when it might otherwise have been released. That's a very important thing, that we get to the bottom of this and we not interfere or in any way disrupt this critical police investigation.

With respect to the work of this committee in due course the government will be showing just how this committee will work and how we can get to the bottom of this issue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Third main question. The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Energy Industry Competitiveness

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over 74,000 Albertans have lost work since last November under the NDP. Let's be clear. Saskatchewan uses the same price of oil as Alberta does, but their fortunes are on the way up. For the first time ever they're expected to drill the most oil and gas wells in Canada, and now a new report today shows that global energy executives see Saskatchewan as the fourth-best oil and gas jurisdiction to invest in while Alberta has plummeted to 43rd. Why, then, is the NDP determined to destroy our ability to compete?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're doing no such thing. I'll reference somebody from the University of Calgary, Jack Mintz, who said that Alberta's new royalty framework will be significantly more attractive for investment. [interjections] I think "more attractive for investment" is absolutely the right direction. Because of our changes in the royalty framework we have 140 new rigs right now, each generating 135 direct and indirect jobs in the province of Alberta. This is the right direction. They want to go backwards.

The Speaker: In the mystical quiet I'm having difficulty hearing jingle bells, so keep the tone down, folks.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, the Global Petroleum Survey said this, quote: the Alberta government has introduced policies that are confusing, create uncertainty for the oil and gas industry, which can invest elsewhere. End quote. That is just a nice way of saying that a massive new carbon tax, caps on emissions, and suing Alberta power companies may not be the best ideas. If Alberta can't compete with Saskatchewan, Texas, and North Dakota, that means less jobs and money and services here in Alberta. Does the NDP not understand that?

Ms Hoffman: Here are some real numbers that are worth taking a moment to reflect on and understand. Our rig count is up 6 per cent in the month of November. That's a sixth consecutive monthly increase, Mr. Speaker. Our oil production surpassed 2015 levels, and in September oil production was up 12 per cent compared to the same time last year. Even with the carbon price Alberta still has a $7.5 billion tax advantage over Saskatchewan, and Alberta recorded $38 billion in capital spending in oil and gas. That's five times greater than Saskatchewan. I wish we'd start talking about the facts. This side is. I wish that side would, too.

Mrs. Aheer: The facts are that Alberta used to be ranked 13th in the world, but after 19 months of this NDP government we're now ranked at 43rd of 96. None of our competitors in the United States have a carbon tax any time soon, and right now the NDP has committed to a $50-per-tonne carbon tax. This tax will not lower global emissions. It won't even lower our emissions, but it'll send billions of dollars of investment out of Alberta. Will the Premier even admit to the damage that these policies are creating in our energy sector? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: The energy sector sure seems to be seeing a lot of progress, Mr. Speaker. They're the ones who asked us to bring in this cap because it helps strengthen their international reputation. Let's reflect on the latest episode of The Twilight Zone. Alberta just got two pipelines approved, and the Leader of the Opposition wants us to scrap that plan and those approvals and move backwards. We're not going to do that. We're going to move forward.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Carbon Levy

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At $20 or $30 per tonne the carbon tax will raise between $1.1 billion and $2.6 billion. At $50 the carbon tax will raise $4 billion a year. Interestingly, a 4 per cent provincial sales tax would raise $4 billion annually as well. Clearly, the carbon tax is a PST wolf in sheep's clothing. To the Finance minister: will you admit the carbon tax is a PST in disguise, and if not, at least tell us how high you're willing to go on the carbon tax?

Mr. Ceci: You know, what I'll admit to and what I'll always admit to is that the climate leadership plan will drive innovation in this province. It'll cause rebates to go back to Albertans, that are going to be addressing better and better efficiencies in their home, in their autos. What I'll admit to is that we're moving forward. You would have pushed us backwards.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about that. There's $9.6 billion in carbon tax to come in in the next five years. Household and consumer rebates, $2.3 billion; renewable energy products to replace coal, $3.4 billion; a new provincial agency, $645 million; transitioning coal, $195 million: in other words, $6.6 billion of the $9.6 billion is only to undo the damage that the climate change scheme is doing in the first place. To the Finance minister: when two-thirds of the carbon tax is to undo the damage, don't you admit that you're at least two-thirds wrong?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, if the third party had their way, we would be spending 10 times that amount on carbon capture and storage. I have heard them say over and over and over again that they would prefer clean-coal technology and so on. Well, we ran those numbers. That's between $9 billion and $10 billion for our post-2030 plans. They would prefer that kind of approach. Our approach is around $10 per tonne of GHG in order to transition our coal-fired electricity into renewables, so that's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. That was quite a spacewalk, Mr. Speaker.

Now let's look at the government-funded services that will be hammered by the carbon tax: municipalities, school boards, hospitals, social service agencies, postsecondaries, correctional services, road maintenance, police services, cultural centres, and the list goes on. To the Premier. You promised that you won't lay off nurses and teachers. What about police officers, social service workers, correctional staff, road maintenance workers, wildlife officers, and Crown prosecutors? Should they be worried about layoffs?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. He may have missed the announcements last week, but our carbon plan, our climate leadership plan, is working. We are moving forward on creating two new pipelines, a major economic driver in this province. We're taking the money that's generated through the price on carbon and reinvesting it in Alberta families. Two-thirds of families get a direct rebate. And we are working to make sure that we acknowledge the reality of climate change, build a stronger, diversified economy. They had 44 years. They didn't get the job done. We've stepped up to the plate, and we're not scared to tackle these issues.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Education, PDD, and Health Program Reviews

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, yesterday I rose in this House to challenge the government on their use of backbench questions, so today I am going to show Albertans what it looks like when an MLA holds the government to account for their constituents. To the Minister of Education. A constituent asked me why the curriculum survey was so long, technical, and complex and if the questions were designed to elicit the government's desired outcomes. Can you tell the House how many surveys were abandoned partway through and whether this exercise is just cover for curriculum changes that have already been decided?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think there was a little question at the end there. The curriculum survey was the biggest interaction that Alberta Education has ever engaged in with the Alberta public in the history of this province. We had more than 32,000 respondents, of which 25,000 filled out part A and part B. Part B gives us valuable information that will then come back to us in the spring, and then we'll go back to the public again. It's a very transparent process because we take curriculum development very seriously.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So fully a quarter of people didn't finish the survey.

Another important issue in Calgary-Elbow is the PDD safety standards consultation report, which was released in late October. My constituents want an update on the progress of some of the key recommendations, specifically recommendation 1, for a neutral and independent body external from government to undertake a review of the PDD program. To the Minister of Human Services: has the review started, who is involved, what are the terms of reference, and when will they file their report?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. PDD safety of the person with developmental disability: we took it very seriously. That's why we consulted Albertans, and 2,000 Albertans raised their voices, and they felt heard. We will be working on the report as a whole with a view to making this province inclusive and giving opportunities to persons with developmental disabilities to contribute meaningfully to the province and live as independently and as safely as possible.

Mr. Clark: Sadly, Mr. Speaker, that is nowhere near an answer.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we saw two more tragic signs of the public health crisis caused by fentanyl and opiate addiction: statistics were released showing 15 deaths from highly toxic carfentanyl, and the heartbreaking story of two parents who likely died of a drug overdose in my constituency of Calgary-Elbow, leaving four children orphaned. To the Minister of Health. You are the NDP. You are supposed to care for people in need. Will you stop parroting talking points written by bureaucrats, do what you know is right, and declare a public health emergency?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, our hearts really do go out to all of those who have lost a loved one to fentanyl, and we know that the best thing that we can do to support them and their loved ones' memories is to expand access to opioid treatments that work. That is why we're working diligently to expand community-based access to opioid dependency treatment as well as working with community partners across the province to open supervised consumption services, which we know will make a difference in saving lives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

2:10 Energy Efficiency Programs

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We keep hearing that Albertans will start saving money while reducing their greenhouse gas emissions through energy efficiency programs. My constituents know that we all need to do our fair share to address climate change, but they have many questions about the climate leadership plan. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: when will Albertans start to see energy efficiency programs for their homes?

The Speaker: The minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three programs will be delivered in early 2017: direct install, consumer rebates, and business and institutional programs. There will be more programs introduced throughout 2017 based on the advice that we got from our energy efficiency expert panel and as we create the Energy Efficiency Alberta agency. We did have to start from scratch on this because, of course, the previous government left Alberta as the only jurisdiction without energy efficiency in North America. But we're looking forward to putting people to work and saving families money on their bills starting in 2017.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government plans to help consumers reduce their household energy cost, to the same minister: can you give us any specific details on what opportunities consumers will have through these energy efficiency programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we're moving forward in early 2017 with direct install of free or low-cost products, that we've already announced. We are moving forward with the consumer rebate program, and throughout 2017 we'll have more to say about audits, incentives for small-scale renewables as we set up those programs and deliver them.

You know, a recent study by the state of Michigan showed that every dollar that the state invested in energy efficiency programs led to $4 in savings for ratepayers, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we're going to do the right thing. We're going to help folks reduce their bills and reduce their emissions while they're doing it.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I would avoid standing up in the future.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans are eager to hear more about the job opportunities that will come from the implementation of energy efficiency programs, can you explain the impacts that these programs will have on jobs for Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, recent studies in B.C., for example, have shown that every million dollars invested in efficiency led to 34 direct full-time jobs. In Ontario every million dollars invested led to 38 direct full-time jobs, and that's why Kevin Lecht from the international association of heat and frost insulator workers said of our approach that it'll create jobs and diversify our economy. Those are jobs that the Wildrose calls a slush fund. They'd cancel those programs and throw those folks out of work. But we're looking forward to making Alberta more efficient. We're looking forward to putting Albertans to work while we do it. The Wildrose wants us to be stuck in the past. That's not the approach we're taking.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

NorQuest College

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March 2013 NorQuest College fired its IT manager when it was suspected that he massively defrauded taxpayers and illegally retained the personal information of his colleagues. NorQuest did not fully disclose this in 2013, and employees found out in the news this fall when Charles Rusnell and Jennie Russell broke the story. Will the Minister of Advanced Education commit to ensuring that privacy breaches like this are immediately disclosed to those affected in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for the legislation I'm happy to answer your questions. It's very important to our government that Albertans have access to the information that's important to them and that there is transparency in the way that this legislation is executed. We are certainly working on improving our processes with all of our partners and ensuring that our best practices are followed by all institutions, all arm's length from the government . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Given that when NorQuest College appeared before the Public Accounts Committee in April 2013, at the height of the investigation into the worker, the college was directly asked if its protections against fraud and IT privacy breaches were adequate but it didn't say a word about what was happening at the time and given that NorQuest College appeared at the Public Accounts Committee again today, is the minister comfortable with the testimony at both meetings given the apparent discrepancy in the facts? [interjections]

Mr. Schmidt: I'm so glad that I'm making such good friends on the opposite side, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, they're not the kinds of friends that I would bring home to meet my mother.

With respect to the testimony that was given today at Public Accounts, of course, you know, we know that NorQuest College had some issues identified with how they handled their protection of privacy information. They've taken steps since that issue occurred, and I'm convinced . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Taylor: Sounds like you're defending privacy breaches.

There are new concerns about proper financial management at NorQuest College. Given that the president of NorQuest, who earns over $400,000 a year, which is well above normal for a vocational school, is accused of taking ridiculous perks like a month of paid sabbatical for every 12 months worked in addition to vacation and all-expense-paid trips to Mexico to take Spanish lessons, all courtesy of the taxpayer, can the minister explain how this could have happened under his watch, por favor? [interjections]

Mr. Schmidt: It sounds like it's paternity test day on The Jerry Springer Show on that other side.

Mr. Speaker, each institution is governed by a board of governors. It is up to the board of governors to determine the appropriate compensation. We trust them to do their work faithfully while protecting the interests of taxpayers and students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

School Fees

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP campaigned hard on removing school fees, a promise which likely influenced a number of parents with school-aged children. Two school years have begun since the minister took office, and still school fees remain. Now, a Calgary Metro article, which I am happy to table, indicates that the government won't even look at scrapping school fees until 2018. To the Minister of Education: is the scrapping of school fees another broken NDP promise, or when will parents no longer have to pay school fees?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question from the hon. member. Certainly, it is our full intention to reduce school fees as per our campaign promise, and certainly we have been working to build a thoughtful plan to ensure that we are focusing specifically on instructional fees. These last two budgets it's been a difficult economic circumstance. Our caucus and cabinet chose to reinstate funding for enrolment, which allowed us to hire 1,100 teachers, 800 support staff, and to keep schools functioning at a high level.

Mr. Rodney: Given that the Metro notes that the minister is considering eliminating school fees for the school year starting in 2018, soon after which Albertans expect the next election, again to the minister: we've known each other a long time, sir. Surely, you of all people would not use the elimination of school fees as a cheap campaign trick again – surely, you would not – to cover up any broken promises from the past, present, or future. Please assure Albertans.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and for the question, I guess. I mean, the issue is around making sure that the integrity of our public school system is intact. Certainly, the very first decision we made in K to 12 education was to reverse the third party's decision to not fund for enrolment and to restore the jobs of more than 800 support staff and hire a further 1,100 teachers. We are reducing school fees as part of our campaign promise, and we are going to do that in a timely, thoughtful manner, as the article did suggest in the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Rodney: A lot of words. We just want to know if it's a broken promise.

Given that in the same article, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Association of Parents and School Councils noted that they had reviewed the resource allocation method documents from the Calgary board of education schools and given that CAPSC expressed serious concerns that school fees are not even staying in the schools, again to the minister: can you confirm for us that all school fees do remain in the schools, where they belong? To ensure transparencies for Alberta parents, please tell us: when will your ministry publish detailed records of the total dollars collected in school fees and where that money is indeed going?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I work with the Calgary board of education and all other 60 school boards across the province to ensure that they are demonstrating financial transparency and making proper use of all funds that they do collect and do receive from the province of Alberta. On an ongoing basis but as part of the rationalization, as I said, a thoughtful plan to reduce school fees, taking instructional fees and then other fees that might be for field trips and so forth, we will have a rational approach by which we can in fact reduce school fees over the next couple of years and fulfill a campaign promise.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Health Care System

Mr. Barnes: At year end it's a good time to review where our health system stands. On performance it's been more of the same: lagging wait times for hip and knee replacements, cataracts, and scores of other procedures worse than where the NDP found them, worse than most other provinces. On cost control the minister has talked a big game but can't get her budget to obey her will. Albertans suffering on wait lists and paying more into a broken system don't want overcharged, untrue rhetoric about the opposition. They want results. Can the minister deliver?

Ms Hoffman: I'm happy to share some more facts, Mr. Speaker. Between 2015 and 2016 we've significantly decreased wait times for specialists to treat a number of different specialties, including a 20 per cent wait time decrease for general surgery, a 21 per cent wait time decrease for internal medicine, a 14 per cent wait time decrease for specialists focusing on ears, noses, and throats. I think these are moves in the right direction. At the same time, we are decreasing the rate of spending in terms of the 6 to 8 per cent we saw on a regular basis by members across the aisle, but we're doing it thoughtfully.

Mr. Barnes: As the Supreme Court said, access to a waiting list is not access to health care. So given that, for instance, we now see children's province-wide mental health access worse than with the previous government and looking at the long list of worsening wait times for surgical and medical procedures, it seems that waiting to access rationed health resources is a universal NDP theme. Will the minister uphold her commitment to universal, publicly covered healthcare by ensuring that everyone can access it in a timely fashion?

Ms Hoffman: Well, we know what proposals they're bringing forward from the opposite side for queue jumping and for people to get treatments in for-profit, private institutions. Mr. Speaker, that, to me, is not universal access. Universal access is restoring the $800 million that was cut by the last government on their way out the door. We've restored that funding. Universal access is moving forward. You mentioned mental health. We did. We supported PCHAD growth in beds, and we've seen a dramatic improvement in that area. Instead of waiting 13 days in Calgary last year, it's same-day access today, and instead of eight days in Edmonton, it's either the same day or the next day. That's great improvement.

Mr. Barnes: Given the problems with our hospital sector, whether the fact that the cost of a stay is $2,000 higher than the national average or that the time EMS spends bottlenecked in emergency departments is once again spiking or that more people than ever before are waiting in acute care for placement into continuing care, AHS still continues with weak targets that they hardly ever achieve. Will the minister step in and actually uphold some accountability in this costly, inefficient, and complacent administration?

Ms Hoffman: I'm so proud to step up as the first NDP Health minister in the province of Alberta and, arguably, one of the first to actually believe in public health care and the Public Health Act, Mr. Speaker. That's why we move forward in making sure that we're supporting reinvestment where it's necessary, but it's also why we were able to successfully get the doctors to come back to the table, big contract, negotiate a new term of agreement for the next two years moving forward. It will see savings for the province of Alberta upwards of $500 million in just two years. That's responsible, that's thoughtful, and I won't be afraid to tackle other challenges.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Hospital Chaplains in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chaplains in central Alberta hospitals were valued members of the health care team up until last Thursday. In multiple central Alberta hospitals certified chaplains were funded through contracts that were up for renegotiation. These chaplains were told that they were no longer needed. Central Alberta is now lacking multifaith spiritual care for suffering, dying patients, their grieving families, and nurses and doctors. The government says that they want to protect front-line workers. Do chaplains count as front-line workers? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to figure out whether they were calling for a cut day or a spend day. It's both, and fair enough. We're trying to find ways to be efficient and effective and support local communities. With regard to the very specific case that the hon. member has just raised, I'd be happy to follow up with him. I don't work in the specific hiring of every individual in every hospital, but I'll be happy to follow up on that member's behalf.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that physician-assisted dying is being implemented, Albertans should not be losing their spiritual counsellors. Multifaith chaplains help dying patients and those seeking to end a life of pain to resolve their faith questions, find forgiveness, console family members, and prepare for their final journey. Given the significant role chaplains play in end-of-life decisions, they are trusted members of the health care team. Will chaplaincy care be provided in central Alberta when requested in cases of physician-assisted dying?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Certainly, for any Albertan who is contemplating their end-of-life care options, we want to make sure that wherever they are in the province, they have access to a full range of services and supports, be that palliative care or access to medical assistance in dying. Currently that system is run through the care co-ordination service, which includes access and referrals to doctors as well as other supports.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, not only do chaplains help patients; they are also an important resource for staff. Given that the Public Health Agency of Canada recognizes the need to care for the caregivers because without it their effectiveness and ultimately their health will suffer and given that care providers have to deal with trauma and high-stress situations and also that the minister says that linen staff are a critical part of patient care, then surely chaplains are critical as well. Why are you cutting front-line jobs that will reduce the quality of care provided to central Alberta hospitals?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Supporting all of our front-line health workers with their mental health and other supports is a critical issue for our government, which is why we set up the valuing mental health panel and are working forward on those recommendations. We know that people throughout the health care system require supports because they often deal with families and with patients through very difficult times. Making sure that those front-line workers are supported is very important to us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Capital Infrastructure Planning and Funding

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week this government promised $258 million for the Calgary green line LRT. Given that Calgary and the feds have each committed $1.5 billion in funding and given that previous Alberta governments have consistently contributed its one-third share to major municipal infrastructure projects and given that delaying full funding until 2019 would be a blatantly self-serving partisan political move, to the minister: will this government give money to Calgary now to start the green line LRT to support the economy and jobs instead of in an election year, in 2019?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his question. I was very pleased on Saturday to stand with the federal minister of infrastructure and the mayor of Calgary and many municipal leaders from around southern Alberta to talk about the great contribution that both the provincial government and the federal government are giving towards transit in this province, including in Airdrie, in Banff-Cochrane, in St. Albert, all around the province, and a significant contribution towards the green line in Calgary. We're certainly looking to . . .

2:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Gill: It would be nice to have it now, but anyway.

While in opposition the member of the current government demanded increased attention to deferred maintenance for Alberta's infrastructure. However, very little action has been taken. Given that jobs are needed and construction costs in Alberta are also low now and given that this government has failed to produce a detailed infrastructure sunshine list, to the minister: will this government disclose to Albertans when it will start aggressively working on deferred maintenance, or was it just one of those feel-good, make-good speeches?

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, we always try to feel good and to do good.

I want to tell the hon. member, in case he hasn't read the budget, that the amount of money in our capital plan and in this budget for capital maintenance has been increased dramatically. It's hundreds of millions of dollars, Mr. Speaker, and I'm surprised the hon. member doesn't know that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This budget says that they're spending more money with poor results, but anyway.

Given that the David Dodge Alberta infrastructure investment report suggested $7 billion in capital investment and given that on page 44 the report stated that the highest return on investment would come from public-use infrastructure such as highways and given that Albertans have been left wondering why there were no highway improvements announced in this set of transportation funding, to the Premier: what other expert reports and recommendations will this government ignore to pursue its incoherent plan, that shows no evidence of working together?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I'm surprised the hon. member didn't ask the question to the Minister of Education because he clearly needs to go back to school, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] You know, this is a very important . . .

The Speaker: Order, please.

Proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, very clearly, it's an important question from the hon. member, but I don't think he's really got the picture. We are making very substantial contributions towards transportation in all areas.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is December 6, the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence against Women. This day is to remember the massacre of the 14 young women at l'école Polytechnique de Montréal who died because of their gender. To the Status of Women: what is your ministry doing to remember these women?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the hon. member for her question. At noon today the Status of Woman ministry held a vigil in the lobby of the Federal building to remember the victims of this tragedy in Canadian history. I thank those in the public, my cabinet and caucus colleagues, as well as my colleagues from across the aisle who came to commemorate the 14 female students, who lost their lives far too early, and to raise awareness about the distressing numbers of violence against women and girls in this province, because it's on all of us to end violence against women.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wearing my 16 Days, 16 Ways orange button. Again to the Minister of Status of Women: how does this campaign fit with today's event?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the insightful question. Today's vigil comes near the end of our 16 Days, 16 Ways campaign against gender-based violence. The 16 Days campaign is to raise awareness of all forms of violence. People often think of violence as only physical. This was definitely the case for the event that stemmed today's vigil. However, violence can take many forms and manifest in many ways. We are working to end all forms of violence. This includes verbal harassment, emotional abuse, and understanding that so-called locker-room talk is not tolerated. Please join me by sharing what you can do to end violence against women using the hash tag 16 days.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the 16-day campaign is to raise awareness on how to prevent violence; however, given that Alberta has the highest rate of violence against women in the country, double the national average, to the Minister of Status of Women: what are some concrete steps Albertans can take to end violence against women and girls?

The Speaker: The hon minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Every Albertan deserves to live free of violence and without threat of the same. We know the facts, that women are 11 times more likely than men to be the target of violence. Some things that we can all do are to shut down comments about bragging and glorifying any form of violence or comments that shame or insult women's bodies or successes. Words matter in this arena. For more actions I encourage everyone to follow @Alberta_Women. We are tweeting an action a day for our campaign. I believe in respect for all Albertans, and this includes the women and girls of this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Calgary Cancer Centre

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, tenders issued for the Calgary cancer centre in 2014 identified the project as a design/build/finance/maintain, or P3, model. Now the NDP government is issuing tenders that are just design/build. Calgarians and Albertans have been waiting a long time for the new cancer centre. Can the Minister of Health explain why the Calgary cancer centre will not be like the Calgary courts project and include the long-term, cost-saving maintenance component to the contract?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. If it is more detailed around infrastructure, I may call on my colleague to support as well. I want everyone to know that we are moving forward with investment in the Calgary cancer centre, something that was long overdue. It is the largest and most advanced centre in the country. We are building the infrastructure that Calgary needs, creating good jobs and expanding access to this important public health care. I look forward to being able to deliver on this commitment, that is so important and long overdue.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Minister. Given that the NDP government's five-year capital plan calls for $1.2 billion over five years for the nine-year build-out of the Calgary cancer centre and given Alberta Infrastructure's reputation for cost overruns and delivery delays on hospitals, as was the case with the south Calgary campus, what guarantees will the minister give that the Calgary cancer centre will open on time and on budget in 2024, 18 years after Ralph Klein promised it to Calgary?

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, you know, the hon. member is trying to create the impression that the 18-year delay has something to do with this government. When this government took office a year and a half ago, it immediately moved to clarify where this cancer centre would be built and to move to get it under construction. Any suggestion that our government has held up that cancer centre is not only wrong, but it's disingenuous.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, cancer patients need treatment. They don't care who is in government; otherwise, they will cure the cancer here.

Given the NDP has chosen to do maintenance on this facility in a piecemeal fashion, similar to bringing laundry and Edmonton lab services in-house and unionized, and given that government's job is to provide services in a cost-effective manner, in a timely basis, what is this NDP government's blind ideology all about, forcing taxpayers to pay more and more for everything?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I simply don't understand what the basis of the hon. member's question is. We're proceeding to build infrastructure at a time when the economy is on a downturn. That means lower costs for us. It means that taxpayers' money goes farther. We can get more infrastructure built for the same amount of money. It makes far more sense than the approach of the previous government, which was to compete with the private sector at peak times and pay a premium for public infrastructure. We're not going to do that. We're smarter than that.

The Speaker: Calgary-West.

2:40 Registry Service Electronic Notifications

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last spring the government announced that Albertans would no longer receive notices in the mail when their vehicle registration was expiring. At that time, I urged the Minister of Service Alberta to have more of a transition program for e-reminders rather than a full stop on them. We are now eight months into the transition and the ministry will have collected statistics on the new program, so to the minister: how many Albertans have signed up for the e-reminders, and what percentage of owners missed the deadline?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm happy to provide an update. Our new system is certainly working. We have a very large number of the population signed up. It's difficult to say what exactly the percentage of the population is at any given time given the fact that we've got new licences coming on, but I can tell you that we know it's worked because we've had an increase of 62 per cent of registrations renewed over the same time period as the previous year. That's 1.4 million driver's licence and vehicle registrations that have been renewed, increasing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that chances are that tens of thousands of Albertans have not signed up for the electronic reminders and this places them at risk for unintentionally letting their registration expire and given that Albertans who would never think of breaking the law are inadvertently doing so and they face fines in excess of $300 because they did not know about the change in policy, again to the minister: what are your plans to improve the communications about the online reminders?

Ms McLean: Mr. Speaker, we launched a very progressive campaign that was digital, including sending out automated calls to more than 2.2 million holders of Alberta motor vehicle documents. This cost very, very little for us to do. We're rolling out a plan to reach all Albertans, and we've been successful. As I've said, we've had an increase in the number of registrations compared to the same time period last year, so clearly our campaign to notify Albertans has worked.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that your ministry chose to provide paper reminders to Albertans over 70 for this year only and given that this transition program ends in April and given that in our constituency offices we are hearing from seniors complaining about the failure of receiving notices, which they have relied on for decades, to the same minister: with April quickly approaching, which means the end of all paper notices, will you consider re-establishing notifications to all seniors for at least one more year?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue to take every opportunity possible to notify Albertans about this change. However, the renewal reminders have gone online. We are in a tough economic time, so we found efficiencies, as the opposition has asked us to do, and this is one of those efficiencies. There are still many avenues open to Albertans to find out what date their licences or registrations come up for renewal, including looking at the sticker on the back of their plate, marking it on a calendar, or signing up through an online renewal reminder. Many of our partners, including the AMA, have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Point of Order Stopping the Clock

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker it's the practice in this House that during question period when a member stops because of disorder in the Chamber, because he or she can't be heard, the clock is stopped. I waited at this time for the Chamber to settle down so that my answer could be heard, and I would ask if the clock was indeed stopped or not.

The Speaker: Let me consult with the table.
Hon. members, I'm advised that the clock was stopped.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, could we just hold on with the departure? We're getting confused with the members who are leaving and the members who have something to table.

The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of four studies regarding the needs of self-represented litigants in the justice system. This is in response to the debate on Motion for a Return 25. The reports are titled Self-represented Litigants in Family Law Disputes: Views of Alberta Lawyers; Opening the Dialogue: the SRL Phenomenon; Addressing the Needs of Self-represented Litigants in the Canadian Justice System; and The National Self-represented Litigant Project: Identifying and Meeting the Needs of Self-represented Litigants: Final Report.

Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: I would like to table an article that I read from yesterday in the House: Enmax Terminates 'Unprofitable' Coal-fired Electricity Contract. I have the five copies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: You have a tabling, Member for Calgary-Lougheed?

Mr. Rodney: Yes. I have two. Yesterday I promised to hand this in. It's from Leah Auramenko, a registered veterinary technologist and ABVMA member, and simply states at the end:

It is my opinion and [that] of the ABVMA that Bill 207 and the resulting proposed amendment to the VPA represent an infringement on the veterinary profession's privilege of self-regulation.

It goes on, but it's tablings, so I won't make a speech.

This refers to my question. I promised I would table it. Now, it has the name of the minister. Shall I just say, "Minister," Mr. Speaker, instead of the name of the minister, or shall I read the headline? It has the name of the minister.

The Speaker: I would prefer that you'd simply table it.

Mr. Rodney: That's why I'm asking the question. It indeed is from Metro Calgary. I'll replace the name: [Minister of Education] Sets School Fees on Back Burner until 2018.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of an article that was from 2012 from Field & Stream titled Save Your Brain! Helmet Makes a Difference in ATV Crash. I was speaking in relation to Bill 36, and I would table them now.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Minister Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, pursuant to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the environmental protection security fund annual report 2015-16.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I understand we have three points of order, I believe.

The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today under 23(h), (i), and (j), language likely to create disorder, unparliamentary language, a whole smattering of offences that certainly were perpetrated by the Minister of Health when during question period, at approximately 1:53, she used – without the benefit of the Blues, it is something very close to this – with respect to speaking about the Leader of the Official Opposition: he is stumbling over the words coming out of his mouth because he knows the words coming out of his mouth are not true.

Mr. Speaker, there are a very significant number of rulings around making an accusation that a member is lying, around using the words “truth” and “true.” I’m sure that you can find a significant number of references where, by making an allegation that the Leader of the Official Opposition is not telling the truth and by saying the words “not true,” it clearly is likely to create disorder, just as it did today. It is unbecoming of a minister of the Crown to imply that a member of the opposition would be lying in the Assembly. That’s exactly what took place today at 1:53, and a very simple way of dealing with this issue along with many other references is to have the member apologize and withdraw.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health I will apologize to the House and to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and withdraw those comments.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Government House Leader, you too had a point of order.

Point of Order Supplementary Questions

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker. It was during the questions being asked today by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. During that question the Member for Calgary-Elbow, after claiming that he was going to demonstrate how to hold the government accountable in question period, proceeded to ask a question, then followed it by another supplementary question on an entirely different subject, and then the second supplemental was on a third subject.

Now, the authorities on this are a little bit convoluted and contradictory, but I am going to make the case. If you look at Beauchesne’s Parliamentary Rules & Forms, on page 122 under 414 – wait a minute. Where are we now? Here we are. Sorry. There are so many marks in my book now that it’s challenging. It says:

Although there may be no debate on an answer, further questions, as may be necessary for the elucidation of the answers that have been given, within due limits, may be addressed to a Minister. The extent to which supplementary questions may be asked is in the discretion of the Speaker.

Now, I was also looking in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, at page 506. It says here:

Members may seek to clarify the answer to a question or solicit further information through the use of supplementary questions. A supplementary question is posed immediately following a response to an initial question. In conformity with parliamentary tradition, the Speaker retains the authority to determine when supplementary questions may be permitted. The same guidelines which apply to initial questions apply to supplementary questions. They are to be constructed as “a follow-up device flowing from the response and ought to be a precise question put directly and immediately to the Minister, without any further statement.”

Now, Mr. Speaker, here’s where it gets a little bit dicey. It says:

In the past, Speakers have used their discretion to insist that a supplementary question be on the same subject and as a general rule be asked of the same Minister. However, at the beginning of the Thirty-Sixth Parliament in 1997, Speaker Parent allowed the practice to be modified by not insisting that an additional question be, strictly speaking, supplementary to the main question. He indicated that he would find it acceptable for a party to split a round of questioning between two Members, with each one asking a different question to a different Minister. This practice remains in effect today.

It goes on, though, and says:

As a supplementary question is meant to flow from or be based upon the information given to the House in the response of the Minister or Parliamentary Secretary to the initial or preceding question...

In this particular case that did not happen because they were on completely different issues.

... the Speaker has indicated that supplementary questions should not be permitted when a Minister or Parliamentary Secretary, in responding to the initial question, informs the House that the question will be taken under advisement.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, what page was that?

Mr. Mason: I’m sorry; that is pages 506 and 507.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what the two authorities agree on is that this is a question to be at the discretion of the Speaker, and a precedent set in the federal Parliament is not necessarily binding for us here.

I refer, then, to a previous ruling by the Speaker made on May 12, 2004. The Speaker at that time said:

Hon. members, I feel that I must make a clarification. Beauchesne 409, dealing with questions in question period, says that in order for a question to be in order, “It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.”

Now, there’s also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise a first question and then they’re allowed two supplementals. It has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question. I’m sorry; I just cannot find the connection between crop insurance and automobile insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit that it is actually the practice and the precedent in this House, as opposed to a recent tradition in the House of Commons, that supplemental questions must be related to the answer received to the primary question in the first place. That is how the Speaker ruled in this matter in this Chamber, and that is, in my experience, always the practice that we have attempted to follow in this House. So I’d ask you, then, to rule on the point of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to what may be a historic point of order, wherein the Government House Leader seems to have made my argument for me. I appreciate it very much when he refers to his own arguments as convoluted and contradictory. I will not pass judgment as to whether or not that is, in fact, the case here.

But I will refer to House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, page 501, under Principles and Guidelines for Oral Questions. I just want to speak primarily about the principle of what question period is for. We raised this yesterday, and I find it somewhat ironic that we are being pressed again on it today, being, really, the main tool that the opposition has to hold the government to account. This text says:

- While there may be other purposes and ambitions involved in Question Period, its primary purpose must be the seeking of information from the government and calling the government to account for its actions.

Very clearly, I satisfied that. Most, I think, relevant, Mr. Speaker, to my questions was:

- Members should be given the greatest possible freedom in the putting of questions that is consistent with the other principles.

Now, the hon. Government House Leader has made exactly the point that I was going to bring up from page 507 of the same text, being Speaker Parent's ruling in 1997 that "allowed the practice . . . by not insisting that an additional question be, strictly speaking, supplementary to the main question." If we go back to page 502, the questions must be questions, in fact. They must seek information, be brief, be within the administrative responsibility of government.

But specifically to the question, Mr. Speaker, of the connection of these questions to one another, I was asking questions that are of deep and pressing concern to my constituents in Calgary-Elbow, questions that were within the purview of the government and are, very clearly, important issues to the people of my constituency, seeking new information and pressing the government to action within areas of their competence.

While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, the practice this stems from is the issue I raised yesterday around the quote, unquote, puffball questions. That is how things have evolved in this Assembly over the last number of decades. We have a new government, and I would hope that this new government would understand the importance of allowing the opposition to do its job, allowing their own private members to do their jobs on behalf of their constituents, which allows them to hold the government to account, not simply read government press releases back to Hansard.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you rule that this is not a point of order and that opposition members be given the largest possible leeway in standing up for our constituents. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I was distracted by my colleague the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre because at the beginning of the point of order I missed the citation in the Standing Orders that would lead us to believe that this was a point of order to start with. I was a little bit confused that the Government House Leader would choose to do that.

Perhaps what I'm about to say I will regret a little in the future because my hon. colleague the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow – I often like to refer to that he is the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, but sometimes to my chagrin it is a fact of the matter that he is the leader of the Alberta Party. As such, we traditionally in this Assembly have given a certain amount of latitude to leaders of parties with respect to the questions that they ask. So I think it's more than reasonable that that latitude be given to the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, the leader of the Alberta Party, and that he receive the same as Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Hays and, in fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition.

As much as that pains me to say, I think he ought to be. I must admit that it does feel a little bit like a revenge point of order on behalf of the Government House Leader from yesterday.

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, I'm sorry. I missed your point. Are you saying that you're in favour? It was unclear to me what you said, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: There's no standing order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you don't need a standing order to make a point of order in this house. If you cite authorities, that's fine. The point that I really wanted to deal with since I was present . . .

The Speaker: You know, I'd like to move on. We have a long day. I think that the case is – with all due respect to the Member for Calgary-Elbow I didn't hear you cite the case, the precedent in this particular House in your argument. You certainly did with respect to the federal government.

As I understand it from an earlier Speaker in this House, and what I've understood in terms of the connection, the line, if you will, between the main question and the two supplementaries has long been a standing practice here. When I heard your question earlier in the day, I didn't see an order being – well, I soon saw an order being raised. But I was grasping to find – I think crop insurance was cited in the standing order. That was not the substance. There were two unrelated topics that you addressed in your question, so in this particular situation and, again, its context, I would submit that there is no point of order and would like to move to the next point of order if I could.

I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. Rodney: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with respect to Standing Order, for the sake of the table and all members, 23(h), which reads, a Member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that Member . . . makes allegations against another Member, and (j), which reads, uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder, and (l), which reads, introduces any matter in debate that offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would leave it up to you. You could have one or two or all three if you so choose.

Thirty-five minutes ago, sir, at approximately 2:30 p.m. the hon. Government House Leader took a personal swipe at the intelligence of the hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway, who, by the way, has earned a degree in agriculture, is a member of the Appraisal Institute of Canada, PGCV from UBC, and also has successful careers in real estate, oil and gas, AISH, and IES boards. I think it's a prima facie example, and I have a feeling the Government House Leader may simply want to stand, apologize, and withdraw his remarks. Please and thanks.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I want to clarify, first of all, that I did not question the intelligence in any way of the hon. member. I said that he needed to go back to school, and because of the disorder in the Chamber, I was not able to finish my response to the question.

The hon. member asked me why there were no roadway or highway projects included in the announcement on Saturday, which we made with various municipal and federal officials. Mr. Speaker, the announcement was to do with the final and third call for GreenTRIP applications. GreenTRIP is a program that was created by the previous government to fund transit. So I was quite taken aback that the hon. member would ask me why there were no road projects in a transit program announcement, and hence my dismay and suggestion that he needed to go back to school. If that's the kind of question that we're getting – why didn't you fund roads from a transit program? – then I think there's something lacking in the question.

However, if hon. members opposite felt that that personalized the question too much – and they do – that was not my intention, Mr. Speaker, and I will apologize for that.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 42 I remind you that only one member is allowed to speak, and that is the mover of the motion.

Speaking to this matter, the Official Opposition House Leader.

Select Special Child Intervention Review Committee Appointment

Mr. Cooper:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly:

1. Appoint a select special child intervention review committee to review the safety and security of children in government care by examining Alberta's child intervention system and related systems, including but not limited to the Department of Human Services and the Department of Indigenous Relations, and the committee will further review the recommendations for the child intervention system made over the past five years and may for the purpose of systemic improvement inquire into specific cases;
2. The committee shall be chaired by the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, or Deputy Chair of Committees and consist of seven members from the government members' caucus, three members from the Official Opposition, two members from the third party, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, with the names of all members to be submitted to the Clerk no later than December 15, 2016;
3. In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans;
4. In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field and may compel the appearance of witnesses with specific and relevant knowledge on matters being investigated;
5. The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
6. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair;
7. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature;
8. The committee must ensure that any and all front-line workers and managers in children services and any delegates or contractors for children services that wish to speak to the all-party committee are given full whistle-blower protections;
9. The committee must submit its report within one year after commencing its review;
10. When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting, or if the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak to Standing Order 42:

A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

Mr. Speaker, during Routine and before question period I gave notice of a motion. I did not move that motion, but I hoped that unanimous consent would be granted so that I may be able to. In the name of time I won't read back into the record all of the 10 points of the motion. I would only just like to take a moment to discuss the urgency of why today myself in conjunction with members of the Official Opposition chose that it was important enough to move this Standing Order 42, that the Assembly debate this issue.

Mr. Speaker, you know that over a number of weeks, north of four weeks now, the Official Opposition in conjunction with others has been shining light on this very, very important issue of the death of children in care and, in particular, a case that we've all become very familiar with. The minister responded to the Member for Calgary-Hays when he asked a question about a committee that would look into reviewing this very important challenge that we have in our province. He asked if an all-party committee would be struck, and the minister had responded that it would be. But one of the challenges is that the minister, while he's committed to this committee, has provided little detail as to what the committee will be made up of. He has provided no detail to members of the Assembly when the committee will begin its work.

There is little that we do that is more important than this, Mr. Speaker, and this is a matter of significant urgency. You know that the business of this Assembly could be completed at any moment, really. When the government decides that the business of the House has concluded, this House will rise, and in order for a committee such as this to be struck, the best way for that to happen is for the House to be in session and for a motion to be made, which is exactly why I have done that today. There is a significant amount of urgency that it is dealt with today, for it is unknown if the House will be in session tomorrow. It is possible that the government could choose to rise today. We already are past the allotted amount of days inside the sessional calendar, and while one could assume that the government would like to have some additional pieces of legislation passed, it is certainly at the Premier's discretion when the House will rise. As such, dealing with this motion today will ensure that it will be done prior to the rising of the House.

Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent and pressing matter because it needs to be done in public. The makeup of this committee is very important. The information that is shared about how this committee will be formed and the terms of reference ought to be done in public. It's why I took some thought about the makeup of the committee, including seven government members, three members from the Official Opposition, two members from the third party, and one of each of the independent members. That would make for a total of 14 members.

Mr. Speaker, it's imperative that this issue be dealt with with the children at the fore, not the politics of this issue, but the children at the fore. That's why I've proposed a balanced committee being chaired by yourself, the Deputy Speaker, or the Deputy Chair of Committees, who certainly are amongst the most impartial in this House. I think it's important that we focus solely on solving the problems and not the politics of it, which is why this needs to be done in public and needs to be done today.

There are many details about the case that we have heard that I shall not debate today, but this is a matter of urgency. The Child and Youth Advocate did not receive all of the important information in the Serenity case. We need to get to the bottom of these things as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition called and the government granted an emergency debate on November 21. It has been four weeks from then. We have received very little information from the Minister of Human Services about what actual changes have taken place. There's been a commitment to this committee, yet we continue to wait for it. Today is the day to sort this out. Today is the day for the government to act.

This matter is of significant urgency, and I would ask all members of this Assembly to provide unanimous consent so we can debate the finer details of the motion. I recognize that it may not be perfect and am willing to work with the government to find a compromise so that we can move forward on this issue today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 42 I would remind you that only one member is allowed to speak, having provided the oral notice earlier. Standing Order 42 states that a motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

So, hon. members, I now ask whether the Assembly grants unanimous consent to allow the debate to proceed.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 36

An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Mason: I understand that the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View may have an amendment or wish to speak to that, and I am just basically covering till he gets in his seat, Madam Chair.

Dr. Swann: It's a pleasure to rise on this important Bill 36 and offer to strengthen it in terms of public safety. I have the amendment here, and we'll proceed once it's distributed or at your request, Madam Chair.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety, be amended at two levels. Section 3 is amended in the proposed section 128.1(2) by adding: "and has received safety training in accordance with the regulations" after the section that says, "unless the person is properly wearing a safety helmet." Section 4 is amended in the proposed section 129 by adding the following after clause (f): "(g) respecting standards for safety training, including the proper use of helmets, to be completed prior to a person driving, operating, riding in or on or being towed by an off-highway vehicle."

Madam Chair, this is an important move forward, this whole bill, towards safety, especially for children but for all riders of ATVs. I'm particularly focused on those under the age of 16 and will remind this House that across Canada we're almost the only province that allows 14-year-olds to drive ATVs independently. Everywhere else it's 16. Virtually everywhere else. That's a concern to me, so I had hoped today to also offer an amendment to raise the age of appropriate driving of an ATV, but it's been ruled out of order because this is a helmet bill. So I'll encourage the minister to examine the whole age question at another time and hope that at some other point in the next year we could revisit the age restrictions and ensure that we try and reduce the carnage with children.

To bring out the latest data from the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research, there were 1,053 emergency room visits in the last two years from ATVs, a 9 per cent increase in the off-highway vehicle emergency department visits; 84 hospital admissions per year in the last two years; and 33 of the ATV deaths in the last 10 years – that is about three per year – were children under the age of 16. About three per year, then, of our children under the age of 16 died with ATVs. The rest of the country has said that you should be 16 or older to drive an ATV. We're still accepting 14. I leave that under advisement since that's not the substance of our amendment here.

What I'm passionate about is that, at the very least, anyone who drives an ATV should have a proficiency test, should be trained in the mechanical and the physical aspects of managing safely, understand some of the forces and the speeds that they'll be going at, understand what happens on irregular terrain, understand how to deal with a rollover, understand how to deal with someone else who's involved with some kind of an ATV incident. In other words, every motorized vehicle that we have authorized in Alberta has a training program associated with it, a mandatory training program and licensing for things like motorbikes and cars, at least. We don't necessarily have a licensing requirement for young people who are driving these vehicles.

So I think there needs to be some further work on this bill, but at the present time this amendment is simply requiring all new drivers or any drivers under the age of 16 to take a proficiency training examination. Sorry. It's not under the age of 16; it's any driver to have given some evidence that they have taken a proper safety course before driving this vehicle.

I'll open it up for discussion, Madam Chair, and welcome the debate.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his interest and advocacy in this matter, that goes back a number of years. I want to commend him for that. Indeed, his advocacy is one of the reasons why this particular bill is now ready to come forward.

Madam Chair, the hon. member has made a couple of very good points. First of all, with respect to age: in Alberta individuals 14 years and older are allowed to operate an off-highway vehicle unsupervised on public land, but supervision is required for individuals less than the age of 14. This is, I think, an interesting question that has been put. I guess that my view of this particular amendment, like the age issue, which was not in order, is that there is merit to considering these matters, but these are not the subject of the bill and, particularly with regard to both age and the requirement of training, would require additional consultation.

One of the things we've really tried to do, Madam Chair, in developing this bill is to proceed carefully and to make sure that we've developed the maximum amount of public consensus on what can be contained in the bill. We do not have and have not conducted the extensive public consultation that I think would be necessary to proceed in these matters. They are not without merit, and I want to indicate that. But if we want to go further, as the hon. member would like, we need to go back and do more consultation.

Madam Chair, I want to say that this is not a final answer to this difficult question, but more consultation needs to happen, and, more importantly, more education needs to be done with respect to safety on off-highway vehicles. We're hoping to step that up. Safety is, of course, the bottom-line concern. The various groups, associations of off-highway vehicle riders are very supportive of this legislation, and they do a great job in terms of educating their members and the general public about safety on off-highway vehicles. We need to continue to support that, and we will.

There's a group called Trail Masters, that I just wanted to mention. A group of youth spend a weekend at a camp learning off-highway vehicle safety skills, including why they need to wear proper safety gear and how to ride safely and responsibly. After that camp each camper becomes a safety ambassador by presenting what they learned about off-highway vehicle safety to the grade 4 students in their schools and other community groups by request. These are the kinds of initiatives, Madam Chair, that we are supporting and we need to continue to support and to extend. Public education, in my view, needs to precede legislation. I think that we can make significant gains in safety by continuing to enhance that public education and public awareness.

At this time – and I regret to say this because the hon. member's support for this bill means a great deal to me – we are unable to support these amendments. As I said, not without merit, but I must recommend to the House that this amendment be defeated.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 36 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

3:30

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 36. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety. The bill was proposed following years of requests for action from individuals and our safety partners.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. minister, I believe we're on Bill 33, as was announced.

Mr. Mason: Oh, I'm sorry. Miscellaneous statutes. A critical piece of legislation. We've consulted widely, Madam Speaker, with opposition House leaders, and I understand that they're okay with it.

Thank you.

I move Bill 33, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016 (No. 2), for third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to this bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a third time]

Bill 36

An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'm sorry. In my excitement I jumped the gun, but I'm now pleased to move third reading of Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety.

Madam Speaker, this bill was proposed following years of requests for action from individuals and our safety partners. The Injury Prevention Centre at the University of Alberta has been collecting data on off-highway vehicle safety for years. Their data shows that an average of 19 Albertans are killed each year while operating or riding OHVs. The largest group of injuries and fatalities is that of riders who were not wearing helmets. It's time for the government of Alberta to take action to reduce the injuries and fatalities to the citizens of this province's off-highway vehicle community, and that's what we've done with Bill 36.

Madam Speaker, we heard from other members of this House, and I've been very pleased to have their support. With that said, some amendments were put forward, and we have dealt with them. I think that with regard to some of the exemptions that were proposed, we know that research on motorcycle helmets, which would follow most of the same standards, has shown that any impairment is negligible.

Madam Speaker, I want to just indicate that I would like to thank members of the House for their support for Bill 36. It's been noted that this bill has been a long time in the making, and I believe that the work done to make it happen has struck the right balance. As I indicated to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, we're not done with education; we're not done with consultation. I believe that we have the support of the off-highway vehicle community. I believe we've consulted widely, including with the agricultural community, and we have, I think, arrived at a sensible bill that will protect people, particularly children, from being injured, permanently impaired, or killed in accidents involving off-highway vehicles.

I want to thank all members for their support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 36, third reading, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety. Come May 2017, when it comes to off-highway vehicles, all drivers, riders, and persons being towed, of any age, will wear a helmet when on public lands, with the passage of Bill 36.

Now, last night Wildrose was trying to be helpful. We do that from time to time to help the government make bills a little better. We tried to get an exclusion for hunters and trappers, and we made our argument. That argument was weakly responded to by the NDP Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who said, "Regardless of the research we are saying no to the exemption." And the amendment was defeated.

Fortunately, though, Bill 36 is a compromise that allows the minister to make regulations to allow exemptions to the rules. Perhaps some future government will find a way to allow an exemption for hunters and trappers when they are engaged in their work. But until then, Bill 36 at least respects the property rights of rural landowners, farmers, and ranchers on their own land, leased land, or lands with the implied consent to be on, including grazing leases, and exempts them from this requirement to wear a helmet. Bill 36 also recognizes that fish and wildlife officers, Alberta sheriffs, and the RCMP would have much difficulty coming onto private property to issue a ticket for not wearing a helmet. This is the compromise, and it is one I am able to concur with.

Helmets are already mandatory for motorcycles and moped drivers in Alberta – all drivers, no exceptions – and off-highway vehicles can reach the same speeds as motorcycles. According to the government 74 people died over a 10-year period in Alberta from head injuries related to OHV accidents. Madam Speaker, that is too many.

Although the government has granted an exemption here for First Nation reserves and Métis settlements, I trust their councils will be responsible and adopt the appropriate bylaws to encourage helmet use on reserves and settlements.

For many riders the $150 fine will be too steep, and for others it will not be steep enough. If this is the case, then maybe it is the appropriate fine. We will also see how regularly it is enforced.

I am pleased the minister conducted consultation on this law, unlike so many other laws the NPD has brought forward since the election. I have also had the opportunity to speak to people in my constituency with regard to the law, and I am pleased that Bill 36 has the support of the Alberta Off Highway Vehicle Association.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would encourage my hon. colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 36, and I thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak in support of Bill 36. I think it's certainly legislation that is long overdue in this province given some of the remarkable statistics that we've seen. An average of 16 ATV deaths in a year is far too many, many of which are preventable by wearing helmets, with children under 16 making up nearly 20 per cent of all ATV deaths, or on average at least three per year.

Given that, it would have been good, I think, to see the amendments proposed by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View pass. I recognize that the government was sympathetic to the general principle that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View was talking about, but I'm not sure I can think of many better examples of preventative measures than wearing a helmet in any activity that involves speed.

Certainly, this bill is going to go a great distance, a great way, towards helping to reduce injury and death from off-highway vehicle use, but I think it could have gone even further. Given that, I certainly do still support absolutely the bill. I know some of the concerns raised by stakeholders certainly are not without merit, but on balance the risk to public safety has not only a great impact on the lives of the people who are injured or their families if those people are killed but of all Albertans who fund our health care system. There is a substantial economic cost involved for those who are unfortunate enough to suffer injury, and that is something that I think is clearly in the public benefit. We know that in many – sadly, not all, but certainly many – cases a helmet does make all the difference between serious injury and walking away unharmed.

Madam Speaker, with those brief comments, I would certainly encourage all members of this House to support this important legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) comes into effect should any members have questions or comments for the previous speaker.

Seeing none, I recognize Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yesterday the Wildrose brought forward an amendment to exclude hunters and trappers from this legislation. The reasoning was simple. Hunters and trappers use off-road vehicles to get to a hunting area or to retrieve game. They aren't running all over at loud, excessive speeds as it would be contrary to what they are trying to accomplish. I can understand the desire to protect children under 16 or 18, like the bike helmet regulation does. I can also understand to a certain extent the off-highway recreational users – we've all seen the fail videos online where speed and radical driving cause some horrific accidents – but the hunters and trappers are a completely different user group. To paint them with the same brush is ludicrous.

Now, the government voted down this amendment. They said things like, "Regardless of the research we are saying no to the exemption." Had they done proper research, they would have found that exemptions like this do exist in other jurisdictions. Manitoba, for instance, has made allowances for hunters and trappers.

Looking at the summary of off-highway vehicle engagement results the government produced, of the people who suggested that exemptions are needed, 31 per cent suggested hunting, fishing, trapping; 22 per cent said travelling at low speeds; 15 per cent said work; and 10 per cent said farming and ranching. I would think that should have had this government considering it before bringing in this wide, sweeping legislation.

Now, the Minister of Transportation said:

The proposed amendments that I will speak about today come from the latest phase of my ministry's review of the Traffic Safety Act. They are the result of consultation with many Albertans, with our stakeholders, and with our traffic safety partners.

The Member for Calgary-Currie said, "Of course, we will be further consulting with outdoorsmen as well as members of the off-highway vehicle community for other possible exemptions."

The Minister of Transportation also said, "I'm looking forward to hearing some amendments when we get to Committee of the Whole because this is by no means the final answer, in my opinion, but I think it is the right balance for now for Alberta."

From those comments, you would think that there was consultation and a willingness to accept amendments. But, Madam Speaker, I've reached out to a few of the major stakeholder groups. I have to say that I was really disappointed to hear what they said. One said that they received an e-mail survey. They felt afterwards that the results of the survey were biased based on the results. They said that they went to the info session last week and that it was basically: the bill passed first reading; it is what it is, and you were consulted. Another group said that they were definitely not consulted. Another said that they got one phone call in which they informed the caller that they would oppose the legislation. They were told that they would be part of a formal consultation, which did not happen. None of these groups supported this legislation.

I hate to say this, but once again we have to bring this House information on the failures of this government. For once I thought that maybe – just maybe – this government would have it right. They said that they consulted and produced a document in regard to the consultation. Unfortunately, when you exclude detractors from your consultation, your consultation is just window dressing. This is how it was put to me by one of the groups: they come up with an idea, they present it with predetermined outcomes and then tell you that what they consulted on was what you wanted. Again, this is very disappointing.

They do have an opportunity to fix this oversight by taking the time to address these groups' concerns and to make the exemptions in regulations. I myself and my colleagues will be consulting closely with these groups and verifying that their voices are heard.

Madam Speaker, you can't simply ignore opinions just because they run contrary to your preconceived notions. Consultation should be genuine, meaningful, and definitely not predetermined. I do applaud this government in attempting to reduce harm to the people of Alberta by bringing forward legislation like this, but it would have been good to see a full and comprehensive consultation with the stakeholders involved.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I have a couple of questions for the hon. member. He's talked about groups that weren't consulted or felt badly consulted or ignored, but he hasn't named them. We did go rather extensively, and the main groups that are involved in this sport or this activity are extremely supportive of what we're doing here. I wonder if the hon. member can tell us which groups they were, and I wonder if he could also talk about his connection to the hunting and outdoor activity industry.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thanks for the question and comments there. Yes. The groups that I discussed with were all related to the hunting and trapping industry here in Alberta. They're all organized groups. As far as my involvement, of course, I in my previous job was an outfitter and guide in the hunting industry, so I spent a lot of time on four-wheelers and a lot of time, myself and employees, working with four-wheelers. I have spent a lot of time in the forest.

Of course, the ATVs that I've seen running in the woods by hunters and trappers: they're driving responsibly. They're using the land properly, and they're enjoying themselves out there in the great outdoors, enjoying what they love to do, which is hunt and trap. That's why I take a particular interest in this. I don't think I have anything to be ashamed of in taking a particular interest in this either, Madam Speaker. I think that when I visit the forest and I see the many people out there enjoying it – again, I believe that there should be an exemption for hunters and trappers.

I know this government considered it but somehow, in the end, decided not to do that. It applies in other jurisdictions around us, so I think that that was an opportunity that was missed by this government, taking that amendment and passing that into legislation. I think this government has an opportunity to consult with these organizations fully and talk to them and see what their feelings are and how they can represent their views and their concerns. Obviously, they didn't feel properly consulted.

Now, there are different groups, obviously, that they did consult with, and that's fine, and that's great. Like I say, I was really hoping that this would be that one-off chance that this government would do things right. I reviewed the document that they produced. I thought that was all great, but I thought I would reach out to some of the stakeholders that I thought maybe were missed. I think it's a great opportunity for this government. They can have that opportunity to do that. I know the one organization, the Alberta Fish and Game Association, represents hunters from across Alberta. It's a big organization. I know also that the Alberta Trappers Association was not consulted on this. So there are a couple of them for you, Madam Speaker.

These groups here, I feel, were left out of this process, so I would like to encourage the government to reach out to these organizations, talk to them, and have a fulsome conversation with them on their concerns. I think there's plenty of opportunity for this government to make good ground with that, and I don't see why there's any problem with that. I would hope that there's no problem with that, anyways. When I looked at the results of the survey they had and I realized that not everybody was consulted, then it concerned me. Who else was left out? Who was included? Who wasn't included? I think there are just a lot of unanswered questions now.

Madam Speaker, again I applaud this government's looking at safety concerns of Albertans. That's one of the most important things we can do here. I would hope that they look at all the different aspects of safety that would protect Albertans from harm, so I would encourage the government to reach out to all these organizations. Maybe they were in a bit of a rush. I noticed that the consultation process happened in the month of September. That's what it said in the report. Of course, September is prime hunting season in Alberta, so I'm not sure if some of these organizations, you know, didn't have an opportunity to respond or, since it was a busy time for them, they couldn't.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other speakers wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for his remarks. I've seen the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky driving an ATV before, and he is perhaps the most gifted ATV driver I have seen in my life, driving through forest with fallen trees in a spring snowstorm. He's certainly someone who brings a lot of experience and personal knowledge to this debate.

I'm rising to speak against Bill 36. I do appreciate the intent of the bill. I applaud the government for attempting to put forward a piece of legislation to improve the safety of Albertans. That is a legitimate goal of public policy, and we should all be supporting that as an intent, but I think the bill fails to meet the mark on a few different fronts.

Now, when I use an ATV, the vast majority of the time I wear a helmet. When I ride an ATV, if I'm doing any kind of serious speed whatsoever, I wear a helmet because that's just smart. It's good practice. You know, we've seen what happens when people use ATVs at high speeds without using a helmet, and it is a very dangerous thing to do. I think that's something that we should encourage through education and advocacy, but I'm hesitant to believe that that should be legislated in the law.

I think that there is a very real need to make helmets mandatory for people who are not yet adults, setting that age at either 16 or 18. I remember using an ATV at 12 at speeds I probably shouldn't have been. I think that it's responsible that we require young people to wear helmets on ATVs. That's a legitimate role of government, I believe.

The opposition put forward a very reasonable and well-thought-out amendment to exempt hunters and trappers, and the member for Grande Prairie-Smoky made the argument quite eloquently on this point. Most hunters and trappers are not driving at high speeds. They're not going off jumps. They're not trying to do stunts or tricks in any form. They're generally moving at slower speeds, accessing a hunt site or looking for game. You know, someone riding an ATV, if they're hunting, if they see a target, generally has to respond pretty quickly. They dismount their ATV, but you can't really shoot with a traditional ATV helmet on. Unless you're wearing an infantry helmet, you're not going to be able to raise a rifle and hunt correctly with most ATV helmets.

We put forward a reasonable exemption for hunters, who use ATVs for very different purposes than some other purposes for ATVs, and that was, unfortunately, rejected. That's an amendment that, if it had been accepted by the government, I think, would have gone a long way to reaching out to those of us who have hesitations about this bill.

I also believe the bill is largely unenforceable. We're talking about this on Crown land. In most of the cases they're going to be quite remote areas, where there's simply just not going to be a lot of law enforcement around or where they have bigger priorities. I'd like law enforcement to be dealing with poachers, to be dealing with criminal activity, not dealing with policing adults, full-grown men and women, who are possibly riding at slower speeds while they're hunting. It is largely unenforceable. Most of the areas where this is taking place are going to be very remote areas. This is not talking about riding on-road or in populated areas. It's going to be Crown land.

I think we would be better suited to focus on education, encouraging people of all ages to wear helmets when they're using ATVs, particularly at higher speeds, where the purpose is recreational; that is, not hunting and trapping. I think we'd be much better focused on supporting education for this rather than legislating to protect adults from themselves, who in many cases are already behaving responsibly. For that reason, I must oppose this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to get up and speak on this bill. I feel that we've had very robust debate as this bill has moved through the House. We've had a chance to actually discuss many amendments, as the last speaker alluded to. I mean, we spoke about amendments for hunting and trapping as well as for mandatory vehicle training. I think we had a robust debate on both of those amendments.

I'd like to take a moment to thank those who brought forward those amendments and were involved in that debate. I know that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has been a long-time advocate on this particular issue. As well, I'd like to thank the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock as well as Grande Prairie-Smoky for his work on this bill and bringing forward the amendment related to hunting and trapping. I know we had a robust discussion on that particular amendment, and I appreciate the member reaching out to me on that amendment as well. I do want him to know that we gave that particular amendment some serious thought, and I appreciate him bringing it forward a little bit ahead of time so we had a chance to look into it further. I'd also like to thank the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who, you know, has shared some of his stories regarding accidents and ATV use. I'd also like to thank my colleague from Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who is also a cosponsor of this bill and spoke very eloquently on a variety of issues as well during debate, and, of course, the minister for bringing this forward.

You know, at the end of the day, this helmet law combined with public education, I think, will go a long way to increasing safety. One of the previous speakers did mention that when you are out in the wilderness, perhaps there is not a police officer around every tree to check on whether individuals are wearing helmets. However, this law does set a precedent that there is the expectation that you should be wearing a helmet. It sets a positive example for youth who are coming up to using off-highway vehicles. That combined with public education, I think, will have a positive effect on helmet use and will go a long way to preventing injuries where a helmet would help prevent that particular injury.

I know I have at least one constituent of mine in Calgary-Currie who has come into my office several times and is a passionate advocate for this particular bill – I was happy to have him bring it forward – as well as the Association for the Rehabilitation of the Brain Injured, who are strong advocates for this bill as well. I was happy to support this bill and work with the minister on this bill. I think that's good work to do as an MLA.

To conclude, I'm going to be voting in support of this bill. On average there are 19 deaths a year from ATV use, and if a helmet could prevent even one of those, I think that we have done good work in this Legislature. With that, I encourage all to support this bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), questions or comments?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed, to be sure, that the government couldn't take it further than simply helmets, but it is progress. I can assure you that I will be on the minister's case in the new year. I expect that he will get both letters and appeals from those in the community that see an opportunity to reduce suffering, handicaps, and hospitalizations, up to 1,000 a year. Three children under the age of 16 die every year, partly from a lack of parental oversight, I presume. But I guess one has to say that if need be, children deserve the state trying to protect children where parents aren't there for them, aren't requiring good training, aren't requiring them to be supervised, aren't requiring them to learn the basics of how to deal with an emergency situation on their all-terrain vehicles. Age is a critical factor in their capacity to manage a thousand-pound transportation device, and training is a critical factor. I don't think we need to know that. We have established that in respect of motorbikes and cars and other vehicles.

I don't think that this is also applying to snowmobiles. Are we going to have to bring forward a separate bill for snowmobiles? It's not clear to me, but they are managed in the same way as ATVs in some legislation. It's clear that that's the next step. If this helmet law doesn't apply to ATVs and snowmobiles, I think we're missing an opportunity, and I think we've missed a crucial opportunity to put more age restrictions on those who are operating what can be very serious weapons for injury both to self and others.

I will leave my comments there. The minister has known for some months that these were areas that we both agreed upon, and I expected more from this bill, but I will continue to press for those changes. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 36, An Act to Enhance Off-highway Vehicle Safety, is a pretty interesting bill, one which I rise today to speak in favour of. I know that as teachers we often would have our kids look at the question: when should safety trump freedom? We would look at that in the context of many different forms of sport and activity in society, and I think that this bill falls under that kind of a discussion, that we're having in this House today.

You know, when trying to figure out whether safety should trump freedom, you have to ask yourself a few questions. I know that one of the points that people have brought up is that Alberta is the only province without helmet laws for off-highway vehicles, and I suppose that's maybe a fact. I'm not sure that it's a very persuasive reason for whether we should trump freedom and individual choice because, you know, life is about choices. That's a really important part of life: the ability to be free to make your own choices about how you're going to live your life, the kinds of recreational activities you're going to have, the kinds of things you're going to do.

I mean, freedom is what makes life worth living. It's a very important thing, to be allowed to make those kinds of choices. We don't have to look too deeply in our history of law to understand that much of the law that we have in our society is about ensuring that a big government can't unduly or unreasonably restrict the freedoms of its citizens. That's a very important concept to uphold.

We also know that safety is a primary consideration in our society. We want to ensure that individuals in our society, as they exercise that freedom of choice, are not unduly bringing harm to themselves, that they are making wise choices because we understand that with a public system of health care – often my students would bring up the point that in exercising their freedom, you know, it's up to the public sometimes to have to pay for the consequences of those actions. That's a reasonable argument, and it's a reasonable thing to be thinking about.

I said that when I rise today to speak in favour of this bill, it's weighing those pros and cons. It's weighing that reasonable expectation that we would try to protect people sometimes from their own poor choices and that we would not place a burden on society with regard to the consequences of poor choices and safety while, on the other hand, trying to make sure that we do allow people to make their own free choices in life and to pursue and enjoy life as they see fit.

You know, skiing is a dangerous sport, and when I first started skiing as a young boy, I never even thought about wearing a helmet. It just wasn't around. Now when I get onto the slopes at 56 years old, I'd better wear a helmet because I'm often face-planting into the snow. Is it a reasonable expectation for somebody to wear a helmet? I think it probably is when you're skiing. Should the state be enforcing it? I don't know.

I know that one of the kids, when we were having these debates in my class, asked if he could go on the Internet, and for the first time in my life I saw somebody that was crazy enough to wear one of those chipmunk flying suits and jump off the side of a mountain and think that they were going to be able to use the flaps on their suits to be able to guide themselves safely down onto the ground. I'm going: you have got to be crazy. So we had that conversation: should we ban that? Should we say that that's just too risky an exercise and that the people that are participating in that kind of event, you know, maybe shouldn't have access to health care if they're going to do something that risky?

Mr. Barnes: Or at least wear a helmet.

Mr. Smith: Or at least wear a helmet.

You know, these things are being discussed by society and by our students. I think that when I look at this bill, I see that it brings a measure of reasonableness to it. It brings a measure of safety with regard to the discussion we're having for off-highway vehicles, but it doesn't shut down the activity. It still allows the individuals to experience the great outdoors, to experience the great outdoors on the back of an ATV, but it does provide a measure of safety.

I probably wish the House had made an amendment for hunters and trappers. I think these are the people that are in the outdoors probably more than most people in our province. They have shown, from my experience in my constituency, that they have control over what they do. They're making wise choices. They understand how dangerous being outdoors can be, out in the wilderness a long ways away from any help. I have a great deal of respect for the experience and the decision-making of the hunters and the trappers of the province of Alberta, and I think it would have been a reasonable measure and a reasonable amendment for this House to support, so I'm disappointed that we didn't do that.

Overall, I see some checks and balances here. I can see that it applies to public lands, that there are exemptions to the helmet-wearing laws on private lands and lands that are on Métis settlements and First Nations reserves, for farm and ranch operations, and if you're a farmer and you're crossing a public highway, you're exempt from having to wear a helmet when crossing that provincial highway. You know, there are some reasonable steps that are being taken in this bill to ensure that it's not an onerous thing, but it is about public safety.

With those thoughts, I guess I would suggest that this bill, although not perfect, is worth supporting, and I will be voting in favour.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. Is this under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Oh. Sorry, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will rise and briefly speak about this. I have a couple of concerns, not with the bill itself but with some of the impacts that the bill may have, particularly in my community, that I just want to be able to say on the record and hope the minister hears.

Before I say that, I will say that I do support this bill. My younger brother Tyler – I have five brothers. I talk about them all the time. I like them. They're the only people in this world, Madam Speaker, that can look me in the eye usually, so I feel more comfortable around them, I think. He's the fifth of the six boys; I'm the oldest. About 12 or 13 years ago Tyler came camping with my wife and me and our youngest son. He was still a teenager. I'm about 10 years older than him or so. He got in an ATV accident. He was wearing a helmet, but he was driving up a hill, and he was very inexperienced with the bike. The bike came up, and he hit the thumb throttle, and the bike slammed him on the ground.

If he hadn't been wearing a helmet, he would have died. As it was, he almost died. All the right side of his face is metal, and part of the left side of his face is metal. He's okay, fortunately, but can't get through airport security very well anymore. It's always a pain. But if it wasn't for that helmet, he wouldn't be here. So I certainly understand that.

I also spent several years working for the Mustard Seed at one of their rural facilities in an area that has a lot of ATV use and have had to respond to lots of ATV accidents, being some of the only people that are out there and far away from emergency services, so I certainly do know that helmets can help. I myself never do any serious trail riding without a helmet, particularly after witnessing my brother's situation.

I do have to thank the government for recognizing that ATV use on private property is often different than trail riding. I know, for example, that when I'm clearing my driveway from snow with my ATV, if I wear the helmet, I often run into the garbage can or the side of the garage or stuff because I have trouble seeing as I'm removing snow. You know, if I'm moving hay for the horses, that stuff, I'm clearly not operating at that speed. The minister and the government recognized that, and I thank them for that.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon and several members on both sides of this House and I represent areas that include a large amount of what we affectionately call in our constituencies the west country, which is the eastern slopes of Alberta and Alberta's backyard, their playground. We have a lot of ATV use inside those constituencies, particularly at certain times of the year. Sadly, I can't remember the last long weekend when I have not read about a fatality inside my constituency on a long weekend, which emphasizes the importance of this legislation.

My community is already taxed often with the work that they have to do with what is going on in Alberta's west country, particularly on long weekends, with that type of stuff. Our fish and wildlife officers are already extremely taxed, I believe, often to the detriment of our fish and game in our constituencies. Our forestry officers are often taxed already with other stuff. I think, you know, there's a clear pattern over the years of not enough enforcement officers to deal with the issues that we already have to face inside our constituencies that are important to all Albertans: environmental issues, fish and game issues, dealing with trappers, that type of stuff.

I just want to emphasize again that we are bringing on another enforcement duty to these individuals who are already very, very taxed inside our communities. I know it overlaps the different ministries, but I think it's important. I feel I need to rise on their behalf just to say that this will continue to add to their burden, and it's going to continue to emphasize the need to finally deal with the funding for fish and wildlife and forestry inside our constituencies once and for all.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Swann: I'm interested in hearing the member's comments about age-appropriate limitations on ATV use.

Mr. Nixon: Well, you know, when I'm on my boat, Madam Speaker, it's not the law that I have to wear my life jacket. I have to have a life jacket on the boat in Canada, but I always wear my life jacket when my kids are on the boat because I want to be a good influence on them as a dad, and I think that teaches them a lesson. My kids are so well trained now that as I'm coming in towards the dock, I often like to pop off my life jacket in advance of jumping off, and they get on me right away, so they know that it's a safety issue.

Kids can't make decisions for themselves. Well, they can make decisions for themselves, but sometimes they could be put in situations where, you know, their level of maturity does not allow them to necessarily make the safe decision. They're influenced by the adults that are around them. Certainly, we want to make them safe.

You know, we already have manufacturers' recommendations on bikes. As far as I'm aware, most bikes that I have ever owned recommend that anyone 16 years or older use them. My children have used bikes since younger, but we've always bought ATVs that are age appropriate for them. We reduce the power capacity and all that stuff. I've got to say that my experience is that most of the parents I have ever ridden with in the ATV community were doing that for their children to make sure they didn't put their children in an inappropriate spot. I have not witnessed a tremendous number of problems. I think that's what the hon. member has asked me about, children or younger people being put on bikes that they weren't capable of handling. I personally haven't witnessed much of that.

I'll be honest. Most of the accidents that I have witnessed in my time working in the forest reserve involved alcohol and not very young people. People between, you know, 18 and early 20s are the ones that I witnessed the most, certainly not kids that ride on a regular basis with their families. My experience has been that the families are making sure to put them on appropriate machines.

Again, I think we want to try to make everybody safe, and I think this bill goes a long way to at least making sure that everybody is wearing a helmet. I know they save lives. As I said earlier when I stood up, I think that's important. I also trust Alberta parents, though, to make the best decisions for their children.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I don't want to get too in-depth on this, but I've been a motorcyclist myself since about the age of 12. With good fortune and good luck and probably a little bit of skill, I've managed not to have any accidents in that period of time. However, my older brother at about the age of 16 did have an accident, and since that day I've worn a full-face helmet. In fact, I don't feel comfortable hopping onto a motorcycle until I put a full-face helmet on for self-preservation.

I know that there's some controversy around this bill. It might be a bit heavy handed, but my concern really is for the safety of the majority of people here. If we can save one life – my wife has a cousin who was in a motorcycle accident. You know, these accidents occur in the backcountry, and he was riding what probably was a motorcycle that may have been a little bit overpowered for him at the age of about 13. He's now getting close to 40 years old, and he's had a brain injury for that entire period of time. It has deeply affected his life and his family's life, and I'd like to think that we would do everything possible to avoid that happening to anyone.

We can argue about decisions and freedom and whatnot, but I think it's a good precedent and a good habit to set. Even if we were to allow adults to have discretion, I would hope that they would be wise enough. I think some previous members have said that those who don't wear helmets will suffer the fate of Darwinism, but I think that maybe we need to be a bit more responsible than that. We need to protect and set precedents here and set legislation in place to protect people under these circumstances.

Again, there are the exclusions on private land, so if it is a rancher or a farmer and they choose to do that. I know that there are some issues around hunters. I'm hoping that they can find a way through possibly using, you know, some of the little . . .

An Hon. Member: Infantry helmets.

Mr. Gotfried: . . . infantry helmets or whatever, the flat helmets that allow them still to hear.

There could be some safety issues around hunting that should be taken into account, but you know what? We live in a world where there's lots of innovation, and maybe there will be a certain innovation which will meet the requirements of having that helmet safety that they require while not, you know, overly encumbering their opportunities to take part in different types of recreation.

So with some caution, I intend to support this bill because I think that the lives of anyone – again, as mentioned by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, you know, we hear about it, it seems, every long weekend, and if we can not hear about it or we can hear about it less on long weekends, I think that's a positive move on behalf of Albertans to protect their safety and to protect health care, that is having to be delivered in many cases for decades because of breaches or incidents that occur because of it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek's comments. I do appreciate him bringing up hunters. I would like to just briefly ask him a question about trappers. I know that he represents a constituency in the great city of Calgary, where I was born. It's a great place. I do not know – and I don't want to presume – whether he's had experience on a trapline or knows any trappers.

I represent a constituency that has a lot of trappers, and I've had the privilege of spending lots of time on traplines with them. It is a unique environment, and there are some safety concerns with restricting how you can hear and how you can see. You're also stopping constantly at low speeds, working traps or removing trees or debris that are along the way on the trail. Now, I was listening to the hon. leader of the Liberal Party. I don't know. Maybe snowmobiles won't apply to this, and most trappers are on snowmobiles as they work their traplines. I don't know where that's at, to be honest.

I do wonder, for a member from a riding that doesn't have trappers as a regular thing coming into the coffee shops or stopping by the office to visit, what his thoughts are about some of the concerns that have been brought up by some of our members on possibly getting an amendment or at least encouraging the government to maybe work with the Alberta Trappers Association going forward, to try to get this right during the regulatory stage to make sure that they're safe as they do their work on the traplines, recognizing the uniqueness of them.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Fish Creek, did you wish to respond?

Mr. Gotfried: Madam Speaker, you know, I think that the opportunity. . .

Mr. Rodney: It's Fish Creek. You've got trappers.

Mr. Gotfried: It's Fish Creek.

Interestingly enough, of course, my constituency borders Fish Creek, where none of these vehicles are allowed. I'm actually quite happy that that's the case, that we don't have to face that. It is the most heavily visited provincial park in Alberta and does not include the use of any types of recreational vehicles on the site.

An Hon. Member: Or traps.

Mr. Gotfried: Or traps.

Again, I think that you raise some good points, that there are some challenges here. There are going to be challenges, but there are with any legislation in terms of how we address doing the right thing versus that some people may or may not be pleased with all of the outcomes of the legislation. But I think, again, there will be some innovations that will allow people to have the recreation that they prefer to have while riding on these vehicles.

You know, I think that there's an opportunity here for responsibility, for individuals to act more responsibly, to protect themselves, and to protect Albertans, really, because we end up bearing the health care costs for injuries and brain injuries that are long term. Again, none of us would wish that on anybody, but it is a public cost that is borne, which may be driven in some cases by responsible and in some cases irresponsible behaviour. Sometimes it's just that incidents and accidents do occur. That's life, and we face that every day.

I think that the concerns that some of the members have raised against this legislation and those that are in support of it are all valid, but I think that this is probably the right approach for us to take, to support this and to protect those that may be irresponsible. We maybe just need to have some legislation to protect them in the instances of the inevitable accidents that do occur.

Thank you to the member for the question. I think that many of us are on the same page on this, and I respect those who have some concerns about it as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a).

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd be interested in the member's comments about whether age 14 is an appropriate age or not to limit access to independent driving of an ATV.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you to the member for the question. You know, having started riding motorcycles myself at the age of 12, I think it's – back in my day at the age of 14 you could ride a motorcycle of 100 CCs or less, and of course I made sure that I had one on the day that I turned 14, so I started riding one a little bit before that. You know, to the member: I'm not sure that the age restriction is going to deliver the right outcome because you're going to have families in the backwoods and you're going to have some opportunities. Quite frankly, because I learned to drive at a young age, maybe that contributed to the fact that I have not had accidents many decades later, because I had made mistakes when I was younger in situations that were not critical and learned a lot about how to handle a motorcycle. I would like to think that learning at a young age is something that is a good thing, but it doesn't necessarily mean that we . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much. I want to thank all members for their comments and their contribution to this debate. I think that there have been a number of very thoughtful comments that have been made.

We certainly are open to consulting, and we certainly did consult with organizations like the Fish and Game Association. We respectfully disagree with their perspective, but I want to say that they were consulted, and we are aware of their views with respect to that. Nevertheless, the overwhelming number of organizations, particularly ATV-user organizations, were very supportive of this particular direction.

I'd like to talk a little bit about the amendments, for example, for recreational hunters, trappers, and so on. It is the case that people who work professionally in those industries do come under occupational health and safety regulations. I don't know what it's like out in practice there. I have not been out on a trapline. I'll admit here in the House today that it's a deficiency in my experience. There is a requirement that commercial hunters and trappers do wear helmets. That doesn't come from this legislation or from the transportation safety act, but it comes from the Occupational Health and Safety Act and code.

What we're really talking about, then, are recreational hunters and trappers, and there are a few points I'd like to make on this piece. We did do consultation on this, including with our own fish and game officers. It has been suggested that a helmet impairs hearing, sightlines, targeting, aim, and accuracy. I just want to indicate, first of all, that it is illegal to carry a loaded firearm on a motorized vehicle. You are not allowed to shoot from a motorized vehicle, and the motorized vehicle itself potentially provides some considerable disturbance to the game, more so than the act of taking off a helmet would do. I think that it was for those reasons we felt that the particular amendment was not necessary.

We recognize that people use ATVs, that they use them responsibly, and that they don't travel necessarily at high speeds. Nevertheless, at least according to the letter of the law, it would seem that people would use ATVs to get to the area of a hunt, and it would not interfere with their ability to actually do hunting because they're going to have to get off the vehicle, they're going to have to load their weapon, and so on. So the simple act of removing a helmet is not going to interfere nearly as much as some of the other activities. I think we need to make that distinction between how ATVs are used. People may shoot from a moving vehicle or be on a vehicle and carry, but that's certainly not legal, and we're proceeding on the basis of the law as it is. I know that members have these concerns, but I think the important point is that we need to deal with safety.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, I think, made a very good speech in talking about the balance between freedom and safety, you know, and this is a question that we have wrestled with. I don't think that they're always in direct contradiction. Sometimes they can both be accommodated. In any event, it's a balance, and depending on your political philosophy, you might be 60-40 or you might be 40-60, but nobody in this Chamber is 100-0, I think, and that's important.

Nevertheless, we wanted to take a careful approach and to have consensus. I think that was my objective in this matter. Having learned from some previous pieces of legislation the hard way, I think we're trying to adapt those lessons in order to move towards a safer Alberta that respects people's rights and respects communities and traditions. We have certainly recognized the traditions that exist in this province for off-highway vehicles as part of the recreational and occupational lives of people in our province.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I believe that this legislation does strike the right balance, Mr. Speaker. I do want to indicate that I appreciate the support, not just from the government side but from the opposition side as well. I think that moving forward in some degree of unity on these questions is the best way to advance the safety of the public and to show respect to all citizens of the province.

So thank you very much for your support and to those that aren't supporting for their thoughtful comments as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 35 Fair Elections Financing Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my honour and definitely a privilege to rise today and move second reading of Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, on behalf of the minister of democratic renewal.

These changes, Mr. Speaker, build on Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta, our government's first piece of legislation after taking office. Bill 1 put an end to corporations and unions making political donations and was our first step in strengthening the democratic process.

This bill, Bill 35, is our second step. It would rein in election spending by political parties and reduce an individual's contribution limits. Third parties would also no longer be able to fund their agendas through anonymous contributions for political advertising.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a forward-thinking province, and our election laws must reflect that. What we all want are fair elections. To our government, fair elections means that Albertans decide elections, not big money and special interests. Fair elections mean a transparent, level playing field for all candidates and parties. I believe this bill would improve our system and give democracy back to Albertans. These amendments would assure that ideas and not money would determine success or failure at the polls. They would mean that Alberta's political leaders would be chosen based on what they stand for and not be influenced by how much money was spent during political campaigns.

The bill sets limits on how much political parties, candidates, constituency associations, and nomination candidates can spend. Political parties would have a $2 million spending limit starting at the drop of the writ and to the close of polls. Candidates would also need to follow spending limits of $50,000 in an electoral division.

For by-elections, Mr. Speaker, parties would only be able to spend $23,000, which is $2 million divided by 87, the number of electoral divisions in Alberta. Some expenses would not count towards these limits. These include travel costs reasonably related to the election or contest, care for children and other dependants, expenses related to candidates living with a disability, audits and professional fees necessary for compliance with the act, and incidental expenses such as parking and gas incurred by volunteers.

Nomination contestants would also be subject to a spending limit of $10,000, 20 per cent of the spending limit for each electoral division. Both nomination contestants and leadership contestants would be required to register and report to the Chief Electoral Officer when they either announce their intention to seek a nomination, begin incurring costs, or accept contributions. Mr. Speaker, we are long overdue for the increased transparency these changes would provide.

Bill 35 also changes contribution limits so that individuals can only contribute a maximum of $4,000 per calendar year. In addition, the bill ensures that unions and corporations can no longer offer paid staff to work on campaigns. Services provided to candidates and campaigns by volunteers like providing office space or graphic design services would be considered a financial contribution.

Third-party advertising, another area addressed by this bill. During the writ period third parties, whether they are individuals, corporations, or groups, would be limited to $150,000 for advertising, and no more than $3,000 of that amount can be used to promote or oppose the election of one or more candidates in any one electoral division. Albertans would also know who is paying for third-party advertising through a sort of sunshine list. Third parties must disclose contributions received for political advertising to Elections Alberta through public reports available for anyone to view.

Mr. Speaker, democracy is really an amazing process, and processes can always be improved. That said, we should keep striving for that next improvement. Alberta's election and spending contribution laws currently lag behind other Canadian jurisdictions, and that's unacceptable. Albertans deserve a fair and modern system. We deserve a political environment that fosters and expands political participation for all candidates in every constituency in our great province. We deserve an even playing field free of influence from those with deep pockets. As the great late Jack Layton said, "Democracy matters, because all of us need to be able to make a difference." The Fair Elections Financing Act would ensure that we can all make that difference.

I certainly look forward to the debate that will probably be ensuing once we get going on this, and I look forward to hearing comments from all members of this House, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The chair would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to declare that I am going to be recusing myself from further participation in the discussion and voting on Bill 35. I am a guarantor on a loan to the New Democratic Party of Alberta, and the Ethics Commissioner has advised me that I should recuse myself out of an abundance of caution although it is not essential.

The Speaker: Given that, I think you should leave the House, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about Bill 35. I do want to start off by talking about contribution limits. My party, the Wildrose Party, the Official Opposition, has long had concerns with the contribution amounts that were available to people within our political system in this province, something I think that we shared often along the way with members from the current government party, particularly when they were in opposition. The amount of $15,000 for one individual times two when you enter into a general election would mean during most cycles that one individual could spend upwards of $75,000, roughly, donating to one particular party. We think that's too much.

I also want to point out, though – I might be anticipating a little bit, Mr. Speaker – some of the government's reaction to some of the things that we'll have to discuss shortly as we debate this bill. I do anticipate, because this is what I have witnessed so far in regard to talking about this particular legislation or issues associated with this legislation, that the government is going to get up and they're going to say: all the opposition parties want to put big money in politics. That's what they have done the whole way. Hopefully now, because we've gotten in front of that issue, we could clear it up right away so that they won't waste their time with that, and we'll be able to discuss some of the important issues around our democracy and Bill 35, that they've brought forward in this House today.

Let me again be very clear, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that it is important. We believe very much in keeping big money out of politics. In fact, every opposition party in this Assembly voted with the government to do that during committee and agreed that that was an important and valuable thing for the people of Alberta and for our system. In fact, if you look at some of the motions that were brought forward during the all-party committee, this party, the Wildrose Party, the Official Opposition, often tried to lower the limits more than the government wanted to lower the limits.

Mrs. Littlewood: That's ridiculous.

Mr. Nixon: It's on the record. We could check Hansard if the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville would like to.

It's clear that there were some discussions during the committee and that the concept of lowering the limits was shared by all parties. There is absolutely no doubt about that. The record is clear. That's where the Wildrose Party stands, and I'm sure you're going to hear that from other members as they rise to speak about that.

With that part of this legislation there, we think that the numbers in general that are being brought forward in this bill are a compromise, particularly the number around $4,000. If you look at the debate through committee, that was a compromise by all parties. You know, this party, for example, wanted $1,000 for constituency associations, not $4,000. That is lower. I know the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville is laughing about that, but that is lower, and there is a clear record of that.

But there are other things now. If we're understanding, Mr. Speaker, we all agree on dealing with the contribution limits. We should celebrate that. Every party agrees on dealing with that going forward, and that probably means that we got something right. But there are other issues inside this legislation that are concerning, and I am looking forward to talking about it as we move on with the different stages of this bill, particularly when we get to Committee of the Whole. Hopefully, we may be able to work on all sides of the aisle to try to make this legislation very good because it has to do with all of our democracy. It has to do with the democracy of Albertans. We will sincerely be bringing forward some stuff, and we do hope that the government listens to that with some sincerity and at least evaluates that from their perspective.

One of the big areas that I want to talk about in second reading, though, is the concept that big money will now be out of politics with this bill. With Bill 1 we got union and corporation donations out. Again, all parties agreed on that, and we got it done. With this bill we'll be able to get limits on how much people can contribute to political parties and the candidates, and we'll be able to get that done. But we have not dealt with the last piece of big money in politics, and that is the fact that the government can still do whatever they want with their advertisement budget.

There's nothing in this that deals with the private member's bill that was brought forward by my good friend the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler that at the time was stopped in the Legislature, and then the government changed their mind – to their credit, I thought at the time – brought it back, and then referred it to committee. Nothing has been done on that issue. In fact, there is stuff within this bill that removes some of the language around government advertisement that I think is concerning. I do look forward to talking about that in Committee of the Whole.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that while we do agree that we should lower the limits, if we lower the limits for every other political party except the governing party, that can still use their government resources to influence by-elections in particular and to influence other things during election processes, big money is still in politics. It's just taxpayer-funded money now, which is a shame. Just a shame. Hopefully, we can address that issue.

Another issue that caused a lot of friction within the committee process was around the fact that this side of the House, every political party on the opposition side of the House, uses constituency associations. Constituency associations are a big part of this bill. They play a major role within this legislation and are very relevant. But the NDP, while they do have constituency associations, during the 2015 campaign according to their own reports never got one donation to those constituency associations. In fact, it's been pointed out by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster that some of those constituency associations have the same CFO for a large number of them. I don't remember the number but definitely over two dozen. He's a really busy CFO.

Now, there's nothing wrong, Mr. Speaker, with the NDP not wanting to use constituency associations. That's the way they structure their party. I believe that's their right, and all the power to them. But every other party in this Assembly uses constituency associations and during the entire process has made very clear that this will cause serious problems to the grassroots structures of our parties. It's going to cause conflicts. It's going to cause people, volunteers, who make our political process work – we have to all agree on that. Volunteers are what make our political process work. It's going to cause them to accidentally be in situations where they may be breaking the law and not even know it. It's going to cause parties to have conflicts with each other on donations. They aren't going to be able to communicate. In our view, in the view of the executive committee in my party, the exact words are: this is going to kneecap the structure of our party at a time that it advantages this government, the incumbent government, because they don't use that structure.

Instead of working with all of the parties to understand how different parties work within our democracy, to accommodate it within the limits, it appears, certainly, now that we see the legislation come forward, that the NDP wants to continue to try to handicap the opposition parties to benefit themselves. That's what it appears like to us. So I certainly do look forward to talking about that in Committee of the Whole.

Now, lastly, I am disappointed that the all-party committee on ethics and accountability, that was brought forward to look at this bill, was not allowed to complete its work. I think that has a bearing on the trouble that we will see with this legislation. The parts that the government has gotten wrong are because they never allowed that process to finish.

Now, the government will get up and they'll say: the opposition was filibustering, and they were trying to stop the whole process. But let's be clear, Mr. Speaker, that during that process the government members that were on that committee spent most of their time trying to get motions passed that would require taxpayers to pay for political parties' campaign expenses. Yes, if you want to ask if I was arguing about that, darn right I was arguing about it because my constituents have made it very clear to me that that is inappropriate. So because the government did not like the fact that we were arguing back and saying, "This is wrong; Albertans don't want to pay for your political expenses," they continue to try to use it as an excuse that the opposition was filibustering. We didn't even get to the point of filibustering. We were talking about the wrong decision the government was going to make.

In the end the government made the right decision, and it's a darn good thing for Albertans that all the opposition parties continued to fight for them, or the government would have made a terrible decision. They would have paid for their campaign expenses with the taxpayer dollars of the great people of this province.

Then, lastly, in anticipation because I already hear it coming from the heckles, they're going to accuse the opposition that the reason we didn't get to finish the committee was because we walked out one evening. But let's talk about the facts of that. This government never called more than half a dozen meetings for the first nine months or so of that committee. So the opposition parties stood up and said: "This is wrong. You won't schedule meetings. You're not taking this seriously, not taking it seriously at all, not calling meetings despite the opposition repeatedly, both in the press and in person, saying to call the meeting, that we've got important work to do." They stood up in their right to protest what the government was doing. That is different.

Over the summer my colleagues from every party on the opposition side of this Assembly participated with the government members in many, many committee meetings as they worked towards this. In the end, Mr. Speaker, the government disregarded the work that committee did and did not let it finish its work because they were frustrated because this side of the House was calling them out for trying to use taxpayer dollars to pay for their expenses. That's a fact. That's a fact. They were very frustrated by that, so they stopped the work that would happen on that despite the fact that in the end they agreed with us. In the end they agreed with us. They said: yeah, that was a terrible decision. In the end they agreed with us. To me, that shows that we were doing good work and that they should thank us for that, though I have mentioned before, Mr. Speaker, that never has the government risen and said, "Thank you for stopping us from making that terrible mistake," and recognized that the opposition was doing its job.

Now, I will close with this. While we agree with the contribution limits and we do hope that we can fix this bill to make it right for Albertans, the parts that we are bringing up often are inside baseball for most people who don't participate in the political process, but they are very, very serious. They can damage the way the opposition run their parties in this province. The governing party could be opposition again one day. They should think about that. Any time that you have the Alberta Party, the Liberal Party, the PC Party, and the Wildrose Party one hundred per cent in agreement, the people of Alberta should be asking what their government is up to, and they should be having a look to see what is going on.

With that said, I do look forward to hearing some of the comments and having some discussions in Committee of the Whole to see if we can get some of the serious problems with this bill fixed for the people of Alberta. I also, Mr. Speaker, look forward to hearing from the government members and to them recognizing the mistake that they were making in committee and the waste of effort that they put into their committee in trying to bring forward legislation and motions that would allow their campaign expenses to be paid for by the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got a lot to say about this bill. As you know and as members know, I spent a lot of time on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. In fact, I attended every single one of 20 meetings in person, and a lot of work went into that process. It started with such optimism. It was in June 2015 that the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition got together to announce the creation of an all-party committee to review four bills: the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Election Act, and the Conflicts of Interest Act. Later Bill 203, which dealt with government advertising, was also referred to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

Now, as much as we started off with some optimism, it became fairly clear early on that there were going to be some challenges. One of the things that I pushed very hard for early in the committee was proper consultation, to take this committee around the province to talk about democracy with Albertans where they live. There was great push-back from the government side on this. They adjourned my motion. They turned it down. I made a motion to consult Albertans, and they turned the motion down using their majority. Let's just unpack that for a minute, Mr. Speaker. A committee set up to review four, soon to be five, of the most important laws governing our core democratic institutions in this province is going to sit in a windowless room in Edmonton, and they're going to talk about democracy in the ultimate ivory tower by ourselves. That was the plan.

Now, we pushed back very hard on that, and ultimately the government acquiesced and said: "Well, you know what? Maybe we'll do kind of an online consultation. We'll invite submissions. We'll perhaps ask some people in." I wasn't happy with that, Mr. Speaker. I find it remarkable that as we stand in this House ready to debate Bill 37 – and what is Bill 37? Bill 37 is supplementary supply, funding of $1.45 million for the Electoral Boundaries Commission to travel the province, to eight different locations not once but twice, to solicit input from the people of Alberta on electoral boundaries. Electoral boundaries are very important. I would suggest to you that they are in no way one one-hundredth of 1 per cent as important as the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, as the Election Act, as the whistle-blower protection act, or as the Conflicts of Interest Act. This is the legislation that governs how Albertans elect the people who represent them. That is fundamental, at the core of democracy.

Now, I'm not suggesting we shouldn't travel the province and spend a million and a half dollars doing that, but I note the tremendous irony that this committee was allowed almost exactly 10 per cent of that amount of money. We are going to spend in this province 10 times what we spent on reviewing democracy, Mr. Speaker, on electoral boundaries.

We had an opportunity to engage Albertans in a way that they'd never been engaged before. That is something that I know while in opposition this government advocated for very strongly from this exact spot where I stand on the floor of this Assembly. But we were profoundly disappointed how quickly things change. There's something that happens, clearly, in the two-and-a-half sword lengths between here and the other side of the House. There's some mindset shift. I don't know what it is, and it baffles me. I hope someday to try to fight that off, the scourge of being dragged into thinking like a majority government that you not only can but must impose your will.

Now, let's talk about the scale of the project that we undertook when the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee was struck. I want to be really clear about some of the things I've heard from the government side, from the Government House Leader, in particular, about exactly what happened near the end of the committee. To understand that, let's understand what happened earlier on. Early on Senior Parliamentary Counsel was asked: has any committee of the Alberta Legislature ever considered four pieces of legislation in a single year? Her answer was: not only has it never been done in Alberta; it's never been done in Canada and, to the best of her knowledge, it's never been done anywhere in the Commonwealth.

That is remarkable. Do you know why that is, Mr. Speaker? This is where I will give the government their due. It is not the government's fault that it takes more than a year to review four pieces of legislation. It isn't. It simply takes time. How long did it take us to get through the whistle-blower protection? Well, we started off, and we invited submissions. We got our feet under us in the committee. People came and gave us thoughtful submissions in person. Many dozens of Albertans, stakeholder groups and individual Albertans, wrote to the committee and gave us their feedback. We then deliberated thoughtfully on that.

Now, we only had about half a dozen meetings in the first seven months, but in the last five months of the committee we had 13 meetings, for a total of 20. We worked through the summer. We worked full days, multiple days in a week. Let it not be said that anyone on that committee did not work hard because every single person – and I have a tremendous amount of respect for the work the chair did in wrangling a pretty unruly bunch. There were challenging times, unquestionably. But we all worked hard. The government worked hard. The opposition worked hard. Everyone worked hard.

We got through whistle-blower protection on July 6. Our next meeting was July 26, almost two months to the day before the end of the mandate of the committee. We didn't start debating and deliberating changes to the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act until the 26th of July 2016. There's absolutely no way – and I can only imagine and would hope in my heart of hearts that the Government House Leader would agree with me – that it is possible to give thoughtful, thorough consideration to a bill as complex as the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act in a month or less and then in time to actually put together a report.

This committee unanimously – that includes the NDP members – agreed to request from this Assembly an extension of the committee given the scale of that work. The fact that that has not been granted and that the committee was not allowed to finish its work is shameful, Mr. Speaker. There's a tremendous amount of work that was undone on the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Some was done – a lot was done – but we barely touched on third parties. Yet we see third-party advertising in this bill.

Lets also talk about how things went once we did get to deliberation. Quite often; in fact multiple times, government members brought in motions that they read into the record. Parliamentary Counsel went: "That motion is out of order. Hang on. Give me a minute." They worked on it back and forth, and we would spend 15, 20 minutes. Sometimes we'd take an adjournment just to get the motion right. Fine. The motion is read. Then an opposition member invariably would say, "Have you thought of this?" and there'd be this sort of rustling on the other side, and they'd go: "Oh. We hadn't thought of that. Okay. We're going to have to adjourn." Then they'd come back and propose a subamendment.

Then the same process would repeat. Parliamentary Counsel would finally get the wording correct, and after a bit of debate an opposition member would say, "Well, had you thought of this?" and the government would go: "Oh. We hadn't thought of that. Okay. We'd better adjourn." And this would happen again and again and again. Nine times the NDP amended their own motion.

If we want to talk about adjournment, Mr. Speaker, the NDP government members adjourned debate on their own motions 23 times. That has nothing – nothing – to do with the opposition. Nothing. So to claim that the only reason this committee took long, that the only reason this committee went long was opposition intransigence and silly games is disingenuous and offensive. That is not factually correct for what happened.

I'm running short on time. I will run through some of the specifics on the bill. I want to get big money out of politics. I always have. I believe eliminating corporate union donations is good. The $4,000 limit: I think that's fine; $15,000 to $30,000 was far too much. I think a $2 million limit on campaign spending by a party, with reasonable exceptions, makes sense. A $50,000 constituency spending limit with fewer reasonable expenses makes sense.

But I want to pick up on what the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre said earlier. There are certain parties in this Assembly, certain parties in this province who operate using constituency associations as a means of channelling the desire for grassroots democracy, and those are the Alberta Liberal Party, the Wildrose Party, the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta, and the Alberta Party. That is the way we choose to operate.

The way the NDP chooses to operate is to exercise their right to tell Elections Alberta that their constituency associations cannot accept donations. What that means is that everything is done centrally within the party, and the party doles out money to the constituency associations or the candidates as needed when an election comes. That's legitimate. That's allowed, but that is not the way the rest of the parties work. As a result, any changes that burden constituency associations with additional quarterly reporting have a disproportionately negative impact on parties that choose to use constituency associations as a way of channelling grassroots democracy. That is especially problematic for smaller parties and emerging parties. Larger parties at least have the option of paying a staff member to make sure that all that filing is done properly.

The committee recommended – unanimously, I will note – to eliminate quarterly reporting for constituency associations. What has the government done? It's increased the amount of effort required for constituency associations to report. For anyone who's ever sat on a board, you know that the hardest position to fill is the financial position. The NDP has found that. Their solution is to have one person, the CFO, for 34 of their constituency associations. That's legitimate and allowed within the bounds of the rules; it's not the way other parties choose to do it. We, especially those of us in emerging parties, are going to have a very difficult time getting enough volunteers with the capability to co-ordinate all of that effort. We're not quite sure what it means yet, but it's likely going to force us to start to operate more like the NDP, which gives people fewer on-ramps to participate in grassroots democracy in this province.

That's not, I think, a desirable outcome, nor is the overreach of involving a party nomination contest in the disclosure process. This party on the government side claims that they want to involve more women, more indigenous people, more people of colour, more people in poverty in politics, but you've created a barrier where people who choose to seek a nomination, perhaps just to see what the process looks like, give it a try, possibly prevail, possibly not, now have to fill in complicated Elections Alberta paperwork. That creates a barrier.

These are not people who are going to put themselves before the people of Alberta. Only one of the particular candidates who are nominated will actually seek election for this Chamber, and once they do, they will fall within the rules. I have a significant concern with that, not only the fact that it will create a barrier for people who do not have the wherewithal to fill in the required paperwork, but it also creates a barrier for people who just say: "Ah, forget it. It's a headache. I don't want to bother." And like some of the changes we've seen with AISH, it's going to reward people who are good at filling in paperwork as opposed to the people that perhaps we'd like to see in here.

Other concerns I have: the $4,000 limit to a constituency association. That means that conceivably one MLA or one candidate could find three friends, each of them giving $4,000 once a year over four years. That's $48,000 of the $50,000 you need to raise. You want to get big money out of politics? If you want the influence of a small number of people over the overall process out of politics, you will do what the committee recommended unanimously, which is to reduce the contribution limit back to $1,000. What this bill does is that it increases the contribution limit to constituency associations four times. Perhaps it's accidental in drafting the bill and not having paid attention to the thoughtful deliberation from the committee, but I would really encourage the government to reconsider that.

As we finish, then, on the changes that have an impact on those smaller parties, I just want to be really clear about what I worry is happening here. What I see happening is an attack against emerging and smaller parties. The larger, established parties have the wherewithal to work the system, to actually comply, and it reinforces their position. What I fear is trying to be set up here is a two-party state in Alberta, where the only choices are on two poles. Alberta is not traditionally a two-party state. Canada is traditionally not a two-party country. Our system does not work well when there are only two parties. We see what happened in the United States when there were only two parties. Albertans are having to make a choice between two bad options. Our system works well when the opportunities arise for other parties to rise up. The changes in this bill will constrain the ability of our party to grow and constrain the ability of emerging parties, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), a question to the Member for Calgary-Elbow? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes, if you don't mind. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the remarks from the Member for Calgary-Elbow, but I am concerned by some real misinformation that he seems to have about how constituency associations operate within the New Democratic Party of Alberta.

Now, I put my name up for nomination with the Edmonton-Centre NDP in February of last year. At that time I had the opportunity to meet with the members of that EDA, who have been part of that EDA for many, many years. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, this is grassroots, local, community democracy. These people live in Edmonton-Centre. They ran a campaign on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development and Trade when he first ran to be an MLA. They supported the Minister of Education when he first ran to be an MLA. They have been part of this, they live in the community, and there are a large number of people in this community who have been part of that EDA and supported multiple candidates. So let's be clear. Our constituency associations offer all of the same opportunities.

Mr. Nixon: How much money is in the account?

Mr. Shepherd: In terms of how we operate our accounts, the Edmonton-Centre NDP Constituency Association operates its own bank account. I regularly accept contributions from people who want to support our constituency association. We take in money from fundraising events for our constituency association. We choose to process those payments through the central party, who then remits back to us the portion of it which we retain for our constituency association and keep in our own bank account.

To be clear, the constituency association operates independently. We look after our own campaign financing. We co-ordinate some aspects of that with our central party; however, we are independent and work as a fully functioning grassroots-level association. We invite people from the community to join us. We're very happy to have many people from the community come out to join us. I can tell you that through my work, in my work out in our community we continue to grow that association, an association that, I repeat, existed long before I came along, with whom I met and discussed things before I even put my name forward to be a candidate and whose approval I sought and whose membership I reached out to in working to become the candidate and now have the honour of serving as the MLA for Edmonton-Centre on behalf of the Alberta NDP.

I can appreciate that the member may have some concerns about certain approaches. I understand that he may have some concerns about the way some other constituencies may have been run, perhaps in other areas. But I can tell you that there are multiple EDAs on behalf of the Alberta NDP that have the same kind of history as Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Nixon: We don't have EDAs, David. Welcome to Alberta.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, whatever term you want to use to call it.

The fact is that our constituency association operates in the same way. It has grassroots, it has people from the community, we choose our candidates according to those votes, and we handle our own finances for our own campaigns. So by all means, I appreciate that the member may have some concerns about other aspects, but I felt it was important to make some comments, as is allowed under 29(2)(a), to clarify the manner in which we operate and to be clear that he should not be impugning all constituency associations with one broad brush.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I've got the Elections Alberta reports up here, and I see zero receipted contributions for number 31, Edmonton-Centre NDP Constituency Association, zero funds. Oh, sorry. I apologize: $2.42 of other income.

Look, the fact is that, you know, to the point, everything in the NDP happens centrally. That's their choice. It's allowed within the rules. That's fine. They're the only party that works that way. So when you create rules that support your party, you are not doing something in the best interests of Alberta; you are doing something in the best interests of the NDP. Albertans will see through it, Mr. Speaker. There's nothing that Albertans hate more than someone who wants to tilt the playing field to their advantage to disadvantage someone else. All that Albertans want is a fair fight. There was a tremendous opportunity here to build something, and they've squandered that opportunity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I certainly have enjoyed the discussion thus far, and I appreciate the comments that have been brought forward. You know, I will tell you that my participation in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee was an interesting experience and one that, regrettably, has not been decided by this government to be extended, as was unanimously requested by committee members.

But I want to make a few statements directly from the outset. First of all, the Progressive Conservative caucus is in favour of electoral finance reform. I want to be very clear on that.

Secondly, I want to make it very clear for those who perhaps have forgotten that the record will show that we voted in favour of Bill 1 to restrict union and corporate donations to political parties. We are also in favour of decreased contribution limits. As the Member for Calgary-Elbow has stated, the limits that were in place before were very high, and I don't think they were appropriate. We were in agreement with the reduction of those limits. The $4,000 limit that is in the current legislation: we're, I think, in general in favour of that. We're also in favour of some mechanism for placing a limitation on spending with the proviso that that spending limitation has to be applied fairly. When I say "applied fairly," it means it has to be applied not just to political entities, but it has to be applied to an extent to third-party advertising, and it has to be applied to entities that are not covered under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

It also has to be applied fairly to the government. We've seen a government that has just finished spending 4 and a half million dollars promoting a climate leadership plan, which would be more than double the amount that a political party is allowed to spend in an entire election campaign. I think that is something that needs to be dealt with.

Now, there's been a lot of discussion, both here in the Chamber and also outside, and the Member for Calgary-Elbow gave, I think, a very good summary as far as the work of the committee. You know, I will say that I don't think we're going to come to any sort of consensus here within this Chamber about the work that the committee did, and I think it's more valuable for us to move forward and decide and have some debate on the legislation in front of us. To start finger pointing and blaming as to what happened during the course of the committee discussions I don't think is terribly productive.

But I will say that I was concerned by the number of recommendations from the committee, some of which were approved unanimously by the committee, that have now been changed inexplicably in this piece of legislation coming forward. I will give you an example. The initial recommendation for the limit on campaign spending for a constituency association was $40,000 and $50,000 for certain designated northern Alberta constituencies. Now, there was some concern expressed about that. At the next meeting, after an adjournment of the debate by the NDP committee members, quite inexplicably and quite arbitrarily that number was increased to $70,000 and $80,000, but there was no explanation.

There was no rationale given for that. In fact, it looked very much like a number picked out of thin air. That was the new number that was recommended, and that was the number that, in fact, was passed by the committee. Now, quite inexplicably, that number in the legislation has been changed to $50,000. We don't know why. It hasn't been explained what the rationale for that is.

Furthermore, a second area that was changed was the maximum contribution, not the $4,000 part but the part that could be given to a constituency association. Now, the previous limit was $1,000 per year. That $1,000 per year was very practical in terms over the course of an election cycle that it meant a single donor could not fund a significant portion of a campaign, especially given that the campaigns did not have a spending limit. Now, we in the committee pointed out that a $4,000 limit, even when applied to a $70,000 campaign, meant that if you had five relatively wealthy donors over the course of an election cycle, they could fund the entire campaign expenses. This, of course, sent the NDP off scurrying to their backrooms to determine some way that they could correct this obvious oversight, which they even said was an oversight on their part.

So now we have a situation where we don't have the limitation of $1,000 to the constituency association. They've reverted to the $4,000 to the constituency annually, which means that rather than restricting the donations allowed, they've in fact quadrupled the allowable constituency annual donation, which seems to me to run counterintuitive to getting big money out of politics. But now we're in a situation where literally, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow pointed out, three donors over the course of a four-year election cycle could completely bankroll a $50,000 election campaign. Mr. Speaker, I think that that flies in the face of the stated goal of getting big money out of politics.

Many constituency associations spend a lot of time and effort engaging constituents, engaging donors, having annual or sometimes twice a year fundraising events that are dedicated towards building up, if you will, a campaign war chest for a political campaign. Now, basically, all you really need are three relatively generous friends. To me, that, I think, defeats the purpose of trying to get as many people engaged in the process as possible. I think it's a significant flaw.

Now, I will give the government credit or whoever in the government backrooms took a look at the committee's recommendations and decided to alter them; that is, whoever that mysterious person is or persons are. They did drop the rebates of 50 per cent of campaign expenses to both parties and candidates who receive 10 per cent of the vote total. That was a good move, and I'm glad that that is not part of the current bill. Certainly, that is something that was not supported by Albertans, and I would suggest that it was the single most opposed decision made by the committee during the entire time.

The final one in that exchange – and there are others, but the final major one was with regard to reporting by the chief financial officers of constituency associations. We had asked that that be moved from a quarterly requirement to an annual requirement. The Chief Electoral Officer, in fact, agrees with that. The Chief Electoral Officer has indicated that one of the things that they spend a great deal of time with in their office is processing these quarterly returns from constituency associations and that, in his opinion, it does not add to the transparency of the overall process and to the transparency that we're trying to strive for in electoral financing. So we agreed as a committee that that should move to annually.

Now, inexplicably, it's been moved back to quarterly, and when we ask, "Well, why quarterly, and what would that require?" we're even told that the quarterly reporting would become more meaningful. I'm not entirely sure what "more meaningful" means, but it concerns me that it does create an onerous amount of work for constituency associations that actually have active fundraising events and have active fundraising.

The lack of restriction on government spending either during or before the writ period is something that I've already mentioned. Mr. Speaker, this is a concern. Now, I asked a question to the Chief Electoral Officer during the course of things. I said: if greater restrictions are placed upon political parties, constituency associations, and other entities over which the Chief Electoral Officer has purview, will that result in more of it going to other entities? And he told me that, without any doubt, the experience in other constituencies and other jurisdictions has been that it absolutely does drive it into other areas where it's not controlled, not monitored. So one of the unintended consequences of putting too high a level of restriction on both spending as well as donations is that it simply forces that into areas that are no longer being monitored by the Chief Electoral Officer. We have seen that in other jurisdictions, and I don't think it is something that we want to see in Alberta.

5:20

The second area that I have a tremendous amount of concern with, that resulted in a rather spirited debate on September 9, is this government's decision that the state should become involved in internal party affairs. It's stunning to me that they think that's a good idea. Mr. Speaker, that is a level of overreach that everyone who loves democracy, everyone who feels that political parties should at least have the freedom to operate without interference from the state should be very concerned about. It is a principle that is of great concern when we talk about the nomination process. The NDP members of the committee felt that it was important now for the government to step into an arena that it has never had any involvement with before; that is, regulating nomination contests. This is a concern for a whole long list of reasons. The principle of doing that is wrong. It also creates a significant increase in costs in the Chief Electoral Officer's office. In Elections Alberta, he suggested on questioning, it would cost approximately $400,000 more per year.

In addition, there's a practical aspect. Nominations typically occur shortly before an election. If we have 87 constituencies and if we say that there are four nomination contests per constituency and there are, say, four candidates running per nomination contest, this would result in over a thousand returns having to be processed by the Chief Electoral Officer's office and approved in the time, then, before the next election comes. Since many nominations contests, in fact, happen shortly before the writ is dropped, in some cases even after the writ is dropped, how are we to know that the Chief Electoral Officer has properly done the due diligence that is required on these nomination returns? The short answer, of course, is that we can't.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, this level of overreach may not even be constitutional. In 2007 the Ontario Court of Appeal in the case of Longley versus Canada specifically dealt with this. A quote from the judgment was read into the record by the Chief Electoral Officer, that:

it deals with discussing the Chief Electoral Officer's restraint from involvement in political party affairs and specifically states that "any regulatory regime governing political parties must interfere as little as possible with the autonomy and internal affairs of political parties."

How political parties choose their candidates, how they conduct their nomination contests is no business of the state. Once the nominee is chosen, then they become part of the overall electoral process, but how they make that decision of a candidate is certainly not the purview of the state.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to move an amendment. I would ask the pages to come and get the amendment from me. I have the requisite number of copies, and the original is on top for the Clerk's table.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that there needs to be some additional work done on this bill. Electoral financing is very important, and we did achieve some measure of agreement on a lot of different aspects of this, but there's still a lot of work to be done.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, it's regrettable that the Ethics and Accountability Committee was not chosen to be reconstituted in some way, but we do have other committees that can take a look at this. With that in mind, I'd like to read into the record that I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

Mr. Speaker, it's my statement, and I put forward that there is still a great deal of work to be done here and that it is important that the committee, a new committee in this case, take the opportunity to review some of the deliberations that were taken by the Ethics and Accountability Committee. I think this referral motion would give them the opportunity to do that. I think that it's important that as we discuss electoral financing, that we look at some of the changes that were made from the time that the committee spent literally hours and hours and hours on this to some backroom, some mysterious person, who has decided to change those recommendations. That, to me, is a concern, how those changes could be made.

Mr. Speaker, it is with that that I would encourage all members of the Chamber to support this referral motion, and I certainly look forward to the debate both on the referral motion and on Bill 35 in general.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, we are on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. It'll be identified as REF1.

The chair would recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and speak to Bill 35 and the amendment moved by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. I thank him for his substantive contribution to this debate. I think he has a firm grasp of these issues, and I think he served ably on the committee. I think most members of that committee on all sides, at least initially, tried to find common ground across the aisle. I did not serve on that committee, but I've heard from members who did – the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and others – who talked about the, I won't say nonpartisan, but let's say multipartisan nature or constructive partisan nature of that committee and the great work that it started off doing.

I support this amendment for several reasons. First, I believe that all bills should go to a committee. All bills should be heard by the public. They should be heard by experts in their fields and allow for testimony. We do this in Ottawa, and most of us do not hold up Ottawa as a particularly functional model of Westminster democracy. Most of us do not hold up Ottawa as a particularly open and transparent democratic body, but in so many aspects the House of Commons operates on a more democratic basis than this Legislature. They have a real committee system, not just the COW,

Committee of the Whole. They have a real committee system that all bills go through, and they can hear from witnesses, people who support a bill, people who do not support a bill, people who want to see thoughtful and reasoned amendments to a bill. We have no opportunity for that here. The all-party Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee did have that opportunity, and it did for a time achieve, I think, some very positive results for Albertans and some positive recommendations, but that committee did eventually go off the rails.

We saw that committee over time become increasingly partisan, that the work across the aisle between the government members, the Official Opposition, the third party, and the two independents, that worked together for a time on some issues, but then it devolved into a much more partisan and aggressive way of doing things. There is a time for aggressive partisanship. I'll be the first to admit that, Mr. Speaker, but an all-party committee dedicated to reforming our democratic institutions is not one of those places.

We saw, unfortunately, the chair of that committee act as a whipped member of one particular side, consistently voting with the government on tie votes to get to ram the government's agenda through at every single stage.

You know, democratic reform is not like most other pieces of legislation that we deal with. When we deal with a budget, we expect that there will generally be sharp divisions between the government and the opposition. When we deal with many bills, in fact, there will be sharp divergence between government and opposition, and we accept that 50 per cent plus one of the votes in a Legislature is a good enough margin by which to pass legislation. For most pieces of legislation that is true even if we very much disagree or are on the 49 per cent side, if we could get up to 49.

But democratic reform, fundamental alterations to our democratic institutions, is different. We expect a higher bar to be set. When governments bring in sweeping changes to the way we elect our government, to the way we govern ourselves in Alberta, it is expected that there will be a degree of all-party agreement or, at the very least, one other major opposition party, a single opposition party, supporting them.

Ottawa is running into this issue right now where the Liberals are trying to ram down a single way of democratic reform against the opposition of the other opposition parties. There's no consensus on how to reform our institutions federally, and as such, federal reform will not have a real degree of legitimacy. Our democratic institutions need to be respected by more than just the party that happens to have the levers of power on one particular day. It has to be respected by all Albertans. There needs to be a broad degree of consensus that the rules are fair when we're making sweeping changes like this.

We saw the all-party committee descend from its very noble original goals where we saw the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition standing shoulder to shoulder, something unprecedented in the modern history of Alberta, in a genuine, hopeful attempt to reform democracy in Alberta. We worked with the government to get big private money out of politics, corporate and union donations.

But then that all-party committee got away from that objective. They were okay with leaving big government money in politics. Advertising during elections with taxpayers' money for partisan purposes is something that members of the government voted to leave in. They fought tooth and nail. Now, I remember when the Government House Leader sat in opposition in a lonely corner of the Legislature, on this side. He was dead against this kind of stuff. Even though he and I had very different opinions on matters of fiscal policy, we generally shared, I believed, a genuine interest in reforming our democratic institutions and getting rid of the unfair advantages that governments have in partisan contests like elections. They believed in that, and they no longer do.

That committee became hijacked by a clear partisan agenda. The committee voted disgustingly to bring in taxpayer subsidies for elections. Now, when we are borrowing $14 billion a year, it is unconscionable that taxpayers would have to support a political campaign, that taxpayers would have to open up their wallets even more to fund the campaign of a party they may or may not agree with. In Strathmore-Brooks just last week we had a fundraiser, and we did it the old-fashioned way. We went to the Patricia Hotel, and we had a nice steak. We raised money the old-fashioned way, Mr. Speaker. We raised money by inviting people in and asking for voluntary contributions. We didn't point a gun at anybody and say: you owe us your . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh, I'm fine with their chirping, Mr. Speaker. I love it. It's okay.

You know, we raise money the open and honest and transparent way, and we raise that money for our constituency association.

Now, I know the Member for Edmonton-Centre stood up and talked about the NDP still using constituency associations. They're shell organizations. They're mere constructs for purposes of nominations and nominations alone. They actually don't raise money. They don't perform the same grassroots function as constituency associations do for the Official Opposition or the third party or the two independent members.

While we are sitting here, Mr. Speaker, I pulled up the Elections Alberta filing for the last quarter for Edmonton-Centre, and do you know what it said? "Nil report." There was nothing to report. There's practically no money in that account because the NDP operates on a centralized model of control very similar to how they like to run governments. Just as the central party of the NDP runs their constituency associations effectively as empty shells, they also like to run their committees that way.

The NDP-dominated committee forced through a series of policies that, thankfully, were not reflected in the final bill. Now, I'm wondering about the section on the votes in the report of the committee that recommended taxpayer subsidies for campaigns. Where did that end up in this bill? Where did that go? I'm certainly glad that it's not here, but we haven't had an answer from the government members as to why that isn't in the bill. Could it perhaps be that one of their political staffers imported from NDP central headquarters in Ottawa, Toronto, or Vancouver moved to gut it because it was politically unpopular? Is it that the cabinet overruled their backbenchers who voted to bring in election subsidies?

We don't know why that was pulled out of the bill. I'm glad that it's not here at all. Taxpayers, I believe, would be outraged if we are using taxpayers' money to support their own election. I know people in Strathmore-Brooks, Mr. Speaker, have no interest in seeing their tax dollars go to seeing these guys re-elected, but you know what? I don't think any amount of money is ever going to see these guys get re-elected in the history of Alberta.

Electoral reform is not a decision for one party, Mr. Speaker. It's not a decision. If we were on the government side of the Legislature, it would be not adequate enough for myself or the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre or the current Leader of the Opposition to stand up and say that we're going to impose a complete reform of the system, and we're going to rig it in our favour and not have the support of a single opposition party. That would be inadequate.

When the federal Conservatives made relatively small changes to the Canada Elections Act, relatively small changes compared to what they're doing here, the federal NDP stood up and cried bloody murder, Mr. Speaker. They called it the Unfair Elections Act. Their federal cousins, who run this party, stood up and called it . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, 23(h), (i), and (j) on that one. The federal party does not run this provincial party or the government. I find that offensive. I certainly think that the hon. member, you know, may be trying to bait members in this House since he enjoys being heckled so much, but the fact of the matter is that he is completely besmirching this government and these members and our party, and I won't stand for it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise in regard to the hon. Government House Leader's point of order. To be clear, the record is clear. The NDP provincially and the NDP federally are the same party. There's the same membership there. It's all there. With that said, I am most interested in the debate. [interjection] I know the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity really wants to stand on the point of order. I hope she does after, but I would like to finish, if that's okay. Thanks.

The hon. member, the Government House Leader, we would not want to see him offended. I don't know why he would be ashamed about his relationship with his federal party, but with that said, I'm happy to withdraw the comments on behalf of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

The Speaker: Thank you very much.

The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks. Please continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was referring to the federated nature of the NDP. We are looking at an electoral overhaul here imposed by the backrooms of the government, obviously, without at least the original support of the backbench members on the government side on the all-party Ethics and Accountability Committee. Obviously, it does not reflect even the government side members because that committee's report, as unsatisfactory as it was, is not reflected fully in this bill.

It is important, when we have a massive overhaul of the electoral system, that there be at least some degree of consensus between parties. When a single party tries to force its will against every single other opposition party in this House – four different parties, Mr. Speaker, represented here – then, clearly, something is wrong. Clearly, they're trying to game the system in their own favour.

There are too many examples here to ignore, Mr. Speaker. This is an important piece of legislation that governs who gets to form government in Alberta. It is governing government. It is too important to allow one party a monopoly on designing a system explicitly designed to favour their own interests.

This is not a bill to get big money out of politics. This is not a bill to make things more fair. This is a bill designed to ensure the re-election of a government that is desperately afraid that it will not be re-elected, Mr. Speaker. That is why we need to send this to a committee. That is why we need to refer this to witnesses and people who can give testimony, and we can hear from people who can give us a more objective and clear-sighted view of how we should properly do electoral reform in Alberta. That's why I will be voting for this motion.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. You're speaking to the amendment REF1, are you?

Mr. Clark: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking in favour of the amendment as proposed by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. In addition to the fact that this committee did not have sufficient time to complete its important work, that was especially true of the review of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, which Bill 35 seeks to amend.

It's very important, I think, that we have an opportunity to continue our work in certain areas. We spent a lot of time on this bill on certain things. A lot of time. We spent a lot of time on donation limits. There were amendments and subamendments and all sorts of different ideas. At the end of the day we came up with, I think, a general consensus.

Mrs. Littlewood: That you say were passed?

Mr. Clark: I'm being prodded by the chair here. My memory is being jogged as to whether or not we actually passed the $4,000. The only reason I could think that was is that it was adjourned four separate times by the NDP.

Donations limits were certainly a topic of debate in discussion, as was the most controversial topic of all, which was using Alberta taxpayer dollars to subsidize political parties. Not my political party or the Member for Calgary-Mountain View's political party; the structure was only going to support bigger parties.

In their wisdom, I will give the government credit for realizing the error of their ways and pulling back on that very poor idea. We talked a lot about that. We talked a lot about loans, and we talked quite a bit about nomination contests, which, again, as we've said, I feel is an overreach. But one of the most important aspects of this bill, as we see emerging in Alberta politics and Canadian politics, is restrictions or lack thereof on third parties.

What's a third party? Well a third party is not the PCs in this house. No. A third party is what is often referred to in the U.S. as a PAC, a political action committee, or a super PAC. That's a real concern. When we have a restriction on what we're able to do within the political sphere, what political parties are allowed to do either in terms of fund raising or in terms of expenditure or where more restrictions are placed on reporting or on nomination contests, money is going to flow outside of the political process. That's a terrible, tremendous concern, I think, to all of us in this House but, far more importantly, to the people of Alberta. The implications of that are that we're going to see more American-style, polarized politics, where you stand up, the I Don't Like This Particular MLA PAC, I Really Love This Particular Party PAC.

Ms Jansen: Alberta Can't Wait.

Mr. Clark: Alberta Can't Wait is one of them. I'm not sure what it is that Alberta can't wait for, precisely.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Me.

Mr. Clark: No one has ever asked that question. I don't think it's the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I don't think that's what Albertans can't wait for. No.

Regardless, Mr. Speaker, those are really important questions. What sorts of restrictions are even possible in a country that values free speech like the province of Alberta? Are the provisions in this bill the only way to deal with that? I don't know.

The reason that we want to dig deeper into these sorts of questions is so that we can get some answers for the people of Alberta and not simply have something imposed upon us, you know, even if the government will claim that they have done some work on it. I don't doubt that they have. But the purpose of a committee is to think through these things, to do so in a public way, and to hear all different perspectives on that.

Do we want more or less restriction on the political action committees? What is the give-and-take between what we want to see happen within the political process and what we want to allow or see happen outside the political process? Have we restricted it too much? I don't have clear answers to these questions because the previous Select Ethics and Accountability Committee didn't have an opportunity to consider them. One of the many reasons why I think a committee is warranted in this case and sending this bill to committee is so that specific area can really be delved into in a lot more detail.

You know, the other aspect of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee we haven't really talked much about, although Strathmore-Brooks did touch on it, is: why is it that the only legislation we see on the floor of the Assembly in this fall sitting is Bill 35, that deals with the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act but not the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, which is something the committee actually reported on? I'm happy to note that the committee was able to come to, I believe, if not entirely unanimous, nearly unanimous support on pretty much every one of those 19 recommendations. So the committee itself I think functioned very well. Again, I want to remind the House that the committee was actually quite a functional group for the vast majority of its time. I'm curious why we don't see that bill on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker, yet we see election finances on the Order Paper.

Just while I have the floor, there was a point made by the Member for Edmonton-Centre about the NDP constituency associations. When you do no filing, no financial filing, you have no burden. It's straightforward. There's no work to be done, and you also don't risk deregistration, nor do you risk facing in this bill a $500 fine. That burden is substantial on the volunteers who run constituency associations. That responsibility is great.

Again, in terms of the committee and the referral motion made by my hon. colleague from Vermilion-Lloydminster, I think it's important that we consider those sorts of things as well. How much time and effort is it going to take for volunteers on the constituency association to deal with that, and what is the impact on Elections Alberta? They've already said that they're going to need more money, in the hundreds of thousands of dollars, substantially more money.

The question that has not been answered for me at any point is: what problem are we trying to solve? Do we have rampant abuse of constituency association funds that we're unaware of? Is this something that Albertans are clamouring for? Do we see rallies on the steps of the Legislature? Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to those questions is: most certainly not, because the committee recommended unanimously, with the support of the ND government majority, to recommend only annual reporting for constituency associations to reduce the burden on volunteers. By reducing the burden on volunteers, you create an on-ramp for more people to get actively involved in politics. That, I would hope, would be one of the objectives of the hon. members of this House. We want more Albertans engaged in politics, not fewer Albertans. That, unfortunately, is a consequence of this bill, intended or otherwise.

I'll give the government the benefit of the doubt. I would hope that they're not trying to tilt the playing field in their direction, but it sure looks that way, Mr. Speaker. It certainly feels that way based on my reading of the bill and my experience in working within constituency associations previous to being an elected member and now working with my own constituency association, just knowing the burden and the amount of work that it takes to file that paperwork as it is now.

I'll also emphasize that the amount of work that's required is no longer just simply a two-page form. I don't know what Elections Alberta is going to come up with, but it's certainly going to be much more complicated than what we deal with now. That is within the bounds of the rules; the NDs have chosen to do it differently, and that's fine. That's absolutely within their right to do so. Other parties do it differently, not just some other parties but all other parties. So it's very difficult for an objective person who was perhaps unfortunate enough to find themselves in the galleries this afternoon to hear arguments on both sides.

To just look at it on the face of it, it feels wrong. It feels wrong to have one party in charge that does things a certain way that's different from everyone else change the rules to fit the way they work rather than the way others work or some combination of the two. That not only feels wrong, Mr. Speaker. I think that is wrong.

So it's very important that we refer this bill to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities to allow for some more thoughtful consideration of all of the different aspects of this bill, including but certainly not limited to the aspects that I have raised. I think that it's not simply about the next election. It really is an opportunity to update and refresh core legislation that governs Alberta's democratic institution. That is something that ought to persevere beyond the next four-year election cycle.

Really, what I worry about, Mr. Speaker, is that once this government takes the approach of tweaking election legislation in a way that favours them, the next government that comes in in 2019 may be tempted to tweak that election legislation in a way that suits that government, and now we get into this cycle. [interjection] I hear the Government House Leader there asking for my assurance that when I am Premier in 2019, I won't do that. I can assure you, Government House Leader, that I will not do that.

Mr. Mason: Mark that down.

Mr. Clark: You've got it in Hansard. It's in Hansard for all time, Mr. Speaker. The world loves and Albertans love an underdog. It's going to be quite a Cinderella story, if I can quote one of the greatest films of all time.

In all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, if we do get into this cycle where we've got a government in charge saying: "Hey, it's our turn. We're going to change election laws and perhaps a raft of other legislation to suit our own political agenda" – in this case it's a very narrow definition of political agenda. It's about how we get elected, how we fund campaigns. So it has a direct impact on the political party of the government of the day. I would really hate to see this just ping-pong back and forth, that every time we change a government, all of a sudden the rules get changed, and things get entrenched to suit the way they work.

I'm not suggesting for a second that it wasn't that way previously because I think there certainly were quite a lot of rules that were put in place that suited the previous 43-year majority government. But let's be clear, Mr. Speaker, there was a real opportunity here and some genuine optimism in creating an all-party committee to review the core legislation that governs Alberta democracy. There was a real opportunity. I would love to be standing on the floor of this Assembly and saying: "You know what? We came up with a report. Not every aspect of that report was unanimous, but we had broad agreement on many aspects. Here we are, and we can debate a bill that reflects that." Gosh, that would have been nice, but unfortunately that didn't happen.

So here we are, and I think the only way out of that hole we find ourselves in is to refer this bill back to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities so that we have an opportunity to finish that important work. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the good news is that a lot of the work is done. A lot of the work is done, and the Standing Committee on Families and Communities would have the opportunity to unearth all of the good work that has already been done by the previous committee. They would be able to review that work, and they would be able to accept many of those motions, I would hope, unanimously and very quickly and then get into simply breaking new ground. That would be, I think, very beneficial for democracy in Alberta. Perhaps they would even consider consulting Albertans on any changes they may like to see.

I'm sure that all those of you who are political watchers, as I am, have noticed that there's a debate and discussion going on on the federal scene about proportional representation and how we elect our MLAs or our MPs. That's a live discussion. There was a committee there that presented a report. Not every one of those recommendations was unanimous. There were certain recommendations that were made by certain groups of MPs. But I will note that that committee was not a government-majority committee. It was at first, and under pressure from Canadians – I think rightly so – the federal government decided to strike that committee in a way that balanced out opposition and government members. And I think that would be very helpful.

Now, the Standing Committee on Families and Communities does not have balance. It is a government-majority committee, but regardless I think there's an opportunity there to really dust this off, perhaps even consider other aspects, including the Election Act, and as that moves forward, I would hope that we have an opportunity to consolidate the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act and the Election Act, which is something that the Chief Electoral Officer had asked of the committee, and the committee had unanimously accepted his recommendation to do so, Mr. Speaker.

With that, I will return to my seat. I would really encourage all members of the House – although I've been here long enough and I'm not so naive as to think that we're going to see a sudden change of heart, one can live in hope, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), hon. member?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I'd just like to ask the Member for Calgary-Elbow – I had the privilege of standing in for one of the members on the committee this summer. I took a day from my constituency, drove two hours, and sat in the committee. I believe that day the government members adjourned debate three times in one meeting. It just seemed like every time they got backed into a corner, got knocked off their talking points, it was just immediately: oh, let's adjourn debate on that topic. So I was very, very frustrated. I basically felt like it was a real waste of my time. I shudder to think what all these meetings over the summer cost Alberta taxpayers. [interjection] Sorry. I will speak through the Speaker.

I'd just like the member, if he would, to comment on his frustration, if he felt the same way during these debates.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Look, some of the adjourned motions were legitimate, and I think we need to recognize that. I also want to recognize that it wasn't just the opposition in the room. The government were there as well and almost always in person. So everyone had travelled and had done a lot of work.

But you're right. My personal observation of how things worked was that every government member had their computer screen up, and as soon as an issue would come up, they would sort of pause, look at whatever somebody had typed on the computer screen, and often would adjourn debate. I have no way of knowing what was on those computer screens and what they said, but it certainly didn't feel like it was an organic discussion amongst private Members of the Legislative Assembly. Now, again, I'm not so naive as to think that everything will be.

What it seemed, Mr. Speaker, in response to the question, was that there was someone somewhere else telling them what to do and that even the committee itself was not as free and open as it could have been, and that was disappointing. The number of adjournments: 23 motions were adjourned by the NDP in the course of the deliberation of election finances and contributions disclosure alone. That's a tremendous number of adjournments and often in response to good questions posed by the opposition, with no answer coming from the government side.

It's unfortunate, but what it shows is that there's work to do, and that's why I think it's important that we take this bill, review it more thoroughly in committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Does anyone else wish to speak under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciate the insights from the Member for Calgary-Elbow, particularly since he sat on the committee and saw some of the machinations that were going on there and some of the concerns he had. I'd like to hear from him a little bit more about the needs of Albertans in terms of our responsibility as legislators to address some of the concerns to ensure that we have the best possible legislation in place and to ensure that the transparency that is being requested by Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but the Assembly stands adjourned until 7:30 this evening.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Tuesday, December 6, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2)

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 37, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2).

The supplementary amount provided by this bill is required for support to the Legislative Assembly to fund the work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's just my honour to state that this is the first time the Minister of Finance has ever tabled a bill that I'll be voting for. Mike drop.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a second time]

Bill 35

Fair Elections Financing Act

Dr. Starke moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment December 6]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to stand and speak to the motion to refer the bill. Of course, what we did for the last year was that we struck the committee to deal with a number of pressing issues that, really, are still before Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, to clarify, you're speaking to the amendment?

Mrs. Littlewood: Yeah, to the notice of amendment to Bill 35.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you.

Bill 1 was passed last year to take corporate and union money out of political campaigning in this province. There was much work to be done, and a lot of that work was part of what we campaigned on, to have electoral reform. In this part we are talking about election financing. Really, why are we doing this now? Why was the committee struck last year, and why was it given a year to get that work done? Well, the answer, Mr. Speaker, is that Albertans want this work to be done now, and the committee undertook to do that.

The committee met, admittedly, you know, a couple of handfuls of times by the time that March rolled around, but that was because the committee was doing the work of putting four acts out to the public to get consultation and submissions back from stakeholders such as Public Interest Alberta and universities and the Canadian Taxpayers Federation, who wanted to have input into Alberta's financing of how we conduct our politics here in the province. That took a fair amount of time. I don't think anyone wanted that part of the process to be rushed. So that piece was done.

Then, of course, I was asked to chair that committee back in April. We were waiting to get the reports back from the Legislative Assembly Office. They did great work. They gave us summarizations of what Albertans had to say about election financing and the Election Act and the whistle-blower act and the Conflicts of Interest Act as legislation in Alberta. I think that to minimize that part of the process actually does a disservice to the Albertans that took the time to actually engage in that part.

At any rate, the committee came together and did a lot of work, really put their noses to the grindstone from April to September. It's because Albertans want to see the power of their democracy and the political process put back in the hands of Albertans, not in the hands of special interests, not in deep pockets, where it currently is, where you can donate $105,000 to a political party over the course of four years, Mr. Speaker. What we have before us now is a set of recommendations. I guess you could say, you know, that there is a synthesis of government direction as well as committee direction into what the bill is, which is what the government is supposed to do.

The idea that we would have spent something like 25 hours talking in the committee about contribution limits and coming to no agreement at the table in committee and then to send it back to a committee I think does a huge disservice to Albertans. They want to see this change now. They do not want to wait. I had a number of conversations with people who called me because I was chair – they saw my name connected with the committee – to ask me questions. I was able to share with them what the committee was doing. There were things that they did not like. Some of them did not support the idea of having public financing in Alberta. However, there were ideas that they did like that some of the opposition members did not want. They wanted things like having spending caps on parties during elections.

So I told that person, you know, that was referred to me by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, that the idea of having spending caps came from NDP members. He said that good ideas can come from all sides of the table, and I think that that's a good thing. I told him that perhaps when the election finance legislation was finally tabled, maybe the people that opposed it would finally see the light. You know, after hearing all of the conversation and debate around the table, as I was able to as chair, I see that there are things that are a difference of opinion and a difference of ideals, of how different political parties conduct themselves.

Then there are things that I have found that I believe are just wrong. The things that are just wrong are the things that Albertans wholeheartedly agree with: lowering contribution limits, putting spending caps on campaigns. Their ears get bombarded and their eyes get bombarded during election campaigns when there are no reins put on what political parties can do during campaigns. So I think that what's really important to remember is that those are the things that Albertans want to see fixed. They see that as being a problem. It's not something that is just: we're adjusting. It's something that has not seen huge change for a long, long time because you had one political direction in this province for 44 years.

When you have one political direction for almost four and a half decades, you end up with your legislation looking one way.

So it behooves us, coming in as new members and as part of a different caucus, to look at things from a fresh perspective. I am so proud that I could be part of this and that I get to represent the constituents of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who want to see these things amended and fixed. There are things that are, quite simply, not working, and that is why I stand to speak against this amendment. Albertans want us to get to work. They want us to get on with it, and that is why I am speaking against the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Clark: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief. Yes, Albertans do want change. They do want contribution limits. They do want spending limits. They do want to get big money out of politics. Those are things that we all agreed on in the committee.

I have an observation and a question for the hon. member. Part of the challenge with this committee is the very quick change from it being a genuinely open, all-party committee to one that certainly gave the perception that the NDP was simply driving through whatever it was they wanted to drive through.

I have to say that it is ironic that it is the committee chair who, in her capacity as MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, is absolutely within her rights to stand in this Assembly and talk about anything she wants to.

Cortes-Vargas: She absolutely is.

Mr. Clark: She absolutely is. However, when you are the chair of a committee, you are meant to be seen as being an objective observer of the proceedings. Certainly, that was an issue that came to a head within the committee, and I think that it just continues that perception. It's very difficult.

If we were to switch spots and you were to ask me, "Can you make a case as to why the NDP ought to be able to be given a pass on this bill? It's okay," well, the first thing that I would probably do is say: "Let's not have the chair of the committee speak to the bill. Let's have someone else speak to the bill, because that's an unfortunate perception that is reinforced by the fact that we have people who were apparently objective not being objective on this."

The reason it needs to go back to committee is that that's the only option that we have. We in the opposition are very limited in what we can actually do, and we agree that it's important that we get election financing right. We believe so strongly in it that we want to get it right.

So I would just ask the member: do you recall exactly how many meetings it was that we spent talking about the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act in total? Over the course of the year at how many meetings did we actually talk about it?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. You know, I did my level best to get five parties around the table to make sure that everybody's voices were heard. There were many, many meetings that were spent on the election finance act, and you would know because you were there. And do you want to know why the Member for Calgary-Elbow was there? Because I ensured he was there. As the chair I ensured that I polled, through the committee clerk, to make sure that all of the parties were represented and part of the conversation.

Cortes-Vargas: And rescheduled most of them.

Mrs. Littlewood: Absolutely. I rescheduled meetings to accommodate schedules. There were retreats that I changed meetings for for the Wildrose Party. There were conversations that I knew that members of the Progressive Conservative Party wanted to be a part of, so I ensured that when we picked our time to take lunch, we took lunch at a time that would allow members to be a part of it, because I believed in all of the parties having the ability to have their voices heard at that committee. I'm not going to apologize for that.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow is asking for me to apologize for ensuring that everybody was around the table and that everybody was heard around the table, and I did that. I don't have to actually stand here with any sort of idea that I didn't. The idea that a member would not be able to be a part of something outside of this Chamber and then not be able to stand up and speak in the House about it is incredible. You know, does that mean that I shouldn't speak about health care because I was a nursing attendant? Does that mean that if I were a hunter that was owning a business that I shouldn't be speaking about the need for helmets on off-highway vehicles? No. I am saying that everyone that is a member of this Assembly should be able to speak.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

You're speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Nixon: To the referral amendment. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Yes. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really wish I had a chance to ask the last speaker a question, but unfortunately we ran out of time, so instead I will speak to the referral motion, the motion that's before this Assembly. I thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for bringing forward the referral.

I think the point that the last government speaker tried to raise on why this should not go to committee, Mr. Speaker, I think, quite frankly, is ridiculous. The evidence clearly shows that the committee was not allowed to complete its work. The evidence clearly shows that the good work from the committee that was done, that was agreed to by all members from all parties at the time of that committee, has not been included in the bill.

We've just had a government member, Mr. Speaker, rise in this Assembly and say that the opposition tried not to bring in contribution limits.

Mrs. Littlewood: No, I didn't.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, she did, Mr. Speaker. The record is clear in the committee that not only did we support bringing in contribution limits – in fact, we fought for that longer than this party on this other side even thought about fighting for it. Not only did we do that; we brought in lower limits than they did. We wanted to bring in lower limits than they did.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, while we were fighting to make limits lower for Albertans, that member, the chair of the committee – this is why it should go to committee again, because clearly it didn't get done – was over and over and over breaking tie votes to bring in a taxpayer-funded subsidy for her campaign and her party's campaign. That's what she was doing. She wants to rise in the House and say that we didn't want to lower contribution limits? We did. In fact, we even tried to lower them.

Mrs. Littlewood: I didn't say that. I said spending limits.

Mr. Nixon: Now, let's talk about spending limits because I hear the member raising spending limits. Every party agreed during that process on the spending limit amount compromise. Some had different ideas on both sides of the aisle. The committee came up with a compromise that would fit and agreed to cap spending limits. Total opposite of what that member just accused us of. Those are the facts.

Now, while we were doing that, the process was being derailed by government members who were trying to bring forward amendments to – get this, Mr. Speaker, it's shocking – make taxpayers pay for their political campaigns, to make taxpayers pay for their expenses. At a time when over 100,000 people in our province are out of work, when people inside my constituency are losing their houses, their businesses, their jobs, these members on that side of the House spent their summer trying to pass motions getting those same people to pay for their political expenses. That's what happened inside that committee.

That's why this needs to go back to committee, because the work could not be done because the government members of that committee spent their whole summer trying to make my constituents pay for their political campaign expenses. That's what happened. That's what derailed the process. [interjections] They get frustrated by that because they somehow now magically want to forget what they spent their summer doing. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I spent my summer doing that, I'd want to forget it, too. But there's this cool thing called Hansard, as you know, and it's on the record.

The cool thing about this committee, Mr. Speaker, is that we called division on all those votes. We roll-called them all, and that member over and over broke the tie over and over, trying to get campaign expenses paid for by my constituents and by the people of Alberta. That's the record that happened in this committee, and that's what every government member who participated in that committee spent their summer doing. Now, is that good work for the committee? I don't think so.

Then at the time they'd get up and say: "Oh, no. The opposition, Mr. Speaker, they're derailing the process. They're arguing with us." Darn right, I was arguing with them when they're going to ask Albertans to pay for the campaign expenses. Darn right, I was arguing with them. I argued with them every day, and in the end they agreed with us, so I guess our arguments were effective. Maybe if they had spent a little less time trying to make Albertans pay for their campaign expenses, there would have been more work done in the committee. They want to forget that. They want to stand up and forget that. That is their legacy on this committee.

Now, the reason that this should go back to committee right now on the referral is – again here I'm going to give you one right now. A member of the NDP said in that committee:

I'm a little discouraged when we sit here and we see amendments brought forward and arbitrary amounts thrown out that don't appear to come from anywhere but someone's imagination. We never . . . got an answer that actually told us someone was sitting down and thinking these things through, so I find that discouraging.

That was the Member for Calgary-West. She sat in that committee with the rest of us. Now, to her credit, she voted against her colleagues who were trying to bring in campaign subsidy by taxpayers.

An Hon. Member: Calgary-West?

Mr. Nixon: Calgary-North West. Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

That's what this committee was doing. Their own member is questioning what the committee was up to, that they were imaginarily picking numbers out of the sky. Should it not go back to committee? Albertans expect us to get this right, and the government just wants to come and say: "Oh, look. We're going to totally change the way political parties operate. We're going to manipulate the new law to make it really an advantage to the governing party. You know, basically, the act to re-elect the incumbent government. We're going to attack every opposition party, and we really would like you guys just to come to committee and sit there and agree with everything we say.

Well, we don't, and the people that I work for, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, didn't send me here to agree with everything that you say. They sent me here to defend them. What you spent your summer doing and what he spent his summer doing, Mr. Speaker, through you, is passing motions and fighting over and over and over to try to make the people of Alberta pay for his campaign expenses. I kind of wish that he would run against me in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre because I'd sure love to talk about that on the debate floor during an election. It's crazy.

To say that the committee completed its work is not true, in my mind. To say that the opposition stopped the process and the reason that we haven't finished the work on this important bill is because the opposition was stopping the process: no. The reason we never got worked done on this act, in particular, though it was almost done, was because the government members spent their summer wasting our time trying to pass stuff to make sure that their campaigns could be paid for, something that every opposition party in this Assembly was concerned about.

Now, what's most interesting, Mr. Speaker, is I think the number one reason – the number one reason – why this should go to committee is . . .

Loyola: You lack integrity, sir.

Mr. Nixon: I heard the hon. member say that I lack integrity. No. When you asked Albertans to pay for your campaign expenses, you lacked integrity, sir.

Now, Mr. Speaker, every member of the committee voted unanimously – unanimously – to ask the Legislature to return this committee to do its work. Every member, including government members. Only after it was out, they all of a sudden started to say all of this weird stuff that nobody could understand exactly what they were talking about. The record will show that that is just not what happened during the summer. That is just not what happened.

Instead, the facts are that government members continue to use their majority through the chair, who broke tie after tie after tie to try to force things through that would cause taxpayers to have to pay for their campaign expenses, that would cause trouble for every other party's constituency associations, all that under the guise of trying to lower contribution limits, something that everybody had already agreed to and passed. We were already through that. The government couldn't just take the win and say: "Yup. You know what? Every party agreed we should lower that." We compromised on the amounts. It could have been a great win.

Instead, the focus became: how do we get the NDP and the NDP candidates' campaign expenses paid for? The opposition did its job, which, in the end, the government agreed with and did the right thing. The question, of course, Mr. Speaker, becomes: during that committee why did the members spend so much time trying to get their campaign expenses paid for? I don't know. I'd be interested to hear that.

This just shows why this should go back to committee because, clearly, the focus that was happening from the government members on this act and that committee was on something that they now agree was wrong. So why would we not refer something like this to committee? Why would we not get this right for the people of Alberta? It's about our democracy. An extra little bit of time before the act comes – we're well away from an election – would not have made a difference, a drastic difference in the process. It would have made sure that we got it right. It would make sure that Albertans got the best deal possible for their election system.

We don't want to mess up the election system for any party. The idea of using a majority to try to make things harder for the opposition is fundamentally wrong to democracy, and the fact is that you forget that this party, Mr. Speaker, that sits across from me right now used to be in opposition and more than likely one day will be in opposition again. In fact, if you're going to spend your summers trying to get Albertans to pay for your expenses, you're probably going to be back in opposition a lot sooner than you think, which is probably why you decided to pull that ridiculous idea from the table. I thank the government again for that.

I think that instead of rising in this Assembly and blaming us for doing our job and saving you from a terrible mistake, for saving the government, Mr. Speaker, from a terrible mistake, they should rise and recognize that the opposition was right to fight for that, was right to fight for Albertans, and should then stand up and say: yeah; let's get this committee, and let's get this fixed for the people of Alberta.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, what we see is the continued behaviour, the continued pattern of behaviour that we see from the NDP government, that the people, certainly where I live in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, are extremely frustrated with and have had enough with, and that is political games. All that this has been, over and over, are political games, which is why you send this to committee. You let the parties work on a compromise, many of which passed with votes from everybody from every side of the House – many of which passed – and in fact the majority passed with the support of members from every party trying to make our democracy better. But the process derailed again when the hon. members for the government who were on that committee tried to do something so ridiculous, to try to get taxpayers to pay for their expenses. That's where the problem is.

Now, how do we get this right? There are serious problems with this. You're dealing with third-party advertisement, third-party advertisement, Mr. Speaker, right now. That work certainly wasn't complete, and it's pretty serious. I know. I sat on the committee. You see the reports that we've seen from elsewhere in the country. There's some pretty serious stuff that happened with PACs that we had to get right, but we're just going to move on. How do I know, unlike what the Member for Calgary-North West says, that it looks like all the numbers are just being picked out of the air? How do we know that's not still happening if we don't go to committee?

There were many things that were raised by the Chief Electoral Officer that are not covered in this legislation, many concerns that he raised in all this stuff that are not being dealt with, again, because the process got derailed so that you could fight to try to get your campaign paid for at the same time as a hundred thousand or more people are out of work, at the same time that Albertans are seeing unprecedented suffering all across our province. This government's focus all summer was to get their campaign expenses paid for.

Well, shame on them, Mr. Speaker. It's not acceptable to the people of Alberta, and it's not acceptable for them to continue to rise in this House and try to justify their behaviour this summer and try to ram through legislation. It is completely ridiculous, and they should hang their heads in shame.

The Speaker: Calgary-Hays, 29(2)(a)?

Mr. McIver: Yes. I appreciate the debate from my colleague from the Official Opposition, and I'd like to get his perspective on why the committee chair stepped down and what were the circumstances around that because I think that might give us some good perspective on what happened this summer. I'd like to also have him highlight, if he's able, some of the decisions that the committee agreed on, including the government members, that aren't included in this bill because it might help shine the light for this House and all Albertans both on why some people want to support this referral and others do not.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker and, through you, to the hon. member for the question. I think the biggest thing that is glaring that everybody agreed to during that committee was the fact to continue the committee. Every member voted to continue the committee to complete the work.

Mr. Rodney: Every member.

Mr. Nixon: Every member from the NDP and from every other opposition party voted to continue the work, showing that, yes, there were some difficult conversations – there should be; we were talking about something serious. But most of the stuff coming out – and you can check. I mean, as you know, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. member, Hansard is tracking . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Through you, of course, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'd like you to look at me occasionally.

Mr. Nixon: Okay. I'm happy to look at you, Mr. Speaker, of course.

Hansard is tracking the votes. They know what happened. It's on the record. It is clear, without a doubt, that most things were being done co-operatively. The biggest things besides the vote to continue the work of the committee were around how much we thought people should be allowed to donate. There was a tremendous amount of compromise and agreement in the end about where the cap on the donations should be. There were also amendments to the government's ideas on how much campaigns could spend, and there was a compromise done on that. In the end, all parties agreed on those two major issues, which is what the government wants to hang their hat on, but the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we're already in agreement on all that.

So then the question is: why couldn't we finish the rest of work? Why couldn't we get the rest of the stuff done? Well, there were some problems. Of course, there was the point of privilege against the chair. I'm not going to get into that, but the hon. member is correct about that. That derailed the process, and there were some accusations made, which have never been properly answered by the chair, but we'll leave it at that.

In the end, the focus, which I think I've made very clear, of the members from the NDP that were on that committee was on getting Albertans to pay for their political expenses. What happened is that every opposition party – the Alberta Party, the Liberal Party, my friends in the PC Party, and the Wildrose Party – were fundamentally in disagreement about that because it's not an ideological issue. It is just plain wrong to go to the people of Alberta and say: you have to pay for my political expenses. Over and over and over we warned them how wrong that was. If you go back and read Hansard – I did this morning because I was curious – it is ridiculous the arguments that they were putting forward to us to try to justify their decision to try to make our constituents pay for their political expenses.

I can tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that I have never met anybody in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre that wants to pay for their political expenses. There are a couple of people that voted NDP there, but even those ones don't want to pay for their political expenses. Certainly, the people that support my party don't want to pay for the NDP's political expenses, and I assume that the people that support the NDP don't want to pay for our political expenses. That would make sense. That would make complete sense, I think.

Anyway, to the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker, there were many great things agreed on, but in the end the committee broke down because of the hon. NDP members' decision at the time to try to make Albertans pay for their campaign expenses. That derailed the entire process. They like to stand up and say to us that, like, we did something wrong. I can tell you that I am proud that we stood up against you trying to take Albertans' money for your campaign expenses. I don't feel any shame for that.

I go back to my constituency now, Mr. Speaker, just like you, and I see people that are hurting, families right now at Christmastime. I was talking to the Santas Anonymous people in Sundre, and they can't keep up already. People are hurting. My colleagues and I had to come up here all summer. We were happy to be here and fight against the government of this province, who was trying to take their money to pay for their campaign expenses. And they wonder why their committee didn't finish its work.

They also ignore, I think, to the hon. member's point, all the good work that the committee did. The committee completed the work on one act – large agreement across the board on that act. It was almost done the work on the elections finance legislation except for the big arguments primarily around them trying to have their campaign expenses paid for.

Then there were two other acts that were very, very serious, that a lot of people from across Alberta submitted things on, took the time to submit and to participate in the process, and this government totally disregarded what they had to say and moved on with it. Again, Mr. Speaker, they should hang their heads in shame.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment to refer this bill on election campaign financing to the committee. I have to say that I was a little astounded to hear the former committee chair stand up here and explain to this House that she granted the Member for Calgary-Elbow his democratic rights, that she allowed him to be on the committee, that she allowed him to speak for his constituents, that she allowed him to take a lunch break. I had no idea that the chair of a committee actually has the right to allow a member of this House to live up to their democratic rights that they were elected for or to take them away. But we heard here tonight that that committee chair personally – personally – had more authority than the people that voted for the Member for Calgary-Elbow and granted him his democratic rights.

I'm sure he is just dying to send a thank-you note across the aisle for that tremendous gift provided by the committee chair when this was being discussed, and I'm sure he will be forever grateful because of the fact that that decision, that carried more weight apparently than those people that elected the hon. member, was granted. For my part I will add my thank you, too, because I think that all members of this House deserve to be able to stand up and speak for the people that elected them in the constituency that they came from.

Certainly, the people of Calgary-Hays: I hope they know that they're my bosses, they're the ones I work for, and they'll always be the ones I work for. I always try to make it clear that I am not confused about who I work for. I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, that many other hon. members in this House feel the same way. The only ones, I guess, that we have to wonder about are the ones that think they can grant those rights to other members of this House.

Now, what I find interesting, unlike the previous speaker, my colleague from the Official Opposition – and I thank him and all members that were on the committee, including government members, including our Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and our former Member for Calgary-North West, who spent a lot of their summer on this committee. I think we can all agree that there are other things you can do in the summer. We can think of those, right? You can go to barbecues and talk to your constituents. You can have them in your office and find out what's important to them. You can meet them at the coffee shops. Mr. Speaker, members of the House could go for the odd bicycle ride, maybe take a vacation, maybe sit on the patio and put their feet up talking to constituents. These are all things that are pretty popular to do during the summer.

But, you know what? This summer 15 members of this House spent a lot of their summer on this issue, and I thank all of them, government and opposition – all of them – because, Mr. Speaker, that was sometimes two, three times a week that they were up here talking about election campaign financing rules. For them to take that much of the summer away from their home constituency, that much of the summer away from their families, that much of the summer away from opportunities for vacation and the personal time that we don't get when we're up here, I think that they all deserve a thank you from all members of this House and, frankly, from all Albertans. That was a big commitment, I have to say.

I wouldn't be surprised if members of this House that were not on that committee were thinking to themselves, as I did a few times: man, I'm glad I'm not on that committee because there are other things than that to do this summer. So I think all members deserve our gratitude. I really do. I do thank them personally for the commitment that they put in during times of the year when they could have been doing so many other things.

Having kept track of the comings and goings from my viewpoint and both from media accounts and from listening to my colleagues in caucus and from reading some of the Hansard of the discussions, I'm left with a few questions that, frankly, leave me thinking that the amendment before this House is a good one and one that should be supported by all members. I have to say that I'm just a little taken aback that many of the decisions that the committee made – the recommendations, pardon me. Committees make recommendations; this House makes decisions. I'm happy to correct myself on that. Of the recommendations that the committee made, several were unanimously accepted by all members, yet those decisions supported by members of the government and every one of the opposition members are not reflected in this piece of legislation.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the elected people that were on the committee representing the people that sent them to this Legislative Assembly are not the ones that made the decisions that are reflected in the legislation that's before us, one is left to wonder, as I do: who actually made those decisions that are in the legislation? If not elected people, then who? If someone's decisions are overriding the decisions of elected people, I think that's unsettling in itself. That's very unsettling in itself. Only the people, I suppose, on the government side that authored the legislation can answer that question. I'm asking it because that, I believe, under the circumstances is a very fair question. If somebody other than the elected people are making the decisions that appear in the legislation, one really needs to ask: who are those people who are pulling the strings? There are so many questions.

I will say that in terms of the title of the legislation, taking the big money out of—hang on. Let me get this right.

Mr. Clark: Saving kittens and puppies.

Mr. McIver: It's not saving kittens. Sorry, hon. member. It's about campaign financing.

Mr. Clark: Fair elections financing.

Mr. McIver: Fair elections financing. As the government members are so fond of saying, taking big money out of elections.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what the big print giveth, it appears to me the small print taketh away when it comes to this bill. There are many things, I think, left hanging out there that the committee should probably talk about. The committee should probably talk about the lack of limits on government spending leading up to and during election campaigns. The committee should probably talk about the lack of adequate limits on third-party spending leading up to and during campaigns. The committee ought to talk about the limits on public-sector union spending leading up to and during election campaigns.

You know what? They should probably talk about what the right number is for the spending limits. I think it's been well established here that the government and all opposition parties agreed that donation limits to campaigns need to be reduced. I think the committee ought to look at the recommendations that they all agreed to when the committee was meeting that don't appear in the legislation and talk about where they went. I think that the spending caps in the legislation for elections don't match what the committee agreed on, including the government side. So what happened? Why did that change? The committee talked about it. They hashed it around. They came up with some agreement, yet the numbers in the legislation don't match what the committee said.

One of the biggest reasons to go back to the committee is to respect the members of the committee and not disrespect them, which the legislation does. When you've got 15 members of a committee, the majority from the government side, and they bring—I don't know whether the government members brought the opposition members onside or the opposition members brought the government members onside or whether there was just a mind-meld of some kind, where everybody said that this is a good idea. The fact is that the idea that they all agreed on isn't actually represented in the legislation. I think that is something that I'm concerned about and that Albertans who look at this process could legitimately be concerned about. If it's not the elected people making the decisions, then who is? [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, I can see by the fact that I'm hearing from other people that they're feeling tender about this question. They're feeling so tender that they can't be quiet about it. [interjections] Again, we've got ministers of the Crown that can't keep quiet. I think they're feeling very tender about this question. [interjections] Consequently, they can't seem to give the time to me to talk about it, and they feel like they have to talk over me right now because, I believe, they're feeling very tender about the answer to the question of who's making the decisions if not the elected people on the committee.

I believe that Albertans should be asking the same question, too, and demanding the answer. The best way to get it is to put the 15 people on the committee in the room and have them continue the work that they started, that, let me say, for the most part good was work with probably—not probably but definitely—the notable exception, that the hon. member from the Official Opposition raised, about who's going to pay for the election. That was not good work when a committee tries to decide that the taxpayers should pay.

Look, Mr. Speaker. Let's be clear. They're trying to get the taxpayers to pay for me to get elected. I don't want the taxpayers to pay for me to get elected. If I can't go out and talk to people and say, "I'm going to do a good job for you; I'm going to represent your interests, and I'm going to take your interests to Edmonton and not Edmonton's interests to you," then they shouldn't vote for me or they shouldn't give me money. But to actually force it out of people's wallets, hard-working Alberta families—some can afford it, and some can't—to actually force it out of the wallets of the poorest people in Alberta to pay to re-elect any of us in this House is disgraceful, shameful, beyond the pale. Anybody—and I appreciate it was the government's side—should be ashamed. It's actually too bad because it's a real black eye on the government members that, as far as I can tell, in so many other areas did good work on this committee. Yet they chose to go down this shameful road for reasons that I can't explain.

So far I haven't heard any of them pop up and try to explain why they think it's a good idea. I'd love to actually hear them at some point in this debate stand up in this House and explain why they thought in the committee, on Hansard—so it's not even like it's a matter of debate; it's record. I'm sure everybody here is too smart to suggest that the government members didn't try to push that through because it's right there in black and white and completely undeniable. But I would love to see them pop up in this Legislature and explain to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all members of the House through you, of course, because we only speak through you, that it's a good idea to have hard-working Alberta families and individuals, rich and poor, pay to get us elected. I'm of the opinion that they would find themselves wanting if they think that they can actually make the case to Albertans in such a fashion that Albertans would accept that they think it's a good idea to have hard-working Albertans pay for their re-election.

So, Mr. Speaker, that one is hanging out there, and I guess I'll leave it to the government members to explain why they gave themselves a black eye by asking Albertans to pay for their election.

The other question that I'm interested in hearing from the members of the committee and particularly government members on is why the committee chair chose to remove the chair herself from the proceedings. It's particularly interesting when it's a committee with a majority of government members on it, including the chair from the government side, and the chair is removed. I think there is probably a public explanation that needs to be given there, and I would be very interested to hear any of the government members pop up to talk about how that situation arose.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day, outside of the notable black eye of the government members trying to make hard-working Albertans pay for their own elections, there was good work done there, work that was not completed, work that as I understand it—and I'm prepared to be corrected on this—the committee was prepared to come back and complete. We should let them. We should let them because, for the most part, opposition members did a great job and, for the most part, government members did a great job. Why not let them continue the great job that they began? Why not even let them correct any mistakes that they think they might have made?

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Calgary-Hays? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really appreciated hearing the comments from the member who has spoken and all members who have spoken to the amendment for referral up to this point. To the member who was just speaking, we've been talking quite a bit about the work of the committee and the results of that committee and the engagement from Albertans and the work of that committee being the basis of the bill that we have before us today, which ensures that there are no more loopholes or backroom deals that can be allowed for well-connected friends or insiders, something that is going to implement a transparent and level playing field for all parties, to make sure that through things like contribution limits, which I heard the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre speak to earlier – that we'll lower the contribution limits.

Today someone can donate $15,000. Today someone can make that donation and be able to contribute a significant amount of money to a single political party. In an election year, under the current rules, someone can contribute $30,000. In this piece of legislation that we have put forward, that limit, that cap, has been lowered to a much more reasonable $4,000, which is much more in line with other jurisdictions. The significant change of that item: I'm curious to know what the speaker who was just speaking thinks of that.

As well, there's the spending limits change, which is going to make sure that there are reasonable amounts that allow parties to communicate during an election to get their message out to all constituents, to run a full and proper campaign, Mr. Speaker, making sure that there's a $2 million cap for parties, a $50,000 cap for constituencies, with that constituency cap allowing for variations so that in a large rural riding, for example, travel costs are exempt, or in a very small, dense urban riding the parking that a volunteer may have to pay in downtown Calgary or Edmonton is something that can be exempt from those spending limits.

I'm curious to know what the previous speaker might think of these things as well as the changes to third-party advertising, which this legislation that we've brought forward really focuses in on, making sure that Albertans are able to identify who is speaking to them, who is trying to influence their opinions during an election. Knowing who is trying to sway them may have an impact. I think that giving people that information in a time when, federally speaking, we saw a five-times increase in third-party advertising just between the previous election and the one before is really important.

We are looking at a bill that will allow ideas and not donations to really determine the success or failure of political parties. So in the speaker's discussion about the potential to refer this to committee, I'm interested in knowing, through the Committee of the Whole, that we have available to us here, through the process of discussing this bill, seeing the work that was previously put in, the input that Albertans have given us, the number of people who said to us that they wanted to make sure that the elections were fair, that wanted to make sure that big money was taken out of politics, and the urgency that we heard about that because of the impact of a $15,000 donation each year. We are just towards the end of a fiscal year, Mr. Speaker, so any delay – the impact that could have in the amount that parties are able to raise, because $15,000 is a lot of money, and for someone who is able to donate $15,000 to a political party: I think most Albertans would call that big money. I know that when the committee was getting input from not only the other parties but from Albertans themselves, there was a great deal of agreement on that.

We are looking at that sunshine list for political donations as well as for third-party advertising so that we can make sure that we have an election system that we can all believe in and that we know is going to be reasonable, making sure that that process can be discussed fully in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Anyone who wishes to speak to the amendment? Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just going to speak briefly to the referral amendment, and I want to encourage the government members to take advantage of this opportunity to send this bill away because we're going to get many more opportunities over the next couple of days to speak to this in Committee of the Whole and third reading and to possibly have some amendments. I think this a great opportunity for the government to just take a step back and refer this bill to committee, where it belongs.

As I said before when I was talking on 29(2)(a), I had the privilege of sitting in on one of the committee meetings over the summer for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. As I said, you know, a two-hour drive in, spend the day in the city, and then a two-hour drive home: it's all good, sir. You know, it's part of the job. But when you get into a committee meeting and the government members literally get backed into a corner and fall off of their talking points, then pull back – and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on at least two occasions in that meeting adjourned debate right in the middle of a conversation. He just: oh, adjourn debate; adjourn debate.

On two occasions that day when we voted on those adjourn motions, we called for a counted vote. Twice that day the vote was tied. Now, rather than the committee chair doing what a committee chair is supposed to do, which is to encourage debate, she actually voted with the government members to adjourn debate and stall debate on those issues both times, Mr. Speaker. This happened twice that day. I was very disappointed, to the point where I myself and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster actually called a point of order on the chair that day. That's all in Hansard. It's all on record.

You know, we've heard from every member that's gotten up on this side and talked about the proceedings of that committee. It's almost an embarrassment. This is an opportunity for this government to do something right. Vote for this referral amendment. Get this out of the House because I guarantee you that in the next two days and a couple of days next week that when we get opportunities for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre to stand up and give his speech again, he's going to do it. How much abuse do you want heaped on you? This is a perfect opportunity for you to vote for this referral motion, get this bill out of the House, get it back to committee, where it belongs. Let's get it right.

There are a few things that were done correctly when it comes to setting limits. Everybody agreed on that. We did have some really good agreement from the committee there. But this is an opportunity to send it back, get it off the debate floor here today and tomorrow and Monday and Tuesday and Thursday of next week. I just think that this a great opportunity.

Personally, when I look at my constituency, I don't think I've got anybody that donates $4,000 a year. We count on $100 here, $250 there. On the recommendation of the Member for Drumheller-

Stettler we actually had a pie sale. It went very well. We actually sold a pie for $600, sir. It's a wonderful way to raise money.

Mr. Sucha: Was it apple?

Mr. Hanson: No, it was actually cherry. It was very, very nice.

An Hon. Member: Was it your wife's?

Mr. Hanson: It wasn't my wife's, no. Actually, I made two apple pies for that very sale, Dutch apple with a crumble top. Delicious.

Anyway, our constituencies, especially out in rural areas – you know, it's small. People that are devoted to our cause are contributing to our campaigns.

8:30

They say that they want to get big money out of elections. Well, I've looked at the last election's finances. There were ridings in this province where one party spent $83,000, and the party that won only spent $2,000. Getting big money out of politics? I don't think it's big money that wins elections. I think it's hard work, and I think that's what we need to do in our constituencies. I'm very proud. My CA is fourth in the province up to this point for fundraising this year.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Who's number one?

Mr. Hanson: Yeah, yeah, yeah. Who's number one?

Anyway, it's part of the grassroots movement in the province. It's people donating $20 here and a hundred dollars there that gets us to where we have to be, to get to that $25,000 or $30,000 that we need to run our campaigns.

I will end with this, Mr. Speaker. This government has an opportunity right now to get the debate on this bill off the floor. All they have to do is vote for this referral motion.

Thank you, sir.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for his comments. I think they were well thought out and well organized and something that all members of this House should take under consideration. But I have some questions that I'm hoping that the hon. member will address here. I want to ask him his opinion on the minister for electoral reform's comments just before him, where the minister refused to answer questions or chose not to answer questions about, for example, whether the committee chair could give people their democratic rights to speak in the committee, refused to answer questions about who's making the decisions that are in the legislation that are contrary to what the committee agreed on, of course leading to the obvious concern that Albertans could reasonably and rightly have, that if the elected people aren't making the decisions, who really is?

I would like his opinion on the adjournments that he talked about. During the committee there were a whole bunch of places where issues were adjourned when the government-side MLAs were essentially losing the argument. Rather than continue the argument, they, using the majority on the committee, essentially adjourned debate on those issues because they were losing the argument.

An Hon. Member: Twenty-three times.

Mr. McIver: I wasn't there, but a rumour that I heard is that that occurred 23 times.

When that occurs, Mr. Speaker, 23 times, I'm interested in asking the hon. member what he thinks about the fact that 23 times, when the government-side members were essentially losing an argument because they were potentially on the wrong side of it, they chose, rather than to continue with the reasoned debate – why does he think that they chose to adjourn debate on those issues and withhold the conclusion to a reasoned debate from Albertans? I think Albertans would be happy to hear those things.

I will say that the minister of electoral reform made mention of limits on third parties, but I'd like to ask the hon. member what he thinks about the fact that now there could be an unlimited number of third parties jumping into an election, each with $100,000 or $150,000, and for the public to try to keep track of that. You know, the argument was made: now we'll know where the money is coming from. I want to ask the hon. member whether the hon. member agrees: when you've got an unlimited number of third parties, each able to spend $150,000, is it reasonable in any way, shape, or form for Albertans to know where all that money came from and to be able to keep track of it?

Since, as the government likes to say, it's about taking big money out of politics, when you can actually have an unlimited number of third parties, each able to spend $150,000, I want to ask the hon. member whether he really believes that that's taking the big money out of politics when, in fact, there is an unlimited amount of money that could be spent by third parties advertising, whether that's truly taking the big money out of politics. Since the hon. member did great work on that committee, I think his opinions on those things would be very interesting.

I would also be interested in whether the hon. member thinks that when there is an unlimited number of third parties that can each spend $150,000, that will potentially drive donations underground or open up the temptation for people to try to influence the outcome of an election without actually making it clear who indeed is trying to affect the outcome of the election.

I want to ask the hon. member as well, Mr. Speaker – and I continue to direct questions to the hon. member, which I think is in order – whether he thinks this is more or less clear . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment to Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act. You know, there are many reasons why we would take a bill and bring it back to committee. I can think of few that are more important than the bill that we're talking about right now and why it should go to committee.

I think one of the things that I still believe is that every member in this Legislature is a committed democrat. I believe that every member of this Legislature values the rights that we have to free speech, to run for different political ideologies and beliefs, to represent those values and those beliefs in an open forum, that democracy is a competition of ideas, that those ideas are to be considered carefully by the electorate, by the constituents that we represent, and that anything that stands in the way of that exercise is incredibly important for us to debate and to discuss and to consider with great seriousness.

I think we can see by the comments of the members that have spoken to this referral motion that there are some really important issues that are being discussed here. This bill sets limits on contributions to political parties. It sets limits on spending. It deals with election campaign finances, and that's an integral part of our democratic process. It's a very important part.

I would agree with the member from the government that stated that elections should be about ideas and not donations, and I think that probably just about every member in this House would agree with that. I don't see any member in this House disagreeing with that. Of course, it's a complicated thing because often ideas need to be expressed, and they need to have a vehicle by which they can be expressed. That can be through advertising, and that can be through events, all of which come down to sometimes the size of your pocketbook.

When we think of this debate that we're having and whether we send this to committee, I think we need to take the time in this committee to have those conversations. I think there would be agreement, and I think we've already said that that Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee agreed on many things. I think one of the things they all did agree on was that we need to reduce the influence of wealth and wealthy individuals in the democratic process. I think that Bill 1, that we spoke to at the very beginning of this government, taking donations from corporations and unions out of the process, was something we could all agree on. Anything that we talk about with regard to this referral amendment and with regard to this Fair Elections Financing Act is important because it strikes at the very heart of our democracy in this province of Alberta.

I will defend this parliamentary form of democracy and the way that we do things in this province because I've seen how it doesn't work in other countries that call themselves democracies. I have the privilege on occasion of travelling down to California, and I had a conversation with some individuals down in California. They were so disillusioned with their democratic system, and I think it all came down, after an hour-long or so conversation, to the fact that in the United States money has corrupted their democratic system.

I'm not a wealthy individual.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Smith: That is the truth. And with three kids in university, I think that maybe some of you can understand why.

Ms Hoffman: Good thing we froze tuition.

Mr. Smith: He had to go to Montreal, actually.

But one of the realities was this. One of the conversations, one of the points that they brought up was that in the last state election for Governor they said that the loser of that election spent over $65 million trying to become the Governor of California. I think we can take a look at our neighbours to the south and see that money has corrupted that system, whereby the only people that can seem to be able to get elected in the American system are people that come from the economic elite of that society, and it is not healthy.

So please do not think that on this side of the House we do not understand the importance of controlling money in politics. We've stated very clearly that $15,000 was too much to be able to donate to any provincial party. We would prefer to have a limit of $1,000 rather than $4,000 at the constituency-wide level.

But there are serious problems in this bill that need to be referred back to committee. I think we've seen even tonight from some of the conversations that the parties on this side, the opposition parties, function very differently in the way they operate their political parties than does the government. That's a reality. I'm not saying that one is right and one is wrong. I'm just saying that that's the way it works. This bill will seriously disadvantage how we choose to run our political parties and the way that we seek donations and the way that we fund ourselves. The state should not be intervening and deciding that we should adopt an NDP way of running our parties. That's wrong. If you choose to run your party that way, that's fine, but our membership does not. You should not have the ability and the state should not have the ability to intervene in internal political matters.

A $2 million cap on political parties, $50,000 for constituency campaigns: we can have those conversations. They're reasonable conversations to have. We must shepherd and we must take care of this democratic system that we have. It's too important for this to become a partisan exercise, where amendments like this, a reasonable amendment that would take it to committee, are rejected simply for partisan reasons. This bill, this committee needs to look at advertising by the government.

Section 44.1 of this act exempts "advertising by the Government in any form" from the definition of election advertising and political advertising. The government's own definition of election and political advertising is an advertising message "that takes a position on an issue with which a registered party or registered candidate is associated."

Advertising by governments has been used in the past and I'm sure will be used again in very suspect ways to try to take an idea and give it credence by putting money behind it so that when we start looking at elections coming down the pipe, all of a sudden advertising dollars by the government on pet ideas and campaign promises that they're going to campaign on suddenly appear on the airwaves.

In the last little while the NDP has spent $750,000 advertising their spring budget, $4.4 million to advertise the carbon tax in 2016, and $700,000 to advertise it in 2015. What's to stop the largest organization in this province, the government, with billions and billions and billions of dollars behind it, from abusing taxpayers' dollars to influence elections? And it's not in here.

You want to take big money out of elections? Let's start looking at governments and how they advertise leading up to elections. That should be discussed by a committee. If that doesn't distort our democratic system, then I think you'd better start thinking again.

Spending limits. All of us understand that there is probably some sort of a link between the spending of money and your ability, perhaps, to get elected. But it's not universal, and we all know that. Every single MLA in this Legislature understands that. I've been in too many elections where money has not been the primary reason for a person winning or losing the election as a candidate.

I spent $22,000, more or less. I think I raised $29,000, and I think I spent $22,000. I believe there are some in this Legislature who won on less than $1,000 or $3,000. If money was the only reason for people winning elections, many of us wouldn't be here. Last election the Progressive Conservative Party reported that they spent $4.3 million in campaign expenses while the NDP spent $1.6 million. Money is an important issue to talk about, and donations and spending limits are important to talk about, but let's also understand that in a democracy ideas and personalities also play a huge, huge role.

I guess one of the things that I would like to have this committee study, Mr. Speaker, is: if we're going to have uniform spending restrictions, how does that acknowledge the realities of the differences in our constituencies? The members that come from urban constituencies face a very different kind of an election than somebody from Drayton Valley-Devon, and the things that they will need to spend their monies on and the things that I will need to spend my money on are very different. I had to have at least two campaign offices. When you're in a constituency of seven or eight or 10 square blocks, you don't need two.

Ms Sweet: Ten blocks?

Mr. Smith: Well, some of you guys have got very dense populations, okay?

An Hon. Member: Like New York.

Mr. Smith: Could be New York.

Okay. The reality is that sometimes a one-size-fits-all policy doesn't work. We need to consider the differences in our constituencies. A committee could look at that. Presently I think that's a flaw in this bill.

I've already said that there's no limit on government advertising leading up to elections. I think a committee needs to look at how they could restrict that.

I think that there's a problem – and we've seen other members talk about this in great detail – with the reporting practices for their CAs and how they now have to start reporting $50 donations every quarter. We have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that the people that run mostly in our political parties don't do this for a living. They're volunteers. We have to ensure that the reporting practices, while holding political parties accountable . . .

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Nixon: Of course, Mr. Speaker, under 29(2)(a). Thank you very much. I appreciate the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon, my good friend and neighbour to the north. I know his constituency well. We share lots of similar areas. I do go to Drayton Valley often to visit with the member and, particularly, the school board that we share up there. I can tell you that Drayton Valley is a great place but a place that's going through a tough time.

With that in mind and given the hon. member's presentation, it brings three things that I would like to ask him about, Mr. Speaker, through you, of course. I think it was great that the hon. member brought up the situation regarding PACs as well as the situation regarding government advertisement and then, of course, his concerns about why this would need to go back to committee given the actions of the government when it was in committee previously.

First is PACs. Barely was the issue of PACs discussed at committee. Again, Mr. Speaker, as I was telling you earlier, the process was derailed because the government members were trying to rein in campaign subsidies, and that kind of slowed things down. But it hasn't been talked about. As the hon. member pointed out, our neighbours to the south – I think we can all agree that the spending that's happening in U.S. politics is ridiculous. There's some evidence about what's taken place with PACs inside Ontario that is alarming. So for the government to bring forward this bill with no evidence that they've been able to work through that particular issue, third-party advertisement, particularly the constitutional issues that surround that and those types of things that have happened in other jurisdictions – I'd like to hear a little bit more from the member on that.

I also appreciate that the hon. member brought up government advertisement. The government of the day right now just recently spent $750,000, as he mentioned, Mr. Speaker, advertising the spring budget; $700,000 advertising the carbon tax in 2015; and another $4.4 million advertising the carbon tax in 2016. That sounds like an awful lot of big money in politics. In fact, this act that we're debating right now in section 44.1 exempts "advertising by the Government in any form" from the definition of election advertising and political advertising. Well, that's interesting. So I'd like to hear what the hon. member thinks about, essentially, the government bringing forward legislation, after trying to get their campaign expenses paid for, that doesn't deal with the fact that they are the only big spender left in politics. The government is the only big spender left in politics. Everybody else won't be. That's great. So why aren't they dealing with that?

I mean, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has brought forward a bill that there were some political games with, of course, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and it's still not been dealt with. It still hasn't been dealt with, and it died now at the committee that they haven't continued. So I'd like to hear a little more about his concerns about government advertising in politics and how we're going to make sure that we get big money out of politics that way.

Lastly, as a Member of the Legislative Assembly for the great riding of Drayton Valley-Devon, a place that has seen significant consequences because of the economic downturn – I mean, if you drive into Drayton Valley, you feel it just as you're driving in – how his constituents feel about the fact that the government used this committee to attempt to use their money to pay for their campaign expenses, and then when they got caught and got under political pressure, they forced it back to the Legislative Assembly without doing their job properly. How do his constituents of Drayton Valley-Devon feel and respond to that?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is absolutely correct when he says that my constituency has been hit very, very hard. When I look at the people in my constituency, they're very generous with their donations. They're very generous with their funds, but often those funds are set aside for people that are truly in need.

People, as a part of our democratic system, should have the choice as to whether or not they're going to donate to a political party. That should not be something that they are expected to have to pay towards. When you pay your taxes and when your taxes go toward funding a political party and to refunding them for their expenses, I don't believe that they have that choice any longer. The foundation of democracy is freedom, and freedom is about choices. At the most fundamental level in a democracy we should have the freedom of choice about which political parties we choose to support. That is a foundation of democracy.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to the referral motion. From what I've been hearing and from what I understand, there seem to be multiple problems still with this act. In a reasonable world and with the ability to do so, it would make sense to refer this back to a committee. I think this is truly something that all members in this House want to see, to get this right. And as much wrong that's been done in the committee prior to, that appears to be not quite finished yet but brought into this House to be debated, I think it would be a really good, smart idea for all members of this Legislature to agree to put it back to committee to fix this bill, to clean it up. There are a lot of really great things in this that I think all members certainly agree on and that Albertans certainly agree on, but there are still some really contentious issues in this bill that need to be dealt with.

Let's just do something really good in here, that's really right. Send this back to committee so that we can do some cleanup work and do right by Albertans. At the end of the day, that's what we're here to do. I think we have that opportunity, and we're almost there. Like I said, there are a lot of really great things in here that are really going to do some good things for democracy here in Alberta.

However, there are some really damaging things in here for democracy here in Alberta. I have many concerns, as have been expressed by many members in this Legislature, and those need to be addressed.

We have an opportunity to make some really poor choices with the passing of this legislation. But right now, with this amendment, we have an opportunity, and I think it's a great opportunity. I encourage all members of this House to support the amendment to send it back to committee, do some cleanup work. It's possible. It's probably not even going to take that much time.

I do have some concern about what happened in the previous committee. The motions that were voted on and agreed to by all parties, when presented in this Legislature, actually don't reflect the wishes of that committee. Perhaps it's just an oversight. This was a mistake, but we have an opportunity with this amendment to make it right.

When we try and take big money out of politics yet allow third-party advertisers to have such a large space in the political sphere, we need to pause there because there are some concerns, some serious concerns, in fact, creating an environment within politics that's sort of this shady, grey area. We need to go back and look at that.

When it comes to donation limits, I can't even imagine the amount of work that is required by Elections Alberta and by the volunteers within the constituency associations to keep track of all of the donations that are going here and there and everywhere. When we're trying to reach out to our members and engage them in the political process and we're having multiple events in our constituencies – you know, 20 bucks here, 50 bucks here, 75 bucks there; there are dinners; there are some items that are contributions, and there are some that are not – those create actually a bit of a nightmare to keep track of for the volunteers in our constituency associations. This isn't to mention the additional monies that are probably going to be needed just for the bureaucracy within Elections Alberta to track on their end as well.

These are reasonable concerns that I have and that the people of Airdrie have. These are reasonable concerns that have also been presented by other members of this Legislature. There is a wonderful place where we can talk about this, go back in, do the cleanup work, and then come back and pass a piece of legislation that everyone in this House can be proud of, because this isn't just for the people in this room, but this is for who may be in this room in 2019 and for subsequent election years afterwards. You may think that you're stacking it in your favour, and there are some ways in which it appears that that is being done, but the members in this House may change, and it would really be in everyone's best interests, in Alberta's interests, if we make this a clear, level playing field and it's fair across the board.

I don't have, you know, a couple of friends with $4,000 sitting around in their bank accounts to finance my campaign. I don't know if other members in this Legislature do. I'm sure that is available. But when you allow only a couple of people to participate in the political process – where you can actually go out and engage a larger quantity of people to be involved, that's a good thing. That's a very good thing.

I implore this Legislature to take a sober second thought at this opportunity, with the amendment before us, to refer this to committee so that we can get this right. That's what this is about. Please, let's get this right. This is a win for all of us, to go back and just clean it up. Make this a good bill. That is my ask here today, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much for the time to express my concerns, certainly, on behalf of the people of Airdrie. I hope that all members of this House vote for the amendment.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Airdrie?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REF1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:05 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Bill 34

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 5: Dr. Turner]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I know that this referral motion was late last night; it happened around 10:30. Maybe the government members were feeling tired, so I'd like to take us back to where we left off on Bill 34.

I must say that it is very difficult to have a productive conversation and debate when the other side can't be bothered to read the bill before commenting on a referral motion. This is exactly why this needs to go to committee. You know, there have been 16 bills brought to the Legislature that have been debated over five and a half weeks. That is approximately one bill every two days because we're only in the House for four days a week. Plus we had a constituency break. So believe me when I tell you that we on this side of the House are aware of the mountain of work and time and study that it takes to be able to come into this House and debate these bills. It would do us a tremendous courtesy to have the other side read the bill before coming into the House and having a debate with us.

To my point, last night the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud made it clear that he does not support our referral amendment. Madam Speaker, I think it's worth looking at why for all members of this House. Let me start by reading Bill 34 for you. It's only one line, so it won't take a whole lot of your time. "The President of Treasury Board, Minister of Finance may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, makes loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee the obligations of the Balancing Pool."

In response to the referral motion that we put forward to send this bill to committee – this bill, Bill 34 – the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud gave a speech that I would like to take a moment to review because I have a few corrections to make. We are talking about in this bill, Bill 34, an unchecked loan. Just in case the members on the other side are wondering, it's about a loan. The member, however, started with a tangent about pipelines, and that's fine, because if you ask what colour the sky is right now, the answer from the other side is going to be: two pipelines. There you go. But he said "that we would not have achieved [that] without acquisition of social licence, a concept that is completely foreign to those folks on the other side. Social licence has been very positive for this province." These are the member's words.

Well, according to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud this loan, the PPA lawsuit, the suing of Enmax, hiding the costs from Albertans of suing Enmax, which is what the bill is really for, got us two pipelines. Really? Okay. I don't recall the government's mismanagement of the PPA file receiving a shout-out from Trudeau. So that was interesting to learn. Apparently, in the NDP world view suing Enmax is the reason Alberta has been granted permission by the folks in Ottawa to repair line 3 and expand an existing pipeline. That is an interesting definition of social licence. Here I was thinking that the NEB did all the heavy lifting. Silly me. Well, hopefully, there are still power companies left around for us to sue the next time Alberta needs a pipeline.

At this point in the member's speech last night I was still, however, completely lost. Had the member bothered to read the 50-or-so-word bill before standing up to school the opposition last night, he would know, again, Madam Speaker, that this bill is about an unchecked loan.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud went on to say, and these are his words: "I'm speaking against the referral motion. I'm speaking against it largely because the rest of the world expects that Alberta is going to get on with its climate leadership." Oddly enough – and again maybe the member can point it out to me, and I apologize if I got this wrong – I do not recall reading, "Give blank cheque to Balancing Pool," in the climate leadership plan. Maybe you could point that out to me, or maybe that report received just a quick lookover as well.

Then the member went on to go after my colleague by saying:

I was disappointed in the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake's comment that this was a senseless bill. Flipping the Switch to New Electricity System Makes Sense for Alberta: a direct contradiction to that member. He says that this is a senseless bill. We've got this great system that has been working so well. It's been working so well that our consumers in this province have been hit by massive changes in their month-to-month electricity bills.

The government member doesn't support our referral amendment on Bill 34 because of the regulated rate option? This bill has nothing to do with the RRO, Madam Speaker. Again, did you read the bill? Fifty or so words. There's still time to read it now. This bill is giving a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool.

Madam Speaker, our problem with the bill is that the Balancing Pool can already cover its losses with a rate rider that does not compromise the principles of fiscally responsible governance. Fiscal responsibility is a thing where you actually care about the taxpayers, so you don't irrationally remove the checks that are in place to protect them. Then again, the government did remove "fair and responsible" and a whole bunch of checks and balances that would actually keep you accountable, things, I might add, that we have given ample opportunity to amend on your behalf for your credibility.

The member went on last night to say:

I don't know if the members over there really care about consumers. It sounds from the discussion here tonight that they don't. Why wouldn't we protect farmers and residential owners and not-for-profits and make sure that they are going to know for the time being what the cap is on their rates?

Again if I could ask: did the member read the bill, Madam Speaker? It is not about the RRO. It's not about the regulated rate option.

I find it immensely amusing that a government currently in a lawsuit with a power company owned by Calgarians accused us of not caring. That is laughable.

You know, the regulated rate option was not an NDP invention. It's been around for a long, long time. The same person that pays an electricity bill: you know they pay taxes, right? It's just one of those things. You can't just shift a cost to a taxpayer and then wipe your hands of it and claim that somehow you've protected Albertans.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud didn't stop there. No, no, no. When he was finished talking about the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, then he went at me in a state of outrage, saying, "There were other people quoted by the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View from stuff that was written about a year ago." That's correct. You're absolutely right. And I think he said: why are you standing up, responding to a speech – oh, that's what it was. I was asking why the member would stand up, responding to a speech that he couldn't be bothered to listen to.

In my first speech on Bill 34 I was highlighting a timeline of the PPA lawsuit that was resulting in the Balancing Pool needing the funds that we are being asked to provide the Balancing Pool through Bill 34. The article that I read, Madam Speaker, was emphasizing the date that it was published in order to show that the government knew about the mass PPA cancellations before they claimed to or, at the very, very least, they should have. So the one and only response we've gotten so far on Bill 34 came from a member that didn't read the bill, didn't listen to our objections to the bill, and I really don't believe, with all my heart, that Albertans would be pleased.

Then because the member wasn't done going after the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, we got this beauty of a line.

I'm surprised that the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake loves that system that allowed these corporate giants to basically shut off their power plants at will, jacking the price up well over the 15 cents, maybe sometimes to 99 cents a gigajoule. He's happy with that. He must love these corporate guys. Economic withdrawal is going to be impossible in the capacity market. The capacity market is what we're all excited about here, and it's the basis for the need of this bill.

Again, Madam Speaker, did the member read the bill? This bill is not about the capacity market.

It's fascinating that we didn't get support from the member or any other government member when we actually asked to amend Bill 27 to protect the MSA's ability to investigate a said market from withholding on behalf of Albertans. That's what that one was about. I would have loved to have seen the member stand up on that; that would have been fantastic. What's even more fascinating is that our MSA amendment came up during the debate on Bill 27, not Bill 34. That is because, unlike Bill 34, that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud rose to speak to, Bill 27 actually has something to do with the MSA.

Madam Speaker, the government owes it to stand up and address Albertans' actual concerns about Bill 34 because it's in the best interests of Albertans. I'm just going to outline my objections one more time just in case you didn't get them the first time.

All right. Bill 34 is about covering the cost of the PPA debacle that this government created when it raised the SGER levy only a few weeks into their mandate without doing their homework on the consequences. Raising the SGER levy resulted in PPAs across this province acting on their contractual right to return their assets to the Balancing Pool, thus the current debt that the Balancing Pool needs to be bailed out of.

Bill 34 is irresponsible. There are no checks, no accountability, no public forum required to explain the minister's request for the funding. Like we've said, a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool for an undisclosed amount of money: that's what this bill is about. This bill is entirely unnecessary as the Balancing Pool already has the power through the use of an approved rate rider to recover its losses. Madam Speaker, government estimates put the needed rate rider at just over a dollar per month per bill while independent estimates from Andrew Leach has estimated this cost to be under $3 a month per bill. Whether the higher or lower estimated cost is correct, this low cost will in absolutely no way ever be able to justify the removal of important checks on government spending.

If we take a look at so many – I don't even know how many amendments, how many opportunities this side of the House has given the government side to be able to look at what they're doing, provide Albertans with the accountability that they so deserve, especially on things like this. A blank cheque? I mean, does the government not realize that these are not their dollars? We have an immense responsibility in this House to taxpayer dollars. As was pointed out in earlier debates, in other debates and other speeches, we are in a province that is suffering right now. We are in a province where families are unable to find work. My own family: I have family members right now that are leaving this province for other provinces.

We have people that are not investing in this province. We are seeing one thing after another. We are seeing investors leave. We are seeing caps on production, caps on upgrading, keeping it in the ground and out of the pipeline, and then, on top of that, to have members come in here to debate a bill and not understand that which we are talking about and, worse than that, to not even understand that what we're trying to do is actually – we're not even amending this. There is nothing to amend here. Never. This bill needs to go.

There will be no amendments from this side of the House, but let me also add that we are giving an opportunity . . .

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the referral? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak in favour of this referral for a number of reasons that I would hope to make obvious. We have before us a bill, and for every bill that comes before this House, of course, there's always a reason in back of it. The government, I would hope, doesn't just bring legislation to this House for the sake of bringing legislation here. When we consider the background that led to the reasons for this bill, Bill 34, even coming before this House, we see that there are some reasons why the government would want this kind of a bill to come into play.

We had a government that came to power and immediately took it upon itself to start meddling in our electricity system, and it appeared as time went by that the meddling continued, that it was I will call it a plan to so break our system that they could at some point as part of their plan stand up and say: well, we're the saviour of this broken electricity system, and we are going to reregulate what was a deregulated, free-market system. I believe that, ideologically, this government doesn't really like a lot of things free market, not really, and I believe that when they came to power, there was definitely an agenda to do what they could to mess with a system that, albeit it needed some repair, certainly did not need to be destroyed, a system that needed repair but certainly did not have to have the government come and so destroy it that we are now talking daily in this place about billions of dollars, tens of billions of dollars. It's not just growing on trees around here. This is tens of billions of dollars that ultimately will have to come from the pockets of hard-working Albertans not just in this generation but in future generations.

We have before us right now another bill regarding money, bill after bill coming before this House regarding money in the billions, and coupled with the deficit, coupled with the provincial debt, which is all in billions, it's just adding up and mounting up. That's why I say that it's like generational theft. We have a situation where future generations are going to be paying for a very long time for the mistakes of this government.

What has baffled a lot of people in the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake who have talked to me – they ask the question: why? Why doesn't the government just hit the pause button? Why don't they see that borrowing and borrowing and borrowing and borrowing isn't going to lead to prosperity? You can't borrow your way and you can't tax your way to prosperity for the people of Alberta. The people in my riding understand that very well. The moms and dads that are there that are out of work: they come to our constituency office. They are genuinely afraid. They're afraid for themselves, but they're very afraid for their children and their grandchildren because it appears to them that the government doesn't really grasp the overwhelming burden that their fiscal policies are going to have on our children and our grandchildren.

Mr. Rodney: Then you should hear this amendment I have.

Mr. MacIntyre: I'm looking forward to it.

We have a government in place that came into power with an agenda, and part of that agenda was, of course, to vilify coal, and immediately they attacked the carbon tax under the old specified gas emitters regulation. It was the first in a series of mistakes that just kept going and going and going. Rather than have the sense to stop, back up, admit their mistake, no, they pressed on, and they doubled down and tripled down and quadrupled down on mistake after mistake after mistake. I referred to it as Whac-A-Mole policy because the unintended consequences just keep popping up. Sadly, Madam Speaker, some of the unintended consequences aren't going to be felt necessarily by our generation, but they shall definitely be felt by our children and our grandchildren.

History will not be kind to this government. History will not be kind to this government's legacy. If you look back through Alberta's history, there are a couple of Premiers that our province has had that stand out. They're in the history books, and their popularity and notoriety go far beyond the borders of our little province here. I'm talking about Premier Peter Lougheed and Premier Ralph Klein, and whether people on the other side of the House agree with their policies or not, the fact of the matter is that both were fiscally responsible Premiers. Both of them made transformational changes in the fiscal policies of our province, and whether you like how they accomplished it or not, there were governments all around the world that wanted to talk to them and ask them: "How did you do it? How did you do that?"

They wanted to know the process because many jurisdictions around the world are and were mired in debt, mired in politics that were continuing to mount up into debt to the degree that, of course, you know, since the mid-2000s we have had whole nations declare bankruptcy. Whole nations. Yet some of those nations, even having gone through what they've gone through – and those generations now of children are experiencing the mistakes made by their predecessors – still press on in the same way. Take Greece, for an example. The solution that was put forward by the Greeks, of course, was: let's borrow more money from the EU, and that'll solve our problem. Tragically, the EU agreed.

Bringing it back to our current situation, we have a government that has made a number of mistakes, and I'm going to give credit where credit is due. The hon. interim leader of the third party stood in this House one day. I remember it still. I think I will always remember it. It's Calgary-Hays, I believe, that the hon. member is from. He stood in this House and acknowledged the errors made by his government, apologized to the people of Alberta for the mistakes made by his government, acknowledged that they had received their just reward by the voters of this province, and, in humility, that member acknowledged all those mistakes.

I have a great deal of respect for a man that does that, a great deal of respect for that. It demonstrates humility, and humility is simply defined as having a right estimation of one's self. That hon. member stood and tried to make amends for what was done wrong and, furthermore, did not stop there but pleaded sincerely and, I believe, from his heart with this government. He said, and I hope I quote him right: learn from our mistakes. He said: learn from our mistakes; don't make those mistakes, because the voters will not be kind.

Madam Speaker, this government is going down the very same road that the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays tried to warn them about and that we in the Official Opposition have tried and tried and will continue to try to warn this government about.

It would be very beneficial for this government to have a dose of humility and go back to the very first error that was made under the specified gas emitters regulation and simply start unwinding all of the steps that have been taken from that point that lead us to this bill currently before the House. Part of the process of correcting the mistakes of the past is to acknowledge them, first of all. It would be helpful indeed for this government to take Bill 34 and refer it and allow Albertans to come and have a say. Albertans, who are the people who will be saddled with the debt: allow them to speak.

It is interesting to note that this government has a penchant for unlimited borrowing. Unlimited borrowing. This government came into power and changed the spending cap, then eliminated it entirely, then eliminated the law on borrowing for operations. Now we have another bill, and the government is saying: "Well, Balancing Pool, you know what? We're not sure how big the damage is going to be to you from our mistakes, so we're just going to backstop you to however much you will ever need." Unlimited. Unchecked.

What's strange, Madam Speaker, is that estimates out there from independent analysts peg the amount of loss that the Balancing Pool may experience somewhere in that $500 million to $600 million range. What I don't quite understand here is that if that's so, why isn't there a cap on the amount of borrowing? Why is it open ended? What do we not know? What other kind of impact is this government going to bring on the Balancing Pool that could possibly have motivated them to bring a bill before the House with no limit on the amount the Balancing Pool can borrow from the government?

When you look at the numbers – and let's just take for a moment that the $500 million or $600 million is a reasonably accurate guesstimate from the independent analysts. All right. Divide that by four years or so, divide that by, you know, a million or so subscribers to the system, plus the commercial and the industrial users, and the actual amount that shows up on the electricity bill, if they would allow it to show up on the electricity bill, isn't going to be thousands of dollars per household. And since it's not a big amount of money and the government has an estimate that it's, you know, less than a couple of bucks, why is the government attempting to cloud the issue and not allow that charge to show up on electricity bills under the rate rider? Why are they pulling an Enron accounting deal and moving that column off our electric bills and onto the taxpayers' burden, to be hidden in the great mass of provincial debt?

I submit to this Assembly that there is more yet to come that is going to so adversely impact the Balancing Pool. The government knows it full well, and rather than back up and correct the mistakes that they've made, they simply use the solution that they apply to almost everything, and that is: tax Albertans, borrow more money, throw more money at the problem, and that'll solve it. Well, that doesn't work. It doesn't work when you've got a systemic problem, and this government has got a systemic problem. Our children, our grandchildren are going to be paying for a systemic problem from a government that will not back up and undo the damage that it has done to our electricity system.

You know, what's kind of odd to me is that the amount of extra revenue brought into this government by increasing the tax under the specified gas emitters regulation is only in the tens of millions, but that mistake that they made is costing us billions. That's a really shocking return on investment here. We're going to go broke with that kind of investment advice.

We've had one colossal mistake after another. This government knew full well the impact of changing the tax on the specified gas emitters. This measure that's before us, as I said, is really just a mess.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment?

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to request unanimous consent of the House to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: There are no other members wishing to speak to the referral amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment REF1 on second reading of Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, as proposed by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment REF1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:56 p.m.]

[Motion on amendment REF1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm rising today to move a reasoned amendment, a bit of a safety net, if you will, for the government. That, of course, is to Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. It's on behalf of my hon. colleague from Calgary-West. I do have the requisite number of copies for distribution available for the Assembly. If you would like, I will take my seat until it is circulated.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. Hon. member, the amendment will be referred to as amendment RA1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As you can plainly see, it reads:

Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not adequately address and minimize the adverse long-term financial implications of changes to the Electric Utilities Act with respect to debt financing.

Madam Speaker, Bill 34 allows the Minister of Finance to make undefined and unlimited loans on recommendations from the Minister of Energy to the Balancing Pool in order to cover what will be, naturally, impending deficits. It is worth pointing out for every member in this Assembly and all Albertans that never in the history of this province has such a borrowing practice occurred. I find that absolutely alarming. Now, since 2006 the Balancing Pool has always had a positive balance at the end of each and every year. Simply put, what has been proposed is a request to spend more money and, in turn, generate more debt, if you can believe that, as if the NDP was not deep enough already.

Now, since taking office, the NDP have exhibited a complete and utter disregard for the taxpayer and public purse. The numbers speak for themselves. We've seen nothing but reckless and profligate spending habits to compound what I have heard termed by many of my constituents as unconscionable spending habits. The NDP have raised taxes on all Albertans – that cannot be argued – during what could be argued is the worst recessionary period that almost every Albertan has ever seen. It includes, of course, a carbon tax. I firmly am convinced that people will not realize what it's all about until it actually happens, and it hits them in the pocketbooks starting next month. It was never campaigned on, was it? Anyone? It is destined to increase given the Premier's comments: we have never outlined that $30 was where it was going to stop. How high will it go? Nobody knows. All of this on top of something I'd never thought I'd see here in Alberta: downgrades, downgrades after downgrades of what used to be our impeccable credit rating.

Madam Speaker, it can't be argued. This is the opposite of a catalyst for growth. Simply put, you do not increase taxes during a recession, especially when families are having an increasingly difficult time meeting their basic needs due to record unemployment levels. I don't know how many members on that side of the House are talking to their constituents. I can tell you that it is making me physically sick to talk to so many of these people who tell me – not just stories; these are realities – of losing family businesses that took generations to build, careers that took decades to build. It's not just about the money. It's not just about sending Johnny or Jane to hockey. It's about: how do I pay for my home? This isn't fair, in my humble opinion.

Madam Speaker, unemployment is reaching an area I'd never thought I'd see in this province, double digits. GDP growth is going in the exact opposite direction it has been for decades. To make a bad situation worse, we can add – I'm going to phrase this nicely, as nicely as I can – a lacklustre NDP jobs plan compounded by tax increases. I've had constituents ask me: "What are they trying to do over there, really? Are they trying to dismantle the very economy, the very culture, upon which this proud province was built?"

An Hon. Member: It's a nightmare.

Mr. Rodney: People call it a nightmare.

This scenario relates to the theme I mentioned at the beginning, Madam Speaker: a lack of regard for the taxpayer, a lack of regard for the public purse. The fact that the government has to table such legislation simply illustrates not only an inability to budget properly but an inability to understand the true cost of their policies.

Their constant meddling with the electrical system is proof of this and has manifested itself in Bill 34. The NDP's haphazard actions to overhaul the electrical system are putting Albertans at a risk they never would have imagined before, Madam Speaker, and these failed policies are driving Albertans further into debt. This will cost Albertans for years to come because the NDP don't have a clue with respect to how this money will be repaid – they've said it themselves – nor do they seem to understand the concept of accrued interest. Over $1 billion in debt financing alone: that's like a Calgary South Health Campus down the drain every year. It's like huge sections of ring roads every year. How does this make any sense at all to anyone? I don't know.

But I do know this: at this rate, royalty from pipelines will not even cover the interest payments. How does it make sense? I hope someone over there can explain it to all of us. If we think about that for a moment – well, I'll just ask this, Madam Speaker: do we have more pipeline announcements coming? We would need two more to even work our way towards the black some day.

Now, if the NDP had any semblance of a plan, if they had an ability to budget properly, if they had respect for the taxpayer, they would not table Bill 34. It's a short-term solution to artificially insulate Albertans from the NDP world view. When will the cycle end? It's a vicious cycle. I don't see it ending. By moving forward with Bill 34, we're continuing the disturbing trend of burdening future generations with debt.

Hon. member, what did he call it a minute ago?

Mr. MacIntyre: Generational theft.

Mr. Rodney: Generational theft. Thank you, sir.

Through the Speaker to the member and to all Albertans: no matter how you slice it, this is debt for future generations, and they're going to have to repay it. They had nothing to do with it. They didn't ask for this. The people over there did. The NDP asked for this, and they don't have a plan to repay it. The government is, whether they choose to admit it or not, destroying future livelihoods, future opportunities, future chances of prosperity. That's the reason why the size of Red Deer used to move to Alberta, because jobs were waiting for them here. Now we see the opposite, well over 100,000 jobs – that's people's jobs – lost in the last year alone. We're going the wrong direction here, folks.

It's one thing to borrow money with a plan to repay it, but it's another thing to borrow unlimited amounts of money with no plan to repay it and essentially throw caution to the wind. That, Madam Speaker, again in my humble opinion, is irresponsible borrowing, and it is a practice that does not resonate with any Albertan I've ever met. It's a practice that this government is exhibiting not only in Bill 34 but in other policies and pieces of legislation.

It's for that reason that I'm very pleased to table this amendment. By their own admission from before the election the NDP need to be transparent with Albertans, and here with respect to how borrowed monies of the Balancing Pool will be repaid, they need to have a plan to refinance their debt, and that concept simply goes hand in hand with good governance.

Madam Speaker, for the sake of all Albertans I hope all of the members of this Assembly will take a deep breath, vote for this amendment, and do so so that the NDP can come back with a responsible borrowing plan and re-evaluate what is currently, to put it mildly, a poor piece of misguided legislation.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, anyone wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As much as I would love to engage and remind the member, appreciating his comments, that the Minister of Finance laid out a clear path for our government to go back to balance, I will save those arguments for another day and would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect of this bill? [interjections]

Mr. MacIntyre: I know you're surprised. I know you're surprised.

Well, Madam Chair, we have before us, of course, what is becoming one of my favourite bills to oppose. There are a number of amendments that we are bringing forward, and I am going to be proposing an amendment in a jiffy here. We're on A6 right now.

The Deputy Chair: We are on amendment A6 still.

Mr. MacIntyre: Can you read the amendment, please, ma'am?

The Deputy Chair: You're testing me now. Just one second. My apologies. We have a lot of amendments.

Mr. MacIntyre: We're on the main bill right now?

The Deputy Chair: No, we're on amendment A6. I'm just going to clarify the amendment. My apologies, hon. member.

Amendment A6. Mr. MacIntyre to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 3(2) by striking out "may establish" and substituting "shall establish and make public."

Mr. MacIntyre: May and shall. This comes back again, Madam Chair, to this issue of being completely unable to manage something you do not measure. We have a situation here where "the Minister may establish renewable electricity program objectives." As I mentioned before – I'll just remind the House again – when you've got a situation where a minister of the Crown may or may not do something, especially when it concerns something of the scope of our electricity system, we have a situation where literally billions of dollars are hanging in the balance. Under the terms of this particular bill, strangely, the Minister of Energy has an enormous amount of discretionary authority when it comes to the development of renewables projects, to the point, Madam Chair, where the Minister of Energy doesn't even have to demonstrate need. There is no – no – compulsion on the minister to demonstrate need, yet the minister has the discretionary authority to insist that these renewable projects be built.

That said, it only makes sense, then, that the minister provide the people of Alberta, first and foremost, but also industry with clearly defined objectives. What this amendment attempts to do is make sure that the minister does the appropriate thing, that the minister shall establish and make public program objectives that promote specific goals, including specific environmental goals and specific social goals and specific economic goals. Without these specific goals being clearly enunciated to not just the people of Alberta but also the investment community, how in the world is anyone going to even understand that what the minister is doing is the right thing? We're talking about a multibillion-dollar industry, a multibillion-dollar infrastructure build-out between now and 2030 to build 5,000 megawatts of generation and another 80 per cent of that as backup for it. It only makes common sense, maybe not so common sense anymore, that the minister ought to have specific program objectives and that the minister shall establish them and shall make them public.

First of all, what kind of program is this section talking about? Well, it's promoting large-scale renewable generation. There are a number of persons involved in the process of getting renewables generation actually up in the air or built in some way. We're talking about municipal governments that are going to be involved, various agencies like the Alberta Utilities Commission, the Alberta Electric System Operator, electricity companies like TransAlta, Fortis, ATCO, rural electricity associations, and so on. There's a massive amount of industry out there that needs to know the direction that the province is actually taking so that they can plan and plan appropriately. But under the terms of this bill, Bill 27, the minister is not under any compulsion whatsoever to establish specific objectives. None. None whatsoever. The minister may, if she feels like it today.

An Hon. Member: Or not.

Mr. MacIntyre: Or not.

Maybe it's an oversight on the part of the government, and if that's the case, then fine. Here we have an amendment that's very clear. We're going to fix it. We're going to make it a little better. The minister is actually going to have a very clear mandate that the minister must establish, shall establish – “shall” in legal terms is a compulsory word. The current language needs to be fixed. Secondly, if the minister is going to ask the ISO to do something like this, there had better be some very clear objectives and specific evaluation criteria in place. Otherwise, why do we even have this section? Why even bother saying, “The minister may establish”? Why even have section 3(2) in existence in this bill? It doesn't make any sense the way it is currently worded.

If the minister doesn't want to – think about putting “shall” in here, Madam Chair. It doesn't mean that the minister, the person, the politician, necessarily has to be the individual that comes up with the plan, but she has the responsibility to make sure that it is done. I understand how things would work. That minister would delegate that responsibility to experts. Hopefully, the minister would bring in many, many experts to advise the minister on what would be the very best objectives, what would be the very specific goals, the environmental goals, the social goals, the economic goals of a particular project. The minister would then publish what these are and issue RFPs or RFIs, and away we go with that project. But as it currently stands, the minister has no compulsion whatsoever to do that. Is the government really saying that we need a section like this in the legislation to let a minister decide these things?

You know, from the get-go, from the election in 2015, one of the things that maybe the government has heard me ask for time and time again is economic analysis. I don't know. The word “economic” seems to be a common word that my lips ask for. Economic analysis. Economic analysis. There's a reason for that, Madam Chair. The good people of Alberta need to know the numbers. The good people of Alberta need to know what it's going to cost. We just debated a bill where the government hasn't taken the time to figure out what it's going to cost the Balancing Pool, so just give them a MasterCard with no limit. But then that's how the government seems to be operating everything, including the provincial budget. Just give the Minister of Finance a MasterCard with no limit.

Well, my request under this amendment, of course, is that the minister have some specific guidelines that the minister must follow, and that is to clearly enunciate the environmental, social, and economic objectives – the objectives – and then make that public for people. Get the good people of Alberta involved in the process. As I will say repeatedly, I expect until the next election, there are a couple of things that this House is going to hear from me time and time again. It's: where is the economic analysis? The second thing is: you cannot manage what you do not measure. Economic analysis is part of that.

Without really clear program objectives and clear evaluation metrics the government is going to be flying by the seat of its pants. We've already seen the disasters that this leads to. If you don't have clear objectives, if you don't have clear evaluation criteria, if you don't put a goal out there, you're going to hit it. You're going to hit your nongoal every single time, and it leaves our entire province like a ship without a rudder.

There are a ton of examples around the world of failures both of government and in industry when corporations, when governments, and even families, for that matter, don't have clear objectives. You know, without a clear vision people perish. It's true. Without really clear objectives in place it's hard on people. People get hurt. Can anyone on the government side get up and say why this particular section should even be here without this kind of amendment? Is it really the case that on the government side of this House they want to have a minister that doesn't have clearly defined goals, clearly defined objectives?

We've asked repeatedly in a number of bills – Bill 25 specifically, Bill 27 here, and other bills – for performance criteria, measurables. When we were in the debate on the carbon tax bill, Bill 20, we were repeatedly asking the government to put in place measurables to determine that in fact carbon taxation was resulting in a net decrease in global greenhouse gas emissions. It was very surprising to us over here that the government voted down such key performance indicators. If you don't have those key performance indicators in place, then you really don't know whether the measures you're putting in place are doing what you want them to do or not. It's impossible to know whether carbon taxation is going to result in any net decrease in greenhouse gas emissions if the government isn't putting into place even something to measure that, yet we have the government already talking about going to $50 when they have absolutely zero evidence and zero measurables in place to determine if the current rate is going to do any good. It's really, really irresponsible and reckless.

Here we have this Bill 27. We have a minister clearly being given an enormous amount of power under the terms and conditions of Bill 27, yet that same minister doesn't have any requirement for specific goals, either environmental goals – what about those environmental goals? Why under this bill, where this bill is supposed to be the Renewable Electricity Act, establishing the framework for getting 30 per cent by 2030, is the minister not required to make any environmental goals, no specific goals on the environment? Isn't the reason why we have this act all about the environment?

Here again there is no requirement for the minister to have any program objectives, specific program objectives, for the social impact. Here again, Madam Chair, one of the rationales behind getting to 30 per cent by 2030 was to improve health, to improve the health of Albertans, yet the minister is not required to specifically make any objectives regarding the social aspect of this act. It's a little bit odd when we have the minister of the environment, the Minister of Energy, the Deputy Premier, the Premier herself, and multiple members over there standing up, you know, beating the health care drum, saying, “We've got to have this because people are getting sick,” yet the minister is not required to establish any clear program objectives regarding the health of Albertans. Yet that is part of the justification for this bill's existence, getting to 30 per cent by 2030.

Then let's take a look at the economic goals. This government has claimed time and time again that the drive to 30 per cent by 2030 is going to provide thousands and tens of thousands of jobs to Albertans and that the drive to a carbon-constrained economy is going to be prosperous for us all. We've heard this time and again: thousands of jobs, that all those oil patch workers and all those coal miners and all those coal generating plant workers are going to find employment in this new green industry. Yet the very act that is bringing renewables to 30 per cent of generation by 2030 does not require the minister to create any program objectives regarding the economy. None whatsoever.

What this actually says, Madam Chair, in its current form, Bill 27 unamended, is this. One, the minister has the power to insist that renewable generation be constructed regardless of whether we need it or not to answer our demand load. Two, regardless of the impact on our economy the government is prepared to borrow whatever money is necessary to make it happen. Three, the Market Surveillance Administrator cannot be the watchdog over how this rolls out when it comes to renewables. Four, the minister, with all of that discretionary power, doesn't even need to create any program objectives to promote specific goals, including environmental, social, or economic.

In other words, Madam Chair, here we have someone given an enormous amount of power and zero accountability. Zero accountability. The minister doesn't need to create specific goals, no specific objectives, and this government is removing any ability to even measure the performance. They don't want to be measuring, don't want to be watching, don't want to be seeing if, in fact, the government's claims actually come true. There are no specific criteria, and there's no compulsion for the minister to make them.

This is another blank cheque. This is another situation where we have one individual being given an enormous amount of authority and power in our province. The watchdog can't watch, and Albertans cannot measure their performance. Is that the kind of transparency the NDP campaigned on? That's not transparency. That's not even opaque. That's a brick wall, and it's a protective brick wall where the minister is protected. The Market Surveillance Administrator can't even so much as accept a complaint, and even if they could, they can't investigate it.

This is not transparency, Madam Chair. What this amendment is trying to do is make the minister accountable for some achievement of clearly identified objectives. Now, I realize that's going to take some work. It's going to take some work on the part of the minister and the minister's department to actually develop clear, specific environmental goals, economic goals, and social goals for this particular bill. But a responsible government should do that. I guarantee you one thing. Any business or businessman or board of directors worth their salt would conduct these kinds of things and provide their company with these specific goals. You take any business course you want to take. Goal setting is always one of the key – key – elements to a successful business.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm sure it will come as a surprise to the opposition that I rise tonight to speak against this amendment as it is unnecessary and unhelpful given the full context of the bill.

The member opposite is endeavouring to create a problem out of section 3 where no problem currently exists. Section 3 simply allows the minister to direct the AESO to develop a program with specific objectives for that one round of the program. These would be objectives over and above the general objectives that exist for every program in this bill. The member opposite suggests that without his amendment we might develop programs without objectives. However, clearly stated objectives are ubiquitous in the bill itself, with no need to require the minister to set additional ones.

The Legislature sets objectives by enacting this bill itself. I'm sorry that the members opposite don't support these objectives. Opposing renewable energy and the opportunities it brings for Alberta is certainly their prerogative. However, the government is setting the objectives in law. Let me take this opportunity to put them on record and to list some of them. Some of the objectives included in this bill are promoting the growth of renewable electricity generation in Alberta; reducing greenhouse gas emissions and improving air quality; ensuring that at least 30 per cent of electric energy produced in Alberta, measured on an annual basis, will be produced from renewable energy sources; promoting large-scale renewable electricity in Alberta; employing a fair, transparent, and competitive process that does not jeopardize the safe, reliable, and economic operation of the interconnected electric system. So right there we have half a dozen objectives for renewable electricity programs in the legislation. It's black and white. The minister need not necessarily set out more.

Now, section 3(2) is purposefully discretionary. What section 3(2) does allow for is that it allows the minister to set additional objectives or criteria. Say you wanted to incent a program that was based on community ownership or was based on inclusion of indigenous communities or was based on particular, specific technologies or specific rural or urban economic development objectives. This discretion will allow us to seek specific outcomes that are important to Albertans as we continue to hear from them and solicit their feedback. But to require the minister to set more objectives than are already in the act is unnecessary. For example, the first program procurement will be decided on price alone. Would the opposition require us to add other objectives rather than focusing the first program on one that ensures lowest cost?

Functionally this is why we oppose the amendment. It creates extra red tape and duplicates elements that are already in the bill, so I would recommend that everyone oppose it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, I definitely want to speak about this. I'm just making some notes in response to the Member for Calgary-East. Unfortunately, I wish so much that what is laid out in this part of the bill was black and white. What we're actually asking for is exactly what you just said. We are asking that it "shall establish and make public." All that means is that it adds credibility to the minister's ability to bring forward programs. As you've said in your own speech just now, if it's best for Albertans, then Albertans should know. Right? We want to make sure that the words "shall establish and make public" add credibility to parts of this legislation so that, as the Member for Calgary-East just said, if the minister so chooses to bring forward programs, you have the capacity to do that.

Right now, as it stands, the minister has power over power and on almost every aspect. Not even almost. We're going to find everywhere in this bill the lack of oversight, the lack of metrics, the lack of desire to show transparency, which I believe was in the member's brief statement, too. How is it that members can justify transparency without legitimate words like "shall" and "must" and “shall establish and make public” versus “may”? How can you even say the word “transparent” without making sure that the responsibility of that minister is to be transparent? Are we supposed to just trust that that’s what’s going to happen? I guarantee you that Albertans are not going to go for that.

The whole reason for putting these words into legislation is to protect Albertans, and governments shouldn’t be afraid of those words because ultimately it shows a government’s desire to make sure that they’re doing right by Albertans and are protecting Albertans. As the member stated, there may be ideas that the minister wants to bring forward, and he or she may think it’s a great idea, but without actually having those words in the legislation to make sure that they are managing the oversight on this, that minister could end up in a whole bunch of trouble.

This is actually protective. This is a protective mechanism not only for Albertans but also for the government because you have to go through the process of making sure that you’ve followed: shall establish and make public. Any time that you have to do something in public, the person is going to do their very best, and they’re going to make sure that they’re prepared and that, when they are standing in front of folks or they are presenting, they’ve gone to the work and the effort to make sure that all of those avenues have been checked.

It’s like anything. I could compare it to music even, doing a performance. You’re not going to just go and do a half-baked performance of something that’s very important to you in front of people that have either hired you or are having you there to do that job. That’s just in my little world of what I did before I was here. I can’t imagine not feeling that sense of responsibility. Sometimes you sign contracts for those things. Well, this is just a continuation of what a normal businessperson would do in a normal, everyday life when you have contractual obligations. I mean, putting in the words “shall establish and make public” should be something that we would demand from our government to make sure that they’re following through with their obligations. I would be proud to put that on something that I put forward because I know I would follow through with that. Even if, let’s say by accident, something happens, this wording that we’re actually wanting to put in will protect those folks that are doing that.

I also want to speak just on the enormous responsibility in what is going to come forward here with programs. You know, we see all sorts of information about particular types of renewables and alternative energy that’s gone wrong, pieces of massive infrastructure that have been left and not reclaimed all over the world. At the very least, we are asking the minister to make sure that this is public information. I mean, we’re dealing with municipalities here. Those municipalities don’t have the right to know what’s coming onto the lands in those areas? You were saying about indigenous folks and other things, Member for Calgary-East. Well, I would assume – I mean, maybe we’re the only ones who are seeing this – that consultation would be key. I would assume that those folks as well as anybody else whose land that these projects may be built on would want you to make sure the words “shall establish and make public” were in there. How else are we going to make sure that we have a check on a system where the only requirement is: well, maybe today I feel like doing that.

I mean, if feelings are going to determine legislation, we are in big trouble. Feelings are not going to justify bad decisions from this government. You’re in big trouble if you’re going to try and defend this one. I would suggest that everyone in this House vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, I just want to respond a little bit to some more on this amendment, this fine amendment, and some of the comments from I believe it’s Calgary-East.

The Member for Calgary-East pointed out in her rejection of this amendment that there are all kinds of program objectives already contained within Bill 27 – I believe that’s a fair paraphrase; would it not be a fair paraphrase? – which then leads to the obvious question: then why in heaven’s name do we have section 3(2)? Why do we have section 3(2)?

(2) The Minister may establish . . .

(b) specific evaluation criteria to be used by the ISO in developing a proposal for a renewable electricity program and in implementing a renewable electricity program to meet the objectives.

Why do we have this, then, if it’s already been done elsewhere in Bill 27? The logic falls down a little bit there, which is not uncommon. If we’re going to have this section in this bill where the minister may or may not do something, at least let’s make sure that the minister shall.

A second comment that I take exception to is that the hon. Member for Calgary-East seemed to think that members on this side of the House are somehow against renewables. That’s a really interesting comment given that, you know, for myself at least, that’s how I earned my living for many, many, many years, on alternative energy projects and teaching alternative energy curriculum at NAIT in the alternative energy program in the school of sustainable building management, and I’m still on faculty there. You know, that was my dream job. Someday, when I’m either worn out from beating on you guys or tired of talking in this place, maybe I’ll go back to that. I don’t know. You may want me to go back to that.

Here we have a situation where, you know, people on this side of the House actually do really appreciate renewables. The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View’s house is plastered with solar panels all over the roof. Anybody on that side got something like that?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacIntyre: No? Oh. See, in the world of renewable technologies one of the things that you really have to do is that you’ve got to put your money where your mouth is. In the industry that I came from, one of the questions that people always asked was: well, what have you got on the go yourself? I mean, our engineering people were being asked that all the time.

You know, taking that under advisement in the early days, it was kind of incumbent upon all of us to actually have these sorts of things in our homes and in our lives. Being a renter and not owning a home, of course, the landlord would frown terribly if I went up and started hammering solar panels on the roof. However, I spent the summer off grid, which was an enjoyable experience, in the middle of Sylvan Lake on a sailing vessel, off grid, solar powered, when the wind didn’t blow. As you may know, sailboats need wind, just like a wind turbine does. But living off grid with solar power was a fun experience for me. I know many people who do live off grid, who have various alternative forms of energy generation. Some of them are colleagues from industry. Some of them are just do-it-yourselfers.

You know, out west towards Edson and that way there are a number of people that are off grid. Some are grid tied, but many are off grid, people that I know. They’re experiencing what it’s like with renewables and the different changes to lifestyles that they have to incorporate in order for renewables to actually function for them given some of the constraints that we experience here such as minus 40, such as snow, ice, such as, you know, really huge demand loads, things like that. We're really going to put some stress on the old batteries when the children come home and flip on every light and every electronic device, the television and everything else. These are some of the constraints you experience with renewable technology.

So over here on this side we are actually very pro renewables. One of the fundamental differences, though, between how we see to promote them and how the government sees to promote them is that we want renewables to be able to stand on their own two feet. We're not willing to sacrifice taxpayers. We're not willing to sacrifice Alberta's taxpayers or ratepayers in pursuit of something, especially as rapidly as this government wants to pursue it. Albertans have a right not to be disrupted.

As I think I've stated before in this House, one of the principles of sound energy management is to do no harm, and the reason why in industry, when we're incorporating energy management principles and energy efficiency measures, we do no harm is because the company is going to have to pay for these changes somehow. These energy efficiency measures cost money. These changes that we're going to incorporate take a lot of money. So if you start bringing in changes for the sake of renewables or the sake of energy efficiency and it hurts the bottom line of the company, you're actually gutting the company's ability to pay for the changes they want to incorporate when it comes to energy efficiency and renewable technologies.

This government came into power and immediately gutted, began and continued to gut, our economy, which ultimately has to be able to afford these very changes that they want to bring in. Right from July onward this government gets a failing grade when it comes to how one ought to roll out these kinds of things. The government has quoted me as being in support of some of the government's energy efficiency measures. I would love to, but unfortunately what has happened is that you've gutted the economy's ability to actually do them. The thing to do is to bring in measures that do no harm, and you bring them in slowly, and you do them bit by bit, here and there, here and there. You do pilot projects, and you prove that they work before you make these wholesale, sweeping, grandiose plans. This government has not done any of that.

This government has gone straight for the grandiose plans, thinking that they know best, and now we're talking about $10 billion here and $5 billion there and $6 billion there. This is our people's money. This is our taxpayers' money, our ratepayers' money, and we don't have the minister being required to even create any specific economic goals. It's an option. I would hope that every member in this place would see the importance of making sure that the minister, with this much power in the minister's control – I would hope that they would appreciate helping Albertans by providing something like this, where the minister actually has some work to do, to create some specific goals.

As I have mentioned, we are very pro renewables over here, but it's going to have to be competitive, and it's going to have to stand on its own two feet, and it cannot constantly be living with both feet in the trough at the expense of Alberta's taxpayers.

I would hope that ultimately we see this government, government members, approve this very responsible amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Good evening, and thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Speaker, I rise to seek unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing the time and the progress and the robust debate that we've had this evening, I move that we adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:56 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

As we go about our work on behalf of the province and the people we serve, let us meet each new challenge with determination as we work to enrich the lives of the people of today, and let us strive to make good decisions for the people of tomorrow. Let us always give thanks to those who came before us.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair, and good morning. Well, we have before us this bill, Bill 25. I'll call it the Limiting of Development bill. We have talked at length about the impact that this bill is going to have on development in the north. We have a situation where, by some estimates, the lost opportunity cost of following through with this bill as it currently stands is going to amount to hundreds of billions of dollars in lost opportunity. The actual cost of that lost opportunity translated into costs per tonne is estimated to be in excess of $800. I believe the figure was $863 a tonne of emissions. That is the lost opportunity cost that this government is attempting to force upon that sector and upon the people of Alberta.

Of course, what dollars and cents often do is that they miss the human factor. We talk in this House so much about a billion here and a billion there and now $250 billion in development that's going to be capped, and really I think sometimes we lose the human element in those discussions. We have a sector, the oil and gas sector, in this province that is experiencing one of the worst economic downturns in the history of Alberta. We have a population province-wide that is also in that same problem. We have downtown Calgary, that according to reports has seen the loss of over 11,000 businesses, 11,000 businesses gone down. They've either shut down or moved.

Again, we talk about these statistics, and we forget to put a face to them. Those 11,000 businesses that are shut down represent moms and dads and children and futures, and those futures are at risk because of the policies of this government during, as I said, the worst economic downturn since the Great Depression.

We have a government here that, unfortunately, doesn't understand that you do not kick people when they're down, and that's what this government has been doing from day one. They came into power knowing full well we were in an economic downturn, and they immediately started raising taxes and fees, following in the footsteps of the government that they replaced.

This is really sad, that this government would continue on in that kind of a way to hurt the people of Alberta, impacting entire communities. It's been policy after policy, legislation after legislation attempting to somehow re-engineer the most resource-wealthy jurisdiction in all of North America to some sort of NDP utopia when, in fact, if we were to follow through unchecked in the methodology and the vision of the NDP world view, they will essentially drive us back to the Stone Age. We'll be driving around in windup cars in their so-called carbon-free environment that they want to try and create here, not realizing that in a carbon-free environment they won't be able to talk to one another on their cellphone. In their carbon-free vision they won't be able to paddle around in their plastic canoe. They won't be able to wear their synthetic shoes, wear their synthetic clothes in their synthetic house.

Madam Chair, this bill that we've got before us, just to put a face to it, represents a bill that is going to be hindering jobs for people. We've seen numerous pieces of legislation from this government that are attacking different sectors in this province. There was the agricultural sector, the agricultural sector that didn't meet the NDP world view. Numbers of us have had e-mails from greenhouse operators who are looking at the carbon tax and can't see a future for their business in this province, a carbon tax that this government justified by saying, "Well, we're going to really do something and provide leadership, global leadership, on the reduction of greenhouse gases," not realizing that for every greenhouse you shut down in this province, that's another truckload of produce coming out of Mexico: jobs that are lost in this province, taxes that won't be paid in this province, moms and dads whose children have a future at risk because of this government's illogic.

Now we have a bill before us that is capping emissions, but really it's a cap on development. It's another in the drive towards leaving it in the ground at a time, even, when for some crazy reason this government refuses to wait for a report from their own panel on this very subject, insisting that, well, we've got to get Bill 25 passed just as quickly as we can. Are we afraid to see what's in the report? I'm not afraid to see what's in that report. Let's have it, but let's have it before the legislation gets passed. There is a proper order to things here, and when you strike a panel, you wait. You wait until you hear the report from the panel. I remember we waited and waited and waited for the royalty review panel, and the government certainly didn't like that outcome very much. It was kind of embarrassing. The review panel came back and said: well, actually, it ain't that broke; it doesn't need fixing so much. In the meantime the very fact that we were having a royalty review resulted in investment fleeing this province to the tune of some $40 billion. It seems to me the government dropped the ball there, too.

Now, when we come to this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, we have before us an act that is going to cost the province again in lost opportunity. We're going to have stranded assets once again, just like we're having stranded assets in our electricity sector. Over and over again we see this government failing to do proper, thorough analysis, independent analysis by people outside their NDP bubble. Of course, even those who are inside the NDP bubble aren't going to get their day. We're not going to listen to what OSAG has got to say before this bill gets pushed through this House. That's, I think, an embarrassment to this government.

Now, again we come back to this issue that capping development in any way in a resource-rich province like this means capping jobs. It means capping futures. It means capping the prosperity of our province, and I will say again that when it comes to the development of our resources, whether they be oil and gas, whether it be agriculture, whether it be forestry, each and every sector in this province is a sector we Albertans should be very proud of. You will not find another resource-rich jurisdiction anywhere in the world that has done such a good job of developing resources in a responsible manner as you will find right here in this province.

Some of us in this room have travelled to other nations in the world that are resource-rich nations. We've got nothing to be embarrassed about in this province. We should be holding our head up high because our industrial sector in this province has done a remarkably good job in developing the resources that we have.

In our agricultural sector are the stewards of the land, and they have done a remarkable job in increasing food production year by year by year and maintaining the quality of our land. Our resource sector has some of the best reclamation and remediation practices in the world, Madam Chair. In the world. As I've said, some of us have been to those other places that don't have those kinds of things. We have nothing to be embarrassed about. We should be holding our head high. We have been leaders on the environmental front when it comes to resource development from the get-go.

This government came to power, and by some of the rhetoric that you would hear, environmentalism in Alberta was somehow unheard of till they came to power, and that is simply not true. We have a remarkable legacy already. We have recycling programs here. We have waste reduction programs in our industries, in the construction industry and the resource development industry. They all had waste reduction strategies for years before this government came to power. We have had remediation and reclamation processes that were invented in this province long before this government came to power. Let's be clear: the NDP did not invent environmental responsibility, like they like to have everyone think is the case. Not true.

Albertans right across this province that are proud wearers of hard hats and gloves and workboots and Nomex: they have been responsible. They have been the leaders on the environmental front all the way along, and I am proud of them.

Now we have a government that is antibusiness, anti everything that could possibly lead to a recovery out of this economic problem that we're in. We have neighbours just to the east of us, in Saskatchewan, that are posting job growth, that are posting growth in their resource sector. They are doing remarkably well facing the very same global economic issues that we are facing, yet here we are stuck. We're not stuck on account of the economic situation globally. We are stuck because of the policies of a government that does not understand basic business. We're stuck with a government that has policy after policy that is based on the ideologies of tax, tax, tax, take that money and spend, spend, spend, and if government doesn't do it, then obviously it isn't going to get done. That is simply not true.

Government is just about the worst at doing everything, the best at taxing, and the most profoundly impactful in destroying economies. It's when government gets out of the way that economies flourish. Take a look around the world where you have had heavy-handed government, and what do you see? Poverty. Corruption. Harm. The vulnerable falling through the cracks. Governments that don't listen to their people. We have government after government taxing their people into the ground, and now we have one of our own right here in this province. I long for 2019, and so do millions of Albertans, because ultimately Albertans are going to have their day. They're going to have their day, and it's going to be glorious.

Here we've got this bill before us, Madam Chair. Overall a cap on emissions like this one is a cap on development and a cap on prosperity, a cap on the future of our province and a cap on pulling us out of this deep recession that we're in. I do not support this bill. I'm not sure you could possibly offer up enough amendments to improve it, but we're going to try. That is our job, to come up with alternatives in an attempt to improve bad legislation like Bill 25, and we will continue to do that. My colleagues and I have a number of amendments in an attempt to improve this bad legislation, and I would hope that the government will listen to reason and listen to the sensibility of these amendments as we attempt, through these amendments, to improve the opportunity for our oil and gas sector to grow and to prosper and to provide badly needed jobs right across that sector.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for enduring me once again. I look forward to the next speaker.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Today I'm proud to stand here in this House as an Albertan, and I'm proud that Alberta is blessed with natural resources. But there is another thing we should all be proud about: having a legislator like the one from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. We are truly blessed to have a legislator like him, who can actually educate all of us so eloquently. It's up to us whether we want to use that information or not. At least he's working day and night to bring all of us up to date. It's unfortunate if you choose to close your eyes and ears, but I mean, we can't help that. I was quite impressed, and this file I understand a bit because I spent my life in this sector.

As I said, Madam Chair, I believe that climate change is real, and I do want to support any bills that would actually reduce emissions. In this case the intent is good. Like with many other bills this government has brought, the intentions are good, but the outcomes are nowhere close to what they say. The reason I oppose this bill is because of the hidden agenda of this government, and the hidden agenda came out yesterday when the Member for Edmonton-McClung got up and said: it's a cap on production. It's in the Hansard. You can look at that. The truth comes out once in a while. Yesterday he said many good points, but he also spoke the truth, that this is a cap on production. That's why I can't support this bill.

This bill is not only a cap on production; it's a cap on economic development and a cap on prosperity. Most importantly, actually, it's a cap on immigration. People like me, economic immigrants, move to this province because this province has the third-largest petroleum resource in the world, which means it's an opportunity for new immigrants to come here and have well-paid jobs and have quality of life. But this bill is going to actually cap those opportunities for new immigrants.

You know, Madam Chair, when economic immigrants come to this province, when they work in well-paid jobs, and when they contribute to innovation and all, they actually pay taxes here, and that contributes to the economy of the province. This bill is going to restrict that movement of economic immigrants across the country or across the world.

Madam Chair, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talked about the prosperity and the resourcefulness of other countries. I came from a country where I personally experienced energy hunger and energy poverty. I've travelled a lot in China and Europe and other provinces that also experience this energy hunger and energy poverty. But I came to Alberta, which has natural resources like coal or gas or oil, and it's unfortunate that we have a government here who wants to strand that resource. They want to leave it in the ground. So all other things they say – they said before that they don't want pipelines. Now they say they do want pipelines. They talked about those two pipelines. I appreciate their efforts now. I congratulate them. In spite of them, we got that. Even if there was any little contribution from the NDP in obtaining approval for those pipelines, I appreciate them. Albertans salute that. But we are all looking forward to getting them built, actually. The Premier was in B.C. for two days, and she couldn't convince her own cousins in B.C., and she couldn't convince her own cousins in Manitoba a few months ago. We'll see how that goes.

Our Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner actually offered yesterday constructive co-operation. We'll do everything we need to do to help this government, to work with them to get those pipelines built. But, on one hand, they say that we want additional capacity to transport the oil; on the other hand, they want to keep the oil in the ground. There is no consistency here, so I don't know how to take them seriously. They say that they consulted the people of Alberta before they brought this bill in. I don't know who they consulted. They talk about those four CEOs. What about the people working in those companies, thousands of them, those employees who are Albertans, who actually own this resource? Those CEOs are big oil. They don't own the resource. Albertans own the resource.

I used to work for big oil. I don't now, because I work for Albertans. Albertans own this resource, and this government is elected to represent Albertans, hard-working Albertans, not the elites overseas and not the elites that oppose Alberta from Ottawa. We are here to represent everyday hard-working Albertans, but this government just called those four CEOs. They don't talk about the employees that work in those big corporations.

Funnily enough, they don't even want to consult CAPP. This is not the cap they are talking about, a cap on emissions. I'm talking about CAPP, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, who are the voice for upstream oil and gas in Canada. Their job is to promote the growth of the oil industry here in a responsible manner and to help them to become competitive and to advocate for the industry. This government conveniently chose not to consult them. I understand the minister told them that they will only have a seat at the table of the OSAG if they blindly support Bill 25. That is really appalling, Madam Chair. They say that they consult. With all the transparency they talk about, they don't even consult the main stakeholder, I mean, who is representing the producers in Canada. This government doesn't want to include them because they don't want to rubber-stamp this government's bill. It's so unfortunate. That's why I can't support this bill.

Also, you know, there were reports that we're going to strand $250 billion of wealth in the ground. That's $250 billion. They may not agree with that report, but the government should have done some economic impact analysis, which they have never shown to anybody. No Albertan knows what the economic impact of this policy is. These bills they're talking about, whether that is Bill 25 or Bill 27, will have far-reaching economic impacts for Alberta. That will impact future generations, too, but this government doesn't want to share that economic impact, if they have done it, and they don't tell us that they didn't do it. And when we are asking them to do it, they just don't listen because of their hidden agenda. Their hidden agenda is to leave the resource in the ground, and they've said that loud and clear many, many times.

Mr. Eggen: Then it's not hidden.

Mr. Panda: Then share the economic impact analysis with us.

Like I said before, you are not elected to solve the world hunger problem. You are elected to solve the problems of Albertans, who are looking for work every day. There are people on the streets in Calgary waiting for this government to help them. This government seems to be talking about the elites of the world and the stars and, you know, celebrities, but they don't want to care about regular Albertans. This NDP is supposed to be the champion of everyday Albertans, Madam Chair.

Madam Chair, the premise of this bill is to reduce emissions, so let's put that into context. The whole of Canada is only contributing 1.6 per cent of global emissions. Should we be complacent? No. We should do everything to reduce that to zero emissions, and the way to do it is through technological innovation and adopting the latest technologies. What about other countries, though, who are emitting 98.4 per cent of greenhouse gases? What about them? How can we help them without killing ourselves here, without strangling ourselves here? No other country in the world is leaving the resource in the ground. No other country in the world is giving away wealth of $250 billion. Only Alberta wants to do that under the NDP. I can't understand that.

Like I said, all other countries are looking for the natural resources they don't have. Countries like China and India have hundreds of millions in a young workforce looking for work, but they can't put them to work because they don't have this kind of natural resource industry. Here we do have it, and we are stupid enough to say that we want to leave that in the ground because of our ideological policies. I don't get that. We can help those countries who are the major polluters by giving them the support they need with the latest technologies, whether it is clean coal technology or other tailings technologies that we use in mining or even water and vapor recovery technologies that we use here, the latest ones. We can support other countries so that they can reduce their emissions. Otherwise, even if we close all of our industry here, all we are going to contribute is not even 1.6 per cent. We have to look at it from that point of view.

I'm not saying that we shouldn't take leadership, but that leadership should not be at the disadvantage of the people that elected us. We're saying that this government is attacking the prosperity of the Albertans who elected them. It's biting the hand that feeds.

There is another thing, Madam Chair. This country is the second largest by area in the world, behind Russia, so that means we need some carbon dioxide here to grow the trees and plants and forests and whatnot. You know, I'm just talking here. I'm a science student. Don't call me a climate change denier; I've already said that a hundred times. We need to do a study for the supply and demand of carbon. Carbon is required to some extent. So have we done that study, whether we are net positive or net negative in the supply and demand of carbon? I haven't seen that from this government or from the minister of environment. That's the other thing Albertans are looking for. What if we determine after the study that we are actually negative in carbon supply?

If that is the case, then we can brand our petroleum products as the greenest on the planet, and we should be getting a premium for our product. Once we determine that we are actually low in the supply of carbon in this country, we can market our products with a branded advantage. Has this government thought about that? Nobody talked about that. Nobody wants to talk about that from the NDP. So that is the other thing we need to look at. In that case, if we could prove that it is not dirty oil – it's the greenest oil – then we can brand our product, and it won't be called dirty oil anymore. That will help us actually to diversify the market and diversify market access. This government doesn't want to talk about that. I encourage them to talk about that.

Like I said, Madam Chair, this CLAP, climate leadership action plan, doesn't achieve the intended results because we can't control other countries. There is no way we can isolate our country from those emissions coming from other polluters, whether it is south of the border or from Asia or Africa, from anywhere, because there is no technology yet to build walls in the sky to isolate ourselves. I don't know if the NDP is thinking about that. Today we're trying to control emissions here, but other countries they can't control, and we can't prevent the wind blowing to our side, bringing all the emissions from other countries. [interjection] Yeah.

Madam Chair, another thing is that, you know, technologies evolve over a period of time. Like, 60 years ago nobody thought we would have the technology to separate oil from the sands. So one day there could be a technology, and we may not need oil to run our cars or heat our homes. Tomorrow somebody might discover a technology wherein you can actually run your automobile with water or air. What happens then? Then this resource that we own will become redundant, so you have to leave it in the ground permanently anyway when we discover those technologies.

Before that happens we have to market the product we own. We have to get the best value for it. So leaving that in the ground is not a solution. Imagine that. If there is no demand for our product because of a new technology wherein you don't need oil to run your vehicles or heat your home, your product becomes redundant, so it's prudent on our part to market the product when there is still demand for our product in the market. It would be stupid for us not to take advantage of that.

Madam Chair, for those reasons that I said, I can't support this bill.

And this government-appointed oil sands advisory group: they haven't given a seat on that committee to CAPP, which is the main advocacy group for the oil and gas sector in Canada. Also, like the previous speaker said, there were people on this committee representing OSAG who are actually paid by this government, and they're actually working against Albertans' interests. They're doing fundraising to protest against the Trans Mountain pipeline. How is that going to help Albertans when taxpayer money is used to pay the protestors to sit on OSAG? I don't get that.

For all those reasons that I explained and, as I said before, as the government hasn't shown us yet the economic impact analysis for this file, I'm going to bring an amendment, Madam Chair, with your permission. I hope that with all the explanation I gave and the other members on this side gave, the members on the government side will support this common-sense amendment to make their bill better. I have the requisite copies. If you'll permit me, I'll start reading the amendment.

The Chair: If you could give me a moment for the amendment. However, you're going to run out of your speaking time.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just wondering if the Member for Calgary-Foothills might like to expand on how this is such a common-sense amendment.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A5.

You can go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, and speak to your amendment.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is a common-sense amendment because Albertans are looking for the economic impacts of this reckless policy. This government talks about being progressive. There is nothing progressive about this bill. It's regressive, and it's all ideological, and it's so radical. There is nothing progressive about this bill. When you want to strand the resource and leave $250 billion worth of prosperity in the ground: so reckless.

That's why it's a common-sense amendment, asking you to look at the economic impact of this bill and tell your families, your neighbours, your friends, the people that you represent, and the world that we actually did this economic impact analysis and this is what we found. If you come out and say, "Well, we are not leaving that much resource in the ground," we'll change our minds. If you're saying that it is going to reduce emissions substantially, we'll support that. It's on you to prove that. But you're not sharing that information with us.

That's why I'm bringing this amendment, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended by adding the following after section 4:

Economic impact assessment

5(1) One month after the date on which this Act receives Royal Assent, the Minister shall prepare a projection of the impact of the oil sands greenhouse gas emission limit established in section 2(1) on Alberta's economy.

(2) The Minister shall lay a copy of the projection prepared under subsection (1) as soon as practicable before the Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Coming into force

6(1) This Act comes into force 60 days following the date on which the Minister lays the projection prepared under section 5(2) before the Assembly.

9:40

Madam Chair, I'm truly convinced that this is a reasonable amendment. This gives the government an opportunity to address the issues and concerns we've raised, particularly when they haven't consulted Albertans on this bill. It's accountability for the government to educate people on the economic impact of this reckless, regressive, ideological bill, and that will give them a real opportunity to step back and to do some economic impact analysis and convince Albertans that this bill is the right bill to pass in this Legislature.

With that, Madam Chair, I ask all members of this House from both sides of the aisle to please, please consider this amendment in the interests of Albertans and in the interests of the people we represent and for the benefit and prosperity of not only our generation but the generations to come.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for being able to speak to, I guess, A5, the amendment that was proposed here today. Really, what we're doing is an economic impact study. An economic impact study is probably the most important thing that they could be doing at this point in time. When you're looking over what has been said up to this point in time, for Alberta we need to have an economic impact study done. This is our main industry. Frankly, this is the number one industry in our province. Then we have our agricultural sector. Because this is such a huge industry, if we don't, that's the most irresponsible thing that we could be doing, limiting what we could be potentially seeing for what kind of production we could have.

You know, if you look at this, our oil: we have the most ethical oil in the world, and we have probably the cleanest environment for people to produce oil, and they get a fair price for their work while they do this extraction. So if you don't do an economic impact study, you are limiting all those different areas.

Again, going back to my first point, being the cleanest oil extraction, that we have, when you look at this extraction, if we limit our extraction to the 100 megatonnes, then other places, other jurisdictions in the world, as the demand for oil increases, will pick up and be able to supply that. We have no control over which countries will be picking up the production. If it's from countries that, frankly, have bad environmental policies, bad human rights policies, countries that don't pay their workers well, well, shame on us. Shame on us here in Alberta for doing that. That's just a wrong thing, a wrong approach, and it's a bad approach that we're going down. You know, that's the direction that we seem to be going.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake said that a better name for this bill would be the Limiting of Development bill. Well, I think this could also be called the Lost Opportunity bill – that could be a very good name – or the Antibusiness bill. These are things that are happening, and it's really limiting what we're doing.

He's asked for very simple requests.

Economic impact assessment

5(1) One month after the date on which this Act receives Royal Assent, the Minister shall prepare a projection of the impact of the oil sands greenhouse gas emission limit established in section 2(1) on Alberta's economy.

(2) The Minister shall lay a copy of the projection prepared under subsection (1) as soon as practicable before the Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Coming into force

6(1) This Act comes into force 60 days following the date on which the Minister lays the projection prepared under section 5(2) before the Assembly.

I think that's a very, very reasonable request because we need to know what it's going to cost Alberta. You know, the Fraser report had a price on this, basically just an estimate. If we go with the Fraser report, it's going to be $150 billion to $250 billion. That's huge. That in itself is antidevelopment. We've lost the potential for that kind of money to be in our economy. This is antibusiness, anti our main industry.

As I mentioned before, it does not make our environment cleaner when the rest of the world will be producing oil and extracting oil and using oil, not clean like we are here in Alberta but under their terms. If we're able to produce oil and extract oil the way we have been doing and progressing with cleaner technologies – frankly, we always keep going with cleaner technologies. It's just been that way. I remember the 1970s. I'm going to go back and do a little history. When I remember the '70s, I remember seeing the stacks that were puking out all sorts of fumes, et cetera. There were fish that were, frankly, being killed in the Great Lakes because they were not using proper technologies.

So we didn't have to restrict. We didn't have to do this. We've come from that in the 1970s to now without having these antibusiness kind of bills that are happening. We need to make sure that we are looking at this. We have been able to go from poor extraction to great extraction to the cleanest extraction in the world. We did that without having to limit ourselves, and we were able to see a great amount of money and a great amount of prosperity in this province. Without an economic impact study, we don't know what that is going to mean for Alberta. How much will we lose in potential development that we could be doing? What is the lost revenue? How many jobs are lost? How many people will be left out of work because of this? An economic impact study would show that.

You know, we've got hard-working men and women in our oil sands industry right across this province. They get up each day to work and to make sure that it's done in a clean, safe manner. Right now with this bill, like I say, we are limiting ourselves. We need to know for those men, women, and the businesses that are in this province what that is going to mean to them. How much money will they be losing as a result, like I say, of this, frankly, bad bill? To me, this is the most practical kind of solution, to have an economic impact assessment done.

You know, contrast that right now with what they've got going in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan is seeing an uptick in their industry while we are going backwards. We are going downhill. That's telling me a lot. That's telling me that investors are now trying to change from where they're looking at Alberta – that's the economic impact that's already starting to happen – and they're moving over to Saskatchewan. Do we want to limit ourselves so that we are not going to be able to take care of the men and women that have these good-paying jobs, ones that can look after their families and help out our province?

In the meantime they're always developing new, cleaner technologies. That's part of what we can do through our universities, supporting the universities and supporting the industry and providing directions. That's what we as a government should be doing, providing direction, not saying that you are absolutely limited to this cap, this 100-megatonne cap. It's irresponsible, and I'm definitely opposed to that. Frankly, this cap is an arbitrary cap. I've asked the government, but I've not heard a clear answer as to why a 100-megatonne cap is the cap that we should be at. How did you determine that? Was it just because 100 a nice, round number?

Mr. MacIntyre: It's a prime number.

Mr. Taylor: It's a prime number. Yes. Thank you. I mean, that's a good reason, perhaps. I don't know.

Why 100? Why not 200? How did you come up with this number? It's going to affect what happens in this province. It's, frankly, antibusiness because when you have 100 megatonnes, what other players are going to want to come to our province when they know they have that limit? They know that they may be pushing up to that cap, so all of a sudden: "Well, I guess I'm not going to go into Alberta, but Saskatchewan is business friendly. Let's go to Saskatchewan. I like the idea of Saskatchewan."

We're just shifting the business from Alberta to Saskatchewan. You know, we're shifting that business over there. You're saying that you want to make it so that it's a cleaner environment here, but if Saskatchewan is producing more – well, the winds kind of blow. You've figured that out. I mean, that's been a basic scientific fact. Whether it blows from Venezuela or it blows from Chile or it blows from Saudi Arabia or from Saskatchewan or North Dakota, those carbons still move, and they'll be moving around into Alberta. If you limit how much we can produce, they're going to blow into our province regardless, but if we can be responsible and make it so it's clean technologies that are coming out of our province, we kind of stifle some of that development that still goes on in the rest of the country, the rest of North America, the rest of the world. Frankly, I think that's the most responsible thing that we could be doing, and this is the most irresponsible part of this.

To be able to get to a point to have this clean oil extraction and to be able to make it so that people want to have clean oil extraction – if you limit it, we're not getting new players into this province. They're not going to be excited about having to develop new technologies for Alberta because, frankly, you're limiting the business.

The first thing we need to do is find out: how much money will we lose in this province as a result of this bill? For that reason, I cannot support this bill. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It isn't a surprise that I will be supporting this amendment, that's asking for an economic impact study. Instead of going into the actual specific amendment and reading this out, what I'm trying to do is give it some sort of perspective that people can relate to.

Now, I'm going to actually give this a smaller scope. I'll go to an article written on September 7, 2012, in the Atlantic. The title is If You Build It, They Might Not Come: The Risky Economics of Sports Stadiums. Now, right under the title we've got, I guess, a little bit of a breakdown of what exactly it's about, and it says: "The trials of the Phoenix Coyotes, the least popular hockey team in the NHL, offer a lesson in public debt and defeat." We're looking at, specifically, a lesson that's been learned by a municipality within the United States that has actually done an economic impact study. The problem here is that even with impact studies, you can still be sent down the wrong direction, but at least you've done some due diligence to be able to decide exactly where the public is going.

Now, I'm going to read a part of this. There are three paragraphs of this article that I'm going to read.

To put the deal in perspective, Glendale's budget gap for 2012 is about $35 million. As the city voted to give a future Coyotes owner hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars, it laid off 49 public workers, and even considered putting its city hall and police station up as collateral [to get] a loan, according to the Arizona Republic. (The latter plan was ultimately scrapped.)

Overall, Glendale is not only on the hook for $15 million per year over two decades to a potential Coyotes owner, but also a $12 million annual debt payment for construction of its arena. In return, according to the Republic, the city receives a measly "$2.2 million in annual rent payments, ticket surcharges, sales taxes and other fees." Even if the Coyotes were to dominate the league like no other in recent memory and return to the Stanley Cup Finals year after year, the city would still lose $9 million annually.

This is an altogether too common problem in professional sports. Across the country, franchises are able to extract taxpayer funding to build and maintain private facilities, promising huge returns for the public in the form of economic development.

Now, in our case we are promising huge returns for Albertans by putting a cap on our ability to do business. In this case, they were at least putting money towards something that could potentially bring money into their community. In the end what happened is that the council, instead of using reasoned thought to move this forward, decided to go all-in without doing enough research into exactly the impacts to their community. Now, we're looking at this example and saying: well, this seems to be a lot smaller example, according to what we're dealing with, which is, from my honoured colleague here saying, the potential of limiting us from bringing forward the opportunity cost of about $250 billion.

Now, in this case here they're going to be bringing in a little bit of money, but they're spending a lot of money to get it. This is exactly where we're at right now. We're running massive deficits in Alberta. Now, you would say: "Okay. In this case we've got a sports team. We think that it's going to bring growth to the community. It's going to bring recreation." What we're saying with the debt cap is that it's going to give us the authority to be able to bring our oil to markets.

Now, I guess I'm confused, and I would love to hear from a member from the other side. How is it responsible for us to not put forward an economic impact study on something that is going to radically impact all of our constituents? The answer is that they don't want the answer. If they vote this down, they want to keep Albertans in the dark. They want Albertans to understand that in the end the intent of this government isn't the well-being of Albertans but an ideology that is moving forward.

I'm going to move on to my next article. The next article came out on December 7 in the Calgary Sun. This is an article by Gunter: Fraser Institute Survey Shows Alberta is Headed Down with a Bullet. Now, what we're looking at is that when Albertans brought in a new government, I truly believed that Albertans were wary but willing to hear what the NDP were going to do. We all know that there is some radical side or ideological base that comes with the NDP, but that's not what they campaigned on. They didn't campaign on harming Alberta. They didn't campaign on a carbon tax. They didn't campaign on unlimited debt. But here we are. The point is that – to go back to this article, because I am referencing this article – as soon as they were elected, according to the Fraser Institute we dropped from 13 to 25 as a good place to do business within the industry. Since these last 19 months we've actually seen it drop consistently further down, and now we're looking at this new report that shows that we're actually 43 out of 96. That is truly shocking.

Now, I'd like to put some perspective to this again. I'd like to put this forward. That means that Alberta now ranks behind Malaysia and Vietnam, and we're only slightly above Egypt, Gabon, and Pakistan. The only one that is really showing strength in this report is our neighbour Saskatchewan, which is ranked fourth place. How can we move so radically downwards? The question always comes down to government policy. Saskatchewan has been able to maintain its ability to show investors that they're a good place to invest. We are next door, and we have been leaders and stewards, which we heard from my colleague, leaders and stewards of our environment, yet somehow we've demonized our own oil and our own businesses that are doing the oil extraction and our own environment by our government. They're saying: we're going to fix something that's broken, and we're going to do it on the backs of Alberta taxpayers. This is truly shocking. This is truly a concern that I've got, and I can tell you that this is a concern that my constituents have as well because they're the ones that are going to end up paying this tax bill if the government gets this wrong.

We're seeing these warnings. These warnings are consistently being brought out by the Alberta people, the Alberta business community, and – guess what? – Canada and the rest of the world. We're seeing that we're starting to drop. It's because we're not listening to how the market works. We're not listening, and we're not moving in the direction that is a positive direction for Alberta. What we need to be doing is that we need to be actually moving stuff forward, and without an economic impact study how do we know that this isn't going to be a move that will debilitate us for generations, like in the first example that I had?

They have actually put 20 years of payments on the backs of their taxpayers when there was not enough work put into the ground game to make sure. They were even willing to bet the house on it, I mean, their wonderful town hall and their police station. That's how much they believed in that, and this is where the NDP government is going. They believe that they're going in this direction. They're not willing to listen to anybody. They're not willing to do economic impact studies. They're not willing to be connected with Albertans, and that, Madam Chair, is what the real problem of this is. It's that in the end it's the opposition that is trying to bring forward a positive move, saying: let's slow this down; let's wait until OSAG comes back with some of its review decisions. I am sure that this government is rushing through this because they know that they're not going to like the answers that are coming from that group because we have board members on that group that are actually trying to work against us, trying to get pipelines into the ground, and that seems to be exactly what the NDP are saying.

Now, I will commend the NDP on moving forward these two pipelines. This is good for Alberta. I am glad to see that the NDP are actually moving forward a goal of moving this forward. I will say that I'm uncertain, and I will always be uncertain. I think Albertans will be uncertain if this social licence played the role in this. I think that in the end what we're looking at here is a government that was able to move two replacement pipelines in and was able to move this forward. I am looking forward to the Minister of Energy being able to honour the commitment of shovels in the ground within a year, which she committed to in the House, because the big problem that past governments have had is being able to get the approval but not actually getting the shovels in the ground. I want and I know my caucus wants to help the government in any way possible to get the shovels in the ground.

I know that we're trying to work with the government, and the way we can do this is by showing Albertans, showing Canadians that there is actually some sort of good reason to be able to support these pipelines, and an economic impact study is the way to do that, by showing everybody that Canada itself will be improved by moving forward with this. But by ignoring the numbers, we are ignoring all the consequences that come along with this. How can we convince people that this is the right decision for anybody when we can't even come up with how it's going to impact us as Albertans? I can tell you that it is frustrating that we continue to bring forward the concern that impact studies should be done.

I'll tell you that when it comes to Bonnyville-Cold Lake, it is jobs, lack of investment in my riding. The one big thing that I am hearing day after day is: how can we get more investment happening? To hear that the oil companies are waiting until 2019 to do a lot of their investment is an unfortunate coincidence that it will probably line up with the election. I am very concerned that should we get another term with this government, it will continue along with these policies that will end up with another four years of lack of investment in my riding, which will eventually mean that I'll end up, unfortunately, on the side of the coal towns that we're seeing that are being shut down, and I don't want that for my riding. Bonnyville-Cold Lake deserves better. We deserve to make sure that we responsibly take these resources out of the ground, and by putting a cap, we are ensuring that there's going to be less and less investment, fewer jobs, and that means that we're going to really harm my riding.

I don't know if the government has even considered the people that are going to be affected by this cap, and this cap will definitely – definitely – impact my riding. It will definitely impact Fort McMurray. It will definitely impact Calgary. It will definitely impact Edmonton. Whether they see it directly impact: well, that's up, again, to how the markets go. I'll tell you that right now I am very dissatisfied with the fact that we continue to go down this road blindly when there are clear signs of warnings. How many more warnings do we need to have before this is just plain negligence on our government?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. The Member for Calgary-Foothills made a statement that I would just like to add on to. One of those things is being absolutely grateful for having the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on our team. He's certainly been a mentor for me, and it's given me a great deal of information and places to go to learn about this portfolio and about where we've come from and where we're going. I just am extremely grateful for the amount of intelligence and the academia that he brings to this file. It's been a tremendous, tremendous help over on this side of the House for my learning curve, anyway.

One of the other things I wanted to say, too – a couple of things really stuck out from what the Member for Calgary-Foothills said. You know, this is a humongous number: $250 billion in wealth. This government has a ton of things that they want to accomplish, a lot of goals, lots and lots of goals, and capping production would seem very counterintuitive to a lot of the programs that the government wants to bring forward. I mean, if you're able to actually help Albertans benefit from that, you're going to have to tax them less, and you'll have those dollars put in some really incredible programs that the government has brought forward, very thoughtful ideas. But you don't have to go to the taxpayer for that; $250 billion of wealth is a potential.

Instead of the government actually developing this amazing resource that we have literally under our feet, it's going to the next resource, our human resource. We're going to the people to somehow come up with the dollars that are needed to run programs that this government wants to put through. First of all, that's not sustainable, and, second of all, we actually have the ability to bring those dollars here even with low oil. Even under the circumstances we are in now, why would the government at this point in time choose to cap? I'm going to go into some of the numbers because I think the numbers are important to determine, especially over on this side, to show that this is about environmental. This is about making sure that the diversification that is so important to this government actually has legs and has the availability to do that.

My father also came from India, in 1963, close to the area where the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills came from. He came in 1963 as a young chemical engineer, and he actually studied at the University of Alberta and met my mom here in Edmonton and married her and then moved to Calgary. He had a lot of different options coming from India as to where he could have gone to pursue this degree, but he came here. You know, he is such a true Albertan and loves this province and is so completely grateful for the opportunities that were provided to him and how he has been able to raise his family and put his stamp on this energy sector. He worked mostly with sour gas and came up with several processes, actually, that were able to transform and change sour gas into sweet gas.

It was one of those things where as a small child growing up, he used to take me out to the field. I've been out to Drayton Valley and Devon many, many times, not realizing what it was that I was seeing because I always got to sit in the little trailers with these, you know, burly oil guys that would make me hot chocolate and sit down and play cards with me while my dad was going out and checking his valves on his sites. One of the things that I remember immensely was the tremendous love that these folks had for their industry, and so many of them actually were immigrants, so many of them. Equally so, we had these incredible Albertans, this embracing community of people that worked together to bring subsurface up to create prosperity for Albertans. I mean, it's incredible. Again, as a little girl, like, I would look at these little dials and stuff coming out of the ground. It didn't make any sense to me, but I thought it was just amazing to be part of that process as a young person.

When the member also talked about energy poverty: I've also been in India when that happens in the middle of some of the hottest days, the hottest days in southern India, when you have a brownout in the middle of the day because the hydro has run out, and you are seeking any shelter that you can. For those of us who had the privilege of coming from families that were privileged, you are so grateful that you can go into a space that is at least concrete in the middle of your house or into some area while millions of people were seeking shade outside in intense heat. I mean, you cannot imagine that until you've actually been there.

On the flip side, we live in a country where we have to heat our homes. I mean, I'm the coldest person on the face of the earth. I freeze every single second of my life. I am so, so completely grateful to be able to warm my hands at a heater. It's one of those things that when you have the privilege, again, of being in this portfolio, you realize at a visceral level how lucky you are. Can you imagine if you didn't have the availability of that?

Now, I'm not saying that that's what this government is doing, not by a long shot. But what we're trying to compare is that we've seen in other countries where the mechanisms are not there for consistency, the mechanisms are not there to even be able to supply to the people who live there. In a place where we are so fortunate to have so much and the availability to develop it and, potentially, get that to global markets and, potentially, be able to provide energy, ethical energy, environmentally responsibly developed energy, to other countries, why would we cap that? The win-win of that isn't just for our own country, but it's for other countries and also for our own prosperity.

I've said this before, and I'll say it again, and I want to be extremely clear. The government talks about environmental impact. Well, the most conducive way to reduce environmental impact is to produce here. The more that we produce here and the more that we're able to get on the global market, the more that we take a bite out of the markets that do not produce the way that we do. Now, that doesn't mean that we shouldn't do better. A hundred per cent agree. There is so much amazing innovation that is out there that will help the government get to their goals in ways that are actually salient, that actually work with the energy industry, that actually allow production to happen but in a way that is even becoming more environmental.

I was just reading that there are two groups, actually, that are working specifically towards that. There are two organizations, Carbon Management Canada and the Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance. These groups are already working towards innovating within the oil sands to become better and to produce fewer emissions. These were already on the docket long before this climate action plan came into being. The curiosity always comes down to that in a country and especially in a province like ours, as the government has said, there's definitely room for improvement, but even without those things there, these industries have already gone there. They have already succeeded in so many ways to become more environmentally conscious, and imagine, given the opportunity to continue on that, what is possible.

You know, we've been asking about this 100-megatonne cap. Where did it come from? Well, if you look at the numbers, the oil sands output would have only reached 125 megatonnes by 2045 anyway. So that random number of 100 was just – I mean, all you had to do is look at the reports and look at the numbers to see where they actually would have been at. I mean, I've got lots of numbers to share with you.

I was also wondering if the government was aware that emissions have actually levelled off in recent years, and that was actually reported by Environment Canada in 2015. That report was actually sent to the United Nations framework convention on climate change. We've levelled off even though production has increased. Isn't that amazing? That's already happening.

The other thing – and I'm going to be talking about this a little bit later as well. There are provisions on the 100-megatonne cap for cogen, and we've already talked about upgrading. Well, what does that mean? Why would you cap upgrading – we've already talked about that – especially when there are jobs here and we do it more environmentally responsibly here? Why would you cap cogeneration, especially on electricity, when that increases efficiency in situ? Why would you do that? It makes absolutely no sense.

There are many, many changes and improvements that have been made in the performance of the oil sands, and a big part of that has to do with increasing efficiency. If you consider the business model, it makes sense that the oil sands would want to be as efficient as possible. Every time they're inefficient, they lose dollars, they lose on all sides of that. It would make sense from any business perspective to be as efficient and as environmentally responsible as possible.

You know, if we're looking at the emissions cap, under the worst-case scenario, if nothing changed with emissions, we would only change it by about 25 megatonnes of CO<sub>2</sub>, and that's without any efficiency changes. If we had efficiency changes, which we're assuming and hoping will happen from these groups, that's going to go down to 15 megatonnes. So what does that mean globally? Point zero three five per cent at the max and .021 per cent in the global scenario. It's teeny tiny.

One of the things that I would like to – and going back to the member's amendment, we want to see this material quantified. The government owes it to Albertans to quantify the effects and to make sure that we have adequate metrics to show what it is that we're looking for and to make sure that we have an economic impact analysis which takes all of the things that I've been talking about into account because that shows transparency on behalf of the government.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? I'll recognize Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I really appreciate the opportunity to rise this morning and speak to the amendment moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. I'm constantly amazed more by what the opposition members speaking to this amendment omit rather than what they actually speak about. They speak about stranding assets, and they speak about lost economic opportunity, and they speak about us being enemies of the oil sands and that we're going to put ourselves in jeopardy of losing the opportunity to develop the asset when, in fact, what the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act itself does is the opposite. It protects our ability to develop the asset over time. It has gained us the opportunity to develop the asset. What it has done, if you want to really know what the economic impact of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is, are two pipelines. That's what it's gotten us: the ability to export the material in a pipeline.

Now, the opposition may not want to recall this, but the Prime Minister was very clear when he said that it was because of our government's leadership and our climate leadership plan that he was able to confidently say yes to both of the recently approved pipelines. He said that "we could not have approved this project without the leadership of Premier Notley, and Alberta's Climate Leadership Plan – a plan that commits to pricing carbon and capping oilsands emissions at 100 megatonnes per year."

Industry knows that this cap will make our oil and gas sector more competitive. The CEO of Canada's Oil Sands Innovation Alliance praised our cap when he said, "With the technology being developed in Alberta we are confident Alberta can continue to grow its industry while reducing emissions."

As far as economic impact goes, the climate leadership plan is directly responsible for the federal approval of two new energy infrastructure projects, the Trans Mountain expansion and Enbridge line 3, that are critically important to Alberta's economy. TMX provides access to tidewater, allowing Alberta's oil sands industry to sell traditional energy products at better prices to new markets. This project alone is estimated to lift Alberta's GDP by about 1 per cent by 2022. These are facts that the opposition tends to conveniently forget because they allow us to actually develop our oil sands over the long term.

If you really are looking to protect that asset, if you really want to make sure that that asset doesn't get stranded, if you're serious about getting our oil products to market, to tidewater, to receive full price, world price, for them, then indeed you have to know that protection of that right comes with responsibility. That responsibility is to ensure that the pipelines get built, and they get built by properly respecting the fact that there are two sides of the coin to the arguments regarding pipelines. There's definitely respect for the environment and those who want to preserve the environment. There's also the economic impact that not building those pipelines would have, and those have to be balanced.

This is the thing that is conveniently forgotten by the opposition when they're asking for an economic impact assessment, thinking that the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is something that would strand an asset. Exactly the opposite happens, Madam Chair. What happens is that, as a result of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, we get access to tidewater, we get two pipelines approved, we get our product to market, we put people to work, we build pipelines, and we end up using that asset over the long term to benefit the economy of Alberta in a way that the opposition would have us forget about. We're not going to do that. We're not going to be looking in the rear-view mirror driving the car. We're going to be looking forward because that's what we were elected to do, and we'll continue to do so every day that we're here in this House.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the next speaker, just a reminder not to use individuals' names. Be cautious of that and aware of that. Thank you, hon. members.

Go ahead, Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to rise and, you know, speak about this amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills. I think it's a common-sense amendment, and it shows that the minister should prepare a projection. It's an old saying, you know: if it doesn't get measured, it doesn't get done. If the government is so confident that this Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is going to make our Earth a better place, then maybe we should have a projection on it.

I don't see anything in this bill that's going to improve our industry, the industry that has been a backbone of our province, that industry that has been a backbone of our country. We can see that in, you know, the equalization payments coming from this province. Limiting this industry: it's not a good thing. I don't think we're doing a favour to our province, to Albertans, and our future generations. I don't see any good thing that's coming out of this. It's killing the competition. It's killing the development and, you know, giving a limit of 100 megatonnes to only four bigger corporations, leaving all the smaller corporations out of the picture.

The minister is basically saying that she's not willing to talk to the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. It's not a very good time because they would have told the hon. minister: look; this emissions act is not a good act.

You know, I spent a lot of time in oil and gas, and definitely we all know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills spent his entire working career in oil and gas. This is coming from, you know, the horse's mouth. We cannot punish the industry that has been a backbone of this country and our province and our future generations.

I just want to ask the members from across the aisle: I mean, how many members have worked in this industry? I don't think very many. One or two. That's fine. Good. You should be supporting this amendment, and you should be voting down this bill. Let's rise above the party line. Let's rise above the ideological movement and, like, the world view and stuff like that and do what is right for our future, do what is right for our future generations.

I'm supporting this amendment. I think the minister should prepare a projection and should give it to Albertans, share that with them and tell them, like, how it's going to impact industry, how it's going to impact the revenue stream.

That's all, Madam Chair. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A5? Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to rise for a minute or two. I want to thank my colleague from Calgary-Foothills for this excellent amendment. I, too, will be supporting it. It's just a chance for a little reflection on where the government is headed. It's just a chance for understanding further what the unintended consequences are going to be and a chance to maybe make some adjustments and help those that are going to be affected by this.

Madam Chair, I think there are three key areas that this economic impact assessment needs to look at. First of all, this managed reduction, this slowdown, is going to have huge negative impacts on jobs, on our local economy, and not only in the north but, my goodness, in Medicine Hat, Redcliff, Bow Island. There's tons of production for our good oil sands producers in Quebec and everywhere, throughout Alberta and throughout Canada. So let's take a look at what that difference will be and how we can ensure that Albertans and Canadians have an opportunity to participate and have an opportunity to find the best social program, a job, somewhere else.

The second area of impact is that if there's a lower economy, there's going to be less tax revenue, impacts of $150 billion to $250 billion over approximately a 20-year period for that much smaller economy at a 10 per cent provincial corporate tax rate, not counting what all the spinoff would be. They say that money can expand at seven or nine times through the private economy. The amount of government services and government programs, the front-line workers that this is going to reduce or has the potential to reduce: it should be analyzed.

You know, when I hear the number that we'll be $3 billion in interest payments just two, two and a half years from now and I'm sitting here reading in the news today that the average Albertan family is almost $25,000 in debt before this, this is going to have huge impacts on government services and where that leads us to. And as so many other countries and provinces are borrowing at the same time, that may have some unintended consequences of higher interest rates.

Madam Chair, I think the third thing an economic impact assessment has to look at is where our biggest customer, the United States, is at. My goodness, in the last several years they've been very aggressive, they've been very efficient, and they've become darn near self-sufficient in producing oil and gas at the same time that we are managing our decline. I was shocked the other day. I was reading how during the time we've been debating the Keystone, American interests have built more pipelines longer than the Keystone by two times. What is the economic impact on our producers? How are our competitors treating things? What is this going to do to the average family that needs to send their son or daughter or a family member to university or care for their community or keep their parents or grandparents in some form of home care or assisted living?

Again, you know, what is this going to mean when we can't sell oil and gas to America? While we've been managing our decline, they've been aggressively expanding their market. While we've dithered and had 157 conditions on every pipeline we've thought about, they've actually built the things.

Madam Chair, in closing, economic impact assessments are not necessarily saying that, you know, it's a way to fight the bill. It's a way to get it right. I would ask all my hon. colleagues to support our colleague from Calgary-Foothills' amendment. Let's try to get this as right as we can for Albertan families.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to speak in favour of this amendment and speak in favour of it based on the fact that we need investment to come to this province. We need investment to come here to do the custom harvest work that the energy industry does in harvesting our natural resources. These companies come here, invest in our province. They provide jobs. They give us the benefit of a standard of living that is the envy of the world, and here we are putting in policy that would limit our ability to realize that potential.

I think it needs to be recognized that what's being asked in this amendment is that we do an economic impact assessment after the fact, that we get an economic impact assessment, available to Albertans, available to investors, on what impact this act is going to have on our industry. I think it's prudent to measure that, and it's prudent to allow investors to have the information they need to feel confident to invest in this province. To do otherwise would be essentially to leave those investors in the dark, to leave those investors wondering: what's the next move this government is going to do, and what is the value of our investment once this plan is put into place?

I have great concern with the fact that this cap on development will essentially be a hardship for the smaller players within our industry, the players that have done a lot of the work to drive the innovation within our industry, and that we are handing this over to a few large players because of the restriction on development.

With that, I would encourage the entire Assembly to recognize the value of an economic impact assessment for the investment that we are needing into the future of this province and the jobs that it will provide and the standard of living that it provides not only in this province but right across this country.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A5?

Seeing none, I will call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A5 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:38 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I've been listening to this discussion. You know, when the government brought this bill forward, as I've discussed here before, it was obviously ill considered and not well thought through. But what has become more obvious now and made it even less of a good idea and more of a bad idea is that the federal government has just approved two pipelines. So the government is now limiting production, essentially nullifying all or some of the benefit from the very pipelines they're so excited about. I don't know why they would undo what's just been done that's good. It just doesn't make sense. If the government is truly happy about the pipelines being approved – I'm sure they are; all members of this House are – why would they undo the good that's just been done? It makes no sense.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to bring forward an amendment. This one is to move that Bill 25, Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, be amended as follows. Section 2(2) is amended by striking out clause (a) and substituting the following:

(a) cogeneration emissions.

And section 3 is amended by striking out clause (d) and substituting the following:

(d) prescribing a method for determining cogeneration emissions excluded under section 2(2)(a).

I have the copies.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much. The reason why we're bringing this amendment forward is that we want to make sure that the cogeneration emissions that are related to the power sector, that all emissions from cogeneration are exempted. Cogeneration has actually reduced emissions in the oil sands by as much as 50 per cent. Some excellent numbers there. The oil sands actually need more heat than power, so we want to make sure that all cogeneration emissions from the oil sands limit in this amendment support a continued adoption of cogen in in situ facilities.

If you don't mind, Madam Chair, I would like to read an article into the record . . .

Mr. Cooper: Portions of it.

Mrs. Aheer: Portions of it. Sorry.

. . . that states probably much better and more eloquently than I could regarding the necessity. What I love about this article is that it's actually very well rounded. It takes into consideration the government's point of view, and it also takes into consideration where things should be changed, certainly, towards where this amendment is going. This article is called This Is One of the Most Efficient Energy Sources Out There. So What's Holding It Back? It's dated September 9, 2016, so some of the numbers are a little bit out because things have changed since then, but in order to read the article correctly, I will try and alter those things as I go along.

In the article it actually starts to begin to discuss about cogeneration. It states in here that cogeneration is clean power's unsung hero. And the oil sands are its ground zero, supplying about 50 percent of Alberta's 4,821 megawatts of electrical capacity, and pushing the province to the top of Canada's "cogen" table. It's not just ultra-efficient.

In the article it also states that it has an opportunity to be very lucrative as well.

Oil sands operators have earned as much as $2.43 per barrel from power sales to the electricity grid. They have in their hands a powerful tool to slash the power sector's greenhouse gas emissions.

11:00

They can actually cut those emissions "by 46 percent if cogen is used to its full potential," according to a report by the Oil Sands Community Alliance, OSCA. I had mentioned this group before. They could do so by displacing coal-fired power. "Market uncertainty" – and this is where I think the government really needs to listen – "and a lack of supporting infrastructure are currently holding them back from upping their game." The chance right now is to give these guys a real push forward.

Alberta started championing cogen decades ago. Oil sands companies invested heavily in cogen and transmission lines [way back] in the 1970s as the northeast region severely lacked infrastructure. The deregulation of the power market in the late 1990s [actually gave them] further stimulus. Suncor, for example, sells about 250 MW into the power pool. According to one analysis, cogen helped reduce electricity generation-related GHG emissions in Alberta by 50 percent between 1996 and 2006, long before this plan came into play.

Cogen plants really come into their own when they're built next to a host building that needs both power and heat, the latter of which is lost in . . . gas-fired plants. The most efficient gas-fired power plant is a combined cycle plant, which operates at up to 60 percent efficiency compared to a coal-fired plant [which is] at 40 percent, typically.

The highest efficiency still comes from gas-fired plants, hitting about 80 to 90 per cent efficiency. A typical cogen plant "captures exhaust heat from the gas turbine in a boiler or steam generator, sending low-pressure steam to a neighboring bitumen plant." The one thing about this, obviously, is that the electricity is transmitted so much more efficiently than any standard utility power plants because of proximity, obviously, and the source avoids line losses that plague long-distance power generation. The article actually goes on to say that the host building and power plant can also share cooling water, compressed air, and water treatment, which also boosts efficiency even more. We would think the government would be very, very interested in all of these aspects. The typical oil sands cogen plant captures exhaust heat.

Mr. Terry Abel, who is the oil sands director at CAPP, says that both mining and in situ operations need a lot of heat for their processes, especially if they're connected to an upgrader. "They [actually] need way more heat than power, and it's this heat that creates the surplus power . . . that could be exported to the grid."

One of the things the article talks about is that most oil sands cogen units connect to the power grid to provide backup electricity during maintenance, but some of them lack transmission lines and distributors' permission to hook up. So that report from OSCA, a group of 25 industry and community organizations – that group actually helps to develop infrastructure, communities, and workforces in the oil sands. Actually, the unreliability of the grid is the prime driver behind oil sands operators building cogen plants and actually keeps their prices down, obviously, for power. AESO actually projects that "the cost of electricity – the commodity plus the transmission charges – for large industrial users will rise an average of five percent per year for the next 10 years."

The article goes on to state:

The previous government planned these hikes to pay for its buildout of power capacity and transmission infrastructure.

So it's already organized within that.

The transmission tariff is the part that's squeezing buyers the most as it soars from $21 per megawatt hour in 2013 to $37 by 2023 – a leap of almost 75 percent. "If on-site cogeneration can be developed and operated for a lower [dollars-per-megawatt-hour] rate than the delivered price of power, projected to reach almost $135/MWh by 2023, there would be [a massive] economic incentive to build cogeneration." Furthermore, by 2020 there will be a significant transmission build, including two new 500kV lines from the Edmonton area to Fort McMurray, widening the export gateway.

With the current carbon tax and the cap on carbon emissions from the oil sands, there's a powerful push, then, to cash in on carbon offsets. Now, one of the issues with that is that those have yet to be defined by this government. We don't really know how that's all going to work. It's one of the impacts that need to be considered in the regulations going forward in this.

The government is targeting oil sands operators, which account for roughly one-quarter of Alberta's annual carbon emissions, pumping out about 70 megatons per year, which the government is capping at 100 MT per year.

It says in the article that the government is working out provisions for cogen, but that's actually one of the factors that is holding up this immediate investment, because even though this action plan has been put together for some time now, we have no working numbers for these companies to be able to look at what's going to be feasible here. I mean, this is such an amazing opportunity to actually bring forward changes.

Keep in mind, too, that there was already introduced by the previous government a tax on emissions. There were already SGERs in place. That was actually based on historical emissions and didn't take into account any new efficiencies since then. If the government is boosting the levy to $30 a tonne and now $50, did you know that some of those results are already being achieved by some of those high-performing facilities? It's pretty incredible. The cogen plants also earn carbon credits, and that was a formula established by the environment ministry.

The article also says, Madam Chair, that under federal rules that were actually set by our former Prime Minister in 2011, "coal-fired power plants must meet GHG emissions standards matching the most efficient conventional gas-fired power plant, or retire once they've been operating for 50 years." So that would have been 12 out of the 18 that would have been offline by 2030. Obviously, we've been having lots of chats about closing the remaining six as well.

One of the things that we have to consider is the efficiency that can happen with cogen here. We have to look at making sure that we make that as available to them as possible by removing any chances of them not being able to produce the energy that they need.

I also want to state that the Minister of Energy had stated that "cogeneration will likely be one of the topics of interest as part of the government's public and stakeholder engagement on energy efficiency through the recently formed Energy Efficiency Advisory Panel." Now, I understand that that panel was supposed to report this fall to the minister responsible for climate change. I don't know if I've seen that report, if that report has come forward. If I'm mistaken about that, I do apologize, but I don't recall ever having information coming forward from that report. It certainly would give a great deal of information and help in deciding going forward, and I highly recommend with this amendment that we do that, especially if that panel has not reported yet. We're going to want to make sure that we're giving as much availability to these folks as possible.

Also, the policies decided by this government on price impact: is the cost of supporting renewables picked up by the taxpayers or the consumers? That's also in that energy efficiency panel report, which, like I said, we certainly haven't seen. I may have missed that, but I would certainly appreciate any information coming forward from the government side if something has been reported, especially since it states right in this that it was supposed to come forward in the fall of 2016. That's yet another panel that has not reported to this House based on legislation that's coming forward and will be passed by next week. So I personally think that that would be a very important piece of information to have.

Just to go on, each of the three main oil sands regions – Peace River, Athabasca, and Cold Lake – has its own supply-demand balance that determines whether it's a net importer or exporter. Athabasca has the most oil sands projects and is, actually, the biggest net exporter. They sell about a quarter of their cogen power into the northeast region, helping its development. It's pretty incredible.

Suncor, already one of the top five power generators in the province due to its cogen plants, plans to build wind and solar in southern Alberta. Its facilities include five cogen systems. That is at its Firebag in situ operations and at its base plant and MacKay River in situ facility. Suncor swapped assets with TransAlta, exchanging Suncor's 20-MW Kent Breeze plant in Ontario and its share of the Wintering Hills facility and related infrastructure.

Another company, MEG Energy, also exports cogen electricity, sending about 85 per cent of the power produced from its 170-MW cogen capacity. Its power sales slumped to about 82 cents per barrel in Q1 of 2016 but have recovered as high as $2.43 over the years. I think they're also looking at the potential to add a new unit.

Again, the issue here is that the industry is capital constrained. It doesn't seem to be on the immediate radar of the government, and we want to make sure that it is.

Oil sands operators can offset the risk of plummeting electricity prices by signing up for long-term power contracts without investing in plants. Shell has a cogen plant that provides steam and electricity to the Athabasca oil sands upgrader at Scotford, northeast of Edmonton in Alberta's Industrial Heartland, ATCO Power. All of these folks would be able to bring it onstream. These are wonderful, wonderful opportunities. Like I said, the article states it much more eloquently than I ever could.

The point of that was, hopefully, to illustrate the importance of exempting all cogeneration emissions from the cap instead of only those that are connected to electricity. As you can tell from what we've just said, most cogeneration produces heat, and if you're planning on capping that, this is going to have a significant impact on the cogeneration ability to actually reduce GHGs in an industry that I know we're all supporting here.

Voting in favour of this amendment would show government support for all of those imperative actions that will bring our resources out of the ground in the most responsible way and provide opportunities for these companies to continue to do better.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to speak to amendment A6 with regard to providing cogeneration opportunities within our industry and within Alberta and the benefits that it brings towards not only development of our industry but also the benefits that it brings towards the investment certainties behind projects like these. You know, when we exempt cogeneration emissions from the limit, we can bring a certain level of certainty that would allow for increased investment. I would like to hear from the government, from the Energy minister, if this was even considered in the development of Bill 25.

Cogen is a very effective way and efficient way of baseload power generation, and we're always looking at creating efficiencies within the production of our energy resource, our electricity resource. Again I'll say it: by exempting the cogeneration emissions from oil sands – cogen emissions are related to the power sector, except when the heat is used for oil sands production. Then it is included in the considerations on the limits on emissions within the hundred megatonnes.

To remove that out allows us to create an environment for investment in these cogen facilities, which will create baseload electricity that will help the certainty in the future of our baseload power, and we do that in a very efficient manner. When we look at the fact that the heat is required in these situations and when we look at gas-fired plants, where a lot of that heat is essentially lost, that's where our efficiencies are gained, by actually being able to use the heat that has been lost.

I would like to hear from the Energy minister if this was even considered and looked at as an exemption within Bill 25. We have a responsibility to do things as efficiently as possible as we power our communities and power our province. To disincentivize this production of electricity baseload power generation would, I suspect, be detrimental to the actual emissions that we are creating through natural gas fired generation. Consider that the most efficient gas-fired power plant is a combined cycle plant, which operates at up to 60 per cent efficiency because, like we've said, they're after the power more than the heat, whereas the cogen plant can surge past that, hitting the efficiency rates of 80 to 90 per cent.

I think this is a very reasonable amendment that has been brought forward, and I would look forward to answers to that question: has the government even considered this in their considerations under Bill 25?

Thank you.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. This particular amendment provides the government with kind of like a two-for-one sale, and hopefully the government will take advantage of the sale. It's a very efficient amendment in that regard, in that it's attempting to accomplish something for the government. I would definitely call this a friendly amendment. It's a friendly amendment in that it's attempting to include cogeneration emissions.

Now, to get into the reason why this is a two-for-one is that if you take a look at the Canadian Energy Systems Analysis Research group from the University of Calgary – and I want to highlight “Analysis Research Group.” I realize this government has an aversion to analysis; nevertheless, the University of Calgary's CESAR group did a study. This goes back a little bit, to April 2016:

Scenario modelling found that adding a lot more cogeneration capacity to provide the heat and power for steam-assisted gravity drainage (SAGD) operations would not only reduce greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions from SAGD, but have an even larger impact on emission reductions associated with the province's electrical grid.

That's the two-for-one nature of using cogeneration for SAGD. Not only does cogen reduce SAGD emissions, but according to their research it has an even larger impact on emissions reductions associated with the province's electrical grid. That is significant, and as my esteemed colleague from the wonderful riding of Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock and points in between has just mentioned, the reason for the two-for-one here is because of the enormous increase in efficiencies when you start talking cogeneration. It comes simply from the fact that you are using all forms of energy that are created by that particular unit.

Combined heat and power works the same way, where you've got, basically, a heat engine that is operating to create electricity and heat energy, and both of those forms of energy are being maximized. Their utility is being maximized whereas if you were to take conventional electricity generation right now, either coal, natural gas, or some other fuel, you're going to get somewhere in that 40 per cent to 60 per cent efficiency range. You're only using the electricity. There's all this heat energy – and it's energy, too – but it's not being utilized. But in combined heat and power situations, you're utilizing the heat also, and it is a form of cogeneration.

To give you an example of what I'm talking about, here in the province of Alberta most of the new Royal Bank buildings in this province have within them a combined heat and power unit. The banks have put them in as a cost-saving measure. They actually are saving money by having a unit, an engine that is generating electricity and heat energy, taking care of the heating and the cooling demands inside their building. Also, because banks have so much sensitive material and electronic data stored, they cannot have a situation where they would suffer data loss. That means they must protect their electricity system within the bank, so they have the capability of actually being off grid with these units, completely off grid. As long as there's natural gas in the pipe, that building is going to be warm, it's going to have cooling when it needs cooling, and it'll have all the lights, and all the computers have all the electricity that they need from these cogen units.

Hole's Enjoy Centre out by St. Albert: a lot of people don't realize that that centre has cogeneration powering it up, massive engines sitting down in the basement. You can take tours if you book them. We have a number of places across this province where there is some sort of a cogen plant just humming away. The Alberta Urban Municipalities Association building right here in Edmonton has cogen. I believe it's on the third or fourth floor, but you wouldn't know it. Even when that thing is wound right out, people that have their offices on either floor above and below that engine wouldn't even know it's there. They're just extremely well balanced. This is not like an engine in your car. These things are very expensive, very well balanced, and very highly efficient, running on natural gas, producing heat and electricity for AUMA's building, again, saving them a ton of money.

Out in the patch that same technology has an enormous opportunity. It's – sorry, hon. member. This was the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills' very career, was it not?

Mr. Panda: Yes.

Mr. MacIntyre: So I'm stealing his thunder. Sorry.

Here we have a situation out in the oil sands where we've got an opportunity to use cogeneration to not only improve the GHG footprint out there on SAGD operations but also improve the footprint GHG-wise for our province's electrical grid by utilizing the electricity that can come from these units.

Further on in CESAR's study I'll quote them again. This is a report from October 20, 2016. “Alberta could simultaneously achieve two of its biggest energy objectives – accelerating the phase-out of coal-fired power and reducing [GHG] emissions from oil sands crude production – using a readily available, proven technology,” cogeneration at SAGD operations. Those reports are both available at CESAR's site.

CESAR has gone into significant analysis, and the analysis that they're doing is like a living document. As situations change in the technologies being deployed out in the patch, CESAR is amending their research. They have a very excellent modelling program that they're utilizing for this. Of course, being at the University of Calgary, this is a significant initiative from that university. I believe it's something this government should be looking at. It is analysis that is being done that the government isn't doing, obviously. We just had an amendment voted down that would have required some analysis from the government. But here's a freebie. The University of Calgary is doing it for you. It's a two-for-one; we can have both an improved GHG footprint out in our SAGD operations and significant reductions in our GHG footprint from electricity production if we were to utilize the available opportunity that's out there.

In addition to that, this is actually an opportunity for oil sands companies to be part of the solution and contribute in a significant way. The innovations that have been used out in the patch have been so significant and globally applied. I remember in the '80s and '90s colleagues going over to Russia and taking our technology that we invented and perfected right here in Alberta over to their oil fields for development of their resources in those nations. On and on, Albertans who have this incredible creativity in industries exporting our brainpower, exporting our technology and our knowledge and our industrial processes all over the world to impact the world. We have always been a leader. There has never been a time when Alberta has not been leading out there in the oil and gas resource sector, whether it be drilling technologies or environmental remediation technologies and so on.

When it comes to this particular amendment, given the friendly nature of it and given the significant impact that cogen could bring in emissions reduction, it makes perfect sense, to me, at least, and to members here, to have this amendment regarding cogeneration emissions. It would provide a significant incentive to having more cogeneration operating out there, where the cogeneration is also providing electricity and reducing GHG emissions on our grid. It's a very friendly amendment. It carries a significant amount of punch to it simply because of the efficiencies that we're talking about being able to achieve with cogen.

I would hope that all members in this House would see the benefit, the significant benefit, of this amendment to have cogeneration emissions not capped and that industry would be encouraged through this to employ even more of cogen out in the patch and other places, too. Hopefully, my hon. colleague can expand on even other places where cogen could possibly be utilized to maximize the enormous benefit this can bring to our GHG footprint.

I will be fully supporting this amendment and trust that all members in the House will follow suit. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

11:30

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of this great amendment from my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. I was a bit late in standing up, and my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, as usual . . .

An Hon. Member: He gets too much time.

Mr. Panda: I know.

. . . was very effective in explaining the benefits of this cogeneration. He also explained different types of processes and tried to educate us again. This morning I said that we are lucky to have a knowledgeable and experienced academic in this House who taught renewables. He can talk on any subject. We are fortunate to have him in this House, and I'm proud to call him my colleague and work shoulder to shoulder with him every day.

Well, I will be brief, Madam Chair. This arbitrary cap of 100 megatonnes: we all talked about how it's a cap on development, a cap on prosperity, and a cap on many things, but it's definitely not a feather in the cap of the government, and it's definitely not a feather in the cap of Albertans.

With this cap that we're talking about here, this 100-megatonne cap, it will be a good idea to exclude emissions from cogeneration being counted as oil sands emissions for a few reasons, Madam Chair. There are two processes in the oil sands, that we have at Athabasca and Cold Lake and Peace River, where the resource is. The shallow one is easy to do, surface mining along the Athabasca River. Those are all mining leases, and it's only 10 per cent of the resource.

The remaining 90 per cent of the resource we have is much deeper, whether it is in the Athabasca region or Peace River or Cold Lake. Incidentally, Madam Chair, it's in your area, Peace River, too. That resource is deeper, so we need to employ thermal technologies like SAGD, steam-assisted gravity drainage, wherein we have to pump in steam to make the reservoir viscous so that we can pump out bitumen. It's an energy-intensive process, and we need lots of steam, and since most of the resource is deeper, we have to use SAGD technology.

With all the SAGD projects nowadays the costs for developing those SAGD plants and the costs for a flowing barrel are very high. We have to bring down the cost of a flowing barrel for SAGD projects, and one way we could help them is to exclude these greenhouse gas emissions from cogeneration.

I'll read this for the benefit of the members here, Madam Chair. I'm reading an article here from the Globe and Mail by David Layzell and Manfred Klein.

Large-scale SAGD-integrated cogeneration is a better alternative. Natural gas is burned in gas turbines that convert about 36 per cent of the energy in the fuel to electrical power. Much of the residual heat can be captured to make steam for SAGD, resulting in the use of 80 per cent or more of the fuel energy.

That means lower fuel use – a major input cost for both SAGD and power generation – and lower overall greenhouse gas emissions.

Like my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake explained, it's a good deal. It's dual purpose. It reduces the input costs for the SAGD process, and it's generating power which we can put onto the grid and which can provide reliable power, and it helps the baseload power. In this kind of weather today, when everyone is freezing outside across the province, we need reliable power which also has lower emissions. That's why it's a good idea to exclude emissions from cogen from this arbitrary cap of 100 megatonnes, Madam Chair.

I was fortunate to work on both mining and SAGD projects when I worked 11 years at Suncor Energy. I was on the Firebag project for seven years, and I worked on cogen plants when we built cogen plants in the stage 3 and stage 4 expansion of Firebag. Each one is an 85-megawatt GE 7EA frame, and we sourced heat-recovery steam generators from the U.S.A. Those two are the main equipment, and the other one will be the high-voltage transformers. In this cogen power those are the heart of any cogen plant. Those are the key equipment: steam generators, heat-recovery steam generators, and the transformers.

I was also lucky to work on combined-cycle power projects when I worked 16 years for Reliance Industries, where we built the world's largest petrochemical and refining complex. The reports suggest that efficiencies are 30 per cent better in the case of cogen as compared to combined-cycle generation, Madam Chair.

Another advantage is that by building cogeneration at industrial sites like Firebag or MacKay River or Kirby Lake or Christina Lake, all of those projects, you don't have to build transmission lines. In that way, we can reduce the cost of power generation.

You know, in this current environment, because of this coal phase-out Albertans are going to be on the hook for higher power bills. By producing more power through cogen processes, we can help Albertans with reliable power, with lower emissions, and reduce the power bills directly or indirectly, Madam Chair.

That's why I support this amendment. As I said before, this whole idea of capping oil sands emissions at 100 megatonnes is arbitrary, it's not good for Alberta's economy and prosperity, and it's not achieving the purpose of reducing global emissions. We can make this bill better. That's why my colleagues brought a few amendments. The previous one was about . . .

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I actually have some experience when it comes to the oil sands. I had been brought into one of the local Cold Lake oil companies about 15 years ago. One of the benefits of working at the oil company was that I was able to get to see exactly how these oil sands boilers worked, and I actually got to see the cogeneration units for this oil company.

Now, for those who don't know what cogeneration is, I think it's important to kind of bring some understanding here of the importance of going down this direction. What happens here is that most people don't realize that what we're trying to do is to push natural gas into a turbine, take that turbine, turn it into heat, take that heat, and create steam out of it. It's always been the big problem: what do you do with the by-product? The by-product itself is heat. So what you're trying to do is, I guess, utilize this excess heat that's created with this. This is cogen.

Now, the oil sands have got something else. There are probably hundreds of different ways of creating heat to be able to make steam, but of the two that I saw, one was that they had this great big tube. We called it a generator. What they did was that inside of this tube they had pipes, and they had a big flame that would shoot into this tube. It would heat these pipes and shoot down, I guess, the water into it and create steam as it comes out. Now, this is simple. That literally is how simple that is, just tubes in there, big pipes, right? Very, very simple.

Now, cogen is not simple. That isn't something that comes up, I guess, easily. The reason this is important is that the cogen units that I had worked with actually came from Germany, very well engineered, but any time something would happen, we'd have to bring German experts in to fix these cogen units or go around and get any extra parts or any maintenance, anything like that that came for these cogen units. The generator is what we'd use primarily. The cogen units were great. What happened is that we used the cogen units, this by-product of heat, to also generate power. They used this power to be able to power the plants, and they used this power to power the pumpjacks. They used this power to power the screw pumps that were in the ground.

What we're looking at here is that because of the cost of these cogen units, we have oil companies that are saying: let's just get to the business that we know, which is extracting oil. Electricity is not their highest priority. I know that's shocking, but in the end what they're trying to do is to extract the oil for the cheapest amount of money they can because this is business. This is business, environmentally responsible – right? – but they're still trying to do this effectively.

What happens here is that these oil sands companies will create enough cogen just to be able to power their own little area. They won't go and create it so that they can actually start to market it out to the grid. Actually, it's well known that a lot of these oil sands companies, when they do sell their excess to the grid, are bidding it right at zero, just shipping it out and taking whatever they can get for it in the market. They're not trying to compete. They're just trying to ship it out because it's a by-product of what they're trying to do.

What we've got here is one of the new projects that's going to be brought forward by one of my local oil companies. It's an expansion project that actually, I'm thrilled to hear, is being moved forward, possibly by 2019. Under their proposal here – and I'm looking at their proposal for bringing this forward – we've got technology considerations. In about the third paragraph of these technology considerations it says, "[Cogen] was considered and rejected for the project as [this project] has sufficient power generation to supply the project." So we've already got enough power from other facilities that have cogen to be able to make this expansion.

Now, I sit hear and I'm going, like: I understand why they're moving in this direction, because it appears that our government is actually moving away from responsible energy when it comes to natural gas. What we're looking for as a government now is wind power and solar power. So instead of incentivizing something that is responsible for us, which is cogen, we're incentivizing things that have proven to fail in other jurisdictions or other provinces. Something that is uniquely used within Alberta isn't even being considered, which is shocking in itself because not very many jurisdictions can use mass amounts of steam. This is the key here. Our oil sands can use mass amounts of steam. It just makes sense. Cogen makes sense.

Why am I bringing this up? Well, what we've got here is a government that said: let's put a 10-megatonne cap on cogen. One of the questions that I have got for the Minister of Energy is: how much of this 10-megatonne cap that we've got is already used with just existing operations? Are we at two? Are we at nine? Where are we at with the cogen? This is important. This is probably why we are starting to see where it could potentially be something that oil companies would look into, but in the end, if they're going to be fighting off a cap of 10 megatonnes, well, how exactly can they justify putting billions of dollars into cogen when they can't even fire it? They'll go to the simpler method. They'll go to that generator I was talking about before.

Now, I think that we should be responsible when it comes to energy. I think that we should be trying to utilize it as much as we can. I will say that when it comes to natural gas, what's unique, especially with the Cold Lake operations, is that another by-product is natural gas. So what we've got here is natural gas that comes from the wells and feeds the cogen units that feed the steam, which goes down and extracts the oil – it's a nice circle; it's a circular thing – and as a by-product what we get is electricity, which can go back out to the grid. This just makes sense. It just makes sense. Why would we cap that? Why would we cap that with a 10-megatonne cap? It doesn't make any sense to me.

What I will say is that when it comes to gas before, when I was working in the oil fields – this is conventional, going way back to my early 20s – gas as a by-product used to be flared off. Useless. We just flared it off into the sky. In my dad's time – my dad was also an oil field worker way back when – he said that it used to flare so bright, it was like daylight outside. That's how much we would flare off this gas. It's just unfortunate that we went down that road, but that's where we're at. So it went from oil that was being brought up along with the gas – gas would be a by-product that we couldn't use, so we'd flare it off. It was the safest way to deal with the H<sub>2</sub>S that would come up with it.

What we've got here is a nice enclosed system when cogen comes along. We get to utilize all of the products that come up. Why are we not taking a more proactive approach when it comes to this? I'll tell you that my riding is one of those ridings – when you start talking about surface extraction, you're looking at further north in Alberta, but Bonnyville-Cold Lake, my riding, is the perfect spot to be looking at cogen. Why is this government not doing more research or economic studies on how to utilize this? We just put in artificial caps, which are going to hurt my riding. It's going to hurt investment. It's going to hurt jobs. That's on you.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mrs. Aheer: I just have a couple of minutes, just a few things to speak about. One of the most important aspects of this amendment is that it supports something that's really neat. Cogen is actually on the cusp of economic viability. Now, that's huge because these are tremendously expensive pieces of equipment. These generators don't go into this as the business of electricity. It's a by-product of what they're doing, and they bid into the grid at zero. They have their own baseload, but they are suppliers. That is so good for Alberta. From the fact that it's so close to being economically viable, this government should most certainly be promoting, supporting, and moving that forward. By exempting all emissions from cogen, you will actually be doing that and contributing to the economic viability of this process.

The companies, actually, that are producing this cogen also pay for royalties of the product, for the heat as power, so they have an input cost as well. They're not power generators first; it's a secondary source. You have to think about the economy of scale for these folks. They're not in the business of producing, you know, 150,000 megawatts of energy at a facility with a couple of natural gas plants or coal-fired units. These are little distributed units, and they're small, but they have a tremendous amount of impact on the grid. We should completely be supporting that.

But the most important part of this entire discussion: cogeneration makes environmental sense. It just makes complete sense to support it, and I could not imagine a reason why this government would penalize that. It makes amazing environmental sense. So I would really, really like to see this government not make it harder for these companies to be able to do right by Albertans in the responsible development of these products.

Thank you.

Mr. Panda: I just wanted, Madam Chair, through you, to briefly request that the hon. minister please consider this amendment. It's a good one. Even the previous one that we brought in about upgrading in Alberta – we talked about that – you rejected that, but this is a common-sense one. This is really good for Alberta.

Mr. MacIntyre: It's a friendly amendment.

Mr. Panda: It's a very friendly amendment.

We're trying to make this bill better. I would urge that you consider and ask your colleagues to vote in support of this amendment in the interests of Alberta and in the interest of reducing costs for SAGD producers. If you think differently, at least please give us the benefit of how you see that differently and why you wouldn't support it. But I would request that you please consider this amendment or at least respond to us why you won't.

Thank you.

The Chair: Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to take – I know we have only a few minutes. I want to talk in support of this amendment because I spent a fair amount of time on SAGD projects at MacKay River, Fort MacKay. Brion Energy: my colleague for Calgary-Foothills is very well aware of that project. It's state-of-the-art technology brought from China by PetroChina. I saw the benefit: the cost went down. You know, I think this amendment will make this bill stronger, it'll make the energy industry efficient, so I ask all the members from across all parties to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question on this amendment?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A6 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:55 a.m.]

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee shall now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 7, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you David James, my assistant deputy minister for electricity and sustainable energy. David is a committed and hard-working member of the public service. With David today is his wife, Alana, and their three children: Kaitlin, Emily, and Tyler. They are using their PD afternoon off from school to attend QP today and learn more about our government. Kaitlin, in fact, is interested in being a teacher and getting into politics one day. I would ask that David and his family please receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, were there any school groups today? The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Edmonton Christian northeast school. Accompanying them today are their teachers, Elaine Junk and Greg Gurnett along with their chaperones, Tibor Hungler, Tanya Mudge, Janet Verlinden, Virginia Esteves, Joy Abesigwa, Marcia Kasapu, and Christina Miketic-Ketsa. If I could ask all of the students to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, when we're having introductions, if you'd avoid the dialogue amongst yourselves, I'd appreciate that.

Are there any other school groups?

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Salimah Walji-Shivji. Salimah is a practising lawyer with a distinguished career. In 2004 she started practising law with AHS and is currently working with an AgeCare group. Salimah is involved with many boards, nonprofits, and community organizations which provide very essential services in Calgary and across this province. I would request Salimah to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to my colleagues in the House, I'd like to introduce Sheila Aitken and Stephanie Sabadaska. They are my two constituency assistants in Stony Plain. They attempt to keep me organized and the constituency running smoothly in spite of the fact that I keep them running in all directions. I'd like all of my colleagues in the House to help me welcome them with the traditional warm welcome of this House as they stand.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in the House to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Katherine Spencer. Katherine works as an applied tree physiologist for the government of Alberta and, in her spare time, volunteers and acts as the heritage sports promoter doing wood chopping, logger sports, and dogsledding. She recently made Team Canada for the 2017 dogsledding world championships. Could Katherine please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Dogsledding. Wow.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Gord and Marilyn Elliott. Gord formerly served for six years on the National Council for the Conservative Party of Canada. He's now a member of the Wildrose Executive Committee, and we're so happy to have him. He is joined by his lovely wife, Marilyn, who was also elected to the National Council for the Conservative Party of Canada. Gord and Marilyn are two passionate Albertans who are dedicated to making our province an even better place for future generations. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests today, hon. members? The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my very great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two young people who are supporting me on a recent political adventure I became involved in. I'd like to first introduce Sierra Garner. Sierra was born and raised on an award-winning quarter horse operation near Waterton in southwestern Alberta and is currently living in Lethbridge, working in the tourism sector. She's also vice-president south for the Progressive Conservative Youth of Alberta.

My second guest is Mr. Thomas Ockley, who's familiar to many of us as being a steely-eyed research man for the PC caucus and has recently also joined me in my political adventure. They're both seated in the public gallery, and I'd like all members of the House to join them in the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Albertans are suffering. They're losing their jobs. They're losing their homes. This is a tragedy. But this NDP government doesn't think they share any of the blame. For anyone who doesn't share their enlightened views of the world, they just need a better education, apparently. When they're criticized for their ridiculous, job-killing ideas, they have one excuse: just blame the opposition. They did this during Bill 6. Now, like clockwork, they say that it's the opposition's fault that Albertans are upset about the carbon tax, and they refuse to take any responsibility whatsoever for the damage it's causing.

Mr. Speaker, when I look across the aisle, I see people who don't know the value of a dollar, who don't understand the fears of working families across this province, people who don't know how hard it is to work a real job and make ends meet. For some of these members this is their first job ever. They are completely out of touch with the consequences of their actions and what life is really about. They make bad decisions after bad decisions, that hurt Albertans. Then they ignore those same Albertans when they go back to their ridings, or, when they ignore frustrated Albertans, well, they jet off to Paris and Morocco. We know this because we constantly hear from Albertans who say: my family can't afford this carbon tax, and my NDP MLA won't talk to me.

The Premier did have something to say this week, however. She wants Albertans to, quote, make better choices. Last time she said: buy a different car. They actually think ordinary people earn the same salaries that they do. Take it from me, someone who's raised kids and owned businesses, life is hard. This carbon tax is going to ruin families in Alberta.

In 2019 Albertans know they will have a better choice, and in just two years the party is over for this NDP government. Then they'll see what real life is all about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Official Opposition and Government Policies

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a person who raised kids and ran businesses, I was disappointed when I opened the paper last week and saw the Leader of the Opposition tell the story of our government and the little red hen. For those who may not remember the tale, the little red hen did all the work: planting the wheat, harvesting it, milling it, and baking the bread. Her friends didn't help with any of the work; they only volunteered to help eat the bread.

Mr. Speaker, I call fowl. In fact, I have my own fowl story to tell. It's the tale of Chicken Little. Chicken Little really liked to go on walks, long, big walks, sometimes all the way across the Legislature Grounds. On these walks Chicken Little occasionally saw things that bothered him.

One day Chicken Little saw the lowest paid workers get a raise. What did he say? "The sky is falling," he declared, and he ran off to tell the press gallery all about it. Then Chicken Little saw farm workers get covered under WCB. "The sky is falling," he insisted to any journalists he could find. Chicken Little saw the government phase out coal and take action on climate change. "The sky is falling," he bellowed to one and to all. Chicken Little saw the government cancel big corporate tax giveaways. "The sky is falling," he recited over and over on Twitter. Chicken Little saw the Prime Minister announce two new pipelines. "The sky is falling," he said, bewildered.

But, Mr. Speaker, the sky wasn't falling on Chicken Little's head. We know from the story that what fell on Chicken Little's head was little more than an acorn or perhaps a wild rosebud.

Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the sky isn't falling. In Alberta the sky is the limit. We got two new pipelines approved, our jobs plan is working, our infrastructure plan is putting Albertans back to work. Our government is working hard to get results for Albertans, and we will not stop, no matter what Chicken Little says. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, quiet, please.
Calgary-Fish Creek.

Economic Development

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is the UN's International Civil Aviation Day, near and dear to my heart after a two-decades-long career with Hong Kong based Cathay Pacific airways, the inspiration for my honoured Chinese name Gaoferi, or fly high.

One of the organization's stated goals is to recognize aviation as an engine of global connectivity and a fundamental enabler of global peace and prosperity. Lofty ideals indeed for an industry that started with a rather inauspicious 12-second flight at Kitty Hawk.

I tip my hat to Alberta's aviation pioneers, including high-flying entrepreneur Clive Beddoe, the man behind Alberta's current flagship success story WestJet. Mr. Speaker, to me aviation, trade, commerce, and tourism are the foundation of bridges we build between people and nations that allow us to pursue global aspirations and a chance to share ourselves, who we are, our rich natural resources, beautiful landscapes, hospitable natures, and the expertise and opportunities within our borders with the world in a mutually beneficial, wealth-building manner.

Mr. Speaker, therein lies the opportunity for a better, more prosperous Alberta. But to achieve success and prosperity, we must demonstrate to the world, through these bridges, that in addition to being ethical, sincere, and moral as well as the conscientious stewards of the environment, we are also open for business.

I've learned from places like Hong Kong, as the most free-enterprise economy in the world 22 years running, that we are indeed in control of our destiny. With just over 7 million people, Hong Kong's GDP, with no natural resources to refine or export, is just one-quarter of Canada's GDP while its per capita GDP exceeds ours by approximately $5,000 U.S. dollars per person. Unemployment is at 3.4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the PC vision for the future of Alberta is to be the most business-friendly jurisdiction in North America and, dare I say, to take on the likes of Hong Kong for global status in the years ahead. I challenge this government to lay down their misguided, job-killing, investment-repelling policies and do what is right in building this great province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I've had a request for unanimous consent to introduce a late guest.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the gallery we have Jamie Leong-Huxley. She has been instrumental in our payday loans legislation. She's worked diligently behind the scenes to help us get community organizations together and really create an initiative that has helped so many Albertans. She has worked tirelessly and been an extremely beneficial partner to the success of our legislation. I would ask that she rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Job Opportunities

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I came to Alberta on a Greyhound bus from B.C. What brought me here were the opportunities Alberta offered. The prosperity of this province allowed my employer to take a chance on a new arrival. I found success here, and now as the MLA for Calgary-Currie I want that success for every one of my constituents.

But right now those same people that gave me a chance are hurting, and it pains me to see that because without their support, I wouldn't be here today. That is why I am so proud of the work this government did to get two pipelines approved. They will boost the economy while allowing us to continue the much-needed work of diversifying our economy and creating new jobs that will come from leading on climate change. These pipelines will help those who helped me.

There are those who say that we should forgo these economic opportunities, leave all the oil in the ground, move instantly to green jobs, and a diversified economy. Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, you can't diversify a ghost town. Conversely, I take offence when I hear those from the Wildrose claiming 140-character, instant budget solutions that would take us backwards, cutting teachers and nurses. When they say things like, "Axe the tax," what they actually mean is to axe the pipelines, axe the jobs. Well, I will not stand for that either.

I want my neighbours in Calgary-Currie to have the same opportunities I did. Male, female, LGBTQ, or disabled: pipelines and a strong economy support whatever field you want to succeed in while we diversify the economy. If my neighbours, working hard to support themselves, should fall, becoming disabled or unemployed, we will be there to help pick them back up because that's what neighbours do, Mr. Speaker.

I am darn proud of my government's record of standing up for jobs, environments, and pipelines. I will happily take my work to the doorsteps of Calgary-Currie. I will put my record of action against the opposition's deep-as-a-tweet plan any day of the week.

People elected me to focus on leading Alberta's economy into this century. Alberta is watching, Mr. Speaker, and I will more than happily show them what I've done.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Katherine Spencer and Heritage Sports

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this job I get to meet exceptional people doing exceptional things, which definitely applies to Katherine Spencer. A tree physiologist by trade, Kat volunteers as a heritage sports promoter. Working with cultural and historical groups, she uses modernized versions of historical jobs and activities to teach about our culture and land settlement history. Through exciting and interactive demonstrations and competitions such as the logger sports competition she organizes during Saint-Jean-Baptiste days in Morinville, Kat exhibits sports as history in action.

Two-thousand seventeen is a year of celebration for Canada's 150th birthday, and what could be more evocative of Canada's heritage than dogsledding, well, maybe besides being a lumberjack, or should I say a 'lumberjill'?

Kat Spencer is part of a group of amazing women who have turned the world of professional lumberjack sports upside down. She was on the Canadian women's wood-chopping team and will represent Alberta and Team Canada in the dogsledding world championships in January of 2017, after which she will have competed at the highest level, representing Canada internationally in both sports.

What better place for a world-class log splitter, axe thrower, and dogsledder to be than beautiful and historic Smoky Lake? Kat chose to locate to Smoky Lake because of its heritage, strong sense of community, and wonderful trails, of course. A community-minded person, she has organized a sled dog race for February 18 to 19, 2017, to share her knowledge and passion with others. The race will provide many opportunities to volunteer and will benefit all that reside in Smoky Lake and the surrounding area. These activities encourage people to get active and learn about an historic transportation method that has contributed to Canadian settlement.

I admire Kat's dedication to reviving heritage sports in our province. What better way to keep the past and our rural roots alive? I hope all members will join me in wishing Kat well in her endeavours and providing our support wherever we can.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Health Care in Central Alberta

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The people of central Alberta would like to know if they have any place in the centralized planning of Alberta Health Services. Specifically, there are doctors who are concerned with Alberta Health Services' top 20 priorities for Alberta. Not one of the top priorities is for central Alberta. All are focused on Edmonton and Calgary. This is not equality.

Let me list some of the issues in the central Alberta health region. AHS tried to close the Sundre hospital but kept it open only after their MLA and the minister – thank you – intervened. The Didsbury hospital heart rehab centre and lab was closed. Chaplain services across the central region have been reduced. The Red Deer hospital has yet to be approved for a catheterization lab even though the viability has been demonstrated and the need is so great that the local citizens have raised $10 million for it. Wait times are still getting longer.

With these problems plaguing central Alberta, it's clear that they are not very central in the centralized bureaucracy of AHS. The tax dollars raised in central Alberta for central Alberta citizens are being siphoned off to priorities elsewhere. This is one of the systemic problems with a centralized health care system. The previous government demolished local health care regions, creating one massive, centralized health bureaucracy where everything comes from the top down, the ultimate pyramid, a relic of Egyptian archaeology. The people at the top of the pyramid are so far removed from the problems on the ground that the system no longer reflects citizens' needs. Centralized power and control are for the benefit of big government, not the people.

This centralized system is not working for my constituents and the surrounding regions. We need local decision-making because centralized planning does not include central Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Table officer, hold the clock, please.

Speaker's Ruling Supplementary Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have had the opportunity to read Hansard and would like to clarify a ruling that I gave yesterday concerning a point of order raised by the Government House Leader, the arguments for which can be found on page 2340 of the December 6, 2016, Hansard.

The point of order had to do with questions posed by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, which can be found on pages 2333 to 2334 of yesterday's Hansard. To be clear, the member's main question had to do with surveys concerning school curriculum while the first supplementary question pertained to persons with developmental disabilities, and the second supplementary related to a public health matter, namely fentanyl. The Member for Calgary-Elbow's questions were not linked together as they ought to have been. I wish to clarify that the rule of our Assembly is that supplementary questions must relate to the subject matter of the main question.

As Speaker Kowalski ruled on May 12, 2004, a ruling which was quoted yesterday by the government House leader and which can be found on page 1390 of Hansard for that day:

Now, there's also a tradition we follow here that if an hon. member is recognized, they raise a first question and then they're allowed two supplementals. It has always been understood that supplementals must have something to do with the first question.

Similarly, on March 30, 1998, Speaker Kowalski ruled that there is a consistent rule that there should be some flow with the questions and they should be in a similar type of subject.

This ruling can be found on page 1200 of Hansard for that day.

Accordingly, the Member for Calgary-Elbow's questions were not linked together as they ought to have been.

In the future I would ask and encourage and expect that all hon. members would ensure that supplementary questions are connected to the main question. Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: You just have to listen to how the Premier talks about Albertans to get an idea of what she really thinks of them. It's clear that she thinks that the vast majority of Albertans, who oppose her carbon tax, should be grateful that they just have an opportunity to, quote, make better choices. She calls farmers who oppose Bill 6 the anger machine. She doesn't hesitate to call Alberta the embarrassing cousin. When will the Premier stop showing such contempt for the majority of people in this province, who don't agree with her agenda?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that what our government has been doing has been standing up for Albertans ever since we got elected, and we do that because we value Albertans and we care about their situations. For instance, we did not come into office and move ahead with $2 billion in cuts to the very services that those families rely on. We didn't do that because we have their backs. We invested in them. We said: we will work with you through this economic downturn. We will not make up pretend solutions while we slash and burn and put nurses and teachers out . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Well, over two-thirds of Albertans don't support the carbon tax. There are no good choices when families have to pick between heating their homes or driving their kids to school. The only message Premier Notley has for families, businesses, and charities across the province . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you used an individual's name. I think that might have been an oversight on your part.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The only message that this Premier has for families, businesses, and charities across the province who are suffering is to make better choices. Albertans don't like being talked down to. They're upset with the NDP for bringing in a carbon tax with no mandate, so why doesn't the Premier, for once, respect Albertans by at least giving them a referendum on the carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing instead is ensuring that 60 per cent of Albertans, every household that makes $90,000 a year or less, will get a rebate on the carbon tax, so, in fact, we'll be giving even more support to low- and middle-income families than they would have gotten otherwise.

You know what else, Mr. Speaker? Do you know what Albertans are really in favour of? Pipelines. You know what the Prime Minister said last week? It would not have happened without our climate change plan. Would the members opposite like us to go backwards to the point where we do not have those two pipelines approved?

Mr. Jean: I know that the carbon tax makes members of the NDP backbench, earning comfortable six-figure salaries, feel important at parties, but it will force Albertans to make better choices between whether to heat their homes or buy groceries. That's the choice they face. Charities will need to make better choices on how to serve those in need. Businesses will have to make better choices on whether or not they keep their doors open and keep Albertans employed. This isn't funny. There are only 24 days until the carbon tax comes into effect. Why aren't you listening to the majority of Albertans, who don't want this carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, the member opposite failed to hear the last answer to the question. Sixty per cent of Albertans, which is actually the majority of Albertans as opposed to the group he's talking about, will in fact get a rebate. So the Chicken Little scenario that the member opposite is outlining is not actually accurate, Mr. Speaker. Now, I appreciate that not everybody on this side can look back to, oh, 10 years having received an MP's salary either, but what we do know is that we are standing up for Albertans, and that's why we put the rebate in place, and that's why we are building our economy on behalf of Albertans.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, on one thing we do agree. This carbon tax will help Albertans put this NDP government in the dustbin of history in 2019. Albertans see what the NDP government is doing to Alberta, and they don't like it. I don't blame them. They see Alberta's energy sector plummeting to 43rd in the world, and the NDP laugh and shrug it off. Hundreds of thousands of people are out of work. This is a big deal. Why doesn't anyone in the NDP seem to get it?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it is so unbelievable how much the members opposite seem to want to see Alberta fail. They think that if they claim it's happening enough, maybe it will. You know, it is so unfortunate how the opposition is putting politics ahead of doing the right thing. In fact, conservatives at the Prosperity Fund meeting talked about getting the pipelines as a doomsday scenario. That is shameful. I implore the members opposite to stand with this government, stand up for Alberta, and help us promote the pipelines.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, to be clear, I love pipelines, all pipelines going from Alberta in every direction. When people who invest billions into the oil and gas industry think Saskatchewan, B.C., Manitoba, North Dakota, Texas, Oklahoma and don't think Alberta, we have a problem. Are the NDP worried? No. They're happy to cap our emissions and put a crippling carbon tax on our economy while our competitors in the United States laugh at us. This is a serious issue, especially because you don't get it. Can the Premier please name one tax or one regulation she's put into place that has made Alberta a friendlier place to invest?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we recently announced that the small-business tax is going to be cut by one-third, so there's one. We also announced tax credits for businesses, investment tax credits, so there's two, and there's three. But the big one is that although the member opposite claims he loves pipelines, after 10 years in the federal government: zero pipelines built, and we just got two approved.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Jean: If the NDP want to talk pipelines, here's a simple question. Just about every one of the Premier's advisers come from the B.C. NDP. They have a long history of working on their campaigns as well. We know that the B.C. NDP are taking the advice of one of her oil sands advisers to fight Kinder Morgan "at the ballot box." Will the Premier mandate that any of her staff or staff of the Alberta government will not help in the election bid of the B.C. NDP? Yes or no?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I can say is that every member of this House is going to do what they were elected to do, which is to work on behalf of the people of Alberta. We are going to do that by repositioning our energy economy as the most progressive energy economy in the world, and we are going to do that by being a leader on climate change in North America, and we are going to do that by getting two pipelines built and bringing jobs back to the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

2:00 Agriculture Financial Services Corporation Board

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past summer, based on information from the Auditor General's report regarding the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, this government suspended several senior AFSC executives with pay. Six months have passed, and the government has spent over $500,000 in wages. To the minister: how does this government justify still paying these substantial salaries, and how much longer must the taxpayer bear the cost of this outrageous boondoggle?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We had the opportunity this past June to dismiss the AFSC's board after examination of some very serious irregularities. That process is continuing on the investigation. These allegations will be investigated thoroughly by the law, by the RCMP, by us to ensure. In the meantime, we have had the opportunity to have an interim board, and I'm very proud of the work they're doing.

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Speaker, it's costing the public purse more than $3,000 a day to pay these people for doing absolutely no work. This is a blatant slap in the face to the thousands of Albertans who have lost their jobs. Minister, how is your agency achieving accountability for taxpayers with these huge salaries paid for no job performance? Or is this simply a way to avoid possible litigation for a wrongful dismissal?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note that recruitment is under way for a new board of directors. I'm very proud to say that we had a very large list of knowledgeable, qualified applicants. We are going through that. It takes some time to go through that because we had such a large number. We're close to getting a short list on that. We'll have a new board of directors very shortly.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, the suspended president's annual salary is over half a million dollars, complete with a government car and a gas card. Another suspended senior staffer makes over a quarter of a million dollars annually. When will this government finally settle this matter of being paid for no work, indicative of how this government will manage other agency, board, or commission executives in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People right across the province congratulated us on taking action on something that was very serious. We took that action, Mr. Speaker. In the interim we've hired an interim CEO, Ed Knash from ATB, to take that. He's been very competent. This is a human resource matter, and it would be highly inappropriate to discuss it in this House at this time. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, I know that many of you will be expecting and wanting gifts under the Christmas tree soon, so you need to be nicer to each other if you're going to get any of those presents.

The leader of the third party.

Carbon Levy

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The Premier was in B.C. to sell the Kinder Morgan pipeline to her teammates in the B.C. NDP. That went poorly. The Premier told CBC news that the carbon tax "is a tremendous opportunity for [Albertans] to make better choices." Alberta families: all they have to do to see their household finances, crippled by this carbon tax, get better is to "make better choices." Who knew? To the Premier: if your advice to Albertans worried about the impacts of your government's carbon tax is simply to make better choices, is it fair to say that you think Alberta families up till now have been making poor choices?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I have to say it's very encouraging to see that the members opposite are sharing question writers today. That's an interesting choice. That being said, we are very proud of our climate leadership plan. We know that pricing carbon is what experts and economists and business leaders around the world say is what is needed to reduce emissions and to build the economy at the same time, so that's exactly what we're doing. At the same time, we are supporting low- and middle-income families by ensuring that 60 per cent of Alberta families get rebates starting in January, and we will not apologize for that.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: The Premier should apologize for her arrogance. It's condescending to respond to the very real anxieties and fears of Albertans by telling them to make better choices. For champagne socialists across the aisle making better choices might be as easy as buying a new car, as the Premier suggested last April, but struggling families can't afford that. To the Premier: your carbon tax rebates will not cover the full cost of a household: electricity, natural gas, gasoline, food, groceries. When Albertans are told to make better choices, is that a choice between filling up the gas tank and buying groceries? That's what it seems to be.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad that the members opposite have finally learned that there are lower and middle-income families that actually need their support. It's nice to hear them finally talking about them. That's why our government very intentionally determined that there would be a rebate provided to low and middle-income families so that this would not have a disproportionate effect on them. In fact, the less income families have, the less greenhouse gas emissions and the less carbon pricing they would be subjected to. In fact, they will come out ahead because we are standing up for middle-class families.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, low- and middle-income Alberta families have to make better choices every day by managing their expenses, something that this government has failed to do. Telling them to make better choices is as arrogant and condescending as anything I've heard for years in this Legislature or Alberta. I thought I would give this Premier an opportunity to make better choices, too. Premier, will you direct your Finance minister to make better choices and give Albertans a plan to someday pay back the debt that Alberta families are saddled with?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we are going to do is make the kinds of choices that have the backs of Albertans. We are not going to move ahead with the kind of flat tax that these folks wanted to go ahead with in terms of health care premiums. We are not going to go ahead with laying off nurses. We are not going to go ahead with laying off teachers. We are going to support low-income families. We're going to bring in progressive taxation. We're going to support working families with better child care. We're going to do all those things because we support working families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Petrochemicals Diversification Program

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater were excited to hear the recent announcement of projects approved under the petrochemical diversification program, but they have questions. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what is the expected economic impact of these projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Alberta has Canada's highest concentration of petroleum refining, chemical processors, and petrochemical manufacturers. These are the people who add value to our resources right here at home. Yesterday the Energy minister and I were proud to join some of the world's best petrochemical leaders to announce two projects approved under the petrochemical diversification program. The projects represent a total investment of up to $6 billion that will be invested right here and create more than 4,000 jobs in the construction phase and 1,400 indirect and direct jobs.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our economy has for far too long relied . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Piquette: . . . on exporting our raw resources and given that Albertans want to see more jobs in the value-added sector, to the same minister: when are the projects expected to begin, and what new products will the facilities enable Albertans to produce?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first project is a joint venture between Pembina Pipeline Corporation and Petrochemical Industries Company, or Pembina PIC. They're going to process about 22,000 barrels per day of propane into polypropylene. The company estimates that the value of what they create is worth 700 per cent more than the propane that they start with. Construction is expected to start in 2019, the facility to be operational by 2021. The second project is Inter Pipeline, which will produce another 22,000 barrels per day and is expected to start next year, in 2017.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Excellent news.

To the same minister: what is the response from community leaders and industry about the government's plan to support the petrochemical sector and to diversify our economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member. This is excellent news. I can tell you that what we're doing on this side of the House is working with Albertans and companies to create jobs here at home as opposed to expending a lot of hot air, which the opposition seems to do a lot of. I'll tell you this much. Mayor Don Iveson said: "This is superb news for the [Edmonton] economy . . . Real value-added petrochem jobs we need." Strathcona county Mayor Roxanne Carr said, "Thank you Ministers . . . for your support in moving [Alberta's] economy forward." Ed Gibbons, who's the chair of AIHA, said that this program will help position Alberta as a competitive location for investment.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

An Hon. Member: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order.

2:10 Child Protective Services Review

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, when we hear stories of how child and family services has failed innocent children, we are right to seek ways to fix it. To date we have received zero details on concrete measures the Minister of Human Services has taken to stop these tragedies in the future. They say that they want a committee, but they voted against terms of reference to give the committee tools and teeth to help fix the problem. Will the House leader commit that this committee won't be a public relations exercise, and when will we see the rules for this committee?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The death of any child in care is a very tragic situation indeed. This government has done a great deal to try and improve the conditions for children. More needs to be done. The Premier has committed to reaching across the aisle and working with opposition members in order to find additional solutions to this very difficult problem, and that's what we're going to do.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we all know the system needs to be and can be fixed, but we also need accountability. That means taking the partisanship out of the committee and giving it the independence to do its work to help give the government concrete advice. Will the NDP commit to working with all opposition parties to form the terms of reference for this committee before the House rises? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said in my answer to the first question, the Premier has committed that we will be working across the aisle to try and work and find solutions to this very difficult problem. We've done a great deal already, and more clearly needs to be done. We want to reach out to everybody, and in due course we're going to be having conversations about how we're going to be doing that. I think the hon. members just need to stay tuned.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that we have seen dozens of reports, recommendations, and investigations over the past several years into the child intervention system and given that I have personally spoken to foster families that already feel intimidated by this government from speaking out on this very issue, will the NDP commit to giving front-line workers, managers, and foster care providers full whistle-blower protection at this committee, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the questions. Foster parents play an important role in the child intervention system. This year alone I was present at their event here in Edmonton, in Calgary, and in Jasper. So I have been in touch with them, and we are working closely. As far as the front lines, we value the work they do. At the heart of what we do at Human Services is the hard work of the front lines. Even this week I have sent out a survey to hear the feedback from the front lines.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Carbon Levy and Seniors

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some Albertans will have hangovers while others may need a stiff drink as they wake up to an Alberta NDP carbon tax on New Year's Day, but all will be subject to higher costs and additional financial burden in this sobering attack on the lives of Albertans. Nonprofit seniors' care providers share significant concerns due to the impact of the carbon tax and their ability to deliver the levels of care, nutrition, and comfort rightly expected by Alberta seniors. To the minister of seniors: how will you respond to these deserving seniors and their compassionate care providers, and what choices would you like them to make when their lives and budgets are negatively impacted by the burden of your misguided carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Environment and Parks minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. You know, we heard from the nonprofit and voluntary sector. They told us that they want to be part of the transition to a lower carbon future. We're working with them to get there. We convened a nonprofit and voluntary sector working group to hear from them, brainstorm the efficiency programs that will help defray many of these costs and ensure that it keeps money in folks' pockets and make sure that we've got the right investments in efficiency. We'll have more to say about that in early 2017.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Their clock is ticking while yours isn't.

Given that the government also owns and/or operates seniors' affordable housing across the province and given that these facilities will also face difficult choices around the burden of the carbon tax and that a portion of current funding will automatically be redirected away from seniors' care towards paying this mandatory tax, without rebate or compensation, again to the minister: what are your department's estimates for the total cost of the carbon tax for government-owned or -operated seniors' housing in fiscal 2017? Can you share those details with us?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it's very important for us to ensure that seniors are well housed in Alberta, and we're completely committed to that. Our government has put $1.2 billion in our capital plan over five years. We know that climate change is real, and we want to make sure that we have a healthy economy and healthy citizens. We've increased the operating budget by 2 per cent, and we are working with those housing management providers to support seniors. We are very pleased with the work that we've done. The opposition would be cutting billions of dollars from the budget instead of investing, and that's what we're doing. We're working with people right now.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There goes the salad off their plates and the foot care that they probably need as well.

Given that the government touts its bare-bones rebate program as a cure-all for the ills of the carbon tax and given that many seniors who still live in their homes actually exceed the income thresholds because of effective retirement planning combined with additional benefits such as modest pensions, again to the minister: what is your government doing to assist these seniors, who have serious concerns about the impact of the carbon tax, and what better choices do you expect them to make to protect this modest retirement lifestyle that they have worked so hard for their entire lives?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, 60 per cent of Albertans will receive a full rebate; 66 per cent of Albertans will receive a full or partial rebate. That's two-thirds of the population. In addition to that, there will be $645 million worth of investments in energy efficiency programs to make it easier for folks to make their homes more comfortable and to reduce their bills even more than the $30 per tonne. Now, in addition to that, there will also be $2.2 billion worth of investment in green infrastructure, and in many cases that will be for some of our . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Education Review

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Education minister has appointed members to a secret expert working group that will spearhead the rewrite of the entire kindergarten to grade 12 curricula. The minister has in the past stated that he will not proclaim the Education Act until he is sure that it reflects NDP values, and this NDP government has a long history of appointing individuals to panels with backgrounds in NDP ideological activism. Why will the minister not release the names of the committee to the public and assure Albertans that the working group is not just another NDP think tank?

The Speaker: The hon. Education minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. The expert working groups that we have working on the curriculum – which is the most ambitious curriculum rewrite/reform in the history of this province. There are more than 300 individuals from the Alberta Teachers' Association, from the Department of Education, from universities, from different other groups, and the only reason that – certainly, we have issues around sensitivity around these individuals. They can choose to put their names forward, you know. Making attacks on people that are making choices to help us to build a curriculum is entirely inappropriate.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, I guess those details will remain secret for now. Given that this minister has named the Alberta Teachers' Association as a primary partner in the curriculum rewrite and since the ATA has loudly and consistently been opposed to funding for anything but one monolithic school system, can the minister ensure that parental choice in education will be protected when he's partnering with a group so opposed to funding diversity in our education system?

The Speaker: Hon. members, may I remind you again about asking questions. The last couple of speakers have given preambles in the supplementals.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we are working with the widest diversity of groups to build new curriculum and to strengthen all forms of education. So for people to suggest that somehow we are limiting choice around education is simply misleading. We are working very hard with a wide range of people to strengthen the curriculum, as evidenced by the excellent math progress we made yesterday in terms of building curriculum.

2:20

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given this massive curriculum rewrite is going to be one of the most ambitious undertakings in Education history and since this government claims to support the rights of parents to make decisions with respect to the education of their children, will parents and parent organizations be participating in the expert working groups, or will the NDP activists be deciding the outcome of the curriculum rewrite?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, for this member to somehow suggest that our expert working groups or the many thousands of people who are contributing to building curriculum are somehow activists is not only demeaning to the professionalism of the work that they do but also to the general outcomes that we want to see for our children. I invite everyone. We had 32,000 people participate in the last survey, the largest, and we will have many more of those groups. We have public meetings. It's the most transparent exercise ever conducted in Education history in this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Nonprofit Social Service Providers

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the summer I met with various stakeholders in a wide range of different not-for-profit service sectors, and what I heard loud and clear is that there appear to be major issues with the new government granting and funding models. According to the stakeholders they are worried that the minister has implemented a system which will pit social service agencies against each other when it comes to funding, in a perpetual race to the bottom. Is the minister implementing a contract bidding process meant to undercut long-standing funding agreements for not-for-profit agencies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say that Albertans have been receiving services for many years from nonprofits, and as we move forward, they will continue to receive those services. That's not the case. We are not putting services up for bidding. Period.

Mrs. Pitt: That's not what we hear, Mr. Speaker.

Given that these not-for-profits in some cases have been operating for many decades and given that we are talking about the services that provide support to front-line staff and individuals with developmental disabilities and given that this new model allows for for-profit service providers to bid for funding from out of province and country, what is the minister doing to keep the community aspect in community-run social programs?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our priority is to make sure that Albertans with disabilities continue to receive the support they need. That's why we have provided stable funding and we have increased that funding. As I stated earlier, there will be no bidding for any front-line services. Whoever they were receiving services from, they will continue to receive those services, and they will have the choice to select the service provider they want to receive services from.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this new process forces individual community services agencies to apply through the Human Services online contracting system and given that these agencies, who are already stretched pretty thin, report that these applications are taking enormous resources to complete, how do you expect small local community agencies to be able to complete these onerous applications and compete with the larger for-profit companies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our priority is that Albertans with disabilities should have a choice and should be able to get the services from a wide range of service providers. These cases are complex. These service providers are unique, and we are supporting Albertans. Whoever they choose to get services from, we are providing the supports. That's why we have maintained stable funding. The information that you are spreading is simply misleading and incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Police Street Checks

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few weeks ago I urged the Justice minister to halt the unlawful practice of carding, or street checks, which sees police randomly stop citizens and ask for their ID. When police randomly card citizens without reasonable suspicion that they have committed an offence, they are breaching section 9 of the Charter, and it's really that simple. The minister has said that she's working with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police to establish guidelines, and I was certainly pleased to hear that. To the Justice minister: when do you expect to have guidelines in place, and what will be your advice to law enforcement in the interim?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. All Albertans deserve to feel safe and respected in their communities. That's why we'll continue to work with the police services to ensure that they can do their job while fulfilling their commitment to bias-free policing. I have found police services to be very open to having these discussions and ensuring that these techniques are only used in places where they're appropriate and they're not used in a biased way. In terms of section 9 of the Charter I don't think it's really appropriate to be pronouncing on individual cases here in this House.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that you also told the House that you want to ensure all people in Alberta feel respected and given that you also indicated that you want to ensure everyone can be onboard with guidelines that provide parameters for police when asking citizens for their ID and given that members of communities who feel carding is a form of racial profiling would like to be part of any form of consultation, again to the minister: how and when will you consult with these stakeholders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We've been working very hard. We've heard some concerns rolling in from community groups already, and we've been having those discussions with them, but we will continue to go out and have those discussions. We will be having a more formal consultation around specifically, you know, when these practices – you're talking about a range of behaviours – are appropriate and when they're not appropriate and what's appropriate to do and what isn't appropriate to do. We will continue to have those conversations.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that Ontario has developed strict regulations for carding that come into effect on January 1 and given that these regulations require officers to provide a reason for stopping citizens, to let the person know that they do not have to answer the questions or provide ID, and to provide citizens with a way to follow up after the fact, to the same minister.

Very simply, this is one of many choices. What do you think of Ontario's solution to this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, we think it's important to have a made-in-Alberta solution, and that's why we're working with community groups here in Alberta and we're working with the chiefs of police here in Alberta to ensure that we have a model that works for us here. Certainly, it's the case that we have some different policing concerns here in Alberta than they do in Ontario, so it's important that we have a made-in-Alberta solution to ensure that we are meeting the needs of our communities and our police here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Affordable Housing in Red Deer

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year the city of Red Deer proposed a locally developed delivery model to provide affordable housing and other support services for clients. I know that this delivery model was developed in consultation with local agencies and stakeholders such as Safe Harbour Society, Central Alberta Women's Emergency Shelter, and Youth & Volunteer Centre. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: how is the government supporting this initiative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-South for her strong commitment to affordable housing. This summer I had the pleasure of visiting Piper Creek Lodge with her, which was built in 1956 and was one of Alberta's very first lodges, and it's still operational. I support this initiative in principle because it has the potential to deliver better outcomes for people who need these supports. I understand that the groups involved have held an initial working session and are planning to do further work. I look forward to seeing the results that come from these sessions.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that clients and taxpayers expect best practices for housing and service delivery models, if this initiative is successful, is it an approach the government would support in other regions of the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although I don't want to speculate, I'm very interested in the developments in Red Deer and how they can benefit clients. I believe that these initiatives need to be driven at the local level. Local housing and support services providers are in the best position to decide what works in their individual communities like facilities in Sundre, Crowsnest Pass, and other places across the province. My ministry will continue to provide advice, support, or information as required to help with these initiatives.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the need for new affordable housing, the need to fix units that are in disrepair, and the need for elder abuse suites in my constituency, to the same minister: what specifically is the government doing to address these needs?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans deserve a safe and affordable place to call home. Just like many other municipalities in the province, Red Deer has a substantial number of families on wait-lists, and many buildings are showing their age. That's why our government is taking action and investing $1.2 billion over five years across the province. We'll continue to work with the local housing management bodies and examine their business plans to see what projects we can support.

We also are committed to addressing the issue of elder abuse. That's why we invested $1.2 million in grants to establish community response models, bringing in law enforcement and financial institutions, to eliminate elder abuse.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Carbon Levy and Agriculture Costs

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in 24 days the carbon tax starts. In my riding there are all kinds of agribusinesses that use electricity or natural gas for secondary processing. A well-known greenhouse in my riding is estimating that the carbon tax will cost them $1.5 million in '17 and $2 million in '18. Another agribusiness owner told me that his expenses for natural gas will increase $700,000 to $800,000 next year. To the minister: has your government considered what the economic impact of this tax will be on agrifood and agribusiness in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We have been listening to the agricultural sector right along. We had the opportunity to meet with producers and processors from one end of the province to the other. We've been hearing them. We heard them to the point where we have had the opportunity to have an exclusion on marked fuel.

We've also listened to the member who brought up greenhouses in particular. I want to have an energy efficiency program. The Alberta Greenhouse Growers Association wishes to extend thanks on behalf of the sector to the government of Alberta for expansion of existing on-farm energy programs. The greenhouse operators, like all other farmers and producers in this province, know what we're doing.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Schneider: Given that the carbon tax raises production costs in agribusiness and given that a lot of Alberta companies are price takers and can't pass on additional costs to the consumers, whether they're selling the products to struggling restaurants or having to compete at a farmers' market with sellers from somewhere else that don't have a carbon tax, to the minister. Agribusiness stakeholders are telling me something completely different than what we're being told in this House. Are you willing to table specific details on your outreach to these businesses and what these stakeholders are telling you? I know that they've talked to you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I know that farmers have been stewards of this land for generations. They continue to be so. I know that farmers also believe in the science of climate change. They're looking for opportunities to lower their greenhouse gas emissions, and there are economic benefits of doing so as well. I'm continuing to work with farmers and ranchers and processors and producers right across this province as we go to a carbon-neutral environment.

Mr. Schneider: Given that this government claims to be fostering a diversified economy and given that I'm hearing the news of greenhouses shutting down south of Calgary and given that one greenhouse owner pointed out to me that the NDP say that they want locally grown food but in reality are making it very hard to operate in Alberta, to the minister. My constituents are watching right now. Will you stand and tell us what this government is doing to ensure that companies in agrifood and agribusiness can operate successfully in Alberta and compete with their counterparts in other jurisdictions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I can highlight what we have been doing. I've already mentioned the exclusion of farms on the carbon levy. We have an expansion of $10 million in the efficiency grants for farms. Alberta Pork: "The efficiency programs in Alberta have been very valuable to pork producers." The Alberta Chicken Producers: "We appreciate this increased investment and shift in the government's cost-shared portion of these programs." The Irrigation Council: by extending the cap under irrigation programs, we are able to do more, make our operations more efficient.

Mr. Speaker, farmers right across this province recognize climate change and are willing to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Government Agencies, Boards, and Commissions

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, before the last election the Balancing Pool was working just fine, thank you very much, with all five members on board. I've been asking why this government did not make a better choice when they did not report that since then they've dropped to three and then, alarmingly, to just one member. We still have no answers to this critical question.

So let's try the WCB. Recently they had no less than six vacancies on their board. Is this government even committed to them? To the Minister of Labour: why have you not announced newly appointed members for these vacancies?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government remains committed to working with all our agencies, boards, and commissions to make sure that we're appointing appropriate individuals and working with them. We have just gone through a process of posting the positions on the new ABC board appointment website. We are working with the WCB to make sure that they get the appointments they need and doing so in a way that makes sure we involve all Albertans to get the best representatives possible.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: But you're still six members short.

Given that a recent Calgary Herald article is entitled There Is a Governance Crisis in Alberta, partially because the U of C, ACAD, MacEwan U, and the U of L, just to name a few, were still awaiting the appointment of board chairs and given that diversity on ABCs along with corporate knowledge and skill sets are something that we can all agree on and given that there's a huge amount of work to do to fill board vacancies and ensure that ABCs can function as efficiently as possible, to the Premier: what better choices are you instructing your ministers to make regarding the escalating problem of ever-increasing numbers of ABC vacancies in this province?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. We are happy to let the sunshine in and Albertans of any background, experience, and expertise put their names forward so that they can have an opportunity to serve this province. We're not going to repeat what happened for decades, where friends and insiders only had the track to have opportunities for leadership. Everyone is welcome. We are opening up the application process, and we're pleased to move forward in appointing a variety of Albertans to serve this province.

Mr. Rodney: Given that in this same article there are significant questions regarding government interference with the structure of the board of the Alberta Energy Regulator and given that there is also grave concern outlined that the government may interfere with the structure of the Alberta Securities Commission as well as AIMCo, again to the Premier: what so-called better choices will you be making to the board structure and makeup of ASC and AIMCo prior to 2019?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much for the question. You know, we are currently involved – last week I was at a supper for AIMCo, and two new board members, very talented and excellent people, came on to join that board. We have a process where some time out, and we're consistently finding people to put on those boards. We are working so that this is not just an insiders', old boys' club, like happened in the past over there. We're looking for talented Albertans and other people and bringing them on. We'll do that because that's the best for Alberta. You didn't do it. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.
The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Climate Change and Agriculture

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is leading with a plan to address climate change. Climate change adversely impacts our health, our environment, and our economy. Rural Alberta is particularly vulnerable on the front lines, including the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, where we have seen two forest fires in the last seven years. To the minister of agriculture: what are the numbers actually showing of what these impacts are?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, as stewards of the land our province's producers know first-hand the impacts of climate change. Over the last hundred years or so producers and their families have seen an average of a two-degree Celsius increase to surface air temperatures across the province. They've also seen that first frost has come much later. They've also seen changes to precipitation across the province, with increases in some regions, decreases in others. Of course, these changes affect agriculture production. We see increased occurrences of extreme weather, increased threats from pests due to milder winters, and changes to crops that tolerate these occurrences.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Littlewood: Given that producers will need to consider new or adapted crops to address these changes because of increased pest persistence and infestations due to milder winters, to the same minister: what is the government doing to prepare Alberta's agriculture industry for the realities of climate change?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, we will help producers adapt to climate change by continuing to invest in research and technology. The province has two crop diversification centres, one in the north, another in the south, to provide applied research, special crops, crop varieties and to diversify production. Similarly, on the livestock side we support investments in projects that support research, innovation, market development and that improve competitiveness. We've also invested in the Farm Stewardship Centre in Lethbridge to use applied research to improve whole farm sustainable practices.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers and ranchers are the stewards of the land and see first-hand the impacts of a changing climate and given that these producers want to invest in energy-efficient options for their operations, what is the actual uptake of this government's on-farm efficiency programs, that were rolled out for the agricultural community?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. We recently announced a $10 million expansion to energy efficiency and renewable energy programs for producers. I'm happy to report that these programs have been very well subscribed. We've approved projects that produced 350 kilowatts of solar energy, and there are applications for another 586 kilowatts received by the department. Applications for the on-farm energy programs are through the roof. Usually we get 15 applications a month; we got 250 applications in November alone. The numbers don't lie. There's a great appetite for programs that help producers become more efficient and reduce their greenhouse gas emissions. I look forward to our continued . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Student Assessment

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By this minister's own admission the 2015 PISA results are a valuable snapshot of how our students are performing relative to the rest of Canada and the world. He said that it provides some valuable information for both schools and the ministry and Albertans to see how we're performing in these subject areas. Yet the value of the provincial achievement tests, which also provide a snapshot of student learning, is being undermined by this government. Will the minister please explain why he will not end the failed student learning assessment experiment and reinstate the grade 3 PATs?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we are certainly working hard. We're very proud of our international results. In reading and in science Alberta was the very number two on the entire planet Earth. We certainly are working hard on PATs. I instituted the no-calculator portion for grade 6, and yesterday I instituted a no-calculator portion for grade 9 mathematics, so we are strengthening those exams as well in consultation . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, given that this minister has undertaken a, quote, collaborative system-level discussion regarding standardized testing and given that the ATA recently passed a resolution stating, “Until such time as the ministerial review of international benchmarking tests is completed, we urge our members to protest to the minister their forced participation in these international benchmarking activities,” can the minister assure Albertans that this review of the international assessments will include Albertans who are supportive of standardized testing and that he will not simply bow to ATA pressure?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this gives us a great opportunity to look at some of the programs that we’re doing to strengthen education generally and mathematics specifically in light of the use of some of the assessment tools we have available to us. Yes, we continue to use those assessment tools because, yes, they give us an opportunity to see where we’re at at any given time. I think that it’s important for us to always work together on curriculum and assessment, work with our teachers, with parents, and so forth. Look at the wonderful results we have accomplished together.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the president of the ATA is quoted as saying that cancelling PATs “would be good for students and for teachers” and that “it’s well past time to kill this zombie” and given that the ATA is a full partner in the curriculum rewrite and given that we are hearing from many Albertans that they want the PATs because of the information they receive about their own child’s learning, can the minister assure Albertans that he will not end provincial achievement tests?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I made it pretty clear that we are in fact working together, with different assessment models. We use PATs in grade 6 and grade 9. I recently just strengthened both of those exams in mathematics to include no-calculator sections. I’ve strengthened the program of studies to work on basic math skills as well. We are working with these tools along with teachers and so forth and will remind the hon. member that, of course, we make the decisions here in the Legislature. We are carrying on with these exams along with other programs that we use. He can read the newspaper all he wants to find . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the tale of Chicken Little, which I referred to in my member statement earlier today. It’s a story I’ve used to teach my children that words have power and consequences. I encourage the members of the opposition to read it.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Mr. Speaker, I’m tabling the requisite copies of the interim report of the Senate Committee on Transport and Communications titled Pipelines for Oil: Protecting Our Economy, Respecting Our Environment. I had the opportunity to appear and testify before this committee of senators who ordered this report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As promised, I’m tabling five copies of the Calgary Herald article dated November 8, 2016: There Is a Governance Crisis in Alberta. You’re going to want to read this one.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a newspaper article from the Financial Post dated Wednesday, December 7, that I anticipate referring to in my point of order. The title is Beware of Fake News Reporting That Liberals Are Better than Tories on Pipelines.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe there were two points of order today. In fact, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre’s was one of the first ones.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to the point of order that my younger, smaller brother rose on during question period today – the reference for your sake and for those in the House will be Standing Order 23, imputes false motives to another member – when the Premier made a statement that was untrue. The Premier said of the Leader of the Official Opposition that during his time in Ottawa representing the good people of northern Alberta very admirably, there were zero pipelines approved. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, there were three or four major pipelines approved, including twice as much capacity as was recently announced this week.

Now, make no mistake, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased with the 600,000 barrels of oil that are now going to be able to be transmitted through pipelines or the expansion of pipelines that the government recently announced. I am very pleased by that. But to say that the Leader of the Official Opposition was in Ottawa during a time when zero pipelines were approved is absolutely not true and is an allegation that is likely to create disorder in this House, as it did today. I simply ask the member to withdraw the comments and apologize, and we can move on with what can be a very productive day.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is very obviously a matter of debate and, therefore, not a point of order. The challenges facing our energy sector getting market access – I myself am contemplating a pipeline from my house to my garage. We’re not going to take credit for a third pipeline getting built. There are pipelines being built all the time. The matter here is that the only way . . . [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

. . . the only way to do that is to get Canadian pipelines to Canadian tidewater. In that respect, the opposition parties failed over the past decade despite being in government both here in Alberta and in Ottawa. In doing so, they failed workers by denying them jobs, they failed families by denying them larger royalty revenue, and they failed every Albertan with lost economic opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other members?

Hon. members, I'm not sure that this is anything more than a disagreement about the facts in terms of the types of pipelines that are being discussed. In this particular situation I would rule that there is no point of order.

However, let me remind you yet again that we should be cautious about the remarks that are passed across this very famous aisle in the middle.

The second point of order, I believe, was raised by the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Point of Order

Oral Questions

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, first, while I'm on my feet, to your earlier ruling about my question yesterday, I will just accept your ruling, apologize to you and to the House for my error in my line of questioning, and I will be more careful in the future.

But I will keep at this. My point of order is under Beauchesne's section 408(1)(a) and (b), when speaking about questions.

Such questions should:

- (a) be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer.
- (b) not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, again, asked a question specifically about the petrochemical diversification program. Remarkably, Mr. Speaker, on December 5, which is scarcely two days ago, there was a government news release entitled Petrochemical Plants Will Diversify Economy, Create Jobs.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker – and I mean this in the truest sense – we don't have the Blues, because I was hoping to be able to quote directly from the answer provided by the minister. I recall words to the effect of:

projects that would . . . process propane extracted from natural gas resources into value-added plastics products that people all over the world use every day. The projects have been approved [and] receive royalty credits under Alberta's Petrochemicals Diversification Program, which was announced and began receiving applications in February 2016.

That's a direct quote from the government news release, Mr. Speaker, and words almost exactly to that effect were spoken by the minister for economic development. The news release also says:

The first project is a joint venture between Pembina Pipeline Corporation and Petrochemical Industries Company (PIC), which has been approved to receive . . . royalty credits.

Et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, again, those are words that were spoken almost exactly verbatim by the minister of economic development in this House. That information is readily available in a government news release, as is information about the amount of product processed by the facility, as is information about data, about investments that would be made over the course of the life of the project.

I just want to quote a ruling made by Speaker Zwozdesky, which I hope will illuminate some of this. I also just want to say, Mr. Speaker, that my purpose for bringing this point of order up now for a second time this week is not simply to slow down the proceedings of the House, not simply to get my words on Hansard. I believe there's a very important principle here that has been established through history in Legislative Assemblies. There are tools available to private members of this House, tools available on the opposition side, and there are greater tools available to government private members to seek answers from their own ministers, from the front bench, in response to constituent questions.

The opposition side, Mr. Speaker, has rare and limited opportunity to hold the government to account. The purpose of question period as laid out through the decades in Beauchesne's, in parliamentary practice, and in our own standing orders is for the opposition to be allowed to use that time. When the government side uses that time frivolously, which I believe has been done here a couple of times this week, it reduces the ability of the opposition and all private members, frankly, to hold the government to account.

In other jurisdictions, Saskatchewan most notably, there are no government backbench questions allowed during question period. None. Now, question period is shorter. That may be something we want to consider in this Assembly. It's an issue for another day and another committee.

The principle that I'm arguing here, Mr. Speaker, I think, is a very important one. I do now want to quote Speaker Zwozdesky as the then Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock asked a question. In response, before the minister answered her question, Speaker Zwozdesky on December 6, 2012, Alberta Hansard page 1344, said:

Hon. members, as you all know, the purpose of question period is to seek information and to hold the government to account, so let's see how you do with your supplemental.

The government answered, and in response, then, to her supplemental, before the government minister answered the question and following the first supplemental, Speaker Zwozdesky said:

Hon. member, really? Frankly, I've never heard that sort of question before, but given that it's been asked by a new member, I will allow it this one time.

Now, historically, December 2012 was the fall sitting immediately following a provincial election, and members were brand new, so the Speaker allowed that very government-friendly question, let's say, one time. A point of order was raised, and in Alberta Hansard, page 1352, also on December 6, 2012, Speaker Zwozdesky said:

In this particular case I could have and should have at the time reminded Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock that questions in question period not only ought to seek information and hold the government to account, but they must also not be hypothetical, and they must not seek opinion. On that point, I would uphold where you were coming from, hon. member.

That was in response to the member who raised the point of order.

With that, I will return to my seat, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to your ruling on this matter. Thank you.

The Speaker: You used the word "principle," that the practice, in your interpretation, has been that the private members on the government side have a better advantage than opposition members. Is that the point you were trying to make?

Mr. Clark: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, there are . . .

The Speaker: I don't need any other. I just wanted to make sure that was the point.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it very disappointing to see this member yet again belittling the very real issues and concerns raised during question period by any member of this Assembly.

On page 501 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, it states as follows:

There exists a vast body of traditional guidelines, many of which are no longer valid or have fallen into disuse. Because of the difficulty in distinguishing between valid and outdated precedents, Speaker Bosley addressed this question in 1986, stating that the appropriate rules for Question Period should recognize the following principles . . .

- While there may be other purposes and ambitions involved in Question Period, its primary purpose must be the seeking of information from the government and calling the government to account for its actions.

Mr. Speaker, what we had today in question period was the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater asking the Minister of Economic Development and Trade about a project that has a direct impact to his constituency. The member sought information, including information about when projects are expected to begin, just as the citation that I read says can be done during Oral Question Period.

Just two days ago, on December 5, 2016, on page 2281 of Hansard, the member raised a very similar point of order. You yourself ruled that they did not have a valid point of order. In an excerpt from that Hansard, Mr. Speaker, you say, "I know that the government backbenchers will reframe their questions so they have much more substance to them." We have done just that.

Not only is this similarly not a point of order, but I think the member opposite should refrain from raising repeated points of order that have previously been ruled on, and the member opposite raising this should be more considerate of the rights and privileges of all members of this Assembly. Those rights and privileges extend to our members on the backbench here, Mr. Speaker, and I do find it offensive that he would suggest that our members for some reason cannot ask questions. I am proud of all our members on this side of the House, and I encourage them to continue asking their questions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'd like to defer a decision on this one till tomorrow. I'd like to read some of the points being made.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 35

Fair Elections Financing Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. As we're just moving into Committee of the Whole, I just wanted to start off with some introductory comments about the bill, and then I'm looking forward to discussing the details with my colleagues and looking at any amendments that might be suggested. If passed, this bill will ensure that political parties are focused on earning the support of all Albertans, not just a select wealthy few. It will also bring Alberta's election financing laws in line with the rest of Canada. The bill is aimed at making changes to three major areas: specifically, contribution limits, spending limits, and third-party advertising.

To speak briefly about each of those, the amendments around contribution limits are going to ensure that no individual can donate more than $4,000 per calendar year. The contribution limit involves money going to any combination of political entities, be they candidates, constituency associations, political parties, leadership candidates, or nomination candidates. Let me clarify that this contribution limit would not be retroactive or apply to any ongoing leadership contests. With this exception, in the bill, if passed, the contribution limits would be effective as of November 28, the day the bill was introduced. This contribution limit will help prevent contributors from attempting to buy influence at the last minute by not having that introduction date or that change date be January 1.

This limit is very reasonable and is in line with other jurisdictions in Canada to ensure that no single individual has significant influence over a political party, candidate, or contestant. The aggregate limit that we are suggesting is a made-in-Alberta solution as a way of ensuring that affluent donors and special-interest groups do not have a back door through which to gain influence.

The bill is also going to change the definition of contributions. For a self-employed person who normally charges fees for their services, if they offer those services to a candidate or campaign, that would be considered a contribution. The normal value of the services they would provide would count toward their contribution limit. Nonmonetary contribution services such as this will be included in the definition of contributions to political entities. Volunteer services are not included in the definition of services, provided that the person providing the volunteer labour is not compensated by their employer or is not being given paid time off to volunteer. Audit and professional services provided free of charge relating to compliance with the act would not be considered a contribution.

All other Canadian jurisdictions include nonvolunteer services in their contribution limits, and this was something that we discussed at length when we were discussing Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. That change has been brought forward here to bring Alberta in line. It also precludes unions, corporations, and other third parties from giving employees paid time off to volunteer for a political campaign.

Bill 35 will ensure that corporations, trade unions, and employee organizations are no longer able to guarantee loans, again something else that came up during our Bill 1 debate. Only individuals ordinarily resident in Alberta would be able to guarantee loans to a political entity or make a payment on a loan or guarantee to a political entity, and that amount would count towards their contribution limits. In this way, loans and contributions go hand in hand, neither being used to gain undue influence.

The second major part of this bill is around spending limits, establishing campaign spending limits of $2 million for political parties during the writ period and including spending prior to that writ period for items used during the writ period. For by-elections party spending limits would be roughly $23,000, which is $2 million divided by 87, approximately. In an electoral division there would be a spending limit of $50,000 for each candidate. Expenses incurred by the party or constituency association on behalf of the candidate will count as election expenses. Nomination contestants would be subject to a spending limit of $10,000, 20 per cent of the spending limit for each electoral division.

They would also be required to register with and report to the Chief Electoral Officer when they announce their intention to seek the nomination, begin incurring costs, or accept contributions, whichever occurs first. These registration and reporting requirements would also apply to leadership contestants.

Spending limits will promote fairness and ensure parties can have a healthy exchange of ideas with voters during election campaigns. I would note that with the exception of the Yukon all other jurisdictions in Canada have spending limits, and they have been found to level the political playing field. Our aim is to effectively ensure that the strength of the parties' ideas are the deciding factor in an election rather than the depth of pockets.

Election expenses will be defined as expenses reasonably incurred by or on behalf of a candidate or a party during the campaign for the purpose of promoting or opposing a party or candidate, so election signs, office space, staff. We do recognize that not all constituencies and campaigns are the same and that urban candidates face different challenges than rural candidates, so spending limits would not apply to candidates' or contestants' travel costs reasonably related to the election contest: transportation, meals, accommodation, care for candidates' or contestants' children or other dependants, expenses related to the disability of the candidate or nomination contestant, audits or other fees necessary for compliance with the act, and incidental expenses like parking and gas incurred by volunteers. Most of these expenses would still need to be included in financial statements and reports to the Chief Electoral Officer. These exceptions are going to help level the playing field for candidates, particularly those in larger ridings or those with children, dependants, or disabilities.

Finally, third-party advertising is the third major focus of our bill. From the dropping of the writ to the close of the polls third-party advertisers would be subject to a spending limit of $150,000. Of this, no more than $3,000 could be used to support or oppose candidates in a particular electoral division. This is the same model adopted by both B.C. and used at the federal level. We think that these limits strike a balance between ensuring third parties can express themselves and ensuring smaller voices are not drowned out.

Third parties who are currently eligible to advertise during elections will still be able to share their views but could not make advertising buys that overwhelm the public discourse. When it comes to third-party advertising, focusing on the money they spend is a much more hands-on approach than focusing on the money they receive. No other jurisdiction in Canada uses contribution limits for third-party advertising, and the existing contribution limits that Alberta has operated under will be repealed.

As is currently the case, third parties will be required to register with Elections Alberta when they incur $1,000 in election advertising expenses, receive $1,000, or plan to do either. Third parties will be subject to these same registration requirements between elections. Between elections they will also be required to identify themselves in their advertisements, which is already the case during elections. These amendments would require third parties to disclose contributions over $250 weekly during an election, and those disclosures will be in turn reported to Albertans through Elections Alberta. Between elections third parties would be required to report quarterly, and those contributions would also be made public.

These amendments are intended to avoid hindering any robust political discussion in Alberta while also providing important transparency. Bill 35 continues the improvements that were started with Bill 1, An Act to Renew Democracy in Alberta. It also takes into account the recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer. We believe that the proposed changes would give Albertans back confidence in their electoral process, and we're committed to ensuring that parties are earning the support of Albertans and not catering to big money and special interests.

I'm pleased to stand in support of this bill, and I look forward to hearing the contributions of my colleagues in this House. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, this has been a very interesting process from the very beginning because there's a lot of what the minister has just spoken about that I agree with. I'm absolutely in favour of getting big money out of politics, I'm in favour of getting undue influence from those of financial means out of the political process, and I think there are a lot of things in this bill that I can agree with and that I like. But there are many things in this bill. It's really unfortunate because we went through a committee process – we talked about this at length last night at second reading – that started off with such promise and, unfortunately, devolved into some challenging times. Now, I would not in any way term that committee a failure. The work that we did, especially on the whistle-blower protection act, was very good work, really thoughtful work, a lot of hard work by all sides, by all parties who were members of that committee.

When it came time to talk about money, as I suppose it so often does, things broke down. There are things that are done in this bill that go far beyond satisfying a public interest. They go far beyond solving a problem that Alberta has. Those of us in this House pay close attention to politics. We surround ourselves with dedicated Albertans who care passionately about our province, and those people put in tremendous amounts of work.

Rarely, if ever, have I heard that one of the big problems we have in this province is constituency associations not reporting frequently enough, not having enough work to do, and Elections Alberta saying: gosh, we need more rigour, more controls over those rogue constituency associations. In fact, one of the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer to the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee was to eliminate quarterly reporting entirely, not just for constituency associations but for parties as well. Now, the committee, in its wisdom, decided unanimously, with votes of all members of the committee, including the NDP, that in fact it's probably worth keeping the quarterly reporting for parties so Albertans can keep an eye on what each party is earning on a quarterly basis but to eliminate quarterly reporting for constituency associations.

The rationale at the time was the amount of work that volunteers are expected to do to keep their constituency associations up and running. I will note, again, now for the record that there is only one party in this House that does not have active constituency associations that file financial reports and that collect donations directly from Albertans.

An Hon. Member: Which one is that?

Mr. Clark: That is the NDP.

So there are two interpretations of why the changes have been made in this bill. One is a generous interpretation. I'm a generous person. My generous interpretation would be that the crafters of this bill sat down and said: "Well, this is the way things work. This is the way we do things, so this shouldn't be a problem, should it?"

Now, a cynical person might say that there was a committee that addressed this at length and that the committee said: "You know, folks, there are other parties that do things differently. In fact, every other party does things differently. So would you mind if we just eliminated quarterly reporting for constituency associations in its entirety?" And the committee said: "You know, that makes sense. Let's do that." Yet here we are with a bill that not only retains quarterly reporting; it quadruples the amount of work that volunteer financial officers are required to undertake, at the very least quadruples, perhaps even more.

With that, Madam Chair, I will move an amendment to Bill 35, and I will hand this to a page and await your receipt of the amendment before I continue.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. The amendment will be referred to as A1, the first amendment to be received. I'm just waiting for the original copy.

Please go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended as follows:

- A. Section 5(c) is amended in the proposed section 4(1)(e) by striking out "and a registered constituency association".
- B. Section 28(c) is amended in the proposed section 32
  - (a) in subsection (3) by striking out "and registered constituency association";
  - (b) in subsection (3.1) by striking out "3(a)(ii) and (b)(ii)" and substituting "3(a)(ii), 3(b)(ii) and (3.2)(b)";
  - (c) by adding the following after subsection (3.1):

(3.2) Every registered constituency association shall file with the Chief Electoral Officer, in the form and manner approved by the Chief Electoral Officer, within the period during which an annual financial statement must be filed under section 42, a return setting out for the previous year

    - (a) the total amount of all contributions received that did not exceed $50 in the aggregate from any single contributor, and
    - (b) the total amount contributed that, together with the contributor's name and address, when the contribution of that contributor during the year exceeded an aggregate of $50.

All of that legalese, Madam Chair, means that constituency associations, if this amendment is accepted – and I would certainly encourage and hope that all members of the House would accept this amendment – would no longer be required under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to remit quarterly filings. Now, I touched on it in my earlier remarks, but the reason that is important is that for those of us that have parties that have active constituency associations, this legislation is going to require each chief financial officer for each constituency association to remit quarterly not simply the top-line revenue and bottom-line expenses, as is currently the practice, through an online system. They're going to be required to catalogue actively every single donation that exceeds $50, to take the name and address of each donor, to remit that to Elections Alberta to ensure that Elections Alberta can disclose any contributions that exceed $250 to that constituency association in the year and then also, of course, co-ordinate with their party to ensure that the amount that that donor has donated does not exceed $4,000 in the aggregate between the constituency association and the party and, presumably, co-ordinate with other constituency associations to ensure that those donations do not exceed the limit.

Now, the challenge with that, Madam Chair, is that those parties that – shall we call them emerging parties? – do not have the resources, certainly the financial resources to hire someone to . . .

Mr. Bilous: Did you say merging or emerging?

Mr. Clark: Emerging with an "e" at the beginning, yes. Not merging with an "m" yet, at this point. That's for somebody else in the House to deal with, other parties.

But those of us in emerging parties are especially at a disadvantage. A generous interpretation of that, as I tend to be a generous person, would be that that is simply an oversight or a misunderstanding by the crafters of the legislation, that it didn't occur to them. So this amendment offers us an opportunity to fix that oversight or that perhaps misunderstanding. We had that discussion in committee, and it was great.

A perhaps less generous interpretation is that the government doesn't want to see a party rise up in the middle. They want to see polarization. They want to see a party that purportedly cares about people and the environment be a choice on one side and a party that cares about only money to be a choice on the other and that Albertans will have to make a choice between two bad options. They have to give up something.

I, Madam Chair, believe in both. The Alberta Party believes in both. We believe in strong fiscal discipline and managing money, and we believe in taking care of people and looking out for the environment. That's what we believe in. That's the centrist position. That's what we believe in, but we're in a position where we are an emerging party, and we do not yet have the financial resources or the human resources to easily comply with the rules. We absolutely will should this become legislation, but I can tell you that it will have a significant impact on our volunteers. It is a roadblock that the government is trying to put up to stop the growth of parties that may take some or all of the centrist supporters who held their nose and voted NDP last time or just thought: well, you know, we'll send a message by voting NDP. They're going to try really hard to do everything they can to retain their position, and that's my problem with this particular aspect of the bill and other aspects of this bill.

The government has taken, the NDP have taken what is otherwise a good idea – getting big money out of politics, reducing donation limits, putting campaign spending caps in place: those are good ideas, and they should have stopped there. Those are good ideas. Albertans are onside with that. I think that had they done that, they would have found unanimous support in this House for those ideas. But no. They had to take this good idea and they had to take it too far. They had to lock in their advantage, put their thumb on the scale, tilt the playing field to the NDP while they have the chance.

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Mr. Clark: That is shameful, Madam Chair. That is shameful.

There is an opportunity, however, for the hon. minister and the government side to prove me wrong about all of those things, and I sincerely hope I am wrong about those things, and if they accept this amendment and perhaps some others coming from the opposition side this afternoon, then we will find that I am wrong. I will be the very first person to stand up and say: "The government was right. They have done the right thing. I give them credit." I will praise them up and down. I'll put it on Twitter, social media. I'll do whatever I need to do. I'll write the minister a nice note. I will do all of those things. I will put it in Hansard. All those things will happen. I won't cross the floor. That would be a step too far, Madam Chair. That would be a step too far.

You know, in all sincerity, this amendment genuinely improves the bill. It makes a substantial difference to all parties in this Assembly and outside of this Assembly who have constituency associations that actively collect donations from Albertans to fund their operations and actively receive those donations as an expression of Albertans' interest in true grassroots democracy because that is what a constituency association is.

With that, Madam Chair, I would really encourage all members of this House to support this amendment. I do hope the government accepts it. I'd be very interested to hear what they have to say.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? I will recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. Speaking to the amendment, I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for raising this issue. You know, my connection with this particular question of quarterly versus annual filing actually started back in the last Legislature, when we passed the current Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, and there was a disagreement about quarterly versus annual filing. At that point we did land on quarterly filing. However, it was raised at that point, and some of my colleagues who were in the previous Legislature may remember that it was argued at that point that quarterly filing for the volunteers that are CFOs within the constituency associations may be overly onerous and that it may create a burden whereby these volunteers would be hard to recruit. It's hard to find people to do this particular job because of all the jobs within a constituency association it's the CFO's job that has the most legislation to keep track of and the most requirements as far as quarterly and annual reporting.

Some years later, in the spring of 2015, when I served on the Legislative Offices Committee, the Chief Electoral Officer came to the committee with a request for an increase in his budget. One of the questions I asked was, you know: are there functions that are currently being provided within the purview of the chief electoral office that you view as being excessive, you view as being beyond the requirement for providing the necessary transparency and accountability that our democratic system expects? The Chief Electoral Officer was very clear. He said that the quarterly reporting by constituency associations was, in his view, excessive. It tied up a lot of time and effort and resources in the Elections Alberta office and, in his view, did not add value to the process. He indicated at that time that if that could be reduced from quarterly to annual filing, it would indeed reduce the workload within Elections Alberta. That was something that I filed away.

So when we came to the committee, in fact, we had a rather large number of recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer and from others who had recommendations on the EFCDA. One from the Chief Electoral Officer, or the CEO, was to move from quarterly to annual filing for constituency associations. On August 10, 2016, our committee, on a hot summer day, which I recall very specifically because I was calling in that day, not attending in person, because I was attending the annual Innisfree fair – if you haven't been there, you're certainly missing something. But I called in that day just before the parade was about to kick off and I was to climb aboard the chuckwagon that was going to take me around the streets of Innisfree not once but twice – that's the way we do things.

An Hon. Member: A double parade.

Dr. Starke: It's a double parade, indeed. You have to buy twice the candy.

On that day, at around 10:20 in the morning, this suggestion was moved. It was moved, and the discussion started about changing from quarterly to annual filing. I remember that day very specifically because although I only phoned in, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who's certainly a passionate spokesman on behalf of democracy and transparency, indicated at about 10:20 a.m. that he was opposed to that suggestion because it was moving in the opposite direction of the transparency that was to be provided by the recommendations for the committee, and therefore he was opposed to moving from quarterly to annual filing. I respect that opinion. There was some more debate.

A little bit later the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw chimed in at about 10:25 or 10:30 – actually, it was closer to 10:30 – and said a similar sort of an argument.

Now, a little bit later the Chief Electoral Officer was asked: what additional benefit is there to quarterly versus annual reporting? This is interesting, and I think this is something that we have to take into account. It is in fact the Chief Electoral Officer whose office has to deal with these reports and who listens to or hears from the various constituency associations across our province. Our Chief Electoral Officer said on that date:

We have heard quite loudly from constituencies that it is taxing on them. The reporting period isn't a month; it's only 15 days, meaning that after the end of the quarter the CFO has 15 days to file the report.

It's actually a reduced timeline than that.

But part of the issue that they encounter is that it does add a disclosure component, not complete disclosure in a sense, because the information as far as the contributions isn't aggregated throughout the four periods, the four quarters.

He goes on to give the details behind that, but at the bottom of his statement he says:

Part of the reason why we're recommending the recommendation that we have [is] if you choose otherwise, we have recommendations in which I think the quarterly reporting would have to be enhanced . . . to make it functional for the CFOs and for our office.

He doesn't agree with that. He says:

There's confusion for the public, who are looking at the quarterly reporting and say: "Well, you're reporting this [but] the numbers are different at year-end. How can this be?"

At the conclusion of his remarks the Chief Electoral Officer says:

All the work that we perform throughout the year on these quarterly reports is pretty much thrown out other than posting on the website for disclosure. That's the only [key] function it provides. It does not assist us whatsoever in the financial review of contributors.

3:30

The Chief Electoral Officer is telling our committee that there is really no added value to all of this additional work that the chief financial officers of all of these constituency associations, who are volunteers, are performing, and that's, you know, a pretty compelling argument.

You know, we had some additional discussion. There was some additional debate, and right around just before 10:40 – and I remember this as clearly as a bell because the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, with whom I've had many spirited discussions on other committees, said, and I would like to quote because I think this is telling:

I'd like to say: never let it be said that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is a hard-headed individual. Never. You've all made some compelling points. I mean, I think that my comments earlier in terms of responsibility I would echo here, but I can understand how this would be a burden on volunteers. Therefore, I retract my previous comments, and I will support this motion.

In the space of 20 minutes through some good, strong debate at committee the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, also the Member for Calgary-Shaw, and all the other members who at one point were against this motion changed their minds. The vote was held, and it was passed unanimously. That's how committees are supposed to work. It was a great day. Perhaps a surprising day but still a great day. So you can imagine my surprise when we were briefed on this bill a week and a half or so ago and we're told: no; quarterly reporting is back.

Mr. Rodney: What?

Dr. Starke: You heard it right.

Quarterly reporting is back, against the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer, against the recommendation of the committee, against what makes sense for our volunteer CFOs in all these constituency associations. For some unknown reason, for some unknown rationale, quarterly reporting is back. Well, Madam Chair, I don't see why that change was made. I don't see why the recommendation and the discussion that was so compelling that within a matter of 20 minutes it changed the minds of a number of members who were originally against the recommendation, why that is not part of the current legislation.

To my way of thinking, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, who has proposed this amendment, a reasonable amendment, an amendment that is in keeping with the recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer, who I would suggest knows best about some of the pitfalls of elections financing – I think this is a very reasonable amendment. I think it is the kind of amendment that we should be proceeding with, and I certainly hope that it finds support on all sides of the House.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

The Deputy Chair: Oh, I missed the House.

Mr. Nixon: That's okay. I'm just giving you a hard time.

Thank you very much for recognizing me today. I'm excited that I get to work on Bill 35 in Committee of the Whole. I know, Madam Chair, you were able to be in the Chamber yesterday as we discussed this important bill during second reading, and I'm sure that you were fascinated and sometimes even shocked by the things that you heard in regard to this legislation.

Specifically to the amendment that's been brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, the independent Member for Calgary-Elbow, my friend, I have to first say very clearly for the record that I completely agree with this amendment and will be supporting it and highly encourage all of my colleagues to seriously look at this amendment and consider voting for this amendment. I think that it will make this legislation better.

Now, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster did a great job of articulating some of the debate that happened in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee over the summer, which I sat on with him, particularly around this issue associated with this amendment in regard to the quarterly reports.

We need to step back briefly, though, Madam Chair, to recognize and to re-address the fact that for much of the committee, the committee was derailed on two issues. The big issue we discussed last night in great detail – we may discuss it more later – was in regard to the government members trying to get their campaign expenses paid for by the taxpayers of Alberta.

The second issue was around what was perceived, certainly by the opposition parties, as an attempt to tilt the playing field in the direction of the incumbent government to benefit the NDP, who, as we have discussed in great detail already as we debated this bill, do not use constituency associations the same way that every other political party in this Assembly does. They do not use constituency associations to manage finances. They were very, very clear about that yesterday. If you look online, you'll see that the reports that are filed by the NDP make it clear that they do not use constituency associations for their finances. This was discussed in great detail in committee because of the concern that manipulating or moving the rules in a way that would advantage the party not using constituency associations and to hurt or to restrict the ability of constituency associations working for other parties to be able to do their job would automatically advantage the governing party, who do not use constituency associations.

Now, we talked about this quarterly reporting at length with the Chief Electoral Officer. The Chief Electoral Officer made it clear that this was not needed, was probably overkill when it came to constituency associations and created an unnecessary expense to taxpayers to be able to manage that situation.

The second thing that was talked about in committee in great detail in regard to this was the burden, the unnecessary burden, that it puts on the volunteers in our political system. As you know, Madam Chair, in our political system the core of what makes it work is not the elected MLAs. Quite frankly, it is not our staff, though they are very important, but it is the volunteers that go door-knocking and put up signs. It is the candidates that aren't successful and able to come to this place but are able to put their name forward on the ballot that make our democracy work. Any excess burden that we put on those people for unnecessary reasons just restricts their ability to do their job, makes people not want to participate in the process. It frustrates them.

When you look at that and then take into context the comments that were made by the Chief Electoral Officer that this was probably not needed or was overkill and is costing taxpayers money unnecessarily, then the question would be: why would we want to make constituency associations have a whole bunch more burden that is making it harder for them to do their role when there is no benefit that has been brought forward by any member during the committee to show why they would need to do that? I suspect there will be no benefit brought forward, though I do look forward to hearing from the minister in Committee of the Whole.

The only reason, Madam Chair, I could see – I think it just reinforces what we said in committee, that this is nothing but an attempt to punish the constituency associations or punish the parties that use constituency associations in an attempt to manipulate the rules or to tilt the playing field to the advantage of the governing party. Now, I do hope to hear from the minister that I'm wrong on that. But it just proves – again, by not listening to the advice of the Chief Electoral Officer and not taking into account the advice of every other party that participated in the committee and to disregard the votes of their own members in the committee, who agreed after lengthy discussion that this was the best way to handle situations for volunteer CAs.

Now, the worst part about this, though, Madam Chair, is that this does not impact larger parties nearly as much as it will impact small parties. As the Member for Calgary-Elbow pointed out in his speech, this will cause trouble for our constituency associations and I suspect for the third party's constituency associations. It's disappointing to see the government, you know, interfering and attempting to cause trouble for independent political parties, but it won't stop our parties. We're big enough. We have enough donations and resources that we could hire staff to help our constituency associations. I promise you that we will be there despite maybe some hopes in 2019, and we will replace this government in 2019 even if they want to try to tilt the system in their favour.

But there are other parties that are smaller and trying to grow within our political system, and the party that I sit in today, that I am with today, used to be there. The independent Member for Calgary-Elbow is the leader of one of those parties. They do not have nearly the amount of resources that some of our other parties have in the system to be able to help those volunteers. Is our goal not to try to make the democratic process as accessible as possible for everybody, to make sure that everybody's views could be heard in the process?

With this amendment we can take a step towards making it easier for everybody to be able to participate in the process, to make it easier for smaller parties, to make it easier for constituency associations. By not supporting this amendment, I would suggest to you, Madam Chair, that this just proves again the opposition's point that during the Ethics and Accountability Committee and so far during the debate on this legislation the NDP are just appearing to be trying to stack the deck in advantage of their political party.

They get frustrated. They really got frustrated in committee, Madam Chair. I know that you know when we would point that out. We were also at the same time dealing with debates to try to get taxpayers to pay for their political expenses, so there wasn't a lot of trust between the two parties or between the opposition and the government. But I'm hoping that as we work through Committee of the Whole, we'll be able to have an opportunity to restore trust in the government's intentions with our democracy, and to support this obvious motion would be a great first step. It's in line with what the Chief Electoral Officer has suggested. It's in line with what every member, including the NDP members, voted for during committee. It would help protect smaller parties within our system. It would help encourage people to participate in the political process at all levels, all the while saving the taxpayer money and making life easier for the Chief Electoral Officer.

Now, I recognize that we do need accountability in our system, Madam Chair. As you know, I have spoken about it at length already on this bill. But if the government can't show one example of how passing this amendment would make it not accountable, if they can't show that once, then clearly they should support this amendment and make it easier for the political process.

With that, I am going to yield the floor, Madam Chair, in eagerness to hear what the minister feels about this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Just before we move on to the next speaker, I would just like to remind all members of this House that when we are speaking to the debate in Committee of the Whole, we are speaking to the content of the bill. I do recognize that we were in a committee that dealt with many of these issues, but if we could make sure that we're actually speaking to the issues within the bill and not bringing in other things, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be brief. I think the arguments have been well expressed, and I have already congratulated the government on getting rid of large donations from corporations and unions. They have made decisions around levelling the playing field on many levels.

This is an example of a really common-sense amendment that I think, as the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has said, would be a win-win-win: a win for government, a win for opposition parties, and a win for the public purse. I, too, would support this amendment and look forward to the minister's comments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now call on the hon. Minister of Labour and responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you very much to the members who have spoken, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for putting forward this amendment. I certainly appreciate the arguments put forth in the discussion, but I would suggest that we do not have a situation where either the government accepts this amendment or the government hates democracy.

In fact, we have in this amendment a bit of a slight misunderstanding. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was absolutely correct in recounting some of the conversations that happened with the Chief Electoral Officer. The Chief Electoral Officer did come to the committee and did present on the current state of quarterly financial reporting and did talk about the fact that it was causing a lot of work for different areas but also that it wasn't providing the value that he needed in his office. As the Member from Vermilion-Lloydminster said, he asked for it to either be removed or be enhanced. What we've done with this bill is that we've actually enhanced the quarterly reporting, as per the request from the Chief Electoral Officer, to make it more valuable, for two reasons. When it was originally discussed at committee, at that point the committee had not come to a decision on any changes to contribution limits.

The Chief Electoral Officer was speaking within the context of $15,000 per year donations, but that has changed. We are now looking at $4,000 as a contribution limit, and we've heard concerns from the members of the opposition about the difficulty in tracking that between constituency associations, parties, and whatnot, meaning that it's going to be more important going forward that we have the reporting through the Chief Electoral Officer and Elections Alberta to know when people are reaching closer to that $4,000 cap.

It may be that someone is donating to more than one party. It is not the case that the parties all need to talk to each other and find out who's donated to whom or even for constituency associations to talk to each other because the reporting through a quarterly mechanism is going to be available at Elections Alberta. Hopefully, we can catch anyone who's getting close to that $4,000 limit ahead of them crossing over, or if someone does donate more than $4,000, we're not having to deal with anyone who's overdonated all at once at the end of the year in a huge amount of work.

Constituency associations are going to need to catalogue donations – who donated them and when they made that donation – anyway. Whether it's reporting quarterly or reporting yearly, that information needs to be logged and submitted. By doing it on a quarterly basis, we will be more able to catch inaccuracies earlier in the process, and we will be able to monitor whether or not someone is getting close to that $4,000 limit.

I would just like to repeat that the Chief Electoral Officer asked us to remove it or enhance it, and we've enhanced it. Under section 28(e)(4.1) on page 32 of our current printed Bill 35 is the new section that the Chief Electoral Officer requested be added to give quarterly reporting the value that we need.

I will not be supporting this amendment. I completely respect the members involved and the discussion that was had at committee, but the situation has changed. The contribution limits have been lowered. The quarterly reporting does have value, and it has been enhanced as per a request by the Chief Electoral Officer. I certainly appreciate the discussion on this item, but I will not be supporting the amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Nixon: I'll be very quick, Madam Chair. I know that the Member for Calgary-Hays would like to speak, and I'm interested in hearing his comments. I do just want to point out to the minister that I listened with interest to her comments, but let's be clear for the record here today. This government raised donation limits for constituency associations, did not lower them the way that she just indicated there. That's a fact. They've raised them from $1,000 to $4,000.

I would also submit, through you, Madam Chair, to her that this shows exactly why this needs to go back to committee, because now she's presenting to this House that the Chief Electoral Officer has changed what he said to us during committee. You know, I think that every member would deserve an opportunity to be able to discuss that with the Chief Electoral Officer.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you. I've been listening to the remarks from all the members of the House. There was one thing, Madam Chair, that seems incredibly clear to me, that the goal of the government with this piece of legislation is to tip the electoral field in their favour. It's obvious. It's as obvious as the day is long. And this is only one example. I'll have more to say later because I'm going to try and stick to this amendment that's before us.

It's pretty obvious that when the government is the one political party that doesn't raise money at their constituencies and really raises it through the central politburo model, everything in the centre, and that they're the only ones that won't suffer from this and when the Chief Electoral Officer has made it clear that there is no real value to getting these quarterly statements, this is clearly designed to slow down other parties from raising money, to tilt the scales in the favour of the current governing party. It's as clear as day. I don't know how anybody hearing this, the same thing that I just heard in the last 10, 20 minutes, could come to any other reasonable conclusion.

When I hear the minister stand up and make the most convoluted, nonsensical excuses to try to cover why the government is doing this to tilt the scales in their favour, it's really embarrassing. A government that determined to essentially cheat and push things in their own favour and make it obvious by the light of day that they're doing it: frankly, it's despicable. I think that, for me, this should be on the front page of every paper and every newscast tomorrow because this is a barefaced attempt to tip the electoral scale in one party's favour.

You know what? I'm going to stop here soon except for the fact that – and I'll talk about this later – this isn't the only thing in the legislation that does that. I will talk more about it later. I won't do it now because, as you know, I think you made a request for us to talk to the amendment before us. This is not the only example where the government has tried to tip the scales in their favour and against everybody else's in this legislation, and I will be only too pleased to expand upon that later on in the debate. Unfortunately, entirely contrary to what the minister said, it really is as simple as that. Either the government supports this, or they don't care about democracy. Clear as day.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I am profoundly disappointed that the government won't even consider this amendment. I find it remarkable that the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who stood with the minister at her own news conference to announce this legislation, realizes this is a good amendment. What's the downside in accepting this amendment? What's the downside?

I also note other government members, in particular the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Member for Calgary-Shaw, who were part of that committee and, as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster had referenced earlier, had started on one side of this debate and discussion, heard the arguments that were made at committee, and changed their minds. Well, that's good. They realized that, in fact – you know what? – it didn't make sense to have quarterly reporting. I find it remarkable how quiet those members are, and I'd really like to hear the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's rationale as to why he's changed his mind on this and what his perspective on this is. In fact, I'd like to hear some other government members, the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. I'd love to hear your perspective on this as to why you think this is a good idea.

There are lots of members on that government bench who were on that committee and who we have yet to hear from on this issue or any other. How is it that you can stand idly by while your party does exactly the same thing that you railed against the PCs for doing back in the day? It's amazing what happens, what magical terrible things happen when you become the government. It is remarkable how quickly you abandon your principles in pursuit of power and how willing you are to adapt legislation, to reject thoughtful amendments that would make legislation better, that would level the playing field for all parties. I promise you, government members, that you will be in opposition again one day very soon, frankly, not many of you, but your party will be in opposition again one day very soon.

I'll put this on the record right now. When I am in government, I won't tip the scales to favour my party. It's not what Albertans want. Albertans want a fair playing field, Albertans want a fair fight, and when Albertans see that you have put your thumb on the scale and are tilting the system to your advantage, they're going to punish you at the ballot box. That's what's going to happen. That is what's going to happen.

You know, to pick up on the minister's words, this is, quote, unquote, going to provide for enhanced reporting. Enhanced reporting. You wonder if the minister of truth is the 20th minister on that side. Enhanced reporting: really, all that does is burden parties that don't operate like the NDP. That's another word for it, burdening parties that don't act like the NDP. This amendment seeks to level the playing field amongst all parties.

You talk about transparency. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has said that this is about transparency. If it's about transparency, can you tell me the number of times that we've had an issue from Elections Alberta that has accused or reported upon or fined a constituency association or sanctioned any sort of constituency association for malicious or incorrect reporting? Has that ever happened? I don't know if it's ever happened.

This bill, this particular section of the bill, seeks to solve a problem that doesn't exist. That is the very definition of tilting the rules in your favour, using your advantage to bully through changes that advantage your party. This is another brick in the wall. This is exactly the kind of thing that over time Albertans get tired of. This is not the number one issue that Albertans are going to ask about in the next election, but it's yet another in a series of examples of the NDP using their advantage to impose their will and impose their views on the entire system.

And it's not just in elections. It's in electricity. It's in climate change. It's in all sorts of different areas. It's in small business. It's in the minimum wage. There are all kinds of areas where the NDP is applying their world view to tilt the scales in their direction, in their supporters' direction. This amendment seeks to fix all of that. Not just this section of the bill but the whole bill seeks to rig the system, to rig the system in favour of the NDP. It's patently, fundamentally unfair. I won't stand for it, and I know for a fact that Albertans won't stand for it, Madam Chair. I really encourage everyone in this House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thanks to the Member for Calgary-Elbow for the comments, of course. I do think that it's probably time to vote on this shortly. I suspect, I think, that most members will agree with us.

But I do think it's really important to make clear what the Member for Calgary-Elbow said. This clearly just shows that the government continues to intend to do what they were doing in committee, and that is to manipulate the system, rig the system, and try to kneecap the competition to make it easier for them in the next election. That is extremely disappointing, and they should hang their heads in shame. If they think for a minute – a minute – that Albertans won't see through that, they're kidding themselves, and they should get out of the capital and go talk to some real people.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Having been to a lot of these Ethics and Accountability Committee meetings, I think that it's interesting that we're hearing that the CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, is saying that we need to enhance quarterly reporting. I would say, if my memory serves me correctly, that I asked this question in different ways to hear how it would impact my local constituency association because I have helped file these financial statements in the past. I specifically asked him: how many days do we have for these quarterly reports after the quarter? The Chief Electoral Officer specifically said that there were 15 days. Now, one of the concerns that I brought up specifically about this was that by the time you get the bank statement to do the reconciliation to be able to do that final quarter, you're usually a week if not more into the quarter. This is a concern because a lot of times what happens is that you just don't have the time to be able to get that quarterly report done. I don't see that problem fixed here or that enhancement being done.

I also never heard him say: by the way, $250 is too high, so let's go down to $50. I haven't heard that one as a suggestion either. I did hear him say that this was a burden on his office and that they would prefer annual reporting just because of the fact that we're standardizing it along with the parties. Now, I specifically also asked the CEO: is it possible to be able to track this at that time theoretical $4,000 through the quarterly reports? I believe he said no, that this isn't possible. It would have to be done when the parties file their final returns, and in that way we would have been able to go through this. So the justification saying that we're going to be using quarterly reports to be able to check to see if people are over this $4,000 limit is, in my opinion, ludicrous.

What we've got here is an amendment that is supposed to enhance it when all it does is to actually put more of a burden on our poor CFOs that are in our constituencies. This is nothing at all like an enhancement. If anything, it is the opposite of an enhancement. I'll tell you that it is frustrating.

I had identified during the committee meetings that the government, by not allowing us to complete the committee meetings and bring forward motions so that Parliamentary Counsel can build an elections act that has all parties putting contributions in there, if they don't do that, then what we're going to end up with is the government cherry-picking what it liked and didn't like. That's exactly what we've got today, that they're cherry-picking. They're getting specific words and saying: well, he must have meant this.

Now, I understand. You know what? Hansard has got a lot happening here on what we had talked about because we actually sat quite a bit on this act. I spent a lot of hours in my car driving to Edmonton to contribute what I thought my constituents wanted me to do for strengthening the elections act. I fully agree that we needed to reduce contributions by individuals, and this is something that our party, the Wildrose Party, has been very consistent on.

Now, when we were going forward with this, I said, "Well, okay; if we continue with this quarterly reporting, then we at least should go back to the bucket system," the one thing that you're trying to eliminate because you're creating complexity here. Now what happens is that we've actually got to work with the party, and we also have to work with the constituency association together.

You've got to remember that the party has paid staff whereas our constituency associations are all volunteers. I have heard our members here specifically saying that the difference between us and the government is that we have constituency associations. We actually have volunteers that are in place to be able to strengthen our ability to get those grassroots out, get them involved, get them fundraising, and create activities within our riding, and through those activities we're able to build our grassroots.

Now, again, it appears the government doesn't seem to feel that the grassroots is as important to them as it is to the Wildrose. That is a very distressing point. We continue to bring up as well that in these meetings we really want to be involved in this. The fact is that when we had four pieces of legislation go through this committee, which was labelled as unprecedented – unprecedented – by legal counsel, we're told we're filibustering. I think we did remarkable work, and I will still stand by that.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

We went through the whistle-blower act. Usually we take a whole year for one act. We got one full act completed. Then what happened was that we got, I would say, at least 80 per cent through the Election Act. So then we're starting to move forward – and I see that the minister wants to say something. If she's going to correct me, then I welcome that.

What we need to say is that when we're moving forward with this kind of important restructuring of our elections finance act, why wouldn't you want all parties to be contributing to that? We all have constituents that are wanting to voice their concerns on the direction our government is going.

I have heard that we had too high a limit. I have heard that in the end what we are looking for is to make sure that it's a fair system. To be honest, that is something that I wanted to strive for. I truly feel that in the end what we're looking to do is move Alberta forward. We're trying to ensure that there's no undue influence.

I would like to hear the minister at least say how exactly it is that enhancement equals what we've seen here.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you. I will be brief, speaking to the amendment specifically. The Chief Electoral Officer presented to the committee and suggested that quarterly reporting should be removed or enhanced. The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is correct that he told the committee that they couldn't use the quarterly reporting to accurately track when someone was going to go over the contribution limits. That is the enhancement that the Chief Electoral Officer asked us to put in, and that is exactly what section (4.1) does. It adds that year-to-date information so that, specifically, the quarterly reporting will be of value in helping all parties, candidates, constituency associations, leadership contestants, and nomination contestants know on a quarterly basis where an Albertan's political contributions are in relation to that $4,000 cap.

There is a marked improvement within the context of lower contribution limits and wanting to help the parties involved, to not cause difficulty or have overcontributions all being sorted out at the end of the year for a contribution that maybe took place in February. I know that this formulation here will serve Albertans and will serve transparency. I thank the member for his comments, but that is how it directly addresses what the Chief Electoral Officer had talked about at that committee.

Thank you.

The Chair: I think I saw the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster stand first. Go ahead.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I have to say that the comments from the minister, as was stated by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, are extremely disappointing, and I will also say that they don't jibe with what is happening with this new bill that has come out, that bears only partial resemblance to the discussions which happened at committee. I think that's the concern, especially the concern of the members of the committee who were there, who discussed this, who debated this, and remember quite well the discussions at committee. And if we didn't remember the discussions at committee, we certainly have them here on Hansard.

Now, specifically, what we are talking about is contributions to constituency associations. Under this bill the contribution limit to constituency associations has been raised, not lowered. Let's be really clear on that. The contribution that an individual can make to the constituency association used to be $1,000 per year, $2,000 in an election year. This bill makes it possible for one person to give a constituency association $4,000, so if indeed these enhancements that the minister speaks of are put in because of lowered contributions, that's just not true. The contribution limit hasn't been lowered; it's been raised. It's been raised from $1,000 to $4,000, so that explanation just absolutely does not hold any water whatsoever.

Furthermore, Madam Chair, I'd like to point out that the idea that the Chief Electoral Officer somehow changed his mind at some point after the committee's discussions concluded and that somehow this recommendation made on August 10 was based on a higher level of contribution but now that the level was lowered, oh, it meant things were different, well, that's not true either. The old contribution limit was $1,000. The new contribution level is not lower; it's higher. It's $4,000. It's specifically talking about contributions to constituency associations.

Now, I will also point out that the Chief Electoral Officer and others in his office were extremely helpful throughout the discussions that we had on this. They were there at every meeting, not just the CEO but his assistant and legal counsel from the CEO's office. They were there, and they were extremely helpful as resources, answered a lot of questions that members had.

He was there right until September, when we concluded our deliberations. So to suggest that somehow because things changed, something that the CEO said on August 10 was now changed strikes me as odd. If, in fact, that recommendation had changed, I would have expected that he would have said at one of the many meetings we had after August 10: "Oh, just a minute. Things have changed.

Remember when I said on August 10 that quarterly reporting really doesn't help?" To me, this comment just does not hold water. There is something fundamentally out of whack here. [interjection] Well, that's one way to put it.

Now, it has also been also suggested – and I think this is also important – that this requirement puts additional stress and additional reporting requirements on the CFOs of constituency associations right across our province, for all constituency associations. But, specifically, it puts a burden on those constituency associations that actively fund raise, that actively solicit donations. When we look at the very helpfully provided disclosure documents, the financial disclosure documents on the Elections Alberta website, we find that, in fact, the constituency associations of the Alberta New Democrats are particularly inactive in that regard.

In fact, they're so inactive that earlier this summer the young gentleman I introduced earlier discovered that one person is the CFO of some 36 constituency associations of the NDP.

Mr. Clark: How many?

Dr. Starke: One person. One person files 36 quarterly... [interjections] Well, in a lot of cases – quite frankly, I've looked at the reports – they're just filed blank. The zeros aren't even filled in. So there are a whole lot of zero reports. One person is the CFO of 36 NDP constituency associations.

Yet the minister tells us here how this is levelling the playing field and how this is enhancing democracy, enhancing transparency within our system. Madam Chair, I simply do not believe that. I simply do not believe that there is anything within here. And if indeed it is true, if indeed her statements are true, then why did they vote down a motion to refer this motion to committee, where we could ask the Chief Electoral Officer directly: so why have you now decided that quarterly reporting is something that should happen?

This is a reasonable amendment. This is an amendment that has the support of all four opposition parties. It used to have the support of all of the government members of this committee as well, including a couple of members who admitted in our committee meetings that they had changed their mind, that they originally had a different mindset but that they had changed their mind.

Madam Chair, to me, it is totally baffling that this minister can take the recommendations of the committee, that were passed unanimously, that had the support of the Chief Electoral Officer, and now come back to speak of some discussions that she's had with the CEO that happened as a result of a so-called reduction in contribution limits where, in fact, the contribution limit has quadrupled, gone up by four times, and that that somehow now means that this is a good idea. It is not a good idea.

It is very clearly – very clearly – designed to unfairly advantage parties that do not have active fundraising activities within their constituency association. If you look – and perhaps some of you haven't looked at your own constituency association fundraising or financial statements and financial reports to the Chief Electoral Officer. I suggest that you do. It's very instructive. It won't take you long. It won't take you long at all, and you probably don't even need an auditor.

In fact, if you look at those reports, Madam Chair, you will find that the workload of the chief financial officer – officers, I should say. There's more than one although one does take care of 36 different constituency associations. The chief financial officers that file reports on behalf of that party, the governing party, that is suggesting quarterly reporting is a good idea, have a pretty easy workload whereas over on this side, for those parties that have constituency associations that actively fund raise, that actively solicit donations, they've got a lot more work to do. Now they're going to make that workload even harder. It only benefits the governing party, and it is unfair. It is completely unfair.

Madam Chair, speaking from a certain degree of experience, hard-earned, I can tell you that Albertans have a tremendous sense of fairness, and when they see something that is unfair, they don't treat it kindly. There has been fundamental unfairness done in the past by governments, and some of it was done by our party when we were in government, and we were rightly punished for doing that. That's fine. I acknowledge that, and we have received what we deserved.

But, Madam Chair, this government promised to do better. This government was, as was coined by my former colleague – well, she's still a colleague – the Member for Calgary-North West, the Doing Things Differently Gang. That's what it was. That was a great phrase: the Doing Things Differently Gang. So the Doing Things Differently Gang rides again. Sadly, you're not doing things that much differently. Really, Albertans expect better. Albertans expect much better.

This is fundamentally a fair amendment. It is an amendment that follows a recommendation of the Chief Electoral Officer as it was stated to the committee, not in some mysterious discussions that happened after the committee finished its work. I think that if indeed the Chief Electoral Officer has had a change of heart, then it is only fair that this matter be referred to a committee that can ask the Chief Electoral Officer why he's changed his mind. But that was suggested and was voted down last night by the government majority.

Madam Chair, I'm in favour of this amendment. The arguments made by the minister are, to me, absolutely invalid. They completely fly in the face of what we know to be the truth, that was presented at committee. In addition to that, it suggests that the Chief Electoral Officer's mind was changed, and I would like to be able to confirm that directly by having a conversation with him before we consider defeating this amendment, as the minister has suggested.

So I would urge all members of the Legislature to vote in favour of this very reasonable amendment for the sake of the fairness to all political parties that operate in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair, I appreciate that. Now, since we've been in opposition, since May 5 of last year a lot of things have changed, believe me. But one of the things that's changed is that we've had supporters and donors to our party fall away, some because they don't support us. But – I'll tell you what – a disturbing number have said, "You know, we're not going to go on your boards anymore. We're not going to give you money anymore." Even though the NDP doesn't raise any money at the constituency level, what they do is read the reports very carefully, and then people say that if they find them on a PC board or giving money, they and their companies won't be welcome to do business with the government. We hear that a lot. Now, I know that doesn't sound nice, but I'm telling you the truth. We've heard this from people.

That, actually, unfortunately, leads to a more nefarious conclusion on what the government's position is on this because if the government is using their power as government to intimidate people and pressure them to not support, certainly, our party – and I assume that if it's our party, it's other parties that are in opposition to the legislation as well – then of course they would have an interest in having a year of that same intimidation before an election instead of just three months. Think about that. Think about that. People are right now afraid to give money and be on boards and stuff for opposition parties, you know, and some of them say: we'll support you at the time when we can, but right now we can't do it because this government is here. Well, right now this adds to that intimidation period, from three months to a year before the next election. In my mind, this really puts a big exclamation mark on the fact that the government, by not supporting this particular amendment, is interested in tilting the scales in their favour.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Sure, Madam Chair. Yeah. I'm speaking in support of the amendment from the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, but I do have some serious concerns here because some of the points raised today by the Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Member for Calgary-Hays are really concerning. The Member for Calgary-Elbow said that the system is being rigged to tilt in favour of the NDP. This is a serious matter, rigging the system by a party which is all about accountability, transparency, and all that. Before they got into government, when they were sitting on this side of the House, those were their values, and now I don't know what happened to that.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow is saying that they're seriously attempting to tilt the balance, which is very undemocratic and very unfair to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who most often worked with that side of the House although he sits on this side of the House. He's being targeted now. His party is being targeted. When I say "targeted," that's this bill reducing the ability of his party to survive. Both leaders, from the Alberta Party and the Liberal Party, happen to be from the same city I come from, so my entire Calgary Wildrose caucus is sympathetic to them.

The point, you know, that the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said: they made mistakes. Nobody's perfect. They said that they made mistakes, and they were punished, and they feel remorseful about that, which is great, and they're willing to improve.

We're not perfect. We're willing to learn from our mistakes, too, but we are grassroots driven, so that means that the NDP has no respect for those common, regular Albertans who spend hundreds and thousands of hours to participate in this democratic process and keep the democracy alive. It's not fair to those volunteers when the NDP is trying to rig the system.

What the Member for Calgary-Hays says, if that is true, if the donors are feeling intimidated by the ruling party, is not good. I don't know how these members in the front row there on the government side can, you know, take it easy when there are serious allegations like this. It's really important. They have to at least apply common sense when they work in this House, when these kinds of reasonable amendments come from members who usually, actually – you know, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View most often is very sympathetic to them. At least when he's talking about fairness, they should pay attention and listen to him.

That's why I'm going to vote in favour of this amendment, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I actually thought that we were getting close to possibly voting on this. Then some of the comments I heard from the minister in regard to what the Chief Electoral Officer may or may not have said in committee I found alarming, so I quickly went and had a look. I, of course, was present when this discussion was happening in the committee as a member of the committee. The discussion that happened in the committee about the content of this amendment happened in great detail, and several conversations took place with the Chief Electoral Officer present.

He gave some comments on this very issue, and I'm going to quote him. He said:

Yes, we have heard quite loudly from constituencies that it is taxing on them. The reporting period isn't a month; it's only 15 days. It's actually a reduced timeline . . .

But part of the issue that they encounter is that it does add a disclosure component, not complete disclosure in a sense, because the information as far as the contributions isn't aggregated throughout . . . the four quarters. So you can contribute $200 each quarter. [When you do that] you're never captured as far as public disclosure. At year-end you're captured because it's over the $250 contribution limit for public disclosure. As a result, when you look at it from an accounting perspective, when you're completing the financial statements, what you report on a quarterly basis does not reconcile with what you're reporting on an annual basis. So there's confusion for the public, who are looking at the quarterly reporting and say: "Well, you're reporting this. The numbers are different at year-end. How can this be?" The same thing is happening with the CFOs.

Volunteer CFOs, I might add.

They're performing all this work, but it doesn't complement what they're doing at the end of the year.

That's part of the reason why we're recommending the recommendation that we have. If you choose otherwise, we have recommendations in which I think the quarterly reporting [could be maybe] enhanced in order to make it functional for the CFOs and for our office. All the work that we perform throughout the year on these quarterly reports is pretty much thrown out . . .

Madam Chair, thrown out.

. . . other than posting on the website for disclosure. That's the only function it provides. It does not assist us whatsoever in the financial review.

To me, particularly the last line, "does not assist us whatsoever in the financial review": that's the Chief Electoral Officer, not me, saying that.

He also said that all the work they do that has to happen because of this reporting is thrown out, completely useless, has no benefit. The Chief Electoral Officer said very clearly that it has no benefit, and the minister wants to rise in this Assembly and indicate that the Chief Electoral Officer is saying something different? I certainly would like to hear from the Chief Electoral Officer because right there in Hansard – and I'd like to do a shout-out to the good people at Hansard because they usually get it right – it's very, very clear that, no, that's not what's happening. They're throwing out the work that these poor volunteers have to do because it has no benefit to the process whatsoever. No benefit.

The minister tried to indicate that it was because we are now lowering contribution limits, that for some reason this would all of a sudden have benefits when, in fact, this government is getting ready to increase the contribution limits to constituency associations. So that argument doesn't hold water.

When we look at it, the Chief Electoral Officer says that there is no need for it, it has no benefit, and it puts a tremendous burden on volunteers who participate in the electoral process. Then we have to ask ourselves: why would the government want something like this that just costs taxpayers money, has no benefit? The Chief Electoral Officer says they just throw out the information, so it's essentially just a waste of everybody's time. Why, Madam Chair, would the government want to waste people's time?

When you start to look at the situation, you realize that they don't use constituency associations for fundraising. They don't have CFOs wasting their time on this, so the only reason that they would disregard what the Chief Electoral Officer said is to make opposition parties of every stripe and on every side of the political spectrum have to waste their volunteers' time so they could benefit. The minister wants to rise and try to convince us that this is not being done to benefit the New Democratic Party of Alberta after reading that?

The explanation that the minister provided in regard to that, Madam Chair, is ridiculous. It's ridiculous. It is clear when you read this that the governing party, the NDP, is attempting to stack the deck, rig the system, fix it for themselves, tilt the playing field to their advantage, manipulate the rules, and kneecap the competition. They're forgetting that they used to be a small party in our political system, and I can assure you that they will be a small party again in our political system if they continue this behaviour.

The minister should rise and explain . . .

An Hon. Member: There is no explanation.

Mr. Nixon: There is no explanation for it, I don't think.

. . . why she thinks that she can change what the Chief Electoral Officer said and how she can justify to this House that the information is just being thrown away, that it's costing taxpayers money and has absolutely no tangible benefit for accountability in our political system except for wasting good volunteers' time and trying to kneecap the competition to advantage the incumbent government. Again, shame on you guys. It's ridiculous.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also went and found the place in Hansard, like my colleague. You know, he did a really good job of moving that one section that the Chief Electoral Officer brought forward, but I want to go a little bit ahead to what was said. I'm going to go partway through. I was talking about these annual returns, and I said:

So this is a true hardship put on constituency associations. That's the real point here, that it's not easily done in those two weeks. These are volunteers. We need to be flexible, and we're not flexible right now. I think that the past government who brought this in tried it to see if it would add to transparency, and I would argue that it's done the exact opposite.

Then we have the Member for Edmonton-Decore:

Thank you, Madam Chair. Through you to the CEO, just a couple of really quick questions, then. Have you found that constituency associations, then, are struggling with this whereas if we had gone to yearly reporting, that would probably make it a little bit easier for them?

This is where our Chief Electoral Officer goes:

Yes, we have heard quite loudly from constituencies that it is [quite] taxing on them.

And he goes on as through my past colleague, so I don't want to go into that entire dialogue.

But I do want to go, after that dialogue, back to the Member for Edmonton-Decore. He goes on to say, after the Chief Electoral Officer had made all of those comments:

Okay. I guess, Madam Chair, just a quick comment, then. I mean, I guess, you know, if you quickly look at what's being proposed here, maybe on the outside it's possible that it would look like disclosure is being reduced when in actuality it's not. I certainly appreciate the member's concerns, and I'm hoping that maybe we've managed to clarify things a little bit. I'm happy to support this motion, which was the motion to make it annual.

I guess for folks that are more interested in seeing it on a quarterly basis, maybe they're just going to have to stay tuned a little bit longer.

That is the truth because we're going quarterly, still. I guess we're going to have to wait until the next government.

But let's go back to what my colleague had said. I will say that what's important here is the last part of his comments. Just from the CEO:

That's part of the reason why we're recommending the recommendation that we have.

His recommendation was to go to annual.

If you choose otherwise, we have recommendations in which I think the quarterly reporting would have to be enhanced in order to make it functional for the CFOs and for our office.

Now, it's important to say that he threw that in, saying that quarterly just isn't working – this is a burden; it's just not working – but if you have to have it here, you at least should maybe change it up some. He didn't ever say that enhancement is the route to go. That is cherry-picking what the CEO had to say from these comments.

Again, bringing back my original concerns that the government would go through this and pick and choose what they want even though the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee had brought this motion forward by way of one of my colleagues. The motion was debated to go from quarterly to annually. The committee came to a decision that this was the right move to take. We had members from the government agreeing that this was the route to go, yet here we are. We've got a government pushing through quarterly even though it is very apparent that the only people that will be benefiting by leaving it a little bit longer or staying tuned is the government.

They have not justified this well enough. That is why Calgary-Elbow has brought forward a very good amendment that we need to consider. Even though this amendment originated as a motion from the Wildrose and he is carrying this flag into this House, we will support this because it is the right thing to do. Volunteers need to be respected, and it appears that this government is not taking in the thoughts of the volunteers in any regard, shape, or form. They're just going and ramming things through.

They're saying that because we're adding input to this, we're against reducing the contribution limits, and that is totally false. We need to establish that we can make this better. We can actually make this nonpartisan, but it's the government that is making this partisan.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:36 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Back on Bill 35. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I am going to move an amendment. I have the appropriate number of copies for the pages, which I will hand to them, and I'll wait till they get to the table.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. The amendment I'm bringing forward is that I move that Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended in section 28(c) in the proposed section 32 by striking out subsections (3) and (3.1).

It is a very simple amendment, Madam Chair. As we just witnessed in this Chamber, the last amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow was voted down, unfortunately, by the government in their clear process to continue to tilt the playing field to their advantage. But in the spirit of recognizing that the government has already made their decision in regard to quarterly filing, I do want to point out as I talk about this amendment that this amendment will still maintain the current provision for quarterly filing by constituency associations though we still fundamentally disagree with that.

Madam Chair, the current act means that volunteer CFOs for constituency associations only have to file the total amount of contributions received during the quarter and at the end of the year that did not exceed $250. The government's proposal is to lower that amount to $50, to lower the amount from $250 to $50. This limit will make it incredibly difficult for the volunteers who make the constituency associations operate. It is very similar to what we discussed in the previous amendment. A good reminder I think for all of us as we continue to debate these important issues around Bill 35 is that we are talking primarily about volunteers that deal with the party finances, particularly around constituency associations, except, as has been pointed out – it's very relevant again to this amendment – not by the governing party.

One of the members in this House yesterday pointed out that the hardest position they have to fill on their constituency association board is their CFO, and I completely agree with him. It is a tough job. If you're sitting there for any board, not just on political boards, it's often the one where people are often most volun-told or really, really begged to be able to participate in it because it's tough. Making it harder for these volunteers will force people out of that position. I can guarantee you that, Madam Chair.

Fifty dollars a quarter and $200 a year is not big money in politics. It's not, and we all know that. There is not one credible argument that could be brought forward by the government – though I suspect they're going to try to invent a credible argument, and I look forward to watching that – that $50 or $200 is big money in politics, particularly, Madam Chair, when this minister is bringing through legislation right now to raise the donation limit by 400 per cent on constituency associations. Four hundred per cent on constituency associations. Four hundred per cent. Taking the donation limits on constituency associations from a thousand dollars to $4,000 is a significant increase. A significant increase.

Then to put forth the argument to take what volunteers across the board are currently reporting at $250 and bring it down to $50 cannot be justified by the NDP as taking big money out of politics. Again, similar to the last discussions that we had on the last amendment, the only benefit that it will have is to make things harder for volunteer CFOs who work – and I think you’re going to see a theme throughout the evening, Madam Chair – for constituency associations for the opposition parties because the government does not use constituency associations when it comes to financial management, which is their right. But it surely is not appropriate for them to continue to try to manipulate the rules and kneecap the competition on the other side that does use constituency associations.

Again, the government keeps rising and saying: no, that’s not what we’re trying to do; we’re trying to make it more transparent. You know, they’ll tell you everything. But when you come and you look at it, it doesn’t add up. That dog doesn’t hunt. It is so obvious what is being done here, and it’s so wrong and in some ways sad. There was so much common ground on this legislation between all the parties that we actually could have had a bill passed that would have been supported by all parties inside this Assembly, which, I would argue to you, Madam Chair, is what Albertans would have liked to see when we’re talking about something as fundamentally important as their democracy.

Having to record the name, the address, and the date of the contribution by every contributor that gave over $51 for a year, in my view, is ridiculous. It’s not big money in politics. It doesn’t make anything more transparent, and it does nothing but punish volunteers for putting their hands up and saying: “Yeah, I’ll help. Yeah, I’ll help make the political process work. I’ll help participate. I’ll give up a night a month to work on the books for a constituency association. I’ll skip, you know, one of my kid’s events that I may want to go to because I believe in the political process, I believe so much in the political process.” You know, in my constituency my CFO believes so much in the political process that she often gets in a car and drives upwards of an hour and a half to a constituency association meeting, sometimes on the other side of my constituency, which is 25,000 square kilometres and a big job for those volunteers. A big job for those volunteers. And not once during committee did anything come forward that would justify this silliness, Madam Chair.

At the same time, I want to make it very, very clear that we’re going to take it from $250 a year to $50 a year at the same time that this government is now increasing – increasing – contributions to constituency associations by four times the previous amount. They’re the ones trying to get big money out of politics? I don’t think so, Madam Chair. I do not think so.

Well, and the hon. minister is laughing, but, again, four times the previous limit is increasing contribution limits.

5:00

Mr. Feehan: You’re misstating the truth.

Mr. Nixon: He’s telling me that I’m not telling the truth. Through you, Madam Chair, I am telling the truth. This bill increases it to $4,000 a year. Try reading your brief, sir. I am telling the truth.

Mr. Feehan: No, you’re not.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Madam Chair. The minister wants to keep telling me that I’m not telling the truth. I think that’s completely against all of the tradition of this Assembly.

The Chair: You wish to raise a point of order? What is your citation on this point of order?

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Nixon: The minister keeps telling me that I’m not telling the truth, referring to and implying that I’m lying. First of all, it is completely – completely – ridiculous, when their own bill says that they increased it to $4,000, to say that we’re lying about quoting their bill.

That aside, Madam Chair, you know and I know that there’s a long tradition in this Assembly to not use the word “truth” or imply that somebody is not telling the truth in this Assembly. That’s disappointing coming from a cabinet minister, and the cabinet minister should rise and apologize and withdraw those comments.

I’m referring to 23(i). Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. member, I don’t think I can consider this a point of order as the minister did not have the floor and did not speak those words on the record. It’s heckling.

I would, however, caution the House to be careful in the words that you say when heckling, to not create disorder.

Mr. Nixon: You know, heckling can be a point of order, Madam Chair, but I will respect your ruling. I do hope that my colleagues note that they can now heckle that ministers aren’t telling the truth, because that’s ridiculous.

The Chair: Hon. member, I just reminded the House not to heckle those kinds of things.

Mr. Nixon: Excellent. I agree. They shouldn’t heckle those kinds of things. I agree with you, Madam Chair. It’s very disappointing to see that from a cabinet minister, I must say.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Let’s be clear, then, because he raised it. The old rules, that will go away after we pass this legislation, cap the donation limits at $1,000 for a constituency association. This government is raising that limit to $4,000. To the minister: that is not lying. It is a fact that you are raising that. Thank you very much.

Why would we lower it to $50 on the other side when they’re already raising the limit for constituency associations? The only argument that could be brought forward for that is that, again, it’s another example of the NDP Party trying to fix this process for themselves, trying to use their majority in the Legislature to rig the system for themselves.

Now, sadly, it’s not going to hurt the bigger parties. It’s going to be tougher, but we’ll get through the process. We’ve got pretty big teams, and we’re able to do it. It’s going to hurt the smaller political parties. It’s going to hurt the start-up political parties that want to get into the process, the ones, I would submit to you, Madam Chair, they’re most scared of because they’re on their side of the political spectrum.

To manipulate our democracy through legislation to advantage the governing party is shameful. Shameful. So by bringing forward this amendment, we’re giving them the ability to say: “Whoa. We made a mistake, just like we did when we tried to get our campaign expenses paid for. Whoa. We made a mistake. Thank you, Opposition, for saving us again from this terrible mistake. Thank you."

Rise, and do the right thing, and vote for this to make it easier. Stop the silliness of trying to stack the deck to the advantage of that political party.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre states that the only possible reason for the lowered limit would be that the government is trying to rig the process. I can assure him that is not true. In the submission that the Chief Electoral Officer made to the committee on October 19, 2015, recommendation 34 states, "if the Legislature retains quarterly reporting, section 32 should be amended to include details of the under-$250 [donations] and include receipts – then get to year-end, [you] only have a quarter left. It will be more functional." This lowered limit is following the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer.

I will not be supporting this amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Clark: I wish I could say that I was surprised by that. I'm not surprised, yet still disappointed. You know, the hon. minister has read a portion of Hansard, and the portion of Hansard she read started with the word "if." The "if" refers to, as we've heard from a couple of hon. members here in reading out the full content of what the Chief Electoral Officer talked about – and I won't read the full Hansard. Instead, I'll give the gist of what he said, which is: well, I guess if you're going to keep it, make it meaningful, but my strong preference is to get rid of it entirely. That was the essence of what the Chief Electoral Officer said. In fact, he was so persuasive that he convinced the government members of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee to change their votes and change their minds on quarterly reporting. So the committee unanimously said that they wanted to get rid of quarterly reporting. For the minister to cherry-pick the little bits and pieces she wants is disingenuous in the extreme.

The argument that we need this provision – and I am rising on the amendment, to speak strongly in favour of the amendment from the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. The government is saying: "Well, this way we're going to know. This way we know when someone crosses the $350 threshold." We will still know, Madam Chair, but every constituency association's financial officer will now need to do the work four times a year – that's four times the amount of work – not just once a year. The result of that is that parties are going to have no choice but to take that accountability away from their constituency association's chief financial officer, which means that all fundraising will funnel through the party, which means that grassroots democracy is sacrificed. [interjection] I missed that, Calgary-Hawkwood. What was that? I didn't hear what you had to say. I'm always interested in what the Member for Calgary-Hawkwood has to say.

Again, as said many times this afternoon and many times yesterday and many times in the committee, every single party in this Assembly works a certain way except for one. We have the one that has the ability to ram through legislation using their majority, and that's what they've chosen to do. It's disappointing in the extreme that they've done that, but that's what they've chosen to do. It seems to be: "Well, I guess that's just what we do as a majority government. Hey, we're in charge now. Let's just impose our will."

That is not what Albertans wanted when they elected this government. Albertans had higher expectations. Albertans had high hopes that things would actually be different, that they would have a government that actually listened to the people. But I understand now why they're not, because this isn't a government of the people, because they don't have connections with their communities, because they don't have strong constituency associations. [interjection] My friend from Calgary-Klein asks me how I know that. Well, I know that because I've looked at the financial reports for each and every one of your constituency associations, and your constituency associations have no connection to community.

Now, I will acknowledge that there are certain members on the government side who have strong connections to their communities. It's not a universal statement in the slightest, but it really does speak to a philosophy and a way of governing and a way of operating which is highly centralized and: we're going to tell you what to do. The best way for this House to operate and for democracy to work is for the grassroots, the people of Alberta, through each one of us, to tell us what to do.

We throw this word "grassroots" around. You heard my eloquent and wonderfully passionate point of order earlier today about the importance of backbench questions. The essence there – and this ties to the amendment, because I can see the Chair wondering where I'm going with this. What this speaks to in this amendment is the restoration of grassroots democracy. The point of order that I made earlier today was about the importance of government members having the flexibility and freedom to ask a truly meaningful – truly meaningful – question of the front bench. That is the job of each one of us in this House who are private members. This provision in the bill takes away the connection to our community because it centralizes everything. That'll be the only choice parties have. So it imposes that we must work, all of us, in the same way that the NDP works. That's not why Albertans elected this government.

I want to see the backbench members on that side have more power. I want to see them have a stronger voice. I want to see them stand up and hold the government accountable, genuinely do that. You do that when you have better connection to community. If we pass this amendment, we will have a bill that enables stronger and better connection to community. That is what Albertans elected all of us to do.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

5:10

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. This is a good amendment. It just brings some common sense to things. If the government won't support it, it's just one more example of how they're trying to tilt the scale in their favour in the next general election. This whole piece of legislation is scaled that way. They have a $2 million per party spending cap but no realistic caps on what the government could spend.

Today we know that the government is up there spending $9 million on the carbon tax plan, more than four parties will be allowed to spend combined in the next general election, and they're spending it out of taxpayers' dollars to support propaganda for this government on one policy. Now, if ever there's an indicator that this government, through this piece of legislation, is trying to tilt the scale in their favour using taxpayers' dollars – they contact members of our party saying: don't be on their list of supporters or on their board or you will not be doing any business with our government.

You know what, Madam Chair? This is the government indicting themselves on bad behaviour, on using taxpayers' dollars to tilt the electoral scales in their favour. I'm not a lawyer, but there's a part of me that's surprised this is legal.

I will be supporting the amendment but, I can assure you, not the legislation attached to it.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do have two questions, specifically. My honoured colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre was putting forward some compelling arguments on why this is such a good idea. One of the members from across the aisle continued to not go through the chair, but she did mention something, and I'm curious where she was going with it. She continued to say: CRA, CRA. I would love to hear how CRA has anything to do with this. I'm assuming that she's meaning the Canada Revenue Agency and not some other agency. So if she could answer what exactly she means by CRA and how this specific amendment will – I'm very curious where that member was going with it.

Secondly, we heard the Minister of Labour get up and say that this is a great idea and that the CEO, the Chief Electoral Officer, recommends this. I guess it's a matter of debate. I would say that the CEO adamantly disagrees with it. To be clear, I would love to hear a reason from the Labour minister, other than a pitched sentence from a report from the CEO, on why she believes that it should be reduced from $250 to $50. I think that's a reasonable concern. The fact is that I believe that the government doesn't have any idea why they're doing it. No idea. That's why I'm saying that we need to hear from the minister, other than a statement produced by the CEO, on exactly what it is, how going from $250 down to $50 is going to help with accountability and transparency at a constituency level or even in filing their annual return.

Now, the one thing I will mention, that brings another question, I think, that should be answered, is that we raised the level that you could donate to a constituency from $1,000 to $4,000. We quadrupled – we quadrupled – the amount you could donate to a constituency, but we divided by five what the constituency is required to report. That is the strangest thing that I've ever heard. The two in no way, shape, or form seem to work with each other.

Again, why is it that the minister feels that $250 is a number that seems to be not reasonable in this case? I guess she's enhancing it. Again, I am agreeing with my members that it is taking something out of context because I actually was at that meeting, like many of the Ethics and Accountability Committee members, and they were saying that we are trying to make sure that we're moving forward in a clear and transparent method, yet we're cherry-picking – and I'll continue to use the word – sentences and phrases that are out of context that I don't believe the actual CEO meant or wanted to derive from there.

Now, the thing that it does do, this lowering it down, is that it is going to create a lot of work for our local constituency associations. Again, it puts a burden on the volunteers, which is something we had mentioned before, with the past amendment.

Now, I'm going to say that we already talked specifically about the quarterly reporting. That is an important one that we need to derive. In the end, I don't think the government has made a very good or compelling case on why we shouldn't go to annual, but we voted on it, and – fair enough; the government does have the majority of votes – they voted down our CFOs being able to reduce the amount of burden that's on the volunteers. It seems to be that, I guess, they have more volunteers than they know what to do with at their constituency levels. It explains why they have so many of them without any actual formed boards.

I am going to read another quote from Calgary-Shaw.

Thank you, Madam Chair. Through you, you know, I want to echo that the initial concerns I heard from [the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie] I shared . . . For myself, I come from sort of a corporate background, so to speak, so quarterly reporting is a very common practice, especially for transparency and to make sure that your practices are being obliged properly. But I did hear some very compelling arguments from the members of the third party and other political parties as well that this isn't a business . . .

This is a key word: this isn't a business.

. . . that these are volunteers, and that there's a lot of anxiety that comes from quarterly reporting as well.

So by reducing this from $250 down to $50, we are actually creating more anxiety for these volunteers. It was acknowledged that this is a problem yet ignored again by this government. That is frustrating when it comes to the fact that this all-party committee debated it, moved it forward, and nowhere in that all-party committee did we actually really mention why we would be reducing this from $250 down to $50. There were no compelling arguments from the government when they had the opportunity during that time frame, but what we do have is some legislation sitting in front of us that is going to cause some grief to my local constituency association.

Yet here we are, another government making another decision, and they had the actual consultation from the CEO, but they chose to ignore it, and that does seem to be a common practice of this government.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

5:20

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to speak in favour of this amendment. It's been kind of a strange day, I think, when we look at what we've discussed today based on the government's name of the bill, Fair Elections Financing Act, and we also look at what the government's intent was, which they say over and over and over again was to get big money out of politics.

The last amendment we worked on was about quarterly reporting. Now, I don't know what's unfair about doing annual reporting, and I don't know where that comes in to getting big money out of politics, but it was bizarre to hear the minister say that the Chief Electoral Officer said that it needed to be enhanced, so it needed to be done. But, of course, when we read exactly what the Chief Electoral Officer said, he said, "That's part of the reason why we're recommending the recommendation that we have. If you choose otherwise, we have recommendations in which I think the quarterly reporting would have to be enhanced." So he's made a recommendation, clearly, and he's saying: if you don't take my recommendation, then we're going to have to do something different.

When the Chief Electoral Officer makes a recommendation, it's probably a good idea to take it, especially when he goes on to say, "These quarterly reports [are] pretty much thrown out other than posting on the website for disclosure. That's the only function it provides. It does not assist us whatsoever in the financial review." We just went through that process, and somehow the government thinks there's something in fairness about that. Obviously, the Chief Electoral Officer has no problem with it, in fact, is suggesting the opposite. There's nothing about big money there. It's not even any dollars we're talking about. We're just talking about the quarterly reporting.

Now, it was also interesting to hear the Minister of Indigenous Relations spouting off in a heckle, accusing somebody, the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, of not telling the truth when he suggested that presently you can donate $1,000 to a constituency association. That's a fact. That's clear. With this new act, the Fair Elections Financing Act, you can now donate $4,000 to a constituency association a year.

Mr. Nixon: I think that's more, isn't it, Member?

Mr. Loewen: I think that might be a little more. I think that's very clearly more, and for somebody, especially a minister, to accuse another member of not telling the truth when the facts clearly point to the opposite: I find that – I can't even think of a word for it, Madam Chair. It's appalling. It's deeply disappointing.

Now, here we are with another amendment, and we're talking about whether the constituency associations need to do extra paperwork for $50 donations. Right now it's $250. This bill, this act, is suggesting that we go from $250 down to $50 for this extra recording paperwork. I don't know what's unfair about a $250 recording. I can't see anything unfair about that, but if we're going on to the government's other excuse for doing all this, if it's getting big money out of politics, well, we're going from $250 down to $50. That makes no sense at all either.

Madam Chair, I've worked in a constituency association before. The people responsible for doing the filing within the constituency association: good, hard-working, honest volunteers doing their best. Every quarter they get stressed out about filing these papers because they know these papers have to be done properly, and they don't want to make any mistakes. They want to do it to the best of their abilities. They want to make sure that they don't bring any harm to the party. They want to make sure that everything is just right. So it creates a lot of stress. Now, what we're doing here today with this Fair Elections Financing Act, getting big money out of politics, is that we're increasing the work, we're increasing the stress of volunteers when all they want to do is to be involved in the political process and help out and have their opportunity in the political process and help out the party that they believe in.

These two amendments are purely common-sense amendments. There's no good reason why this government doesn't accept them. One the government has already voted down. It's shameful – shameful – to think that this government thinks that annual reporting, just like us doing our taxes annually, is somehow unfair or somehow gets big money out of politics. That's not the case, Madam Chair. Members on all sides need to support this amendment and bring back some common sense to the discussion on this bill altogether because so far common sense has been lacking here.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll ask the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I am going to move another amendment, and I will send the copies up with the page and wait for you to give me permission to continue.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. The amendment is quite long, so I won't read it unless you require me to read it. The core of what it does is that the amendment triggers most of the act to come into effect on January 1 instead of having three different timelines, where different parts of the act are triggered by different rules.

I would submit to you, Madam Chair, that this is a common-sense amendment which will let every party and their volunteers maintain the reporting rules that are currently in place until the end of the quarter that we are currently in. In no way does this amendment change any of the proposals that have been brought forward by the government in this current legislation, even the ones that we disagree with.

Having a successful system where volunteers can make an impact without unreasonable changes I think is important to our democracy. I'm sure that you would agree with me, Madam Chair, and I think all members of the House will. This amendment will allow the Assembly to bring this act into effect in a timely manner, and it will avoid the avalanche of reporting errors that will punish volunteers and make the work of Elections Alberta unreasonable going forward.

I would submit again, Madam Chair, that it is a completely reasonable amendment designed to simplify the process and to make the dates line up and be more appropriate for the people involved.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment because of the simple fact that it simplifies things and clarifies matters as well. It is something that would reduce the burden on volunteers, which has been a theme for this afternoon's debate. It is something, I think, that is absolutely merited. I would really hope that the hon. minister would genuinely and truly consider accepting this amendment because I believe it does improve the bill, adds consistency, and makes life easier for those dedicated volunteers that run our constituency associations and our parties.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you very much to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre for putting forward this amendment. I am in agreement that this amendment, which will make sure that the third-party components of the bill come into effect on the day that the Fair Elections Financing Act received first reading, is a good amendment. It brings this in line with other areas of the act that are brought in line on the day of first reading and I think contributes to what we are trying to do with this bill, which is encourage fair participation and transparency in the democratic process, because making sure that we have a transparent and level playing field for all parties and candidates are the goals of this act.

I appreciate the amendment put forth by the hon. member from the Wildrose. That will contribute to and support making sure that we are moving forward with a fair, democratic, and modern electoral system. I support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 carried unanimously]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, thank you for recognizing me. I'm following up on some conversation that occurred last evening. It's interesting because it involves the Member for Edmonton-Centre, who rose under section 29(2)(a) after the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow spoke, and it had to do with clarifying a position of how his constituency association operated compared to what the Member for Calgary-Elbow was speaking about.

It was interesting because the hon. member stated – and I'm quoting here from Hansard, page 2356 – that in terms of how we operate our accounts, the Edmonton-Centre NDP Constituency Association operates its own bank account. I regularly accept contributions from people who want to support our constituency association. We take in money from fundraising events for our constituency association. We choose to process those payments through the central party, who then remits back to us the portion of it which we retain for our constituency association and keep in our own bank account.

To be clear, the constituency association operates independently.

There was some additional discussion to that. It was very interesting.

You know, I said, "Well, my goodness, we should take a look at that," so I did. For the period from December 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, according to the documents filed with the Chief Electoral Officer at Elections Alberta, the Edmonton-Centre New Democratic Party Constituency Association, in point of fact, received zero contributions. Zero. The fundraising of the Edmonton-Centre constituency association was also zero. I should say that there was reported $2.42 in other income.

Mr. Rodney: Sorry. Does that stand for thousands?

Dr. Starke: No; $2.42.

The member also mentioned about, you know, processing and transferring funds back and forth, but it's puzzling because there were zero funds transferred to the central party.

You know, I also looked at the period from January 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, to see the contributions that had been taken in that were described by the hon. member. In fact, the grand total for that calendar year was zero. I then looked for the period January 1, 2016, to September 30, 2016, and I found that that was also zero.

So I said: well, you know, let's maybe take a look at the financial statements, the reporting for the Alberta New Democratic Party for the calendar year January 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, and let's look at fundraising functions. The hon. member described fundraising functions, and I said: well, if they're processed through the central party, then it'll show up in that record. The total fundraising functions for the Alberta New Democratic Party for the period January 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015 – the total amount that was raised from all fundraising functions – was zero.

You know, I'm certainly puzzled, Madam Chair, at how the financial recording and the financial reporting to the Chief Electoral Officer and the statements of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that were made last night in reference to comments made by the Member for Calgary-Elbow could jibe. Certainly, some of what the hon. member described doesn't seem to really correspond to what's been reported to the Chief Electoral Officer.

Madam Chair, I guess the point that I'm making here is that, yes, there are different ways that different parties operate. It is most disconcerting to me as a member who respects how different political parties operate, because there are, certainly, differences, that the current legislation is very clearly, in my view, being brought forward in such a way that it favours the operational model that exists within the Alberta New Democratic Party, the governing party, the party that currently has a majority in our Legislature. To have rules brought in that are very clearly in support of the model that is there and then to have an hon. member indicate here in the Assembly that, “Oh, no, no, no; it’s different” and “Oh, no, no; we do fundraising at the constituency level” and “Oh, no, no; you know, the fundraising goes through the central party” and then to in fact have that information not be corroborated by the official reporting that has been submitted to the Chief Electoral Officer is troubling.

Now, Madam Chair, I want to say directly that I have a great deal of respect for the Member for Edmonton-Centre. He works very hard for his constituents. We’ve had many conversations on a number of subjects. We don’t always necessarily agree . . .

An Hon. Member: Sharp dresser.

Dr. Starke: He’s a sharp dresser.

We don’t always agree on a lot of policy matters. I’m not doing this, Madam Chair, in any way to try to impugn his reputation, but I certainly would appreciate somebody providing some clarification as to how the comments that were made under 29(2)(a) last night, which, certainly, from what I am reading and unless I’m misinterpreting things – what I am reading here and what has in fact been reported to the Chief Electoral Officer I think most people would agree are quite different.

Now, if there has perhaps been an error made and these reports have to be amended in some ways to reflect what is actually happening and what was actually described by the hon. member, then, you know, by all means, that should be done. Errors can be made. But I’m in fact concerned that, you know, there’s some issue or some other problem.

Now, earlier in debate this afternoon I pointed out how a single person is the CFO, chief financial officer, for 36 different NDP constituency associations. Fortunately, for that individual, who would otherwise be a very, very busy person, the amount of financial transactions that he has to keep track of is relatively small. That’s certainly good because the workload that he would be undertaking would, I would suggest – you know, I think of the CFO in my constituency association. It’s a big job, and I’m very fortunate to have someone who is a former bank manager to do that job. Someone who is a chief financial officer for a major oil company in Lloydminster does that job for me.

You know, different political parties operate in different ways. I think the one thing that we need to be cognizant of because I think it is going to come up as we continue to debate this particular issue is that the rules that are set out need to be able to accommodate the different approaches of different political parties in our province. At the time that we were in government, had we introduced rules that were specifically punitive to the way the New Democratic Party operates its system within its party, I would tell you that we would be rightly called out for that. That would be fundamentally unfair to do that. Yet now that we have, you know, sort of a turnaround and the shoe on the other foot, we see a government that is putting through legislation that is, very clearly, punitive to parties that operate with a constituency association structure, and that, to me, is most disturbing.

Throughout the discussions that we had over the course of the summer at our committee, we pointed out some of those differences and, in some cases, why those were punitive to parties that had a different structure and a different function. In some cases those arguments were accepted and were thought about by the members on the committee, and I appreciated those thoughts. And I appreciated the fact that minds were changed. You know, that happened more than a couple of times during the course of the committee because in a committee structure we were able to have these kinds of discussions as to how different parties work. We learned a little bit about, you know, some of the different things that we do within our own constituency associations right across the board, and it was very instructive.

But I for one am most concerned with the direction these amendments are headed. In many cases these amendments are being turned down, with the exception of the last one, which is good. But the fact that amendments that are very specifically designed to repair inequities that have been brought as a result of this legislation, amendments that are designed to correct a situation where the committee’s recommendations have been ignored by the legislation as it now sits, I can tell you, is profoundly disappointing.

I think it is profoundly troubling that the committee did good work – and all members of the committee I think put in a great deal of effort into the committee’s tasks that we had – and that work is summarily being swept aside by someone in the minister’s office, perhaps the minister herself. I don’t know. That’s troubling to me, and that makes me question what the benefit or what the use of having the committee was in the first place.

You know, I think, as has been pointed out by other members, that we did excellent work on the whistle-blower protection act. I think that once those recommendations are brought forward in terms of amendments to the legislation, they will strengthen the whistle-blower protection act, and that is a good thing. I think that’s part of the job that the committee was tasked to do. I guess we don’t know yet, because we haven’t seen them, what those amendments will be, but I’m certainly hopeful and optimistic that when those amendments come to the House, we will see a reflection of the recommendations that came from the members of the committee.

I’m puzzled and very concerned about the number of recommendations that went from the committee – in some cases they were unanimous; in some cases it was a split vote. Regardless, I’m concerned about the number of those recommendations that are different now that they come to the floor of the Assembly. That, to me, is something that’s troubling, and that, to me, is something that suggests a disregard for the effort of the multiple members that sat on that committee. So I’m certainly disappointed by that.

Madam Chair, I will tell you that I am concerned about the direction that this debate is headed. I know that there are a number of other issues that are still being reviewed by Parliamentary Counsel in terms of other amendments that are to be brought forward, and I’m looking forward to the opportunity to debate those amendments as well. But for now I wanted to make the comments and have them on the record indicating that I have grave concerns about the direction that this discussion is going and especially the direction in which the government has chosen to take this in terms of benefiting specifically the Alberta New Democratic Party’s methodology and the way that they operate as a political entity, which, as we’ve stated before, is quite different from the other parties in our province.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 35. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard the report, does the Assembly concur?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wish to move that we adjourn the House until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:56 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, December 7, 2016

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.
The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to request unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: Please go ahead.

Ms Renaud: Okay. Thank you. It is my pleasure to introduce to you from our grassroots, incredibly strong EDA in St. Albert, Vice-president Tom Genore and his lovely girlfriend, Amanda Archer, who is also a member.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 37

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2)

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Mr. Ceci: It's my pleasure to rise and say a few words about the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2). As all members of this Legislature know, the $1.45 million provided by this bill is required to support the Legislative Assembly to fund the very important work of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I think all members of this Legislature agree that this is important, and on that note I would ask all members of this Legislature to support the bill.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?
Seeing none, I shall call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 37 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: I am. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 37.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Any opposed, please say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 34

Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Rodney moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not adequately address and minimize the adverse long-term financial implications of changes to the Electric Utilities Act with respect to debt financing.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment December 7: Mr. Bilous]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill?
The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on such a lovely Christmasy evening. A very Merry Christmas to you. It was nice to hear the carollers this evening on the steps of the Legislature. I know that visitor services does such a wonderful job at this time of year bringing the best of the season here to the Assembly. It's my hope that we'll be able to bring the best of the season here to the Chamber tonight. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that the best of the season for Albertans would be that this government would take a pause, just like my colleague from the third party has asked them to do by moving this reasoned amendment earlier in the session. The best Christmas present that Albertans could have is this government actually listening to Albertans.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that when I am in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talking to folks about the direction that this government is taking, they are alarmed. They're alarmed that in a bill like Bill 34 the government would be willing to write themselves a blank cheque, a blank cheque of unlimited borrowing opportunity for this government. You know, I'm going to tell you a lot about how they're frustrated this evening, but one of the things that they're most frustrated about is that this government created a problem, and now they're creating legislation to solve the very problem that they created. This government acted quickly, without thought or care or consideration with respect to the PPAs. They acted without doing their homework, without checking the facts, and as a result they got themselves in a pickle. The worst part about that is that the people who are holding the pickle jar are Albertans.

Mr. Nixon: Their hand is stuck. Their hand is stuck in the jar.

Mr. Cooper: And that is exactly the problem. Their hand is stuck in the pickle jar.

Madam Speaker, now they're in a bind, just like this government was in a bind, so they started looking around for answers. They started looking around for answers, and the only one that they could come up with was that the government create legislation that would give them unlimited borrowing power to the Balancing Pool. Now we see the Balancing Pool losing significant amounts of money while the PPAs are returned to them, and essentially they need a bailout.

Now, this isn't the only problem that this government has created with respect to PPAs. At the first of it, they started attacking corporations that are owned by Calgarians.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. They don't really like corporations.

Mr. Cooper: Well, you know, it's interesting. They sometimes like corporations, and other times they don't.

Mr. Nixon: It's confusing.

Mr. Cooper: It is confusing.

Sometimes they stand and make accusations about the opposition, how we don't like companies like Suncor.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, through the chair, please.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, you know that what I am saying is absolutely the truth. Sometimes they attack. In fact, they sue corporations. They're in multiple lawsuits. Multiple lawsuits. I know that I've heard from the third party on numerous occasions about some of their concerns around the type of lawyers that they hire in these types of situations. Let me tell you that what's happening right now is more than disappointing for Albertans; it's frightening, because they're spending hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars to sue companies that had legal contracts in this province that are owned by Calgarians. Calgarians are likely to see, if it proceeds, quite possibly a 4 per cent hike in their property tax, which is what we've heard the mayor of Calgary say.

7:40

At every single turn with respect to our energy market and our electricity market this government has acted recklessly. I can tell you that the members on the other side believe that there's no trouble on the horizon, but we are headed to a big wreck. This is a $7 billion gamble on our electricity market, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: How much?

Mr. Cooper: Seven billion, with a "b."

In fact, those weren't just my words about the $7 billion gamble; those were respected columnist Chris Varcoe's words. It is really quite something else to see this government that has this train on a track that's headed towards a bridge that is on fire. What is quite likely to happen – and I can tell you that this isn't the holiday train they're driving. It's a train wreck they're driving. It's a train wreck. [interjections] I've got all night, Madam Speaker. Remember to tip your waitress.

Let me tell you that it's unfortunate that the government is committed to putting Albertans at risk, because what Bill 34 does is exactly that. What Bill 34 does is exactly that. It is writing a blank cheque for the Balancing Pool to try to cover the mistakes of this government.

I can tell you that if you've been in the House at all lately, Madam Speaker – and I know that you have because I would never refer to the absence of a member – I know that you've been here when my hon. colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has spoken at length efforting to get through to the government. It's not just about talking; it's about letting Albertans know exactly the problems that are being created by this government.

As we move towards the end of this session, I hear from more and more Albertans and more and more folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that are just asking this government to put a pause on legislation just like this. The good news is, Madam Speaker, that right now, this evening, this government has a chance to do that.

We've seen a very reasonable amendment from the third party that would require the government to do an economic impact assessment, to provide information to Albertans on just exactly what the costs are going to be. But, like we've seen time and time and time again, this government isn't interested in listening to concerned Albertans. They're interested in heading headlong over a cliff, some, like my hon. colleague – or at least my colleague – from Strathmore-Brooks, might say a fiscal cliff, a fiscal cliff that ends in disaster, with the tax burden on Albertans skyrocketing, with the debt on Albertans skyrocketing, with power bills of Albertans skyrocketing.

Madam Speaker, I don't know what got into the government during the break. I don't know what happened between 6 and 7:30, but it sounds like for the very first time in a long time they're listening. They're listening, and they're paying attention, and they're hearing and acknowledging that what we are on is a path that doesn't end well for taxpayers. It doesn't end well for Albertans.

Mr. Nixon: How does it end?

Mr. Cooper: It ends with every single Albertan having a significantly higher amount of debt. You know what, Madam Speaker? I would love to give you what that number is, but you know what the problem is? They don't know because in this piece of legislation, Bill 34, they've written themselves – what? – a blank cheque. That blank cheque provides an incredible amount of latitude to the Balancing Pool. I'd just like to remind you: do you know why the Balancing Pool needs a blank cheque? They need a blank cheque because this government created a mess. This government has been in power for long enough to at least read contracts and didn't. So now they're suing the people of Calgary. They're borrowing unlimited amounts of money for the Balancing Pool. It's more than a bit disappointing; it's frightening. And the Government House Leader knows it.

Madam Speaker, I know that when I look across the dinner table at my children, certainly my nine-year-old – and many in this House will know my children. From time to time I like to share a story about them. Every time I share a story about them, it's true. I know that at Halloween I was teaching my kids about taxes, obviously, which every good dad – I was also teaching them about socialism when I took all of the nine-year-old's candy and then gave a bunch to the littlest. He's, like: "Whoa. I went out and did all the trick-or-treating. How come she gets some?" And I was explaining the concept of socialism, where even though one person does all the work, you can divide up all of those, say, revenues so that everyone has it equally. He was a little concerned about this principle.

But, you know, I want to make sure that I'm being relevant to Bill 34 tonight, so let's get back to the very important issue of taxes and how taxes are going to be going up because of this government. I mean, we've seen it at every turn. They haven't seen a tax that they don't want to increase, with one exception. I will give them that. With one exception. They listened to a recommendation from the Wildrose about reducing small-business tax, and for that, we say thank you.

Mr. Nixon: They didn't thank us for that.

Mr. Cooper: No. They didn't thank us, but we've thanked them. We've said thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Sometimes I wonder who's on first, but that's fine.

Speaking to 29(2)(a)? Please go ahead.

7:50

Mr. Nixon: Yeah, absolutely. Great. That went by very, very fast, that 15 minutes, Madam Speaker. I thoroughly enjoyed the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I particularly liked the concept of pause as he was referring to this reasoned amendment, you know, and the need to pause. Sometimes pausing is a good thing. I think you can think of examples in your life where if you paused for a few seconds, you ended up not making a worse mistake. [interjection] I know that maybe the postsecondary minister is used to making mistakes, but I'm not.

Earlier today I was calling my twins, 10 years old today.

Mr. Cooper: Speaking of which, isn't it their happy birthday today?

Mr. Nixon: That's right. I called them when we had the supper break to wish them a happy birthday, and if they're watching, I will through you, Madam Speaker, say happy birthday to Austin and Chyanne Nixon. We were talking about how cold it was on the farm, back home by Sundre. It's well below minus 30, so I was concerned for my favourite horse, Tank, which I've talked about in this Chamber many times.

Now, I know everybody laughs. I know that the Sergeant-at-Arms' staff love to hear stories about Tank, and I haven't talked about Tank in a while. Let me first assure you, Madam Speaker, in case you do not know, that Tank has earned his name. He's a big guy, okay? He carries me, and he's a great horse. I love him very much. I wanted to make sure the kids had given him extra feed today when it was that cold.

The reason I think about it when I hear the concept of pausing is that Tank knows where you are in the house. I don't know how he knows that. He comes up to the fences with his grain bowl, and he shakes it. If you're on the living room side of the house, there's lots of room, but if you go to the bottom of our house on the walkout side, what we call the family room, if he goes in there, he gets stuck in this kind of side fence thing. He'll sit there shaking his grain bin, convinced that we're going to come outside. Now, my daughter is convinced that she's trained him to do that. What happens is that my daughter goes out to give him grain, and I tried to explain to her that, actually, Tank has trained her to come outside and give him grain. Then he gets so excited that he's in this thing that he doesn't pause to figure out how to get out of it, and he keeps running at the dead end on the fence, and he's stuck in there.

An Hon. Member: He's a horse.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. But when you manage to whistle at him and get him to just stop for a second, then it dawns on him that all he has to do is take two or three steps back and back out, and he's not stuck in the corner anymore. Then the now 10-year-old will give him as much grain as he wants, and Tank is happy. When Tank is happy, I'm happy because I like Tank.

I think the hon. member had a valuable point. Just like Tank, it might be time for the government just to go: "Whoa. Wait a minute. Seven billion dollars. Whoa. Whoa. Just take a few moments."

An Hon. Member: Where's the wheat?

Mr. Nixon: He doesn't like wheat, Madam Speaker.

Just like I whistle at Tank and say, "Whoa," and he stops, the government should take the hon. member's comments and go:

"Okay. Wait a minute here. What's going on? What is going on? What is this $7 billion going to do to the people of Alberta?" So I wonder if you can expand a little bit more on the need to go: whoa.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. I was thinking to myself that Bill 34 and whoa-ing are virtually the same thing. Madam Speaker, my hon. colleague has a very good point. This reasoned amendment – you know, you remind me a little bit of Penn and Teller, I think. Sorry. I got a little sidetracked there.

This is a chance for this government to say, "Whoa," to put the brakes on, to step back from the edge, to allow all Albertans to provide feedback. This is a very reasoned amendment on why Bill 34 should not proceed, and I encourage all members present and all members that may or may not be to vote in favour of this amendment and say whoa to Bill 34.

I look forward to hearing from my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre because I'm sure he has some comments as well.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is going to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Speaker. It's great to have the opportunity to rise this evening and talk about Bill 34, in particular the reasoned amendment that we're here to discuss. I thank the hon. member from the third party for bringing forward this important amendment. I think it is a very reasonable amendment. I think it's important that this House takes the time to consider why the member brought forward this amendment, what the need is for a reasoned amendment. I think that as we look at Bill 34, it's pretty clear that this bill is just basically coming forward because the government has to cover its tracks in the debacle that they made out of the PPA situation, that we've seen over the last little while.

The biggest problem I have with Bill 34, and the reason I think that we need a reasoned amendment on it, is that the bill itself is completely and utterly irresponsible to the people of Alberta, the people that have sent us here to protect them, to stand up for the people of Alberta and to manage the business of this province. Of course, the cabinet, that sits across from me, Madam Speaker, has the ultimate responsibility for that. Because of the mess that they've made with the PPAs at the beginning of their term and throughout their term, they've ended up in a situation now where they've essentially got to come up with, you know, upwards of $7 billion just to begin to fix that situation, using a bill that puts in place no checks, no accountability, no public forum required to explain the minister's request for funding, just a blank cheque to the Balancing Pool for an undisclosed amount of money.

Now, I think that, first, that is what we should start with, the concept of a blank cheque. We've seen with the NDP government, since they've taken power, that over and over and over they have come to this Assembly and have asked for blank cheques. Bill 6 would come to mind, the idea that they just wanted to pass that and remove exemptions for certain farmers and ranchers and that, in exchange, they wanted the opposition just to trust them that they would get the regulations side of that right later. And the people that we represent in our communities – our friends, our neighbours, our family members, often some of our other hon. colleagues – should just trust them that they will get that right. "It's going to be okay, Opposition. Don't worry. Don't worry; it's going to be all right."

I will note now that last year at this time we were discussing Bill 6. Right about now. We might have been just done, Madam

Speaker. We're now a year later, and we still don't have the regulations situation fixed. We're still hearing complaints about the panels that have been put forward. We're still hearing concerns from the farmers and ranchers inside our province. That was as a result, again, of a blank cheque request from the NDP government trying to govern and put rules in place, in that particular case, for people and, you know, not including the people that they wanted to legislate in the process.

Now, here we are again, back here in this House about a year later, and again the government has come here and said to the opposition: give us a blank cheque.

Mr. Cooper: A blank what?

Mr. Nixon: A blank cheque. Give us a blank cheque, with no accountability, no controls in place, no proper explanations, all of it being put in place to try to be a stopgap or try to fix the problem that was created by this very government.

Now, I have to ask myself, and I think that you would, too, Madam Speaker, on behalf of your constituents: why would you want to give another blank cheque to this government? What has this government done to show that they could be, quite frankly, capable of dealing with another blank cheque? They still haven't fixed some of the things I just raised from the last time that they asked about a blank cheque.

The concept, though, of that is extremely important because they're asking Albertans to just trust them with a blank cheque, an unlimited amount of money, no clear rules or regulations put in place from this House to hold the government accountable for how they spend that money or how much of that money would be used, all this at a time when the government, in regard to this area that now requires all this money, is suing Alberta-owned companies, is suing Alberta municipalities.

The concept of trust: I have to say, Madam Speaker, that with the constituents I represent in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, I don't find a lot of people left there that trust the government. The idea is that they would want us to stand up and say: "Yeah, it's going to be okay although you didn't provide us, really, with any reports or justification why you want this. You've created the problem, and you've shown no ability in the past on other legislation to be able to handle a blank cheque." To say, "Opposition, just stand up and give us another blank cheque; it's going to be okay this time," I don't know about you, but I certainly don't feel very comfortable doing that. I just don't.

The NDP raised taxes on power companies with no regard for the consequences both in the law and on the ratepayers across the province. Our responsibility, Madam Speaker, is to the people of Alberta. They're the ones who pay the bills for this place. They're the ones who keep the electricity on while we're here debating late at night. They're the ones who pay the bills for the needs all across this province.

When we're dealing with this issue of power, if we look at other provinces in our country, we are already seeing significant problems in other jurisdictions that have gone there before us. Recently we saw the Premier of Ontario apologize – and to her credit, I think – for the mess that got made with their power system, and the ultimate consequence of that mess was to the people of Ontario, who have outrageous power bills because of the decisions of the Ontario Premier.

So we have to ask ourselves as we're debating these bills here: what happened in that other jurisdiction? What went wrong? How is this government, who's shown no ability to handle a blank cheque and who's suing corporations, trying to break contracts that were made by previous governments, going to ensure that our ratepayers, our taxpayers, the good people of the province of Alberta, are not going to get stiffed with outrageous power bills, just like they did in Ontario?

That is not an unreasonable question, and lots of people are asking it. I suspect people that voted for the NDP are asking that. I certainly know that people who voted for the opposition parties are asking that. Definitely the Wildrose members are getting asked that. I assume members of the third party, through you, Madam Speaker, are getting asked the same question.

It's concerning – it's concerning – because ultimately we need to know what the costs to our constituents will be over the long term for the decisions that we make inside this Chamber, particularly when we're already seeing a situation where so many people in our province have lost work, where people are losing homes and jobs and are facing tough times because of the economic downturn. They're already facing drastic tax increases because of this government's ideological policies. They're already seeing the energy industry suffering because of concerns about investing in our energy industry in Alberta because of this government's policies.

Again, now they're going to go to the opposition, who represent those people, and say: "It's going to be okay. Just give us a blank cheque. Give us a blank cheque." I've got to say, Madam Speaker, that I don't think you would be comfortable giving the government a blank cheque either given that in the last few months they've attempted to or are ripping up existing contracts between the province and corporations. How does that give trust to the people of Alberta? I don't know. I can't see in those actions any trust from the people of Alberta.

I don't see any reason why the opposition should support this amendment from a government that has already shown, as I've said before, that it can't be trusted with a blank cheque, that has shown itself not capable of following through on other legislation that they forced on the people of Alberta, that is now suing people and corporations and municipalities in our province that are associated with stuff associated with Bill 34, who have provided no research or documentation or evidence on the amount that this will cost the people of Alberta in future years. Instead, they expect the members opposite to just take their word for it.

Now, I'm sure that in some cases it may be fair that opposition members may just take the government's word for certain things but certainly not on a bill that's going to cost at least $7 billion, by some estimates, at the same time that we're going to see property taxes go up in the city of Calgary because of the carbon tax, that we're going to see the cost of fuel go up in my constituency because of the carbon tax, that we're seeing businesses in my constituency shut down because of the minimum wage mess, that we're seeing youth unemployment go up because of the minimum wage situation.

So if you take that and then you put in this reasoned amendment, we have to ask ourselves, I would say, Madam Speaker: why would we stand up and vote for this legislation? Instead, it clearly needs to go back to the drawing board. It clearly needs to go back, to hold up, take a pause, have a look at the situation, and go from there.

The reason this is relevant to this reasoned amendment, Madam Speaker, is that there are other situations that we've had already in this Legislature, in the 29th Legislature, when the opposition has said, "Whoa; hold up; let's talk about this a little bit," and the government has listened and had a discussion and a dialogue with the opposition, and the government ended up making situations less bad or ended up stopping what would have been, clearly, a mistake and an affront to the people of Alberta.

We've talked lots in the last few days about the government's decision not to proceed with a campaign funding subsidy, which was a good decision. That's a decision, again, where they heard from the opposition, and they went: okay. Granted, it took a while, Madam Speaker. I think it took several months of long discussions between the opposition and the government, but in the end the government made the right decision on behalf of the people of Alberta. That's because the opposition did their work. If the opposition didn't do their work over the summer, the government in this case would have brought in motions and legislation that would have put in a campaign subsidy.

So now here we are back with another bill. We're back with another bill, and you've got opposition members from all parties saying: "Okay. Hold on. Let's talk about this. Let's make sure that we're not making a mistake or that we're not making things worse for the people of Alberta." I don't think that's unreasonable. I don't see anything unreasonable about that. I can think of situations in my life where I have paused or my family has taken a pause and looked at the situation and went: "You know what? That's probably not the best idea. Maybe we should adjust that. Maybe we should talk a little bit more with the people that are involved in it, the people that are going to be impacted by it."

Maybe we should gather a little more evidence on what the consequences may or may not be to the people of Alberta because, ultimately, we're entrusted by the people of Alberta to get this right. You would agree with that, Madam Speaker. I think the government members would agree that that is our responsibility. I certainly know that my hon. colleagues would agree with that as our primary responsibility.

Instead, though, time and time again, Madam Speaker, I find myself having to rise in this Assembly and caution the government to slow down the legislation that they keep moving through. More often than not they don't do the right thing, like they did with the campaign subsidy, and they bulldoze right through it. They proceed with the legislation, and then we end up with the drastic consequences on the people that I represent and on people all across this province.

Maybe when the government can finish some of the projects they've already started, maybe when they can get the panels done with Bill 6 and they can make sure that farmers and ranchers aren't having to deal with the terrible situation that's been created now for over a year, maybe when they stop suing corporations, maybe when they stop bringing forward taxes that are putting a tremendous burden on the people of our province, the people who I know, Madam Speaker, just like in my riding and in your riding, people that are losing jobs, that are struggling to make ends meet – they are now about to face drastic increases in their heating costs, drastic increases in their vehicle costs, drastic increases in the cost of everything from the indirect costs.

Often this government forgets that when they're raising the cost of fuel, this raises the cost of everything in our society – everything – from the care to the grocery stores to the iPads that the members are enjoying tonight or laptops or earphones or whatever we use tonight, the binder I use. I don't want to use a prop, of course, Madam Speaker. It raises the cost of everything. And now the legislation that we are debating in the final days of this sitting has the real risk, with the true evidence from other jurisdictions, in our province of raising the cost of Albertans' power bills.

Madam Speaker, the reason we need a reasoned amendment on this and that this should pass is that this government has to start to acknowledge that their policies are putting a tremendous burden on the people of Alberta. They are putting a tremendous burden on the people of my constituency and your constituency and their constituencies. They are raising the cost of everything.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Please go ahead, hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think it's been a very lively and totally interesting discussion. It reminds me of a couple of years ago. We had a different team in here, and there was a similar type of event that took place. It was quite interesting to watch, and a lot of people were getting a lot of entertainment out of it.

I know that the hon. member here has mentioned something that's near and dear to my heart, and that's horses. He's got some great things to say about horses. Earlier on we were talking about "whoa," and I'm thinking "whoa," too, because I know for my operations that I'm going to be paying more for power bills and so on and so forth in the next few weeks. I know the hon. member will be paying more to maintain his horse, to heat the trough and keep things from freezing up. I wonder if the hon. member would like to talk a little bit as well about the power company he deals with and how much more he expects that he's going to have to pay in the ensuing months and years because of this bill. [interjections] Perhaps he can enlighten us on how much more he's going to have to pay to water his horse than what he is now.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the hon. member for the question. I did hear some great comments as he was speaking. Well, I don't know about great comments but interesting comments from the government as he was speaking to the effect that, to answer his question, I should get solar panels on my place. I already have a couple of solar panels, to be honest. They help with my electric fences, with the heater I put in the water for the horses, although at this time of year even that can't quite keep up when it's this cold. I think it was well below, as I said, minus 30 at home today. But that, I think really shows – that comment from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is concerning because it's very similar to what the hon. Premier said today, and that is that the carbon tax essentially will force Albertans to make better choices. That's a little bit insulting.

Over time we may see things change. I actually think my house is fairly efficient. I do own a large property, so there's more stuff. There are more shops to heat, that type of stuff, watering facilities to heat for livestock. But I don't have a full-fledged farm operation like most of my neighbours do and, of course, that will even increase that. They're pretty concerned, back in my community, about how much power bills are going to go up, particularly when they see what is happening to our cousins in Ontario. They're certainly asking themselves right now: is this government putting in policies that are going to force us into the same situation, with astronomical electricity costs?

They already are putting us in a situation where our fuel costs are going through the roof. Our fuel costs are going to go through the roof. Our heating costs on our homes are going through the roof. And some of our communities – Hanna, for example; the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler represents the great community of Hanna – is almost being wiped out, when you go down there, absolutely petrified people because of this government's coal policy.

So that's all happening in many communities that we represent, but not just to us. Many members on the other side of the aisle represent communities that are suffering because of the decisions of this government. If the power bills are now going to go up on top of that, how much more do we want Albertans to take? Are the Premier and her members suggesting, by her comment to make better choices, that the people back in Sundre or Rocky Mountain House should just turn the heat off to their houses today, in minus 30? I mean, I can't see her suggesting that, but that's what it sounds like when she says that we should make better decisions. Should we not put heaters in the water for our livestock and let their water freeze over? Of course not.

We're still going to have to use energy. Some of the members represent very different constituencies than I, and that's fine. You might be able to use different types of vehicles in that constituency, but you're not driving down the driveway at my house in a Smart car. You're just not going to get down it, particularly at this time of the year. I'll have to come and push you the rest of the way down the driveway so that you can get there, and then you're going to come into my warm house, that I'm heating while paying the carbon tax.

I think that the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod has a very fair question of what this is going to mean, you know, not just for us in this House but for the people of Alberta, who are often currently suffering terribly because of some of the government's decisions. Increased power bills and the consequences from the decisions that could come from these pieces of legislation that we're debating right now in this House will make life worse for many Albertans. It will take money out of many Albertans' pockets. It will prevent vacations and certain things that they will do with their kids. It'll will prolong retirement. It'll raise the cost of raising livestock. It'll raise the cost of bringing 4-H calves to sale. It'll raise the cost of everything.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, any time we in this Legislature have a bill come before us, unless, of course, that bill is completely frivolous, there's always a reason for it, and it behooves us all as legislators to ask the question: why? Why are we even looking at any particular piece of legislation that comes before us? The last thing Albertans need is laws for the sake of laws. They've got quite a few, and not all of them are real good.

We have before us right now Bill 34, which is essentially going to give the Balancing Pool unlimited financial resources to cover losses that the Balancing Pool is going to experience.

One of the things that I have come to understand from the responses from the other side of the House is that the members opposite either have not read their electricity bill or don't understand what it's telling them. We've heard repeatedly from the other side: well, Albertans are protected now because there's a cap on the regulated rate option, the RRO. Well, news flash: the cost that shows up on your electricity bill for consumption is just one of many line items on your electricity bill, and some of those line items are not directly related to your consumption whatsoever.

So having a cap on the RRO does not protect Albertans from price volatility in the all-in price of electricity, especially when we have a situation occurring in our Balancing Pool where it is hemorrhaging money. Some estimates are in the neighbourhood of about $70 million a month. It wasn't all that long ago that the Balancing Pool had a net balance of over $700 million. If memory serves me correctly, it was $709 million – $709 million – and because of this government's mishandling of the PPA file, that has been eroding to the tune of some $70 million each and every month.

Now, as it goes, of course, the Balancing Pool by mandate is not in a position where they can just absorb losses to infinity. Those losses are going to have to be passed along to Albertans at some point in time. The government, of course, does not want to have Albertans see their electricity bills go up, so thinking that they were going to protect themselves – that is, the government – from the embarrassment of seeing electricity bills go up, they've capped the RRO at 6.8 cents for the next four years.

But what they then had to do was to somehow protect the Balancing Pool and keep it whole. That brings us around to the reason for the bill that we have before us right now, Bill 34. To protect the government's image in their claims, their repeated claims, that their climate action plan, their renewables electricity plan of 30 per cent by 2030 are not going to result in increased electricity bills, in order to maintain that narrative, the government capped the RRO. However, all those other line items still come into play. The Balancing Pool has to account for its losses in some manner.

Again, the government – and I've got to hand it to them – did some very creative Enron accounting here. They simply said: look, we are going to backstop the Balancing Pool with an unlimited line of credit to the Balancing Pool. Now, in the world of bookkeeping this is how it will look: the Balancing Pool will have a debt that they owe, but on the government's books a debt owed the government is an asset. So whatever the debt is that the Balancing Pool runs up, it doesn't show as a debt to the government; it actually shows as an asset. Brilliant. It's going to be raising the net assets of the government. All the while the government is in reality sinking Albertans deeper in debt. Brilliant.

Andersen accounting would be proud of this government. How many of them ended up in prison, hon. member? It was two or three, I think, from those shenanigans. The American Securities and Exchange Commission did more than just slap them on the hands. Here's the reason why that method of accounting became known as Enron accounting, because it presented an untrue picture of Enron's health as a corporation. And that's precisely what this measure is going to do. Because the government of Alberta can show this as an asset, it's going to present an untrue picture of the net assets of the province; in other words, the health of the province. Not only is it brilliant; it's also skulduggery in the true sense of the word.

An Hon. Member: Skulduggery?

Mr. MacIntyre: Skulduggery, yes. It's a pirate term. For those of you who . . . [interjections] No, I was not a pirate, but don't look real hard.

Madam Speaker, the result is that this government has very creatively attempted to pull the wool over the eyes of the Alberta public by extending an unlimited, uncapped amount of money to the Balancing Pool to cover whatever debts the pool is going to incur. Yes, the pool will have now a debt on its ledger, a debt owed.

But the government has even gone a step further and said to the pool: look, guys, we're going to give you 14 years to pay that back. In other words, that's going to be 14 years of having an asset show on the government's books. Quite frankly, the reason why that thing has no cap on it is because, I believe – and, granted, this is conjecture, but I haven't been far off as I've been following what this government has been doing. I and my colleagues have pegged it all the way along. We were charging that this government was going to go to a capacity market a way, way, way long time ago, and here we are today.

An Hon. Member: What's wrong with that?

Mr. MacIntyre: There are lots of things wrong with that, and we will get to that later. Stay tuned. Stay tuned.

Back to Bill 34, that we have before us. Fourteen years the Balancing Pool will have to pay that debt back, a debt that has at this moment no limitations. It makes me wonder: what more is this government going to do to the Balancing Pool that they would have to give the Balancing Pool a lending limit with no limit? What else is coming down the pipe here?

An Hon. Member: Oil.

An Hon. Member: Bitumen.

Mr. MacIntyre: Not to the Balancing Pool, no. That doesn't work in the Balancing Pool, hon. member. Read your electricity bill.

Madam Speaker, it is deeply concerning to myself and to others that we have a situation where the government is extending an unlimited amount of credit, which does provide the government with an asset offsetting the government's books, making them look a lot healthier than they really are. As brilliant as that bookkeeping might be, in the United States that would not be allowed, but here in Canada in this government, of course, that would be allowed. It's very unfortunate. Nevertheless, it is still a questionable practice to be doing this, especially when the Balancing Pool already has in place a mechanism that has been there from the beginning.

An Hon. Member: That sticks it to consumers.

Mr. MacIntyre: Does the hon. member think that the consumers and the ratepayers and the taxpayers are three different people? It matters not how you stick it to them. You are sticking it to them. If you're not sticking it to them on their electric bill, you're sticking it to them as a ratepayer, or you're sticking it to them as a taxpayer. But one way or the other, Member, you're sticking it to Albertans. There's only one person in Alberta that pays the bill.

Mr. Schmidt: I know where you should stick it.

Mr. MacIntyre: Point of order. Madam Speaker, that is definitely a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: Would you like to speak to the point of order, Member?

Mr. MacIntyre: He's not even in the room.

The Acting Speaker: All right. We were having such a good start to our evening. If we could please try to control our comments back and forth to each other and the tone of the evening so that we can move forward on these discussions in a more positive manner, I would appreciate it.

Hon. member, if you would like to continue with your debate, please.

Mr. MacIntyre: There was a point of order, madam.

The Acting Speaker: Please, go ahead.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Unfortunately, we have a minister that is on his way out of the Chamber. I probably need to say sorry for referring to the absence of the minister, but here we are.

The minister said: you know where you can stick it. I don't have the Blues available to me, but that is pretty inflammatory, and I will say that, if anything, it definitely is 23(h), (i), and (j). How exactly is it that a sitting minister thinks that's appropriate language in the House, especially at this time of evening? I'm hoping that the minister is able to speak on the fact that this is just something that – we want to have lively debate, there's no doubt, but this is not lively. This is not constructive. This is very unfortunate, that the minister feels this is the right way to go with it. We are trying to make sure that all Albertans are hearing our concerns, and this is taking up time of debate, when we can be actually dealing with something that is important like Bill 34 and explaining how bad this bill is.

Madam Speaker, I encourage you to rule that minister out of order.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, I retract my statement.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, would you like to continue?

Debate Continued

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To continue, as I began, with why we have this bill before us and explain some of the reasons why we have this bill before us, it is abundantly clear that the government is attempting to cloud from the people of Alberta a reality, a reality that this government's mishandling of the electricity file is going to be costing Albertans hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is abundantly clear to me that the government is terrified to have that charge show up on our electricity bills because, as opposed to perhaps some members on the opposite side who may not read their electricity bills, there are lots of Albertans who do, especially commercial users and industrial users, whose electricity bills are massive. They pay very close attention to their electricity bill. It's in the tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars each and every month, and they watch those bills closely, looking for every and any opportunity to save money, to make their businesses more efficient.

8:30

Here we have a bill before us that will effectively cloud from Albertans a sobering reality that this government doesn't want Albertans to face. What's rather strange is that by the government's own estimations, on residential bills at least, the charge that would be indicated may only be less than $3. Some independent estimates are in the $2 range as well, but it's not particularly a great sum of money, yet the government wants our people to not know that, that their mistake is costing them anything.

Now, up until recently Albertans were receiving a credit on their electricity bill. That credit has been there for a very, very long time. The total amount of money returned to Albertans is in the many hundreds of millions of dollars through that line item as the Balancing Pool was being profitable in its operation and passing the profit on to you and to me. Now for the first time Albertans are going to start seeing a charge, or they would ordinarily have seen a charge, but the government doesn't want that. So we have this bill where the government will lend the Balancing Pool all the money they need, but: do not show losses on Albertans' power bills.

Now, I would surmise that because the charge on a residential customer is actually going to be so low – I can't see that that would have been necessarily a motivation for the government to attempt to hide that reality from Albertans, but then when I was looking at some of the commercial and industrial bills that constituents of mine have, that painted a very different picture. Now we're looking at a situation where the Balancing Pool would have to put on a commercial customer's or an industrial customer's bill thousands and thousands of dollars that weren't there before. Now I can understand.

All right. We come back again to the reason for this bill. This government doesn't want to appear antibusiness, so they are afraid of showing the true cost of their mismanagement to the business community and the industrial community, which would show up on their bills. Instead, the Balancing Pool is going to have an unlimited supply of borrowing, and they can amortize this thing out over 14 years. I believe this government is hoping and praying that the Balancing Pool will get back into the black again and be able to pay down over time the debt that they owe the government.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Very interesting. You know, it's an honour to serve with a gentleman that has the knowledge that our friend from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has. He knows more about electricity than a lot of people, I've got to say, probably a lot of people in this House. We're honoured to have him here, and we're lucky to have him here. He is able to speak about just about anything that can go on with electricity without a note in front of him.

You know, there are some things with Bill 34 that we have heard over and over and over, but I really would like to hear the member's take on PPAs if he would be interested at all in talking about PPAs: a lot of issues going on there with the government suing many companies over contracts, not a position that we like to see a government in, and maybe the consequences of their actions.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, of course, the whole reason that we have Bill 34 before us is because of the mismanagement of the PPAs to begin with. What is rather interesting about those PPAs is that they had a fixed life to them, and we were approximately 16 years along in those PPAs with, give or take, about four years to go, just four years left to run them out.

The consequence of the government moving ahead as quickly as they did is that what would have taken care of itself in just four years is now stretching out beyond a decade. Had the PPAs just kind of trucked along and run their natural course, it would have been done, and it would not have resulted in this mess that we are faced with right now. It would not have amounted to the multibillion-dollar fiasco that we currently have before us, with all of the different ramifications we are now seeing, on account of the mishandling of the PPA file to begin with. Had the government just cooled their jets when they got into power and let the PPAs run their natural course, it would have saved Albertans billions and billions of dollars. Billions of dollars. We would not have issues with stranded assets. We would not have issues where we've got to lend the Balancing Pool money. We would not have an issue with the Balancing Pool hemorrhaging like they have been. All of that could have been prevented.

That's the frustrating part of this entire mess the government has made of our electricity system. It was all entirely preventable. Industry experts and myself and other people who were watching this, consultants that I know, colleagues of mine, everyone was saying to the government: "Stop. Whoa. Hold it. You're making an enormous mistake here. Just let things run their natural course." But no. No. The government really thought they knew better, better than the people who have been in this business for a long time, experts who've forgotten more than I'll ever know, the guys in the industry that live with this each and every day. This government refused to listen to any of them and just pushed on ahead anyway.

Now here we are, one mistake after another, causing a crisis. Like they say, crisis management: you're running from crisis to crisis to crisis, and the solutions you put in place to deal with one crisis actually cause the next crisis. That's crisis management. It results in businesses and governments crashing to the ground. Here we have Bill 34, and I've got to say that we're not done yet. This government is not done messing with the electricity system. There's going to be more. Every time they make another move, it's another billion, another two billion.

They don't seem to care that the reality is that those great big numbers fall on the backs of just one population: Albertans. You can call them consumers, you can call them ratepayers, you can call them taxpayers, but ultimately it's the moms and dads of this province.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, this is a very saddening bill that's being moved forward. I'd like to start with exactly how it was brought into the House. I would like to start with Hansard, November 29, 2016, page 2114. This is when it was introduced for first reading.

Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Electric Utilities Amendment Act, 2016. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

The proposed bill would enable the government of Alberta to manage the impacts of the coal power purchase arrangements on the Balancing Pool and provide consumers with stable electricity prices.

I didn't see anywhere in there where it said unlimited borrowing. That actually sounds really good. I want that. I don't want this.

8:40

I'll tell you, it comes down to the fact that when we're looking at the Balancing Pool, it was something that was working before. Now we've got a government that decided that they know how to do this better, that they know how to do it better than Ontario. Yet here we are. We're looking at an unlimited line of credit with the government.

Now I'd like to go to the Balancing Pool website. It's balancingpool.ca. This is where I'm getting a lot of my information from. Specifically, I would like to go to the 2014-2019 strategic plan, but let's start off with a few things first. Let's start off with the mission statement, which is right on the website.

The Balancing pool supports the transition to a fair, efficient, and openly competitive electricity market in Alberta by performing the duties and responsibilities set out in its mandate including managing the risks and maximizing the value of the assets held on behalf of Alberta's electricity consumers.

There are a few things here that I would be nervous with being on the board. I don't think it's a coincidence that we had 4 out of 5 board members resign because, in the end, this mandate no longer is achievable. We're never going to see, in my opinion, this Balancing Pool back in an asset position, just a liability position.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I apologize for interrupting, but we are speaking on the amendment.

Mr. Cyr: Absolutely.

The Acting Speaker: I just want to make sure that you're talking about the amendment and not debating the actual contents of the bill right now.

Mr. Cyr: Absolutely, the reasoned amendment, Madam Speaker.

When we start reviewing exactly what it is that we're moving forward, is this Balancing Pool still doing what it's been mandated to do? That is the big question here because this is not what it was set up to be, a great big bank for the government.

I know that I'm uncomfortable with ABCs having unlimited ability to borrow money because we're starting to move away from the government taking it upon itself to have unlimited borrowing to now giving it to its agencies. This is frightening because, in the end, we're not going to know exactly how much the government owes. The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has been very clear that this is a practice that is avoided in other jurisdictions. Why would we want to practice that here? I'm uncertain.

When we start looking at the rest of the website here, I would like to say that on the website what we've got – this is something that is important because this is something that they are striving towards. “Avoid a consumer charge”: that's one of the things they wish to do. Okay. Okay. This unlimited debt will avoid a charge. That does seem reasonable here. “Maintain a stable consumer allocation”: well, that will be zero, so that's pretty stable if you've got anything here. “Avoid mid-year adjustments to the allocation”: well, with unlimited debt, there's no reason to. It does seem that when we look at this, the mandate seems to be out, but they do seem to be going through some of the things that they wish to move forward on.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Now, I would argue, going back to the mission statement, that this direction that we're going in is not fair, efficient, or openly transparent. We are looking at new markets, it says here. Well, what does that mean? I guess that we're looking at banking markets. It'll be TD or CIBC or somebody that's borrowing money. There are not going to be any assets to maximize, so it's going to be how much we can prevent debt, which seems to be something that is unavoidable with the government. Lastly and most importantly: responsible to Alberta's electricity consumers. Well, it seems like we have to trash the entire mandate. We have to go – and I'm thinking off the cuff – and get unlimited debt into the incredible future. That's more of a vision statement, I guess.

You get my point that this really isn't responsible. This isn't something that I would consider Albertans to be wanting to move forward. I do understand why the government is hesitant to go with debt caps because it failed once already with the government themselves.

Let's talk about the Balancing Pool when it faces the different concerns that we've got here. They've got three areas of concerns on the website that are in their strategic plan. The first one is “uncertain wholesale power prices.” Now, this is something that the government has been bringing up consistently, saying that the radical adjustments in the power price mean that we should go down this road. Well, that does seem to be a risk. I will say, though, that when it comes to power on my bill, it's never my kilowatt usage that seems to be the problem. It does seem to be the distribution and transmission fees.

The second one is “potential PPA liabilities.” Well, that does seem to be a big concern for this government as now they're suing everybody to get out of their liabilities. That seems to be a good reason to be putting that as a risk.

Uncertain performance of the investments within their portfolio: well, they can get the wrong people managing the money within the accounts, and then they could lose money. That does seem to be reasonable.

Those are the three. I think that what we need to add is a fourth, though. There should be a fourth point: unstable government or NDP government. That needs to be a risk that is identified by these guys because that seems to be the biggest risk that the Balancing Pool has got, and it's not here.

Moving forward here, they go into extraordinary events. Extraordinary events. Now, I will tell you that through my experience working as an accountant, there are different types of events that happen. Extraordinary events are something that would happen once in a generation.

An Hon. Member: Extraordinary.

Mr. Cyr: Extraordinary. That's right. This is exactly what it is.

They do have some strategic initiatives here: “Assess and verify extraordinary events using internal and external expertise. Dispute as required.” Well, it appears that the experts, who are government now, making decisions, are deciding that the PPAs are not the direction we want to go in.

We've got, “Maintain financial reserves to cover potential liabilities,” which seems to be – well, why even bother having that point anymore now that we're going to unlimited debt?

But the last one, this one here, is the one that strikes me as interesting: “Reduce the consumer allocation or invoke a charge should a ‘black swan’ event transpire.” I actually have never heard of a black swan event. I had to look it up. I assumed that I knew what it was. Well, this, I would argue, in this case would be the NDP winning the 2015 election. That would be categorized as a black swan event.

I have a lot more to say about this area, especially about the strategic plan, but – you know what? – I think I'll wait for my next speech. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Any other speakers under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Clark: Actually, I'm going to move one-minute bells, Mr. Speaker. It looks like we may be inching ever closer to a vote, and I would ask for unanimous consent, please, to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Any other speakers to RA1?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment RA1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 8:52 p.m.]

[One minute having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

For the motion:

Aheer	Gill	Nixon
Clark	Hunter	Panda

Gray	McKitrick
Totals:	For – 12	Against – 38

[Motion on amendment RA1 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are back to second reading. Are there any other members wishing to speak to second reading of Bill 34?

Having heard none, the hon. Minister of Energy to close debate.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move that we close at second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole (continued)

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

The Acting Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 35 Fair Elections Financing Act

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am going to move an amendment. I have the appropriate number of copies, and I will provide them to the pages and wait until you tell me to proceed.

The Acting Chair: Okay. This will be referred to as amendment A4. Please proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I am going to move that Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended in section 43 in the proposed section 44.1(1) as follows: (a) in clause (d) by striking out the word "or" at the end of subclause (v) and by striking out subclause (vi); and (b) in clause (g) by striking out again the word "or" at the end of subclause (v) and by striking out subclause (vi).

Mr. Chair, during the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee the government whip, a member who I enjoy working with in this Assembly, introduced a motion similar to this very amendment that I am introducing today. The member's motion in that committee read as follows:

That the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee recommend that [the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act] be amended to ban government advertising during general elections with the exception of ads required for government business that are certified in accordance with a process similar to [Ontario's].

9:00

Well, Ontario's rules are more relaxed than I would be comfortable with and, I think, most of my colleagues would be comfortable with. At least they don't have an exemption which writes the government of the day a blank cheque to spend on advertisement as much as they want. That's exactly, Mr. Chair, what the NDP government of the day in our province is proposing with Bill 35, a blank cheque.

Again, Mr. Chair, I know you probably have seen the pattern, that I have described many times inside this Assembly, of this government over and over asking for blank cheques. But here we are again, government again asking the opposition to provide them with a blank cheque on behalf of the people of Alberta. I think you know – and I know you would agree with me – that you certainly would not want to provide a blank cheque to this government in particular. I think you would agree with that.

I think what's important, though, about my first comments on this is what the government whip said in committee. The government whip moved a motion similar to this motion, which, I would argue and submit to you, shows that the government whip agreed with the opposition caucuses that this was a good direction to go. So I certainly would expect, Mr. Chair, through you to the government whip, and I eagerly await her rising and speaking in support of my amendment. I can't see why she would move an amendment for it in committee and then come to this House only a few short weeks later and say: "No. I changed my mind. I didn't like that." I can't see the member doing that.

With that said, though, Mr. Chair, the last time I sat in committee, the government whip and her fellow colleagues on the NDP side were fighting to get their campaign expenses paid for by taxpayers, and then when we got back after the committee, they had changed their minds about that. So maybe, you know, I'll let the government whip certainly speak for that member's self shortly.

Now, the Ontario Government Advertising Act of 2004, which is what the government whip cited during that debate, reads as follows:

Despite notice or deemed notice that an item meets the standards, a government office shall not publish, display, broadcast, distribute or convey the item during the period beginning with the issue of a writ under the Election Act for a general election and ending on polling day.

Now, unsurprisingly, the government whip then immediately adjourned the member's motion. Immediately. Now, we've talked about it many times in the last couple of days. That was pretty much what happened in the committee: 23 times the government adjourned their own motions.

Now, what happened, of course, Mr. Chair – and I know that you know because you were present at some of those meetings – was that the government would come forward with something, in fact, that was often described by the Member for Calgary-North West as pie in the sky, just numbers that they were reaching for in the air. They would bring it forward, and then good questions would start coming from all over, from all the parties, and then very quickly the government members would look at their laptops, and – I don't know – maybe because the government whip was in there, nobody was giving them instructions on what to say, so then they would adjourn debate. How many times? Twenty-three times. Twenty-three times they adjourned debate – 23 times – one short of two dozen. I'm shocked. I'm sure you are shocked.

Now, I've got to ask, Mr. Chair: how disconnected is the backbench of this government from its front bench? How disconnected is it? Quite frankly, can we even call the government whip really a backbench member? A member of the leadership of her caucus? Clearly, it appears that only the Premier's office is calling the shots. It's shocking: 23 times.

When the government whip brings forward a motion, a good motion, I support it. It's a good idea that we should deal with this issue, and we're going to give the members an opportunity to follow through on what that member proposed right now and do the right thing for the people of Alberta and make sure that we truly, once and for all take big money out of politics. Big money out of politics: I believe in that. I've long said it, many times, in this Assembly. I said it before I was even elected. It's been a big part of the member-driven policy of the Wildrose Party, and the NDP, to their credit, have often pushed for that as well.

I mean, usually we lead; they follow. I like that. So today we're giving you an opportunity again. We're going to lead, and you should follow. If you don't take my word for how good this amendment is, I think you should take, through you, Mr. Chair, to the members across the way, the chief government whip's word for it because I just think that what the member, the chief government whip, brought forward is excellent, and it's what we're going to consider today. We're going to, with this amendment, truly give an opportunity for the government to actually follow through on what they keep saying they're going to do, which is to take big money out of politics.

Let's look at what they've done so far. We've lowered the $15,000 limit, something all parties agree with. Parties on this side of the House tried to lower it to $1,000 at the constituency level. This party raised it to $4,000. A thousand dollars to $4,000 is a drastic increase. A drastic increase. That doesn't sound like they're getting big money out of politics. They like to rise and say: hey, it's the opposition that didn't want to get big money out of politics. Well, we wanted to go to $1,000. You guys wanted to go to $4,000, and that's the legislation that you've brought forward.

But the most glaring amount of big money that is left in politics right now is what this government is spending, is the ability of the government to use the taxpayer purse to attempt to influence elections, to attempt to slant the system in favour of them. Now, in the case of this government it's not going to work. Albertans are wise to them, and when they finally drop the writ, Albertans will deal with that at the ballot box, and I think that they will deal with it in a very drastic way. They're the ones who should. They're the boss.

But is the NDP more interested in entrenching its own advantage than properly managing provincial finances, than properly managing our democracy? This party used to be in opposition. It used to be a relatively small party compared to the opposition parties that are here now. They could be back in that position one day. That's not unreasonable. Governments change. The party across the way knows that governments change. They should be thinking ahead, in my mind, not only to how this will impact their party when they're in opposition but to how this impacts other parties in opposition. If they truly want to take big money out of politics, they should stand with the government whip, like I'm about to, and they should say: let's do this.

Now the difference, Mr. Chair, between the chief opposition whip and the government whip is that I'm not going to adjourn my motion. We are going to vote on the motion, so the members across the way are going to have to stand at some point on the record and make a decision on what they want to do. In committee they adjourned and waited for more feedback from the Premier's office or wherever it comes from on the computers during that. I don't know. I'm giving a little bit of warning, I guess, for the word from the top to come if that's what you guys choose, but I would suggest instead that you stick to the principle that you have articulated, that you have put forward, that the government whip has put forward, rightly so, and that is: let's once and for all take big money out of politics.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Madam Chair, great to see you.

The government has come so close – it has come so close – but along the way it's been distracted. It's been distracted with trying to force through motions in committee to get their campaign expenses paid for, to get their political party campaign expenses paid for. But now we're here in a situation where they don't have to be distracted anymore. They're going to have to make a decision on behalf of their constituents if they truly want to take big money out of politics.

Now, Madam Chair, I know without a doubt that you want to take big money out of politics. I think you share that goal with all of us. I know the government whip clearly shares that goal with all of us and recognizes the importance of dealing with government advertisements in our political system. You know, the NDP spent $750,000 advertising their spring budget. Did you catch that? Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars advertising their spring budget.

An Hon. Member: How many nurses is that?

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. How many nurses is that?

The NDP spent $700,000 advertising the carbon tax in 2015 and another $4.4 million in 2016 advertising a tax that they were putting on the people of Alberta that is going to raise the cost of every product that they buy. That's big money in politics. Now, with this legislation, when it passes, Madam Chair, do you know how much a political party will be capped to spend inside a general election? Through you: does anybody know? I can tell you that it isn't $4.4 million. That sure sounds like big money in politics.

9:10

The members across the way have talked a big game on this, and they have had many opportunities to do the right thing, and they will have another opportunity shortly. The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler gave them a great opportunity with a private member's bill, which was sabotaged inside this Assembly. Then when the press started to ask questions about why the government was making decisions like that, the government used some procedural things to get it back into this Chamber and then, ultimately, put it back to a committee, that voted to be returned and then has not been returned by the majority in this Assembly.

Now, why has it not been returned? Because the members across the way got caught with their hands in the pickle jar, this time – this time – trying to get money for their political campaign expenses, trying to get my constituents and your constituents to pay for the campaign expenses of members across the way. Shocking. It's shocking.

But here we go now. We have another opportunity, an opportunity to do the right thing, an opportunity to stand up and show that you truly believe in getting big money out of politics. If you truly believe in getting big money out of politics – if you truly believe in getting big money out of politics – you will show it right now.

The question that will be asked, specifically on this amendment, at the end is: is the NDP more concerned about the ballooning debt in our society right now, or are they more concerned with using electoral legislation to stack the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about running deficits on operational expenses, or are they more concerned with stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about addressing double-digit unemployment in Calgary or stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about restoring our advantage so that we can now stop losing out on new drilling projects to our neighbours, or are they more concerned with stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about finally fixing our broken FOIP system or stacking the deck?

That's what this amendment gives them, an opportunity to show that they aren't, that they are actually concerned with getting big money out of politics. But so far, each time that they have had the opportunity, even one given to them by their own whip, they have not taken that opportunity. They have not taken that opportunity.

Is the NDP more concerned about trying to improve Alberta's terrible track record on stayed charges and backed-up court rooms, or are they more concerned with this legislation on stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about protecting our wildlife and fisheries? No. What are they concerned about?

Mr. Cooper: Stacking our deck.

Mr. Nixon: It's obvious.

This is the problem that we have here. I want, Madam Chair, to give the government members an opportunity to stand up and prove once and for all that they truly want to get big money out of politics instead of what it certainly appears like, over and over and over, both in committee and today, as they voted down each and every amendment, except for one, that has been brought forward by the opposition. In committee, when they spend all their time trying to get their campaign expenses paid for, to Albertans and to this side of the House it looks like this side of the House is only concerned with stacking the deck. Only concerned with stacking the deck.

Is the NDP more concerned about training more apprentices and journeymen or stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about articulating how they will bring 2,000 new long-term care beds or stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about university grads entering the workforce or stacking the deck? The hon. members across the way are starting to see a pattern.

Why don't we today, led by the government whip and the Government House Leader – I encourage him to lead the way as a leader in his party – stand up and show the people of Alberta that you truly want to get big money out of politics and that you're not attempting to rig the election system and stack the deck in favour of the incumbent government? Stacking the deck.

Is the NDP more concerned about getting unemployed oil field contractors back on the road, or are they just concerned with stacking the deck? Is the NDP more concerned about making the government leaner and more efficient and stop putting debt on my great-grandchildren or – what are they concerned about?

Some Hon. Members: Stacking the deck.

Mr. Nixon: Stacking the deck, Madam Chair.

Is the NDP more concerned about helping our law enforcement keep our families and communities safe or stacking the deck?

This is their opportunity, with this amendment, to show that they are truly concerned about the people of Alberta. So far, as we have dealt with electoral reform in our province, what I have seen from the government is: attempting to get their campaign expenses paid for, attempting to get individual MLAs' campaign expenses paid for, changing the system to punish opposition parties' political structures to the advantage of the incumbent party, making things harder for volunteers to participate in our political process, and getting mad that we won't rubber-stamp them for doing what? Stacking the deck.

It's so obvious to the people of Alberta, Madam Chair. I just don't understand why the NDP won't stand up once and for all and truly show that they are with the government whip, that they are going to stand with the government whip and say: we want big money out of politics, and we expect our party, the governing party of the great province of Alberta right now, to follow the same rules as everybody else.

Is the NDP more concerned about keeping Alberta seniors united or – what?

Some Hon. Members: Stacking the deck.

Mr. Nixon: Stacking the deck.

Is the NDP more concerned about improving transportation and infrastructure or stacking the deck?

This is the opportunity to show that your number one priority is not to stack the deck in an effort to try to make the situation better for you in the election of 2019. I don't know when you'll call it. I'm not sure if you're going to stick with the fixed election law or not, but we'll see.

Is the NDP more concerned about helping our teachers in the classroom, something they say is important – and I agree with them – or their priority to stack the deck?

Some Hon. Members: Stack the deck.

Mr. Nixon: Stack the deck: get their campaign expenses paid for, change the rules to make it hard for political parties, and keep them with the biggest purse in all of politics, the government purse, taxpayer dollars, in an attempt to buy votes. Or they could stand with the government whip and stop stacking the deck.

I'm happy to see, Madam Chair, that the Government House Leader is finally starting to see the pattern. I feel like I'm being listened to tonight. I might be getting through to him. I know that we got through to the government whip during committee. I hope that the government whip is still with us on this important thing, in fact. But, you know, the motion did get adjourned, so maybe the government whip changed their mind when they adjourned the motion for the 23rd time in the committee.

Is the NDP more concerned about encouraging more tourism to our province or stacking the deck? What are you more concerned about: rigging the system, manipulating the law to your advantage, stacking the deck, getting taxpayer money for your campaign expenses, or standing with the opposition and the government whip and getting big money out of politics?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is an honour and a privilege to rise on Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, on a night that we're getting such a poetic conversation going. There's rhythm in the way he's speaking. Of course, I'm honoured to rise and to speak after the opposition whip and to speak a little bit about what we talked about in committee. [interjection] It is dream work. It's a dream to be here because we are making history by putting the democratic process back into Albertans' hands. That's what we're doing here. We're renewing the democratic process, and we have been doing this for over a year. Of course, the committee has worked really hard to get us there.

You know, even in opposition our party has always stood for looking at ways to limit government advertising, and we will continue to do that because we believe it's an important step to making sure that the electoral process is protected.

Of course, what we need to remember, though, is that if we played out this amendment that the member brought forward – this is under the Election Act, so it really doesn't apply to the election finances one. If you were to pass this and to put this in place, then you'd have to ask yourself: who are the contributors, who are the donors to the government advertising, and how would you list those people? It just wouldn't work.

I believe, you know, that the member has a point and has a shared interest with the government in making sure that there are limits put in place, and we're looking forward to working on that. I'm sure the minister responsible for democratic renewal will be looking at this issue as we move forward with the Election Act, because that's where it sits, in the Election Act.

I believe that not only are we looking at that today, but it's also an honour to talk about the fact that we are introducing a bill today that has contribution limits, has spending limits, and introduces items for third-party advertising. Of course, at the end of the day, we want to make sure that these rules apply equally to all parties, and we want to make sure that we're closing the loopholes that allow for big money to influence the political process.

Again, I won't be supporting this amendment from my friend across the aisle, not because we won't be working on this . . .

Mr. Nixon: Whip to whip.

Cortes-Vargas: Whip to whip. But, unfortunately, the whip needs to think about this a little bit more carefully.

We need to look at doing this within the Election Act. It's something that, of course, we have talked about. When we were in opposition, I know that our party talked about how we were going to limit government advertising during election periods, and we will continue to bring that conversation forward because it is important.

I really want to thank the members for their participation in this debate. It's been a lovely evening, and I'm looking forward to our late night together.

That's all, Madam Chair. I'm happy with those statements.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. For those of us on this side it's a pretty tough act to follow Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It's a tough act to follow, but I agree with absolutely everything he said. This government is . . .

Some Hon. Members: Stacking the deck.

Mr. Clark: . . . stacking the deck. I won't try to pull off what he did.

There's no question that they are tilting the scales to their advantage, that they have a thumb on the scale on this. There's no question.

You know, in all sincerity, Madam Chair, I want to just pick up on a couple of things that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park said.

She talked about renewing the democratic process. Really, what we're doing is making the democratic process the New Democratic process. Everything in this bill, especially when you see the better part of $10 million spent by this government not to advertise programs that are available to Albertans but to try to convince Albertans that government policy is a good idea, things like the carbon tax – there's nothing that Albertans can do to take advantage of the carbon tax. All they can do is that they may get a rebate. There's no program to be taking advantage of. There's no public benefit. It's not about reducing drinking and driving, curbing smoking, encouraging helmet use. It is only about the best political interests of government.

So I'm an enthusiastic supporter of this amendment because the government uses their tremendous weight of taxpayer dollars to influence the opinions and views of Albertans, and that's fundamentally wrong. I can tell you that, being on the receiving end of some of that in the 2014 by-election, it's unacceptable. I know that this government knows it's unacceptable in their heart of hearts. Why, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, the hon. Government House Leader, sat in this very spot and railed against nonmajority governments. And if he were here today, I promise you that he would do the same thing. I absolutely promise you. It makes me wonder. How quickly things change when you find yourself on the government side. I am profoundly disappointed that you've done that. It doesn't need to be this way. It does not need to be this way.

The other thing that the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, the chief government whip, had talked about and, in fact, had yelled across the way at me was that one of the reasons it took so long and that the government had to adjourn 23 times was that I had the audacity in the committee to move that we actually step through each one of the recommendations brought to that committee by Albertans through the admittedly not very comprehensive consultation process. But such as it was, we had many, many recommendations from Albertans, and we on that committee owed it to Albertans to consider each and every one of those recommendations.

The ND government side, however, would rather that we had cherry-picked about a half-dozen or so of those, just gone through those and then just completely ignored any of the other recommendations. That included dozens of recommendations from the Chief Electoral Officer.

The job of that committee – that is why that work takes time. Yes, it takes time. Yes, democracy takes time. But it's worth it. It's absolutely worth it. And it is shameful that the government majority on the committee would have thought that we would somehow just be able to cherry-pick through a few recommendations and completely ignore the rest of them, not give them any consideration. I can tell you that we passed many thoughtful motions unanimously as a result of having gone through that. So, yes, it took time, but it took time because it's important work.

What's interesting is that this government agrees that we need to reduce government advertising and eliminate it, certainly, during a campaign period. At least they say that they agree. But the amount of money spent on government advertising by this government in particular reminds me of another government they don't like very much. How many tens of millions of dollars did the Harper Conservatives spend on advertising? How did you folks feel about that? Like the Canada jobs action plan.

Every time you went by one of the old building Alberta plan signs, how did you feel about that? Did you think that was a good idea? Did you go: "Hey, I am thrilled that my tax dollars are being used for this noble purpose. This is wonderful. I think this is great." How many of you, in your heart of hearts, in the last campaign sat in an all-candidates meeting or talked at the doors about the fact that government advertising is wrong? "Doesn't it bother you that these Building Alberta signs show up in empty fields and promise a school that's never going to be built? Yeah, that drives you insane." I know that many of you did that.

But now you find yourself on the government benches, and somehow it's okay. "Oh, it's okay because it's us. It's okay because it's our plan." The amount of money that your government is spending on the carbon tax advertising greatly exceeds the amount of money that was spent on the building Alberta plan signs. You know what? That was one of those bricks in the wall that brought down the previous government. Don't think for one second that Albertans don't see right through that, and they're going to bring you down as well as a result.

This is an opportunity to stop doing that. It's a thoughtful amendment. It's entirely reasonable, and it removes that locked-in government advantage. So I really encourage all members of the House, the government side in particular, to really think hard about supporting this amendment. I know that the front bench likely doesn't want to, but I encourage those of you on the backbenches, those government private members, who have a tremendous amount of power. I don't think you maybe realize sometimes how much power you have. Your job is to represent the views of your constituents, and I think that if you were to ask your constituents if they want you to reduce or eliminate money spent on frivolous government advertising of purely policy programs, not programs or services that Albertans can take advantage of, not truly public service, but trying to convince Albertans that a policy position taken by the government is somehow the right one, that that somehow is an appropriate use of government dollars – it isn't.

This amendment seeks to end that. That's in the best interest of Alberta, that's in the best interest of democracy, and that's in the best interest of the bottom line of this province as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now recognize the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Yes. Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's a privilege to talk this evening on this amendment. I won't even begin to attempt to mimic the southern Baptist, Bible, revival-tent preacher style of the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, with his marvellous antiphonal style of delivery, you know, with the chorus coming back and forth across the Chamber. I think that's a performance that won't soon be repeated, perhaps to the betterment of us all.

Madam Chair, I will say, though, on an entirely serious note, that this is a very important topic. Indeed, it is sort of the issue that when this Bill 35 was first announced, it was the issue that was perhaps first identified by the media as being a critical issue; that is, one that is important, that needs to be dealt with. It needs to be dealt with because, once again, it speaks to the issue of fairness. Now, unfortunately, the government has had a couple of opportunities already to demonstrate that it understands the concept of basic fairness and has failed. Nonetheless, we will continue to try to point out – and especially in this case. I think the Member for Calgary-Elbow makes a very good point.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, whom we miss, is now in a situation where no longer does he righteously rail against these injustices but somehow now has acquiesced to being part of the government caucus. And that is a sad statement. I miss him. I miss him, and I miss his consistent demand for social justice, that was once in this House, that once spoke with such clarity and such passion on issues such as this, and now that voice is somehow muted, somehow muzzled. It is so sad.

While I didn't necessarily agree with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood, nor do I agree with him much even today, I do have a basic respect and admiration for the fact that he was always consistent in his statements defending the right of fairness. That was something that I admired. In fact, the other three of his colleagues that now form part of the government caucus and are part of cabinet – all four of them I always admired because from their position here, where the Member for Calgary-Elbow is now ensconced, those members were always consistent in terms of their ability to articulate a position that demonstrated a basic grasp of social justice. I think that that social justice was something that was an important sort of balancing that we needed here in the Chamber.

So, indeed, it is now disappointing to me that on an issue as fundamental as government advertising during election campaigns, something that is fundamentally unfair, that is fundamentally tipping the scales in the favour of the governing party... [interjections] Well, one might say that. I'm not going to because I think it's been repeated altogether too often. Nonetheless, I would say that this is an issue of fundamental fairness.

Now, some may say that the government needs to communicate with the people of Alberta. I agree one hundred per cent. The government must communicate, and that is important. But at least during the election period that sort of advertising needs to halt for the writ period, for the 28-day period.

I think the Member for Calgary-Elbow correctly points out that the use of advertising can be misused and abused. Once again, it seems like it's mea culpa day over here in the third-party caucus. When that particular bit of advertising went on during the by-elections in October 2014, that was not a proud moment for our party, and that was not a proud moment for democracy. To say it in another way, it was wrong. It was wrong, and it should not have been done. These are the sorts of things that when you're in government, you're sometimes – I won't use the term "blinded to." Let's just say that sometimes you perhaps don't have the clarity of vision to see that it's not the right thing to do. The ends for some reason sometimes justify the means, and that is fundamentally wrong. That cannot be used as a reason for doing something that is fundamentally wrong.

This amendment, this very reasonable amendment that indeed addresses the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act very definitively and addresses what is in Bill 35, seeks to remedy that situation, and it seeks to remedy a situation that is fundamentally unfair. It is fundamentally unfair for a government, that has the keys to the treasury and unlimited use of that treasury, to access those taxpayer dollars to assist with its campaign during an election. This is especially true when there has been a restriction or will be a restriction placed on the advertising that can be done within the bounds of that campaign.

Now, don't get me wrong. I think that $2 million is a reasonable figure to be spending on an election campaign. Goodness knows, in the last one the two parties that were the most successful both spent considerably less than $2 million, and the one that, arguably, got the fewest votes per dollar spent spent considerably more than $2 million.

You know, it's interesting. We heard repeatedly during the course of debate in the committee about how important it was to get big money out of politics because ideas should matter and not who has the most money. Yet we are seeing that the constitution of the current members of the government caucus puts that statement completely to a lie. Most of these members were considerably outspent by other candidates running in their constituencies, yet they were victorious, and they won. They are, in fact, living embodiments, proof – walking, talking, sneezing proof – that big money does not necessarily carry the day. They showed that somebody could spend less money and, in fact, be successful, something which I myself sort of take a certain amount of personal hope from at the present time.

Nonetheless, I think that it is incredibly important that we recognize that the government's access to the treasury, that the government's ability to advertise – and we've seen, certainly, this government's ability to advertise – can be misused, and it should not be. That is a concept that, I would suggest, my friends that sat over here in the former, somewhat smaller New Democratic Party caucus would have recognized, and I do so miss them. I say that perhaps to a certain extent tongue-in-cheek, but, Madam Chair, I do agree with the Member for Calgary-Elbow. There is something in that now that they are there, I've yet to have demonstrated to me, certainly in the course of debate on this issue, that they still have those ideals, that they still aspire to those lofty ideals of democratic socialism, of social justice. I'm not seeing it, and that indeed is disappointing because while I didn't necessarily agree with those policies, I always had respect and admiration for them.

I think that as far as a balanced society goes, it is critical that there are voices that articulate those positions. I think that is part of a just and overall balanced society. It's something that I believe in strongly because most of the issues that we deal with, whether it's here in the Chamber or out there in what I call the real world – this Chamber can be somewhat of a departure from the real world – most of the issues we deal with are not black and white. Most of the issues are many, many, many shades of grey in between.

With that, Madam Chair, I wholeheartedly support this amendment. I would certainly like to see, I hope to see that members of the government caucus who are actually still listening will vote in favour of the amendment because I think it establishes a basic sense of fairness and justice. If the members opposite decide to vote against this amendment, I would suggest that they are going to have some explaining to do. They will need to explain to their constituents, they will need to explain to the media, and they will need to explain to Albertans why they think that it's okay for the government, when it's restricted the amount that can be spent by political parties, can continue to spend in an unfettered and unregulated manner during the course of an election. That is fundamentally wrong. For that reason, I support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Madam Chair. I know it's getting late. Certainly, as we were discussing just a few minutes ago, when I had the opportunity to rise and talk for 20 short minutes, stacking the deck is a concern. But the reason I rise again is in response to the hon. government whip, whom we started out this conversation with discussing the amendment that she moved forward at the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

I do appreciate hearing from the government whip tonight, Madam Chair, and her response to my questions in regard to her motion in that committee and where she stands today, now, and whether or not her colleagues in the government caucus across the way were going to stand with the government whip and support getting big money out of politics, just like she moved inside the committee, because the amendment that I am moving tonight is basically identical to the amendment that she chose to move at that time in the committee. I was happy to support it. I wish that I had an opportunity – I know many other members in the Assembly wish they had the opportunity, but of course, as I discuss, the government whip then adjourned that amendment, just like they adjourned 23 other amendments during the process.

The government whip's response today, through you to me, Madam Chair, to this side of the House, was that this has nothing to do with this act and then seems to indicate that possibly at some later date the government may address this very, very serious issue to get big money out of politics, the last portion of that that has to be dealt with, and that is the government using taxpayer dollars. However – and I've already quoted this, but I'm going to quote it again – the government whip introduced a similar amendment, as I've told you, in committee that said that the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee recommend that the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act be amended to ban government advertisement during general elections with the exception of ads required for government ... that are certified in accordance with a process similar to [Ontario's.]

Now, earlier, when I was speaking, I described to the House Ontario's process, so I don't think I will do that again. The point of me reraising it through you, Madam Chair, to the government whip, is that very clearly, in her own words, she makes it clear that it's for the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act and now will rise in this Assembly and indicate to us that, no, what she meant had nothing to do with this act. That seems, to me, like a great contradiction, certainly.

We also have an amendment that has been approved through the process, fits within the legislation that we are debating today, and quite clearly, Madam Chair, there is no doubt – the facts are clear – that the government has the opportunity in the next few minutes to stand up and prove once and for all that they really want to get big money out of politics. But as we've seen over and over as we debate this important legislation in this Assembly, the government clearly is not indicating to Albertans that they truly want to get big money out of politics because their pattern has been to actually raise it in the case of constituency associations from $1,000 to $4,000. That's the opposite of lowering it. I know we've heard from some ministers today that they didn't agree with that, but in my world $1,000 to $4,000 is an increase. Maybe it's different in the NDP cabinet ministers' worlds. I don't know.

Then, when we come forward with an opportunity to once and for all limit the last big loophole that we have for opportunities for parties to use big money in politics, the government indicates that they want to do it at a future date. Madam Chair, this is a government that spent $4.4 million advertising a carbon tax, that spent $750,000 advertising their spring budget. Madam Chair, $4.4 million on the carbon tax: let's think about that for a second. We've capped parties at $2 million, and we're for that. But just on one issue this government has over doubled that cap.

Their own whip, the government whip, has indicated and moved forward, though she did adjourn it, that there is support for this from the NDP backbenchers, so how disconnected is the NDP backbench with cabinet? All of a sudden they get here and their beliefs in that issue are not valid anymore? Similar to when they were trying to pass stuff in committee to get their campaign expenses paid for – and then, ultimately, that was stopped, fortunately in that case, by the cabinet.

When I stood up earlier, I talked in great detail about the fact that clearly this government is just indicating to Albertans that they want to stack the deck in favour of them in the next election, that truly most of this does absolutely nothing to get big money out of politics in our system, that this is truly about trying to re-elect this government, that this is truly about trying to hamstring the opposition parties, particularly the small opposition parties. It's truly about stacking the deck and not dealing with the big issue of getting big money out of politics because if it truly was, Madam Chair, about getting big money out of politics, these government members would stand up and vote with us, vote with their whip, stand with their whip, and make it very, very clear.

Now, Madam Chair, you know my party. We don't have whip votes. We believe in free votes. Normally I stand in this Chamber and I say to the government members: ignore your whip. I have spent so much time in my elected life standing in this building saying: please ignore your whip, and do the right thing for your constituents. But tonight I'm saying: listen to your whip, and do the right thing for your constituents. It's a win-win for the whip on the government side today. It's a win-win for the whip.

Now, in some ways it's funny – and it's late at night – but truly, at the end of the day, it isn't funny that we have to keep coming here to try to get the government to do the right thing, to try to get the government to stand up for the right thing, to try to get the government to follow through on what they promised to do. They promised to get big money out of politics.

When they started the process of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, stuff like this amendment was exactly what we were supposed to be working on. During that committee, before it was derailed by the members trying to get their campaign expenses paid for, the members agreed with us on this.

Mr. Cooper: Remember when Drumheller-Stettler proposed this bill?

Mr. Nixon: That's right. And then Drumheller-Stettler proposed this almost exact same type of bill. It was through procedural stuff by the government that they tried to shove it aside, but then the media caught them and didn't like it, so then they brought it back, the first time, I think, that that's ever happened in the Alberta Legislature, that they managed to get a bill that was dead and bring it back. It was kind of neat. It was like magic.

Then they decided to take it and send it to committee, so we said: okay; let's go to committee. Then the government whip sat in committee and said, as I've read to you, Madam Chair: yeah, that's a great idea; that's what we should do. Then – I don't know – an e-mail or text message came, and they had to emergency adjourn the debate on it. There may be another level of whip in the government. I don't know what happens there, but they had to adjourn debate on that.

Here I am today giving the government the opportunity to prove once and for all that when I stand in this Assembly and I say, through you, Madam Chair, to them, that they are trying to stack the deck, trying to kneecap opposition parties, and trying to make sure that we can't spend money – rightly so; we want to get big money out of politics – but that they, the governing party, still have the ability to use taxpayer monies to manipulate campaigns and to use to their advantage, that's wrong.

Just like when we warned you and begged you not to use taxpayer money to pay for your campaign expenses, that's just like this. When we begged them all summer and they worked all summer, Madam Chair, to try to get their campaign expenses paid for and, in the end, somebody finally had a second thought and went, "Oh, that's a real bad idea; I guess we should listen to the opposition," I suspect that's because we talked to Albertans more than them. I don't know why it took them so long to realize how bad of an idea that was.

Here I am today telling you that if you truly want to get big money out of politics, if you're truly not trying to use this bill to hamstring the opposition and rig the system for you, then in a few minutes stand up and support your whip's comments in committee, stand up for Albertans, and get big money out of politics once and for all. If not, you are trying to stack the deck, and Albertans will remember that. I promise you that, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is very hard to follow my colleague through his very, very focused speech on trying to convince the government. I am sad to hear that the government whip has brought this forward and that it is appearing that she's not going to be supporting ours after supporting it in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee.

It's important to note that we heard a member from the past government say that they had made mistakes in this area and would like to correct those. I think that's very admirable. I heard that same member say that he knows the House leader very well, and he's hoping that the House leader would go back to the man that he knew before he got into government. Right after our chaos that happened with Bill 203, which our Member for Drumheller-Stettler put forward, all of that, we just heard that some really incredible circumstances moved around, and what happened is that they referred that bill to the standing committee.

But what happened here is that the deputy House leader said that – now, I'm going to read a quote from a newspaper, from Matt Dykstra. I should start there. It was an article on November 2, 2015: Alberta NDP Government Votes Down Bill Prohibiting Government Advertising During Elections. That member, who is a cabinet minister, explained that the government "absolutely agrees with" the bill but voted it down in order to refer the issue to the all-party Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee which has already been appointed to review the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, and more.

We've got the House leader, the deputy House leader, the whip. Who else could be more influential to make sure that we remove government advertising? It seems like we have a disproportionate number of members on the other side that believe this, but – wait – I actually have another person.

An Hon. Member: Oh.

Mr. Cyr: I know. This is shocking.

You know what? It's starting to add up. This is an important topic. It is. On December 9, 2014 – so before the election, before the election that made the decision to form this government, on May 5, 2015 – we had a press release from the NDP. A press release from the NDP. What we've got here is: [Premier's last name] Introduces NDP Accountability Priorities. I'd like to read the first part of this. It's a December 9, 2014, press release.

In response to PC legislation claiming to increase government accountability, NDP Leader [the now Premier] called for a series of changes that would effectively protect Albertans from several forms of inappropriate behaviour demonstrated by the PCs over the last several years.

"This PC party has continually flouted the basics of accountability and trustworthiness in government," [the Premier] said.

That sounds pretty familiar.

"We thought, at the very least, that [the former Premier's] widely-touted Accountability Act should fix the most obvious problems of recent years."

Let's be clear: "most obvious problems."

The New Democrats are proposing a number of necessary clauses . . .

I marked that word, "necessary."

. . . for [the past Premier's] upcoming Accountability Act.

This includes – there are lots of them here, and many of them have actually come up. I am, actually, very surprised that our government has been fighting on a lot of these things already.

The [past Education minister] clause . . .
I can't use his name for obvious reasons.

. . . fixing the Elections Act to prohibit MLAs from using government resources during elections or by-elections."

Wow. Isn't that what we're doing with this amendment? We've got the deputy House leader, House leader, whip, Premier. That is a stunning number of their cabinet that suddenly don't believe in government accountability. This is truly shocking.

I will tell you that for something that has been a passion of my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler, when he brought forward Bill 203 – it needs to be understood that when it comes to these private members' bills, because we sit so few days, you really don't get a lot of opportunity to pass a bill, which is why it is so saddening that the government was hoping to change the sound bite away from their irresponsibility in this area. They wanted to stop the story with political manoeuvring, that in the end was to send it to a committee. We talked about it with the committee. The whip put forward this motion, and then it died. Now the government has the opportunity to bring it back, and – guess what? – it sounds like they've given up on this, too. They believed in it before the election, they believed in this after the election, but now, when it's actually time to actually move forward with something that is going to take big money out of government advertising, they fall short. They fall short. This is a common practice of this government.

Thank you, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back now on the original bill. Are there any comments, questions, or amendments in regard to the bill? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to move an amendment to Bill 35. I'll wait for the pages to distribute the same and provide you with the original copy of the amendment before reading it into the record.

Madam Chair, I will say as a preface that this amendment attempts to address what has appeared, at least, to be a very arbitrary setting of the spending limit for constituency associations or at the constituency association level. You will recall, when I spoke to this at second reading, that there is a certain amount of inconsistency in the setting of the maximum allowable spending from the time it was discussed at committee to what the committee eventually landed on to what has now ended up coming back in the form of a bill. This, I think, demonstrates that the government and the minister have not really landed on a number, and the number that they have landed on is completely and totally arbitrary. Certainly, something as important as this should not be left just to an arbitrary methodology – pick a number out of the air, throw darts at a dartboard – for determining spending limits.

So, Madam Chair, I move that Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended in section 36 as follows, (a) by striking out the proposed section 41.3(1) and substituting the following:

Election expense limits – registered candidates

41.3(1) No registered candidate and no chief financial officer of a registered candidate shall incur election expenses in respect of an election in an electoral division that exceed in the aggregate the greater of:

- (a) $50 000 as adjusted in accordance with section 41.5, or
- (b) 50% of the amount established pursuant to section 39(1)(a) of the Legislative Assembly Act for the establishment and maintenance of a constituency office by a Member for that electoral division.

(b) in the proposed section 41.5(2) by striking out "41.3" and substituting "41.3(1)(a)", and (c) in the proposed section 41.5(3) by striking out "41.3" and substituting "41.3(1)(a)".

Madam Chair, what this amendment endeavours to do is to bring some rhyme or reason to the spending limit for a candidate in a specific election. You know, we looked at this, and at committee the initial recommendation was to have a $40,000 limit for candidates except to have it at $50,000 for certain northern constituencies. The rationale for having a higher limit for northern constituencies was to cover travel expenses, which, most people representing northern constituencies were quick to point out, is not necessarily a major contributor to the expense of running a campaign. Nonetheless, that $10,000 differential was felt somehow to be a rational thing to do.

Then when it was stated that $40,000 and $50,000 seemed rather low, again, as this committee often did, there was an adjournment of debate, which happened a number of times. Later on a new proposal was brought forward where the limit should be $70,000 and $80,000, again with a $10,000 differential for northern constituencies, again with no strong rationale for why that differential should be in place.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Nonetheless, the committee eventually landed on those figures: $70,000 and $80,000. You know, when you look at what most candidates who ran in the last election actually spent on their campaigns, that was a limitation that most candidates should be able to comfortably stay under. Now, there were some candidates who spent more than that. For the most part, interestingly, those candidates were not successful in winning the election, which lends even more credence to the argument that big money didn't decide, certainly, the last election.

But that was the limit that was decided upon, and it was voted upon by the committee. Then, somewhat inexplicably, when the bill comes to the House, we now are back to a $50,000 limit with some exemptions, certain exemptions on travel expenses and for certain other certainly very reasonable sorts of expenses that can be incurred during the course of an election campaign. I was personally somewhat disappointed to see that kennel fees were excluded from that list, but nonetheless.

Mr. Chair, I do look, though, at that number and consider it to be entirely arbitrary. There's no rhyme or reason to it: $40,000, $70,000, $50,000. How do we come up with those numbers? I got to thinking to myself. You know, it's interesting. The gentleman that occupied the chair you're sitting in right now for over three decades, Dr. McNeil, recently retired, was perhaps known as the dean of clerks of certainly all the Legislatures in Canada and maybe perhaps even in the British Commonwealth.

One of the things that we were all as members familiar with is that Dr. McNeil developed the formula for the member's services allowance, the MSA. That formula takes into account a number of factors, including the number of electors, the population, the size of the constituency, and the distance of the constituency from the city of Edmonton. Using a formula that Dr. McNeil, an engineer, developed was how they arrived at the MSA. You know, it's interesting because I think most of the members in the Legislature will agree that the MSA is eminently fair in terms of taking all of those factors into account in determining what amount should be allocated to the budget to run our various constituency offices.

So I thought to myself: well, we have this model already. We have a model that is workable, that is generally agreed upon by most members as being fair and equitable, and that takes into account the fact that 87 different constituencies are in fact very different. To apply a one-size-fits-all $50,000 limit to all 87 constituencies, some of which may have a population in the 50,000, 60,000 range and others which have a population that is barely 15,000 or 20,000, some which cover an area that is massive and cannot even be reasonably driven across in one day with a vehicle, whereas others are small enough that they could be comfortably walked across – we have a considerable diversity of constituencies: size, shape, population.

You know, in terms of the population, the ethnic mix in the population, the backgrounds, whether it's rural, whether it's urban, the point of it is that these constituencies are not all the same. So why should the spending limit be the same for all constituencies? It just simply doesn't make sense. To have something that is in fact a rational way of determining a constituency spending limit, we already have the formula in place. It is a formula that was worked out by Dr. McNeil, and I think it is a formula that has some rhyme or reason to it. It takes into account some of the different factors that are involved.

Rather than trying to reinvent the wheel, my suggestion is that we simply take that formula and that we take one-half of the amount that is designated by the MSA and that that be the spending limit for that constituency, except in cases where one half of the MSA would be less than $50,000, and that's the reason why it says in the amendment the greater of $50,000 or one-half of the MSA.

I think that this provides an acknowledgement, at least, that not all constituencies are the same, that different constituencies will require different types of campaigns, and that in some constituencies, by virtue of their geography or by virtue of their population mix, you'll have to campaign in a different way. I think that this particular amendment allows for that. It provides for that. I think it is a rational and reasonable amendment. It also provides for the fact that it's not just an arbitrary number. It is a number that will be very clear because it's set annually by the Legislative Assembly Office, so candidates will know exactly what their spending limit is, either $50,000 or some number greater than $50,000, and that will allow them to spend an amount that is comparable to the needs of their constituency.

Mr. Chair, I would encourage my colleagues in the Legislature to seriously consider this amendment. I think it provides for a level of flexibility within the spending limit, and that spending limit then has some relationship to the complexities and to the diversity of constituencies within the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. government whip.

Cortes-Vargas: Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Thank you, Chair. I was just looking over the amendment that was put forward by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Of course, the main objective in bringing in the spending limits is levelling the playing field. When we look at levelling the playing field, we also have to acknowledge that there are things like differences in regions and in the amount of space you have to cover, which is of course why we also brought in an exemption for kilometres that wouldn't be included in the $50,000 spending limit.

The proposal here is to link it to the Legislative Assembly Act. Of course, there's a matrix within the Legislative Assembly Act that determines how much money goes to each constituency office. That matrix uses the electoral count, and it takes different things into perspective. But, of course, in doing so, it's giving a certain set of monies for a year. It's doing that for a year. It's hard right now, just from seeing this, to give you a range of how much that is. I know that it's $140,000 in some cases. I know that it's a little bit higher, it's a little bit lower depending on the electoral count, depending on what matrix score your constituency falls under. Of course, that does leave a variance.

What it does is that it moves away from this idea of levelling the playing field. What we wanted to do was to make sure that there is a number that we have the spending limit at but also take into account that, yes, absolutely, in certain situations there are MLAs, in this case candidates, that will have to travel more in their constituency to reach their electorates. In this instance I would say that it moves away from that. For that reason, I'm not supportive of this amendment.

I mean, it gives an option, right? The proposal is to move to $50,000 or to 50 per cent of the matrix of the Legislative Assembly, which is an inconsistent way of establishing a level playing field, especially when you have this range that isn't easily accessible. You can't even determine what's going to be 50 per cent at a quick glance. In certain instances other members here might have a different number, so 50 per cent of that would be different.

Of course, because that is one of the main objectives, bringing something in like spending limits, and not only are just the candidates travel costs and transportations and meals not counting towards the spending limit, but the care for the candidate's or contestant's children and dependants, expenses related to disability of the candidate or contestant, all those things are not included, as well as audit and certain professional fees necessary for legal compliance and incidental fees like parking and gas. Those are examples of things we're exempting from the spending limit to make sure that we do take into account the differences that candidates have when campaigning in different regions of the province.

Of course, we go back to the idea of how we're going to do this, and I think it's actually been very thoughtful, putting in these things, because we want to make sure that being a candidate is accessible for everyone independent of their personal circumstance. That is how we make sure that we have diverse representatives that are being elected. For that reason I very much support the proposal that is in the current bill, not amended, which is $50,000 with the exceptions. For that reason I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Chair, I appreciate the comments from the hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park, but I have to say that there are a number of flaws in what was said. Firstly, I have absolutely no issue with the carve-outs that are contemplated within the bill with regard to exemptions for travel costs and meals and that sort of thing, but, you know, I can tell you that this is reflective, in my view, of a significant lack of understanding of what constitutes the major expenses in a campaign.

I can tell you that even in a rural constituency like mine, that takes two and a half to three hours to drive across, my travel costs, my lunch costs, all of the things that fall into the basket of things that are exempted would constitute an extremely small percentage of my overall costs. So the fact that they're now exempted really makes very, very little difference, and the fact that they're exempted makes very little difference in terms of creating the level playing field that the member speaks of.

You know, the other thing about the level playing field: what matters is that all candidates within a given constituency are allowed to spend to the same limit. It doesn't have to be the same amount in each constituency around the province. In fact, it shouldn't be, because each constituency around the province is different and unique. This cookie-cutter, one-size-fits-all approach that is applied in this bill is reflective of the whole sort of attitude of a lot of items in legislation that this government has brought forward, where it's demanding that everybody be treated exactly equivalently, in fact, when it doesn't make sense because representing a riding like Peace River or Lesser Slave Lake, with huge geography, is very different from representing a riding like Edmonton-Centre or Calgary-Buffalo. There are massive differences in doing that.

You know, just as an example, at committee – and you were there – you heard some of the discussion about expenditures on signage. In rural areas you have to have four-by-eight signs. You don't have to, but it's certainly helpful to have four-by-eight-foot signs. These things are expensive. These things cost a lot of money, and in a typical campaign in a rural area you buy quite a few of these signs, that sometimes cost in excess of $35 to $40 each. And that's to say nothing of the wood that you have to mount it on or the signposts that you have to build and the lumber and all that. That costs an awful lot more, I can tell you from experience, than the tanks of gas or the lunches or the things that are exempted.

In point of fact, constituencies are different. Where the need for a level playing field is is that all of the candidates running within that specific constituency should have the same spending limit. I absolutely support that. That's an issue of fairness. If you're going to have spending limits, that same spending limit has to apply to all of the candidates running in that constituency. But to suggest that the same spending limit should be applied to Cypress-Medicine Hat as is applied to Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood simply makes no sense – it makes absolutely no sense – and to suggest that it does is a little bit, I think, naïve. I think it points out that there is a lack of understanding of the fact that campaigns operate and run differently in different parts of the province.

Now, the closest thing that I could find that acknowledged and made a calculation for the differences in constituencies around the province was the matrix developed by Dr. McNeil for the calculation of the MSA. In fact, he was teased a little bit at the time of his retirement that only an engineer would develop a mathematical matrix and a mathematical calculation for determining an MSA. But, in point of fact, it was a formula that he developed in order to provide some fairness, not that every constituency be treated the same, because they're not all the same. But within that constituency should all candidates have the same limit applied to them? Of course they should.

When we talk about a level playing field, the playing field has to be level for everybody within the same contest. To suggest that the playing field has to be standardized for all 87 constituencies across our province I don't think is realistic, and I don't think that it's reflective of the diversity of the constituencies in our province. That's why I feel that a one-size-fits-all limit, a $50,000 limit, albeit with the carve-outs and the exemptions that are put in this legislation that, personally, I don't have a large issue with: I don't have a big issue with those, especially some of the ones for things like child care and things like, you know, care if the person running is a caregiver for a disabled relative, that sort of thing. No issue with those. I think that's actually a good step forward.

But to suggest that this $50,000 figure – and, again, some of this comes from: where did the $50,000 number come from? It was $40,000, then it was $70,000, and now it's $50,000. I mean, if we wait another few weeks, is it going to be $60,000 and then $35,000? It just strikes me as being exceedingly arbitrary. I think that our limits have to be based on something a little bit more based in and grounded in fact. The MSA calculation certainly is grounded very much in fact. It's formulaic. It's not hard to figure out. Well, it's maybe a little hard to figure out, but the beauty of it is that somebody's already done that for you. We know that the LAO does the calculation, and anyone who's thinking of running will have that number provided to them to say: "Okay. This is what the MSA calculation was for the previous fiscal year. You can spend up to one half of that." That's not that difficult, and I have absolute confidence that the LAO, working together with the Chief Electoral Officer, could provide that information to prospective candidates very, very easily. I've no question about that whatsoever.

What it does do is allow for the variation between constituencies that is a fact of life in Alberta. To suggest that every constituency should be treated the same and that that somehow is an issue of fairness when you have these kinds of diversity in population, in size, like you say, in population makeup, in background that we have within the 87 constituencies, or whatever the number the Electoral Boundaries Commission decides on once they are done their deliberations, I just think is an unreasonable and it's a naive expectation. That's why this amendment, I believe, addresses that. I think it addresses it in a very nonpartisan way and in a way that is acceptable to members once they are elected in terms of funding their constituency offices. So I would suggest that we apply that same rule of fairness to constituency spending limits for election purposes.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Hearing none, are we ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: Question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Acting Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 35?

Mr. Cyr: Well, again, when we start talking about elections, I get heated up. I will say that I really think that we all need to be reconsidering where we're going. It's disappointing that we spent so much time in the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, and we actually debated this point. I worked with the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, and we were able to discuss this with the group, that not every riding is the same. So I'm very sad to see that the government has voted down that amendment.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I will present an amendment. I will hand this to the pages and wait for the table to receive it before I continue.

The Acting Chair: This will be amendment A6.

Please proceed, hon. member.

10:40

Mr. Clark: Thank you. My amendment reads as follows: Mr. Clark to move that Bill 35, Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended as follows.

- A. Section 17 is struck out and the following substituted:
  - 17 Section 15.1 is amended by striking out "of a limit prescribed by 17(1) or 18(1)" and substituting "of the limit prescribed by section 17(1), 17(1.1) or 18(1)."
- B. Section 19 is amended, in the proposed section 17, as follows:
  - (a) in subsection (1) by adding "Subject to subsection (1.1)," before "contributions by";
  - (b) by adding the following after subsection (1):
    - (1.1) Contributions to a registered constituency association shall not exceed in any year $1,000 in aggregate, as adjusted in accordance with section 41.5.

What that means, Mr. Chair, is that no constituency association may collect donations in total more than $1,000. This solves the fundamental flaw of the bill, which was addressed and fixed by the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee, of potentially only three people contributing enough funds over the course of a four-year period to finance an entire election campaign. As the bill is currently written, three individuals of some means could contribute $4,000 each to a constituency association over four years; $12,000 a year times four is $48,000, almost the $50,000 donation limit. Of course, the $4,000 that they would donate is reduced substantially by the tax credit that is applicable to the donation.

This is one of the issues that the committee grappled with as it appeared that $4,000 was going to be the limit as the government took away the buckets, constituent associations being isolated as a donation from the parties, and this bill does that as well. But this fixes a fundamental problem with the bill. It doesn't increase the $4,000 limit. It's very important to note that the $1,000 as proposed in this amendment is not additional, over and above the $4,000 limit. It's still retained within the $4,000 total aggregate cap. So we're not trying to get around the $4,000 limit, which I support and agree with. What we're doing, though, is restricting a constituency association or any aggregate group of constituency associations from receiving more than $1,000 from a single donor in a year.

Now, I think this is an important amendment, one that the committee dealt with, which was supported unanimously by members of the government side as well as all members of the committee and therefore representing all parties in the House. I think it's important. There have been some amendments that I, frankly, was not expecting the government to support but would have made the bill much better had they done so, but this, I think, would make the bill fundamentally stronger, would make the legislation fundamentally stronger.

I would really encourage and would hope that the government would be willing to support this amendment. I know that it's something I've talked about with many members on this side as well as the government members. I think there's a general agreement that if one of the ideas of this bill, as I believe I've heard a couple of times, is that we're trying to get big money out of politics – I believe I've heard that. This amendment seeks to do precisely that, because as the bill stands, three wealthy individuals – three – could elect a single MLA, could ultimately support the entire campaign of a single MLA. In doing that, if you want to find influence, that would be the dictionary definition of influence, having an MLA beholden to three people who financed their entire campaign. It is also the exact inverse of grassroots democracy.

I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support this. In all sincerity, I would like to hear what the government side has to say and hope we find support for this, I think, reasonable and thoughtful amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Chair. As always, it's a pleasure to get up in this House and speak to legislation that we are considering. I want to say that what we have proposed here in the fair elections act – I want to remind people that under the current legislation individuals could contribute $15,000 to a registered party in any year, and that would actually double in an election year. In total over a four-year election cycle you could have a rich, wealthy individual give up to $105,000 to a political party of their choice. I'll repeat that: $105,000 to the political party of your choice.

When I go out and I talk to constituents, when I go out and I talk to people – never mind the $105,000 – I would ask them first: how many of you could afford to give a political party $15,000? You know, not one person told me, at least in my circle of friends and people that I was consulting with regarding this legislation, not one of them – not one of them, Mr. Chair – said that they could afford $15,000. Not one of them.

You know, when we talk about getting big money out of politics, we're talking about exactly that. We're talking about lowering the contribution of one individual from $15,000 to $4,000. When we say we're getting big money out of politics, that's what we're talking about, reducing that contribution from $15,000 in a year, which would double in an election year, to now $4,000 with no double up in an election year. That, I would say, is a considerable difference. A considerable difference.

Now, the other thing that I want to say in terms of this particular amendment is that we felt that it was absolutely necessary to give the choice to the person making the contribution. We've lowered it now to $4,000. That's not big money at all. Not big money at all. You know, that contribution of the maximum of $4,000 per individual per calendar year: that applies to any combination of the party, the constituency association, the candidate once an election has been called. It also applied to leadership contestants and also nomination contestants.

Therefore, the constituent, the contributor, the donor now has to ask themselves: "Okay. My cap is $4,000. Where am I going to put my $4,000? I can put some of it in a constituency association. Oh, there's a leadership race coming up. I'd better think about how much I want to give to that leadership race. Oh, and don't forget, I want to participate in the actual nomination process of the person that I believe will be the best to represent my community from my political party in this area. I may want to contribute to that person's nomination race if they were to have one."

So you see, Mr. Chair, although the contribution limit is $4,000, we're providing constituents with a choice. Let me tell you that it is absolutely amazing to me that we have a political party on the other side of the House that normally gets up in this House and adamantly makes arguments for choice, yet on this issue they're not standing behind that. We want to provide the constituent, the contributor the freedom to make the choice of where they're going to put their $4,000. You know what? That, to me, is how we get big money out of politics because now the individual has to think about all the other options that I just finished describing.

Mr. Cooper: But they can't choose one.

Loyola: Absolutely. They could choose one, and that would be their choice. That would be their choice if they wanted to. You know, I'm willing to bet that when constituents, when contributors to the political parties are told, "Hey – you know what? – you could give money to your constituency association, you could give it to your candidate, you could give it to a leadership contestant, your nomination contestant," when they're explained that they can do that and that they have the choice, well, then, we leave it up to them.

An Hon. Member: They don't have that choice now?

Loyola: They have the freedom to decide where they want to put their up to $4,000. They could decide where they want to put that.

Mr. Chair, just to summarize and go back, the fact that we're proposing in this bill to move from $15,000 a year down to $4,000 – oh boy. Let me tell you that when I went to constituents in my riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie and I explained that we were lowering the amount from $15,000 to $4,000, they were saying: good job. They were impressed. They were, like: "Why didn't the previous party look into this? Why didn't they make that change?"

Let me remind everybody that's sitting in the House right now that when this government first came in, the first bill that we passed got rid of union and corporate donations. Why wasn't this proposed earlier by the other party? [interjections] Yeah. You know, that's a good point, Member. That's a good point, Member. I only know of one political party that wouldn't accept corporate donations in the past. So we found that it was absolutely necessary to follow through with this idea. Let's get corporate and union donations out of our electoral process.

Mr. Chair, I want to thank you for the opportunity to highlight these very important factors that I've discussed. For that reason I want to recommend to all of the members of this House that they not support this amendment. Give Albertans the freedom of choice.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Chair, I have to say that the comments by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, if they weren't so ridiculous, would be funny.

But in terms of choice he says that with this $4,000 limit now we've given people choice. Now, that would imply that currently that choice doesn't exist.

An Hon. Member: Does it?

Dr. Starke: Well, I think it does. That choice certainly exists, and in fact that choice is broader now than it will be under the proposed bill.

I want to be very clear. I said this yesterday, but perhaps some folks have short memories. We were in favour when it was moved last year to eliminate corporate and union donations, and we voted in favour of that. We are similarly in favour of a reduction in donations to political parties. We can debate here whether that number should be $4,000 or $5,000 or $1,000, but $4,000 is the number that's been landed on.

This notion, somehow, that the $4,000 as an aggregate limit and that that is somehow superior to the choice that is available now is of course totally ridiculous. Currently you have the choice of giving up to $15,000, as was stated, to a political party. Now, that number is too high, and that number should be reduced, and it will be. That's a good thing.

You also have the choice of giving up to $1,000 to your constituency association. But now we have the choice of giving up to $4,000 to that constituency association, which is interesting for a party that professes to want to get big money out of politics. I'm going to come back to the calculations that the Member for Calgary-Elbow referenced before.

The third thing you have the choice on is to support a nomination candidate. You have the choice to do it, and it is not included with any restriction. You have the choice of giving up to an unlimited amount to a leadership candidate because in fact there are no current limits to contributions to leadership candidates. Nomination contests are not even included under the electoral financing act. So, Mr. Chair, to suggest that somehow this $4,000 limit enhances choice is ludicrous, totally, completely ludicrous.

What this $4,000 limit does do – and this was pointed out in the course of the committee debate. I am surprised that the hon. member has completely forgotten about this aspect of debate, but it was pointed out that even at the $70,000 spending limit, that was at one point the spot on the dartboard that the dart hit when they were trying to decide on a limit, when that was the number, we pointed out that over a four-year cycle it would only require five donors to completely bankroll a $70,000 campaign. We pointed this out.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

It was interesting because at that time the members of the committee said: "Oh my word, that's a flaw. That's something we didn't see. That's something we didn't realize. Oh my goodness, that's a problem." So within the next meeting all of a sudden, then, came this carve-out, this $1,000 carve-out, actually very similar to what the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow's amendment is contemplating. That meant that even at the $70,000 level and even over a four-year cycle you needed a lot more donors to come up with enough money to finance a campaign.

But let's be very clear. Under this piece of legislation somebody who wishes to run for office and have a $50,000 campaign bankrolled can do it with the contributions from three people over the course of a four-year election cycle. Three people. If you're wanting to get rid of big money and the influence of wealth, I would suggest that this is exactly the opposite of doing that.

You know, to be honest, I think that the strategy of having constituency associations do fundraisers and solicit campaign donations and solicit donations on a year-to-year basis, something which, based on the filings of the various constituency associations of the New Democratic Party, doesn't happen on that side but certainly happens over here, that whole process can be eliminated. Well, that won't create too much of a ripple on that side of the House because it's not happening now, but it certainly happens on this side of the House. It is a way for us to engage with constituents. The idea is not so much to have a fundraiser. A lot of the time we end up calling them friend-raisers because we don't raise that much money, but we just have a lot of fun doing it.

11:00

I was up in Grande Prairie earlier this year and for the first time in my life went to a skeet shooting fundraiser. It was sponsored by my colleague the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Cooper: Pull.

Dr. Starke: Pull. Exactly.

The only thing I accomplished that day was a big bruise on my shoulder. I did blast a few targets, though. But it was fun. I don't know what we raised. What did we raise? Not a lot of money. But we had a lot of fun. Certainly, I think . . . [interjections] We'll have to work on the aim part of things.

All joking aside, what we have now is a scenario with a $50,000 limit. Basically when you're elected, you go to three people, three people who are well heeled. You know, $4,000. I mean, it used to be $15,000. Four thousand dollars. You can go to them and say: I want you and you and you to give our constituency association $4,000 per year for the next four years. So they're making a commitment of $16,000 over the course of the four-year period. Those three $16,000 contributions will aggregate out to $48,000 and will completely bankroll the campaign in that four-year election cycle.

You know, I guess I should be happy with that because it's going to make life in the constituency association a whole lot easier. All you really need to do is find three people who are reasonably wealthy and can afford to give $4,000 a year.

Mr. Cooper: I've already found three.

Dr. Starke: Good for you. Perhaps they have friends and relatives in Vermilion-Lloydminster. That would be lovely. I'm not sure that they would bankroll me, but if they bankroll you, that's great.

The bottom line, Madam Chair, is that it's completely opposite to the goal of what this government is saying that it's trying to do. It's allowing a small group of relatively wealthy people to have undue influence over candidates.

An Hon. Member: Let's put big money back into politics.

Dr. Starke: Let's put big money back into politics. That's exactly what this does. It puts big money back into politics, so it completely defeats the purpose of the bill.

An Hon. Member: What was the old limit?

Dr. Starke: The old limit was $1,000.

Mr. Clark: How many times is $4,000? More than quadrupled.

Dr. Starke: Well, quadruple it seems to me. Yeah. Four hundred per cent.

Madam Chair, this amendment addresses that. This amendment is very similar to something that was discussed at committee and was approved at committee after considerable debate. I think most people will call it the bucket debate because we talked about different envelopes or buckets for donations to go into. And there is a rationale behind that. At least at the committee . . . [interjection] I see that my friend from Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood has found his voice once again. I'm delighted to hear that.

At least at committee the basic logic behind that was able to be understood by members of the committee. They saw the logic even when it was at the $70,000 threshold and you needed five friends.

Now you only need three friends. Three friends will bankroll your entire campaign.

You know, I really think that when you look at this, it's completely counter. And to suggest that this is all in the name of choice and that somehow choice is now enhanced over what it was before is, of course, ridiculous. The idea that this $4,000 limit, a quadrupling of the previous limit of contributions to constituency associations, is somehow getting big money out of politics, that that is somehow reducing the influence of a certain specific small number of wealthy individuals on elected officials is patently untrue. Completely untrue.

If in fact this bill passes, I will be on the lookout to find three well-heeled friends that will completely obviate the need for my constituency association to do any fundraising at all for the next election because it will simply . . . [interjection] Excellent. Excellent. All we need to do is find those three people that are prepared to bankroll the constituency. [interjections] I may be part of the way there already.

Madam Chair, it just points out the flaw here. My colleague the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who sat through the bucket debate, who was there as well and heard the arguments and saw members of the government see the basic flaw in the one-size-fits-all approach, has proposed a rational and reasonable amendment to correct this flaw. That's our job. As legislators we should be interested in crafting better legislation that doesn't create flaws, that doesn't create unintended consequences.

Clearly there's an unintended consequence here. Three people can bankroll a $50,000 campaign. Now, if you're comfortable with that over there, if you're good with that, then vote this down – then absolutely vote this down – but we'll know that members of the NDP caucus are just fine with three individuals having that much sway over their elected official because of three individuals that the elected official, the MLA, is beholden to for having essentially bankrolled their entire election campaign. Unbelievable.

So, Madam Chair, I certainly concur with this. I am quite stunned, actually, that the government members can't see that this amendment solves the same flaw that was there when we discussed this in the dog days of summer, in August and September. Now we have a situation where the flaw is right back into the legislation, and that's unfortunate. I would encourage members to vote for this reasonable and rational amendment on behalf of the member.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to maybe make a few comments with respect to this. You know, the hon. members opposite have argued that a $4,000 donation is big money. Well, you know, the previous legislation of the former government, of which the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was a member, had in an election year a donation limit of $30,000. Not only did they have $30,000 as a donation, but they allowed, in fact they encouraged, in fact they absolutely depended upon donations of a very significant amount of money coming from their corporate friends.

Of course, we got rid of that, and they were shamed into voting for that bill because originally their leader was not going to support that bill. Eventually something happened inside their caucus, and they decided that they had to support it, so they did, and good for them. Better late than never. A deathbed conversion I think you might call it, Madam Chair.

You know, now they're claiming that a $4,000 donation is big money. Well, I beg to differ. The fact that we've lowered the spending limits in individual constituencies to $50,000 does not suddenly proportionally make $4,000 become a really big money donation. They've made a great deal about, well, how a handful of people could hypothetically and theoretically fund a campaign if they gave the full amount, four people or three people over four consecutive years giving the amount, and then this is a huge, huge problem in their minds. In actual practice, Madam Chair, that is very, very likely to not occur or, if it does occur, to be a very rare event.

The fact of the matter is that the real issue is reducing the amount that can be donated from $30,000 to $4,000 and putting spending limits on campaigns, something that's never happened in this province before. Under 42 years of Conservative rule that's never, never happened. Well, it's happening now.

Now, I just want to suggest that, in fact, this amendment is attempting to tell donors, just to reiterate in case we missed it, that they're only allowed now in a year to donate a total of $4,000 for everything. They can divide it up however they wish. It's a bit like – I don't know – if you've ever been in any of those meetings where you get to make decisions by putting little dots on things that they hang up on the wall. I'm sure we've all been subjected to that.

11:10

An Hon. Member: Dot-mocracy.

Mr. Mason: Dot-ocracy. It's going too far to call it a nightmare.

Anyway, this is a bit like that. They can put one dot here and another dot here and another dot there. It could be a leadership campaign, a nomination meeting, the actual election, to the central party, or to an individual candidate. They can put their dots wherever they want, and they can put all their dots on one thing if they want. As much as I don't like being subjected to a dot-ocracy procedure, the fact of the matter is that it maximizes the choice available, Madam Chair, to individuals.

What they want to do, for some reason of their own devising, is to limit the ability of individuals to decide how their relatively small $4,000 will be allocated. They want to take away that choice from those people and say: you can only give $1,000 to this constituency. I don't really understand why. The argument that they're making that, you know, three people could finance this is a bogus argument and makes no sense, Madam Chair.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

Mr. Mason: A point of order? Madam Chair, I can save you a lot of trouble. Saying "bogus" is not a problem.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, speak to the point of order first.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know that it's late, but I am pretty certain that if I had my list of unparliamentary language in front of me, we would see on numerous occasions where the word "bogus" has been ruled to be unparliamentary. It would be easy – easy – if the member would just apologize and withdraw.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, that's very unlikely to happen. He's got no citations, and it's not unparliamentary.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it is getting late. I know we are really engaged in this debate, but if we could please listen to the speaker, if we could just try to keep the decorum in the House so that we can move on.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Madam Chair, thank you very much. With that, I'll conclude my remarks, and I will move that the committee rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 35. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Do you concur with the report? Those in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, say no. So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. In light of the hour and the enjoyable debate this evening I will move that we adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:15 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Thursday, December 8, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Hon. members, on December 10 it will be international Human Rights Day. This day recognizes when the United Nations General Assembly adopted the universal declaration of human rights. Let's take some time today to reflect on the significance of this day and be resolved to never stop defending the freedoms and rights of all human beings.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 35

Fair Elections Financing Act

The Chair: We are currently on amendment A6. Are there any further speakers to this amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just want to wrap up my comments on this amendment by talking briefly about some of the things that the hon. Government House Leader had spoken about last night in his speech. He had talked about choice and the fact that the way the bill is structured allows for Albertans the choice of where they put their money, be it a constituency association, a party, a nomination candidate, a leadership candidate, an actual election cycle candidate. I'm baffled by that because those are all choices that Albertans have right now, so this bill does nothing to enhance those choices.

What this amendment seeks to fix and to address is a fundamental flaw in the bill which puts big money into politics. I've heard a couple of times in this House that the objective here is to take big money out of politics. What this does is put big money into politics by allowing as few as three individuals to finance an entire election campaign for a single candidate. That's what this bill allows for. It's a problem that was fixed at committee. It's baffling to me why it hasn't been fixed in the bill. I think it shows the disdain that the government has shown for the process of that committee, and it is profoundly disappointing.

Madam Chair, that is why we brought this amendment, and I'm actually surprised that the government is not choosing to support us on this because I think it is in fact a very reasonable amendment. It helps achieve what is the stated goal of this government's legislation, which is to get big money out of politics. Would anybody here love to tell me who here would not like to get big money out of politics? Hearing none. Of course we do. Of course we do. Of course we do. We all want to get big money out of politics. So it's a fairly straightforward amendment, and I would very much appreciate and love to see this government support it.

You know, what they've done is that they've got their thumb on the scale here with this bill. They've got their thumb on the scale. Some would say that they're stacking the deck against opposition parties. Some would say that they're stacking the deck. They've got 53 cards. Fifty-three cards. They've got an extra joker in their deck of cards, Madam Chair, and they have stacked the deck against opposition parties.

Albertans will see right through it. Albertans will see through it, they will know what this government has done, and they will reward them accordingly at the ballot box by voting for someone else because they'll see that the government has taken the opportunity as a majority government to tilt the scales, to stack the deck in their favour, and that is not how we do things in Alberta, Madam Chair. That is not how we do things. Albertans like a fair fight. They don't like it when the bigger kid uses their advantage and takes advantage of the smaller. That's what's happening here.

Madam Chair, I would encourage everyone to please support this very reasonable amendment, and I look forward to other comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, good morning, Madam Chair. It is a pleasure to be back in the Chamber with you today, of course, and with my hon. colleagues in all the other parties in the Assembly on this fine, cold morning. Welcome to Thursday. I hope that everybody has a safe trip back to their constituencies later today.

I do want to talk a little bit about the amendment that has been brought forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, the independent member for Calgary-Elbow, my good friend . . .

Mr. Clark: The next government.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. I'll even give it to him today because I'm feeling Christmasy.

. . . the leader of the Alberta Party.

Last night as we finished our work in the Chamber for the evening, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Government House Leader rose, and it was nice to hear from the NDP on this important piece of legislation. They tried to focus their comments – not tried to. They focused their comments primarily around the concept of choice. Particularly, the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie felt that it was important to point out that the Wildrose Party, the party of the Official Opposition, my party, was all about choice.

I do want to confirm through you, Madam Chair, to him that, without a doubt, this is the party of choice that is in the Assembly and his party across the way is not the party of choice. I do appreciate him bringing that to all of our attention. We've been mentioning that to the people of Alberta for a while and him helping to reinforce our message is appreciated, certainly by me. When it comes to things like parental choice, we stand with parents; his party doesn't. When it comes to things like farmers' property rights and the choices around their land, we stand with them, and his party doesn't. I do appreciate him pointing that out as we went home for the evening. It was certainly appreciated.

However, when we go to talk specifically about the amendment that we're debating right now, that has been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, I think the argument falls short and, to be quite frank, is a little bit confusing and appears to be almost smoke and mirrors to a certain extent. Madam Chair, it's trying to, you know, in my mind, distract us and the people of Alberta from the fact that this government, the members across the way, are actually trying to raise the contribution limits inside constituency associations. They want to gloss over that fact and then just get to the fact that with this legislation we're going to lower the ridiculous $15,000 amount to $4,000. That's something that all parties agree on in the Assembly.

As the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow just articulated in his comments, during the debate in the Ethics and Accountability Committee – and I will note that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was a member of that committee – this concept was debated in great detail. And the committee as a whole decided, with unanimous votes if I recall from all parties inside that committee, that we needed to deal with the issue of making sure that we did not accidentally raise constituency associations at the same time as we were trying to get big money out of politics on the party side.

Now, this has been pointed out by many members in the last few hours as we have debated this important piece of legislation, Madam Chair, but by raising the amount from $1,000 to $4,000, four times the current amount in the legislation, we are putting in a situation in constituencies, you know, where three people can essentially finance one MLA's campaign. The main reason for getting big money out of politics, that has been stated by all parties, is an attempt to make sure that small groups of people can't influence political parties more than others or influence candidates more than others. The idea is that we want more people to participate in the process and to make sure, you know, for lack of a better term – and I don't think that anybody who is currently in this Chamber would allow this to happen to them – that one or two or three people can't buy a tremendous amount of influence with one political party or one political candidate.

Now, if three people inside a constituency can pay for an MLA's entire campaign, that means, I would say, that they could certainly be perceived as buying influence. Given that throughout this debate the government has really focused on and hung their hat on the fact that they want to get big money out of politics – something, again, Madam Chair, I agree with them on – the opposition, including myself, continues to point out that when you dig into this bill in more detail, it clearly shows over and over and over that most of the bill has nothing to do with that. It's truly about rigging the system to the benefit of the members across the way.

Now, that probably is because – I mean, at least from what I hear when I'm talking to everyday Albertans – this government is in deep trouble in 2019, so they need to try to get as much of an advantage as they can for themselves to try and get their MLAs re-elected. But when we make decisions in the House, particularly around democracy, it shouldn't be about our jobs or our re-election chances. It should be about protecting our democracy. We all came here and took an oath or affirmed our dedication to our democracy and to our constituents to make sure that we protect them. So when we're debating something as fundamentally important as democracy, I suggest, through you, Madam Chair, that we need to remove any attempt to try to make an advantage for any one political party.

At any time over the years the current government could become opposition again. The opposition could become government, or vice versa, and things will move around. What is most important is to protect democracy, to make sure that Albertans can continue to have choice, continue to participate in the system, and to make sure that small groups of special interest or small groups of people with access to more resources can't have undue influence over top of the rest of the people of Alberta.

Now, I think that's a noble goal. It's a goal that the government says that they have, but then at the same time they bring forward legislation increasing contribution limits by 400 per cent and then have the nerve to stand up in this Assembly, Madam Chair, and say: "No. We're lowering it. We're lowering it." We even had cabinet ministers yesterday calling us liars when we pointed out that they were going up by 400 per cent, though their own bill shows without a doubt that they are raising contribution limits on constituency associations by 400 per cent. Four times the amount. Two or three individuals can now fund one campaign, particularly now because we put contribution limits in to try to get that situation in some sort of relative control, but the consequence of that is that fewer people will participate when we make the donation limit so high.

Now, I will note that as the Government House Leader and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie presented last night, particularly the Government House Leader spent a lot of time talking about stickers on poster boards. I was a little confused, to be honest, but it was late at night. Maybe this is some sort of NDP ritual at their constituency associations – I don't know – where they put stickers on boards.

An Hon. Member: It's a religious thing.

Mr. Nixon: I don't know what it's all about. It was quite fascinating, about putting stickers on the boards.

I think his core point, though, was something to do with choice. It was late, so it was a little bit confusing. But, again, we've established that this side of the House is fairly committed to protecting Albertans' choice, particularly when it comes to democracy. The other side of the House, the NDP side of the House, clearly, as we've seen this legislation progress, are dedicated to attempting to rig the system to their advantage and probably don't care about Albertans' choice. To put forward the argument of choice in regard to the amendment that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow has brought forward is ridiculous because the choices that were presented in the argument by the hon. Government House Leader and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie about what choices the people of Alberta would get as a result of the legislation that the government has brought forward already exist.

Already inside our province you can donate to a leadership campaign. I suspect some members inside this Assembly have already donated to leadership campaigns in the past. I know I've donated to leadership campaigns in the past.

Mr. McIver: I've collected donations for leadership campaigns.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah. I know that my good friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, I'm sure, has collected leadership donations in the past as he pursued leadership. I know that the leader of the opposition certainly has collected donations for his leadership campaign in the past, and I know I have donated to leadership campaigns in the past. I have that choice. So do all of you, and so does all of Alberta. There's a good choice that already exists. I don't really know what that has to do with the amendment, but that's what the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie brought forward.

Nominations. I have had small donations for my nomination in the past. I don't know about all members of the Assembly because nominations sometimes are different, depending if you're in a heavily contested nomination. I was in a heavily contested nomination against a sitting MLA, so there was a little more action than in most nominations, so a little closer to a campaign. Some people are just appointed or acclaimed to a nomination, depending on what's going on there, so they may spend less. Certainly, they or anybody else in Alberta has the option to donate to their campaigns, to their nomination campaigns, and to participate in that process. I don't know about all of you, but that sounds like a second choice that Albertans have, and again, Madam Chair, it was an argument that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie used against this amendment.

Parties. I donate to my party. I know many members across the way donate to their parties. Many Albertans donate to our party. This year more Albertans donated to our party than any other party in the Assembly. I do know that if I look at every party in the Assembly, Albertans are donating to them, and they're allowed to. There are generous tax benefits that are associated with that, and currently that is taking place. You can see every quarter that parties are taking in money from their donors. Certainly, if you're a member of a political party on all sides of the spectrum, both federally and provincially, you're getting the e-mails asking you for money or the phone calls asking you for money. Clearly, people have the choice to be able to participate with their party currently under the system.

Again – now we're on the third thing – I don't understand what this has to do with this amendment and why the member would bring it forward: candidates. During my election to come to this place with all of you here today, I received donations. I donated to my own campaign. Many people in my community and family members did. They certainly had the choice to donate to my campaign. I appreciate that they did, all of my donors. They had a choice to donate to the NDP candidate that ran against me in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, a nice young lady. I enjoyed the campaign with her. She was from Edmonton, so I suspect most of her donations probably came from Edmonton, not Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. But they had a choice. The people in Sundre could have chosen to donate just to the NDP candidate, to the Wildrose candidate, to the PC candidate that was in our constituency, just like they had the choice of who to vote for. Again, choice already exists in our system on that issue.

Now, if the core of the argument being brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is that $15,000 a year to a party, doubled in an election period to $30,000, was too high, I agree with him. I have always agreed with him on that. This party has been on the record for that a long time, and quite frankly, Madam Chair, the governing party has been on the record for that a long time. It is something that these two parties shared long before this party was in power. We have done that. Through the committee process we got that done immediately. The idea that the number had to come down was agreed upon very, very quickly. There was lots of discussion on what that number should be, trying to determine, in looking at other jurisdictions inside the country and around the world, what the appropriate number should be for Alberta based on its economy, population, size, those types of issues. We wanted to make sure that we had the right number to make sure people could participate in democracy but, at the same time, get undue influence out of the process.

Where the process derailed – and the amendment that the Member for Calgary-Elbow is bringing forward is an attempt to deal with that – was the idea of raising constituency associations up at the same time that you're trying to drive party donations down. This was debated in great detail. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie participated in the debate, and I enjoyed his comments during that debate. I certainly participated in that debate. In the end, all parties, including the NDP Party, the governing party, agreed that $4,000 for constituency associations was too much. Increasing them by 400 per cent at the constituency level was not appropriate, and it was counterproductive to what we were trying to do with this legislation. So we passed an amendment where everybody agreed, and we said that it would be $1,000 for constituency associations and that we felt that that amount was appropriate.

Then we arrive in this Chamber and we see the legislation. The government has decided to bring it to $4,000 and then has the nerve to keep rising and pretending like they're lowering contribution limits when the evidence shows that they're not. So the amendment the hon. member has brought forward is an attempt to deal with that. The question then becomes: what has changed in the few short weeks since the members across the way were in committee? It would be nice if the members would rise and explain what has changed, not try to cast the illusion that there was not choice already where to donate and that for some reason now, by passing this piece of legislation, Albertans get a whole bunch more choice where to donate. They already had the choice to donate to all of those places before. This legislation does nothing to change that, and this amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow certainly does nothing to prevent choice.

What it does is that it prevents one or two or three people from having a tremendous amount of influence on any one MLA or any one political candidate, which is the stated goal by this government, Madam Chair, on what they're trying to do with the legislation, though the evidence from the legislation that they brought forward clearly shows that maybe that's not really the goal.

When you look at some of the other amendments that have been brought forward during debate in Committee of the Whole here in the Chamber and the government's arguments against those, it clearly becomes, without a doubt, so obvious to everybody that we know that this is about stacking the deck for the NDP government. This is about rigging the system for the NDP government. This is about tilting the process in favour of the NDP government. If it was truly about contribution limits, you would stand with the opposition, who is truly trying to get the contributions low, and you would get them out. You would stand with the opposition and you would make sure that governments can't abuse the taxpayer dollar during by-elections and elections, just like your government whip proposed during committee.

Instead, we're back here again, with the Government House Leader and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rising and talking about stickers and confusing everybody and trying to make it sound like they've brought choice for the first time into our electoral system, that already existed for as long as I have participated in politics.

The reason that the members across the way have fought so hard for this I think is obvious; some people may not see it. I was confused during committee as the members fought so hard to line their campaign pockets with taxpayer dollars to pay for their campaigns and for their party campaign and spent their whole summer trying to get constituents to pay for their bills. I didn't understand that, particularly because when I talked to Albertans, they were appalled by it. They were very, very upset about it. As I've said to you before, Madam Chair, I suspect that it just shows again how much more our side of the House actually talks to rural Albertans and doesn't hide in the bubble of the Assembly, because we knew that was wrong. It took them a lot longer to get there, but they got there, and I appreciate having the opportunity to help them get there.

But at its core the reason that you're seeing the other stuff, Madam Chair, and the reason you're seeing the government want to vote against this particular amendment, again, is because we have established, without a doubt, through the Committee of the Whole process that this government's primary goal is to rig the election, to beat up on democracy, to kneecap opposition parties, to make things harder for this side of the House – to make things harder for this side of the House – to attack our volunteers, to attack the people that participate in the political process, to make it harder for volunteer CFOs who are trying to do it, to make it harder for people to enter politics, to help protect incumbents, to make things easier for the incumbents, to make things easier for them. I don't know. Are you guys so scared during your nomination process coming up that you need to make it so much easier for yourselves or what? It's confusing.

Now, as I've said before, Madam Chair, it won't work against the bigger opposition parties. There are enough resources currently in the bigger opposition parties to allow us to survive the direct attack by the government on democracy. But there are some smaller parties that participate in our political process. Those parties: I personally disagree with their ideological ideas, but I do support their right to participate in the election system. I do support their right to participate in democracy.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow leads one of those smaller parties. I don't agree with him on everything. I agree with him on many things, but I don't agree with him on everything. But what I do agree with him on is that his party, his members, his voters have a right to participate in our election system. They have a right to expect the government of the day not to attack their democratic rights. They have a right to expect the government of the day to make sure that they can participate in the political process the way they want to.

There is not an Albertan I've ever met that says that they want their government to come here and mess with the democracy that is currently inside our province in an attempt to make people, to make smaller parties that are closer to the political spectrum than the government not be able to succeed in order to give an advantage to the government.

We see it happening federally right now. It's a big deal in federal politics right now with some of the stuff that has been brought forward on democratic reform, where the people of Canada have categorically rejected the idea of one government of the day attempting to rig the system to make things easier for their re-election. This is Canada. We're a democracy. The governing party does not attack small political parties inside our political arena. They attack them on policy, certainly, they attack them on where they stand and what the government would do differently, and they attack them on the differences in the views and the hopes for the province and the ideas that we have for the province, but they do not attack other political party structures in an attempt to make them not be able to participate in the system. Dictators do that, Madam Chair, not in the Canadian democracy and not in Alberta.

We don't stack the deck. We spent a lot of time talking about that last night, and the members across the way need to own this, their attempt to stack the deck. We left the committee after a whole summer where we watched members – I'm not going to name them all; they're all in Hansard, though – over and over and over vote shamefully to try to get their campaign expenses paid by the taxpayers of Alberta. Then as we brought that up . . .

The Chair: Are there other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A6? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise again and speak on Bill 35 and particularly on this amendment. You know, on the government side yesterday one of the members used their statement to give his version of a children's rhyme, something about the sky falling or something to that effect. That was cute. I'm not sure how clever it was, but it was definitely cute. I enjoyed the entertainment value of it. But the reason I raise this is not to critique, good or bad, the member from the government side yesterday but as a lead-in to the fact that a more recent and current tale is one that the government-side members ought to pay attention to. It's not nearly so cute, and it's not nearly so funny, but it's very pertinent to what we're doing here today and much more recent in context. It is that the people of Alberta really believe in the concept of fairness. They want everybody to do their best. They don't demand perfection. They would like it, but I think they accept from amongst their elected people their best efforts.

They don't like mistakes, and they criticize them, but if they believe the best efforts are there, lots of times they'll give people second chances. What I use as an example of that is that our party was in government for 12 or 13 elections in a row, and no one thinks we were perfect. I'm sure we could all agree on that. No one thinks we were perfect. But they kept re-electing us because I think that underneath it all they believed we were doing our best and that we were mostly amongst the good ones. At least, intentions were good. Let me say that. At least I will say this: enough of them believed it that they kept re-electing us for 12 or 13 elections.

Where that changed last year was when they stopped believing we were the good ones. I believe that what we did to cause that, one of the big things we did to cause that, was that we called an election a year early. We called an election a year early, when the party who was the Official Opposition then and is still the opposition now was in disarray. Nobody argues with that. We called the election when the Liberal Party appeared to be in disarray. We called it when we had a year left in our mandate.

Mr. Clark: How did that work out?

Mr. McIver: That's my point. Hey, I'd appreciate a little patience, Member for Calgary-Elbow. I'm coming to that. You're just jumping ahead a little bit, if you don't mind.

When the people of Alberta saw that, they decided we were no longer the good guys and good ladies, that we were no longer doing the best for them, and they rewarded us the way they reward people that they don't believe are doing their best anymore. They fired us.

Now, the reason I raise this – and you can only imagine, folks in here, that it gives me no joy to raise this, but I'm actually, government members, the best friend you've got right now – is because I am reminding you that what you are doing with this legislation is very similar to what was done to get the last government that I was part of fired. With this legislation there's no way, if you pass this legislation, that you could possibly tell Albertans that you have their best interests at heart. You've got lots of policies I disagree with, and I'm sure that in every case you can make some excuse or some argument why you think it's good for Alberta. I may disagree with every one, but you could at least make some argument.

9:30

On this piece of legislation you have crossed that chasm. This is as self-serving, as biased a piece of legislation, designed to tip the electoral scales in your favour, as you could almost possibly do. There's just nowhere to hide. You know what? You can't look your constituents in the eye after passing this piece of legislation and expect any of them to believe that you have Albertans' best interests at heart and not only your own. Now, it's a little disappointing that you've come to this point after 18 months or 19 months instead of 40 years, but it appears that you have. There's still time to save yourselves by either rejecting this piece of legislation or making some amendments to it that would make it more balanced.

Now, we established in talking last night in the House the fact that you are going ahead and making it so that quarterly reports have to be done by constituencies, when you're the only party who doesn't really raise any money at your constituencies and that you're loading administrative burdens onto every party but your own, costing every party but your own a bunch of money, completely tipping the scales.

I pointed out in this House last night, and I will do it again today, that since this government has been in place, Madam Chair, they have told people – because people have told us. We keep hearing from supporters of ours that they're afraid to give us money, afraid to be on our boards because the government has said: if we find you on any PC list, we won't do business with your company; we won't employ you on any boards.

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Mr. McIver: You know what? That is shameful behaviour. So there are two examples.

Now, what's before us here now is just one more example. In committee all parties, including the government party, agreed that $1,000 was a good number, yet here you are at $4,000. We had a supporter of ours do some research on this, and here's what's interesting, Madam Chair. Of all the parties, the NDP has the least amount of donations over $4,000. Again, talk about self-serving. They talk about taking big money out of politics, but what they're really doing – and to be clear, you know, for full disclosure, our party had the most donations over $4,000. The Official Opposition had a good number of them, and the governing party I think had less than 10.

Here's another example – if it was only one example, it would be bad enough – another in a long string of examples in this legislation where the legislation is not designed to be fair and is not designed to take big money out of politics, especially if they turn down this amendment, because they're actually raising the donations from $1,000 to $4,000 per year, which would, I think, by some definitions, be called: putting bigger money back into politics. What they're doing here is cutting off donations for every party but their own, another example of the governing party trying to tip the electoral scales in their favour, against everybody else, and they're doing it with legislation that they can ram through with the majority they have.

Mr. Nixon: To stack the deck.

Mr. McIver: To stack the deck, to tilt the playing field, to put their thumb on the scale. There are a whole bunch of ways to describe it, but it is essentially taking democracy and abusing it from a government majority standpoint. It's shameful and despicable, and the government ought to be ashamed. They ought to be ashamed. No credibility on this. No integrity on this because they are going against even what their own members agreed to in committee, which was to keep the donations for constituencies at $1,000. I can see that they've done the math. They've realized that, they've looked at the numbers, and they've said: what number will hurt the other parties the most and hurt our party the least? If you do a mathematical examination, you'll find that number is pretty close to $4,000. Shameful. Shameful.

You know what? I get it. You got the majority. You get to do what you want. But what I don't think the public will stand for is twisting democracy in your favour because democracy, by definition, is equal. Everybody's voice has to be equal. This is a bold, barefaced attempt to make democracy more advantageous for the government side than for any of the opposition sides. It's as plain as day, and this is only one example in the legislation.

You know what? What's interesting is that the Member for Calgary-Elbow has offered the government an opportunity to save some face and say that, at least in this example, in this one section only of the legislation: we will do what the title says. As I've said before – and I'll say it again – you call the legislation the Fair Elections Financing Act. The government members always say: taking the big money out of politics. Well, apparently, what the big print giveth, the small print taketh away, and that's exactly what's happening here.

You're actually adding money in. You are making it, with the rules that you have, as pointed out by several of my colleagues in the House, including our Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, that I've heard say it a few times, so that with a $50,000 limit for a campaign in a constituency, when you take $4,000 per year from a donor, if the donor gives you $4,000 a year for four years, that's $16,000, okay? And you just multiply that by three, and you get to $48,000 out of the $50,000. Three members, three people from your constituency, or three Albertans can finance $48,000 out of the $50,000 that you're allowed to spend in a campaign. Yet the government is going to turn to the cameras and say: "See? We made it even." Nonsense. Absolute nonsense.

They've picked a number at $4,000 that's the most disadvantageous to all the opposition and the least disadvantageous to the government. It's good for the government, bad for the opposition, and they expect Albertans to believe that they are defending democracy. They're crapping on democracy. They are offending anybody that believes in democracy. That's what this government is doing with this piece of legislation in black and white. Folks, when it's in black and white, you can't really hide from it because people can go on the website and see it.

You can stand up in front of the cameras all day long and tell people that you're taking the big money out of politics, but those that pay attention will know that you're increasing the donations from $1,000 to $4,000. It doesn't actually twig on you that it's just a little inconsistent with what you and your Premier and your front bench have been saying to the cameras? You're not telling Albertans the truth. Albertans know it. They'll bust you on it. You know what? If it was about policy, they could say: well, you know, I kind of like it. But it's not about policy; it's about democracy. You're dumping on democracy. You are dumping on the thing that makes the country what it is, our province what it is, the only thing that makes it great. You're dumping all over it. It's a shame. Absolutely shameful, Madam Chair. Absolutely shameful.

You know what? I tried to start off with a tale about how our government ended up not being in government. This is the type of thing that will cause Albertans to fire a government. There is an old maxim that I believe in, that people don't hire governments; they fire governments. There's no doubt that last year on May 5 they fired ours. I get that. The government members, Madam Chair, ought to actually pay attention to that and think about how that happened. When the public no longer believes that the government they have are good people and have their interests at heart – this is a piece of legislation that will really twig Albertans to understand that this NDP government does not have their best interests at heart. I'll tell you what. When the election comes, I will have this in my hand, and I will be out campaigning, because this is a reason to fire a government. This is a reason to fire the government right here.

You know what? I will sit and listen for a little while right now, but government members ought to actually think about this. You ought to be ashamed to look your constituents in the eye if you don't vote for this amendment because while this won't fix the whole piece of legislation, this will make the one small piece of it at least somewhat consistent with what you're telling the public. If you can't support this – you know what? – then the emperor has no clothes, folks. Then you actually have no credibility, and you have dumped on democracy. Don't do that.

Chair's Ruling Relevance

The Chair: Hon. members, I've tended to give a great deal of latitude in the subject matter that we talk about, but in the interests of greater efficiency I'd remind members that during committee stage, we need to be debating the clauses of the bill. In this case we're debating the amendment itself, so if you could try to keep your comments a little bit more directed, that would be helpful.

Thank you.

Debate Continued

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly, Madam Chair. We are talking about an amendment that attempts to stop the government from rigging the system with the bill they brought forth, an amendment that will help protect constituency associations from this government's headlong approach to attack constituency associations, an amendment that will help protect smaller parties from this government's approach of attacking constituency associations.

There are choices in this life, and the government is making choices. You know, I had a call late yesterday afternoon from Rocky Mountain House's radio station. They wanted me to go on the air, and they have me on quite often, so I came on. You know what the opening question was? It was about choices. It was about the comments from the premier of Alberta, who said that Albertans should make better choices.

Now, I had a lot to say about that to the people of Rocky Mountain House, and I can assure you that the people of Rocky Mountain House will have a lot to say about that next time at the ballot box because, let me tell you, the people in my community do not deserve to be told by the Premier to make better choices when they are fighting for their jobs, their homes, and their livelihoods because of the policies of this government. This amendment right here is about saying to the government: "You should make better choices. You should bring forward better legislation. You should stop attacking the opposition parties. You should stop trying to rig democracy and, instead, make it fair for constituency associations, make donation limits appropriate for constituency associations, to keep it separate, to make sure that we don't see $4,000." That is what this amendment is about, Madam Chair. This is exactly about different buckets for different constituency associations.

The government wants to avoid that. I get it, Madam Chair. I get it. They spent their summer trying to stack the deck, and now they're in the Legislature trying to stack the deck. The Member for Calgary-Elbow with this amendment is giving them an opportunity to stop that behaviour, to make different choices, to make a different choice and, instead, stand with the Member for Calgary-Elbow, have a serious look at the amendment that he has brought forward, recognize that as the legislation currently stands, if we don't pass this amendment, there will continue to be an attack on smaller parties. It will continue to prevent other parties from being able to participate in our democracy, it will continue to attack volunteers in our democracy, and it will continue to kneecap the opposition.

Now, Madam Chair, I certainly think that you're probably just as appalled as I am about the move by this government to try to rig democratic rules to make things easier for them in the next election. This amendment that we are debating right now gives them an opportunity to not do that.

Now, with some of the amendments that they voted against, there will still be a tremendous amount of rigging, but at least in this case we can empower constituency associations all across the province to be able to participate in democracy how they always have, to have, like, grassroots participation in democracy. You know, "grassroots" is a word that all parties in the Assembly often use. It's something that I know is very, very important to the Wildrose Party. I've watched the NDP members stand up and raise this issue in the past and say that grassroots is important to their democracy. I would note that the way the grassroots participate in the democratic process for the New Democratic Party is different than the way they probably participate in our party, but I would also note that the legislation as it currently stands – and this is what the amendment is trying to fix – only attacks the way the grassroots participate in the parties on this side of the House.

Think about that. Madam Chair, it only attacks the way the grassroots participate in the opposition parties, not in the way that the grassroots participate in the government side. Now, some people would call that stacking the deck. There is no way around that. This amendment is about stacking the deck at its core. The amendment is about stacking the deck at its core. Stacking the deck.

The opportunity is here for the government to stop stacking the deck, take the member up on the offer – opportunity, I guess, would be a better way of saying that – and vote or help work to make the amendment better. That's an option that is before the government. If they don't quite like some of the wording and they want to do something a little different, we'd like to hear about that. But to be able to make sure that they are actually not bringing big money back into politics, that they aren't increasing constituency donation levels by 400 per cent, that they are not crippling opposition parties' political structures and that, by doing this, they'll be able to keep buckets within the system, to be able to protect the integrity of the political system that we all enjoy. That's a choice, Madam Chair, that the government has before them.

I will close with this because I am eagerly awaiting the vote on this amendment. We have choices. All of us make choices on a daily basis. We have choices in politics, we have choices in our personal life, and this government certainly has choices. Rather than say to my constituents and the people of Alberta that they should make better choices – let's be honest today, Madam Chair – this government should make better choices.

This government should stop rigging the system. This government should not waste their summers trying to line their pockets with taxpayers' money and instead should stand up and support the Member for Calgary-Elbow and protect our political system. If they do not, Madam Chair, they one hundred per cent prove to the debate about this that all this government is about is rigging the system to their advantage. It's trying to get taxpayers to pay for things to make them feel better or pay for their campaign expenses. It's trying to attack political parties, and that is shameful. As I've said before, they should hang their heads in shame and . . .

Mr. Carlier: Point of order.

The Chair: Hon. member, we have a point of order. One moment. Go ahead, Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Repetition

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I heard, you know, earlier, before the member stood up to speak: try to keep on topic, on task. This member, in particular, should be called to order because he has persisted in needless repetition, raised matters that have already been said in the current session. It's my understanding that he stood up and spoke for a third time, which, for sure, is his right, but he hasn't added anything to the debate. He is just repeating over and over again the same things he already has. I do believe it's a point of order.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I would say that, unfortunately, the Deputy Government House Leader made the argument against his own point of order. Before he stopped speaking, he pointed out correctly, just for the record, that there is no limit to the number of times people can speak in Committee of the Whole. For that reason there is no point of order.

Mr. Nixon: As was pointed out by the leader of the third party – and I appreciate his pointing it out – this is not a point of order. It is categorically offensive that the government of the day would attempt to stop members from speaking about important amendments. I get why they are ashamed of what they are doing and why they would want to, but that is not what this is. This is democracy here. This is exactly what we're talking about, trying to stifle the opposition from being able to speak on behalf of the people of Alberta.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is not a point of order. The minister of agriculture is saying that repeating what we have to say here somehow makes this illegitimate debate. Every day we listen to the same minister read the exact same notes repetitiously in question period over and over and over. If that was so, then practically fourth-fifths of his answers in question period would be ruled out of order.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre is making very valid points about democracy, the fundamentals of what we're talking about here. The fact that they would bring a point of order to try and stop him from speaking on this really speaks to the point of what we're doing here, protecting democracy. This is not a point of order. The government is just ashamed that they have to sit here and listen to people who do not agree with them, Madam Chair. There's no point of order.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. This is Committee of the Whole. This is an opportunity for members to get up and speak on numerous occasions and even on the same bill or on the same amendment. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has been speaking on different amendments. You may think that he is repeating himself. That's unfortunate.

There was an amendment earlier this week that offered you the chance to send this to committee and you wouldn't have to sit here and listen to this for three days. So now sit here and listen to it for three days.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Madam Chair, I just want to make some comments on what the Member for Strathmore-Brooks talked about: repeating answers. You know, often if you get the same question, you get the same answer. Answers don't change just because the question is the same. I'm not sure exactly where his argument was there. Often in question period in particular: same question, same answer.

Mr. McIver: I have different comments to make, Madam Chair. My, I hope, very respectful advice to you is to rule against this point of order based on the fact that what the government does not get to do is stifle debate and stifle dissension. If you are to make a ruling that allows government to stifle debate and stifle dissension, you are making everything we're doing here irrelevant, and I think you are much too wise to do that.

The Chair: Hon. members, given that it's committee, I've given a little more leeway than normal, but once you've spoken to a point of order, generally that's enough. I think we're starting to run into repetition on the points of order, so let's settle that piece.

Again, it is committee. Members are allowed to speak as often as they like and even if it involves repetition at times. It happens. My kids always accuse me of repeating myself, but that's what happens. I would encourage members that it's important that we stay focused on the amendment, focused on the clauses of the bill, and let's try to be a little bit more efficient in how we conduct business here in the House.

Please continue, hon. member.

Debate Continued

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. As I said, I was actually close to finishing my comments, but I think I'm going to have to recap them now because I don't exactly know where I was at before I was interrupted by the point of order.

I think the reason that we're seeing some repetitiveness in the comments about certain amendments is that at the core the bulk of the amendments that are being brought forward by the opposition are an attempt to stop a couple of key issues. We've discussed them, but obviously the government by their comments, through you, Madam Chair, are not fully understanding what we're bringing forward. So maybe we need to try to do a better job of being able to articulate what we're trying to say, and I will try to do a better job. My colleagues on this side of the House seem to know what I'm talking about, but maybe that's because we actually have grassroots democracy in our parties. Maybe that's what it comes down to.

At the core here's what we're dealing with. First, on this bill we're trying to get big money out of politics. The Official Opposition has agreed with that. The third party has agreed with that. Both independent members have agreed with that. So here we are. We're trying to get big money out of politics, which is what this amendment refers to. This is specifically to that amendment. We're going to lower the limits from $15,000 a year to $4,000 a year, very much part of this amendment. There you go. We're on the amendment, and we're at $4,000 a year. I agree with that. I think that taking it from $15,000 to $4,000 a year is a good idea. I don't know for sure that $4,000 was the right number, but it's a compromise. We had to get out of $15,000, so we're passed that.

There's a second component of this. In our system currently, until this bill passes, a constituency association can receive $1,000. Now, unfortunately, this government again has brought forward retroactive legislation in the middle of a quarter, which has created a whole bunch of accounting problems, and as we can see from the state of the province's books, that side of the House is not very good at accounting. We'll digress on that for right now.

The core of this bill then turns around and raises the constituency donation level from $1,000. So I want everybody to be clear on that because there seems to be some confusion, Madam Chair, to the members across the way: $1,000 is what their constituency associations can receive right now. As has been established in great detail during debate, their constituency associations do not receive any money because they're controlled by a central authority, and they take all the money that is raised at the constituency level. That's what they choose. On our side, to myself or any of the members on this side, our constituency associations can receive a maximum of $1,000 a year.

With this legislation that is being brought forward by this government, the NDP government, they can now receive $4,000 a year. Now, this amendment that has been brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow is specifically about that at its core, the fact that for a constituency association we're now going from $1,000 to $4,000, which, Madam Chair, I think you will know, obviously, that $1,000 is significantly less than $4,000. In fact, it's $3,000 less. To get very, very specific to help the members across the way: constituency associations donation limits have now increased by $3,000. Three thousand dollars. Now, if they're wondering how I got to that: I minused $1,000 from $4,000. So now we have an increase of $3,000. That seems significantly higher than $1,000. Again, to the amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, this is what he's trying to fix.

Now, on top of that, with this bill we cap the amount that any individual candidate could spend during an election at $50,000. So once you cap the amount at $50,000, that that's the only amount that could be spent during that campaign, and you raise the donations up to $4,000, any one person can donate $4,000 a year each year or one person and their spouse can donate upwards of $8,000 a year from one family or a family associated with one business, you only need two or three people to be able to fund an MLA's campaign.

Now, at it's core the bill that has been brought forward by the government – the government has attempted to say that it's all about getting big money out of politics, which we agree with. We have shown over and over throughout the last couple of days that truly at its core the government's goal is about rigging the system. There's absolutely no doubt about that now as each amendment goes through. Specifically to this amendment, the hon. member is trying to say: "Hey, we don't want just two or three people to be able to influence a campaign. If the goal of this bill is to take influence out of politics, this is counterproductive."

In response to the reasonable questions brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, the government, when they're not trying to raise pointless points of order and stifle the opposition from speaking, are rising and saying: "No. No. This is just about taking big money out of politics. That's all we're about." But they won't answer the question about the 400 per cent increase on constituency associations. Four hundred per cent. Four times. That's important, and it is the core of what this amendment is about. It is the core of this amendment, which is to say: "No. Whoa. Back up. Let's have a look at this. Are we really accomplishing the goal of getting big money out of politics?"

Now, it's made categorically worse in my mind, Madam Chair, when we point out the fact that during the committee that was struck by the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of the other opposition parties in the Assembly and the Premier on ethics and accountability, the members that were sent there from the governing party supported that concern. I could pull out Hansard and quote it all, but they're not going to stand up and deny it because they know they supported it, so I won't waste our time with that. They supported taking it to $1,000. We've already seen that they've been overruled by the government front bench. I guess that's how they run their party. It's particularly interesting that the government whip was actually on that committee and fought to get that limit lower. I digress on that, too. That was the decision that they made.

But the government can't continue to then rise in the Assembly under the guise of getting big money out of politics, trying to defend the actions that they're taking to attack political parties or to kneecap political parties or to make things worse for political parties on the other side of the spectrum to make things easier for them under the guise of getting big money out of politics because the core of the disagreements on this bill comes down to constituency associations and how parties manage themselves.

The core of the disagreement on this bill, Madam Chair, is not around lowering from $15,000 to $4,000 for any one political party. The core of the disagreement is how the governing party is treating other political parties that are in the spectrum. This amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow gives them an opportunity to say: "Okay. You know what? We got caught with our hands in the cookie jar." Or the pickle jar, as the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills likes to say. "We got busted. We're caught, just like we got caught on political donations or on campaign subsidy when we were in committee." That's okay. You got caught, so rise up and do the right thing and say: "Okay. You know what? We had a majority, and we thought it would be cute to try to rig the system to attack smaller political parties, but, hon. member, you got us. I'm sorry, Albertans. We'll move on."

Instead it appears, based on about two or three days of debate on this piece of legislation – three days, I think – that the governing party is going to continue down the road of attacking other political parties.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Why?

An Hon. Member: Because they can.

Mr. Nixon: Because they can. You know what? They can. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays pointed out that they have a majority. You don't have to stand inside this Assembly for too long to understand that this side doesn't have enough votes to be able to stop it. We will in 2019, I assure you of that, something that the other side of the House should remember because this amendment will impact them when they're on that side. At that time, when the governing caucus is back down to four or five members sitting on this side of the House, they might be saying: "Whoa. We kind of wish that we'd listened to the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre because this legislation is still hurting us."

Mr. McIver: We often say that.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. I mean, as the leader of the third party says, they often say that in their caucus meetings. It doesn't surprise me. I do wish that he would call my spouse because she doesn't. We need to get this right. All I am sincerely doing, Madam Chair, is trying to give the governing party an opportunity to do the right thing.

10:00

An Hon. Member: We're helping you.

Mr. Nixon: I'm helping you. I'm helping you.

And it's applicable to this amendment, the thing of help, because that is the point of amendments. The opposition is attempting to make the legislation the government brought forward better, trying to fix things that they may not have seen. That is our job. I know the hon. agriculture minister is hoping that we would come here on behalf of our constituents and just sit here and rubber-stamp everything he does or everything his party does. That's not what the people I work for tell me to do. My job is not to come here and say: "Oh, yeah, go ahead. You can rig the whole system to your advantage. It's all right." I sure wouldn't want to go home to Sundre tonight to the A&W and say: you know, the agriculture minister said that I'm just supposed to do whatever he says. That's not our job. Our job is to do exactly this, and that's what we're doing. We're saying: "Look, there's a mistake here. You're making a terrible error."

The reason this matters is because of what happened in committee on this exact legislation. There were, clearly, mistakes made, which show that as we debate this legislation with this amendment, it is our job to say: "Hey, look, we have an amendment here that will fix the legislation that you're bringing forward. We have an amendment here that'll stop the errors that you're making." We've done this so much as we've gone through it – and I will close shortly, Madam Chair – in our time together in this Assembly, when over and over and over and over this government has attacked the people of Alberta with their legislation – attacked them – attacked communities, people's livelihoods, their homes.

Here they are again now, but what's worse is that this time they're attacking democracy. They're attacking democracy. This amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow will help stop or at least blunt the attack that is coming from the NDP government. By not voting for it, the governing members, I would submit to you, Madam Chair, are showing that they have no interest in protecting democracy and that their own interests are nothing but the self-interest of re-election.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 35 and the amendment put forward by the Member for Calgary-Elbow. The Member for Calgary-Elbow's amendment is, I think, well thought out and a valuable contribution towards making the so-called Fair Elections Financing Act a little less unfair than as proposed by the government. I think it seeks to address some of the genuine flaws in the bill which are meant to stack the deck in favour of the government.

I really appreciated the comments from the leader of the third party. I think he gave the government an opportunity for some self-reflection, to perhaps look in the mirror, if you will. The leader of the third party's comments, I believe, were humble and genuine. He talked about the problems of the previous government, the arrogance that had set in, and how the previous government wanted to rig the election in its favour.

It called an election a year before a fixed election date when it believed the Official Opposition, the Wildrose, was dead. Rumours of our demise turned out to be significantly exaggerated, but incapacitated and disorganized we were for some time, and the government attempted to take advantage of that and seek re-election in its own selfish interests and not the interests of the public. The Liberal Party was in disarray, and that surely fed into the former government's decision to call an early election for its own selfish advantage.

I want to thank the leader of the third party for being honest about that. I think these were humble and genuine comments and some lessons learned. I know that that's probably difficult for the leader of the third party to say. I know he's proud of his party and his record in public service, and to be able to recognize when your party is wrong about something is difficult. We all struggle to do that because we think we're all right all of the time. I assure you, Madam Chair, that I am right all of the time, but theoretically I might be wrong from time to time. Theoretically, at least. The leader of the third party recognized that they were wrong in doing what they were doing, and Albertans punished them for that and rightfully so. I'm hopeful that some lessons have been learned.

The leader of the third party is trying to share some of those lessons with members on the government side. That is something they should not ignore lightly. It's something they should take to heart as they try to rig an election in their favour. The NDP are now doing the same thing. The NDP are trying to rig the system in their favour. They've seen the polls, they've talked to their constituents, and Albertans are planning to fire them in two and a half years. They know – they know – that the vast majority of members on the government side stand a very, very real chance of losing their seats in the next election. They know that they stand a very real chance of being thrown out on their petard in two and a half years, and they know that if they're going to have any hope of staying in power, they're going to have to rig the system in their favour. They're going to have to stack the deck.

You know, Madam Chair, when you stack the deck, normally you want to slip a couple of aces in there, but we have got 55 cards of jokers right now. It's a deck of jokers because it makes no sense to the democratic processes of this province. If this government was actually interested in getting big money out of politics, they would accept the opposition's recommendations to get big government money out of politics. They would have accepted our amendments that would have banned government advertising during elections.

You know, just the other day – just the other day – this government shamefully put millions more taxpayers' dollars towards government advertising, government advertising for partisan, political propaganda in support of the carbon tax, that 80 per cent of Albertans oppose. Eighty per cent of Albertans want nothing to do with the CLAP, the so-called climate leadership action plan, of the government. Albertans do not like the CLAP. They do not like the carbon tax. And this government knows that Albertans do not want the CLAP, so they're trying to sell it to them in government advertising with millions of taxpayers' dollars. They're spending millions.

You know who this sounds like? Well, let's talk about lessons from the previous government. This is mirroring the actions of Alison Redford at the most depraved and corrupt point of the most corrupt government in the history of this province. They are following in their footsteps right now. Alison Redford, we remember, the former Premier Redford, would spend millions of taxpayers' dollars to put her name on billboards and advertise failed and poor government policies that Albertans didn't want. Redford took this province into debt. She began to destroy the legacy of Ralph Klein and the great conservatives who built this province. Albertans didn't want to go there, so to sell Albertans on those policies, she spent millions of taxpayers' dollars on government ads to sell her unpopular policies. Well, in the end it didn't work.

But I remember the NDP. They sat in the nosebleeds of this House for decades – they sat in the nosebleeds – and when the Redford government spent taxpayers' money on partisan political advertising, they stood up rightfully and condemned it. I thought that we agreed. I was at the Canadian Taxpayers Federation at the time, and I genuinely thought there was real agreement between myself and the Wildrose and the Liberals and the NDP that this was a bad thing to do, that regardless of your views on the larger, philosophical role of government, the left versus right stuff, none of that mattered on this stuff. This was about basic ethics, that it is unethical to take taxpayers' money to fund political campaigns.

And what have the NDP done? As soon as they got over there, they put their snout in the trough. They put their snout in the trough because it's their turn to do it. I expected them to be better, Madam Chair. I expected them to perhaps govern according to their ideology, but I expected them to govern more ethically. I expected them to govern more democratically. I expected them to hold themselves to a higher standard, but now they have gone far beyond the worst excesses of the former Redford government's abuse of taxpayers' money for government advertising in favour of their partisan political agenda.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Fildebrandt: It's shameful. It's shameful.

You know, corruption is not just lining your own pockets with money, Madam Chair. It's not just forging flight manifests and whatnot. It's also taking taxpayers' dollars and putting them towards your own partisan or personal reasons. It involves abusing taxpayers to further your own partisan political interests in ways that have nothing to do with your principles or your policies and is just about your re-election, and that's what we're seeing. This is a corruption of government policy designed to favour the re-election of the members opposite because they know that they're in big trouble in two and a half years. They know that they're in big trouble with the voters in their constituencies, so they have to try and rig the system – they have to try and rig the system – in their favour to give them every possible advantage, and it's shameful.

You know, just the other day the Premier said that Albertans have to make better choices. Well, speaking of lessons from the former government: Albertans have to make better choices. What does that sound like? That reminds me a lot of telling Albertans to look in the mirror. That reminds me of telling Albertans to look in the mirror because they're at fault for the poor choices of the government. Well, the Premier seems to think that she knows better than Albertans. The Premier seems to think that she can make better choices than regular Albertans, that she can make better choices than families and small-business owners and taxpayers, that the government needs to tell them how to make better choices. Well, you know, I would tell this government to look in the mirror themselves.

If this government, if these members sat back in the nosebleeds, as I'm sure they will again in two and a half years, what would they say? What if the Wildrose sat on that side of the House? If the Wildrose sat over there and brought forward a bill designed to rig the system in favour of our re-election, do you think that they would do what the minister of agriculture has done and try to silence us, or do you think that they would do what we're doing right now? Do you think that the members sitting on the government side right now, if they were in opposition and we brought forward a bill to rig the system in our favour, would sit silent and just rubber-stamp a bill like that? Or do you think that they would stand up and fight against it with everything they have? Would they stand up and speak against the bill at every stage? Would they put forward reasonable amendments to try to make this bill actually fair for the election process of this province?

I know that there are four members on that side of the House who sat in opposition, and I genuinely believed that they cared about democracy, that they cared about a fair and reasonable and open and transparent process. Then they got over there, and everything changed.

Well, I really hope that if the members on this side of the House right now are honoured to sit on the government side, we do not fall into that same trap. I hope that we will hold ourselves to a higher standard than the members in that government who used to sit in opposition and used to bellyache about the undemocratic and untransparent and unfair actions of the former government. I hope that if we are honoured to sit on the government benches of this House in two and a half years, we will hold ourselves to a higher standard, that we would not be such hypocrites as to speak in favour of democracy in opposition and run roughshod over it in government. I hope that we would hold ourselves to a higher standard, Madam Chair.

The NDP know that they have to rig the system because they have no other way to get re-elected right now. In rural Alberta they are about as unpopular as the flu. In rural Alberta virtually everyone wants the NDP gone. There was just a federal by-election in Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner, where the NDP proved that they are the new 1 per cent. They proved that they are literally only 20 per cent more popular than the Rhinoceros Party, Madam Chair. The Rhinoceros Party. Frankly, the Rhinoceros Party is a significantly more electoral option, I think, for more Albertans. If there was a two-party system in this province and the NDP was one and the Rhinoceros Party was another, my money is on the Rhinoceros Party right now.

In rural Alberta people want this government gone almost unanimously. I can't find a New Democrat in my riding anymore. They're gone. In Calgary the NDP support is less than half of what it was on election day. Calgarians know that this government is not governing in the best interests of Albertans. It's not governing in the best interests of Calgary. Even in Edmonton, where this government enjoyed tremendous support during the last election, Edmontonians have begun to turn against this government, too, because they see that this government is not governing for Edmonton. It is not governing for Alberta. It is governing for themselves.

That's what this bill is, Madam Chair. This bill is purely meant just to seek the re-election of this government. It's not meant to cut taxes. It's not meant to improve health care. It's not meant to improve education, to improve our roads, our environment. It's not meant to improve the finances of the province. It's not meant to improve the democracy of this province. It's meant for one thing and one thing only, and that is to rig the system in favour of a government that knows it's going down in defeat in two and a half years if they don't change the system.

Madam Chair, the Premier said that Albertans need to make better choices. Regardless of what this government does here trying to rig the system, no matter how much they rig the system, we're still going to have an election in two and a half years. The Premier says that Albertans need to make better choices. I'm confident that in two and a half years, no matter how much they rig the system, Albertans are going to make a better choice, and they're going to throw them out of office.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow on the amendment.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll be very brief in what I hope will perhaps close debate on this. I just want to make two points, two very important points.

The government shouldn't care whether this amendment passes because it has no impact on their party, because they raise zero dollars through their constituency associations. Now, I suppose I almost hesitate to bring this point up because what I'm really saying is: hey, NDP, here's actually an opportunity for you to kind of stick it to the other parties again because every other party here raises money through constit associations and therefore could conceivably raise up to $4,000 per person in a constit association every year. That actually is an advantage should we choose to use that.

Now, some parties, perhaps ours, may say that we're going to impose our own limit because we think it's wrong. Maybe I should go quickly and call this vote so you guys can vote it down because, actually, it's to the advantage of the parties on this side, but I'm not going to do that, Madam Chair. That would be wrong. It's not about locking in our advantage. We're not here – I'm not here, I can tell you that – just to find ways of maximizing advantage for the Alberta

Party. I am here to do the right thing for the province of Alberta, to do the right thing for democracy. I hope that's why each and every one of you is here as well. I hope that's why you sought election in the first place.

This has no impact at all on the NDP. What it does is that it puts big money back into politics. You have created a loophole, deliberately or inadvertently, that will allow us to raise more money in constituency associations, four times as much money. That's not right. It's not right, Madam Chair. It's absolutely not right.

The other thing I want to emphasize, which I don't know if I've emphasized enough, and then I'll return to my seat and we can vote on this: the amount of work this creates for Elections Alberta has already caused them to say that they need an increase in their budget, a substantial increase in their budget. Elections Alberta is going to have to add staff. Now, maybe that's part of the NDP's job-creation plan. That's, I suppose, possible. It's going to create at least two, three, four, five jobs, full-time jobs for people just to manage constituency quarterly reporting data and all of the different administrative burdens that this bill imposes upon Elections Alberta. The shameful part of all of that is that it solves a problem we don't have. This is not a problem that we currently have in the province of Alberta, so why have you come up with a solution in search of a problem?

I think you're being a little too clever for yourselves. You've out-thought yourselves on this one. You're trying to disadvantage others, and in so doing, you may have actually disadvantaged yourself. That's because you're not trying to do the right thing. You're not trying to make this bill right for democracy. You're not trying to make this bill right for Alberta. You're not trying to pass legislation that will stand the test of time and go unchanged for decades. You're not trying to leave a legacy that you can look back on in five, 10, 20 years from now with pride. You're trying to stack the deck. You're trying to put legislation in place that the next government, that comes in in 2019, will be forced to change, setting off this chain of events where the next government changes it to tilt the playing field to their side, and then you come in many decades later and tilt the playing field to your side. That's not what Albertans want. Albertans expected better from you. That's why they elected you. That's the kind of stuff they got rid of the PCs for, and you're doing the same damn thing. Not okay. Not okay, Madam Chair. Albertans will judge. Albertans will judge.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: I'm very excited to be back on the bill, Madam Chair. With so much robust debate over the last few days, I look forward to moving another amendment. I do note that out of all the amendments that have been passed so far, we've been successful in passing one amendment. Unfortunately, we'd like to see some more amendments, and I suspect we may be able to get something done on another amendment. Let's see if we can.

I do have the appropriate number of copies, Madam Chair. I will send them up to you and will await your permission to proceed with this amendment.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A7.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am moving that Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended as follows. In part A section 39 is amended in the proposed section 43.02 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) An audited financial statement and a copy of the auditor's report shall accompany each financial statement of a registered leadership contestant required to be filed under subsection (1) if the campaign expenses of the leadership contestant exceed $25,000.

In part B section 44 is struck out, and the following is substituted:

44(1) Part 6.2 is repealed.

(2) Part 6.2 continues to apply to leadership contests occurring when this section comes into force, and in addition, an audited financial statement and a copy of the auditor's report must accompany each financial statement of a registered leadership contestant required to be filed under section 44.96(1) if the campaign expenses of the leadership contestant exceed $25,000.

10:40

This amendment is being brought forward because, in my view and in my colleagues' view, I believe there must be reasonable financial limits and thresholds for auditing that are not too tough, not too restrictive on potential leadership candidates but maintain transparency, openness, and accountability in our electoral system. Leadership contestants can generate a lot of money in some cases, and in other cases they don't generate a lot of money, so we want to make sure that the cost of the audit is appropriate to the amount of money that is being raised. We wouldn't want to see a leadership contestant that participated in a leadership race that would only cost a lower amount, like $10,000, compared to a leadership contestant that may spend upwards of three-quarters of a million dollars.

We felt, after some discussion across the aisle, that $25,000 was the appropriate number although I would be, of course, open to any feedback from any members of the Assembly if they feel differently. But the concept is that at a certain amount it becomes appropriate for an audit to be completed and is not overburdensome on leadership campaigns.

With that said, I would be happy to sit down and hear from the government side of the House where they are at on this amendment and see if there is some bipartisan support for it.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic reform.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the member for bringing forward this amendment. I think that he is absolutely correct that it adds to accountability and transparency, that it is not going to be something that is burdensome to leadership contestants because the requirement is that there must be at least $25,000 of expenses incurred before an audit is required.

I will be supporting this amendment, and I thank the member for bringing it forward.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 carried]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments?

Mr. Nixon: Well, Madam Chair, we appear to be on a roll. It's very exciting to see an amendment pass in Committee of the Whole. I think that that alone deserves recognition. Let's see if we can get going on a couple more. I think we're disproportionately out a little bit. You know, I would imagine it's something like 180 to 1 or somewhere along there. I would not state that as a fact, though. I've not done a count on that.

Madam Chair, we recently discovered that the NDP has at some point in the past created what I would refer to as a shadow party. It appears, in our mind, when we look at this shadow party that it's been built to get around the rules that are regulating political parties or certainly is set up in a way that could get around the rules of political parties or at least skirt the spirit of the laws that this current government is bringing forward.

They, they being the NDP, have created an unregulated and unaudited, secret version of their party which can do things that the NDP as a party is not allowed to do. Now, I call it a secret shadow party because I believe most of the members sitting on the government side don't know about it, or at least what it truly is. I know that Albertans have never been told about it, and I certainly suspect that the bulk of the members of the NDP Party are not aware of the secret shadow party that they are automatically members of.

Now, I suspect that the government members don't know that they are members of this secret party automatically. I suspect – I don't know for sure – that they never asked to join it, but by being members of the NDP government, members, including you, Madam Chair, are automatically members of this shadow organization.

Now, this leads to some weird issues that I think we need to discuss in Committee of the Whole. Two days ago the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud rightly recused himself from the debate on Bill 35 since he has signed loan guarantees for the NDP. Now, that member participated in the committee associated with those loans, but specifically for us here on Bill 35, he did recuse himself from the process, rightly so. I commend him for recognizing the potential conflict and working with the Ethics and Accountability Committee and declaring that conflict and taking the appropriate steps. I think we all should recognize that, and we recognize that the Speaker properly at that point asked him to leave the Chamber while we were debating this bill, so he was not in conflict. Again, I commend the member for doing the appropriate process.

But the fact is that every single member of the NDP, whether they know it or not, is a member of the shadow party. This shadow party exists to guarantee the debts of the NDP that are in its official registered bylaws. Now, this organization is doing exactly what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud is doing, and he honourably recused himself from this debate, rightly so. But every single member of the NDP is automatically a member of this secret organization that I'm referring to.

Now, it's an interesting question as to whether every member of the NDP caucus might also need to recuse themselves from the Bill 35 debate as the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has rightly done for backing loans. Every member across the way, Madam Chair, including yourself, is a member of the organization who is backing substantial loans, the shadow party for the NDP.

We know that one of the government ministers is married to the president of the shadow party. That minister, certainly, should recuse herself from this debate if the traditions of this Assembly are to be followed.

Now, Albertans don't know where this organization got its property. They don't know where it got its money. Who gave it money in the past? Who pays its bills now? Is it getting union money that would be illegal for the NDP to take in? How much union money is it getting? What activities is this organization undertaking that benefit the NDP? We know that the president and treasurer of the NDP are automatically on the board of this shadow party.

Unlike a legitimate political party, the shadow party isn't independently audited with the audit being disclosed to Elections Alberta. We've talked a lot about the need for transparency in our political process, but here we have a shadow party of the NDP that is not accountable to the audit process currently in our election system. Let's be clear. This organization is only audited – only audited – by the executive of the NDP. Madam Chair, I think that at the very least, this smells bad. It's awkward. It raises a whole bunch of questions, and Albertans, when they find out about it, will not be impressed.

That brings me, Madam Chair, to my amendment, that I will be moving shortly. We wanted to move amendments to Bill 35 to prohibit off-the-books political wings. That's what we want to move. There needs to be a prohibition on any political party from having an off-the-books shadow party similar to what the NDP has. I am looking at some of the hon. members across the way, and it appears, based on their reaction, that they don't know about the shadow party. We'll talk about it more in detail as we proceed.

Now, the ability to create an unregulated and unaudited shadow party is an affront to the intentions of the first bill that this Legislature passed unanimously, by every party in this Assembly. The first thing that we did together as a group in the 29th Legislature: this shadow party is an affront to that. I was proud to support the government's first Bill 1, to get union and corporate donations out of our political system. Some of the first votes that I passed in my public life were for that, but now I have to question whether the government was truly sincere about this issue.

When everyone is concerned about PACs and third-party advertisers, rightly so, the NDP now needs to explain to this House and to Albertans why it owns an off-the-books shadow party, which may be acting as a PAC. These types of shadow parties cannot be allowed to exist. That is clear.

Unfortunately, we are now told that the government has crafted Bill 35 in such a way that it's making things harder for political parties, and we as the opposition as a whole, not based on ideological beliefs or political bent of individual parties but as the opposition that represents the majority of Albertans but the minority inside this Legislature have to ask questions about whether this shadow party has been set up in such a way to continue to benefit the NDP going forward at the same time that they're using the legislative process to cripple the opposition as a whole.

We must be able to close this 747-size loophole. It is deeply concerning to the people of Alberta. It is deeply concerning to the opposition party that it even exists. But mostly and why it is applicable here today inside the Assembly, it is deeply concerning that Bill 35 has not been dealt with.

Now, I'm afraid that if a loophole continues to exist, then other parties will have to consider taking advantage of the loophole if only not to fall behind the NDP. Quite frankly, that would not be a good thing – that would not be a good thing – and it would be counterproductive to what we are attempting to accomplish with Bill 35.

With that said, Madam Chair, I would like to move an amendment. I do have the appropriate amount of copies, and I will send them up with the pages and wait for your permission to continue.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A8.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment states that I will move that Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, be amended in section 43 in the proposed section 44.1(1)(i) by adding the following after subclause (v):

- (vi) an organization with a board of directors, executive or senior management that includes persons who belong to the executive, board of directors or leadership of a registered party.

I certainly hope that all members, including the members from the governing side, will support our attempt to close this giant loophole that is in the legislation that has been brought forward. I also certainly hope that the members on the other side will explain what is going on with the NDP's secret shadow party. It certainly is troubling and against the spirit of the legislation that this Assembly is currently working on, Bill 35. It is against the spirit of the first bill that this government brought forward and often touts as part of their legacy.

If you look at the NDP's 2015 audit, a footnote cites that the NDP's $400,000 operating line of credit is guaranteed through a related nonprofit association. That nonprofit association which I am referring to: every member across the way is automatically a member.

While we will have a lot of discussion about this as we debate this amendment, I think the first question that we must ask ourselves in this Chamber, particularly the members who are members of an organization which is guaranteeing political donations for their party, is if they would prefer at this point to contact the Ethics Commissioner, like the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did, to see if they need to recuse themselves, similar to what he did, or at the very least to rise and explain to Albertans why they can proceed in this debate in clear conflict but the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud cannot.

The nature of this organization is troubling, and there are many questions that need to be answered before we are able to complete the work on Bill 35. But the first question of the utmost importance is whether or not the government members across the way need to recuse themselves from this process. I highly encourage members to consider that, and I look forward to having more discussion in the future about the NDP's secret shadow party.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. There is no shadow party. The way that the member opposite is describing something that Elections Alberta and the Chief Electoral Officer are completely aware of and have been working with the Alberta NDP on is dramatic but incorrect. There is no loophole to do with this society of which we mention, and there is no conflict in this case. Again, this is something that the Chief Electoral Officer and Elections Alberta are fully aware of, and it is not something that gives the Alberta NDP an advantage through Bill 35.

Regarding the amendment that the member has proposed, I actually would really appreciate more clarification because what he has done is added to the exclusions of third party – third party “does not include,” and then he's added “an organization with a board of directors, executive or senior management that includes persons who belong to the executive, board of directors, or leadership of a registered party.”

The amendment that's been tabled I'm not sure even attempts to do what the member is describing. With all due respect, the member does not fully understand and does not have the details of this issue. There are no financial benefits provided by the entity that they are talking about. Again, the Chief Electoral Officer is fully aware and has no concerns about this. We will be working with the Chief Electoral Officer to make sure that our party complies fully with the acts that we have brought forward to get big money out of politics and to make sure that there is transparency and accountability in all things that we do.

I certainly would like to thank the member for his concern, but I do want to stress that there is no issue here. Unless he can explain how this exclusion from the definition of third party does what he is talking about, I will not be supporting this amendment because, again, I think it shows that the member does not fully understand or have the details on this issue.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for rising. I do have to first point out in regard to the comments that the minister started out by saying that the shadow organization that I'm referring to did not exist, but then in the next sentence said that the Chief Electoral Officer is aware of it. So which is it? Does it not exist, or is the Chief Electoral Officer aware of it? That is a big difference.

Second, I will be writing to the Chief Electoral Officer and to the Ethics Commissioner, and I have been in contact with their office, and I would strongly suggest that the minister contact them as well before making statements on behalf of the Chief Electoral Officer and where he or is his department may or may not stand in regard to this organization.

Now, we'll talk about the details and how they apply to the amendment in reference to the minister's questions. But I do note, Madam Chair, the core of what I brought forward immediately to start was the fact that this organization that I refer to, the NDP's shadow party, is backing loans associated with the governing party. I'm going to show that in a second. It is backing loans of the governing party.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud rightly recused himself because he was backing loans for the NDP. Good for him for talking with the Ethics Commissioner and doing the right thing. I think it's always hard to figure that out, and that's what the Ethics Commissioner is for.

That question needs to be answered, Madam Chair. If all members of the NDP are backing loans just like the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, why they would not need to recuse themselves from this process is a legitimate question. I would also note that at no time in the minister's comments does she say that she has been or that her party has been in contact with the Ethics Commissioner about that potential conflict, similar to what the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud was.

Now, as for no financial benefit, again, a footnote in the NDP's 2015 audit cites that the NDP's $400,000 operating line of credit is guaranteed through a related nonprofit association. That begs the question: who is the related nonprofit association, and what is their relationship to the New Democratic Party? Is it the Calgary housing society or the Calgary house society that is mentioned in another footnote as being related through common directors? We went looking for the Calgary house society, and we didn't find it, but we did find the Calgary & District New Democrat House Society. As we looked, it does have interlocking directors with the NDP. The NDP's first vice-president, the NDP's treasurer, a former NDP provincial secretary, and an NDP labour VP and southern Alberta caucus director are on the house society's board of directors.

11:00

Scott Payne is the president of the house society, and he is one of the NDP's two labour vice-presidents and the southern Alberta director of the NDP caucus. He is also the spouse of a minister of this government. Chris O'Halloran is the treasurer of the house society and a former NDP provincial director and stakeholder relations manager in the Premier's office. Siobhán Vipond is a director of the house society, and she is currently the NDP treasurer and co-chair of the Premier's economic advisory council and the secretary treasurer of the Alberta Federation of Labour. The four others are also long-time NDP activists. Anne Wilson is currently first vice-president of the New Democratic Party.

The house society does own an industrial condo in Calgary, unit 321, 3132 -26th Street N.E. in Calgary, Alberta. Now, if you go to that location, the space is the NDP's Calgary office. It also seems to host the Calgary & District Labour Council. There seems to be a connection.

We looked up the objects of the society, and there's nothing special there, to be honest. Now, in 2011 the society amended its bylaws so that the society could guarantee the debts of the Alberta New Democratic Party with property of the society. Guarantee the debts of the New Democratic Party. It's right in the society's bylaws. It's current executive is completely tied to the executive of your party, and every member across the way is automatically a member of it.

So what exactly is the house society? These are questions people don't know the answers to, the minister doesn't seem to know the answers to, and certainly Albertans don't know the answers to. But, clearly, it's backing loans for the NDP Party, the same thing that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud recused himself from this debate for.

How did the society come to own an industrial condo with a clear title? Where does it get its current money? Who gave it money in the past? Who pays its bills now so that they can pledge the condo's title as security on the NDP's debts? Is that what's going on? It's a fair question. What part of its bills are paid for by the Calgary & District Labour Council, which appears to also be located in the house society condo, if any?

The house society, Madam Chair, isn't related to the NDP; it is the NDP. They are the same organization with the exact same membership. The only difference – and this is why this matters to this debate and this amendment – is that this house society is not regulated or audited by Elections Alberta or anyone except for by the NDP. According to the minister it doesn't exist. She has said that the government has talked to the Chief Electoral Officer about an organization that doesn't exist.

Their membership rules make it so that every member of the NDP is automatically – I want you to get this. This is very important. This is very important. The membership rules of the shadow organization make it so that every member of the NDP is automatically a member of the house society, and if a member quits the NDP, they cease to be a member of the house society. This begs a couple of questions.

The first and the most important I think right now, Madam Chair, is that because we know from the documents that this shadow organization is backing the debt of the NDP Party, we know that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has rightly recused himself from the debate, we know that every member across the way is automatically a member of the party, the question first and foremost is: why have they not recused themselves from debate?

We also have to ask: first, have the NDP members as a whole, have the members across from me right now been told that they're automatically a member of this and that they're backing debts for the NDP Party? But even more important, I think: have the members of the NDP Party been told that they are automatically members of an organization backing the debt of a political party? We don't know. We don't know if NDP members have ever been told this.

This leads again to weird things. Again, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud rightly recused himself from the debate on Bill 35 since he has signed as a guarantor of loans for the NDP. He properly did it. He properly removed himself from the Chamber. But if every single member of the NDP, including the cabinet, whether they know it or not, is a member of the house society automatically and the house society also guarantees NDP loans – guarantees NDP loans, something the minister has indicated in her comments, from what I can tell, wasn't happening, but clearly the documents show that it is guaranteeing NDP loans, without a doubt – it is an interesting question as to whether every member of the NDP caucus has to recuse themselves from Bill 35.

I certainly think that, at the very least, they should adjourn debate on this and contact the Ethics Commissioner for themselves. That is our responsibility as elected members, to make sure we're not in conflict. I will not presume to speak for the Ethics Commissioner, and I encourage through you, Madam Chair, that the hon. minister not speak for the Chief Electoral Officer. They are independent officers, and that's what they are here for. I will be contacting them to get their feedback on this. My office has already spoken to them verbally. They're aware that that letter is coming.

They rise in this Assembly and say, "No; that organization doesn't exist," when, clearly, it exists, and clearly the minister is a member of that organization, and clearly that organization backs loans to the party. The president and the treasurer of the NDP Party are automatically on the board of the house society, documents show. Unlike a political party, the house society isn't audited by Elections Alberta. The house society is audited by the NDP. Three members of the NDP Party – or the New Democrat Party, would be a better way of saying that – finance committee are the only people who audit the house society. They're the only people who audit the house society. So there is no independence in its financials, which only the NDP members can see and then only once a year at their AGM and only if they know where to look.

Given the blank stares from half of the government caucus as I started to speak about this, most of them probably aren't even aware that they're backing loans in part of an NDP shadow party. The fact that the minister has admitted that they have even started to reach out to the Chief Electoral Officer in any way shows that they are at least very aware that there may be potential conflicts here, that there may be a situation where they have at least had to seek advice. I would note again: no contact with the Ethics Commissioner, as far as I'm aware or from what the minister has indicated, despite the fact that this organization is backing loans and that every member of this government caucus is part of it.

As I said, Madam Chair, we will be writing to the Chief Electoral Officer. When everyone is concerned about PACs and third-party advertisers, the NDP needs to explain to the people of Alberta, they need to explain to this House why it owns an off-the-books shadow party that may be acting as a PAC. The Calgary & District New Democratic House Society isn't regulated. It isn't independently audited. It is allowed to receive unlimited corporate and union donations. It has no limitations on the activities it undertakes, and we have to take the NDP's word for it now for what the house society is or is not doing despite the fact that it is a complete mirror of their political party. Complete mirror. Same membership automatically, same leadership of the party across the way from me as in the leadership of this organization.

The NDP are telling us that they've been upfront with Elections Alberta about the house society, but we can't believe that Elections Alberta has said that the society and the NDP, which have the exact same membership – I suspect they might not even know that the society and the NDP have the exact same membership or that the society is only being audited by the NDP. I suspect they don't know how many loans may be being guaranteed. It would be interesting to know that. I can say that when we checked with Elections Alberta, they did not characterize it the same way that the minister did. Now, we'll have to talk to them in more detail, and I look forward to their response.

We will ask the Chief Electoral Officer to order the NDP's auditor to audit the Calgary & District New Democrat House Society going back for at least seven years. For all practical purposes, since it has exactly the same membership, the house society is the NDP, and it has never been properly audited or properly disclosed to the people of Alberta. We will also be asking the CEO when the NDP disclosed the details of the house society's peculiar structure to him. Albertans deserve to know where the house society got its money, where it spends the money, and what activities it undertakes. They also deserve to know why the house society has not been transparently disclosed. Albertans deserve to know when this government finally decided to talk to the Chief Electoral Officer about this shadow organization.

11:10

The reason that we bring this amendment forward is that clearly there needs to be a prohibition on any political party having an off-the-books shadow party. I don't think that we want to see that across the board. The ability to create an unregulated shadow party is an affront to the intentions of the first bill of this Legislature, a bill that was passed unanimously with the support of every party. Fortunately, the government has crafted Bill 35 in such a way that we are able to try to make an amendment to deal with shadow parties and make that glaring loophole the size of a 747 go away. We have an opportunity to do that. I'm afraid that if the loophole continues to exist, other parties will have to consider taking advantage of that loophole, quite frankly, Madam Chair, not because they want to, but because they'd have no choice because they would fall behind the NDP.

Putting transparency into our political process is a noble goal and something that I support. Having shadow parties that make people automatically the members of it, that exactly mirror a political party, and then using that organization to back the loans of that political party and then not disclosing what's going on, the same leadership, the same membership, having people automatically become members of an organization that they may not even know they're members of – do they know that they're backing your loans? Does all of your membership know that they've automatically been made members of the Calgary house society and that they are backing massive loans to the New Democratic Party? Do they know that? That is a very important question.

I believe that there are concerns on whether the members across the way from me, Madam Chair, can even participate in this debate, and I think that those concerns should be addressed with the Ethics Commissioner. I think that the easiest way to handle that, of course, would be to adjourn debate and let that process go through. I want to make sure that if the members are in conflict, they be given an opportunity to be able to address that properly. And I will not presume how that should be dealt with. We have an Ethics Commissioner for that.

I eagerly await feedback from the Chief Electoral Officer on some of the questions that we've raised. But I strongly urge the government to show that they are truly interested in closing loopholes, that they are truly interested in making our political process better, that they're not going to keep using shadow parties on the side that have exactly mirrored membership between both parties – the minister kind of skirted over that in her remarks, exactly mirrored membership – and, according to the documents from the NDP Party and the secret shadow organization, have a financial relationship in the loans. This is a serious issue.

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud recused himself, rightly so, because he was backing New Democratic Party loans. He recused himself, and good for him. I have some questions on why he didn't do that in committee, but he did recuse himself in this Chamber. He recused himself. He stated the conflict, and it was clear that it was about backing loans for this party. And then we come to find out that every member that is across from me right now and every member of the New Democratic Party is backing loans as well.

So, Madam Chair, how can this government justify continuing to participate in this debate until they know what is appropriate and until they declare all of their conflicts and check with the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta on whether they're in conflict? Certainly, the second part of it, what's really relevant for the debate that we're having here today, is: what are they going to do to make this better for Albertans? What are they going to do to make sure the legislation won't allow shadow parties to continue? What are they going to do to fix the conflict that currently exists? And then, lastly, are they going to tell their members that they have automatically made them members of an organization that is backing large amounts of loans to their political party?

Our number one goal with the electoral reform legislation that we have dealt with in the 29th Legislature of Alberta is to get big money out of politics and to make the process more transparent. And here we come to find, at the very least, an organization that is controlled and, you know, owned by the New Democratic Party, that nobody knows about except for maybe some of the hon. members in the government.

Its own documents show that there is a financial connection between the parties, that, at the very least, according to the minister there were concerns enough in the party across the way that they're trying to communicate with the Chief Electoral Officer to address those concerns and to check where the concerns were at, but they're not communicating with the Ethics Commissioner. [interjections] Well, it's not about that; it's about making sure, one, that you're not in conflict and then, two, that we close these loopholes in the future. We don't want every political party all of a sudden to start making shadow parties that are the exact mirror of them, completely controlled by the political party but off the books, unaudited, unaccountable to the people of Alberta. That goes exactly against everything these members say that they stand for, Madam Chair, exactly against everything these members say that they stand for.

I will yield the floor shortly, Madam Chair, and close with this. I highly encourage all the members who are members of the secret society – and some of them may have just found out today – the secret shadow party, to consider whether they should vote for this legislation or whether they should at least adjourn and contact the Ethics Commissioner.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Again, the member does not understand and does not have the details on this. This is something that we have worked with the Chief Electoral Officer on. I would like to thank the member for his concern because we are equally concerned about making sure that there are no loopholes; that there are no undeclared goods, services, costs; that there are no benefits to other parties that are not equally available to all and transparent to the people of Alberta. The Calgary house society does not fulfill the purpose that the member opposite appears to think it does. The amendment that he has put forward does not address any real or existing problem with elections financing, so I will not be supporting his amendment. I thank the member for his concerns.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, the documents that I referred to in my comments on this are audit documents associated with both societies. The minister has risen now twice, and at no time has she referred to the fact that loans are being guaranteed. We can't skirt over that fact. There are tremendous other questions with what's going on with the society. I'd like to hear the answers so that, at the very least, Albertans can know what's going on because it looks fishy, without a doubt.

The facts produced in their own audit documents say that this nonprofit group, or society, is backing the loans of the New Democratic Party – backing the loans – and one of the members has already recused himself from the debate for doing the same thing. So that conflict – at the very least, there are many other serious issues that will have to be addressed, and we'll use the independent officers of the Legislature for that. But specifically to the bill that we're on right now, this organization is backing the debts of the New Democratic Party, and judging by the minister not wanting to comment on it or not commenting on it, obviously, then, their audit reports are correct. I assume the audit reports of the party are correct. I think that if the audit reports of the party are not correct, then we would have a completely other issue that we would have to deal with.

You have one member who recused himself and the rest of the members that are in this Assembly participating in a debate on the same thing that that member had to recuse himself for. Rising up and over and over saying, "Oh, no, it's not like that; it's not like that," when their own reports show that there is a financial connection between the two organizations, at the very least for backing debt. At the very least for backing debt: an organization that is completely and one hundred per cent controlled by the governing party.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Regardless of the fact of whether the members opposite knew about this previous to this morning or not, we are now going to be voting on this amendment. You now have knowledge of that, so it's going to be up to you to decide how you vote on this and whether you actually vote on this amendment. Think very carefully before you do.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Mr. Nixon: The last thing I will ask, Madam Chair, through you to the minister, is: will the housing society at the very least make its books transparent immediately to the people of Alberta?

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A8?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to move to adjourn debate on Bill 35 and that when the committee does rise and report progress later this morning, they do so on Bill 35.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27 Renewable Electricity Act

The Chair: We are on amendment A6. Are there any members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity this morning. When we are talking about an act such as Bill 27 and the significant impact that such an act is going to have upon our province, it is important that we take into account a very fulsome and thorough consultation process and that that consultation process not just be left to chance but that there be some prescription contained within the act to ensure that proper consultation is carried out with all stakeholders that are responsible.

One of those stakeholders, of course, is the landowner. The landowners, especially when it comes to utility-scale renewable projects such as wind and solar, become an extremely important part of the process here. Landowners are going to be required or asked at least, hopefully asked, in a voluntary way to participate in the development of utility-scale renewable projects that are going to require massive amounts of land area and, quite literally, thousands of landowners. I believe that it is vitally important that when we have a bill such as this, that is going to be requiring that 30 per cent of our electricity come from renewables by 2030, which is only a few years away, really – in the grand scheme of massive projects 14 years isn't that far away, not really. It's kind of almost tomorrow already when you're talking about really massive infrastructure builds. I believe that it's extremely important on the front end of this bill that we get some things very right, and one of those is consultation, specifically consultation with landowners.

So I would like to propose an amendment.

The Chair: Hon. member, we are already on an amendment.

Mr. MacIntyre: We are? Which amendment?

The Chair: We're considering amendment A6, moved by yourself.

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, as you can tell, I have a few more. We're on A6: unless the minister is satisfied that reasonable consultation in respect of the proposal is taking place with any affected municipalities.

The Chair: No. That's not the amendment.

Mr. MacIntyre: No? Can you read the amendment that you're on?

The Chair: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to move that Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act, be amended in section 3(2) by striking out "may establish" and substituting "shall establish and make public."

Mr. MacIntyre: Right. Thank you, Madam Chair. The "shall" instead of "may."

Well, here we have a situation, as I mentioned, I believe, yesterday, where the minister is not under any compulsion to actually do the minister's job in ensuring that something takes place specific to proposals and the objectives and goals of those proposals. I would hope, Madam Chair, that the members of this House would realize that it's vitally important, when we're talking about this scale of project, that the minister set out specific goals and specific criteria. For example, if you have very large corporations that are going to be involved in these projects and municipalities as well, who are going to be asked to participate in a very real way, especially when we're talking about utility scale, it's going to be vitally important that the minister has laid out the specific goals and objectives for this particular development. If we don't have those, if the minister is not required to make those specific objectives and make them public, then what exactly are we going by?

11:30

Does that mean, then, that developers are just going to be throwing proposals at the minister and that the minister is going to somehow choose the best one? We have a process here that is going to be incorporating the consultation of municipalities, possibly user groups. It only makes sense that the minister actually be required. I realize that in some pieces of legislation you don't want to be really overly prescriptive in the legislation, but when it comes to something like this, where the minister doesn't even have to set forth a specific target, it just seems to me that that is a hole in that piece of legislation.

Now, we have some other bits of legislation that this government has run through this House. Specifically, I'm referring to Bill 20, where we attempted to put forward a couple of friendly amendments from this side of the House requiring a certain measure of measurement to quantify results. It met with significant opposition from the government side. The government did not want to actually have measurement and verification of verifiable greenhouse gas reduction on account of Bill 20 before increasing the carbon tax in 2018.

If you remember that particular debate, I said something in the order that we have a carbon tax coming into play in January 2017. The government claims that that carbon tax is going to result in greenhouse gas reductions. Okay. Furthermore, in 2018 that carbon tax is going to increase substantially and result in even more greenhouse gas reductions. However, for the alleged greenhouse gas reduction the government claims is going to take place as a result of the carbon tax coming into play in 2017, the government balked at any idea of actually measuring and seeing if, in fact, that initial carbon tax results in any genuine greenhouse gas reductions.

I will say this also, Madam Chair. It's one thing to say that your carbon tax is going to result in greenhouse gas emissions within the borders of the province of Alberta. However, we have at great length explored the reality of carbon leakage and that carbon leakage is the Achilles heel of carbon taxation. Carbon leakage does result in no net greenhouse gas reductions globally. When we are talking about measurement and verification of results, it's going to be very important that this government prove their climate action plan and, specifically, carbon taxation because that is the mechanism they claim will result in a change of behaviour amongst us Albertans, to the point where we will be reducing our greenhouse gas footprint. All right. Fine. Prove it. Put some measurements in place. Demonstrate the truth of that allegation.

Furthermore, is it actually resulting in a net global reduction? Frankly, carbon leakage has a unique phenomenon to it in that in the alleged reduction of greenhouse gas emissions here in this province, carbon leakage has a unique ability to actually increase the amount of greenhouse gas emissions in another jurisdiction beyond the level of greenhouse gases that would have been emitted here had we kept that business here. That's why in some cases you're going to see carbon leakage resulting in higher greenhouse gas emissions globally than if the government in question would have simply left things alone. That is a very real reality in the phenomenon of carbon leakage, and this government refuses to acknowledge the reality of carbon leakage and has proposed nothing whatsoever to address the reality of carbon leakage.

In fact, when members from this side of the House attempted to shield our greenhouse industry in this province, the government side of the House unanimously voted that amendment down. That one little industry proves my point in that every greenhouse operator in this province cannot survive this government's carbon tax in 2017 and 2018.

That lost production of locally grown, fresh, often organic produce is going to be replaced by produce from jurisdictions as far away as Mexico and Central America and Florida, and those items are going to be trucked all the way up here – all the way up here – emitting greenhouse gas emissions all the way here. We put a bunch of greenhouse operators and their staff out of work, there are going to be no taxes paid by those people, and now we're having to buy food from another jurisdiction. We're actually creating jobs somewhere else, creating carbon emissions somewhere else on account of an act and a tax that was supposed to reduce greenhouse gas emissions but, in fact, does not.

I think I kind of understand why this government is so shy of measurables. They haven't done their homework to actually do the analytics on the impact of this carbon tax throughout a very complex economy like Alberta's. It's like they're denying the science of economics and economic realities. If they would simply perform those analytics, they would come to a similar conclusion, I believe, to what the government of Australia and the government of France have come to that has led them to cancel their carbon tax. Just one reason they're cancelling it is the adverse economic impact and the adverse greenhouse gas emission impact of carbon taxation.

I would hope that at the very least this government would not be so shy of putting their money where their mouth is, so to speak, and allow for some actual measurable objectives that the minister has to put in place so that we can see what the targets are and that the minister not be simply given an option to do those sorts of things but that the minister be required to provide that and make it public. Transparency is a problem with this government, and this is a friendly amendment to help that situation and to give Albertans at least something they can look to, something that they can see. They can see a public document that says, "Here are the targets; these are the specific objectives of what the minister wants to accomplish" rather than just saying: well, the minister may or may not.

I would hope that every member in this House will support this I think friendly amendment.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, December 8, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a distinguished guest representing the Swiss Confederation, Mr. Pascal Bornoz, consul general of Switzerland in Vancouver. The consul general brings a wealth of experience and perspective to Canada from postings in places as diverse as Santiago, Bangkok, and Riyadh.

Mr. Speaker, Swiss people are counted among the earliest of European newcomers to the treaty lands of Alberta. In fact, two of the earliest Alberta communities, Stettler and Blumenau, were founded by the Swiss pioneer Carl Stettler. Also, the famous Swiss mountain guides were instrumental in growing the tourism market in our world-renowned mountain parks. Their legendary climbing and guiding skills opened up the Rocky Mountains for thousands of Albertans and tourists from around the globe. I'm happy to say that we continue to advance our relationship with Switzerland through educational exchange programs, tourism, and trade. We welcome every opportunity to build our relationships with valuable international partners like Switzerland.

I'll now ask Consul General Bornoz to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. Minister of Labour, you have a guest?

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Ryan MacIsaac. Mr. MacIsaac is a litigation lawyer practising in the Calgary and Toronto offices of McCarthy Tétrault. He is visiting Edmonton for a hearing regarding the importation of gypsum drywall from the United States into western Canada, a matter of great importance for this province, particularly as the rebuild continues in Fort McMurray. I would now like to ask Mr. MacIsaac to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Mr. Adam Fuñe. Adam is a constituent of yours, Mr. Speaker. He graduated from Monsignor McCoy high school in 2016 and was a recipient of the prestigious Governor General's award. He is now attending the University of Alberta, pursuing a bachelor of science with a biochemistry specialization. I would ask that Adam rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to introduce to you and through you someone that I've worked with since I've been a minister in the government of Alberta, David Breakwell, who is the assistant deputy minister of the corporate strategies and services division in the Infrastructure department. After an accomplished public service career and having made many important contributions in the departments of Energy, Health, and Infrastructure, he has decided to retire from his role in leading strategic corporate services in Alberta Infrastructure. His willingness to help others, his competence, and his kind-natured personality will be truly missed by me and by his colleagues across the government. Public servants like David are a vital part of our society and help us deliver the services that Albertans need. David is joined today by his wife, Debbie, his daughter Jodie Dearden, his son Landon Breakwell, and his daughter-in-law Lauren Breakwell. I would ask David, Debbie, Jodie, Landon, and Lauren to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you our newest member to the Alberta Health Services Board. I'm excited to say that I recently appointed Heather Hirsch, who is a 19-year veteran front-line health care worker. I know that her experiences as an indigenous woman and a mom will serve us very well as we think about the families of the citizens that we have so much work to do for to continue to provide the very best health care for. I ask that Heather along with her daughter Amelia Crowshoe, who are both present here today, please rise and receive the warmest of welcomes from our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A real pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to the House Harpreet Gill, another stalwart Liberal from Edmonton, also a Sikh community organizer and co-organizer of the Sikh parade and a progressive activist. He's also co-organizing a seminar on opiates and fentanyl at the Sikh temple in Mill Woods this coming Sunday at 11:30 with Councillor Moe Banga, with the help of the gurdwara executive committee. With him are his mother and sister, Chhinderpal Kaur Gill and Jaspreet Kaur Gill. I'll ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Dr. Swann: Thank you for accommodating a second introduction. My pleasure to introduce to you and through you two courageous and historic individuals, Darlene Dunlop and Eric Musekamp. Please stand and be recognized by the Legislature. Eric and Darlene have been here many, many times in their long 15-year fight for the fundamental rights of farm workers. Today they're in Edmonton to attend the launch of a book, Farm Workers in Western Canada, a collection of essays about the farm worker experience, to which Darlene is a major contributor. The launch will be at 3 o'clock at the Common, and I invite all in the Legislature to join us, especially the Member for Drumheller-Stettler, who's still puzzled as to why Bill 6 is a legal necessity. Let's give Darlene and Eric a warm welcome to the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two very special people.

The first is Dr. Audrey Reid, who is originally from Vermont and is now a lecturer at the University of Alberta in the department of biological sciences. Next is Dr. Aaron LeBlanc, who is a Killam postdoctoral fellow at the University of Alberta and just happens to be my son. I knew that he was going to be a scientist when he decided at age five to glue himself and his friend to the carpet face down to test the strength of white glue. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three distinct introductions today. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Diane Walton, Ann Marston, and T.K. Boomer. Diane is a writer and the managing editor of On Spec magazine, which is an award-winning magazine and was founded in Edmonton. On Spec is probably English Canada's longest running print journal of science fiction, fantasy, and other speculative literature. Ann Marston has had a very eclectic career. She's been a bush pilot, a flight instructor, a literacy co-ordinator, a college instructor, and is now a published fantasy writer. T.K. Boomer, or, as he's also known, Greg McKittrick, is a science fiction writer, with his first book of a trilogy, Planet Song, just published. He is also the reason I am sitting here as an MLA as he has been a wonderful support to my activism in our 33 years of marriage. I would like to ask Diane, Ann, and T.K. Boomer to please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent of mine, Tracee Collins. Tracee spends her time helping children, families, seniors, and vulnerable populations in Calgary. She served for six years in the Palliser-Bayview-Pumphill Community Association, most recently as the president, and she currently serves as board director for the Calgary Homeless Foundation. I would request Tracee to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly quite a large group of folks who work in my Ministry of Advanced Education. They work in various departments, including the apprenticeship and student aid division, advanced learning and community partnerships, and the strategic and corporate services division. Their roles vary, of course, but one thing they all have in common is that their work ensures the success of our higher education system for the students of this province. They take tremendous pride in their work on behalf of Albertans, and I take tremendous pride in working with them and representing them as the Minister of Advanced Education.

I'd ask them all to rise as I read their names: Guy Germain, Ailish Goldie, Matthew Cox, Robert Rock – please stay standing as I read your names – Maria Morgadinho, Mavin Kaur, Michelle Hutchinson, Bose Lampejo, Laryssa Talanchuk, Katrina Sholdice, Debra Tworek, Sarrie Ling, Charlotte Balding, Kayla Olyan, Nicole Sawatzky, Joana Apreku, Aimee Galick, Mira Quintin, Terri Curtis, Lindsay Salloum, Alfred Appiah, Razvan Catrinescu, Megan van der Linden, Erin Reynar, Kerri Hill. If there's anybody else that I missed, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly five individuals dedicated to building Edmonton's brand by telling our authentic story: Todd Babiak, director of Story Engine and one of the earliest supporters of Make Something Edmonton; Carmen Douville, programming/community manager; Shayne Woodsmith, digital storyteller with Make Something Edmonton; Cheryl Watson, VP; and Joseph Pedrola, activation manager with the Urban Economy team at the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation. I'd like to ask that all my guests rise as I thank them for their hard work on behalf of our city and as I ask that we all provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my guest, an outstanding Calgarian and Albertan, Jeff Callaway. I've known Jeff for many years. We lived in the same neighbourhood, and we worked in adjoining buildings in downtown Calgary. Jeff is the president of Wildrose, working hard every day to bring Alberta back on track and bring all conservatives together. In his spare time Jeff works for Canaccord Genuity Wealth Management. I ask my guest to rise, and I ask all of you to give him a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to welcome to you and through you Cynthia Watson, the chief evolution officer of Vivo, a sustainable charity on a mission to raise healthier generations, which is located in Calgary-Northern Hills. The organization is committed to creating evidence-based solutions to get Alberta moving more and sitting less, something we can all attest to in this House.

Also, I'd like to introduce David Watson. He just received from the Governor General this morning the sovereign's medal for volunteers for his work with veterans. In the last 16 years he's created 1,000-plus unique memorial prints as an act of remembrance, and they are displayed in over 48 countries around the world.

I'd ask my two guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to the House Elizabeth Roberts. Liz has been a practicum student at the Lethbridge-West constituency office since September and is completing her social work degree at the Lethbridge campus of the University of Calgary. Liz has been very helpful these past four months to my two constituency assistants, who join her here today, Lisa Lambert and Natasha Fairweather. I ask them now all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introductions today, hon. members? The Minister of Service Alberta and Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you today staff from Service Alberta who represent the residential tenancy dispute resolution service, better known as the RTDRS. This October the RTDRS office in Edmonton reached the milestone of 50,000 applications for tribunals. I know that not everyone could attend today, but I'll mention everyone who we know was able to attend, and I'll ask those in attendance to please stand as I mention their names so we can celebrate them and their important work: Martin Roy, Shelley Johnson, Narinder Sidhu, Colleen Wing, Reyila Dilixiati, Beth McKinley, Angela Wesley, Brendon Hewitt, Andrew Herriot, James Lambert, Michael Baron, Jim Young, and Meghan Woo. I'll ask that this House please join me in providing my guests with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Make Something Edmonton

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of my city. Edmonton is a city of innovators. Edmontonians created Canada's first mosque, opened the first food bank, and started the North American fringe theatre movement. They founded successful national and international companies and gained international recognition for their art, music, literature, and film, and like the First Nations who once met here on the Rosedale Flats, they are open, welcoming, and collaborative.

That's the story that Make Something Edmonton has been dedicated to telling since 2013, and that's the story that propelled them to win the City Nation Place award for best expression of place brand identity in London last month, beating out campaigns from Sweden, Costa Rica, and Russia. Make Something Edmonton is an initiative supported by the city of Edmonton and the Edmonton Economic Development Corporation, an agency tasked with cultivating the energy, innovation, and investment needed to build a prosperous and resilient Edmonton economy.

Together with a number of community stakeholders they developed a unique idea to tell our story in an authentic way, not with logos and slogans but by inspiring Edmontonians to pursue their passions and ideas to make their city even better. Edmontonians responded, launching 1,500 individual community-driven projects and making Make Something Edmonton the platform of choice for city builders and city shapers. Edmonton Economic Development Corporation continues to build on this success, leveraging our identity and branding to lay a solid foundation to market and promote investment in trade, attract new tourism, conferences, conventions, and major events.

I personally have a page on Make Something Edmonton, and I've had the privilege of seeing many of its projects come to life. I'm a firm believer in the power of citizens collaborating and contributing to build a better city, and I encourage everyone in the Edmonton region to explore Make Something Edmonton's site and take part as a city builder or as a supporter in making a new idea real, in making something Edmonton, and in making our city a better place.

Government Policies

Mr. Nixon: I've never seen a government so removed and out of touch with the people they're supposed to govern. They've shown gross incompetence and failed to be honest about the death of children in care. After emergency debate in this House about the life of little Serenity, they continue to make a mess of the file. It took the Human Services minister weeks to pull Serenity's file and give it to the RCMP. The minister should resign, but the Premier owns this. She told Albertans that she was serious about fixing this but dropped the file completely. But that's just where it starts.

The NDP has the nerve to stand here and tell everyone that their carbon tax is good for families. They are indifferent about the pain it will cause families. They stand up and are completely indifferent that the carbon tax will pillage charities across the province. They are shutting down coal, literally destroying whole communities, and they brag about it. But they refuse to look those people whose livelihoods they are destroying in the eyes or even bother to meet with them. They are smug, they are arrogant, and they are condescending. They look down on farmers, they're embarrassed of our industries, and they call small-business owners selfish as they are forced to close their doors because of NDP policies.

Worst of all, the Premier now has the nerve to call Albertans worried about her agenda Chicken Little. Tell that to over 100,000 people who've lost their jobs under the NDP. Tell that to Albertans who are dealing with the worst unemployment in two decades. Go into my riding and look at the climbing rates of crime and suicide and tell them that they're just being Chicken Little. This is not a joke, Mr. Speaker. This government's policies are hurting people's lives. Albertans are sick and tired of it.

The next election is just two years away, and it cannot come fast enough for the majority of Albertans. Albertans are ready to wipe this NDP government from the map.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Investigation of Death of Child in Kinship Care

Mr. Jean: I know that we all want better for kids who go through government care, but the level of incompetence from this NDP government on this file is breathtaking. In September 2014 Serenity died while in kinship care. She was beaten, malnourished, and sexually assaulted. No one deserves justice more than this little girl, whose life was cut cruelly short and who lived in unimaginable and unacceptable pain. We were told that there was an active RCMP investigation, but the RCMP said: this investigation is on hold, awaiting more reports. It turns out that they were waiting on this NDP government. How can the Premier possibly justify these delays?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. First, I would like to clarify some dates. On September 15 the OCME sent the final file to the RCMP, and they were investigating at that time with the RCMP. They are mixing two investigations. On October 24 the RCMP asked the DFNA in question for the case file. On October 27 the DFNA reached out and started discussing the release. On November 18 Human Services got the written request, and on November 22 Human Services provided the file.

Thank you.

Mr. Jean: In mid-November we held an emergency debate in this House. It was an opportunity for the government to stand and justify and explain what they were doing to help Serenity's case, but they failed. For weeks we've asked dozens of questions into her death, with no real answers and zero accountability from this minister. It wasn't until late last night that it was discovered that the Human Services minister delayed giving an important report on Serenity's case to the RCMP for weeks. Why did the Premier and multiple ministers keep Albertans in the dark in relation to Serenity and her death?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The death of Serenity or any kid in the child intervention system is a deeply concerning issue, and we do care about that. On November 18, 2016, Human Services got a written request for the case file. Two working days later, on November 22, the case file was transferred to the RCMP. These are the facts. They can have their opinion but not their own facts.

Mr. Jean: There is only one set of facts. This government failed Serenity and many children in care. At every corner of this story there's gross negligence from all levels of government, and it failed a little girl. Without substantial changes nothing will improve. The Premier, the Justice minister, the Deputy Premier, and the Human Services minister all said that they could not comment on an ongoing, active investigation, but it turns out that the investigation had stalled, and the only thing stalling it was this NDP government. Why did all departments of this government mislead Albertans about the state of this investigation, and when will it stop?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that there's nothing more concerning than death of children in our care. The RCMP was working with the office of the Chief Medical Examiner. There was an investigation. We received the request on November 18. Two working days later I provided the file. That's what we are doing. I also today announced a panel to look into these issues. We have been failing these kids for the last decade. Serenity was not the first case. We have an obligation to fix . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second main question, hon. members.

Mr. Jean: Secrecy continues to shroud our entire children in care system, and it's simply a disaster. In the final 11 months of Serenity's life no care workers checked in on her despite numerous complaints and warnings. The Child and Youth Advocate's office had been investigating this case for over two years, but at every turn he was blocked from further information. How is it that during these two years and this past month no one in the NDP pushed and asked the RCMP simply what more they needed to complete their investigation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. We have failed our children, Serenity for decades, and now it's time for action. That's why the Premier committed to considering making a panel, and today we released the terms of reference for that panel. That panel, which will include . . . [interjections] If they care about these issues, which I believe they do, they will work with me to find solutions to all these issues going forward. Those terms of reference are broad enough to fix . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, this is a very sensitive topic. I want you all to remember that we're going to have a lot of travel ahead of us tonight, and I hope we can calm down the mood.

Yes, I will give five extra seconds to the clock for that.

I think that we are at first supplemental.

Mr. Jean: The best action this minister could do right now is to resign. That would help Albertans. The minister has called this – I quote – an unfortunate error. Most Albertans, I believe, would call it gross incompetence and totally unacceptable not just by the minister but by the cabinet and by the Premier. This case wasn't a secret. The Child and Youth Advocate had been investigating. We were all here during the emergency debate, but nothing was done for weeks and months. If the Premier or anyone in this government were serious about doing all they could to get Serenity justice, why didn't they just simply pick up the phone and call the RCMP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this case we have done everything and we will do everything that's needed to be done. We will work with the RCMP. At the same time we will make sure that their investigation remains independent. There were Human Services ministers before me. There will be after me, but changing faces doesn't change anything. Changing policies changes things. Changing practices changes things. That's what I am inviting everybody to join me in.

Mr. Jean: I asked this question on November 21, and I'm going to ask it again. The only reason we know what we do today is because a reporter dug and asked the tough questions. She found answers while the Child and Youth Advocate got requests for information blocked at every single turn. A system that operates in secrecy, like this NDP government is doing, will fail Albertans. Premier: where was the report from the medical examiner's office? Where was the report from the Justice department? Where was the report from Human Services? And why did it take so long to complete an autopsy on this little girl?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reporter certainly is very passionate. I respect that, but she didn't have all the facts. Let me clarify. On September 15 the OCME sends the final file to the RCMP. On October 24 the RCMP asks the DFNA for the case file. On October 27 the DFNA reaches out to Human Services. On November 22 Human Services receives the formal written request. Two working days later we provided the answer. Those are the facts.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: Quote: it is an issue still under active investigation, so we will work with the RCMP and all involved to make sure we get this right. End quote. That was the Human Services minister on November 22. Turns out that was completely false. The investigation was on hold. The RCMP wasn't being worked with. They were waiting to get the documents from the ministry that they needed to do their investigation. The minister failed to hand over that report until Tuesday or Wednesday of this week. This minister's best before date is long overdue. He needs to go. Why hasn't the Premier demanded his resignation?

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to echo the comments that have been raised by members on both sides of this House that this is a very tragic situation. What kids deserve is somebody who's got their back, and I have to say, with all confidence, that the minister has their back. I don't think that anybody in this House campaigned on defending the system. The system needs to be fixed, and today the minister brought forward a recommendation for a panel to do just that.

We take the opposition at their word that they want to help us fix this. Please do roll up your sleeves and help us. All of our children deserve an opportunity to have the very best life, and I challenge everyone to help us do that.

Mr. Jean: That minister has had 19 months on this file to fix it and get it right. "We are committed to working with [the RCMP] in ensuring that they have the tools that they need to continue their investigation." That was the Justice minister on November 24. Clearly, the Justice department never took that direction seriously because it took weeks for the government to hand over a critical report to the RCMP. The Justice minister failed to do her job, and what she told this Assembly wasn't right. She can't be trusted on this file anymore either. Will the Premier demand her resignation, and if not, why not?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I have full confidence in every person sitting on this front bench, and I think that all of us in this House should know that we all step forward to try to make the system better, not defend the system. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, I can't hear the speaker.
Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition brought forward a recommendation. We've taken their recommendations very seriously, and we do want to work with them. [interjections]

The Speaker: Keep going.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. We want to work with all members of this House, and that's why the announcement was made this morning. Our children deserve better, Mr. Speaker, and we're committed to that.

Mr. Jean: The announcement does not include transparency or whistle-blower protection. It's a sham.

If the Premier won't hold any of her ministers accountable for this mess, she needs to start giving Albertans some real answers. The fact is that Albertans expected better from the NDP on this file, but they failed and failed miserably. They failed to do their homework, they failed to do their due diligence, and it's meant the delay of justice for an innocent young girl. Will she tell Albertans on what date she knew this RCMP investigation was put on hold and why she didn't take any actions whatsoever to ensure the police got every single document they needed to investigate and solve this issue?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to reinforce that the timeline that was outlined is, in fact, the true timeline. On November 18 the written request was received. On November 22 a secure link was provided to the files that were requested. It's my understanding that there were some issues on the side of those who were trying to access the report. Those issues in terms of the file format were remedied, and they have their report now. I have to say that the timeline is the fact. The other fact is that we want to work with every member of this House to make life better. Children deserve somebody who's got their back. They don't deserve a minister who throws up his hands and not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier.
The leader of the third party.

Child Death Review Ministerial Panel

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government promised to establish an all-party committee to examine Alberta's child intervention system in public. The Human Services minister today announced something far from that, a ministerial panel that will hide behind closed doors, chaired by the minister responsible. It's like asking a turkey to vote for Thanksgiving. To the Premier: since for Serenity there is no justice if there is no blame, will you now keep your promise of a public all-party committee?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We did take the recommendations that were brought forward and have agreed to have all parties in this House represented in helping us move forward in solving these challenges. There is some very specific information that must remain in confidence, and we will make sure that we protect children's and families' rights to privacy. But there will be a public-facing piece of this. The committee will report publicly, and the committee will be involved in developing next steps to make sure that the public can be involved and have full protections.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, they lost me when they went behind closed doors.

Multiple systems failed Serenity before and after her death, including the child intervention system, the RCMP, the medical examiner's office, and the minister's office. Cracks in these vital systems are evident, and Albertans have a right to know precisely what happened in Serenity's tragic case. Since the ministerial panel won't be conducting its business in public, will the minister call a public inquiry into what happened to Serenity so that we can place blame and get some justice?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we all want justice. We want justice for Serenity and all of the other children in the system. Again, I'm not here to defend the system; I'm here to fix the system. This is why we have moved forward with creating a committee. I want to clarify that the minister is not chairing the committee. This is going to be a committee that has participation from all parties within this House, and the committee will have the opportunity to engage with the public. I want to warn everyone that some of this information is very difficult, and we need to all be prepared and respect the privacy and integrity of these children. They deserve that, and they deserve a better system.

Mr. McIver: No blame, no justice.

I've been a minister. I know that you can't keep track of all your files all the time, but I know when a terrible case like Serenity's comes to light, you have to make it a priority. I always understood then that I was renting my seat as a minister by the day. When you're a minister and you let a crisis languish for three weeks, you have failed to pay the rent. So both the Human Services minister and the Justice minister haven't paid the rent, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: how soon will you replace these two ineffective ministers?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to confirm that two days after the request was received, a file was uploaded. I understand they had difficulty accessing that file, and that has been corrected.

I have to say that children don't deserve a minister who flips up his desk and walks out; they deserve a minister who is going to stand beside them and fix the system, Mr. Speaker. We want every person in this House to stand up and help this minister and make the system better. That's exactly why we've moved forward with creating this panel and look forward to seeing everybody – I believe it when they say that they want to make the system better, so please do work to help make that happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to go on record calling for a legislative committee on this issue as well.

Chronic Wasting Disease

Dr. Swann: I'm shifting topics to the Alberta prion institute, that just received $11 million from Genome Canada to trace chronic wasting disease in deer, elk, and moose in Alberta. We need to act now to prevent a catastrophe not only in wildlife but in our agriculture community. CWD is a fatal brain disease like mad cow disease. It's spreading across western Canada since its introduction in game farms, and 15 years ago, the experts said that BSE, mad cow disease, would never cross species. Now, several hundred people have died from BSE.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjection] Your time is allocated, hon. member.

Is there a minister who would like to announce . . . [interjection] Hon. member, your time is up.

Please proceed, hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. You know, as a government we absolutely recognize the importance of keeping our livestock – our tame livestock, our domestic livestock, wild livestock – safe from any form of disease. It's important for biosecurity reasons, for our markets, for everything. We're continuing to work with the industry – the farming industry, the wildland farming industry, other livestock industries right across the province – on all our biosecurity issues and continue to be working with the member with the question as well on making sure we can do all we can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Swann: It's been a decade since I started raising these issues. When will you ban the movement of all potentially wasting-disease-infected carcasses, live animals, products, equipment, or other sources of infectious materials across this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. The odd time that, you know, those biosecurity issues do come up in the province, the department takes it very seriously and reacts very quickly. Those operations do happen not that often, but we do take action on it. Continuing to work with the member, we welcome the member's input in going forward to do much more if we could.

Dr. Swann: No action. No action in 10 years.

Given there's now evidence that thousands of citizens are unknowingly consuming infected animals, including First Nations, will the minister mandate and implement now convenient, cost-free testing of all animals harvested in the CWD-affected areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The member I think does realize that there is testing going on. It is true that we have over the past few years, you know, picked up a couple of incidents when this has happened. It isn't the doomsday scenario that he's trying to make us believe. Incidents do happen. We have control of it. We continue with those controls. I have all the confidence in our public servants to do what they do best, and that is to make sure that we're all safe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

2:10 Investigation of Death of Child in Kinship Care (continued)

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a former worker with children's services, as a mother, and as an Albertan, I, too, am heartbroken when any child dies. Minister, did the department of Human Services fail to give the report of Serenity to the RCMP?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The reporter is certainly very passionate and vocal on these issues, but she didn't get all the facts right. So I will clarify that Human Services received a written request on November 18. A few days later, on November 22, we provided the file, the password, a secure file. There were some issues. As of yesterday the RCMP has confirmed that they have received the needed material. We are doing everything that needs to be done.

Ms Goehring: For two years the office of the Child and Youth Advocate asked the office of the Chief Medical Examiner for their report. They never heard back. What happened?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and thank you, Member, for the question. The OCME is changing its practice as to how it communicates with the OCYA. Until now standard practice had been that when the office of the Child and Youth Advocate contacts the OCME about a specific case, a note is added to the file to indicate that request. Going forward, a reply will be sent to the OCYA to ensure they are aware of any current investigations.

Ms Goehring: Most autopsies take a few days. This one took two years. Why?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The office of the Chief Medical Examiner determined the cause of death within a few days and notified the RCMP immediately. The autopsy report took additional time to complete due to its complexity and as a result of the ongoing investigation. The medical examiner has remained in contact with the RCMP as the investigation has continued. The RCMP requested that the OCME not release its findings as publication of the details of the death could be detrimental to the ongoing police investigation. That's what we confirmed from the OCME.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Child Death Review System

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, two years ago the government formed an expert panel to provide recommendations on reforming and streamlining Alberta's child death review system. The panel provided a number of common-sense recommendations, including providing the office of the Chief Medical Examiner direct access to the government's intervention services information system and investigating the deaths of all children in care in Alberta. There have been 71 children die while receiving protective services. Minister, how many of these deaths have been reviewed and by whom?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two death review processes: one is internal; one is external, the office Child and Youth Advocate if he chooses to do so. It's at his discretion. That is the reason that we have brought forward this proposal of a panel so that all deaths of children can be investigated. If they are serious about it, which I believe they are, they need to work with us to get this right, to fix the system, to have a system in place that we can look at all deaths and learn from those deaths and avoid . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has had 19 months to take action on this important recommendation and given another recommendation of an expert panel, that has been endorsed by the chief medical officer, was the creation of a multidisciplinary child death review committee and given that Alberta's chief medical officer of health stated, and I quote, that the current review processes do not meet the standards recommended by the Canadian Paediatric Society and that the chair of the panel has stated, and I quote again, that there was no evidence of change; nothing happened, end quote, to the minister: what are you waiting for, and how long do the people have to wait for you to do your job?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, I just want to reinforce that nobody is here to defend the system. I believe we're all here to fix the system, and we want you as colleagues of ours in this Legislature to help us do that. So I want to say thank you for bringing forward a recommendation around a committee moving forward.

I have to say that in terms of what's moving forward, all parties will be included. The outside experts will be consulted and invited to present to the public. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. [interjections] Excuse me, maybe you didn't hear me. Order, please.

Please proceed, Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that we can move forward on the following pieces, including that all parties will be included, outside experts will be consulted. There will be assurances.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I know that this minister and this party want to distract from the fact that this file has been grossly mismanaged and our children in care are suffering. This new panel does little to address any of our concerns. Given that the government has failed to even meet several of its past recommendations and given that the minister has stated that he will absolutely not resign because, I quote, "we have work to do," why doesn't the minister just do what Albertans want, what Albertans expect, and hand in his resignation?

Ms Hoffman: Albertans expect every one of us to step up and do what's right for children, Mr. Speaker. That's why we invite the members opposite to participate with us in receiving presentations from the public – from the public – and in ensuring that information about children is protected. The publication will be made public. There will be pieces involved throughout that are very traumatizing, and the members deserve to have the opportunity to be able to process that information in a way that's safe. But the committee will have an opportunity to engage with the public, relevant stakeholders and will have a public-facing manner while protecting the privacy of children and their families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our PC caucus, like many other Albertans, was devastated to learn that this NDP government failed to hand over a critical report to the RCMP regarding child intervention. It is clear that this government has trouble understanding when a crisis is affecting Alberta families, even when it's right in front of their faces. We're seeing this same thing with fentanyl, and we're seeing it again with the child intervention system. Premier, why do you continue to double down and not address crises that are hurting and impacting Albertans today?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. That's one of the reasons why we have moved forward on having two pieces to the panel. One is very short-term, action-focused, immediate actions. The panel itself will be involved in determining next steps because the panel, all of us in this Chamber owe it to roll up our sleeves and make sure that we're doing everything we can to fix this.

Then afterwards there will be a longer piece that involves, Mr. Speaker – the panel members themselves will be involved in developing the outward-facing pieces of that to ensure the safety and protection of the children and that public accountability is provided.

Mr. Gill: Given that we know the Human Services minister and the Justice minister fall back on empty key message promises of looking into certain issues and that the Justice minister's response was that the matter was being investigated by the RCMP and she cannot share the important progress, we aren't buying it anymore. The Minister of Human Services was not actively following up on this heartbreaking case, and the Minister of Justice was not ensuring her department was working collaboratively with the RCMP. Premier, do you have confidence in the ability of both of these ministers to ensure that we don't lose any more children?

Ms Hoffman: The Justice minister and the Human Services minister absolutely have my confidence and the confidence of our entire caucus, Mr. Speaker. We are working with them to provide supports and opportunities to help them improve the system. Everyone knows the system needs to be fixed, and it is our responsibility to step up and do that. You have two options: you defend the system and ask for an individual to take responsibility; you fix the system and have an individual taking responsibility. Our minister is doing just that, and he's stepping up to fix the system, and I hope that all members opposite do just that as well.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, Premier, you're out of touch with Albertans because they have lost confidence in your cabinet. Given that the Minister of Human Services and the Minister of Justice have not done their job and are holding up an RCMP investigation into the death of four-year-old Serenity, to the Premier. My question is very simple. Will you do the right thing today and replace these two ministers so we can move forward with an all-party committee to address this issue in this child intervention system and start saving lives?

2:20

Ms Hoffman: We are moving forward with an all-party committee, Mr. Speaker, and we want the committee itself to be involved in just that. That's why we're moving forward with making sure that we have opportunities to fix the system, and we are committed to doing just that. The two individuals that are being called upon are standing right there. They're working to make the system better. Instead of flipping over a table and calling for everyone to start from scratch, I encourage everyone to come to the table, sit down, work on the system, and make it better because every child deserves that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November several ministers in this NDP government, including the Justice minister, stood up and told the House that there was an ongoing investigation into the death of Serenity. The RCMP just received the files that they need to continue a full investigation this Tuesday. To the Minister of Justice: can you explain to Albertans what happened, and do you agree with the Minister of Human Services that nobody will be held to account for this tragic death of children in our care?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. My understanding is that the RCMP are actively investigating this case. The RCMP have the relevant documents that they require. The office of the Chief Medical Examiner notified the RCMP of the cause of death as soon as it was determined, which was within a few days of the death. The RCMP requested that the OCME not release the findings as publications of the details of the tragic death could be extremely detrimental to the ongoing investigation. Absolutely, the RCMP are moving forward with their investigation, and we are supporting them in that, and if they require additional information, we'll be happy to comply.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is saddening to hear that this government isn't taking our children in care seriously.

Given that we've learned from the RCMP officials this morning that this government waited until Tuesday to submit Serenity's report despite weeks of pressure from the opposition, why didn't the Justice minister take action when the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, the media, and the opposition raised the issue?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. That timeline is troubling, and this started far before the questions that were raised in this House, but the timeline is the truth: September 2016, the office of the Chief Medical Examiner completed the report; October 24, the RCMP asked for the report; October 27, DFNA reached out to Human Services. It goes on: November 22, the report was uploaded. I understand now that there were some challenges that the receiving party had with downloading that file. Those have been fixed, and the file is in the hands of those who require it.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government looks like it's over its head. We've seen this issue with FOIP obstruction persisting at the Ministry of Justice, and considering that the Serenity case raises new issues around secrecy within this government, will the Premier admit that the minister is incapable of managing her department and restore the trust that has been broken under this government's watch and actually hold somebody responsible for the tragic death of Serenity?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll say again that we are absolutely committed to fixing the system, not one system but many systems. We are inviting members from the government caucus as well as each other party that's in this House to step up and help us in doing that work. We have a table that we are asking you to come join us at, and our children certainly deserve to have the opportunities that will be presented in that committee, both the shorter term piece as well as the longer term piece, to make sure that the system does improve. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

To the two House leaders, government and opposition: try and manage the communications with each of yourselves through me, please. Yes. Thank you.

Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Protection of Indigenous Children in Care

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has made commitments to indigenous Albertans yet has failed to come through on those promises. Children are dying while this government does nothing to stand up for them and advocate for their health and safety. Maybe Serenity is only one horrible example of the lack of oversight that this minister is providing in the care of our most vulnerable citizens. This government needs to start doing something substantial for indigenous Albertans instead of making empty promises. To the minister. This case is clearly criminal. What has your ministry done to work with the Minister of Human Services? Why hasn't someone been held responsible?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Certainly, the circumstances in which Serenity died break my heart. There is still an investigation going on, and criminal investigations are done by the RCMP and police. We will cooperate with that investigation and make sure they have all the needed and necessary information.

Mr. Hanson: Given that the Child Intervention Implementation Oversight Committee presented their final report to the Minister of Human Services in February 2015, nearly 22 months ago, and since this report strongly recommended that the minister support the creation of a multidisciplinary child death review committee within the office of the Chief Medical Examiner and that this would be part of the Fatality Inquiries Act review, to the minister. You have shown zero leadership to protect indigenous children in care under your watch. How have you participated in the Fatality Inquiries Act review, and what steps have you taken to protect innocent indigenous children?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. This is one of the reasons why, with a panel, there is a two-part piece. The first part is very short term, and it's focused around making sure that all parties in this House have an opportunity to bring forward specific action items and make sure that they've been implemented properly. That's the short-term piece.

The longer term piece will be many other pieces around the public-facing component, working with front-line service providers. I think that that's an excellent recommendation, that is exactly one of the pieces that the panel will be reviewing.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, there are children in care that do not have another 22 months.

Given that the AG report states that Human Services "does not have clear, coordinated processes for providing early support services to Indigenous children and families" and given that the Indigenous Relations minister is supposed to be supporting other ministries in fulfilling their duty to protect vulnerable indigenous Albertans yet obviously both ministries failed Serenity and her family horribly, what has the minister done to support Human Services in developing processes that will meet the needs of babies such as Serenity before more children are killed while in care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forming that panel is just one thing. Since becoming the government, we have accepted and acted on the Child and Youth Advocate office's recommendations. We have increased intervention funding by $37 million, which was voted against by all that side. We strengthened additional support for child care such as increasing the advancing futures bursary. We have developed assessment tools for kinship caregivers. We have dealt with front-line staff caseloads with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have had enough. We have a little girl who has died, and there are numerous questions surrounding her death that need to be answered and need to be answered now. The terrible case of Serenity's abuse and subsequent death is indicative of a problematic investigation involving the RCMP. To the Solicitor General. Everyone is accountable here. Will you ask the RCMP on behalf of the people of Alberta to perform an inquiry into the perceived botched investigation into Serenity's death, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm aware that the member has been a member of the armed forces as well, and the RCMP certainly do have an important . . . [interjections] Sorry. City police and the RCMP in partnership with other law enforcement agencies have a very important role to play in this. My understanding is that the RCMP is investigating this case, and the questions that have been raised are the questions that are being raised by the public as well as by the minister to make sure that Serenity, her family, and all children in the system have justice.

2:30

Mr. Ellis: Everything needs to be public in this situation, Mr. Speaker.

The medical examiner's office also falls under the authority of the Solicitor General. There are lots of perceived concerns with the procedures of that office. I believe the Solicitor General should be asking: where did the autopsy report go off the rails? Again to the minister: will you launch a public inquiry into the procedures of the medical examiner's office to determine where it failed Serenity so that it does not fail other children, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Just to reiterate, the RCMP requested that the OCME not release its findings as publication of the tragic death materials could have a detrimental impact on the ongoing investigation. That investigation is still ongoing. The medical examiner has remained in constant contact with the RCMP as the investigation has continued.

We do absolutely want to ensure and now all parties in this House can work to ensure that we absolutely make sure that everyone gets justice in this case. This is something that rests on all of our shoulders, and we all feel . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. The entire system failed Serenity and her mother possibly due to their lower socioeconomic status, and this is unacceptable. It is wrong to treat people differently because of their perceived status. This is what I have been fighting against for years. To the minister: will you and your government initiate a public inquiry into the circumstances surrounding Serenity's death, and if you don't, will you resign so that Alberta can have somebody who cares take that necessary action?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The poverty of children is something that we've been working to address every day in this House. That's why we moved forward on bringing forward the Alberta child benefit as well as working with the federal child benefit, to make sure that families get the supports that they need to be able to stay strong and resilient and together whenever it's safe for children. That, of course, is our ultimate goal. And that's why we are working on both sides, around addressing the system changes once children are in the system but also keeping families strong and resilient and together.

I'm proud to be part of a government that's standing up for families, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Child Death Review Ministerial Panel

Loyola: Thank you. I believe that I speak for all the members of this caucus when I say that we take this issue very, very seriously, and that is the issue of children in care. I'm hoping that we can get a little bit more clarity on the ministerial panel. Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister on the ministerial panel: can you please let us know if that will be a public or private committee? [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. member. [interjections] Hon. members.
The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. The chair and the committee members will have the discussion, and they will decide their work plan. As was suggested, I'm not the chair, but I will certainly consider the Wildrose proposal for the chair. This is no different than other panels that have preceded this: the royalty review 2014 panel, the mental health review panel. There is absolutely good reason for the panel to have public meetings, to hear from the front lines and hear from the public. And if they choose to have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Loyola: Again, Mr. Speaker, through you to the minister. I know that it's important for us to collaborate with all parties in the House. Did you consider any of the opposition's terms of reference when coming up with the terms of reference for the panel?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. I absolutely did. The public will be invited to make presentations, the front line will be able to participate, and families will be engaged. When we write the terms of reference, they will look at the review process, they will look at root causes, they will look at resources, staffing, training. We have framed those terms of reference in the broadest possible sense to get this right.
Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, what do you hope that the panel will accomplish?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two things that are expected of the panel. In six to eight weeks it is expected that the panel will come with concrete recommendations around our death review process. In the next six months it is expected that the panel will come up with concrete recommendations to address root causes of these issues, to address resources and staffing needs, to suggest what changes can be made to avoid similar incidents from happening again, and to strengthen support for families and communities across this province.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Protection of Children in Care

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. This NDP government failed to protect Serenity, and it breaks my heart to know that there are other little ones out there right now being sexually abused, beaten, and starved. Today the Human Services minister admitted that the NDP government has failed children in kinship care and announced a government panel that will deliver predetermined outcomes, no powers to subpoena, no public record, and a minister who himself should be investigated is sitting on this panel. How ridiculous is this NDP panel, and how is it a better solution than an all-party legislative committee that this Wildrose has been asking for for three weeks?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We have been moving with the information that we received and the recommendation from the Official Opposition around their terms of reference . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: . . . with the recommendation that came forward from the leader of the third party around creating this in the very first place. We do believe that every single person in this House wants to make life better for children, especially children in care who are suffering. That's why we are wanting to work with all parties in this House to make sure that we can move forward with the best interests of children always as the guiding lens. We want to solve this together, Mr. Speaker, because we know that for more than a hundred years we certainly haven't solved . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier. Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Again, Serenity was sexually abused, starved, and beaten. It is unimaginable what that child went through. And she represents systemic issues in kinship care. Given that the office of the Child and Youth Advocate has repeatedly detailed that there is insufficient training practices for kinship care providers but, much worse, Mr. Speaker, that there is inadequate training for case-workers and given that these recommendations for improvements are years old, how is it acceptable to this minister that his staff are inadequately trained?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We certainly have taken steps to strengthen the kinship model by coming up with assessment tools. We are also helping staff to deal with caseload issues. There are 27 pilot projects going across the province to ensure that kinship caregivers have the right support, to ensure families have the right support. We have added $37 million into the system. Across Alberta there are 1,700 kinship homes providing services to children across this province, and one incident doesn't reflect . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, we keep hearing: "Supports. Supports. Supports. We're doing this. We're doing that." Well, the friends and family of Serenity are devastated, and they deserve justice. Given that this family has suffered, they've been betrayed by the government, they've been betrayed by the system, Serenity's mother is finding out about this case in the news, and this minister keeps saying that they have support, I would like to hear from this minister: what supports are they offering Serenity's family, the siblings, and everybody else that has been involved in this case?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A week ago there was a vigil on the Legislature's doorstep. I along with my colleague the Minister of Indigenous Relations participated in that. I have spoken directly to Serenity's family. I have provided them with my information and offered every support whatsoever they need to deal with this. That is what I have done specifically for this case. Going forward, I have established this panel to look into these systemic issues to make sure that we can avoid similar incidents.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member . . . [interjections] Order, please.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

2:40 Forest Industries and the Environment

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They call us the do-nothing government, yet mitigating climate change has been a significant priority for the forest sector for many years alongside the former PC government. The forest industry has reduced their carbon footprint and produced green electricity from biomass. To the minister: since 1990 Canadian pulp and paper companies have reduced greenhouse gas emissions by 66 per cent. How much is your carbon tax going to reduce emissions in your term in government?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. The truth is that we can act now or be left behind. This government took the position that we're going to act now. The member is absolutely right. The forestry sector has taken this seriously. They will continue taking it seriously. From the Forest Products Association of Canada: Canada's Forest Products Industry Is Part of the Solution to the Climate Change Challenge. From the Alberta Forest Products Association: "Mitigating climate change has been a significant priority for the forest sector for many years." They are doing their part to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and other pollutants, and we're going to continue working with them to find those solutions.

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that forest companies have invested in renewable and sustainable electricity and have been successfully generating green energy from biomass since long before the government's climate leadership plan and given that this government is incenting new green energy production, to the minister: what is your government doing to recognize the green energy production that's already been built because of the forest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We're reviewing the bioenergy credit program. It was a program that was started by the previous government, had sunsetted. We're reviewing that program, looking to incent the forest industry yet further. It's important to note that the Canadian corporate executives who urged the federal government and this province to take action on climate change included the Forest Products Association of Canada. We're taking their advice along with that of executives from across Canada, continuing with the climate leadership plan because that's the right thing to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government's climate leadership plan looks at how much carbon is produced in Alberta, but there are two sides of the equation, and given that a healthy forest is a carbon sink and that investing in the health of forests is the best defence against climate change, to the minister: why doesn't your climate change leadership plan recognize the carbon sequestering that is amplified by healthy forest practices by our forest industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, this matter of offset protocols is ongoing. We need to make sure that our offset protocols are verifiable, measurable, and reportable and that they conform to what is happening in other jurisdictions, which is exactly why we are doing that. I had the opportunity to meet with the International Emissions Trading Association at the United Nations' meetings on climate change when this matter of forestry, agriculture, and waste offset protocols was raised. We'll have more to say about that in 2017.

Thanks to the hon. member for the question.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Calgary Rotary Challenger Park

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the far southeast corner of the incredibly diverse riding of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, past the longest runway in Canada, is Calgary Rotary Challenger park. The barrier-free park was established in 2003 with a mission to provide accessible sport and recreation facilities where everyone can play.

I recently had the chance to tour the park with executive director Jim Zackowski, and he explained the unique partnership between the rotary clubs of Calgary and Airdrie, the Calgary Airport Authority, and the Calgary Parks Foundation that helped the park become home to baseball fields, tennis and basketball courts, picnic areas, football and soccer fields, and a 400-metre synthetic surface track.

Tenants of the main building include Renfrew Educational Services, BAPS temple, and the park's administration team, which is currently evaluating expansion plans for the park.

The organization has just signed a long-term lease with the Calgary Airport Authority for just over five acres of land adjacent to the park's west boundary, where the CRCP is hoping to expand its operations to include a new barrier-free, environmentally friendly 110,000-square-foot centre for all abilities. The centre is intended to be a co-location facility that would house a number of not-for-profit organizations. Focusing on integration, inclusion, and collaboration, the centre will be a hub that provides a multitude of community services to our youth, seniors, and other more vulnerable populations in our communities.

I encourage everyone who hasn't had the opportunity to see the park to attend the family fun day next June 24 and see what a remarkable facility it is. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Culture Days

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 Alberta Culture Days began as a one-day event celebrating our province's arts and cultural communities. From September 30 to October 2 of this year Alberta Culture Days covered three days of festivities in over 70 communities across the province, cultivating a sense of belonging and pride through celebration of our vibrant culture and diverse heritage.

Calgary-Northern Hills served as a 2016 host site, with Vivo for Healthier Generations, north-central Calgary's recreational hub, holding its sixth annual cultural expo. Vivo's cultural expo featured traditional songs by Chantal Stormsong Chagnon and Cheryle Chagnon-Greyeyes of Muskeg Lake Cree Nation 8; martial arts demonstrations by the Mo Fan Taichi & Wushu Academy; a tribute to carnival by the Brazilian Community Association and Quilla dance; the Afghan Jalebi, performed by Nazma Nanji; performances by groups such as the Young Bhangra, Angela's hip hop dancers, the Mexican dance and art association, the Métis Nation of Alberta region 3; as well as a visit and opening remarks from our Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Displays at Vivo's cultural expo featured explanations of various cultural practices, information for new residents, and local newspapers in languages other than English. Free food samples were provided by EthniCity Catering, a local company employing new Canadians.

I'd like to congratulate Vivo for Healthier Generations for bringing together performers, artists, and delicious foods from our diverse community to celebrate, through arts and culture, who we are as Albertans.

As a resident of the Calgary-Northern Hills community I am proud of our province's commitment to Alberta Culture Days. Through participation in cultural activities we honour our past, understand one another in the present, and undertake building our shared future together.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Serenity

Mr. Barnes: In this House we speak a great deal about policy, about administration, about systems, but there are times when such cold, dispassionate terms fail us. There are stories that brutally remind us that every single thing we do here is about people. We represent people. We serve people, not systems. Four-year-old Serenity's life and death is that story.

It's been said many times that there is nothing more tragic than the death of a child, but what about when that death becomes another distant and impersonal statistic? What about when the story behind the death is forgotten and the same mistakes are made again and again and again? Serenity was a person, a child with dreams and desires, a child who could feel joy and sorrow, a child who laughed, played, and cried. She wasn't a number. She wasn't a failing of a process. She wasn't a blip in the system. She was a human.

From the beginning of this horrendous story the entire government system has failed by forgetting that humanity is at the centre of everything it does. The system ignored a mother's anguish and a child's torment. The Human Services minister, having failed to do his part to get justice for Serenity and pass along information to the RCMP, now calls it an unfortunate error.

No, Mr. Speaker. I absolutely reject this cold, uncaring, sanitized language. I'm sick and tired of hearing about processes and bureaucracies and unfortunate errors. We can no longer hide behind reviews and reports and panels and recommendations. For too long nobody has cared enough at a human level to do anything about it. A child died, starving, neglected, abused physically and sexually. We demand justice for this poor girl, peace for her family, respect for every other life in the hands of a sprawling government apparatus that protects itself before our children.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I give notice of the following. Under Standing Order 15 of the Legislative Assembly I am providing you with written notice of my intention to raise a point of privilege at the appropriate time. It concerns misleading statements that were made in the Assembly by the Premier, the Minister of Human Services, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General, and the Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Also, Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time I intend to give notice under Standing Order 42 that I propose the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly:

1. Appoint a select special child intervention review committee to review the safety and security of children in government care by examining Alberta's child intervention system and related systems, including but not limited to the Department of Human Services and the Department of Indigenous Relations, and the committee will further review the recommendations for the child intervention system made over the past five years and may for the purpose of systematic improvement inquire into specific cases;
2. The committee shall be chaired by the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, or Deputy Chair of Committees and consist of seven members from the government members' caucus, three members from the Official Opposition, two members from the third party, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, with the names of all members to be submitted to the Clerk no later than December 15, 2016;
3. In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans;
4. In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field and may compel the appearance of witnesses with specific and relevant knowledge on matters being investigated;
5. The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
6. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair;
7. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature;
8. The committee must ensure that any and all front-line workers and managers in children services and any delegates or contractors for children services that wish to speak to the all-party committee are given full whistleblower protections;
9. The committee must submit its report within six months after commencing its review;
10. When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting, or if the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give oral notice of a motion for the next Order Paper, the motion being as follows:

Be it resolved that the following changes to

- (a) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that MLA Miller replace MLA McPherson
- (b) the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future be approved: that MLA Drysdale replace MLA Jansen
- (c) the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices be approved: that MLA Drever replace MLA Jabbour.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I have five copies of the ministerial panel on child intervention handout that the Minister of Human Services distributed at his media conference ever so recently.

The Speaker: I believe we have three points of order.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Excuse me. The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I think the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has got lots of stuff to say this afternoon, so I will rise on his behalf for this point of order. I rise on 23(j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." A member that I have tremendous amount of respect for, the Government House Leader, during, you know, what was an emotional question period, I do recognize, did tell this side of the House to shut up. I think you would find that that is certainly abusive language and definitely language that would create disorder.

With that said, I do recognize that sometimes during question period things can get a little bit heated, and I'm sure the hon. member recognizes that. I would just ask that he rise and do the right thing, withdraw and apologize.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, during the discussion, which was very heated and very emotional, which I recognize, I became increasingly concerned that opposition members were calling on the Minister of Human Services to be accountable but were not listening and were shouting at him to resign instead of listening to the answer. At one point I called to the other side and called for order – in no way did I mean to usurp your position – to ask them to try and pay attention. The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre yelled across to me: you're not the Speaker. I, unfortunately, used the words that he said. I met rudeness with rudeness – I should have taken the high road – for which I apologize and withdraw my comments. It was unworthy of me.

The Speaker: The second point of order.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on 23(h), (i), and (j). During question period on numerous occasions the Minister of Health, the Deputy Premier, made a number of statements that were likely to create disorder, particularly when she continually and regularly referred to a committee which is not a committee. It's a panel. There's a very big difference in the facts between a panel and a committee, and on numerous occasions the Deputy Premier said that that's why they were taking action with this committee. That's not a fact. The fact is that it is a panel. The Deputy Premier also made numerous – numerous – statements about how they took into consideration all of the recommendations that the Official Opposition had made, and that also is not a fact.

When ministers of the Crown make statements in question period that are clearly devoid of the facts, that will create disorder every time. I ask not only that she withdraw and apologize but that the government refrain from spreading misinformation in the future.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've been in this place a long time. Sometimes it feels maybe too long. I'm sure that hon. members opposite might agree with that.

Let's look at 23(h), (i), and (j).

- (h) makes allegations against another Member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member; [and]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Now, the hon. Opposition House Leader cited all three, but he basically directed his arguments to (j), "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

Mr. Speaker, what we have here is a difference between a panel and a committee, a semantical difference. Well, I mean, here's the Oxford dictionary. A committee is "a group of people appointed for a specific function by a larger group and typically consisting of members of that group." A panel is "a small group of people brought together to investigate or decide on a particular matter." Now, there are some slight differences in those definitions, but I have never heard of a semantical difference creating disorder.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition and most of the opposition were very, in my view, disorderly in the conduct of this question period. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please. Hon. member, I'm trying to listen to the House leader's arguments.

Mr. Nixon: Well, let's hear the arguments.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you don't get to talk back to me. The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Amazing, Mr. Speaker. It's amazing.

So we have a semantical difference. It's a matter of semantics, which the Opposition House Leader claims creates disorder on their side. Well, Mr. Speaker, if they're going to be so disordered when you have a semantical difference, then what happens if you have a real difference of opinion on something substantive instead of something trivial like the definition of a panel or a committee, which apparently causes the members opposite to jump up and call points of order?

Mr. Speaker, if you read (j) carefully, it's not just: creating disorder. The opposition is fully capable of being disorderly without our help; there's no question about it. But (j) requires the use of abusive or insulting language to create disorder, and the hon. Deputy Premier and Health minister did not insult them by calling it a committee.

I have never seen a more frivolous or trivial or contrived point of order in all the years that I've been in this House, Mr. Speaker. I have been on both sides of points of order many times, but frankly I think this is beneath the Opposition House Leader.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I think I've heard enough.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Let me remind all of you again that we've all been working very hard in this House, long hours, on some very sensitive and important topics that I know all of you care about. I do sense the emotion at a particular time like this.

With respect to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, in this particular instance I don't believe that was a point of order.

Oh, I missed Calgary-Hays. My apologies. I didn't see you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief. Let me say that I heard the recitations made, and I'll try not to repeat them. The Government House Leader's whole argument is whether it's a trivial difference or not. The disruption that you saw in the House today was entirely based on that difference, which was in no way small. While the Oxford dictionary may cover the basic meaning of the words, in this House the meaning of those words is quite a bit bigger.

For example, Mr. Speaker – and this is what this is all about today – the government promised us a committee which has members from all sides of the House and does their business in public, reported in Hansard, so that there is no doubt about what happens and the public can see what happened and decide whether they like it or not without having to get a second opinion on exactly what was said.

A panel: no small difference, I think you'll agree, Mr. Speaker. Completely different. The panel has five NDP members, gets to decide what's in the report with their majority, and can hide anything that's said. So it's not a trivial difference. It's a massive difference and the whole source of the outrage today in the House. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. member, please.

Thank you for your additional information. In this particular instance I don't see a point of order.

There's another point of order, number 3. The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: We combined them.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Point of Order Oral Questions

The Speaker: I want to deal with a point of order from yesterday, which was concerning the Member for Calgary-Elbow's point of order. The arguments for the point of order are found on pages 2411 and 2412 of December 7, 2016. It has to do with the question that was asked by the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater, which is on page 2404. In his arguments the Member for Calgary-Elbow reinforced Beauchesne, paragraph 408. That paragraph indicates amongst other things that oral questions should – two things:

- (a) be asked only in respect of matters of sufficient urgency and importance as to require an immediate answer;
- (b) not inquire whether statements made in a newspaper are correct.

I would note for all members that the provision in Beauchesne's is no longer applicable.

Specifically, paragraph 410(2) states:

While some previous guidelines remain valid others have fallen into disuse, e.g. that it is out of order to ask about matters reported in the media or statements by Ministers outside the House or "certain questions [concerning] government policy".

I would note that only a few days ago I ruled on a very similar point of order raised by the same member. On Monday I admonished the private members from the government caucus to be careful, use questions of substance, but I ruled that there was no point of order. You can find my remarks on page 2281.

I note to all members that the ability for private members of the government caucus to ask questions of the government is a long-standing practice and tradition in this House, and it certainly has been in the period of time that I have been in this chair. In other words, all private members have the opportunity to hold the government to account. All private members have the opportunity to seek information. I would conclude by saying that all private members should continue to do exactly that. I find that there was no point of order.

There is a question of privilege. I would call upon the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Privilege Misleading the House

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a point of privilege. As you know, points of privilege should not be taken or entered into lightly. Points of privilege are a serious matter. You'll know that throughout today there was a lot of very serious discussion. We've had a lot of very serious discussion in the House over a number of weeks. I want to make a number of references and then point to a number of facts that will lead to my belief that a number of members on the government side provided answers to questions in this House that misled the House and, in fact, made misleading statements.

With respect to privileges and issues of contempt you can find in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, chapter 3, page 83, where it speaks of breaches of privilege, a list of a number of those breaches, one of which, the third bullet point – and I'll spare the House from reading all of the bullet points today – is: "Deliberately attempting to mislead the House or a committee (by way of statement, evidence, or petition)."

You'll also find in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, 24th edition, page 254, section 15, under Misconduct of Members or Officers, Members Deliberately Misleading the House: "The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt."

Mr. Speaker, as was indicated in my notice of the breach of privilege, which, I might add, met the requirements of providing the appropriate written notice as laid out in Standing Order 15(2):

A Member wishing to raise a point of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement . . .

as I did,

. . . to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least 2 hours before the opening of the afternoon sitting.

You'll notice that the written notice that I provided was stamped by your office at 11:15, providing more than the additional two hours' notice.

Mr. Speaker, on November 22, page 1930 of Hansard, the Premier made the following statement. I'll read the whole answer for you.

Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite is correct in that the final report was not completed until much later because of the complexities that he alludes to. But he should also know that the medical examiner was in touch with the RCMP with respect to preliminary findings within days of receiving the information and [that he] has been in touch with them throughout.

In terms of the progress of the investigation, that is a matter for the police to deal with independently from those of us in this House.

The Premier clearly identified that this was a matter for the police to deal with independently of the House, but last night we found out that the police had been hindered from that independent investigation because the Ministry of Human Services had not provided the information to the RCMP.

Now, subsequently, I have heard in question period today that the government attempted to provide that information but that what they did not do was ensure that that information had been received.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Human Services, the Premier, and others had a responsibility to provide information to the RCMP for them to independently investigate this horrific tragedy. That is exactly what the Premier said that they did, but the facts are contrary to that.

On November 24, page 2029, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General said the following:

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. There is nothing more heartbreaking in the world than the death of a child. In this particular case the autopsy report wasn't forwarded because the RCMP still has an ongoing investigation, and they've asked us not to release this information at this time.

This is the important part.

So we are committed to working with them in ensuring that they have the tools that they need to continue their investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to you that the information that the Department of Human Services had was a very important tool for the RCMP to continue their investigation, yet they did not provide that information. As such, the statement she made in the House is clearly in contempt of this House because it seems they were not committed to working with them, particularly with getting them the most important information with respect to this horrific tragedy. Let me be clear. This government and the Minister of Justice showed contempt for the Assembly with how they chose to answer the question, just as is highlighted in Erskine May.

On November 30 the Minister of Justice, page 2183 of Hansard:

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Nothing could be more tragic than the death of any child, particularly in [these] circumstances . . . That is why we thought it was so important to ensure that the RCMP were able to complete their investigation in the way that they saw fit and to protect the information in the report from the Chief Medical Examiner in order to ensure that they could complete that investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that providing the information that is paramount and critical to the investigation was probably job one. The government led this House to believe that that had been completed. That was not completed for whatever reason, whatever circumstances, be it an unfortunate error or otherwise, until December 6, which was confirmed by the RCMP today in a 12 o'clock press conference at K Division.

On November 30, page 2183, the Minister of Human Services:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. It's a deeply concerning issue, and I share in the devastation that members of this House and all Albertans are feeling. As the Minister of Justice indicated, it's an issue . . . under active investigation, so we will work with the RCMP and all involved to make sure that we get this right. At the same time, we are absolutely committed to making improvements to avoid similar incidents from happening in the future.

Mr. Speaker, they said that they would work with the RCMP to make sure all involved get this right. That wasn't true. They didn't ensure that the RCMP had the information until seven days later, on December 6. On December 6, page 2332 of Hansard, my colleague the Government House Leader said the following:

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier has been clear in this House that because of an ongoing RCMP investigation not all the information was released when it might otherwise have been released. That's a very important thing, that we get to the bottom of this and we not interfere or in any way disrupt this critical police investigation.

With respect to the work of this committee in due course the government will be showing just how this committee will work and how we can get to the bottom of this issue.

Now, I will reserve my comments around the committee and how it's not going to work or how it's certainly different than what they proposed in this House prior to the Standing Order 42 that will follow. But let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader said that "that's a very important thing, that we get to the bottom of this and we not interfere or in any way disrupt this critical . . . investigation." I can assure you that not providing the information to the RCMP has created disruption. It has created a significant delay. The RCMP asked for the information, and they did not receive it. They did not receive it in a form that could be utilized by the RCMP until the 6th of December.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear to me and I hope that it is very clear to you that the government and ministers of the Crown have misled this Assembly. They have misled Albertans and, as such, it's my hope that you, too, will find this government, as you have before, in contempt of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, are you prepared to make arguments today, or do you wish to defer?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the advantage of the arguments by the Official Opposition House Leader. I am prepared to proceed, however. We may wish, if that is agreeable to you, to supplement this information. I don't know if that's acceptable or not acceptable. There are some additional points that I don't think we have prepared for. That's all.

The Speaker: We'll take a moment, please.

Hon. member, if I understood your point correctly, you indicated that you would be making some arguments today and possibly additional arguments on the next day of the sitting. If, in fact, that's correct, I just want to make it clear to you that you're going to get one opportunity to make the case. If you do not have the information for the points you've raised earlier, then I would suggest that you defer. You're not going to get a second shot at it.

Mr. Mason: That's clear. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm prepared to proceed.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Now, Mr. Speaker, allegations of misleading the House are very serious. A point of privilege and a contempt of the House is one of the most serious allegations that can be raised in this place, and it needs to be dealt with with the utmost seriousness, and I think all of the authorities are clear on that fact. I believe I've heard every Speaker since I've been in this place reiterate that point. So they ought not to be entered into for anything but the most serious reasons and certainly not to try and make political points.

Mr. Speaker, it is my contention that this does not meet the test of privilege in the procedural manuals or the test that has been applied in this House over the years.

On page 86 of the House of Commons Procedures and Practice, second edition, it's stated:

The following elements have to be established when it is alleged that a Member is in contempt for deliberately misleading the House: one, it must be proven that the statement was misleading; two, it must be established that the Member making the statement knew at the time that the statement was incorrect; and three, that in making the statement, the Member intended to mislead the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are three very, very significant thresholds that have to be reached before it can be established that a point of privilege has taken place.

In this Chamber on a number of occasions we've had allegations of misleading the House. On March 12, 2014, a similar matter was brought forward, and Speaker Zwodetsky made a ruling that can be found on page 215 of Hansard for that day, in which he stated:

Now, if the member who raised the point of privilege is alleging that the minister deliberately misled the Assembly, then that indeed is a very, very high bar and is almost never made out according to the many rulings that you will have researched as part of your preparation for this point of privilege. In order to constitute a contempt and to conclude that a member deliberately misled the Assembly, three elements must be met, and members have referred to this in their own words. First, the statement must in fact have been misleading; secondly, it must be established that the member making the statement knew at the time the statement was made that it was incorrect; and three, in making such a statement, the member must have intended to mislead the House. . . . We must accept that the members who spoke, spoke, I hope, with honour and with their own conviction and their own belief.

In this case I do not find there to be a prima facie case that would constitute a point of privilege. So that will conclude this matter today.

Mr. Speaker, very similar rulings were previously made on February 19, 2003, and on December 3, 2012, which I will not repeat here.

To the matter specifically at hand earlier today, the Minister of Human Services outlined a detailed action plan on how he proposes to move forward, working with members of the Opposition as well as experts. He has also provided information, including a timeline, regarding the case in question.

He has indicated that on September 15, 2016, the office of the Chief Medical Examiner completed its report, which was then provided to the RCMP. On October 24 the RCMP asked the delegated First Nations agencies for the child and family services case file. On October 27 the DFNA reached out to Human Services and started discussing co-ordination of the file. On November 18 the DFNA provided a written request to Human Services for the case file. On November 22, two working days later, Human Services provided access to a secure link to download the file.

Mr. Speaker, we have since understood that the documents were retrieved, due to some problems reading the files, on December 6, in which case the minister has provided that information. We've confirmed with the RCMP again today that it is an ongoing and open, active investigation, so that particular allegation is incorrect.

I just want to go back a little bit. It's not enough even if the Official Opposition House Leader was correct in his assertion that there was not an active investigation going on. Members on this side would have to meet the second and third tests as well. They would have to have known that in the first place, and secondly, we would have had to intentionally be misleading the other side. Mr. Speaker, with respect to that particular allegation none of the three tests are passed. First of all, it was a true statement. Secondly, we didn't know that it was false. It was true, and we knew it was true. Finally, we were not attempting to mislead the House. On that particular piece I think the Official Opposition's case falls apart.

The office of the medical examiner notified the RCMP of the cause of death as soon as it was determined, which was in a few days of the death, Mr. Speaker. The RCMP requested that the office of the Chief Medical Examiner not release its findings as publication details of the death could be extremely detrimental to the ongoing police investigation, and the medical examiner has remained in constant contact with the RCMP as the investigation has continued.

Mr. Speaker, the House has not been misled. Members on the other side may well believe that errors were made. They may be dissatisfied with the structure of the panel that we have put forward. These have been put forward by the Opposition House Leader as reasons to support his point of privilege. None of that is material to this point of privilege. The question needs to be resolved as to: what particular pieces of information did ministers provide that are named in this point of privilege that were incorrect? Then they would need to establish that the ministers knew they were incorrect. Thirdly, they would need to be able to show that the ministers intended to mislead the House.

Mr. Speaker, there's nothing but differences of opinion on how this case should have been handled, and that's fair, and that's legitimate, and it's the obligation of the opposition to bring those forward and to demand accountability from the government and from the ministers on that side. That is fair game as far as we're concerned. But the point that needs to be satisfied that they have not satisfied is whether any of the statements made by ministers in this House were untrue. That's the very first test, and I don't believe that they have shown that anything was untrue. They certainly haven't shown that the ministers knew them to be untrue, and they certainly haven't shown that the ministers intended to mislead the House.

So, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I would ask and argue that there is no point of privilege here, in fact far from it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I rise because this point of privilege addresses and touches on the privilege of all members, not just the members of the opposition party or any party who may have asked the questions that are up for discussion here today. I do want an opportunity as well – and thank you for that opportunity – to address some of the points made by the hon. Government House Leader.

I believe the Opposition House Leader has made a very clear case in quoting from the direct words used by the ministers in question in this House: "We are committed to working with them in ensuring that they have the tools that they need," "they" being the RCMP in this case. That is a direct quote.

Today RCMP Inspector Gibson Glavin said, quote: we did ask for the information, but we did not receive it in a format we could access until December 6. That is, I believe, clearly different than what the minister had said on I believe it was November 22 or 24, and I believe that it was the Minister of Human Services that was quoted as saying, "We are working with them in ensuring that they have the tools they need" in addition to the words of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on November 30. I believe that that is, in fact, misleading. So that satisfies the first test.

Whether the minister knew it was incorrect or not, he should have known. He either knew or ought to have known, and I believe that is a fair and well-established test. That is his job, to know or ought to know what is happening within his ministry, especially when something is as urgent and as public as this case. Whether it's intentional, Mr. Speaker, as difficult as it may be for the government to hear, you know, on a day when we've had some very high emotion in this House – the question of intent concerns me greatly. When a party is concerned, when government members are concerned about their reputation in the eyes of Albertans, it certainly gives them a lot of motive to intentionally hide information from the House and therefore from Albertans.

So I believe that you should find that the information that was presented in this House was in fact misleading, that the minister either knew or ought to have known that it was incorrect, and that they had sufficient motive for them to do so intentionally. That is not, as the hon. Government House Leader has said, something to be taken lightly. But it certainly seems to me that that is exactly what we are dealing with here, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that you would consider those points as you make your ruling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak to the matter?

Thank you. When I received the letter, I already started the research. I will be dealing with the matter, and I will be coming back to the House with a ruling next week.

Motions under Standing Order 42

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 42 I want to remind you that in making arguments, only one member is allowed to speak and that that is the member who has given notice of the motion, the Official Opposition House Leader. The House leader having provided oral notice of his motion pursuant to Standing Order 42 earlier this afternoon, I would now recognize him.

Select Special Child Intervention Review Committee Appointment

Mr. Cooper:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly:

1. Appoint a select special child intervention review committee to review the safety and security of children in government care by examining Alberta's child intervention system and related systems, including but not limited to the Department of Human Services and the Department of Indigenous Relations, and the committee will further review the recommendations for the child intervention system made over the past five years and may for the purpose of systemic improvement inquire into specific cases;
2. The committee shall be chaired by the Speaker, Deputy Speaker, or Deputy Chair of Committees and consist of seven members from the government members' caucus, three members from the Official Opposition, two members from the third party, the Member for Calgary-Elbow, and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, with the names of all members to be submitted to the Clerk no later than December 15, 2016;
3. In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans;
4. In carrying out its duties, the committee may solicit written submissions from experts in the field and may compel the appearance of witnesses with specific and relevant knowledge on matters being investigated;
5. The committee is deemed to continue beyond prorogation and may meet during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;

6. Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid, subject to the approval of the chair;
7. In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may, with the concurrence of the head of the department, utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Legislative Assembly Office and the officers of the Legislature;
8. The committee must ensure that any and all front-line workers and managers in children services and any delegates or contractors for children services that wish to speak to the all-party committee are given full whistle-blower protections;
9. The committee must submit its report within six months after commencing its review;
10. When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is sitting, or if the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Standing Order 42, the waiving of notice.

42(1) A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

(2) If the Assembly grants unanimous consent to proceed with the motion, each Member who wishes to speak in the debate shall be limited to 20 minutes, and the debate shall conclude

- (a) when all Members who wish to take part have spoken . . . or
- (b) at the normal hour of adjournment in the afternoon on that day, at which time the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the matter.

Mr. Speaker, as we established just a couple of days ago, what we are currently asking for is unanimous consent, unanimous consent to debate the motion that I provided oral notice of during the Routine. For the benefit of the House and the time this afternoon, I will not repeat the full context of the motion. What I will do is make note that there were some small changes from earlier in the week to this week that make a significant impact, particularly in the timeline of reporting. As we indicated earlier this week, the timeline was recommended as one year, and in this motion it is recommended as six months.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my remarks is to express the urgency of why this matter should proceed, and while there are many similar reasons to earlier this week, significant things have changed since then, the urgency of which we now are faced with. While some similarities remain in terms of the government being able to conclude the business of the House as early as this afternoon and as late as the passage of the rest of the bills on the Order Paper, one could presume, although I would never presuppose a decision of the Assembly, that that would be some day next week.

The urgency before us is that the government has made some significant remarks, both in the press and here in the House today, that they intend to work with the opposition on a panel even though the government had agreed to an all-party committee that would be on the public record, that all parties would be involved. It had been recommended by the Official Opposition that that would include whistle-blower protection, that it would include all of the things that were laid out in the motion. Now, unfortunately, earlier in the week the Government House Leader chose not to provide unanimous consent, which was more than a bit disappointing. What we could have done is worked together then to come to an agreement on the terms of reference of the committee, which is exactly why, in the most nonpartisan way possible, two days ago that's exactly what we did.

Now, today we saw the government introduce a panel of their own, making claims that they took into consideration all of our recommendations, which is devoid of the facts. They claim that they've accepted our recommendations, yet there is virtually nothing inside the panel that was included in our document. So all that I would like to do this afternoon and the reason why it's so urgent, because clearly the government is taking steps on some form of panel, is have a discussion here in the Chamber about how we can come to an agreement that works much better for all parties in the House.

Mr. Speaker, their panel includes a government member chairing it. It includes five members. It includes one member from the Official Opposition, one member from the Alberta Party, one member from the Alberta Liberals, and one member from — this does not reflect the face of this place. It does not reflect the face of this and presents significant challenges on a go-forward basis for the panel.

Mr. Speaker, what I'm providing the government an opportunity to do — and as I mentioned two days ago, I'm willing to discuss this. It's why I provided it to the government in advance two days ago. I'm willing to discuss it. I'm willing to accept amendments to the terms of reference that are provided here. I think that a lot of good could be done this afternoon by the government choosing to provide unanimous consent to work out the terms of reference for the betterment of members in this House, for the betterment of our members of the media, who I know are interested in what may or may not be happening at these meetings, and for members of the public.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Standing Order 42 states:

- (1) A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 39.

So, hon. members, I will now ask whether the Assembly grants unanimous consent to allow debate to proceed.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2)

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and move third reading of Bill 37, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2016 (No. 2).

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Close.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

Government Motions

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Statutes Repeal

29. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 3 of the Statutes Repeal Act, SA 2013, cS-19.3, the Legislative Assembly resolves that the following statutes, appearing on the list of statutes to be repealed which was tabled in the Assembly by the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General on April 13, 2016, sessional paper 82/2016, not be repealed:

1. Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act (2004 cB-2.5);
2. Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2009 (2009 c20) ss9(2)(b), (d), (15), (18);
3. Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004 (2004 c9) s8;
4. Health Professions Act (RSA 2000 cH-7) ss155(1)(c), 156(n), 156(u) and 156(aa) and scheds. 1 and 13;
5. Health Professions Amendment Act, 2008 (2008 c34) ss12, 13, 15;
6. Oil and Gas Conservation Amendment Act (RSA 2000 c24(Supp));
7. Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Amendment Act (RSA 2000 c34(Supp)) s8 "8.1(3)".

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. These statutes will be extended by one year. During that time, if it hasn't already begun, each of these will undergo further review, with more work being done in a variety of areas and with ministers and their offices engaging and consulting with stakeholders regarding the relevant statutes.

Thank you very much for your indulgence, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Close.

[Government Motion 29 carried]

3:50

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 27

Renewable Electricity Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: You're surprised, I know. Would you mind letting the House know where we are on this bill, please?

The Deputy Chair: We are on the main bill. There are no amendments currently.

Mr. MacIntyre: Wonderful. Well, Madam Chair, there are a number of issues surrounding renewables development. This government has chosen to focus in on wind turbines and solar power. Of course, there are many, many other forms of renewable and alternative energy forms. I'm not entirely certain why the government wanted to focus in on two of the renewables with the worst dispatchability of any of them, frankly. Both of them require backup.

We have other forms of renewable and alternative technologies that are stand alone, geothermal being one of them. We even have technology today, Madam Chair, where there are these mini units, geothermal units, that can actually use the heat from a flowing well, and we have literally hundreds of thousands of such flowing wells in this province, and a number of these flowing wells – it depends on the organization you're talking to, but anywhere from 20,000 to 40,000 of our flowing wells actually have enough heat energy and pressure and rate of flow to generate electricity.

Of course, these flowing wells have been flowing for some time. The heat energy contained in the products flowing from that well can be used to generate electricity. Energy is energy, you know. We measure energy in many different forms of measurement, whether it be British thermal units or kilowatts or whatever, but energy is energy. We can always transform energy from one form to another. Now, we do have some efficiency loss. It's just a reality of changing the form of an energy from heat energy to electrical energy. Nevertheless, we have a number of wells right across this province that would qualify for that kind of a thing.

Some of the other issues that we have here regarding this particular bill, of course, are not only the two kinds of renewables that the government seems to be focusing on but just that, in addition, Madam Chair, those two particular renewable technologies, photovoltaics and wind power, also require massive amounts of surface land, surface area.

Of course, when we're talking about wind turbines and converting the force of the wind into electrical energy, the higher we put a wind turbine, the more efficient that turbine will be. But, of course, we have roads that need to get there. We have subsurface infrastructure that needs to be put in place to support it. Massive amounts of concrete there. We also have utility corridors to reach those turbines just literally, you know, to run the wires from the turbine to our main trunk. Things like this. Massive amounts of land that are used there.

When we're talking about photovoltaics, again, when we're talking utility-scale photovoltaics, large amounts of land are needed. Again, we need roads. Again, we need infrastructure for supporting the racking and, you know, many hundreds of thousands of tonnes of concrete in footings. We also are going to need rights-of-way, easements, and corridors for wire to carry the electricity from the utility-scale solar farm, we'll call it, to our main trunks again.

All of this infrastructure, the roads and the equipment itself, is going to be parked on someone's land. As a result, when it comes to the consultation process, when it comes to the decision-making by this government for the siting of these particular renewables – specifically, I'm talking about wind and solar now because, as I said, that is the focus of the government – landowner consultation is going to become paramount.

Now, as you probably know, Madam Chair, the Wildrose does have some history with property rights. I believe that if you go back to the very foundation of the Wildrose movement, it was property rights that kicked it off, and property rights are today still a platform in the base of our party, in our movement. Property rights are a big thing to rural Albertans, and property rights are going to be a big thing when it comes to reaching 30 per cent renewables by 2030.

So I would respectfully like to propose an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead, hon. member. The amendment will be referred to as A7.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you. I move that Bill 27, the Renewable Electricity Act, be amended by adding the following section after section 5:

Landowner Consultation

5.1 A proposal under section 5 shall not be approved by the Minister unless the Minister is satisfied that reasonable consultation in respect of the proposal has taken place with any affected municipalities and landowners.

Now, there is a reason why we've included municipalities in this, and hopefully it's an obvious reason. We have a number of rural municipalities around this province who could very much benefit from the use of renewable technologies on certain plots of land that are within the municipality, owned and controlled by the municipality. I am speaking, of course, of things like brownfields. Brownfields in our province – and we do have a few – pose a significant problem for a county or a small town in that this is land that the town can do nothing with. That land is next to useless as any form of revenue for the town. The town cannot grant a development permit on that brownfield because it is contaminated in some manner, so there it sits.

In a number of our communities around this province they have been struggling of late to realize significant commercial and industrial tax revenue. For those communities that have brownfields, I believe it makes an enormous amount of sense for them to take those brownfields and put them to good use in generating some form of revenue. Because of the limitations that a brownfield presents in what kind of commerce or industry you could put on something that is classified technically as a brownfield, renewable projects – and let's use solar as an example – are excellent projects to park on a brownfield. And, as I said, we have quite a few of them. I would hope that the government would take the time to actually do a full-on inventory of brownfields across Alberta, locate them, add them up, and use that information, arm our municipalities with that.

Now, one of the things about this particular amendment – you know, Madam Chair, it's rather easy for a government in Edmonton to just sit there and insist that all of this renewable infrastructure be built. It's relatively easy to sit there with a map of Alberta and draw circles on it and say, "Well, we're going to do it here, and we're going to do it over there, and we're going to locate it in this municipality," and away we go.

Realistically, though, Madam Chair, because of the enormity of this – I don't know if members can even wrap their minds around the size, the scope of the massive amount of infrastructure we're talking about in building 5,000 megawatts of renewables. I think that I may have to produce some sort of a graphic on a map of Alberta just to show you how big a chunk of ground this is going to take to do. It would be helpful, I think. I see the Government House Leader agreeing with me. That would be a good thing to do, to give us a visual as to just the sheer scope of this, an enormous amount, and I will say that thousands of property owners across the province are going to be impacted by that scale, thousands of them. We're going to have a massive amount of people to deal with in this.

As I said, it's relatively easy for some people up in Edmonton to sit down with a map of Alberta and start plunking down renewable projects. We really need to have a fulsome consultation with the owners of land out in rural Alberta where these things are going to go. This is not something to take lightly. Far be it from me to point out that some of those rural landowners are still a little bit hot about Bill 6. They may not be in exactly the most co-operative frame of mind right now, so I would really strongly recommend that the government join with me in approving this particular amendment to save them some grief later. There is a significant amount of consultation with landowners out in rural Alberta that this government is going to have to do before we dare go down a road of putting 5,000 megawatts of renewables out there.

Now, smaller communities around Alberta are actually going to have to live with this. Some of the members from southern Alberta where we have massive wind farms already in existence have made it very clear to me that NIMBYism is a significant, growing phenomenon in southern Alberta. There are whole communities of people down there that are just fed up to here with wind turbines. I believe that as the government attempts to build more or approve projects for more, that NIMBYism isn't just going to go away. I am fully anticipating that it is going to grow, that it's going to be organized, and there's a significant amount of consultation that this government is going to need to do.

From our perspective, the Wildrose is on the side of Alberta's families. Those families out there in rural Alberta where all this infrastructure is going to get built deserve to be listened to, not just heard, and there is a difference. We have had a lot of rallies and petitions and phone calls into MLA offices. We've had letters to the editor all across this province regarding the carbon tax, how Albertans are so adamantly opposed to more taxation and specifically this carbon tax. Now, the government says that they're hearing, but giving heed is a different thing. What I'm recommending is that we need to have this amendment in place with this bill so that this government will not only hear what Albertan landowners have to say but heed it.

The wording proposed is that the minister will not approve a project "unless the Minister is satisfied that reasonable consultation... has [in fact] taken place with any affected municipalities and landowners." So both. It's important that it be both. The reason why both is also because we have some municipal governments that really want to have commercial development taking place in their municipalities for the purposes of revenue generation, tax revenue generation, but that doesn't mean that the people within the municipality are all onside with this. So it's important that consultation take place with not only the municipalities but the landowners, too. It's just basic common sense.

Now, it is true that the former government failed to address the concerns of Albertans by improving property rights in Alberta, but I will remind the NDP that this was also something the NDP campaigned on during the election, and right now you could probably use something that you did campaign on. There are an awful lot of bills before this House and bills that have been passed that you did not campaign on, so here's one you did campaign on. You did campaign on improving property rights. Many of us here in the Wildrose were hoping to see dramatic improvements made for landowners, to return to a very fair compensation process for landowners, and there's still a significant amount of legislation that remains that is an irritant to landowners; for example, Bill 2, the Responsible Energy Development Act; Bill 24, the Carbon Capture and Storage Statutes Amendment Act, 2010; most importantly, Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act.

Just to remind hon. members of what some of these acts mean, Bill 2 from 2012 takes away some of the important notification and appeal rights that landowners previously had. Just think about that for a moment, Madam Chair. Bill 2 actually removed important notification and appeal rights for landowners. What kind of a democracy is this where landowners are neither notified nor do they have recourse to the courts? If you will remember, the NDP fought against that. So here we have an amendment before the House that is starting to go down the path of remedying this. We are still waiting for this government to really get onto the property rights issues that the NDP campaigned for. We're being patient, kind of.

In Bill 24 we had the government ignore the common law ownership of pore spaces and simply declare that the government owns it all and has access to it to pump carbon dioxide, just an arbitrary ownership swap here. Bill 24 is another one of those bills that I am confident the NDP are well aware of and, hopefully, will take to task and repair.

4:10

Then we come to Bill 36, the Alberta Land Stewardship Act. It is still a gigantic concern because under this particular act it grants cabinet significant power for vast central planning with no adequate checks or balances. It gives cabinet the power to do so much without proper consultation with the people of Alberta. It comes back to that business I started with, of some folks sitting down in Edmonton with a map of Alberta and just drawing things out. Under Bill 36 the government has an enormous amount of power to do just that, Madam Chair, to sit down with a map and draw things out and let 'er rip.

This is wrong. This has to be remedied. Part of the remedy process, I believe, is this little friendly amendment right here. The minister has got to be satisfied at least that some reasonable consultation has taken place rather than just arbitrary decision-making being done. Then, frankly, the government has got to acknowledge...

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to take a moment to support the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake on his amendment here, asking for reasonable consultation with respect to the proposals that take place, and this reasonable consultation would be with municipalities and landowners. Now, I really believe that today we will have an opportunity – it doesn't happen that often – where the government and the opposition will be able to see eye to eye on something.

One of the reasons why is because I have several quotes from the Government House Leader in the past where he is so strongly in support of property rights. I'll read this for you here.

I want to assure the hon. member opposite that our party has always believed in due process, in proper notification, rights of appeal. All of the fundamental rights of property owners are things that we support, and we're going to make sure that in the fullness of time those continue to be protected.

Right now I believe we're in the fullness of time. It's taken, I guess, 18 months to get to the fullness of time, but here we are. We have this glorious opportunity here today.

He goes on to say:

We led the fight on behalf of the rights of property owners in this province against the draconian legislation of the previous government.

So here we are. We're looking at the draconian legislation of the previous government. He admits fully that some of these bills that were passed back then were draconian.

He goes on to say:

It was the NDP opposition that led the fight for a balanced and fair approach to property. What that means to me is that people have the right of appeal, they have the right of due process.

Here we are with an amendment that's talking all about due process, so I believe that we have an opportunity here, Madam Chair.

He goes on to say:

We do insist on making sure that people's rights to their property are protected so that fair compensation is provided and there is a due process for people, including a right of appeal. Those will be things that we will be considering in the future.

And here we are in the future considering them.

He goes on to say:

We're especially disappointed that the Electric Statutes Amendment Act, amended by a controversial Bill 50 in 2009, has not been addressed. By failing to address that bill, the government continues to prioritize the interests of industry, in this example electricity, over landowners and Alberta families.

It's very interesting that we're sitting here talking about that very thing, electricity, and we're talking about this controversial Bill 50, that had not been addressed and still hasn't been addressed. I would think that this is the perfect opportunity for the Government House Leader to jump up and support this amendment wholeheartedly.

He goes on to say:

With respect to the help that the opposition is offering in this particular regard, I think that it is not necessary, but we will make sure property rights are protected.

Well, unfortunately, I guess our help is necessary because this government has done nothing in its 18 months for property rights. In fact, they left it out of this bill, and we're helping by putting them in there.

Now, we could go on to one of these campaign brochures from the NDP.

Alberta's NDP stands for . . .

- Due process with respect to rights of landowners.

That's what we're here talking about, the amendment, due process.

- Power customers must not be required to pay for utility projects of for-profit companies.

I think that's probably what's happening here, that power customers are going to have to pay for utility projects of for-profit companies. That's a little unusual, but I guess things change when you become government.

NDP in opposition submitted two private members' motions to the Legislature, demanding action. One of them said,

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the Government to introduce legislation to protect the rights of landowners, ensuring property rights cannot be arbitrarily violated or extinguished without consultation and fair compensation.

Without consultation. All we're asking for in this amendment is consultation. It's the stuff that Alberta's NDP at one time at least believed in.

Now, it goes on to talk about three bad Tory bills. It talks about that the Government House Leader has been a leading voice opposing three laws that look after government friends instead of Albertans. "Bills 19, 36, and 50 are clear proof this is the most secretive government in Canada, a government that can't be trusted to look out for the rights of ordinary families and property owners."

Bills 19, 36, and 50. The most secretive government in Canada.

When we look at his comments on Bill 19, it says that this is one of the most ill-advised pieces of legislation this government has brought forward.

That's Bill 19. Well, I guess, with all due respect, the previous government actually rescinded that one.

He goes on to talk about Bill 36:

This is yet another example of the government's own trend toward centralizing power in the political leadership of the province.

What has the government done about Bill 36 since it's been in power?

An Hon. Member: Nothing.

Mr. Loewen: Yup, exactly that. Nothing.

It goes on to talk about Bill 50:

Landowners know this law is a disgrace, and they're furious.

Government interference with property rights shows a lack of respect.

We agree.

So that's why I believe that we will be agreeing on this amendment. I would think that the Government House Leader would have to support this and encourage all the members of his caucus to support this. It only makes sense after all these comments.

I could read more, but I think I've read enough to make the point that this government has had a year and a half to do something about these draconian laws – their words – and have done nothing. They said that they didn't need the help of the opposition, but obviously they do need some help because they've done nothing yet and keep bringing forward legislation that doesn't respect property rights.

It's a simple amendment. It's incredibly simple. Let me just read it here:

A proposal under section 5 shall not be approved by the Minister unless the Minister is satisfied . . .

I mean, that's being pretty generous. The minister is satisfied. There's nothing wrong with that.

. . . that reasonable consultation in respect of the proposal has taken place with any affected municipalities and landowners.

Reasonable consultation and that the minister is satisfied with that. I think that's pretty simple stuff, pretty straightforward.

I would expect that the Government House Leader would be encouraging all the NDP caucus to support this amendment, a very good amendment. There's nothing wrong with supporting reasonable consultation with municipalities and landowners, but we will see. We will see. We've been disappointed before.

Hopefully, this is one of those opportunities when we will join together in this House across the aisle and support property rights. I think it would be a pretty good gift here on the last day of this week that we sit here in this House to join together, support this amendment, and help in protecting landowners' rights and respecting municipalities. Very simple, straightforward.

I would encourage everybody in this House to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

4:20

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now recognize the Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you. I'd like to rise to speak in opposition to this amendment. This amendment demonstrates a remarkable failure to understand the full scheme of the regulatory and approvals process applicable to renewable energy projects and, also, how renewable energy projects are developed in co-operation with landowners who receive revenues from the projects.

Now, let's review a few of those. In the municipal district of Pincher Creek, for example, the Summerview wind farm phase 1 and 2 highlights – and these are the highlights. There's $12 million into the local economy during the construction – that's pretty good – plus $5.8 million annually. TransAlta's Summerview phase 1 and 2 wind projects, which have a combined capacity of 136.2 megawatts, provide enough electrical energy to power 55,000 Alberta homes and to offset more than 257,000 tonnes of CO<sub>2</sub> a year. Isn't that remarkable? They also provide the municipal district of Pincher Creek with $1.2 million in annual tax revenue. That says a lot. And it helps fund new community services and infrastructure and local landowners with over $500,000 a year in royalty payments. That's pretty good, I'd say.

They argue that there are issues with landowners and stuff. Let's look at what's already in place to protect landowners. Processes are already in place to ensure that renewable energy projects are also subject to public scrutiny under the Alberta Utilities Commission's strict regulatory processes and reviews of new generation projects. It does that. The AUC's processes include reviews with local communities, in consultation. Okay. This also . . . [interjections] A lot of arguing over there.

The Deputy Chair: I know we're in Committee of the Whole, but let's bring the tone down a little bit, please.

Mr. Rosendahl: This can include full hearing processes, where the AUC deems it necessary, to decide on the best public interest. As a result, the AUC can put conditions on the project to require certain mitigations of various concerns. So there is consultation. You can't say that it doesn't occur.

This is no different from the processes applicable to other forms of generation. In fact, recently approved wind farms have gone through full public hearings which resulted in certain conditions on the projects. Well, we have a process in place to consider and review these concerns.

An Hon. Member: Read the act.

Mr. Rosendahl: They're there.

An Hon. Member: Read the bill.

Mr. Rosendahl: We are reading the bill. Okay?

Let's look at the process a little bit. Prior to making an application, the proponent would be required to consult with landowners, municipalities, and other stakeholders to identify potential adverse impacts and work to mitigate them. There is consultation. Applications to the Alberta Utilities Commission have very detailed requirements. As set out in their rule 007, applications for power plants, substations . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt; however, given the time we will now rise and report progress on Bill 27, Renewable Electricity Act.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report? Please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed, please say no. So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, Madam Speaker, I'm sure we can find something very productive to do in the last four minutes, so I suggest that we adjourn as quickly as possible and return next week.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:27 p.m.]

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

* An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at 780.427.2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter number until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Season's greetings to you.

Let each of us reflect and pray, each in our own way. During this festive season many of the people of this province celebrate Christmas and the birth of the Christ child. The birth of the Prince of Peace in a stable because there was no room at the inn might serve as a symbol to all of us of our need to share with our brothers and sisters and celebrate our good fortune with our friends and family.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark. Feel free to sing in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 37 students from Afton school in the wonderful constituency of Edmonton-Meadowlark. The students are accompanied today by their teacher, Mr. Scott Slatter. I would ask them to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?
Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Robbie Kreger-Smith. Robbie is the Alberta Party's Edmonton regional organizer as well as being the constituency association president in Edmonton-Decore, and I can tell you that as the Edmonton regional organizer Robbie is a very busy guy these days. I'd ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 16 hard-working staff from the marvellous Department of Treasury Board and Finance. I can't thank these staff members enough for their dedication to their work and for making sure everything runs smoothly. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House 26 members representing the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at in Calgary and Edmonton. This year marks the 50th year of the establishment of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at in Canada. I was fortunate to have been part of that celebration when the head of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at world-wide visited Calgary last month. Alberta, especially Calgary, is home to several members of the Ahmadiyya Jama'at, and Baitun Nur, one of Canada's beautiful mosques, is also located in Calgary in my constituency. I would request the distinguished guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House as I call their names. There are 26 names, but I can just introduce the first five.

The Speaker: Thank you. The first five. We have a deal.

Mr. Sabir: Majeed Ahmad Tariq is the president of Ahmadiyya Jama'at Calgary, Shahrukh Abid is imam of the Baitun Nur mosque, Nasir Mahmood Butt is imam of the Edmonton Ahmadiyya mosque, Humayun Hafeez Ahmed is the regional president, and Sultan Ahmad Mahmood is the director of public relations, Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at in Calgary.

Thank you very much for being here. I guess they're already seated.

The Speaker: Thank you. Welcome.

The Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Samuel Williamson and his mother, Christine Williamson, who've been active in my constituency for quite awhile now. This holiday season Christine asked Samuel what he wanted for Christmas, and Samuel said: I want a pass to the government. He has some great ideas, starting with a guaranteed annual income of $6,000 per person, so I will have to consult with him a bit after this. In light of this young man's great desire for an all-access pass I would ask them to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Nice tie.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure to rise today and introduce three constituents from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Amanda Hawman and her children, Alessandra and Bennett, have joined us today. Amanda is a passionate advocate for women's issues and an advocate for those who have been abused, and she does a wonderful job in the constituency. She is a super-fantastic mom. She also has the misfortune of working for me.

The Speaker: Welcome, and good luck with that.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. I'll be brief. As the members across the way know, I'm famous for being brief. First, I do look up today and see that the family of the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is here today, specifically Ms Tanya Cooper, who is, of course, my good friend the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills' wife. I have to say to the Assembly that they did not travel with him last week, and he was absolutely miserable to live with up here. So I do want to say to Tanya: thank you for coming, and please do not send him up here anymore by himself. With that, I'd ask that she rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Paul and Brenda Chisholm from the wonderful community of High River. Paul and Brenda's daughter Haley has been fighting a severe kidney disease for seven years. Haley's doctor says that a rare drug could prevent further damage to her kidneys and may stop her from needing a transplant. The province is refusing to provide the needed medication to Haley, so her parents are here today to fight for her and do whatever they can to give their daughter the best chance at treatment. A little bit later my good friend the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat will ask some questions about that, but for now I would ask that Paul and Brenda rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today two constituency workers from my constituency, the most wonderful constituency of Edmonton-South West. Marta Szylo and Amelia Van Hoffen join us in the members' gallery today. They do the great work of ensuring that I get to the right place at the right time most of the time. On top of that, they are the front line for my constituents to have access to this government. I do want to also point out that Amelia is going to be leaving me very shortly as she is due with her second child on February 27. If they'd please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Adrienne Webb and her service dog, Jellybean. She uses this important dog to navigate life. She deals with PTSD as well as other issues. Her problem sometimes is getting access to places because the laws and regulations are somewhat restrictive if a dog doesn't come from an ADI-accredited kennel. Please join me in welcoming Adrienne and Jellybean.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests for introduction today? The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour along with the Member for Calgary-Greenway to introduce to you and to all members of the House Majeed Ahmad Tariq of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at in Calgary and Humayun Hafeez Ahmed, regional president of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at in Alberta. The Ahmadiyya Muslim Jama'at has been a very active member of the Alberta community, and their mantra is Love for All, Hatred for None. I would ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mathematics Education

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone who taught math in junior high, nothing angers me more than reducing the concept of math education to one extreme or the other. I do not know a single math teacher who thinks about it in terms of discovery math or back to basics nor one who teaches to only one of these two extremes. All people learn differently, and what works for one child does not work for every other child. Most teachers I know use a variety of methods to ensure each child in their class understands a concept, be it multiplication or algebra, to the best of their abilities.

It is clear to me, however, that a return to the methods of our youth is not the solution. How many people do you know who tell you, "Oh, I'm just not that good at math"? This is common in our society and accepted, but it isn't okay. How would you feel if someone told you, "Oh, I'm just not that good at reading"?

It was with much excitement, then, that I read the report of the Mathematics Curriculum Review Working Group. The members of the group are mostly postsecondary educators who teach mathematics and are ideally suited to identifying gaps in knowledge of students who are taking math in university. The members identified key themes: that students need to have a more positive attitude towards mathematics, to develop perseverance, and to learn from their mistakes. "If we want students to be comfortable with messiness, then we [must] assess with messiness as well. Multiple choice doesn't allow for this."

I'm pleased to see our government moving on recommendations from the report last week. One key issue that was identified is that teachers themselves do not always feel comfortable with math, particularly in the elementary grades. The bursary program introduced by the government will allow current and preservice teachers to access up to $2,000 to help cover tuition costs for postsecondary courses designed to strengthen their knowledge, skill, and confidence in teaching mathematics.

Math is important, Mr. Speaker, and we are moving forward to ensure that we are teaching it well so that in the future we won't have to hear about people who just don't like math.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the safety of our children in care should be of paramount concern for all of us. I wholeheartedly believe that we have no time to lose and that now must be the time for action.

Last week the Deputy Premier said that she believes all parties want to see the system fixed, so why does this NDP government need to do another panel when we already have a plethora of recommendations from previous studies? In a report of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate, which detailed the tragic death of Serenity, the advocate renewed its call for the ministry to provide cultural, relevant support services for kinship caregivers. Kinship care means that the children are placed with someone who has a special family connection to the child. According to past studies these caregivers often receive less training and fewer services. Mr. Speaker, how has this not been rectified to date?

The advocate noted that potential kinship caregivers are self-vetted to determine their own suitability. In this self-vetting process caseworkers conducting the home study simply review a take-home assessment completed by the potential caregivers. How does this lend itself to objective evaluation and doing our proper due diligence when, literally, children's lives are at stake? In the case of Serenity she was neglected and abused in the kinship care program. How can time and time again no one be held responsible when these deaths occur?

Mr. Speaker, it's been two years now, and, that we know of, no one has been charged or fired. Children who are the responsibility of the state deserve to have someone who is accountable for them. Workers and the minister must start being held responsible. The system has failed Serenity, and it is still failing other children. We need to get to the root of this problem. The government needs to make sure that this ministry's priority is protecting the safety and well-being of our children, not absolving anyone of blame: unions, legislators, RCMP, or Justice. We all need to do better.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Carbon Levy Rebates

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to questions from constituents I've met while door-knocking in one of Alberta's most diverse ridings economically and culturally, Edmonton-McClung, I rise today to speak about our government's carbon levy and the rebates that will apply to 60 per cent of Albertans. Putting a price on carbon is a most cost-effective way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions that cause climate change. Alberta's carbon levy will reward families, businesses, and communities that take steps to lower their emissions. The levy will also help to diversify our energy industry and create new jobs and is already improving access to new markets and better prices for our traditional energy products.

Full rebates will be provided to Albertans who earn $47,500 or less and couples and families who earn $95,000 or less. An additional 6 per cent of households will receive a partial rebate. The rebate is solely tied to income and not energy use, so eligible recipients will have a financial incentive to reduce household emissions. You do not need to apply. You'll automatically receive a rebate if you file a tax return and meet the income criteria. You're not required to answer questions over the phone or give access to your home to determine eligibility. For a family with two children the carbon levy's total estimated costs in 2017 are around $338, while the full rebate that will be provided to families earning $95,000 per year will be $360.

The carbon levy is the key tool that will pay for the transition to a more diversified economy. Over the next five years the levy is expected to raise $9.6 billion, all of which will be reinvested in the economy and rebated to Albertans. Mr. Speaker, the carbon levy is good for Albertans, good for our environment, and good for our resilient economic future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Mental Health Supports

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are compassionate people who believe that when our friends and relatives are experiencing a mental health issue, either a mild and short-term or a more serious mental illness, they need our help. Some of the ways we can support good mental health are contained in the Psychologists' Association of Alberta's position statements regarding essentials of mental health.

One of the most important points presented is that Albertans have a right to work in psychologically healthy workplaces. Working in an environment in which people are not bullied or harassed but are valued and treated in a respectful manner is essential in enabling people to work productively and effectively.

As well, mental and behavioural health publicly funded services should be on par with funding for physical health publicly funded services. The stigma against psychological illness often prevents people from accessing help, leading people to suffer longer than needed. All Albertans, regardless of income, should have access to psychological services. To address both these issues, the services of psychologists for the assessment and treatment of mental health problems and disorders require continued and improved supports.

Finally, as a former school psychologist I've heard from students that all Albertan students should have timely access to school counsellors who are able to support students in dealing with their concerns. School counsellors are able to assist students and link students to psychology services when needed. Many schools no longer have school counsellors on a regular basis, and some students have noted that there are few mental health resources available for youth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Investigation of Death of Child in Kinship Care

Mr. Jean: The NDP know that our children-in-care system is broken, but they have dropped this file altogether. The result is that Albertans are still waiting for a girl who was beaten and starved to death to receive justice. For years we've seen panels, committees, reports, inquiries, and recommendations sit on the shelf gathering dust, and now the minister in charge failed to give the RCMP critical documents on time and when asked. Premier, how can Albertans trust this government to fix this file when the minister who's been responsible for the last 19 months has failed so badly?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. They can trust this minister and this government because this minister and this government are committed to making progress on this very, very difficult file. Quite honestly, people who care about this issue know that it is complex and long-standing. The legacy of residential schools, the legacy of the '60s scoop, the legacy of firing social workers in the '90s, the legacy of fracturing our service delivery, the legacy of cutting funding to the OCYA: all these things contributed to the systemic problems that those providing services face. We are committed to working on them diligently.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The incompetence, secrecy, and negligence on Serenity's file is stunning. It's beyond belief that the death of a child has taken over two years to investigate. The Child and Youth Advocate got requests for information blocked at every single turn. I've asked this before, and I'm going to ask it again, Premier. Where was the report from the medical examiner's office, where was the report from the Justice department, where was the report from Human Services, and why did it take so long to complete an autopsy on this poor little girl?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed at great length, and as we know, there are complexities to this file and complexities, more importantly, to this tragedy and to the whole challenge that this matter presents us as legislators in Alberta. Our government has begun to take action; our minister has begun to take action. We brought in a $340 million child tax credit to reduce poverty, the very thing that threatens families at risk. We brought in additional funding to FCSS to help agencies that work with these families who are at risk. We've increased funding for women's shelters to help . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: The Chief Medical Examiner took a full two years to complete Serenity's autopsy. Two years, Mr. Speaker. If a child death review committee had been established to review the deaths of all children in Alberta, as recommended by the 2014 implementation oversight committee, this may have actually been prevented. The chair of that committee, Tim Richter, says that this should have been a top priority of this NDP government. To the Premier: why have you allowed your minister to ignore this for 19 months, and when will you actually make the changes recommended by the last review committee over two years ago?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated, we are establishing a panel with the very view to making changes to the child death review process in time for the next legislative session in the spring, so that is action. But – you know what? – not every recommendation is created equally, and it is important for us to look at these recommendations clearly to determine which are going to work best. Not every recommendation that was made in the 2014 report is one that we think is helpful, but we do know that we need to make changes. We will be working with members opposite to bring those changes forward in the spring.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Rare Diseases

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Haley Chisholm is a vibrant teenager who has been living with a very rare kidney disease for seven years. Today I met with the Chisholm family, and I thank the Health minister for doing the same. The Chisholms are doing everything they can to secure funding for Soliris, a drug that has shown promise in treating Haley's rare disease. Her own specialist physician has said that this drug could help Haley's rare disease, but Alberta Health disagrees. Will the minister please review this file, the input of the specialist physicians, and available evidence to ensure that this drug is covered?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question as well as to Haley's family for their ongoing strength and advocacy on behalf of their daughter. I commend them, and I would probably do exactly what they're doing if I were in their shoes. As a politician I'm certainly not in the best position to be able to make determinations about a course of care. That's why we entrust physicians to bring forward recommendations to the physician panel that determines exceptional drug coverage, and that's exactly what's to happen in this case. We'll continue to monitor the science and the evidence, but I trust doctors to make the best decisions to support patient care.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, time is very sensitive for Haley. She currently takes 18 pills per day to slow the advance of this disease, but the next step will be an experimental plasma-substitution therapy requiring constant appointments while she tries to complete her studies and live her life. Beyond that, she could require a kidney transplant. We only request short-term coverage to see if her disease responds to the drug. Can the minister assure us today and the Chisholms that she will review this file and provide the information to them as soon as possible?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I am absolutely committed to making sure that the Chisholm family maintains contact with our office if we can be of support in that process. At the end of the day, politicians are certainly not in the best position to make determinations about care, and that's why we've created these systems, to make sure that they continue to move forward. Our office is happy to help connect the Chisholms' doctor, to provide the very best information and up-to-date information about ways that he might be able to continue to move forward in his advocacy and the parents as well. At the end of the day, we do have to trust that the health professionals make health determinations.

Mr. Barnes: We have been told that Alberta Health cannot approve funding this drug for an off-label use because there is a lack of clinical trial evidence. However, given the extreme rarity of her disease it is no wonder that full clinical trials to test this particular drug have not and cannot be done. The evidence that does exist is limited but very promising. If the short-term exceptional drug therapy program cannot handle this truly unique case, will the minister commit to reforming an unresponsive process?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I want to commend the family for their ongoing work in supporting the very best possible health outcomes for their daughter. I'm proud of the fact that I was able to meet with them and share the frustrations that they shared around some of the concerns with regard to the drug manufacturer and some of the processes there. Certainly, in terms of the short-term exceptional drug therapy program, I'm proud to rely on the expertise of physicians. None of us on the floor is in a better position than the physicians on this panel to make the best determinations. Health Canada does determine what's on-label and not on-label. The trials continue to move forward, but I've been informed that there is an adult trial under way that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Third main question.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been another record-breaking week for Alberta under the NDP's economic mismanagement. Sales of Crown drilling rights in Alberta have fallen to the lowest level in 39 years. Here are some other records that the NDP has broken this year: highest unemployment rate in two decades, record deficit, record debt, piles of credit downgrades, and record job losses. Congratulations. How many more records does Alberta have to break before this Premier realizes that this carbon tax she's trying to implement will just make things so much worse for Alberta families?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the record that we will and indeed have broken is the record of the number of pipelines approved here in Alberta, and we are very proud of that. We are working to build the economy. We are not tearing down the economy. We're not criticizing Albertans. We're working with them to build our economy on every layer. Instead of doom and gloom, we are looking forward to improvements, and we're already seeing them.

Mr. Jean: Well, two-thirds of Albertans who do not want a carbon tax were relieved to see a Premier in Ottawa last week tell Ottawa that their province will never sign on to a carbon tax. Unfortunately, that Premier was from Saskatchewan and not Alberta. Alberta's Premier was busy championing a $50-per-tonne carbon tax for Albertans that will pillage charities, hurt businesses, and take $2,500 every single year out of the pockets of Alberta families. Why was the Premier championing Ottawa's carbon tax instead of joining the millions of Albertans who don't want this carbon tax from the NDP?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, if we look at the thousand people at the rally yesterday and then subtract the thirty grandmothers who were thrown out, that does not amount to a million people.

But to be clear, Mr. Speaker, the Saskatchewan Premier fought for the right to have a made-in-Ottawa plan imposed in Saskatchewan. He fought for a right to make political points, and that is all. What we fought for was to have a made-in-Alberta plan, working with industry, moving forward with Albertan business because that's the way we build a progressive, effective . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Over 100,000 Albertans have lost their jobs in the last year and a half, and that's her answer?

The Premier can't ignore the millions of Albertans upset by this carbon tax. Albertans are hurting. They're anxious and frustrated that every level of government seems more concerned about how to tax them than getting Albertans back to work. Seeing as the Premier gave the thumbs-up to Ottawa's carbon plan, will she release her government's economic impact study, how much it's going to cost Alberta's families, how much indirect costs will go up, and how much money it will take out of our economy?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the members opposite are capable of reading in the newspaper the number of reports that have been produced which talk about how many economists believe that pricing carbon is actually the way forward, because there are a lot of them. In addition, we know that the pipeline that just got approved – which, by the way, happened because of our climate leadership plan, the very plan these folks would want to walk away from – will create 22,000 construction jobs. It will add at the very minimum $3 per barrel. This is going to grow Alberta's economy, and we are proud to have made that happen. [interjections]

The Speaker: I'm not sure if you've shared season's greetings with each other or not today.

The leader of the third party.

Child Death Review Ministerial Panel

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the veil of secrecy over the ministerial panel promised for Serenity's death is wrong. The Deputy Premier patting your government on the back for a public-facing piece, which is a final report, while keeping everything else behind closed doors is pitiful. All panel deliberations except necessary confidential information must occur in public. To the Premier. Legislative committees regularly move in camera when the need arises, but otherwise they do their work in public. Will you please direct this panel to follow the same procedure?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, when the member opposite first asked us to consider this, he began it by premising it with reference to the work that had been done by the former Minister of Human Services Mr. Bhullar. As we know, the work that he did and the panel that he created was not an all-party committee. It was a party that consisted primarily of experts, and it was a panel to which opposition members were invited to come to observe. What we are proposing instead gives tremendous opportunity for engagement of members opposite. It will allow for excessive public opportunity, high levels of transparency, but it will also not provide a platform for politicians . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Well, the Premier promised an all-party committee in public, and she's broken that so far. The terms of reference for the ministerial panel are narrowly focused on the death review process in the child intervention system. While those issues are critical, the lack of protection and follow-up for Serenity runs into an abysmal depth. It includes looking at the ME's office, the RCMP, Human Services, and the minister's office itself. To the Premier. Serenity's case points to a failure of multiple agencies, offices, and public employees. Under the Public Inquiries Act you can order a public inquiry. Will you do so, please?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member opposite ought to read the terms of reference more carefully. In fact, it is within those terms of reference that the issue of the death review process will be addressed. It will address all the actions of all the agencies that the member opposite just spoke of. That's the way to go forward. That's the way to get to a solution quickly. That's the way to get to a point where next spring we bring in legislation to remove a lot of the barriers and to streamline this process and to ensure that there is a much higher level of transparency in terms of how these investigations proceed.

Mr. McIver: The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister could throw a blanket over all that information if he wants to under the terms of reference. Serenity's abuse and subsequent death suggest a shocking lack of concern for the welfare of our indigenous children. All of Alberta has seen in recent weeks the Minister of Human Services fail to use the authority of his office to take control of a terrible situation. They no longer have faith in him. Premier, when you were in opposition, you called for resignations based on what you saw as a lack of ministerial accountability. This case is clear cut. Will you replace your two ministers?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our minister has worked diligently – diligently – on supporting the work of his ministry and supporting child intervention. You know what was the first thing he did when he became minister? He looked at what had been proposed under that member opposite's proposed budget. You know what it was? It was $600 million a year coming from child protection; $600 million per year was proposed to be taken out of child intervention by those folks over there. This minister over here said no. He restored that funding. He brought in a $37 million increase because he is committed to making this . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Protection of Children in Care

Mr. Clark: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly two years after Serenity's death major problems persist in Alberta's child welfare system. These are not new problems. Report after report after report have identified the issues. A committee chaired by Tim Richter was established to implement past recommendations, but this work has been ignored by the minister. It's clear we don't need another panel. We need action. To the Minister of Human Services. We all know what's wrong; we all know the answers. How can you justify yet another repetitive panel?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The stories of Serenity and other children are tragic and can't help but make you recommit to take action. That is why we are taking action. As we move forward with the committee, we will look at the work that has been done previously. In the short term, for spring session, we will bring in a process that will look over the death review, which was ignored by the previous government. We will bring that legislation next spring. Thank you.

Mr. Clark: This is on you, Mr. Minister. I expect you to have implemented the damn changes. That's what's needed here, Mr. Speaker. Some of the recommendations made by the implementation committee include benchmarking outcomes for children in care, creating a joint child death review panel, conducting and releasing internal reports into all child deaths. These are just a few of the many clear, actionable recommendations you have had on your desk for more than 18 months. Again to the Minister of Human Services. You've been in charge for a year and a half. Why haven't you implemented a single one of Tim Richter's recommendations? [interjections]

The Speaker: I want to remind all of the House. You've been very good at it, but, again, particularly on sensitive topics like this, please direct your comments through the chair.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The death of Serenity represents the systemic issues that have been there for decades, and there is no simple solution. There is the legacy of residential schools, there is the legacy of '60s scoop, there is a legacy of laying off social workers, there is a legacy of fractured systems . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order is noted.

Minister, your comments through the chair. Are you finished your comments?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this minister is responsible for two catastrophic failures. First, his inaction means that whoever murdered Serenity is walking free today, and second, we have no assurance that other Serenities aren't at risk in the system right now. I do lay blame, and I have no faith in this minister. The Richter report says that, quote: at the end of the day no amount of external review, oversight, policy, or process can replace leadership. To the Premier: will you immediately replace this minister with someone willing and able to fix the system?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I have said before, not all recommendations are created equal. There were a number of elements of that previous report which, quite frankly, will not help us move forward in terms of dealing with the problems that were reflected in the case of Serenity. For instance, the idea of having the OCME investigate every death of every child in Alberta will result in the critical issues that impact children in care being lost. It would result in us failing to make the kinds of focused changes that we need to move on. That is why we are reviewing this. We will move forward . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Energy Industry Update

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past few weeks there have been calls for optimism in Alberta's oil patch; however, I'm still hearing from my constituents in Calgary-Glenmore that they're concerned about jobs. They still can't find work and are having a hard time paying their bills. To the Minister of Energy: what will the production cuts from OPEC mean for working families here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We certainly are cautiously optimistic about the OPEC production cuts. More balance between supply and demand is going to lead to oil price increases, and we will continue to monitor that situation. Higher oil prices will make it easier for industry to make those investment decisions and to create jobs. It will also mean more revenue for Alberta to put towards the social programs that our families rely on. There is still work to be done, and that's why we're moving into diversifying our economy with our petrochemical industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that OPEC cuts may be good news but many oil and gas projects are still on the shelf, to the same minister: when will companies here in Alberta start announcing capital investments?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the question. Certainly, many companies are showing cautious optimism. Last week Cenovus did announce that it would proceed with the expansion of their Christina Lake oil sands project. Recently CNRL announced it would resume its Kirby North oil sands project, and to date we have over 140 wells that are being drilled on the new modern royalty framework.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that so many Albertans are struggling due to the drop in oil price, again to the same minister: when will families in Alberta start to see real benefits from the approval of Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there's been lots of good news lately with two pipelines. The CEO of Kinder Morgan expects that shovels will be in the ground within the year in 2017. Trans Mountain has announced also that there will be 22,000 new construction jobs. That means that once it's completed, there'll be at least $3 a barrel more to Albertans, and without this additional pipeline access, the companies would be losing between $8 billion to $13 billion annually in revenue by 2022. Without additional pipelines we would lose $1 billion annually in revenue to the government.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Airdrie.

Protection of Children in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard of yet another review panel into the current state of our children in care. Multiple reviews have been done on this issue, hundreds of recommendations authored, countless reports, several official panels and committees, and reviews of reviews of reviews. Albertans are sick of hearing of tragic and avoidable stories like Serenity's, and they want action. To the minister: what are you doing in the meantime to take action on the hundreds of already existing recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. What we are doing: we have put forward an action plan of which we will see the changes in the immediate future.

At the same time we have taken steps to address the root causes. We are dealing here with historical injustices, generational trauma, residential schools, the '60s scoop, and the firing of social workers in the '90s. That's why we are making important investments, like investing $340 million so that families can bear the costs of raising the child. We have invested $25 million in FCSS so preventative measures can be put . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

My apologies to the hon. member. I called you Calgary-Airdrie. I meant to say Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Given that this panel was announced last week and was flaunted as the action being taken and given that everyone in this Assembly granted an emergency debate because the safety of the children in government care must be addressed now and given that the minister cannot even be bothered to post the details of this panel on the government website, is the Premier still proud of this minister? [interjections]

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for highlighting the important work that we're doing as we move forward . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Quiet, please. [interjection] Hon. member, quiet, please.

The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite said that they wanted to be a part of the solution, and we certainly take them at their word when they say that. That's why we've moved forward with a ministerial panel, and we look forward to seeing the work that they do. Absolutely, we have the full confidence in our minister, and we continue to have his back because he has the backs of children.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP's only answer to children dying in care is a minister-run panel and given that this leads to serious questions of trust, that the minister will ignore valid ideas in favour of an NDP world view, and given that this side has called for a fully independent committee of the Legislature, will someone please tell me why the government wants to put the fox in charge of the henhouse?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said repeatedly, we are committed to establishing a committee that involves people – a panel that involves experts on the matter so that we can come up with the best solutions, the best distillation of the many recommendations that have proceeded over the last many years, and bring it forward in an effective way in time for this spring. We have invited members opposite to be part of that committee. We are not going to create a platform on which they can score political points, like they are trying to do today, rather than trying . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. Thank you. [interjections] Could we have a little order, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an all-party panel has been established to fix Alberta's child intervention system and given that the Minister of Human Services said in question period last week that if the panel members "care about these issues, which I believe they do, they will work with me to find solutions," to the hon. Premier. Albertans care about all of the Serenities out there. How are you going to protect them in the interim while this panel does its work?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'd like to first take this opportunity to correct a piece of information I gave in answer to a different question when I was talking about the proposed budget cuts of the last government. It was roughly a $30 million cut to a $600 million child intervention budget, one that was expected to happen over a couple of years, that was reversed and, in fact, increased. I needed to correct that because I was incorrect previously.

As I've said before, the minister and our government are doing a number of things to try to work to prevent the risks that are presented to children at risk throughout our province every day. One of the key issues, Mr. Speaker, is poverty. We have worked quickly to ameliorate that, and we will continue . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Given that I have a proposal for Serenity's law, which amends the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act to make it the lawful responsibility of adults to notify police of a child who needs intervention – and I will table this today – and given that this is my private member's bill but that because it is at least a year away, I recommend that we act on it now, to the Premier. More Serenities are being victimized as I speak. Are you willing to ask for unanimous consent of this House to stay one more day to pass legislation that can start saving children's lives immediately?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the member's effort to put forward a substantive recommendation like that. Indeed, that's exactly the kind of thing that I anticipate having us work on with the panel to bring forward legislation in the spring because that's exactly the kind of practical solution that could help close some of the gaps and loopholes that we know exist. I look forward to working with him should he be the nominee from his caucus on the panel. It's exactly the kind of idea that we need to move forward on, and I thank him for it.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is so simple. We could do it today.

Given that last Thursday the Deputy Premier made the following statement in QP, "All of our children deserve an opportunity to have the very best life, and I challenge everyone to help us do that" – Mr. Speaker, I took that challenge – and given that I cannot go home for Christmas knowing that more Serenities are out there being victimized while we wait for a panel to start its work, to the Premier: please put the politics aside for the love of Alberta's children. Do not allow this House to recess before Serenity's law is passed.

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, it is really kind of rich to hear the member opposite talk about putting the politics aside. I think it is a good idea, but for the member to come in today 10 minutes or 20 minutes before the House begins with a request for somebody else to draft a bill that is not yet drafted and to then suggest that we should somehow change the rules to run it through today in one go when it's not ready and it's out of order, after 44 years of failing to address it in the past – I have committed to having these kinds of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. Thank you.

Minister of Human Services

Mr. Loewen: In 2007 there were reports of foster children kept in unsafe or inappropriate foster homes because there was nowhere else to place them and that alleged sexual abuse victims were left in homes with their alleged attackers. That's horrible, but unfortunately it sounds familiar. It sounds familiar to the failure of this government with Serenity. I'm going to ask the Minister of Human Services the same thing our present Premier asked the minister in 2008. "You clearly have no idea what's going on inside your ministry. You failed your staff. You failed Albertans. You failed these children. Why won't you resign?"

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I have stated that we have failed these children for decades. Folks over there are the only ones who think it's time to step down. I think it's time to step up. That's why I came with an action plan, and we will move forward with that.

Mr. Loewen: Given that at that time the Premier said, quote, I think the minister has to take responsibility for not fully keeping the advocate accountable, for keeping her ministry accountable, and for keeping the children of Alberta who are in the government's care safe, end quote, and given that the Premier asked at that time, "So Albertans have no reason to have any faith in your assurances. You've lost all credibility. Why won't you resign?" to the Premier: what message does this send to Albertans if this minister is not held accountable?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the minister has been working diligently since taking over this file in May 2015. There have been a number of issues that he has had to deal with, and he has done them well. In addition, he has moved forward on a multiplicity of initiatives that are helping children in care. He has moved forward on funding women's shelters, absolutely fundamental to ensuring that kids are kept more safe. He has increased funding to FCSS. He has moved forward on child poverty funding. He has . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Loewen: Say one thing; do another.

Given that at the time the Alberta NDP leader, who is now serving as the Government House Leader, said, quote, it is our view that she should resign immediately from her position as children's minister and that if she doesn't resign immediately, the Premier should fire her, end quote, and given that these questions are as pertinent now as they were when the Government House Leader asked them, to the Premier: what makes this situation any different?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into a detailed comparison of the three situations, but I would commend a detailed comparison of the three situations to anyone who is interested in this matter because I will tell you that they are not remotely comparable. This minister has worked to protect children since he was first elected. He will continue to do so. We will bring in legislation in the spring to deal with the matter of child death reviews. We will continue to work on how to improve the system overall and to prevent these things in the future, and we will . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier. Thank you.

Government Advertising

Mr. Fildebrandt: In 2014 the Premier characterized ad spending of the Redford government as pre-election campaigning. She labelled Redford's 214 communications staff as a waste of taxpayers' money. In the same year the now Government House Leader on multiple occasions accused Premier Redford of excessively spending taxpayers' dollars to, quote, control the message. He passionately denounced wasting taxpayers' money on advertising the policies of the party in power. Does the Premier still agree with herself?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I guess I could ask the same question of the member opposite because – you know what? – while his leader was in the federal government, over 10 years they spent $750 million on advertising. [interjections] In one year they spent $115 million on advertising for a political plan. It's jaw dropping how much money the member opposite's government spent on political advertising, yet we spent $4 million. I assume that their real concern is that we're not spending enough. [interjections]

The Speaker: Folks. Calm it down, folks, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The inability of the Premier to answer a question is jaw dropping, Mr. Speaker.

Given, Mr. Speaker, that the most corrupt Premier in the modern history of Alberta spent $4 million over three years on self-serving partisan propaganda while the new boss is just like the old boss, actually nearly three times worse than the old boss – to date the NDP have spent $10.5 million in half the time – and given that Albertans were disgusted by this waste of money when Redford did it and they're disgusted now, will the government do the right thing and put an end to this taxpayer-funded partisan propaganda?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of bosses, the member opposite's boss was part of a government that in one year spent $113 million on political advertising. I believe that's – ah, let's see – 30 times more than we've spent. Thankfully, we will not be following their example.

Mr. Fildebrandt: More non answers from the Premier.

Mr. Speaker, the overwhelming majority of Albertans oppose the carbon tax. The NDP didn't dare put it before Albertans in the last election because they knew that they would lose. The NDP don't have the guts to put it before Albertans now in a referendum because they know that Albertans will reject it. The writing is on the wall. The Premier told Albertans that the carbon tax would help them make better choices, and in 2019 I'm sure they will. Is the Premier so incapable of convincing Albertans to support her carbon tax that the only option is to outspend Alison Redford on partisan political propaganda?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite's boss was part of a government that spent $5 million on the War of 1812. Five million dollars advertising the War of 1812. What our advertising does is that it informs Albertans about the single biggest public policy change that's been made in this province in years. It will tell them about the rebates that over two-thirds of Albertans will be receiving soon, it will tell them about the energy efficiency grants that they'll be eligible for, and it will tell them about how the plan helped to get them a pipeline.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Dental Profession Oversight Amber Athwal

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been two weeks since the Alberta Dental Association and College referred Amber Athwal's case to a hearing tribunal. The ADAC is blocking her family from knowing what happened to their daughter. Other parents are concerned about the safety of dental services for their children. Dentists have told me that they're concerned that a hearing tribunal will take years to complete. Dentists and patients are still waiting for decisions about complaints filed in 2012 or earlier. To the minister: what will this government do to ensure that the Athwals and all Albertans can learn from this tragedy to prevent similar future incidents?
