Communicating your choice is critical. It means telling your family and caregivers what quality of life means to you. I encourage all Albertans, starting with each and every member of this House, to have these conversations while you're still fit and healthy. This will help your family and your care providers know what your goals are when the time comes, whether that's aggressive medical intervention to prolong life or comfort care that allows natural death to occur.

These conversations can be challenging, so Alberta Health Services has developed a tool kit to help. By visiting conversationsmatter.ca, you can learn about advanced care planning, which helps you think about, talk about, and document wishes for health care in the event that you become incapable of communicating your wishes. You may never need your advanced care plan, but if you do, you'll be glad it's there and you'll be glad that you've had these conversations to make sure that your voice is heard.

Death is a natural part of life, and part of living a good life is having a good death. Palliative care and advanced care planning can ensure that you and your loved ones' choices are respected. Advanced care planning truly is a gift to your family.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

100% Skate Club

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 1 the city of Calgary opened two skateboard parks, including one at 64th Avenue and Centre Street NW, in Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill. The park is pretty popular. I've seen a lot of young men taking advantage of the park, and that made me stop and think: where are the women? I was fortunate to get connected with an organization called 100% Skate Club, a skateboarding club for girls and women that was established by Erica Jacobs, who was a semiprofessional snowboarder and competed nationally as a skateboarder. She started the club to encourage people to look at skateboarding differently and encourage girls to take it up.

The group started with a Facebook page just under a year ago and now has 45 members, girls and women from ages four to 53. Membership is free and promotes the idea that each member is a leader.

Skateboarding is relatively inexpensive as a sport, and it's available to virtually anyone. It promotes self-expression through healthy physical activity. Some of the projects that 100% Skate Club is spearheading right now are lessons for the Calgary Police Service as well as skateboarding lessons for women, which I'm seriously considering if I can find enough bubble wrap.

There is a vibrant skateboarding community in Calgary, including the Calgary Association of Skateboarding Enthusiasts, called CASE, who recently held a fundraiser to further their commitment to the growth of skateboarding in Calgary through consultation on future skateboard projects and providing opportunities to encourage skill development. Skateboarding is a thriving sport, and it's something that almost anyone can participate in.

I'm very happy to have 100% Skate Club and their commitment to encouraging girls and women to take up the sport and providing a community where we can feel safe and supported in trying it out. The club will be holding their season kickoff on March 30 at millennium skateboard park in Calgary at 6:30 p.m. I'd like to encourage all girls and women interested in skateboarding to come out.

Thank you, and Erin go bragh.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two requests. First of all, I would request unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 7(7) to continue the daily Routine past 3 o'clock. Secondly, I would request unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests directly following the end of the Routine.

Two Sergeants Brewing

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on St. Patrick's Day to talk about the wonder of craft beer. Budget 2015 saw the fulfillment of our government's commitment to small breweries who choose Alberta to brew their labours of love. Our government removed a barrier that previously capped production at 19,999 hectolitres because brewing any more, the tax per litre would more than double. This made it hard to grow. The new tax formula for breweries adjusted the per litre tax incrementally as production rises, making craft brewing more profitable at higher volume.

This brings me to a proud story that comes from Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta. In August 2014 Kevin Moore, a veteran of the Canadian military, and Keith Edwards, a veteran of the British Royal Airforce, sat in the garage and spoke of how they wished they had a real pub to go to. Four months later they brewed their first brew. With undivided support from their wives, Yolanda and Lynne, Two Sergeants Brewing opened last month, and they began brewing on their own premises last week.

It's not a place for dinner though they serve sausage on a bun and soft pretzels. It is a place to go with your friends and enjoy an Alberta craft brew. Whether it is the Bangalore Torpedo IPA, my favourite, ringing in at 7.4 per cent with citrus and pine bitterness; or their Passion'D Ale, a lightly hopped wheat ale with coriander and orange rind; or a brew with a cause, the Patrolman's ESB, an easy, classic bitter with hints of coffee and caramel, brewed in memory of fallen Edmonton Police Service Constable Daniel Woodall, with part of the proceeds going to the Woodall family fund.

I visit once a month with my Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville EDA with our big-tent policy. Their staff are not only world-class, but they treat us like long-lost friends. And we haven't been kicked out yet. Kevin lobbied me for an Alberta flag, that now proudly hangs in their establishment, and also hanging on the wall is a clock that is stopped at 5. I encourage all members of the House who enjoy a good adult beverage to visit Two Sergeants Brewing, where it is always 5 o'clock.

Salud, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Seven point four per cent.

Government Policies

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly a year has passed since the provincial election, and Albertans are still struggling to understand exactly who or what this government is. They say that they're pro pipeline, pro energy, and pro Alberta. But the Member for Calgary-East used to call Alberta oil dirty oil, the environment minister wrote the foreword to a book called An Action a Day Keeps Global Capitalism Away, the Premier appointed a Soviet-era communist to serve as her deputy chief of staff, and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is a huge admirer of some of the worst leftist dictators.

This member recently said in the House: "I come from Latin America, where . . . we've had many experiments in democratic socialism." "I am and always will be a proud democratic socialist." So I ask: what exactly are these Latin American experiments in democratic socialism the member is proud of? Would they include the rule of Hugo Chávez, whose quasi-dictatorship rewrote the Venezuelan Constitution to allow him to stay on as President, whose policies drove Venezuela's economy into the ground and turned a once prosperous country into one that continually faces shortages of everything, especially freedom?

Did the Soviet-backed, communist Castro regime make that list, I wonder, a regime that repressed an entire nation, murdering and imprisoning dissidents, religious leaders, and minorities? You'll find the image of Che Guevara, Castro's most vicious lieutenant, on leftist T-shirts and even our Premier's watch.

We all know that members opposite need a lesson in economics, but apparently they need a lesson in history, too, unfortunately for this province. Wildrose is here to stand up for prosperity, freedom, and democracy, and we will proudly stand against this government's radical agenda each and every time it bubbles to the surface.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Can I remind each of you that you need to have respect for the entire House and be cautious about statements that might inflame the debate.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate was just a little inflamed. I was very distracted.

As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I am pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on 2015 activities from January to March 2015, during the 28th Legislature.

I'm also pleased to table five copies of the committee's report on 2015 activities from June to December 2015, during the 29th Legislature.

These reports will be posted to external committee websites. Copies are also available through the committee offices.

Thank you.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Carson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, in these difficult economic times our government is committed to protecting Albertans from undue and unanticipated costs. As vehicles remain an important aspect of Albertan lives, it is my commitment to ensure everyone is protected against unforeseen financial stress. Bill 203 will establish guidelines that increase transparency, accountability, and peace of mind for both consumers and business owners.

I look forward to discussions and deliberation with my colleagues in the House as well as the broader community. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance and President of the Treasury Board I have three tablings today. The first one is the required number of copies of a document entitled Alberta Growth Mandate. This document explains the mandate that was referenced in Budget 2015; namely, that up to 3 per cent of the heritage fund be allocated for investment in growth-oriented, Alberta-based companies. As the document shows, the Alberta growth mandate does not contradict the heritage fund's legislative mandate. As this document makes clear, it will be professionals with expertise in business development and investment, not politicians, who will make these decisions in the best interests of Albertans.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance the required number of copies of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund third-quarter report. This report shows clearly the outcomes and success that the Alberta growth mandate has already achieved. Notably, AIMCo is implementing the Alberta growth mandate, having recently made a substantial investment in TransAlta Renewables.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, also on behalf of the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board, I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of the Automobile Insurance Rate Board's 2015 annual report for the year ended December 31, 2015. The report was prepared under the board's direction in accordance with section 601(1) of the Insurance Act and must be tabled in accordance with section 601(2) of the act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a statement released yesterday from TransAlta responding to our government making good on its commitment by announcing a coal facilitator. TransAlta stated:

The appointment of Terry Boston, a credible and collaborative industry leader, is a major step forward in the renewables transition and will help to remove uncertainty in both the electricity sector and Alberta's broader economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of Statistics Canada Table 051-0017, which I referenced earlier today in debate on Bill 3, interprovincial migrants to and from Alberta showing that Alberta's interprovincial migration has in fact dropped as of the fourth quarter 2015.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise today to table five copies of the page biographies for the Second Session of the 29th Legislature, spring 2016. I know I speak for all of the House when I say that we very much appreciate these young people's learning in support to this Assembly.

Statement by the Speaker

Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day Program

The Speaker: Fellow Members of the Legislative Assembly, as you know, the Legislative Assembly is hosting Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program, which will be held on May 1 to 3, 2016, at the Alberta Legislature. There is only one week left to apply for the program. This is an opportunity for high school students from all corners of this province, all of your constituencies, to learn about what we do here. Please remind your high schools that this three-day program is fully supported by your Legislative Assembly Office, so there's no cost to the students whatsoever. Transportation and accommodation details will be arranged by the visitor services office. The application form is available on the Assembly website. I urge you to support the MLA for a Day program by promoting students' participation from your constituencies and also through your personal involvement in this program. Need I say that this is an opportunity where we can allow the youth of our province to have first-hand experience at the practice of democracy.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: There are some guests that we missed before. I would first of all recognize the Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have in the public gallery 58 visitors with the Alberta Girls' Parliament. These young ladies have enjoyed the day today. They've met with the Premier and various other ministers and with the Speaker and myself earlier. We also enjoyed during this morning's session, when we were doing a standing vote, their lovely singing outside. So thank you for entertaining us. They are with their teachers and group leaders: Shannen Hoffman, Deanna Michaels, Heather Robertson, Veronica Hoffman, Kathleen Robertson, Amanda Omelusik, Tracey Rogers, Laurie Robertson, and Imogen Pohl. Can we have the young ladies rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, do you have some introductions you'd like to make?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly some members of my family and friends who are here today to hear my maiden speech. They're seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'll ask them to rise as I say their names: my mom, Dorothy Sigurdson; my eldest son, Maxwell Sigurdson-Scott; Carl Schouten, my middle son; my father, Barney Sigurdson, who is 86 years young; and my youngest son, Wade, is sick today, unfortunately, so he couldn't be with us. He's 14. Also two friends are here: Erica Bullwinkle – Erica was my campaign manager, and she's here today – as well as Brent Kelly, who's my ministerial assistant. I ask everyone to give them the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 16: Ms Drever]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Bow. I think, hon. member, you have two minutes left. Do you have any other comments you'd like to make?

Ms Drever: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great honour that I rise today to give my maiden speech to this Assembly. It is truly an honour to sit in this 29th Legislative Assembly as the MLA for the constituency of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. Though these are not the first words that I have spoken in this House, I am proud to say that the first words I spoke were to address the issue of seniors' supports in my home riding.

I stand here today to speak of my constituency, my community, my home: Fort McMurray, a region also known as Wood Buffalo. This area is the second-largest municipality in Canada, at over 66,000 square kilometres. It is a land of hot, long summer days and cold wintry nights. During the hottest days the sun barely dips below the horizon, and energy abounds in all people. In winter it's a land where the aurora borealis lights up the sky with a shimmering and awe-inspiring beauty, where the light of the moon is reflected in the snow.

It's a land settled by people from across Canada, from across the world, people who truly have the pioneering spirit, that same drive that encourages people to explore, to leave their homes and their families with the hope of succeeding and ultimately creating a better life for themselves and for their families. It is this same pioneering spirit that created Canada, the greatest country in the world.

When I was young, my community was diverse. The people were Dene, Cree, and Métis. There were those who hailed from Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Quebec, and British Columbia. There was even a family from Ireland and another one from England. Today there are people from places such as India and Pakistan, the Philippines, China, Peru, Brazil, Somalia, Ethiopia, Nigeria, Sweden and Norway, Russia and Poland. Over 300 families moved to Fort McMurray from Venezuela after its socialist dictator, Chávez, found them to be no longer useful. It is an international community with a diversity that would rival any metropolis.

It's a land of natural beauty. The flora and fauna are as diverse as in any rainforest: jack pine, lodgepole pine, tamarack, white spruce, black spruce, balsam fir, willow trees, aspen, balsam poplar, birch trees, saskatoon berries in abundance, and especially the Alberta wild rose, thriving in Wood Buffalo.

This land is also home to an amazing variety of wildlife. This is the wildlife that was the original export of this region. Furs from these animals were the basis of trade. Today these animals flourish in this amazing habitat. Wood bison, moose, and caribou traverse this land. Wolves, coyotes, and black bears with muskrat, lynx, weasels, and red squirrels dot this region. Ducks, geese, whooping cranes, and swans nest in these wetlands. Bald eagles, hawks, and ravens fly overhead. Bats, nighthawks, and owls flutter through the wooded canopies of these forests. Grouse wander through the brush. It truly is an amazing ecosystem.

This land is the epitome of the Great White North. It has the world's largest dark-sky reserve and has the world's largest beaver dam. This area was first mapped by western peoples in 1778. In 1790 Alexander Mackenzie described the oil sands for the first time. By 1870 free enterprise thrived, with the Hudson's Bay and North West companies competing in this region. This region has a valued resource, a product upon which mankind so heavily relies, petroleum. The indigenous peoples of this area used this product to patch their canoes. This valuable resource has always been a controversial product. As it is expensive to wash sand of oil, so it is capital intensive. It is a product that Albertans have always known to be of great value, provided that oil was sold at a certain price point in the global market.

Dr. Karl Clark, a chemist and oil sands researcher, is best known for creating a process that separated the crude from the sand. It's interesting to note that his vision was that after an area had been mined, it would be reclaimed and used for farmland. Alas, this aspect is not prominent in the north. You would think that this new government, who desires to promote local food production, would recognize this interesting aspect of the developments.

Despite a footprint that is minuscule in relation to the region, with a vast expanse of boreal forest surrounding these plots of land that are being mined for this valuable resource, it is ridiculed and accused. It is made to be an environmentally unfriendly product, to be unethical oil, yet the hypocrisy around this abounds. Our energy sector has been a world leader in developing cutting-edge environmental technologies. We are proud of our history, proud of our industry, and proud of our stewardship of the land we love.

With their activist rhetoric, antipipeline scorn, the NDP has labelled Alberta's goods as not environmentally friendly, and sadly our Premier is leading the charge on this, labelling our province as Canada's embarrassing cousin. Instead of standing up for our beloved Alberta, this government continues to sympathize with regions that import unethical oil. By undermining our energy sector, this NDP government is damaging our competitive advantage.

Petrochemical developments in California or the Gulf of Mexico escape this criticism. Countries such as Saudi Arabia, Iraq, Algeria, and Angola, with their questionable policies regarding freedom and equality, let alone environmental policies, elude this scrutiny. It is sad to see that there are Canadians that would prefer to support these regimes while discouraging developments that would create jobs and revenue for this country.

I entered this world of politics because I wanted to effect positive change. The old PC government ignored this region but greatly valued the money that it acquired for the products and the jobs that this region produced. That PC government had a culture of entitlement, questionable ethics, and cronyism, an incompetent government that refused to twin a highway despite the federal friends that my good friend from Fort McMurray-Conklin secured when he was in the federal government, a government that ignored the needs of this community to grow despite being landlocked by Crown land, only to sit back and watch as the real estate values rocketed and reacted to the basic economics of supply and demand, a government that tried to move a seniors' facility because the land where it was to be built was far too valuable.

It was a government that I encountered in my previous life with the fire department in 2006 at an accident along that treacherous highway that would take so many lives. Despite the attempts by two of their own esteemed members to draw attention to this highway, despite them encountering an accident where we were rescuing a person, no action was taken by that government. Their incompetence continued until 2015, when the people finally stood up and said: no more. Today I see a party who's lost its voice, whose only desire is to jockey for Senate seats in the federal Liberal government.

The people of Alberta have spoken but did not know this newly invigorated Wildrose. They were so disillusioned by the old government that they blindly supported a socialist party. This new government is made up of people who until recently picketed and marched and said: "No more tar sands. No pipelines. No more development in the north." This is a government made up of idealists with a naiveté unbecoming of a governing party, an attitude and position that they quickly learned was not in line with Albertans. The little support that they have shown is countered by them supporting groups in other provinces who continue to fight our ability to get our product to the world. They point to the birds that died due to the oil sands development but ignore the birds killed by wind turbines. It is a hypocrisy that is difficult to comprehend.

Let the people of my home know that they have a voice in our Legislature and that my good friends and I of the Wildrose will continue to fight for all Albertans. As the MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo I will continue to respect our citizens, community organizations, and industry. I will support this government when they operate on common-sense values to the benefit of our region as well as all Albertans. I will advocate for jobs, health care, our seniors, and the economy. I will bring value-added ideas and engage with residents to also bring theirs. I will support and promote the Alberta advantage. I will represent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to tell you about the wonderful constituency I represent and also to share the story of what led me to this new job I have as Member of the Legislative Assembly for Edmonton-Riverview. I am honoured that the citizens of Edmonton-Riverview chose me as their representative. My deep-felt gratitude goes out to them. The 2015 provincial election was not my first time running. I also ran in 2012. Although I was not successful, we did make significant gains and laid the foundation for our later success.

As each MLA will attest to, my riding is the best. Edmonton-Riverview straddles the North Saskatchewan River and reaches from Whitemud Drive in the south to Stony Plain Road in the north and from 109th Street in the east all the way over to 170th Street in the west. The magnificent river valley parks provide a welcome connection to nature for all. Just a few of the parks that line the river valley include Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hawrelak, Emily Murphy, and Whitemud. These parks provide an opportunity for city dwellers to find calm and peace amongst the trees and grass or snow, depending on the season. Right in the heart of Edmonton, this natural beauty is preserved.

Besides a network of trails for hikers, cyclists, skiers, snowshoers, and other person-powered transportation, Edmonton-Riverview is made up of walkable mature neighbourhoods. It is home to more than 40,000 Albertans living in active communities, including Windsor Park, McKernan, Parkallen, Lendrum, Malmo, Lansdowne, Grandview, Belgravia, Crestwood, Parkview, Laurier, Lynnwood, Jasper Park, West Jasper Place, Meadowlark, and Elmwood.

The community league system we have in Edmonton supports many activities, and the dedication of volunteers in Edmonton-Riverview provides opportunities to connect with neighbours, advocate for community initiatives, and develop our community together.

The communities of Edmonton-Riverview are also bustling with small businesses. The famous Bon Ton Bakery, Valleyview IGA, the Parkallen and Piccolino restaurants are just a few of the long-serving establishments. People from all over Edmonton come to enjoy their goods and services.

If this wasn't enough, the University of Alberta is also situated in Edmonton-Riverview. This world-class institution provides education to over 30,000 undergraduate students, nearly 10,000 graduate students, and employs thousands of academic and nonacademic staff. The University of Alberta farm is also on the east side of the riding. Not many urban representatives can say that they have a farm in their riding.

A good number of significant institutions are connected to the University of Alberta, including the University of Alberta hospital, the Mazankowski Heart Institute, the National Institute for Nanotechnology, the Stollery children's hospital, the Cross Cancer Institute, and the Canadian Blood Services clinic.

Another unique organization in my riding is the Whitemud Equine Learning Centre, where you can ride horses in the heart of Edmonton.

Now that I've told you a bit about my riding, I'd like to tell you a bit about myself. I was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, which is where a lot of Icelanders with the name Sigurdson come from. My dad was Icelandic, but since he married an English gal from Holden, Alberta, they were always planning to move to Alberta. My mom was a teacher, and my dad had his journeyman sheet metal ticket. They figured that wherever mom could find a teaching job and there was no sheet metal shop so dad could set up shop with no competition, we would live. This turned out to be Valleyview, a small town in the Peace River country. A short aside, the riding I represent has an area known as Valleyview, and what a fun coincidence.

The Valleyview I moved to when I was seven years old was markedly different than the one in Edmonton-Riverview. It was an oil town surrounded by farms and, to the west, the Sturgeon Lake Indian band reserve. My mother taught elementary at St. Stephen's Catholic school, and my father started a small business, Valleyview Sheet Metal. Together my parents worked hard to provide for their three children.

Although my mother began teaching as soon as we moved into town, she did not have her teaching degree. She'd only completed the first year. But my mom was determined to complete her bachelor of education, and she took evening and weekend courses in Valleyview and Grande Prairie. After several years of burning the candle at both ends, she finally finished her degree. My mom did everything. She was a student. She was a worker. She was a mother.

My father started a business from nothing. This took guts and creativity. When I look back on this, I see my parents' tremendous courage as they built a new life together in an unknown community. Needless to say, they are both inspirations to me when I have experienced challenges in my own life. Their example helps me find my way through.

Besides being courageous, industrious, and perhaps a bit unconventional, my parents are also champions for fairness and justice. It was in their home that I began to understand inequality and the responsibility of governments to support all citizens. In Valleyview I witnessed the discrimination indigenous people experienced. When I was in grade 6, my best friend lived at Sturgeon Lake. When grade 7 began, I looked for her at Hillside high school. She never came. I never saw her again. I always wondered what happened to her.

My parents were stalwart New Democrats, which was extraordinary in my hometown. All my friends thought we were weird because we were NDP. Having different political views wasn't always bad, though, because sometimes when I came home from school, Grant Notley would be sitting at my parents' kitchen table. Despite my family being different from others in town, I was confident in our values. Then as now our values of inclusion and equality hold true for us.

3:30

I moved to Edmonton immediately after finishing grade 12. I studied political science at the University of Alberta, and I wasn't sure what I wanted to do, but my education confirmed what my parents had taught me, that I was a social democrat. With my bachelor of arts completed, I needed to find work, and I was hired as a STEP student for the MLA for Edmonton-Norwood, Ray Martin. That experience, now more than 30 years ago, deepened my passion for politics. My connection with Ray and his wife, Cheryl, opened up a new world for me. Their support and guidance helped me get to where I am today. Thank you to Ray and Cheryl.

Throughout my 20s I looked for that career job that felt right for me. I struggled to find my feet, but looking back, I could see that there was a pattern. No matter what job I had, I was always drawn towards helping people. In my late 20s I decided I needed to go back to school again to become a social worker. This was challenging for me as I was also a single mom. Regardless, I was determined to do it. I went on to complete my bachelor and master of social work degrees at the University of Calgary. From then on I knew what my purpose was. I never questioned if I had made the right choice in going back to school and taking on a significant amount of debt to become a social worker. I knew I had made the right choice.

Being a social worker is truly a calling for me. In my 25-year career I have worked in many fields of practice. Whether it's supporting families involved in the child welfare system, treating children with mental health issues, serving those challenged by family violence, developing community initiatives, or teaching students enrolled at faculties of social work, it's all been a tremendous privilege. But through all of this I couldn't help but feel that there was a piece missing. My social work career occurred during a time of retrenchment in social services. Every year we learned of new program cuts. Every year it was more and more difficult to serve vulnerable Albertans. Every year we had to figure out how to creatively serve our clients with less.

Social workers are taught to look at situations through a person-in-environment lens. Our work supports individuals to make healthy choices for themselves and their families, but we also look at the environment in which they live, the society. As we examine the society in which we conduct our work, we often need to ask questions such as: does everyone have the opportunity to be included socially and economically? What if an individual has a physical disability or a learning disability? Are there supports for people experiencing family violence? Are there programs to remove and minimize barriers to those with mental health issues? As I went about my work, increasingly I saw that vulnerable Albertans were being left behind by government decisions. I knew this had to stop, and I wanted to help make change, so I became even more involved in politics.

When I decided to run as a candidate in the 2012 provincial election, I must admit that it was a challenging decision for me, even with my frustration regarding the lack of progressive policies. This was due in large part to my personal circumstances. For 10 years I had been married and had two more children. Sadly, however, my marriage ended in divorce. I was again a single mom, but this time a single mother of three sons. It seemed ridiculous to think that I could run since I was already maxed out with a full-time job, teaching part-time at the university, and being a mother to three boys.

But our Premier, who back then was just MLA Rachel Notley, didn't seem to care that I was too busy to take on running in an election. Despite my firm no, she kept at it. She deconstructed all of my arguments against running, like the excellent lawyer that she is. She also looked at the situation through a gender lens, which for me was the most powerful. Needless to say, she didn't take no for an answer, and certainly her successful lobbying is a big part of the reason why I'm standing here today. Thank you, Premier.

Another amazing woman who greatly influenced my success is Erica Bullwinkle. Erica was my campaign manager in both the 2012 and 2015 elections. Erica has dedicated her life to ensuring that progressive women are elected to represent constituents. Her credentials are stellar. Back in 2008 Erica helped to get the campaign office of our now Premier up and running. In addition, Erica was the campaign manager for Edmonton Strathcona Member of Parliament Linda Duncan. When she was elected as an MP for the first time, it was an extraordinary accomplishment. MP Duncan has been the sole Alberta representative from any party other than the Conservatives for three consecutive federal elections. I know that this is in large part due to Erica's tremendous political acumen, dedication, and, most importantly, unreasonable hopefulness in the face of what others would say were insurmountable odds. Therefore, when Erica agreed to be my campaign manager, I knew she was the right woman for the job. Thank you, Erica.

I'd like to acknowledge another member of my family who could not be here today, my sister Karen Sigurdson. Now retired, Karen was a dedicated Alberta public servant for 30 years. She began in the role of communications but was eventually promoted to the executive director level. Karen's communication expertise was generously shared with me during both of my campaigns, but even more importantly, she was and is always someone I can rely on to give me the straight goods. In the political world this is invaluable. Thank you, Karen.

Before I close, I want to acknowledge my sons, Maxwell, Carl, and Wade. Now, as all members of the Assembly know, our families sacrifice so that we may do what needs to be done to get elected and to then serve the citizens of Alberta. Too many times to mention, my sons figured things out for themselves or got one of their brothers to help them.

I want to thank my eldest son, Maxwell, for supporting his little brothers, making supper for them, helping them with their homework, and being a loving listener to their stories. Maxwell is also a tremendous support to me. He inspired me to pursue my dreams. At an earlier time I struggled with my own self-worth, but being a mother to Maxwell reminded me that I was important. I was important because I was his mother. He reminded me of this every day, and even though the challenges at times were overwhelming, he and I together overcame them. Maxwell is currently studying at the University of Alberta in the Faculty of Education, just like his grandma.

My middle son, Carl, is also here today. As any parent knows, witnessing our children grow is remarkable. Carl from a young age had a calm disposition, which I must say is welcome to a mother of three boys. Athletic star, soccer and hockey player, and an honours student, as Maxwell did before him, Carl inspired me and supported me to accomplish my goal.

Wade is my youngest son – and he's sick today, so he couldn't be here – or, as I prefer to call him, my baby. At 14 years Wade has a generous heart and unwavering determination when he sets his mind to something. Wade is also an honours student, currently in grade 9. He's perhaps the least enamoured with my new job. Last fall, at a time when I was away from home more than I was there, he declared: I don't like your new job. Things have calmed somewhat since then, and I'm able to be home more often now. But as we know, things can change quickly. Wade reminds me of what is really important, our connections with one another.

Thank you, Maxwell, Carl, and Wade, for understanding and, indeed, supporting my work and accepting my big dream. I love you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any comments or questions under 29(2)(a) for the minister?

Hearing none, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sure is an honour to rise today and speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. The throne speech is a wonderful tradition that helps the public understand what the government has planned for them in the upcoming session. As well, it communicates the government's vision for the future of our province; at least, it usually does.

Now, I would like to go through some of the items brought up during this throne speech and fact-check them against how this government has performed so far. As we learned earlier today, it's vital to understand what decisions have gotten us to where we are so that we can know which direction we are going. I'm going to begin with a subject that is of great importance to me, Mr. Speaker, a topic that affects the lives of all Albertans now and in the future, and that would be the state of our democracy. In the speech there was a brief mention of democratic renewal, and I'm glad to see that this is something that is on the government's radar. After 44 years of one-party rule there is a need to assess the state of our democracy and see if there's anything we can do to improve upon our system of representation. Making a more open, accountable, and transparent system of governance is attainable and is fundamental for a prosperous Alberta.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, in the throne speech it states: “[My] government is looking forward to the report of this Legislature’s all-party Special Committee on Ethics and Accountability.” I have to say, Madam Speaker, that I, too, am looking forward to seeing what this committee has to report, especially since this committee has only met five times since it was first struck last June. Not surprisingly, meeting for a couple of hours every couple of months has not yielded a great deal of results, and the committee is still working on the first of the three pieces of legislation that it has to review. So maybe I should correct myself. I am more curious than I am looking forward to what, if anything, this committee has to report.

On top of reporting, I am also curious as to when this government actually intends to publish its report. The public has been getting mixed messages on this as well, Madam Speaker. On February 2 the government announced that the committee would be reporting this upcoming June rather than in September, which was the original promised date during the committee’s first meeting. The minister of democratic renewal, who was the chair of the committee at the time, is on record as committing to that fact. Now we learn through the throne speech that the Ethics and Accountability Committee has reverted to the original reporting date. I hope that the first order of business for the minister responsible for democratic renewal is to correct this misinformation coming out government.

Madam Speaker, as a sitting member of the committee I can tell you that there is much work to be done. I am sincerely relieved to hear that we will now be reporting in September instead of June, but I still have skepticism. At the rate that the current committee is working, will there be any meaningful and thorough review of all three pieces of legislation? The provincial elections legislation, the Conflicts of Interest Act, and the public interest disclosure act are all laws that alter the very nature of our democracy. These are not to be taken lightly, and they are not to be glossed over, either.

We need to get this committee back to work, and I strongly encourage the minister to do so and to encourage the chair to bring it back to work, unlike the jobs plan that the government is doing, and to actually commit to producing some results and getting this committee back on track.

Thanks, Madam Speaker. With that said, I would like to now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I’m honoured to rise and move Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services.

Currently in Alberta there are several pieces of legislation that govern public-sector workers. They include the Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act. Both of these acts prohibit strikes by unionized employees as well as lockouts by employers. Last year, however, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the right to strike is a fundamental right for unionized workers. A subsequent ruling by Alberta’s Court of Queen’s Bench made the same point. The courts declared that certain sections of the Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act are invalid because they prohibit strikes.

Madam Speaker, Bill 4 amends these pieces of legislation to reflect the courts’ rulings. Alberta’s labour laws have not changed significantly, some in over a decade, and must now be modernized to protect public-sector employees’ Charter rights. Last year our government conducted extensive consultations with Alberta’s public-sector employers and unions regarding an essential services approach. The public also participated in this process. The legislation presented here is fair to employees, employers, and all Albertans, ensuring access to essential services in the event of a work stoppage.

The health and safety of the public is our primary consideration, and, Madam Speaker, Albertans can be assured that critical public services will be maintained during any labour dispute. With this legislation collective bargaining will now take on an even greater role than it does. That is because there will be less use of compulsory arbitration to settle labour disputes, the process used when workers are not allowed to strike. Employers and unions will be required to negotiate in advance of any work stoppage to determine which areas of their work are considered essential services.

Madam Speaker, the proposed legislation will put greater responsibility into the hands of employers and unions to negotiate essential services agreements that will give employees the right to strike while ensuring the availability of essential services. Each situation will be slightly different, so it is critical that the parties work co-operatively to set up an agreement that meets the spirit of the law that allows workers the right to strike and protects the public by ensuring that essential services are not unduly disrupted. I want to be very clear, Madam Speaker, that some unionized public workers such as police and firefighters will not be allowed to strike because of their essential roles. Our aim is to update Alberta’s labour relations legislation in keeping with the direction of the courts while ensuring stability for critical public services.

This legislation is similar to the laws in other provinces and is intended to balance the interests of employers and employees while protecting public health and safety. Madam Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to preface my comments by saying that it is the position of the Official Opposition to implement reforms that ensure that those employed in essential services are treated fairly. We want to make sure that any determination as to what constitutes an essential service is done fairly as a great number of Albertans will be affected by this decision.

Also, as we stated many times before, it is our position that the best practice is to refer bills like this to committee, where expert witnesses can provide us with the pros and cons of passing this bill. Given the size of the bill and the technical nature I would recommend that committee is the place to send this bill.

With those caveats I will start. This decision not only pertains to government of Alberta employees but also impacts employees of Alberta’s health care system, including continuing care facilities amongst others. There are vital services that Albertans depend on, quite literally for their lives, that are affected by the essential services agreement in those areas.

Now, we do recognize that the government here is responding to a Supreme Court ruling from 2015 and that they are working on a timeline established by a consent order that occurred under the previous government. The Official Opposition accepts this and that the legislation needs to be drafted, but we have concerns. We hope to hear from the minister about whether some of our concerns are indeed problems with the bill. If so, we hope that she and the rest of the MLAs in the House will work with us so that measured and thoughtful amendments will occur because I know that nobody here wants to get this bill wrong.

We are consulting with our constituents and subject experts in this field with regard to this legislation over the upcoming constituency week and look forward to discussing the details of the bill with all MLAs when we get back to the Assembly. As I said earlier, let's have this bill sent to committee for further scrutiny. Let's take the time to get it right.

First, I want to address an important point regarding the scope of this bill. The title of the bill, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, does speak to the impetus for why this legislation was needed, but this legislation overreaches the Supreme Court ruling. For instance, the legislation includes a prohibition on the use of temporary workers while those bargaining for a new agreement are on strike or lockout. That's not required anywhere in the Supreme Court decision. Madam Speaker, may the record show that we want to have that discussion. We want to have that debate and give due assessment to such a legislative change.

The Supreme Court ruling stemmed from two particular findings within legislation in Saskatchewan. First, the court took issue with an employer's ability to unilaterally decide what is an essential service. Second, they took issue with the absence of an adequate, impartial, alternate mechanism for bargaining. The impact of these two factors taken together and the assessment that striking is a Charter right led to the current legislative onus upon Alberta. In no way does it derive from this that a public-sector employer cannot hire temporary workers to compensate for lack of labour during a strike. To wedge such a restriction into An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services when that particular provision is not actually being required in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling is, quite simply, disingenuous.

We understand the convenience of being able to do a swath of labour changes in one go as opposed to multiple pieces of legislation, but there is a fundamental difference between what the Supreme Court decision requests and what the government here would like to implement. A fundamental difference, Madam Speaker. Again, we want to debate that particular labour provision, but we want to study it first. It's unfair to put it forward under the guise of a Supreme Court requirement where there is a tight timeline to review and implement legislation. Does such a restriction on the hiring of temporary workers diminish the government's bargaining position when there are ongoing negotiations? Again, these are taxpayer dollars being bargained, so we need to be particularly prudent.

What's more problematic is that this gives bargaining unions a monopoly on labour and workers, thereby constraining the government's hand in negotiations. The government's role in these negotiations should be to stand up for taxpayers and how their dollars are negotiated. This is an area for study, and frankly it does not even seem like it needs to be part of the essential services discussion here today. If the government actually believes this provision to be relevant to the Supreme Court decision, I invite them to table before us any assessments showing that. Otherwise, perhaps the minister can consider leaving this as something to be negotiated on a case-by-case basis rather than legislating it for everyone.

But let's get back to the heart of the bill: proposing a framework where we can allow public-sector strikes while preserving essential services. The Supreme Court recognized the right to strike in their ruling. Specifically they found it to be a fundamental right guaranteed under section 2 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The statistics across Canada show that when wage negotiations commence for a service that can't legally strike, it's a bargaining advantage.

A 2011 Fraser Institute study found that government employees in Alberta were already earning 10 per cent more than private-sector counterparts, that they also retired two years earlier on average and enjoyed better pensions, that 81.4 per cent of public-sector workers were covered by a registered pension compared to merely 21.5 per cent of private-sector workers, all in addition to better job security. As we have recently seen, they have enjoyed virtual immunity to downturns in the economy. Of course, Alberta had a prohibition on strikes and lockouts for workers in the public sector, so a lot of agreements may have compensated for that lost right.

We don't take issue with workers striking – that's their right – so long as there are safeguards in place so that Albertans can still access critical services regardless of whether or not there is an ongoing strike action. This legislation fundamentally changes a certain aspect of Alberta's labour relations regime. The bill does seem to want to limit service disruptions by trying to clearly establish what does and what does not constitute an essential service. We support this principle. But a scenario where some public-sector workers are deemed essential and stay on the job while perhaps many of the very people they work with are not deemed as essential and can thus engage in a strike or partial strike is a new experience for Alberta.

It is possible that the first essential services agreement missed some details. Perhaps we discover that a certain occupation at Alberta Health Services should have been classified as essential when the agreement was made but was not, and there are serious consequences in a strike situation. Let's face it; governments don't always get things right the first time. The mechanism described in the proposed legislation does not seem to allow for a quick fix should there be an emergency situation. Essentially, it requires the same process of the two sides to sit down and go through the negotiating process all over in order to amend the agreement.

I would remind those in attendance that ministers are responsible for the services their departments provide. That's also the case in a strike situation or emergency situation regardless of agreements in place. It is our hope that the government has assessed this scenario fully and can address the obvious concern. What if important essential services are not being adequately covered after the first week of a strike? What's the remedy? Can we be sure a minister can fulfill their duties to the public? Given how new this is, it is not unreasonable to consider a sunset provision of five years or so that forces a review of this legislation so that it can be improved if the experience shows that changes are warranted.

One of our major concerns pertains to the role of the commissioner as outlined in this legislation. There's an extraordinary amount of authority, where essential services agreements are concerned, all concentrated in the hands of one person.

As per section 95.3(2) of the proposed legislation the commissioner has the ability to determine whether . . .

- (d) an essential services agreement has been entered into, amended or terminated,
  - (e) a person is bound by an essential services agreement,
  - (f) a person is a party to an essential services agreement,
  - (g) an essential services agreement is in effect, and
  - (h) a service is an essential service
- and the Commissioner's decision is final and binding.

“Final and binding,” Madam Speaker. The position is by government appointment. It would be profoundly problematic if this appointment were to go to someone who is not a fair-minded Albertan. Ideally, it should go to someone with a background of expertise on labour matters who does not have a history of being on one particular side or the other. With the recent appointment of a top AUPE negotiator, who will not be named, as the government’s chief labour negotiator, we are less than sure that the government will get this one right for all Albertans. An appointment could yield profound consequences for several years and lead to precedents and impacts that will last much longer.

There is a valid debate to be had over who should be making these decisions. Perhaps the Labour Relations Board more broadly, not reduced to a single commissioner; perhaps another body. The concern is whether there are enough checks and balances on the commissioner to properly serve all Albertans’ interests. To have this concentration of responsibilities in one individual on a matter as impactful as essential services is troubling, Madam Speaker. I say this, in particular, because this bill also gives the commissioner the power to sit alone and hear and decide a question and to have that decision be considered that of the Labour Relations Board. It’s difficult to convey how absolutely impartial a commissioner needs to be with these sorts of powers and how problematic it would be to have a partial commissioner.

The ability to amend an agreement consented to by both parties is no small role or responsibility. It is my hope that in the course of this debate this government can give a clear reason as to why they feel the need to empower this position so much. Perhaps the minister and the officials that crafted the legislation and advised her have valid case studies and examples for why a role with such a concentration of responsibilities is needed. It would be very helpful for us as lawmakers to have the minister table these studies.

Another item of concern is under section 95.41(1), specifying what should be contained in an essential services agreement. As worded, this bill allows for this section to be vastly expanded through regulations. In fact, subsection (g) specifically invites that scenario. Defining the required contents of an essential services agreement is perhaps one of the most important parts of this legislation. It’s important that both sides have a clear legislative scope for what should and should not be included. This leaves room for cabinet to usher in a series of changes to what is required of employers or bargaining units, for that matter, without undergoing the scrutiny that accompanies a proposed formal legislative change.

As outlined here, Madam Speaker, we have concerns with this legislation, serious concerns. These range from the overarching powers of the commissioner to significant details left to regulations. Also troubling is that this bill goes a little above and beyond what the Supreme Court asked. But considering how involved the government party is with labour groups, I will commend them on their overall restraint and reiterate that I am very open to supporting this bill, depending upon where the discussion and perhaps amendments go during debate.

We do recognize that the government needed to put this legislation forward in part because of the consent order made by the previous government, but the bill is barely 48 hours old, so we are consulting with subject matter experts to ensure that this bill as presented will not yield negative consequences to Alberta. Also, as I have earlier said, we will be discussing it with constituents over the upcoming constituency break. We hope we can work with the government on some measured and thoughtful amendments should they be determined necessary to ensure a fair process for all Albertans impacted by this important legislation.

Seeing as today is St. Patrick’s Day and I am of Irish descent, maybe we will get lucky and have this government consent to this bill being passed on to committee.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I’m pleased to make comments on second reading of Bill 4, which proposes to amend the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code to make them compliant with the recent Supreme Court decision upholding public-sector workers’ fundamental right to strike. The legislation guarantees public-sector workers the right to strike with the caveat that unions and employers must agree on a contingency plan in the event of a labour disruption.

As far as the outcome of this bill: unions and employers will be required to have an essential services agreement in place before proceeding to collective bargaining. Such pacts will determine which workers are needed to maintain vital services and therefore must stay on the job during a strike or lockout. In the case of nurses, for example, their agreement would likely detail how many employees are required to keep basic hospital services running.

The use of replacement workers will be banned for groups covered by an essential services agreement. In cases where the parties are struggling to reach an agreement, they can bring in umpires to adjudicate the dispute. These umpires will be required to settle quarrels about existing agreements and, in the case of health workers, for example, would be people familiar with hospital scheduling and issues related to safety.

It’s important to remember that Alberta is unique, apart from Prince Edward Island, the only two jurisdictions that do not have legislation to allow essential public workers to strike. Bill 4 covers about 150,000 unionized workers under 77 collective agreements, including most health workers, government employees, and nonacademic staff at postsecondary institutions.

Bill 4 is a sea change in Alberta, Madam Speaker, from the former PC administration, which tried to legislate away freedom of association, which is guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and imposing, as it tried, wage settlements. On the whole the bill is a fair and balanced response, in our view, to rulings by the Court of Queen’s Bench and the Supreme Court which declared it unconstitutional for governments to impose a blanket ban on strikes.

Bill 4 effectively guarantees public-sector workers the right to strike while still ensuring access to public services in the event of a labour disruption. Perhaps the most striking thing about Bill 4 is that organized labour supports it, which is a far cry from the diametric opposition that PC bills 45 and 46 created in the last five years. This speaks, I think, volumes about what’s possible if we can get labour peace and fairness perceived on both sides.

Many on the political right will decry the so-called judicial activism in relation to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, yet this issue is a perfect example of how the courts can intercede when governments are running roughshod over fundamental rights. The reason people go out on wildcat strikes is precisely because they’re desperate. They cannot find any other way to communicate with their employer, in this case the government, to get a point across.

They absolutely must have that option. All of us will benefit. Bill 4 provides that with a reasonable caveat. Under bills 45 and 46 of the previous PC administration, it left workers no option and no bargaining opportunity. The ability to go on strike is really the only card that workers hold as a tool to ensure some element of accountability and fairness.

Madam Speaker, pending a more detailed examination, I appreciate the leadership taken by the minister, and I look forward to hearing more of the elements of the debate that need to come out, the details around the commissioner and his or her role and how we may ensure that both sides, both the public and the union members, get a balanced approach, which is, I think, what the role of government is, to try and provide a balance of rights and freedoms on both sides to ensure that the public interest is being served long term.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Then I'll call on the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise today and speak in support of Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. Currently in Alberta the relationship between public-sector workers and their employers is governed by several pieces of legislation. Before being elected last May, in my former role as a front-line registered nurse and elected workplace representative I watched the case of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour make it through the Supreme Court with keen interest. I knew that the labour legislation in Alberta would be put to the test as a result of the court's ruling. These include the Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act.

In their current form both of these acts prohibit strikes by unionized employees and lockouts by employers. Last year, however, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the right to strike is a fundamental right for unionized workers. A subsequent ruling by Alberta's Court of Queen's Bench reached the same conclusion. The courts declared certain sections of the Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act invalid because they prohibit strikes.

In their ruling the Supreme Court justices indicated that freedom of association granted by the Charter protects the right to autonomy and the dignity of vulnerable people. They went on to say, "This collective action [of a strike] at the moment of impasse is an affirmation of the dignity and autonomy of employees in their working lives." More specifically, Justice Abella said that the right to strike is essential in evening the playing field between workers and employers. Justice Abella noted that there had been a long-standing "fundamental power imbalance [between employers and employees] which the entire history of modern labour legislation has been scrupulously devoted to rectifying." Bill 4 works towards a more even playing field between workers and their employers.

The Supreme Court ruling came as a result of the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour's challenge of a 2008 law passed by the Saskatchewan government. That law limited the right to strike by workers deemed by the government to be in essential services such as jail guards. The law gave the Saskatchewan government the unilateral right to decide which workers were essential, and it denied them access to effective alternatives for resolving labour disputes, Justice Abella said.

In response to the Supreme Court ruling striking down Saskatchewan's unconstitutional law, University of British Columbia law professor Joel Bakan remarked that the view of the courts has changed as governments have become more hostile to unions. Mr. Bakan wrote:

Since the 1980s, organized labour has lost ground as a result of unsympathetic government policies and laws, not to mention economic changes, such as globalization. The court recognizes that as workers' freedom of association is eroded by economic shifts and hostile governments, the judiciary becomes more essential for protecting this fundamental right. It's a classic case – like segregation in the U.S. South, or abortion or sexual orientation equality in Canada – where governments cannot be relied upon to respect constitutional rights and freedoms, so the courts step in.

Well, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that unlike the previous government, this government can be relied on to respect workers' constitutional rights and freedoms. We are doing just that with Bill 4, and I say: it's about time. Bill 4 amends Alberta's labour legislation invalidated by Supreme Court rulings. Alberta's labour laws have not changed significantly for almost 30 years and must now be modernized to protect the Charter rights of public-sector employees. Modernizing our labour laws also works towards repairing the relationship the government has with its public-sector workers after the vicious attacks by the former PC government.

On the other hand, our government has achieved broad consensus with employees and employers alike. We conducted extensive consultations with Alberta's public-sector employees and labour groups. We are taking an approach towards essential services based on a negotiation and adjudication model. The public has also participated in the process. This legislation is fair to employees, employers, and all Albertans, ensuring access to essential services in the event of a work stoppage.

As always, the health and safety of our public is our primary consideration. Madam Speaker, Albertans can be assured that critical public services will be maintained during any labour disruptions. As a former front-line public-sector worker I know with certainty that when professionals like registered nurses and all other public-sector workers, for that matter, sit down to negotiate an essential services agreement with their employers, they will keep the safety of Albertans front of mind.

With this legislation, collective bargaining will be more meaningful and will take on an even greater role than it has before. The Minister of Labour mentioned this previously, but I believe it bears repeating. There will be less use of compulsory arbitration to settle labour disputes. Employers and unions will have the ability to negotiate in advance of any work stoppage to determine which areas of their work are considered essential services.

Under the model proposed by Bill 4, Madam Speaker, greater responsibility will be put into the hands of employers and unions to negotiate essential services agreements while ensuring the availability of essential services to protect the public. Each situation will be slightly different, and Bill 4 provides that flexibility. The parties will work co-operatively to set up an agreement that meets the spirit of the law, that allows workers the right to strike, and that protects the public by ensuring that essential services are not unduly disrupted.

I want to be very clear, Madam Speaker, that some unionized public-sector workers such as police and firefighters will not be allowed to strike at all because of their essential roles. Our aim is to update Alberta's labour relations legislation in keeping with the direction of the courts while ensuring stability of critical public services. This legislation is similar to laws in other provinces and is intended to balance the interests of employers and employees while protecting public health and safety.

Madam Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues in the Legislature to support this bill. With that being said, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, I believe that we have had a wonderful, productive two weeks of session, where we heard from a great many of our MLAs on both sides of the House on matters of very significant importance and on matters that have a direct bearing on their experiences as new MLAs.

That being said, I believe that we've conducted as much business as we can for the time being, and I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 on April 4. Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:13 p.m. to Monday, April 4, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 4, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, let us reflect. Let each of us, in our own way, reflect on the great strength and courage of Albertans all across this province. During times like this we need to have confidence that strength can be found from within and from those around us. Let us welcome the small acts of kindness and recognize that like threads when tied together, they become a strong rope that prepares us for the future.

Let's now welcome the singing of O Canada.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Robert H. Reynolds, QC
Seventh Clerk of the Legislative Assembly

The Speaker: Hon. members, with the indulgence of the House I would like to make an announcement. It gives me great pleasure to announce the appointment of Robert H. Reynolds, QC, as the seventh Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. [Standing ovation] Hon. members, I think you may be standing more than once in this case here today.

As the seventh Clerk of the Legislature of Alberta, effective today, Mr. Reynolds, a long-serving and dedicated employee of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, is one of Canada's foremost experts on Westminster-style parliamentary practice. Rob's professionalism and commitment to the public service will ensure continued focus on the Legislative Assembly Office's mission to provide nonpartisan parliamentary support and to implement the innovative changes necessary to sustain the Legislative Assembly Office as a leader in parliamentary support organizations in Canada.

I would like to personally express my thanks to the representatives of the various caucuses who were consulted and participated in the process for their time and advice with respect to Rob's selection. I can truly say that Mr. Reynolds' selection was supported across all parties in this Legislature. I am confident that Mr. Reynolds will provide strong leadership to the dedicated LAO staff and employees and valued service and advice and decisive direction to this Assembly and to myself. I can tell you that personally I look forward to working with Mr. Reynolds.

I would now invite the Deputy Speaker to make some brief comments and to introduce Mr. Reynolds' family.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I first met Rob Reynolds about 10 years ago, when I began working here at the Legislature. I remember being in a committee room, and it was like this deep sigh of relief as soon as Rob came in the room because here was the man with all the answers. I've come to know Rob very well over the last little while, and I'm so thrilled that he's taking on the role of Clerk because he is still the man with all the answers. Even if he doesn't have the answer to the question, he always has something really funny to say.

It is indeed my pleasure and my honour, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ritu Khullar, who is the wife of our new Clerk, and their younger son, Nikhil. They're both seated in your gallery. Their older son, Samir, is also joining us but not physically. He's watching the session streamed at the University of Waterloo, where he is in attendance. I see they have risen. Would you please give them all the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. As we all know in this Assembly, family is the reason that we are able to do what we do.

Again with the indulgence of the House I would recognize the Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and congratulations, Mr. Reynolds. It's my pleasure to rise today and give a warm welcome to the seventh Clerk of the Legislative Assembly, Robert Reynolds. Now, they've written some stuff here for me, which I will read.

Mr. Reynolds brings to his new role a wealth of experience, having worked closely with the officers of the Legislature for 20 years. He has a long history in Edmonton, having articulated and practised in the city before joining the Legislative Assembly Office in 1993 as Parliamentary Counsel. He became Senior Parliamentary Counsel in '97 and moved on to the position of Law Clerk and director of interparliamentary relations in 2010. He is a frequent speaker on the subject of parliamentary privilege and is often why my privilege motions fail, I believe. He's recognized as one of Canada's foremost experts on parliamentary practice. He has also twice served as president of the Association of Parliamentary Counsel in Canada.

I just want to say that he's always been most helpful to us in opposition and again in government, has a tremendous sense of humour and an engaging laugh, which I'm sure that all of us will come to appreciate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Welcome, Mr. Reynolds.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an absolute pleasure – and thank you for the opportunity – to rise and just say a few words on behalf of my caucus on the appointment of Mr. Reynolds as the new Clerk of the Assembly. With over 20 years of service to this Assembly we know that Mr. Reynolds, Rob, is a model of professionalism and integrity, serving the Assembly with the unique ability to lighten any situation with that wonderful smile and his great sense of humour. We hope that this service will continue for years and years to come; however, whether he intends to beat Dr. McNeil's 28 years' tenure as Clerk is perhaps optimistic thinking.

I might just add a very quick thank you to you, Mr. Speaker, for ensuring a multicaucus approach to the appointment, one that the Wildrose fully supports.

It can't be escaped that Mr. Reynolds has a very particular sense of humour. Some would call it dry; others just don't get the joke. So in honour of that humour, a little bit of humour on qualities found in that rare vintage of Queen's Counsel lawyers. Château Queen's Counsel is a rare, dry vintage, matured in remote corners of Edmonton and around the world. It has a prominent nose and a full, round body. It's rather crusty, with a price tag that makes it hard to stomach, and is best left stored undisturbed in dark cellars for many years.

Now that my own attempt at his sense of dry humour has either hit or missed, my absolute heartfelt congratulations on behalf of the Wildrose colleagues, Mr. Reynolds, on this new chapter of your life. I look forward to your orders du jour.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I must tell the House that I'm still working on understanding all of the new Clerk's humour. I have figured out about 50 per cent of them. I also must tell both of you gentlemen that I have some new ammunition here to use as you two bring resolutions to the floor.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, very much. Certainly, it gives me great pleasure and it's a great privilege today on behalf of not just the current members of the Progressive Conservative caucus but past members of the Progressive Conservative caucuses that have served with Mr. Reynolds and, indeed, members of legislative staff both here in Edmonton and around the province – you know, one of the things that I think is important to realize is that as the head now of the Legislative Assembly Office Mr. Reynolds is in fact the boss of all of our constituency assistants as well, and that's an important role that he will play. I know that Dr. McNeil's role in that was certainly appreciated, and I know that Mr. Reynolds will carry that on in a way and in a culture that were established and, I think, will be maintained and carried on through his tenure.

You know, I'm well aware of Mr. Reynolds' wry sense of humour, and despite the fact that he is an Anglican lawyer, I'm quite prepared to serve under his direction because Lutheran veterinarians just do that. It's certainly a pleasure to congratulate him on his appointment.

I, too, echo the comments that were made that the process to ensure an all-party development and selection, I think, is something that is appreciated by all, given the nonpartisan nature that is so critical in this role.

One final comment. I'm certainly glad to know that I, too, may have the privilege of learning what it means to have my points of privilege turned down as well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to stand, too, and congratulate Mr. Rob Reynolds as the new Clerk of the Assembly. I would hope in the spirit of the times that we're going to save some money on this man as well as get the results that we need. He's been approachable, deferential, diligent, and certainly in over a decade of my working with Rob, it's been a pleasure to both work and challenge some of the decisions that have been made here. He will be very instrumental in the critical decisions that we make over the next few years, and I have every faith in Rob, that he will serve this Legislature and the people of Alberta in a very exemplary way.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I also rise and on behalf of my entire caucus would like to echo the praise that my colleagues have rightly shown to Mr. Rob Reynolds and also echo my thanks to you, Mr. Speaker, for the thorough process, the crosspartisan, nonpartisan process that you went through in naming Mr. Reynolds as Clerk. Now, that's something that we know, as we've heard, doesn't happen every day in this Assembly.

Mr. Reynolds and I have a little bit of history. I'm sure he doesn't remember me, but I certainly remember him when he started in this role, if I'm not mistaken, 22 years ago. I was working my very first job, for the Official Opposition here in the Assembly.

An Hon. Member: Which opposition was that?

Mr. Clark: It was an opposition led by Laurence Decore. I had a tremendous respect for, a tremendous affinity for him and everything he stood for.

It is something, that our paths cross again, and I just wanted to echo and again offer my heartfelt congratulations and look forward to your strong leadership of the Legislative Assembly Office, something that I know each of us respects, and I know how important that is for all of us and all the work that we do in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

The first official action of our Clerk, to call for ...

The Clerk: Introduction of Visitors.

The Speaker: It gets better.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and also my congratulations to the new Clerk.

My pleasure to rise and to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 31 students plus four of their student supervisors, including teachers, from St. Martha school in the Edmonton-McClung riding. The teachers include Ms Shelley LaFontaine, educational assistant Mrs. Elizabeth Persad, parent helpers Ms Tracy Reyes-Fischer and Ms Anita Fuernsinn. I'll ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you the students and staff of the beautiful Bowden Grandview school. If you'd please stand when I call your name. We have with us today Ms Tracy Dreher, Ms Brenda Sherwood, Mrs. Carrie Chatt, Mrs. Amanda Minty, Mrs. Tracy Thorkman, Mr. Chad Hunter, Mrs. Sheryl Neilson, Miss Andrea Rainault, and approximately 32 students. If you'd all rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly the wonderful students of Meyokumin school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Megan Gregoire Davis and Ms MacLeod as well as a parent, Mr. Jas Lallh. I ask them to please rise now and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly a true Edmonton superhero and her team of cancer-fighting avengers. We are joined by seven-year-old Mable Tooke, whose heroic alter ego we are familiar with, Spider-Mable. Spider-Mable is a cancer survivor who is the Canadian Cancer Society's daffodil champion this year, helping raise awareness and hope in the fight against this terrible disease. I'd ask that both Spider-Mable as well as her parents, Lisa and Neil, and grandparents Rick and Yvonne rise and please remain standing as I introduce some of their other avenger partners here. They include Christine McCourt-Reid, national board member of the Canadian Cancer Society; Angeline Webb, policy and health promotion department manager with the Canadian Cancer Society for Alberta and the Northwest Territories; Cerina Lee, a graduate student at the University of Alberta School of Public Health and a public policy intern at the Canadian Cancer Society for Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

Spider-Mable, you are such an inspiration to all of us. Thanks for being here today. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I think we have much to learn, all of us, from the strength of children.

I'm going to ask for unanimous permission of the House to finish Introduction of Guests.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to rise today and introduce on your behalf two guests seated in your gallery, Dr. Terry Daniel and his 11-year-old grandson, Aiden Daniel. Dr. Daniel is a professor in the department of finance and management science in the School of Business at the University of Alberta. Aiden Daniel is 11 years old and has a keen interest in politics. I would now ask that Terry and Aiden rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and all members of the Assembly leaders and members of the Hope Bridges Society of Strathmore. I would ask that they please stand as I call their names: Cathy Lindon, Terry Gathercole, Patricia Timmermans, and John Ashton. Strathmore's Hope Bridges Society uses creative expression through the arts to foster meaningful relationships and change the perception of difference. Hope Bridges believes that everyone belongs and promotes inclusion and values citizenship in everything they do. In a spirit of hospitality and a standard of excellence, Hope Bridges facilitates the connection of community members through inclusive arts activities, where they are not judged and where all are uniquely valued. Hope Bridges works to build a stronger community using arts programming that promotes connection and well-being through participation and inclusion. Please join me in thanking and welcoming members of Hope Bridges Society to the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several members of the North Edmonton Minor Football Association, NEMFA, the Edmonton Seahawks. NEMFA was created in 1993 to serve children aged eight to 17 years in north Edmonton and has grown from an organization first run out of the trunk of a car and a garage, with 17 players and only 13 uniforms, to today, with a board of nine, over 40 field staff, an average of 200 players registered annually, and their clubhouse in the glorious community of Edmonton-Castle Downs. Joining us today in the gallery are Marvin Mills, the president and sometimes coach; Ken Anderson, the vice-president; Mirella Horner, the general manager of football operations; her husband, Paul Horner, equipment co-ordinator and former coach; and Shelley Yuskow, secretary and former registrar. I'd ask them to remain standing and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce something new, the freshly minted member elect for Calgary-Greenway, Mr. Prab Gill. Though Prab is not sworn in yet, we look forward to him joining us down here, amongst the rest of us. With Prab today is Mr. Mandeep Shergill, who was Prab's campaign manager and who will be working with Prab in the Calgary-Greenway constituency office. I would ask them both now to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: On Friday an additional 440 Albertans lost their jobs, this time at Cenovus. Wages are plummeting across the province, with Alberta seeing the largest year-over-year decline ever. And it's not just in the energy sector but in every industry right across the province almost. The NDP has responded with a failed jobs program, new taxes on everyone and everything, and damaging new regulations. To the Premier: what hope can suffering Albertans possibly have in a government that continues to do this type of damage to Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government is very concerned about the consequences of the significant job losses that we are seeing across the province, and that's why we are acting to do everything that we can to support Alberta communities, to support Alberta families, and also to diversify the economy, something that the folks over there don't think should be a priority, and also to engage in job-creation measures. There are a number of issues that we've talked about before, and I look forward to talking about more of them today and in the budget as we go forward.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, the Premier recently applauded the federal budget, saying that she was pleased and that it was a good start. Seriously, we have the federal environment minister commenting on how the federal budget is about moving in the direction of no development in the oil sector. There's more red tape, there are more delays and more uncertainty surrounding the approval of new pipelines than ever before, and a tanker ban, of course, remains in place on the west coast, without any word whatsoever from the government. Ottawa is becoming even more distant and uncaring about Alberta. When will the Premier actually stand in her place and stand up for Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, what we've said is that as we try to work with our colleagues across the country, we're going to engage in respectful dialogue and discussion. We're not going to engage in tweeting and name-calling and that kind of thing because that doesn't get us to where we need to go. Now, for instance, the member opposite began his questions talking about job losses. Our government went to the federal government and said: EI doesn't work for Albertans. As a result of the changes, which, yes, must be improved – and you've heard from me on that already several times – over $300 million will come into Alberta, into the pockets of Alberta families who've lost their jobs, that wouldn't have been there based on the representations from those folks over there.

Mr. Jean: There is one issue Albertans want this Premier to fight for. The tanker ban on the Pacific north coast is bad news for Alberta's energy sector and all of Albertans. It blocks a pipeline that would get Albertans back to work and would grow our economy. I've asked the government nine times if they support the Liberal ban on tanker traffic. For an Alberta Premier this should be a very easy question, with only one right answer. Premier, do you oppose the B.C. north coast tanker ban? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Leader of the Opposition continues his campaign of intimidation and half-truth to get pipelines built. Here's a fact: there is no tanker ban in place yet on the west coast. So there's a thing you should probably know.

Secondly, what's delaying Gateway being built are the 209 conditions that the NEB put in place under the member opposite's government. That's what's delaying that pipeline getting built. We know, going forward, that shaming and yelling at our provincial and federal counterparts is not the way to get things done. We will work collaboratively. We will have discussions at all levels till we get what . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second major question.

Mr. Jean: Albertans are also worried about the looming increase of their power bills, and the NDP have no one but themselves to blame. Power purchase agreements have a clause to stop governments from making generation of electricity unprofitable. Instead of studying the economic impact, the NDP raised taxes through the specified gas emitters regulation starting January 1 of this year. Can the Premier tell Albertans if her government did any economic analysis whatsoever about possible consequences before plowing ahead with these ideological changes?

Ms Notley: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we've done a great deal of economic analysis. We know that we need to walk away from the archaic policies and practices of both parties over there in order to build our economy going forward and to improve our environmental record to get the very pipelines that those folks think are so important built, the same ones that haven't been built over the previous 10 years of ignoring the environment and ignoring people across this country. We won't do that. We will act responsibly on our climate change leadership plan, and that will contribute to getting those pipelines built, and it will also protect the environment.

Mr. Jean: The Balancing Pool, an independent body created to protect the electricity grid from political interference, has confirmed the rights of power companies to cancel their PPAs. The Premier apparently didn't get the memo. She's now preparing to use taxpayers' resources to challenge the Balancing Pool and these companies. It's a giant mess, and Albertans will be left to cover the cost of up to $1 billion per year because of NDP incompetence. Why can't the Premier admit her government made a mistake and that all power consumers in Alberta will now be paying the price?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the issue here is what the power companies believe the previous government agreed to. It is true that it is outrageously shameful what they think, because they believe that they got to sign contracts that send the profit always in their direction and the losses always in the direction of the consumers. That is shameful.

Mr. Jean: We know that this is just the beginning of the NDP experiments with power bills. This government is paying a consultant $100,000 a month to figure out how to shut down coal plants. There is no clear plan on how to replace the electricity except through either massive taxpayer subsidies or much higher power bills for Alberta families. My question is simple. How can Albertans trust that the NDP has their best interests at heart when everything this government has done has only made things much worse?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition says that he is 90 per cent agreed on everything with the leader of the third party, so my question is: are they 90 per cent agreed on a contract that power companies believe means that they keep all the profits and the public picks up all the losses? Do they agree with that? That is the question that I think should be answered.

The Speaker: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Municipal Grants in Place of Taxes

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, municipalities rely on provincial grants in lieu of taxes to pay for the municipal services that provincially owned facilities use. The previous government's budget included cutting the grants in lieu program on social and senior housing facilities. Since despite municipal concerns this government kept that cut in place, to the minister of seniors: how does she justify the province dodging responsibility and sticking taxpayers with the bill by transferring the cost for provincial social housing to municipalities?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the member for the question. He's quite right; it was the previous government who made the decision to cut this funding. We haven't been able to restore every cut that the previous government has made, but we do know that now is the time to invest in infrastructure like roads and bridges, and that's what we're doing, and that is a significant support to municipalities. We're working with them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, that didn't precisely answer the question. Last month the AUMA mayors' caucus met with the housing minister. The minister refused to reinstate this grant program. This hits municipalities hard; for example, Calgary, a $5 million loss; Lethbridge, a $913,000 loss. Now some municipalities are considering a moratorium on approving any further social and senior housing in their communities. Will the minister admit that they made a mistake and announce today the return of the grants in lieu of taxes program?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The unprecedented collapse in the oil price means that we need to make fiscally responsible decisions. Unfortunately, we're not in a position to approve every request for funding. Our government is proud of our relationship with municipalities and the investments we're making in these communities, and we're working well with our partners.

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government has seen no issue with drastically raising taxes on Albertans. Increased business tax, increased income tax, and the NDP PST carbon tax have all resulted in Albertans handing over more and more of their hard-earned money to this government. Provincial facilities have cost impacts on municipalities, yet this government refuses to pay when it's their turn. To the Premier: does the Premier think that it is fair that this government refuses to pay its fair share?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, to begin with, let me just be very clear that Alberta continues to have the lowest taxes of any province in the country. Secondly, that will remain the case because we know that now is not the time for more to come out. It's very interesting watching the folks over there because, you know, one day is a spending day, the next day is a cutting day, the next day is a billion-dollar cut day, and the next day is a billion-dollar spend day. You know, we just cannot possibly keep track of whether you want us to spend or cut, spend or cut. The minister made a very good point. We need to be responsible. We need to manage our finances prudently. We can't say yes to everything, and we're going to move forward on that basis.

The leader of the third party.

Government Spending

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the PC caucus launched Engage, a public conversation that asked Albertans what is important and how government should deliver its part of the picture. Time and again we've heard this government say that they can't cut spending without cutting front-line services. The PC caucus completely rejects this premise. Alberta's talented and knowledgeable public service, if empowered, will find a better way. Premier, will you empower the taxpayers' employees who are experts in Alberta public service to identify cost savings and then implement these savings quickly?

Ms Notley: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, that would be better than announcing a billion-dollar cut to health care without the slightest idea of how you were going to do it, which is exactly what the members opposite did, which, of course, is exactly why they didn't win the last election. Albertans didn't want a billion-dollar cut to health care, nor do they want a $4 billion health care cut, which is what they're talking about today.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, let me correct the Premier, who I don't believe was sincere with what she just said. In 2013-14 at a cost of $3.2 billion Alberta had 2.1 million emergency room visits, of which, according to AHS, only 10 per cent were real emergencies. Ninety per cent of that amount is $2.8 billion annually. So we're not looking for cuts. Will the government do something to redirect this overexpenditure in one area and find a way to deliver those services in a more appropriate and cost-effective way, as we do suggest?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, making sure that we're using the resources that we do have efficiently and effectively is an ongoing priority for this government. That's why we keep investments in numbers like 8-1-1, where you can call anywhere in Alberta and have an opportunity to speak directly to a registered nurse, talk through your symptoms, and find out whether or not you do need to go to emergency. We're not going to shut down emergency rooms and fire nurses and lay off tons of public service workers. It's important that we move forward in a sustainable responsible way and find efficiencies and invest in primary care.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the only ones talking about laying off doctors and nurses are on that side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the government's spending is out of control, and they are borrowing for operational expenses for the first time in decades. Finding savings today will avoid deep cuts later. That's how it works. To the Minister of Health. You know and we know that abuse of tobacco, alcohol, and drugs places huge burdens on health, justice, and social services. What will your government actually do to prevent harm before it costs a fortune and further harms Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the first things this government did was extend the ban on flavoured tobacco products to include the exemption that the members opposite approved, which was menthol. We have consistent practices, and they're showing that the numbers are going down and that youth are less susceptible to smoking. As well, we're continuing to move forward in a sustainable and reasonable way as opposed to magically pulling $4 billion of cuts out of thin air. If it was such low-hanging fruit, why didn't the members opposite address it when they were in government?

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mental health is an important topic and one that I'm pleased to see this government seems to be taking seriously. Now, there's very clear evidence to show that most mental health issues have first onset by age 24, and untreated mental illness has significant implications for academic success, productivity, substance use, and social relationships. Addressing mental health in Alberta's postsecondary system absolutely must be a priority. To the Minister of Advanced Education. This year marks the end of the three-year plan that allocated $12.5 million to postsecondary mental health. In your opinion has this been an effective program?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we've heard loud and clear from students all across the province of the value provided by the programs that were initiated under the previous round of funding that was allocated to those programs, and certainly I'm working with my colleague the Minister of Health to look at options for continuing to support mental health services on campuses all across this province.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad we seem to agree that it's a worthwhile program, but I think that, very clearly, it's one that is in need of improvement. Now, the current program treats students in Alberta's schedule 1 universities differently than the rest. Per capita funding was in some cases 30 times higher. Students at NAIT received $4 per full-time learner equivalent in mental health funding whereas the University of Lethbridge received $146 per FLE. To the same minister: do you agree that this inequity is absurd and should have been addressed sooner?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for pointing out the fact that the previous round of funding wasn't in fact given on a per capita basis. One of the things that we need to address is that access to mental health services is not equitable across the province. A student at NAIT, for example, lives in a large city that has more access to mental health services in the surrounding community than perhaps a student in Lethbridge or Grande Prairie would have access to. Providing equitable mental health funding is a priority for this government going forward.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that the minister and I are on the same page on this one. I wish, though, that you'd addressed the issue sooner. You still have an opportunity, though.

The students in Alberta's 26 postsecondary institutions, I'm sure we agree, are key to our continued prosperity as well as economic diversification in Alberta, but they need the tools to succeed, and that especially includes support for their mental well-being, which is enabled through stable, predictable, and equitable funding that does not discriminate against students based on what school they choose to attend. To the Minister of Advanced Education again: will you commit to providing stable, equitable, long-term funding...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the acknowledgement that the hon. member and I are on the same page, which is odd because he's usually on the same page as the Wildrose and the PCs.

At any rate, we are looking forward to making sure that predictable, sustainable funding is in place for all of our postsecondary institutions across the province, and that will include mental health supports for our students.

Petrochemical Diversification Program

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, the low price of oil is stressing families in my constituency of Edmonton-Manning. They tell me that they are worried about making ends meet and that they are looking at our government to take action. To the Minister of Energy: what steps are you taking to diversify our petrochemical industry and help get Alberta off the resource royalty roller coaster?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Well, first of all, we believe that creating jobs for Alberta families is our number one priority. A few weeks ago the minister of economic development and I announced a petrochemical diversification program that is a competitive program that will leverage $500 million of royalty credits into $5 billion of investment.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, given that many Albertan families are feeling the effects of this downturn and are still looking for work, to the same minister: how many jobs do you expect these investments to create?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We estimate that this program alone will create two to three projects around Alberta, create 3,000 jobs in the construction phase and 1,000 permanent jobs after production begins.

Ms Sweet: Mr. Speaker, given that I've heard from many constituents who have been struggling for some months now and are anxious about their future, again to the Energy minister: how soon can we expect Albertans to get back to work?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. We estimate that after this competitive program is done and the projects are awarded, work will begin by the end of this year in the construction; again, 3,000 jobs in construction, 1,000 permanent. And we, unlike what our opposition has said, are not picking winners and losers. These are 3,000 winner jobs and 1,000 winner jobs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation and WCB Review

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent internal government documents shed light on the implementation of Bill 6. The documents show that department officials warned the minister that Bill 6 would create – and I quote – panic. Now the government is preparing round-table discussions, and farmers need certainty, not panic. Can the minister commit to Albertans that actual farmers and ranchers, not just producer and labour groups, will be participating in these talks?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. I can assure this House and the Alberta public that actual farmers and ranchers are going to be at these technical working groups as will workers. It's important to remember that the legislation is about farm workers, and workers will be involved as will the whole industry across Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, the same internal documents recommended that there be a call centre established and manned by experts to field the numerous questions that Bill 6 left unanswered. Given that the members opposite refused to answer their phones or make themselves available until thousands of farmers from every corner of the province started protesting, why did the minister ignore his experts' advice in this regard?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I couldn't disagree with the member opposite more. I have been absolutely making myself available – I think he's probably aware of that – as have many people here on the front bench and behind me, who have made themselves available and continue to make themselves available. I'm absolutely looking forward to the next steps in this process.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government ignored advice on Bill 6's timing and consultation. Since the government is now launching a major review into the WCB, a broken monopoly that they're forcing upon rural Albertans, how can these same rural Albertans trust this minister to choose common sense over ideology on any recommended changes to WCB?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's absolutely critical that Albertans feel confident that the Workers' Compensation Board is providing fair compensation and meaningful rehabilitation. The review of the Workers' Compensation Board is long overdue. It hasn't been reviewed in 15 years, so we are taking a look at it. We will be engaging farmers, ranchers, and workers in all segments of the sectors that are covered by WCB to make sure that they are engaged in this conversation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently hosted a prebudget round-table in Calgary-Lougheed, and the recommendations of my constituents mirror our PC caucus's $4 billion challenge as outlined in our Engage document, which we are proud to launch today and which I will be tabling in the House this afternoon. So I'll ask the Finance minister: regarding the widespread economic concern, which has already negatively affected Alberta's historically stellar credit rating, will your government take the challenge of our constituents and our caucus to control spending through cost savings and efficiencies while ensuring quality front-line services?

Mr. Ceci: I appreciate the question, Mr. Speaker. Quality front-line services is a task we take very seriously in terms of funding appropriately, and we're doing that. We did that with Budget 2015. We'll continue to do that with Budget 2016.

I appreciate the engagement with your constituents. Many MLAs from this side have done the same thing and passed on the information. As well, thousands of Albertans have taken the opportunity to get in touch with us online and give us their feedback.

Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Minister.

Given that some accuse your government of having the same fervour for deficit and debt as the federal cousins and given that the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed don't share any ideologically different direction but do share the PC caucus's respect for fiscal restraint, again to the Finance minister: when might we expect a response from the government to the letter that I sent on behalf of our constituents, and beyond that, what assurance can you provide to all Albertans that your government will not slide into a damaging, unsustainable fiscal cycle of perpetual operating deficits?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm just thinking back to Budget 2015, where we presented that. One of the people who gave us a quote with regard to our borrowing for operating, the point you're bringing up – it's not unusual. Let me start with that. In fact, it's very usual at the point when the economy changes dramatically and revenues fall off. Indeed, the whole structure of budgets, whether they are provincial or federal, contains a certain automatic stabilization. David Dodge, former governor of the Bank of Canada, believes we're on the right track. We're going to be on the right track with Budget 2016 as well.

Mr. Rodney: And the Finance minister knows very well that there were other recommendations. I'm not sure how closely those are being followed.

Given that the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed have participated in this prebudget consultation, as have, as you have mentioned, thousands of other Albertans, and given that our constituents' advice to you is to control spending and debt levels and given that they are also urging your government to focus on job creation, which is another key focus of our PC caucus Engage document, to the Finance minister: how much of the advice from the constituents of Calgary-Lougheed and our caucus is reflected in the overall message that you've received from other Albertans? By the way, when did you send the budget ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: You know, the budget will be coming out and will be tabled on April 14. As soon as we have it ready, you'll get it.

In our prebudget tour we went around the province. Many cities and towns have been engaged: the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie. We held two telephone town halls, where over 66,000 Albertans listened for a period of time. We have heard many, many things. Some of those are reflected in your consultation, and we will be presenting all of those on April 14.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Airdrie.

PDD Service Delivery

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP have established a track record of implementing policy without consultation. We saw it with Bill 6, and now the government has taken aim at our most vulnerable by implementing a hasty transformational plan. A three-year consultation process was reduced to a rushed implementation period for all the hard-working PDD care providers in this province to complete the new and mandatory master service agreement. Why won't the minister acknowledge the need for a thoughtful and deliberate process for PDD care providers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will begin by saying that our government has stabilized services for the most vulnerable people in Alberta. Regarding PDD, it was our government who started consultation on safety standards, and that's the way we will move forward. Going forward in all our policies, we will consult the sector and do what's the right thing to do in consultation with the sector.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the NDP government's transformational plan includes a new provision where all service providers must now sign a master agreement and given that this agreement includes a gag clause preventing public commentary should care providers have comments or concerns about their industry, how can the minister say that Alberta's most vulnerable are being adequately protected when those directly involved in PDD care cannot be whistle-blowers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned before, for any step, any policy going forward, we will consult PDD, and we will do what's recommended by the sector. That's the approach we have taken with safety standards, and that's the approach we will take going forward.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that these rushed timelines will harm and are harming service delivery for those with developmental disabilities and given the fact that the government's moves to date are removing local decision-making, showing that they have no faith in the great work that the providers do in our communities, how can this minister not see that his transformation of the PDD funding structure is rushed, ill consulted, and lacking the confidence of PDD leaders?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will reiterate one more time that these issues are important to our government. We intend to work with PDD service providers on these issues, and we will get this right.

I want to mention that I'm glad to hear that from that side of the House because these are stale issues for them, that they have no interest in legislating.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week I received a very concerning letter from the village of Vilna. It was in regard to this government's decision not to reinstate the grant in lieu of taxes for 25,000 housing units across the province, over $11,000 to this small village alone. Downloading the cost of these units onto municipalities is wrong, especially since the primary owner of the units is the government of Alberta. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: why does this government want everyday Albertans to pay extra to cover the government's share?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is very proud of our relationship with municipalities. This decision was made by the previous government, and at this difficult time economically we can't reinstate every cut that the previous government made. We're working with municipalities and supporting them through investment in infrastructure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are tired of this government raising their taxes. Given that without this funding municipalities will have to raise taxes on property owners, who are already struggling to make ends meet, many of them seniors and people on AISH, why does the minister want our municipal partners to take the heat for yet another NDP tax increase?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. As the Premier said very well earlier today, we have the lowest taxes in the country, and that remains so. You know, the Official Opposition can't have it both ways. They can't be saying that they're going to have reckless cuts and then demanding that we invest more. We need to be prudently making good fiscal decisions, and that's what this government is doing.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall I asked the Minister of Municipal Affairs about a new tax category in the county of Smoky Lake called uncollectable taxes – these extra taxes were due to the uncollected linear tax from industry – and the minister didn't have a good answer for me then, but she assured me that the government was committed to working with municipal governments to meet their revenue shortfalls. How is this government helping municipalities and ratepayers by saddling them with yet another tax burden?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. The truth is that our government is fully committed to providing municipalities with the tools and resources they need to serve Albertans. We are investing $34 billion in necessary roads, schools, transit, and other public infrastructure to provide communities with the facilities they need. We are working hard within our budget to be responsible fiscal managers. We take that responsibility seriously. But again I have to say: spend money, you know, but don't spend money. Spend money; don't spend money.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Job Creation

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Small and medium-sized business are the backbone and job creators of Alberta. Their entrepreneurial spirit creates, sustains, grows, and diversifies the provincial economy. The most competitive business climate in Canada, known to many as the Alberta advantage, previously allowed them to succeed. This government instead introduced the 27,000 jobs plan, scrutinized by our caucus and the business community. To the minister of economic development: for the record, how many jobs out of 27,000 did your plan create? Just a number, please, not a list of hollow promises, programs, or one-job platitudes around creation of economic development.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. Quite frankly, our government has released a number of initiatives that we're doing to help small-business owners and entrepreneurs, starting last fall, when we made more than $2 billion in capital available through ATB, through the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, and through AIMCo. As well, the Minister of Labour announced our STEP program, which is going to be accessible to small-business owners this year. Let's keep in mind as well that under our government we still have the lowest taxes in the country.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that answer as one job.

Given that it is painfully obvious that this government's flagship job-creation strategies are destined for abysmal failure, it is time for a different approach, and given that the Engage document released today by the PC caucus outlines a viable alternative, the small-business venture capital tax credit, to the minister of economic development: will we see this tax credit in next week's budget? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I know it's not the members' opposite strong suit to be patient, but what they do need to wait for is April 14, when the Finance minister will table the budget. All of the House and all of Alberta will see that our government is committed to working with the job creators – that's small businesses, entrepreneurs, and our industry friends – in order to help create the right conditions to create jobs in Alberta so that Alberta remains the best province to invest in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government promised Albertans a very nimble 27,000 jobs plan, that was doomed to fail, and given that small-business venture tax credits have been proven in neighbouring jurisdictions to return almost $2 to the provincial treasury for every $1 spent in tax credits – it seems this government is intent on another failed plan. To the Minister of Finance: given that this very common-sense idea could yield exceptional results, if the minister of economic development refuses to help businesses and communities around Alberta, will you?

Mr. Ceci: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade did not say that he wouldn't help. He's helping already. He's been involved with an international tour. He's been around this province. He'll continue to work as quickly and as hard as possible to support the economic development and trade that this province needs to get itself back on its feet. Stay tuned for April 14 at 3 p.m.

Gay-straight Alliances in Schools

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, we know that gay-straight alliances and queer-straight alliances are providing essential supports for schools in Alberta. It's important to support students to continue establishing these groups as it is their legal right. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to promote the establishment of GSAs and QSAs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very important question. We know that GSAs have the potential to save lives, and we're going to do all we can to support these groups, to make sure that they're in all schools that want them. We all know that many schools already have gay-straight alliances, and we will continue to work with school boards to ensure that students who want to form a GSA or a QSA can do so in any school in the province of Alberta. We know that GSAs and antihomophobic policies in place within schools have a positive impact for all students in the schools and help to save lives.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've heard some concerns from people who are worried about schools following through with implementation, the necessary policies to ensure that our students have the supports and protection that they need, again to the minister: what is being done to ensure that all authorities are following through with their legal responsibilities when it comes to establishing GSAs and QSAs?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I've been visiting schools and meeting with students who belong to gay-straight or queer-straight alliances across the province. These students have been telling me how much it means for them to know that they are supported. They have told us that legislative changes to support LGBTQ students have the potential to save lives. The stakes of this work are very high, and I count on all of you here in this Assembly to help us get the job done.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're right. It does save lives. I've actually known a lot of people that it's saved the lives of.

What other stories are you hearing from the community about the students involved in the GSAs and QSAs in the province, that make such a significant difference every day?

Mr. Eggen: Well, we certainly all know that when kids are being bullied or are experiencing stress, they don't do well in school. The School Act requires school authorities to ensure welcoming, caring, respectful, safe learning environments for all students and ensures that students who want to form a GSA or a QSA are able to do so. These laws, Mr. Speaker, are already in place. Again, the establishment of GSAs as well as other policies being followed in schools helps to ensure that the most vulnerable students can thrive in a welcoming, safe, and respectful school environment. We expect nothing less for all of our students in the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Government Agencies, Boards, and Commissions

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism. There are many Alberta agencies, boards, and commissions under the Culture and Tourism banner. Alberta Finance defines ABCs as having some degree of autonomy from the government. They're arm's-length entities, independent boards that are only required to report to the government once a year. Yet when I try and contact them, some have become tight-lipped and say that they need permission from the minister to speak to me. Is it possible that these so-called arm's-length ABCs are in fact being micromanaged by the minister?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Of course, that's not the case. What I understand is that there were some questions that were directed to different departments in the ministry. It is often the case that when you go into a ministry, the minister is informed that the questions have been asked, which I believe is normal practice. I believe that there is a review already under way for ABCs. We'll continue to do that, and once we have that report, we will present it to the Chamber.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, being informed is one thing, but given that I have received a letter from one of these minister's arm's-length agencies which told me that it could not meet with me without the minister's explicit permission, I fail to see how these boards are not being kept under the minister's thumb. Why do these organizations feel the need to seek permission from the minister instead of actually remaining at arm's length?

Miranda: Mr. Speaker, as the minister I am responsible for everything that happens in every single one of these agencies, boards, and commissions. Therefore, I will definitely – I do not know; I have not seen that letter. If you could please forward it to me, I will be able to talk more to it. But I can tell you right now that, absolutely, when everybody has a question, they come to the ministry and we decide how we allocate the resources and where I send the questions to.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, information is one thing, but given that the members opposite ran on a platform of an open and transparent government, I would expect these boards and commissions not to feel the need to warn the minister when a member seeks to speak with them. Can the minister explain exactly how these types of controlling relationships create the open and transparent government that the NDP promised?

Miranda: Mr. Speaker, again I have to say that when a question comes into the ministry, of course I'm going to be informed what the question is. If the member across wanted to have a question, all the member had to do was contact my office, and I would be more than happy to have that discussion. You know what? This is what a ministry is supposed to do. It's supposed to be transparent. It's supposed to be responsible. However, I am accountable for everything that happens in that ministry; therefore, yes, of course they're going to ask me what's going on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By now even this government must have seen that its minimum wage plan is hurting small business as well as the very people it wants to help. Our PC caucus's Engage document underlines the importance of a business-friendly environment for a strong economy. To the Minister of Labour:

given that an Alberta Chambers of Commerce survey indicated that businesses have laid off workers – since October 1 two-thirds of them have been minimum wage earners – what do your own numbers show about the wage hike's effect on unemployment for minimum wage employees?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We want to make sure that single parents working for minimum wage can take care of their families, and that is why we are supporting a phase-in of a $15 an hour minimum wage. We are working with our stakeholders and our partners as we go through this process. I have reviewed the survey done by the Alberta Chambers of Commerce as well as met with the Alberta Chambers of Commerce as part of the engagement plan. In the meantime we are currently monitoring the situation so that we can make informed decisions about the phase-in as we move forward.

Mr. Ellis: Given that this government indicated that imposing a higher minimum wage would particularly help single mothers and underskilled workers and given that the wage hike is actually causing greater unemployment for these workers and given that the business community is offering common-sense solutions that will truly help underskilled workers and other low-income Albertans while maintaining their jobs, to the same minister: what are your comments on the business community's well-thought-out alternative solutions?

The Speaker: Madam Minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are continuing to engage our stakeholders like the business community to review their suggestions as we continue supporting the phase-in of a $15 an hour minimum wage. Nobody who works a 40-hour work week should be going to a food bank to support their family. We will work with our partners and look at all ideas as we support that phase-in going forward.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you to the minister for mentioning "engage."

Given that the way this government is layering on costs for businesses shows a lack of understanding of economic realities and given that as our province's most diverse base the small-business sector is a critical job creator during economic downturns and given that, as predicted, this ill-thought-out wage plan is actually hurting the people this government claims it most wants to help, to the same minister: why do you insist on pigeonholing people into minimum wage jobs when you could work with the business sector and help prepare low-income Albertans for better jobs?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The member's premise of his first two questions is patently false as far as talking about all of the people earning minimum wage that are being laid off. Our government has been going around the province consulting with small businesses, looking for ways that our government can act as a partner with the business community. We recognize that small businesses account for 95 per cent of Alberta's GDP and that they are the economic drivers of our province. The member will have to wait for April 14, where all members of the House will see a number of initiatives our government is taking to support small businesses and ensure that Alberta is the best place ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Royal Alberta Museum

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Downtown Edmonton is undergoing an unprecedented era of revitalization. There's a lot of new construction, including the construction of the new Royal Alberta Museum, and I've got to say that the residents of Edmonton-Centre were very excited for this great addition. We recognize that there are great benefits that come from tourism to our province, and the opening of this museum has the potential to have a big impact on our economy here in Edmonton-Centre. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you give us an update here in the House on how the construction is proceeding for this project and when we can expect the museum to be open for Albertans to visit?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that question, hon. member. I'm pleased to be able to report to the House that the construction of the new Royal Alberta Museum, right downtown next to city hall, is on time and on schedule and will be opening very shortly, some months from now. We'll be moving, then, the various displays and artifacts from the existing Royal Alberta Museum into the new one, and we're expecting it to open in 2017.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that with the opening of the new museum we are going to have an incredible opportunity and some real potential when it comes to redevelopment of the previous museum site and given that my office has received correspondence from many residents regarding its future use, again to the minister: does your department have at this time any specific plans for the Glenora Royal Alberta Museum site?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the public that no decision has been made about the future use of the existing museum building. Due diligence for the Royal Alberta Museum at the old location means looking at all of the options. We have experts in-house who are looking at those options to repurpose the facility. Once we have all of the information, we'll also explore all potential uses for that building.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, along those lines, given that the Glenora site for the RAM will be expected to be home to staff for about another three years, thus allowing a fair amount of time here for consideration, and given that I've spoken with many groups and individuals who have ideas for the site's reuse, again to the Infrastructure minister: when you make future decisions about the use of this property, will Albertans have a chance to comment on potential proposals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to assure the hon. member and all Albertans that this is an important facility. It will be in use for about three years as we transition to the new location – he's absolutely right about that – and we need to make careful, thoughtful decisions. There will be consultation with the community and with Albertans about the future use of that building.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mountain View Seniors' Housing

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we are blessed to have many nonprofits working towards the common good. One, Mountain View Seniors' Housing, operates seniors' lodges, self-contained apartments, and subsidized family housing in three local communities. It's come to my attention that more than a dozen of those provincially owned facilities operated by Mountain View Seniors' Housing are sitting empty, unable to be rented until urgent maintenance and repairs are completed. Is the Minister of Seniors and Housing aware of this situation, and what does she plan to do about it?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Of course, investing in seniors' housing, affordable housing, making sure that Albertans have the housing they need is very important to this government. As has been said already today, I recommend the member wait for the budget on April 14, and he'll see significant support in that area.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, for seniors on fixed incomes and for low-income families every nickel counts, and every tax increase this government imposes makes it more difficult. At a time when affordable housing is in such short supply, how can the minister justify allowing 13 properties out of only 20 that are available, including 40 bedrooms, to sit vacant and in a state of disrepair?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This is a very important question. The truth is that when we came into government, there was a billion dollars of deferred maintenance needed, so he's very right that there are gaps and challenges in this area. We as a government are committed to investing in this area. We want Albertans to have the proper housing for seniors and for people on low incomes, and we're working to have that happen.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that nonprofits like Mountain View Seniors' Housing strongly support direct rent subsidies to prevent these kinds of long-term maintenance deficiencies and costs, what is the minister going to do to ensure these are repaired and/or additional rent subsidies are provided so that more individuals can be helped?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. This is an area that I'm very concerned about and very passionate about. I just want to assure him that we as a government are very committed to making sure that people have affordable housing in Alberta, making sure that seniors have homes that they can stay in and live well in, and that there are facilities that they can move to when needed. We're very much looking forward to telling you more details about that very shortly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Spider-Mable and Daffodil Month

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is Daffodil Month, and I'm honoured to say that my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud is home to the local superhero Mable Tooke, who was here earlier. She's also known as Spider-Mable. Spider-Mable is a familiar face to Edmontonians and, in fact, the world after saving the Oilers captain Andrew Ference from an evil villain last year. Also last year, at a spinathon at Riverbend junior high I joined the Minister of Education and many politicians as well as sports figures and heard of Spider-Mable's heroics and her story as a cancer survivor, which offers hope to all Canadians living with cancer.

Mable was just four years old when she was diagnosed with ALL. She finished her last chemotherapy in November 2015, the day after her seventh birthday. But she knows the fight isn't over, and that's why she was here with her parents and her grandparents and her partners in cancer-fighting from the Canadian Cancer Society.

April is Daffodil Month, and our guests are asking us to purchase and wear the daffodil pin to show people living with cancer that they're not alone and to remember those this disease has taken. Mr. Speaker, I'm an oncologist who treats adult patients with ALL, and I, obviously, do clinical research. That research was supported by the Canadian Cancer Society and pursued in Edmonton and Calgary, and it has markedly improved the outlook for my patients and actually all patients in Canada with ALL. I'm a strong supporter of and a donor to the Canadian Cancer Society for over 35 years. We need to continue supporting them in this important research into preventing and treating cancer. That's why I challenge this House to stand with Spider-Mable and proudly wear this daffodil pin.

Thank you very much.

Hope Bridges Society

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak about a community-based not-for-profit organization in my constituency that works to change hearts and minds through the universal language of art, the Hope Bridges Society. The Hope Bridges Society grew out of Project HOPE, a therapeutic program in the Golden Hills school division for children aged 3 to 18 years with severe learning needs, including communication, cognitive, self-help, social, emotional, and behavioural difficulties.

When children involved with Project HOPE graduated high school, there were still barriers to entering the next phases of their lives. To bridge the gap, a group of concerned community members in Strathmore got together and discovered that these children were not the only marginalized members in the community. There were seniors and new Canadians as well.

How can we support those with learning disabilities, seniors, and new Canadians who are isolated and build a stronger community? How can we reach the hearts and minds of everyone who lives in the area of Wheatland county so that everyone belongs and is valued? For Hope Bridges, they found the answer in the universal language of the arts, where they are not judged, where they are all uniquely valued, where everyone belongs and everyone is welcomed. The isolation is overcome by using the arts to promote connection and wellness through participation and inclusion.

On April 16 the Hope Bridges Society will hold its third annual fundraising art and wine auction at the Strathmore Golf Club, from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. I'll be there to support this terrific community organization, that sets such an excellent example for Albertans everywhere, and I hope that other members of this House will join me there, too.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The leader of the third party.

Progressive Conservative Engage Initiative

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a rich and diverse history. Together we have experienced prosperity and hardship, and through both we remain caring, innovative, and hard-working people seeking opportunity in striving to fulfill our potential. We share the vision of making that dream a reality for each and every Albertan.

Today the PC caucus kicked off a real conversation with Albertans by launching Engage. We are seeking frank and open feedback from Albertans. For us Progressive Conservatives this means going back to our roots. Simply telling people what we think is not consultation. What Engage does is that it goes to the next step. We are continuing the process of reaching out, listening, and learning. The web page is abpcmla.ca/engage. Our caucus does not have all the answers; with Engage we are encouraging and welcoming all feedback. We will share the feedback in the hope that hearing from Albertans concerned about their province will inspire this government to change course.

Whether we sit on the government or opposition benches, the priority needs to be getting Alberta back to work. The need to achieve good government does not stop regardless of who is sitting in the Premier's chair. Our PC caucus will draw on our experience in government and from the many wins and losses we have experienced over the years. As Albertans we want to see this province at its best, and we have many ideas that we are keen to share. We also know that we don't have all the answers, but we do know and we're confident that in partnership with other Albertans and those people who work for Albertans, we can move forward in a positive and constructive way.

We invite all of Alberta to join our PC caucus in recommending positive changes to the current government. Won't you engage us in this important conversation?

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Edmonton Seahawks Football Club

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to tell you and all members of the Assembly more about the north Edmonton football association the Edmonton Seahawks. NEMFA is a nonprofit that was formed in 1993 and is one of only two organizations providing minor football to children and youth in north Edmonton. The Edmonton Seahawks clubhouse is in my constituency of Edmonton-Castle Downs.

The football program is offered to children and youth at four levels, serving boys and girls aged 8 to 17, providing a safe, affordable football opportunity to the children and youth in north Edmonton. The Seahawks promote teamwork, leadership, sportsmanship, and healthy lifestyles with a focus on development of participants. There are not any paid staff, and a child has never been turned away due to financial difficulty. They provide in excess of 40 trained volunteers, made up of current parents, former parents, and former players that went through the program. The Seahawks motto is Once a Seahawk, Always a Seahawk.

Our family joined the Seahawks when our youngest son was eight. I have been a team manager, and my husband has been and still is one of the coaches. The players still call me Lady Coach. Our son played on the peewee team last year, and they won the city tier 3 championship. Many parents and players from other Seahawks teams were there to cheer them on.

The Edmonton Seahawks have strong relationships with their community and with the Edmonton Eskimos. The Eskimos have been involved with the program for many years, and players have come to our practices to meet the children and to participate in practice. The Seahawks have also been invited to Eskimos games to cheer on the players through the tunnel run and to play half-time matches against other minor football teams.

Thank you to the board members that are here today. Go Seahawks go.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead. Please remain seated, hon. member.

Lignin Recovery Plant in Hinton

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is positioning the province as a leader in addressing climate change issues by encouraging the use of renewables. I'm proud to say that West Fraser Mills Hinton Pulp, a company in my constituency of West Yellowhead, is a true leader pioneering this change. Hinton Pulp, with their partners FPInnovations and EcoSynthetix Corporation, are encouraging the use of lignin, a natural glue that holds wood together, as an alternative to petroleum-based resin. Hinton Pulp, by using FPInnovations patented LignoForce process to recover lignin from black liquor, will see the construction of Canada's first commercial lignin recovery plant.

The 30-ton-per-day lignin petroleum recovery plant is expected to be a boon to industries looking to incorporate lignin into their product lines. This $37.5 million project has been funded in part by federal and provincial government programs and has received major investments from individual entrepreneurs and companies.

If processed properly, lignin can replace petroleum-derived resins used intensively in manufacturing of plywood and other engineered wood products. Lignin is as good as conventional petroleum-based resin and has the potential to lower production costs. Most importantly, it cuts down on greenhouse gas emissions.

The demand for lignin is forecasted to grow as more companies find suitable applications. To meet these growing demands, the Canadian codevelopers Noram engineering and FPInnovations intend on marketing the LignoForce system to other kraft mills trying to capitalize on their black liquor.

Current research focuses on diversifying the use of lignin as an adhesive application for plywood and other products.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Tourism Promotion

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the weather starts to get nicer and spring and summer travel plans begin to take shape, I'd like to highlight the incredible opportunities that are available in Alberta tourism. As many in this House will know, tourism is a significant driver of our province's economy. Especially with the current downturn that our province is facing, attracting visitors and encouraging Albertans to stay local during their spring and summer vacations is incredibly important. According to tourism stats almost two-thirds of Alberta tourism expenditures come from Albertans. With a low Canadian dollar and many Albertans having to cut back due to the current economic climate, staying in Alberta for a summer vacation does make good sense.

A quick Google search shows that articles are showing up in papers in Canada and the U.S., even the LA Times, marketing Alberta as the place to go this summer. I couldn't agree more. From the badlands to the Rockies, the Taste of Edmonton to the Calgary Stampede and, yes, even the Ponoka Stampede, world-class fishing in northern Alberta, other things: there's so much to see and do across our vast province. I know that my family will be enjoying Alberta's great backyard this summer, and I would encourage all members of the House to spread the same message and do the same.

Finally, I'd be remiss if I didn't point out that the NDP government isn't actually helping encourage tourism in our province because of the $3 billion carbon tax. The fact of the matter is that the higher cost of keeping the lights on in a hotel or filling up on a tank of gas will inevitably be downloaded to that tourism consumer. I sincerely hope the NDP government will re-examine this risky and ideological antitourism policy.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I request leave to present the following petition that has been received for private bills under Standing Order 98(2): the petition of Laird Hunter, counsel to the Bow Valley Community Foundation, for the Bow Valley Community Foundation Repeal Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to request the unanimous consent of the House to waive Standing Order 7(7) to allow the daily Routine to be concluded.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 201 Election Recall Act

[Debate adjourned March 14: Mr. Cyr speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon to close debate.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to close debate on second reading for Bill 201, the Election Recall Act, and I do so with mixed feelings. This debate has highlighted for me the real strengths and weaknesses that are so clearly evident in our Westminster parliamentary form of democracy. This Legislature is made up of talented individuals chosen by the people of Alberta to be able to work together because of our commitment to this experiment in governance that we call democracy. Yet, obviously, we are divided by political ideology, human frailness, individuality, and indeed uniqueness.

Let me be clear. This is a private member's bill. I did not ask my leader for permission to present this bill, but out of courtesy I informed him and my caucus. This is not an opposition bill, although it may have the support of some of the opposition. Nor should it be a mystery to this House if many of the Wildrose support this bill, as I am sure that many of our MLAs ran for the Wildrose Party because of our belief in recall.

There is only one MLA in this House that truly knows why this bill was chosen to be brought before the Legislature, and that person is myself. I brought this bill before this House to redress a serious imbalance of power that all Albertans know exists. A problem in our system, as I see it, is that all too often MLAs vote against the wishes of their constituents because of party discipline. I brought this bill before the Legislature because I believe, my constituents and many, many Albertans believe that it would make our democracy more accountable. Full stop. That's the reason.

So many of the concerns against this bill that argued it was a way to get around financing laws are mistaken. This bill is not an orchestrated attack by the opposition because we didn't like the results of the election. Indeed, the bill builds in an 18-month threshold before recall could be enacted to deal with that scenario. Similarly, this bill was not an attempt to do an end run around financing laws, which we the Wildrose voted along with the government to enact earlier this year. These and other arguments were nothing but political posturing and a visible reflection of the problem of how party politics can warp the debate in this House.

However, there were arguments presented that had merit in my eyes. For those members who had issues with this bill, I strongly suggest that you support the bill in principle and send it to Committee of the Whole. I assure the hon. members that I will be open to all amendments that would improve this bill, especially those around the thresholds of numbers and financing. That is how democracy is supposed to work. The creating and passing of legislation should be a collaborative effort of all of the MLAs in this House.

So I say to this House that a vote against this bill will not be a vote against thresholds and financing or other arguments that I have heard. Instead, a vote against this bill will be a clear reflection that you do not believe in the principle of recall. I leave it to you and your constituents to figure out at the next general election the importance of your rejection of recall as a way to improve our democracy.

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster addressed the long-standing debate about whether an MLA is elected to simply obey the wishes of his or her constituents or has the autonomy to use his or her own judgment and to vote in disagreement with those who elected him or her. My answer to your concern is that recall will impact this debate in at least one way; it shifts the balance. Presently the MLA will often place his or her party's concerns above those of their constituents. With recall, a new balance evolves. The MLA must give more consideration to those who elected them while still wrestling with their conscience and the desires of their party. A vote against this bill will not eliminate personal conscience or the requirement to defend minority rights from the tyranny of the majority, but it will ensure that you must carefully consider the wishes of your constituents when you make your decision.

I close this debate with an appeal to this House for the support of this bill in principle. Send this bill to Committee of the Whole, where amendments can be proposed and either accepted or rejected.

Once this process has occurred, then the final judgment on this bill should be rendered by the House.

Thank you.

[Motion for second reading of Bill 201 lost]

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Point of Order Division

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, something that has created some concern for me. I think that it's perhaps instructive and useful for members of the House to be reminded of a matter of decorum during the course of divisions.

That matter of decorum is that during divisions, according to page 639 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, there is to be no movement around the House, and indeed there is supposed to be no noise in the House from the time that the question is put, while the Clerk is conducting the important work of taking the roll and calling the votes. I will remind the hon. members that during that time it is indeed the Clerk who has the floor and that all comments that are made on either side of the House are not recorded in Hansard and therefore do not become part of the public record. However, we have seen in the past and we saw again today that as soon as certain hon. members stood to vote on an issue, they had comments directed in their direction. This is inappropriate. Votes should be taken, and hon. members should be treated as honourable members and allowed to vote their conscience and vote according to the procedures.

Although Standing Order 32, which deals with divisions in our standing orders, does not specifically make reference with regard to the conduct of members during the course of divisions, House of Commons Procedure and Practice is very clear. We have seen, in fact, in a number of cases during the course of taking divisions in this House where that practice has not been followed. I would just encourage and urge you, Mr. Speaker, to encourage hon. members to follow that practice in the future.

The Speaker: Are there any other comments? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise very briefly to thank the hon. member for raising the point of order today. Certainly, on behalf of the Wildrose caucus I'll take this under advisement, and if there's anything that we can do to add to the process during recorded divisions, we'd be happy to assist.

The Speaker: Are there any other comments?

Hon. member, thank you for drawing it to my attention, to the House's attention. I think the point is well taken. I did not see movement, but I thought I heard some sound. I think the principle that's being addressed to all sides of the House is: show respect at this crucial time. The hon. member is correct. It is the Clerk's floor at that particular time. It's a crucial part of the process, voting, and I'd ask that each of you show respect.

Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Mr. Speaker, thanks so much for allowing me to rise and speak about the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. I was very happy to hear that there's been lots of debate about affordable housing in the House today and in the past weeks, and I'm very excited to get the opportunity to talk about it again.

I just want to thank the members of my constituency of Calgary-East, whom I'm proud to represent here today. The idea for this bill arose from conversations that I've had with constituents on their doorsteps and in my constituency office. These people are our seniors, single parents, new Canadians, and women escaping violence. I've spoken with municipal officials and local organizations like Horizon Housing, Women Together Ending Poverty, Momentum, Sunrise Community Link, the Calgary Housing Corporation, the Wood Buffalo housing corporation, and the Alberta chapter of the Canadian Home Builders' Association. I just want to take a second to acknowledge Jim Rivait and Wendy Jabusch, who are here in the House this afternoon to watch debate on this bill.

All of these organizations are aware of the problem. We have too many people having a hard time finding and keeping a home here in Alberta. There's much expertise available in Alberta to draw from and much work being done. The aim of this bill is to hear from many Albertans and to take a big-picture look at this crucial issue. I want to allow a committee to conduct a comprehensive review of affordable housing issues in this province. I want a committee to make recommendations that would make Alberta a province committed to housing security, a province where every Albertan has a safe, secure place to call home. These are recommendations that I hope will be realized.

Mr. Speaker, affordable housing is a priority for Albertans, and therefore it is a priority for our government. In order for housing to be considered affordable, it needs to cost less than 30 per cent of a household's before-tax income. Households exceeding 30 per cent are said to be in core housing need. Thousands of Albertans are in core housing need at this time. The latest census data, from 2011, found that over 23 per cent of renters in the province and approximately 10.7 per cent of all households in the province are in this core housing need. In 2015 the Edmonton Social Planning Council reported that the number of households in core housing need was trending upwards in the Edmonton area.

I'd like everybody to take a moment and just imagine someone who is in this situation, someone who makes $15 an hour, which is currently above minimum wage. Thirty per cent of that person's monthly income is $800 before taxes. I don't know if you've tried to find somewhere to live in Calgary or Edmonton or, really, anywhere in the province for $800 a month, including utilities, lately. I think you'll find that it's extremely difficult.

I have a friend and former constituent who was able to come to Calgary and to leave her naturally devastated country of Nepal after the earthquake. She came here to try and make a better life for herself and for her young son; however, once she was here, her life took a turn into further, more difficult circumstances. Her husband became physically violent. She was fortunately able to flee with her young son, and she was helped by a women's shelter. However, at a point you have to leave a women's shelter, as we've discussed previously in the House.

This friend of mine had to find affordable housing, and she had to find daycare for her son. Her son had to move schools. This woman makes $12 an hour working full-time at a fast-food restaurant. She looked for a suitable apartment for half a year, and she was finally able to secure a one-bedroom basement suite. Now, this suite is not legal. It doesn't have a separate entrance. It doesn't have separate laundry, and it's located, you know, some days an hour away from her job via transit. Now, it does include free Wi-Fi, but I still think she's not getting a very good deal.

Housing is a basic human right. It's something that we learn about in school very early on. I recall from fourth grade, la quatrième année de Mlle Labonté, that we learned about the human need for food and shelter and water, and we made posters about those things. Humans' need for shelter is something that we learned very early on in school. In fact, as I learned later on in school, there are many fundamental human rights. Adequate housing is a fundamental human right enshrined under article 25 of the UN declaration of human rights. Safe, adequate housing is essential to social well-being.

Mr. Speaker, emergency shelters are not adequate housing, and cars are not adequate housing. It's not acceptable for someone to be asked for six months of rent up front. It's not acceptable for someone's rent to go up hundreds to thousands of dollars with only three months' warning. What are we saying as a society when mortgages on most three-bedroom houses cost less than the monthly cost of renting a two-bedroom apartment?

Housing in Alberta is at a crisis point. My office deals with people who want to get into Calgary Housing every day. I have spoken with a father of a new Canadian family who has cancer, who wants to make sure that his wife and children are cared for. I've spoken to seniors on fixed income. I've spoken to, you know, a single mom whose roommate moved out, and she couldn't afford the rent anymore. These are all people who need social housing and who are precariously housed. They are at risk of becoming homeless, and I have to tell them that the wait-list is huge. There are over 3,000 people on the wait-list to get into Calgary Housing and more than 15,000 people on the wait-list for social housing across Alberta. Wait times vary depending on the housing program or the type of housing requested.

I just want to tell you about another constituent who's in this situation, who's been on the wait-list for Calgary Housing for over a year. He's from Afghanistan. He's lived here in Canada for three years, and he works the night shift at Cargill as a side puller. This man lives in a three-bedroom house with five other adults. One of the bedrooms in that house is occupied by a whole family that has a baby. He lives in this situation because despite working full-time and taking English classes during the day, he can't afford his own apartment. His rent has recently also been increased.

There's a steadily increasing demand for affordable housing, but we have limited supply, as has been noted. Alberta is expected to grow by more than a million people in the next decade and two million people by 2041. This is a problem that urgently needs to be addressed, and it's not something that's going to disappear.

Alberta's affordable housing infrastructure is also aging. Many of the buildings are between 30 and 60 years old, and operating costs, including utilities and repairs, are increasing. Very few social housing units have been constructed since 1993, which is when the federal government stopped funding social housing.

We're facing difficult times in Alberta right now. Right now in Alberta more people are facing the possibility of homelessness. I would submit that hard times are, in fact, the best times to invest in solutions that will help our most vulnerable immediately and will help all of us in the long run. In difficult times Albertans have always worked together. Our government will not leave our most vulnerable neighbours behind, and this bill supports that commitment. I'm proud to be part of a government that is committed to making thoughtful decisions about how we move forward with respect to affordable housing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to establish a committee that is tasked with developing recommendations to ensure all Albertans have the benefits of safe, appropriate, and affordable housing. The committee will make recommendations to ensure Albertans can enjoy the human right of housing security. There hasn't been a committee on affordable housing since 2007, which was under very different economic circumstances, but housing remains a critical issue whether the economy is booming or contracting because each situation puts pressure on low-income households' ability to maintain housing.

There are too many Albertans, my constituents and yours, who are working hard to provide good lives for themselves and their children but have to deal with situations that make this very difficult. I believe that everyone here in this room wants to make a positive difference in the lives of Albertans. I believe that all Albertans – those in low-wage jobs, those with disabilities, seniors who've worked their whole lives in Alberta – should be able to afford their own safe, legal home. Mr. Speaker, I'm hopeful that we can do better for people, that every Albertan can have a comfortable place to call home, a place that they don't need to fear will be taken away from them.

Now, I do have a whole section on work that's currently being done, but as I am running out of time, I will leave that to further debate. I do want to acknowledge that there is plenty of work being done by excellent nonprofits and local organizations all over the province to fill the gaps that are due to a lack of planning on behalf of previous provincial and federal governments.

Really, people who know me know that I'm a big-picture person. I'm a systemic change person. I know that the social housing solutions of the '70s aren't going to work for us today here in Alberta. We need new ideas. This is why I want to strike a committee instead of choosing to propose specific solutions. In order to achieve a change that works – whether that change is in a business, whether that change is in a school, whether it's in a community – you have to consult the people who are affected, and you have to use their ideas. For a problem of this magnitude we need a made-in-Alberta solution. A committee is a democratic process where everyone can be heard and all voices can be considered.

To achieve systemic change in how we house people, we need not only include but embrace all stakeholders. We need to honour all points of view on such a dynamic issue and set upon a course that examines our options in creating the most equitable path forward. Issues I've included in my bill are issues my constituents care about: rent regulation, mobile-home park rent, security deposits, and affordable home ownership. These are things I've said that I would work on, but I do want to note that the bill is not limited to those considerations. I wanted to keep it wide open.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. To confirm, you did say that you are moving second reading of Bill 202?

Ms Luff: Second reading, yes.

The Speaker: Thank you.

I would recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak on Bill 202 and the concerns I have with this bill as it is presently laid forth. Albertans are taking note of this government's dependency on creating endless reviews on matters such as the one before us, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. If this government insists on pushing these reviews instead of taking real action to help Albertans as they suffer during this economic downturn, they should at least be formulated in such a way that this can be helpful. Reviews like this should be launched with a careful balance between the dichotomy of market assessment and policy recommendations. Unfortunately, this government has tipped the scales of this review toward the side of policy recommendations. Their decision to do so only shows that the NDP government is becoming increasingly less concerned with market realities and more concerned with slanted recommendations.

The meat of this bill is contained in section 3(2), which stipulates that the report must include:

- (a) rent regulation;
- (b) rent subsidies;
- (c) security deposits;
- (d) affordability of rental rates including rates for the rental of mobile home sites;
- (e) affordability of home ownership and mechanisms to support affordability.

Mr. Speaker, it is very important that we start here. This proposed piece of legislation is a bill to create a committee to create recommendations to the minister on those five areas and others.

However, as I talk with more and more stakeholders, I'm hearing nothing but concern for the direction of this bill, and some of them are wondering about its very necessity. The concerns I'm hearing have to do with the possibility of rent control or other red tape and regulations that would discourage homeowners from becoming landowners, which would then, in turn, reduce the overall number of affordable rental properties available. Is the government hoping this review will produce specific results that will support its ideological agenda and ultimately lead to rent control?

My question arises from a Calgary Herald article from October 2014 in which the Premier told the Herald that “the government should implement a form of rent control.” The Premier said, “If we leave it to the market, there will end up being a market for tent space in this park.” She said this last year while in downtown Calgary. Throwing around this extremely naive view of how the free market works is a shameless scare tactic used by the NDP across the country to advocate for large governments and overregulation.

Thankfully, in June of 2015, in another Herald statement, the then Municipal Affairs minister, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, said that a lot has changed in the last year, and rent controls are not on the table for the government.

He said:

I can tell you, quite frankly, that our government is not at this time looking to rent controls.

He went on.

I can tell you in the same breath that we are focused on working with cities, with municipalities to ensure that we are building more affordable housing units... Our current direction is looking at working with municipalities to supply more housing so that rents can come down.

I don't think we need to look much further to understand why we're all a bit confused to be discussing a government-supported private member's bill that wants to establish a committee to review rent regulations. I believe Albertans, property owners, and tenants need to hear that this government has once again committed to a proper balance of regulations which benefit the people who really need help instead of treating private property as a government-owned public facility.

Wildrose believes in consultation, and since reading this bill, I have spoken with many stakeholders and consulted many leaders of those who work with those who need affordable housing. Of all of those I spoke with, there is only one group – only one – that said that they had actually been consulted. Many groups are telling me that they are downright concerned that this government already doesn't have this type of information. They keep asking me: where is the minister on this file? As review after review comes down the pipe, my honest answer is that I have no idea. This is information that the government should already have. By introducing this bill, the government has as much as admitted that it does not have a plan for dealing with social issues such as affordable housing in our province. Why else would our minister be directed by one of their own?

While the other side will be quick to dismiss my concerns as fearmongering or deny that this bill is connected to social issues, I want to remind them of our support for Motion 501. In March the Wildrose agreed to a review of current policies and strategies with a view to increasing community capacity to deliver transitional and low-barrier housing for vulnerable Albertans suffering from complex mental and physical health needs. This was a review that aligns with our policy of protecting our most vulnerable Albertans, and it is unique in its status as a specific issue-based review.

This bill, on the other hand, is a broad, overarching review aimed at providing policy recommendations with no real mention of a quantitative market review. It shows that private members are not doing their own research to either understand their own policies or the research that already exists. The hon. member may not know this, but the province currently has a board comprised of stakeholders and government officials who advise the minister on housing and rental related matters. I'm referring, of course, to the ARTAC, the Alberta Residential Tenancies Advisory Committee. It seems that the member hasn't thought about utilizing already existing infrastructure within the government and furthermore has not asked the stakeholders already working in the industry to share information on what they know.

I'm also concerned about the committee this bill proposes to strike. As the bill currently stands, the members of the NDP government cabinet will be the only ones to have any say about who will be on this committee. Even with our other concerns I would like to point out that a nonpartisan appointment through the Standing Committee on Families and Communities would have allowed representatives of all Alberta's elected parties to have a say on the committee's members, which would have made this bill much more palatable. When bills are crafted so poorly and with such haste, it is not hard to see why all sectors of our economy and Albertans themselves are losing trust with this government.

Last year Albertans watched as the government announced a review on royalties in the oil and gas sector at a time when Alberta could least afford it. The economic realities were weighing heavy on industry, and the livelihood and jobs of many Albertans were on the line. This government forged ahead with a lengthy, delayed review which caused regulatory uncertainty that was bad for our economy, bad for investment, and bad for Alberta. How do they think this review is any different? Without any clear need for reporting and coming as it does on the heels of a previous commitment not to overregulate the market, why are we asking to approve a study that would open the door to more regulation? There will be a high level of uncertainty in the market, and investment will surely slow down while this committee crafts a new way to save our housing market.

But the government isn't using common sense. That's an old saying: if it's not broke, then don't fix it. I can't help but think that this bill is trying to fix a housing market that isn't broken. If this bill receives the cabinet's support, it will reopen the idea of policies like rent control. Every single person, agency, group that we consulted is a hundred per cent against rent control. Before we continue this conversation, the NDP needs to be honest about its agenda or come forward again in this House and state that it is against rent controls and needless government overregulation. Will the government clearly state its position?

This is the second private member's initiative that calls on the Seniors and Housing minister to produce action on her file. It is already within the minister's power to conduct these studies at any point. Whether the minister is collecting this information and choosing not to share it in this Assembly or whether there is just no information being collected at all, either way, the situation on this file is concerning.

Wildrose would like to see the scales back in balance, back toward a true market assessment focused on data, not heavily tipped toward policy recommendations from a committee hand-picked by the NDP. As legislators we should be the ones debating policies and learning from the data. Lazy governments in the past hid behind reviews, and this is not something we want to see continue. We're paid by our constituents to stand up, discuss the issues, and take meaningful action on behalf of Albertans. I think we should get back to that and stop trying to change Alberta one review at a time. Albertans are looking for a government that shows leadership and that stands up for them on the issues that matter with meaningful action, not endless, needless reviews.

For these reasons I will not support Bill 202 in its current form. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing forward this important bill. It's a big-picture bill, as the member rightly stated, and it's a bill that will touch much more than simply the items that it says must be included: rent regulation, rent subsidies, security deposits, affordability of rental rates. It is not limited in any way, shape, or form to those four items. It's a much bigger review than those four items might entail.

One of the most fundamental social determinants of health is safe, clean, well-maintained, affordable housing, and it's an issue that's close to my heart. I've been trying to cultivate my knowledge of the issue since being elected and meeting with stakeholders over the last 10 months to determine that this issue receives the attention it deserves. I'm, once again, grateful to the Member for Calgary-East for bringing it forward.

Affordable housing means a lot of things, a lot of different things, and it touches all of us. There's a perennial shortage, as the Member for Calgary-East indicated, of affordable housing in this province. Now, in 30 years as a realtor prior to becoming elected, I noticed difficulties in the area of housing where people weren't able to satisfy their needs with affordable housing and that the majority of people who were suffering a lack of affordable, decent housing were children and single mothers. Now, this teaches all of us to pay attention to this perennial shortage.

I was with homeEd for over six years, which is a city of Edmonton nonprofit housing corporation, and during those six years not one unit of affordable housing were we able to build or add to the portfolio. So it's been a common problem for housing management bodies throughout the province for decades that we've not been able to add to our housing stock and our portfolio, nor have we been able to properly fund the maintenance of this housing stock so that it's properly managed so that the people who need it most have the most fundamental right that they own, and that is to have an affordable, safe, clean, well-maintained property to live in.

Now, there's a wealth of experience on both sides of the House with respect to affordable housing. Many hon. members of both sides of this House, not only myself, have in their previous lives, before becoming elected, acted as volunteers in the affordable housing field. I respect that other members in this Assembly from both sides of the House really are knowledgeable about this issue. I think it's very well understood that we have not done well over the last 20 or so years in this province to not only keep up with the demand for affordable housing but also to maintain the housing stock that we have. All who have been involved will know that stakeholders are anxious to participate in a long overdue review of affordable housing in Alberta.

Now, it's not something that is going to be focused resolutely on rent regulation. It's a private member's bill that has a big picture in mind, and it'll be a much larger, encompassing review of affordable housing in the province. Clearly, it's not limited to simple rent control aspects of the bill. Safe, affordable, and appropriate housing is a priority for this government, but this is a private member's bill. We are committed to making thoughtful decisions about how we move forward with respect to affordable housing.

The latest census data, in 2011, found that over 23 per cent of renters in the province were in core housing need; 10.7 per cent of all Alberta households, or 137,485 households, were in core housing need. Now, the Edmonton area community plan forecasted a gap of 22,000 affordable housing units in the city by 2015. They also forecasted a shortfall of 2,000 supportive housing units and 1,150 permanent supportive housing units. Some populations are more affected by housing challenges than others, particularly indigenous people, and newcomers make up a higher percentage of renters in core housing need.

So this is a pan-provincial problem that all members, I believe, should be interested in solving and really reaching out to all stakeholders across the province who have not had an opportunity to voice themselves towards the province in a really energetic way and in a comprehensive way.

It's a much wider issue than simply rent regulations and rent control. Whether you're talking about housing first; whether you're entering housing from homelessness; whether you're talking about families looking to gain an apartment that's affordable to them, that's clean, coming out of downtrodden housing which is unhealthy or unsafe or unaffordable, where they're spending 40 per cent, 50 per cent of their income on housing needs; whether you're looking at housing our seniors or those who are mentally ill, there's a vast panoply of housing needs in this province that really needs to be examined, and the time to do it is now.

We don't need to go forward without consulting the individual stakeholders who, in my 10 months of having been elected, are really thirsty for an examination, for a platform, for a venue within which they can review with government the real needs that exist and have existed for a long, long time.

Now, the bill seeks to establish a committee tasked with developing recommendations to ensure that all Albertans have the benefits of safe, appropriate, and affordable housing. It's not something we should take lightly. It's something that shouldn't be dismissed as just another review. It's a fundamentally important subject to people right throughout this province, urban as well as rural. There's a need for affordable housing in smaller rural communities that is not being met. Every Albertan needs a safe place to call home. The concept of housing security shows that when individuals have their personal security and a safe place to live in, other challenges in their lives become easier to confront, whether health challenges or employment, education or addictions. Safe, affordable housing is a human right. The UN Human Rights Council recently adopted a resolution recognizing the right to adequate housing.

We are committed to making thoughtful decisions about how we move forward with this, and that's why I support the concept of a bill which creates a review committee that allows all the stakeholders to coalesce and really bring their message forward to government about the necessity to make changes to affordable housing in a very thoughtful way and a long-term way and a sustainable way, a way that perhaps looks at innovations and creative solutions to affordable housing that haven't yet been tried in this province. Rather than looking at simply granting money, maybe you look at doing things that are incentives to create affordable housing that is sustainable, whether the financial input the government puts into affordable housing is a seed that allows a new framework of affordable housing to actually function in perpetuity without continuous injections of cash from the provincial government over the long term.

There are ways of incorporating mixes of market rent and subsidized renters within the same building. That was the homeEd model. We had an 80 per cent, 20 per cent mix of market renters versus subsidized renters. The market renters had no idea that there were subsidized renters within the building, but there was a cross-subsidization that took place. It was a healthy model, so you weren't creating ghettos of affordable housing or subsidized housing within a whole complex right throughout one corner of the city. It's important that communities share the responsibility for affordable housing so that it's implemented and that it's built within every corner of the city, no matter what community it happens to be.

Right now there are about 66,000 affordable housing units in Alberta with another 7,800 under development. Now, these housing units are located in communities throughout Alberta. With these units government is serving over a hundred thousand individuals, including low-income seniors, single parents, immigrants to Canada, and individuals with specialized housing needs. Alberta Seniors and Housing works with over 300 community-based organizations, including municipalities, nonprofits and for-profit organizations, and housing management bodies to deliver housing and related supports to Albertans. There are over 108 housing management bodies managing over 45,000 housing units in 250 communities across Alberta.

This is not something that is a small issue; it's something that we need to really sit down and review properly. This committee will allow these housing management bodies as they coalesce into umbrella organizations to properly present their arguments to this committee.

What I'd like to encourage all members to do is to support the bill.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. We do need to have a conversation on governance. I think this conversation needs to start happening now here in this House. It starts with us taking a look at ourselves and asking: what are our roles? For instance, the government is comprised of the cabinet of ministers, the backbench is comprised of government MLAs, and the opposition is made up of different parties' members whose duty it is to hold the government to account on legislation on issues as big as budgets and as small as private members' motions.

All too often in this House we in opposition rise to ask questions and raise concerns for the purposes of fulsome debate in the best interests of all Albertans. Full, reasoned debate is not what this ideological NDP government or its backbench is interested in. Instead, they rely on scare tactics and rhetoric to say that we are not up on social issues. This couldn't be farther from the truth, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose is one hundred per cent committed to governing this province in the best interests of all Albertans and, in particular, in the interests of the most vulnerable. We support good legislation and good motions when they will benefit Albertans, and, of course, we also have the duty to our constituents and to this province to oppose bills that are not in their interests.

I've had the opportunity to join my colleagues in engaging with many stakeholders over the last few days, and I can tell you that people are really confused. They're telling us they are concerned with how this government rolls out its policies. We all know the NDP record on consultation leaves something to be desired. Whether it's oil royalty reviews, come-and-be-told meetings for farmers on Bill 6, or PDD sole-source contracting implementation, one thing remains clear; this government rarely consults, and when it does, it does poorly. One stakeholder I talked to has actually spoken with this member.

We need some questions answered. Can the member tell this Legislature who it proposes the committee would consult in the process of this review? Does the member have a list? I have some suggestions I would like to put on the record right now – it will be helpful – Alberta government services; the Alberta Residential Tenancies Advisory Committee, ARTAC; Alberta government residential tenancies dispute resolution centre; Canadian Federation of Apartment Associations; Realtors Association of Edmonton; Real Estate Council of Alberta; Alberta Barrier-Free Council;

Calgary Residential Rental Association; and the Canadian Home Builders' Association. Those are just a few that you can put on that list. They should be on your list of those to speak to before you introduce legislation, yet many of these groups were not consulted before this bill was even tabled. When bills come forward, they should be based on consultation, on information that takes into account the facts on the ground and weighs the necessity of the legislation.

Unfortunately, this bill is not really necessary. This is a government and backbench that is antimarket and truly fails to recognize that the market adjusts down to the economic realities. This review is not grounded in economic reality and fails to provide the most fundamental component of a review, market assessment information. Without this type of assessment of the market any recommendation coming out of this review would be based solely on opinion. We need to be assured that the recommendations are not created without context. We have heard some concerns about rent control. I actually heard them in a speech today. The members opposite are so quick to attack landlords and bring in studies on rent control, but this is simply irresponsible, Mr. Speaker.

In June this government's Minister of Municipal Affairs stated, and I quote: I can tell you, quite frankly, that our government is not at this time looking to rent controls. End quote. "Time" is the key word in that phrase, Mr. Speaker, because now we have a government supporting a private member's bill to study rent controls. In what has become its trademark ideological fashion, this NDP government is going around creating regulatory reviews, which can create market uncertainty. This drives away investment. It's like there's an industry you guys don't want to mess with.

As my colleagues have said, this government must reaffirm its commitment that it is not going to legislate on such risky economic policies, which burden businesses with red tape and overregulation. Mr. Speaker, the reality is that rental property owners are not often huge corporations. These are regular people. They're seniors. They're Albertans who have temporarily left this province to find work, thanks to you, or people who have moved for other reasons, who haven't been able to sell their property because of the market slowdown. Some are just simply trying to get ahead. They're independent business owners running family operations.

While I recognize that the intent of the bill is to strike a committee to create recommendations, I do feel the government must be forthcoming and honest with its policies. Businesses and families are already hurting from the NDP tax hikes. Rental property owners need to be assured that this NDP committee will not advocate for increased regulation and decreased security for them. Not only is the review's purpose unnecessary and undesirable, but the bill itself shows just how little this NDP government understands its roles and capacities.

Getting back to our roles in this House, the backbench is not the place to be driving large-scale, sector-wide reviews. The minister actually already has the power to establish a review committee of this nature. Yet here we are debating a bill to create a committee which the minister could just appoint, which will report to the minister. Why? Why would the minister not just undertake the study? Is the minister not really interested in doing her job?

The committee this bill seeks to establish needs to be more transparent and accountable. The government has chosen to ask the Legislature to take on the responsibility of creating the committee but doesn't want the committee to be responsible to the Legislature. Why have it only report to the minister? Why wouldn't the government consider allowing it to be a two-way street and have the committee report to the members of this Assembly, the elected officials? Albertans sent us here. This is just another example of how the new NDP has reversed its stance on the importance of transparency now that it's in power. We would like to see the NDP government undertake meaningful consultation to inform committees like the one this bill would establish. We all know how strong the NDP record is on consultation or lack thereof.

Wildrose is committed to protecting our most vulnerable and providing results, not time-wasting reviews like the former PC government. The government has the ability to produce a report that can inform results without passing a bill, and it's concerning that they haven't really figured that out yet.

So, unfortunately, I will not be supporting this bill. We all must do better. We must recognize our duties to bring forth strong policy recommendations that will help Albertans, instead of the endless reviews.

Thank you very much.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be part of a caucus with such strong advocates for affordable housing, including the Member for Calgary-East. Bill 202 proposes the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act, which is in keeping with our government's priority for safe, affordable, and appropriate housing. What I particularly like about this bill is that it addresses the complexity of providing affordable housing by engaging all the stakeholders involved. Stakeholders include municipalities, nonprofit groups, housing co-operatives, developers, house providers, shelters, and organizations that specialize in the different stages of the life cycle such as organizations for seniors.

This bill also addresses the reality that there is not one solution or one approach but many solutions and approaches to providing affordable housing. This has been reflected in the recently released report in my own riding of Strathcona county that was endorsed by council.

A substantial portion of my career and my volunteer engagement has been about affordable housing. I was fortunate to be involved in innovative approaches. I also saw how diligent and vigilant one has to be to ensure that affordable housing is maintained in the community. I really want to talk about the need for diligence and vigilance when you're talking about affordable housing. I could cite many examples of why the Affordable Housing Review Committee Act is needed in this province and why we need to work together to ensure that affordable housing is created and maintained.

I'm just going to give you one example from my own experience. As a housing activist I found that the threat to affordable housing stock sometimes came from groups who should have known better than to devise schemes to remove tenants from rental properties. A management company for a low-rent housing complex in the municipality I was working with decided to evict the tenants so they could renovate the building into a luxury rental building. A number of the tenants decided to fight the eviction and to seek help. The developers went as far as shutting off heat to the complex, earning the ire of the local council, which became appalled at the action of the developers and became very public about the desire for developers and management companies to stop this action. The residential tenancy office issued a ruling in favour of the tenants, but each time the developers did not comply, seeking appeal to a higher court. If it had not been for the actions of the tenants, the leadership of the local municipal council, and the weekly protest in front of the developers' office, over 240 units of affordable housing would have been lost in this municipality.

This fight has shown me that retaining, building, and maintaining affordable housing requires diligence, watchfulness, and a commitment to ensuring a housing first approach in communities. This is what I'm hoping the committee that the act is going to create will be doing for us in terms of affordable housing. I will therefore urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill and to demonstrate their commitment to planning and action on affordable housing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak today on Bill 202, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. I want to preface my comments by acknowledging that I am certain that nobody in this place disagrees that there should be affordable housing available in Alberta. The Official Opposition caucus believes in positive affordable housing solutions. Unfortunately, while surely well intended, this bill may even hurt the economy if it results in risky experiments on the market or the perception that there could be new and onerous regulations, and it could actually provide fewer opportunities for families in need of affordable housing.

Now, this legislation as presented sets up a committee to review numerous aspects of the rental market: rental regulations; rent subsidies; security deposits; affordability of rental rates, including rates for the rental of mobile home sites; affordability of home ownership and mechanisms to support affordability. Earlier on today we heard from the Member for Edmonton-McClung that it truly is going to be talking about rent controls. Decisions in these areas can affect Alberta's rental markets greatly, but this bill as currently worded does not provide adequate detail on how consultations will be carried out on this matter. Frankly, this government's record on consultation is not exemplary, Mr. Speaker. We saw this, of course, with Bill 6 and the lack of consultation that this government bothered to do with farmers. There are questions about the consultation process.

The committee this bill seeks to establish needs to be more transparent and accountable. If the intention is to use the Legislature to create this committee, why has it chosen to make the committee accountable only to the minister? We know where this is going. We know where the Premier stands. As my colleague mentioned, in 2014 the Premier told the Calgary Herald that Alberta should implement rent controls, and the committee that this bill would set up could be the first step to that.

When prices are capped, people have less incentive to fix up and rent out their property or, frankly, to actually build more rental properties if they have the means. If there's decreased availability, landlords could become more selective with tenants and tenants may stay in more affordable properties longer than makes sense for their economic means given the smaller market that a rent-controlled environment creates. It's worth noting that evidence from New York shows that those living in rent-controlled apartments generally have higher median incomes than those who rent market-rate apartments. The losers in these scenarios are the very people the government is presumably trying to help through the bill.

I would encourage members to review one of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation's rental market reports for Alberta. Here's what they'll see. Rental vacancies are going up. Rental demand is going down, specifically as a result of a weak labour market. Let me quote from CMHC's most recent Alberta rental market report for Alberta, released this past fall.

Reduced income growth and job prospects have contributed to reduced demand for rental housing . . . In terms of rental supply, the overall universe of purpose-built rental apartments increased by 3,890 units in 2015, with the majority of the rise concentrated in two-bedroom units. This represents the second consecutive year the apartment universe increased, following declines from 2004 to 2013.

This is contrary to what we heard just earlier.

Low vacancies in the province over the past three years have contributed to more rental construction. By the third quarter of 2015, the total number of rental starts was already higher than any annual total since 1990.

You don't have to be an economist to know that in a market like that, no landlord will successfully rent out a property if they don't drop prices to meet the market.

Now, affordable housing is an issue for many Albertans because the economy is continuing in a downward spiral. We see this in Alberta's climbing unemployment rate, now the highest in 20 years. Just last week new Statistics Canada figures revealed that the average weekly pay in Alberta has dropped by over 4 per cent in the last year, a record drop.

The much broader issue isn't that Albertans are being squeezed out by escalating rent costs; the broader issue is that the job market is suffering and that more and more Albertans are struggling to make ends meet, not just to pay their rent but to meet all their other obligations as well. It is the broader context that we need to take a look at, Madam Speaker.

A committee can study affordable rental housing all they want, but that will not solve the real problem here. This government is treading water with no clear plan while the economy continues to decline. The economy is in a bad place. That shouldn't be a surprise to anyone here, but in an economy like this the government's priority should be to figure out what the barriers are to getting back on track to the Alberta advantage. Now is not the time for experiments with the rental housing market, especially when it can adversely affect so many Albertans.

I don't doubt for a moment that, unfortunately, there are unscrupulous landlords who are acting in bad faith with regard to the prices they ask for units, but it would be profoundly careless to allege that this is characteristic of all landlords in Alberta. The reality is that a great number of property owners and managers are everyday Albertans, and their rental units are their livelihoods. Who are we talking about here? They're seniors that rely on renting out property to supplement their sparse income in retirement. They're Albertans who have temporarily left our province to find work or people who have moved for other reasons and haven't been able to sell their property because of the market slowdown. While the government wants to establish a committee to review ways and means to bring rental prices down, the taxes, the expenses, the bills for property owners just seem to be going up on the way.

We know, for instance, that electricity costs are rising. There has been clear evidence in the last weeks that Alberta's electricity costs are heading in the same direction as Ontario's, and there are some significant warning signs for Alberta in the Ontario situation. It's a relevant detail to this discussion. Here's what happened. Ontario's coal-fired electrical plants were all shut down. As also seems to be the case in Alberta, nobody carried out a proper economic impact assessment to take into consideration how such a sudden shift from coal to other sources would impact everyday people, businesses, and families. According to information from the Association of Major Power Consumers, Ontario has the highest industrial electrical rates in North America. According to Ontario's Auditor General, during a single eight-year period Ontario electrical users paid a staggering $37 billion more than the market price for their electricity. I bring all of this up in this context because the rising cost of electricity and utilities under this government will likely be another pressure point on property owners, making the prospect of renting out their properties less and less gainful.

In conclusion, I want to say this. My colleagues and I in the Official Opposition believe that while the goal of this bill is worthy, the market intervention ultimately decreases options and choices for families and those who need affordable housing options. The reality is that many property owners who rent out housing are independent business owners or individuals looking to supplement their income. It's tough to see how they wouldn't be hurt by the effects of this bill. In this difficult economy rental property owners and all Albertans are looking for hope and looking for answers, not more regulations and especially not experimental regulations.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to begin by clarifying some misapprehensions of our colleagues across the aisle. To be clear, Bill 202 is a private member's bill. The bill's origin is solely with my colleague the Member for Calgary-East. I know this because I spoke with her at several points over the weeks during which she refined her vision and navigated the standard legislative process. I can also testify from my own work in developing and, yes, consulting on a potential private member's bill that our members have the freedom to independently explore areas of their own interest, discuss them with fellow caucus members and, yes, propose our own private members' bills.

I took the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon at his word today when he declared that the bill he put forward was of his own design and of his own volition. I would simply ask that the members opposite recognize that the Member for Calgary-East is simply doing the same.

That said, I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to this bill. I believe that I can honestly say that since being elected, there has been no issue I've heard about more consistently from both residents and stakeholders across the spectrum than that of affordable housing. Just yesterday afternoon, as I was out door-knocking in my community, I met a young man who works for a local social agency. He echoed the concern that I've heard from community groups, from agencies, and from local business interests, that we as a society need to find new ways to increase accessibility to and the affordability of housing in our province. He spoke of the challenges many residents of Edmonton's downtown face in accessing or maintaining housing that they can afford. Madam Speaker, this is a growing problem.

My constituency office is two doors down from the Capital Region Housing Corporation, whose wait-lists for affordable housing and rental supplements grow increasingly unmanageable. Many on those lists come to my office seeking help in maintaining the housing they have or finding a new space that they can better afford. In fact, I recently received a report from the caseworker in my constituency office outlining her work in helping my constituents access and maintain housing. These cases comprise nearly 40 per cent of her work. With Alberta's population expected to grow by 1 million in the next decade and the aging of much of our current affordable housing stock, this problem is only going to get worse.

As I discussed this yesterday with my constituent, he also raised another housing concern. He noted that he and his partner had been recently forced to move from the building they'd called home for several years when they found that they were expecting a child and the building they were in was adults-only. It's worth noting, Madam Speaker, that Alberta is the only province in Canada which currently lacks provisions in its Human Rights Act to address this kind of discrimination.

Now, the gentleman that I was speaking with had greatly come to appreciate the convenience and diversity of living in our urban core but, like others I spoke with, found significant challenges in finding affordable, family-friendly housing there. Eventually they were fortunate to be able to take over the lease on a townhouse from friends who moved overseas. However, there are many others who find themselves forced to leave neighbourhoods they love, communities close to services they rely on, including public transit, social agencies, schools, and sometimes even their employment due to challenges of affordability and accessibility in securing family-friendly housing in our urban neighbourhoods.

Edmonton-Centre, in particular, is home to many new Canadians who take up residency in what is affordable though often very low-quality housing along the northern edge of our downtown core. These individuals build community as their children attend local schools. They play in the local parks. They're enrolled in child care in excellent local facilities like the Oliver Centre. However, as these families settle in and become more successful and look to secure a better quality of housing, whether through rental or ownership, they often find that they cannot affordably do so in the neighbourhoods and communities that they have come to call home. They are forced to move into more distant neighbourhoods, away from their cultural communities, where they often face increased costs and increased isolation.

While I'm incredibly excited for the economic potential that comes with the revitalization of our downtown core, I am also concerned about the effects that it may have on the affordability of housing in Edmonton's urban neighbourhoods and the effects this may have on vulnerable residents and families.

Now, I recognize that this is a complex issue. This involves many stakeholders across the spectrum, community groups and business and developers, many of whom I had the opportunity to speak with in the pursuit of my own considered private member's bill. So I thank my colleague from Calgary-East for bringing forward this bill. When we're at a time when all three orders of government are coming to the table and recognizing the need to once again invest in affordable housing and when so many of the developers, realtors, and others I have spoken to in the housing industry have expressed a willingness to speak and work with government to discuss how we can best address these problems, it makes sense to me to establish a committee that could consult with all of the stakeholders involved, draw on the considerable expertise available on all sides of this issue.

We can't afford to simply continue the status quo. We know that we're facing a problem that's been ongoing for some time. We know that it's a problem that can only get worse. I can't see the difficulty, I can't see the problem in simply wanting to sit down, talk with all individuals, consider all options and possibilities to ensure that all Albertans have the opportunity to have a safe and affordable place to live.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in second reading of Bill 202, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. I don't think there's any question that this is one of the paramount issues that Alberta faces today, not only because of the ongoing influx of new Canadians and new Albertans over many, many years but also now the economic downturn that has threatened thousands of people in their stability and their homes.

The housing review committee act proposes to create a mandate to prepare a report on accessibility and affordability and to make recommendations to the minister within nine months. I guess part of the concern is that those of us who have been around for a while have seen this story repeatedly unfold and, along with the government, who was formerly in the opposition, harangued the last government. To his credit, Ed Stelmach was a very staunch supporter of affordable housing and did a lot up until four years ago, and nothing much has happened since. A lot of good investment, a lot of recognition that the corporate sector has to be there, federal and municipal governments have to be there – municipal governments, of course, depend on what the provincial government is allowing and enabling them to do. Not least is recognizing some of the issues that the big cities face disproportionately to the rest of the province, but I think rural areas and smaller urban communities have similar problems.

I guess from the outside it appears that we're delaying something that we have all kinds of research, all kinds of information on for Alberta and all kinds of recognition that what's really needed is action. One of the most creative options that I've seen is coming out of Vancouver, where they have a similar, very hot market, very expensive, and the nonprofit organizations have taken over both public land and public buildings that are not being maintained or developed because the government of the day doesn't have the money. The nonprofit organizations can take the land and leverage it for loans and leverage the properties that need massive amounts of refurbishment, and they can actually get on with the job.

I don't think it should take nine months. I don't think it should take a committee to decide what we need to do here. I think many of us are anxious to see action, not more talk and more research, when we already know so much about Alberta.

Having said that, I hasten to add that there's no question that this is an important issue for this government to address. If they don't feel confident in their research, if they don't feel confident in what we already know about this province and the economic uncertainties or they don't have the will to borrow more money, then encourage municipal and even provincial buildings and lands to be transferred to those that can do it. There are tremendous examples across the country that we could learn from and that we could move on rather than delaying for nine months. There's a critical need.

I share the Member for Edmonton-Centre's concerns that every day or at least every week I have one member of the public or a family contact me about getting help to get into some kind of affordable dwelling or protecting them in the dwelling where they are because they're about to be evicted. They don't have the funding or they've lost some income, and they don't know where to go.

There are seven housing associations across the province that have been addressing this issue for the last 10 years. They have a plan in place, and somehow – I think they're as puzzled as the rest that we haven't gotten on with some of the great planning and opportunities that have been presented to the various levels of government in Alberta. They know what needs to be done in conjunction with – what is it called in Calgary? – the housing board. They have made plans over the last decade. The Resolve campaign is a combination of nine organizations that has gotten all kinds of great plans in place, ready to go, some of them shovel-ready. We presented one of those to the minister last week. The Alberta

Interagency Council on Homelessness: that's the body that has been planning these developments across the province for years and has many of them ready to go. I guess I'm concerned.

I understand that we're in a budgetary crunch, but there are options. If this government doesn't want to go into further debt to try and facilitate more of this, then ensure that we get on with the job by empowering municipalities and, indeed, transferring some of their own land and some of their own properties to the nonprofit organizations that have proven themselves, groups like Trinity foundation, Silvera, the Calgary housing corporation, a comparable one up here in Edmonton. They simply need to be able to leverage money, leverage properties, and borrow themselves, and they can do it in some cases as efficiently or more efficiently than the government can.

So if I were to make one amendment, I would say that if you're going to set up a committee, have them report in three months, not nine months. Let's make sure we get on with the job and start solving some of the problems here.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in support of this bill, and I want to thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing it forward. As you know, I recently had the distinct honour and privilege of delivering my maiden speech in this Chamber. In it I spoke about the many great things that make up my constituency of Calgary-Cross and the many reasons why I'm so very proud to represent it. I also related to you about the journey to find my home in this beautiful province.

However, today I rise to tell you about the challenges that the constituents of Calgary-Cross face, and that is the issue of affordable housing. Madam Speaker, thousands of Albertan families have an extremely difficult time finding affordable housing. There are many heartbreaking stories of struggle and perseverance to find a simple and most basic dignity of having a roof over your head. While there are thousands of families facing this struggle, I want to tell you about one particular family in Calgary-Cross. Kerry and Randy have a family of nine, and over the past five years this family has faced homelessness a total of three times. Three times they have faced homelessness, and recently they would have faced homelessness a fourth time; however, they were lucky enough to apply to Habitat for Humanity and were actually accepted into the program. They learned that they would be facing homelessness when their current landlord told them they were going to sell their home. In the face of, actually, the prospect of being without a home again, we now have this family who has found new hope and new dignity and new purpose.

As you know, Habitat for Humanity is a wonderful organization that empowers families by providing home ownership through the use of volunteer labour and donations of money and materials to build a safe, affordable house. Habitat homes are then sold to partner families with no down payment, a no-interest mortgage. The mortgage payments are then put into a revolving fund, which is then used to build even more homes for more families.

I am proud to tell you that I was actually at a ceremony when the first shovels hit the ground and can report that in just a few short months the projects are near completion for the first units. I want to take the opportunity as well to thank the Member for Calgary-Shaw, who, along with many constituency assistants from Calgary, dedicated a day and volunteered their time to build this family a home. So I thank them for that.

Madam Speaker, Kerry and Randy are good, hard-working people. Randy is an active volunteer with Inn from the Cold and organizes an annual Christmas toy drive. His eldest daughter is also an active member of the community and actually volunteered to distribute food during the 2013 Alberta floods. By all accounts they are a model Alberta family, yet like I mentioned, three times they've faced homelessness. This is the problem we're talking about today.

I want to reiterate my sincere thanks to the member for bringing this very important issue forward for us to have a discussion, for us to begin the consultation process that is necessary in order to reach the decisions that are best going to address the issues for the people of this province. We all know that stable housing makes better families, better families make more vibrant communities, and vibrant communities make this province better. It's a very simple formula. Every Albertan needs a safe place to call home. The concept of housing security shows us that when individuals have the personal security of a safe place to live, other challenges in their life become easier to confront, to manage, whether it's health challenges or employment, education, or addictions.

Overall what this member's bill is proposing to do is to strike a committee that is going to look at issues in question and come back with recommendations. Now, I have heard many times the members of the Official Opposition express their concerns about consultation in this province, and here we are talking about not necessarily wanting to do that same process. So it's kind of confusing to me. I do look forward, however, to the day when we come to this Chamber and are talking about social issues and we actually hear something from that side that actually supports those kinds of issues.

I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that this is the kind of issue that I and many members of this government ran on as a priority of the issues that they were talking to their constituents about at their doorsteps.

In closing, I want to again invite all of you to vote in favour of this bill and to support it going forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, followed by the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I want to start by saying that I absolutely agree with and support the goal of this bill and what it's trying to do in increasing access to affordable housing for all Albertans. There have been some very impassioned speeches here by the members previous, not the least of which came from the Minister of Culture and Tourism. I have a tremendous amount of empathy for anyone who finds themselves in that situation.

What I'd like to focus on in my comments here are solutions. How do we solve those problems? They're tremendous challenges still in our province, perhaps not as acute as they were as recently as a year ago but still a serious, serious problem in this province, that we do need to address and to address with some urgency.

I'd like to pick up on some of the solutions offered by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, which I think are very compelling solutions. There are a lot of things that we can do. One of the things the province can do is to increase the stock of affordable housing available in this province by providing dedicated and sustainable funding to a variety of agencies. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View referenced the Resolve campaign in Calgary, and there are many other groups like that. There is a seven-city group that's gotten together to tackle their various 10-year plans to end homelessness. Each are in various states of progress. All of them need that final push over the top. I would suggest that this government providing substantial capital funding to affordable housing in this province would certainly be welcomed from this part of this side of the House, I can assure you, perhaps even if we need to borrow some money to do that. I think that would be a good use of those dollars.

We need different types of housing in this province. We need single units. We need multifamily units, townhouses. We need permanent supportive living. People need a path through the housing chain, be that rental accommodation or eventually, hopefully, as in the case referenced by the Minister of Culture and Tourism, to ultimately perhaps even own their own home as well. That's a goal of many, many Albertans.

Another option in terms of the solution is rent supports to ensure that rental costs do not exceed 30 per cent of income. I was having a good conversation with the Member for Red Deer-South about some of the challenges of food security for kids in school, kids going hungry. An inability to pay for both rent and food is a very real problem for many Albertans.

Fortunately, there are agencies like Horizon Housing, and I'm absolutely thrilled and proud to have Horizon Housing facilities in the constituency of Calgary-Elbow. They do tremendous work. They are part of that Resolve campaign, and they are in the process of building another remarkable development in Calgary-Elbow as well as the work they do elsewhere, which will help ensure that people do not find themselves in that situation. That's really important.

What this bill does is that it creates a committee to sit and talk about these things. What we don't need is more talk; we need more action. And while I have a tremendous amount of respect for the member for bringing forward the idea and focusing on housing, what I'd much rather see, rather than simply a committee to talk about these things, is action. I want to see action to support the 10-year plan to end homelessness. I want to see capital funding to increase the affordable housing stock.

I think there are opportunities that are nonfinancial for this government to remove barriers to information sharing between agencies that deal with people struggling with homelessness or on the verge of homelessness. There are many wonderful agencies in this province, but often they're working at crosspurposes, where people find themselves shuffled from agency to agency, where very often provincial tax dollars are spent in multiple silos, ostensibly trying to achieve the same thing but often working at crosspurposes. That will not only not cost the government more money; in fact, there's an opportunity perhaps to save money while at the same time then improving outcomes. These are all options. These are things the government can do right now without another report.

I want to be very clear. In my consultations and discussions with stakeholders my understanding is that a report not unlike the one contemplated by this bill is, in fact, either in progress or has been completed and submitted to the minister. So I believe that there has already been a very substantial consultation recently completed by the ministry of housing. Now, I know that the timelines on private members' bills are long, and I'm not sure if the member was aware of that report. But it's my understanding from multiple stakeholders that, in fact, this exact sort of report, perhaps even more wide ranging, has already been done. If that's the case, wonderful. That's great. That's good. Let's let the minister receive that report, let's see what it says, and I will absolutely and enthusiastically support this government taking action to increase the stock of affordable housing in this province.

Now, one of the other aspects of this bill that I do find troubling is any contemplation of rent controls. There has been, certainly, some discussion here in this House today about the challenges of rent control. Of course, I've done some research. I have a concern that even raising the idea of rent controls greatly elevated the blood pressure of many a landlord around the province although it may seem on the surface that it has beneficial effect. One would think: "Well, isn't this great? We'll reduce or constrain rental increases, and that will have a beneficial effect." On the surface I'm sure some would believe that.

But the Calgary Action Committee on Housing and Homelessness has created a document called rent control, perception versus reality, which I'll be happy to table tomorrow at the appropriate time. It finds that rent controls often erode the quality of controlled units, at the same time driving up costs for all other rental housing. It creates closed communities, reducing the turnover in rental markets. Now, why would reducing the turnover in rental markets be a bad thing? What it actually does is that it creates these closed rental communities, having an impact where perhaps black markets can develop and, ultimately, creating a housing shortage. That's not what we're trying to do here. In fact, we're trying to do the opposite.

What we can do in this province and what has worked well is that we allow the market to do its job. Now, the government has a big role to play in ensuring the stock of affordable housing is there, but it doesn't prevent people from moving through the housing chain. It doesn't disincent people from making an investment in rental accommodation even as a small entrepreneur.

Now, I want to be clear on this upcoming comment that I don't want the Minister of Culture and Tourism to take this as a sharp criticism of his example because I'm really encouraged and inspired by any story of a family who has found their way into permanent housing, and Habitat for Humanity is a remarkable organization. But the example he used was that they were in the situation where their landlord was selling the property. That's something that as a landlord you have the right to do. You have the right to dispose of your asset at any time. There are rules, of course, in terms of timeline, of notice, and that sort of thing. Now, I don't want in any way to diminish the experience that that family was going through and what it meant for them. I know that in their case that meant that they were facing homelessness, and that is the opposite of trivial. In fact, it's a very, very serious situation for a family that's faced that previously.

But I want to be careful that in talking about this bill, we don't create a situation where landlords or entrepreneurs feel like there may be a risk, a bigger risk, in investing in a rental property, which would reduce the stock of rental accommodation available in the province, which would exacerbate the problem that we're all here trying to solve. So I think we want to be very careful about that.

I just want to highlight a couple of other structural issues that I have with the bill.

I agree with the Member for Calgary-Mountain View that the nine-month time frame, if this bill does go ahead, is probably too long.

I've already talked about my concern about rent regulation, rent controls.

Section 3(2) says, "The report must include, but is not limited to, a review of" the five things listed. In section 4 it enumerates four stakeholder groups but does not use the wording "including but not limited to," which by the definition means that the only people that could be consulted would be landlords, tenants, home builders, housing organizations. That would mean that if someone perhaps was contemplating becoming a landlord, they're not able to contribute.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 202, and I want to just indicate that I believe that the provision of affordable housing to all Albertans is a critical responsibility of all of us and that I believe that in our own ways everyone in this Assembly would like to aspire to that goal. The question is, you know, how to go about it.

Let me take some of the comments that I've heard from our friends in the Wildrose Official Opposition. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo apparently has difficulty distinguishing between a private member's bill and a government bill because he repeatedly referred to what the government is doing with respect to this, and I just want to indicate to him that this is a private member's bill that is put forward by a member of the government caucus and not a government bill.

I think that's significant in a number of ways because government bills can take direct action, but private members' bills are often constrained. I've had considerable experience drafting private members' bills, and I know that there are limitations that have to be there that are brought to our attention by Parliamentary Counsel. One of the most common forms of a private member's bill that wants to move in a certain direction is on the advice of counsel formatted in this particular way; that is to say, to strike a committee to move in a certain direction. That's very common, and that is one of the limitations, I think, on private members' bills that I've experienced. So the suggestion that this private member's bill would be holding up government action in key areas for nine months, I think, is not necessarily the case.

Now, both Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and Airdrie went on and on about consultation, and I find that really difficult to fathom since the bill is precisely about consultation. Now, a private member doesn't have the resources of government to do the consultation to the same extent that the government could do, but I think that it's pretty clear that this is a bill about talking to stakeholders. It specifies four major groups, including landlords, tenants, home builders, and housing organizations, all of which will be consulted. There will be, in fact, public meetings. Section 4 of the private member's bill talks about public meetings that would be held. All of these things are envisaged by the bill, so to do a whole bunch of consultation so you can pass a bill to implement consultation strikes me as a bit ridiculous.

Now, the Official Opposition has made a great to-do about rent controls, and I think the minister – the statement that they've quoted by the minister of economic development, that the government is not considering rent controls at this time, is a definitive statement of where this government is at. Rent controls are one of many tools that have been used by governments, including the former PC government. At one point it brought in rent controls. That doesn't mean that they're the best tool or the most desirable tool or a tool that is available or is particularly useful at all times.

Quite frankly, I think that the key here is to increase the supply of housing, particularly the affordable housing, and to let the market work. That is, in fact, I think you'll find, where the government is focused, and I think members should stay tuned, going forward in the next couple of weeks, for some news with respect to that particular direction. I believe that we need to make sure that every family, every individual has at least some basic, secure housing and that there's a responsibility, when the market doesn't work, for the government to play a role. That doesn't necessarily mean or usually mean rent controls.

The Official Opposition is trying to spin this in a way to frighten off investment, and I think that that's shameful. I think that it doesn't represent what's needed in the market – this is my personal opinion – and doesn't recognize the reality today and is not what's needed in the current situation. I want to indicate to hon. members that I think this bill is a good bill. It sets a clear direction for the House. It will not interfere with the government taking action in a more immediate sense, but I think that it's a worthwhile thing to do, to have that consultation, to continue to focus the efforts of all of us on making sure that every Albertan has a decent, safe place to go to when they come home at night. I think that that's the goal of this bill.

I think it's really quite despicable how the Wildrose opposition is trying to portray and spin this bill as something nefarious, something that is not going to help people, because it will help people, Madam Speaker. It will generate public awareness. It will give policy options to the government, not all of which have to come from the bureaucracy. There are lots of great ideas out there, and I think that anything we can do – anything we can do – to reach out and invite new ideas to solve these problems is welcome. I think hon. members should support this bill because I think it advances the cause of housing and of ending homelessness, making sure that everyone has a secure place to live.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon in the few minutes that we have left together to just provide some very brief comments about the bill before us. Let me be clear. Myself and the other members – I wouldn't speak for everyone, but certainly the members who've spoken today firmly believe in providing affordable housing if done in a way that increases access, and the hon. members for Airdrie and Fort McMurray both share that desire. Certainly, members of the Official Opposition have a desire to ensure that there is affordable housing in the marketplace.

Earlier today I rose to highlight this concern, that in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, in Olds, Didsbury, and Carstairs there are 20 affordable housing units available. In the community of Olds there are eight of the 20, and only two of those eight are currently inhabitable, and there is a waiting list of five to have access to those units. Madam Speaker, what those five individuals are calling out for is access to affordable housing. They didn't call up my office and say: please stand and vote for a piece of legislation that's going to study something that's been studied on numerous occasions, and nine months from now put that study on the shelf and don't do anything with it, just like the last number of studies that have been done. What are those five people on the waiting list in the community of Olds hoping for? They're hoping for action, just like – we heard the minister of tourism speak about people who are pulling themselves up out of homelessness through wonderful organizations.

What we need is more affordable housing in the marketplace. We need housing providers that are willing to invest in their community by purchasing homes and then providing them to others for rent. We have seen study after study. We have seen this government call for studies. If this is going to be a priority of the government – in fact, I hope that it is – they will take the necessary steps to go ahead and ensure that this information can be realized. But more important than the study is action.

The government would like to say: "Oh, the opposition doesn't support access to affordable housing. Well, the opposition doesn't care about issues around social housing, affordable housing, seniors' housing." While they would like to make these wild and outlandish claims, what the opposition wants to see is a commitment to ensuring action on these items. The people in Olds want action. The people who are waiting for access to affordable housing want action, and that's exactly what we would like to see on this side of the House. Affordable housing is of critical importance. If families don't have access to housing, which is so important to the future success of those families, that creates such uncertainty in the home. Children underperform. Relationships are strained at the thought of being homeless.

What we don't need is more inaction. What we don't need is more studies. What we don't need is significant housing providers and stakeholders coming, as I know – I have taken phone calls that have raised significant concerns. While I appreciate the Government House Leader's commitment to not utilizing rent controls, the challenge with that statement, Madam Speaker, is that it went like this: the government is committed to not using rent controls at this time. So there is this uncertainty that is created amongst housing providers.

The Government House Leader likes to make accusations about the opposition's desires, the opposition's perceived role in affordable housing.

We've seen members like the Member for Medicine Hat work closely with the community of Medicine Hat to ensure that homelessness doesn't exist in that community. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that Medicine Hat should be congratulated. The housing community and the partner organizations in Medicine Hat should be upheld. What that community didn't need was another study. That community rallied around a cause.

As much as a study is nice, action by the government is exponentially better. Unfortunately, that's not what we see. I know that members on this side of the Assembly are committed to ensuring access to affordable housing, are committed to supporting our seniors . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but we're at 5 o'clock. We've run out of time to close debate. We need to move on to the next order of business.

5:00 Motions Other than Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Energy Sector Jobs

502. Mr. Rosendahl moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to engage with energy sector workers when developing strategies to diversify Alberta's energy sector and create value-added jobs.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak to the issue of government engaging with workers when developing strategies that diversify Alberta's energy sector and create value-added jobs. On behalf of my constituents of West Yellowhead, many of whom derive their livelihoods from the energy sector, and the countless Albertans I've spoken to who work in and are affected by the energy sector, it is my privilege to debate this motion today.

When we're talking energy sector, we also include forestry and coal. We also must include the spinoff jobs that these industries create, whether it's a single welder or whether it is a company that's providing plant turnaround maintenance. These workers are also affected by this.

Madam Speaker, as our province endures the current economic challenges due to the drop in the global prices of oil – and we must add coal to that – it has become more apparent than ever that we must invest in economic diversification to ensure that Albertans are not casualties in what has become a boom-and-bust economy. All we have to do is look at the town of Grande Cache when we're talking about this because it's happened to them before.

No one will hear me argue against the notion that Alberta is an energy province. As I engage with my constituents in West Yellowhead, I am reminded every day of the role the resource sector plays in the lives of Albertans and the role our resources have in creating a fair and strong economy. We are and we will continue to be an energy province. Regardless of what some may say, we are proud of Alberta's natural resources and understand the critical role these resources have in our economy.

Madam Speaker, diversification in the energy sector is essential for Albertans so that our province's economy becomes resilient to the changes in the energy and coal prices. It is our duty as members of this Legislature to ensure that our province captures the full value of our resources. This also includes forestry. In doing so, it is essential that our government engage with resource sector workers when developing new strategies. Listening to workers and industrial leaders must remain at the forefront of the government's agenda. By doing so, Albertans can be confident that we will be on the right path towards diversifying our economy and creating good, value-added jobs. I am proud to be part of a government that values the input and ideas of energy workers, and we are committed to supporting them in a variety of ways, especially in such difficult economic times. The fact of the matter is that front-line workers understand the challenges the energy sector faces, and our government respects their role and opinions.

Today's unique economic challenges should remind us of the importance of economic diversification. It also serves as a reminder that economic diversification requires a multipronged approach that includes looking at new areas of opportunity while finding opportunities to build on our current areas of strength. Through this motion it is my goal to ensure that Albertans working in the energy sector remain in the energy sector regardless of the price of energy. Alberta's resource sector remains a key driver of the provincial economy. If we want to create long-term, sustainable jobs, we need to diversify beyond just energy extraction into other areas of strength. But, again, we must engage with our community workers and stakeholders.

During the March 8 Speech from the Throne the government identified that it would establish the energy diversification advisory committee, which will provide advice on the steps needed to build a more diversified and resilient economy. As plans develop, I certainly urge the committee to engage with the various organizations that represent resource sector workers. Madam Speaker, my constituency of West Yellowhead has many organizations and energy sector workers who would be interested in sharing their input and ideas, and I'm more than happy to collaborate with the committee to ensure my constituents are being heard. This is vital.

During our current session the minister of economic development introduced the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. This will assist entrepreneurs and businesses to create new jobs and growth, which will become increasingly necessary during difficult economic times. Madam Speaker, I am proud to be part of a government proactively working to support a diversified economy.

The fact of the matter is that Albertans are tired of these boom-and-bust cycles. Previous governments may have been content with having the province's economy depend on a single commodity and on a single market. Our government is taking a different approach. Our government is working towards a future where our resources hold full value. Our government is striving towards a prosperous future for today and for our children. Let me remind everyone: all Albertans deserve to benefit from their province's resources. This is the true Alberta advantage. Our government will not sacrifice long-term recovery for short-term benefit. Diversification within the energy sector is central to long-term recovery.

One of the four objectives of the royalty review advisory panel was to identify ways to encourage diversification opportunities such as value-added processing, innovation, or other forms of investment in Alberta. On January 29, 2016, the government of Alberta accepted all of the royalty review advisory panel's recommendations, including the fourth recommendation, to seize opportunities to enhance value-added processing.

Madam Speaker, on February 1, 2016, as part of the government's continued action on the economy to help create jobs, attract investment, and diversify Alberta's economy, the government announced the petrochemical diversification program, which will encourage companies to invest in the development of new Alberta petrochemical facilities by providing up to $500 million in incentives through royalty credits. The benefits of this program are significant to Alberta workers and their families: between $3 billion and $5 billion worth of investment attracted to Alberta, up to 3,000 new jobs during construction of new petrochemical facilities, and more than 1,000 jobs once the operation begins. Madam Speaker, this program will attach investment and create necessary jobs in Alberta. I'm proud to say that the program came as a direct result of industry leaders' input. More than ever our government remains committed to engage leaders in the energy sector.

As part of the government's long-term climate change strategy the government is committed to phase out coal-generated energy by 2030. In my constituency coal mining has become integral to the local economy. Through this motion I urge the government to focus on public outreach with energy workers and coal industry leaders to ensure that West Yellowhead and all impacted communities in Alberta are engaged in this process. I have heard concerns from those in my riding about the future outlook of the coal mining industry, but the fact is that reducing fossil fuel emissions is central to a climate leadership plan, which will create more jobs and diversify our economy. Our opposition seems to think that it's okay for Alberta to ignore the realities of climate change, but this government is not willing to follow the same approach.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I rise to speak about Motion 502. I was one of those proud energy sector workers till recently. I don't understand why this government deems it necessary to waste this House's time and money. We are paid very well for the job we do or, at least, the job we are supposed to do. Taxpayers are paying for us to create and debate legislation that could better Alberta. Instead, the Member for West Yellowhead thinks it is important to create legislation that wastes everyone's time.

My first question to the member is whether or not he considered the energy sector workers before submitting this motion. In fact, did the member consider anyone before creating this motion? The irony of the situation would be quite hilarious if the member on the backbench decided to create a motion that convinced the front bench to consult when he himself didn't consult. Now, if the member did consult energy sector workers before creating this motion, then what is the point of this motion? If the member could already consult energy sector workers, then there is no need for a motion to tell people to consult energy sector workers.

Seriously, why is the member wasting our time with a piece of legislation that should be a normal part of anyone's job? That's our job. Our job is not to make decisions just based on our own ideas. Our job is to consult with Albertans and create legislation that they deem is important, necessary, and useful. The only way this piece of legislation could be any more wasteful is if we took some scissors to the bill and made it say: be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly ask the government to engage with Albertans before creating the legislation.

An Hon. Member: It's not legislation; it's a motion.

Mr. Panda: Okay. I hear you. Actually, I take back what I said.

That would be a far more useful piece of legislation since this government cannot seem to consult with Albertans before creating legislation. [interjection] Yeah. I'm coming to that. This motion is a perfect example of why this type of legislation is needed. I'm coming to your point. [interjection] You know what? This is probably the most important piece of legislation this government has brought to the table so far. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members.

Mr. Panda: I apologize for what I said earlier.

The Member for West Yellowhead has hit the nail on the head as to what this government needs. This government needs legislation that commands them to consult with Albertans. Albertans have been begging to be consulted with. Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been begging to be consulted with. The Member for West Yellowhead is probably more in tune with Albertans compared to any of his fellow NDP MLAs, who are making fun of energy sector workers. I'm sure the Member for West Yellowhead saw the outrage Albertans showed when they were not consulted during Bill 6. If we'd had this motion before, maybe the ministers would have applied the spirit of this motion to their legislation and consulted with farmers. Unfortunately, they did not consult, and instead we had protest after protest here at the Legislature asking this government to consult with them. The pain this government put itself through trying to calm the masses after they put forward Bill 6 without consulting Albertans could have been prevented.

If only the Member for West Yellowhead had put this motion through sooner. There are many Albertans who would have benefited from this motion being passed sooner, and I would like to read some quotes from Albertans who wanted this government to consult with them.

With regard to Bill 6 Shandele Battle said: it would be implemented January 1, and then where's our voice; for me, that's not democracy; that's dictatorship.

Also on Bill 6 County Councillor Bill Velichko said: that's my problem with the NDP right now; they just throw anything in without doing a study on it.

On Bill 8 the Calgary board of education published a release saying, "We are also concerned that Boards have not had a chance to discuss the Bill with the minister."

On the menthol ban the Western Convenience Stores Association issued a release quoting the association president, Andrew Klukas: "All we wanted was a chance to speak to this government about the impact of their decision . . . We were denied that chance."

An Hon. Member: To continue poisoning.

Mr. Panda: That's the record of your government.

On the climate leadership plan the Financial Post ran an article with the following statement: "Imperial Oil Ltd. chairman and CEO Rich Kruger, and MEG Energy Corp. president and CEO Bill McCaffrey, were not consulted and are reportedly outraged by the secret deal."

I'm saddened that Albertans had to ask so many times before this government consulted them. I'm saddened that this government could not consult with Albertans without taxpayers' money being spent on this motion, which reiterates the job description of an MLA. But, in the end, I'm glad that someone from the NDP government saw what the rest of Alberta saw. I'm glad that the member from the backbench saw that his front bench was not consulting Albertans and decided to do something about that. I'm glad that this motion was put forward. This government needs to understand that consulting with Albertans is of utmost importance.

I encourage every single MLA here, especially every minister on the front bench, to vote in favour of this motion. More consultation is needed, and this motion is a step in the right direction. A lot of money has been spent creating this motion when you consider all the staff involved. I really hope this is the last time we need a piece of legislation directing the ministers to do their job since every additional piece costs taxpayers more and more money. Hopefully, this motion is enough, and we don't need a separate motion directing every minister separately to consult on every issue individually.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll start by correcting the previous speaker in that this is a motion, not a bill. Motions are the rights of individual members of the Assembly to represent their own constituents but also to act in the best interests of their constituents and all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 502. Quite frankly, there's no minimizing the impact that the collapse in global oil prices is having on our workers in the energy sector, but while Alberta's economy has experienced a major setback, I know that this is something that we can and will recover from because as Albertans we've always not only seen the challenges that we've faced but also the opportunities in those challenges. It's clear that Albertans need an economy that is resilient to energy swings, captures the full value of our resources, and offers prosperous futures for our children.

To do this, we have set out a strong economic/jobs plan that includes investing in much-needed infrastructure to build schools, hospitals, roads, and bridges, that Albertans rely on; supporting the private sector in creating jobs; improving access to capital for entrepreneurs; encouraging innovation across a variety of sectors; and increasing access to markets for Alberta's products and services. This spring we saw the introduction of the new Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, which will give the government additional tools to carry out this plan. In order for government to be successful in carrying out this plan, we need strong partners. That's why we're seizing this opportunity to work with and invest in our workers.

Earlier this year, Mr. Speaker, we announced that the Alberta government will provide up to $500 million in royalty credits to our petrochemicals industry. This program builds on the strengths of our energy industry and our skilled workers and will attract new investment into Alberta. It will capitalize on growing global demand for petrochemical products like plastics and textiles. We shouldn't just be shipping our raw resources out of the province. We should be processing them here and keeping the jobs here at home. This program will attract between $3 billion and $5 billion worth of investment. New facilities will generate thousands of jobs from construction through to operation. Additional benefits will flow to the manufacturing, transportation, and business sector services.

Mr. Speaker, the royalty review panel's report urged the government to accelerate the development and commercialization of partial upgrading and value-creation technologies for bitumen. The petrochemical diversification program was the first step in that direction.

Mr. Speaker, as part of our government's commitment to phase out coal-generated energy by 2030 and transition to cleaner sources of electricity, our government made a commitment to work with affected workers to support their long-term economic sustainability through this transition. We will be investing in new technologies, better efficiency, and new job-creating investments in green infrastructure. This transition will be good for our health, good for our environment, and be economically sustainable.

Mr. Speaker, these are just a few examples of how the government is engaging with energy-sector workers to build a stronger, more resilient, and diversified economy defined by high employment, a strong workforce, and healthy enterprises, and I commend the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing forward this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing this to our attention. I would hope everyone in this House has as much regard for the energy workers in this province as I do, and as the Energy shadow minister over the last year my immense respect for this industry has just grown. But I have to say that the motion is shallow, and it's another example of the NDP taking time out of the House with job descriptions.

Across the way they have mentioned that motions are for members to say what's needed in their constituency, and I completely agree. That's wonderful. However, what we're trying to find out here, I guess, is what the ministers' jobs are. So going forward from there, Albertans need leadership, Mr. Speaker, and instead the province's leaders are going to spend the next hour debating a proposal to remind the ministers of what their job is. As the Official Opposition we're a little baffled as to why the NDP feel they need to get House approval on something that is so implicit in governing. This is so far beyond common-sense policy. We have a minister that is currently pushing his mandate letter through the House, Bill 1, and now we have members of the NDP's own backbench putting up motions to remind their ministers that they should be consulting before they push through legislation. It's unbelievable.

The government still doesn't get it that Albertans expect consultation from their government. This is not a concept that should even be up for consideration. Consultation is not a debatable entity, yet here we are debating the need to consult. Should Albertans be concerned that any time there's legislation that doesn't include specific recommendations to consult, the government will feel the need not to? What has the government been doing for the last 10 months if not meeting with groups in the energy sector, workers, as their industry takes the worst beating that we have seen in a generation?

Mr. Speaker, you would have thought that after the massive, province-wide Bill 6 rallies, motivated in large part by the failure to consult on the part of this government, those over there would get the importance of meaningful consultation. It is not just a few reps at the top but all the way through the sector. Congratulations – congratulations – to the NDP backbench on figuring out that consultation is important. That's fantastic. At least some members of the NDP seem to understand what the thousands upon thousands of protestors were trying to tell this government during the numerous Bill 6 rallies. It's a little more than disheartening to see that even the NDP's own MLAs feel that the cabinet ministers still don't understand and that this requires further action and that this has to happen in a motion.

I want to break down this motion for the members of the House, and I will try to be as eloquent as the Member for West Yellowhead. The motion reads: the members of this House ought to “urge the government to engage with energy sector workers when developing strategies to diversify Alberta's energy sector and create value-added jobs.” Yes. I agree completely.

It is difficult to know even where to begin. This might be the reason that we're struggling to understand what this government is trying to do. Over in the Wildrose our entire party is structured around the requirement to consult with people. We advocate for grassroots governance. We utilize the knowledge of everyday Albertans when crafting our ideas. Consultation is so essential to the soul of our party that it never dawned on us that our new government, who saw how out of touch the old one was, would need a reminder of this.

Mr. Speaker, the most ironic part of this is that the motion then goes on to address the notion of government-driven economic diversification. How could you possibly expect to centrally plan economic activity without first consulting Albertans? Governments, especially those bent on central planning like this one, suffer from information asymmetry. Unlike the free market, where thousands of commercial exchanges provide the information necessary to define the relationship between goods supplied and goods demanded, this government strives to be the sole arbiter of what Alberta will supply and what the world will demand.

It seems that on their climate plan they only consulted a handful of oil executives, but here they are acknowledging workers, and that's fantastic. Thank you again to the member. It's important. But I'd like to note another group, the small and medium-sized energy businesses, who are so vital to the exact innovation that you're looking for and the job creation in our primary economic sector. Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely imperative that this government not only talk to the workers who have experience on the ground and a few top execs at multinationals but that they engage with those who run the thousands of smaller businesses and contractors because they actually will have the insights not only into what might work but what will also distort the marketplace and hurt others with the unintended consequences.

Over the next three years this government will be in negotiation with industry representatives that have infinitely more knowledge than all of the members in this House in their field. This is not something that anybody needs to be offended by. It's an implicit reality. They are the experts in their fields, Mr. Speaker. Even with the diversity we have here, there are so many professionals that are not adequately represented, and this House alone does not have all the answers.

Alberta has an immense wealth of knowledge capital, and our people are well educated, they're entrepreneurial, and they're innovative. We should be relying on Albertans to tell us what the barriers are, and the government could responsibly move to spur new investment based on that information. That's where the consultation must come in. There is an undeniable arrogance seeping out of any government that does not understand that one of the greatest values a democracy has is the ability to download decision-making authority by designing our political process to be responsive to the demands of the people who put us here.

The Wildrose has been very clear and firm with this government that jobs need to be its primary priority. I was proud to stand beside our leader, the Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin, when he released and we released our Wildrose jobs action plan to much critical acclaim. Mr. Speaker, government-driven economic diversification is not a guaranteed path to job creation. A few weeks ago now I chose to rise in this House and use my response to the throne speech to detail for you some of the history of the government-backed economic diversification in the province of Alberta. I outlined for you numerous failures that previous governments embarked upon.

Now, maybe the government at this point didn't feel the need to listen to the Official Opposition that day, so let me be clear again. Corporate welfare is not a guaranteed job creator, and if you don't consult widely, as the Member for West Yellowhead has so eloquently said, you will surely do more harm than good. With the growing number of job losses, Alberta's tax base is shrinking. This government needs to be certain that the returns promised on a government investment aiming to diversify Alberta's economy exceed the tax burden that it creates. We still haven't seen this government define what diversification means. We still don't have a well-thought-out plan for development.

It is time to govern. Where are the concrete plans? Why hasn't the government presented a detailed vision for diversification? We're talking about diversifying petrochemicals, yes? But beyond some certain business grants to certain businesses, I haven't seen a plan. There are so many opportunities in this province of Alberta, and as the shadow minister for Energy I have in the last 10 months had the pleasure of meeting with numerous workers and executives in the petrochemical sector.

Mr. Speaker, I will of course support this motion, and, yes, this government absolutely – absolutely – needs to do more consultation. I'm just completely baffled by the necessity to state it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and speak to the hon. member's motion. I also would like to thank the Official Opposition for reminding us at length about this motion being such a time-waster. For many Albertans, especially those who work in the energy sector either directly or indirectly, this is a stressful and frustrating time. We all hear and see the stories daily, the strain of job losses and the pressures that are put on hard-working families. While we cannot control the global price of oil or natural gas, we can control how we react to it. I believe that our government is taking strong and balanced action that will provide the industry with new tools and policies to add value to our resources, diversify our markets, and create good jobs.

Please allow me a few minutes to outline some of the actions our energy workers have either been involved in or will benefit from. As previously mentioned by our minister of economic development, our government has announced a new petrochemicals diversification program that will attract investment, create jobs, and provide long-term benefits to Albertans. This program will encourage companies to invest in the development of new petrochemical facilities in Alberta through royalty credits totalling up to $500 million. It's expected that these credits will leverage $5 billion in new investment. This investment is investment that otherwise would have gone to the U.S. Gulf coast. In fact, we have heard first-hand from industry that projects they were considering and planning for Louisiana are now being rethought in favour of Alberta, all because of this diversification program.

Projects will be selected through a competitive application process, with credits awarded only once the approved projects are built and operating. The goal is to support the construction of several facilities using methane or propane as feedstock. These feedstocks are abundant in Alberta, and it's a value that we should be tapping into. This program will result in jobs both in construction and operation of these facilities and can create more demand downstream for their resources. It is expected that it will create 3,000 jobs in construction and 1,000 permanent jobs afterwards.

Recently I did visit several major hubs for petrochemical diversification areas in Alberta such as NOVA Chemicals in Red Deer and Methanex and CF Industries in Medicine Hat. I recognize how important the industry is to Alberta and the potential it has for further growth.

My department also continues to move forward with the implementation of our new modernized royalty framework. The new framework is based off recommendations that we received from industry and from Albertans and through the panel. I'm pleased to inform the Legislature of some of the consultations that went into the report. The panel conducted an open and transparent examination of our royalty system that included direct discussions with industry and Alberta unions that represent thousands of workers. The panel met with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, Alberta Federation of Labour, United Nurses, Building Trades of Alberta, and many, many industries. Additionally, the panel held four public open houses in several cities and conducted telephone town halls across Alberta, reaching thousands of individuals.

Mr. Speaker, our government values the input from these organizations and from these individuals. These are workers who are on the front line of this industry and understand the challenges as well as anyone. In their consultations the royalty review panel found fundamental flaws with the old framework, flaws that were holding Albertans back. The panel found that the old framework was out of date, causing us to lag competitively. It was too rigid for the advances in technology. It was too risky, with built-in uncertainties that deterred investment. It lacked incentives to encourage more efficient and environmentally responsible development, and it lacked transparency to allow Albertans to see for themselves how their royalties were being collected without a plan to diversify our economy.

Albertans can't afford a royalty system that isn't up to the challenges of today, which is why our new framework will encourage all companies to drive down costs, making us more competitive; provide greater certainty for investors; remain adaptable to advancements in technology; support a more efficient and environmentally responsible development; and it will help to diversify our energy economy. Taken as a whole, the modernized framework makes it easier for companies to understand their long-term costs so they can invest with confidence and support jobs in Alberta.

Our support for energy workers does not end here. As part of our recent Speech from the Throne our government was pleased to announce the energy diversification advisory committee. This committee will be made up of a broad representation of Albertans who understand the importance of promoting more value-added industries in our province. While the membership of this committee has not yet been finalized, it will consider the views of energy workers in this province and the importance of their opinions as it reviews opportunities for our province.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our government continues to support the building of new pipelines. Better market access will support our energy sector and, by extension, energy workers. Our country's inability over the past 10 years to pursue a strategic energy policy that Canadians support has made it impossible for our country to diversify its markets. Canada currently imports almost a million barrels of oil from other countries when there is no need if the proper infrastructure could be built. Canada does not need to finance the economies of other countries when we have the resources to be self-sufficient and support energy and construction jobs in our own country. This is an argument we continue to make publicly and privately with stakeholders at home and across the country. The construction of these pipelines will support energy workers as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to bring these facts to the attention of this Legislature, and I am pleased to support energy workers in Alberta. Our government supports them. I thank the hon. Member for West Yellowhead for his motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it would be amusing if it wasn't kind of sad, but here we have one of the government's own backbenchers that wants to urge the front bench over there to do something that any competent government would understand is their daily duty to do; namely, to consult with all stakeholders before it makes major policy changes. But, then, if this socialist government has one undeniable hallmark, it is its utter lack of seeking input from all Albertans before making up its mind on important policy directions. Let's not be fooled by the climate action consultations. The Minister of Energy admitted her staffers were so-called assisting the panel from the very beginning. With so many pressing issues facing our province, from skyrocketing unemployment figures to the plummeting price of oil, Albertans expect us to be here working on the pressing issues of the day and not wasting our time with motions like this, designed to remind us of our most basic duties as legislators.

The worst part about this is that the motion doesn't even meet its own apparent goal. Perhaps the member doesn't understand the true nature of policy consultation. It needs to be very broadly based, and I don't understand why this motion only urges government to engage with energy sector workers, for instance. What about the contractors? What about the independent businessmen and businesswomen, who don't qualify for employment insurance, by the way, and who don't show up in some of our unemployment statistics? And what about the communities, the municipalities like Hanna and Forestburg, whose very existence is now threatened by this government's policies rolled out without consultation in the first eight weeks or nine weeks of this government taking office? Where was that consultation before rolling out a policy? How about the chambers of commerce? The Rotary clubs, who represent the job creators in our province: why aren't they worthy of mention in this motion? They're not worthy of engagement?

Well, we saw the disastrous effects of this government failing to properly consult not that long ago with the botched implementation of Bill 6. The members opposite thought they knew better than the farmers and ranchers and even their own government experts, who warned them that this bill would create, and I quote, panic amongst farmers and ranchers who were begging, pleading to be consulted with. But the government pushed forward without broad-based consultation, and now we're having round-table discussions after the fact. The government said that it learned its lesson following the Bill 6 debacle, but clearly that is not the case.

Clearly, the government's own backbenchers don't want to go home again to thousands of Albertans who have been ignored on legislation, and sadly I would have to concede that maybe this government needs to be constantly reminded that consultation is critical on policy changes to our most important industry. This comes as second nature to most people, but time and again we've seen this government make some head-scratching decisions with very real consequences for workers and businesses, families, and entire communities with no prior consultation.

No doubt the member putting this motion forward is sharing a sentiment he's heard in his constituency. I realize there are coal miners and plant workers in his constituency who are probably in a state of shock right now that this member over here for West Yellowhead is representing a party that is putting their communities at risk and putting those families out of work. They were never consulted ahead of time, but this government just rolls on anyhow, and people just don't trust this government to diversify the energy sector or properly consult while it seeks to do so and needs a reminder.

Being that this is one of our most important industries – and, frankly, this government has many members who just can't be trusted to act in a way that is fair and reasonable – the list of groups who would be left out of consultation under this motion is quite shocking. Why doesn't this motion urge the government to engage with those who represent consumer groups, for example? Sectors of our economy that use energy like farmers, small-business groups, and, as I mentioned before, chambers of commerce, these small and medium businesses who consume energy to produce products who are also the job creators and the drivers of most innovation and diversification in our province: why are they missing from this motion? Is it because the Member for West Yellowhead and most of the NDP caucus don't have the life experience to see this world and Alberta's economy from multiple perspectives? I'm trying to understand why any member of this House would put forward a motion that states the obvious yet misses so very much; namely, the scope of broad consultation in the development of policy.

Once again we see a motion from the NDP caucus urging the government to do what any competent government should already be doing anyway. It's as unnecessary as Bill 1, which lays out the job description for the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. This motion is another kind of job description for a government that doesn't appear to know how to do its job. But I'll tell you what. If the front bench of the NDP caucus really aren't sure what to do and they need legislation and motions like this and Bill 1 to give them job descriptions and tasks on a week-by-week basis, then okay, I guess we'd better help them along and support this motion. Any step towards more consultation is a positive step under this government.

So I am encouraging everyone in this House, especially the ministers across the aisle who need the support and understanding of what their job is, to all support this thing. Maybe once this is done, we won't have to revisit the issue again. Everybody over there will know that you need to consult Albertans before you make policy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to rise today and speak in favour of my colleague's motion about engaging with workers when developing strategies that diversify Alberta's energy sector and create value-added jobs. It's something I engage in daily, as I know our government MLAs and ministers do as well, contrary to the belief over here. On behalf of my constituents of Leduc-Beaumont, many of whom derive their livelihoods from the energy sector, and the countless Albertans I've spoken to who work in and are affected by the energy sector, it is my privilege to stand in this House and speak in favour of this motion today.

As I engage with my constituents in the fantastic constituency of Leduc-Beaumont, I am reminded every day of the role that oil and gas plays in the lives of Albertans and the role our resources have in creating a fair and strong economy. There are approximately 500 oil and gas companies in the Alberta international region, with many in my constituency, and that's just the oil and gas ones. There are also a growing number of renewable companies as well. I've had a number of constituents in my office speaking about the issues they are facing, the troubles they are having after losing their jobs, and being left out of the new EI changes certainly hasn't helped them on this journey. These Albertans aren't looking for a handout; they're just looking for a hand up.

Mr. Speaker, I digress. I've also had some very positive stories of companies diversifying their services. One company I know of had to let go of about 20 people not that long ago, then turned around and hired them back plus more because they knew their company could use the skills that they had to enter into the renewable sector as well as oil and gas, and they are now very well placed to continue to succeed well into the future.

Mr. Speaker, the historical overdependence on a single commodity has made us vulnerable to external factors our government and Albertans are unable to control, but Albertans are resilient. Albertans have shown they are a resilient and entrepreneurial group during this economic challenge. We need to look no further than Leduc and Beaumont to see that.

Albertans want and need a government that stands up for their interests during these economic times. Mr. Speaker, diversification in the energy sector is central for the long-term growth of Alberta's economy, the whole sector. As my colleague stated, it is our duty as members of the Legislature to ensure that our province captures the full value of our resources. Diversification to me means not only moving into and utilizing more green and renewable energy sources to complement and supplement fossil fuels but also realizing the potential of the companies, the technology, and the people we have already to expand into other areas and other markets. It is essential that our government engage with the over 158,000 natural resource workers in Alberta when developing new strategies. Listening to workers and industry leaders must remain at the forefront of this government's agenda.

I was recently at an energy services breakfast, listening to experts and innovators in the energy industry discuss exciting opportunities in their fields, from Columbia to Mexico to India. It was a fantastic and very positive morning, learning not only about new opportunities but also about some of the amazing things already happening here in Alberta. And there are a lot of amazing things that have been happening and continue to happen. As Canadians and Albertans we do a fairly poor job of patting ourselves on the back with that. One of my focuses is to try to get more of that positivity out there and to talk about the things that we already are doing.

It's not always about reinventing the wheel per se but building on what we already have as well. I'm proud to be part of a government who is actively seeking the input and the ideas from these energy workers. During these difficult times we remain committed more than ever to supporting those affected by the energy sector. Mr. Speaker, front-line workers have the valuable knowledge and experience to speak to the issues as we move towards energy diversification. They are the boots on the ground who are in the thick of it and who know well the different ways we can diversify in this tough economic climate.

Today's difficult times also serve as a reminder that economic diversification requires a prolonged approach in finding opportunities to build on our current areas of strength. There are no quick fixes. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's energy sector remains a key driver of the provincial economy, and if we want to create long-term, sustainable jobs, we need to diversify beyond just energy extraction into other areas of strengths.

Earlier, during the Member for West Yellowhead's statement, I was happy to hear about the innovative TM lignin recovery plant project happening in West Yellowhead. It's a great step towards economic diversification and finding new opportunities. As my colleague stated, in the March 8 Speech from the Throne we highlighted our government's will to establish the energy diversification advisory committee, which will provide advice on the steps needed to build a more diversified and resilient economy. As plans develop like my colleague's, I certainly urge the committee to engage with the various organizations that represent energy workers, whether that be PSAC, CAPP, Green Energy Alliance, or other groups in Nisku like Fox Oilfield, Trinidad Drilling, and Bulldog Energy. There's also a new initiative out there called Iron and Earth, which is led by oil sands workers committed to building Canada's green energy future. I encourage you guys to look it up. It's quite interesting.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans are tired of these boom-and-bust cycles. Previous governments should have done a little better job of working with the companies in the energy sector to help them weather the storms of these global commodities markets. Workers and their families are struggling because of low prices of resources, something this government cannot control, but there are steps we can take. I'm glad that our government is fighting to include Edmonton, Leduc, and Nisku, which have been badly hit by the collapsing oil prices, in qualifying for the employment insurance changes that benefit workers in the rest of Alberta. It would certainly help people in my region to get through this downturn.

I support my colleague's motion as it speaks to our government's commitment to create value-added jobs during a time when Albertans are concerned about their economic security and represents the values of Albertans, who want a fair and prosperous economy. Mr. Speaker, I want this province to be an all-encompassing energy province. I know we can and I know we will get through these tough times stronger on the other side.

Thank you.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise today on behalf of my constituents in Lethbridge-East and to speak in favour of this motion put forward by my colleague the MLA from West Yellowhead. It is about engaging front-line workers.

In Lethbridge-East some of my constituents are affected directly through the loss of their jobs in the oil and gas industry, and some are affected indirectly through oil services industries. Nonetheless, they are affected as are we all. In Lethbridge-East we are affected a little less so than in other areas of the province because our economy is much more diversified, having much greater involvement in agriculture, being home to both a college and a university, and the spinoffs to those areas. We also sit next to the largest wind farm in western Canada and a top-of-the-line biomass energy generator. We are an excellent example of economic diversification and energy diversification.

Mr. Speaker, given the lessened impact in Lethbridge compared to other areas in our province, specifically because our economy is diversified, this really speaks to the importance of investing in economic diversification throughout the province. Obviously, the natural course of action to deal with this crisis should be for our government to engage with energy sector workers when developing these new strategies, and we are.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the member, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate on Motion 502.

Mr. Rosendahl: To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Albertans need a diversified economy, an economy that is strong, tough, and flexible. This resilient economy will provide a buffer to energy price swings and will capture the full value of our resources. I'm proud to share that the government has set out a strong economic plan that includes investing in much-needed infrastructure to build the hospitals, schools, roads, and bridges Albertans rely on; supporting the private sector and creating jobs; improving access to capital for entrepreneurs; and encouraging innovation across a variety of sectors.

As I indicated in my member's statement earlier today, Hinton Pulp, by using its collaborator FPInnovations patented LignoForce process to recover lignin from black liquor, will see the construction of Canada's first commercial lignin recovery plant. This local project is an example of true collaboration, entrepreneurship, and a community dialogue that was open to new and innovative business ideas.

We must not forget that Albertans' resource sector remains a key driver of the provincial economy. Mr. Speaker, as our province endures the current economic challenges due to the drop in the global price of coal and oil – and oil is still below $40 a barrel – it has become more apparent than ever that we must invest in economic diversification to ensure that Albertans are not casualties in what has become a boom-and-bust economy.

We have about 158,900 people working in the natural resources industry, which includes workers in our mines, quarries, natural oil and gas sectors, and we must not fail to mention the other spinoff companies. Hence, Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely essential that our government engage with resource sector workers when developing new strategies. Listening to workers and industrial leaders must always remain at the forefront of the government's agenda. They should be informed, consulted, and discussed with so that they, too, have an equal say in their future. Hence, I urge the government to engage with resource sector workers when developing strategies that diversify Alberta's energy sector and create value-added jobs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me this opportunity to stand up in the House and speak to this issue. It is a privilege. I look forward to hearing from and working with all my colleagues in the Legislative Assembly on this important issue.

Thank you very much.

10 a.m.

Tuesday, April 5, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: If you would bow your heads, hon. members.

Time is precious. Let us use our time as public servants to dedicate ourselves to achieving our common goals and working towards the betterment of our great province, which is in our care. Let us remember that strength and success are accomplished by working together. Listening, understanding, and respecting one another's views can open up new possibilities and new opportunities.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Nixon]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: I'm done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.
The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I've changed districts, but that's fine.

The Speaker: Well, you're shorter than I'd thought.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Thank you for this opportunity as well to, you know, give a response to the Speech from the Throne as it will relate to my maiden speech. On May 5, 2015, like many Albertans, I watched the results of the provincial election on television. Surrounded by family and friends in the home I share with my beautiful wife, Michèle, I came to realize that I would be successful and would become the third Member of the Legislative Assembly for Whitecourt-St. Anne since its creation in 1993.

I couldn't be more honoured to serve the wonderful people of this district. This amazing constituency is rich in diversity in not only its people and communities but also its natural wonders. The hard-working people of Whitecourt-St. Anne are farmers, ranchers, foresters, machinists, plumbers, electricians, welders, truckers. They serve meals, clean hotel rooms, work in stores, provide financial and legal advice, teach and guide our young. We can't forget the many men and women who serve the public good as nurses, peace officers, and firefighters. Some work in or near their town while others commute to Whitecourt or Edmonton, but all contribute to the prosperity of Alberta.

Much has been said about the need to diversify our economy, especially in light of the current downturn in the price of oil and gas. Whitecourt-St. Anne, with its abundant resources, is well positioned to take advantage of that diversification. Oil and gas, for sure, will become more diversified, but so will the other two major industries in Alberta, agriculture and forestry. As the largest of our renewable sectors both have a lot to contribute by way of value-added products. Research in forestry and agriculture will allow us to continue being world leaders in new wood and agriculture products.

Our climate change leadership plan will allow for increased innovation in the use of biofuels and green electricity generation. There are already some exciting things happening in the district to demonstrate to the world that we take climate change seriously and will do something about it. Whitecourt-St. Anne will have a large role to play in the new green economy. As we continue to invest in the future of this great province, we will strive to diversify our economy so as to ensure that those in Whitecourt-St. Anne who find the current economic times tough will be able to look forward to a brighter future.

That future is in large part possible because of the good people of Whitecourt-St. Anne who spend some of their free time helping others. The single greatest asset to the social well-being of our communities is its volunteers. You might be a member of a service club or a leader with a youth group such as Scouts Canada or coach a hockey team. You might help out with the community lunch box program in Whitecourt or perhaps the Legion in Evansburg or other towns. Perhaps you spend some of your free time at the agricultural societies or the 4-H club and not only contribute to the prosperity of our rural district but also play a huge part in maintaining that rural lifestyle we all love and cherish. Whatever you volunteer for, I am grateful for your contribution. Your efforts are what make Whitecourt-St. Anne the great place to live and raise a family that it is.

From the vistas of the Pembina River to the amazing trails of Carson-Pegasus provincial park the constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne is one of the most beautiful areas of the province. Many of us enjoy spending time near the many small lakes that dot the landscape. We are blessed with wonderful farmland and an abundance of forested areas. Tourists come to Whitecourt-St. Anne to hunt and fish, ski, snowmobile, camp, and hike. The district is large, with over 70 villages, hamlets, towns, and summer villages. It spans from Onoway, Alberta Beach, and Alexis First Nation in the east to Whitecourt, Blue Ridge, and Mayerthorpe in the northwest to Peers and Wildwood in the southwest.

Michèle and I moved to Lac Ste. Anne over six years ago. It was one of the best decisions we ever made. We got married on our property and celebrated in the Darwell hall. We have met so many wonderful people, especially over the past year or so. It seems everyone has a passion for their hometown or their family farm.

Like many Albertans, I grew up on the family farm, a farm that my brother now runs as a fourth-generation farmer. He's 10 years older than I am, so I knew early on that he was most likely to continue the family tradition. I, instead, found work as a geotechnical technician with Agriculture Canada. That job saw me working on many different irrigation projects across the country, mostly in Alberta. Little did I know that those 20 years as a public servant with Agriculture Canada would serve me so well in my future job as a public servant for the province of Alberta. As the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Whitecourt-St. Anne I am a public servant. As a public servant I feel that my role is to represent the citizens of the district the best I can. It does not matter whether you supported me in the election or not. I am here to represent all.

After so many years with only one party ruling, we all had to learn to transition. That transition has had its bumps, but I'm proud of what we've been able to accomplish in 10 short months. We have shown that we put people first. Whether it is maintaining funding for education or health care or implementing a stimulus plan that will put many Albertans back to work, we continue to show that people are our greatest resource and our first priority.

A few days after we all realized that after 43 years there would finally be a change in the government of Alberta, the Premier asked me to meet with her. I was not sure what I could have possibly done wrong in so short a time. We had not even been sworn in yet. To my great relief I was not in trouble. Instead, the Premier asked me if I would like to be the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry. I was absolutely overjoyed and immediately said yes. I also told her that if I'd had the choice of ministry, it would have been agriculture as I know how important farming is in my district.

I have to admit that I did not know a lot about forestry at first, but I always knew that forestry is also an important industry in Whitecourt-St. Anne. People in the industry have been fantastic in bringing me up to speed with respect to the challenges and opportunities in forestry. In fact, only three days after the election I was asked by Alberta Newsprint Company and Millar Western to tour their facilities in Whitecourt. I eagerly accepted their invitation and proceeded to visit as many mills across the province as I possibly could.

The people of Whitecourt-St. Anne, like the rest of Alberta, face some challenges, but I believe the opportunities outweigh those challenges. I have vowed that I will work with all Albertans to do what I can to face those challenges and to explore those opportunities. The good people of Whitecourt-St. Anne should expect no less.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Questions and comments to the member? The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was really quite happy to hear from the minister about his Whitecourt-St. Anne riding. I spent many, many summers in the Alberta Beach-Lac Ste. Anne area, and I know the riding reasonably well. It has a number of interesting issues that are ongoing there, and one of them happens to be the water supply to some of the smaller towns within the riding. I'm wondering if he might comment on what might be happening with respect to consideration about the water supply, particularly for Alberta Beach and some of the other surrounding communities which might get together to share costs in providing a better water supply.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the follow-up statements. There are, you know, some water supply issues with many of the small communities right across Alberta. It is, as a matter of fact, probably a phenomenon that's felt right across Canada. A lot of the small communities in the district of Whitecourt-St. Anne, including Alexis First Nation, are in the process of developing projects and plans that include pipelines and include other forms of improving their water quality.

While we're on the subject of small villages, the summer villages in Whitecourt-St. Anne are abundant. I do believe that there are more summer villages in Whitecourt-St. Anne than any other district in the province. As a matter of fact, there are 14 summer villages just in my own county of Lac Ste. Anne. These are a vibrant part of a very unique municipal designation in Alberta. They have been around since about 1910 or so. The hon. member had mentioned Alberta Beach, which until recently had been a summer village but actually now is considered a village, but it's surrounded by many summer villages just the same.

If you haven't had the opportunity to visit any of the summer villages, I would encourage anyone in this House to do so. They are vibrant and wonderful little communities. Here's a bit of a plug. There's recently a new mobile phone application for farmers' markets. If you want to find out where your farmers' markets might be, there are currently about 168 or so Agriculture and Forestry designated farmers' markets across the province, many of those in those summer villages. I encourage you, if you haven't done so already, to find that application, load it onto your mobile phone, and have a great opportunity to visit summer villages and communities right across this province, looking at the many wonderful farmers' markets and what rural Alberta has to offer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I frequently hear plugs for each community as I sit in the House here. Good for you.

The Member for Drumheller-Stettler, 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to rise and congratulate the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne on his maiden speech because I've come to the realization that it's not even been a year since he's been elected to the role, and I believe he's exhibited himself reasonably professionally. I have had the honour to work with and confer with him in private and in public, and it's been an honour.

I just would like to question the member on his acumen as an agriculturalist and his acumen in irrigation, an irrigation-involved specialist, possibly, if I could use that word, and what he feels the way forward for the province could be in these trying times of economics and job creation.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member was speaking, I was trying to think: how can I weave that question about irrigation into the district of Whitecourt-St. Anne? That's going to be a challenge. There are no large-size irrigation projects in Whitecourt-St. Anne, but as a matter of fact, Alberta has close to 50 per cent of the irrigated land in Canada. We have about 1.4 million acres under irrigation in Alberta. It's been a success story not just for Alberta but for Canada. We have a wide range of diversification of crops in our irrigated areas, everything from forage crops to specialty crops of potatoes, and currently about 20,000 acres of hemp also in the province.

Some good news as of late: the sugar beet crop this year will expand by about 6,000 acres. That's great news. That's an industry that has over the past few decades found, you know, some challenges, so to be able to this year expand their acreages is very good news. I'm hoping in some large part, if all the stars align, to be able to take advantage of the implementation of the trans-Pacific partnership.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Now the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. Like you watching out for everyone here in the House today and every day, my parents watch me from above and bless me every day.

Today I have the honour to rise and respond to the throne speech on behalf of the entire Wildrose Calgary caucus. After three attempts at running for this office, I finally can rise and give my maiden speech. I would like to first thank my constituents who voted me, as the 904th MLA, to this 29th Legislature. I thank you for your confidence in me to represent your interests in the best possible way I can. I would like to thank the members of the Wildrose who nominated me as their candidate. I'd also like to thank all my volunteers, donors, and friends for their continued help and encouragement, without which I wouldn't have run three times.

I would like to thank the previous MLAs of my riding for their service to the people. One of the MLAs I have to extend special thanks to is MLA 830. If it were not for his abrupt service to the people through his departure, I would not have arrived here as soon.

Last but not least, thank you to my wife, Santhi, and our son, Himanish, for their unwavering support to me. I love them both so very much, till my last breath.

Since being elected, I have had the opportunity to attend many different community events such as a multicultural event called One World, several Chinese New Year festivals, and a couple of family skating parties organized by the community associations in my riding. I also attended Holi, the festival of colours, and a Muslim-Christian interfaith family gathering. I look forward to celebrating the greatest outdoor show on Earth, the Calgary Stampede, for the first time as an MLA.

I'm also proud to now represent the schools that my son went to as a child. Those schools gave him a world-class education, and I am beyond thankful for the time and effort teachers put into helping our future generations. My son was the reason we moved to Canada. My wife and I wanted him to have the best education possible in Calgary, the best city in the world. Ironically, he cheers for the Oilers. Well, I'm trying to make up by wearing the Calgary tartan today. Actually, tomorrow is the celebration, but I'm wearing it today to make up for my son cheering for the Oilers.

Calgary-Foothills is a very diverse riding. It's filled with old and new Canadians such as myself. It's filled with people of many different faiths, backgrounds, and many different cultures. I want to know more about everyone in my riding through meeting every single one of my constituents. My goal is to knock on every door in the riding several times before the next election, and in the process maybe I can lose some of the weight I gained as an MLA. I cannot do my job as a representative of the people unless I meet and listen to them on a regular basis.

I have some big shoes to fill when comparing myself to past MLAs of Calgary-Foothills. Constituents from my riding have had the benefit of being represented in the past by former Premiers Ernest Manning, William Aberhart, and Jim Prentice. Although I cannot promise I'll live up to their fame, or infamy, depending on your opinions, I can promise I will represent the people of Calgary-Foothills in the best possible way.

Of course, I'm not the first MLA here to rise and give their maiden speech in the House, but reading my predecessors' speeches has taught me valuable information about the area I represent. In 1975, before this area was the city of Calgary, MLA Kidd talked about the vast lands filled with trees, creeks, and agricultural land. The riding used to stretch all the way to the B.C. border, but since Calgary has grown by leaps and bounds in the last 40 years, the riding has shrunk to a small portion of the size it used to be.

Today I have the opportunity to interact with my constituents on a much more regular basis. Living in such close proximity to those I represent allows me to understand their needs and issues better since I am their neighbour, issues that plague my riding and my neighbours such as the half-built interchange, that poses a safety risk to children travelling to school every day. Most importantly, people in my riding are very concerned about the economy and jobs. They know that when we have a thriving economy, we can afford the best health care, education, and seniors' care. These issues and any other issues that my neighbours have will be addressed by myself in the most effective way possible. Whether this means sending letter after letter to the ministers in order to address issues or volunteering at local associations to help people on the ground, I will help my neighbours any way I can. I will work with all levels of government to find solutions.

Helping my neighbours was something I learned from my father. He was always very helpful to the neighbours. He went out of his way. His elder brother used to manage their joint family finances and the family business, which went through some difficult economic times to the point of almost poverty. Then my father took control of the family responsibilities, and he worked hard to repay every single debt and followed through by stabilizing the family finances of four of his siblings. They had a giant family.

My father did not have higher education since there was no high school in his area. He thought education was very important to enable the next generations to find well-paid jobs. He collaborated with the neighbouring villages to raise funds and built a high school in the middle of all the villages. Due to my father's generosity and hard work, today we have 11 doctors and 12 engineers who are his direct descendants, his bloodline.

His generosity extended beyond the family. He would pay for priests to travel to bless the land for the whole community along with supplying all the materials for the celebrations. He even built a temple in his community as a way to give back to the community. He was a farmer, a small-business man, and a fiscal conservative. From his own experience he learned that debt is expensive, and he realized that interest paid to the lenders could be used to pay for education and health care. He said that one's hand should always be like this, not like this. That's how he lived his entire life. Now you all should understand why I ran for a party which wants to balance the budget.

I was born late in my parents' lives. Perhaps I was an afterthought. But that meant my mom brought me up like a rare species, a cute panda. I think the term is "helicopter parent" today. I'm sure I caused her more trouble than I was worth. Even so, she loved me regardless. I learned persuasiveness and gentle bargaining from my mother, which helped me to succeed in my professional career in oil and gas.

My parents taught me and my older siblings to share with others and to care for those who are in need and to love everyone, even your enemies. Coming from the political system in India, the opposition was seen as the enemy. For the record I do not think the NDP are the enemy; my political rivals, yes, but not my enemy. I'm very glad that I do not have to fear for my safety after I point out negatives about the government such as bills that are a job description or a job creation program that creates no jobs.

Running for office here in Canada was not the first time I was involved in electoral politics. I was tired of the one-party system in India, so I campaigned for the opposition in a federal seat held by my relative. We both lived on the same street, and he was the longest serving federal minister in India. I was only 14 then, and my parents were not too happy that I campaigned against their own cousin. I heard the agriculture minister when he mentioned about one party ruling for so long, and that's the reason I am in politics here. I didn't like the one-party system either.

I was elected to students' union leadership positions that were fiercely contested. Active involvement in student politics was not only fun but also shaped me into a fearless fighter. I ran my own brother's unsuccessful campaign for public office. In India to win a seat is not easy or open as it is here in Alberta. You need a lot of muscle and money to win an election there. Since then my resolve to ensure that people get representation from more than one side has stayed with me. That's why I chose to run for the Official Opposition. I knew that for democracy to work, we need more than one opinion. We need an effective opposition to keep the government in check. So despite the last two by-elections, I hope the members opposite remember that your jobs will be important in 2019.

Alberta has always had a cyclical economy. We have our ups and downs, but we have always come out stronger in the end. During these tough times Albertans are looking for hope and strong leadership. We are down, but we are not out. We are in these tough times together, but we should not be attempting risky, ideological economic policies that add to the problem. I don't blame the NDP for the price of oil, but I do blame them for the decrease in business confidence due to increased taxes, royalty reviews, carbon tax, and the unpredictability of what policies they'll implement next. Luckily there are Albertans who support our economy, who support our oil sands and promote Alberta instead of calling us embarrassing cousins.

This government should be looking toward patriotic groups like Canada Action and Oil Respect for how to properly represent Alberta. Instead, this government proposes bills that do not help Albertans to get back to work. In fact, the government's very first bill refers to those who already have work instead of those who do not work now. It's a shame. I'm part of APEGA, and its membership is about 80,000, Mr. Speaker, many of whom are looking for work now.

My constituents are telling me that their biggest concern is that their family and friends need to get back to work. I have no idea who the NDP are talking to that made them decide their first bill should not be directed at those needing work, but I'm here to tell this House that my constituents are very unhappy with how this government is operating. I hope that this government will listen to the opposition and help get Albertans back to work.

My party created the Equalization Fairness Panel and proposed a 12-point jobs action plan. Wildrose continues to be the only party that is a strong advocate for Alberta's energy sector and pipeline projects to get the product to tidewater.

Before I conclude, I would like to quote a few verses from Gita, the scripture Mahatma Gandhi used to refer to to derive fresh joy and new meanings from it every day. When you refer to chapter 3, Karma Yoga, and relate it to our contemporary politics, Mr. Speaker, it says that the parents, the schoolteachers, the professionals, and the political leaders are all in general considered to be the natural leaders of the innocent people. All such natural leaders have a great responsibility to their dependants. Each one of us here in this House, Mr. Speaker, each and every MLA of every party, of every political stripe, is expected to perform our duties as servants of society.

The Speaker: Hon. member, your time as allocated is up.

Allow me to just say to all of the House that it's a privilege to listen and learn. We saw evidence this morning again of hearing and learning a lot about individuals. It's really quite a privilege.

Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: I was just wondering if the hon. member would like to expand a little bit on what he was trying to say at the end there. I was quite interested in his closing comments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Opposition Whip. I was saying that each one of us, every MLA here in this House, being natural leaders – I was quoting the Gita, and in the scripture it describes teachers and political leaders, all of us, as natural leaders. So we have the natural responsibility to our dependants. I mean, they all expect us to perform our duties as servants of society, as learned and mature professionals. Selflessly, with purity and perfection, we are expected to serve the public. As the MLA for Calgary-Foothills I promise to do my part to help Albertans and to represent my constituency to the best of my ability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. I'd also like to comment to the Member for Calgary-Foothills. I've found it very intriguing in the brief time that I've come to know the member about his agricultural background, and I find it honourable that the member would come from a farming background in a foreign country with a foreign language and achieve the political prowess that he has in this country. I was wondering if the member could just expound upon that perspective a little bit, coming from another country to this country and from that to this Chamber.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Member, for the question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a dream for many immigrants like me to come to a country like Canada to fulfill our dreams. You know, it's the people here inviting everybody and the opportunities that are provided here. I'm not a career politician. I'm an engineer by training. I'm a professional engineer. But the opportunities we have here in Alberta – the reason I chose Alberta was that we had lower taxes and great job opportunities and world-class education and, I mean, top-class health facilities and all that. That's why we moved here.

There were some challenges initially, you know. It's adjusting to the climate and adjusting to the new country. It was a little bit tough for my family and me, but it's the people, the Albertans and Canadians, that made it so easy for us. They're so welcoming, and they helped us succeed in this country. Based on my upbringing in a conservative family, that's the way to give back to society, and that's why I chose to run for politics.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Foothills: it's been an incredible journey for you. This was your third time running, and you were successful. Not only that, but you used to work up in my neck of the woods, up in Fort McMurray. You worked for one of our biggest employers up there, Suncor. Not only were you an engineer, but I believe you were also on the management side. From what I know of the oil sands, that's quite the pay drop to take on this position in public office. You chose to run for the opposition, when you could have perhaps applied to run for the governing side. You chose to give a balanced representation to the people of Alberta, to ensure a strong opposition. What was the driving factor behind all of these decisions that you made?

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Thanks for the question. I chose to run for the best party because the best people, like you, are also involved in the best party. You know, you're doing a great job as MLA for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo. I mean, that's the place we should be celebrating, actually. That's the best resource we have in the world, and very few countries are blessed to have that kind of resource. We should be leveraging that and taking full benefit of that. I mean, the reason I left my career in oil and gas is that, like I said before, that's what my parents taught me, to give back to society. My family condition is that my son is grown up, and I've fulfilled that responsibility as a family man, so today I'm available to serve the public.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in the House to respond to the Speech from the Throne and to deliver my maiden speech. I was elected on May 5 to represent the constituency of Calgary-Buffalo, right in the heart of downtown Calgary. Calgary-Buffalo is a beautiful riding. It's filled with life, culture, and community. It's bound by the Bow and Elbow rivers and is probably the smallest geographical riding in the province. What makes the riding so unique is its diversity. Calgary-Buffalo contains some of the oldest and newest buildings in the province. It includes affordable housing only blocks from some of the most expensive square footage in the province. It contains thousands of small businesses that speak to the ingenuity and spirit of the province, including all manner of restaurants, retail stores, and health care practitioners. The riding is also home to many corporate headquarters that help to drive the economy.

Calgary-Buffalo also has many innovative social service agencies and a thriving cultural scene. The riding is full of life. Residents can walk to shops, parks, restaurants, galleries, music and theatre venues. Also integral to the riding are many agencies dedicated to helping newcomers join the Canadian community, helping those who fall into homelessness, who struggle with mental health or addictions, who are fleeing domestic violence. Calgary-Buffalo is a riding with people from all walks of life, a riding where people are joined together by common values, common culture, common struggles, or common interests and can come together to celebrate those things and where all are welcome.

Mr. Speaker, the diversity and complexity of this province is truly represented by my riding. In Calgary-Buffalo people from all backgrounds come together. Residents interact with people from a variety of circumstances. It's these different cultural backgrounds, diverse experiences, and varied perspectives that make the riding and our province so strong. Fundamentally, it is in this coming together that we create the space for Albertans to see from a broader perspective than their own. It allows each person to understand and share the lived experiences and perspectives of another. This sense of community allows people to come together to help their neighbours through tough times or to work to create ingenious new businesses and technologies to grow our economy while protecting our environment for future generations. I'm deeply grateful for the opportunity to represent this diverse, progressive, and constantly evolving riding.

In preparing to speak today, I reviewed many of the speeches delivered by members of this House that preceded me in the riding of Calgary-Buffalo. I was struck by many similarities between the challenges and opportunities facing governments of the past and people of the past and the challenges and opportunities that face the government and people today. One of my predecessors spoke of the optimism of a new government replacing one that had been in power for decades, another of the trepidation that accompanied the significant economic and fiscal challenges in the '80s brought on by the drop in the global price of oil.

It was very moving to think that those who have gone before have wrestled with similar challenges and felt a similar sense of obligation to those that sent them to this place, and it reminded me that at the end of the day most people want the same thing. They want to work hard and to make a contribution to their community. They want their families to be safe, prosperous, and happy. Times change in many ways, but those fundamental values remain, and they bind us together as members of the Alberta community.

When I chose to run for election, it was in part out a sense of duty to that community. Alberta has given me so much, and I felt that I should give back. I was lucky enough to be born and raised here in Alberta. In this province, Mr. Speaker, we are blessed with amazing opportunities. We are surrounded by hard-working, decent people who want to contribute to the strength we have in this province. We receive a world-class education in a public system available for all and never have to fear that our families will be bankrupted by an unexpected illness because of our public medical system. We are blessed with natural resources that provide wealth and opportunity to so many. We live in a safe and democratic country, and our rights are protected by the rule of law. I have lived here all my life, so I might be biased, but I believe it is the best place in the world to grow up.

These amazing gifts that we have in this province and in this country, in my view at least, come with obligations, and I feel that one of those obligations is to give back to the democracy that has given us those gifts. So when I was given the opportunity to participate, to go out and suggest a certain vision of the future of this fine province to the residents of Calgary-Buffalo, a vision that aligned with my values, I took it. I expected that it would be both challenging and rewarding, and it was, though ultimately it worked out rather better than I ever could have dreamed.

Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that words can truly express what a genuine privilege it is for me to stand here in this place. I was given the opportunity to stand with a group of my peers, people I didn't know at the time but whom I have grown to respect immensely, and to offer the people of my riding and of this province a vision of the future. It's a vision based on shared values like ensuring that every Albertan regardless of origin or circumstance has access to the same high-quality education and has the right to feel safe and respected in pursuing that education, values like the belief that no person should be left behind simply because they have had an unlucky turn of fate such as struggling with mental health problems, addictions, or any number of things that are not their fault but have left them in need of the compassion and assistance of their fellow Albertans; a vision of a province where decisions are based on evidence, not outdated rhetoric, where everyone has the right to equal treatment before the law and those who struggle deserve a second chance; a vision of a province where the decision-makers recognize that putting more money in the hands of middle-class Albertans benefits all of us and that criminalizing poverty serves no one and harms everyone; a vision of a province where leaders communicate honestly with the electorate about hard times and the hard decisions that face us so that we can work together to make decisions based on the evidence instead of selling fairy tales or hiding the truth.

That vision of Alberta was chosen by the people on May 5, 2015, and it was that choice that sent me here today. I now have the opportunity to stand amongst some of the smartest, hardest working, most caring, and dedicated people I have ever met. Every day I am amazed by the opportunity I have to work with this amazing group of people to try and make this province better for all

Albertans, to make sure that the wealth and opportunity of this great province benefit us all, not just a privileged few.

Many steps have been taken to implement this vision. I had the great privilege of introducing a bill to prohibit donations by corporations and unions less than a month and a half after I was elected, and on my birthday. We put campaign funding back into the hands of the electorate and reduced the impact that wealthy corporations can have on the outcome of elections. I worked with my colleagues to ensure that enrolment growth in education is funded, to increase protections for women fleeing from domestic violence, and to ensure that LGBTQ youth and their allies have a right to come together.

I also had the opportunity to follow through on a promise I made during the campaign to protect the rights of transgender and gender-variant Albertans. In consulting about this bill, I was deeply moved to hear the stories of many transgender people. Many of these stories contained struggles that most of us are lucky enough never to have had to overcome, but many also contained amazing acts of strength and kindness by friends and strangers alike. It was such an honour to meet so many brave Albertans who fought for so long not just for their rights but for the rights of transgender people to come after them in the hopes that those youth will never face the same barriers that they've had to overcome. Many of them said that this was the first time they've ever felt welcome to share their lived experience here in this building. Mr. Speaker, I've had an opportunity that few people will ever have, to stand as an ally alongside so many who have worked so hard simply to be accepted for who they are.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to thank the many people that assisted me along this journey: my family, who stood with me and supported me despite their differing political views; the friends that came out on a really tiny campaign run out of the back of a car to work so hard to bring me to this place; and, most of all, my husband, who stood by me through this incredible ride and has continued to support me as I grow and learn in my new position.

Mr. Speaker, I'm humbled by the optimism, ingenuity, hard work, and genuine care and concern for their neighbours demonstrated by the residents of Calgary-Buffalo, whom I serve. I've had the opportunity to meet with many of my constituents, and many of them are excited to see a more diverse economy. Oil and gas will remain a cornerstone of our economy. That industry has given us so much, and we can and must support it, but it's also time for us to ensure that other sectors have a chance to grow as well. There are so many great ideas in Calgary-Buffalo, including green businesses and entrepreneurs with new technology to offer. I'm excited to watch these businesses develop.

Mr. Speaker, as I speak today, the province is facing tough times, maybe the toughest that we've seen in a while. We can and will pull together and weather the circumstances we find ourselves in as a result of the drop in the price of oil. This province has a history of pulling together and working hard to make it through tough times, and we will again. I am inspired by the residents of my riding: their hard work, their dedication to a better future, and their fundamental desire to help their neighbours even through difficult economic times. I am strengthened by the incredible dedication and compassion of my colleagues, by their fundamental desire to leave this province a little bit better than they found it and to ensure that all people have the tools to share in the many opportunities in this province.

I'm so grateful to the citizens of Calgary-Buffalo, who voted for the vision of Alberta that we offered them, of an Alberta where everyone has an opportunity to participate and we pick our neighbours up when they fall on hard times. I am thankful to stand here in this place and work every day to act on those values and to strive to make the lives of everyday Albertans just a little bit better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to reflect to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo as well that it's also been not quite a year since her election, and I think it'll be interesting to hear her further responses to this. As an Albertan that grew up in a period of time when the Premier and the government of the day amassed a vast sum of money in what was known as the heritage trust fund, that created a savings account, I'd like to understand what the member's feelings are now, when we're in a difficult economic time, on what level of debt the member would accept as a personal level. If she could expound upon that and possibly on a level that might be an acceptable level for a government to accept: is there a feeling of a level of acceptance of debt that she personally espouses or that the constituency relates to her in that regard?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. I did grow up in this province, and I'm familiar, I think, with the ups and downs of the oil market. My father was a geophysicist, and he worked in that area, so I have recollections of what it has been like in the past. I think that with respect to what the member said about the heritage trust fund, I mean, I certainly find myself somewhat frustrated that given that this cycle was a little bit predictable, governments of the past didn't do a better job of saving to ensure that in these lean times, when we know that revenues are going to drop significantly, as they have done, there were funds available for the government to draw on to ensure that it can protect all Albertans in these times when they have such greater need.

With respect to the member's comments on acceptable levels of debt, I think that the sort of critical first piece to recognize is that there are more debts than simply financial ones. One of the frustrating things that I have experienced coming into this position is that there's sort of a significant infrastructure lag in this province. So that's one debt. The result of that is that people don't have access to hospitals and schools that they need. That's deeply frustrating, that that sort of debt has been handed down to us.

Other forms of debt include what I would call a sort of educational debt. If we fail to invest in education now for our children, we will be investing very heavily in the future in my ministry, actually, in justice services for those people. I think that, you know, when we're looking at what we're willing to pass down to the next generation, we have to consider whether we're leaving them with clean water to drink, whether we're leaving them with a well-educated population who will be able to take the economy and take this democracy and rule of law forward where it needs to go, whether we're leaving them with the necessary infrastructure, the roads to support the economy, the hospitals, and the schools to support the people of this province as we move forward.

In terms of acceptable levels of debt it's my view that a government should always be fiscally prudent. We should always struggle to do our best job to make sure that we are not passing down money that needs to be repaid, but we also need to struggle to ensure that we're not passing down other things, that we're not passing down buildings that haven't been repaired in so long that they become useless, that we're not passing down a situation in which our people don't have access to schools and hospitals because they haven't been built, and that we're not passing down a population who doesn't have the fundamental education to carry forward the things that we have built here, to carry on with the rule of law, and to carry on with the vibrant economy we have, that has the skills to transition – as we know, we need to broaden and diversify the economy, and I think that education and the ability to think critically and respond to circumstances are really critical in that way.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say thank you to the hon. minister for her passionate speech on behalf of her constituents and her own journey to arrive where she is today. Of course, congratulations on her election and the position that she holds. I think myself and the minister have . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and speak to the 29th Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Since May, when I was first elected, it has been a profound privilege to stand here on behalf of the men and women of my constituency.

Cardston-Taber-Warner is an incredible place to live, and I'm honoured to live there. It's the most southwestern part of Alberta, right up against the U.S. border. Many of the towns and municipalities trace their heritage to the end of the 19th century. It is a place where a man or a woman could come with a dream. All they needed was $10 and a willingness to work the land and make something of it. It's the same entrepreneurial spirit and can-do attitude that has made our province so great for so long.

It is also home to the largest First Nations reserve in Canada, the Blood reserve, which was established under Treaty 7. I am thankful for their rich culture and their contributions to our communities and for the opportunity to work with them and to learn from them.

Cardston is home to the Cardston Alberta temple, one of Canada's designated national historic sites. On the east end of my riding one can taste the world's best corn. The Taber area, which has a phenomenal irrigation system, boasts the highest heat units in Alberta, which makes it an ideal place to grow world-class produce. On the west side of the riding sits one of the forgotten gems of Alberta, Waterton Lakes national park. With its beautiful mountain trails and cascading waterfalls, Waterton is one of the most beautiful places on earth. My constituency is a remarkable place, and it's an honour to represent it.

I chose to run for election, Mr. Speaker, because I honestly believe that Alberta is the best place to live. I attended university down in the United States, but when that period of my life was over, there was little question in my mind about where I wanted to settle down, about where I wanted to start a business, and about where I wanted to raise my family.

Next month my first grandson will be celebrating his first birthday. When he grows up, I hope that he sees Alberta as the same land of promise and opportunity that so many of us have seen for so long. I would hope that he chooses to settle in our province not because it is where he is from and where his roots are from but because it is Alberta, a land strong and free.

In my career I built and ran numerous businesses, from start-ups to large enterprises to the residential and commercial construction company that my dad, Roy, and I operated over the past decade. Over the years I saw first-hand what policies gave Alberta that advantage, and I saw first-hand the impact of policies that took it away. Throughout the last decade a slow and growing cobweb of thick red tape and increased government size began building up.

Any sense of responsibility has fallen under the long shadow of a shameless descent into debt and deficits. If we are to pursue an irresponsible high-tax regime, one filled with debts and deficits, it may take more than a generation to undo this mess. There are jurisdictions here in Canada that can reveal what that looks like. Ontario now spends $1 billion on interest payments to service their debts each and every month. That's one of the largest line items in their budget. They spend more on servicing their debt than they do on postsecondary education. It is my sincere hope that we halt our descent towards that path. If Albertans managed their finances like this government does, they would soon be bankrupt and homeless.

I am thankful to have a place here among my fellow conservatives in the Wildrose caucus. I'm a conservative because I believe in the worth and dignity of every person, that no matter who you are, where you came from, what you were, or where you were born, every individual has worth and value. That's the compassion at the heart of conservatism, that every individual should be free – free to pursue opportunities, free to pursue their own goals and to raise their own family, free of overbearing governments, and free to save or invest their own earnings as they best see fit – the freedom that no matter where anyone started, every individual can pursue their own livelihood and their own destiny.

But we cannot truly be Alberta, strong and free, if there is a segment of the population for whom all of these freedoms and opportunities are out of reach. When we talk about jobs and the economy, we're talking about how to prevent serious social problems like poverty and homelessness, the myriad personal and family problems that come from bankruptcy and depression, and other illnesses that can result from not having a job or from losing a business. One of the greatest fallacies of the last century has been that such problems can be solved through heavy-handed government spending. Look at the United States, for example, which has spent between $15 trillion and $20 trillion over 50 years on a war on poverty, yet the poverty rate has barely changed.

This fallacy of government spending is a recurring one, especially in the circles that many members of the current government seem to find themselves. I note that the Premier and others on the government benches are no strangers to the Broadbent Institute events. A few days ago I was surprised to see a media report that former federal NDP leader Ed Broadbent had claimed in a speech that much of the inequality we see today is a direct result of austerity budgets in the mid-1990s, when the federal government of the day sought to balance the budget and pay off the debt. It's a peculiar claim, Mr. Speaker. The time when average wages barely grew, family incomes fell, and poverty was in double digits was actually in the period preceding the 1990s.

The share of the national population below the low-income cut-off line has been generally declining over the past 20 years. In fact, when Statistics Canada brought out their income of Canadians report a few years ago, it showed that fewer Canadians were below the poverty line, the low-income cut-off, than ever before. The trend was generally mirrored in Alberta, where the low-income number was in double digits during the early 1990s but then steadily declined downward, dropping even below 6 per cent at one point.

In recent years many left-leaning groups had put out studies that income inequality was worse in Alberta than anywhere else in Canada. To this I can only quote former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who said, "So long as the gap is smaller, they would rather have the poor poorer. [You do] not create wealth and opportunity that way. [You do] not create a property-owning democracy that way."

The reality, as we know, Mr. Speaker, is that for years upon years Canadians from every province and territory came to Alberta because there were jobs and there was opportunity. When their own provinces suffered job losses and no opportunities, they chose Alberta. Why? Because we were doing something different here and something good. It's a status that we should be working to regain.

I know that many of the government's pursuits, especially as they pertain to Alberta's energy industry, are predicated upon the idea of social licence. It's a concept that has come up repeatedly through modern history in numerous iterations. I'm reminded of a certain quotation from the 19th century that underlies it.

Even a whole society, a nation, or even all simultaneously existing societies taken together, are not the owners of the globe. They are only its possessors . . . [and] they must hand it down to succeeding generations in an improved condition.

That, of course, was from Karl Marx in The Communist Manifesto, a text that for all its good intentions has led to immense suffering throughout the 20th century and even today. It's an extreme example, but frankly recent centuries in human history are filled with suffering as a result of brazen, blinded pursuits of ideological goals by governments. It's why we're so opposed to this government's social engineering experiment.

I'm a conservative because I believe in results-oriented solutions. No matter how well-intentioned, all government programs and initiatives need to be accountable to Albertans. We work for everyday Albertans, and we owe to them that their tax dollars are used wisely and that their elected officials are not passing initiatives that will actually harm them.

I looked forward to hearing the government's Speech from the Throne but was disappointed to find that the government was only offering more words, not practical solutions. The throne speech failed to address the NDP's failed job subsidy program, which has created zero jobs. This new legislation offers no concrete solutions and, as such, is an affront to the tens of thousands of Albertans who are out of work.

In this session the Wildrose focused on delivering positive, alternative solutions to get Albertans working again such as reducing small-business taxes, providing relief for families in need, and stability for our energy sector. One such solution was the Wildrose jobs plan, which I had an opportunity to work on, which gives specifics on how to stop the bleeding that's happening in our province's suffering labour market. It is my sincere hope that this government looks to implement these recommendations.

In a prominent place in my home, Mr. Speaker, hangs my favourite picture. In this picture one can see a man standing in the doorway of a lighthouse while a storm rages all around him. One is drawn to the picture, and at first he is awed by the size of the waves that are crashing around the lighthouse. However, as you look closer, you are drawn to the man's face. You notice that this man is calm. How could he be so calm in such a raging storm? He is calm because he knows what that lighthouse's foundation is made of. He is calm because he knows that, as in times past, his lighthouse will weather the storm well. He is calm because he knows that the sun will come out again and that the winds and the waves will subside. This picture has hung in my home for close to 15 years, and I have had many moments to think upon it. What if the lighthouse's foundation were to be undermined? I am sure that the man would not be so confident. In fact, I doubt he would even stay in the lighthouse.

These days Alberta's new canvas has me and, quite frankly, many of my fellow Albertans questioning: is the foundation of Alberta strong and secure? Is it a place that can weather the storms? We have seen the storms of low oil, and we have weathered them well, but this new, tumultuous storm, a.k.a. the NDP government's policies: well, we will just have to see if we survive this one.

On an adjacent wall in my home hang pictures of my family: my wife, Angie, and my five children; my son-in-law; and my 11-month-old grandson. As a father it is my responsibility to try and provide my family and future generations with a bright future. The storms of life will come and go, my friends, but let us not be the creators of those storms. Let us instead create a place where all people can come and realize their dreams.

In closing, I again extend my heartfelt thank you to my constituents in Cardston-Taber-Warner for electing me to represent them here. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for his thoughtful speech. Earlier we heard from the Member for Calgary-Buffalo that debt can be found not just in economics, but you can also have a social debt, and that social debt can be created when you choose to balance a budget. I think the implication was that compassion is found when we as legislators choose to accumulate an economic debt in order to address a social debt. Could you elaborate on this perspective from your point of view as a conservative, on how compassionate we are when we accumulate economic debts as a result of social debt?

Mr. Hunter: Thank you to the member for the question. Mr. Speaker, I do know that there's a balance that you need to strike. I do know that. We live in a very complex society. I think that a lot of people, when they're younger, grow up having dreams and hopes and aspirations, and they hope for a bright future. One of the reasons why I ran was my concern for what future we're offering our children and grandchildren. Is it going to be a future laden with debt and with loss of hope because of that debt? When you take a look at some of the jurisdictions like Greece, where young people have no hope for jobs, for opportunities to be able to advance themselves, there is a loss to that society for generations.

My concern is that in Alberta we chose something different. We chose to have no debt. We chose to be able to have low cost of living, low taxes, and because of that we offer hope and opportunity for our future generations. We've unfortunately, over the past few years and recently, deviated from that course, which was once called the Alberta advantage. That Alberta advantage was so amazing that people from all over the country, all over the world, actually, said: "Let's go to Alberta because there's opportunity there. There's hope there. There's a place where we can raise our family in dignity." Now, that's the kind of social licence we should be fighting for because there's no better social program than a job.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, it's a great honour to speak in response to the Speech from the Throne this morning. I'd like to take a moment to express my gratitude to the people of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill for the opportunity to be their voice in the Legislature. It's a privilege to represent these good people in the government, and I will do my best to listen and bring their concerns and ideas forward here.

I'd like to take this chance to tell you about myself and the riding I represent. The riding of Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill was established in 2005 and includes some of the best parts of the city. The name of the riding is derived from two namesakes. Calgary's 26th mayor, Donald Mackay, served the city from 1949 to 1959, and he's credited with starting the tradition of presenting a white stetson to visitors, cementing a custom that continues today and has been adopted by Tourism Calgary, which annually presents their white hat awards to celebrate inspiring individuals in the tourism industry that go above and beyond to provide service to visitors to our city.

11:10

Nose Hill park is the second largest urban park in Calgary and in Canada. When you drive into Calgary from the west of the city, you can see the remnants of an ancient river when you look to the north. It was this river along with a retreat of glaciers from the last ice age which created the hill and began forming the distinctive shape that it has today. The park is home to many native plants such as the prairie crocus and has some of the last existing natural grasslands in North America. Ninety-five per cent of North American grasslands have been lost to development, pollution, and cultivation. The park covers 11.27 square kilometres and has more than 300 kilometres of trails, worn there by walkers, runners, cyclists, my dog, and almost 200 species of animals that have been recorded in the park.

Mackay-Nose Hill is comprised of five great neighbourhoods in the northwest quadrant of Calgary: Huntington Hills; Beddington Heights, where I make my home; MacEwan; Sandstone; and Calgary's fastest growing community, Evanston. I'd like to talk a little bit about Huntington Hills. It was established in the late 1960s, as was I, and has one of the most active and vibrant community associations in the city. I was happy to present the community association with a cheque for $350,000 recently, and that was from the community facility enhancement program, which normally has a limit of $125,000, but there was such a deficit and it is such a vibrant part of the community that an exception was made for them. This grant is going to go towards refurbishing the gymnasium, which is home to many sports and recreation programs in the community and is used by groups city-wide.

The community association is also home to child care and community programs. Parent link runs a triple-P parenting program, and this is funded through Human Services. It supports parents with a proven program to develop the skills, strategies, and confidence to handle any parenting situation. I'm sure my colleagues here that are parents will agree with me that parenting is the singularly most challenging role that any person can take on, and I'm so grateful that this program is available.

Huntington Hills Community Association also offers curling, skating, and meeting spaces for many organizations in the community and holds one of the best Stampede breakfasts in the city, where last July I skillfully caught every one of the pancakes that was thrown by our very popular mayor, and that was no easy task.

On the east side of the riding is the Calgary airport. The airport is managed and operated by the Calgary Airport Authority. This is a nonprofit organization that ensures that YYC continues its role as a vital part of the Calgary economy. The airport contributes in the neighbourhood of 7 per cent of the GDP to the city of Calgary. It's a vital gateway for both people and goods – 15.48 million passengers and 134,695 metric tonnes of cargo travelled through the airport last year – and YYC is a major hub for both WestJet and Air Canada. The airport authority owns and leases hundreds of thousands of square feet of warehouse, industrial, and office space. This space is home to a number of local and international businesses. Due to the continued growth of the airport, a number of new hotels and commercial facilities have been built around the area in the last five years and have really transformed it. YYC is opening a new international terminal later this year and will have 24 new gates to serve travellers.

I recently helped one of the companies in the Skyline industrial park open their new location. CCI Wireless provides wireless Internet access to rural Alberta and is one of the kinds of companies that can benefit from the $1.5 billion, announced in the throne speech, that is available to Alberta Treasury Branches to support lending to small and medium-sized businesses, which are the backbone of our economy. Rural Internet access allows our farmers, ranchers, and rural businesses to participate in the economy in ways they haven't been able to. A cattle rancher with wireless Internet access has the ability to stream live auctions and bid on animals that previously they would have had to spend time and money to travel just to see. Some of these farms may even be in Mackay-Nose Hill as there's a large area on the north side of the constituency that has some farms and acreages. CCI Wireless employs around a hundred Albertans with good-paying, stable jobs and has plans to expand, creating a couple of hundred more jobs.

It's this kind of diversity that will make our economy more resilient to the changes in the energy industry and the effects that we are all facing because of the protracted and unexpected drop in the price of oil. The government has also directed AIMCo to earmark half a billion dollars for Alberta companies, those with growth potential, giving our small and medium businesses the chance to grow their enterprises and position themselves for the economic recovery that Alberta will see.

The throne speech was delivered on March 8 this year, which was also International Women's Day. This day has grown to celebrate the gains that have been made in striving for the equality of women and men. Actually, Mr. Speaker, this is feminism. Feminism is simply the belief that men and women should have equal rights and opportunities. It's not a scary agenda of hatred or hurt. I'm proud to be part of a government caucus that is gender balanced, with equal numbers of men and women who are committed to serving the people of Alberta.

I'm proud of our government for leading the way in equality by establishing the Status of Women ministry. One of the outcomes I'm committed to as an MLA is that women and girls can walk alone without fear, and I'm excited that a ministry exists that is leading the effort to end violence against women in conjunction with other ministries.

Sexism is what allows violence against women to continue, the belief that women and girls are less than, that they are inadequate, that they're incapable. Women face prejudice based on our gender every day in so many ways that it is difficult to relate the experience to others. Sexism is a type of bullying that is deeply ingrained in our culture, and it hurts everyone, men and women, girls and boys, by constraining us to narrowly defined roles and ideas of what we should be. Sexism makes achieving the same wages as men very difficult for women, especially in Alberta, where women are reported to earn less than 65 per cent of the wages that men make. Companies are shown to be more successful when they have more women in management roles, yet we still see women underrepresented at boardroom tables across our province. It would take a woman working in Canada 235 years to earn the average yearly salary of a male CEO in our country.

I'm a single parent. I raised a daughter and a son – and I'm very proud of both of them and their support – in Calgary, then in a small town called Kenley in the United Kingdom, and in North Attleboro in Massachusetts. I moved my family to England to work for a manufacturing company and experienced blatant sexism on the job. My male colleagues made higher salaries than I did, they enjoyed a closer relationship with our manager through their trips to the pub and the golf course together, and they were encouraged to fly business class while travelling for work while I was given economy tickets until I insisted on equitable treatment. I look forward to ending sexism and the damaging effects it has on our society, Mr. Speaker, and I urge all of my colleagues in the House to join in the effort.

One of the biggest challenges I faced was finding reliable child care. I had to fly my mother over from Canada to watch my children for me so I could travel for my job. Being able to afford good child care even when working in a professional capacity is a challenge for single parents. I know that single parents and their children especially will benefit a great deal from enhancements to the Alberta child benefit and the family employment tax credit, announced in the throne speech.

As any parent can tell you, health care and education are very important to families, and it's these issues that got me more involved in our political process, Mr. Speaker. In late 2014 the Premier at that time was telling Albertans to be prepared for 9 per cent cuts in health care and education. That is a lot to cut from these essential services.

I remember when Albertans had to cope with the fallout from the deep cuts to health care in the 1990s. I remember taking my kids to the store. We were driving down an alley off 14th Street in the northwest, and we saw a man eating food out of a dumpster. He was digging through the food that had been thrown out by a local restaurant. At that time I was working as an administrative assistant at an oil company, and I didn't make a lot of money, but it broke my heart that anyone in our province would be so hungry that they'd have to eat food from the garbage. So I stopped, and I gave him $20 to get something safe and healthy to eat. The man was mentally handicapped, and he'd been discarded by a government intent on making deep cuts, with no support for him to navigate a world that he'd never had to live in alone before. It wasn't the sort of world I wanted my kids to live in then, and it isn't the sort of world I want kids to live in now.

We are all connected, and we are stronger together when we take care of one another. The prospect of more people facing homelessness, more people having to wait even longer to see a doctor, larger classrooms, longer waiting times for surgeries that make life bearable: well, this was unacceptable to me, so I decided to get involved. I joined a campaign called Better Way Alberta, and we encouraged Albertans to sign a petition against the deep cuts the government at the time was proposing.

It was through that work that I was approached to run as a candidate for the NDP in last May's election, and I met a former MLA who is deeply committed to public service, Bob Hawkesworth. Bob was the MLA for Calgary-Mountain View previously, and he served as a long-time city council member in Calgary. I'm really fortunate to have such a generous person in the riding of Mackay-Nose Hill. During the election Mr. Hawkesworth was a wealth of advice and support for me, and he was my biggest cheerleader. He was out knocking on doors with me every night. He helped me to distribute thousands of flyers – some of them even had my face on them, which was very cool – and he stood with me and other great volunteers in the early mornings when we stood and waved signs and greeted commuters on their way to work. I really would like to thank him for his support.

Mackay-Nose Hill has been hit quite hard by the economic downturn, Mr. Speaker. An estimated 2,500 people have been directly impacted in the riding through job losses, and I know that many more have faced wage cuts. I've heard from constituents about the economic and personal struggles they are facing, and I know that hope is what helps pull people through tough times. I was happy to hear that the government is committed to putting many Albertans back to work through the investment of $34 billion in the provincial capital plan to help build the roads, transit systems, schools, and other facilities that the province needs to support our communities and our citizens.

I've lived in Alberta most of my life. I was born in Edmonton, just in Oliver, and I grew up in Sexsmith and Grande Prairie. I've lived and worked in the U.K. and the U.S., and I chose to come back to Alberta because of the diversity and the opportunity we have here.

As you can tell, Mr. Speaker, Mackay-Nose Hill is a diverse riding and not just in the communities and the parks and the industry. Young families, senior citizens, people who weren't born in Alberta, people who recently made Calgary home after fleeing war, people who need support because of disability, people who have created companies that employ many of our neighbours, people who cook for us, take care of our roads, drive our buses, people who serve our community in a myriad of ways, all of these people make Mackay-Nose Hill home, and it has been my honour to tell you about our riding and how the throne speech will impact us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill: it's an interesting comment that you make there. As a former rancher I know what it's like to have Internet access out in the rural community. Also, Member, you made some comment in regard to the CFEP grants in your constituency, and you made a comment that there was an exception made to the funding there. I was wondering if you could elaborate on that, how that funding worked, because we've also received some of that funding in our ridings as well, and I'd like to know what the limits are for them.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the question. I'm afraid I'm not going to be very helpful in giving you more information. I do know that the limit is normally $125,000, and I know that the community association made an appeal to have more funding granted to them through the program, and that is how they came to have the amount that they did.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her reply to the throne speech. Our constituencies are adjacent, so I've got to know the member quite well. I know that she was in the oil and gas industry for many years, so I'd like to ask her to elaborate on her experience in that industry.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. I actually started off as a receptionist at an oil company a long time ago. It was through that work that I developed two different interests that I ended up parlaying into a career. One of them was business. I was working for the business development department of the oil company. We did deals, we sold properties, we bought properties, we created strategies in order to move the company forward, and one thing that I got really good at was developing applications. I developed a database to track acquisitions and divestitures. Yeah. I started working in IT. I've worked for lots of large oil and gas companies. I've also worked for TransAlta Utilities.

My career is what took me overseas and to the U.S. as well, where I worked for manufacturing in the electronics industry. Coming back to Calgary and moving into a business analysis role definitely gave me the opportunity to understand even more in depth how oil and gas companies work, and it's been an amazing learning opportunity. Of course, being from Alberta, I've been through the economic ups and downs before, and I can really empathize with what people are facing today, regardless of what area of the industry they're working in.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I just urge the members – it could be my hearing; it could be the sound system – in the back corner to just raise your volume up a little bit. I'd appreciate it.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to rise today and share my thoughts in response to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to take this moment to acknowledge Alberta's Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. Lois Mitchell, who not only safeguards the constitutional traditions and principles of this House but also engages with Albertans on a continual basis. It is the examples set by strong women of our past and present that lay the groundwork for the change we expect to see in our future.

So let's look to the future, not today, not right now, to our children's and our grandchildren's future. We need an economy that is resilient to energy price swings, captures the full value of our resources, and offers a prosperous future for our children. We are working hard to improve public services, minimize the impact of the current recession on Alberta families, and mend the infrastructure deficit throughout Alberta. I'm very proud of the work that we as a government have accomplished by reinstating the STEP program as well.

I'm privileged to rise today to espouse my riding of Stony Plain, and I'm privileged and humbled to represent what is, I am sure, the most diverse, hard-working, and beautiful constituency in all of Alberta. We are farmers and ranchers, business leaders and entrepreneurs; we are coal miners and teachers. Our riding encompasses everything from Winterburn Road in Edmonton to the Pembina River, the North Saskatchewan in the south to the Yellowhead in the north, except that we scooch down around Spruce Grove.

Stony Plain is one of the very few original ridings with the original name, formed in 1905. The boundaries may have changed, but the location hasn't. The town of Stony Plain, historically known as Dog Rump Creek, is the town of the painted past due to our nearly 40 murals painted in various locations throughout the town.

Another one of the great attractions in the town of Stony Plain is the Multicultural Heritage Centre, which is housed in the town's first school. One of the biggest draws at the multicultural centre is Homesteader's Kitchen, where you can get artisan breads, homemade soups, and an endless selection of homemade pies. As a new draw for the Stony Plain region Ryan Smyth, the former player for the Edmonton Oilers, is now playing for the Stony Plain Eagles triple-A senior men's team.

The Multicultural Heritage Centre is just off Main Street. On Main Street there are boutique shops of every description, from village fashions to Phina's, from Blue Diamond Jewellers to Bing's restaurant. Across from my constituency office is Pet Foods Etc., and I'm kitty-corner to the co-op.

Recent census data shows that the town of Stony Plain has 16,127 residents and Parkland county has 30,568 residents, a growing and vibrant community rich with culture and history. I'm advocating for infrastructure enhancements such as roads, vibrant businesses, local health resources, local agriculture, and our local schools.

Rural tourism is a strong industry west of Edmonton. In one day you can have a picnic at the Devonian gardens, run through the corn maze, catch a fish for dinner at Jackfish Lake, and sleep under the stars at Wabamun. It is a true destination located just around the corner.

The Stony Plain constituency is on the traditional territory of Treaty 6. There are two indigenous bands that also call Stony Plain home, the Enoch Cree First Nation and Paul First Nation, and I am proud of the ongoing work with these nations. As a result of what our government has heard from most of Alberta's indigenous governments, we will repeal Bill 22 and will engage indigenous communities on the consultation they as nations would like to see to support the capacity of First Nation and Métis peoples. This government will also consult indigenous people on a new indigenous people sacred ceremonial objects repatriation act that would facilitate the return of sacred objects to the nations to whom they belong.

These are tough economic times, especially for my constituency of Stony Plain. However, the residents in my constituency are resilient, innovative, and hard-working, and there is no doubt in my mind that we will get through this together. Taking care of the people around us while encouraging industry to grow are goals we need to work towards as a community, a government, and a province. To move forward in a careful, considered way while encouraging growth in consultation with those affected is of the highest importance. There will be a measured approach for the spring session at the Legislature. We have laid the economic framework, and now it is time to tweak some of the smaller pieces so we can continue to play the role of a shock absorber for the economy and encourage diversification and job creation while in this downturn.

We're also investing $34 billion in infrastructure to build the roads, schools, and other vital facilities that Albertans need, which will help keep our tradespeople and our professionals at work. Investing in infrastructure, public health, and education have been priorities during this downturn. We have one of the youngest, strongest workforces in Canada, and maintaining that workforce is part of what will help get us through these rough times. Our greatest resource is our people, the way we care about and care for one another. Our government will continue to act with focus and determination to engage the citizens of Alberta in skills training, retraining, and expanding access to the workforce for people facing unemployment. We will ensure access to venture capital. Updated credit union legislation and, of course, Bill 1, Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act, will help entrepreneurs and businesses in my riding to create new jobs and growth.

The opposition members have obviously been listening to our economic development minister's speeches, and they were paying attention to our announcements in our throne speech, as proven by the approximately six points of their 12-point job action plan that our government has obviously already mentioned. I'm excited to be able to share and discuss with my constituents in Stony Plain details about our expansion of access to workforce and skills training and retraining for the unemployed. This is a commitment for the present and the future, the future of Albertans in our economy.

We are extremely proud in Stony Plain to supply 40 per cent of the energy for all of Alberta. In the region there is Keephills, Sundance, and some work across the river at Genesee. Many more people support our energy by working at the Highvale mine in pits 03 through 09. The hard work of our men and women ensures that people's lights stay on across our province. Over 1,300 people in the riding of Stony Plain help produce that power and will continue to do so for the next 14 years. New legislation will give force and effect to key elements of Alberta's climate leadership plan such as phasing out harmful emissions from coal-powered generation by 2030 to protect our health and our environment.

A modern royalty system will promote innovation and efficiency and provide full transparency and public accountability on the calculation of our royalties. Alberta is an economic leader, buoyed by our energy sector, and we know that right now we need leadership to ensure that we get our product to tidewater. The continued engagement on pipelines is proof that our government is fighting hard for Alberta, its interests and its economy, and we will not back down.

A fair number of Stony Plain residents are employed in the oil and gas sector, the sector that has seen some of the most drastic fluctuations of all industries in this past year, and I understand the stress that puts on our communities. To that end, our government is vigorously urging the federal government to take account of the current economic shock affecting the resource industry and reconsider employment insurance rules that exclude too many Albertans from those much-needed benefits, those of us still around Edmonton.

The new child benefit plan will help 380,000 children living in low-income households. The plan to create new jobs and opportunities while building on traditional economic strengths is what our province needs right now. My constituents have told me that, as I'm sure others have around the province. There are too many low-income households in Alberta. Many of those households are single-parent families.

My beautiful children spent much of their lives in one of those households. We have lived in government-funded housing and other low-income situations. When my children and I moved to the capital region, it was so I could pursue educational opportunities. As a single parent I returned to school, and one of my greatest accomplishments was earning my licensed practical nurse diploma. Though it was difficult, I taught my daughter that pursuing an education is always worth the hard work, and I taught my son what a strong woman looks like. Since my partner, Will, has come into our lives, he has continued to encourage me to always strive for my goals, and he has supported my work as a nurse and as a legislator.

As a nurse and a caregiver the most important part of my job was service and advocacy, to serve those who couldn't always perform the activities of daily life that healthy people take for granted and to advocate for those without a voice to those who needed to hear the message. I spent a number of years working diligently with vulnerable populations. My first role was working with individuals with developmental disabilities. It is where I found my passion for health care. There were many challenges for both my clients and myself, and one of the biggest challenges was the high staff turnover. It can take an individual who lives in care a minimum of six months to come to trust a new caregiver that comes into their lives due to the high turnover in that profession. When there is no trust between caregivers and clients, it makes many situations more dangerous and more difficult for both. Everything from personal care to outings is more stressful for the individuals and the caregivers. Unfortunately, if a client doesn't have capacity to emotionally handle stress, the person may, understandably, lash out at caregivers.

Sometimes due to these stresses an individual may lose their housing supports. If a person loses their housing, the chances of other supports falling to the wayside are very high. People in this situation often run out of money, which leads to a person with no income on our streets. When the physical health of a person on the streets is compromised and, with luck, that person ends up in a hospital, the individual must stay in an acute-care bed until supports are found for that person. This leads to many people staying in acute-care beds for much longer than is needed, and as we all know, acute-care beds are not the appropriate place for long-term care. This is why we are investing in health and housing.

As an acute-care nurse I specialized in patients with acute stroke and acute geriatric patients. This involves many aspects of care, from total care to rehabilitation, from palliative care to dementia care. All care is essential, and every situation is unique. There's an old saying in nursing: they may not remember your name, but they'll always remember how you made them feel.

There are many parallels between nursing and serving as an elected representative. Both professions are about serving people and advocating for them. When a constituent contacts my office in Stony Plain, many times that person is at the end of their rope. Whether it's an agency they are having difficulty contacting or not knowing what resources are available in our community, it is my job and the job of my staff to advocate for each and every constituent who contacts us. We advocate in many ways, from directing a constituent towards a resource to connecting the constituent to the services and supports in our community to bringing forth their concerns to the relevant ministries.

We also value the role that local government plays in supporting our interactions with local residents. I am heartened by the opportunity this government will provide by inviting the public and municipal governments to comment on a modern Municipal Government Act. The trimunicipal region, which encompasses the town of Stony Plain, the city of Spruce Grove, and Parkland county, is well known for their strong co-operative projects and initiatives. It should be a model for every municipality in Alberta. Having a strong region makes for resilient communities, which makes for sustainable living. There are many ventures in our trimunicipal region such as the trimunicipal leisure centre, the Meridian Foundation, the heritage pavilion, the EMS facility, and the soon-to-be new RCMP detachment, to which two if not all three of these partners contributed. The trimunicipal region works because a small community can do something good, but a strong region pulling together can do many great things.

I'm proud to be a voice in the Alberta Legislature for Stony Plain and Parkland county residents and families, promoting solutions that will make Albertans' lives easier and more prosperous. This agenda is large and ambitious, but I support this initiative to create a better, more prosperous, more diversified, and more caring Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've had the privilege of being able to give my maiden speech early in the First Session, it's still both an honour and a pleasure to be able to rise on behalf of the people of Edmonton-Decore and address the Assembly in response to the Speech from the Throne. Of course, I'd first like to thank Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor of Alberta for delivering a speech filled with hope, optimism, and a path to future prosperity for all of Alberta. That path speaks of managing an energy price shock, the likes of which we haven't seen since the '80s, and how we must support the energy sector during these very challenging times. But it also speaks of a future with a diversified economy, stable public services that Albertans rely on every single day, and an environment that also produces clean energy so that we can protect our land, our air, and our water.

Mr. Speaker, the throne speech also addressed a concern that was growing in my riding of Edmonton-Decore, and that concern is democratic reform. Our political process cannot be for just a select few, and it cannot be administered by just a select few. It must be for all Albertans. I'm already hearing about how pleased my residents are with where this government is leading on that, and they are excited to see what will be coming in the future.

The days and weeks ahead are no doubt going to be a challenge, Mr. Speaker, as we navigate through these very volatile times, but Albertans, like the residents of Edmonton-Decore, are optimistic, they are hopeful, they are also entrepreneurial, and they are very resilient. With qualities such as these the future does indeed look very bright, and together we will build a future that will stand the test of time.

If I may quote from Her Honour's speech, "Albertans want to build a society that gives a hand up to people who need it, cares for the vulnerable, and opens doors for our children and our grandchildren." Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Edmonton-Decore I'm humbled and honoured to be their representative in this House as we work towards building this future together, a future with that diversified economy, with stable public services that future Albertans can count on, a future where the environment we live in protects the land, the air, and the water for generations to come, all of that under a democratic system that doesn't exclude any Albertan and where everyone is equal and respected equally.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Turner: Under 29(2)(a). Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the member to elaborate on a few things. I had the honour and pleasure to work with the member before the election and campaigned with him and saw him working on the front lines, actually, and the tremendous reaction that he was getting at the doors. I was also impressed with the work that he had done in the last session promoting the local band, the Emeralds. My first question to him is actually to get an update on what has happened with the application for the Walk of Fame for the Emeralds.

I had another question, though. I really do appreciate the sense of optimism, forward looking, and care and compassion that he has for all of his constituents and indeed all Albertans. I saw a notice the other day that he had been participating in a job fair in northeast Edmonton. I wonder if he could bring us up to date on what happened with that.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to answer those questions. I guess that to start with the update on the Emeralds, there has been a significant letter campaign going on, with the intention of being able to show people that the Emeralds, who have been in the business for 45 years, which is remarkable, are very, very worthy of a star on Canada's Walk of Fame.

To my understanding, we have a deadline of roughly around the end of May now to get those letters in. Those letters will be filling a box at this point. Of course, with the letters that came in from the members of the Assembly, we are expecting letters very shortly from members of Edmonton city council, and all the letters that the band themselves have been able to get during their somewhat boosted career since this first came out will hopefully sway some folks into taking a very hard look and bestowing that honour on them. We're getting prepared to send those letters off very, very shortly.

The second question, the job fair: that was put on by the Member for Edmonton-Manning. A fantastic idea, I think, to bring not only employers but also unions, different organizations together and the ability to not only network within each other but to reach out to communities and folks and let them know that there are still things happening. You know, even with this downturn in the economy, there are still a lot of great things happening. Businesses are expanding, businesses are coming online, and they have those things to offer to people.

That job fair was a great example of being able to reach out to people, and I certainly thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for putting that on and for the chance that I had just to go and speak with some of those people who were attending that. The feedback was very, very positive, and it very, very excited people to hear that although we are experiencing those challenges in our energy sector, there are many other sectors that are growing and that are coming online now. I look forward to maybe being able to participate in something similar in the future with Edmonton-Decore's participation.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member across the floor for talking about the job fair. It was a great event that happened in Edmonton-Manning, and we had a really great response from it.

It truly is my honour to stand and speak in this House today and be part of a historical shift in the politics of Alberta. Today I am proud to stand with the first-ever NDP government and the first gender parity caucus in Alberta. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this is not the norm for Alberta or for Canada. Women continue to fight to become leaders within the political world. School boards, municipalities, provincial and federal politics continue to struggle with supporting women to run. Many ask: why is this; why don't women run for politics? Well, the first thing is that no one has ever asked us. That was until last year when our now Premier asked Alberta's women to run for the NDP, and I am proud that women represented more than 50 per cent of our candidates in the last election.

Mr. Speaker, a government that understands that we need to represent our constituents is something I am extremely proud of. In Alberta our population is more than 50 per cent women, so it seemed only fitting to have the throne speech delivered on International Women's Day and to recognize the work that women have done before us and to honour the work we continue to do today. I think, as Her Honour noted in the throne speech a few weeks ago, the fact that our new Ministry of Status of Women, the only stand-alone ministry in this country, is being led by a new mother is proof that further barriers are starting to come down, though we still have a long way to go.

In the work of building this province, from the stay-at-home mother to women who run the farms, work in the trades, and support our public servants, women make this province run, Mr. Speaker, and it is time that this is celebrated and recognized. Before being elected, I was one of these women. I worked as a public servant in the Ministry of Human Services as a child protection worker, a role that I still miss and cherish today. I had the privilege of not only working with a great team but also continuously being humbled by the families and children I was able to work with.

Child protection is not an easy profession, Mr. Speaker. Workers are exposed to constant conflict and crisis and at times are threatened. With a pencil and a pad of paper they go into homes that police officers will not enter without guns or backup. They see domestic violence, neglect, sexual and physical abuse, and abandonment. Yet every day workers show up over and over because they believe that they have a responsibility to keep children safe, no matter if this means that they will miss their own children's soccer games or school concerts. They put Alberta's children first, above all else, something that truly needs to be respected.

What also needs to be respected, Mr. Speaker, are the families that the workers in Human Services work with. Each family has their own story, each as unique and challenging as the next. But no matter what the challenges, Albertans are resilient. I have seen the changes that people can make when given a little support. That's why I'm so proud that our government is going to be introducing a new Alberta child benefit plan. This is a $340 million investment in direct support that goes to Alberta's families who need this help the most.

Mr. Speaker, from my experience, this investment and the introduction of the family employment tax credit, which will help at least 380,000 children throughout our province, can't come soon enough and will have a direct impact on all Albertans' lives. From the single mother who leaves an abusive partner to the teenage parent to the street youth who goes back to school and graduates, we have many success stories within the Ministry of Human Services, and this is why I am so glad to be part of a government that values the work of all of our front-line public servants.

So many have asked me why I became a social worker. Well, Mr. Speaker, I was raised in a loving and caring family with strong women. First, I would like to tell you about my grandmother. She was a strong believer in the good of all people and dedicated her life to taking care of not only my father and his siblings but the community of Pincher Creek. She was a dedicated Baptist, attended the church in town and also at times the Mennonite church beside my uncle's farm. She was well respected and loved by many in the community of Pincher Creek and was known for her generosity towards others. After retiring from running the Home Hardware store, my grandmother volunteered at the Christian Life Outreach. She would be there every day making food bank boxes or sorting through donations from the second-hand store, and most of the time she would be having coffee or offering a listening ear. She was a true gift to have in my life, and I hope that I can be half the woman that she was to the people of Alberta.

Then there are my parents. My mother stayed home with my brother and me when we were growing up. She was a very patient woman with a kind heart and didn't speak negatively of others, qualities that I believe my brother probably picked up. As many people can say, I am definitely my father's daughter. My father was a welder who worked through the boom in Alberta. He was a labour activist, a shop steward, and a strong believer in social justice. He is also a fiscal conservative, so many know that I am not totally like my father. However, like all of us in this House, while we may not always agree with the ways to approach different issues, we are still respectful and we are still understanding. Even with our political differences, my parents came from Vancouver Island to help me on E-day, a day that I will never forget, for even my conservative dad was calling on behalf of the NDP and was so excited to see us become government.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I will give thanks to the constituents of Edmonton-Manning for providing me the honour to represent them in this House. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Manning for giving us that glimpse into her life, her past, and her reasons for being here in this House today. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Manning has the opportunity to represent a considerable amount of farmland in the north of Edmonton, farmland that I grew up quite close to. There's less of it there now, but there's still some. I know she's been working on behalf of protecting that and the persons that are working that land. I was wondering if she could expand a bit on her experiences with that.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Edmonton-Manning is a very diverse community. I'm quite fortunate. It's very large. It's one of the larger ones in the city of Edmonton. My constituency goes from 66th Street and 137th Ave all the way to the Fort Saskatchewan boundaries. I cozy up to Strathcona county and Sturgeon county, so I have farming communities. I have diverse ethnic communities. We basically have everything in Edmonton-Manning. The privilege of that is that we back right onto the North Saskatchewan River, which has some of the best land in the province and a very unique microclimate. We have Riverbend Gardens, and they provide a lot of the fresh vegetables and a lot of different things to many of the farmers' markets here in the city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and would it be okay if we adjourned debate?

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Ms Ganley: Mr. Speaker, I think we've made some excellent progress today. I think it was very interesting for us all to sort of hear a little bit about our members and their values. I move that we adjourn the House until 1:30 this afternoon.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 5, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House fantastic students from the school of Greenview in my home community of Woodvale. This school is located just blocks away from where I've resided for the past 15 years. I've had the pleasure of reading to these classes, and I hope they very much enjoyed their visit here today. I'd like to ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fantastic grade 6 class from St. Philip Catholic school. It's an honour for me to have 21 schools in my riding of Edmonton-Decore, with St. Philip being one of them. The last time I visited St. Philip was for their carnival, and the students did a great job teaching me how to use code to take a selfie. It was a wonderful display of Italian culture, which is just another example of the cultural diversity of Edmonton-Decore. I truly look forward to visiting them again later on in the school year. I would now ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce the members of the Education Advisory Committee. This provincial committee offers pedagogical expertise to the visitor services office in their development of educational programming and represents elementary, junior high, senior high, and postsecondary education across Alberta. With us today are Dr. Carla Peck from the Faculty of Education, University of Alberta; Dr. Craig Harding, social studies learning leader, Calgary board of education; Corvin Urbach from Wolf Creek public schools in Ponoka; Lauren Wheeler from the Alberta Museums Association; Dr. Wally Diefenthaler, educational consultant; Brian St. Germain from the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit learning services, Red Deer public school district.

The committee is also joined this year by Karen Aitken, director of the parliamentary education office of the British Columbia Legislature, here to observe the committee's activities. Would you please give them all the warm traditional welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to this Assembly staff from the municipal services and legislation division of my ministry, Municipal Affairs. With us today we have Linda Lewis, Susan Thomson, Angela Markel, Doug Walter, Abdel-Rahman Ahmed, Ida Dei, Laura Klassen Bullock, and Jayne Nicol. These staff members all work in the legislative projects unit and provide valuable support on a wide variety of initiatives. For the past several months they have been heavily engaged in our major priority, developing proposed amendments to the Municipal Government Act. I am so grateful for their tireless work on the MGA, and I am looking forward to bringing the legislative amendments forward later this spring. I ask these staff members to all please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Members and guests, the highest priority, visitors to this House, is school groups, and it appears that there is another school group that was to be mentioned. The minister for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you this afternoon another school group, also from the constituency of Edmonton-Mill Woods, the Millwoods Christian school, who are here for the entire week for School at the Leg. I hope they find lots of interesting things to learn and do, and I'm looking forward to speaking with them later in the week. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Tanis Dubé, and I'd like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of the Council of Alberta University Students, commonly known as CAUS. This group represents the interests of more than 100,000 university students from the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, Mount Royal University, and MacEwan University. We admire the work that these students do in their advocacy and lobbying to ensure quality, accessible postsecondary education for all Albertans. Seated in the gallery, a safe lobbying distance away from all of the members here on the floor – and I'd ask that they stand as I read their names – are Romy Garrido, Brittany Pitruniak, Danika McConnell, Levi Nilson, Erik Queenan, Madina Kanayeva, Navneet Khinda, Fahim Rahman, Dylan Hanwell, Virginia Brickley, and Beverly Eastham. If we could give them the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly members of the Canadian Institute of Steel Construction. They are Todd Collister of Supreme Steel, the bridge division; Paul Collins of Collins steel; Andy Boelee from Empire Iron Works; Jesse Kornelsen from Sierra manufacturing; Michael Hladun from Leder Steel; Jim Kanerva from Waiward Steel; Etienne Vachon from EZ-Steel; Gayle Holtz, Northern Weldarc; and Neil Kaarsemaker of the Canadian Institute of Steel Construction. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Institute of Steel Construction promotes dialogue, collaboration, and commerce between industry and stakeholders, advancing the benefits of steel to the consulting community, builders, buyers, academia, and government. I would like to thank the institute and its members for working together with the government as we build quality infrastructure to meet the needs of Albertans. I would now ask that our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Gerry Turcotte, president and vice-chancellor of St. Mary's University in the beautiful riding of Calgary-Shaw. Gerry, who will be launching a book, Small Things: Essays on Faith and Hope, on April 14, joined STMU five years ago and, since becoming president, has led St. Mary's University to being one of the fastest growing universities in Alberta. He's accompanied by Debbie Osowy, St. Mary's vice-president of business and finance. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lorraine Woollard, a friend and cousin who, after retiring from a long teaching career, became part of a University of Alberta group that developed an internship program, the nonprofit board student internship, that lets students work with nonprofit community organizations. The students use the know-how gained to help other students find community-based learning opportunities and, along the way, grow as citizens. As Lorraine has said: anything we can do to open more doors to learning makes for a better society of fully engaged citizens. Lorraine, if you would stand, we would like to offer you the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three experts in financial trading, including carbon markets: Andrew Hall, Claude Cyr, and Blair McDermid. Mr. McDermid and I grew up together, played hockey together. Mr. McDermid went on to represent our country on Canada's national volleyball team, and I ended up here. I think we know who wins that exchange. I'd ask the three of them, please, to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Transition from Coal-fired Energy Production

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to share with you and the House some perspective from my constituency. Spruce Grove is rated as one of the best cities in Canada to raise a family, in no small part due to the hard work of our school board. However, many of my constituents are worried about the health of our children caused by air pollution from burning coal. It can affect the respiratory system, the heart, and the central nervous system. Medical research shows that these impacts on our health result in lost days of work, increased hospital visits, and chronic respiratory illness.

However, I do realize that these coal plants are a significant source of livelihood for many families in my constituency. That is why I am proud of our government's transition plan to phase out coal emissions by 2030 to protect Alberta's consumers and taxpayers while supporting communities and workers and to ensure fairness to companies and investors.

Under the federal regulations several plants were already slated to close; however, there was no plan in place to support the affected communities through the transition. I am proud to say that this government is working with the affected communities, with indigenous people, industry, environmental groups, municipalities, and many other partners. This is the right plan for our province, and now is the right time to implement it. I am so glad that this transition will bring in heavy business opportunities in alternative energy.

I am proud to say that my constituency, especially in Spruce Grove, is already a pioneer and leader in alternative energy. For example, the neighbourhood of Greenbury is using wind turbines to power their street lights, and the city's new public works facility makes use of passive lighting, geothermal heating and cooling, and solar power to heat its water. These are just a few examples of Alberta's leadership with alternative energy.

In the long run I am happy to see how alternative energy will diversify Spruce Grove's economy. Alberta's ingenuity and entrepreneurship, that made Alberta, will continue to build our province.

Emergency Medical Dispatch Services in Calgary

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, three weeks ago I asked the minister why she would rob the people of Calgary and surrounding areas of their reliable, locally managed emergency medical services. I compared it to Edmonton's dispatch model, where code red events outnumbered Calgary's by over 2,000 per cent. I and a few other MLAs toured the facility and heard directly from the commander that Calgary has the best dispatch model in place. The government has promised time and again that AHS takeovers come with all sorts of benefits and successes. We can plainly see that it doesn't play out like that in reality.

Right now the city of Calgary's integrated dispatch model is internationally considered as best practice. In fact, it's the only dispatch model in Alberta to be an accredited emergency medical dispatch. Instead, this government would like to use subpar dispatch models. They would like to force the city to stop using the best practice in the world and risk the lives of people in and around Calgary.

If transitioned to the minister's suggested substandard model, response time could increase due to the additional call transfer. It would hamper integration with the Calgary fire department, who are often the first on the scene at a medical emergency, and complicates situations requiring a multi-agency response. It could result in confusion and potential loss of critical information as callers are required to repeat their details.

The city of Calgary strongly believes that EMS call evaluation and dispatch services should remain with the city, not AHS. They're willing to negotiate dispatch costs so that front-line workers . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-North West.

LGBTQ Seniors

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the most important roles that a government plays is to take care of our seniors, making sure that our parents, grandparents, and great-grandparents have the support and respect they deserve. An often overlooked element of this area is making sure that LGBTQ seniors are able to live their lives openly, honestly, and without fear of discrimination. A sad trend that we're seeing is LGBTQ seniors feeling ostracized and struggling to find supports simply because of who they are and whom they love. Ensuring that support programs for our seniors are inclusive, supportive, and affirming is a must.

As a society we've made tremendous strides towards equality and acceptance, but I am saddened, Mr. Speaker, that there still exists elements of homophobia and transphobia in an area that is necessary for the safety and security of our seniors. No one should have to lie about who they are just to get the support and respect they need. No one should be made to feel shame about who they are. It is 2016 and any type of discrimination should not be tolerated in any form.

Mr. Speaker, getting this issue right is key. Yesterday we began a public conversation with Albertans when we launched Engage. We want and need the feedback of Albertans on this issue. What can we as legislators do better? How can we make sure all Albertans are treated with equality and respect from childhood to old age? Our caucus doesn't have all the answers. The Progressive Conservatives will walk the walk and make sure each voice that reaches us is listened to and what they say is treated with the respect they deserve.

The topic of this member's statement came from a concerned Albertan. We are glad she engaged us, and we look forward to more conversations like this one in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Northern Alberta Travel Issues

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've spoken previously in this House about the resourcefulness and resilience of the people of my constituency of Peace River. Today I'd like to talk a little bit about the unique challenge we face, transportation and getting around. Everything we do in the north involves incredibly long distances, whether it's a 16-hour round trip to Edmonton for medical treatment or a four-hour drive to shop at the nearest Walmart. A woman in labour can face a 90-minute commute to the nearest hospital. We think nothing of driving 600 kilometres to enjoy a concert or an evening out. Every aspect of our lives involves hours of travel.

We have only two highways coming north, one east-west corridor that depends on a ferry in summer and an ice bridge in winter. Road conditions are always unpredictable and sometimes downright scary. First Nations communities are connected primarily by gravel road, with sections that can be impassable when it rains.

If you don't own a vehicle or hold a driver's licence, transportation challenges are even greater. At present we have just one daily bus through the region, and there are very few scheduled flights between Edmonton and Peace River or High Level and none within the constituency itself. Of course, flights are costly and out of the reach of most.

A related challenge is gasoline price. At any given time we pay on average 20 cents more per litre than the rest of the province. Not only does that impact our personal travel costs, but the increased costs of transporting goods and services are passed on to us in higher prices for everything.

We love the north, however, and as northerners we find ways to manage even during difficult economic times. I'm confident that our government is trying to understand the unique challenges we face in the north and is willing to listen to our concerns. I want my constituents to know that I've been advocating tirelessly to ensure that these challenges will always be considered when legislation and regulations are being developed, and I will continue to speak up on their behalf.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

1:50

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Interprovincial Trade

Mr. Jean: Wildrose believes that Alberta must continue to be a province that fosters free trade across Canada. It grows our economy, it creates jobs, and it saves consumers money. One study estimates that internal trade barriers in Canada cost the average household nearly $7,500 per year. We know the NDP has a long history of ideologically opposing any free trade despite the obvious benefits it has for working Albertans. My question is simple. Will the Premier advocate for or against breaking down interprovincial trade barriers?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. As the minister responsible for trade I can tell this House that I've engaged in meetings with my counterparts across the country as we are in the midst of negotiating or renegotiating a new agreement on internal trade.

Mr. Jean: I'd like to congratulate Brad Wall and the conservative Saskatchewan Party for a convincing victory in their election last night. In fact, last May Premier Wall made a plea for Alberta to stay part of the New West Partnership, an agreement that benefits our economy and saves consumers money. By the end of next month with a change in government, we're hoping, Manitoba could be asking for membership. Will the Premier commit to working with Premiers Wall and Clark to expand partnership in the New West agreement to other provinces that may be interested in removing trade barriers that hurt our economies?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We certainly do congratulate Premier Wall on his win last night in Saskatchewan. It's been only 11 months since we won power here in Alberta, so the feeling is quite familiar, and we understand and share in that celebration.

Notwithstanding Mr. Wall's desire to have his family reunited in his home province, we welcome people from across the world, including 7,500 more people who came to Alberta just in the last quarter, and we continue to work with our partners, including other provincial leaders, right across Canada.

Mr. Jean: This Premier has been silent when it comes to the trans-Pacific partnership trade agreement even though we know it would increase access to new markets for all Albertans. They've been cagey on the New West Partnership even though it removes barriers for trade between provinces in Canada. Meanwhile this government is set to further reduce competitiveness for Alberta businesses with a $3 billion, uncampaigned-for carbon tax. Why is the Premier creating barriers that prevent economic growth instead of working aggressively with provincial partners to tear down these barriers?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we are very proud of our climate leadership plan. We stood on stage with leaders from industry all across Alberta who said that this is going to help us move forward in building the pipelines that we so desperately need, that members opposite should be advocating for instead of poking people in the eye on Twitter. That certainly isn't in the best interests of Albertans. We're going to continue to move forward on economic diversification, including our climate leadership plan, to make sure that we can sell our current products and diversify the economy, something I know they have no interest in doing, but Albertans do, and we're going to do it.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Here in Alberta people are worried. Late yesterday Sanjel sold off its energy assets in North America while seeking protection from its creditors. But the NDP remains committed to an economic agenda that directly hits our oil and gas sector: a $3 billion, uncampaigned-for carbon tax; much higher power bills for all Albertans; and higher business and personal taxes. While our neighbours to the west and the east are trying to attract business investment, the NDP is simply pushing it away. When will this Premier start standing up for our oil and gas sector instead of working against it?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that the hysterical language that's coming from the other side of the aisle certainly isn't conducive to the work that we're doing to make sure that we continue to have jobs here in Alberta, diversifying the economy. We can't control the low price of oil, but we can get Albertans back to work by investing $34 billion over the next five years in infrastructure projects. That certainly is not something that members in the party opposite have been advocating for unless its in their own home riding. We're actually putting people back to work. We're making sure that we have opportunities to increase access to small and medium-sized business loans. ATB is ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier accused Wildrose of spreading a campaign of intimidation and half-truths when it comes to the federal government's tanker ban. Well, here are some facts for the Premier. The Prime Minister, this Prime Minister, has instructed his minister to legislate the tanker ban, and as of February he has restated his opposition to Northern Gateway. That's a tanker ban. This pipeline could grow Canada's economy by $300 billion. That's a lot of money. These are not half-truths or misinformation. These are the facts. Why won't this Premier even acknowledge them and stand up and fight for Albertans' interests?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, the Leader of the Official Opposition continues his campaign of misinformation, half-truths. [interjections] I suggest that his research department do a little bit of reading and find out that there is no tanker ban in place, Mr. Speaker.

Having conversations with his cabinet, we're going to continue to make sure that everyone knows what our needs are. We're working full speed ahead on making sure that we have drama-free access to tidewater. As opposed to the member opposite who has nothing but wants to create more drama, we're actually working collaboratively with our partners in other provinces and the federal government, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'd just remind the loyal opposition to please keep the volume down.

Mr. Jean: We have a federal government that says no to tankers on the west coast. It puts up red tape and roadblocks on building new pipelines, all the while allowing foreign oil to supply Canada's east coast. The federal environment minister even said that the recent budget was a first step to halting the development of our energy industry. Why won't the Premier see these moves for what they are and stand against these direct attacks on Alberta's interests and stand up for Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we're absolutely standing up for Albertans. There is no tanker ban off the west coast of B.C. The tanker ban isn't stopping Northern Gateway from being built. There isn't a tanker ban. It's the 209 NEB conditions for approval that Enbridge needs to meet, and the company is certainly working through those conditions. We know that shaming our provincial counterparts in B.C. and other areas of the country certainly isn't helping to get pipelines built. We're working in partnership with the federal government and actually having face-to-face meetings as opposed to putting out aggressive and disrespectful tweets and misinformation.

The Speaker: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Organ Transplantation

Mr. Barnes: The most recent data shows an alarming trend in this province. Life-saving organ transplant rates have plummeted over the last decade. In 2005 our health system provided 321 transplants. A decade later we are down to 290. During that time the rest of Canada saw much better results, with some provinces surpassing us as leader. Could the minister explain to Albertans why we performed fewer transplants despite a million more people and a 60 per cent spending increase?

Ms Hoffman: I have to say that this is more sloppy math and poor research from the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker. They are being hysterical on something that we are certainly moving forward in a reasonable and balanced way. We're working to make sure that people know about the ability to sign up to be organ transplant donors. Whether they're live donors wanting to donate kidneys or partial livers or whether they suffer the unfortunate incident of a fatality at an early stage, their organs can certainly be put to use in saving up to five other lives. We're doing a positive information campaign, not more hysterical fearmongering and badmouthing.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this is life threatening, and the NDP's approach to health care seems to be as flawed as ever. New boards, new CEOs, but the same broken system. While they talk about spending more money on a wasteful Alberta health system monopoly, they can't say what results will be achieved. We already have the most expensive hospital system in Canada and cannot even be a leader in a critical area like transplants. Will the minister tell us how she intends to improve value for hard-earned tax dollars?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly are a leader in a number of areas, including liver transplants, right here in Alberta. We're very proud of that. It's unfortunate that they're using misinformation and fearmongering because the point they're trying to make is an important one. We need to do a better job with organ donation and transplant in Alberta for Albertans. I'm pleased to have met with the Canadian Transplant Association as well as Alberta Donates Life Coalition, and we are certainly making a number of positive moves in that direction. I've signed my organ donor card. I hope the members opposite have as well.

Mr. Barnes: Organ transplants are just the latest window into the failures of a broken system, for which Albertans are always paying the price. Despite having a system that only gets more expensive, we are now being outperformed nearly across the board. No matter how much we give it, this bureaucratic, inefficient centralized system cannot do something as essential as providing life-saving transplants. How will the minister ensure that the billions we spend on AHS actually go towards saving the lives and . . .

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: To all of the staff that are working in organ donation and transplant every day in Alberta I say thank you. They are doing life-saving work, Mr. Speaker. Almost 220,000 Albertans have already registered to be part of the organ donation registry, and we want that number to continue to grow. It's important that we have a single agency to co-ordinate organ and tissue donation, and we need to make sure that we move forward in an honest, reasonable, and balanced way rather than making inflammatory speculations and sloppy research. It just isn't becoming of this Chamber.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party.

Environmental Monitoring and Reporting

Mr. McIver: Today the environment minister announced that the Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation, and Reporting Agency, AEMERA, will move from an independent agency to one held within the confines of the ministry. To the environment minister: will the industry still be required to pay $50 million per year for an independent agency that no longer exists as an independent agency?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. As part of our broader review of agencies, boards, and commissions to find efficiency, our government conducted an independent review of AEMERA, where we found that it was a failed experiment in outsourcing a core responsibility of government to an arm's-length body. The financial arrangements remain the same. We are in the beginning stages of a new agreement with the federal government on the joint oil sands monitoring, and we will be investing the savings that we find back into front-line monitoring services.

Mr. McIver: Well, an answer, Mr. Speaker. I'm grateful for that. What we've learned here today is that the industry is still going to pay for something they're not getting. This is taxation without representation if ever I saw it. The question to the minister is: what will you name this new tax, and under what guise will you impose it?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, with all due respect, just has his facts simply wrong. There is an agreement on monitoring, that industry will pay for monitoring in the oil sands. That agreement continues, and they are grateful for the fact that we are ensuring that every single one of those dollars is being put to use properly and being reinvested back into front-line services rather than the duplication, the administrative replication, and inefficiencies that the previous government built.

Mr. McIver: The only duplication I hear is the double-talk from the minister.

Today the environment minister took an external, independent committee and moved it under the minister's direct control, the same minister with a long, well-documented history of attacking the energy industry. To the Premier: who will monitor your minister?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, question period is for matters of government policy, not for personal attacks. It is not for drive-by character assassination. I will not answer the question.

Palliative Care

Mrs. Littlewood: Mr. Speaker, as a health care professional I have seen how Albertans' experiences with our health care system affect them personally at all stages of their lives, and in my experience with the Good Samaritan Society I also witnessed how conversations about certain life stages come more easily for some compared to others. Given that this government has been actively consulting on the immediate issue of physician-assisted dying, to the Associate Minister of Health: can we expect more long-term conversations on palliative care?

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Absolutely, this government is committed to supporting a range of options for people facing decisions about end-of-life care. Palliative medicine is central to end-of-life care, and it will remain so even after June 6. As we move through our consultations, what we're hearing from Albertans is that they want a choice about how they are cared for and how they end their care and how their choices are respected as they make end-of-life decisions. During the break Minister Hoffman was able to visit hospice and palliative care facilities in Olds and Lethbridge, meeting with doctors, nurses, and other caregivers, who give so much of themselves.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given how important these services are to Albertans, again to the Associate Minister of Health: what are you doing to ensure quality of access to palliative care across our diverse province?

Ms Payne: We have committed to expanding benefits available to caregivers through compassionate care leave in recognition that no one should go through this process alone. We also know that the need for palliative care is there regardless of location. Palliative care is currently offered in every health zone. We are looking to increase availability, especially outside of Edmonton and Calgary. We remain dedicated to ensuring people get the right care at the right time from the right professionals.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given how critical palliative care is to the overall health and well-being of Albertans, to the same associate minister: how can we make sure that it is not ignored in the run-up to legislation on physician-assisted dying?

Ms Payne: Thank you for the question. It is abundantly clear to me that Albertans need access to appropriate information to support a range of choices for end-of-life care. We have included access to and discussion about palliative care and end-of-life options as part of our newly revised continuing care standards, and these conversations must happen among all of us regardless of age or health situation. I want to make sure that any choice about end-of-life care is well informed, well supported, and well enacted so that patients and their families can experience this process with the least amount of disruption and distress.

The Speaker: The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Municipal Grants in Place of Taxes

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Seniors and Housing dodged around my questions addressing this government's cut to the grants in lieu of taxes program on social housing. Her response that new anticipated provincial infrastructure funding will adequately compensate any shortfalls is unfair and overlooks the individual needs of municipalities, many of whom have no capital projects in mind. How can the minister possibly justify her ineffective response when this government's system is delinquent, leaving municipalities who have individual specific shortfalls for property taxes remaining unpaid?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's very important. Our government is proud of our relationship with municipalities and the investments we are making in our communities. The previous government made a decision to cut this funding, and we haven't been able to restore every cut the previous government has made. The Official Opposition can't have it both ways. They can't support reckless cuts and also stand in this House and ask for more.

Mr. Stier: Well, Mr. Speaker, really, I mean, we need it reinstated. Smaller communities will be hit hardest. St. Paul faces a revenue shortfall of $50,000; Ponoka, $11,000; Black Diamond, $35,000; Elk Point, $20,000; Boyle, $13,000; Lacombe, $75,000; Vilna, $11,000; and Slave Lake, $186,000; and I could go on. Given that many municipalities have had to cut services and raise property taxes as a result, why isn't this government prepared to fulfill their financial obligations to municipalities, not all of whom have an infrastructure project slated for this year?

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. With the unprecedented collapse in the global oil price, this means that we need to be fiscally responsible in our decision-making. Unfortunately, we're not in the position to approve every request for funding, but we do know that now is the time to invest in infrastructure like roads, bridges, and that's what we're doing. These investments will help keep Albertans working and support municipalities by getting shovels in the ground on important projects. It's not rocket science; you can't spend less and spend more at the same time.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. This time to the Premier. This entire infrastructure theory in place of taxes, that has just been mentioned, is faulty. Given that it doesn't correspond directly to the taxes owed from government-owned social housing facilities, what's next? Courthouses? Provincially owned land in our municipalities and other provincial buildings? Maybe the province will stop paying its water bills. How many other key municipal funding systems will be harmed by this government trying to cover this faulty infrastructure-replaces-municipal-taxes theory?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, municipalities have needs, and we're working to make sure that those get addressed in a variety of ways. I have to say that they're very appreciative of the fact that we are continuing to move forward with MSI, that we're continuing to move forward with infrastructure investment in their communities. I understand their frustration that we can't reverse every bad PC cut, but sometimes we need to take the resources we have and figure out how best to make them work. I'm really proud of the fact that we are supporting municipalities.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not all refineries are set up to process bitumen, and due to geopolitical factors beyond our control we're lucky that the U.S. Gulf coast has the capacity to take on large quantities of Alberta bitumen. We can't miss any opportunity to strengthen our partnerships with the U.S. Gulf coast, and it's crucial that new energy infrastructure such as pipelines is championed at all levels of government. To the Energy minister. When in Houston earlier this year, it's my hope that you advocated for increased energy infrastructure development. When asked the question, did you show support for the approval of Keystone XL, and if not, what did you actually advocate for?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, when I was in Houston, actually, I talked about all our pipelines with several groups. We talked about: what are the ones that have the most chance of being successful? I did talk about Keystone XL. Unfortunately, there's an election going on right now, and there are a lot of factors beyond our control, but I still advocate for pipelines east and west in Canada right now.

Mr. Fraser: Given the fact that the Gulf coast refineries were originally built to refine Venezuelan heavy oil and given the fact that the relationship may change between the U.S. and Venezuela to the point where the Gulf coast refineries actually accept Venezuelan crude, to the minister: would you agree that there needs to be a strategic, long-term vision for transporting bitumen to the Gulf coast, and if not, why not? Respectfully, Minister, do you understand the urgency to get our product to new markets?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, absolutely, I understand the importance of market access. With the American election currently going on, while Keystone is a possibility, it's not the best possibility right now. Going east, going west: I'm working on both right now with my government. We're advocates with industry to see how we can get the process through as smoothly as possible because it is critical. We need pipelines.

Mr. Fraser: Given that Alberta has an abundance of natural gas and that, in fact, it can be key to reducing our provincial emissions footprint both in electricity generation and in subsidies for new natural gas upgrading facilities and given that our natural gas exports to the U.S. have essentially stopped because of the Marcellus shale gas production in the U.S., Minister, will your government show leadership on energy efficiency and test the feasibility of moving provincial government fleets from gasoline to natural gas?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. You're absolutely right. Our number one customer was the U.S., and they're gone. They've got their own gas. Right now, you know, less than 1 per cent goes elsewhere, so we have to look at all kinds of possibilities. I think that with the climate change implementation plan, that will be one of the matters discussed. We also have to look at other markets or other uses such as in the petrochemical diversification plan. We have to take responsibility for making better use of our resources.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Rural Health Services

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last session I asked the minister about a procedural error by AHS that harmed Valleyview residents by losing a qualified doctor. Given that bureaucratic bungling like this is a result of the government's overly centralized health services, to the minister: what reassurances can you give worried rural families that centralization will not get in the way of their having local access to good doctors?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to talk about some of the engagement we've been doing throughout the province. Certainly, any time there's a break, I try to make sure that I'm out and connecting with front-line citizens throughout Alberta and people who are working in hospitals. For example, during the break I had the ability to be in Lac La Biche and announced to the community that we're investing $3 million in making sure that we have dialysis in the hospital. It was very well received there.

Mr. Loewen: Considering that the minister received a letter outlining this problem in November and that I reminded her about it in December and that she finally responded in February this year – Wildrose believes in world-class health services, but I have to ask – to the minister: are the ongoing inefficiencies only within AHS, or are they systemic throughout your entire department?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I have encouraged the hon. member to reach out to our office. I've taken opportunities to meet with many of his caucus members, and if he has a specific issue he'd like to address moving forward, I encourage him to take that direction or to work with his Official Opposition critic in doing so as well. I like to make myself very accessible. We believe in public health care, Mr. Speaker, and we're very proud of that.

Mr. Loewen: Considering that rural communities are rapidly losing health services at local hospitals and patients needing specialized procedures such as MRIs and CT scans are being sent to urban centres for these exams and given that these cities are often hours away and poorly linked to transport systems, to the minister: what is your department doing to ensure Alberta's vulnerable citizens are afforded reasonable access to the specialized health care they need?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there are a lot of efforts to make sure that we get the right care in the right place, and that isn't necessarily Edmonton or Calgary. We all want to make sure that we have access to the right specialized equipment as close to home as possible, and I have to commend the health foundations throughout Alberta who take this as a local initiative. When they think that there's a need in the community, they're stepping up, they're rolling up the sleeves, they're working in collaboration with Alberta Health Services, and they're fundraising often to make sure that they get that equipment. This is happening all across our province, and we're going to continue to work with local leaders in local communities to make sure that we continue to have a great health care system across . . .

Provincial Cash Management

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General found that Alberta Treasury Board and Finance does not have an integrated cash management system, that they rely on manual processes and Excel spreadsheets to manage their cash flow. Alberta is the only province in the country that does this. Can the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board explain the government's failure to resolve this problem, identified more than a decade ago?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. In response to the question, this problem had been worked on by ministry officials back in 2014. Actually, in 2014 they identified it, and the AG also picked up on it at that time. The issues that they brought forward have been accepted by the ministry. We understand the issues, we are working on them, and in the future we will have a leading banking practice because of the work that's been done by ministry officials.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that we need something more specific – it looks like the Finance directors are having an interdepartmental turf war, trying to protect their own antiquated spreadsheet systems – and given that bureaucrats broke the Financial Administration Act by opening new bank accounts without your department's involvement, will the minister knock some heads together and bring in a cash management system that will save taxpayers money?

Mr. Ceci: Of course, it's critical that we have a cash management system that reduces the cost to the taxpayer, reduces the amount of borrowing, and handles cash in the best way possible. That is the work that's going to be done by officials. They'll be bringing that forward, and I understand that that will lead us towards a best practice banking system in this province.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, we're looking for a concrete commitment to follow the AG's recommendations. Bureaucrats identified this problem more than a decade ago, and those bureaucrats have requested a solution that has been sitting in limbo for two years now. Officials at Public Accounts Committee even told us just this morning that they have an office pool going as to how much cash will be left in the kitty at the end of the year. Will the minister end the departmental turf war and implement the common-sense, tax-saving solutions recommended by the Auditor General?

Mr. Ceci: I think it's already clear that the ministry and this minister have accepted the recommendations of the AG that were made after things were identified by people in the ministry. We're working on this, I'm working on this, and we'll be bringing the results forward shortly.

The Speaker: Calgary-North West.

LGBTQ Seniors

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we launched Engage, our plan to seek out feedback from Albertans. We've been getting a lot of feedback on what should be included in our document. [interjections] Yes, I'm talking about social issues. You can nap. One of these concerns was raised on the topic of LGBTQ seniors and the struggles they face. To the Minister of Housing and Seniors: what steps have you taken to make sure that the supports we have available to seniors are inclusive, compassionate, and understanding so that we can end all aspects of discrimination in our system?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to the member for the question. Of course, the seniors have built this province, and we care very much about making sure that they live in affordable, accessible housing that respects their dignity. We make sure that we are investing in facilities that have a billion dollars of deferred maintenance, unfortunately, because of choices the previous government made. I just want to assure this House that our government is very much investing in seniors and supporting them.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speak with anyone in this field and you will hear heartbreaking stories about people being forced to hide their sexual orientation and their identity in order to find a safe place to live. Again to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: given that no one should have to go back into the closet out of fear that they won't be able to find support or take care of themselves, are you prepared to follow up with concerns to make sure that these appalling situations don't happen again?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course, our government is committed to ensuring that LGBTQ people of all ages, right from school-age up to seniors, are protected. That's why we brought in amendments to the Human Rights Act recently, that's why the Minister of Education has been working so hard to ensure that all schools are implementing guidelines to protect children, and we will be working as well with the ministry of seniors to make sure that seniors who are LGBTQ are protected as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that we have seen a profound effect that support groups like GSAs and QSAs have had on improving the lives of our LGBTQ youth, will your ministry be prepared to work to develop similar support programs for LGBTQ seniors?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Well, of course, I think that our government is moving forward on a number of fronts on this issue. We're deeply committed to ensuring that all Albertans have their rights protected and that all Albertans have the right to be true to who they are. If there is a demand from the community for such programs, we will certainly look at ways in which we can set those up and ways in which we can support them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Service Dogs

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have heard from my constituents, many of whom are men and women in uniform as well as veterans, about concerns regarding wait times for service dogs for persons impacted by posttraumatic stress disorder. Given the important role service dogs play in the lives of persons living with PTSD as well as those impacted by blindness, autism, epilepsy, and other mobility challenges, to the Minister of Human Services: what are you doing to address the high demand for service dogs?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government has heard the concerns from veterans' advocates and from the disability community who have called for more service dogs to be available. The service dog qualification regulation expires in 2017, and prior to that expiry we will be exploring potential changes to the regulation to increase Albertans' access to qualified service dogs under the Service Dogs Act. We are committed to upholding the safety of persons requiring service dogs while ensuring . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the update. I'm sure the persons requiring service dogs will be encouraged that our government is taking this issue seriously. Given the ministry's approach can the minister elaborate on how service dog regulations keep Albertans safe?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the important role service dogs play in the lives of those they serve, Alberta has a robust system in place to ensure a balance between service and safety. Service dogs that successfully complete a training program by an institution accredited by Assistance Dogs International have qualifications under the current regulations, and individual schools determine the type of training. There are nine accredited training institutes in Canada, only two of which are in Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Goehring: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I have heard from some veterans who tell me that the regulations currently in place limit public access, again to the same minister: what is our government doing to ensure regulatory changes preserve Albertans' right to access public services?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, again. I want to assure the member and all Albertans that we will take a thoughtful and thorough approach as we explore potential changes to the service dog regulations. Qualified service dogs must meet high standards to protect the health and safety of the public. Under the existing regulation owners of qualified service dogs can apply for a government identification card that can be shown when their right of access is questioned. As we explore changes, we will work to ensure that the need to uphold public safety is balanced with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Tobacco Recovery Lawsuit Investigation Review

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Justice Iacobucci released his report into Tobaccogate. Now, I hope that the current Ethics Commissioner will accept the justice's recommendation and reinvestigate this matter. It is obvious that many senior officials in the previous government went to great effort to be less than fulsome with the previous investigation. They didn't tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth, but that did not stop this government from promoting them. What does the Premier want to tell Albertans who might be concerned that officials who mislead an ethics investigation were promoted by her government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, these allegations are deeply concerning to the government, and it is for that reason that we retained a former Supreme Court justice to provide us advice on how to proceed in this matter. That report has now been issued, and we are following the recommendations outlined in that report. The Ethics Commissioner has, I understand, reviewed the letter that I sent to her, and I believe she provided a response just before we came into the House here. The government will also be reviewing its response and any other steps that may be necessary.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that this isn't the first time that officials who facilitated wrongdoing in the Redford administration were rewarded by this Premier – for example, the incoming Deputy Minister of Executive Council, the top bureaucrat in Alberta, built the sky palace and refused to come clean on how it happened – will the Premier explain to Albertans why her NDP MLAs ran interference for that deputy minister at the Public Accounts investigation of the sky palace? Why is this government covering for the wrongdoings of the previous government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, the government is deeply concerned by any allegations of wrongdoings. When asked just yesterday about this matter and why it was that we had investigated it despite the fact that the former member involved is no longer with the government, I indicated – and I will indicate again in this House – that it is absolutely critical to us that this government be transparent and accountable to the public and that the public be able to have full confidence. That's why we have received the report, and that's why we're moving forward with the recommendations.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that Justice Iacobucci made it clear that he did not have the investigative tools to look for criminal wrongdoings and given that the documents uncovered suggest that a minister, senior bureaucrats, and political staff may have conspired to rig what may be the largest government contract in Alberta history, will the Premier join the Wildrose in calling in the RCMP so that we can clear the air, or will this government cover up the wrongdoings of the previous government?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, this government has no intention of covering up for the previous government. That is why we brought in former Supreme Court Justice Iacobucci to investigate this matter. He has made his recommendations, and we are proceeding on the basis of those recommendations. With respect to further steps that the government can take, we are still reviewing the report, and we will determine whether those wrongdoings are criminal wrongdoings. Not all wrongdoings are criminal wrongdoings, so we will determine whether that is . . .

Tourism Strategy

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating the new Minister of Culture and Tourism and joining with all Albertans that celebrate the significance of his recent appointment. I suspect that the minister would prefer to build a legacy not just on the ground that he's broken but on the future paths that he will tread. In that light, to the minister. Tourism industry stakeholders were dismayed when your predecessor's 2015 ministry business plan made no reference to the Alberta tourism framework, the first industry-led, multiyear tourism strategy ever developed in Canada. Will you commit to including it in your business plan for Budget 2016?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I have been briefed on a variety of issues. Like the member has stated, tourism showcases this province's vibrant communities and our unique destinations. Of course, there are many things that we can do. I will be taking all the information and making the best decisions going forward.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the best information is in that strategy.

Given that Alberta's tourism levy was established in 2005 and given that it is the model that many other provinces have adopted for funding their tourism promotion efforts and given that the full amount generated was historically allocated to tourism promotion and given that this past fall's budget marked the first time that funds from the levy were siphoned off into general revenue, to the same minister: what conversations have you had with your colleague the Finance minister to end this parasitic and predatory practice?

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Absolutely, we are going to support the industry. We're going to do the best that we can. But we also understand that we have to support the things that Albertans care about, health care and education. We're going to continue with that focus, and we're going to continue also promoting tourism in this province.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Minister, if you want to fund health care and education, let me tell you something. Every tourism levy dollar that escapes the insatiable clutches of your colleague the Finance minister and actually goes to promote tourism in this province gives the Alberta treasury some $19 to pay for those essential services.

Will the Minister of Culture and Tourism tell this Assembly what the projected amount of the levy is for this fiscal year, and will he take the action proposed in our Engage document and commit to allocating the full amount of the levy to the promotion and marketing of our province as a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I know you're a very veteran and experienced member of the House. I want to urge you, hon. member, to put your comments through the Speaker next time. I'm sure that it was an oversight on your part.

The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Of course, we're going to take all the information that we have and make decisions that are going to support the things that are important to the people of this province, health care and education. Those are the things that Albertans tell us are important. We also understand that tourism is an absolutely fantastic way to diversify this economy and to support the services that this government is going to support. Again, we will take the information and make the best decisions possible.

Thank you.

Wildfire Season Preparation

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, last year our province faced one of the most challenging wildfire seasons in its history. Communities in our forested areas saw the third-highest number of wildfires ever, with an area more than twice the size of the 25-year average being burned. The threat of forest fires is a constant concern for the residents of Banff-Cochrane. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what is this government doing to ensure that Alberta's forests and our forestry communities are being protected from the very serious threat of wildfires?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the Member for Banff-Cochrane for the question. Our government is committed to protecting people and property from the threat of wildfire. To properly prepare for this wildfire season, on February 16 I authorized the acceleration of preparation activities by moving the start of wildfire season to March 1. This helps our province prepare in two ways. First, it helps by monitoring burning activities so that we can manage and mitigate risk by requiring stakeholders to obtain a no-charge fire permit one month earlier in order for the department to proactively and co-operatively address burning projects. Second, it ensures that firefighting preparations and training are well under way and that we'll get into the middle of spring by facilitating early recruitment, retention, training, and mobilization.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this has again been a very dry spring for most areas of our province and given that this year's fire season will likely be intense as well, to the same minister: what are you doing to prepare Alberta's forest communities for wildfire threats, to make them safer and more resilient in the face of these natural disasters?

Mr. Carlier: Mr. Speaker, our province has learned some very tough lessons about wildfires and the risks associated with them. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, a fact well known to Alberta's forest communities. One of the ways our government is helping to mitigate the risk of wildfire to Alberta's forest communities is by working to implement the recommendations coming out of the Flat Top Complex. More than this, my department is working hard with communities and property owners in Alberta's green areas to implement FireSmart initiatives such as vegetation management to remove fuel for wildfires to spread, improved interagency co-operation for better responses, and better emergency planning in the case of evacuations.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that your department estimates that half of last year's fires were human-caused and given that your department spent over half a billion dollars fighting wildfires last year, what are you and your department doing to stop or minimize human-induced behaviours that lead to wildfires, that threaten communities like those in Banff-Cochrane?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many things that we can do to minimize human-induced activities. For example, I've taken the opportunity to order a review of the Forest and Prairie Protection Act and regulations, parts I and II. Public engagement is a key step in the amendment and reform of legislation. We're asking Albertans if fines for burning fires without due care should be increased. We're also asking Albertans if they think the rules on debris disposal need to be changed to better protect our forests.

Additionally, we also support fire chiefs' and municipalities' efforts to provide information on active fire bans in the province. I encourage everyone to visit albertafirebans.ca

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Maintenance Enforcement Program Privacy Review

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Ministry of Justice reported a breach of as many as 60 highly sensitive files. The Justice department didn't even know its employee was snooping in personal records until the Edmonton Police Service discovered it in an unrelated investigation. To the Minister of Justice: are there currently protections in place to prevent breaches like this? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, I was extremely disappointed to learn that an employee of the maintenance enforcement program had been involved in these alleged activities. Currently the maintenance enforcement database is accessible only by log-in, so we're able to track where our employees touch. All employees are subject to a criminal record check. Obviously, as a result of this incident, we will be reviewing what policies and procedures we have in place to make sure that we can do better in the future.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these breached files may contain highly sensitive information, including Albertans' banking records, addresses, and social insurance numbers, and given that the information pertains directly to families navigating the justice system, are single parents now at risk of fraud due to the actions of a Justice department employee?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, of course, the reason that we were so disappointed to learn of this particular incident was because this employee did have access to information of vulnerable Albertans and Albertans who are subject to the justice system. We have begun reviewing our files. Edmonton police are contacting all affected people. The most important thing, I think, to note is that the employee in question no longer has access to this database or any information on file.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this department is clearly vulnerable to privacy breaches and given that this breach could be just the tip of the iceberg and that the Department of Justice seems unable to live up to the standards of Alberta's privacy laws, again to the minister. Yes or no: is the minister looking for any further breaches of privacy that may have gone unnoticed in her department?

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Well, we're always deeply concerned with the privacy of Albertans, so we are always looking to ensure that no further privacy breaches occur.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

2:40

The Speaker: Yes.

Point of Order

Oral Question Period Practices

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, just as a matter of procedure and a matter of past practice in the House, typically right around that 50-minute mark, which is sort of that magic time period, if the questioner starts his first question or is recognized by the chair any time before that 50-minute mark, that full question, whatever question number it is, is allowed to start, and then we finish all three series of questions. Since, clearly, we were a good 20 seconds short of the 50-minute mark, I would encourage you to move on to the next questioner.

The Speaker: Your encouragement is very much appreciated. I believe that most of the House and, certainly, the table officers agree with you. It was an attempt to move the process along. It was closer to 10 seconds.

Nonetheless, the next question: I believe we are at Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Is that right?

Infrastructure Capital Funding

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta industry is asking for government co-operation to allow them to fund and build infrastructure to support economic diversification. One major push by industry has been for a toll bridge on highway 15 over the North Saskatchewan River that would allow for a wide heavy-load corridor, which would improve efficiency and safety on roads in the area. Enabling industry to build a new toll bridge would create hundreds of jobs for Albertans at a time when we need them the most and when material costs are low. To the Minister of Transportation: when will this government release a plan to co-operate with industry to build . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the position of the government is that toll roads are not on our agenda.

But I should point out that in the Progressive Conservative's document they call for a restoration of funding of the strategic transportation infrastructure program, or STIP, which they cut three years ago, and we reinstated $100 million for that over five years in the last budget. Mr. Speaker, if they want to engage, they should engage by reading the budget.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, given that capital bonds enable community members to vote with their wallets to get local infrastructure built and given that larger projects attract more attention and money and given that community members can invest directly in their future to get results sooner and earn a financial return on investment which remains in Alberta, to the Minister of Transportation: why has his government not chosen to allow Albertans to invest to build our infrastructure but, instead, has chosen to issue $2.1 billion in bonds with international investors between January 1 . . .

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for the question. Our government increased infrastructure spending in the capital plan during the last budget by 15 per cent over the previous government's amount, and that is going into a number of programs that will support transportation, municipal infrastructure, or transit across the province. This government is doing far more to invest in infrastructure, badly needed in this province after years of Conservative mismanagement.

Mr. Drysdale: Mr. Speaker, it's too bad they haven't announced one new project since they've been there a year.

Given that Alberta has successfully spent billions on infrastructure and ring roads and the largest multiple school build in history using P3s, which have proven to be reliable long-term models for infrastructure building, and given that ministers opposite have admitted that on school builds alone P3s will be able to deliver schools hundreds of millions of dollars under budget while being profitable to investors, when will this government enable Albertans to finance . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, well, I can name one single project that this government has approved that the previous government tried to cancel, and that is the Calgary cancer centre, a major project to provide good cancer care, badly needed by the people of Alberta after being jerked around by the Progressive Conservative government for 10 years.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might I say now that in 15 seconds we shall continue with Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Safe Harbour Society

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a unique organization in my constituency of Red Deer-North called the Safe Harbour society. The Harbour, as it is warmly known, is a prime example of the importance of centralized wraparound services gauged to attend to the complex needs of Red Deer's most vulnerable population.

The Safe Harbor society is a result of an amalgamation of three previous nonprofit agencies and currently operates addiction services, transitional housing, and an emergency shelter. This combination of services allows guests to have access to supports along the health and housing continuum while only telling their story once. Executive director Captain Kath Hoffman and director of operations First Mate Trish Haggarty-Roberts are the proud leaders at the Harbour's helm. They recognize the efficiency of an integrated approach to providing services for a rising number of vulnerable central Albertans.

The Harbour recognized long ago that it is difficult to address addiction issues when basic needs for food and shelter are not met. The continuum of health and housing supports offered by the Harbour addresses the relationship between addiction and homelessness in a collaborative and dynamic approach. Indigenous supports offered by Safe Harbour recognize the diversity of our vulnerable population and acknowledge the links between suffering and disconnection from one's family and culture.

I am proud that such a unique organization exists and belongs to my riding of Red Deer-North. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Megan Wolitski

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In honour and loving memory of 11-year-old Megan Wolitski I would like to remind this Assembly of a horrific accident that took place in my riding on October 25, 2012. That day, as children in a grade 6 classroom at l'école Racette had barely settled into their desks, a vehicle came barrelling through the wall of the school into their classroom, pinning three children underneath and traumatizing the rest of the classroom and the entire community. The following day Megan Wolitski passed away from her injuries. One of her classmates was left with a lifelong debilitating injury, and another suffered trauma that she will struggle with for years to come.

The sad fact is that the accident was completely avoidable. The driver of the vehicle had a medical condition and wasn't supposed to be behind the wheel. When a judge sentenced the driver to two years in prison and a lifetime driving ban for criminal negligence, he made it clear that it was not punishment for the medical condition but for driving when he shouldn't have been. His punishment won't protect other Albertans from those who drive despite having medical conditions that make it unsafe.

Megan's grandmother asked me to see to it that Alberta enacts legislation to protect all Albertans from her granddaughter's fate, legislation similar to what is already in place under section 283 of the Saskatchewan Traffic Safety Act and section 230 of the British Columbia Motor Vehicle Act. Both of these provinces require qualified medical practitioners to flag for authorities any patients suffering from medical conditions that make it dangerous to the public for them to operate a vehicle. They also require them to tell authorities if they have reason to believe that a patient continues to drive after being warned that it would be dangerous to the public and to themselves. Mr. Speaker, current voluntary provisions in the Alberta Traffic Safety Act need to be made mandatory so that our roads are safer and no more Alberta families suffer from this gap in our laws on traffic safety.

My heart goes out to the family of Megan Wolitski, to all of her classmates, who will never be able to forget that day that changed their lives forever. Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to table this document and the requisite number of copies signed by approximately 11,000 Albertans in support of Bill 201, the Election Recall Act. While Bill 201 was defeated in this House yesterday, democracy has a way of continuing to evolve and progress, and these 11,000 Albertans will now be on record as supporting a vision of a more democratic Legislature.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, responses to questions raised by Dr. Swann, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View; Dr. Starke, hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster; and Mr. Loewen, hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, on November 18, 2015, during the Ministry of Environment and Parks 2015-16 main estimates debate.

On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Government Organization Act the Alberta Association for Safety Partnerships' Radiation Health Administration Organization annual report for the period September 1, 2014, to August 31, 2015, with attached financial statements for the year ended August 31, 2015; the Alberta College and Association of Chiropractors' Radiation Health Administrative Organization annual report for the year ended June 30, 2015, with attached financial statements for the year ended June 30, 2015; the Alberta Dental Association and College's 2014 Radiation Health and Safety Program annual report dated January 1, 2014, to December 31, 2014, with attached financial statements dated December 31, 2014; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association's Radiation Protection Program 2014 annual report, November 1, 2013, to October 31, 2014, with attached financial statements dated December 8, 2014; the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta's Radiation Health Administrative Organization annual report for the period January 1, 2014, to December 31, 2014, with attached statement of financial position for the year ended December 31, 2014; the University of Alberta's Authorized Radiation Health Administration Organization annual report 2014-2015; the University of Calgary's Radiation Health Administration Organization annual report for the period April 1, 2014, to March 31, 2015.

The Speaker: I believe that members may have missed my eye earlier. Banff-Cochrane, we could go back to Tabling Returns and Reports. Is that your intention? We need unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a document outlining the support that ATB is providing to Albertans during this economic downturn. The document outlines that ATB is helping business owners as a result of the $1.5 billion expansion that our government recently provided.

The Speaker: Next tabling. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've been looking forward to this opportunity to table the five requisite copies of the document Engage: Connecting with Albertans. It's something that the government side has asked for. So has the Wildrose, and others have. Albertans are very excited about this, as are we. On behalf of Progressive Conservatives I simply turn to page 3 for one sentence to explain. "Engage is intended to start a conversation with Albertans to build a better future for our province. It is our intent that through conversation, we will encourage Albertans to get involved, and identify new ways of doing things." You can get one of these copies or go to abpcmla.ca/engage.

It has also been the request of a couple of members on both sides of the House for examples of cost savings. Again, this was ready more than 24 hours ago on behalf of Progressive Conservatives in Engage: Connecting with Albertans. They wondered how we would come up with all these savings. Again one sentence: "These four examples alone total savings of over $1.5 billion. We are confident that the Alberta Public Service can find even more."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of an article written in the New York Times recently, appearing on March 20, that indicates that JPMorgan Chase would no longer finance new coal-fired power plants in the United States or other wealthy nations. The retreat follows similar announcements by Bank of America, Citigroup, and Morgan Stanley that they are, [in fact] in one way or another, backing away from coal.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 4

An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

[Adjourned debate March 17: Mr. Westhead]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I yield the rest of my time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services: this is important essential services legislation. It will modernize Alberta's labour laws as the current legislation is almost 30 years old, and it will bring legislation in Alberta in line with the Supreme Court of Canada ruling regarding essential services legislation in Saskatchewan stating that the right to strike is a fundamental right and integral to the bargaining process. It's needed because bans on public-sector strikes within the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the Labour Relations Code are unconstitutional and violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Compulsory arbitration, which is provided within the legislation in place, is not sufficient to encourage employers, government, and unions to work together within a meaningful collective bargaining process. This legislation will revert responsibility for reaching a settlement to employers and unions, and this will minimize the use of compulsory arbitration. It must be a meaningful bargaining process, not each side attempting to force others or interfering with the rights of public-sector employees or employers.

An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services has been arrived at through extensive consultation with Alberta public-sector employers and unions to ensure an effective, made-in-Alberta approach that is fair to employers, unions, and the people of Alberta. This consultation began in September of 2015 between those employers and unions, and the public was also invited to provide input by way of an online survey. In this way, even in the event of labour disputes or strike action the people of Alberta are ensured continued access to essential services through this legislation.

Creating an essential services agreement, which determines which services must be maintained during a work stoppage: it must be written between an employer and a union before any negotiations can take place for new contracts. In this way if there is a labour dispute, which has been ruled a fundamental right by the Supreme Court of Canada, our people in our communities are always taken care of. Albertans deserve the best health care, with the right provider at the right time in the right place. This legislation will help ensure that this priority will remain at the forefront for all Albertans.

The Alberta Union of Provincial Employees president, Guy Smith, said that the legislation is a fundamental shift toward levelling the playing field in labour negotiations, which is sorely needed. As a unionized employee and a union shop steward I have sat at the bargaining table. Though it is expected for both parties to arrive at the table in good faith, if things go awry when there is not an equal balance of power, it makes fair negotiation unlikely. By supporting all parties at the bargaining table, an agreement that is equitable for the employer, worker, and public is more likely to occur. For a nurse and a caregiver the entire focus is on your patients and how to care for them in the best way possible. This legislation allows skilled, competent employees to continue those essential day-to-day operations if a labour dispute is in progress.

For many of these essential services providers, the work hours encompass the entire 24 hours in a day. This means shift work, and being on call is a normal practice. I understand the toll it takes on your family to work a split shift, a night shift, the demands on my partner to ensure that the obligations of our family were always met.

To support the work of this government in creating an equal and fair bargaining process supports all of our most important front-line service industries and their workers. Labour negotiations go beyond compensation. Many times that is the least contentious hurdle. Hours of work, working conditions, health benefits: these and many other things are also major factors to be negotiated at the bargaining table.

These negotiations affect more than just employees; they affect families. Many times here in Alberta the stable income provided by working in a front-line service is the sole income in a household, or it supplements an income affected by the boom-and-bust economy that many Albertan families face. How are we to impress upon the next generation that these careers are valued by our communities if the compensation to perform these oftentimes dangerous or demanding tasks is diminished by an unfair bargaining process? The people that choose to perform these roles are in service to their communities, and the contributions they make go beyond their salary to the true meaning of community. An investment in our front-line service is an investment in those communities.

People employed in critical service areas such as police officers and municipal firefighters will continue to be prevented from striking due to the integral services they provide our communities. This legislation doesn't apply to teachers within Alberta either as they already have the right to strike within their bargaining agreements. It will only affect government employees; those employed by agencies, boards, and commissions; nonacademic staff at postsecondary institutions; employees of AHS; and employees at other approved hospitals.

I urge everyone in this House to support this bill for our families and our communities, that support us every day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I would call on the Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to stand in this House and speak to this bill. The intent of the bill: I absolutely do support it. It's encouraging, and we've heard from the hon. member that respect is important in the workplace. Being an advanced care paramedic for over a decade, working for Alberta Health Services in the city of Calgary, being the president of CUPE 3421, president of the Calgary paramedics, I've also sat at the table. You know, I encourage the government on this bill, absolutely, and, again, those departments and agencies to collaborate because it is time that there is a paradigm shift in terms of government and public service, how they negotiate, and creating a new path forward.

To speak to the critical services, I hope that as we move forward in further readings and into Committee of the Whole, the government would perhaps take a look at one thing. One issue that I have with this, again, being a paramedic – you referenced police officers and firefighters. Paramedics work alongside that very group, and I know, listening to the stories of the strike in 1990, that if you ask any physician, any nurse, most of the collaborative health care, who do amazing work, they say: "Bring the paramedics back. They're crucial. They're vital." I can attest to that. They're one arm of that collaborative practice front that makes, I think, our health services one of the best because of the quality people and the skills that they have. So to take that front-line service off the street, I think, is a danger to Albertans.

I think it also, unfortunately, messages to that group, with the day-to-day work that they do – again, still a registered paramedic in this province, I am. It seems to diminish their role. They have one foot in public safety, and they have one foot in health care. I know that in discussions with the hon. Health minister there is a role to expand the practice of paramedics to work in the community to help fix some of those things. I go back to what we launched in Engage, just for a minute: if people would take the politics out of it, take the hyperbole out of it, and listen to that one particular cost savings when it comes to health care.

We heard that there's only 10 per cent of what's going to the emergency department – and my friends in allied health care know that, that there's a lot of people that make it to the emergency department that don't need to be there. Paramedics can play a vital role, and I know the minister is working on this, and I applaud your government and the work that she's doing around this, around more collaborative practice, allowing nurses, advanced care, critical care paramedics, even basic life-support paramedics, our EMTs, you know, to do the work they were intended to do, to do the work they were trained to do, which will create alternate destinations. We're talking about saving billions of dollars, creating efficiencies, and paramedics and emergency medical services will have a crucial role in that, being a lot of the time the first door, the first window for many people to enter our health care system.

I hope, looking forward as you discuss in your caucus, that paramedics will be included as part of that group with police and firemen as an essential service because I would hate to see – one of the odd things, too, is that we know that there's the direct delivery that Alberta Health Services provides, so the city of Edmonton, Edmonton metro and Calgary metro EMS services. What's odd is that they would be allowed to strike under this law, but a private operator that owns a private ambulance service is considered essential. The messages are mixed there, so my hope is that you'd take a look at it, include paramedics and emergency medical services under that line. In fact, I think my colleague from the Liberal Party would probably agree as we have many friends on that front-line staff.

Thank you for your time, and I hope that we can work on that.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Dr. Swann: I wonder if the hon. member could expand on the distinction between the public and the private ambulance services and what he's, I think, alluding to in terms of their capacity to strike. That's news to me.

Mr. Fraser: Yeah. The private care is a contract that goes through Alberta Health Services, so it's an outside contract. Then there's direct delivery, directly owned and operated and managed by Alberta Health Services. That's what we call direct delivery. That's the majority in the province, but there are private operators. Again, maybe it's worded in the legislation – and I may have to correct myself – that anybody who's contracted to do a service falls under this legislation as an essential service. That's what I'm guessing. But those seem to be the highlighted pieces from the members on the street and some of our dear colleagues and friends that you know. You know, there just seems to be a mismatch there in terms of: why are paramedics in direct delivery not considered essential, and why are private contractors considered essential?

3:10

The Speaker: Any other question for the hon. member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. As has been stated, this bill will modernize two key Alberta labour laws to reflect rulings by the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta.

The courts have been clear. It's every Canadian's right to join a union and, not only that, also to collectively bargain, which includes that right to strike. Now, I stress this because, as many of the members from my own caucus may know – and I'll remind the other members of the other parties – I used to be the president of the Non-Academic Staff Association at the University of Alberta. Under PSERA we were told that we could not strike. This kind of put things in a difficult spot for us because it was already like the system was purposely set up so that it would be an antagonistic relationship between the union, the staff at the University of Alberta; and the employer, the University of Alberta. Bill 4 will ensure that labour legislation is fair to unionized employees and employers while ensuring essential public services are maintained for all Albertans.

I'm really proud that this is a made-in-Alberta solution that addresses our province's unique needs. It's important for all of us to consider that Alberta's public-sector labour legislation is almost 30 years old and needs to be modernized to protect public-sector employees' Charter rights. Public-sector groups have been forbidden from striking since the 1970s in Alberta, which has pushed the parties into arbitration to reach settlements. The legislation covers about 150,000 unionized workers under 77 collective agreements, including most health workers, government employees, and nonacademic staff at postsecondary institutions.

A move to an essential services model for key components of Alberta's public sector would serve to bring Alberta's labour relations legislation more in line with the Supreme Court's position on the right to strike. The proposed legislation, Bill 4, was carefully developed based on government's extensive consultation with Alberta's public-sector employers and unions regarding an essential services approach.

I want to stress that because, you know, often our friends from the opposition say that we don't consult or we don't consult extensively enough, but here's a perfect example of how we have. We are listening, and we have been doing our homework and making sure that we're hearing the opinions of the people that we are here to legislate on behalf of. Beginning on September 16, 2015, the government started consultations on essential services legislation. Face-to-face meetings were held with key stakeholders, and the public was invited to provide input in an online survey as well. The well-respected labour lawyer Andrew Sims, Queen's Counsel, was contracted to lead the consultations and provide a report with advice to the government.

In fact, this legislation places greater responsibility for reaching a settlement in the hands of employers and unions, minimizing the use of compulsory arbitration. I couldn't agree more with the member from the Conservative Party across who stressed collaboration. I couldn't agree more. It's completely time for a paradigm shift. We need to move away from this antagonistic model that we currently have and work towards finding solutions together. I would say to our friends across the way, the opposition, that this is truly the relationship that we'd like to have with you. Let's work together to find solutions, right? Unfortunately, to date I don't think we've had that opportunity with what's coming from across the way, which to me is more rhetoric than fact.

Determining what essential services will be maintained during work stoppages will be decided by public-sector employers and unions by working together. If they can't reach an agreement, a neutral third party will resolve the dispute quickly and efficiently.

So it is without reservation that I support this bill, and I strongly suggest to all the members of this House that they support it as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie under 29(2)(a)? I would recognize the minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member could share with us some of the steps in collective bargaining. Given that the SFL case was decided by the Supreme Court on the basic right to free association and therefore of collective bargaining, could the member talk a little bit about how collective bargaining is, in fact, impaired when there is no right-to-strike provision?

Loyola: Thank you to the minister for the question. Really, I'd like to highlight this by sharing a little anecdote. Under the previous government they had gone to the University of Alberta and basically were pressuring the University of Alberta because they were cutting funding to postsecondary education. The University of Alberta, our employer when I was still under the Non-Academic Staff Association, found itself in the peculiar predicament where it actually even had to ask us to open our own collective agreement.

Now, at the time – and this just goes to show how important I believe democracy is – being president, for me what was most important was that we go to the membership of the union and ask them if we should open up our collective agreement or not. I'm proud of the fact that out of the more than 5,000 members of the Non-Academic Staff Association more than 630 members showed up at a lunchtime meeting to have this discussion about opening up our collective agreement or not. It was at that meeting, after presenting the case of how the previous government was really locking the hands of the University of Alberta administration because the underfunding to postsecondary education was causing this question to even be answered – but what was really important is that of the members of the union that showed up to that meeting, more than 600, 639 voted to not open the collective agreement, and two members voted to open it. Just to show that that's the way the democratic process works inside of a union.

When we go to the collective bargaining process, it's so important to have the voice of the union membership be a part of that process. To me, unions are a perfect example of the democratic principles that we should try to further within our own society. Have the members themselves, have the citizens themselves be a part of the process. This is what has happened with the consultation process. Stakeholders, employers as well as employees have been consulted on the process.

Again, to all the members of this House: I highly encourage you to vote in favour of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A brief question on Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. I'm just curious to know if the member would provide any comments on whether or not there are any portions of the legislation that are outside of the scope of the Supreme Court ruling.

Loyola: To be quite honest, I am not one hundred per cent sure, but I will reread the bill, and I'll get back to you personally, Opposition House Leader.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. If this bill is just to implement a Supreme Court ruling governing essential services, then I will support it. I am cautiously optimistic about the bill. However, in labour relations the proof is in the pudding. Any decision on what constitutes an essential service needs to be reviewed carefully to ensure that those in essential services are treated fairly but also that vital provincial responsibilities that we are obligated to provide are carried out, and as with any bill concerning government negotiations with the public sector, we need to ensure that it also respects taxpayers.

As with any important piece of legislation, our discussions with stakeholders and constituents as well as analysis and debate in the Assembly will inform the position of this caucus. We have already identified some points in this bill that I am seeking clarity on. These include ensuring that key officials in charge of the process to certify essential services are Albertans with an understanding of our situation and circumstances and ensuring that the restriction on replacement workers is negotiated, not legislated, on a case-by-case basis. It is my hope that we can work with the government to pass reasoned, measured, and thoughtful amendments, should they be necessary, to ensure a fair process for all Albertans impacted by this legislation.

The Wildrose Official Opposition understands the importance of meeting the requirements of the Supreme Court ruling by the required date. On principle we support the notion of ensuring that nonessential workers are not lumped in with essential ones, but we look forward to hearing the government's response to our several questions on the details of this bill. We are particularly interested in its process to define essential services, its rationale surrounding the commissioner's powers, and the government's ability to make regulatory amendments to the act once passed. We must be extremely careful, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that the government has a fair and open process for defining what services are deemed to be essential and thus prevented from striking. Defining essential services is a delicate matter which requires a balanced and measured approach.

It may be commonly assumed that designating a service as essential decreases the number of strikes. In terms of full strikes this is true. However, a study by the C.D. Howe Institute showed that between 1977 and 2008 there were over 600 partial strikes by services declared to be essential. Moreover, it may also be assumed by some that being an essential service and thus barred from striking would mean less bargaining power and lower salaries. This is false. The right to strike does not mean higher salaries. It is, in fact, generally the opposite. The same C.D. Howe study showed that officially designated essential services had an average 13 per cent premium over negotiated nominal wage increases.

From a fiscal perspective, ensuring that we have a clearer understanding of what is an essential service will potentially save Albertans' tax dollars. It will remove services that are not actually essential, however important they may be, from the path to an automatic and often expensive arbitration process. It will mean that the government is fully accountable for wage agreements and can't blame irresponsible raises on arbitration.

This legislation has the ability to affect Albertans for decades to come. In light of the fact that labour laws continue to evolve, would the government consider implementing a sunset provision for this legislation as recommended by the Canadian Association of Counsel to Employers?

Another element of concern is how the government has decided to respond to the Supreme Court by appointing a single commissioner vested with a great deal of power. Accordingly, the commissioner appointed to oversee essential services agreements must be committed to securing agreements that respect Albertans' needs and Albertans' tax dollars. This commissioner should be an Albertan familiar with our own unique labour laws and history, not someone dropped in by the NDP, as they have done with several government posts already. It needs to be someone committed to Alberta, Alberta services, and Alberta's tax dollars. It should not be a patronage appointment or an AUPE insider whose professional history makes Albertans wonder if the public interest is his or her one and only priority.

But even if all of these conditions are met, the government still needs to explain the need to concentrate so much power in the office of a single appointed commissioner. Section 95 of the bill states that this commissioner will have the unilateral power to amend essential services agreements. These agreements will then be binding on both the employer, taxpayers, and the employees, the providers, even if they had a mutually agreed upon arrangement to something else. That is incredible power, Madam Speaker, power without appeal. These agreements need a measured approach. Can the government explain why it decided to give the commissioner such extensive powers instead of requiring the commissioner to obtain the agreement of both parties if he or she desires some change to voluntary agreements?

Furthermore, the bill states that this commissioner must be either the chair or the vice-chair of the Labour Relations Board, which is appointed by the cabinet. The appointment of the commissioner from among the chair or vice-chair of the Labour Relations Board cannot be a patronage or insider appointment, as we saw when the government appointed a veteran from the AUPE to be their new chief negotiator on public-sector contracts. The government wants to grant this political appointee the ability to have significant authority without any means to appeal their decisions. My question is: why isn't the commissioner subject to ministerial authority? Why isn't the Labour Relations Board as a whole charged with adjudication of the essential services agreements?

Now, we know the elephant in the room. We know that organized labour is deeply entrenched within the NDP, and that's okay, but we need to be open about this. The Alberta Federation of Labour is written into the constitution of the NDP and receives delegate spots at NDP conventions. The NDP also have a labour caucus, that elects two vice-presidents to the executive. The Provincial Council of the NDP has five members from the labour caucus, two from the Alberta Federation of Labour, and one member from each of the five largest affiliates in the province. Could you imagine having corporations and chambers of commerce being entrenched in the constitution of the Wildrose? No. We wouldn't. Then we have the big union bosses who step up as NDP candidates during elections but are safely allowed to return to their positions as union bosses when they lose.

I want to support this bill, but I am skeptical about several sections of it, Madam Speaker. We must ensure that our laws comply with the Supreme Court, but we should go no further than required by the Supreme Court for reasons that are thus far not adequately explained. The NDP's history and recent actions give us real cause to carefully study this bill to ensure that the final product is fair to the essential services workers, responsible to the Albertans who rely on those services, and respectful to the taxpayers who pay for them.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for his comments. In light of the fact that already there have been two members of the House that have gotten up to talk about collaboration and a paradigm shift, I would like to hear from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks on how he thinks that we can better work together in order to reach agreements between employers and employees moving forward.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for the question. I think it's a very pertinent question. On some matters there is obviously a very big difference of opinion between parties and we have to agree to disagree – in fact, most days might be like that – but sometimes we're able to find areas of collaboration between parties. We've done it on several bills already, and it is my genuine hope that we can do so on this bill. It is my intention to support this bill at second reading, but further support of the bill from myself and the Official Opposition will depend upon how we're able to collaborate moving forward.

We have very serious concerns about the bill. I do believe that the bill is written with the best of intentions to comply with the Supreme Court ruling. No matter which party was in government, a bill of some form would have to be brought forward to comply with the Supreme Court ruling. My concerns rely primarily around the significant powers given to the commissioner and the inability to appeal those decisions and around parts of this bill which appear to go beyond what was required by the Supreme Court, particularly surrounding replacement workers. It's my belief that agreements around essential services and replacement workers should be negotiated, not covered in the legislation, particularly here. I think it would unfairly tip the balance of negotiations out of the hand of employers when trying to negotiate fair and reasonable essential services agreements.

It is my intention to support this at second reading. I know that the Minister of Labour provided a very thoughtful and thorough briefing to members of the opposition that I think went a long way to reaching out to us. If it was simply tossed on the desk without us seeing it, perhaps it would have been less collaborative. I think it was a good process to brief the members of the opposition, to bring us into the process for our feedback. I do believe it was genuine and in the best of intentions. But we do have real concerns about this bill that will have to be brought forward in the form of amendments later. I think that members on this side of the House genuinely would like to see a spirit of co-operation to ensure that this bill can receive the support of all parties at third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: This is 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In response to comments from the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks I was wondering – you talked about the sunset provision in the bill, and I had a question for the hon. member. When you have a suggestion like that, it seems like adding a sunset provision in the legislation would create red tape and bureaucracy, something that I know the member often speaks against in this House, and requiring government staff to spend more time renewing the legislation in the future: I would think that we wouldn't want more cumbersome clauses in our legislation. I was thinking that would not be a good thing.

I can imagine a scenario where a contract with the public service would be up for negotiation sometime when, say, a sunset provision would be coming due. You know, with your concern for taxpayers you could imagine the chaos that would create and potential feelings of bad faith when you had a sunset provision coming due and a contract negotiation. You would have some sides of that debate trying to understand whether that provision is going to be there for them and whether their rights would change halfway through the negotiation process. I was wondering if the hon. member would agree that that would potentially be a problem with adding a sunset provision and, if not, maybe enlighten us.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm always happy to enlighten the Member for Calgary-Currie. That is a thoughtful set of questions, which I am happy to speak to. Our suggestion of a sunset clause in the legislation comes from I believe it is the council for employers in the province. Coming from a perspective where when we're putting forward legislation and there are ...

The Deputy Speaker: Moving on to the next speaker on my list, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. It proposes to ensure that our code, Labour Relations Code, is compliant with the Supreme Court decision, as discussed. This dialogue has been helpful for me to further clarify some of the nuances of this important legislation. The legislation basically guarantees public-sector workers the right to strike with the caveat that unions and employers must agree on a contingency plan in the event of labour disruptions.

I take us back to 1977, when Premier Peter Lougheed made it illegal for any public-sector employee to strike, declaring them essential even if they weren't, and to compensate for removing their right, he ...

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, it's just been drawn to my attention that you did already speak to this bill in second reading, which means you can't speak again. You can in committee but not in second reading.

Dr. Swann: I don't believe I have spoken in second, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm advised by Parliamentary Counsel.

Dr. Swann: We disagree, do we? I'll have to ...

The Deputy Speaker: I guess we'll have to check Hansard.

Dr. Swann: Must have been my double.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand to speak to the important issue around essential services. As many of the members are aware, I represented the Human Services members who worked in PDD, office of the public guardian, AISH, and children's services. In this position I participated as a member of the bargaining team and have had the experience of going through binding arbitration.

Let's spend a few minutes talking about the bargaining process. During former Premier Peter Lougheed's leadership he deprived public employees the right to strike in the event of an impasse in bargaining. However, in return they received access to compulsory arbitration processes; in other words, an arbiter who looks at the facts, the laws, and the public- and private-sector compensations and who then has the right to impose a settlement on both parties, binding arbitration. This process was a compromise that was established due to a respectful relationship between the government and the essential services employees.

However, things have changed, Madam Speaker. In recent years the past government under the leadership of Premier Redford engaged in the process to dictate the salaries of all employees by introducing Bill 46, Public Service Salary Restraint Act, that would impose a two-year salary freeze and negate the collective bargaining process by removing binding arbitration. In addition to this legislation a second piece was introduced: Bill 45, Public Sector Services Continuation Act. This act significantly increased the penalties for illegal strikes by workers who are determined to provide essential services. This bill was introduced as a response to the wildcat strike by correctional officers that began at the Edmonton Remand Centre earlier that year. The government proposed to introduce harsh fines of up to a million dollars per day on a union in the case of an illegal strike or even the threat of an illegal strike. Neither of these bills received royal assent. However, it was this tone that was set by the past government that raised serious questions around the ability to have a fair bargaining process between the essential services workers and the government.

A court challenge was launched to the Queen's Bench with an outcome that ruled that workers have the human right to strike, so here we are today, Madam Speaker. It needs to be reinforced, the importance of the bargaining process. As all members of this House will recognize, the language that is developed in contracts is extremely important when ensuring transparent and working relationships. In fact, the language within the collective agreements that are negotiated is where the most time and work is spent. This language can focus on things such as occupational health and safety, hours of work, caseload issues among a variety of other things. Financial compensation is the last thing to be negotiated and is usually the quickest part of negotiation.

Madam Speaker, why do we need to amend our labour laws to ensure that essential services workers have the right to strike? Let us refer back to the Redford government and the strike at the remand centre, a strike that was not started due to compensation but, in fact, was a response to imminent occupational health and safety issues found within the remand centre. Members have tried to have the issues addressed; however, they were ignored, and the workers were being injured. So the workers struck, and it created stress on supporting the inmates because there was no plan in place to ensure that there were significant workers available to keep the building running.

We can do better, Madam Speaker. Our government understands the importance of being proactive and ensuring that we plan to support the essential services that so many Albertans need and that may also be affected by a strike. This is why the essential services agreement is so important. These agreements are essential to protecting the public services Albertans depend on. That's why our essential services legislation sets out a commissioner who will assess and verify essential services agreements to ensure requirements are being met.

The language in place in our legislation also provides flexibility by allowing essential services agreements to be reassessed in order to accommodate a change of circumstance or a continuation of care. This is important legislation, Madam Speaker. Not only does it address the fundamental right of individuals to strike; it also ensures that Albertans continue to receive the quality of care that they deserve.

In closing, Madam Speaker, we need to remember that workers' rights are human rights, and it's our job as a government to ensure that human rights are protected here in Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services is the title of the bill. Lots of really important technical information in there. I'm just wondering: from the hon. member's perspective, is there anything inside the bill that's outside of the scope of the Supreme Court ruling?

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I would think that what the member is trying to hint at is looking at the replacement worker component within the bill. I just want to really reinforce how important it is that we ensure that the people that are working during strikes are the qualified people that need to be there. We want to ensure that when we are entering into these essential services agreements, the staff that are going to be replacing the workers that need to be in there are the qualified nurses and the LPNs and all of those people that have been working in those facilities, not private contractors that are going to be brought in that could potentially put Albertans at risk.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the member for her response to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. However, that's not what the people in the briefing told members of this caucus when we asked about that specific provision concerning replacement workers for essential services. There are ways to replace people for essential services that are – you know, you could bring in other workers from the same field, perhaps even from the same workplace to cover off those positions. It was not a public safety provision, as explained to us in the briefing. It was explained to us in terms of a balance of negotiations.

Now, I'm of an opinion that your essential services workers probably shouldn't be replaced, but those provisions should be negotiated in the essential services agreements, not in the contracts later on because that would remove a significant bargaining chip from the government when negotiating a fair and reasonable essential services agreement.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm actually quite happy that the member has decided to stand and ask me a question, partly because when we're looking at how we engage with the commissioner in developing these essential services, all of those conversations are happening around who the workers will be that will be able to provide the essential services in case of strike.

The part that I found really interesting, though, is that there was a conversation that had just happened recently around some inconsistencies with the Wildrose and the member of the Official Opposition and how they were feeling about this piece of legislation. The member who just asked me the question was speaking to the fact that "moving forward, the province should amend the legislation governing binding arbitration to reflect the fiscal realities of the province" in the Edmonton Journal on June 11, 2014, but then we also have another member that spoke up last week and was arguing in favour of the status quo and using arbitration as a good mechanism. I guess what I'm trying to understand is that – I'm not quite sure where the Official Opposition actually stands on this legislation and why there's such a resistance when looking at, you know, trying to figure out, really, whether arbitration or commissioners or any of those things actually matter.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions under 29(2)(a)?
Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Manning for the knowledge that she's shared with us regarding her own personal experiences and if she could elaborate a little bit more on the importance of this legislation from her perspective.

Ms Sweet: Well, I think that there are two key components that are extremely important about this legislation. Thank you again for the question. The key component is the fact that there is a fundamental right for individuals who affiliate with the union, the right to have a bargaining process that includes the right to strike. There will be conversations that I'm sure will happen in this House over the next few days that will try to make it be perceived that this will somehow hinder the ability of the bargaining process. What we know is that when there is the ability for a right to strike, the bargaining process tends to work a lot more efficiently because there is a mutual understanding that this needs to be resolved or work will stop. There is this ability to move forward and to make sure that everybody is working collaboratively together.

I think the other important thing about essential services and that we're going to have an essential services agreement is the fact that it protects Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: Next on my list is the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today this House is considering Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. In our democratic system, which carefully separates the powers of this Legislature and government, this Legislature must now make changes to how we treat a large number of workers. The Supreme Court, which exercises judicial power, has determined that the right to strike is a fundamental right for unionized workers. The prohibitions that the Alberta government has put in place in the law banning strikes by public-sector workers have been deemed by the Supreme Court to be an unreasonable infringement on the workers who belong to a union.

A further court decision by the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench in 2015 ruled that parts of the Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act needed to be replaced. New legislation needed to be drafted that would allow workers, at least those not considered essential to public health and safety, to now be able to go on strike and for employers to be able to lock out their employees as in another unionized environment. The ramifications of these changes, Madam Speaker, will have huge implications on employer and employee relations in the public sector provincially.

An essential service as currently defined in this bill is a public service that if it was interrupted "would endanger the life, personal safety or the health of the public" at large. An essential service would also include those jobs where "the maintenance and the administration of the rule of law or public security" could be negatively affected. That is what's going to make this a difficult task. We must ensure as legislators that this bill balances the safety and security rights of Albertans with the right of Alberta citizens who work in public-sector jobs to fairly bargain for their wages and their working conditions.

Under current legislation teachers and teaching support staff, health care employees at nonapproved hospitals and those not working for Alberta Health Services, privately owned and operated senior care facilities, all staff at not-for-profit continuing care facilities, and most municipal workers have had the right to strike. But there have been many unionized workers in Alberta who have been deemed by legislation to work in a job broadly deemed as essential services: all unionized government of Alberta employees, including agencies, boards, and commissions; nurses; technical and professional staff at approved hospitals; postsecondary faculty and support staff, police, firefighters, and emergency medical services. As we debate the relative merits of this bill, we are going to have to be very careful. This bill must balance two legitimate sets of rights.

Earlier this year this Legislature debated whether to raise personal and corporate income taxes. At the time I argued that while every government must assess taxes on its citizens, if it is going to provide for public community services, this should be done with the realization that these taxes are not just the government's by right, and therefore the government must be very prudent when setting tax rates. A worker or a business owner has the right to their labour, and there must be compelling reasons to assess those taxes before the state is justified in imposing its will to compromise your right to keep the efforts of your labour.

In this instance, when we are talking about a worker's right to strike, I would also argue that as an extension of a person's right to keep the profits of their labour, that same worker has the right to bargain for their wage, including the right of unionized workers to strike. Indeed, it was only a few years ago, when the PC government was threatening that right to strike by public employees, that the Wildrose Party defended that principle in this very Legislature.

Indeed, as an educator for 30 years and therefore a member of the Alberta Teachers' Association I became well acquainted with the process that teachers had set in place for local bargaining. While I never had to exercise my right to strike as part of the process of collective bargaining – I always was very grateful for that – I was always appreciative of the fact that that option was there for teachers. Why? Because unless there are compelling reasons to show differently, every worker should be able to influence the compensation and the working conditions, et cetera, under which they are agreeing to work.

Now, Madam Speaker, I'd better be careful here because I don't want my colleagues in the House across the way, my colleagues of the NDP, to believe that like Paul on the road to Damascus I have been blinded by the light of progressivism and suddenly have come to see the light. Unions and collective bargaining and, in extreme circumstances, even the right to strike may have a place in labour relations, but as in all things in life, especially for conservatives, there must be a balance in life and a balance in rights.

There are jobs and there are circumstances under which it would be deemed reasonable to restrict the rights of a worker and to exclude the right to strike. Under Bill 4 police, firefighters, and non Alberta Health Services ambulance operators will continue to be deemed an essential service and will therefore use compulsory arbitration to solve disputes and will not fall under this particular piece of legislation. This, too, is proper. Workers are not the only ones with rights; the society as a whole has a legitimate right to expect that their society will not be destabilized or become unsafe because of a labour dispute. Society must depend on the police, the firefighters, the doctors, and the nurses that provide these essential services to be available at all times. People's lives and the very safety and security of society depend upon these jobs.

The workers that enter these professions know ahead of time that their chosen profession is of critical importance to the well-being of the society as a whole and that when they chose to enter that profession, they were giving up their right to strike when bargaining collectively. This does not mean that these professions are not at the end of the day compensated fairly. In fact, those who are granted compulsory arbitration in exchange for the right to strike have generally profited from it. A study by the C.D. Howe Institute showed that essential services had an average 13 per cent premium in their negotiated nominal wage increase.

In a democracy all rights have restrictions, but those restrictions must only be applied in what would be commonly viewed as a reasonable restriction on that particular right. The Supreme Court has ruled that we must review our legislation to ensure that the right to strike is being restricted only in what would be viewed as a reasonable fashion. We must ensure that Bill 4 does exactly this. We must ensure that it is a good piece of legislation. While this bill titles itself after the need to meet a Supreme Court requirement, the way it has chosen to meet it and the ways it has gone beyond what the court demanded are what we must deliberate upon. In case we have not quite got it right after deliberation – and let's clarify that the courts were not entirely clear in their ruling on what is required to make any fixes in this important act – I believe we should consider a sunset clause; that is, a clause that automatically forces this Legislature to review this bill by having to revisit it four or five years from now.

In section 95 of Bill 4 a commissioner is appointed to oversee essential services agreements. The bill states that this commissioner will have the unilateral power to amend essential services agreements even if both parties agree. I worry that this does not pass the smell test of what would be considered reasonable in a democratic society. All officials and all agents of the government in a democracy must always face a reasonable level of accountability in order to maintain good government decisions. The power of unilateral decision-making is almost never a good idea. I believe that this commissioner needs a check, whether it is by the Labour Relations Board or the minister who is subject to the House and therefore accountable to the people of this province. That is something I hope we can think about when we are in the Committee of the Whole.

As we look for the right balance, let's keep in mind the need for nonessential public employees to have similar rights to other individuals but also the Crown's duty to provide basic services to Alberta and to Albertans. There will always be some grey areas in what is determined to be essential, but with rights at stake on the one side and lives at stake on the other, we need to act in good faith here in this Legislature to ensure that the process we set up to adjudicate those differences is a fair one.

While I approve in principle the direction of this bill – it will not only improve individual rights, but I believe that it will bring in an ability for the people of Alberta to ensure that essential services are still maintained – I believe that we need to make sure that we have at the end of the day balanced individual and societal rights in an appropriate and a democratic fashion.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the member for his statement. I'm just curious around how you see the arbitration process working and how you would, then, perceive the commissioner working. I keep hearing these comments around: too much power for the commissioner. Yet there is an actual arbitration process that is a binding process. Does your party support arbitration? Does your party support commissioners? How do you decide who gets the ultimate binding agreement when it comes to the bargaining process?

The Deputy Speaker: Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. You know, I think that as we come together as a Legislature, that's a discussion that is probably best had at the Committee of the Whole.

An Hon. Member: We can't hear you.

Mr. Smith: I'm sorry. I will make sure that I speak to the Speaker there, and then you can hear me speak, okay?

I believe that, for the members across the way, when we take a look at the whole arbitration process – I know that while I've had some understanding of that as a part of being an educator for 30 years and having seen some arbitrated settlements both with nurses as well as with teachers, I would be remiss if I said that I had a full understanding of it. I believe that probably her questions and how we see things going – I'm still open. I'm still very fluid on how we do this. I believe that we need to have that conversation about whether or not the commissioner will have some checks on his power where that has the ability to impact arbitration and whether or not we need to work down that path. I remain open as a legislator to the comments that are here, but also at the end of the day we'll have to make a judgment as to whether or not we've come to a good decision on this.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have a question for the member. He indicated a bit of concern around unilateral decision-making of the commissioner. I just want to make sure that he understands that there is a procedure leading up to the fact before the commissioner were ever to get involved. You know, this process involves a negotiation and adjudication model, so there are several steps and checks and balances before it comes to the commissioner getting involved. One of the reasons that the Supreme Court ruled the way they did is because in the SFL case the government was the one making a unilateral decision, and that's why they threw that law out. I just wanted to ask the member if he feels that all the processes leading up to the point where the commissioner would get involved, those processes prior to the commissioner, would satisfy his concern about unilateral decision-making.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question, or for the comment at least. You know, obviously, again, what I say is that, really, Committee of the Whole is going to be important, and that's what it's there for. These are issues that are very important. We have to balance those rights. I look forward to hearing the conversation so that I can make a better decision as to whether or not we've actually found that right balance. So thank you for the comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll move to my next speaker, Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. I should probably provide a little bit of background here as to why I'm a little bit interested in this. Before being elected as the MLA for Edmonton-Decore, I worked in various positions at Lucerne Foods over 26 years. Out of the 26, I spent 18 of those as a shop steward as well as volunteering on various committees and also performing the duties of a relief representative with the United Food and Commercial Workers, local 401. So you could probably say that workers' rights have been a bit of a top priority of mine for quite some time, and I very clearly say that I support the collective bargaining process, which I've even participated in a few times, and the rights of both the union and the employer.

But I also know that Albertans need to have reliable access to essential services in the event of a work stoppage. This is why essential services legislation recently introduced by our government is so important. This will modernize Alberta's labour laws and ensure that employers, government, and unions work together for the benefit of all Albertans.

Now, why is this so important? Well, again a little history. In 2015 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the right to strike is fundamental for workers. Then, of course, only two months later the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta declared that strike prohibition in the Public Service Employee Relations Act and similar strike bans in the Labour Relations Code are unconstitutional. Needless to say, Madam Speaker, the courts have been quite clear that public-sector workers have the right to strike.

Now, currently Alberta legislation forbids strikes and lockouts in the public sector. It requires compulsory arbitration to solve disputes. Bill 4, an act to implement a Supreme Court ruling, will change this by placing a greater responsibility for a settlement in the hands of the employer and union negotiations, minimizing the use of compulsory and often very costly arbitration. It's been a little bit too easy for both sides to simply say: "Well, it's not working out. We can't reach a deal. Let's let somebody else go and make those decisions for us." The bill can really get out of hand sometimes when that happens. We need to have this process so that we can begin good-faith bargaining at all times, not just sort of when we feel like it or when, you know, sunset clauses step in and we can just decide: well, we'll just bide some time.

This legislation has been brought forward after, of course, extensive consultation with Alberta public-sector employers, unions, and employees and the general public. If passed, it will bring Alberta's labour legislation in line with the courts and, finally, the rest of the country. It would also ensure stability for public services in our province. I think the last thing we want to see is people going out on strike and chaos ensuing. That's why it's so important to have this essential services component.

Albertans shouldn't have to worry about care and safety when two parties can't agree. Bill 4 will ensure that essential services like emergency health care are provided to the general public during strikes and/or lockouts. Determining what essential services will be maintained during work stoppages will be decided by the public-sector employers and the unions working together, something that we've kind of created an atmosphere of not being able to do. I think this will finally open it up and allow these folks to get to the table, get a deal hammered out so we can move forward. If they can't reach an agreement, a neutral third party will resolve the dispute quickly and efficiently. The last thing we need is these things dragging out forever on end.

This legislation will create a fair and level playing field, will provide Alberta workers basic rights that they've been denied, allowing them to bargain with their employers in good faith. It will also create a collaborative atmosphere for employers and unions working together to reach an agreement that is fair for both sides.

Madam Speaker, in summary, this legislation helps us achieve our goals: to comply with the Supreme Court of Canada and the Queen's Bench, to protect public services that everyone relies on, and to balance the right of unionized workers to a fair collective bargaining process. I would certainly want to encourage all of the members of this Assembly to support this bill because I think we can finally put to rest this combative atmosphere that we seem to have always had.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was listening to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore, he was talking about working together with the government and with the particular bargaining unit in regard to figuring out which employees would be essential services employees. Now, since he, as he mentioned, has experience in the union movement and the public sector and other contract negotiations, I was wondering what his thoughts would be on whether having both the employer and the union work together on who is an essential service would foster goodwill amongst the parties as they go through the negotiation process.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Certainly, when you can get both sides at the table actually talking, it's amazing what starts to happen. One of the biggest roadblocks in bargaining is just simply stalling out and hoping to just go to a process where somebody else will do it for you. It's so important that when you're coming to the table to bargain, it's done in good faith. You're actually trying to work with each other. The employer can actually come to the table, you know, and let the other side know what it is they need to make everything happen. The union can then come to the table, doing the exact same thing.

It's amazing how often you actually come to a fair and equitable agreement when both of those stories are allowed to be told rather than just simply pushing it off to an arbitration process that generally doesn't tend to favour either side. I think that once we can get these two sides actually talking, it will be pretty exciting to see what the employer, what the union, and what even the bargaining members can put together.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, next on my list is the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and debate this very critical and important piece of legislation, Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, and for the record a few other sundry items in there.

An Hon. Member: Sundre?

Mr. Cooper: Hey, I like what you did with "sundry" there.

This is an important piece of legislation. This is a highly technical piece of legislation. We have already seen, just this afternoon, some varying of opinions on what is in the bill, what isn't in the bill. Is the bill's only desire or scope to fulfill the mandate of that Supreme Court ruling, or are there other items inside the piece of legislation that go beyond that Supreme Court ruling?

My intention this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, with my questioning of my colleagues in this Assembly on “Are there items inside the bill outside of the scope of the ruling?” is actually not to trip anyone up. The intention was merely to say that there is a wide variety of knowledge on this particular piece of legislation. There are many members in this Assembly that are very, very knowledgeable about every step of the process, and there are members of the Assembly that know very little about the process.

What I consistently come back to in this place – and many of you have had the pleasure or not pleasure, depending on one’s perspective, of being here when I’ve had the opportunity to rise and speak about the importance of getting legislation right. While I appreciate that the government has engaged Mr. Sims to put together the report on the Supreme Court ruling and while I appreciate that they have done some consultation on this particular issue – you know, they are doing consultation better on some issues that are perhaps more important to them than others, as we’ve seen in some other pieces of legislation where the consultation hasn’t been quite as robust as it has here in the lead-up to Bill 4 – I get back to the fact that while the consultation may have been good, certainly that same type of consultation hasn’t been afforded to all members of the Assembly.

We see a situation here today with Bill 4 where in all likelihood we’re going to conclude second reading of Bill 4 today. Committee of the Whole is going to come quite likely tomorrow given the very few pieces of legislation that this government has introduced in this session. So Committee of the Whole is going to come tomorrow, and then it’s very possible and reasonable that on Thursday morning Bill 4 could in fact become law.

Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker. There are many things in this piece of legislation that I and many of my colleagues – and I can only speculate because of the free-vote system that we have on this side of the House – will be supporting. In fact, it’s my belief that the vast majority of the Wildrose caucus will be supporting Bill 4 at second reading.

So I find it a little disingenuous when the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie rises and says that he just wants to have a conversation with the opposition and just wants to work with us when, in fact, there has been more than one occasion where we have had this opportunity to work together. It appears that we’re going to support Bill 4 at second reading. We certainly had some good co-operation on Bill 1 in a previous session, when we were getting union and corporate donations out of the influence of politics. Now, there are some significant loopholes in that legislation. I think that the government should take steps to fix those, but certainly we worked together on that.

There are a number of other areas, including the Official Opposition proposing a significant number of reasonable amendments to legislation, most of which haven’t been accepted. But, in fact, at this very moment, while we speak, it’s my belief that the Official Opposition, a member of our team, is meeting with a member of their team to discuss some of the possibilities around amendments because what’s important to this side of the House is getting legislation right for all of the province. That means that it’s possible that there is going to be a wide variety of amendments that we’ll propose that, in fact, are good ideas. In times past when we’ve tried to work together, particularly on a previous piece of legislation in the form of Bill 203, the government said, “We want to talk about it,” killed it, brought it back. So it’s not just the opposition that prevents communication inside this place.

I agree that we ought to ensure that pieces of legislation best reflect the interests of Albertans. One of the ways that we have the opportunity to do that is in committee, because tomorrow or whenever Committee of the Whole is called in this place, likely tomorrow, when we introduce a number of amendments, the government is going to have to make decisions very, very quickly as to whether or not they support those amendments. It’s one of the reasons why we’ve reached out to the minister responsible for this bill, to try and have a sense so that there can be some mutual agreement, perhaps.

But the best way, Mr. Speaker, the way that happens in almost every jurisdiction across this great land, is that these sorts of critical decisions aren’t made on the floor of the Assembly but are in fact made in a legislative policy committee. We saw and just heard the Minister of Economic Development and Trade across the aisle here say, “We’re working on Bill 1 in committee,” and the special ethics committee is certainly doing that. While he may have not said it out loud so everyone could hear, he certainly said that we were working on it in committee, fixing the loopholes around Bill 1, and it’s my belief that the special ethics committee is working to do that if they would ever meet, sir.

Mr. Bilous: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. minister raised a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I refer to, in the standing orders, 23 ...

Mr. Cooper: Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j).

Mr. Bilous: Sounds pretty good.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, what the hon. member just said – his claims are patently false. I did not speak to Bill 1 going to committee, nor did I talk about making amendments to Bill 1 whatsoever. It’s completely untrue and false, and I request that the member withdraw his comments.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, certainly, I will be happy to withdraw my comment. I would just add a point of clarification for you, that I certainly wasn’t referring to Bill 1 in this legislative session but Bill 1 in the last legislative session, which was to ban union and corporate donations. I believed that he had implied that the special ethics committee was dealing with some of the loopholes at committee, and in his jest across the aisle during my presentation, perhaps that wasn’t the case. Either way, I am more than happy to withdraw the comments and consider the matter dealt with.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Do you wish to continue?

Debate Continued

Mr. Cooper: I’d love to continue. As I was saying, the role of committee can be used as an important tool here in the Alberta Legislature, as is done in many jurisdictions, because we get to have that conversation that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie so wisely desires, this conversation between the government and the opposition that isn’t done oftentimes in the highly partisan manner that, in the nature of the government and opposition, particularly in the Chamber, it typically winds up in.

So I would just like to propose an amendment to Bill 4 that would allow that committee to take place. I'm happy to pass those around, and I'm happy to continue as well, whatever your preference is, sir.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have copies of the proposed amendment, 95 copies?

Mr. Cooper: I do. Do you mind if I continue while they're distributed?

The Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Cooper: The notice of amendment is for Mr. Cooper to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Mr. Speaker, what this amendment does is that it would provide an opportunity for all members of the Assembly to have the chance to reach out to experts, to labour lawyers, to union leaders, to business owners, to essential service providers. Earlier today we heard that there may be some confusion around the role of paramedics, some paramedics being included inside the legislation and others that may not be included inside the legislation. These are the exact type of loopholes – it would be great if we could get them solved prior to the legislation becoming law.

We have heard from Albertans that what they would like us to do is to make sure that we get it right, and I believe that the government's intention is to get this piece of legislation right as well. But the best place for us to ensure that that can happen is – if we send this piece of legislation to committee, the committee can do a great job calling witnesses to ensure that we get the information that everyone needs so that we can make the best decision for Alberta.

Now, it's my guess that the government members will rise and say: "You're just trying to delay this. We've had a Supreme Court ruling that requires us to implement this." Let me be very clear. We are in full support of ensuring that the Supreme Court ruling is adhered to, and we in no way, shape, or form are intending to delay this bill for months and months and months on end and, in fact, are just wanting to get the information that is available to us out there on the record through the committee process.

While I've proposed amendments in past times and there were some hard-and-fast deadlines that existed on other pieces of legislation and the government used those hard-and-fast deadlines as an excuse to not send legislation to committee, the former government can no longer be blamed for timelines in this Assembly. The timelines that currently exist are because of this government. So it's critically important that we ensure that legislation is debated in a robust manner that can put stakeholders of the legislation at the fore, because what I would hate to see, Mr. Speaker, is something that we saw regularly in this place in the past, running risks, particularly if Bill 1, the act to ban corporate and union donations, ever has to come back to have those loopholes closed, perhaps as early as this fall, because we didn't do the due diligence at the time.

Certainly, when the third party was in government, this place regularly passed pieces of legislation and came back in the fall to fix the unintended consequences that they created. I think the point around which paramedics are in or out is a perfect example of the concern. We have the time, we have the ability, and I think it's critically important that Bill 4, a bill that's important to the future of our province, important to labour relations in our province, be sent to committee so that we can get it right the first time.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, have all of the members received copies of the proposed amendment?

Seeing none, I remind the House that, as I understand the process now, the discussion is with respect to the amendment. Subject to the resolution of that amendment we would go back to the motion.

With that recognition, the Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As much as I love to hear the opposition members speak out there – I understand where he's coming from – I do rise in opposition to this, sorry to say. I apologize, you know, for upsetting him. He did mention what he said about the Supreme Court. I think the Supreme Court has called upon us as legislators to bring in clear and concise legislation on essential services, and as law-abiding members of this government we will and we should comply.

Now, this legislation has been endorsed already by employers and employees alike, by AHS, United Nurses, and other providers, whether they be health care or other public services that we've discussed, that our Labour minister has talked to. On the topic of health care, you know, we always want to make sure that those people are taking care of the patients, the families and are getting the people they need, the professionals they need.

This means not compromising the spirit of essential services in agreements by bringing in replacement workers – it was alluded to before – who could possibly do more harm than good. You know, I've seen that. It was in the private sector, but I have seen it at a mill that I worked at as a young fellow not long ago. There was a strike, which nobody likes, and it's never good for any side, to be honest. It's always hard on everybody. I had a friend of mine's dad who wasn't trained, who wasn't professional, but he was put in a situation, and he was killed because he wasn't a professional. That's not to speak to, you know, public service workers in this respect, but it was a replacement worker. Anyway, I digress a bit, but that's just from personal experience. Honestly, it just kind of popped into my head there.

The bill already I see as a clear framework, and it encourages employers and employees to work together and to collaborate and decide who isn't or who is essential in the workplace.

In my previous career as a communications technician with Telus I wasn't an essential service, but – I'll tell you what – when I showed up at a house with a family with kids that hadn't had Internet for a few days, they most definitely felt like I was an essential service, you know, in restoring their sanity. So I was kind of a health care worker in the same respect.

As much as I think that I was essential, you know, somebody like my wife, who's a health care worker and who saves lives every shift and never ceases to amaze me with what she does – those are the people that we're talking about here. Those are the essential services, and I have the utmost respect for them. She's a respiratory therapist and essential to the patients in her care.

You know, there was a previous members' statement about – again, this is personal. I can talk to what a member said in here because he was confused about something. He made a statement about a union worker going back to his job after being elected or not. Personally, in my union we bargained a fair contract where I can take a leave of absence for a political position or to run for a political position, and if I win, I have a leave of absence for the term of that position. If I don't, I can go back. That holds true for next time, in which I determine that I will win again because how could you not with this handsome face here? And because of all my hard work that I do in the constituency. Sorry. That's what I should have said first. I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Talking on the bill again, you know, Albertans deserve to know how their vital public services are being protected when there is a labour dispute. There's a lot of uncertainty out there. A lot of people don't know. Even in my previous union, the steelworkers, there were guys in the union who didn't know how this worked and how bargaining worked. As a shop steward and a VP and a delegate for conventions that was my job, right? Right now this bill is encompassing all of this. It's letting us communicate with people already. It's already given us the opportunity to consult with people out there.

As the Supreme Court said – and I go back to the Supreme Court because this is who we are ultimately listening to – it is every Canadian's right to join a union if they choose and to collectively bargain, and that includes the right to strike. Under the essential services model, bargaining will take on an even greater role in making sure that contracts and agreements are fair for everyone involved, and that's what we are going for here. It's a very positive step. It's going to be clear and open bargaining, making it fair on all sides. I think it will go a long way in enlightening citizens on how these agreements work and when they are needed.

I am also hopeful that throughout this process and debate the Official Opposition will come to understand exactly how collective bargaining works and that contracts are legally binding agreements and that you can't simply break them to cut workers' wages and benefits when you feel like it. I'm just saying. [some applause] Thank you.

So I will speak against this amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: We are now dealing with the amendment to Bill 4. Speaking to the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll look forward, perhaps, to speaking to the main motion later on.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment brought here is to basically stop it in the House and send it to committee, which, frankly, isn't the worst idea in the world. I would have preferred that the mover had done it after second reading as opposed to at this point, and perhaps the mover will try it again at that point. I think this is a pretty important piece of legislation, one where we would want to hear from members of the House, anybody that wants to speak to it, before we send it away. That would be preferable. I think we got a signal from the government side that it may not pass, but on the off chance that it does, I feel obligated to say a couple of things here.

During my time as Labour minister if there was one thing or a couple of things impressed upon me, it was that labour legislation is super important. It affects everything that happens in Alberta, every family's livelihood, every business's opportunity for future opportunities. Certainly, one of the things that was made clear to me by people much wiser than I am on matters of labour is that one needs to be careful. One needs to be careful because labour legislation is one of those things in government that can actually tip the scale, and if you want to talk about creating winners and losers, it can really create winners and really create losers and not necessarily to the benefit of all Albertans if it's not done with great care, which is why I will say that I'm hoping to get a chance to talk on this more again in second reading.

But at some point, perhaps even in Committee of the Whole after we've heard from more members of the House that want to speak to this, having the most fulsome discussion possible, including at committee, is probably a good idea, Mr. Speaker, even if it does not happen at this particular point.

The Speaker: Questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Hays?

All right. Are there any other speakers with respect to the amendment? The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to express why I think it's so important that we move forward expeditiously as opposed to stalling this unduly. Certainly, both levels of court have declared that the right to strike is important as a Charter right. Both courts found that Alberta's public-sector strike prohibition interfered with collective bargaining. Certainly, being the minister for a very large public sector of employees, I think it's important that we have fair collective bargaining processes that lead to consistency, ideally in terms of patient care as well as moving forward and making sure that we have replacement worker legislation and processes outlined to make sure that if we ever are in the unfortunate situation, which, again, is neither the employer nor the employee's desire – it's important that we make sure that we do have that legislation in place. I have to say that by stalling on moving forward with this legislation, I'm concerned that it could lead to unsafe conditions, which we've seen.

Obviously, having the legislation in place that the previous government passed didn't stop strikes from happening. It meant that there were wildcat strikes and that they put the citizens of those facilities in danger, I would say. Rather than continuing to have legislation that isn't in compliance with the Charter, that isn't in compliance with the court rulings – this is simply a Supreme Court ruling. Delaying this further, I think, would threaten the safety and well-being of the citizens I'm thinking about who are sitting in hospital beds, who obviously want to make sure that when they ring the call button, somebody is there to deal with their needs, that somebody is there to respond to them.

I think it's really important that we move forward in a way that has been outlined, through a careful legislative bill, that seems to have great support on both the employee and the employer sides of the equation, to make sure that we protect the interests of our citizens, that we honour the rights of workers, and that we can move forward as a responsible government in a timely fashion.

Certainly, Alberta's public-sector labour legislation needs to be updated. It's almost 30 years old, Mr. Speaker, and it needs to be modernized to protect public-sector employees, respect their Charter rights, and, again as I mentioned, respect the citizens who rely on those essential services to be delivered in their hospitals or in their communities. Prisons are another example, another place where we saw wildcat strikes because we simply didn't have legislation that enabled safe and respectful bargaining processes. As a result, it led to a very unsafe situation, I'd say, for inmates as well as guards in those facilities.

With that being said, I would urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment as proposed, an amendment that would essentially stall this process which I think is very important. It's timely. You know, given that there are only two provinces that need to comply, I think it's about time we acknowledged that we are in 2016, updated our labour legislation, and made sure that the rights of both the workers as well as those who rely on those workers are respected and reflected. I worry that the amendment as proposed, which is basically for it not to be read a second time, would impede that.

I think that the person who moved the amendment actually said that he'd be voting in support of it at second reading, so I find a remark that he'd be voting in support of this and at the same an amendment saying that it not be read a second time very contradictory and would ask that my colleagues vote against the amendment and that we move forward with this essential legislation to enact the Supreme Court ruling. This is a very clear Supreme Court decision, and it's time that we got on with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment to Bill 4?

Seeing none, before I call for the vote on the amendment, I understand there may be an agreement with respect to the length of times on the bells. I'm not sure if that's . . .

An Hon. Member: No.

The Speaker: Okay.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 4 lost]

The Speaker: Back to the bill. Hon Member for Calgary-Hays, you'd like to speak to the bill?

Mr. McIver: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 4, the essential services legislation. First, let me say that I will compliment the minister on bringing this forward. It's not that many months ago, when I was Labour minister, that this was on my plate for the very same reason that it's on this minister's plate: because of a Supreme Court of Canada decision in Saskatchewan, as has been referenced by many members here today, that says that people have to be offered the right to bargain collectively and strike and join a union and the other things that the Supreme Court of Canada decision made clear. So this is something that we as legislators in the broader spectrum have to do. Frankly, in the broader spectrum most of what's in the bill I certainly agree with.

As I said earlier, labour legislation is one of those things. I was there in the Labour ministry just long enough to know how little I know. While I probably learned a hundred times more than I knew when I started there, I still believe I don't know much because labour legislation is pretty complex, pretty far reaching into society, pretty far reaching into the economy and, in my view, should never be trifled with or taken lightly because you really can change people's lives. When you change people's lives, I think we get paid in here to try to change them for the better instead of the worse, which is why the care is required with legislation like this.

Mr. Speaker, I once said something that got misunderstood. I think I said that the fewer people that don't have the right to strike, the worse that it is. That's a double negative, which is, of course, the exact same meaning as the more people that have the right to strike, the better it is, which is how I feel. I sincerely believe that if you're going to have a good result and you're going to have people's voices heard on their own behalf when you're searching for that good result, the very best way to do it is to negotiate. If you're going to negotiate, there are certain elements that are required, and one of those elements is to have equal power between the parties negotiating, or more or less equal power. Pure equality is probably hard to achieve, but some manner of equality simply because, otherwise, if that's not the case, then one party with less power isn't actually negotiating; they're begging skilfully, or not skilfully in some cases. Nonetheless, it's not a real negotiation unless both parties at the table have some leverage. I believe that is what essential services legislation is intended to achieve.

Now, under the previous government, the PC government, there was legislation in place, that is still in place now, where the vast majority of employees whose paycheques are funded through the Alberta government either directly or indirectly – you know, through AHS or education or other means – don't have the right to strike. In fact, this is what's a little bit unusual about this legislation coming to Alberta compared to when it has come to other provinces. In most provinces when essential services legislation is put into place, fewer people have the right to strike because some are considered essential. They were all able to strike before, and this is done to protect the public in those cases. In Alberta's case, which is quite interesting, most of the employees already don't have the right to strike. This is very unusual compared to most provinces in Canada where this has happened in that a lot more employees will have the right to strike than do today.

Mr. Speaker, I will repeat this for the record and to be perfectly clear: I think that's a good thing. I think when that is the case, without the right to strike, negotiations have a built-in default from day one, and the built-in default is that you go to arbitration. So we're going to go in, go to the bargaining table, and see what we can get. If we don't like it, we can throw up our hands and say, "Let's go to arbitration, and we'll see what those folks give us," or on the government side, "We'll see what those folks make us pay or do or whether they take our side or not," whereas with a genuine, across-the-bargaining-table negotiation I think it really requires not one side or the other but both sides to take a serious look at what they should be asking for and what they should not be asking for.

Now, there's a saying in business that I think applies to government and probably applies to family life and everything else, too, and that saying is: when the money runs out, then you have to think. Mr. Speaker, if you can always spend more money, you can solve lots of problems simply by paying for the solutions without really having to think, in my view, hard enough about what's the best solution, not just the solution you can get away with. I think essential services legislation, if we do this correctly, should take us to that place. It should take us to a place where when the employer and the employees are sitting across the table negotiating, they are truly thinking about everything, not just thinking about a number that they think the arbitrator will or will not give but, rather, thinking about that number – of course, numbers matter when you're talking about people's paycheques. But I really think there'll be a more sincere conversation about working conditions, about conditions that keep employees safe and healthy and also about what's a management decision and what's an employee decision.

In my view, too many of those decisions under an arbitration system – not every time, of course. But there are a lot of times where people think there's an attractive number on the table and they don't get to the nub of the working conditions and they don't get to the place where the employer and the employees can best work together and find a way to deliver best value to whomever you're doing the work for.

Delivering the best value has great benefits. It has great benefits, obviously, for the employer because they just get better value for the money they're spending. But, in my view, it gives better value to the employees, too, because it puts them in a position to negotiate for better job satisfaction. I don't know anybody that goes home and says to their husband, wife, son, daughter, mother, father: I went to work today and did the lousiest job I could do. Nobody says that. You know why they don't say that? Because it's not true. People go to work, and they do the best job they can do.

Under a proper negotiation part of the conversation ought to be and I believe will be in most cases about: how can I do a better job? How can we work better together? What is the fair rate of compensation for that both in outright pay and in benefits, time off and all the other things that go around that? Only through negotiation, in my opinion, can you actually get to the best result because that takes work. It does take work. And when you've got the safety valve, where you can always throw up your hands when you're frustrated – because people that negotiate sometimes aren't all that easy to deal with, Mr. Speaker. We know that in this House. We're not always easy to deal with. Sometimes it's easy to throw up your hands and say, "Send it to the arbitrator," or throw up your hands and say, "We're the majority in the House, and we're going to do what we want," or throw up your hands and say, "We're the minority over here, and the government is going to do what they want anyway." I think the way you get to the best result is by negotiating and working it through to the best logical ends that you possibly can.

This does modernize, as has been said here, two pieces of legislation. It certainly codifies the Supreme Court's decision that people have the right to bargain collectively. It actually puts us in a position where the employer and the employees will negotiate on what's an essential service. I believe that's what the Supreme Court of Canada decision says has to happen, and I think we're bound to get a better result. There are going to be some interesting and probably difficult negotiations.

What's interesting is that when I was Labour minister and I started this process before the current minister was there, we talked to different labour groups – and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will be interested – and we talked to some of the faculty groups that weren't allowed to strike. Interestingly enough, there was a mixed opinion. Some actually didn't want the right to strike because they thought they were treated pretty well, and other ones wanted it very much. I believe they were both sincere. I'm not saying anyone was right or wrong. Everybody has the right to express what they think is in their best interest. But we're going where we are.

I think I'm almost out of time. I actually have quite a bit more to say. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that we will have some questions as time goes on about the power of the commissioner, where the checks and balances will be for that role as described in the legislation. We will have to talk about replacement workers and the changes that go beyond the Supreme Court decision. I look forward to getting to those discussions. I look forward to asking questions. As I expressed to the Labour minister earlier today – she was gracious enough to say that she would try to accommodate that – I'm hoping to get an opportunity to sit down with her before we actually make a decision in this House on this and talk about a couple things in the legislation. I'm grateful for the fact that the minister said that that could probably be accommodated. That's something that I appreciate.

I would be remiss if I didn't say that while we disagree with a lot of things the government does, getting advice from Andy Sims is a good idea. Andy, if you're listening, you know you and I don't agree on everything, but you are one of the smartest people I've ever met on labour issues. If there's any little bit I know about it, he taught me four times that much, and I only remembered 25 per cent. I think he's not a bad person for the government to get advice from. Again, while I would say that I don't agree with them on everything, boy, he has a lot of things figured out that most other people in this world do not have figured out when it comes to labour legislation. I feel pretty confident that I'm right in saying that.

Mr. Speaker, I'll stop right now. I'm sure I'll be on my feet again before this debate is over. Again, on the face of it essential services has to be done. We don't know whether it will save the government money or cost the government money. We actually don't know whether it will get the employees better wages and working conditions. That, as it ought to be, will be the subject of negotiation, which I think in my heart is the right way to sort things out between human beings, to sit down in the same room at the same table at the same time with a pot of coffee or something and actually talk about what your interests are, both mutual and in conflict, and just sort it out.

Again, I'll stop. There are some few issues that we need to talk about and maybe have some amendments on this legislation before we're done, but at the core of it, Mr. Speaker, going the essential services route is the right thing to do. I would implore all members on all sides of the House to make a big effort to get this right. There are 220,000 or so people – not jobs but people – in Alberta who get paid out of the government purse, and we owe it to them to get it as right as we can.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the member under 29(2)(a)? The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. I would hate to miss the opportunity to ask you. Mr. Sims lives in my constituency. I see him from time to time on the street. What's one of the biggest life lessons he gave you in your time you worked together?

Mr. McIver: Life lessons? Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if he gave me life lessons. He surely gave me labour lessons. I think that I've said some of those. You've got to be careful because you can really change the balance of power. You can put a whole bunch of people out of business and put a whole bunch of people in business. I suppose that sounds good if you're putting people in business, except for the fact that you can't get the employees you need if you're the winner because if you're in a jurisdiction where the labour law is out of balance, you actually can't get the employees to come in and work there. So the biggest lesson? Be careful. Don't think that any of this is easy or simple.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for your statement. I'm just curious, going back to the fact that you were a past Labour minister and that you've worked in the area. We've had a lot of conversations here in the House around salary freezes and trying to freeze the salaries of the front-line workers. I'm just wondering from your experience if you have any learnings around how negating the bargaining process and trying to freeze salaries when you're not in an actual bargaining period would potentially impact the relationship with the public servants.

Mr. McIver: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the last part of the question is probably the easiest one to answer, that if you try to change the rules of an agreement before the agreement is done and you try to change it in such a way that it's more negative for the party you're dealing with, it's probably not going to help the relationship very much at all. In fact, it's probably going to be harmful. Again, I'll go back to my core belief that the best deals are negotiated, not imposed.

That's really the basis of a lot of the legislation that we have, actually, even the legal legislation that we have, even within the Human Services ministry, to provide equality of power between people dealing with each other, whether it's spouse and spouse or husband and wife or parent and child or senior and caregiver or whatever it is, to make sure that there is some balance there. When there's an agreement made, you know, and it gets changed, then that's a change from the established balance of power and influence.

I'm sure there are times in life when difficult situations make it tempting to go there and pull that lever, and I understand that, but it's more ideal – much, much more ideal – in my opinion, to negotiate, to make an agreement based on both sides having some relatively equitable leverage, and then live with that agreement. Life doesn't always allow that, but that's way better than the alternatives, in my opinion.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Hearing and seeing none, the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I feel I absolutely must speak in support of Bill 4 given my personal history as a former regional executive vice-president – that's REVP – and a member of the senior executive of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, which represented about 180,000 members and was the union that represented me for 32 and a half years as a public service worker. I was also a union president and steward as a volunteer in two separate locals. During that time I had the opportunity to work on essential services agreements for our members on a number of occasions.

First of all, I must reiterate what a number of my colleagues said, and that is that under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms Canadians have the right to unionize and a right to collective bargaining and to strike. Essential services agreements provide protection to the public while also balancing the employer and employee rights under the collective bargaining process. Union members are workers, citizens, and taxpayers, and I believe that they care about what happens in this province. I have participated in many, many strikes during my previous career as a public service worker. Just in case you didn't know, I was a union member.

In 1989 the welfare programs group, of which I was a member, were not identified as essential. The 1,250 members of this group across Canada went on strike. It had a profound impact on our department and the public. We were all parole officers. All of us recognized there should have been a number of our members designated as essential, not all but a significant number. Our department did not do this, and the public was at risk because of it. Every strike in which I was a participant was for many reasons, but first of all it was about respect. As a parole officer I was a front-line worker. No one ever wanted to jeopardize the safety of the public.

As an example, on September 11, 2001 – you should remember that date – we were on a strike line as members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada were officially on strike. As a parole officer my position had been identified for that particular strike as an essential services worker, and along with my colleagues I was in line to cross the strike line to go to work. We got word of the attacks on the World Trade Center, and as soon as it became known to us, our union nationally took down that strike line until the security risk was addressed. All of our members recognized the importance of providing essential services and what essential services actually are.

As an REVP I was the executive member on one of our bargaining teams. We came to the table to negotiate in good faith. As the team all had been or were front-line workers, we understood the need to have some employees identified as essential. In terms of protection of the public we know that that has to happen. We knew when the essential requirement was for a few positions or many positions. We knew because we were the front-line workers who provided protection to the public.

Having negotiated what work positions needed to be essential, this provided the balance between both the employer and the employee, and it balanced that with the protection of the public in mind. It also brought a level of respect and credibility to the process that was missing when essential services agreements were not in place. When these agreements were in place, bargaining team members on both sides of the table felt that they could actually really negotiate because they recognized that both sides had some tools if an issue could not be negotiated.

I support this bill, and I urge every one of my colleagues on both sides of the House to also support it. Essential services are – I can't even express to you how important they are. The public needs us to have this agreement, and so do our employers and our employees. Please support this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Lethbridge-East under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I would call on the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and speak in support of Bill 4. [some applause] Well, thank you. I'll take that. Absolutely, yes. There's a lot to like in addition to the obvious, you know, keeping up and adhering to the Supreme Court ruling, which is nonnegotiable, of course, and not optional.

The previous comments by the Member for Calgary-Hays I think are very well made, that this legislation puts an emphasis on negotiation. I want to recognize those comments and the experience that backs those comments and brings what I think is a very welcome nuanced view of this issue. There is, I think, an opportunity here for us not just to work together in a spirit of collegiality for the sake of doing that but, ultimately, in recognition that there is perhaps a better way to get things done. The best way to do that is at the bargaining table, where open conversations, perhaps hard bargains, can be driven both ways but done so in a spirit of openness and negotiation.

I also, I guess, want to just build on the comments from the Member for Lethbridge-East. I think it's very timely, and I'm glad that you had the opportunity to go immediately before me because one of the things I like about this legislation is section 95.45. Should there be a situation, should something change – I think the perfect example is what you talked about, the 9/11 scenario – should workers who have not been deemed essential services be on strike and something changes – there's an emergency situation – there is a provision, section 95.45, Significant Change in Circumstances, which allows for application to be brought to deem certain workers and certain services to be essential given a change in circumstances. That's the sort of flexibility that I think we'd all like to see in legislation, and it's a very good example here in this bill.

I do have some questions about the bill. There has been some talk about the power of the commissioner. You know, I do agree with the Member for Edmonton-Manning that – my concerns about the commissioner are not so much the power that the commissioner has. Frankly, someone ultimately needs to be that ultimate arbiter. Somebody needs to decide at the end of the day. What I like is the umpire model, where both sides agree to an umpire and allow that umpire to then make that decision.

The question I have about the commissioner – I'm not even sure I would go so far as to call it a concern, but it is a question I have. It's a nagging question that I have about any sort of appointment done by Executive Council. Who exactly is appointing the commissioner? While I don't question this government's integrity in choosing someone who will be a truly neutral arbiter, let's just say that perhaps in future governments there may be a risk that that person is weighted in one direction or the other.

I ask that as a question and raise that as an issue not so much because I have a firm answer to exactly how we address that. Of course, it's not a position necessarily, I think, that we would expect to report to the Legislature. I think we need to let the management of the public service ultimately run this, and this Legislative Assembly certainly can't micromanage every single issue. It is just something as I read the legislation and I thought about the model of the umpire. Again, liking very much that we have a scenario where both sides agree who that umpire will be, is there some way we could incorporate that same model or something similar when we're deciding who the commissioner may be?

There's been a lot of discussion about replacement workers and whether or not, in fact, that is strictly within the purview of meeting what the Supreme Court laid out. I suppose that in any legislation there's always a risk of overreach. When I look at that replacement workers provision, I do worry that perhaps that feels a bit different. I've looked at other provinces. British Columbia and Manitoba both have prohibitions on replacement workers in one form or another although I believe that those prohibitions were put in place through a separate process, through separate amendments to labour relations legislation, and not as part of those provinces' efforts to meet the Supreme Court ruling.

Having said that, I just raise that simply again as a question, as to whether or not, in fact, that's an absolute requirement to meet the Supreme Court ruling. You know, perhaps that's something we can discuss further. Maybe even amendments will be brought at some point although I don't think by me. That's something we may have an opportunity to further discuss.

Those are certainly not issues that will cause me to vote against Bill 4. I think it's an important piece of legislation. With that, I will return to my place, and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments with respect to the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise, of course, to speak in favour of Bill 4 for a number of reasons. I think, first of all, I'll see if I can speak without notes here and recall all of the things I apparently used to know about labour legislation. Of course, as my friend the Deputy Premier and Health minister indicated, she thinks about this legislation through the lens of the people in hospital beds and the people that she is sworn to ensure get the services. For me, I have spent less of my time in the last 10 months thinking about labour relations and more time thinking about critters and air, land, and water.

So I'll return to a job I once had with the Federation of Labour. As part of that job I used to teach labour history, Mr. Speaker, and in fact a couple of my students are in this House now. The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane and the hon. Member for Peace River both had to endure my lectures at labour school on the topic of the Public Service Employee Relations Act and the prohibitions on the right to strike. We'll see if we can recall some of that information as we go along here, and these poor people will have to endure yet another Phillips lecture on the matter.

I think it's useful to sort of back up and think about why the Supreme Court ruled in the way it did in the SFL case. The hon.

Member for Calgary-Hays, the leader of the third party, is quite right. These are complicated matters. That is why, you know, PSERA under Lougheed was passed, I believe, in the late 1970s and essential services regimes have been introduced in various provinces through the 1990s, various legal interventions that were found to have overreached. Of course, it took that long to work its way through the court system, resulting in the SFL case.

It's useful to think of why the SFL struck down essential services legislation in the Saskatchewan case. The reason is that the Charter guarantees us the right to freedom of association, and that right, Mr. Speaker, extends to the right to join a union. Now, we don't join a union for no purpose at all. The right would have no real effect if the act of belonging to a union did not result in a meaningful process for collective bargaining.

That is the nub of the SFL case, that what a government may not do is interfere in that right of free association that we have as individuals. As part of that, the substantive exercise of that right is that it must result in something. What was found was that the result of impairing collective bargaining, Mr. Speaker, impaired our right to free association. Collective bargaining as a right, then, its foundation, is the right to withdraw labour. You do not have a collective bargaining process that is meaningful if workers do not have that right.

As the Member for Calgary-Hays indicated, labour relations is a balance. We know this, all of us who have experience with the labour relations environment. There is always a careful balancing. Labour relations boards and others are always interested in this balance. It should be noted that in the SFL case and in the legislation here there must be limits on the rights of employers to impose a lockout, Mr. Speaker. It's both strikes and lockouts. It's not simply the withdrawal of labour, but it is also that there must be reasonable limits on the employers' exercise of simply locking the doors as a way of influencing the bargaining process.

So, Mr. Speaker, that's where the decision to strike down the essential services laws in Saskatchewan came from, and it's where the Alberta decision to reject elements of the Public Service Employee Relations Act came from as well. You know, this was a long process, and Alberta is already overtime with respect to us having appropriately balanced essential services legislation in place. That's why we need to move forward with some haste and not further mire this process in various committees and so on.

Now, I think another really important piece of this is how thoughtfully the minister and the minister before her proceeded in this matter, again with an eye to the careful balance of labour relations and the appreciation, certainly on our government's part, that a careful balance of labour relations leads to appropriate negotiated outcomes. That means, Mr. Speaker, as an extension of that, that it is not appropriate to rip up public-sector contracts, that it is not appropriate to bargain in the media. What is appropriate is to have a regularized, rationalized legal system in which we resolve bargaining between employers and employees.

This legislation comes on the heels of some thoughtful consultation on the part of the minister involved. It also comes as a result of expert advice given to us by Andy Sims, for which we are grateful, quite a robust process given that we also have some exigencies of time, that we must have this piece in place in order to conform with the courts and the law.

Now, I talked about strikes and lockouts, and this is not just about a right to strike. It is also about an appropriate balance for employers, in this case and in many cases the public sector or, in fact, government, to have appropriate steps for a lockout as well. There is a balance here. There are employers and employees. So that's an important point.

I want to talk a little bit about what compulsory arbitration resulted in under the previous essential services rubric, where almost everyone who was very clearly not deemed essential was banned from exercising a right to strike. You ended up at compulsory arbitration, and that was not good for either employers or employees. It was not good for workers, and it was not good, necessarily, or in the public interest for government. The reason for that was that compulsory arbitration forced the hand, and it didn't require anyone to engage meaningfully in negotiation. It just simply pushed everything into the red zone immediately. "Okay. Fine. We can't agree. We're going to compulsory arbitration."

That is not in the public interest. What's in the public interest is for worker groups to understand the current situation facing government and for government to understand the facts that, you know, it may be that in the public sector we have had years of austerity, of cuts, and of devaluation of the important work that public-sector workers do, the majority of whom are women, I might point out.

You know, there is an appropriate balance here that needs to be struck that was not reflected in a compulsory arbitration process. You know, usually arbitration results in higher awards to unions. Unions were happy to go to arbitration quite often. This will ensure that we have a better balance and perhaps a consideration of more of the nonmonetary pieces and so on; in other words, a regularized labour relations environment that prevails in every other mature jurisdiction. That is what we will end up with with the passage of this legislation, which, I'm very proud to say, strikes the right balance.

On this matter, Mr. Speaker, of its breadth, the fact of the matter is that without some consideration for how replacement workers might be dealt with in an unlikely event of a strike or lockout, there is an impairment of collective bargaining. That is just a simple fact. If the withdrawal of labour does not result in some kind of movement in negotiations, then you, again, have an impairment of collective bargaining. That's why we see similar language in legislation in other provinces.

I want to talk a little bit about what it means to impair collective bargaining and why collective bargaining is so important and why the courts have seen it as a fundamental right, a Charter right, of all individuals to free association and therefore everything that accrues to us from that, what it has meant in practical terms, in substantive terms, the substantive equality that that Charter right confers. Of course, we have legal equality, and we have, then, the substantive outcomes for people. What does it mean on the ground for the women and men in this province?

I would argue that what collective bargaining has done, Mr. Speaker, particularly for women, is that it has led to better pay equity. Women have been able to bargain in family leave. Women have been able to bargain sexual harassment and other components into collective agreements. The other thing that women have been able to do under the pay equity piece – and this is why it's important – is that they've been able to ensure that work done by women does not fall behind on the wage grid as it might do in the private sector, where there is an absence of collective bargaining. So you do see a public-sector wage premium for some work done in hospitals, for example, like laundry and maintenance and so on. Why? Because women have been able to democratically bargain for that, and it has resulted in better wages and a better life for families across this province.

I will remind the House of other things that have been bargained for, in fact through a strike, and that is that Canadian postal workers back in the 1970s, a predominantly male membership, went on strike for maternity leave, Mr. Speaker, and then that was bargained in. You know, that led the way in this country for an appropriate approach to balancing work and family life that all women and men now enjoy, and that is a result of collective bargaining and that fundamental human right.

A couple of other pieces are important that have been bargained in in the public sector, and again this is on the nonmonetary, Mr. Speaker, and shows the value of bargaining. Joint worker-employer health and safety committees are something that keep people safe. They ensure that there is a negotiated process for workplace hazards where both parties can sit down and – again, to the Member for Calgary-Hays, who recognizes this – seek that balance for safety and ensure that safety on worksites doesn't balloon into an injury or, heaven forbid, a death. They have been proven to save lives, and that's the kind of thing that gets bargained in.

Another important piece that is now becoming bargained in is discrimination based on one's gender identity or gender expression. Those are the kinds of reasons why this right is so important. I think it's important to take a step back and understand what the court has underlined and what this process delivers in terms of a good life for families and workers across this province and the other Canadian provinces, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments with respect to the minister of the environment under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Jabbour: Well, as a former student I just have to say that that brought back some wonderful memories. I thoroughly enjoyed learning about labour history. I think what you've helped us understand here today is that by learning the context and understanding where a piece of legislation comes from and why it has developed, it can really give us insight that's absolutely essential. I really want to say that I appreciated that you shared that with us. When you mentioned the laundry workers, again, for me that brought back thoughts of, you know, one of the lowest paid professions, one of the most vulnerable groups, yet they advocated for huge change here in this province. I'm very proud of the work they did, and I'm very proud that we can bring forth this legislation. Thank you for reminding me of all of that.

I think that was all. I don't really have a question, just a comment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising today to speak in favour of Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. This bill simply modernizes Alberta's labour laws to reflect the rulings of both the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. The courts have been very clear. It is the right of all Canadians to join a union if they so choose and to collectively bargain, which includes a right to strike.

Despite what some people may think, not all strikes are about money. More often than not a strike is about work conditions. Prior to my election to this House I was involved in the labour movement for many years, and in that time I have walked many picket lines. My first picket line, though, was in 1969 in B.C. I was nine years old. The meat cutter strike wasn't just about money. It was about safer work conditions. These people were lifting heavy carcasses, causing back injuries. They had no PPE, personal protective equipment, which resulted in broken bones from things like dropping a frozen carcass on your foot. A 400-pound carcass on the foot crushes toes. They lost fingers because they didn't have meshed gloves, and they weren't allowed them in their bargaining agreement. These were the most important issues that they were fighting for, and everyone has the right to fight for these kinds of issues.

This bill will enable government of Alberta employees, nonacademic staff at postsecondary institutions, employees of Alberta Health Services, and others the right to fight for better work conditions. Working double shifts, working short-handed: these are some of the reasons they need not only the right to bargain collectively but the right to strike. I encourage all members of this House to join me in support of this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think we've had an excellent conversation here this afternoon in our debate on Bill 4 in second reading, so with all the progress that we've made and the things that we've learned, I would move to close debate on second reading of Bill 4.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Seeing as we've made some great progress this afternoon with second reading of this very important bill and that it has now moved into committee, I move that we adjourn until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:29 p.m.]

9 a.m.

Wednesday, April 6, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us bow our heads, contemplate, and/or pray in the manner in which each of us chooses. Let us prioritize our duties in this Assembly in order that we can properly fulfill the requests of all Albertans, who are counting on us for assistance and for leadership. In times like these we must remember that we are here for each of them and for one another.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned April 5]

The Speaker: The Minister of Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to reply to the Speech from the Throne and embark upon my maiden speech as a first-time elected member of the Assembly for the constituency of Calgary-Varsity.

Firstly, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank the Premier. I'd like to thank her for her leadership, passion, honesty, and care for this province. It is her strength and trustworthiness that Albertans voted for when they elected the NDP to form a majority government. I was elected in a historic sweep in which the people of Alberta voted en masse for dramatic change after 44 years of the same governing political party. I'm still so proud and amazed at what Albertans accomplished when they rallied together on May 5 to effect change. It proved to generations of Albertans that voting actually means something and democratic participation is worth while. I'm proud to be part of a dynamic and diverse caucus. I'm proud that our government was the first in the country to have a gender-balanced cabinet and near gender-balanced caucus. I'm also proud that Albertans elected the first openly homosexual MLAs in the province's history to our government.

Our caucus and government brought in a ministry responsible for the status of women, which had not existed for the past 20 years. As recently as 2009 a prior member of this Assembly and then governing party was recorded to have said that if women want equal, they can find it in little packages at Starbucks. Not on our watch, Mr. Speaker. On our watch women will be represented and will represent the people of this province.

I'd also like to thank the people of Calgary-Varsity, my neighbours, for electing me and trusting me to be their representative in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Being given the trust of the electorate is perhaps one of the most humbling experiences any citizen can have.

I was born in Calgary at the Holy Cross hospital but raised in Edmonton when my parents, unfortunately, decided to move to the colder city to the north. When my parents divorced, my father returned to Calgary, so I came to know two homes and two cities. I obtained my first degree, a bachelor of arts, from Concordia University college of Alberta, in Edmonton, where I met my husband. We then moved to the fairer city to the south, Calgary. This was a more difficult transition for my husband, a self-identified Oilers fan, but easier for me, a Stamps fan.

It was in Calgary, at the University of Calgary, that I obtained my law degree. Through my studies I had the opportunity to learn much about our justice system. I worked in provincial prosecutions and then in criminal defence. I then began a career in family law, practising mostly in the area of high-conflict parenting litigation. Through my time in practice I helped many people at their worst, and this sparked a burgeoning desire to help folks on a much larger scale through the law and legislation.

Being an independent kind of person, I started my own law practice. I hung out my own shingle so that I could pursue the areas of law that I felt most passionate about and so that I could represent many clients pro bono and without the imposition of the billable hour. I experienced the trials of starting and running my own business in a profession that is still dominated by men. I grew this business into a partnership with another young female lawyer and two employees. Starting my own business gave me a keen understanding of small-business entrepreneurship. Starting and running this business was one of the most trying things I'd ever done yet one of the most rewarding.

After the floods of 2013, in which my own home was flooded, my husband and I sought higher ground. As two young professionals we were looking for a neighbourhood where we could grow roots. We wanted a home that was affordable but not on the outskirts of the city. No, we wanted a place where we could become involved in our community, where we could raise our family close to schools and off-leash dog parks yet still home to the many urban conveniences and amenities to which we had been accustomed while living downtown. We moved to Calgary-Varsity.

Calgary-Varsity encompasses the communities of Varsity, Dalhousie, Brentwood, Banff Trail, University Heights, Montgomery, and parts of Charleswood, which is part of the Triwood community: all communities with proud, active, long-standing, and successful community association representation. While Calgary-Varsity once represented the outskirts of the city, the suburban northwest, Calgary-Varsity is now very much an urban constituency which successfully retains its family and community-centred focus. How is it that in our fast-moving society an urban area can maintain its sense of community? I attribute Calgary-Varsity's ability to maintain its sense of neighbourhood, family, and community to its strong community associations, to its many public schools, its scenic parks where the community gathers, and the many community organizations that call Varsity home.

I would be remiss if I failed to mention the very families that inhabit Calgary-Varsity, new and young, and the many seniors who raised their families in Calgary's northwest. Our seniors in Varsity maintain our community and our sense of neighbourhood and family. Our seniors in Varsity are vibrant and active. They're strong advocates for our constituency and our province. Our seniors have witnessed where we have been, where we are and have a strong sense of what will take us boldly into the future. The bedrock of our province, the information keepers and wisdom givers, our seniors in Calgary-Varsity keep us a family and community-centred constituency in the midst of whirlwind urbanization and development.

There is no avoiding development. The residents of Calgary-Varsity know this well. Varsity is being thrust into an ever-increasing urban future, but its community-minded residents have created an environment that attracts new families and makes Varsity the kind of place where people grow their roots well into their golden years.

Calgary-Varsity is truly blessed to be named in recognition of such a world-class postsecondary institution, the University of Calgary. The University of Calgary celebrates its 50th anniversary this year. A young university that punches well above its weight, it is the heart of my constituency. Many of Varsity's residents work at, go to school at, or have a degree from the University of Calgary.

Varsity constituents, I believe, are unique from all others. Rarely do they arrive at our constituency office looking for assistance but, rather, to assist. Passionate about the environment, disability issues, education, and seniors' concerns, Varsity constituents will take the time from their busy workdays to educate my staff and me and advocate for positive change in our province and our community. I am increasingly thankful to represent the constituency of Calgary-Varsity and, above all, to call it home. I know that my family, including my husband, Shane, my newborn son, Patrick, and our two dogs, Mokie and Shakespeare, couldn't agree more.

Thank you.

9:10

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any questions for the hon. Minister of Status of Women under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the chance to rise and speak in this hallowed hall. I am humbled. I am honoured to speak to the Speech from the Throne. If you would have told me 10, 11 months ago that I would have been standing here in front of some of the brightest, most hard-working people in the province, with this Mace on my lapel, speaking about the constituency that I call home and the people and the businesses that keep that community running, I would have told you that it was a dream. If you would have told me 10 years ago that when I moved to Beaumont and started working in the community to help my wife support our growing family, I would have had the opportunity to run in a provincial election, talk to thousands of my neighbours and community members about what they hope for the future of this province, I would have told you to keep dreaming. But I am here, I am in front of you, and I do have the incredible honour of telling you about the unique, diverse, and interesting riding that I now call home.

First, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the amazing people of my riding, who have given me the privilege of representing them here, and I endeavour to work every day my hardest for the people of Leduc-Beaumont. I would also like to thank the incredible volunteers on my EDA, who worked tirelessly to get me elected. They were and are truly fantastic teammates, friends, and people. I'd also like to thank my CAs, Colleen Copley and Kim Slomnicki, who keep me organized and on the straight and narrow and who do incredible work serving and helping our constituents. They are the backbone of our constituency office and invaluable, to say the least.

But my biggest thanks go out to my beautiful wife, Kelly, and my two boys: Declan, who is seven, and Maddoc, who is five. They are my heart and my soul, and I would be nothing without their love and support. I am truly blessed to have them in my life, and I'm extremely grateful to them for always being there for me when I need a hug, a smile, a kind word, or a good wrestling match. My five-year-old now thinks he's John Cena for some reason. My compatriot would love this right here.

Since being elected as the MLA for Leduc-Beaumont, I have had the distinct pleasure of working with three mayors, many councillors, and hard-working admin staff for the town of Beaumont, the county of Leduc, and the city of Leduc. Immediately after being elected, I was welcomed into my role with hearty handshakes and a sense of belonging. I am very grateful to have experienced municipal leaders like Mayor John Whaley from Leduc county, Mayor Greg Krischke of Leduc, and Mayor Camille Bérubé of Beaumont helping show me the ropes. Public service at all levels requires a special kind of commitment, and my community is lucky to have leaders who have been champions of prosperity and community-mindedness as well as co-operation. I am so glad to work as a team with these leaders to weather whatever may be.

Ours is a community of hard-working entrepreneurs and business owners that are hugely committed to giving back to their communities. Large corporations and organizations like the Edmonton International Airport are still supporting local initiatives and organizations there because this is where their employees live and where they are raising their families. The people of Leduc-Beaumont have strong ties there, ties to groups like the Knights of Columbus, who were recently present at the Franco-Albertan flag raising in Beaumont; the Optimist club in Leduc; Lions clubs; Rotary clubs; Kinsmen clubs; the Golden Pioneers in New Sarepta; Leduc & District Food Bank; Linx Connect; the community living association; the drug action coalition; the Boys' and Girls' Club of Leduc; St. Vital Seniors Centre in Beaumont; the 4-H clubs in and around Leduc county, Leduc, and Beaumont; the Riseup House; and Leduc and District Emergency Shelter. These are just a handful.

There are also the business associations like the Leduc chamber of commerce, the Beaumont Chamber of Commerce, and the Leduc-Nisku Economic Development Association, who have all helped me immensely in doing this job. We have the second-biggest industrial park in North America; some say first, but we don't want Texas to be mad, so we say second. With that title comes hard-working, skilled, and educated labour and business owners who know what it's like to roll up their sleeves and find solutions and a community of people who find strength in each other. There are all manner of businesses there, from oil and gas service operations to advanced manufacturing to green energy and renewable operations. The technology created and used in this industrial park is used all over this country and all over the world. They are creating technologies and processes that prove that economic sustainability and environmental sustainability are not mutually exclusive. Renewable energy and fossil fuels will supplement and complement each other and help us to build a more sustainable society and world for future generations. It's most definitely a partnership and not an us-versus-them scenario.

We will continue to be an economic driver in this province. The businesses in Leduc, Nisku, and Beaumont are finding ways to move forward, finding markets, manufacturing to the needs of industry, and finding solutions for businesses who need to adapt to the changes put in front of them, as they always have. Part of my job, I feel, is to listen to these entrepreneurs and innovators and to find out what roadblocks or hurdles are in the way of new and emerging technology and to remove them or tweak them if feasible and to help them have the ability to diversify and create new job markets whenever possible.

Mr. Speaker, I've said some general things about my constituency, but here are a few more specifics. The history of Leduc can be traced back to 1889, when Robert Taylor Telford settled on a piece of land near a scenic lake, Telford Lake. This piece of land would become the cornerstone of the new town. During those earlier years Robert Telford was the first postmaster, general merchant, and justice of the peace of the settlement, that was informally known as Telford. He also served the community as mayor and as a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

In 1890 a government telegraph office was being set up by Mr. McKinely, a settler in the area. He needed a name for the place and said: we shall name it after the first person who comes in. And in through the door came Father Leduc. In 1899 Lieutenant Governor Dewdney of the Northwest Territories decreed that the settlement of Telford should be called Leduc in honour of the notable Roman Catholic missionary Father Hippolyte Leduc, who had served the area since 1867 and later went on to become the vicar-general of the diocese of Edmonton.

I was going to speak French here, but I don't see the translation. I'll give the English first, and then I will give you the French. Beautifully situated, known for its picturesque church on the hill, the town of Beaumont began as a French colony in 1895. Ten acres of land were purchased in 1894 from the Hudson's Bay Company, and a founding resident donated 20 more acres. These 30 acres were the foundation of what became the hamlet of Beaumont. St. Vital church was constructed and completed in the spring of 1895 on these 30 acres of land. In 1899 a group of 38 farmers formed an incorporated company called la Compagnie du Moulin de Beaumont Limitée, Harvest Company of Beaumont. Beaumont moved into the 20th century firmly established as a community with an active commercial base whose social and spiritual life revolved around the church.

Here we go. Située dans un lieu magnifique et reconnue pour son église au caractère pittoresque bâtie sur la colline, la ville de Beaumont fut établie en tant que colonie en 1895. En 1894 10 acres de terrain furent achetées de la Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson, et un résident fondateur fit le don de 20 autres acres. Le hameau de Beaumont fut donc fondé sur ces 30 acres de terrain, et au printemps de 1895 l'église Saint-Vital fut construite à cet endroit. En 1899 un groupe de 38 fermiers établirent une compagnie constituée en personne morale, la Compagnie du Moulin de Beaumont Limitée. Ainsi, c'est à titre de communauté bien établie que Beaumont fit son entrée dans le 20e siècle, jouissant d'une saine activité commerciale, ayant l'église au coeur de sa vie spirituelle et sociale.

Located 30 minutes from Edmonton on highway 21, the village of New Sarepta is just moments away from Joseph Lake centennial park and Miquelon Lake provincial park. This village derived its name from a group of German immigrant settlers from Russia. The railway, built in 1912, provided a nucleus for a town, and homesteaders were quick to make the area a farming community. This thriving village is striving to become the cartoon capital of Canada, which I'm sure most of you didn't know, and you can visit its famous fence of fame. Many of the walls in New Sarepta high school are adorned with original cartoon murals created by Yardley-Jones. It's pretty interesting to see.

Looma is a small hamlet of approximately 37 people east of Beaumont, and most I met on my election campaign. Kavanagh is a small hamlet of approximately 38 people south of Leduc. The hamlet was created and settled by workers of Kavanagh block of the CNR and was named for Charles Edmund Kavanagh, who was the railway superintendent.

There are many amazing places and attractions in my riding, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to highlight just a few of those for the House today. On February 13, 1947, on a farm just southwest of Edmonton news of a huge oil strike at Leduc No. 1 was transmitted around

Alberta, Canada, and the world. This famous discovery marked the birth of western Canada's modern oil industry and has been called one of the most important economic discoveries in Canada's history.

Today the grit, determination, and success of our early oil patch pioneers are preserved at the Canadian Petroleum Discovery Centre, with 13 acres and 23,000 square feet indoors of models, fossils, working rigs, antique equipment, machinery, murals, archives, classrooms, theatre, and more. It's a truly unique museum experience, and I was pleased this past summer to have some of my ministerial and MLA colleagues join me at Leduc No. 1 for the summer rib cook-off and to see the world's oldest drilling crew set to work on the working rig there. I hope you guys join me this summer because we're actually going to be cooking. I hope to have more of you visit this summer, and I also hope we can showcase some of the green and renewable energy sources that will illustrate how we can be an all-encompassing energy province.

The riding I have the honour of representing not only has deep roots in the energy sector, but long before there was Leduc No. 1, there was some of the best – and there still is – agricultural land in the province. In Leduc county we have about 1,250 farms – many are in my riding – with roughly 228 hectares of land used for farming, which is about 15 per cent of county residents who are employed in agriculture. A few years ago Leduc county, out of all the counties in the capital region, ranked first for total crop acreage; had the largest barley, oats, hay, and alfalfa acreages in the region; and also ranked first for the value of livestock and poultry and the largest number of cattle and calves, approximately 60,000 head, which are things to be very proud of.

We also have an amazing Food Processing Development Centre in Leduc. It's a modern, fully equipped pilot plant and product development laboratory facility. It's staffed with experienced food scientists, engineers, and technologists. The centre's services are designed to strengthen and expand the capability of Alberta's food processors to meet the challenges of the marketplace through application of new technology and the development of new or improved products and processes. I had the opportunity to tour this facility last summer and to welcome a Chinese delegation there to see it as well. They were so excited about the place that they inquired about how much it was to purchase within about 15 minutes of being there. I can tell you that we're very lucky to have such a facility in our riding and in our province.

I mentioned the Edmonton International Airport before. It is an integral and very important part of the riding. It provides a good tax base that the county of Leduc uses to invest into our communities, keeping smaller rural towns and villages alive. They also give back to our communities through many different charitable initiatives. Ever wonder where all those liquids and interesting things confiscated at security go? Many of those are donated to the Leduc food bank for families in need.

It is also Canada's largest major airport by total land area and the fifth busiest by passenger traffic and by aircraft movement and Canada's first, I'm proud to say, LEED gold certified airport. Over this past year we've had the pleasure of welcoming Icelandair, KLM airlines, and Air China Cargo, and these new flights in and out of EIA have helped boost our economy and have shown we have a first-class airport here serving the capital region and Alberta.

Speaking of boosting the economy of the capital region, with significant growth projections for this region and the ideal location presented by seamless air-to-ground-to rail connectivity at and around EIA, the city of Leduc, and Leduc county, they are currently embarking on an aerotropolis viability study. Aerotropolis is a land-use strategy that focuses on economic development around an airport. It also leverages the strengths of existing businesses on airport lands and surrounding areas to encourage further economic diversification and job growth. We're very excited about the positive impacts this will have on our area and surrounding areas going forward.

But wait. There's more. We also have a thriving music and arts community in the riding. In Beaumont we have had since 2008 the Beaumont Blues and Roots Festival, that has been presenting the Alberta capital region with the best in live Canadian blues, roots, folk, rockabilly, and country music. I hope some of you get to come and experience it.

In Leduc we have the amazing Maclab Centre for the Performing Arts. It is a pre-eminent performing arts facility serving the whole county with music, theatre, dance, and more. It is also connected to the Leduc composite high school, giving the kids a wonderful opportunity to explore the arts.

Mr. Speaker, I'm Albertan by choice. I love living in the town of Beaumont and in my riding of Leduc-Beaumont. It has everything my family and I need. It is a beautiful place to live. We've chosen to raise our kids in the county of Leduc because it is an amazing place to raise a family. We love the communities, the people, and the land.

Like some other members of this Assembly and like a lot of Albertans, I moved here with my family for the opportunity that this province provides. I originally grew up in Duncan, B.C., on Vancouver Island, and I come from a long line of farmers and forestry workers. I have family in Saskatchewan, Alberta, B.C., and the U.S.

I am proud to come from a family of hard-working men and women, a family who has worked the land and continues to do so to provide for themselves and those around them. My twin brother – we're fraternal, not identical, and he certainly can't grow a beard like I can – my sister, who's four years younger, and I grew up on a small hobby farm of about five acres, and over the years we had cows, pigs, laying hens, and horses. We had apple trees, and Mom would say on the way to the bus: grab an apple for your lunch and . . . [Mr. Anderson's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The Official Opposition member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My pleasure to rise. I'm so enthralled by the comments from the Member for Leduc-Beaumont. I wondered if he just might like to take a few minutes to conclude his thoughts there.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. You know, we had cherry trees, hazelnut trees, plum trees, blackberries, and grapes. We were a 10-minute bike ride from one of the best fly-fishing rivers in North America and about 15 minutes from the ocean. It was truly an incredible childhood.

I'm blessed to have the two most amazing parents a person could ask for. They are two of the most kind, honest, hard-working, selfless people you will ever meet. We weren't rich, but we never lacked for anything. The love that my parents showed to us and continue to show to us and to everyone who comes into contact with them continues to drive me today. My dad is a strong, stubborn, and honest man, sometimes to a fault. He is blue collar and hard working, and I don't say it enough, but I love you, Dad. I would put my dad's work ethic up against anyone's. Even at 62 that man works harder than anyone I've ever seen in my life. All of my life he has done what it takes to feed and clothe our family.

The forest industry was our main source of income, so, Mr. Speaker, I'm no stranger to the ups and downs of the economy and people losing their jobs and having to do whatever it takes to care for their families. When I have constituents who come in and have lost their job, who are worried about losing their job, I get it. We've been there. I know they want to work hard and provide for their families, just like my dad did and does. I will always do my best to help those who need a hand up. My mom and dad taught me that you take care of the people around you, and maybe it's my Norwegian and Irish blood and the clan system ingrained in me, but I feel that if you aren't going to help those around you who need it when they most need it, then what are we here for?

My mom is probably the most caring and empathetic person you will ever meet. She consistently puts other people's needs above her own. From her I learned compassion, caring, empathy, and how to listen. I used to joke that we couldn't go anywhere without a random person stopping her to bend her ear and tell her their life story. She's always been there for anyone at any time. I used to joke about it, but not any more because it started happening to me day in and day out. I guess I love people, and they see past my exterior and realize that I am a big teddy bear and that I care deeply for people around me and will always lend an ear and help.

I am fiercely protective of those around me and those that I care for. I will always stick up for the little guy. I guess that's part of why I'm so pro labour. You know, to me, it doesn't matter if you're union or not; I'm going to stand up for you, and that's who I am. That being said, I am proud of my union roots and background and will not back down from them. I am a steelworker, and I am proud of that. My time as a shop steward, vice-president of my local, and delegate to convention gave me the push to run for MLA. My union brothers and sisters were and are behind me, and I will always be thankful for that.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. I hope my colleagues from all sides can see this about me: what you see is what you get. I'm honest. If I don't know the answer to something, I'll admit it, and I'll try to find it for you. I won't ever be purposely misleading or untruthful. I can agree to disagree, and I respect all sides of a conversation or debate, even though I'm mostly right. I don't like playing games unless it's fastball or rugby. I'm straight up and straightforward. I dislike conjecture, speculation, and will always try to base my opinions and judgments and decisions on facts, as I believe we all should. Being informed on a subject is a wonderful thing.

Thank you, everybody, for listening to me today. I appreciate it. It's a pleasure to be here.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

9:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Leduc-Beaumont?

Having heard none, the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my colleagues in the Legislature. It truly is an honour to rise to speak in response to the Speech from the Throne. I want to first of all express my appreciation to the Lieutenant Governor for the grace and dignity that she exhibits in all of her activities, particularly in presiding over this Legislature.

To you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Deputy Speaker, I offer my appreciation as well. The tenor of this House and the quality of the discourse is due to your influence. I know it's frustrating from time to time, but I certainly empathize and appreciate your activities.

I actually want to express appreciation to other members of the House. Like my colleague from Leduc-Beaumont, I really do appreciate the cut and thrust of debate and sometimes interjections across the floor. I'm hoping that my interjections are received in the spirit in which they're given, which is with some humour and in an attempt to raise the quality of the debate.

I also want to take this opportunity to thank very much the Premier of this province and the other senior members of our caucus. A year ago there were four New Democrat members of this Legislature. They certainly hit above their weight, or whatever the analogy is there. Some of you will recall that my first foray into provincial politics was as a candidate in the by-election in Edmonton-Whitemud in October of 2014. That was a very positive experience for me. It was made much more positive by the support of the four sitting members, and I really do appreciate it. One of them is in the House at this time. I learned a lot from going door to door with the Minister of Education. I learned how to actually listen to people, to appreciate a variety of opinions, and to validate those opinions. I think that is something that all of us should take to heart as we're dealing with our constituents.

I had another experience which was very positive but has left me with some nightmares. I was actually door-knocking with the now Premier. It was getting towards evening, and the Premier in her inimitable way decided that she actually knew how to door knock and didn't need somebody like me hanging around and we could knock on twice as many doors. So I went off with another constituency person and really did do a good night of door-knocking, and then I realized that I'd lost her. I'd lost the Premier, and I wasn't sure where she was.

Any of you that know Edmonton-Whitemud realize that we don't live on the square in Edmonton-Whitemud. There are cul-de-sacs and curved roads, and there are not a lot of lights out and about, so it took a while. What I was most concerned about, actually, was that her husband was back at the constituency office and I was going to have to explain to him that I had misplaced his wife. Fortunately, she was smarter than me and actually tracked me down. Anyway, that was an interesting experience.

I had the now Minister of Transportation and Infrastructure as well as the Minister of Economic Development and Trade out helping me campaign. That was a very positive experience. I was taking on a formidable opponent in that election. Some of you may recall that the three-term mayor of this city was parachuted into that riding by the ex-Premier of this province. I ran because I thought that that was basically an insult to health care, which he was going to become the minister of, and probably an insult to the citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud.

Edmonton-Whitemud was a very fertile ground for the New Democrats. I actually was able to obtain the support of over 5,000 voters in Edmonton-Whitemud in the by-election. That was actually more votes than some of us in this House have obtained in a general election in our ridings. I'm very appreciative to the citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud for their support.

When it came to the general election last May, the results were actually turned right around. Fifty-seven per cent, the majority of the voters in Edmonton-Whitemud, voted for the New Democrat candidate. They voted for the vision, the compassion, the caring that our Premier had shown in that campaign. It was an easy campaign for me, a very easy campaign. Every day during that campaign I was at the doors bringing to the citizens of Edmonton-Whitemud the positive message that this party, the New Democratic Party of Alberta, has.

And it was well received. It was well received because a lot of my constituents are teachers, nurses, laboratory technicians, and, fortunately for me, doctors. The many doctors in Edmonton-Whitemud really appreciated the message that we were bringing funding back to health care, bringing funding back to education. And not just to the primary and secondary schools, we were bringing funding back to advanced education. So colleges, apprenticeships, the universities knew that they were going to have a supporter in the New Democratic Party.

I want to turn back to the history of developing my interest in politics. Let there be no doubt that I am a democratic socialist. Like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I am proud of that designation. I'm proud to say that I am a socialist and dare say that all of you are socialists. You all care about the welfare of man, the social justice, the rights of people. That's what we're here for, so I am proud to say that I am a socialist.

My socialist background actually comes from my heritage. Like the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake – I'm guessing that he has a Scottish background from his dress today – and like the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, who admitted to having a Scottish grandmother, that he wasn't following the precepts of, I'm proud to say that all of my grandmothers are Scottish. And all of them were socialists.

My paternal ancestry goes back to the Highlands in Scotland. My ancestors immigrated from the Highlands to Ontario county in Ontario in about 1850. They were very successful farmers in that area, and then they immigrated to southwestern Manitoba in the late 19th century. My grandfather Andrew Turner, whom I'm named after, was the western Canadian plowing champion in about 1910. It was a real accomplishment. That was done with horses, a single-bladed plow. I have the trophy. It's one of my proudest possessions.

My father was a child of the Depression, and I certainly gained an appreciation for the nickel and the dollar through his influence. He had to leave school before he was completed because of the Depression, and he went on to work, buying grain in an elevator, and then going to war and spending several years overseas as a radar operator. Like other speakers here today, my father has been a massive influence on me, and I am disappointed that he's not here today for me to tell him.

My mother's parents immigrated from Glasgow to Winnipeg in the early 1900s. My grandfather was a painter. My mother was a product of what was called in those days normal schools, and normal schools basically taught you education. She went out to a one-room schoolhouse in Pipestone, Manitoba, and had to break the ice in the water supply before the kids got to the school, that sort of thing. She was a tremendous influence. She died when I was 20 years old, but again was a tremendous influence on me.

My political influence goes back to Grant MacEwan. Grant MacEwan was the dean of agriculture in Manitoba after the war, in the early '50s, and he ran in Brandon-Souris as a Liberal candidate. My father was a poll captain for him and was very disappointed when Grant MacEwan didn't win that election. It was actually a victory for Alberta since Grant MacEwan moved to Calgary and became dean of agriculture here and is the namesake of our great university in this city. Hearing about that really validated politics as a useful avocation.

My first connection to a political figure actually was with John Diefenbaker. When I was about 12 years old, I received a copy of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms from John Diefenbaker in school. I would recommend that everybody in this Legislature read that document, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We've been talking about rights for workers that are essential services. We've been talking about rights for people that are transgendered. We've been talking about rights for individuals to access physician-assisted dying. When you go back in history, look at that document. John George Diefenbaker, the prairie renegade, was the designer and the writer of that document, and he needs a lot of credit. I don't give him enough credit to ever vote Conservative, but I do see him as a model for my involvement in politics.

My next hero is Tommy Douglas, no doubt. I mean, everybody on this side of the House loves Tommy Douglas. But I have a different connection to Tommy Douglas. October 1970 is a date that should go down in everybody's memory bank. In October 1970 I was a medical student at McGill University, actually living not far from the Royal Victoria hospital, which happened to be right next door to where the British commissioner's office was – well, not next door but very close. The British commissioner was kidnapped, and we all know the story. What happened was that Pierre Trudeau invoked the War Measures Act. The War Measures Act didn't need to be invoked, in my opinion, but the upshot of it was that several hundred people like me, college students, just regular people walking around that area of the city, got put in jail, and they were kept in jail for several weeks without charges, without legal representation.

It was an abomination. It should never have happened. And, you know, the only person that stood up to Pierre Trudeau, the only person who said that this was wrong, this should not have happened in this country, this country which is democratic, was Tommy Douglas. I can tell you that I have voted New Democrat ever since. In every election I have voted New Democrat, no doubt about it, because Tommy Douglas and the people who have followed him in the national party as well as our party here, Grant Notley, when I first moved here, and all of the successive leaders, have had that same gumption, that same devotion to human rights, the same desire to make sure that all of us and all of our rights are protected. I am definitely a democratic socialist as a result.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was really engrossed by the comments of my fellow member here. I was wondering if he could finish his comments.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Well, thank you very much. I appreciate the opportunity to finish. I apologize to the House for getting so wound up about the importance of human rights. We need to always remember that it is those human rights that are the basis of our democracy and our prosperity.

I do want to mention in response to the Speech from the Throne that there are many things in that Speech from the Throne that are very important; in particular, climate change. I'm a person that put solar panels on their roof several years ago because I am interested in reducing my carbon footprint. This is not a treasonous act. This is not an act that is going to subvert the oil and gas industry. It's my way to reduce greenhouse gas things.

I am very proud of our government's leadership on climate change. This will affect our ability to get our oil and gas accepted in the world's markets. This will improve our environment; this will improve health. I am particularly proud of the fact that we're going to phase out coal generation of electricity, particularly in this area, where this city is subject to the particulate emissions from coal plants to the west. We need to find an alternative, and I am confident that we can do that.

Just last night several of us were discussing advances in the energy field and diversification with members of the Building Trades council as well as the Alberta Construction Association, very positive discussions about how we're going to promote alternative energies and improve the climate of this area.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to make those remarks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hunter: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I have appreciated the comments made by the hon. member. I have one question, though. As a Wildroser I've had the opportunity to be able to research solar panels and wind energy and have been very interested in it. You talked a lot about, you know, a person's rights and a person's ability to choose their own destiny. You say this is very important. So my question to you, hon. member, is: where do you find the balance between a buy-in from individuals versus legislation that dictates that everybody has to do something?

Dr. Turner: I'm actually not sure what the question is there. Really, I'm positive that nobody is going to force anybody to do anything along the lines of putting solar panels on their roof. What we want to do is to create the economic situation for transitioning to alternative energies and also to do other things like retrofitting your house by putting more insulation in and, you know, having access to alternative energies like biomass or geothermal. All of these things, I think, are important in how we are facing this climate dilemma.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a)?

I would recognize the Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to rise today to respond to the throne speech. I'm able to speak here today because of the constituents of Calgary-McCall who put their trust and confidence in me to represent them and shared their hopes with me for a better and more inclusive Alberta for everyone. I thank the people of Calgary-McCall for their support and assure them that I am committed to working hard on their behalf, having their best interests in mind, and earning the trust they have shown in me.

Mr. Speaker, as the MLA for Calgary-McCall, first and foremost, I speak for and on behalf of my constituents, and in view of that, I will start by talking about the constituency and the people of Calgary-McCall. Let me begin by saying that Calgary-McCall is the most beautiful constituency in this province. I understand that you and my colleagues in this House might have heard similar claims before, but I'm sure that by the time I finish describing my riding, you will be convinced.

I want to recognize that Calgary-McCall is on traditional Treaty 7 territory. It is located in the northeast quadrant of the city of Calgary. It includes the communities of Castleridge, Falconridge, Martindale, SkyView Ranch, Redstone, Cityscape, and my own neighbourhood of Saddle Ridge, where I have been living since 2007.

Calgary-McCall is one of the most ethnically diverse ridings in the province and, by extension, one of the most culturally vibrant. Calgary-McCall is home to people of aboriginal, European, Asian, Caribbean, African, and Central and South American origin. The people of Calgary-McCall get to experience this beauty and strength of cultural diversity and religion every day of their lives, whether it's through building relationships across ethnicity lines, within neighbourhoods, eating out at restaurants in the community with cuisines much different from their own, or learning a new language and culture through interacting with other parents at the park where their children play. This is what makes Calgary-McCall truly unique and most beautiful.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-McCall is a riding that celebrates Christmas and Stampede with the same vigour as it does Eid festivals, Vaisakhi, Diwali, and many other religious and cultural events. It's a riding that hoists the Canadian flag with pride on Canada Day and builds a large human poppy to honour fallen soldiers on Remembrance Day. It's a riding that sees people play cricket and field hockey in its fields in summer and boasts of outdoor skating rinks in winter. It's a riding that truly reflects and upholds Canadian values of democracy and harmony in diversity.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-McCall is home to people from all over the world who, like myself, came to Alberta with a dream of a better life, quality education for their children, reliable health care for their families, and opportunities to reach their full potential. I came to Canada in 2004, and I have been living in Calgary ever since. When I came to Canada, the challenges in front of me were the same ones facing every newcomer who comes to this country in search of a better life. I had to restart my career and my life from a new beginning, and all things considered, I would say that my journey has been exceptionally rewarding. I owe my success in a huge way to this country, to this province, and to the people of Calgary-McCall, who enabled me to be who I am today.

I'm a firm believer that no success ever belongs solely to the success holder. There is always more to it: families, friends, organizations, institutions. Therefore, I would take this opportunity to acknowledge and thank everyone who has helped me in any manner through the course of my journey. I'm also certainly indebted to everyone who stood up for the progressive values and NDP principles in this province that I identify myself with today.

Mr. Speaker, I have a rural and farming background, but the farm life that I witnessed growing up was much different than modern-day farming. It was more of a struggle for survival, and it required a lot of manual labour and hard work in the fields. Despite all of those struggles at home, I can't be more thankful that my family prioritized my education and that I was provided the opportunity to pursue and complete my education. Those values of hard work and sacrifice are the values that I will try to live by while serving my constituents, as I know many colleagues strive to do.

I came to Canada with a master's in economics, but as a newcomer to Canada I worked in all kinds of starter jobs to make ends meet. One common thread in all my jobs in those days was that they were all minimum-wage jobs, which helped me relate first-hand to and appreciate the financial hardships that minimum-wage earners go through. Based on that experience, Mr. Speaker, I can say with authority that an increase in the minimum wage does and will help. It will make a difference. It will make a difference in the lives of so many hard-working Albertans, including Albertans living in my constituency whose families depend on minimum wage. I know that, and I have lived that. That is why today I'm very proud to stand with a government that recognizes the struggle of families who live on limited income and means and has committed to improving their lives because in a healthy, productive, and inclusive society everyone matters.

Mr. Speaker, in 2007 I went to the University of Calgary to pursue further education, and I completed my master's in social work and a law degree. During my time at university I worked at a homeless shelter, but financially that wasn't enough to put me through school. I wouldn't have been able to finish my schooling without the support of my eldest sister, who also lives in Calgary, and the financial assistance that I received from the government in the form of student loans and scholarships. Given the trajectory in my life I am convinced that education has been the single most important investment that I have ever made, and I wouldn't be standing here today without it. As outlined in the throne speech, in this province what we wish for ourselves, we desire for all.

Mr. Speaker, I want every Albertan to have the same opportunity that I had, and this is why I fully support my government's priority and focus on children's education and advanced education, priorities clearly articulated by the government's decision to reverse funding cuts to education and to provide stable and predictable funding to school boards and universities and to freeze tuition fees for postsecondary students.

Mr. Speaker, while I was campaigning for my election and going from door to door, talking to my constituents, I repeatedly heard concerns respecting health care, education, and recreational facilities in the area. Many parents shared with me that they had to send their children to school in the northwest and southeast quadrants of the city. That was not just an inconvenience for the parents but also was unfair to the children, who spend a lot of time commuting.

Other concerns that have been shared by my constituents are the need for schools with an English as a second language focus and the need for more facilities such as funeral homes with culturally appropriate services, and additional sports facilities. Although we do have an amazing recreational facility called the Genesis Centre in my riding, which welcomes over 1 million residents per year for a variety of programs and services, we do still need more such facilities. These issues reflect the social and infrastructure deficit that we inherited and that need to be dealt with. Mr. Speaker, it makes me proud that our government has committed to an investment of $34 billion in much-needed infrastructure projects that Alberta currently lacks but crucially needs. I'm pleased that there are six new schools planned for Calgary-McCall, including the Nelson Mandela high school, which is due to open this fall. In the coming days and months I look forward to working with my colleagues on all issues that matter to my constituents and all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I also held two open houses, on January 9 and March 26, in my constituency to learn about the constituents' views on various issues and gather their feedback and input so that I am able to represent them better. The constituents shared their views and valuable feedback relating to many issues; however, the economy and job situation topped the discussion. Also, like many other Albertans they stressed the need to cut reliance on a single commodity, a single price, and a single market.

I also note that my constituency is home to many new Canadians and lower income Albertans, and based on available data, the average household income in this constituency compares lower than other constituencies in Calgary, and the unemployment rate in this constituency has remained higher than the provincial average.

I'm pleased that the throne speech prioritizes expanding access to workforce skill training and retraining for the unemployed. It articulates the government commitment to diversifying the economy and supporting small and medium-sized businesses with venture capital, investing in a green and more sustainable economy, and investing in necessary infrastructure. I'm confident that the initiatives and priorities identified in the throne speech will lead Alberta to emerge with an economy stronger than ever, thus benefiting my constituents and all Albertans.

I'm also very pleased that our government is standing up for Albertans who are facing immediate hardships. At times like this we must think of our children first. The new child benefit will provide $340 million for up to 380,000 children in low-income families, and it certainly will go a long way to address child poverty in this province and help families make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, prior to getting elected, I was practising law in the field of aboriginal law, and I'm very pleased that the throne speech indicated the repeal of Bill 22 and a commitment to engage indigenous communities on future consultation frameworks. I also note that the throne speech outlined the government's desire to consult on a new indigenous peoples' sacred ceremonial objects repatriation act. From my previous work experience and conversations with my colleagues from the legal profession I can appreciate how important these steps are for indigenous people, and I am very proud to be a part of the government that believes in and is taking steps towards renewing the relationship with indigenous communities in this province.

Also, it shouldn't come as a surprise to anyone that I have a background in the labour movement, and I'm very pleased to see the government taking steps to implement the Supreme Court of Canada ruling respecting workers' right to strike. I'm confident that the Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services will protect and strengthen the rights of hard-working Albertans who dedicate their lives to serving fellow Albertans.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to acknowledge and thank my constituents once again for putting their faith in me to speak for them. I would also like to thank my family and my friends, whose consistent encouragement gave me the strength to follow my passion and my dream. Also, I am indebted and thankful forever to everyone who supported me in my journey and inspired me to do my best and be my best. I know that I am here because of all of them and the people of Calgary-McCall, and I pledge to never let them down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Sure. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate the hon. minister for the great journey he had and for the great success he had. In fact, both of us moved to Canada at the same time. We took different paths to politics, but both of us are here today. He had the opportunity to actually make a difference, and he also represents the most diverse riding in Calgary, in the northeast part of Calgary. Very few have had the opportunity to serve in the cabinet being new Canadians, and he has the opportunity today to do a lot for other new Canadians, so I would like to know from him: what is he doing to help new Canadians with respect to recognition of overseas graduates, I mean, their educational accreditation in Canada? There are so many foreign medical graduates driving cabs in his part of town.

Also, Calgary was hit due to this low oil price economy. What is he doing to help all those jobless people looking for jobs? How is he advocating for them within his caucus, and how does he plan to help those new Canadians?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the kind words. I think there were two questions. One was relating to education credentials for people coming from overseas. I indicated that I came here with a master of economics degree only to find out when I went to university that that was equivalent to a BA, and when I applied to the department of economics, I further found out that I didn't have math 30, so I'm not even eligible to go back into the master's program. Those are the differences between the education systems in various parts of the world. Where I was coming from, we have a bachelor's degree that we complete in two years while across Canada and all G-8 countries and even many developing countries it's four years.

Those things I believe that we can't change unilaterally here unless the systems in other parts of the world are on par with the modern education system in the developed countries. For the most part those credentials are recognized within the framework of immigration, which is a federal matter, but I am willing to play my role if I can help in any way to change that and facilitate that for the newcomers.

The second thing: the member mentioned how I am helping Albertans during these tough times. As I indicated, the throne speech has outlined many initiatives and priorities that will help Albertans get back to work, and I'm certainly part of those discussions, and I fully support those initiatives. The first bill that was introduced in this House was focused on job creation and economic diversification, and that certainly indicates that that's the priority of our government, that's our priority as a caucus as a whole for us and to get Albertans back to work. There are many investments and initiatives that are listed in the throne speech, and I'm confident that those initiatives will help Albertans to get back to work, and I fully support those initiatives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting to note the educational background of the hon. member. I have a particular interest in economics, of course, as you might have guessed, and I would be interested to know, based on the education you have in economics, your thoughts on governments taking limits off spending. From your educational background could you maybe explain to all of us your thoughts on borrowing money for operational expenditures by a government and the impact that might have?

Thank you. [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Speaker: I don't think you'll get the opportunity.

The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the last session of the Legislature I was able to stand and deliver my maiden speech. Those 15 minutes were easily filled because St. Albert is a remarkable community. I won't tell you that it's the most beautiful, but it is. [interjection] Thank you. St. Albert is remarkable in a lot of ways. It's remarkable for its history – it's one of the oldest communities in Alberta – for its growth, and for its people. There are a lot of famous people that come from St. Albert: Lois Hole, Jarome Iginla, and Mark Messier, to name a few.

St. Albert has been recognized nationally as one of the best places to raise a family. I could go on and on, but I won't. That's not what I'm going to focus on today.

Always the nerd, I used to watch question period on my computer while I was working, and I can remember saying so many times: I wish I could get all of those people trapped in a room for about an hour so I could let them know what I think about certain issues. Surprise.

I wanted to explain some of the issues about the sector that I worked in most of my adult life, so I'm going to give you a little history. Before being elected the MLA for St. Albert, I was the executive director of the Lo-Se-Ca Foundation. I managed an organization in St. Albert that was one of the largest employers in that community, and we offered community supports for people with developmental disabilities. We offered residential supports, which means we had staff go into people's homes so they could live independently in the community, as independently as possible, from living in their own apartment, their own condominium to having a roommate, having a couple of roommates. We also offered employment supports and day program supports, all the way from supporting someone to do volunteer work in the community to helping someone find a job that they wanted and making sure that that job was doable for them.

The lens that I viewed St. Albert through was always focused on the people of St. Albert with disabilities, their families, and their friends, so I'd like to share some of those things, and I'd like to tell you about some remarkable St. Albertans that you probably have never heard of but were giants in my life.

Bryan Muntjewerff: he's no longer with us. He grew up in St. Albert. He lived his whole life in St. Albert. His family was instrumental in getting the Special Olympics started in St. Albert. It actually was his dream to have his own place, to live as independently as possible, and with staff support he did do that. For the last 15 years of his life, I believe, he had his own condominium. He participated in his community, and he volunteered.

Sonny Rochette was a young man, originally from Quebec, who also wanted to live as independently as possible: have a job, have a girlfriend, get married one day. That didn't turn out. He died at a very young age, but we were able to be part of his life and to support him.

Len Bambush, another fellow who's no longer here, spent the majority of his life in the Michener Centre. He was taken there as an infant, grew up there, but in his 40s actually managed to transition to the community. We were lucky enough to get him, so we were able to support him for about 15 years, I believe, and he was able to live out the end years of his life in the community with friends. He didn't have family anymore, but he had friends. He had a meaningful life.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would encourage you to raise your voice.

Ms Renaud: Oh, sure.

Joanne Lewis, another woman, who was all of about four foot two, was the most powerful woman I've ever met. She had Down syndrome, and she always wanted to have her own life in the community, and she did. She lived her life that way. She lived her life exactly the way she wanted to.

Lastly, Gordon Opleta, another man who we supported to live in the community, to have a job. He was somebody that had the same job for 20 years. I don't think he ever had a sick day. I don't think he was ever late, and I don't think he ever had a mean word to say to anybody.

These were giants in St. Albert. These were people who shaped my life, but what I wanted to say about them is that none of them ever suffered from a disability. None of them were defined by the disability that they did have, and they were only the most vulnerable when their power was given away by a label. They were always people first.

Getting back to the point of having you locked in a room, I wanted to explain a little bit about this sector because I think it is very complex. It was very complex for me to learn when I first started out. Persons with developmental disabilities is a department of a very large ministry. What it supports are people with developmental disabilities right across Alberta, and it provides supports, staff supports, for them to live in the community and for them to work in the community.

AISH is a whole separate issue. It's assured income for the severely handicapped. It provides income to people who are unable to work, and it allows them to also live in the community. I think there are many times that people get those things confused. Housing is very much a separate issue in many ways from supports for people with disabilities.

I've said a number of times in this House that, you know, we use the word "inclusion" a great deal. I want to remind you that inclusion is a verb. It's not a buzzword. I think that we have to be careful when we use it because we have to back it up. There are approximately 10,000 people in Alberta that are supported by PDD. There are thousands and thousands and thousands of people who work in this sector. I'm pretty sure that in every single constituency right across this province there are people with disabilities and there are people that work in this sector.

In 2009 a woman with Down syndrome died in a flashover flame fire. At the time of the fire she was in a basement, and she tragically died of smoke inhalation. A couple of other very tragic incidents involved some scalding deaths. As a result, you may have heard that there were some safety standards that were drafted by the bureaucracy of PDD at that time. There were eight actually. They focused on safety inside and out of the home, furnishings, environmental requirements, medication administration, water temperature, compliance with the Safety Codes Act, zoning, and inspection by public health. There were some strange exceptions to those regulations, but I won't get into that.

What that was was an example of absolutely well-meaning regulations and work done by a group of people that were absolutely well-meaning, but they missed the mark. They missed the mark because they did not consult the people. They didn't consult the people whose lives were affected by these changes. As a result – and I'm sure you've heard recently – there was a lot of confusion, there was a lot of anger, and there was a lot of talk about these regulations really missing the point and, really, in a way, bubble-wrapping people with disabilities to the extent that it removed choice.

If we didn't already know this, I'm certain we've learned in the last 12 months, for sure since May 5, that active engagement by families and communities is at the heart of social and cultural reform. People with disabilities, their families, their friends, unpaid supports know that community living is essential. The alternative is segregation and congregation, and we all know those ugly stories. We know the ugly legacy of eugenics, forced sterilization. I was so thrilled to see us all stand in the House out of respect to Leilani O'Malley Muir, who died just a few weeks ago. This woman was a fierce advocate. She was sterilized for failing an IQ test, and she successfully sued the province of Alberta in 1995.

The reason that I was telling you a little bit about the PDD safety standards and the services that we as a government offer was that what was incredibly meaningful for me – and I never would have believed this over a year ago – is that we actually had the ability to go back and to consult where a consultation should have happened. I am thankful to the Minister of Human Services, who chose to strike a committee to look at these regulations. This was a very, very different consultation than what we were used to. During my time in the sector I can't even count the consultations that I had been to. I don't really know why sometimes they were called consultations; they were more of a lecture.

But these consultations were about sitting down and having conversations with people, and I think the first few were a bit odd. People walked in the room and didn't really know what to do. Where do I go? Who's speaking? When does it start? We had to let them know: no, we're just here to listen. Just sit down. We have some very general questions for you. Tell us what's working. Tell us what you'd like to see and what your ideas are. Again, it was very unusual to do a consultation like that, but it was so incredibly meaningful. I think we received over 1,200 online submissions, and I think we met with about 750 people across Alberta. We stopped in Westlock, Grande Prairie, Edmonton of course, Calgary, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, and Fort McMurray. I understand that people are busy – I get that – but I was really disappointed that there wasn't even one MLA from any of the opposition who showed up at these consultations.

One of the biggest questions that we asked people at those consultations is: what is safety? What makes your home safe, and what makes you safe? What we heard again and again and again is that what makes people safe is a real home in a real community, no different than ours, no different than people without disabilities. What makes people safe is a decent income, a job, access to qualified and consistent staff. Certainly, every Albertan deserves to live in the safest environment possible, but we can't legislate all aspects of people's lives. What we heard very loud and clear was that more than anything people with disabilities, their families, their friends, their biggest fear was of creating a home that looked like an institution. What keeps people safe is learning from tragedies and creating inclusive policies that don't create more complex barriers.

Our next steps are phase 2. You heard last week that the PDD safety standards were repealed. I am so incredibly thankful. The many, many people that I know in St. Albert, people with disabilities, their families, are overjoyed, and I don't think any of us ever imagined that this would happen.

These are very complex issues. I hope that my time here has created a little better understanding, and I hope that you'll remember at least some of what I've said when you face difficult choices that shape policy for people with disabilities, their families, and their friends. I hope that you're all better equipped to make informed decisions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much to the member for her comments. I really do appreciate them.

I have been doing some significant work in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on this particular file and engaging with service providers and individuals that require assistance. On behalf of the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and particularly individuals in this community that raised many of the concerns with me that you have raised in the House today, I appreciate the work that you're doing on that file in whatever way the work is getting done. I know that there are members of this caucus who are passionate about this particular issue, particularly my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View and some of her personal experiences in this region. There is so much important work that needs to be done in and around this file. There is a long way to go, and I appreciate the work that's been accomplished on the safety standards and an effort to try and get that right.

From the members of the PDD community that I represent, from myself, I appreciate that work and hope that in future – unfortunately I was unable to make it to the closest event, and the only one that I could have gotten to was in Fort McMurray, which was distance prohibitive. I do appreciate the work that has been done.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to respond quickly. At one of the consultations, actually in Red Deer, there were a number of people from the surrounding communities that did tell me how supported they felt by their MLA, who was actually willing to listen and had gone out of their way to listen. So thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: First of all, thank you very much to the member for her speech. This is an area that touches me quite personally because I have a hearing impairment challenge. I was at the meeting in Lethbridge, and I got incredible feedback from those persons who attended that meeting.

Could you share a little bit some of the major issues that you heard about when you were doing your consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. The biggest thing that we heard was that people wanted to be consulted. Before decisions were made, whether it was about funding or the structure of a system, people wanted to be heard and consulted. Safety was less about sprinklers and fire extinguishers and slow-burn drywall, and it was more about inclusion. It was about being accepted in the community, being part of the community, being employed in the community. That was what we heard again and again everywhere we went. You know, I wasn't totally surprised, but it was incredible to hear it from hundreds of people across the province.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I've been really touched by the fact that the MLA for St. Albert actually named people that she worked with in her speech because very often we don't recognize people that we have worked with. I wanted to really thank the member for that.

I also wanted to thank her for her work that she has done on the PDD review. I was really interested in what she and the minister thought would happen in the second phase of the PDD review.

Ms Renaud: Thank you. Well, the regulations that were created are repealed, but they do need to be replaced with something that will keep people safe. Although it sounds like a very simple question, I think the task ahead of us is huge. I don't think that at the very beginning we envisioned this process going as long or being as complex as it is, but I am quite thankful that we're going to be given the time to do this properly. I'm not entirely sure what phase 2 will look like, but it will look at crafting or designing some solutions based on what we heard and then testing them and then really listening to people.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in reply to the Speech from the Throne for the 29th Legislative Assembly of this great province of Alberta. I'd like to begin by thanking the Hon. Lois Mitchell, who is doing Alberta proud in her work as Alberta's 18th Lieutenant Governor. I'd also like to take this moment to congratulate our Premier for leading us into a new government and for all of the advice and work that I have been able to accomplish with her. She's served as a role model in my involvement with politics.

I'd also like to take a moment to congratulate the new ministers of cabinet, but especially our minister responsible for the status of women. As you know, this minister is also a new mother, the first in Alberta to give birth while in office. Minister McLean's bright and steadfast spirit is not only something I deeply admire; her spirit also reminds me of the strength and persistence in my constituency of Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Each time I enter a meeting with my constituency, I see a fierce love and dedication to their community reflected in their eyes. I see dedication to co-operation and knowledge of how to get things done. I have a deep respect and appreciation for this community, and it holds a special place in my heart, having been the first place I called home upon arriving in Canada.

See, I was born in Colombia, and my family immigrated to Alberta when I was five years old to pursue a better life. My brother and I and my parents, too, went through a huge culture shock. I was born blocks away from an ocean in a small town that barely had running water. We were to move to Sherwood Park. It was a vibrant community, but it's quite different from where I was used to. Often my brother and I were told we were being too rambunctious, and I struggled to learn English. When you live by an ocean, you talk louder. It serves me well here, but maybe it didn't back then.

The community of Sherwood Park was so welcoming that that's where we thrived. My dad taught me to step outside of my comfort zone and start public speaking from a very young age. I remember a lot of microphones being put in my hand with very little instruction as to what I was supposed to do next. He was a leader in the Spanish community in Sherwood Park and the surrounding areas, and a lot of new Canadians would have his phone number and would call him up as soon as they arrived in order to get help in getting employment and guidance in situating their new lives here without family. So I remember sitting under tables playing games as a young child, listening to a lot of stories of resilience, hardships, and new beginnings. A lot of these immigrants, from refugees to the newly immigrated, created a lot of sacrifices in order to get here, and from them I learned that I have the motivation to make sure that there are opportunities for everyone moving forward.

My mother worked with people with disabilities. I started helping her when I was 12, babysitting children with autism and learning more about behavioural strategies. I followed in her footsteps and became an educational assistant for children with disabilities before focusing on my social work studies. My mother also helped me figure out that resilience is one of our strongest qualities as humans.

You know, the MLA for St. Albert was discussing the importance of working with communities with disabilities, and I absolutely agree with that. I actually have a learning disability myself. I actually learned to read using some of my technical skills, and, luckily for me, my mother was a speech pathologist. I actually didn't know how to read very well until I was in junior high. I learned to read by programming the first iPod at that time, and I converted it into something that was visually something that I could actually read. What I know from that is that our ability to problem solve allows for the adaptations necessary for anyone to be successful.

You see, my parents always taught me the value of community spirit and the importance of helping to take care of others, and they always encouraged me to challenge myself and to step into leadership roles. It's an attitude that I see everywhere in my constituency. I want to express my deepest appreciation for the sacrifices my parents made in putting their children first and moving to Alberta to ensure a brighter future for us children. It requires a lot of sacrifices from immigrant parents in sacrificing their own future for us.

Being one of the first elected openly LGBTQ Hispanic MLAs – and I don't think it takes long to realize that I am also one of the youngest and definitely the youngest whip in Alberta's history – it is clear that these sacrifices are not only worth while but that I am proud of this province and what this recent election has shown to a lot of minority groups, that this is a welcoming and inclusive province, abundant with opportunity. It's a message well received by those minority groups when I go to visit youth, when I go to visit LGBTQ communities and Spanish-speaking communities. Largely they've been left out of the mainstream conversation, and to be able to identify within the language and the community that they come from is a significant step forward.

I'd like to acknowledge my partner, Aleisha, who has been instrumental to my overall success. She is my sounding board and my calm in the storm, keeping me grounded, which allows me to be at my best and to focus on serving my constituents. As you might know, this job can be a little time consuming, and I am grateful that she is always there to bring some balance into my life. Aleisha has been an Edmontonian all of her life. She is coming to love Sherwood Park as she gets to know the community.

Strathcona-Sherwood Park is a community made of leaders. From business leaders to agricultural leaders to educational leaders, we are what it means to be rural, and we are deeply proud of our diversity. The advantages of rural-urban constituencies are apparent to many that visit our community. Our agricultural sector regularly works hand in hand with our business sector to find solutions to issues of our province and that our world is facing.

If any of you have had a chance to visit the Beaver Hills initiative, you'll know what I mean. The Beaver Hills initiative was recently designated as a UNESCO biosphere reserve to conserve the valuable cultural and ecological resources that exist within my community. This initiative will not only provide rural landowners with economic incentive to take advantage of their natural capital; it will also create new business opportunities for agriculture and rural tourism in a sustainable way. Much of our sense of pride comes from innovation like the Beaver Hills initiative and contributions we regularly make to the world around us.

Acreages, farms, and ranches make up a large part of my constituency, and on a smaller scale my constituents are proven stewards of the land. Many of my constituents work in the Industrial Heartland as well, whose contributions to Alberta's economy are remarkable.

Our innovations in refining have provided many of the building blocks necessary to capitalize on the province's new petrochemicals diversification program. Adding more value to our resources while creating economic activity and jobs is more important than ever. Our government made a commitment to support greater economic growth and diversification, and we're acting on that commitment. The new petrochemicals diversification program will help our province compete for new investment and job opportunities by turning our raw resources into foundations needed for plastics and other goods. My constituents are excited about this opportunity to strengthen our local economy and contribute to the economic success of Albertans and all Canadians.

I would be remiss not to mention one of the groups that drives economic activity in Strathcona county, the Strathcona and district chamber of commerce. They work tirelessly through luncheons, breakfasts, trade shows, and many more networking opportunities, and they play a vital role in supporting our business sector and are always willing participants in both government and community activities.

I've said it once, and I'll say it again: Strathcona-Sherwood Park is a community made of leaders. Leadership is cultivated in my constituency through a culture of empowerment. Residents are empowered and inspired to join community leagues and start businesses and join their condo boards. Many opt for all three because they know that the opportunity to have your voice heard is endless. They believe in the power of consultation and advocacy.

One of the most vocal groups in my constituency is Seniors United Now. I had the pleasure of sitting down with about 40 seniors to discuss ideas for a better Alberta. One of their main concerns was affordable housing. Many of our seniors have been living in the constituency for decades and are intent on continuing to contribute to their communities for the years to come. We all know that Albertans deserve to live in a safe and secure home no matter what their income. Seniors built this province, and we need to do the best we can for the wisdom-givers of our community.

I was pleased to share with them the fact that our community, our government have made affordable housing a priority, and we are working with the federal and municipal governments to find a solution that will increase flexibility and sustainability in the current affordable housing system. We must take care of one another, and I know that on the municipal level, as previously mentioned, there has been a task force in our county that reflects the need for affordable housing and proposes some recommendations. That also reflects the mantra that we must take care of one another.

When it comes to walking the walk, our emergency response teams are a strong example of this. Our community, like many others, struggles with domestic violence. Many folks from our emergency response system have ties to women's shelters and serve our communities, and they make an effort to raise awareness and provide volunteer assistance to these members of our community that are in a vulnerable situation. This dedication to gender equity is important to the communities across this province and a priority for our government. Alberta's Ministry of Status of Women is focused on decreasing violence against women and girls, increasing leadership and democratic participation, and increasing women's economic security. We know that we cannot build a stronger, more prosperous province if we leave women behind. That is why our caucus is committed to including the voices of women in our policies, programs, and legislation, and Alberta will be better off for it.

Strathcona-Sherwood Park is an example in community collaboration. This is an expansive constituency spread through many communities, but they always find ways to connect with each other. Strathcona county came together to build a rec centre in Ardrossan, providing those rural communities with access to much-needed services. They have created a bookmobile, essentially a travelling library, that becomes a weekend hub of connection for the surrounding communities.

In December I had the privilege of visiting many community leagues in Strathcona-Sherwood Park, and I would encourage every member of the House to buy a ticket to the Christmas in the Country event, where you get on a bus in the morning and tour through my fantastic constituency. I won't get into a fight about who has the best community. This bus makes a stop at various community leagues, providing an opportunity for you to explore the diverse and beautiful parts of the province, meet interesting locals, and acquire all the gifts that you may need for the holiday season.

Albertans voted for a government that would begin investing in their future immediately. This means investing in their schools, roads, health care, and public services. Strathcona-Sherwood Park is filled with advocates, experts, and private citizens passionate about being engaged and involved in the democratic process, that is leading Alberta to more prosperity. I'm honoured to support and collaborate with these inspired people in a journey to a stronger and better Alberta.

My constituency elected me to be a fresh, young, new voice, and it is time for these new voices and new faces to create an opportunity for all Albertans to be reflected in the Legislature. I believe that our caucus has the energy, the tenacity, and the diversity of abilities and knowledge required to lead Albertans through this challenging time. I look forward to the coming opportunities to represent my constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With that, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4 An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm really pleased to rise and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, here in Committee of the Whole. During the debate at second reading there were a lot of really good questions asked about this legislation, and I'm really excited to get into more of a dialogue about this bill and what we're doing with it.

Just to frame the discussion, the purpose of this bill is to bring Alberta's public-sector labour relations legislation into alignment with the directions from the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Queen's Bench, making sure that workers have the right to join a union if they so choose, to collectively bargain, and the right to strike, that was deemed to be fundamental. What we've tried to do with this legislation is to strike the right balance between the right to strike and making sure we're protecting vital public services. With that, we have implemented a framework that puts the responsibility on the two parties to come together to negotiate an essential services agreement. Both parties need to come to the table in good faith, and it puts a lot of that negotiation and that determination of what is essential on the parties, who understand each work environment the best.

When looking at setting up this legislation and looking across the country at the types of essential services approaches, we found that across Canada there are generally two types, a co-operation centred approach, in which both parties work together to negotiate essentiality, or the mandate-centred approach, where the government makes a determination and says, "This is essential; that is essential," and names, perhaps, specific job titles or other specific determinations. It was a mandate-centred approach in Saskatchewan that was ruled inappropriate by the Supreme Court, so Alberta has chosen to use a co-operation centred approach and, in determining this legislation, has really focused on creating a system that is going to allow the parties to work together to come to an amenable conclusion.

With that – I won't go on at length at this point – I am looking forward to the discussion and working with all of my colleagues to get the best Bill 4 we can. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's important that any legislation like this, which pertains to integral and often life-saving services that Albertans depend on, is carefully scrutinized. The legislation as presented lays out minimal requirements for the contents of an essential services agreement, but as worded it allows for the government to quietly expand upon those regulations at a later date. In fact, the way the legislation is laid out, those requirements that are in the legislation and those that can be quietly added on at a later date would be requirements of equal significance. This backdoor ability allows the government to make significant changes to essential services agreements without the oversight and transparency of the Legislative Assembly.

I wish to introduce an amendment to address this. Now, I have the requisite number of copies of the amendment. Just let me know when you would like me to continue reading.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.41: (a) in subsection (1) by striking out clause (g) and (b) by striking out subsection (4).

There's nothing in the Supreme Court decision that promoted this legislation requiring backdoor regulatory expansion of the mandatory contents of an essential services agreement. I want to be clear that this is not meant as an indictment of the current government or the minister. Frankly, it isn't helpful if any government of any political stripe is able to make significant alterations to what is required to be in an essential services agreement. Given the significance of essential services legislation any expansion of what needs to be in such an agreement should be given proper oversight through the Legislative Assembly. The requirements of what is to be in an essential services agreement between the two sides at the bargaining table is perhaps one of the most consequential parts of any legislation on essential services. Accordingly, it should be given due scrutiny and legislative oversight when changes are sought.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Albertans need to know that essential services agreements will be thorough and capture the unique aspects of each workplace in order to ensure vital public services are maintained during a strike or lockout. The section that is being amended, section 95.41(1), defines the contents of an essential services agreement, stating that "an essential services agreement must include at least" and then goes into some of those minimum requirements.

The intention of this section and the inclusion of (g) was to allow the government a little bit of flexibility in that definition of what's required in an ESA should it need to be expanded as the parties enter into essential services negotiations for the first time in Alberta. I do want to be clear that there was no intention here to pass the legislation and immediately add regulations, rather more the thought that this is something new and if we needed to add additional items, through regulation might be a way to do that.

That being said, I can understand the opposition's hesitancy to support this section. We do have other mechanisms. The legislation allows the parties themselves to add additional requirements to an essential services agreement, depending on the nature of the workplace. The commissioner will have the authority to send an essential services agreement back to the parties if he or she feels that the requirements to meet essential services for a particular workplace have not been met.

Our government has committed to working with all parties. I know that I myself have enjoyed that privilege as chair of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee and then through my role as minister, being able to reach out to opposition critics and have these discussions. So I really appreciate that this is a reasonable amendment. I know that I and my other government members are prepared to accept reasonable ideas and good suggestions regardless of where they may come from. That's not something that's always been the case in this House, but I think it makes sense.

With that, I am prepared to support this amendment. I am interested to hear what others in this House might think of this, but I think removing the referral to regulations would be reasonable and that the other mechanisms we have in the legislation will ensure that we still have good essential services agreements being negotiated by the parties.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to the amendment. I'd like to begin by thanking the minister for her comments and just acknowledging that she is right when she says that good ideas can come from anywhere. I know that from time to time the government likes to say that we have no good ideas, but we can all circle the calendar today because the day has come where we had one.

Anyway, I think it's wonderful that we have the opportunity to have a conversation about this. I certainly would have preferred the ability to have this conversation at the committee level so that we could have had other voices, not just legislators' voices. But we're going to spend the rest of the morning and likely some of the afternoon talking about a number of amendments that the opposition is going to propose.

Our goal when we come to the Assembly isn't just to oppose the government. We will bring a number of amendments this afternoon, all with the same intent of strengthening a piece of legislation. There are many good things about this piece of legislation. Many of those things have been set out by the Supreme Court, and we need to ensure that we are respectful of that decision.

Certainly, I know that the government, when they were the fourth party, would have spoken out strongly against this particular provision, where it would have resulted in a consolidating of power into regulations, and those are often in the minister's office. So it's great to see them today being respectful of some of the things that they have said in the past and ensuring that these sorts of loopholes, where governments can change regulations on the fly without the proper scrutiny of the Assembly, are tidied up.

I hope that in the future we're going to be able to find other areas, perhaps even areas in other legislation that have been passed over the recent years. Not to harp on it, you know, but we've seen Bill 6 pass and now all the regulations coming after. I appreciate that the government perhaps has heeded some of the warnings when we pass legislation and do regulation after, and this amendment prevents that sort of action.

So I am also pleased to stand in support of this amendment that puts accountability, trust, transparency into the hands of the Assembly and works to reduce some of the consolidation of power in and around the minister's office.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak in support of this amendment. I think it needs to be outlined that our government is very committed to working with all parties in this House, and it is important to recognize that the purpose of Committee of the Whole is really to provide an opportunity for members to bring forward amendments in order to strengthen bills and act in the best interests of Albertans. Having reviewed this amendment, I do agree with my colleague the hon. Minister of Labour in her assessment that this one provision is not necessary in the bill and her support of the hon. member who moved this amendment in the first place. So I'm happy to support that.

I just wanted to make a note, Madam Chair, that in previous years, when I sat as one of four members of the fourth party, there were times where I approached the previous government with amendments that were quite reasonable and strengthened a bill, which again is the intention and purpose of Committee of the Whole and the reason for our democratic system having multiple parties and perspectives represented. Quite frankly, there were times where I was told that the previous government would not accept an amendment because it came from our party, which I think is quite disappointing for the fact of the matter that it shouldn't matter where an amendment comes from or who's putting it forward. We want the best ideas possible in order to bring forward the best quality of legislation. Again, if our goal is to serve in the best interests of all Albertans, then that's in fact what we should be doing.

With that, I will conclude my remarks and urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further speakers, questions, or comments with respect to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Moving back onto the bill, are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's been a great day so far, and we'll see whether we can keep this going.

Now, we appreciate the government's recognition that illegal strikes and lockouts that violate essential services agreements should face monetary penalties. Regrettably, the monetary penalty proposed is a mere symbolic gesture. The legislation as presented only fines unions up to $1,000 per day for an illegal strike, which is not an adequate penalty or deterrent for an illegal strike whatsoever. The same principle applies to employers who wage illegal lockouts.

I wish to amend the legislation to remedy this situation. I have the requisite number of copies, and I'd like to present them now.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 33: (a) in the proposed section 70(1) by striking out "$1000" and substituting "$ 750 000" and (b) in the proposed section 71(1) by striking out "$1000" and substituting "$ 750 000."

If we agree that essential services provide much-needed services and that anyone who willingly and deliberately seeks to interrupt those services should be penalized, then it naturally follows that there should be real penalties, not symbolic ones. Further, if a big union can afford to easily wage illegal strikes or if a large employer, for that matter, can easily afford an illegal lockout, then not only does that negatively affect workers, but it cheapens the value of essential services for everyone. I think everyone here can be in agreement on this. If we are to recognize that something is illegal, that a certain act should be discouraged and penalized, then we had better make sure that any such response actually has the desired effect.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. We brought this legislation forward because of the Supreme Court of Canada ruling, making sure that we are respecting the fundamental right to strike of our workers and balancing that right with the need to protect our vital public services, maintaining health, safety, and well-being as well as public security while we're doing that.

With the amendment that's been proposed,

we are treading into territory – the Supreme Court did not address these types of prohibitions. As well, it's my understanding that during the consultation process adjustments to the amounts were not part of that consultation, so this is something that we haven't had an opportunity to talk to the stakeholders involved about. I would want to do that to understand the implications. I would suggest that this is potentially a good conversation to have, but it might be better suited for a larger discussion around labour legislation in the future because I would want to engage all the necessary stakeholders.

Again, we are interested here in protecting workers' rights, protecting the public service, and making sure that we're putting forward solid legislation that does that, and I don't think that this change to the penalty amounts helps in that case. So I will not be supporting this amendment, but I look forward to hearing additional comments on this.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. We had a good thing going there for eight minutes.

It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment and to respond to some comments from the minister. Here we have a perfect example of the case that I made yesterday about this type of legislation going to a policy committee. It's highly technical, and clearly it's not perfect. We just heard the minister say that she didn't have an opportunity to consult all the stakeholders. Yesterday we were given the impression that the Sims report did everything that it needed to do, and now, less than 24 hours later, we see a part of the legislation that the minister acknowledges might be a good idea, but we haven't had the time to have the discussion on some of the implications that it may or may not have around the Supreme Court ruling.

It pains me to think that we're going to likely, because there's a lot of support in the House, pass a piece of legislation that we acknowledge on the second day of debate is flawed. Listen, Madam Chair, we're never going to get to a spot where it is absolutely one hundred per cent perfect, foolproof, is never going to need another change, but the fact is that we haven't even got it close to the finish line yet, and we've already acknowledged that it might need some more study, that we need to contact some stakeholders, that we need to get some feedback around how it may or may not impact the Supreme Court ruling.

If it currently doesn't impact the Supreme Court ruling to say that it could be $1,000 a day, what is inside the Supreme Court ruling that's preventing an actual deterrent? While we recognize that $1,000 per day may be a significant amount for a small employer or a small union, $1,000 a day for a massive employer or a massive union is pocket change to some. There is no deterrent in $1,000 a day. We've taken these steps, recognized that there's a flaw in the legislation, proposed a solution. Our solution doesn't say that it will be $750,000 a day, because that wouldn't be reasonable either, but that it could be up to that, so I think that it's very reasonable.

I think it's quite unfortunate that the government has chosen not to recognize that there are some uniquenesses in the size of employers or unions. I think it's unfortunate that the government has recognized that this is a potential challenge in the legislation, one that we might have to come back as soon as the fall to fix, when this all could have been done and corrected by sending the legislation to committee and moving forward at that point. We would have been able to bring in experts on the Supreme Court ruling, experts around some of the other issues, and have this very discussion and then, when we pass the legislation, have the best piece of legislation that we could offer to Albertans.

So I'm disappointed on that hand, and I'm also disappointed that we haven't acknowledged the fact that up to $1,000 per day for an illegal strike or lockout is, quite frankly, a little embarrassing. I would encourage members on the other side to support the legislation based on that information, and I hope that there's some continued debate.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I'm pleased to rise to respond to some of the comments that I just heard. The penalty amounts were not inside the scope of the Supreme Court ruling, and it really isn't the case that it was a flawed process or flawed legislation in this case. Rather, it's the case that we asked our experts as well as all of the stakeholders that we brought in to participate on this to take a look at how an essential services agreement could work in Alberta and to help us create that made-in-Alberta solution. It was an opportunity to potentially open up Alberta's labour legislation incredibly broadly and to make changes throughout, but this government very deliberately chose to take a narrowed focus, to look at the pieces that were key within the essential services agreement framework.

As well, it's my understanding that in many cases board-levied fines are largely irrelevant because the most common process is to file board orders in court and then ask for civil or criminal contempt penalties. Essentially, with what we're talking about now, these fine amounts are not likely to play in very often, and I think it will make sense to refer to a larger, more fulsome labour codes review process going forward, where we're looking at things beyond the scope of the Supreme Court ruling.

I look forward to the opposition engaging in that process when it's taking place as they had the opportunity to engage in this process because it was public. Over the year we used an expert, Andy Sims, a renowned labour lawyer. We had stakeholders from both sides. We engaged the public through surveys. We asked all Albertans what they were thinking on this piece and consulted fulsomely as well as provided technical briefings to all involved.

Again, I will continue to not support this amendment. I appreciate the comments, but certainly the references to flaws when we're talking about pieces that aren't necessary to be changed around the Supreme Court ruling – I just wanted to comment on that.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have a couple of questions for the hon. minister regarding what I perceive to be some contradictory statements. First of all, if this fine amount of $750,000 in this amendment falls outside the purview of the Supreme Court, why do we have a fine amount of up to $1,000 included in this document?

Furthermore, if a more fulsome consultation is required before we can consider this yet the hon minister just went through a great lengthy explanation of just how much consultation went into this already, we have some contradiction here. On the one hand she's suggesting that more consultation is needed before we can address this issue of $750,000, but then there was this great long list of consultation that she claims did take place in regard to this bill. So we have some contradictions here.

If the fine amount is outside the purview of the Supreme Court, why is there even the $1,000 figure in here? If it is within the purview, then why is it so small? And if there was all of this consultation that took place, why in the world was the $1,000 figure even suggested? Just exactly who were the experts that were consulted in this? Might it be that they were all union people and that there were not very many people outside of that? These are contradictions this minister has made, and I would like her to answer, please.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the questions. I'm sensing a measure of distrust with those questions being asked, but I'm happy to discuss them quite clearly. The fine amount as it stands is the fine amount that was there before this consultation began. It has been the fine amount. I don't know if it's from the original drafting of this legislation in '88 or if it might have been adjusted throughout, but essentially this was the fine amount before we started the process. So we've not made any changes to that.

Section 70 read:

- (1) No person or trade union shall cause or attempt to cause a strike by the persons to whom this Act applies.
- (2) No person to whom this Act applies shall strike or consent to a strike.

It has the language that we explicitly need to remove to meet the Supreme Court ruling. This is a section that is touched because we need to adjust it so that it can say,

- 70(1) A trade union that causes a strike contrary to this Act is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine not exceeding $1000 for each day . . .

because the bill has changed the fundamental right to strike here in the province of Alberta.

So language throughout the Labour Relations Code as well as inside of PSERA needed to be adjusted. That's one of the reasons why Bill 4 is so lengthy. It's not because the essential services provisions are long – they're actually fairly condensed – but the ripple effect of those changes in the legislation needed to be handled carefully, and it involved touching many different sections. So that's why the fine amounts are there. They were there previously. That's why the section has changed, because the language needed to be changed, and if you read the old language, I think that is fairly clear.

Regarding the consultation that I am discussing, we had consultation regarding the implementation of the Supreme Court ruling to implement essential services here in Alberta very fulsomely with all members, not just with one side but all sides:

employers, employees, people impacted by the changes, people involved in the labour relations system as well as the public. The focus in that discussion was to talk about an essential services framework and how that system might look in Alberta going forward. The results of that conversation were incredibly detailed and included a lot of great information but did not include a recommendation around the fine amount and whether that should be changed.

Again, I refer to the fact that we could have looked at this as a very broad opportunity to make changes all across the Labour Relations Code, PSERA, to make major, sweeping changes, potentially. We've chosen to take a very narrow focus, to look at the essential services pieces, in this case changing sections – I'll refer to them as sections 70 to 73 although I'm certain that that's not the longer name of them – to accommodate essential services but not to change the fine amounts.

I hope that might clarify that we consulted extensively with all stakeholders. But there are things in the labour code that various stakeholders would like changed or looked at differently. The Official Opposition as a stakeholder may have things that you'd like us to review more thoroughly. A larger labour code review is appropriate and needed and long overdue because one hasn't been done in decades, and I look forward to considering how we might do that and to bringing a plan forward. In the meantime I'm very, very pleased with our made-in-Alberta solution that addresses Alberta's unique needs, making sure that our labour legislation is fair to unionized employees and employers while ensuring that essential public services are maintained for Albertans.

Thank you for your questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the minister for the answer. I just have actually one more question if I might ask. So it's up to $1,000, but the question I have is: in terms of your legislation who will determine what that amount is? Is that the umpire? Is it the commissioner? Who determines that?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. The fine amounts in the case of an illegal strike or lockout are, I believe, determined by the courts, but I'm actually not a hundred per cent certain. I have many experts and assistants, potentially. When it comes to the fine amounts, there may be someone else who can answer that question for us.

The Chair: Any further questions or comments with respect to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Basically, just a quick comment. I mean, what we're talking about in this section, of course, is wildcat strikes. Based on my experience in the labour world, when you're getting into a position of a wildcat strike, somewhere before that the one single thing that has happened has been a failure to communicate. Somewhere along the line somebody stopped listening, and the concerns that are being brought forward are not being addressed. A wildcat strike is just not something that you, you know, pull out of the drawer as a willy-nilly thing to do. It's gotten very, very serious when workers are prepared to go out in the midst of a contract period, feeling that their concerns have not been addressed. Most of the time it's usually been around things like health and safety, where the workers felt that their safety was imminently at threat.

When we start talking about putting very large sums of money as a deterrent to this, again it just simply does not solve the problem of not listening to what those concerns are. So I just wanted to put that out there for folks.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I always find it funny in here, the phrase "wildcat strike." It's an illegal strike. It's against the law. Trying to make it sound like it's not against the law doesn't serve this House very well and doesn't serve Alberta very well, when you're trying to make an illegal act sound like it's legal. It's not legal. The phrase is kind of offensive that way because, frankly, in my view, it's a way to disrespect the law, labelling something that's illegal and trying to make it sound like it is not.

I will say, more to the point on the legislation, that I heard the minister talk about a larger labour code review, which is probably a good idea. But it does beg the question that if the government is going to do a larger labour code review, why have they gone in this legislation beyond what the Supreme Court of Canada decision requires? If the government was only to put through what the Supreme Court of Canada requires – and I agree with that; actually, I'm not sure I've heard a single member of this House say along the way that they don't agree with that – then we could get this done easily.

The problem is that the government is trying to slip in other elements of legislation, a Trojan Horse as some would say. Others would just say that they're trying to do things in some cases that are beyond that legislation, that haven't been fully discussed and vetted. In my view, the proper place for that would be in the larger labour code review that the minister referred to. If along the way we can get the minister to agree to pass what the Supreme Court of Canada requires and take everything else out for now until we get to the larger labour code review, that would be a step forward and one that I would applaud.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I rise against this amendment, and I'm going to just refer to what the Member for Edmonton-Decore had said. I will refer to it as an illegal strike. I was involved in, actually brought in as a third party to, an illegal strike at the Grande Cache Institution. The issue at hand was the safety of the staff and other inmates at the institution. The institution had many blind spots, where there was no camera, where there was no ability to see if staff or an inmate were in a certain area, and staff had actually been attacked by inmates in the area. They'd gone to the department. They'd asked over and over and over again to at the very least put a camera into those blind spots so that there would be some semblance of safety for anybody who would be there. The department did not do that.

I'm not saying that an illegal strike was the best way to do it, but that's what happened. The staff could not tolerate putting their lives at risk every single shift when they worked, and they had an illegal strike. The result of that was that every staff member who was involved was fined, and they were prepared to live with that rather than lose their lives. Eventually the department fixed that problem. As my colleague said, those kinds of strikes do not happen unless there is something incredibly significant that occurs and is not being fixed. I would say that looking after your life when you're working in a correctional facility is a pretty significant reason for doing that. They had attempted to have that conversation over and over again with management and the department to no avail.

I am absolutely opposed to this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I would like to thank the Member for Lethbridge-East. I feel that was very important to say. It's also important to say that, actually, this amendment doesn't say that we should change the law in terms of the amounts because a wildcat strike is good or bad. It's not pointing that out. What it is saying is that if it's an illegal strike and we have changed now the labour laws under the Supreme Court ruling, this issue of a wildcat strike is actually not as needed in the environment that we now see in Alberta.

Remember that this amendment speaks not only to the union responsibilities but also to the business or to the government responsibilities as well, saying that if there is an illegal action taking place, the consequences will be severe. This is the reason why we've brought forward this reasonable amendment. We feel that it is a check and balance on the system so that this isn't being done willy-nilly, as the member said. This is something that they need to really think seriously about, that if they're going to go down this road, there are significant consequences to their actions.

And remember, once again, as the hon. member to my left said, this is an issue dealing with an illegal strike or an illegal action by a government or department or business. We're not talking about the right to strike. We know that the Supreme Court ruling has said that is a right. We're just talking about the nuances of this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make a clarification. Let me just present the idea that when there is a wildcat strike, what's happening is that it's not the union itself that makes the decision that these members are just going to go out and cause the wildcat strike. I can think of no greater democratic process than the members from a workplace not even consulting their union and saying: hey, there's something here that's not okay. In most cases, as far as I know, it has to do with the workers' own safety, right? Not even their union is involved in the process of saying: hey, you should do this wildcat strike. They're not being told to do it. They're doing it because they see it as an infringement upon their safety while in the workplace.

Now, what happens when they do go on the wildcat strike? Well, it's the Labour Relations Board that would deem if it is an illegal strike, in their words, and then would ask the union to do something about it. It would be a judge that would then determine the amount of the fine, and it would be determined within the courts. Okay? Again, as my two colleagues here have expressed, this really has to do with workers themselves within their own workplace determining that there is a safety risk and then highlighting what that risk is for them to actually go on a wildcat strike. Fines are determined by the judge, and if it is an illegal strike, it is determined by the Labour Relations Board.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the bill. Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. The legislation as presented removes the ability of a public-sector employer to bring in outside temporary workers to get the job done while there is an ongoing strike or negotiation. In no way, shape, or form did the Supreme Court decision require this. I am proposing an amendment to address this issue. I have the requisite number of copies, and I will present them to the Clerk.

The Chair: You can go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.41(3) by adding, "unless permitted by the essential services agreement" after "bargaining unit that is on strike or lockout."

As ministers of the Crown would know, they are responsible for the services their ministries provide to the public. This amendment simply allows those services to be provided while strikes and negotiations are still ongoing. This amendment is not – and I want to be absolutely clear about this – about an unfettered right to use replacement workers to get around negotiations. It simply amends the bill so that replacement workers can be allowed when both sides agree as part of their essential services contract. This is a fair measure, aimed at ensuring that Albertans can have access to essential services while respecting the rights of all parties.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. With our essential services agreement framework we are asking both sides to come to the table in good faith and to come to an agreement together, termed an essential services agreement, where we are outlining an environment of what will happen during a strike or lockout. We want to ensure in the event of a work dispute that patients or anyone impacted will be continually cared for and looked after throughout any strike or lockout or work action that may be happening.

The replacement worker discussion was held at consultation. It was something that various parties included in their submissions around what might make sense. My view on the replacement worker discussion is that we need to make sure that the agreement negotiated by the parties is what is used going forward. In this case the opposition has proposed an amendment that says, “unless permitted by the essential services agreement,” implying that a replacement worker provision might be negotiated into the essential services agreement, which I think is perhaps a misunderstanding of what’s happening.

If there is a function that needs to be continued during strike or lockout action, that needs to be determined as an essential service and provided by the members of that bargaining unit during the strike or lockout. If it’s work that’s not essential, then those workers deserve the right, as defined by the Supreme Court, to be out on the strike line. The idea that both parties might choose to include other parties or someone hired during a strike or lockout only is very unusual and is not something that I think would happen very often or at all as we look at this going forward.

The amendment as I read it adds “unless permitted by the essential services agreement” after “bargaining unit that is on strike or lockout” and begins on the premise that both parties, employer and employee, would come to an agreement that involves hiring outside employees in this case. This may not be in the best interest of Albertans because in many cases it is the employees who have worked in a facility – I’m thinking in this case about health care environments – who understand that work environment, who understand the patients, who understand the needs. In that case, through the essential services agreement we need to be determining that someone needs to stay and continue to perform those functions.

I’m looking forward to hearing more debate on this issue and discussion. At the current time I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. minister.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m looking at this amendment – and I know I’ve had a couple of chats with the minister about this particular section – and I’ll ask members of the House to consider how important this might be. Of course, under the legislation anybody who is an essential service can’t strike anyway, so that wouldn’t apply. This is people that are not considered essential. But as we all know, “essential” is a word that means something different, probably, to every one of us in this room, right? I think the minister talked about health care workers and hospital workers. I think we could have a long and interesting discussion about who is essential and who is not in a hospital room. Is the person that mops up vomit and blood off the floor essential? I think there’s a pretty good argument for yes, and there are some arguments that some people could say no. Doctors and nurses, I think most people would say, are essential.

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

Mr. McIver: Oh, okay. Thank you.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. In view of the hour, I would move that the House stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:55 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, April 6, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to introduce a class of students from Erle Rivers school in the town of Milk River in my constituency. With a population of less than a thousand people, the school draws students from other rural communities. They come from a school with a proud history dating back to 1909, almost as old as our province. I was pleased to meet this remarkable group of students earlier today. They have a clear interest in the work that we do here on behalf of all Albertans and how it affects them. Well, at least all but one of them. I would not be surprised if we saw many of them back here in this same place at a future date doing work remarkably similar to what we do here. In fact, one young man, when asked what he wanted to do when he grew up, stated without hesitation: I'm going to be the Prime Minister.

I would like them to stand as I read their names. I'm going to read the names of the teachers and the parents that have come to help, and I'd like the school to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. Mrs. Sharalyn Patching and Mrs. Cheryl Stewart are the teachers, and the parents that are helpers are Jody Miller, Lane Bellew, Connie Robertson, and Terra McCulloch. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I met your class earlier today, hon. member.

The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 35 grade 6 students from Crestwood elementary-junior high school. They're accompanied by their teacher and parent volunteers. Their teacher is Ms Ludwig. Their educational assistant is Mrs. Zyke, and their student teacher is Ms Drawbridge. They are also accompanied by two parent volunteers, Mr. Klassen and Ms Si. I hope I got it right. Anyway, please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel honoured today to rise and to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the grade 6 students and teachers of Holden school, but that also includes the towns of Holden and Ryley. You might be interested to know that Holden was named after James Holden. He was a former MLA. Today we have with us three teachers – Mrs. Cheryl Oslund, Ms Karen Arychuk, Mrs. Joanne Elliot – and two parents, Mr. James Bichel and Mrs. Lavonne Svenson. Could the students, the parents, and the teachers please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise in the House and to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the grade 6 class from St. Anthony school in Drayton Valley. St. Anthony school was just down the block from my high school, and I have spent many hours in the school gym coaching with and against the basketball teams from this amazing school. So it gives me great pleasure today to ask the students and the staff – Trudy Henley, Andrea Maduik, Colin Webb, Nancy Dodds, Lynne Motkoski, and Susan Huska – to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school guests here today, hon. members? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every year thousands of underground facilities in our province are damaged by digging. This not only interrupts services, but more importantly these incidents can lead to environmental contamination as well as injury or even death. I nearly lost my own job 10 years ago when I inadvertently came this close to hitting an underground infrastructure along highway 2. April is national dig safe awareness month, and several of our hon. members are sporting Dig Safe pins today.

It's therefore my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly members of the Alberta Common Ground Alliance seated in the gallery, sporting the bright orange safety vests. We've often heard, "Call before you dig," and that's awareness that this organization is trying to spread, advocating for the safety of workers and the general public. They're working hard to keep Albertans safe, running countless education and training programs to raise awareness of these issues. I'd ask all of the members seated in the gallery representing the Alberta Common Ground Alliance to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

To all the students in the building: remember to call before you dig.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly Ms Karen Bardy. Karen had the pleasure of being a parliamentary intern with NDP leader Grant Notley in 1982. She then spent her career in program development and community partnership work at the Edmonton public school board. She's a lifelong supporter of the NDP and an avid political enthusiast.

She's also the mother of my ministerial assistant, Kelta Coomber. My constituency staff for Calgary-McCall recently received the following feedback from the office of a colleague about Kelta. "Can you do me a favour and tell Minister Sabir that Kelta is an amazing MA and responds in crazy record time. Make sure that he knows that all of the [constituency assistants] love her." I agree with the statement, and Karen should be very proud of Kelta.

I ask Karen and Kelta to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you student members of our LGBTQ community from three Alberta schools. We have a number of students from Lindsay Thurber school in Red Deer, which was the first school in Alberta to establish a queer-straight alliance. We also have two Forest Lawn high school students from Calgary, who are important advocates for human rights and have worked to build acceptance and understanding in their community. We also have a student joining us from Edmonton's Boyle Street Education Centre, where students and staff worked together to develop their LGBTQ policy, that they submitted to my office, to ensure that everyone in the school is in a safe and caring environment. These students should be commended for their efforts, and I would ask them to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly members of Citizens for Public Justice. This is a member-driven, faith-based public policy organization focused on ecological justice, refugee rights, and poverty elimination. CPJ has had a long history of working for the common good of society, and I'm proud to say that the organization was originally founded by people in Edmonton.

Joining us today are Dr. Janet Wesselius, professor at the University of Alberta, Augustana, and former chair of the CPJ board of directors; Mr. Mark Huyser-Wierenga, Crown prosecutor with Alberta Justice and a former chair of the CPJ board of directors; Kathleen Felix, an assistant to Mr. Mark Huyser-Wierenga; Mr. Wayne Groot, a farmer and a current member of the CPJ board of directors for Alberta and, I'm proud to say, a member of the MLA for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater's constituency association; and Dr. Darlene O'Leary, CPJ's economic policy analyst. I would like to ask them to stand and receive the usual warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour to be able to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the board of directors of the Ukrainian Youth Unity Council. My riding of Edmonton-Decore has a very rich and vibrant Ukrainian community. One of the pillars of this community is located within my riding, the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex, which is owned and operated by the Ukrainian Youth Unity Council. It's been a tremendous honour to attend several events at the Ukrainian Youth Unity Complex, and I look forward to attending very many more. I would now ask that the board of directors please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my delight to introduce to you and through you representatives of some of the irrigation districts, who have helped create Alberta's aquatic invasive species conservation canine program in support of aquatic invasive species prevention. The program is a model of what successful collaboration between government and stakeholders can be. The partners provided the funds for us to create the first-ever conservation canine program focusing on detecting invasive mussels, a major threat to Alberta's environment and economy.

I'd like to invite the representatives of the irrigation districts to stand as their names are called: Mike Wind, vice-chair of AIPA and board member of Taber irrigation district; Tony Machacek, chair of Taber irrigation district; Harold Unruh, chair of Bow River; Richard Phillips, member of AIPA and manager of Bow River irrigation district; Bob Chrumka, chair of the Eastern irrigation district; Carl Chomistek, member of the AIPA executive committee and board member of the Eastern irrigation district; Terrence Lazarus, manager of St. Mary River irrigation district and also my neighbour; Bob Dykstra, member of the AIPA executive committee and board member for the St. Mary River irrigation district; and Martin Van Diemen, board member of the Lethbridge Northern irrigation district.

Mr. Speaker, I have an additional introduction to make to you and through you because the Legislature has well and truly gone to the dogs today. I would like to introduce to you Hannah McKenzie, Heather McCubbin, and Cindy Sawchuck with the K-9 unit and, of course, our friend Hilo, who is a valued member of the Environment and Parks team.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that they all rise to receive a warm welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests or visitors? The Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several staff and students from National Sport school, located at Canada Olympic Park in the constituency of Calgary-Bow. Founded in 1994 to support student athletes with Olympic potential, the school allows students to train and travel internationally, all while studying in school. I will be talking more about this tomorrow in my member's statement. Joining us today in the gallery – and I ask that you stand when I say your name – are Ken Weipert, the principal, Brooke Apshkrum, Carter Malyk, Rachel Thibeault, Kent Zado, and Leanne Topp. I ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, any other guests or visitors today?

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

School LGBTQ Policy Update

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a special occasion and to update this House on the important work that we are doing to support students and staff in Alberta schools. Last Thursday marked International Transgender Day of Visibility. It was a day to celebrate and embrace our differences and to stand together and support one another as equals. This day was also when I was pleased to inform Albertans that most of our province's public, Catholic, francophone, charter, and private schools had submitted their policies in an effort to support safe and caring schools for all students.

We know that the development of these policies has at times been challenging, but the most important things in life, Mr. Speaker, are not often easy to achieve. We know that our work is far from over as we now review the policies and discuss their contents with our school leaders. We will also work in the months ahead with students, parents, and teachers to support and educate each other. This House deserves plenty of credit as well in this endeavour as members voted to amend the Alberta Human Rights Act in the fall and, prior to that, approved An Act to Amend the Alberta Bill of Rights to Protect our Children, formerly known as Bill 10, legislation that received all-party support. Our work over these past few months now has been to align school board policy with these existing pieces of legislation.

It should also be noted that these laws would not exist without the tireless efforts of so many LGBTQ community members and advocates who have fought for years for recognition and to be afforded the human rights that everyone should be entitled to. It is their work in the face of adversity that has spurred a movement towards equality and social justice. I had the privilege of sitting down with a number of these brave champions earlier today, and I want to also thank members from the opposition parties for joining me in that same conversation. I think we all came away, Mr. Speaker, with a better understanding of the need to support our students fully in this matter. I hope each and every one of us will do our part to educate others in the spirit of peace and understanding, that we will reassure parents that they have been and always will be invited to be involved in all aspects of their children's education, and, working together, we will be able to protect and nurture all of our children in the province of Alberta. We will be the stronger for it, all of us standing together.

Finally and most importantly, to the dedicated LGBTQ advocates gathered here today and from around the province and in the light of last Thursday's commemoration, I want to deliver a simple message to you all. Our government sees you, we hear you, we are inspired by you, and we will do everything in our power to support you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: I recognize the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Wildrose shadow minister for Education and I had the pleasure of sitting down for lunch with the minister and a group of LGBTQ advocates. It was a great lunch. We discussed some issues that, frankly, LGBTQ children face in a school environment. Some are bullied, some are marginalized, and there are some who wake up in the morning to a feeling of dread at the thought of going to school that day. That's unacceptable. They don't feel comfortable, and they don't feel safe.

Mr. Speaker, there's not a member in this House who feels that this is acceptable. No child, whether they are gay, straight, transgendered, of a different race, religion, or ethnicity, should ever, ever feel unsafe at any school. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is absolutely clear on this matter and all matters dealing with this, and it is absolutely right on these matters.

Now, over the last few months there has been vigorous debate on how to ensure that these rights are upheld in schools right across the province. There are actually some who believe that this debate ought to be shied away from or tempered. I disagree. Something as fundamental as ensuring the safety of all children in schools deserves fulsome and reasoned discussion by all of the members in this place. I, too, am very proud of the work this Assembly has done, and I'm proud of the efforts of my colleagues in the Wildrose caucus to ensure that the safety of LGBTQ kids remains front and centre in all the conversations that we have with children, with school boards, with parents, and amongst our colleagues in this House.

Today does not mark the end of this conversation. I expect there will be continued discussion on the best path forward to providing a safe environment for LGBTQ children, for all children, and I believe that these discussions ought not be looked at as destructive or as dangerous as long as they always remain respectful and productive, with the clear objective always being the creation and the enforcement of a safe and caring learning environment for all of Alberta's children.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to allow the leader or a designate of the third party as well as the two independent members to respond to the ministerial statement.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to join with all my colleagues in this House to recognize the fact that this province has never been more proudly inclusive. Like the minister and so many others, I was honoured to attend the International Transgender Day of Visibility. It was a fantastic event to share in, and it was an emotional one. The significance of so many members of Alberta's trans community gathering to celebrate proudly and publicly was lost on no one in that room and no one around the province.

I also rise today to thank so many people for the hard work and dedication that they put into fighting for equality, acceptance, and understanding in the LGBTQ community. As associate minister of family and community safety I was honoured to preside over the raising of the Pride flag for the first time at the Legislature. I was also pleased to bring forward the relationship statutes and the Vital Statistics Act, removing the preamble to the Marriage Act that states that marriage is between a man and a woman, and removing the onus to be 50 per cent of the way through gender reassignment surgery in order to get the sex changed on your birth certificate.

I want to send out a particular thank you to our Education minister. You have been incredibly inclusive, and I thank you for including us in the discussion about the LGBTQ guidelines. The progress that has been made on these guidelines is a great start. There is still, however, work to be done to ensure that our students, our staff, and parents in this province know that our schools are inclusive places of learning and acceptance. The Progressive Conservatives support the guidelines. We offer our full support and guidance to the government to get this task done.

Lastly, our deepest thanks to the many advocates in the LGBTQ community for their courage and for their dignity. We stand side by side with you now and in the future to ensure that the human rights afforded to every Albertan are your rights, too.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to speak on this historic bill near and dear to all our hearts, in particular to two Liberal members, Laurie Blakeman and Kent Hehr, who in this Legislature fought long and hard to put LGBTQ interests on the legislative agenda.

Last year this House, to its credit, rose as one to say that in Alberta there's a fundamental principle that as a matter of public policy all persons are equal. I was encouraged when watching the hon. minister pursue this mandate, which, as he has shared with us today, is now being implemented by most school boards in the province. However, it is the "most" in the minister's statement which causes me concern. Most school boards accepting the laws in Alberta isn't enough. Safe environments for all children, not for most children, is the order of the day. It's not enough that most Albertans are equal.

I understand there are significant challenges facing the minister. Even greater are the challenges of the LGBTQ youth. Not everyone in Alberta understands the incredible difficulties that face these young people in school: the suicide rates, the bullying, self-rejection, mental anguish, and addictions in many cases because of being different and being judged to be different. Nonetheless, members of the LGBTQ community have fought for too long and too hard to accept anything less than the full implementation of the government's regulations.

The near-unanimous vote in this House was a clarion call for change in Alberta, and I for one will be watching to ensure that the spirit and the letter of the law are experienced by all children, present and future, who deserve our respect and our protection.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, there's an old saying that 90 per cent of life is just showing up. Now, that sounds easy, but it is not. Today at lunch we talked about the great work that goes on in GSAs and QSAs in Alberta schools, how students and staff support one another, and about the need to expand these important clubs to all parts of the province. Now, there's no doubt that a small group of determined people can make big changes, and it's important to recognize the work of these remarkable people when discussing inclusivity and human rights in our province. I want to recognize all of those who celebrated with us the Transgender Day of Visibility last week, and I especially want to thank the students who joined us for lunch today. I want you to know that we in this House may be the politicians, but you're the leaders. You are the leaders, so thank you.

But we also need to recognize that the work is not done. Rights are rights no matter where you live in Alberta or which school division you belong to, and I do commend the government and this minister for pursuing consistent policies across the province. My message to you is this: keep going. It's too important to stop now, and you have my full support for the path that you are on. At lunch earlier today the Minister of Culture and Tourism challenged all of us to speak up, to be allies of the LGBTQ community, and to take an active role in making change happen. I can assure you that on behalf of all members of the Alberta Party we will always be your ally. We will do everything we can to ensure that rights are rights for all Albertans everywhere.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Alberta Health Services

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of my questions today will be about the serious issue raised in the resignation letter of the former CEO of Alberta Health Services, but let me first commend the integrity of Vickie Kaminski in writing that letter. The CEO of the largest organization in Alberta walked away from her $600,000-a-year dream job without severance simply to protect her professional reputation from political interference. This show of integrity is an example of the best of Alberta's great public service.

My question is this: has the Premier read the damning resignation letter, and what will she do about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No, I haven't read the exact letter, but I've certainly heard about it in great detail. Let me be very clear. Our government was elected to protect and promote public health care and to do so specifically by promoting public delivery of public health care. Those were critical issues that we ran on, that we spoke to Albertans on, and that we got a clear mandate on. Our Minister of Health has now followed the act, followed the roles and responsibilities of AHS, and has done her job to move forward on the very things Albertans elected us to do.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, last fall Vickie Kaminski sat in my office and committed to me that she would fix AHS. She believed she could make AHS more effective. I believed her. Just a few weeks later she was gone. Her resignation letter makes it very clear that detailed business cases were regularly overridden by this NDP government for ideological reasons. AHS has had five CEOs in five years. Political interference is rampant. Does the Premier still believe that it was a good idea to put her most ideological minister in charge of the health care system in Alberta?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I could not be more convinced of the rightness of the decision to have the current Minister of Health in that role.

Mr. Jean: In her resignation letter, Mr. Speaker, Kaminski says that she told the Health minister, and I quote: if all AHS activities are going to be micromanaged by the government and all decisions have to be reviewed and vetted by the minister before they can be acted upon, then there are simply too many decision-makers. End quote. I couldn't agree more with that statement. Can the Premier tell us what qualifications the Health minister has that would allow her to micromanage, review, and vet every single Health decision? Is the minister going to be the new CEO of AHS?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the Health minister was elected by the people of Alberta, and she was elected to oversee the spending of almost 40 per cent of our budget, not to hand it over to some self-made CEO who thinks that they get to operate independent of the very people who put that money into their budget. This is a function simply of the legislation that governs the relationship and the very practices and policies that AHS itself has. It is unfortunate that the former CEO did not read either of those documents.

The Speaker: Second major question.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, one part of the resignation letter is truly shocking. The former CEO of AHS says that she was instructed to conduct her business with the Health ministry in, quote, voice mode, meaning there should not be any e-mail trail. She got orders without substantiating documentation. She described it as, quote, an environment lacking in trust and transparency. It is very clear that this government is trying to do things in secret. What agenda is the Premier hiding by having her minister give political orders to top public servants without creating any records whatsoever?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite is taking one comment and blowing it right out because, of course, there are loads of records, absolutely loads of records. Now, I appreciate that the member opposite would probably prefer if I just sent him notes rather than getting up and speaking, but many people in the world do actually speak to each other. To suggest that they not speak to each other is really, really, quite silly. I suspect that the deputy minister has a phone in his pocket, I suspect that he uses it, and I suspect that that's the way many people operate with each other. The speculative comments that were included in the letter really are simply that.

Mr. Jean: AHS is the largest organization in Alberta. It employs 100,000 Albertans and keeps Albertans healthy. It is not silly. Yet we learn that its CEO would get cryptic e-mails from the Health ministry saying that instructions would be coming in voice mode. Albertans know that you cannot run a successful business without writing things down. This is a very important organization to Albertans, but this Health minister was trying to run AHS in voice mode to hide her political interference. Will the Premier acknowledge today that hiding things from Albertans is unethical and commit that it will never happen again?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that – I mean, there are a lot of issues here, but let me first of all remind and bring to the member opposite's attention section 8 of the Regional Health Authorities Act and the mandate and roles document of Alberta Health Services. I would suggest that it outlines exactly the kind of oversight that the minister has engaged in and should consider continuing engaging in. When you talk about political interference, I would suggest that the letter's admission that a critical decision affecting the people of Calgary was intentionally withheld until after the election is political interference.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, this voice mode issue is very serious. Albertans know that when someone wants to leave no record, it is likely because they are doing something wrong. Albertans know. This NDP government wants to do things in secret. It isn't the interests of Albertans that they're looking after. Running a government without a paper trail is simply not ethical. Will the Premier make public the full details of every single instance where the Health ministry asked AHS to operate in voice mode?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you what our minister did do. When our minister came into the role, what she said is that going forward, we want to have evidence-based decision-making. So when we looked at decisions that had been made previously, we said that we want to see the evidence for that particular decision; we want to know why that decision was made; we want to consider all the facts. It was a little alarming to discover the number of decisions that had been made without any kind of written evidence, without any kind of written record. But that being said, that's exactly the way we're going forward. We are making evidence-based decisions. That's why the minister decided to reconsider the issue of the Calgary ambulance. That's good governance, and that's what we will continue to do.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Third major question.

Mr. Jean: Keeping secrets from Albertans is not right.

In her letter Kaminski details two examples of political interference. In one case: AHS ordered to the bargaining table just so the Premier wouldn't be booed at an AUPE speech. But she says that there are also other examples. Apparently, there was political interference in linen outsourcing and laundry outsourcing. AHS is being stopped from changes that, quote, have solid business plans, are more effective and efficient, and would save significant public dollars. To the Health minister: what was Kaminski talking about?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what former CEO Ms Kaminski was talking about was section 8 of the Regional Health Authorities Act, where the minister gives directions to a regional health authority for the purpose of "providing priorities and guidelines for it to follow... and co-ordinating the work of the regional health authority with the programs, policies and work of the Government." Our government got elected on a clear decision that we would not promote the privatization of public health delivery in Alberta, that we would do the opposite, and that's what the minister is working on.

Mr. Jean: Kaminski told the AHS board that there was political interference in the decisions on Edmonton and north zone lab services. Let me paraphrase her letter: even though AHS has identified the right things to do and the right way to do them, AHS is being stopped. That type of political interference is very concerning and unacceptable. To the Health minister. What did Kaminski mean when she said: will the Health minister release the AHS briefing notes on lab service, that Kaminski referred to in her letter?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, as I said before, the minister very clearly made a decision that we wanted to see evidence for what was the best decision, so she sought out that evidence. As I said before, when we first took over this role, we discovered that there was no evidence. There was no written evidence to suggest that that particular issue was a good decision, so this minister set about getting evidence on which to base her decision. There is a review under way. That will be disclosed, and the completion of it will be happening very soon. We look forward to talking with Albertans about it because that's what good governance looks like. We are the ones elected to run this, not a CEO.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Kaminski also told the AHS board that the government is politically blocking, quote, workforce initiatives that are simply everyday good management practices. End quote. The CEO of AHS has accused the NDP government of interfering in everyday people management. Can the minister tell us what is going on here? Is this an example of what Kaminski called, quote, the ideology of the new government, that does not allow AHS to do what needs to be done and should be done?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, prior to the last election AHS was operating under a plan which did allow and plan for laying off thousands of front-line health care workers, including nurses and other front-line workers. After the election we said that we're not going to do that. That's not the way we're going to control costs in Alberta. Yes, the minister said that we want to know: how exactly are you going to save this money, and how many front-line service workers are you laying off? That's exactly the kind of questions that the minister does have to ask because that's what she was elected to do.

2:10 Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Albertans learned a new Orwellian phrase: voice mode. Apparently voice mode is how the Health minister and senior staff avoid creating traceable paper documents surrounding their decisions for both Alberta Health and AHS and, by extension, avoid being open, transparent, and accountable to Albertans. To the Minister of Health: if you stand by your actions and characterize them as being governance rather than interference, why the attempts to keep them off the public record by using voice mode?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for this question, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very happy to answer in voice mode. We are on the public record. There are times when there certainly needs to be dialogue, where you can get much clearer outcomes and you can have the back and forth necessary to have a conversation. Some people like to communicate that as voice mode; I say, "I'll give you a call." Whatever it is, certainly it's important that we have an opportunity to have dialogue, respectful conversation, and that doesn't prevent anyone from putting things in writing after the fact.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, evidence-based decisions can't be made after voice mode because there's no evidence.

Yesterday we established that the environment minister eliminated the independence of AEMERA, an arm's-length review agency for the environment, by interfering; we heard that the tourism minister requires permission for people to talk to MLAs from agencies, boards, and commissions; and now we hear about voice mode at AHS. To the Premier: is making government less open, less transparent, and less accountable part of the change your government brings to Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to greater openness and transparency. Absolutely. There are a number of forums within which that has already happened. The all-party committee on democracy and accountability and transparency, something that, frankly, never existed in the previous 44 years: that is a wonderful, open forum for us to move forward on a number of these important issues, and we will continue to do so because we respect the right of Albertans to know about what's going on in their government.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, the all-party committee will be documented and not in voice mode.

The government is currently reviewing all agencies, boards, and commissions, which we think is a good idea. One of the main focuses, of course, of agencies, boards, and commissions is to provide independence from political interference to protect the public interest. Again to the Premier: do you plan to gut independence of all ABCs so you can voice mode your way out of any accountability and transparency?

Ms Notley: Well, the irony of that, Mr. Speaker, is that many of those agencies, boards, and commissions by actions of the previous government are actually exempt from the very rules and regulations that would make them more open, more accountable, and more able to be reviewed by Albertans. It's very ironic that he would suggest that by eliminating any of them, we'd be reducing that. Nonetheless, what we are actually doing is that we're going to be looking forward to how we can get costs under control, get a little bit of connection between what the public service is earning and all the friends and insiders and many of the ABCs created over the last four decades and, instead, work on behalf of Albertans . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Alberta Health Services

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Health services, the largest budget in government at $19 billion, continues to be plagued by inconsistent governance, which is reflected in the high turnover of senior staff and continued low morale in the workforce. Allegations from Ms Kaminski suggest that the dysfunctional relationship between the ministry and AHS continues to erode confidence in the organization and threatens not only fiscal responsibility but, more importantly, quality of care, findings also made clear to me in the Premier's provincial addictions and mental health review. Can the minister tell us how she will improve relations between her ministry and AHS?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and to the member for the question. Certainly, public health care is public business, and I'm very proud to be a part of a government that makes sure that we don't placate our responsibility by pretending that we've got a business organization operating a business when, really, we're talking about essential public health care, which Albertans count on so desperately. Certainly, I have a very positive working relationship with my deputy minister, with the board, and with the interim CEO. I have to say that it's been a breath of fresh air, and I look forward to that continuing to be the case as we move forward.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister commit today in conjunction with the new board to survey Alberta Health Services staff to better understand current attitudes and concerns in relation to the organization? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the proposal. Mr. Speaker, certainly, it's an interesting idea. I want to make sure that I'm aware of what types of surveys there are currently in place and make sure that I have an opportunity to review those. As well, I make sure that I'm out on the front lines having opportunities to engage first-hand. During the two-week constituency break I was at 11 communities meeting with AHS leaders and front-line staff, and that continues to be a priority of mine as well as my associate minister.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that the government changed the rules for appointments to the board and appointed Mr. Richard Dicerri, then head of the civil service, to the AHS board, will the minister review this decision as a barrier to the kind of accountability and transparency and independence that are needed?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, certainly, I'm very proud of the complex skills and the expertise that are around the table. Mr. Dicerri was selected because of his extensive experience understanding both the public service and Crown corporations. He has over 35 years of experience, and even though he is retiring from the public service, he's agreed to stay on the board, and I'm very proud of that.

Certainly, the rules that were in place under previous boards of AHS were that you couldn't have any revenue from the government of Alberta, you couldn't be engaged as an Alberta Health or Alberta Health Services employee. I think it's important that we have expertise around the table, including health expertise and government expertise, and I am proud of the board we have.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Trade with Asia

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been hearing a lot from my constituents, who want to share that if we want to be successful as we diversify our economy, we must expand and diversify our trade markets as well. Can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade update my constituents of Edmonton-Mill Creek and all Albertans on his recent trade mission to Asia and explain why he went there at this time?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. My 14-day trade mission was to try and create and simply attract new investment and to increase market access for our energy, agriculture, forestry, tourism, and petrochemical sectors. Given the challenges that Alberta's economy is facing right now, it's absolutely critical that we expand our markets and opportunities for Alberta businesses to grow and move into other markets as well as attract investment dollars back home into Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that many of my constituents have been affected by the economic downturn and are looking to this government for results, again to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: what tangible results did you get from this trade mission?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I mean, this trade mission was absolutely critical, and there are quite a few tangible results that we got from it. First of all, we signed a memorandum of understanding with the Shanghai Municipal Commission of Commerce. This MOU supports investment and collaboration in sectors like environmental management and technologies, health, and infrastructure.

I signed as well an MOU with the Korea Importers Association and want to point out that Alberta is the only province in our country that has an MOU with the Korea Importers Association and that we're the third jurisdiction in North America. This is absolutely significant as far as increasing our opportunity to get our agriculture products . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, minister.

Mr. Speaker, given that we already have trade offices in Asia, again to the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: how will opening a third international office in China help create jobs for Albertans and diversify the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. That was one of our three concrete tangibles from this trade mission, opening a new Alberta office in Guangzhou, in the province of Guangdong. Very simply, Guangdong province is very similar to Alberta in the sense that it is one of China's biggest economic engines and driving forces. That province alone is responsible for one-fifth of China's GDP. It is absolutely critical that we have staff there in Guangzhou not only to help support Alberta businesses with entering into the China market but, as well, identifying opportunities and attracting investment . . .

2:20 Emergency Medical Dispatch Services in Calgary

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, Wildrose has risen in this House 10 times to highlight the issue of EMS dispatch services in Calgary. Calgarians deserve to have quality services when it comes to dispatch and to be kept in the loop on matters that will directly impact the delivery of those services. That's why I was so alarmed to discover the revelations of the AHS former CEO. Answers the Health minister gave in this House about Calgary ambulance dispatch do not reveal what is really happening, so I will ask the minister, plain and simple: what exactly is the government's plan for Calgary dispatch?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, plain and simple, our plan is to continue to make sure that we have reliable EMS service and to improve it, actually, throughout Alberta, and certainly the best way to do that is to have a dialogue with the local community. When the mayor expressed concerns about the transition, I made it a priority to make sure that I can meet with him and have an ongoing dialogue, expose some of the evidence, and make sure that we come to the right decision. The members opposite have asked me to make rash decisions. I'm actually making sure that we have time to talk and work through the details, and I plan to keep doing that.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government just can't seem to help itself when it comes to meddling. Whereas in less than a year of governing they have no problem exercising political interference when it's to their advantage and given that we've learned that the Health minister was hiding facts about Calgary EMS and that we also know that she wasn't telling the mayor of Calgary the full story about a crucial issue, I want the minister to come clean and say when and what exactly the mayor was told about the dispatch plans.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. Mr. Speaker, this has certainly been an issue that's been ongoing for many years under the previous government. There were messages conveyed, including in the letter of resignation, that the last government said publicly that they weren't moving forward but that their plan actually was to move forward just after the election. Certainly, the mayor of Calgary didn't want that to happen, and I made sure that our government stepped up and asked for the evidence. We have an opportunity to go through it with the city, and the mayor is very grateful.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, seeing as the Health minister knew full well that AHS is locked into a lease of at least 20 years for the new EMS dispatch and given that we thought it was bad enough when there was a short-term problem of an empty building at $60,000 a month and whereas now we know that Albertans are on the hook for $15 million – $15 million – to move ahead with a Calgary EMS dispatch that the city doesn't want, why did the Health minister try to cover this up? Does she really think this is the way to run Alberta's most expensive ministry?

Ms Hoffman: Since the member opposite has been referring to Mayor Nenshi, I thought I'd actually put his own words on record. From a statement he just released:

Minister Hoffman, to her great credit, put the transfer on hold and has repeatedly promised that she would get answers to The City's questions about the 911 service change – questions which AHS had refused to answer over a period of [very] many years. Minister Hoffman did the right thing for Calgarians and she should be applauded for her actions.

... Minister Hoffman's putting a stop to these games is not "political interference," it's proper governance of Alberta's largest expense.

The Speaker: I'd just like to caution both sides of the House. Let's be cautious about statements that may be interpreted to reflect upon the character and reputation of members.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Trade and Development Initiatives

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before in this Assembly, agriculture and forestry play an integral role in the diversification of our economy. I've heard from Alberta ag and forest industry producers that they're excited about exporting their innovative projects to new markets. Recently the minister of economic development travelled to China to talk to stakeholders there and promote Alberta industry. Although I got scooped by the member behind you, I would like the minister to tell what tangible results he got on this trip.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I mean, agriculture and forestry are two of our priority sectors in addition, obviously, to our energy sector. At the moment we do a significant amount of trade, especially with Asia. I want to highlight the fact that, first of all, China is Alberta's second-largest trading partner; Korea is our fifth-largest trading partner. There's much more as far as opportunities to increase the amount of trade that we're doing. That's one of the objectives and one of the tangibles that we got out of this trade mission.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this trip to China led to promising new market expansion for Alberta's forest and agricultural industry, which I support a hundred per cent, to the minister: how are you going to be able to deliver our products to these new markets? Maybe use Zeppelins?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for his question. I mean, absolutely, when we talk about diversification, which I've spoken on a number of times, it's not just diversifying our products; it's also diversifying our markets. And the fact that we want to increase our opportunities for trade is absolutely critical.

Mr. Speaker, we're also looking at increasing our market access. That involves working with our different rail companies, our different modes of transportation to ensure that we're getting Alberta products to tidewater and overseas into new markets.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Related to economic development, I would like to thank the minister given that he took my advice last fall and moved NADC to Economic Development, which was absolutely the right thing to do.

Now my question is: seeing that NADC has been a year without direction or leadership, when will this government appoint a new chair to NADC?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question, a very pertinent question. Absolutely, it's one of my priorities, to work with our different organizations throughout the province. It's very critical that we not only keep a watchful eye but that we're acting in a supportive way to support especially our entrepreneurs, businesses in northern Alberta. I think there are great opportunities to expand the great work that's already going on. So to the member's question: we will be doing this in a very timely manner.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The former CEO of Alberta Health Services doesn't trust this Health minister, and Albertans don't either. After major flooding shut down nine Red Deer operating rooms on March 1, Alberta Health Services first said: one or two weeks to restoration. Then later the minister said that three of these operating rooms would be running this coming week. Now we've learned from AHS documents that these rooms will not see full completion till May 31. The finish line keeps moving. Can the people of Red Deer trust this new timeline?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, the flooding that happened at the Red Deer regional hospital on March 1 as a result of a sprinkler system being unintentionally struck and causing flooding is certainly not something that could be planned for and certainly is something that we're responding to in a way that makes sure that patient care is the top priority. Making sure that you have operating rooms that are clean, sterile, and fit for operations is our number one priority. We are hopeful that we'll be able to get these online quickly, but obviously we're not going to put patients in unsafe situations.*

Mr. Orr: Mr. Speaker, the minister said that Red Deer residents could get their surgeries done in Olds and Innisfail, but given that workers from these communities are reporting very few surgeries being added to their queues, can the minister explain why front-line workers in Olds and Innisfail are telling us that they just aren't seeing the positive benefits of this good-news announcement?

Ms Hoffman: I'd certainly be happy to follow up with the specific information that the member has raised in this Chamber, in voice mode or in e-mail, after the fact. I would like to have the appropriate information to be able to give the appropriate response in a timely fashion, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there are operating rooms in other parts of the province that can accommodate elective surgeries, including nearby communities but in other areas of the province as well.

Mr. Orr: Given that the minister has been accused of micromanaging and slowing down processes at AHS, it appears that the minister's political interference is hurting front-line care and increasing already dismal waiting times for patients in Red Deer. Even the doctors are, I quote, getting grumpy because they can't perform needed operations for patients. What does the minister say to the citizens of central Alberta as they see wait times getting longer while operating rooms remain closed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the question. I'd be happy to follow up with Alberta Health Services and the hospital administrator and find out what specifically is happening on-site. I think that's what's being asked of me, and that's what Albertans ask of me, to make sure I'm accountable for the system. Certainly, we want to make sure that when patients have surgery, they're not in a situation that makes it worse because they have contracted an infection. Making sure that those environments are sterile and fit for surgery is our number one priority. Urgent situations are moving forward, but elective surgeries have had to be postponed. As soon as those rooms are back up, we'll make sure we get people caught up as quickly as possible.

Organ Transplantation

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Health minister why our per capita transplant rates have been steadily falling over the past decade despite increased spending by Alberta Health Services. The minister refused to acknowledge the plummeting numbers and called it hysterical fearmongering. This isn't hysteria. Albertans are deeply worried about the troubling trend, and Wildrose shares these concerns. Could the minister cut the baseless attacks, care about Albertans, and tell us exactly what her ministry will be doing to restore Alberta as a leader in organ transplants?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question. What I spoke to yesterday was the fact that the member opposite was saying a decade, but his research department was being very creative and picking nine specific years to show a point where there might be a blip in the data. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that that's what opposition researchers do. They try to find something salacious.

In terms of what's happening in neighbouring provinces, I'm really happy that B.C. is increasing their capacity so that people don't have to travel outside of province. I think that's important. Of course, in Alberta we want to continue to make sure that Albertans have access to transplants. We'll support neighbouring provinces, but certainly their province stepping up to the plate is not something that we should be condemning them for.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, this data the Health minister refused to look at comes straight from CIHI, which gets it from her own ministry.

Given that Alberta's average transplant rates have decreased 21 per cent over nine years while rates have vastly improved elsewhere and given that we have one of the most expensive hospital systems in Canada while spending far more than any other province on an age-adjusted per capita basis, will the minister finally accept the evidence from her own department, and more importantly what will you do about it?

Ms Hoffman: I'd be very happy to give the research department of the Wildrose a lesson in actually looking at, when your member is going to say a decade, making sure you look back at the decade, not picking specific numbers in a nine-year random sample. That is more sloppy math on the part of the Official Opposition. I think that they should be questioned on it.

In terms of what's happening here, what's happening here is the records in terms of liver transplants, lung transplants, life-saving surgeries, Mr. Speaker. Being disrespectful to those recipients and the staff is not a way to move the system forward. I am proud of them.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that I will be tabling this information today and given that the bottom line is that Alberta families suffer under the weight of a bureaucratic, inefficient, wasteful Alberta Health Services monopoly and given that we were once leaders in organ transplants and seeing that the system is clearly failing our patients and excellent front-line surgical teams, can the minister just put down her talking points and tell us: what you will do to get the resources directed to Albertans, who desperately need and deserve a higher quality of care than our broken system can deliver?

Ms Hoffman: I'm pleased to respond to your talking points, through you, Mr. Speaker, of course. I'm very pleased for the fact that I've signed up to be an organ donor. I imagine many members of this House have, including members opposite. It's important that we have living donors for opportunities where we can, as with partial livers or kidneys, but often in these situations it's very tragic outcomes that lead to the high number of increases. We're looking at small sample sizes, but there are hundreds of people's lives in Alberta that are saved every year through organ transplant. I'm proud of the system we have. I hope that members opposite think about public donation and public health care as they continue to move forward.

Physician-assisted Dying

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, our Progressive Conservative Engage document has already provided thousands of Albertans the opportunity to raise issues of concern. One of these is physician-assisted dying. This is a complex medical, ethical, legal, and moral issue, and people have strongly held opinions on this subject. There is a widespread understanding and desire that there will be a fulsome debate on this subject so that hon. members from across the province can express the concerns of their constituents. To the Associate Minister of Health: will you commit to Albertans that physician-assisted death will be debated here in the Assembly?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Absolutely, we know that physician-assisted dying is a very, very sensitive issue, which is why our government has engaged with Albertans through an online survey as well as the online portal for sending in comments. At the close of the survey over 10,000 Albertans had submitted their views.

Additionally, myself and other members of this House are consulting with stakeholders to prepare a what-we-heard document so that we are able to bring forward a framework that fully represents the views of Albertans.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, no indication if we're going to debate it here in the Assembly.

Given that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that physician-assisted suicide is legal and given that a federal panel on this issue has made a number of recommendations that many feel fail to adequately protect vulnerable Albertans against undue pressure to request this terminal procedure, what measures is the minister considering to ensure that Albertans facing this profound stage in their earthly journey have full access to palliative care and receive full counselling support as well as the opportunity to reconsider and renege on end-of-life decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Protecting vulnerable Albertans is a key part of any framework that we'll be bringing forward. To that end, we know that an individual is the one who's required to make the request of their physician and that they will be required to reiterate that request and that at any point in the process an individual may withdraw their consent and the process will be halted.

Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, many Albertans have also expressed concerns about doctors and medical personnel, who previously focused solely on healing and relieving suffering, now being called on to end the lives of their patients. Given the profound burden that this places on these professionals, none of whom have had training dealing with the mental strain of performing euthanasia, to the minister: working with the College of Physicians & Surgeons and the Alberta Medical Association, what measures are being developed to support medical personnel suddenly faced with this challenging ethical situation?

Ms Payne: I'll thank the member for the question. To date we've had 80 doctors who've stepped forward and indicated their willingness to participate in physician-assisted dying. Working with the college of physicians in Alberta – I had a meeting with them earlier today – we've been talking about different training modules that will be available as well as supports that will be available for any of the medical professionals that aid someone in the decision to end their life as part of their end-of-life care. As we continue to move forward with this issue in advance of the June 6 Supreme Court deadline, we will continue to work with our partners across health care.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

School Board Autonomy

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I have heard concerns directly from both the Calgary Catholic and the public school board that the new MGA may challenge the autonomy of school boards and impact student learning. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what impact will the new MGA have on the autonomy of school boards and student learning?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for sharing the concerns from her constituency. The modernized MGA will be about building strong, sustainable communities, and that includes support for schools and for our children. No element of the new MGA will challenge the autonomy or authority of school boards. Instead, we are striving for greater collaboration among all the stakeholders to come together to build complete communities that serve Alberta's families. The Minister of Education and I have met with a number of school boards from across Alberta, including Calgary and Edmonton . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental question.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that these school boards have also raised concerns around the development of city charters with Calgary and Edmonton and given that these boards have stated that they believe elements of these charters could potentially undermine the authority of school boards, again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: can you please explain the effect that city charters will have on the authority of school boards?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to clarify that the MGA and the city charters are separate processes. The city charters are looking at potential enhancements in terms of creating and building better collaborative partnerships between the cities and school boards, none, however, which will affect a school board's authority, which both myself and the Minister of Education have reiterated to a number of school boards from across the province. It's quite simple. Municipalities and school boards serve the same communities, the same families. We want to support those collaborative relationships so that Albertans are served effectively and efficiently by their governments.

2:40

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and again in regard to the city charters: when will school boards, other stakeholders, and the public have an opportunity to weigh in on the development of city charters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the opportunity to speak about the fact that both city charters and the MGA will be a very transparent process. The MGA will be presented this spring, but it is not final. Everyone, including our school boards, will have the opportunity to provide feedback before the final legislation is passed next fall. We are committed as well to openness and transparency on city charters. Any proposed changes for Calgary and Edmonton will be posted publicly for a prolonged period of time so everyone can view and provide feedback on the charters before the final approval of this government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Grande Prairie Hospital Construction

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Grande Prairie hospital fiasco has caused a great deal of anxiety among the citizens of the Peace Country. They're worried that the NDP can't be trusted to get this project on track. Can the minister tell the people of the Peace Country when she first became aware of construction delays to the Grande Prairie hospital?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member. There are a number of problems with the project at Grande Prairie, and they originally stem from the announcement of the building of the hospital with a price tag attached, a political announcement which then forced the department to design to the political announcement instead of taking a careful look at what the needs were, doing a business case, doing your design, and so on, and then announcing the project. So we've changed this process since coming into office. Now we scope out our projects before we make a political announcement, and that way we can keep . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Loewen: Given that these delays due to mismanagement by consecutive governments do nothing but continue to break the trust of Albertans, can the minister at least tell us if it was before or after she met with the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, the mayor of Grande Prairie, and myself on September 9?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. As I mentioned during a previous session and I'm happy to reinforce today, at that time what I said to the room of stakeholders – and I was happy to meet with them – was that I wasn't aware of any deadlines. That's absolutely fact. What I did do is that as soon as I found out there was going to be a delay, we scheduled an opportunity for me to call the MLAs and, of course, the mayor as well to tell them in person over the phone. Then afterwards we released a formal communication to the broader community. So as soon as I found out, I made sure I communicated it publicly.

Mr. Loewen: Given this hospital has been not only plagued by cost overruns, poor oversight by consecutive governments, and delay after delay and given it is apparent that only the Wildrose cares enough to stand up for patients and front-line workers, can the minister tell us here today if she has received any current information regarding any further delays, budget changes, or changes of scope of the hospital?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, what a ridiculous assertion. Only the Wildrose. What a ridiculous assertion. Furthermore, the assertion that consecutive governments are responsible for the problems of the Grande Prairie hospital is patently false. We are working very hard to reduce the costs of this hospital. It was built far too big. It was built with many problems because of lack of planning on the part of the previous government. We are working hard to clean up that mess.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Engaging in critical housing issues with constituents and stakeholders is a commitment of the PC caucus. Addressing these issues requires an overarching housing strategy, a clearly defined one-stop shop for private and nonprofit partners. We are proud of early strides our government took with respect to leveraging public funds to maximize outcomes in seniors' and affordable housing, but it is clear that more work needs to be done. To the minister of seniors: are you working on the development of an overall housing strategy which addresses the entire housing continuum geographically and demographically, and if not, why?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question also. All Albertans deserve to live in a safe, secure home no matter what their income, and we in Alberta have a spectrum of services for people to support them, whether they're low income. We are as a government very committed to this. Certainly, in my career as a social worker I know that it's so fundamental. It's fundamental to the social determinants of health to have good housing, and we are absolutely as a government diligently working on this.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that one of the most effective ways to tackle affordable housing is to partner with the private and nonprofit sectors and given that multiple stakeholders are providing innovative and sustainable concepts in redeveloping and densifying underutilized properties in both rural and urban settings, the government would be wise, of course, to engage in leveraging these partnerships. To the minister: can you specifically outline for the House any current initiatives or programs from your ministry to partner with private and nonprofit housing entities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Just yesterday I met with the Horizon association in Calgary. They're a nonprofit agency. I met with Resolve. They're working for several nonprofit agencies in the Calgary area to make sure that there is affordable housing across the spectrum. I've met with many, many other stakeholders since being appointed to this ministry February 2. I just commend the member to be very alert during the budget because I think we'll have some very good news for him.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little short on specific initiatives, but I'll take that as an answer.

Given that another issue to address within the housing continuum is the ever-present need for additional seniors' housing and given that our PC Engage document outlines a plan heard from multiple stakeholders to co-locate seniors' housing with other services and forms of attainable, affordable market housing and given that this would allow seniors to age in place as vibrant, active contributors within communities they built, to the minister: are you exploring new and innovative ways to fund capital investment or to deliver new concepts in seniors' housing, and if so, what are they?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We know the importance of keeping seniors in their communities, keeping seniors in their homes, keeping seniors in facilities that support their needs and making sure that they're integrated into the community. I again just support the member to be alert and watch for further details coming out very shortly.

Thank you.

Payday Loan Service Review

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, like many parts of Alberta, my constituency of Red Deer-North is working hard to cope with the challenges of the current difficult economic times, but we're seeing that in these tough economic times some Alberta families are still turning to payday loan services to help them deal with financial challenges. Last fall the Minister of Service Alberta announced a review of the province's payday lending regulations, and since then my constituents have been anxiously waiting for action on this important issue. To the Minister of Service Alberta: can you update the House on what you heard from Albertans during this consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question. The member is correct. We launched a consultation last October. Fourteen hundred people participated in our online survey. My department also held many face-to-face meetings with borrowers, community and nonprofit organizations, and industry, and we received in-depth submissions. We heard Albertans loud and clear. About 80 per cent of respondents overwhelmingly said that they want lower rates, limits on borrowing amounts, and want lenders to offer longer payback periods and allow for instalments. In response to this feedback we will be moving ahead with changes to better protect Albertans who use these payday loan services.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in many cases people who use payday loans can end up paying upwards of 600 per cent interest on their loans but given that I've heard from some companies who argue that the use of the term "predatory" is unfair, to the same minister: is this a fair characterization, and why are you introducing legislation on this issue when you could just change the existing regulations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is a very important issue. We feel that it deserves the full attention of the whole Assembly. It affects many Albertans and is important enough to warrant legislation. Six hundred per cent interest rates are predatory. Period. We want to end practices that expose Albertans to vicious cycles of debt.

Thank you.

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, given that in some communities payday lenders may be the only option for Albertans and given that these folks are worried about being able to make ends meet, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: will Albertans still have access to short-term loans that they may need to bridge gaps in their finances?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely. Our changes are to limit the excessive interest rates that are charged by payday loan companies. We will continue to allow for more reasonable lending so that Albertans who need these services will have access to them. We are also working with the Finance minister and community partners to put better lending alternatives in place. As Albertans we look forward to helping each other and doing so in tough times. These alternatives will help Albertans who just need a few bucks to get to their next paycheque. I'm proud of the action that we're taking on this, and I look forward to discussing this more in the coming weeks.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Minister of Health has requested an opportunity to supplement an answer given earlier.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's to a question raised by the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka. It was mentioned in a question by the member that the operating theatres weren't on track to open. I'm pleased to inform this House and all Albertans that there are three operating theatres scheduled to open the second week of April. So they are indeed on track to open on time, and they will be safe.

The Speaker: You have the opportunity for a supplementary question, hon. member.

Not seeing that, I would advise the House that it appears we will not be able to finish the Routine on time. Is there a desire to have unanimous consent to continue?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to continue the Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Forgive the indulgence, but I forgot to mention that you do have 15 seconds if you'd like to leave.

Hon. members, 15 seconds has subsided.

Members' Statements

Health Care System

Mrs. Pitt: Albertans are worried about an NDP government that is more concerned about ideology than working in the best interest of patients. They have watched as a centralized superboard in AHS has grown more distant and uncaring about the concerns of patients, families, and our most vulnerable. The more power centralized in health care, the more patients have suffered every single time.

It started with doctor intimidation, queue jumping, and public inquiries that revealed a fundamentally broken health care system. In communities across Alberta it meant ripping effective ambulance and dispatch systems away from their communities, creating higher wait times. Emergency room wait times increased while wait times for key surgical procedures spiked. All the while, whether it's the previous government or our new NDP government, the only solution they offer is to dramatically increase spending without any concrete ideas to improve outcomes for patients.

Today we have the town of Sundre bubbling with anger over long-term care cuts and now in a damning letter from former AHS CEO Vickie Kaminski clear signs the government is not only ideologically interfering in our health care system but misleading Albertans on several key files. The letter shows the NDP keeping secret information like a 20-year lease space that cost $750,000 a year to centralize Calgary EMS services. We heard that the government used labour negotiations to try and build goodwill for the Premier at a government-union AGM. We also found out that the government is on track to negotiate wage increases. We heard that the government is blocking innovative initiatives to save the health care system money while protecting front-line services.

What it all adds up to is an NDP government who is more interested in keeping secrets and interfering in a broken health care model. Albertans are tired of the experiments and the broken trust. They are sick of the secrecy, and they are angry about it. Albertans deserve better.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Dig Safe Month

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about safe digging. April is known as the Dig Safe Month across Canada. Dig Safe Month coincides with the unofficial start of the spring digging season.

Every year thousands of buried lines such as cables, wires, pipelines, water mains, and sewer lines are accidentally damaged by excavators. As a result our everyday utilities – namely, heat, electricity, water, telecommunications, and Internet – along with emergency services are interrupted. These incidents lead to serious injuries and significant environmental contamination that add huge costs on public tax dollars. Hence, this campaign serves as a reminder to homeowners and contractors that they need to click or call before they dig because all these unnecessary risks are preventable.

Alberta was the first province in Canada to create a one-call service, in 1984. Thirty-two years later Alberta One-Call receives and processes over 500,000 locate requests from the digging community. Despite that, over 2,500 damages to underground infrastructure occurred in 2015, most because the person digging failed to click, which means failed to identify and locate the buried lines before they dug, and initiate the damage prevention process. Requesting a locate is free, and the notification centres are easily accessible through websites. In my constituency of Calgary-Glenmore awareness around protection of buried lines is an important issue due to the upcoming southwest ring road construction project.

Several members are sporting the Dig Safe pin to spread awareness. With us today are some members of the Alberta Common Ground Alliance, who have already been introduced in the House. They are working hard to keep Albertans safe by raising awareness of these issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Wellness Strategy

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's not-so-new government has racked up the highest deficit projections in the history of our province. So in our Engage document our PC caucus asks: how can we create a culture of increasing quality of life and improving health outcomes while decreasing costs?

The previous government designed programs and policies that were positive, proactive, and preventative. Through a rigorous province-wide consultation, the most comprehensive framework of its kind on Earth, Alberta's strategic approach to wellness was created, but we've heard nothing about this or other groundbreaking initiatives for aboriginal Albertans, students, employees, and seniors.

The NDP have made no commitments to continue hosting international wellness symposia, provincial wellness forums, and Alberta workplace wellness summits, which were previously supported by stakeholders clear across Alberta and all parties in this House. A few days ago the NDP canned the internationally recognized Healthy U campaign and shut down healthyalberta.ca. The minister in charge assigned the recently appointed Associate Minister of Health, not wellness, her first job: dealing with assisted death. With great respect I say, Mr. Speaker, that I fear this government is overlooking wellness.

Finally, the NDP has been silent on the Alberta Get Outdoors, or GO, Weekend, an act passed by all parties of this very House and which just happens to be this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday. GO has been supported by every ministry in the past and organizations across our province, but the NDP has literally dropped the ball on this as well.

With skyrocketing rates of chronic health diseases of all kinds and ever-escalating health care costs, I implore the government to concentrate on root causes so that Albertans can be as happy, healthy, and out of the hospital as much as possible while decreasing health care costs and taxes.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Tartan Day

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we celebrate Tartan Day, which recognizes Scottish heritage around the world. I do want to recognize the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who's sporting his kilt today, and I am wearing the Calgary tartan, designed by the St. Andrew-Caledonian Society, a Scottish historical and heritage organization in Calgary. The century-old society has done an amazing job by recognizing and celebrating Scottish heritage in Calgary since the time of George Murdoch, and it presented Calgary with its very own tartan. It is now a symbol of Calgary that any person can wear anywhere they choose, wherever they like, whenever they like.

The colours truly represent the beautiful diversity of Calgary: red, the colour of the North West Mounted Police and a Calgary colour; blue for Calgary's rivers, the Bow and Elbow, that connect together; yellow for the prairies and wheat fields that are found in the east; grey for the Rocky Mountains found to the west; black for the oil and gas industry, that has made Calgary prosper; and white represents Calgary pride in the symbol of the white stetson and white hatter awards.

Many Scots were and still are vital in the building of Calgary, which was named after a small hamlet in Scotland. As a Calgarian I was proud to wear the Calgary tartan kilt when I was sworn into the 29th Legislative Assembly. This tartan symbolizes our history, where we have come from, and where we are going. Later on I'll be tabling five copies of a description of the Calgary tartan from the St. Andrew-Caledonian Society. I want to thank them for developing a unique piece of Calgary's history and especially thank Robert Henderson, the president, for ensuring that we, the elected officials in Calgary, are educated about this important historical footprint in our city.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all those of Scottish descent who have helped make our province the amazing place it is today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Citizens for Public Justice

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to rise to highlight the important work of Citizens for Public Justice, or CPJ. CPJ is a member-driven, faith-based public policy organization focused on ecological justice, refugee rights, and poverty elimination. With offices now in Ottawa, CPJ has a long history of working for the common good of society, and I'm proud to say that the organization has strong roots in Alberta and specifically in Edmonton. CPJ has been very formative in my own understanding of public policy through a social justice lens. The hours I have spent discussing, reading, and listening to faith-based public policy analysis have been instrumental in my own path towards choosing to seek election as an NDP MLA.

Through its 53-year history CPJ has remained a constant, active voice in Canadian public affairs, influencing public conversation around issues such as the Mackenzie Valley pipeline and Edmonton's recycling program as well as advocating for indigenous and ecological justice. Throughout the years politicians like Grant Notley have attended events as well as persons from all political persuasions. While I served on the CPJ board, we developed a policy in favour of a guaranteed livable income for Canadians. This was supported by politicians from diverse political parties, including former Conservative Senator Hugh Segal and NDP MP Paul Dewar.

Recently CPJ's work on climate change has gathered over 60 signatures of senior faith community leaders in Canada on a statement calling for action on climate change, poverty, and indigenous rights. I was proud to have introduced to this Legislature current and former board members and staff of CPJ. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Citizens for Public Justice for their commitment to informing public policy and advancing social, economic, and ecological justice in Canada.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Lethbridge BioGas

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to share with the members a unique business that I recently toured in the great riding of Little Bow called Lethbridge BioGas. Opened in 2013, this is a waste-to-energy process where organic waste material is recycled to make other value-added products by employing an anaerobic digestion process as well as providing electricity to the grid.

When certain organic products are sent to the landfill from processing plants, the value of this potential energy goes untapped. It also breaks down over time and releases deadly methane gas. Every industry related to food processing has something that this plant can use to reduce this problem. Lethbridge BioGas employs proven technology and has a working solution. In partnership with producers they take manure that would have been previously land applied, mix that with other organic materials, and they use their process to safely remove the methane under a controlled environment. The end product is able to be applied back to the land. It's high in nitrogen and good for the soil. The methane that is removed is used to power two huge engines that have a generation capacity of almost three megawatts on a 24/7 basis that would power a town of 3,000 people. In Europe there are over 17,000 similar facilities.

Lethbridge BioGas is an example of an off-the-shelf design. This particular facility is big in technical terms but can easily be scaled down and tailored to the quantity of feedstock that is available. There are a lot of opportunities and potential for this technology. This just makes so much sense. Why aren't there more of these? There is a regulatory environment in place in Alberta that isn't set up to handle industry like this. We need to fix that. Members, rural areas can diversify by using these very scalable facilities, helping to grow and sustain Alberta's economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and introduce Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

This bill will help Alberta seniors receive the financial support they need to remain safe, secure, and independent in their own homes for as long as they choose or are physically able.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table the requisite five copies of the description of the Calgary tartan, which I had the fortune to wear at my wedding, my graduation both from college and high school as well as when being sworn in. A member of the opposition asked why I wasn't wearing it now. It hasn't accommodated the 30 pounds I've gained in this job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two reports to table. The first one is the government's own information that the Health ministry gave to CIHI, the Canadian Institute for Health Information, which unfortunately clearly shows that over a 10-year period we have slipped 28 per cent in the number of transplants that we do. As our population has grown by a million people, we're doing, actually, less, and we are no longer a leader. It is very, very important to our citizens, so please take a look at the copy of this, and please sign your organ donation card.

Secondly, I have five pictures of a building that we think is the $15 million boondoggle on Macleod Trail that Alberta Health Services has rented and paid for, a nice big building with not a vehicle or a person around it. I'd like to ask you to take a look at this as well. I have the five requisite copies, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other members for tabling returns?

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from the AAMD and C to the Resource Stewardship Committee dated January 29, 2016. Yesterday during question period the Minister of Transportation highlighted that although the strategic transportation infrastructure program, or STIP, was restored in Budget 2015, it is not necessarily for rural bridges as specifically suggested in our Engage initiative. Additionally, the government website on STIP states that funding won't be realized until at least 2017-18, and more interestingly the letter from the AAMD and C reads: "Comments made by Minister Ceci about not being able to afford all promises made . . ."

3:10

The Speaker: Hon. member, as I understand practice and precedent, you table a document rather than speak to the details. Could you summarize the substance of it and table it?

Mr. Drysdale: Well, as the letter stated, Minister Ceci said that all promises may not be able to be afforded. I'll table the requisite number of documents, and I'd like to thank the minister for promoting the Progressive Conservative Engage initiative.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4
An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling
Governing Essential Services

The Chair: We are on amendment A3. Are there further members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think I had the floor. I know that everybody was hanging on the edge of their chairs waiting for what I was going to say next at 5 to 12, when I was cut off, so I'll continue now.

Madam Chair, this amendment says to add "unless permitted by the essential services agreement," which is an indication that an agreement bargained across the table could vary this section of the legislation. As I started to say this morning, all of us in this room might have a different definition of what we would determine as essential work from nonessential work. That is at the heart of my argument here. Because of the fact of the wide range of important work done by Alberta civil servants, everybody's definition of what's essential will be different. Again, there are some obvious cases, a doctor or a nurse who's in the middle of a procedure with a patient. I think most Albertans if not all would agree that that is essential. There are other jobs that Alberta employees do that, while it's all important work, could be defined as other than essential.

The problem, Madam Chair, is those grey areas, areas that are really important but that somehow in the determination by the government – and I know the government will do their best to get it right. I'm not saying otherwise. But I say that even the government would agree, I think, that some things are almost essential. You know, you draw the line somewhere, right? There are so many different jobs that the 220,000 employees on the government payroll do. With the ones that are just right on the line of being almost essential, the government should probably support this in the event that they're not a hundred per cent right.

I know they're going to try to get it right – I give them credit for that – but if there is a situation where the health or safety of an Albertan or perhaps even the protection of a really expensive piece of infrastructure is suddenly at risk because of a legal strike action, then without this or some other change the government or the agency, that uses government money, wouldn't be able to bring in replacement workers to protect that piece of infrastructure, to protect that Albertan, to protect the public safety and good. Madam Chair, this is, I think, a responsible way for the government to say: we recognize that there may be unforeseen circumstances where something that is deemed nonessential is so important that during a labour disruption you'll want to bring in somebody else to look after those people or that piece of infrastructure. This, frankly, as opposed to being really at odds with the government's legislation, may save the government's butt in a circumstance that they honestly, sincerely, and despite their best efforts did not foresee.

For that reason I intend to support this, and I encourage other members of the House to do so. I think it's a responsible amendment made here in the Legislative Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to put my thoughts on the record about this amendment. Bill 4 as presented sets out a framework to allow employers and employees to work together to determine who is and is not essential in the workplace. I believe the honourable minister has already spoken about this, the situation that the member who brought forward this amendment mentioned, where it might be agreed that temporary workers may be allowed. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, I think, would potentially logically expect that allowing workers from the nonbargaining unit to be involved in the initial stages of those negotiations would perhaps be misinterpreted by the various bargaining parties or misunderstood and would potentially create a negotiation environment that might not be conducive to a good deal for both sides and might hamper the process.

For that reason, I will not be supporting this particular amendment. I believe the concerns that the member brought up have been addressed by the minister, and I don't believe this amendment is needed and might potentially be harmful. I will not be voting for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise and debate Bill 4 on national Tartan Day. I have no idea what tartan this is. My wife picked it out, so it can't be that bad.

An Hon. Member: Tip-top.

Mr. Cooper: No, I don't think it is.

On to important issues of the day and this particular piece of legislation and on to the issue at hand. I think there are just a couple of quick things that I'd like to point out. Just prior to the House rising at noon, we heard the hon. minister speak to a previous amendment that wasn't included or some concerns around whether or not it was included inside the scope of the Supreme Court ruling, so there was a decision amongst the government to hold off on making any movement and, in fact, keeping a fine in place that was, you know, set in the mid-80s. This government has said that this legislation needs to be updated, and we agree, but the rationale for not doing that was that it wasn't inside the scope of the ruling, and here we have another piece of the bill that is also outside of the scope of the ruling. It seems that the government wants to move in some areas that are inside and other areas that are outside of the ruling, so I do have some concerns around that particular issue.

When it comes to this particular amendment, the government, the ministers of the government are responsible for providing services to Albertans no matter what's going on in negotiations. I want to be absolutely clear about this, and I want to be absolutely clear that our discussion around the right to use replacement workers is not to get around negotiations. It's not to provide unfettered access to replacement workers but to acknowledge the fact that there very well may be circumstances that arise where both parties decide that that is an appropriate and fair measure and would then allow and ensure that Albertans could receive service.

An example, and I think the leader of the third party was moving in that direction: perhaps a boiler breaks down in the middle of the negotiations or strike, and there is no one able to repair that boiler, and there is significant infrastructure damage to that particular building. Perhaps it's in the middle of a very cold winter, and the whole building is going to freeze up. On both sides of the discussion there is agreement that it would be advantageous to get that done. However, the striking workers aren't willing. Whatever the case may be, the point is that there are a lot of scenarios where it may be good to be able to have this at the discretion or the availability of the minister to try and negotiate it. Absolutely ruling it out does not serve Albertans well along the process.

I think it's a reasonable amendment. I think it's an amendment that is pretty measured. It's not hysterical, as some would call us. I think that it's important for ministers to remember that at the end of the day they are responsible for ensuring that the services are provided, and this could and should be considered as a reasonable tool that they may need in the eventuality of circumstances that are unforeseen.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. There are a couple of items that I've heard so far that I just want to take the opportunity to respond to. The first is the question of scope. You're absolutely correct. I have used the argument that we're trying to use a narrow definition, that we're trying to keep this to the Supreme Court ruling. Through reading the Supreme Court ruling, you can see that the consideration of replacement workers was part of it. It wasn't in their ruling per se, but if you press Control F, you can find that replacement workers were discussed or considered in three different places.

It was considered and discussed in our consultation, so we were able to engage the stakeholders and have a conversation about replacement workers and the impact that replacement workers have on that collective bargaining process. The Supreme Court ruling fundamentally was about making sure that the collective bargaining process is fair, balanced, and provides the right to strike to the workers, which they do require. Through the discussion about replacement workers the employers were able to express that replacement workers did not seem very likely, particularly during a dispute, because the skills and qualifications of a bargaining unit are not easily replaced. So that's definitely something to be considered. There were some employers that talked about replacement workers in case the negotiations of essential services were delayed until there was job action, but our government has decided that you must have those conversations and make those determinations upfront.

In our determination replacement workers are an important piece of this legislation. We have considered it carefully, making sure that this is an important step in how we're moving forward. That's my response regarding scope. Who is doing the work during a strike or lockout directly impacts how long that strike or lockout takes place. It directly impacts the people impacted, the public who might be using those services.

Now, in the case of emergency scenarios we have considered what that might look like. What we're asking the parties involved in an essential services agreement to do is to also consider that during the essential services negotiation. If an employer requires someone to do a function, then that should become an essential service under the essential services agreement that gets negotiated. That's the process we expect them to go through.

The wording of the replacement worker clause refers to the work of an employee on the bargaining unit that is currently on strike or lockout. In the scenario that we were just hearing regarding a boiler failing, for example in the case of an emergency, if that is work of the bargaining unit that is out on strike or lockout, the legislation allows the use of the umpire, that person who is on the ground to help make these decisions.

I'm not sure if I've spoken enough about the umpire in this system because it is a pretty key part of the legislation. The term "umpire" is used because, as in baseball, this is someone who is supposed to be there, on the ground, making decisions in a very flexible and nimble way. Umpire decisions, rulings, you would say, will happen at 3 in the morning during a strike or lockout because these are high-pressure scenarios. Things happen. We need to make sure that essential services are protected. If there's a dispute about that, that will be dealt with within X number of days. The legislation talks about it. It can be escalated up to the essential services commissioner.

But that umpire on the ground, when that boiler fails, to help rule on if the bargaining unit should come back to fix the boiler because of this, this, and this implication: that will absolutely happen. As well, if the boiler being fixed isn't something that the nurses of HSAA typically do, well, the employer is able to hire someone because it's not the bargaining unit that's out on strike.

We really want to emphasize that during the negotiations of the essential services agreement – the legislation is really intended for the two parties to come to that table, negotiate together. The entire point of our approach, which is that co-operative centre approach, is for those conversations to be had well in advance. That allows, when a strike or lockout starts, for that confidence that the parties have negotiated and determined what needs to happen. In the case of something unexpected, the parties can amend their essential services agreement, the umpire can make rulings on the ground to adjust what's happening, or the commissioner can be involved, but ideally the umpire is what's going to happen in most cases. All reasonable scenarios so that services for Albertans are protected must be considered. We have confidence that in the mature and modern labour relations community we have in Alberta, we are going to be moving forward with this best approach.

My final thought on replacement workers is that the people who are best suited to provide services in the case of the health care industry are the professionally trained staff that are familiar with the needs of patients, the environment, and clients as well as the unique workplace. So bringing in other people, replacement workers in a health care setting, for example, could compromise patient care as replacement workers are not familiar with the unique needs of patients. Albertans want and deserve professionally trained and highly qualified staff that deliver the vital public services that they depend on. Potentially, replacement workers could put that at risk.

In fact, a scenario where replacement workers could be used to the negative impact of Albertans is if, for example, a union advocated for: oh, yes; we'll use some replacement workers because we're going to take all our best people out onto the strike line. You're going to end up having to hire people with maybe the same qualifications, but they don't know the environment well enough or they don't have the particular skill set potentially, so then you have people delivering the service that aren't as familiar with the environment.

My preference and how we've laid out the legislation is that during the negotiations we need to know who is going to do what work. We're going to have that negotiated by the two parties with the existing staff, with the bargaining units in play.

3:30

Those are the reasons that I do not support this amendment. I appreciate the thought that the opposition has put into this. It was considered by the government. It was discussed with the stakeholders at the consultations. Moving forward, I truly feel that adding any discussion of replacement workers into the essential services agreement will lengthen the negotiation process that it will take to negotiate that essential services agreement. It adds a whole other complicating factor.

I, again, look forward to hearing more discussion on this, but I do not support this amendment at this time. Thank you.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have one final question that I'd like to ask the hon. minister. Going back to the question of who would be – so if we have a boiler go down in an emergency situation, you've indicated that the umpire's responsibility would be to determine whether or not that is a five-alarm fire, as we like to call it, and if someone needs to come in off the picket lines or if someone needs to come in in terms of a temporary worker. This is the question that I'd like to know.

More importantly, I'd like to know this, Madam Chair. In the event that the process breaks down and this umpire is not able to move on something quick enough and there is a multimillion-dollar problem, who is liable at that point? Would it be the umpire? Would it be the government? I think that this would be an interesting quagmire to have to go through to figure out who would be liable.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. The first part of your question was around: in the case of an emergency how does that get decided? I really want to emphasize that the first way that gets decided is by the two parties discussing it, because the system is based on collaboration and on them working together. It isn't the umpire necessarily, first and foremost, particularly because the care and well-being of patients that are being served in a health care setting or even just the environment, the work environment – if something is going wrong, the employees impacted will know emergency status, what might make sense. They may not completely agree with the employer, but I anticipate a lot of disputes to be negotiated just between the two parties. If that doesn't work, then the umpire does step in and can make judgments or rulings as necessary. Absolutely, that's the process, but I really don't want to lose that co-operation based focus that is the focus of this legislation, to bring those two parties together to come to an agreement and to make sure that any strike or lockout is done in a safe way and continues to provide the vital services to Albertans. We can't lose that thread.

In the case of a theoretical multimillion-dollar – that something has gone terribly, terribly wrong. I couldn't speculate as far as liability just because it's such a hard thing to pin down. We don't know what scenario that might be or what that looks like. But I do know that all parties involved will be working to avoid anything like that. We are trying to minimize disruption while still respecting the fundamental human right to join a union and go on strike.

The Supreme Court of Canada ruling was very clear that we need to bring forward legislation that does that, that allows for strikes and lockouts. We've used the Supreme Court ruling in formulating our approach while talking to Albertans who are using the labour relations system, both employers and employees, consulting widely. I'm very proud of the essential services legislation that we've brought forward and the process that we are using. I think it's going to serve Alberta well. I call it an Albertan-made solution because there's nothing exactly like it in Canada, and we're getting a lot of positive comments and support on it.

I appreciate your feedback and your amendments and thank you for the question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to stand in the House and speak against the amendment that the Official Opposition, the Wildrose, have put forward. The question is as to why we would not allow replacement workers as part of an essential services agreement that is created between the employer and the employees. What the opposition doesn't understand is that in good-faith collective bargaining both sides come to the table and work on what each needs and wants, and the agreement would determine what workers are needed to perform those essential services, therefore making the need to allow replacement workers unnecessary. So this will be my opportunity to educate these members opposite that would support the amendment as to why it would be in the worst interests of patient care to support it.

To highlight, I would like to share my experience working for the Good Samaritan long-term care facility. I worked in geriatric care for a number of years. What you learn when you work in health care is that you are all in it together, that your strength comes from working as a team and that part of working as a team and part of teaming in long-term care is to have rotations through the teams of residents that you serve. At Good Samaritan we had four wings and four-week rotations on each, and this allowed you to learn the specific care for each resident. In the case of one staff being sick, if you needed to bring in someone to help, the rest of the staff had the experience to deliver quality care to those patients. In the case that you couldn't find someone, you had the rest of the team to pull together and take care of those residents.

If you bring in a team of replacements, you lose consistent care, and consistent care is the key to safety and dignity. Consistent care is critical in all areas of patient care. Areas such as meals and food: you need to know as a health care professional working in long-term care, as a caregiver for those people, what that person's choking hazards are. Do they need their food puréed? When I give a glass of juice to this person, does it need to be thickening level 1, 2, or 3? Residents eat at least three times a day, so they are at risk if you don't know their needs.

Sometimes it's less serious: how do you like your coffee? After working with all four wings, I knew exactly what each resident wanted. I knew how they took their coffee; I knew how they took their tea, if it was cream, milk, sweetener. I knew it for every one of 50 people, and I knew specifically what they needed for every meal. I could do that because I cared about the people that I worked for and that I worked with. Those things are simple, but they're important because these residents can't do it for themselves. They deserve just like you and me to have choice and quality of life.

Or bathing. I had a resident who always looked forward to my turn on her wing because I knew how she liked to have her hair washed. She was someone who liked a good scalp massage. But there are more serious issues when it comes to bathing. Do they have a fear of bathing? Do they need a more gentle approach? What's the sensitivity of their skin? As we age, our skin becomes more delicate, putting us at greater risk of burns in bathing. What are the transfer techniques that that person needs to get safely from their wheelchair into the bath or into a shower?

Or medication. What time? Which ones? What's the method of delivery that you use? Critical issues needing professionalism and familiarity.

Or toileting care, a thing that people don't really like to talk about but that is a critical facet of resident care. What's the time that you take them? It's not even just a matter of healthy hygiene, but it's maintaining skin integrity. You need to know their schedules because this helps give them autonomy, and you can mitigate potential harm that could be caused if you don't.

Sometimes a lack of care is not as easily identified. To underline this, I'll provide members with a couple of examples. I worked with a sister who had very specific needs. You had to make sure that she was busy. You had to make sure that she was kept on her correct bathroom schedule. Most importantly, you had to ensure that that sister was not dressed too hot. That was a matter of dignity for her. Madam Chair, if you didn't monitor this on her behalf, you would run the risk of finding her naked as the day she was born, kneeling, holding onto the hallway railing, praying for our souls because she loved us. So it was in her best interests for us to know what she needed because we needed to be the people that maintained her dignity.

There's also an example of a gentleman that I worked with that you would think hated getting up in the morning, you would think he hated getting dressed, you would think he hated taking his meds, you would think he hated taking baths, but that was only if you were new. He suffered from dementia, so being in care and not being with family, it was imperative that you knew him and that he knew you. If you were to replace that critical person in that critical role, you're making this his problem, and that's not a burden that we are meant to do. We are meant to provide a good quality of life, good quality of care, things that are only managed through consistency – consistent people, consistent teaming – the investment that you make in the people that you work with and the people that you serve.

Madam Chair, I applaud this section of Bill 4 because it would prevent replacement workers and because I understand the issues. I bring my experience as a long-term health care worker to the table as a legislator in the Assembly in order to help those that are lacking some knowledge in these areas to be able to make a well-informed conclusion. That conclusion would be to vote against this amendment, and I encourage all in this House to do so.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to echo some of the comments my hon. colleagues have made already and the hon. minister as well. I want to talk a little bit about what I really believe we as legislators and we as service providers are obligated to do, and I think that's to provide a quality of care that's unparalleled anywhere else and to make sure that when we provide this quality of care, we're doing it with quality employees, quality people and making sure that we are consistent throughout all of this process.

While I understand that the spirit of this amendment and the intent of this amendment is not to impede that in any way and is not to get around negotiations, as the hon. member across had mentioned, I think that there are some very valid concerns with allowing the replacement workers clause into this bill. When we look at this – and as one of my colleagues had mentioned before, quality of care is important to make sure that you know the needs of the patients in the area. What that means is that in the case of when we are negotiating our ESAs, we must be able to negotiate our essential services agreements in good faith.

I think that by putting in a replacement workers clause, it becomes much more difficult to negotiate the ESA. Whether it's the bargaining units themselves or the employers, there's now another wild card part on the field, and because there's that wild card on the field, we're looking at saying: "We're going to have to push back how long this is going to take. We'll have to look at different provisions. We'll have to look at more things." All that does is prolong the negotiation process, and nobody wants that. We want to be able to provide that quality of care to Albertans everywhere.

These loopholes that we're leaving inside ESAs could cause significant problems for any bargaining unit that did want to go into strike action or for any employer who did want to enter into lockout action. I think that the violation of that spirit of negotiation would be detrimental to Albertans everywhere because Albertans and Canadians, as we know, do have that right to strike. The longer it takes for us to negotiate those ESAs, the longer we'll leave Albertans without that right.

Madam Chair, I think that once an ESA is negotiated with or without these clauses if they were there, we would have significant issues with the length of strikes. As the hon. minister had mentioned before, umpires are available, and umpires will be on the ground to make sure that when there are significant problems such as a boiler exploding, we will be able to service those issues immediately, and we will service those issues with the people that know the environment, the people that know what needs to happen, the people that know the area.

If we were to bring in replacement workers instead, Madam Chair, I think this could severely hamper negotiations and extend the length of a strike or lockout action. What would that mean? That would mean, quite simply, that we'd be hampering the quality of care for Albertans because, as in the nursing example, if you are extending the lockout, then whether there are replacement workers or not, that means that they're running with fewer services. Albertans will be receiving fewer services during that lockout, and if we extend it by allowing replacement workers in – we know it to be true that when you bring replacement workers in, strikes last longer. If we were to extend those strikes, you are saying to Albertans: we are comfortable with letting you be without services for longer. I'm not comfortable with voting in favour of that. I am not comfortable with telling Albertans that I'm okay with them being on some reduced level.

Madam Chair, I think that every Albertan deserves the absolute best we can possibly provide for them. I believe that Albertans deserve the absolute best at all possible times. Once the ESAs are negotiated, we will know which employees are essential. We will know which employees need to be there to provide the basic level of care, and if there was some emergency, that was not expected, the umpires would be able to bring in the required persons to assist with that emergency. I do really, strongly believe that allowing these replacement workers would be impeding our duty, would be impeding our obligations as legislators, our obligations as service providers and would really hamper our ability to help and protect and serve Albertans everywhere.

Madam Chair, for those reasons I have no choice but to stand in opposition of this amendment. Thank you.

Ms Fitzpatrick: I, too, stand in opposition to this amendment. Yesterday – I think it was yesterday – I gave you an example of what happened on 9/11 when a strike line was taken down immediately when there was a national emergency. But right now I'll talk about, first of all, as several other people have said, that any time replacement workers have been brought in on any strike line, it has continued the strike for much longer than was necessary. It removed from the employer the necessity of sitting at the table and actually negotiating.

The next point I want to make – and I'll speak to this from my 32 and a half years of working in the public service. I took pride in my job along with everybody that I worked with. If there was an emergency, if something happened and there was a person on that line who had the expertise to deal with it, I'm telling you right now that we as members on that line would support that person going across the line to fix it.

I'll give you an example. I was on a strike line at Edmonton Institution a number of years ago, and as we were on the line, a person drove up in a car and went to the farm across the road from the institution. When that person drove up, I myself and several other people on the line recognized who that person was. He'd been a former inmate who'd served his sentence, but we knew what his offence was. We knew his history; we knew about him. We also knew that the people across the road were now vulnerable based on what we knew about that previous offender. We immediately went to management, who were also out on the line, and we talked to them, informed them about what was going on. They immediately got the RCMP out to that farm and took care of the situation because workers have pride in their job and don't want to see anybody hurt or anything that shouldn't be happening happen.

We absolutely do not need replacement workers because the workers that work in those jobs do care about their jobs and do care about the safety of the public or anything that would be at risk. So I stand absolutely opposed to bringing in replacement workers and to that amendment.

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, I appreciate the comments that have been made. Perhaps if I clarify once again what this amendment is for, we can save multiple people from standing up and saying that this is about replacement workers. This is about mitigating potential loss to machinery, about potential multimillion-dollar losses. This amendment was never intended to allow employers or companies to be able to have replacement workers carte blanche.

I appreciate the comments that have been made, I appreciate the impassioned pleas, but this was not the intention of this amendment. So I hope that the members opposite understand that this amendment was specific in its intentions.

I'll leave it at that, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Yes. I've been involved in labour issues probably going on the better part of 38 years and the whole issue of taking clauses and – I call them muddying them because I've been at the negotiation table many times. Many times that you were in negotiations and you ended up adding the words “and,” “or,” “but,” “because,” and “why,” it took away from the essential meaning of the clause, and you can twist it later so that the intent isn't even there anymore.

This has been done over many years. In our place of work we couldn't even agree on what “emergency” was because they thought they had the right to phone you at 2 in the morning and say, “I phoned you, so it's an emergency,” in their opinion. These kinds of things have gone on over the years, and there are all kinds of things that employers have done.

I've participated, I'm sad to say, in many strikes across this province over many years. The worst one, I'll say, was the Gainers one. I don't know how many people in this room were there on that. [interjection] Yeah. I was, too, and it was ugly. Was it necessary on our part as labour? Yes, it was because of the issues and what was being pushed by the employers. It was the employer that decided that they could address the labour issue by replacement workers.

It doesn't matter whether you look at the strikes at Lakeside Packers down at Brooks, Finning, Zeidler's, and so on and so forth. I mean, the list goes on and on, and it was always the same thing. It's important to understand that from labour's point of view, we have to make sure that when we put legislation in, it's going to protect the workers, protect the employers, and make sure we're doing the right thing so that somebody else can't read something else into it that wasn't there to begin with.

This amendment, in my opinion, is muddying this clause and creates indecisiveness as to the way it should read. So I'm opposed to it, as we should be.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to just point out from the last comment that was made there that in the event you were trying to not muddy the waters, I'm not sure if you would consider the size of this bill. I would say that this is actually doing exactly what you said that you don't want to see happen. So that's something to think about.

Anyway, we'll move on here. I have another amendment that I'd like to present. While the legislation as drafted did not adequately include a proper deterrent against waging illegal strikes or illegal walkouts, it also does not include an adequate deterrent against other violations under this act. A one-off sum penalty is not necessarily enough. Furthermore, it is entirely unhelpful if the monetary penalty faced by an individual is paid for by their employer or their trade union. Again, it is entirely unhelpful if a corporation or a trade union facing a monetary penalty can pay it without difficulty and without it being a deterrent.

Accordingly, I wish to propose an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies that I would like to submit.

The Chair: This amendment will be A4. Proceed, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 33 in the proposed section 73 by striking out clauses (a) and (b) and substituting the following:

- (a) in the case of a corporation or trade union, to a fine not exceeding $750 000, or
- (b) in the case of an individual, to a fine not exceeding $75 000, which may not be paid on the individual's behalf by a corporation that employs the individual or by a trade union to which the employee belongs.

This proposed amendment simply recognizes that individuals should be responsible for their own actions, amending section 33 of the legislation by striking out the proposed section 73 and replacing that with fines not exceeding $75,000, which may not be paid on the individual's behalf by a corporation or trade union.

It's clear from the wording of the legislation that the government does recognize already that, yes, individuals who are guilty of offences under this act should be penalized, but it profoundly defaces the spirit of the bill and what it intends to achieve in this section if a corporation or trade union of means is able to pay those fines on behalf of an individual.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for this amendment and for giving us the opportunity to consider it. Similar to discussions about amendment A2, the fine amounts and the process for how fines work in this legislation was something that had to be adjusted to accommodate the essential services framework and some of the language. But the actual amounts as well in this case, the payment of particular fines depending on who may pay something or whatnot, is not what I would consider in scope and was not discussed at length at the consultations, particularly because essential services agreements are about avoiding any illegal strike scenarios through negotiations rather than using highly punitive fines in this case. The fine amounts, again, were not something that we had the opportunity to discuss.

I would say that suggestions such as this would be entirely appropriate as part of our larger review of the labour code, something that I hope to bring a process forward on and work on with the members of this House to determine what might make sense. I certainly suggest that that might be something that we do in the future or have a conversation about with major stakeholders and get into this larger issue.

But for our essential services bill, Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, we just need to focus on making sure that that labour legislation is fair to unionized employees and employers, making sure that essential public services are maintained for all Albertans. I think that we've done that through Bill 4.

I will not be supporting this amendment but would invite the member to potentially bring this forward as part of a larger labour code review. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

4:00

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise, as always, and speak to the amendment, an amendment that would create stronger penalties for other violations inside the legislation. We have heard on numerous occasions from the government side of the House that this bill is long overdue. When it comes to the Supreme Court ruling, we couldn't agree more. Ensuring that all aspects of that ruling have been addressed is certainly important.

We've also heard that this legislation has been the same for approximately 30 years. While a $1,000 fine in the '80s may have been a significant one, it's certainly not as significant today. We had the opportunity to debate a similar amendment in a different section. The principle remains the same, that when illegal actions take place, it is important that there is a deterrent.

Now, I recognize that there are times when individuals will make decisions that they feel are necessary at the time. We've heard of many situations where those actions may be and quite likely were justified. The fine that is proposed by my hon. colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner doesn't say that it will be $750,000 or that it will be $75,000 but that it would be up to. We learned earlier from the Minister of Labour that a judge would determine that. It's quite easy for a judge to hear the facts of why the decisions were made along the way that led an individual or union to act illegally. If in the judge's opinion it becomes justified, one could only imagine that the judge wouldn't then use the maximum fine amount, and it could be quite reasonable.

But it is important in all cases, particularly around essential services, that all parties count the costs, that they recognize that there are consequences for their actions. We have the opportunity while the bill is before us to ensure that it is as robust as possible. To let an opportunity go by – I think the former member for the fabulous constituency of Edmonton-Centre used to say in this place all the time that oftentimes bills don't get back before the House for a number of years. So today is the day. Barring the government's decision to send this bill to committee and allow more fulsome and robust debate at committee, which, as we all know, I am consistently in strong support of – but given that that's not going to happen, today is the day to make additional meaningful changes to the legislation. That's exactly what we are proposing here. It isn't a licence to use the maximum fine. When individuals break the law and can make a reasonable case, it's quite likely that the judge will respond accordingly. But when that doesn't happen, it at least provides teeth and deterrence.

The government, much to their credit, is attempting to put forward legislation that will create the best possible environment for negotiations. We've heard the minister refer on numerous occasions to the lead-up and negotiation in good faith. I think that's wonderful when all of those things happen, but we have to be realistic. There are times when it's not going to be as ideal. There are going to be times when people act inappropriately and illegally, and when they do that, they should be held accountable. That's exactly what this amendment does, and I strongly encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just a little disappointed with some of the conversations I heard recently because we're talking about this not being 1980. I've cited the Bank of Canada's inflation calculator for this, and it has been determined that if we were to match the rate of inflation for $5,000, it would only be about $15,000, not $75,000. The challenge is that, as the member who brought forth the bill alluded to earlier, this may not be the best time for us to discuss this. You know, ultimately, from time to time there are instances for safety reasons that individuals may need to move away from the workplace, and from time to time it may be individuals who are younger and naïve.

You know, the best example I've seen when I was working in the restaurant industry is that we had an unsafe piece of equipment. We had to make a judgment call because we had an employer who was not looking at the option to fix that piece of equipment. What we made the decision to do – and this was a very naïve decision because we did not know about the right to refuse – was walk off the job. Ultimately, our employer moved forward to remedy the situation. At the time I don't know if a heavy fine would have been necessarily the best option for someone who was of a young age to face.

With that being said, I'm not going to support this amendment on the basis that, realistically, we need to look at that as a potential challenge that we could be facing with this at play.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wish to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Any questions or comments? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, I'd like to make an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here. I don't know; may I speak to it before the copies are out?

The Chair: Just wait until I see it.

Mr. McIver: All right. Of course. It has gone through Parliamentary Counsel. What I will say by way of background, with your permission until you see that, is that the minister said that there's going to be a larger labour code review. Yes, she's nodding. Okay. You can't see that at home, but she's nodding.

What I'm suggesting – I won't talk about it until I get permission.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Okay. I just got permission.

I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.41 by striking out subsection (3), which is the subsection disallowing replacement workers.

Madam Chair, the government is doing something important here, which I support. They are putting Alberta in compliance with the Supreme Court decision. Truly, bravo. Happy to support that. The section that I'm asking to be taken out is not part of complying with that Supreme Court of Canada ruling. I guess what I'm suggesting to the minister and to government is that if you want to consider this section, my recommendation is to do it as part of the larger labour code review. This is an item banning replacement workers.

I know it's fashionable with certain groups of people, but the fact is that when we've talked about this, members on the government side of the House have, I believe, agreed that this is about negotiating with a reasonable balance of power between the worker and the employer. To outright ban replacement workers really tips the scale one way beyond the level that is reasonable. As we've talked about, there may well be cases where public health or safety is in jeopardy, and in those cases it's important to be able to bring in workers to do the important work that's there.

There are so many important things that we do here as a province. We look after seniors. We look after disabled people. We look after sick people. We look after highways and roads that keep Albertans safe when they're travelling from point A to B. We plow those roads. We operate safety devices. We inspect workplaces to make sure that workers remain safe. There are so many jobs that after negotiation, whether they're considered essential or not, are still very important. In some cases they're life-and-death important; in other cases they're important for other reasons: to keep the economy going, to keep people safe, to maintain a good quality of life.

What this motion does is that it really says that the work that Alberta civil servants do is important. Passing this would be the House saying that we value the work that Alberta civil servants do, so much so that each time when those occasions come along and when there are labour disruptions, that situation needs to be evaluated on its own merits, and the government and the minister of the day, who – and we all recognize here that the current government is the one elected. Congratulations. Someday it will be another one, but right now it's this one. But the fact is that government is responsible to ensure ongoing health and safety, and this will help them to do that by not taking one of their options away when there's a labour disruption.

For that reason I will move this amendment. I'll ask the members of the House to support it, and I will sit down and listen carefully to what members of the House have to say about it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his comments in making this amendment. I think we have a difference of opinion regarding the scope on this. You did mention that it's not part of the Supreme Court ruling, but I think the discussion specifically around who is doing the work during a strike or lockout is critical. It needs to be discussed and negotiated inside of the essential services agreement so that we can make sure that our essential public services are being maintained for Albertans. It's clear that we need to implement this legislation now.

For those reasons we've included this ban on replacement workers within the essential services agreement. Putting this into place now rather than deferring this piece until later – because I do see it as something that is in scope and that will become key in the negotiations between the employers and the employees as they set out their essential services agreement. We do not want replacement workers to lengthen any job actions or to lengthen the amount of time that it takes to negotiate an essential services agreement. We do need to make sure that this legislation is fair to all parties. The member referred to it as tipping the balance, and I do not agree in that case. When replacement workers were discussed with employers at the consultation, employers stated that in many cases they would never consider replacement workers because they don't have the skills, training, and knowledge that the employees and the members of the bargaining unit have.

It was discussed at consultation. We did consider it as we were preparing this legislation. I see it very much as an important piece of our essential services framework, to make sure that as the two parties come to the table and have this conversation, the situation on the ground during a strike or lockout doesn't spontaneously change through the hiring of replacement workers. In my mind, if we're asking both parties to come in good faith to negotiate in a mature and responsible way, making sure that what gets discussed at that negotiation is what happens is key, and allowing replacement workers says: you can discuss your essential services agreement now; when a strike or lockout happens, the employer can change the ball game. That doesn't make sense.

For those reasons I will not be supporting this amendment, but I'll thank the member and listen to additional comments.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I guess I find myself rising to echo some of the sentiments of my colleagues from earlier with regard to replacement workers. I guess I can draw on my experience in my former life as a shipper/receiver at Lucerne ice cream. Certainly, I wouldn't say that shipping ice cream out is what you would call an essential service, I guess, depending on how you feel about ice cream. Maybe there's an argument there.

We spent a week on our own strike line. I guess for fear of maybe sounding like I'm tooting my own horn, I was very good at my position as a shipper/receiver. I ran a very, very efficient warehouse. We were able to move product out the door at a very incredible rate. During that week off – once I came back to what I thought was going to be, you know, cleaning up a few things here and there, I literally spent the next month trying to undo what had occurred in that simple week's time. I had asked management: who did you bring in? They told me that they had brought over a very qualified shipper/receiver to do my job. Of course, when I saw one trailer, that I knew was bound for Vancouver, and a load that I could do personally myself within about a three-hour period taking upwards of seven and eight hours to do, I question someone's perception about what they necessarily feel is a qualified temporary worker.

When we're talking, again, about ice cream, maybe it's not necessarily a significant thing, but translated into other areas of government and health care and whatnot, I shudder at the fact of what could be considered as a qualified temporary worker. I guess, you know, with that experience behind me, I don't think I can support this amendment, and I would urge my colleagues to not support it as well.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Let me say this. We heard from the minister that these things need to be negotiated. Well, with all due respect, if you leave this section in, there will be nothing to negotiate because it will just be outlawed, so what the minister said needs to happen won't be able to happen if this section is in there.

Further, the other thing that I heard government members say – and I agree with them on this, just for the record – is that which jobs and which work are essential services and which are not needs to be negotiated. Now, Madam, that's important. I know the government will do your best. I know you will. But here's the interesting thing about negotiations. There are two people at the table. They're both defending their own interests. Sometimes people make mistakes. Sometimes one party is a better negotiator than the other party.

Because of that, despite the government's best efforts – and again I will give them credit that they will make their best efforts – with the number of positions, 220,000 roughly, paid out of the provincial payroll, if one of those positions is wrong in the negotiation between what's essential and what's not and there's a labour disruption where something should have been deemed essential and it wasn't, either because of an honest, well-intentioned mistake or one side of a negotiation being a better negotiator or having better information on that day, the possibility surely exists that something that's pretty darn important or essential will be deemed nonessential and, as such, be open to strike action. If the bill passes with this in it, then the government will by their own law be very much powerless to deal with that.

The other thing that I would remind the government: if you really feel that strongly about it, the time to do it might be at the larger labour code review, after the negotiations about what's essential and what's not, when the government can be more sure about whether they got it right, that one side didn't outbargain the other and deem something essential that shouldn't have been or not essential that should have been. Actually, there might even be a few months that go by where the government will have experience with the results of the negotiations and be able to look at it and say: "Wow. We negotiated to the best of our ability with the best intentions on behalf of Albertans, and somewhere along the way one negotiator had a bad day. Somebody made a mistake. Somebody's judgment wasn't as good as they would have liked it to have been." Then they'll be caught when there's a labour disruption and unable to undo that.

For the government, by supporting this, I'm offering you insurance that you don't end up looking bad later. If you're going to do this, you should do it later, after you have some experience, after you negotiate, after you, the employer, and the employees have the benefit of second thought. That would be an appropriate time to do it. This is an insurance policy, that you're throwing out the window if you leave this section in right now. As such, respectfully, I think I'm doing Albertans a favour, and respectfully I think I'm doing the government a favour by suggesting that they leave that insurance policy intact until they have a little bit of experience with this because this is a big change. If I'm not mistaken, there are well over 100,000 employees that are going to get the right to strike that don't have it now. That's a good thing, but with that many positions, that many job descriptions – none of us is perfect.

I don't know, but if I was in the minister's shoes or in the Premier's shoes, I was thinking that if I was going to make a change that big, that profound, I might want to have an insurance policy in my back pocket just in case I get 95 per cent of it right and not a hundred per cent of it right. That's what I'm suggesting that the government do, to keep that insurance policy in their back pocket so that they can protect themselves if they're imperfect. No disrespect to the government. We're all imperfect. There it is. I'm trying to help.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you for trying to help. It's very much appreciated, and I'm happy to talk about this a little bit more because I want to make it clear that in the legislation if the negotiation is wrong, if we missed somebody who was essential – these are being negotiated in advance. To be clear, strike or lockout cannot happen until an essential services agreement is filed with the essential services commissioner. That means that the process needs to happen in advance of the collective bargaining process starting.

Again, negotiations for essential services are going to happen in advance, and if we miss something, if something's not included, we've actually got provisions within this bill that will help us to deal with those scenarios. Either party can initiate a renegotiation of the essential services agreement because something was missed. If something is missed, on an emergency basis, as some of the earlier scenarios discussed, on the ground those two parties can come to an agreement, and we've heard from some of my colleagues that that is what happens in most scenarios during a strike. Alternatively, the umpire can make rulings, and then the commissioner can come in and suggest adjustments. So we're not in the scenario where we write up this document and then everyone has to live by it and if something's wrong with it, there's nothing we can do.

The clause that's included and that we're discussing with this amendment is needed now because we are implementing the essential services agreement to fulfill a Supreme Court ruling. The timing on this is incredibly tight. We need to put in a system that works as soon as possible, and for that we relied on people with experience. We relied on people with experience to advise this government through the process. We made sure to consult the people who use this system on both the employer and employee side, those impacted, labour negotiators, mediators, arbitrators, and others within the labour relations world. While the hon. member is right to point out a lack of experience in myself as a new minister, we had a lot of experience that went into creating this legislation.

I am always happy to take good advice, as we've seen earlier today. Good advice is always welcome.

I would like to echo that this a public safety issue. We need to make sure that highly skilled, trained, familiar-with-the-environment people are the ones that are delivering the services to Albertans. We get the best results when we know that's happening, having staff that know the clients, understand the workplaces and the scenarios. If they're needed during a strike or lockout, then that can be negotiated.

To hear the language that leaving this in is an insurance policy for the government – it's an out in case something goes wrong – doesn't sound like going to a bargaining table in good faith. If one side has an insurance policy and has an out, I think the other side knows that, and I think it influences the discussions. We want our two parties to come to the table as equals. We want there to be respect and trust when we're talking about the essential services agreement and respect and trust as we're talking about collective bargaining because there are a lot of elements where we are in the same position or on the same side of the table. We want to serve Albertans. We want to have safe, healthy, and fair workplaces.

That's very important to this government. There's a lot when it comes to the negotiations that the two sides could be in agreement on. Respectful negotiations are key, and I think that's what we're striving for going forward.

We've got 150,000 employees that are impacted by this legislation, so it does impact quite a few people.

I appreciate the opportunity to talk about this legislation once more. I think it is made in Alberta and addresses some of our unique needs.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. When dealing with essential services legislation, it's absolutely integral that the precise definition of what constitutes an essential service is carefully considered. Any wording should be carefully considered and assessed based on what would and would not be included. Accordingly, there are some omissions in the government's definition of essential services that should be corrected. The current legislation only includes those services which, if interrupted,

- (a) . . . would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the public, or
- (b) that are necessary to the maintenance and administration of the rule of law or public security.

Without a doubt, we agree that any service that falls into these definitions should be considered essential, but there are important services that would not necessarily meet this criteria.

I wish to introduce an amendment to address this issue. I have the necessary requisite copies, that I would like to submit at this time.

The Chair: This amendment will be known as amendment A6. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.1 by striking out "or" at the end of clause (a) and by adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) that are necessary to prevent serious environmental damage,
- (d) that are necessary to prevent major deterioration of workplace machinery, equipment, or premises, or needed to secure workplace premises, or
- (e) that are necessary to properly manage the finances or investment funds of the Government of Alberta.

4:30

I believe that these amendments will ensure that essential services are better defined in order to better serve Albertans. Under the definition proposed in the legislation by the government, those who manage Alberta's significant investment funds and make important decisions based on when there are sudden market changes would not be declared essential nor would those who maintain machinery or help prevent serious environmental damage. We recognize the importance of the work done in these areas and that there are potential devastating consequences if they are all suddenly off the job. This amendment helps ensure that Albertans are protected.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for this amendment and the opportunity to talk about the definition of essential services. As I think most people will agree, the definition of essential services is a key part of this legislation. It's critical, and it was something that the Supreme Court of Canada spent a lot of time discussing and considering. It's something that we talked about quite a bit in our consultations. There are three different types of definition of essential services across Canada: consequence-based, which is what we have here, where you describe the types of consequences or things you need to avoid through defining essential services; there's an enumeration approach, where you say that this role is essential, that role is essential; and there's the option of removing the definition entirely.

The enumeration approach of saying this is an essential role, that is an essential role was the style of essential services legislation that was happening in Saskatchewan when the Supreme Court ruling came down. Saskatchewan has since updated its essential services legislation based on the Supreme Court ruling. What they chose to do was remove the definition entirely. In Saskatchewan they don't have a definition of essential services. Rather the two parties need to negotiate and determine what essential is, without the legislation providing any guidelines or guidance. So that's how one jurisdiction chose to react to the Supreme Court ruling.

All other definitions have not been tested against the SFL decision of the Supreme Court. I think that that's really important to note because I know that some pieces of this amendment, some of these new definitions, come from other jurisdictions. They are in place in other places, but they have not been tested against the Supreme Court ruling. The only jurisdiction that has updated based on the Supreme Court ruling chose to not include a definition at all.

In the Supreme Court ruling – and I will endeavour to read just a little bit of this – it talks in paragraph 84 about the importance of knowing what essential services are. It talks about some previous decisions, and it reads:

These decisions have consistently defined an essential service as a service "whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population" . . . In my view, and without attempting an exhaustive list, persons essential to the maintenance and administration of the rule of law and national security would also be included within the ambit of essential services. Mere inconvenience to members of the public does not fall within the ambit of the essential services justification for abrogating the freedom to strike.

In our case here in Alberta what we are bringing forward now is a more narrow version. Specific words in any definition can be too narrow, can be too broad, or can cause insensitive interpretations. We are relying on the unions and the employers to work together to decide what is essential and potentially a neutral third party to help with that. In order for the neutral third party and those involved to make good decisions, we settled on a definition that focuses in on some of those key life, health, safety, public security discussions, taken directly from the Supreme Court interpretation, so endangering the life, personal safety, or health, that type of language. I would argue that our definition is very closely aligned with the Supreme Court of Canada decision and with our obligations under the international obligations, so the international labour organizations.

Employers aside from the essential services bargaining unit members must always plan for and make contingency plans for the types of things listed in the amendment under (c), (d), and (e). They do so by the use of management employees and others. They do so by shutting down equipment that might be vulnerable. Specifically around (e) I'm concerned that it is very broad. Finances and investment funds of the province could extend to every clerk that's checking expense accounts. How do we determine exactly what that implies? I think it includes maybe more people as essential, where I'm not entirely certain that that's the intent. As well, the finances and investment funds of our province are largely handled by persons outside of the bargaining unit either because they're management employees or because they're employees excluded in section 12 of PSERA.

In order to create legislation that gives that power, that negotiating flexibility to the two parties, that allows us to make sure that we're truly dealing with essential services, and gives guidance to a neutral third party to make recommendations, our feeling is that by broadening the definition and including environmental damage, deterioration of workplace machinery, managing finances or investment funds, that's going too broad. I think mirroring the Supreme Court decision and keeping a bit more of a narrow focus and then relying on our two parties to come to an agreement on what is essential for each workplace is going to serve us better.

Again, I will state that through the consultation process with our various stakeholders, labour relations experts, unions, and employers there was a lot of discussion around this. In the end, the government chose to go with something that really closely matched the Supreme Court ruling.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to highlight a few things. I found the comments from the minister quite interesting, particularly around the fact that the only jurisdiction that has a quasi-tested definition – no jurisdiction has an actual tested definition – the jurisdiction that was first to respond and responsible, if you will, for the Supreme Court ruling in the SFL case, has no definition. So we're, you know, trying to navigate the waters in the best way possible. Certainly, we rarely consider following the lead of some of the other provinces in this country, but we certainly do see the environmental protection piece of this amendment in other jurisdictions.

Madam Chair, I think you can imagine a situation in a far-off, significantly rural portion of the province. In fact, you drive those areas of the province on a very regular basis. I think yesterday in the House you referred to driving 600 kilometres just to go and see a concert and then returning home because that's what people do in the north. So we can see a situation where there's significant cause for serious environmental damage with this definition. It wouldn't endanger life or public safety because of the remote nature of it or health of the public because of the remote nature of it or it wouldn't be necessary to the maintenance or the administration of the rule of law or public security but is potentially causing significant damage to our province. The breakdown in negotiations or a strike might prevent action on this because it's not deemed as part of the essential services definition.

As I mentioned, there are other provinces that have this parameter, and I think that it's one that we would be wise to adhere to. We on this side of the House would not want to see serious environmental damage taking place over a prolonged period of time because a service hadn't been determined to be essential, the same as there are people who manage the finances of our province who, quite likely, aren't going to fall into the realm of essential services because of the definition that's been put forward in this piece of legislation.

There are times when the market has been extremely volatile, and it could potentially expose significant risk in terms of the costs that could be incurred by the province of Alberta if the financial management side of our province isn't considered to be essential. Now, we all know that there can be negotiation that would take place should they be considered essential, and then we can move the path forward. But the problem is that if it's not in the definition, we can get into a situation where the province could be losing millions and millions and perhaps tens of millions of dollars on a daily, weekly, or, depending on the length of the disruption, monthly basis, in which case it could move into the hundreds of millions, all because we don't have the definition quite right. So I think that this amendment is quite reasonable.

We have also used examples already in this Chamber today about some other areas that may be beneficial to be considered essential, particularly in the case of the deterioration of workplace machinery, equipment, or premises where should they fall outside of the scope, we could see significant risk to the province, particularly in the maintenance of our assets.

I think that today is a great day to have some discussion around exactly what should be included inside the definition. This is a very critical portion of the debate. It's something that we have the opportunity to get right today. While I recognize that there are some unquities and some challenges with the fact that no definition has been tested, I think we ought to err on the side of ensuring a robust definition that includes things like the protection of the environment where there is serious environmental damage, to err on the side of preventing major deterioration of workplace machinery and equipment, and to err on the side of ensuring that the finances of the province can be managed through significant disruption.

We have a responsibility and certainly the ministries across government and the ministers have a responsibility to ensure that services continue to be provided. By accepting this amendment, it puts some additional tools certainly in the hands of the Environment minister, certainly in the hands of the Finance minister, and perhaps in the hands of the Infrastructure and Transportation minister to make sure that the needs of our province are being met no matter the state of negotiations that are taking place in the province.

We all, while we're in this place, need to be taking a very long view on our approach to public policy. We need to make sure that we are trying to foresee circumstances ahead of us that are going to have a positive impact on the province over a long period of time. Much of this bill does that. Much of this bill works to try and mitigate labour disruption while ensuring essential services are continued. It changes many things about the environment around labour negotiations, all of which are very important both to the province or to large employers as well as to employees and members of unions and Albertans in terms of their rights that we've seen granted by the Supreme Court ruling.

I encourage members on all sides of the Chamber to consider the ramifications that could exist if the definition isn't broadened, to consider the significant financial risks that we would be then placing our province under, and to consider the significant potential damage to infrastructure that could exist if this amendment isn't accepted and, in turn, these services deemed not essential. I encourage members on both sides of the Chamber to consider the amendment, to support the amendment to ensure that our province has the best possible definition moving forward. Should that definition be challenged, we would then need to deal with that at that time.

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Regardless of how many members in this place feel about the proposed legislation, how it addresses the needs identified by the Supreme Court decision, there is one thing we can all agree on. The aftermath of the Supreme Court decision is that the labour relations and employment law landscape in Alberta is significantly changed. We recognize that the government needed to put this legislation forward, but it is a significant shift from labour relations in Alberta. Accordingly, given this new experience there should be an onus on the Legislative Assembly to revisit this legislation after a time. There could be unintended consequences. There could be matters pertaining to vital, essential services that we have not yet considered. Frankly, we owe it to Albertans to always be mindful of essential services.

Accordingly, I am proposing an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies, and I would like to present those now.

The Chair: This will be amendment A7.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm saddened to see that so many won't be able to hear how good this amendment is going to be. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended by adding the following after section 34. It reads:

Part 4

Expiry

35. The amendments brought into force by this Act expire on April 1, 2021, and the affected provisions shall revert to the form that they were in prior to the coming into force of this Act, unless the Assembly adopts a resolution no earlier than April 1, 2020, that this Act not be repealed.

As members will note, this is not an ad infinitum call for countless reviews. An overt and frequent use of sunset clauses is merely red tape upon the machinery of government. That's why this amendment calls for a single revisitation. This is a one-time obligation upon the government of Alberta to revisit this particular piece of legislation. In several years' time there will be feedback from stakeholders from all sides of the bargaining table about whether or not the final version of this bill to pass through the House got it right. Perhaps there will have been strikes and lockouts in which the successes and shortcomings of this act will have been on full display. Creating a particular window that requires the government to re-review the legislation, whether that is this government or a future government, is simply a common-sense measure when it comes to significant legislation like this.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for this amendment. Albertans need to know that our vital public services will be protected in the event of a labour dispute. For this legislation we've held extensive consultation on essential services with employers, employees, and the public to make sure we get it right. The Supreme Court has ruled that if the bill expires, it will leave Albertans with either a void of no essential services exceptions or, given the language in this amendment where it reverts to this earlier form, then it would provide back to the compulsory arbitration phase.

But I'm also concerned that it says: "revert to the form that they were in prior." Knowing that this government would like to do some labour code reviews as the labour code is continually changed after this is put in place, how does that impact that need? When I do do a labour code review – let's say that that happens in, you know, six months – does that meet the requirements of this expiry? Does my larger labour code review mean that we've fulfilled the needs here?

I appreciate that the member opposite doesn't think that this is red tape because it's just once, but we've seen the members opposite propose sunset/expiry dates in the past, so it does feel a little bit like red tape although it is just the once. I don't think that this expiry date adds reasonable value. Again, I think it puts us at risk with the Supreme Court ruling if anything were to happen that removes our essential services legislation. It is the intention of this government that should there be needed adjustments to this legislation, to do that in a timely manner, not in a scheduled manner, waiting four or five years out.

For some of these reasons I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that the comments made by the minister maybe are a little misleading on this in that the law will still be the law. The Supreme Court ruling will still be the Supreme Court ruling. The point with the sunset clause is that it allows legislators to be able to revisit this issue based upon a lot more evidence, a lot more time having passed, and it's not an out because that Supreme Court ruling is still the precedent that is being set.

What this allows the Legislature or the government at the time to do is to be able to address this issue in a way where we have a lot more information, and I think that that's something that would benefit this government to be able to take a look at. This is just an option for them to be able to make sure that in the end, if it has to be tweaked, it still can be tweaked.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in support of this amendment. I know that people on all sides of the House will be surprised by that, but I think what we have here is an important amendment that strengthens the legislation. One of the reasons why we got here, outside of the Supreme Court ruling, is that the fact of the matter is that this hasn't been done for 30 years. There are some significant challenges in the legislation because there was no requirement for the Assembly to act.

I know it's going to be hard to believe, but from time to time politicians are sometimes not that incentivized to deal with tough issues. They sometimes don't like to tackle the issues of the day as promptly as perhaps they need to, so what happens is that decades go by, and we have legislation that has the tendency to become antiquated. While the Supreme Court ruling is very unlikely to change, there are certainly many aspects of the legislation. While we've heard the minister commit to a more fulsome review, that may or may not happen. And I don't mean that because the minister is disingenuous in her comments. I just mean that there are often additional political pressures that wind up guiding a government's decision-making process.

I hesitate to talk about things that may not be entirely relevant to the amendment, but the political decisions that were around the presentation of the budget, a budget that is the fourth-latest presentation in the last 15 years, were very likely made because of political pressures. So if we don't have a firm timeline and a requirement upon the Assembly or perhaps the minister, from time to time we wind up in situations where decades go by and nothing has changed. The great thing about this amendment is that it would ensure that that doesn't happen.

What needs to continually be a process in this House is that we make a commitment to ensure that the legislation we're responsible for remains current, that it is in the best interests of Albertans: union workers, employers, the government, all of the stakeholders. When we pass bills with just a commitment, that commitment is from time to time not fulfilled, particularly when there are changes in government and the new government may be distracted by other tasks at hand. This requirement ensures that that won't happen. The minister is quite right that we don't want to see the province getting into any significant challenges with the legislation lapsing, so one can only imagine that the government of the day would ensure that that didn't happen.

I strongly support this type of legislation. I agree with my hon. colleague that it's not red tape. You know, the minister had said that it adds red tape. A very good case could be made that this isn't red tape but good governance. Our decisions have ramifications in the Assembly, and it's important that we review those decisions in reasonable timelines, and I think the timeline laid out in the amendment is more than reasonable. It allows for the bill to be in place for significant contract negotiations to take place all across the province with some of our largest employee groups. At the end of that, we can come back and find out if the decisions made today accurately reflect the decision, accurately reflect the things that are inside the scope of the Supreme Court ruling and the large number of items outside of the Supreme Court ruling that have been included in Bill 4.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment. I look forward to an additional amendment passing in this Assembly today. As we saw this great spirit of co-operation that took place earlier in the day, I hope that we can continue such teamwork.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak to this amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Chair: Back on Bill 4, are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Hunter: Madam Chair, it's been a great day. Actually, maybe I'll amend that and say that it started out as a great day.

As my colleagues and I have previously stated, members who have reviewed the legislation will know that there is a disproportionate amount of power in a single commissioner who makes key decisions on essential services. Albertans, regardless of which side of the table they are on in an essential services negotiation, deserve to know that their interests are being served by a commissioner who is in touch with the situation in Alberta and with Albertans' needs. When things go wrong in essential services agreements or negotiations, when other avenues like going through umpires have failed, it's the commissioner that makes the call.

Alberta's labour environment is different than in other provinces. The employment and labour landscape is different than in British Columbia or Saskatchewan or Manitoba. While it's possible that there's someone in another jurisdiction who has valuable experience in essential services discussions, it is not the same as having someone from Alberta. For any government to unilaterally parachute in someone from out of province would simply betray the trust of Albertans. Only an Albertan will truly fight for Albertans' best interests.

For this reason I wish to move an amendment. I would like to present the requisite number of copies of an amendment speaking to this issue, and I do so at this time.

The Chair: This will be amendment A8.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.3 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The Commissioner must be a resident in Alberta for at least 6 of the 10 years preceding designation under subsection (1).

With this amendment we do recognize that many Albertans, like other Canadians, do migrate to other provinces for shorter or longer periods of their lives. They may still be gaining valuable professional experience elsewhere, but given the prescribed role of the commissioner it's good common sense that the commissioner is someone who lives in Alberta and actually files their taxes here.

I think that out of all the amendments, Madam Chair, this is my favourite one, and one of the reasons why I would say that it's my favourite is because we have a lot of jobs that have been lost in Alberta; wouldn't it be nice to be able to keep at least one here?

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of the outstanding people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to speak to the amendment. I think that we have seen some significant changes in our province. We have seen some significant changes in the leadership of our province, and this role, the Alberta commissioner, the commissioner in the legislation, is a critical role in the future and in the functioning of the province of Alberta.

While we can recognize that there are lots of talented people that live right across this great land of ours, there are some unquities about Alberta. There are things that make Alberta unique. That is the actual definition of unquities, particularly for the good people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. In fact, I think you'll find that that is an Alberta-specific phrase, something that a commissioner that had spent six out of the last 10 years in Alberta would fully understand. It is exactly why we need to ensure that the commissioner is, in fact, an Albertan. We have some of the most talented people that live right here in our province, and I think it's critically important that we celebrate that.

Madam Chair, I've said many times in this place that the government of Alberta isn't what makes Alberta great; it is Albertans. It is Albertans that make Alberta great. In fact, Albertans have been making Alberta great in spite of the government, particularly in the last few years of the previous government. So I don't know why we wouldn't ensure that an Albertan fills this critical role of the commissioner.

We're not suggesting that people should never leave Alberta so that they can have a career here. We're suggesting that six out of the last 10 years is reasonable for an expert in the area to have a continued understanding of the issues of the day, to have full knowledge of the legislation, to have full knowledge of the current issues of the day in Alberta. I think it's critically important that we celebrate the success and the incredible talent that we have here in Alberta, to have a commissioner from Alberta. To ensure Alberta's interests, the interests of all of those engaged in the negotiation, including the government, workers, employees of the government, those providing essential services, and taxpayers, it's critically important that we have an Albertan defending the interests of all of those people.

That's exactly what this amendment would ensure, that the commissioner needs to reside in the province for six out of the last 10 years, and I think it's very reasonable. I think that all members of the Assembly should support such an amendment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. I listened with great interest. Now, I did hear that Albertans make Alberta great, and in the context of this amendment I'm wondering if you give preference to those who've been here longer, six years out of 10. Are those the Albertans you're talking about?

The best person for the job of essential services commissioner is going to be someone who understands the law and the Albertan community. Absolutely. In my short time as the Labour minister I have learned a few things, and one of those is that the Alberta labour relations community is tight-knit, relatively small. Everyone knows each other. They understand the unique needs of the Alberta labour relations system.

I can commit to you that I will be making sure that an Albertan is the person we select for the labour relations essential services commissioner, making this amendment not necessary. I mean, within the legislation we state that the commissioner is a member of the Labour Relations Board, and Labour Relations Board members are required to understand the unique environment here in Alberta. So understanding the Alberta labour relations environment is a key component of that. We will be selecting the best person for the job. As part of that, I will be engaging the labour relations community – that's a process that I've already begun because we will need an essential services commissioner sooner rather than later – talking to the community and hearing what makes sense.

I certainly hope that all members will support our new essential services commissioner once that person begins what will be a very tough job for the first few months, implementing and overseeing vitally important legislation that protects the rights of our employees to strike and protects the public service and those vital public services that we all rely on.

For these reasons, the fact that it's unnecessary and a bit odd, I will not be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

5:30

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. As encouraged as I am with the scout's honour, we will make sure we do the right thing in this situation. It's always better to make sure that you have the legislation in order to be able to get this right. What's interesting about this is that this is a reasoned amendment, yet it almost seems like the minister is stopping what she says she's going to do anyway. So I'm not sure why we shouldn't just pass this and get on with the work of the day.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to say that finding an essential services commissioner, making sure we have the right person for this job is going to be an incredibly important task, making sure we get the right combination of people who can understand the labour relations environment and oversee an incredibly, vitally important service. If I find someone who's been a resident of Alberta for five years and I'm not able to make that person an offer because of this amendment, that would be a shame if that was the best person. I don't have an essential services commissioner in mind, but this type of a hoop that must be jumped through does not seem productive in selecting the best person for the job for Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have a very quick question. Seeing how we're just chatting about the commissioner, what do you think is a reasonable timeline for the hiring of the commissioner? What do you currently have in mind?

Ms Gray: That is a very good question. We're currently getting a legal opinion on whether we can start posting now or if the legislation needs to be passed before we can do that. We want to make sure we do this properly. We're having conversations.

Certainly, the labour relations community, who were engaged heavily in the development of Bill 4, are aware that we need an essential services commissioner and that that position is coming up, so we can have a lot of great conversations about it. As far as posting and timeline, we're waiting on a legal opinion before we go there.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, just listening to the debate back and forth – and there are some good points on both sides, I guess – I had to stop and think here just a little bit about the fact that when we lost our net for a new Clerk, one of the things that we found was that the best person for the job was the person that we had home grown, the person that intimately understood this Legislature, not the other Legislatures, intimately understood the job that we have to do and how the various rules of the Legislature apply to us. We chose very wisely, and we can see the benefit of that, of choosing somebody that was experienced and talented and knew what we needed to have done here in the Legislature.

I want to contrast that with a similar decision that's been made in this province that some of my constituents have brought forward with some concern. We have a position in our province called the Chief Firearms Officer, and when we went to make the decision as to who that person would be, we allowed in this province for that individual to be appointed by somebody from down east. Many of the people in the hunting and gun community of my constituency have been very concerned with the fact that the persons or people that have been appointed to this position haven't understood the culture of Alberta and haven't understood what they needed to and how to interpret the Firearms Act in this province. They've been very concerned with the fact that somebody coming from outside, who didn't understand how things were done, was making decisions that would affect everybody's life in Alberta.

I can't help but think that that analogy or that situation, that case study example, is similar to what we're talking about here. All this amendment is asking us to do as a Legislature is to assure us that not only are we looking for a very competent and experienced person but somebody that also understands Albertans and Alberta and that when we start talking about essential services and balancing those rights to strike versus the right to protect public services, they understand what we want and what we have done in the past in this province.

So I would speak to this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just really wanted to stand and say one last time that I am going to be looking for someone who knows Alberta and is the best person for the job.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill, Bill 4. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Hunter: I think I'm winning them over. I thought I heard a clap over there.

Madam Chair, when this legislation comes into force, employers and bargaining units for workers will be negotiating essential services agreements for the first time in Alberta. Given that essential services are vital and integral to the day-to-day well-being of Albertans, it's important that we get as much of this legislation right the first time as possible. As currently worded, Bill 4 does not allow for quick emergency amendments. It may be discovered in the middle of a strike or lockout while negotiations are ongoing that a certain service should have been designated essential but was not. Accordingly, there needs to be a mechanism that allows for a quick return of those services should such a situation arise. Any such provision should recognize the rights of workers but would also recognize that there is important work to be done.

That's why I'm seeking an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies, that I will present to the Clerk at this time.

The Chair: This will be amendment A9.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment moves that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed 95.45 by adding the following subsection:

(1.1) Upon the filing of an application under subsection (1), notwithstanding section 95.41(3), an employer may use the services of persons hired by the employer or supplied to the employer by another person to perform the work of those employees in the bargaining unit that is on the strike or lockout until such time as the Commissioner makes a declaration under subsection (1) or advises that a declaration will not be made.

This amendment will allow for temporary workers to get the job done should it need to be done. The legislation already does account for back-to-work situations, as would be the case in a large-scale public health emergency such as SARS. Not every emergency would be of that size or magnitude but would be significant regardless given that it would pertain to an essential service. This amendment would allow for a short-term solution in those scenarios while negotiations are ongoing.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much. I am rising to speak to this amendment because I think there might be a misunderstanding with the legislation. There is a mechanism built into this legislation so that if there is something happening on the ground and decisions need to be made, that's where our concept of the umpire comes in. This essential services framework, which is a made-in-Alberta solution addressing our province's unique needs, ensuring that the legislation is fair for unionized employees and employers and making sure that the essential public services are maintained, does this through a couple of mechanisms, including the use of an umpire. That umpire will be involved in the negotiation of an essential services agreement and will become familiar with the workplace involved. Likely someone who has worked in health care would be the umpire, the mediator/arbitrator for a health care environment, for example.

That umpire plays another role, and that is to make decisions or rulings in case of a need during a strike or lockout. In the scenario, as I understand your description, the umpire is the one who will come and, on the ground, make a call. The legislation refers to the questioning of the umpire's decisions. It could get escalated up to the commissioner, especially if someone disagrees. But we very much needed a mechanism that – if something was going sideways during a strike or lockout, it needed to be dealt with immediately, and that is where the umpire comes in. Again, the umpire, that terminology, comes from baseball. It's somebody on the field making the call immediately.

In this case, I am not going to support this amendment because the legislation already has this. I think that your introductory comments neglected to mention that this is another form of replacement worker in that you're allowing the employer to hire additional people during that strike or lockout, something that is prohibited in earlier sections, that we've had a few conversations around. I would mention that this touches on the replacement worker argument again.

But the key point in my mind is that this legislation, intended to protect vital public services, does allow for a mechanism so that if there's a change or something that needs to be done rapidly on the ground, that can happen.

Mr. Hunter: With respect, Madam Chair, I just need some clarity from the minister, if I could. If I understand you correctly, you're saying that the umpire has the ability and the right to possibly bring in temporary workers. My question is, then: you're going to ask a person that may not have the necessary knowledge of the industry to make a decision about whether or not these temporary workers would be needed in this situation whereas an employer, whether it's government, public, or private, would have the best understanding of the situation. That's my first question.

The second question that I have for you. If you are saying that the umpire's role is going to be – say, for instance, in the example of health care they would have a knowledge of health care. Are you going to have umpires for every industry that have an understanding of every industry? I mean, we're talking about now creating a WCB or an OH and S. Is this the scope of what you're trying to do here?

Ms Gray: Thank you for the questions. I believe that I was misunderstood. There is a ban on replacement workers in the legislation. The umpire would not be making a ruling to hire someone for the employer. It would be, rather, to potentially ask one of the strike line employees to come back to fulfill that function.

As well, umpires are not necessarily going to be subject matter experts in every industry or field. Someone who is a skilled mediator/arbitrator could be an umpire in most scenarios. I did refer to an umpire potentially understanding health care scenarios because there are a few more technical or difficult to negotiate, where understanding some of the nuances could be more important, but I don't believe it's the case that we need highly specialized umpires throughout. Mediation and arbitration are the main skill sets. Umpires or people who could fulfill the role of umpires exist today in our labour relations system performing different roles. We have people who can do this job. It's going to be a new role, but it's going to essentially be mediation and arbitration in its focus. Someone who's done that before for health care might do that job again.

I hope that clarifies for the member.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to speak to this bill, and in principle I've told you that I agree with it, but there's some conflicting information in this that speaks to a group of people that are near and dear to my heart, the profession that I come from, and that's emergency medical services.

Consider: it's the middle of summer. Your child is in the back, in the pool. They're playing, and they've drowned or nearly drowned. Is that not a public safety issue, that harm to your child and having an ambulance, a skilled professional there to save that child's life? Would you agree? Would the government agree? I think you would. I think all Albertans would.

We see in this bill that firefighters are an essential service from the start. Compulsory arbitration: rightly so. Police: compulsory arbitration. What's missing is paramedics, that are out on the street every day saving lives and providing essential care to people that are in pain, quality of life, until they can get further care. Mental health issues are on the rise, particularly now with the way the economy is, yet the government – and, believe me, I've worked all day on this to try to get them included as essential services. I can tell you right now that if I did a poll in this province, people would agree that emergency medical services should be an essential service along with firemen and police.

My question is to the minister. Minister, can you just fix this one nuance, and then when you get to the negotiation piece after the fact around the essential services, you can figure out what that looks like inside a bargaining unit? We have firefighters with their own union, police with their own union. We have an effective bargaining unit that represents two-thirds or more of the emergency medical professionals, and they do a good job, but this group or part of them can be hived off immediately by this government.

It's the right decision. We don't want to have to worry if the ambulance is going to show up or not. Everybody would agree, especially if you're the mom or you're the father and your child is nearly drowned, sick, with a broken leg, or in a car accident. They're essential to life. They are essential to making sure that when your loved one is in pain and they're crying and they're writhing in pain, the trauma that that brings to a patient – and I know there are other health care professionals. Our job is to take that pain away. Our job is to make sure that the community has confidence that when you call the ambulance, they're going to be there. There should be no negotiation. There should be no threat of a walkout, no threat of a strike for something that you need to save a life.

What I can't understand after all the work that I did in CUPE 3421 and all my brethren did before then to get parity with police and fire is why today this government can't recognize emergency medical services as an essential service to the life and well-being of Albertans. Now, I tried to make this so that this could be your amendment, so that you can make this decision. To be honest with you, anybody who has a special interest, whether it's a union or anything else, to leverage the skill and the responsibility that paramedics have shouldn't even come into question. The right decision, Minister, respectfully: recognize paramedics along with firemen and police as the core backbone of the safety and well-being of Albertans, I implore you.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 4. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Madam Speaker, I move that we adjourn the House until tomorrow at 9 a.m.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. When we focus on possibilities, obstacles and barriers diminish. At the close of this week in service of the people of this province let us continue to focus on what we can do, not on what we cannot.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 4

An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. To continue our work and discussions from yesterday, I'd like to speak to some of the comments we heard around ambulance attendants. Our government supports front-line workers, our paramedics and our emergency services technicians. The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that the right to strike is fundamental for public-sector workers to engage in meaningful collective bargaining. In crafting this legislation, we relied on two key sources, the Supreme Court of Canada ruling itself, which we are legally obligated to comply with, and the experts – employees, employers, the public, and labour relations stakeholders – consulted during the engagements, led by Mr. Andrew Sims. Through this process and with that guidance we chose a consequence-based approach to defining essential services rather than an enumeration approach, where the government would name individual categories of essential services.

Ambulance workers, including paramedics and EMTs, working for Alberta Health Services are part of a larger bargaining unit for which many essential services agreements will need to be made. It is highly likely that these workers would be considered essential and not permitted to strike, for many of the compelling reasons that we heard yesterday. For independent ambulance operators the bargaining units are smaller and would result in a situation where nearly all the workers would be considered essential, and any strike or lockout scenario would be ineffective to the collective bargaining process. In that case, the bargaining unit will remain subject to compulsory arbitration, and this was discussed and agreed to during the consultation process.

We have engaged with the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, and they are in favour of this legislation as written, which provides these workers with the opportunity to negotiate essential services. More broadly speaking, the Supreme Court ruling is clear. These workers have the right to strike.

I want to speak specifically about the vital role that paramedics and EMTs play in emergency care. We know that paramedics and EMTs are some of our most courageous front-line emergency responders, providing advanced medical care in life-threatening situations. In Alberta there are over 4,000 emergency medical responders, emergency medical technicians, and emergency medical technologists, paramedics. In the Edmonton zone alone EMS professionals respond to more than 157,000 events annually. We know that when lives are on the line, the skills and knowledge of a paramedic can make the difference between life and death. We are tremendously proud of these paramedics and EMTs, and we are all thankful for the emergency services workers who bring their skills and professionalism to patients every day.

Make no mistake; we understand these workers are absolutely critical to the public health and safety of Albertans. I can't stress enough how grateful I am – I believe we all are – for the brave and courageous work they do. I would like to invite Albertans to visit thankaparamedic.com to show your appreciation. This website is hosted by Alberta Health Services. It lists hundreds of amazing thank-you letters to paramedics from Albertans. While so many of these stories would have you in tears, I will share just one.

On Thursday, Sept 17 I had collapsed while calling 911 . . . I'm not sure of the paramedics' names. But I want to thank them for saving me. You are the ones that you never get to speak to. You are the ones that sneak out the back door once everything is under control. You are the Angels!

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have one quick question for the minister. In your remarks you said that it's not likely to affect this group of courageous individuals that serve our province so well. What if you're not right? What if a situation arises where it is likely that they wouldn't be considered and the legislation hasn't met the needs of the public and of those individuals?

Ms Gray: Thank you very much for the question. The process in negotiating an essential services agreement begins with the two parties, the union and the employer. At that point the case that emergency medical technicians fit the definition of essential services, which involves life, health, and safety of everyday Albertans, is extremely high. I used the word "likely" because I cannot predetermine the outcomes of these conversations. This needs to be happening with the workers themselves, who can make a better argument than I can as to the critical nature of their work, and we'll have that discussion there.

If in that case there is a disagreement – because I do not believe that a union would ever agree that these are nonessential workers – they would make the case very, very strongly that they are. An umpire might be brought in if there was a disagreement, and the umpire would make a ruling at that point. If, in that case, the employees are still not satisfied that they have been determined to be essential through this process, the commissioner would be brought in to make a ruling.

Again, both the umpire and the commissioner as neutral third parties would be using as their definition the definition of essential services that we've included in this legislation, which makes clear that an essential worker is one that impacts the life, health, and safety of Albertans. I believe that that closely matches the exact definition of what some of these workers are doing.

This is why I used the word "likely." I cannot predetermine the nature, but I do mention that there are two neutral third parties who will be validating that we are meeting the essential services definition as outlined in the legislation and making sure that the health and well-being of all Albertans is protected in the event of a strike or lockout. That is fundamental to the nature of this legislation. We've written it this way in consultation with experts, stakeholders, and to comply with the Supreme Court ruling, which says that we must make sure that Albertans that are citizens have that right to strike while still protecting vital public services.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise. I listened to the minister's remarks, and I'm sure the minister is sincere. But I also listened yesterday to the remarks of my colleague the Member for Calgary-South East, who, as members of this House know, is one of at least two members in this House that are paramedics. With no disrespect to the minister I think the minister is missing the point that my colleague was trying to make yesterday.

It's really about respect, Madam Chair. It's about the fact that when we in Alberta – and a lot of other places in the world, but we're talking about Alberta right now. When we dial 911, we're in a time of great need. We expect people to come to us in a hurry, we expect them to be professional, and we expect them to be prepared. And you know what? Many times we expect them to be prepared to risk their life. We expect them to be prepared to put themselves in harm's way.

One of the other expectations is that we actually expect them to see things that most people shouldn't have to see. What's at a scene many times when an EMS or a paramedic professional or a police officer or a firefighter shows up – and they show up at the worst tragedies, as you can imagine: a human tragedy, a house fire, a motor vehicle collision, some other tragedy. They oftentimes are exposed to things that the rest of us don't have to be exposed to, and they do that willingly.

In legislation it's codified that there's a requirement in the legislation, not through a negotiation. And, Minister, I know that what you said, you said in good faith. I'm not questioning that. But it is an important difference. The difference between having it codified in the legislation and subject to a negotiation really puts it in a different category.

I think what my colleague did yesterday was to really explain well to this House how paramedics deserve the same respect as the other first responders. It's not special treatment. I hope that no one in this House would say that it's special treatment. It's a special job they do. It's a special risk they take. It's the fact that they go and do the things wearing a uniform, where they can't hide, where they're identified. They're separated from the rest of us by the uniform, and we depend upon them to be there at our times of greatest need, not most of the time when we call 911 but every time.

Again, they are subject to the same hardships and the same personal payment that they make as part of being EMS. They have PTSD from seeing unspeakable tragedy, terrible personal events, terrible physical events. Frankly, they come to us at the time that we need them most, and they deserve the same respect. They deserve the same respect. I can tell you that what I believe strongly is that they have that same respect from Albertans on the street. What we're hoping for is to show that level of respect from here, the place where laws are made in Alberta, the Legislative Assembly, the same level of respect from those people who are elected from across this province.

This is a day when we can actually say out loud that we appreciate the sacrifices that they make. We appreciate the fact that their families don't always look at them the same way when they leave home as they look at us. When I leave home, my wife is pretty sure I'm coming back. In fact, I would say that, in fairness to the first responders, most of the time their families expect that they're coming back, but there's an additional risk that they take above and beyond what other Alberta workers take. I don't think any of us would doubt that. So this is really about respecting that.

If there's one thing that I think I hear out of the NDP playbook, you know, it is that you talk about equality all the time and equal recognition of things. This is an opportunity where if we treat in law our first responders who are paramedics the same way that we treat our first responders who are firefighters or police officers, it would send a very positive message. It would send a very positive message to all Albertans, and it would send a very positive message to a whole bunch of men and women that go out there and do that work every day.

I will ask the minister to consider carefully what she just said, and at some point soon, Madam Chair, I'm going to ask, by way of an amendment, the minister to reconsider what she just said because I believe that for all of us in this House I don't think this is partisan. I think that on both sides of the House we all agree that first responders go a great job. You know, there are a lot of issues in this House that can tear us apart across the aisle. I think this is one that could probably bring us together, and that's what we're asking for.

So, Madam Chair, with your permission I would like to move an amendment, please. I'm guessing you don't want me to talk about it till after you see it, right?

The Chair: Until I've seen the original.

Mr. McIver: This, to be clear, is on behalf of my colleague from Calgary-South East. It's certainly my hope that if we can agree on this, this will bring us all together and be something we can all walk out of here with and be proud of and say that we did the right thing for the right reason today.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A10. Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 9 in the proposed section 96(1) (a) by striking out clause (b) and substituting the following:

- (b) employees who act as ambulance attendants as defined in the Emergency Health Services Act and, to the extent that they bargain collectively with ambulance attendants, employers who are ambulance operators as defined in that Act,

(b) in clause (c) by adding, "excluding employees to which clause (b) applies" after "all the employees of those employers," and (c) in clause (d) by striking out "clause (c)" and substituting "clauses (b) or (c)".

It's a little bit wordy, but I tried to explain. Madam Chair, I could never be as eloquent or articulate as my colleague from Calgary-South East was, who works as an advanced care paramedic and has lived the life that those first responders live. Respectfully and not up to the standard that he would do, I move this on his behalf.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for the comments and this amendment for our consideration. This legislation is not a value judgment on any particular type of work. This legislation is the creation of a framework under which we recognize that there is key and essential work happening throughout Alberta, particularly from our first responders, whom we value and respect. It is through this process under negotiating an essential services agreement that we will be going through with the employees themselves, with the employers and having the conversations about what we can do to make sure that Albertans are maintained in a safe, healthy, functioning environment during any strike or lockout.

I do want to stress that we engaged the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, so the representatives of some of those front-line workers, who are in favour of the legislation as it is written. We carefully considered the advice of all of the experts involved, from renowned labour lawyer Mr. Andrew Sims to everyone engaged in that consultation process. Understanding very much the appreciation and the passion that there is for our front-line workers, this government echoes that as well. We know, again, that when lives are on the line, the skills and knowledge of a paramedic can make the difference between life and death. But this legislation is not about judging a particular type of work; it's about creating a framework that all Albertans can use so that as roles change, as careers evolve, regardless of what happens, we have a framework that serves Albertans in any case.

Because we have the support of those who were consulted, because we have carefully considered these issues repeatedly, I will not be supporting this amendment. We do value our front-line workers, absolutely. We think this framework, which respects their right to strike, which is critical – the Supreme Court has ruled that all Canadians have that right. By not removing that right to strike at this point but instead including them inside of the essential services framework, we are showing our respect to these workers and all Albertan workers.

I look forward to continued discussion on this, but I believe that this framework is fair, balanced, and serves Albertans. I look forward to the discussion. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a couple of quick questions for the minister, following on from some of the other comments made in the House this morning. The minister has made statements this morning that she wouldn't want to prejudge something in terms of the discussions around whether or not paramedics would be determined to be essential, and she said that they would likely be. The question is, then, because she doesn't want to prejudge the discussions: is it possible, because of the legislation, that they wouldn't be? I think that that is part of the larger discussion. That's important. If we're not prejudging it, then both "likely to be considered" and "possible that they wouldn't be considered" could be within the realm of a judgment.

I think one of the things that we saw so clearly yesterday afternoon from my colleague from the third party is that this legislation carves out space for firemen to be absolutely, one hundred per cent guaranteed to be considered to be essential, not likely to be considered but absolutely considered essential. We see that same respect given through the legislation to our police services. A very clear case was made that that is the exact same respect in legislation that paramedics and EMS should receive.

While I can be sympathetic to the fact that the minister believes that they're likely to be considered, the possibility that that wouldn't be the conclusion exists. We have the opportunity to ensure that paramedics and EMS are given the respect they so rightfully deserve through legislation, the same respect that the other forms of first responders receive, that this legislation ensures they have. This is a wonderful opportunity for the best idea to win, for the fact that we have the opportunity to communicate to all paramedics, first responders, and in fact all Albertans that this Assembly understands the value that they provide our province. We have the chance today to ensure that in legislation.

Now, I can see that there was some significant back and forth to try and get an amendment that would provide the Chamber the ability to do that. Here before us that is exactly what we have. Now, I recognize the legislation is likely to, but we ought to remove all doubt from our first responders' minds and ensure that they are communicated to that they are essential, that we value the work that they do and communicate to Albertans that fire, police, and EMS are viewed on an equal playing field, are given the respect that they each deserve. Pass this legislation, pass this amendment to ensure that there can be no strange rulings, meddlings, or miscommunications to our first responders. I fully, without reservation, support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. As I always try to do, I listened carefully to the minister's response. Let me add a little more context for the minister. There is an element of respect here that probably needs to be given to these workers. The history of paramedics is an interesting one. They've always done a great job. They've always been extremely well respected by the public. This is something that you're not responsible for, this government and this minister, but it's something that I'm going to say because it's something you should be aware of. You might be aware, but if you're not, I'm going to make you aware.

Over time the profession of being a paramedic has been kicked around a little bit. What I mean by that, Madam Chair, is that I spent a few years on city council in Calgary, where the EMS service used to reside. Over the years they were kicked around from pillar to post a little bit. There were times where they had been their own free-standing department in the city. A couple of times they got moved to be under the direction of the fire department and then under the direction of some other body and then independent again and back and forth. There's been some ping-ponging done over the years. That's some history that actually is worthy of consideration here when you consider maybe it's about time that this particular profession got the respect that it deserved. I can tell you that that's the case.

Now, the minister said, you know, that she can't prejudge, but by saying that you leave – it's the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde thing, Madam Chair. What I mean by that is that if you say that you're going to do the right thing now, you leave the paramedics worried that some day with a different minister, different government, a different day, they – and no, that's not a shot at the government. I'm just saying that the fact is that things change over time. It might just be the minister. Maybe she'll get some better job. Who knows? The fact is that the people in charge of things change from time to time. Even if while you're here the EMS will be an essential service, they are left hanging, wondering whether they still will be when you move on to something bigger and better. That is the uncertainty that we need to remove for those people. They deserve better. We owe it to them.

The minister also said something that my colleague from the other party talked about, prejudging. Well, Madam Chair, I would submit to the minister that Albertans have prejudged: EMS, paramedics are essential. Albertans have prejudged. What I'm asking the minister and the government to do is to show that we hear Albertans and we're going to reflect what they believe. My colleague said it last night when he was speaking, that if he was to do a survey of Albertans, he's sure that there would be 90-plus per cent of them that would say that EMS is essential, and I believe he's right about that. Albertans have prejudged. Why? Because they're essential.

Our job here is to recognize what all Albertans know. Show them that we're awake. Show them that we hear them. Show that we agree with them. Show them that we are respecting them and we're representing their views. They've prejudged, and they've prejudged correctly. We work for them. Now would be a good time to demonstrate that. Respect those people. Don't leave them hanging out there wondering whether the respect is temporary or at the whim of the current minister or whether it's codified in legislation as it ought to be, the same as it is for police officers, the same as it is for firefighters, as it ought to be for paramedics.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much. I would like to speak a little bit about the fact that I absolutely want to be clear that I value paramedics. In fact, just this past summer I came across someone who eventually ended up passing away in an MVA, and I ended up being the first person on the scene. You know, when the first responders came and helped bring that individual to the hospital, once I was off the road and dealing with all the emotions of being the first on the scene, dealing with someone who'd gone through that kind of trauma, the first thing I did was call up my paramedic friends. "How do you do that? You're amazing. I'm so proud of all the work you do. Thank God you are there and doing the work that you do."

Having said that, the health care that we provide – I mean, specifically this is looking at health care, and as a nurse for 17 years I feel very happy to speak on behalf of health care – is a very complex connection of a variety of workers that provide services to Albertans when they are in need. Certainly, there are many workers within the health care system who are considered to be absolutely essential. We value all of those workers. When we look at this, certainly the reason that we have included firefighters and police in this legislation is because the Supreme Court specifically recognizes them. In the spirit of respecting the negotiations and collaboration that would go into developing this essential services agreement, we are only including what we have to include based on what the Supreme Court references.

I have to say that I have faith in the negotiations of employees and employers to come together and to decide what's in the best interests of Albertans, to ensure that we recognize what are truly essential services. I have faith in that process. I have faith that they will recognize that there are a variety of people who will be essential. Examples would include, absolutely, ambulance attendants. You know, I have full expectation that they will be on there. There are also OR nurses and ER nurses. There are X-ray technicians and lab staff. Without them Albertans could not get access to the quality of services that they deserve. I think it is a very complex interaction of staff, and I look forward to seeing the results of employees and employers coming together to come to the very best conclusion as the experts in this, the experts in terms of their particular situation, to decide what are the essential services.

We have to be very clear that we value all the workers in the situation. We certainly value ambulance attendants, but we also value the process and collaboration and respect the importance of having both employees and employers have the conversation together to come up with the essential services that make the most sense for Albertans going forward.

Thank you.

Mr. Ellis: I can't believe that we are even for a single moment debating whether EMS is an essential service. I cannot. That's shameful. Let me tell you something. I have commanded many, many incidents. Do you know who's at every one of those incidents? Not just the police, not just the fire, but EMS. I always have EMS on standby. Without them the police officers have no support. Without them the firefighters have no support. Without them the victims of crime, the victims in fires, the victims of emergencies – so then I'm going to ask you this, Madam Chair. How are you going to tell that person who dials 911 in a medical emergency: well, we're going to get somebody to you, but EMS is not quite essential, we've determined. Not quite essential. How are you going to tell that person that? It is not even a question that EMS is an essential service, not a question in my mind, not a question in any Albertan's mind, and it's embarrassing that we're even having this conversation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. Emergency medical services. Let me give you a little bit of insight into the emergency services, what they perceive EMS to be. It has always been considered, pardon my language, the bastard child of the emergency services. It's always been a barely funded system that just adequately provided the bare-bones minimum for emergency services. Police: we require them for so many aspects, to control and maintain order on our streets and whatnot. Fire departments: there's a perception that no one wants to die in fires, so it's always been a tragic thing over the previous years. But EMS has always been one of those things that people just seem to avoid because they always think that they'll never need that, never need an ambulance.

We have to understand that EMS has evolved over the years to truly providing health care in the field. Dr. Norman Bethune, a great Canadian who in the late 1800s, early 1900s was the first person in the world to do blood transfusions, introduced the first levels of EMS to our world. After that, in the modern era, it was the Vietnam vets that came back from the war and joined the fire departments in the United States. It was in the Vietnam War when they also accelerated the type and quality of health care in the field, in the combat setting, and they brought those skills back with them here to North America. When they got on with those fire departments, they started providing a different level. At that point society started to recognize that not just physicians could provide health care out in the public setting, that there was a need for providing true health care in the field, not just a load-and-go situation. When I say load and go, back in the day the hearses would be called; the funeral homes would be called to transport a lot of people who required a stretcher because they were banged up from a car accident or something like that.

So we have come a long way. Today they do everything from intubation to defibrillation to starting that intravenous and doing so much more in the field. They are very, very vital. It is providing, truly, health care outside of a hospital setting. It is the most extreme situation. People underestimate what these people do, what they've seen.

As the other members in this House have talked about, we do see a lot. It's not too many people that have to deal with dead babies with families crying around them, and you just see this rigor mortis child sitting there on a bench. That's disturbing stuff. Or to see someone who'd been burned in a car fire after it hit a welding truck. The skin: it's not like a true burn. It's like the skin melted, and it's like a sheen mask. That was quite disturbing to see. There are a lot of instances, a lot of situations that paramedics run into very equivalent, if not more so, than some of the other emergency services, and the fact is that they have to deal with that medical situation. And God bless the firefighters for pulling that patient out of that burning house, but then it's the paramedic that has to take care of that guy and try to keep him alive until we can get him to the hospital, which might be, say, in a case in Airdrie, 20 minutes to half an hour away, or in some other rural setting where the closest acute hospital is a couple of hours away.

It is a difficult job. I'm torn on hearing from the government side that they may not consider it to be an essential service despite the things that they do. It is as vital as anything. Working for a combined service, providing both EMS at the highest level as the paramedics and providing the fire and rescue side of things, the EMS call volume was anywhere between 75 per cent and 85 per cent of our total call volume, and those are standard statistics across the province. There is a sheer number of calls that come out.

Not only that, but paramedics are forced to wait in hospitals as they try to clear beds because of the low capacity of our beds and stuff like that as they fill the backlogs, as they get filled by people like seniors and others who don't have a long-term facility that they can call home. So they adjust, and they accommodate them in the long-term care beds, which compounds it and influences other areas where patients could sit but, instead, all just get bumped down to the point where there are patients sitting in emergency departments who could or should be in some sort of longer term facility or bed.

EMS is a hard job. We don't have X-ray machines and blood-testing machines with us. We have to determine by the mechanism of injury how hard we think that car hit that wall to determine what kind of injuries they got. We have to evaluate, based on their history, if they took their medications properly, what they did, because there might be a metabolic issue that's within them. It's a lot of deciphering, a lot of inquisitive actions in order to determine the best course of action for these patients in an environment where it's very, very difficult to get this information sometimes.

It's really unfortunate, Madam Chair, that this government would not consider this amendment, this change. It's a subtle change, but it will impact so many help providers that are currently dealing with a lot of stresses, including posttraumatic stress syndrome. It's unfortunate, and they require more support. I hope this government doesn't underestimate the things that they do and that they will recognize them as truly an essential service. When these people aren't on the road, people won't have that health care provider at their door.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Often we get up in this Chamber and at this point we say that we are pleased to rise. I'm very disappointed and I'm very upset to have to rise to speak to this today, to what I think is an absolutely common-sense amendment, but it is my honour to do so.

It's my honour to thank the gentleman who spoke last night, who wanted to bring this forward, and I thank our interim leader, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, for bringing it to the floor and speaking eloquently about it. I thank the previous speaker, who was a professional in the field and risked his life, and his brethren and sistren who have done exactly the same thing. Having one less paramedic, one less emergency medical technician, having one less person who provides safety to Albertans will make Alberta a less safe place.

This amendment is, as I say, common sense. It will save lives. I have some friendly advice for our friends in the new government, whether it be the Premier or the cabinet. We cannot refer to members' absences – I will not – but I trust this message will get through to the people that are authoring this bill and everyone else here. Take it from me. I've served the second-longest amount of time; only the House leader on the other side has served more time. I seldom get emotional. I feel myself getting emotional about this situation. Here's the thing. When we sat on the government side, guess what? Every once in a while we took an amendment; we accepted it. It's this sort of situation. They thought of something we didn't. Good thing. Let's do it now before it's too late. It's not: throw them a bone; it's just the right thing to do. In my time I even voted against my own government. So I can tell you this. If you have advice on your side that you should vote against this, ask yourself, your family, your constituents: what is the right thing to do in this situation? I think the answer is very, very clear.

At this point, Madam Chair, I feel the need to paraphrase the hon. Member for Calgary-South East from yesterday evening. His words are so powerful. They come from the experience of having worked a career in EMS. Not everyone has been privy to what happened at 10 to 6 last night, so here it is:

Consider: it's the middle of summer. Your child is in the back, in the pool. They're playing, and they've drowned or nearly drowned. Is that not a public safety issue, that harm to your child and having an ambulance, a skilled professional there to save that child's life? Would you agree? Would the government agree? I think you would. I think all Albertans would.

We see in this bill that firefighters are an essential service from the start. Compulsory arbitration: rightly so. Police: compulsory arbitration. What's missing is paramedics, that are out on the street every day saving lives and providing essential care to people that are in pain. [We're talking about] quality of life, until they can get further care.

I would add, Madam Chair, that it's not just quality of life; it could be life and death.

Additionally,

Mental health issues are on the rise, particularly now with the way the economy is, yet the government – and, believe me, I've worked all day on [trying] to get them included as essential services. I can tell you right now that if I did a poll in this province, people would agree that emergency medical services should be an essential service along with firemen and police, as our Member for Calgary-West has already articulately alluded to from personal, professional, not just political experience.

He goes on:

It's the right decision.

We should be able to leave it at that, but I'll continue.

We don't want to have to worry if the ambulance is going to show up or not. Everyone would agree, especially if you're the mom or you're the father and your child is nearly drowned, sick, with a broken leg, or in a car accident. They're essential to life. They are essential to making sure that when your loved one is in pain and they're crying and they're writhing in pain . . .

By the way, Madam Chair, I've been in many of these situations as well, and I agree.

. . . the trauma that that brings to a patient – and I know there are other health care professionals. Our job is to take that pain away. Our job is to make sure that the community has confidence that when you call the ambulance . . . There should be no threat of a walkout, no threat of a strike for something that you need to save a life.

Again, I'm paraphrasing my hon. colleague from Calgary-South East.

What I can't understand after all the work that I did in CUPE 3421 and all my brethren did before then to get parity with police and fire is why today . . .

Today.

... this government can't recognize emergency medical services as an essential service to the life and well-being of Albertans. Now, I tried to make this so that this could be your amendment, so that you can make this decision. To be honest with you, anybody who has a special interest, whether it's a union or anything else, to leverage the skill and the responsibility that paramedics have shouldn't even come into question. The right decision, Minister, respectfully: recognize paramedics along with firemen and police as the core backbone of the safety and well-being of Albertans, I implore you.

Again, on his behalf.

Madam Chair, I know that you're listening intently. I know from your time over a decade ago up in Hansard that you have seen this happen. For anyone who has just tuned in on the web or otherwise, I'll just repeat what I said. This is the right thing to do. It's okay to take an amendment once in a while. Honestly, if you were to take the time and not rush this through, if you were to call up anybody in your constituency and say, "Who's an essential service?" do you honestly think people would leave out those that are the first responders to save people's lives, that put their lives on the line every day? I don't want to use the term "no-brainer." I know some people in colloquial language would do exactly that. But I have yet to hear one good reason from the government as to why they should be excluded.

So I encourage the minister, the Premier, any member of cabinet, any member of the caucus to stand and convince everyone else here and, I really believe, towards one hundred per cent of the Albertans out there why you should exclude EMS from this common-sense amendment.

Over to you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my honour to speak to the amendment. As somebody who drafted a number of opposition amendments, I think that in my over four years I got one through, so certainly I know the frustration sometimes when amendments don't get through. I imagine that for a great deal of the members on the opposite side of the bench it wasn't because the amendments were coming from us; it was because, I hope, they had done the research and thought through the nuances of the situation. When I had an opportunity to meet with the member from Calgary, certainly, on first response, I was like, "Yeah; that's sounds like a really good idea," and then I did my research because the important thing is to make sure that we understand the context, not just what might be public perception.

Certainly, the context is that we are here today debating An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. That act itself names two first responders. Unfortunately, it doesn't name three, but it does name two first responders. It names police, and it names fire. The decision of the Supreme Court was to impact both Alberta and Saskatchewan, who had legislation that was in contravention of the Supreme Court ruling. When Saskatchewan passed their legislation, they wrote in other essential services that were not named in the Supreme Court ruling, and the Supreme Court overturned that legislation because it wasn't compliant with the Supreme Court ruling.

When I did my research, I found out: "Oh. We need to make sure we're complying with the Supreme Court ruling. I understand." We also went a step further to reach out to those who were elected to represent a vast number of emergency first responders, who I have tremendous respect for. I know everyone in this House does. If you are ever in a situation where you need to call 911, you need to know that somebody is going to show up. So we reached out to those who were elected to govern a large number of them through the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, and they said: "You're right not to write it into the legislation. We will work this out at the table. Thank you for approaching us about this idea. It certainly is an interesting idea, but you're right. Don't write it into the legislation. This is about implementing a Supreme Court ruling."

With all respect to all members of the House, the passion that they bring to the debate, and to anyone who might be listening, this is about implementing the Supreme Court ruling. We're certainly going to have conversations with the employer and employee groups to make sure that we get this right for other areas. But in terms of the actual legislation itself, as we've seen from the precedent in Saskatchewan, I think it's very important that we implement the Supreme Court ruling, which specifically names two, not three, types of emergency first responders.

While I certainly appreciate the merit – and that's why I and I'm sure other members of our caucus as well went that extra step in doing additional research before we decided how we'd be feeling on this amendment – it's the research that's guided me to this decision. I certainly appreciate the passion that you've presented here today and, of course, the service of first responders sitting in this House and anywhere else in Alberta. Many are in ambulances at this very moment.

We continue to work with them and look forward to finding ways that we can make sure that when you do call 911, you have the confidence that those emergency first responders will be available. But in terms of the research I think that the Supreme Court decision as well as the Saskatchewan legislation and the fiasco there show us that we shouldn't be writing additional essential services into this legislation, that we should be working that out with employers and employees.

So with all respect, Madam Chair, I'll be voting against this proposed amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am disappointed to have to rise again and speak, with my colleagues from the Official Opposition and the third party, in favour of this amendment. The hon. Minister of Health I don't think has quite grasped the gravity of this bill. The minister stated that this amendment would be going beyond what is required by the Supreme Court, that it is outside the scope of what was required.

We have stood here and talked about how significant sections, very substantive sections of the government's own legislation go beyond what is required by the Supreme Court. In their own briefings, that I participated in, their own experts told us that sections of this bill go beyond what is required by the Supreme Court, particularly in legislating out options for replacement workers in essential services before the essential services agreements are even negotiated. That is not required anywhere by the Supreme Court. It was put in by this government for reasons that have not yet been properly explained. Yet they stand there and tell us that any amendment here, which would make very clear, crystal clear, in the legislation that our EMS workers, who we rely upon every day to save thousands of lives every year, who are, beyond any question, an essential service, would be going beyond what they're intending to achieve in this legislation.

Well, let's look at what the title of this bill is. It is an act to comply with a Supreme Court ruling. Well, they've already gone well beyond that. The Supreme Court was clear. While all public-sector employees have a constitutional right to organize and to strike, that right is not absolute, and the government has a right and a responsibility to protect essential services. It is our job, and we would be negligent if we passed legislation in this House that jeopardized the safety and security and health of Albertans by neglecting to make crystal clear in the legislation right now that our EMS workers are essential services.

Now, the hon. Minister of Labour has stated that EMS workers would likely be covered by an essential services agreement: likely, not certainly, Madam Chair. We wouldn't know for sure. If there is any possibility whatsoever that our EMS workers would not be covered by an essential services agreement, then there is a problem. Our EMS workers save thousands and thousands of lives every year in this province. The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, who has worked with our EMS workers, has described how critical they are. The Member for Calgary-West has described how critical they are. The Member for Calgary-South East has described how critical they are, having been one himself. There is ample experience – first-hand, front-line experience – in this very House from its elected members to know that EMS is not an optional service. It is an essential service, and we should recognize that in this legislation.

I call upon the members opposite to do the right thing, disobey their party whip if necessary, and vote for this necessary amendment.

Mr. Taylor: You know, Madam Chair, I'm frankly floored that anyone in this House does not want to support this amendment. What I see here, echoing what the member had just recently said, is that there have been many changes to this Supreme Court ruling. There are many changes that have already been done. This government's bill would have been that much more palatable had it actually just stuck to the Supreme Court ruling, but it went beyond, and it made changes. Now when they're asked to make a change that would support and help people, help Albertans and keep them safe, all of a sudden: no, we can't make any of these changes.

This is wrong. You know, I've been a firefighter. I've been on many calls, and on these calls we're experiencing trauma, we're experiencing a lot of problems. The EMS, the paramedics, they come, and they're assisting us. As a firefighter I can't transport these patients. We just have to provide comfort. We can't provide them with, really, anything but the basics. We need to have the EMS and the paramedics on-site in a timely manner.

They have to be able to go from that incident, whenever that incident occurred, into an operating bed within an hour's time. That's the golden hour. If an incident happened – there was a car accident – that was 20 minutes away from the hospital but it took 10 minutes to get it called in, that's going to delay the times that much more. If you don't get them in at the golden hour, the chances of them actually having a successful recovery go down. It goes down significantly, exponentially, as the time goes on.

It's absolutely imperative to me to be able to have these people on-site. When we have a fire, we have an accident, we're able to call them out, and they're there. They're ready, and they're able to go. If we make these changes, I fear for the lives and the welfare of the people in Alberta. They backed us up so many times. I'm just surprised that the government has not decided that this is essential. To me, this is essential.

It is clear that I will vote in favour of this amendment, and I believe that everybody here should. I frankly believe that everybody must vote because at some point in time you'll need the services of the ambulance, the firefighters, the paramedics – they all come together – the police. When you're on a scene, it's not just one person or another person; it's a team. I can't emphasize enough that I believe we must vote in support of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm going to echo my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright. We have two major highways going through part of my district, being highway 63 and highway 881, where there are a lot of major accidents. They've been the focus in the news for the last 10, 15 years as, you know, a couple of the most dangerous highways in Alberta, for sure.

One of the problems is that the first responders on most of those accidents are volunteer fire departments. They're not qualified or prepared to deal with these accidents other than by giving comfort. They're not allowed to assist more than by giving comfort, as much as they'd like to. The idea of a volunteer fireman standing on the side of highway 63, watching somebody die, knowing that there was not an EMS en route is just astounding to me, and I can't believe how anybody across the way could not support that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Chair. This government is relying on a Supreme Court ruling to guide them in this. When the Supreme Court made their decision on EMS, we have to recognize one thing about emergency medical services, that it is not on par across this country. There have been attempts at trying to standardize the levels, but we have to recognize that there are differences. I want everyone in this House and in this province to know that Alberta for over 20 years has been known to have the pinnacle of emergency medical services.

For many, many years Alberta was the only province to provide true paramedics, people who could provide advanced life support. They could give injections of medications. They could provide electrical treatment in the form of defibrillation. Intubations. Many of the things that only doctors can do in operating rooms and emergency departments paramedics were empowered with. In Alberta we were blessed with having some very good doctors who very much believed in emergency medical services and in paramedics.

Strathcona county – where is the Member for Sherwood Park? – is renowned across this province and this country as having one of the finest emergency medical services in this country. They were a model for the rest of the province in reaching those highest levels. Their physician medical director: he was on the board of the province for many years, providing that guidance.

To make people understand more what I'm talking about, when you go to Quebec, if you go to Montreal and you require an ambulance, you'll notice that they sit in the streets. They don't have regular fire halls or emergency services halls. Like, police have a police station. The fire department has a fire hall. The EMS sit in the streets because they don't want to pay for any shelters for them. Also, the fact is that they are very busy. We have to note that there, when there's a critical emergency – and my brother can attest to this as he was an emergency physician in Montreal – they would grab the doctor if the call was deemed critical enough, and the doctor would go in a chase car, which is basically a car of sorts with all the advanced life support, all the medications in the back, with the lights and sirens so they could stream down the street and rendezvous with that ambulance. The ambulances only had basic life support.

Basic life support: what does that mean? It has advanced in the last few years, so they can give things like sugar for diabetics and Narcan for narcotic overdoses, but for the most part in other places they do very, very little. They can maybe take your blood sugar test, but they can't give you the glucose. That's probably changed in this day and age, I hope, in the last few years. The point is that we are not at parity.

When I was taking my emergency medical technician course back in the year 1991, there was a fellow in there, and he was all the way from Nova Scotia. I was amazed at this fellow because he was here in Alberta to take our basic life support course and bring that education back to Nova Scotia and teach it. Today Nova Scotia's emergency medical services are considered on par with Alberta's. It is a provincial program there, but we also have to recognize that it is a smaller region. I mean, that area is as big as one of our constituencies, with a much smaller population, albeit diverse. They have evolved and are run by, I believe, you know, a province-wide service.

Sometimes Alberta Health Services and other agencies take note of that, and they look and see them with their centralized dispatch, and they think: well, if they can do it in Nova Scotia, we can do it here in Alberta because of the efficiencies. We have to recognize that we can't compare province to province because, again, there are different dynamics involved, the logistics around the actual physical factors involving territories and whatnot, and Alberta is a large territory. Again, we should be happy to know that Alberta does continue to have the highest level of paramedics and EMS in this province and that they do provide a high level of health care, which we have deemed over the course of time to be very vital, so vital that Alberta Health Services took that service over from the various municipalities and centralized it.

If Alberta Health Services recognizes the importance of emergency medical services here in Alberta, we have to recognize that they might be on to something. They've recognized that the level of treatments that the paramedics were providing was something that they wanted under their umbrella. Running EMS in with the Wood Buffalo region my last four years there and then encountering the interaction with the provinces – Alberta Health took it over – was a difficult time, but the one thing that we do have to recognize is that they did recognize that it is a true medical service, and it is in the prehospital setting, and this is something that we have to take very, very seriously. Even though the folks in Ontario and Quebec and the Supreme Court don't consider EMS to be at the high level, we have to look at Alberta and adjust things accordingly and recognize that perhaps this is the place where we do consider it an essential service because it is a medical service here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to bring us back, with all the passionate and well-thought-out arguments here that we've heard today, you know, to why we're here in the first place. The title of the bill is An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. As the hon. Health minister said earlier, members on this side did a little bit of further research into deciding how they would include or not include certain services as being essential or not. One of the things that I found out in reading the actual Supreme Court ruling itself was that one of the primary reasons the Supreme Court struck down Saskatchewan's law was because of the unilaterality of deciding which services are essential or not.

I've got a couple of passages from the Supreme Court ruling that I'd like to share with the members here today. I'll read a couple of passages. The first one is that "the unilateral authority . . . to determine whether and how essential services are to be maintained during a work stoppage with no adequate review mechanism, and the absence of a meaningful dispute resolution mechanism to resolve bargaining impasses" justify the conclusion that the Saskatchewan essential services act is not minimally impairing, and their conclusion is that that essential services law was unconstitutional.

The Supreme Court specifically mentioned police services and fire services as two services which are absolutely essential, and they left it at that, so by adding other professions into our legislation, we run the risk of unilaterally deciding which services are essential or not, therefore, you know, potentially violating the provisions of the Supreme Court ruling.

I just wanted to add a couple of other things here. The Supreme Court ruling: their reasoning why they deemed Saskatchewan's law as unconstitutional is that the definition of that law, of essential services, was "very broad." "In the absence of an agreement with the Unions about what the definition means, employers are entitled unilaterally to decide what they included." That's one of the reasons the Supreme Court gave for making the decision that they did.

Another passage here is that "the power of public employers during a work stoppage to designate how essential services are to be maintained and by whom was unilateral and required no consultation with the Unions." On the other hand, the reason that we've written the legislation the way we have is so that consultation with the union does occur and that the negotiation can occur between the employer and the employees. The Supreme Court goes on that "the unilateral decision-making power granted to public employers was unnecessary. There was no explanation for why the Unions were denied any input into naming essential services employees."

Madam Chair, in light of the Supreme Court ruling and what has already been said by the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Health, and other members on this side, it's quite clear that the services that have been deemed essential in our legislation follow the spirit of the Supreme Court ruling. Those that were not included also follow the spirit of the Supreme Court ruling because the point is that it's up to the unions and the employers to negotiate the process of deeming what's essential and what's not.

We need to stick with the spirit of what the Supreme Court has said. Otherwise, you know, we run the risk of a constitutional challenge because this is a very recent ruling. They've been extremely clear in what should and shouldn't be included and why it should or shouldn't be included and also the process by which those services not deemed as essential should be worked out between the unions and the employers themselves.

I feel confident in the legislation that's been proposed by the Minister of Labour. You know, in that respect, I am not able to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've had a couple of ministers in this room state that one of the reasons they're not in support of this amendment is because it overreaches the requirements of the Supreme Court ruling when, in fact, there are segments, large segments, of this entire bill that overreach the bare-bones requirements of the Supreme Court ruling. So that argument, actually, has no foundation in fact whatsoever. If this government was really just concerned about implementing the very bare bones, the minimum requirements of the Supreme Court ruling, this bill would be substantially different than it is. I absolutely reject that argument against this motion.

Secondly, something that appears to me to be a fundamental flaw in some of the logic, so-called, coming from the other side is this notion that we are somehow not the lawmakers. The Supreme Court does not make law; we make laws right here in this room. This is where laws are made. This is where the laws in the best interests of Albertans are created. If the Supreme Court in our collective judgment has left something out, we have a solemn responsibility to the people of Alberta to put that something in, and that's what this amendment does. If this government is somehow . . .

An Hon. Member: Beholden.

Mr. MacIntyre: Beholden, or afraid to do something in the best interests of Albertans because the Supreme Court of Canada didn't include it, then what in the world are you doing sitting over there? We are here to represent the best interests of Albertans, and that's what we need to do. This amendment is vitally important. EMS is an essential service. Period. The end. We are the lawmakers in this room. Let's get something straight.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just had to rise again because some of what I heard is – I'm trying to think of a parliamentary word – balderdash. Balderdash, I think, is still parliamentary. What was balderdash? I hate to say this. The Health minister, whom I have great regard for – I do. I think she's a fine legislator, and she works hard, and I think she does a good job, but today she said something that I don't believe she believes. She was saying that they have to do this because of the Supreme Court of Canada decision. This is beyond the Supreme Court of Canada decision.

We put in amendments to get rid of the lack of replacement workers, which is way beyond the Supreme Court of Canada decision. The government is holding that tight, tight, tight, tight because we asked them to be reasonable on it. Yet on this issue that matters all of a sudden it's all about the Supreme Court of Canada decision. We can't do anything outside of the Supreme Court of Canada decision. Nonsense. Balderdash. I don't believe it. I don't believe the minister believes it.

Then the minister went on to say, as if that wasn't bad enough and she hadn't buried herself enough on this issue, that the bargaining group that they're in right now doesn't want it. Now the government has decided to reduce EMS paramedics to a bargaining chip. An essential service: they have reduced them to a bargaining chip, a shiny pony. Shame, shame, shame, shame. Terrible. There is no excuse for that. The government needs to get on their horse. They need to do the right thing. They know what the right thing to do is. Everybody in Alberta knows what the right thing to do is. The government knows. They just need to do it.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much. I just want to take a moment to speak to this issue. It's a fundamentally important issue. [interjections] Exactly. It is one, I think, that betrays a certain contradiction on the opposition side of the House in terms of their thinking about the issue.

To begin with, I am very pleased to see the right-wing parties in this Legislature finally defending public servants after years of doing everything possible to define them as the enemy, to define them in derogatory manners, and to push things back. I understand. I've been listening to what they've been saying and listening to the passion that is coming from that side of the House. I welcome that passion. I think it's extremely important. As you know, I bring passion to the types of things that I talk about all the time. I appreciate that, and I respect that.

I have the same passion about the work that is done by the members of the EMS. I am very pleased to know that we have people out there who are highly respected, who are highly trained, and who I think should be highly paid to do fundamentally important work in our society. You know, the left wing of our politics in this province has been working to support exactly that kind of service provided to the citizens of Alberta for years. We absolutely think it's important that we continue to support them.

What I'm finding interesting, though, in the conversation that's here is that the sense of the relationship between the government and the employees is so fundamentally different between our two sides of the House. What the opposition wants to do is that they want to find a place to put a dark line and controlling rule into place so that they can impose their sense of rightness onto the situation.

What we're asking to do instead is to engage in a relationship with the people, whom we respect, and allow that relationship to play itself out in its fullness and to give the respect to them so that they can come forward, define their own work, and go forward with this legislation to the boards and the committees that they need to address and say: this is who we are; this is what's important about what we do. Fundamentally, I believe that the work they do is critical. I believe that that work should be supported. I want in my relationship with them to allow them to have the opportunity to define themselves, to express who they are, and to use a process put in place and not to be cornered by a rule, a process that allows self-definition, that allows them to bring their knowledge forward, that allows them to gather the support that the opposition keeps saying is out there.

They keep saying that everybody out there thinks that they're essential services, yet they do not trust that if we actually asked the people involved to define them in a way that expresses that essential service – they don't think it'll happen. What I'm seeing is tons of passion and no faith whatsoever. I don't believe that that's the way we should be treating our people, who work every day to provide services for the citizens of this province. I think we should be saying that we don't want a hard and fast rule. What we want is a process that guarantees that the language, that the considerations are all brought out, put on the table, and everyone has a chance to invest in that conversation. If we do that, if we have the chance for people to invest in that conversation, then it's going to last a much longer time.

I'm reminded of the movie Hawaii, in which the minister coming from Britain puts on his long johns on November 1 of every year because that's what he always did. His Scottish grandmother told him that that's when you put on your long johns. He defined a rule, and he lived by the rule. It made no sense in the circumstance.

The alternative is, of course, that you define a process, that you define a way in which people communicate with each other, a way in which people can actually say: this is what I stand for, this is what I want to see happen, and this is what I believe is important about the work that I do. Then you provide an opportunity for people to listen to that, for people to hear that and to respond to that by negotiating an agreement that recognizes what it is that they're telling us. That's what we're doing. We are creating an opportunity for a relationship, and we're respecting and having faith in the people who provide the services that they will be able to best articulate who they are and best describe what it is that they need.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. There are two things I want to say in response to comments made by the leader of the third party. Certainly, I appreciate the kind remarks at the beginning of his statement in terms of him respecting my legislative capabilities. I want to say that I appreciate that and certainly respect as well the democratic process that workers have to elect a voice for those workers. That, of course, is the organization that they've elected through a democratic process, and that would be the HSAA leadership for the vast majority of these attendants that we're talking about. To refer to the democratically elected leadership as a bargaining chip I find really disingenuous and disrespectful to those workers. I find it really disrespectful in terms of the tone. Certainly, we reached out to the bargaining unit that represents the vast majority and the democratically elected representatives of those folks. That certainly is a priority of mine. We want to have a really good working relationship with them, and I want to have a good working relationship with all members of this House.

I think the passion that you're expressing is felt for EMS and EMR and paramedics across our province. We have great respect for them, as do all Albertans. I also think that understanding what happened when only two jurisdictions were impacted by the Supreme Court decision – obviously, there were many decades that it could have been addressed by the third party when they were in government without having to have a Supreme Court decision, but we're here today. We're implementing the Supreme Court decision.

When the other jurisdiction took a path of naming other essential services that weren't named in the Supreme Court decision and that was overturned by the Supreme Court, it seems very strange to me that we'd be trying to set ourselves up for a similar fate in the only other province that has to move forward with this legislation. When we can look at what's happened in our neighbouring province when they took a very similar path, why would we set ourselves up for failure?

Instead, what we've done is that we've reached out to the democratically elected representatives of the vast majority of ambulance attendants, and we've said to them: do you think it's best to be included? Obviously, the Supreme Court didn't put it in. Mr. Sims, who I know the leader of the third party has tremendous respect for, said: don't put it in. We need to follow the names of the essential services outlined by the Supreme Court decision and work in collaboration with employers and employees, and of course their democratically elected leadership would be the representative of the employees.

With all respect to the members of this House and, of course, to our first responders, I stand by my earlier comments. I want to make sure that we get this right, that we don't waste lengthy time having work that we do in this House overturned by the Supreme Court. I'd rather that we do the work hands on, in a way that abides by the Supreme Court decision, with the first responders and with other essential service providers as have been mentioned in this House by other colleagues as well.

Thanks again for the opportunity to provide that clarity.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, I'll call the question on amendment A10.

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I think it's painfully obvious today that it's very disappointing to see that this government is not willing to accept numerous common-sense amendments that would work to make this legislation better and would also allow for appropriate evolution over time. Strangely, it reminds me of a debate in this House that occurred shortly before Christmas, when we were debating Bill 6, about an issue that a majority of Albertans were supportive of in principle: the idea to keep farming families safe. Everyone agreed on that, but beyond these walls or at least the walls on that side of the House people out in Alberta were very much against the process in which it occurred. That's why there were numerous – numerous – amendments that occurred from this side of the House in very, very good faith on behalf of the people who demonstrated in front of this House by the thousands and across the province day after day after day.

For some people not quite sure what I'm talking about, one of the last amendments was a hoist amendment, where I suggested, with great respect, that the government take the time to consult with farmers, especially because we were told that regulations would take a couple of years to design. Yet somehow there was a cause, apparently, for debate to go through the night, day after day after day, to slam this through, utilizing a majority, before the Christmas break. It was nonsensical, and this reminds me of the same thing.

Let's take the time to do this right. Even though the same thing could happen here again today, we will try one last time to give the government the opportunity to do the right thing. I will caution that this amendment is not going to have the desired effect of improving the legislation right here and now, but it will provide an avenue for issues related to and created by this legislation to be brought back to the table in the not-too-distant future. Therefore, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Hays I move that – if it please the chair, I can mention that we can have this passed around, and I'll read it into the record while we're waiting for it to be distributed – Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended in section 8 in the proposed section 95.41 by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) A committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of the operation of subsection (3) within one year of the coming into force of this subsection and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within 6 months after beginning the review, a report that includes any recommendations for amendments to this subsection by the committee.

Madam Chair, would you like me to wait for further distribution?

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Rodney: I can continue? Thank you. Yesterday on this side of the House a number of amendments were brought forward, as mentioned. They looked to address this very section. One of them tried to repeal this subsection altogether. One of them looked to establish temporary use of vetted replacement workers in an occasion within the confines of the current legislation. Madam Chair, this amendment would bring the discussion of the application of this subsection, that being what effect the blanket ban on replacement workers has had on the carrying out of essential services when a strike has occurred and an essential services agreement is in place.

Madam Chair, by putting this arbitrary ban on replacement workers and going above and beyond legislative changes required, which we've heard is something this government is reticent to do even if it may be the right thing, the validity of the arguments we have seen against amendments to section 95.41(3) of the proposed legislation from the government are cast in a hurricane of doubt. The least that can be done now is to have a committee of the Legislative Assembly review the application of this particular part, this extremely important issue, after the effects of what it has actually done have become visible. Having sat in this Chamber for some time, this is exactly what these committees were created to do on an all-party basis. There has been great success on this in the past. The rationale is that we have to ensure that the balance of the scales is not tipped beyond the level of what is reasonable. I urge all members to support this amendment so that we can best monitor and evaluate the effectiveness of this particular change that is being made.

Madam Chair, in politics it's very common for one side of a House to use the words that another has utilized against them in the past. I'm going to resist the temptation for that. We've had a number of ministers and members come forth, you know, and they've been trying to be conscientious and reflect their own view, but we need to reflect the views of all Albertans on this issue. So I'm not going to say that the minister of this, that, or the other thing has said this, but I will ask the question: is this the right thing to do? I think we could all agree that the answer is yes. Consult.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his amendment and his comments. I would like to address a few of the statements that he has made. He began by talking about common-sense amendments. We are always happy to work with all parties in this House collaboratively to create the best legislation possible. We saw that with the acceptance of amendment A1. I certainly hope that the opposition would give credit that this has been as collaborative as we could make it, willing to listen and willing to discuss the issues as we go.

I do want to address the member's comments around Bill 6 because the hoist amendment, that the member himself put forward, would have prevented 46 Albertans who have been covered for time lost through worker compensation injuries between January and March 16 from receiving anything. We've had 106 approved claims through WCB this year for farm workers. Of those, 46 were time lost, and that means that a worker was injured to such an extent that they were not able to go to do their job. WCB has provided them the compensation that they need in those scenarios. That is the reason why this government made it a priority to make sure that all workers in Alberta are covered. That is why Bill 6 was important. We continue to work with our stakeholders to make sure that the regulations will be solid. I'm happy to discuss that at more length, but I really must address that hoist.

The amendment before us now refers to consultation, and I would like to remind this House that an extensive consultation took place for this legislation, that was led by renowned labour lawyer Mr. Andrew Sims, that involved experts, employees, employers, the public, those in the labour relations community through a series of very in-depth working groups that received submissions and discussed the issues as well as online feedback from the public. I have great confidence in the consultation that took place because I've spoken to the people who participated, and a number of them told me that through the process Mr. Sims led, they adjusted their feedback; they adjusted what they were thinking because they heard and reflected back on really good, collaborative consultation.

To honour that consultation, this government has put forward legislation that reflects what we heard, that incorporates that consultation. We are not talking about an arbitrary ban. We are not talking about something that is out of scope. We are talking about something that the Supreme Court considered, that was discussed at our consultations, that is necessary for an essential services agreement to be properly reached because we need both sides to come to the table with confidence that there is a fair and respectful negotiation happening for essential services agreements, not that one side has something in their back pockets.

For these reasons, I do not support this amendment. I am proud of Bill 4, the essential services framework that we've created. We've consulted heavily with our stakeholders. We have listened to the experts. We have complied with the Supreme Court ruling. The need to come back to review this one piece: I disagree, and I will not be supporting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to support the amendment moved by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Hays. I think this is a reasonable amendment that will help make this bill less bad. I think we've gotten to the point where our amendments to make this bill a good bill are clearly being rejected at nearly every turn by the government.

Now, I think that it's very reasonable for the opposition to ask that a committee be struck to study how well the legislation is actually working, in effect. This is something we should do right across the board. Legislative committees should be more regularly utilized outside of the main estimates process. We need to give committees good, valuable work to do and utilize the capable members who sit on these committees, who are doing great work during the estimates process but are left often without enough substantive work to do in between the estimates.

We put forward an amendment, that the government rejected, calling for a sunset clause in this legislation, effectively requiring that after a period of time, this House must either renew or not renew this legislation depending on how well it is working or not. This is new ground for the government. This is a significant piece of legislation. This is not a housekeeping piece of legislation. This is not a technical change. This is a significant bill that will have significant effects on the delivery of essential services in Alberta, on the availability of essential services during labour disputes. It will have a significant effect on the ability of the government to negotiate with our public-sector unions in good faith on behalf of the Albertans who require these services and the taxpayers who pay for them. We asked for that sunset clause so that at a designated time this House would be able to give a thumbs-up or a thumbs-down on how well, or not, this piece of legislation has worked. That was unfortunately rejected by the government, as were most of the common-sense amendments put forward by the opposition.

I believe that this amendment, put forward by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, is an even more compromising amendment than that. This is not asking a lot. This is asking us to look at a particular section of the bill to determine how well it is working six months after it comes into force.

The commissioner is given extensive, extensive powers. We'll be speaking a bit more about the powers of the commissioner quite soon. The commissioner here is given massive powers without any check on those powers. The commissioner is able to come in and impose an agreement on essential services. Even if both bargaining parties have come to a mutual agreement, he can override that decision. That is a huge, huge set of powers given to a single individual when we don't know who it will be. We don't know if that individual will be a credible, long-term civil servant or if they'll be a patronage appointment or if they'll be appointed from the AUPE. We don't know who that person is going to be. This is a powerful, powerful position that can make significant decisions, with significant ramifications on public policy and the treasury and essential services in this province, with no means to appeal their decisions. They do not report to the minister. The minister has no ability in emergencies to override decisions of that commissioner.

If the government feels that that is an appropriate way to go, we would be well advised to review the role and powers of the commissioner in six months. This is a reasonable thing to do. I imagine that even if we review it and find that it's not working out, members will have the ability to reject that anyway. But we should at least take the time six months hence to review how well subsection (3) of this bill is working, because it is such a powerful and, arguably, draconian section of the legislation to give a single commissioner those kinds of powers.

I encourage all members of this House to listen to the arguments made by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, which I think are reasoned and fair and moderate, and vote for an amendment to require a review of this section of the legislation by a committee of this Legislature in six months.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Since I see no other speakers, as is the case with you, Madam Chair, perhaps we could close with this. With kindness I say that the government has admitted that they have a really rough record when it comes to consultation on a number of bills in the past. I trust they would take this as a friendly amendment that would provide the perfect opportunity to do exactly that, to consult. Perhaps this record of consultation, or lack thereof, is simply a reflection of the fact that before last spring only four members sitting over there had ever sat in this House before. That being the case, why don't we have a safe exit for them on this? The spirit and intent of the bill are maintained. It's intact. It can still pass, just not immediately.

This would provide the opportunity, in the words of the Health minister, to go out and talk to the people who we are referring to in this bill. I've seen the negative reaction to the fact that it's been referred to as a bargaining chip. Nobody wants to hear that. Nobody wants to see that. Nobody wants that to be the reality. So let's make sure that that's not the case. Let's allow the folks on the other side to have those consultations with these different groups and make sure that when it comes to the House, there is agreement out in Alberta.

I can assure you, at least from my perspective, Madam Chair, that if that indeed is the case, I could vote for this bill. I think a bunch of other people could, too. We just need to know that the homework has been done, and that has yet to be proven. Over the next few months that could happen, and we could come back in the fall, and we could get this done.

I urge all members on all sides of the House to just take a breather. Let's take the temperature down. Let's do the right thing. Let's bring this back after the proper consultation and agreement has been done, where we can all vote for bills such as this.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we've said before, we recognize the need for this legislation to comply with the Supreme Court decision, but we want to improve on this piece of legislation. As my colleagues have noted, the legislation as presented gives a single commissioner an inordinate amount of power, with binding decision-making powers that cannot be appealed. As worded, it allows a single individual to unilaterally make binding decisions on essential services agreements. The choice of the commissioner as proposed is not a mere token appointment. It requires not only that the government be confident in their choice but that they have the confidence that this individual will perform their role properly going forward. It is not unprecedented that an appointee does not perform their role as they should.

11:00

Again, this is not an indictment against the current government. Such problems have arisen for parties of all stripes across all jurisdictions in this country. But given the power that the commissioner wields in regard to essential services agreements, it is important that there be proper checks and balances on that office. That's why I am proposing an amendment to pull back the commissioner's ability to make binding unilateral judgments, replacing them with an adjudication panel.

Accordingly, I wish to move an amendment, and I have the requisite number of copies for the Assembly for distribution. It's a rather extensive amendment in terms of text. Would you like me to read the entire thing?

I move that Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, be amended as follows: (A)

“Commissioner” be struck out and “Adjudication Panel” substituted wherever it occurs. (B) Section 3 is amended in the proposed section 8 by striking out subsection (4.1) and substituting the following:

(4.1) The Adjudication Panel may designate another member of the Board to act as part of the Adjudication Panel when a designated member of the Adjudication Panel is unable to act or is absent.

(C) Section 4 is amended in the proposed section 9 as follows: (a) in subsection (13) by striking out “may sit alone” and substituting “may sit as a 3-member panel” and (b) by striking out subsection (15). (D) Section 8 is amended in the proposed section 95.3 as follows: (a) by striking out subsection (1) and substituting the following:

(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall designate the Chair, vice-chair, and one other member of the Board to form the Adjudication Panel.

And (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) A decision of a majority of the members of the Adjudication Panel is a decision of the Adjudication Panel.

And (2.2) a quorum of the adjudication panel is the chair, the vice-chair, and one other member of the board.

The Chair: Hon. member, I don’t see that in my version of the amendment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I’m sorry?

The Chair: That last line you read is not in this amendment.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I can withdraw that last line. Do you want me to continue, Madam?

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Replacing the commissioner with an adjudication panel on the Labour Relations Board, which already exists, is a common-sense oversight mechanism for this bill. Instead of a single individual making unilateral and binding decisions, decisions would now be made by a majority of a three-person panel. Individuals are already on the Labour Relations Board because of their experience in these matters. Taking their input and expertise into account is a common-sense measure that improves accountability for the commissioner without prolonging the process.

I urge all members of the Assembly to vote for this common-sense amendment which, I think, will improve the accountability of this process and ensure that the commissioner is making the best decisions possible.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for giving to us for consideration this amendment adjusting the legislation to remove the commissioner and replace it instead with an adjudication panel. These types of oversight or governance decisions were considered through the consultation process by the experts, employees, employers, labour relations community as well as by the government while drafting this legislation. In this case, I cannot support the amendment because, with the commissioner and their appointment, essential services is a new facet in the Alberta labour relations process. It’s something that hasn’t been done before, and we need to make sure that we have a person who understands the Alberta context, who understands essential services, who is able to guide this system, especially in its initial years.

With the Labour Relations Board we will be looking to do some capacity building so that others will become aware of essential services, but having that essential services commissioner, who understands the system, who is trained and is experienced – this is someone who sits on the Labour Relations Board either as chair or vice-chair, someone highly experienced and trained – is what the government has chosen to do with this legislation after considering multiple options.

One comment that the member opposite made was that having a panel does not prolong the process. Unfortunately, we’ve seen in the past that, yes, scheduling more people who need to be involved in any individual case does prolong the process whereas a single commissioner is able to review and act in a more rapid manner.

As well, I’d really like to stress that the purpose of this legislation, the design of this legislation, is for the majority of the negotiations and decision-making to be on the ground. This is not a lawyer’s playground; this is for employers and employees, who understand the work environment that we’re talking about, to work together to negotiate essential services agreements. In the majority of cases we anticipate that the commissioner will be doing an oversight role, reviewing an essential services agreement and then filing it.

We need and want the parties involved in bargaining over an essential services agreement and determining what essential work needs to be protected so that the public, if a strike or lockout is happening, can rely on health, safety, well-being, and the rule of law continuing to be maintained in Alberta through this process. Having the umpire available to negotiate any disputes that may be happening at that level and having the commissioner validate that is, I believe, the best solution to move us forward.

So thank you to the member for this amendment and for considering some of these options. They were considered. We consulted with experts. I cannot support this amendment because I think that having that commissioner role is critical in overseeing our new essential services process here in Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let me be clear. We need and want the majority of the negotiations to take place as has been laid out. But the challenge is that when we create legislation, it’s rarely important when everything is going well and critically important when the ideal isn’t being reached. That’s exactly why we propose this amendment because it is in times when the commissioner is going to be needed extensively that, at the end of the day, being a grassroots organization, we rarely feel comfortable with one person being the be-all and end-all. It’s one of the reasons why we regularly seek in this place to keep as much regulation out of the hands of Executive Council and the Premier’s office as we can.

So I’m thankful that in this piece of legislation the government made the decision to remove the provision that would allow significant regulation changes by Executive Council or allow one individual, the minister’s office, to be able to make sweeping changes. The principle that was in place there, Madam Chair, is the same principle that is in place here. Putting extensive control and power in the hands of the commissioner has a real risk and an opportunity to create challenges when one individual has the ability to make unilateral decisions that have significant impact on the negotiations.

I, quite frankly, am surprised that any side of this argument – be it the employer, the union, those negotiating the agreement – would feel comfortable with it just being one person. At the end of the day part of our role as government is to ensure that there are the appropriate checks and balances on individual power. It is a fundamental tenet of democracy, and it should be applied wherever possible in a number of things that we bring to the Chamber. It should be applied throughout government structure.

We've seen, certainly, when the governing party was the fourth party, then stand in this place on regular occasions, fighting the consolidation or advocating strongly that power not be consolidated in ministerial offices or around the cabinet table or in the Premier's office. Quite frankly, the third party, when they were government, didn't have the best record on this. We saw property rights legislation that created significant challenges when it came to the opportunity for cabinet to make decisions. In fact, we've heard a commitment by this government to correct some of these challenges that were created by the opportunity of unilateral decision-making. We saw those same sorts of actions when they were introducing other labour legislation. I firmly believe that we should be negotiating, not legislating. We saw the previous government doing these types of behaviours, consolidating power around ministers, the cabinet table, or single individuals.

The amendment that we propose prevents that sort of thing. It prevents this consolidating of power. I guess part of my question is: why does the government feel that it's reasonable to consolidate this type of power? Can the government tell the Assembly why it prefers to centralize power in the appointment of this official instead of making the commissioner subject to ministerial authorities or other labour relations boards as a whole to adjudicate these issues? I understand that time was used as one of the concerns, but these critical processes aren't going to be happening regularly. It's very reasonable that the members of the panel could be available during these critical negotiation steps. So to use time as the only reason I don't think holds as much water as it ought.

It is so fundamental to the process, to the moving forward and ensuring that we are respecting democracy, particularly in this case, that we ensure that no single individual holds such significant power over critical negotiations. The government has made a case that they want to, wherever possible, have the negotiations happening, and we agree. But when they don't break down, we shouldn't take all of the negotiating power of the parties and put it in the hands of one person. It is the opposite of what they're trying to achieve.

Here is an opportunity to do the right thing. Frankly, part of the challenge that we're going to face as we move forward is that there are so many decisions that we've made in the last two days that are outside of the scope of the ruling. While we support ensuring that all of the aspects of the Supreme Court ruling are held and are enshrined in legislation so that we can meet the requirements, we're getting to a point where the entire bill becomes a real challenge. I'm happy to hear from the minister if she chooses to continue to comment.

I hope that members of the Assembly will support the amendment. We had a good thing going yesterday afternoon. I might add that unless there are some significant changes, I believe that this is the last amendment that the Official Opposition has to present. Perhaps we can start on a good note and end on a good note, and we can move this legislation forward in a positive direction that respects democracy, prevents decisions from being less transparent, less secretive, lessens the consolidation of power because that's exactly what Albertans would want.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A12?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 4 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

Mr. Carlier: Madam Chair, I move that the committee rise and report, please.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 4.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, say no. So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 4 An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm honoured to rise and speak to Bill 4, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services. The purpose of this bill is to bring Alberta's public-sector labour relations legislation in alignment with directions from the Supreme Court of Canada and the Court of Queen's Bench. The courts have been clear. Workers have a right to join a union if they so choose and to collectively bargain, which includes the right to strike. Certain segments of the existing Labour Relations Code and the Public Service Employee Relations Act that prohibit strikes and lockouts have been declared invalid and must be revised to ensure that they do not interfere with the public sector's right to strike.

As a result, Madam Speaker, we have brought forward Bill 4 to introduce a proposed new model for public-sector legislation to Alberta, known as essential services legislation. This type of legislation is common in other parts of Canada. It allows for strikes and lockouts by public-sector workers while still requiring essential services to be available to the general public during labour disruptions. In developing this proposed legislation, government held extensive consultations with Alberta's public sector, led by well-respected labour lawyer Andrew Sims, to engage both employers and unions. They have known for a year that this legislation was coming, and we ensured that they had ample opportunity to provide comments and suggestions.

We have reviewed all this input carefully and have developed legislation that, if passed, will meet the direction of the courts and be fair to all parties involved. Essential services legislation will change the way public-sector collective bargaining is done in this province for the better. This is because the proposed legislation will put greater responsibility into the hands of employers and employees to negotiate essential services agreements that will give employees the right to strike while protecting the provision of essential services.

Compulsory arbitration is coming out of our legislation as the primary means to resolve disputes. It will still be used in certain circumstances, but for many public employees it will no longer be the fallback position when negotiations get tough. Currently, Madam Speaker, if public employers and unions can't settle their dispute, they can call on the arbitration process to solve it for them. That will no longer be the case if this legislation passes. The parties involved will need to work harder to find common ground. I'm confident that Alberta's public sector is up to the task. After all, this is about employers and employees working together to create a balance ensuring the constitutional rights and protecting the public, both of which are important.

Yes, as directed by the courts, more public-sector workers in Alberta will have the right to strike if their unions are unable to come to an agreement with their employers, but Albertans will still have access to the services that protect the life, personal safety, or health of the public as well as maintaining the maintenance and administration of the rule of law and public security. This proposed new legislation will ensure that during times of labour disruption, including a strike or lockout, essential services for Albertans will be maintained. Madam Speaker, Albertans might be inconvenienced somewhat, but if a public-sector strike were to occur, they can rest assured that essential services will continue to be available.

We've had the opportunity to thoroughly debate this legislation in the House, and I would like to thank all members for their perspectives on this issue addressing some of the concerns and amendments we heard in Committee of the Whole. First, I'd like to thank the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner for his amendment removing the piece of this bill that deferred to regulations. I found that amendment to be entirely reasonable given that this bill has other mechanisms for ensuring that essential service agreements are complete and meet all the requirements for each unique workplace.

There were several other amendments that we were not prepared to support. Members across the way proposed some changes to penalty amounts that would have significantly increased penalties. We may revisit these fines in a more fulsome labour code review at a later time.

There was some thoughtful debate around the section on replacement workers. As stated, our government believes that the provision barring replacement workers is appropriate as it ensures a level playing field during labour negotiations. Replacement workers are against the spirit of what we're trying to accomplish with this legislation. We want employers and employees to come together on a fair and reasonable essential services agreement. If that process is successful, there should be no need for replacement workers. Albertans also deserve to know that they are receiving care and service from the workers who know their needs the best. Specifically, in health care this is about ensuring that Albertans are receiving care from professionally trained nurses and staff.

There was also some discussion of a sunset provision or a one-time review of the legislation in four years. Simply put, government can review legislation at any time, and I don't believe a scheduled review is necessary. Rest assured, we will be watching very closely how this first round of essential services agreements is negotiated and are prepared to revisit this legislation if needed.

There was also the member's favourite amendment requiring the essential services commissioner to be an Albertan living in the province for six years or more. I'm not sure about you, Madam Speaker, but that maybe wasn't my favourite. I'm not sure that government should be legislating who is or isn't Albertan. I believe that if you choose to live here, work here, and pay taxes here, you are an Albertan. The commissioner will be a well-respected member of the Labour Relations Board, which is a board of Albertans doing their best for Alberta.

There was also a thoughtful amendment from the Member for Calgary-South East regarding paramedics, which, I know, is a profession that the member knows very well. While I could not support that amendment as it runs somewhat contrary to our consultations and the way bargaining units are structured in emergency medical services, I want to thank the member for his perspective. Paramedics and EMTs are absolutely vital to the public health and safety of Albertans. The Supreme Court has ruled that these workers, too, have the right to free and fair collective bargaining and to negotiate an essential services agreement. These workers will be considered essential because everyone knows that the actions of paramedics and emergency medical responders make the difference between life and death.

Finally, today we had some other good discussion around the makeup of the commissioner, the role of the commissioner and, again, reviewing the legislation in a timely manner, which we will be doing.

In closing, in this proposed legislation Alberta is following the direction of the courts and providing the basic rights that all workers must have access to. It ensures that bargaining rights are fairly and equitably applied to both employers and employees and their unions. This is the first of what I hope are many steps to be taken by this government, Madam Speaker, to modernize workplace laws in Alberta. I look forward to the passage of Bill 4 and the implementation of essential services legislation here in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to speak to the currently endorsed mandate of the Supreme Court of Canada in support of essential services and the right to strike. Albertans who provide these vital services deserve the ability to exercise the same autonomy as others covered by collective agreements. Our ability to support this progression gives rise to the modernization of our current labour laws.

The right to strike reflects a key element of the bargaining process. As the government it is our obligation to follow the precedents that our Supreme Court of Canada has established. The collective bargaining process relies on the right to strike as a key component of the employer and bargaining unit relationship. As such, it represents a fundamental principle that is inherent to the collective agreement, that is achieved through communications. Our vital services act with integrity and abide by this agreement.

It is our priority to ensure that the services provided are just as protected as those who require them. In support of this mandate we support that those qualified to provide these services also have a voice in the execution of their function. The ability to use replacement workers can compromise patient care and potentially violates the spirit of essential service agreements between parties. Our diligence requires us to establish the framework to first determine who is essential in order to mitigate the impact on the negotiation position of employers or employees. We are confident that our experienced commissioner will provide the necessary expertise to support the implementation of this mandated legislation. This allows us to deliver the best interests of our Albertans efficiently.

Vital services are an extremely important part of Albertan infrastructure. Currently they echo a less effective model within their framework that prohibits the essence of collective bargaining. Without this ability our workers are forced to compulsory arbitration as the mechanism of resolution. Madam Speaker, I recognize the importance of communication as it pertains to dispute resolutions, but I also recognize that the right to strike provides a sound message in moving past conditions that do not reflect a relationship balance.

Our government looks to the transparency of consultation as it moves to implement a model that protects the Charter rights of public-sector employees. For over six months our government has opened communications with Albertans to ascertain their input regarding this important subject. As a result of this new precedent, key stakeholders will engage in stronger communication, that supports effective, more balanced resolution. As a result, it will minimize the use of costly third-party mechanisms and place a greater onus on a more cohesive relationship between employers and unions. The key characteristic of unionization is the ability to strike. It is not to say that it is the only resolution to conflict, but it paves the way to stronger, sounder relationships. It takes good faith and places that importance back in the relationship.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is an important bill with significant implications for public policy in this province, for the delivery of essential services, for our finances, and for the essential service workers who deliver those services. This bill is required in some form to comply with the Supreme Court ruling concerning the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour. But this bill goes further than is required by the Supreme Court, and this bill does not get the balance right. Now, a bill would be required to comply with the Supreme Court ruling regardless of which party was in government, but this bill goes further and adds several little nuggets into the bill which are not required by the Supreme Court, which gave me real cause for concern.

I will preface my further comments by noting that the Wildrose does not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike. In fact, that's the position put forward by our members as well, that we will carefully examine what should be included in essential services and ensure that they are treated fairly. That is Wildrose member past policy. In fact, we did agree with the aim of the bill in principle, and that is why we voted in favour of the legislation at second reading, as an expression of that support. We agree that compulsory arbitration should be reserved for truly essential public servants in exchange for a reasonable infringement upon the right to strike. Members confused the Supreme Court ruling or have not read it when they say that the ruling gives an absolute, unchecked right to strike and that it does not require the government to provide essential services during a labour dispute.

We agree with the government's stated intention in the bill: solely to implement a Supreme Court decision. Perhaps the most flawed part of this bill is its title because it does more than just implement a Supreme Court decision. It gives a few little nuggets, like Easter eggs spread throughout the lawn, that really give cause for concern, and we have to wonder why those things are in the bill, Madam Speaker. We agree with the stated intention of the bill, to implement a Supreme Court decision, but we fundamentally disagree with the suggestion that that is all the government is trying to achieve here.

The bill goes well past what is required by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court struck down the Saskatchewan legislation because they found that striking is a Charter right and that public employees do not have unilateral authority to determine what is essential without an adequate review mechanism and that those laws lacked an impartial alternative bargaining process to settle disputes. That is the substance of the Supreme Court decision, Madam Speaker. It is not an absolute, unchecked right of public employees to strike, illegally or legally. The court came to its conclusion based on these factors handled together, not separately. There was not a line in the court decision that speaks to how they would have ruled if only one of those factors were present such as if it was a compulsory arbitration process, but there was never any doubt that, following the ruling, the labour relations landscape in Alberta would change as a result of the ruling and its implications for Alberta.

When the legislation goes into effect, public-sector employers and the employee bargaining units will be sitting down and negotiating essential service agreements like this in Alberta for the first time. Unfortunately, however, this bill in its current form is not a balanced approach, and as a result I am not convinced that it secures the delivery of essential services that Albertans rely on. It was regrettable that the government defeated almost every single proposed amendment that sought to correct areas where this bill was deficient.

Many aspects of the bill also potentially weaken the government's bargaining position with public-sector unions. That's a disadvantage for the taxpayers of Alberta. Albertans have reason to be suspicious of this government's relations with big union bosses. The NDP, of course, constitutionally recognizes an entitlement for certain union representatives to be delegates to conventions. Again, we all remember that just last month the government appointed a top AUPE negotiator to lead the government's side in bargaining talks with AUPE. We raised a valid concern, that we still hold. How are Albertans supposed to have any confidence in the upcoming public-sector negotiations when the Premier is appointing a top AUPE negotiator as the government's chief adviser with AUPE? Even if he's not at the table, what role will the same individual have when the government is negotiating with AUPE bargaining units for essential service agreements? More problematically, this government voted on and defeated nearly every single amendment aimed to correct this part of the legislation that particularly benefits the power of big union bosses that hold particular sway and power within the NDP.

Again, I would remind members that my caucus colleagues and members of the third party and I were clear from the start that we were cautiously optimistic about this legislation. We voted in favour of it at second reading on principle. I wanted to be able to support this bill at its final stage and potentially have all-party support for it. I was optimistic that that would be one of these rare moments where all parties can agree on something. Unfortunately, that does not seem to be the case. This government chose to defeat significant amendments, leaving the original problems still front and centre, that will require correction from a new government in the future.

Government members chose to defeat an amendment to help ensure that the essential services commissioner is a fair-minded Albertan. No, the government members chose to have that reasonable condition defeated, leaving open the possibility that this powerful new role could be filled by another partisan drop-in from places like Manitoba, where we expect there to be many unemployed NDP staffers in the next month.

When I read the proposed legislation, I was particularly surprised that the government chose to outright shut down the possibility of replacement workers before an employer and employee bargaining unit even had the chance to negotiate an essential services agreement. As my colleagues and I pointed out, this was completely and entirely outside the scope of the Supreme Court ruling, which the minister claims she was only trying to implement and nothing else. That is just not true, Madam Speaker. Obviously, the number of times unions and the government would think of the limited use of replacement workers would be necessary but few, but it's disappointing to see that the government forced a blanket ban on replacement workers based on ideology under the guise of implementing a Supreme Court ruling.

The amendments proposed by my colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner yesterday were modest, common-sense solutions to improve this bill. Instead of having a blanket ban on replacement workers, one modest amendment simply proposed that they only be allowed when an essential service agreement allows it, one that is valid and agreed upon by both parties and states that replacement workers can be used under specific circumstances in a strike or lockout. Unfortunately, the government opposed this.

Another modest amendment would have allowed replacement workers in an emergency situation, should one arise while there is an ongoing strike or lockout, until a decision by the umpire and commissioner is made on the best remedy for an unforeseen emergency. Unfortunately, the government defeated that amendment, too.

Of course, given that this sort of legislative framework for essential services is relatively new to the Alberta experience, it would have made sense to have a one-time impetus on the Assembly to revisit this bill in a few years, once there's been an opportunity to see what is working and what's not working and what we can do to improve it. So my colleague for Cardston-Taber-Warner proposed an amendment for a sunset clause. Unfortunately, the government rejected that, too.

My colleague from the third party, Calgary-Lougheed, proposed a committee to review subsection (3) of this bill in six months' time, a reasonable, rational, and very modest amendment to ensure that the powers of the commissioner are appropriate and being exercised properly. For reasons that are not yet duly explained by government members, that amendment, too, was rejected.

Madam Speaker, even an amendment to ensure that EMS workers are defined as essential services – a no-brainer – was shamefully defeated by members from the government side. I cannot think of any definition under which EMS workers would not be considered an absolutely essential service, deserving of being enshrined in the legislation.

You know, I know that if the four original members who sit on the government side were still in opposition, they would have voted for that amendment. If they were still in opposition, sitting in the seats they occupied last year, they would have voted for an amendment like that because they knew it was the right thing to do. But now that they're in government, they like to reject anything that comes from the opposition unless they have no choice politically but to accept, or amendments that they'll accept are technocratic in nature and not substantive. It's funny what government can do to how one sits in this Legislature at times.

The legislation does not recognize that an illegal strike under the act merits a financial penalty for trade unions or a corporation, yet the government has chosen to keep the monetary penalty to a sum that is little more than a symbolic gesture, a slap on the wrist. We shouldn't be kidding ourselves. Canada's largest public-sector unions have multimillion-dollar strike funds at their disposal. They would not be deterred by a mere $1,000-a-day slap on the wrist.

First, keeping penalties so low cheapens the value of an essential service agreement. If there isn't an adequate deterrent on an employer against staging an illegal lockout or on big union leadership against organizing an illegal strike, then it's easier for them to conclude that such acts may be worth doing in certain circumstances. A $1,000-a-day penalty is laughable if you are a big union boss and you have a multimillion-dollar reserve fund. One thousand dollars a day is not a lot if you're an employer and are saving much more from wages not paid to workers locked out.

Now, if a union, let's say, had $20 million in their strike fund, at $1,000 a day that means that that union could strike illegally for 20,000 days. Twenty-thousand days. That is almost 55 years. Now, I don't expect that this would actually come to pass, but the legislation proposed levies a trivial $1,000-a-day penalty for illegal wildcat strikes. That would allow those strikes to go on, even though they're illegal, for 55 years. It's almost laughable if it wasn't so deadly serious to the delivery of essential services in this province, Madam Speaker.

In proportion to the salaries a private member is paid in this Legislature, that is the equivalent to us getting a speeding ticket and paying about $6.35 for it. I think a lot of us would continue speeding if we paid only $6.35 to get home down the QE II. It would be no deterrent whatsoever, and $1,000 a day for a penalty for illegal strikes is just as laughable as a speeding ticket of $6 to Members of this Legislative Assembly.

Not only does this laughable sum weaken the government's bargaining position on behalf of taxpayers, but it does not protect Albertans who rely on essential services. An illegal strike by a designated essential service against a government that is prohibited by the same law from having replacement workers leaves the government with almost nothing to bargain with. The essential services that would be jeopardized in that scenario are essentially used to force or at the very least strongly pressure the government to concede their position in a negotiation or risk the well-being or even health and safety of Albertans.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise and speak to Bill 4 today. As we know, this legislation is necessary as a result of the recent Supreme Court decision, and while it is necessary, it is up to the ministry to develop and implement this legislation.

I believe that Bill 4 is a good piece of legislation. It's drafted in consultation with one of the greatest labour law minds in the province, drafted in a way that creates a balance between the right to strike and the need for public safety. What's more, Madam Speaker, I am pleased with the approach to allow both sides, labour and management, to be the ones that draft the essential services legislation. This is the right place for this to be done, not here, not in the Assembly. These two parties are the experts in their industry and what it takes to have their operations run efficiently, without endangering the public. In the legislation there's incentive for both parties to reach an essential services agreement as the legislation states that bargaining cannot commence until the ESA is in place.

Madam Speaker, I believe that the ban on replacement workers is appropriate. This ensures that the best people suited to provide care are always in place. Quite frankly, to add replacement workers would completely undermine the essence of the legislation.

This bill, Madam Speaker, does not need to go to committee. Not only is it the government's obligation to get this done, but it is thoughtful and fair legislation that will ensure both the rights of workers and the rights of the public to have essential services.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by Chestermere-Rocky View if we have time.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know what? This is a little bit of a disappointing place to come to. When this bill came forward, members from all sides of the House, all parties, said quite clearly that they were pleased that the government was moving to satisfy the Supreme Court of Canada decision based on what happened in Saskatchewan, and I was one of those. When the debate started, I congratulated the minister for bringing this forward, and I meant what I said. That was a good thing to do.

Had the government stuck with that plan, I suspect there may well have been one of those rare cases where we may have had unanimous agreement on the legislation, and we could have all left and said that we had done the right thing. Unfortunately, the government took the right thing and could not resist the urge to throw some gifts at their friends. I don't mind that the government has friends. That's okay. We should all have friends. But when we sit in this House, we need to remember who we're serving. We need to serve Albertans, all Albertans, and not our friends. Sadly, that's not what has happened here.

The government, using a really important piece of legislation as a smokescreen, has added other things that are outside of the requirement of the Supreme Court of Canada. Over the course of debate our party and the other opposition have tried to point this out and guide government into the right direction, but they have rejected that good advice at every turn.

One section in particular is the outright banning of replacement workers in the public sector. Now, I agree and I think members of all sides of the House agree that workers should have the right to strike. There needs to be some balance in the negotiations. That's what the Supreme Court said. But the government could not resist tipping the balance on one side instead of leaving the balance where it is. They, unfortunately, used a really important piece of legislation as a smokescreen to hide that fact, but I don't think that Albertans are going to be fooled.

As has been said – and I will repeat some of it but not all of it – our party and some of the other opposition have tried hard to correct this legislation. I know that we made an amendment to remove the section where the government bans replacement workers and even said that if they really want to do this, do it by the light of day, do it honestly, do it in the bigger labour review. If you really, truly in your heart believe it's the right thing to do, do it by the light of day, not under the smoke of a Supreme Court decision. But that's not what the government did. In my view, they have chosen to hide this fact from Albertans under the cover of something important and good.

We tried to reason with them. We tried to take the reasonable approach. If they wouldn't ban it, we offered them an opportunity, through another amendment moved by my colleague from Calgary-Lougheed, to review this change in a year to see how it's working. Why? To make sure that Albertans are kept safe, something that I think all Albertans would agree with and something I used to think that all members of this House would agree with. But that's not the way it has unfolded.

Along the way, you know, the government has been bobbing and weaving, which is really interesting. When they stand up to talk, they say, "Well, we're doing this great thing for the Supreme Court of Canada decision," which is a good thing. Then in the next sentence they talk about the stuff outside of the Supreme Court of Canada decision: why it's important to ban replacement workers, and why they can't include EMS as an essential service. When they get challenged and pinned down on that, because they have not got a single argument that actually supports either one of those things, they retreat underneath the smoke of the Supreme Court of Canada decision.

Anybody watching that wants to review the proceedings here and the arguments on the government side, that has been very consistent, bobbing and weaving. They lead with the Supreme Court of Canada, but what they're really doing is other things. And that's a shame. Albertans deserve better, and I don't believe that Albertans will be fooled.

The fact is that the government missed an opportunity here, too. They had a chance to fix a long-standing situation where EMS paramedics are not considered essential. They could have stood up today for all Albertans who care about their safety. The government could have said: "We care about Albertans' safety. Of course, we know paramedics are essential. Of course we know that, and we're going to codify it in law the same way that it has been done with firefighters and police officers." Almost all Albertans agree with this.

In fact, you know what's really telling? It's a tradition here, and it's not a bad one. When there's a standing vote in the House, the government – and they always win the standing votes because they have the majority – pound on the desk, quite proud of themselves. Well, when they won the vote slapping the EMS paramedics in the face, you could hardly hear anything, very gentle, like they were ashamed. And I believe they were ashamed. I believe when they go back to their ridings, when people learn what they have done, the paramedics will not be happy.

I wish every one of them good health. I wish every one of them good health for a long, long time along with everybody else in this House and everybody else that's watching. But I particularly wish the government members good health, because when that day comes when their health isn't good, who will come? One of those people that they would not say today were essential. They would not say that they were essential. When they come to pick them up from wherever they need help, they will be calling someone, who will come dutifully and do a great job, who the government would not say, given the opportunity, were essential.

It is shameful. It's shameful and made worse by the minister saying that the bargaining unit they're in wants to keep them. The government is using essential workers who keep Albertans safe as a bargaining chip, as a shiny pony to deliver to one of their friends. Shameful. Absolutely shameful.

You know what? For EMS workers, paramedics watching, I have no idea what they might be thinking. But I can tell you – and I don't blame the government for this – that paramedics have been kicked from pillar to post, as we've heard from people here and I certainly know from my time on city council. Lots of times they've been kicked from being an independent part of municipalities to under the fire department to some other group, back and forth, and really not given the identity that they have earned and deserve through their years of selfless dedication and hard work in looking after Albertans during their time of greatest need. But this government couldn't find the gumption to recognize that.

They were offered and offered. And you know what? My colleague from Calgary-South East, as he said in his remarks, went to the government and said: "Why don't you do it? You be the hero."

We'll cheer for you. Just do the right thing, and we'll cheer for you." We would have cheered for them on this side of the House. We would have if they just agreed to do the right thing. And it's so obvious. There are lots of things that we do in this House that are a matter of opinion, of legitimate debate, that you could disagree about. Are paramedics essential? Yes. There is no debate. We all agree, and the government wouldn't act to recognize it. Shameful.

Not only would they not take the lead on it and be the heroes of the day, but they wouldn't let us give them some friendly advice, that we would have had to thank them for, because they're more interested in looking after their friends than all of Albertans, and that really is telling. It's really, really telling. It's okay that they have friends. Again, I support that. Everybody should have friends. But we all have public records here, and they show whether you're supporting all of Albertans or just your friends. Well, we got a pretty clear answer today from this government.

They're not supporting all Albertans, and they're surely not recognizing what paramedics have earned for as long as they've been around, that they are a key part of the social safety net and the physical safety net for Albertans, something that we all depend upon, people that we admire and look up to and depend upon. They had a chance to say it out loud today, and they slid under a rock and said: nah; we're going to look after our friends instead. You know what? That is shameful.

If it were not for those things, I could support this legislation because I and our party do support adhering to the Supreme Court of Canada decision. We've made that clear through the debate, and we're very firm on that. Unfortunately, the government of today has chosen – has chosen – to sully what should be a very good-news story by not looking after Albertans. It makes me sad, Madam Speaker. It disappoints me.

You know what? I guess when I see paramedics, I'll tell them that our party and the other opposition did our best for them, but we could not overcome a government that was more determined to please their friends than to do the work that they get paid for by 4.3 million Albertans.

It's a sad day. It's a sad day, and it's almost fitting that it's Thursday so that when our government friends go back to their own ridings, they will be subject to the wrath and disappointment of the people. When they got elected, they said, as we all did: we're going to represent what you say when we go to Edmonton. Well, today the government didn't do that, and it's not like they didn't know. They knew very well what the people who elected them believe, as I do and as I believe everybody in this House does. Many of the government members said that the work the paramedics do is essential.

Yet when given the chance to make it official, to recognize them, to put it into law, to not leave it up to a negotiation that could change later, when there's a different minister or a different government or a different something, those paramedics, although the minister said, "Well, for now you'll be essential," are left wondering whether that will change with the weather, with the change of a minister, with the change of government or the whim of the current government.

Madam Speaker, it saddens me that I'm going to be unable to support this legislation. There is no good reason why this had to happen, but the government . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1), the Assembly stands adjourned until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, April 7, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very distinguished guest and former MLA, Barrie Chivers. Joining Barrie today are members of his family: Tamara, Daniel, Darren, Wendy, and Batya Chivers, Katie Clackson, and Peg Chivers. He is also joined by a number of colleagues and friends.

In 1990, following the death of his long-time law partner and MLA, Gordon Wright, Barrie was elected as the Member of the Legislative Assembly representing Edmonton-Strathcona. As MLA Barrie was the Official Opposition critic for the Attorney General, Solicitor General, consumer and corporate affairs, and at the time the native affairs portfolio. Few people have had more profound influence on labour, employment, and human rights legislation in Alberta than Barrie Chivers. It's fitting that today, as we consider third reading of Bill 4, we recognize him. His firm, Chivers Carpenter, intervened in the Supreme Court case upon which Bill 4 is based. It was in 1987 that Barrie first argued at the Supreme Court of Canada that the right to strike is a Charter right. Mr. Speaker, it took almost 20 years for the Supreme Court to agree with him.

Barrie's distinguished law career dates back to 1970, when he was admitted to the bar, and in 1973 he cofounded the law firm Wright, Chivers & Co. Barrie's defence of workers is legendary. His clients have included numerous labour organizations representing firefighters, teachers and educators, nurses, municipal food service and maintenance workers. His impeccable legal work has led to more progressive legislation in our province. As a result Albertans enjoy greater fairness in the workplace. We recognize Barrie today as he finally retires from the practice of law. Knowing Barrie, I expect he will pursue new opportunities in his retirement with the same devotion that he has given to his legal career.

Please join me in thanking Barrie for his incredible contribution to Alberta and wishing him well as he now rises with his family to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to encourage the Assembly to witness the wonderful presence of my local school, the H.E. Bourgoin middle school. As I read your names, I'd like the parents and students to rise, please, and we can actually thank you for coming up here and visiting the Legislature: Ms Cheryl Law, Ms Gina Elock, Mrs. Vonda Worthman, Ms Brosseau, Ms Katherine Heppner, Ms Mandee Urlacher, Ms Amanda Shideler, Mrs. Chawnsa Dutertre, Mr. Dutertre, Ms Rondeau, Ms Pitcher, Kelly Bowman, Stacy Sartan, Jennifer Genster, Christina Matwychuk, Lana Patey, and Odette Gagne. Sorry about that to those whose names I brutalized.

This school was named after one of the first teachers at the Duclos school. This school was formed on March 5, 1982. Their colours were brown, orange, and white. They actually took on sensibility, and it looks like they dropped the orange and went black, white, and blue. Currently they have the vision of working to meet the needs of students, which is admirable. Their mission statement is Maximizing the Learning of Every Student. I have to say that I am proud of this school in my riding, and I'd ask that everybody in this Assembly join me in welcoming them here today.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups here today, hon. members?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly guests from the Calgary Stampede. The Calgary Stampede has been bringing together people from across Alberta and attracting visitors to our province from across the world for an incredible 132 years. First held in 1912, the Stampede has become a long-standing Alberta tradition that preserves and promotes our western heritage, culture, and community spirit. The Stampede contributes to our goals of building strong communities and a robust, diverse economy. Generating more than $400 million in annual economic impact, the Stampede provides more than 5,000 jobs and stimulates tourism and business throughout the region.

As a not-for-profit organization the Stampede owes its success in large part to the people behind it, including 2,300 volunteers and 1,200 staff who commit their names, energy, and talent to this great organization. I would like to ask Mr. Warren Connell, chief executive officer, and Alison Buie, the government relations manager, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Michael Gardiner. Michael is a good friend, an accomplished campaigner for postsecondary education and for workers' rights, and, according to both himself and the judging panel of myself and my husband, the best dancer at my wedding. I'd like to ask him to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly my incredibly dedicated constituency staff. Jocelyn Stenger, my constituency manager, has been an incredible asset to my office and the Edmonton-Meadowlark community as a whole. She worked for two of our current ministers while in opposition, and her social work background has helped many of my constituents navigate programs and receive the results that they need. Jim Storrie, my constituency assistant, is responsible for helping me reach out to the people of Edmonton-Meadowlark to keep them informed about the services and programs that we offer. Finally, Bobbi Schuring is currently in the Edmonton-Meadowlark office as a social work student studying at Grant MacEwan.

The people we put in our constituency offices are, I believe, a reflection of who we are as MLAs, and I am able to come to this House every day confident that my community is receiving the best support possible because of my staff. I'd ask all three to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Barbara Warner and Carie Fargey-Scott. Barbara is a former legislative counsel and page at the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and is also the daughter of the hon. David Warner, a former Speaker in Ontario. Currently her private law practice helps Canadian charities and not-for-profit organizations. Carie lives in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. She's also a former parliamentary page in the House of Commons in Ottawa and currently is a team manager in claims assurance services at Alberta Blue Cross. Barbara and Carie bonded over their love of politics in their first year of university many years ago, and Barbara's trip out west wouldn't be complete without a visit to this Legislature. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

1:40

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you I wish the Member for Edmonton-South West a happy birthday.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly my newest constituency assistant, Michelle Hoare. Michelle joined my team early in the new year, and I and the people of Calgary-Shaw are incredibly happy to have her onboard. She's a born-and-raised Calgarian who is passionate about social, feminist, and political issues in Alberta. Michelle has a bachelor's degree from the University of Saskatchewan in international relations. In her spare time she volunteers at the Brenda Strafford Foundation and the Calgary drop-in centre. I'd ask that she please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: I wonder if it's true that the Member for Edmonton-South West can now vote. Is that right?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you the Council of Alberta University Students, or CAUS, well named. They're wrapping up their week of advocacy here with all parties in the House. I regret that I missed their green muffins last night as they celebrated the end of their advocacy week. Joining us today are incoming members of the council, who will officially start their term May 1, including – could you stand as I mention your names – Stephan Guscott, Tristan Bray, Mike Sandare, Carley Casebeer, accompanied by the executive director, Bev Eastham, I hope, and by research and policy analyst Josh McKeown. Join me in giving these fine folks a welcome from the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my delight to introduce to you and through you several members of the Metis Settlements General Council. I met with them this morning: Sherry Cunningham, elected treasurer; Randy Hardy, president; Stan Delorme, vice-president; and Alden Armstrong, executive director. The MSGC is a governing body that enhances, preserves, and promotes Métis settlements collectively while addressing socioeconomic needs through good governance and community involvement. They also seek to preserve and protect their land and culture. I ask that they rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so honoured and pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the three most important men in my life: my husband, Malkeet, who I've been with for 25 years and who holds my heart and has my back; my oldest son, Akesh, who is 19 and who put his own school career on hold to come home and take over my business of 20 years, my music school, and has done a phenomenal job; and my youngest son, Seheran, who has overcome absolutely every hurdle that's ever been put in front of him and has gone on to prove that all children with special needs are of absolute importance and has just proven over and over and time and time again that he is a magnificent human being. I would ask that all three of you stand right now and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a friend of mine and a former university roommate – the less said about that the better – who is here all the way from British Columbia. He is working hard to continue to develop business opportunities in Alberta's Industrial Heartland. If I could have Mr. Cameron St. John please rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Solar Power

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to share that the transition from coal-fired generators by 2030 is generating a positive future for alternative sources of electrical power to meet our needs. In my constituency of Wetaskiwin-Camrose business owners and communities are using solar power more than ever. For example, Parkland Fertilizers has installed 350 solar panels on their new building. The Montana Cree Nation admin office is powered by solar panels, and the community of Maskwacis is negotiating with a company for renewable energy production. The city of Wetaskiwin is offering homeowners a $500 rebate for installing solar panels.

Industry experts say that Alberta is set to produce 2,000 megawatts of solar power by 2025 and that by 2030 renewables will produce 30 per cent of Alberta's electrical energy. The government's new $5 million Alberta municipal solar program will assist municipalities all across the province with capital cost rebates for solar system installations and create jobs.

Mr. Speaker, we have some of the best examples of alternative energy facilities. The largest solar farm in Alberta is the Green Acres Hutterite colony east of Calgary. In Vulcan there are plans to build a project 30 times larger. Another solar farm north of Lethbridge, that will produce enough power for 8,220 homes, is on the way. Other companies are getting into the solar race, too, and when completed, these companies will put $900 million in new spending and produce 352 megawatts of electrical generating capacity. I have read in news articles that Enbridge and TransCanada, which operate solar power plants in Ontario, are ready to shift into Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, on June 4 and 5 the Eco-Solar Home Tour will feature 18 homes where you can talk to the homeowners about their energy efficiency features.

Hence, Mr. Speaker, the scenario for Alberta's emerging solar power looks a lot sunnier. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Shane Dawson Jr.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is never out of order to highlight the positive accomplishments of others. I've coached some amazing athletes, but regardless of their athletic skill or abilities I was always proud of every athlete that attempted to live up to our school motto, Strive to Excel.

On the weekend I had the opportunity to watch the Toronto Blue Jays play the Boston Red Sox. Just a baseball game for some, but for me it was an opportunity to watch one of my starting basketball guards, Shane Dawson Jr., pitch in his first major league game for the Jays, one of those times that makes us as parents and coaches and teachers and indeed the entire community proud. I am proud of Shane because he has taken a natural athletic talent and honed it through many long hours to achieve excellence in his chosen field. He is an example that a passion for life and hard work can result in excellence.

I'm proud because Shane knows that while success is good, it is not success that makes you a good person. Having a little sister that struggles with Smith-Magenis syndrome has meant that Shane knows that all people have value and must be treasured. I'm proud that Shane understands that he has been able to achieve his dreams in part because of the efforts of others. He invests time in kids through volunteering. He has learned the lesson that he must repay what he has been given.

Excellence is never easily achieved, but when it is, it should be celebrated, and I am proud to bring to the attention of Albertans one of our own, Shane Dawson: a great baseball player, a proud Albertan, and an even better person. I wish Shane the best of luck. May his fastball always be in the high 90s, may his curveball continue to break hard, and may his changeup continue to fool batters. As he continues to grow in life, may he always move forward in service to others with the speed of his fastball . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

National Sport School

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a unique and exciting school located in my riding of Calgary-Bow. The National Sport school is located on the Canada Olympic Park grounds and caters to students who excel in and are dedicated to competitive sports.

Since opening its doors in 1994, the National Sport School has helped Alberta's youth achieve their athletic goals and also, along the way, teach its students how to be leaders and productive members of their communities. Recently Principal Ken Weipert shared a story with me of how, through the school leadership program, the school was able to bring together enough food supplies to provide the local Mustard Seed Community Support Centre with over 1,000 sandwich lunches.

The student body of the National Sport School represents athletic excellence in over 30 sports, including alpine skiing, figure skating, luge, bobsledding, gymnastics, water polo, and equestrian sports. Yesterday I had the pleasure to introduce several students. Brooke Apshkrum successfully brought home a gold medal in luge at this year's Youth Olympic Games, which were held in Lillehammer, Norway, in February. Congratulations, Brooke. Carter Malyk competed in luge and bobsleigh and would be continuing a family tradition when he achieves his dream of representing Canada in future Olympic Games. Keep up the excellent work, Carter. And Rachel Thibeault, 16, is a competitive swimmer, member of the University of Calgary Swim Club, and has been competing since 2007.

While the dedicated staff support these children in meeting their academic goals, these young athletes travel the world representing Alberta and Canada on the world stage. The National Sport School can be proud of the fact that in the last two consecutive Winter Olympic Games the students and alumni made up 10 per cent of Canada's athletes.

It was an absolute pleasure touring the facility with the principal and learning about the programs the National Sport school has to offer. This unique school is an asset to our community, and I'm very proud to be representing them here today.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: It's time to elect Thomas Mulcair as our Prime Minister. Those were the Premier's words last October in the federal election. Today the federal NDP leader says that if his party tells him to, he will do everything he can to keep Alberta's oil in the ground. We know this Premier has fund raised for the NDP politicians who have said this in the past, but Albertans expect her to condemn this when she speaks at the convention on Saturday. Will the Premier stand in her place and commit that she and her cabinet will do everything they can to condemn this motion in the strongest terms possible?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make it crystal clear that I absolutely do not agree with what Tom Mulcair said about keeping oil in the ground yesterday. Those remarks are unacceptable, and I will certainly be there to convey that message to membership and to make sure that they know how important it is that we get our product to market.

Mr. Jean: I'm very glad to hear the minister say that. I hope to hear the Premier say exactly the same thing because . . . [interjections] I understand, and I'm glad to hear that the Premier understands the damage from the federal NDP advocating to stop oil production here in Alberta.

The fact remains, however, that the Premier has fund raised for anti-Alberta leaders in Ontario, and the federal NDP has made several statements campaigning against Alberta pipelines. My next question is a very simple one. Will the Premier advocate to her provincial and federal colleagues, proudly stand in her place, and support Alberta's oil sands and our pipelines right across the country and around the world?

Ms Hoffman: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. We've been consistent on that. We know that pipelines are the safest way to get our product to market, and we absolutely are committed to making sure that we have a drama-free method of getting our product to tidewater.

In terms of party members not always agreeing, for example – we have a few people here – a former colleague of the hon. leader not that long ago said that Nelson Mandela was a terrorist. Did he agree with what that party member said? I sure hope not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: I hope that this government can understand why Albertans need some clarity from the Premier on this issue. On pipelines the Premier has campaigned against projects like Keystone and like Northern Gateway that are so important to our resources. Members of her cabinet have campaigned for B.C. politicians asking to keep Alberta's oil in the ground, and the Premier refuses to oppose plans for a crude-oil tanker ban. Will the Premier stand up and advocate for all our pipeline projects and against tanker bans to her federal NDP friends, and will she stop fundraising for these people that oppose our industry?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we've been really clear that we absolutely are committed to making sure that we get a pipeline built to tidewater. We are focusing our efforts on making sure that the paths of least resistance and of most benefit to Canadians are the pipelines that we're moving forward with. So we will certainly be talking about opportunities to move our products east and west with our colleagues from across Canada over this very weekend.

Another example of a former colleague that the hon. leader shared a party with, Brent Rathgeber, just said a little while ago that the Official Opposition's job . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I believe there was use of a name in your statement. As I understand, it should be avoided in the House. [interjections] I'm sorry. You're correct.

I'm advised that I was incorrect. I did interrupt the member. My apologies.

Alberta Health Services Decision-making

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, last fall the Premier delivered a keynote address at the AUPE's annual convention. What's concerning is the allegation from the former CEO of AHS, the highest paid person in Alberta by the government. In advance of the speech, to avoid embarrassment for the Premier, AHS was ordered back to the bargaining table to offer a raise to AUPE. This move will cost taxpayers millions and millions of dollars. Can the Premier confirm if anyone in her office instructed AHS to offer raises to the AUPE in advance of her appearance at this convention?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has spoken to this issue before, and I'll be proud to speak to it again. Certainly, when there is an opportunity to get back to mediation, we encourage both the employer and the employee to go to mediation. We've all said in this House that we think the best way to get deals is to have people sit down and talk, and that's certainly what we encouraged them to do.

In terms of what was said yesterday, the Leader of the Official Opposition said that Ms Kaminski's professional reputation was exemplary, and then a few minutes later his colleagues said that the system that she led was bureaucratic, inefficient, and wasteful. Get it right. Mr. Speaker, which way is it, (a) or (b)? I really think they need to straighten their facts.

Mr. Jean: It's (c): this government keeps interfering.

The NDP government offering pay raises to public-sector unions so that the NDP Premier could avoid embarrassing herself when speaking to our union brothers and sisters is exactly what Albertans feared may happen with this government. It's a serious allegation, and the Premier needs to provide a serious answer, not avoid it. Did the Premier or someone in her office order AHS back to the bargaining table with the AUPE in advance of the Premier's attendance at their convention after they'd already received instructions in the bargaining unit?

Ms Hoffman: As has been said, this is a long-outstanding negotiation that broke down under the previous government. When we saw that there was an opportunity to get the parties back to the table, we thought it was important to encourage that. We do not apologize for that, Mr. Speaker. This is being negotiated right now, and certainly I am proud of that.

In terms of interference, certainly, if that's what you want to call it, I guess I'm guilty. When the opposition whip asked me to meet twice recently to talk about Sundre, I said: absolutely. I think that's important. I think that he's doing his job, and I think I am, too.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday, when asked about interference in the Edmonton lab services project, the Premier said, "There was no written evidence to suggest that [this] particular issue was a good decision, so this minister set about getting evidence on which to base her decision." Well, we actually FOIPed that decision, and it is one of the most researched AHS decisions that we have ever seen in Wildrose's history. I will table those documents later. Did AHS not share this evidence with the minister, or was the minister mad that the evidence didn't fit with her ideological agenda?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, there was lots of evidence that the one model that was being considered had been considered. There wasn't evidence that either of the other models or three other models, maintaining the current mix of private and public delivery or expanding public delivery, was considered. That, to me, is evidence on one specific model. That's not evidence to make good decisions.

How about other interference? The opposition Health critic just yesterday asked me to interfere in that promotion of organ transplants. That's good governance. The opposition Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky suggested yesterday that the Minister of Infrastructure and myself should interfere in the Grande Prairie hospital construction. He's doing his job; we're doing ours.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Energy Policies (continued)

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another day and more grim news for Alberta's economy. Canada's oil patch has suffered the biggest drop in investment in almost 70 years, and instead of providing stability for our energy sector, the NDP has done everything it possibly can to drive investment out of this province. When Albertans asked for a steady hand, they got higher taxes and risky economic experiments. When will the Premier start restoring confidence in our oil and gas sector instead of pushing it out of the province?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The unfortunate news that capital investment is down significantly is a direct result of low global prices of oil, and certainly we feel for those families. The decline has resulted in devastating job losses here in Alberta, and it's made it more difficult for governments across the country to invest in education and health care. Only the opposition thinks that Alberta's government decides the price of global oil. We know that's not true. We're continuing to work with other partners like Texas and North Dakota, both of whom have governments other than the NDP. We need to find ways to put people back to work, and we're doing that.

Mr. Jean: Just this year a shocking $50 billion of investment has been pulled out of our energy sector. That's like Canada's entire aerospace industry being wiped off the map in just a short period of time. Rig workers and the men and women who rely on oil and gas to put food on their tables are tired of a government that fights harder for carbon taxes than for their jobs. Can the Premier explain how introducing damaging new tax hikes, experiments with our electrical grid, more regulation, and a $3 billion carbon tax, that wasn't campaigned on, provides hope for these Albertans?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the United States two-thirds of their rigs have been decommissioned. The hardest hit state is Texas, which is led by a Republican governor. Does the opposition blame the Republicans for the low price of oil, too? For the first time in 10 years oil production by America's second-largest producer, North Dakota, is falling year after year. North Dakota has a Republican governor. Are you blaming them? We're taking responsible action. We're moving forward on climate leadership and diversifying the economy and getting a pipeline built so that we can get people back to work.

Mr. Jean: Here's what Tim McMillan, with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, said: "Canada needs urgent action to remain [a competitive] market for oil and gas investment." The NDP's own royalty report shows that Alberta's competitive advantage is slipping both here in Canada and in North America. The Premier's response: a $3 billion carbon tax, higher business and personal taxes, and punishing new regulations. Can the Premier please stand and explain how higher taxes will help increase Alberta's competitiveness in the world?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are incredibly proud of the work we are doing to address climate change and be climate leaders. As a result, people are looking at Alberta differently than they have in the past. They know that we take climate change seriously. They know that a price on carbon is the best way to make sure that we address easy emissions and to diversify the economy by reinvesting that revenue back in green jobs and other local initiatives to support communities. I'm incredibly proud. This is going to be good for the renewables, and it's also going to be good for getting us pipelines built, which is fundamental.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The PC caucus this week launched Engage and challenged the government to seek out ways to save Albertans $4 billion over two years. [interjections] The Official Opposition may think saving money is funny, but we think it's serious. One way to achieve this is to empower the public service to find efficiencies and cost savings while maintaining front-line services. When I asked the Premier about it, she didn't answer my question. To the Minister of Finance: when the public service identifies cost savings that don't require layoffs or cuts to services, will your government then act quickly to put these savings into action?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we had a very rigorous engagement process this time last year; it was called the 2015 election. Albertans sent a very clear message: keep your hands off our health care and our education. That's exactly what we're doing. We are making sure that we're moving forward strategically, that we are moving forward thoughtfully. We reinvested $800 million as opposed to what the member opposite proposed, which was to cut significant resources from front lines. I find what he was proposing this time last year and what he's suggesting today very ironic.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, what's ironic is that I read in the paper this morning that the minister is proudly putting her hands on health care, and then in the same day she's not. That's really interesting.

Alberta municipalities receive revenue through linear assessment. Linear properties include pipelines. Sometimes the pipelines are owned by companies that go bankrupt, and the companies, of course, stop paying their taxes. Despite that, the municipality is still on the hook to pay the Alberta government's linear assessment for education. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: when are you going to correct this unfairness and stop assessing municipalities for linear property owned by bankrupt companies that cannot pay?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I'm very proud of the broad range of supports that we provide to municipalities right across Alberta. Despite our own 20 per cent budget reduction, we continue to provide strong support to municipalities right across this province to ensure that they can take care of the residents that we share together. I'm proud of the relationship we have built with our municipalities. I look forward to ongoing conversations with them. I'm very proud of our continued support for all of the communities across Alberta.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, at a mayors and reeves meeting in Lethbridge last week, in front of one of the private members over there, they were told that the government never answers the questions, and that's still consistent today.

Purchasing is an area where government could assist municipalities to deliver stable, cost-effective services. The government of Alberta is a major purchaser of many commodities also used by municipalities. To the Municipal Affairs minister: will the government of Alberta work with the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and municipalities to help them reduce their expenses by combining purchase volumes that result in a net savings?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Again, since becoming the Minister of Municipal Affairs, I have worked tremendously hard to build a relationship with AUMA and AAMDC. It's tremendously respectful. We have a great relationship with one another and have exchanged a number of ideas over time. Certainly, if there's any kind of opportunity to work together to enhance services to Alberta, to increase the efficiency, I'm happy to work with them on a variety of options and have those conversations.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has a competitive electricity system, one that should be maintained to enable the orderly retirement of coal-fired generation and a careful transition to gas-fired power and renewables, all without jeopardizing reliability or substantially increasing the cost to Albertans. Now, that is a tall order. I've heard many concerns about the impact the government's plan will have on electricity bills and also whether the government thought through the implications before they acted. To the Premier: before today, have you or any of your ministers met with leaders from the Balancing Pool to discuss the potential impact of your policy changes before those changes were made?

The Speaker: The minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. Of course, we undertook a very robust engagement process through last fall that led to the launch of our climate leadership plan, which included an economy-wide price on carbon, action on methane, action on energy efficiency, and the phase-out of coal-fired electricity. Now, we engaged with experts across the economy and did some very deep dives on technical engagement. That was in the hands of the Climate Leadership Panel, which then reported to us in November.

Mr. Clark: I'll take that as a no, Mr. Speaker.

The Premier has said previously in this House that the change-of-law provision of power purchase agreements allows owners to return their unprofitable contracts, and she's called them a failed legacy of the previous government. Mr. Speaker, that is simply untrue. PPAs have generated about $4 billion for Albertans since 2001, and we currently get a credit on our electricity bills. If the minister had engaged with the Balancing Pool and other experts, you would have known that. What assurance do Albertans have that the government has done their homework before making such major decisions?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we're working currently with the Balancing Pool and looking at the overall issue, what some of our options are, so, yes, we are engaging. As much as this morning we had a meeting. Yes, we're working on that.

Mr. Clark: It's taken you nearly a year to sit down with the Balancing Pool to actually have that meeting, which is very troubling.

Given the risk of significant added costs to consumers will the Premier engage the experts and request AESO, the Balancing Pool, the Market Surveillance Administrator, and the coal phase-out negotiator to work together to prepare a detailed impact assessment, including the cost of new transmission lines, and release their findings before you move forward so that all Albertans know the cost and impact of your plan?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. To correct the hon. member, today was one of many meetings we have had. We've had previous meetings with the Balancing Pool, and that's exactly what we are doing right now. We are bringing all the players in to look at the whole picture and the whole issue holistically. There will be more to report, but at the moment we're working with all the different players.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Arts and Culture Industries

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week Calgarians were thrilled to be able to host the Junos and Junofest in our beautiful city. Over 17,000 Calgarians signed up to volunteer, including my CA, and I know myself that I and many of my colleagues got out to see shows over the weekend. While it was wonderful to see Calgary and Canadian music highlighted, I have heard some concerns from my constituents regarding the costs associated with hosting arts and culture events during our current economic climate. To the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what are the economic impacts of arts and culture events like the Junos last week?

The Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. I was very proud to actually participate as well and be part of the events of the week. We know that when we have large events like the Junos come to our city, it generates about $10 million, or more than that, perhaps, in revenue. I believe that's a very good investment. I know that this is the year of music for the city of Calgary, and we were happy to participate. We are going to continue working with them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given the impact our arts and culture industry provides by having a significant return on investment and given that our government remains committed to diversifying our economy, again to the Minister of Culture and Tourism: what additional supports are available to our arts and culture sector?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. My ministry continues to work with this sector to support growth in the arts and culture industries. Our government is committed to continuing this approach and ensuring that Albertans have access to top-notch cultural experiences. We have continued our investment. Earlier today I went on a tour of the Royal Alberta Museum to see the progress that's being made there. The Calgary film studio will attract business from around the world to this province. I think that's a great investment. We will continue to support that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the minister. Given that in an economic downturn tourism remains one of the fastest growing sectors of our economy, again to the same minister: what are you doing to promote Alberta's arts and cultural festivals to the rest of Canada and the world?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Our tourism sector showcases this province and our vibrant communities to the entire world, and that leads to the strengthening of our economy. I am proud that a French language travel guide will soon be available as well to attract visitors from across the country and across the world. I am confident that the upcoming flights from Beijing to Calgary will also bring an additional number of visitors to this great city. It's going to be a great contribution to this province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Coal-fired Electric Power Plant Retirement (continued)

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's risky plan to phase out coal is going to kill thousands of mining jobs in communities like Forestburg and Hanna. These are good-paying jobs, family jobs, and workers are worried that this ideological government hasn't done its due diligence. What exactly is the minister's plan to take care of these families after she kills their way of life?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as a matter of decorum in this House, might I remind the member that this phraseology of killing things is entirely inappropriate in this House.

As to supports for coal communities, on November 22, 2015, when we released the climate leadership plan, we made a commitment that we would phase out coal-fired electricity in the remaining six plants after 2030 in a manner that would not unnecessarily strand capital, in a manner that would support communities and ensure transition for workers.

Mr. Taylor: You know, I asked exactly what you were going to do. That answer is not good enough for the families who need certainty right now.

Given that the federal plan to phase out coal has given these families in my community up to 15 more years to plan their shift away from coal and given that the minister has no plan and provides no certainty and no predictability, can the minister explain why she made this decision as an order in council and didn't sit down and consult with workers, officials, and communities like Forestburg and Hanna before she came to this radical decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that 12 of the 18 plants were scheduled for decommissioning by 2030, and that was under the federal environment coal regulations. Now, the previous government did not have any kind of plan to transition those workers throughout those communities. We have committed to that. We'll have to wait for the budget in order to get some details on that. However, for the remaining six plants this is why we have appointed a facilitator: in order to ensure that we do not unnecessarily strand capital, that we transition the communities, and that we are fair for workers.

Mr. Taylor: Given that these coal plants are the lifeblood of communities like mine and given that these are major employers that provide good, solid jobs you can raise a family on and that they fuel our economies, does the minister even care that her ideological actions are killing jobs and the local communities that they support?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the real ideology at work here is stranding workers and communities, which the previous government planned to do. So immediately we took action, and we looked at the fact that 12 of these 18 plants were going to be decommissioned beginning in 2019 because they had reached their end of economic life and that we would need to put some kind of transition plan in place for those plants, which we are doing, which will be in the budget. Now, why did we make this decision? One word: health.

Environmental Monitoring and Reporting

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, listening to the debate yesterday, I heard the minister of economic development tell this House they're interested in good ideas regardless of where they come from. There are some solid ideas like, for instance, that in October 2013 the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview called on the previous government to create an environmental monitoring organization that is independent and at arm's length from the government and free from any political interference. To the minister of economic development: how does eliminating AEMERA, an independent, arm's-length agency, work to help you achieve your goals?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. You know, as part of our broader review of agencies, boards, and commissions to find efficiencies, our government conducted an independent review of AEMERA. Our government has always said that we need to do a better job of monitoring the environment, and that's what this decision will deliver.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Science Advisory Panel that we are retaining will report directly to Albertans. We have asked the Auditor General to examine the matter within two years' time. In addition, the good work that was happening within AEMERA will continue, without the costly administrative duplication that the previous government built into it.

Ms Jansen: That's wonderful news. So the jobs are on panels. Good. It's nice to have clarity.

In the statement by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade he noted that unless there was an independent and arm's-length body, the organization would be at the mercy of the minister and their political direction. To the minister of environment: how can Albertans feel assured this new body will be accountable when it's now at your mercy?

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, as part of a broader review of agencies, boards, and commissions the fact is that this province looked at the duplication, the administrative bureaucratic inertia within duplicating efforts, and we decided that monitoring is on the level of public safety and public health. It is core government business for which the government is responsible. And you know what? We will see how it all works out. But the fact of the matter is that the Auditor General will be examining it in two years' time.

Ms Jansen: See how it all works out. Well, that's comforting.

Mr. Speaker, on October 31, 2013, the minister of economic development said: "When you don't have an ... arm's length, a distance between government and a body that they're selecting, questions arise, questions about judgment." This statement is directly at odds with what your government has done by eliminating the independence of AEMERA. To the minister: who in your government made the judgment to walk away from accountability and transparency?

2:20

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the ABC review I requested the former Deputy Minister of Environment Canada to conduct a thorough review of AEMERA, and what we have come up with is the fact that the Science Advisory Panel will report directly to the public, will work with the chief scientist to identify gaps and address those gaps through peer review. That is the core good business that we are carrying forward with AEMERA. What we are eliminating is the former government's proclivity toward appointing friends to boards and the costly duplication of executive teams. That is what we are eliminating, and that is how this government is going to move forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

ReThink Charter Academy

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Research clearly demonstrates that charter schools cost less on a per-pupil basis and are closed down if they aren't effective at meeting student achievement goals in their charter. There is an incredible need for the special program being offered to some of the most vulnerable Albertans through ReThink's charter school in Calgary. This school had received preliminary approval from the previous government, and all edits to the application had been made to receive final approval. Will the minister explain to the families why he rejected the application?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. One of the very first things that I embarked on as Minister of Education was to make sure that we're using due process and following due process in all of the endeavours that we have, including applications for new charter schools. So we made a point of using the regulation process that we have set up and not pre-approving like the previous government did. It was very inappropriate and sent the wrong signal. Based on the way that we went through the process, some charter schools did not make the grade.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that special-needs advocates state that spaces are tight for special education in this city, independent schools are full, and kids within the public system are falling through the cracks and given that Alberta is the only province that has charter schools and that the Education ministry itself reported that overall charter schools appear to have provided enhanced student learning outcomes, will the minister revisit his rejection of the ReThink charter school application and provide an important option for some of the most vulnerable students in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question as well. As I said before, we went through due process using the regulations that were provided, and until we review and revisit those regulations, then I am bound to using the process as it was designed.

Let's not forget as well that we have a very vibrant public school system in the city of Calgary and right across this province that's constantly innovating and constantly building to make sure that kids get the education that they need.

Mr. Smith: When the public schools are full, it's hard to get them in.

Given that I am worried for the parents, who are seeing an opportunity to help their children with learning disabilities reach their potential, and given that these families desperately need the special programming and supports that were to be offered through ReThink charter school, will the minister please help me explain to these families why they are not being allowed to exercise their parental rights to choice in education?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our ministry has reached out, and we can reach out more to ensure that all students and their families in the city of Calgary and right across the province as well have all of the different opportunities available to them, the different choices available to them, too, through all of the forms of school education that we have in the province. We are very proud of the different alternatives that we offer throughout the province and in the city of Calgary, and we're very proud of following due process to make decisions in governance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada's oil patch has suffered its biggest drop in investment in almost 70 years, the largest two-year decline since 1947. Capital spending has dropped by $50 billion over a two-year period, and the protracted plunge in oil prices means that Albertans don't see it getting better any time soon. It's time to wake up. To the Energy minister: why with stark investment numbers and ever-climbing job losses is the NDP government still pushing ahead with ideological policies that are hurting everyday Albertans?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I think the key in that article is that it's Canada's oil and gas sector, not Alberta's. When I was in Houston a month ago, there were 53 countries attending. [interjections] We all had the same story: a decline in capital investment, job losses, low oil and gas prices.

Mrs. Aheer: Given that it is the junior oil sector facing the brunt of this economic downturn and given that the juniors are the heart and soul of the Alberta story, forging new ground and entrepreneurs, and that since juniors sink their own hard-earned dollars into these ventures, the economic downturn has real-life implications like loss of income, companies, and even one's house, will the minister explain to Albertans why this government has failed to take urgent action for Albertans to remain an attractive market for oil and gas investment?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, we're picking up some pieces of lack of planning in pipelines over the past 10 years. That's what we're doing daily right now, working with the companies to get our product to tidewater. We know that Albertans will prosper more if we can get that product to market. Right now we get significant discounts, and that's hurting Albertans.

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are disheartened to see that this NDP government is clearly missing the big picture, continuing to damage our economy, and using failed soft diplomacy. Given that energy is a key economic driver in our province, this NDP government needs to realize that energy companies will suffer. There is a ripple effect across the economy. Given that there is a surefire way to spur this energy economy, market access, and given that to date the NDP government's record for promoting market access to tidewater has been astoundingly poor, will the minister commit right now to stand up for Albertans and stand up for Northern Gateway, Energy East, and the ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. [interjections]
Hon. members, keep the volume down, folks.
Proceed.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. In fact, this week I have spoken to four different companies who have complimented our approach on pipelines. One company today asked us if we would go to the U.S. to talk about our climate change plan because they see it working. In fact, these same people asked us if we could ask our colleagues to work with us and not against us. Three to four of them have told us that they have spoken to you folks about your approach.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Registry Service Renewal Reminders

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are no longer receiving paper reminders for various renewals such as vehicle registration and ID cards. This for the most part is a common-sense, cost-saving measure that meets our PC caucus's $4 billion challenge. Most Albertans are comfortable with living solely in the electronic realm; however, this is not true for everyone. To the Minister of Service Alberta. You continue to tell seniors that they will receive paper reminders for another year, except this is not quite true. Only seniors over 70 will receive these reminders. Why have you not included all seniors in the paper renewal reminders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In tough economic times like these it's no secret that we're facing some trials, so our government is committed to finding efficiencies within government that can help us save money. This particular initiative will save Albertans $3 million per year and will move us into the 21st century, I'm proud to say, by bringing renewal reminders online.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that you are creating confusion about the registration and licence renewal reminders and given that going full stop for a segment of our seniors' population may result in some of them unintentionally failing to renew their registration or licences and given that any plan to phase out paper reminders in favour of electronic ones deserves a transition plan and not a full stop, how will you ensure that seniors under 70 do not fail to register their vehicles because they are waiting for a reminder that will never come?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have a plan here to ensure that this transition is smooth because it's important to us that Albertans do renew on time. The way that we're going to take this going forward is by educating Albertans about this. As you've mentioned, seniors over 70 will receive an additional renewal reminder by paper letting them know about the online service, letting them know to contact their registry agents, who also play a part in this system. Additionally, just like clockwork, they will continue to renew in the same month that they always have, and all Albertans can always just check the back ...

2:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all Albertans are being asked to set up electronic reminders and given that it's a big expectation to assume that everyone will do it proactively, let alone seniors and many rural, remote, and low-income Albertans who may not have access to the technology, and given that you surely don't want Albertans to inadvertently break the law, to the same minister: what is your ministry's ongoing communication plan for ensuring that innocent Albertans are not unnecessarily caught up in the justice system due to this government's procedural change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure my friend across the aisle and the minister of seniors will agree with me when I say that our seniors are vibrant individuals. My own grandmother is over 90, and she has a smart phone, so I think it would be incorrect to suggest that at someone's age, particularly because of their age, they would not be able to remember what month they need to renew or that they wouldn't have access or know how to navigate online systems.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Métis Consultation Policy Development

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from constituents and Albertans alike about their concerns regarding the government's historical relationship with Alberta's indigenous population. I've also met with many Métis settlements members who are concerned about industrial development in their traditional territory. Given our government's commitment to developing new relationships and implementing the objectives and principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, to the Minister of Indigenous Relations: what is Alberta doing to understand and address the potential impact of Crown decisions on settlement members' harvesting and traditional use activities?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Our government understands and recognizes how important traditional practices and harvesting practices are for the Métis people of this province, and we are very proud to have signed on April 4 a consultation agreement with the Métis settlements in consultation with the Métis people. It's a formal, meaningful consultation policy. It's a crucial step toward our goal of fulfilling the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples and providing a stronger, more collaborative relationship with the Métis people.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the minister for the update. I'm glad to hear that the government is engaging in meaningful consultation with settlement communities. This is certainly a deep-rooted value that Albertans support. Given the importance of this policy to industry and Métis settlements what kind of consultation occurred in the development of the Métis settlements consultation policy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. When we formed the government in this province, we immediately declared our intention to change the relationship with the indigenous people in this province, and as a result we have used the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples to help guide us. As part of our consultation process in developing this policy, we worked with the Metis Settlements General Council and ensured that their interests were brought to the table and fully respected. We are very proud to say that we received unanimous support from all eight of the settlements and, as a result, have a consultation policy, that was definitely lacking in the previous government.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this policy is critical to developing respectful relationships, what is the government doing to ensure that nonsettlement Métis communities – I'm a member of those myself. How are we ensuring that those communities are consulted?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We are very proud of the movement we have made forward with the settlement Métis in this province because they had been a neglected group of the indigenous population in this province under the previous government. Again, we have found another neglected group, and that is the nonlanded Métis people. As a result, we have begun our process of engaging the Métis Nation of Alberta Association in building a consultation process, and we expect over the next year or so to be able to complete that consultation, just as we've done for the settlement Métis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Advocate

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many Albertans, care providers, and many social service groups that our health care system has continued to let Alberta's seniors down. Systemic cases of abuse, poverty, and inadequate care are things our seniors are often forced to deal with on a daily basis. Wildrose is renewing our call to create a truly independent Seniors' Advocate to help seniors navigate confusing government programs and identify key areas where we can better support our seniors. Will this government do its part to protect our most vulnerable by creating a truly independent Seniors' Advocate?

The Speaker: The minister of seniors.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you also to the member for the question. It's very important for us to make sure that our seniors are receiving the services they need and have the proper housing. We know that there was a billion dollars in deferred housing left over from the previous government. Our government is committed to making sure that there are services for seniors in Alberta, and we're working closely with all the organizations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there exist other independent officers in Alberta like the utilities advocate, like the Child and Youth Advocate and considering that the previous government showed no interest in protecting our seniors, who are often amongst the most vulnerable groups in our population, what steps will this new government take to answer the Wildrose call to create an independent advocate for our seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Certainly, we do have a Seniors' Advocate. Seniors in Alberta are welcome to give any kind of concerns or complaints they have to the Seniors' Advocate, and we'll move very quickly on responding to their questions. We're open to hearing what the opposition has to say about that, and we'll take this under advisement. We appreciate the feedback.

Mr. Yao: Given that the October 2014 Auditor General's report highlighted limitations of the current Seniors' Advocate's office, which does not have the mandate to compel facilities or AHS to take action to provide detailed information related to seniors' concerns, and given that these are standard, necessary powers equivalent to the powers of other independent advocates, why doesn't the minister recognize that the current PC system does nothing to actually help our seniors and that we need an independent advocate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. We as a government are extremely concerned about seniors in this province. We know that this is an area that has been neglected by the previous government, and we are very excited about some of the major initiatives that are coming forward very shortly. I encourage everyone to stay tuned about the budget, and we'll be talking more about that. We know that the process we have in place now does respond very well to seniors' concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Adult Learning System Review

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When this government announced the current tuition freeze last spring, it also promised an adult learning review to advance our postsecondary system. Last fall the minister at the time claimed that the government was very quickly rolling out the review. Having spoken on numerous occasions with student and institutional leaders, I know they're eagerly anticipating the onset of this consultation, but as of today the government is still silent, almost a year later. Sound familiar? To the Minister of Advanced Education: does your ministry actually have a timeline for this, or is this just another NDP promise that's gone by the wayside?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite, of course, being a member of the PC Party, is familiar with promises that get thrown by the wayside. I'm proud that we are a government that has kept its promises, including the tuition freeze, which we introduced last year and will continue this year. Of course, institutions are wondering what's going to happen once the tuition freeze is lifted, and we are working to make sure that institutions have the certainty that they need to go forward with that in the next year.

Mr. Rodney: Given that one of the guiding themes of our recently launched PC Engage strategy includes the need for government collaboration and inclusive policy development, the NDP is failing miserably in this regard. Consultation is not occurring for the adult learning review, and this is extremely challenging for students who are trying to plan their finances during these trying economic times. To the same minister. We'll try this a different way. With whom and how exactly does the minister plan to conduct this consultation, once it begins, at a time when postsecondary students, hopefully, will be working at summer jobs if they can find them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the issue of summer jobs, of course, our government has reinstituted the STEP program, so he'd better be a little bit humble when he's talking about reducing employment opportunities for students.

We are certainly going to conduct engagement with postsecondary institutions, students, faculty members, and concerned community members about sustained, predictable funding for our postsecondary institutions, and we will be launching that review in the fullness of time.

Mr. Rodney: That's strike 2 on questions and answers so far. Let's see if we can hit a home run on this one. Given that this government conducted the Bill 6 so-called consultation that they themselves admit fundamentally failed in terms of process and then resulted, as you remember very well, in protests across the province, including on the steps of this very building, and given that it appears that this government is reticent to begin yet another important consultation, to the same minister: is the government going to begin conducting the adult learning review in voice mode, or will documents be produced if there ever is a consultation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I just said in my previous answer that we are going to be conducting the consultations around the adult learning review so that postsecondary institutions will have certainty about what will happen to their funding once the tuition freeze is lifted for the 2017-2018 academic year. I'd be happy to include whatever documents we produce and submit them to the hon. member and all hon. members for their consideration when that is completed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South. [A timer sounded] I've recognized the member, of course.

Legal Aid Review

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are aware of the importance of maintaining a fair and accessible justice system that includes the role of legal aid. In my constituency of Red Deer-South I've spoken to vulnerable constituents who are dealing with the justice system and have shared their stories regarding barriers to accessing legal aid. To the Minister of Justice. You recently announced a review of the legal aid system. What issues are being considered as part of the review?

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much and to the member for the critical question. Of course, we all know that legal aid plays a vital role in our justice system in ensuring that the most vulnerable have access to a fair justice system just like everyone else. This review was undertaken to ensure that we're using taxpayers' money in the most efficient possible way while respecting those rights. We will be reviewing governance, scope of services, financial eligibility guidelines, and the delivery model to ensure that we're doing the best work for all Albertans.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that the process has been started and given that my constituents are anxiously awaiting the results and looking for an update, again to the Justice minister: what work is going on now, and when can we expect it to be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the critical question. Well, of course, in performing this review, we want to consult with all participants in the justice system, so we are talking to people from Legal Aid staff as well as the legal community, service providers, and the court. We anticipate finishing these conversations and having this come to a close later this year so that we can provide Albertans with the certainty that legal aid is working in the best possible way.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. Given that at the same time that you announced the review, you also mentioned some interim changes on how legal aid services are delivered and given that our province is currently experiencing difficult times, again to the same minister: can you tell us how these changes have helped Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. When we announced the legal aid review, we did announce in concert with Legal Aid some interim changes. These included an increase to the financial eligibility guidelines to ensure that more low-income Albertans can receive those services and a targeting of that service to make sure it's supporting the most vulnerable. We know now that legal support officers are able to complete applications in a much lower time frame. We've also launched a pilot project that will allow for discretionary coverage, and this has cut down on Rowbotham applications before the courts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've been advised that the Minister of Health has a supplementary piece of information as a result, as I understand it, of yesterday's question.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Red Deer Regional Hospital

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have an update for the Assembly on the ongoing repair work in response to the flooding at the Red Deer regional hospital. The question was asked by one of the hon. members yesterday. Work continues around the clock to bring the five affected operating rooms back online. My office was updated just today to say that one room will be online on Monday, which is sooner than was expected. The other four remaining rooms will be up the following week, which for some of them was slightly later than we'd expected, but between next Monday and the following week they should all be back up and online. Of course, patient safety is the top priority.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Roberta MacAdams

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Roberta MacAdams, whose portrait hangs on the fifth floor of the Legislature, was a very private but very important woman in Alberta's history. She was elected in 1917 as the first woman MLA in Alberta, and she was one of the first two women elected to a Legislature anywhere in the British Empire.

A book, Give Your Other Vote to the Sister: A Woman's Journey into the Great War, written by Debbie Marshall, tells the story of this extraordinary woman. Not only did she run for office while serving as a nursing sister overseas during the Great War, but over 90 per cent of her electors were men, Alberta soldiers stationed in England and in the muddy trenches of the Western Front.

MacAdams grew up and was educated in Ontario, but in 1911 she accepted a domestic sciences teaching position with the Alberta government's department of agriculture and moved to Edmonton. She was a dietitian and enlisted in the Canadian Army Medical Corps in 1916 in order to contribute her skills as a hospital dietitian.

Following the introduction of the Alberta Military Representation Act, MacAdams decided to run in the 1917 general provincial election to be one of two soldiers' overseas representatives in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. MacAdams sat as an MLA until 1921 and was the first woman in the British Empire to introduce and pass a bill. After her term ended, she returned to devoting her life to education, providing nutritional education to the farm wives in the Alberta countryside.

Roberta MacAdams was a courageous and determined woman who shows us how, with conviction and perseverance, we can make change happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Rwandan Genocide Day of Reflection

Loyola: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to rise and acknowledge today, April 7, the International Day of Reflection on the Genocide in Rwanda. In 1994 more than 800,000 people were systematically murdered throughout Rwanda. The vast majority were Tutsi, but moderate Hutu, Twa, and others were also targeted. On this day we remember all who perished in the genocide and renew our resolve to prevent such atrocities from ever being repeated anywhere in the world. Stories of the survivors' courage demonstrate to us that reconciliation is possible even after such a tragedy.

Edmonton has its own vibrant Rwandan community, many of whom arrived after the Rwanda genocide. Today Edmonton's Rwandan community has more than 2,000 members, and the majority of them are under 45. This hard-working community lives mainly in north and central Edmonton. After 22 years many members of the community are still dealing with the trauma due to the loss of family, friends, and other loved ones. It's a very close-knit community, which tries to heal its wounds by organizing private vigils and awareness campaigns throughout the month of April right here in Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, July is the month of celebration to mark the end of genocide. In August community members set up one of the most beautiful tents at our Edmonton Heritage Festival in Hawrelak park to showcase Rwandan heritage through Intore dance, which is a traditional ballet form of Rwanda.

UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon writes:

The history of Rwanda teaches us an essential lesson. While the capacity for the deepest evil resides in all societies, so, too, do the qualities of understanding, generosity and reconciliation. Let us nurture these hallmarks of our common humanity to help build a life of dignity and security for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

2:50 WiseGuyz Program for Junior High Boys

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a program that finds a home in schools throughout Calgary, run by the Calgary Sexual Health Centre. The WiseGuyz program acknowledges the pressure on boys and young men to behave in certain ways, and it seeks to address the effects this has on society, including social isolation, poor communication, homophobia, risky sexual behaviour, and violence.

We can take heart in seeing teen pregnancy rates dropping, but it is hard to ignore the fact that STI rates continue to rise. Even more alarming is the troubling reality that sexual violence rates are on the rise. Mr. Speaker, this is not okay.

While most sexual health services are targeted toward women – combine that with the damaging attitude that boys will be boys – WiseGuyz addresses the growing discussion of cultural and media messages about what it means to be a man in our modern world. WiseGuyz engages junior high boys in a weekly program that covers four modules: human rights, sexual health, gender, and positive relationships. It helps young men understand the connection between masculinity, male norms, sexuality, and violence. My favourite description of the program is from a young boy in the program who describes it as a program where you learn not to be a jerk.

I could go on about why I like this program, but frankly the results speak for themselves. They're available at calgarysexualhealth.ca. The outcomes of this program are remarkable. There's a marked decrease in homophobia, a huge increase in sexual health awareness, and a meaningful uptick in the attitudes toward embracing progressive male norms.

With huge steps being made in the development of our young men, WiseGuyz has quickly gained a reputation for being a strong model in changing behaviours and reducing incidences of bullying, homophobia, and dating violence. Mr. Speaker, I am so thankful that programs like WiseGuyz are in this province, and continuing such supports is critical. By challenging the stereotypes about masculinity, teaching young men to respect themselves and others, and giving them the skills . . .

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

Mr. Connolly: In accordance with Standing Order 99 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petition that was presented on Monday, April 4, 2016. As deputy chair of the committee I can advise the House that the petition complies with standing orders 90 to 94. Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Bill 6 Securities Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016.

As you know, the securities regulatory landscape has become more complex, sophisticated, and international in scope. It is being driven more by technology than ever before. Our goal is to ensure that Alberta's securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's capital markets and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. This requires continuous review and updating of provincial securities laws. The proposed changes in this act will update and further harmonize Alberta's securities laws with those in other jurisdictions across Canada and will enhance the protection of Alberta's investors, promote the operation of a fair and effective Alberta capital market, and minimize systemic risk.

Mr. Speaker, as I recently announced, our government will continue to regulate our own capital markets right here in Alberta instead of joining the national securities regulator. Our government strongly believes that Canada's capital markets are best overseen by local regulators who know the industry, have street-level knowledge, and can respond to local regulatory challenges quickly and effectively. We are not alone in this belief, but we also understand that we must work together with all of the provinces and their security regulators to ensure effective regulation across the country. Introducing this bill is a reflection of our commitment to the continuous improvement of Canada's existing securities regulation system.

Mr. Speaker, I now move first reading of Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Bill Pr. 1

Bow Valley Community Foundation Repeal Act

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Bow Valley Community Foundation Repeal Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in my remarks during question period I made reference to some quotes, and I'd like to table the articles from which they came.

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. As the first one I would like to enter into the public records three documents, which are the trading cards for the three canine conservation team dogs that do the mussel-sniffing activity on all of our watercraft or many of our watercraft entering into the province. They are Diesel, Hilo, and Seuss. These are the cards that are given to boat owners as their watercraft are being inspected, and they certainly seem to ensure that people are not so angry when they have to sit in traffic lines. That's the first piece about that.

Now, the second thing I'd like to table. Canada's Ecofiscal Commission has put out a recent report, Mr. Speaker, entitled Choose Wisely: Options and Trade-offs in Recycling Carbon Pricing Revenues – now, of course, the Ecofiscal Commission contains as members folks like Preston Manning and is funded by companies like Suncor and TD Bank – in which it is not that we must price carbon; it is how we best price carbon.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to table 100 pages of information that Wildrose obtained under a freedom of information request on the strategy of Edmonton and north zones lab services. The minister and the Premier have claimed that this evidence did not exist. We suggest that if she needs help finding these business cases, briefing notes, and analysis, I'm sure that one of the pages will deliver one of these to her office.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Auditor General Appointment

12. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the February 2016 report of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices (Sessional Paper 19/2016) and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that the Auditor General, Mr. Merwan Saher, be reappointed for a two-year period commencing April 29, 2016.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 14, 2016, the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices reported to the House concerning the reappointment of the Auditor General. It is now my privilege to move the motion.

The Speaker: The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour today to rise in this Assembly to acknowledge the work of Mr. Merwan Saher, the Alberta Auditor General. Mr. Saher is receiving reappointment to his position, and I am confident that I speak for all members of the Assembly when I congratulate and thank the Auditor General and his colleagues at the office of the Auditor General. Your work is crucial to the maintenance and transparency of government. Whether it be through the reports that your office puts out or by answering questions at a committee level, your efforts assist both the public and the members of this Assembly in having a better understanding of the performance of our government.

In my time as the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake I have sat on the Public Accounts Committee. Mr. Saher has produced reports and made appearances which have assisted all members of the Assembly in understanding the complexities of our system of governance. This is a difficult and a thankless job that fundamentally works to improve the efficiency and the effectiveness of the public sector.

Mr. Saher, congratulations, and again my most sincere thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other members to speak to this matter? The hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think I can speak for everyone on this side and probably everyone over there, too, that we're very pleased by the report, and we're happy to support the recommendations. I would encourage all members to vote in favour.

Thank you.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate April 6: Cortes-Vargas]

The Speaker: The Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to respond to the throne speech. I lived in Alberta during the global recession of the '80s. It was a difficult time, but we made it through. Unfortunately, decisions made by the government of that time were not in the best interests of Albertans. The slash-and-burn of front-line staff such as nurses and teachers is something that we're still feeling the repercussions from, so I'm very glad our government has promised in the throne speech to draw the right lessons from our current economic situation by supporting front-line workers and families. I note the help to families through the new child benefit program. During the '80s I was a single parent raising four young daughters, so I know how important those kinds of supports are.

The throne speech has me reflecting on my own role and how I came to be in this House with the great honour of representing the constituency of Peace River. My journey has been one of change, often very dramatic change. Integral to my ability to be successful in my new role is the love and support of my daughters Carla, Marni, Amaya, and Naomi, who have stood alongside me and encouraged me every step of the way, and, of course, my four amazing grandchildren – Noah, Reuben, Virgil, and Rhea – who are as proud of me as I am of them. I love you guys and couldn't do it without you.

I've lived all my life in Alberta. My grandparents on both sides came to Canada in the early 1900s. My maternal grandparents were Ukrainians from Austria, and they settled in Hairy Hill, where they farmed and raised a family. I spent many wonderful years growing up on their farm, and I also had a semirural upbringing on my paternal side. My grandfather was sent away from England at age 12, one of the home children who were sent to Canada during the war to be fostered. He eventually made his way west, married my grandmother, and for a time they homesteaded in Grande Prairie. They soon moved to a farm in southeast Edmonton near Refinery Row. My grandmother opened a small restaurant to serve refinery workers, and this eventually became the Ham Shack, a popular high-class dining establishment that served many of Edmonton's movers and shakers of the time.

When my parents married, they settled on a piece of land behind the Ham Shack, and my dad built the house where my siblings and I were raised. Overall, we had a good life and a happy, intact family. Summers we would explore Alberta, driving forestry trunk roads, camping in the bush, or spending time at my aunt's lakeside cabin up at Crane Lake. Every winter my mom would build a giant skating rink on the empty lot next to our house where all the neighbourhood kids would come to skate. My mom was a hard worker, kind, generous, and devoted to her children. She was fiercely independent and taught me to think for myself, skills which helped me manage the profound changes I would experience later in life.

But there was something rather unusual about my upbringing. My mother was part of a very conservative and fundamentalist religion that interpreted the Bible literally and taught that the end of the world was imminent. My dad was not of the same faith, but he allowed her to take the lead in raising us, so the church was a key focus of our lives, and friendships, relationships, and activities outside of the church were very, very restricted. Higher education was discouraged, and the focus was on missionary work.

My dad, on the other hand, values higher education. He's an extremely intelligent and creative man who spent a lot of time in his basement workroom, where he experimented and built things. During a time when computers took up whole floors at the U of A and were programmed with punch cards, my dad built a small home computer. He also constructed a theremin, which was an early electronic synthesizer. One of his most wonderful creations was a Tesla coil. I'd round up all the neighbourhood kids, and we'd enjoy a lightning show in the basement. My dad later became security manager for the government of Alberta and, in fact, was responsible for security here at the Legislature until his retirement.

My mom didn't believe in voting or supporting political parties, so politics was not part of our lives. The one exception was my uncle Dave. He was a tireless advocate for the underdog, passionate about fairness, and always ready to fight to see justice done. He took this to the next level, running as a federal candidate in 1984 and '86 for two western separatist parties. He inspired me and planted the early seeds.

I began teaching piano when I was 13 and started my first band when I was in high school. Eventually the band included all my siblings, and we travelled the province performing for weddings, parties, and graduations. At age 19, driven by a desire to do something more meaningful with my life, I moved to Central America and lived for two years in Honduras, where I met my first husband, who was a popular singer there.

We returned to Edmonton and began to raise a family. Unfortunately, he had addiction issues and was abusive, so after some years I made the decision to raise my daughters on my own rather than live in fear. I returned to music as a way to support my family. I formed a band with my brother and sister and managed to earn a living as a musician in Alberta for a number of years.

After some time I remarried, and this proved to be another key change in my life. Circumstances around that marriage led to a crisis of faith. I began to question the things I had been taught all my life. I realized that what my mother believed and taught me as a child did not make sense and did not fit with my world view. I began to experience a sense of enlightenment and freedom for the first time in my life as I broke free from the shackles of the fundamentalist religion in which I had been raised.

This freedom came at a cost, however. I learned first-hand how religion can divide families, how deeply held religious beliefs, no matter how sincere, can be used to judge, marginalize, and hurt those among us who are perceived as different or who do not believe the same things we do. This experience, while incredibly painful, has helped me learn to be inclusive, welcoming, and understanding of everyone in the province and in my constituency regardless of where they come from or what they believe. The process took a profound toll on me personally, however. I lost family and friends, and I went through a bout of severe depression that almost cost my life. My marriage was another casualty. With the love and support of my daughters I came through.

Key to managing the change was my decision to go to university. I enrolled in my first university course, and at the age of 45 I became a full-time student at Athabasca University, eventually earning my master's in psychology. I became active in my student union and embraced politics. I joined the NDP under Raj Pannu's leadership, attended my first political convention, and, incredibly, voted for the first time in my life.

3:10

When I graduated in 2002 with my BA in psychology, it was one of the proudest moments of my life. I shared that proud moment with my daughter Marni, who graduated the same week with her BA in chemistry. While attending university, I found an ideal job that fit my study schedule, Alberta Hansard. Soon I was completely hooked on politics, watching the activities in the House on a daily basis. Listening to the members, often till the wee hours of the morning, ignited something in me. I would see the dismissive way the opposition was marginalized, the way legislation was rammed through in the middle of the night without consulting with Albertans. I saw arrogance and inflated self-importance and a government completely disconnected from the needs of average Albertans, and I longed for a better way.

But I was caught up in trying to make a living while finishing my degree, and the recession of 2008-09 put serious financial pressures on me, to the point where I was facing foreclosure. As I struggled to save my home, I encountered many predatory lenders who were eager to take advantage of me. That's why I'm so pleased to support the act to end predatory lending, as these unscrupulous lenders truly need to be stopped. Even though I was still a full-time student, my student loans went into repayment, and my efforts to work with the student loan system were incredibly frustrating and unsuccessful. This is another area where I'm looking forward to seeing some changes under our government. Soon I was working multiple jobs, caught in a treadmill of day-to-day survival. I know what it feels like to be forced to choose between feeding your family or paying rent. I know what it feels like to be penalized for having no money by having your lights and heat turned off and then having to pay extra for reconnection. Too many Albertans live like this.

My youngest daughter, Naomi, who was building her own career as a welder, kept encouraging me to focus on my dream of being a psychologist, so I accepted a position in High Level where I could complete my registration requirements and once again faced major change. I packed up my car and headed north to parts unknown. I quickly fell in love with the north and its people. I saw the wonderful community spirit and the ways people worked together. I learned first-hand about the profound long-term effects of residential schools on generations of our indigenous peoples. Working within the mental health system, I saw the many service gaps and the way the system was failing citizens with top-heavy bureaucratic delivery that meant year-long wait-lists for mental health treatment and inadequate crisis response, and I knew we could do better.

I became active with my union and was sponsored to attend winter labour school. One of the teachers of my labour history course happened to be a dynamic, passionate young woman I'd first met during my student union days, who also happened to be the NDP candidate in Lethbridge-West. You know her now as the minister of environment. In the course of our conversations that week I made a decision to embark on yet another major life change, and here I am. Being elected as the MLA for Peace River last May has been an amazing experience. I consider it a great privilege to represent the Peace River constituency, and I'm deeply honoured that constituents have entrusted me with this responsibility.

Peace River, as you know, is the largest constituency in the province by square kilometres but one of the smaller by population. There's a lot I wish I could tell you about my fabulous north, but I don't have a lot of time. My constituency is home to Alberta's oldest community, Fort Vermilion. Established in 1788 as a key trading post, Fort Vermilion quickly became the main trade corridor, opening Alberta up to the rest of the world and serving as Alberta's economic trade engine. The beautiful Bay house along the Peace River is currently being restored by the community and stands as a testament to the role Fort Vermilion played in Alberta's early development. Bush pilot Wop May made his historic open biplane flight in minus 34 weather to Fort Vermilion to deliver diphtheria antitoxin to keep the area safe from epidemic. My constituency is also home to several of Alberta's youngest towns. High Level celebrated their 50th anniversary this past year, and Rainbow Lake will reach that same milestone this year.

Our communities are diverse and unique. In the far north we have Zama City, which is not a city but actually a small hamlet of only about 250, but it has been home at times to more than 4,000 oil workers because it sits in the centre of one of Alberta's largest gas and oil fields. At the southern tip we have Reno, where only a few families still remain but which has the distinction of having three original structures, including the Holy Ghost Catholic church, which date back to the first Ukrainian settlers in the 1930s.

My hometown of High Level is an incredible place. When I first arrived, I was bemused to see the hotels. We have the Mirage, the Flamingo, the Stardust, Caesar's, and indeed in the early days we branded ourselves as the Vegas of the North. High Level is also a model for diversification. Our economy is only about 20 per cent reliant on oil and gas as we are diversified into forestry, lumber, agriculture, and service industries, so we are managing much better than some of the communities further south.

Other areas in my constituency aren't doing as well, unfortunately. Some smaller towns are struggling to remain viable. Peace River itself has felt the impact of the oil and gas downturn with the loss of some major projects. Although gas and oil has slowed, it continues to be very important to our economy in the north. Peace River is home to the fourth-largest oil sands in Alberta.

Our companies there are looking for ways to increase efficiency and diversify into petrochemicals and other areas, and I'm hopeful that our government's focus on infrastructure rebuilding will help my constituency, particularly with the construction of an essential new Peace River bridge. We are well placed to support construction in the north because we have several large sand and gravel companies and excellent potential feedstock for asphalt.

Lumber is key to our economy. We have two lumber mills in High Level. We've got La Crete Sawmills, Fraser mills in Manning, and the DMI pulp mill in Peace River. These companies are leading the way in environmental responsibility. A number of large trucking companies provide support to that industry, and during the winter logging trucks are constant along the Mackenzie highway.

Farming and agriculture is also important to my constituency. Many people don't realize this, but the north is actually taking advantage of climate change to plant new crops. We are opening up agricultural lands, helping to compensate for key agricultural areas lost to urban sprawl further south. I'm proud to say that we have almost 20 per cent of Alberta's organic farmers in Mackenzie county alone, and the Mackenzie Applied Research experimental farm in Fort Vermilion continues to research new and innovative crops.

My constituency is home to two of Alberta's seven remaining operational ferries, Shaftesbury in the town of Peace River and Tompkins near La Crête. The La Crête ferry takes traffic across the Peace River from May to September. Then from December to March we cross the ice bridge. It's quite the experience to drive the ice bridge in March as the ice begins to melt. You drive through surface water that rises to the top of your tires, trusting that the ice underneath is still solid enough to hold the weight of not just your vehicle but that huge semi that's following you.

Integral to my constituency, of course, are our First Nations and Métis. My constituency is on Treaty 8 lands and is home to three different nations: the Dene Tha', the Beaver, and the Little Red River Cree as well as the Métis in Paddle Prairie. The Lubicon and Tallcree also come into my constituency. These communities enthusiastically supported my election, and I'm deeply grateful. They've not experienced a positive relationship with past governments, and I'm working hard to change that.

The Peace River constituency in Alberta's far north has been described by some as being like the original western frontier. It's a place of incredible opportunity, where you can arrive with a dream and turn it into reality, where newcomers can build a successful life creating something from nothing. Northerners are resilient and resourceful. We find ways to cope and manage the most difficult possible circumstances, and we come out successful on the other side. We survive by being creative and innovative. We're taking the lead in adapting and diversifying and innovating in the north, and one of my goals is to help the rest of the province understand the important role we play in making Alberta great.

I love this province and its people. I consider it such a privilege to be a part of this Assembly, where I can play a small part in supporting the people of my constituency of Peace River through this difficult time. I want to thank my constituents for entrusting me with this responsibility.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 4

An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services

[Debate adjourned April 7: Mr. McIver speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays is not present.
The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this legislation was introduced, our caucus has made it clear that we recognize that there was a need for the legislation. Any other party here could have won the last provincial election, and still they would have found themselves obligated to introduce legislation on essential services. The reality is that, yes, there was a Supreme Court ruling in the Saskatchewan Federation of Labour case, and, yes, the last PC government agreed to have us tied to that decision. So, yes, there is an implication for Alberta, one that fundamentally changes the labour landscape in Alberta in a way that we are not opposed; namely, rather than define all public-sector workers as essential, come up with a fair way to determine which ones truly are.

Regrettably, while the title of the bill is An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, the legislation itself goes substantially beyond what the Supreme Court required. As my colleague the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner said during his second reading speech, there are a number of items in this legislation that we would be more than happy to debate, but they should be done separately in their own context. To debate them as part of a legislation that claims to merely be implementing a Supreme Court decision is profoundly disingenuous. If one were a pessimist, they could reasonably conclude that this demonstrates a certain cynicism on the part of the government.

But let me be perfectly clear. Wildrose does not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike. We agree in principle and voted in favour of second reading as an expression of that. We agree that arbitration should be reserved as a last resort for truly essential workers in exchange for the necessary compromise on their right to strike. For other workers a deal should be worked out by the parties, and the government should be fully responsible to the public for the agreements as opposed to leaving it up to compulsory arbitrators.

Again, we agree that the government had to put something on the subject together now, and we agree with the government's stated intentions solely to implement that Supreme Court decision. But we disagree with how they went about it. It's clear that they did much more than that.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We are opposing the bill in the end because there are just too many flaws and too much uncertainty about ensuring the public good. They set up a full resolution mechanism that puts the union's authority and their workers' rights ahead of the people's representatives and the need to protect public safety and public dollars. We are opposing the bill in the end because there are just too many flaws and too much uncertainty about ensuring the public good, too much authority in the all-powerful commissioner, who the government wouldn't even agree to keep Albertan, defeating our amendment and leaving open the suspicion that they will parachute in another partisan pal from elsewhere.

Now, a number of members here spoke about this bill and mentioned the Supreme Court ruling. It's clear that many members are not all that familiar with the actual text of the Supreme Court ruling. The Saskatchewan law that was court challenged and Alberta's existing regime are substantially different. While Alberta uniformly didn't let the public sector strike since the Loughheed era, they allowed for impartial binding arbitration. There was no such mandated alternate resolution system in place in Saskatchewan. It's the pairing of those two circumstances that led to the Supreme Court decision. If this is of surprise to any members, I invite them to review that decision. The ruling against Saskatchewan's laws was based on the facts that Saskatchewan's public employers do not have unilateral authority to determine what's essential without an adequate review mechanism and that those laws lacked an impartial alternative bargaining process to settle disputes. However, the SFL decision nowhere alludes to what they would have ruled if only one of those factors had been in place, so the findings of the court in SFL cannot be transplanted upon Alberta.

Nowhere does the Supreme Court require public-sector employers or bargaining units to make considerations about whether or not temporary workers can be employed temporarily to deal with unexpected issues that emerge while workers are striking, yet there is a strict ideological banishment of all replacement workers in this legislation. It's not even something the two parties can agree to as a conditional element.

The Supreme Court does not give any indication of how essential services should be defined other than that public-sector employers cannot unilaterally define them, yet there is a section of this legislation in which the minimal contents of an essential services agreement are prescribed by government. Were it not for an amendment put forward by our caucus, any future government could go to the regulations and expand the mandatory requirements of essential services agreements. Of course, I should acknowledge that the government voted in favour of that amendment, and we do want to give them credit for that.

However, most of these amendments pertained to the fact that large parts of this legislation were well outside the scope of the Supreme Court ruling. I observed with surprise that there were some groans and audible expressions of dissatisfaction from some members in the government benches when amendments continued to be put forward.

Madam Speaker, yesterday our caucus put forward substantive amendments concerning monetary penalties against illegal strikes and illegal lockouts. Speaking against these amendments, the Minister of Labour and others said that raising monetary penalties and fines was somehow against the Supreme Court ruling. As I noted earlier, there is nothing in the Supreme Court ruling that would have necessitated this. More disturbingly, a few members over there rose to defend the low fines by suggesting illegal strikes even by essential workers were not something to worry about.

Yet even the government in this proposed legislation acknowledges that the largest public-sector union here has a multimillion-dollar defence fund. Who here honestly believes that they would be fundamentally discouraged and dissuaded from an illegal strike by a mere $1,000-per-day fine? Let's be realistic. They likely wouldn't even notice. My caucus colleague's amendment also raised the monetary penalty for employers who take part in an illegal lockout. Would a large employer be genuinely dissuaded from an illegal lockout by the prospect of a mere $1,000-per-day fine? Of course not.

It was disappointing to see the government members vote against these amendments. Nobody is implying that public-sector unions are wanting and willing to wage illegal strikes with frequency, but we do have to recognize that these are essential services agreements that are being discussed. The services involved here are those where it is generally recognized that there is a major threat to life and public safety and well-being if those services are unavailable for a time. That's why it is vitally important that big union bosses are discouraged from organizing illegal strikes of these workers. The potentially devastating consequences are what make the action so effective. Now that strikes for general workers are permitted, we can only imagine what levers might get pulled in the middle of a contentious strike. The government should have agreed with our amendment and agreed to put some actual deterrents in the fines.

Madam Speaker, yesterday my caucus colleague proposed an amendment that whoever is the commissioner for essential services should have a recent background of living in Alberta, working with and for Albertans and understanding our unique labour history. The role of commissioner, as defined in this legislation, is a profoundly powerful one. As noted in the legislation, the decisions they make are final and binding where essential services agreements are concerned.

Alberta's labour history is different than that of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, or anywhere else in Canada. Alberta's labour relations community, as I understand from stakeholders and others, is also relatively close. There are qualified professionals here who know the background on a lot of major files as they pertain to the public sector. To have these overlooked in favour of someone with essential services or other labour relations experience in another province is problematic. To have them overlooked in favour of another NDP crony from another wing of their organization is frightening.

There are certain private-sector positions as well where there is some requirement of local familiarity for desired candidates. For example, some private-sector companies will require that a candidate have experience and existing relationships with local media before being hired for a media relations position. Some private-sector companies will require that a candidate have experience with the local jurisdiction's regulatory requirements before being hired to advise on government relations and policy framework. So there is nothing illegal or unusual about such a common-sense provision for any candidate to serve as commissioner. Yet the government defeated this amendment.

There is no restriction keeping this or a future government from appointing someone from out of province to oversee one of the most significant and delicate labour relations positions in Alberta, unilaterally making final and binding judgments on essential services that greatly affect Albertans and their government. It was disappointing to see the government vote against this motion and have it defeated.

I should note as well that the power of the commissioner and the authority that is wielded by whoever has that position is, again, not something that was prescribed by the Supreme Court in the SFL decision, so the government cannot use the cover of the Supreme Court for the structure of the essential services regime that this act prescribes. If this is the desired wish of stakeholders that the government consulted with, that is a somewhat different matter, but there are still relevant concerns about the checks and balances on the role of the commissioner. If the government wanted to discuss the creation of such a role and to structure Alberta's essential services regime this way, that is a matter that should be debated on its own terms. To frame that as being part of what the Supreme Court required is just not correct, and we never heard a good explanation for why there couldn't be a small panel rather than a single person.

Madam Speaker, in conclusion, I want to note the following. Wildrose understands the importance of meeting the requirements of the Supreme Court ruling by the mandated date, and on that principle we understand why the government had to put forward this bill. But there is overreach here beyond what the Supreme Court had asked, so we wanted to make the bill better. We proposed several amendments to ensure that essential services are better protected and treated fairly and to ensure that the public interest is protected at the same time. Regrettably, this government had chosen to defeat those amendments. Credit where it's due: they approved one amendment. But that amendment alone does not resolve the numerous problems that exist within this legislation as proposed.

Given all of the consultation that had been done with Alberta stakeholders and given how quickly this government is able to push legislation through when they actually want it passed, there is still more than adequate time to do a better bill on essential services, so I will be opposing this bill.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, next on my list is the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Essential services pertain to the most vital services that Albertans rely on, that they depend on. Accordingly, it's important that the government gets this legislation right. Wildrose does not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike. All individual rights should be respected, and it's just not necessary to tell nonessential workers that they can't strike, even if it has proved convenient for many over the last 40 years.

We agree in principle with reducing that category of essential workers and voted in favour of that at second reading as an expression of that. As my colleague the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner noted when he spoke about this bill in second reading, we were open to working with the government on this proposed piece of legislation. As several colleagues had outlined earlier, we recognized that there was a need for this bill in some form given the Supreme Court ruling and the previous government's agreement to have us bound by it, but the approach that this NDP government took for this bill went beyond what was required and didn't do enough to ensure that Albertans can rely on the sometimes life-and-death services that government is duty bound to provide regardless of labour disagreements. We do not agree that this bill only implements the ruling by the Supreme Court.

There were several reasonable Wildrose caucus amendments that were defeated. This bill could have been considerably improved, and it's a shame to see that this was not the case. One of the amendments put forward by my colleague was to raise the monetary penalty to discourage illegal strikes or illegal lockouts. A maximum $1,000-per-day penalty does nothing to dissuade a big union boss who thinks an illegal strike by certain essential workers would be strategic to him or a large employer who wants to lock out workers. When we talk about legal strikes and the need to have adequate penalties, we're not talking about any service. The government's own legislation as it appears here speaks to that.

- (a) the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the public, or
- (b) that are necessary to the maintenance and administration of the rule of law or public security.

Albertans shouldn't have to worry about whether or not these workers are available.

Emergency services – police, fire, EMS – all save lives in different ways. They all help to protect life and protect our society. Police attempt to help by enforcing laws with the ability to restrain predators and bullies, people who would commit violent crimes on each other. Firefighters: not only do they alleviate emergencies, but in many communities such as Fort McMurray, Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Airdrie, fire service supplements EMS by providing EMS-qualified staff. This is especially important when ambulances are caught in code reds, which is still often happening.

Of the three, EMS is the one that provides the most direct medical intervention. It is health care, so much so that our government, Alberta Health Services back in the day, recognized this and took them under their own umbrella. They recognized that the quality and level of care that they were providing was on par. In Alberta virtually anything that can happen in an emergency department, paramedics can do out in the field, and that is a valuable service indeed, the ultimate interventions. People call these agencies in the most dire situations, yet EMS remains on the outside. You need these people. These emergency medical service workers, the paramedics and EMTs that are in this field, they can keep you from becoming paralyzed out in that field. They will keep you breathing. They will make sure that you are breathing. They will keep your heart beating. They have all the interventions, all the medications, all the implements to help assist with this, yet we don't consider them essential, not entirely.

I'm sure that many members here have had the misfortune of experiencing an emergency, a situation where someone's life is on the line. The life-saving services in those cases are the ones where illegal strikes need to be discouraged. There is no talking point. There is no explanation that can comfort those who are adversely affected by an illegal strike in these service areas. Nobody should have to rush a loved one to the hospital and find that much-needed services are only operating at a partial capacity or not at all. Nobody should have to wait by a phone in the case of an emergency only to find that a response is taking too long.

Madam Speaker, in the early 2000s I was in the EMS profession. I was fortunate enough to be working for a fire service, though, a service where we were integrated and we could not strike, but during that time there was a provincial-wide strike in EMS. I was way up in Fort McMurray. We tend to be a little bit isolated, but I could hear through all my friends and whatnot what a terrible time that was. Many of my brothers and sisters were working down south with a lot of these agencies and were put in difficult situations, but again it was a service that was never treated appropriately. Many of my instructors who were teaching me when I went to school, many of the managers that I was learning under, many of these supervisors had to work on the floor in the field to cover these bases, but there were not nearly enough of those to cover so many that needed to be protected. Yet in the police and fire services, even though they may have work disagreements, labour disputes, they're able to get through these without the ability to strike. They use arbitrators, and there's no reason why emergency medical services, who provide health care in the field, can't be under this umbrella.

Some members may also recall what happened in Montreal in 1969, when 3,700 members of the Montreal policemen's brotherhood walked off the job over pay issues. It's regrettable that the sides involved couldn't come to a conclusion beforehand, and there were consequences. I raise this example because police and security are a prime example of what many people think of when they think of an essential service, something needed to maintain the general welfare of our communities. The result of that 16-hour strike included violent protests, mass burglaries and lootings, assaults, and so on. Off the top of my head, I believe there were over a hundred arrests that day.

Of course, the circumstances there were significantly different than the current labour environment in Alberta, but the broad point is this. There is a real human consequence when essential services disappear. Services that have that designation have it for a very particular reason. So, yes, there should be significant monetary penalties for big unions that want to go ahead with an illegal strike and put their bargaining interests ahead of the interests of Albertans. A small fine of no more than $1,000 per day is simply not adequate to deter an illegal strike.

One of my colleagues' amendments yesterday would have expanded on the definition of essential services. The government's bill as introduced does not adequately define essential services, meaning very important functions concerning infrastructure and the environment and financial security that would be neglected in a strike. Wildrose believes that what is essential to the public interest goes beyond just safety and the rule of law.

Do the folks over there really believe it is not essential to prevent an environmental disaster just because there are no human lives at risk? Well, you voted the inclusion of that down as a consideration of what is essential, so you'd better hope that managers can handle everything on that front in case of a strike. It simply might not be possible for managers in a strike or lockout scenario to be able to make all of the necessary decisions quickly without some of the unionized workers. If it is possible, well, I guess that poses a different problem for those unionized workers.

As members will recall from yesterday's debate, the reality on the ground is that certain workplaces will become hazardous and certain machinery will be devalued if not maintained. We therefore asked that the bill be amended to include, as Ontario's does, the designation of preventing the major deterioration of workplaces and equipment and machinery as an essential service. This does not mean that every position pertaining to equipment and machines would have been declared essential.

The amendment would not have altered the fact that legislation lets both sides negotiate an essential services agreement. In workplaces where this would apply, there are simply a few roles that might be designated essential for simply maintaining expensive, important equipment or financial interests or environmental concerns. Who and what would be is between those negotiating, but the definition here precludes many interests from even being considered by an essential services agreement under this act given this particularly narrow definition. We do not want to needlessly expand the definition of essential to too many positions because that has consequences as well. But there are some legitimate concerns that the current definition, as proposed legislation, does not capture what is actually essential to the public interest. Whichever side of the bargaining table you're on, that interest has to come first.

Yesterday my colleague also sought an amendment concerning a change in circumstance. It will be a significant event for many Albertans in the public sector when this legislation comes into force as employers and bargaining units for workers will be negotiating essential services agreements for the first time in Alberta. As currently worded, Bill 4 does not necessarily allow for quick emergency amendments. It may be discovered in the middle of a strike or lockout while negotiations are ongoing that a certain service should have been designated essential but was not.

Governments do not always get things right the first time. That's true of any government in any jurisdiction of any political stripe. Accordingly, there needs to be a mechanism that allows for a quick return of these services should a situation arise. In yesterday's discussion the minister and other members made a point that an umpire could handle the scenario. The minister suggested that the umpire will be there on the ground and can direct one of the public-sector workers to cross the picket line and perform an emerging essential service. But what if the union disagrees and appeals to the commissioner? How long will that take? And last I checked, it is not mandatory for every worker to be full-time on the picket line, so what if that skilled employee is not available to just come back into work?

The amendment would have allowed a public-sector employer to use temporary workers to get the job done for a narrow period of time if negotiations are ongoing and the bargaining unit for whatever reason is unwilling or unable to let workers return. Some on the government benches made the case that there are scenarios where an unfettered right to replacement workers would tip the scales of fair bargaining, but that's not what this amendment would have done. This amendment would have allowed the commissioner to put an end to the use of replacement workers as soon as a decision on the new circumstance was finalized. We think that was a fair compromise to ensuring that Albertans have access to the services they need while respecting the rights of all involved.

Our caucus recognized that an essential services agreement needed to be passed. I want to once again be clear. Wildrose does not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike. Our caucus agreed and voted in favour of second reading as an expression of that.

But there are still some serious questions remaining in this bill. In the end there are simply too many flaws in the legislation. Like so much of the legislation you guys write, there are a lot of flaws. The government still has time and the opportunity to not only implement what was actually required by the Supreme Court but to separately discuss other labour legislation. It's just so important that we get this right when the essential services this government provides are at stake.

I cannot support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will call on the hon. minister of culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in support of this bill, and I thank the minister for bringing it forward. Prior to my election to this Chamber I was actually working for a union, and most of the work that I did there involved research. Prior to that I was actually the president of the local union for flight attendants, and I can tell you that in the federal jurisdiction we do have legislation that actually considers flight attendants an essential service. The reason for that is because you need to get mail from one end of the country to another. Other reasons as well are because you need to support communities that are in the north, for example, that rely on air travel to bring perishable foods and replenish food items. In the federal sector there already is a law that has a provision to compel workers who are, you know, going to entertain the idea of perhaps withholding their services or being locked out of their work by their employer to have a resolution mechanism, to resolve and to establish a number of people, of workers, that can maintain a level of service that is acceptable, that doesn't put the public good, the public welfare, into question.

I actually had the fortune, or misfortune, of having to deal on several occasions with the possibility of going on strike. In my situation, of course, it was a little bit tricky because, you know, I had members all over the world, and if we did go on strike, we would potentially have picket lines, well, around the planet. So when we entered into negotiations, we would actually often start with our discussion on an essential services agreement. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that oftentimes those were quite difficult, but they were not impossible to do, and the reason for that is because employers have a vested interest in ensuring that services are being delivered according to their business plan. From the workers' perspective I can tell you that not a single one of us wanted to ever put a single person in the north in peril. We were representing workers who were extremely proud of the work that they did, and they were actually very much willing to listen and were very much willing to enter into this dialogue. Oftentimes those kinds of discussions took place at the beginning of bargaining, when things aren't so heated.

One of the things that I saw in this process here and one of the questions that I myself had for the minister when we started talking about this was: at what point do you enter into these discussions? Well, as you can see, it's going to be part of the bargaining process. It's going to allow for workers who right now don't have the right to actually strike to be able to do that if that is the case. However, we are providing now a mechanism that determines whether they are an essential service and whether they are required to actually stay on the job and at the same time protect their collective bargaining rights, their rights as workers, now guaranteed by the Supreme Court of Canada. So, to me, this mechanism makes a lot of sense. I have seen it practised. I have practised it myself.

To the concerns that have been raised, for example, pertaining to EMS workers, I actually have organized them. I was an organizer as well, so I actually signed up a few locals into a union and turned it over, of course, to somebody else to negotiate their first collective agreement. I can tell you that EMS workers, much like flight attendants, are extremely proud of the work that they do, and I can tell you that they're extremely reasonable people, and they don't get into that job because they want to go on strike; they get into that job because they care about people. They care about providing the services, and they're not going to be the ones who are going to prevent people from getting all the medical attention that they need just because they're having a dispute with their employer.

That is the pride that a person feels when they enter into those kinds of jobs. They do that because – let's face it – it's not always about the money; it's about the pride that you feel, the reward that you feel from being part of your community and providing a service that is so, so essential to the fabric of that community and the well-being that a lot of them do their hours and work a lot of hours for free as well because they care that much about the patients that they look after.

So I have no doubt, Madam Speaker, that if the situation were ever to present itself where EMS workers would need to have that discussion, they themselves would tell the people who represent them to look into that and ensure that they can provide a level of service that will never put a single Albertan in harm's way. I believe that. I really do. And why is that? Because the workers of this province are extremely proud of the work that they do, proud equally of being union members as well, and now, under this bill, they will have the same rights as every other Canadian, and I stand behind that. I support that.

I thank the minister for bringing this bill forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the next speaker, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Let me be perfectly clear. Wildrose does not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike. The Supreme Court was very clear on that. We agree in principle and voted in favour of this proposed legislation in second reading as an expression of that. We agree that arbitration should be reserved for truly essential workers in exchange for their right to strike. For other workers a deal should be worked out by the parties, and the government should be responsible to the public for the agreements, not compulsory arbitrators.

We agree that the government had to put something on this subject together now, in light of the Supreme Court decision. We acknowledge that. We agree with the government's stated intention solely to implement that Supreme Court decision. We just disagree with how they went about it. We disagree with any suggestion that all they are doing here is implementing the Supreme Court decision.

We are opposing the bill in the end because there are just too many flaws and too much uncertainty about assuring the public good, too much authority in the commissioner role created in this legislation, who the government wouldn't even agree to keep Albertan. You know, it's simple. We asked them to, you know, just make sure that it was at least an Albertan. They defeated our motion. Whatever side of the bargaining table you're behind, we are all public servants. That public interest needs to be protected above all.

The proposed monetary penalties, up to $1,000 per day for an illegal strike, are not real penalties. It's an acknowledgement that something wrong has been done with a symbolic punishment. Someone with a multimillion-dollar defence fund will not be deterred by a daily penalty that barely, barely cracks four figures. The same thing goes for the penalty of up to $1,000 per day for an illegal lockout. An employer willing to wage an illegal lockout on their employees is unlikely to be deterred by such a small figure; let's be reasonable.

Even the government will acknowledge that this legislation represents a significant shift for Alberta labour relations here in Alberta. Inexplicably, the government felt the need to oppose our amendment to raise the value of monetary penalties up to $750,000. That's not a minimum; it just ups the scale a little bit. That doesn't mean that every offending trade union or employer would face that maximum fine, but the ceiling on fines would have been lifted for those who are larger, who can quite literally afford the monetary fine proposed in the bill.

Yesterday the government claimed that lifting the monetary penalty was beyond the scope of the Supreme Court ruling. That's absurd, to suggest that a maximum fine of $1,000 is within the scope of the Supreme Court decision but a maximum fine of $750,000 is somehow not within the scope of the Supreme Court ruling. The reality is that neither of these decisions are within the scope of the Supreme Court ruling; they're within our scope. The Supreme Court ruling did not speak to what is an adequate monetary penalty for someone who wages an illegal strike or lockout.

The title of the bill, An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services, does speak to the impetus for why this legislation was needed, but this legislation overreaches the Supreme Court's ruling. For instance, the legislation includes a prohibition on the use of temporary workers while those bargaining for a new agreement are on strike on the lockout, you know, overreaching the Supreme Court ruling. That's not required anywhere in the Supreme Court decision. Madam Speaker, may the record show that we want to have that discussion. We want to have that debate and give the due assessment to such a legislative change.

The Supreme Court ruling stemmed from two particular findings within legislation in Saskatchewan. First, the court took issue with an employer's ability to unilaterally decide what is an essential service. Second, they took issue with the absence of an adequate, impartial, alternate mechanism for bargaining. The impact of these two factors taken together and the assessment that striking is a Charter right led to the current legislative onus upon Alberta.

In no way does it derive from this that a public-sector employer cannot hire temporary workers to compensate for lack of labour during a strike, so to wedge such a restriction into An Act to Implement a Supreme Court Ruling Governing Essential Services when that particular provision is not actually being required in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling is, quite simply, disingenuous. We understand the convenience of being able to do a swath of labour changes in one go as opposed to multiple pieces of legislation, but there's a fundamental difference between what the Supreme Court decision requests and what the government here would just like to implement.

My colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner yesterday proposed two common-sense amendments to this aspect of the legislation. These did not strike out the ban on replacement workers that this government insisted on. One such amendment merely said that in an unforeseen circumstance, such as if it is discovered in the middle of a strike scenario that a service should have been designated essential but was not, the employer can temporarily use replacement workers. Not an unreasonable request. If the commissioner were to have found that the use of replacement workers in such a context damaged good-faith bargaining negotiations, they still could have the ability to shut down the use of replacement workers. Our amendment specifically allowed for that, but that, too, the government defeated.

The reality is that the government has overstepped the boundaries of the Supreme Court ruling. When this bill was introduced, my colleagues and I were very cautiously optimistic. We recognized the need to carefully define essential services workers and ensure that those workers in those services are treated carefully and fairly. We do not oppose nonessential workers having the right to strike, and we want Albertans to have the access to the services they need at all times, 365 days a year. That's why I will not be supporting this bill in this form. If this bill were simply about implementing a Supreme Court decision, that would be a different matter, but this bill goes far above and beyond that.

It is just so important that we get this right when the essential services this government provides are at stake. Ministers of the Crown are responsible and accountable for the services, especially essential services, that their departments and agencies provide. They are still responsible for those services when there's a strike, legal or illegal. They should be mindful of that when voting on this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister of culture, under 29(2)(a).

Miranda: A question under 29(2)(a). I was wondering if the member could tell us if he knows how many illegal strikes there have been in the province of Alberta over the last five years and a rough idea of how many collective agreements are actually bargained in this province over the same period of time.

Mr. Hanson: Well, the fact is that I don't have those numbers in front of me, and I really don't think that it's relevant to the discussion we're having. [interjections] So why didn't you just tell us that, then?

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments?

Any other speakers wishing to address the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to all members who have contributed to the debate on Bill 4. This piece of legislation is one that was done because of the Supreme Court ruling but also because of the Court of Queen's Bench ruling, which tested Alberta's legislation against the Supreme Court ruling and was the true impetus, the reason why we needed to do this. I am very confident that this made-in-Alberta solution is going to respond to our province's unique needs, making sure that the right to strike, which is fundamental and was ruled on by the Supreme Court, will be protected while making sure that we are protecting the public safety, the health, and the well-being of Albertans, protecting the rule of law during the case of a strike or lockout. We need to make sure that Albertans are able to rely on that, and that's what this legislation does. We've had a lot of discussion here in this Chamber about the importance of some essential work, and we all agree that's important. That is what this framework is here to recognize, that essential work, essential services need to continue in the event of a strike or lockout.

This is a fundamental change to how labour relations will move forward here in the province of Alberta. I look forward to working collaboratively with all of those in the labour relations community to start implementing this legislation and putting it into practice once it has been proclaimed. We believe the courts have been clear. It's every Canadian's right to strike, and we have set up a framework so that that can happen safely, securely, protecting first and foremost Alberta's public health, safety, security, rule of law.

Again, thank you to all members who've contributed to the debate on this bill. I very much enjoyed the discussion. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 5

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

The Deputy Speaker: I'll hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. On behalf of Minister Sigurdson I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

Madam Speaker, I'm pleased today to rise and speak in support of Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. The bill will help senior homeowners remain secure and independent in their own homes. It speaks to the needs of an aging population and addresses the current economic reality. Home means comfort and security for all of us. Our homes and communities contribute greatly to our sense of well-being. Seniors have told us that being able to stay in their own homes and their communities as long as they choose to or for as long as they are able is enormously important to them. Being able to live in a place they have called home for years or even decades is often critical to an older person's quality of life and sense of independence.

We all have aging parents, family members, or friends who are facing difficult decisions about whether they can stay in their own home. We know that more people are facing this decision and more want to remain in their homes and communities. Life expectancy is increasing as well, and many seniors are enjoying more active lives and are able to maintain full independence for longer than was possible in earlier times. Right now there are more than 515,000 seniors in Alberta, and the numbers of seniors are growing faster than the general population. We as government want to support seniors to be self-sufficient in their homes for as long as possible, and it is our responsibility to address the needs and priorities of a growing population who are aging.

Under the previous government the special-needs assistance program provided eligible low-income seniors with a grant to cover a portion of certain home repairs. The previous government made a decision to cut that funding of $8 million and replace it entirely with a loan program. Today our government is presenting a new option that would help more seniors to finance the home improvements they need to do to remain in their homes. The program, housed in Bill 5, provides a loan program to help seniors with home equity to make needed repairs and stay in their homes. In addition to the loan program, we are restoring $2 million in grants to help the seniors who most need it.

The act we are debating will support the seniors' home adaptation and repair program, a great example of how we can help more seniors remain independent in their own homes. Now, the program could help as many as 145,000 seniors' households or about 260,000 seniors afford a wider range of home repairs and renovations than what is currently offered under the previous special-needs assistance program for seniors. We know that the majority of seniors own their own homes in Alberta. About 90 per cent of seniors live in private households, and of these about 83 per cent actually own their own homes.

Now, a low-interest home-equity loan with the Alberta government would help seniors make those repairs or adaptations to homes that are not currently covered by these grants. Many senior homeowners have home-equity value that they can draw on to improve and adapt their homes. Now, this is a voluntary loan program that will give seniors another option to make the repairs and improvements they need in order to stay in their homes as long as possible. As I mentioned, the loan program is designed to cover a broader range of supports to more seniors than is currently available under the special-needs assistance program. We are proposing an implementation date of July 1, 2016, to allow time to develop the regulations and for communication activities to be planned and implemented.

Now, as I mentioned, to ensure that we continue to support the most vulnerable of our seniors, the loan program would also include a grant component. We want low-income seniors who are currently eligible to access the special-needs assistance home repair benefit program but lack sufficient equity or are mobile-home owners who do not own their land to still be able to access supports for essential home repairs.

We also must ensure that the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act includes strong consumer protection measures to ensure that seniors know their rights when they apply to the loan program. The act includes four sections to legislate consumer protection concerning a range of important issues. The act will ensure measures to consider the reasonableness of the cost to the individual for the home repair, renovation, or adaptation as part of the loan approval process. It will require the contractor to advise the consumer that the loan program is available to eligible individuals. It will ensure that consumers are made aware of their cancellation rights if they are not eligible for a loan. It will state how contracts may be cancelled and how the consumer may notify the contractor. It will state the effect of a contract cancellation and the responsibility of the contractor to refund any money paid if a contract is cancelled. As well, the regulation under the act will confirm that cancellation rights must be prominent and in writing and included in the contract.

The application form will ask if a senior entering into a contract has been notified by the contractor about their cancellation rights. Seniors who indicate they have not been advised will be contacted by phone to inform them of their rights if they are not eligible for the loan. Contractors will also be contacted to be informed about their obligations under the act and to be advised how they can access further information. The consumer protection mechanisms in the proposed act in no way diminish or exclude consumer rights or existing protections under the Fair Trading Act or its regulations.

The value of this act to seniors in our province is clear. We are, Madam Speaker, mindful of the need to propose fiscally responsible ideas, particularly given the current economic environment. The new program will not cost more to administer since the resources that administer home repair grants through the special-needs assistance program will be shifted to the loan program. We believe this is a positive step for seniors and is fiscally responsible for our government.

4:10

We have addressed the needs and priorities of our growing aging population. We will be able to help up to 260,000 seniors with needed repairs or modifications to their homes, and we will support seniors to remain safe, secure, and independent right in their own homes, exactly where they want to be.

Thank you.

With that, I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think we've made some good progress today, and I move that we adjourn the House until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:11 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to April 07, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, April 11, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Bow your heads, and let us reflect. As we reflect, let us commemorate the 99th anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917. Life is precious. When it is lost, we are all weaker. On this day I would ask that all members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly reflect upon the lives of Canadian military personnel lost in service. When we think of them, let us remind ourselves that war is sometimes the result when we fail to reach agreement through dialogue and diplomacy.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a very special guest who spent many years serving Albertans. Mr. Denis Ducharme is the former MLA for the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, which he represented from 1997 to 2008. During that time he served as whip and as Alberta's minister of community development. Mr. Ducharme also sponsored the Fair Trading Act, and he is here today to listen to the debate on Bill 203 as president of the Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta. My guest is seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I ask him to stand and accept the very traditional warm welcome from this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a school group from Sherwood Park, Our Lady of Perpetual Help school. I have a very special place in my heart for this school because it's a French immersion school, and I had an opportunity to talk to the students, and their French was very good. Alors, félicitations à tous les étudiants. I would like to ask them to rise and to receive the customary welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you Mr. Glen Metzler, president and managing director of API Labs, and members of the board of directors, including Blaine Takeda, operations manager and director, John McFadyen, and David Mercer. API Labs is an early stage pharmaceutical fine chemicals processing company establishing the groundwork to create a poppy industry in western Canada. The development of this industry will provide opportunity for agriculture, processing, and research in southern Alberta, creating good jobs and diversifying our economy. I ask that our guests rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three people helping to diversify our economy and create jobs right here in Alberta through a partnership between Alberta Garment company and Olds College that has resulted in the creation of the Apparel Innovation Centre, that we'll hear more about today. Adrian Bussoli is president of Alberta Garment, Michael Bussoli is general manager of the Apparel Innovation Centre, and Tammy Forbes is the associate vice-president of external relations at Olds College. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three wonderful people and business owners from my constituency of St. Albert: Anna Gimpel, Sabrina Roy-Westra, and Jennifer Thomson. All three have a wealth of knowledge and experience in midwifery, and together they own and operate the St. Albert Community Midwives, which opened in 2015. I'd ask them to rise if they're here, unless they're out helping someone give birth. There they are.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House guests who have come to watch the proceedings this afternoon on Bill 203: Sheldon Seefried and Mark McKeown from Fountain Tire, Pauline and Jessica Andruik of Superior Automotive, that's NAPA Autopro, Rita Kause of Mewassin Automotive and the Canadian Independent Automotive Association, Ian Hope of the Alberta Automotive Recyclers and Dismantlers association, Biju Abraham of Speedy Muffler, Peter Finstad of Tirecraft, Garth Hough of West End Tireland, and Terry Dulyk of Dulyk's Automotives as well as Rick Schwabe of Schwabe's Automotive Centre, and John Schmidt of Smitty's automotive. Mr. Speaker, my guests are seated in the members' gallery. I ask them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our guests from the Camrose primary care network, who exist to meet the primary health care needs of Camrose and area through collaborative, comprehensive, team-based patient care, and they are here as part of their team. If you would rise as I call your name, I'd like to introduce Stacey Strilchuk, the executive director; Colleen McKinstry, clinical director; Pamela Fankhanel; Eryn Petiot; Colleen Lindholm; Stephanie Loosemore; Pamela Sherman; and Alysa Bartman. Yes, you've risen, and if everybody could given them a warm, traditional welcome to the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three Albertans engaged in driving our economy forward and supporting our not-for-profit sector. Robbie Kreger-Smith, Trevor Aboussafy, and Jason Gold are also stalwart members of the Alberta Party and part of our Edmonton regional organization team helping us put together a fantastic event this coming Thursday evening. I'll ask Robbie, Trevor, and Jason to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Highwood.

1:40

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a number of automotive industry stakeholders here today to witness debate on Bill 203. I ask that they stand when I call their names: Nancy Suranyi, owner of Namao Automotive Repair and board member of Alberta Independent Automotive Association; Simon Weller, vice-president of sales and marketing in Canada for NAPA Auto Parts; Troy Sawada, director of national accounts, west Pacific, for NAPA Auto Parts; Alvin Chibi, general manager, NAPA distribution centre here in Edmonton; Duncan Dalzell, owner of Dalzell's automotive; Bruce Church, owner of Tristar Collision; Scott Shewchuk, owner of Fountain Tire; Dale Meyn, general manager of Midas auto service; Kent Asselstine, owner of Legend automotive; Bruce Stewart, owner of Bruce Stewart's automotive; and John Fisher, owner of Midas auto service. I ask that the House provide the traditional warm welcome. They're sitting in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: Welcome

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you three guests. Two are senior executives of British Petroleum, or BP Canada, headquartered in Calgary. They are Stephen Willis, president and chairman, and Anita Perry, vice-president, communications and external affairs. Joining them also is Del Robostan, senior vice-president of British Petroleum oil marketing for BP's global oil Americas division. British Petroleum Canada is a valued partner in developing Alberta's energy resources and is a significant investor in our Alberta oil sands. The company holds interests in three oil sands assets in the Athabasca region of northeast Alberta: the Sunrise, the Pike, and the Terre de Grace projects. If Stephen, Anita, and Del would please rise, I would ask you to give them the warm, traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, M. le Président, it is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the House three visitors from Quebec. They are staff members with Members of Parliament in the House of Commons in Ottawa. I would like to introduce Charles Chateauvert, Julien Fournier-Dorion, Helene Gagnon. Helene Gagnon actually works for the Member of Parliament for Edmonton-Strathcona. I will ask them to rise and receive the customary welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, to you and through you I would like to introduce a very dear friend and a colleague who sat with me on the Alliance executive and the national board of directors of the Public Service Alliance of Canada from 2008 until 2011, M. Jean-François Des Lauriers. In the gallery, if he would please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other guests? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly the chief executive officer of Parkinson Alberta, John Petryshen. He is joined today by members of the Parkinson Alberta board, clients, and care partners. Today, on World Parkinson's Day, we draw attention to the second most common neurological disease affecting 10,000 Albertans. April is Parkinson's Awareness Month, a time when we shine light on the great work done year-round for Albertans living with Parkinson's disease. Last fall Parkinson Alberta moved into a new home in Edmonton, the Buchanan Centre for Parkinson's. This one-of-a-kind facility in Canada is located in my Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood constituency.

The tulips we wear today symbolize that hope will bloom this spring. This spring Parkinson Alberta brings hope to people across the province. Helping those living with and affected by Parkinson's through support services, programs, and educational opportunities is key to living with the disease. It is Parkinson Alberta's main focus. Today we applaud the important work of Parkinson Alberta as they rise to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Apparel Innovation Centre

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm happy to be speaking about a great Alberta company, the Alberta Garment company, and its new state-of-the-art garment testing facility, the Apparel Innovation Centre. The Apparel Innovation Centre is a partnership between Alberta Garment and Olds College. Olds College has a fashion marketing and apparel technology program, so it was a natural fit. It is western Canada's first apparel and research facility, and I'm proud to say that it is located in Alberta's greatest constituency, Calgary-Klein. The facility boasts such state-of-the-art machinery as a hot liquid and steam protection testing chamber and a thermal comfort testing chamber, that allow designers and entrepreneurs to test prototypes for protective gear to be worn by workers in the oil patch and other industries. As the only facility of its type in western Canada, Alberta designers no longer have to use similar facilities in Montreal or the United States. Instead, they can design, test, and cost their visions right here in Alberta.

Since opening the facility in January, Adrian Bussoli, the president of Alberta Garment, and Michael Bussoli, general manager of the Apparel Innovation Centre, have already had many established brands, established businesses, and new designers taking advantage of the facility's unique opportunities. What's more, they are a bright light in today's otherwise challenging economy, with many new hires in the last few months alone. Having had the pleasure of touring the facility, it is an impressive facility, and it shows the hours of testing, design, and manufacturing that go into the garments that keep Alberta's workers safe and warm on the job, and it really is a facility that fuels more innovation and entrepreneurial spirit right in our own backyard.

Congratulations on the new facility, and I look forward to Alberta Garment's future endeavours and the possibility of more partnerships.

Thank you.

Energy Policies

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, let me take you down memory lane. Just a few years ago, in fact, the Premier was standing outside taking pictures at antipipeline protests; the Education minister was chanting, "No new approvals"; and the environment minister was penning a how-to guide for anti-Alberta protesters. But then something happened. They stumbled blindly into power. Now they want us to believe they're not the same radicals who have been a thorn in the side of our province for years.

But Albertans aren't fools. No one was surprised to see the NDP vote to shut down the energy sector this weekend. The Leap Manifesto is the embodiment of everything the NDP, including the members opposite, have espoused for years. The ideas contained in this radical manifesto are in the DNA of every single member across the aisle. They call our oil dirty. They demonize our energy workers, and they tell them to take a hike. They hold our energy communities hostage to their extreme ideologies. Sure, they're being very careful to say the right things now, but the fact is that their past actions are in perfect harmony with every paragraph, every sentence, and every word contained in the Leap Manifesto.

This manifesto didn't come out of nowhere. It was released during the last federal election, when the members opposite were ignoring their jobs here and working to elect anti-Alberta candidates in other provinces. This manifesto serves to remind us, however, that this government is fundamentally un-Albertan. This government does not represent our hard-working people. This government cannot be trusted to do the right thing at the right time for the right reason.

The Wildrose is proud to stand up for the values of Albertans. We're focused on stopping these radical members from killing jobs. We will proudly be Alberta's voice until this government and the manifesto it rode in on are nothing but a bad memory.

Thank you.

The Speaker: A point of order by the Government House Leader. I've been advised of that.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Energy Policies

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2014 there were 375,000 Albertans whose livelihoods relied on the energy sector; 100,000 of those jobs have disappeared in the last year. But that's not enough jobs lost for the Premier's friends, friends the Premier's cabinet campaigned for, friends the Premier herself has fundraised for. The Premier promised that by taxing families with a $3 billion carbon tax, by shutting down coal in Alberta, and by capping oil sands growth, Alberta would get a pipeline. Not even her own party members are buying that, however. How does she expect Albertans to actually trust this government?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I find it a little bit ironic to have the member opposite asking about trust given that just last week your own supporters said that building a pipeline was a, quote, doomsday scenario that might possibly result in support for our government, and you are ready to put your party's interests over that. So who should Albertans trust? Who should Albertans trust? Not those folks over there.

Mr. Jean: The Premier can't do $10,000 fundraisers for NDP members who back radical anti-Alberta manifestos and then pretend that she has nothing to do with it. The Premier stood with ForestEthics just in November promising that her own manifesto against our energy sector would build pipelines. It turns out ForestEthics is actually a founding signatory on this NDP Leap Manifesto. So is Public Interest Alberta, a group with very close ties to the Premier's own cabinet. Why should Albertans have to pay a $3 billion carbon tax when the Premier's own friends don't support our energy sector?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, let me be perfectly clear. If you didn't happen to see it on Saturday, let me do it again. Our government completely repudiates any part of that document's reference to the energy sector and pipelines. We will continue to work hard to get to a pipeline, and I will not be lectured by somebody who stood in government for 10 years and couldn't get it done.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta NDP has done everything possible to make life harder in our energy sector. They raised business taxes and taxes on heavy emitters, they are shutting down coal, they are capping growth in the oil sands, and to top it all off, they are asking Alberta families to pay a $3 billion, uncampaigned-for carbon tax only to have the Premier's closest friends vote to shut down our energy sector altogether. Will the Premier back down from her own risky manifesto, seeing as she has failed to get Albertans the social licence she promised this would?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'm hearing from a former MP who sat in government for 10 years and failed to do anything to build a pipeline. We have no lessons to learn from this hon. member, who accomplished nothing while in government on this issue, and what the member is now asking us to do is to return to a policy of science denial and climate change denial and do nothing for another 10 years. We will not do that either.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Jean: Oh, Mr. Speaker, that's funny. The Leap Manifesto is a complete rejection of the energy industry and resource development in Alberta as a whole. The manifesto calls for a total moratorium on pipelines and oil sands development. Albertans know that it is a radical set of policies that would shatter our way of life and our quality of life. Albertans also know that the members across the aisle would have been voting for this manifesto if they were still in opposition. Does the Premier not recognize that part of the reason she didn't sway her party members is that they don't believe she's actually sincere about it?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are clear. We must get to yes on a pipeline, and we will repudiate again the suggestion that we would ever stop building energy infrastructure in Alberta. But what I want to know is this. Supporters over there called building a pipeline a doomsday scenario. We've repudiated our problem. Have you repudiated yours?

Mr. Jean: It's true, Mr. Speaker. Even NDP members are now supporting the Wildrose.

The Leap Manifesto isn't just against pipelines; it also opposes trade agreements. It thinks that trade agreements are wrong because they might "stop damaging extractive projects." The Premier might have more credibility in her opposition to the Leap Manifesto if she actually supported the trans-Pacific partnership or even the New West Partnership, but the Premier has opposed international trade agreements and even interprovincial trade agreements. Will the Premier take a stand today against the entire Leap Manifesto by recommitting Alberta to the New West Partnership?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I've already answered this a couple of times now. Our government absolutely repudiates the manifesto. We will not support that part of it that talks about energy infrastructure because we are committed to supporting a progressive, sustainable energy industry in this province, supporting the workers that that supports, and moving forward on responsible environmental development, including the climate change plan, because that's the way to move forward. You don't look backwards. You don't look at the dinosaurs. You don't stick your head in the sand. You actually take responsibility for the future when you're asked to govern.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: I think supplementary 2, Mr. Speaker.

The Leap Manifesto calls for adopting an iron law of energy development. If you don't want it in your backyard, then it doesn't belong in anyone's backyard. Think about that. It rejects pipelines and mining of all resources. It makes NIMBYism the law of the land. Reasonable people know that that sort of policy is just crazy. Albertans know that lots of government members and many of their senior staff are on the record supporting crazy ideas just like this. Will the Premier purge her government of this type of crazy antidevelopment ideology?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, what could be helpful is if we all actually work together to get the pipeline that members across say, some days, that they want. You know, their supporters are out there saying that they don't want a pipeline, that it would be a doomsday scenario. I suggest to the member opposite that instead of hoping for failure, they come together and work with us to get that kind of energy infrastructure in place. He spent 10 years not doing it. Maybe if we work together, we could actually see success.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Today the government had a jobs plan announcement. Albertans were hoping to actually hear something positive or productive. Maybe the government might even act on one of our, you know, great ideas in the jobs action plan. Instead, the minister announced the cancelling of their failed job plan. In their winter newsletter to NDP members just a couple of months ago this government listed the jobs plan that they abandoned today as one of their top three accomplishments. How exactly does a failed program get listed as a top government accomplishment?

Ms Notley: Well, first of all, I would ask the member opposite to read the documents he is receiving – strangely, as a member of our party – a little bit more carefully. Today what happened was that the minister of economic development, in talking about one small part of our jobs plan, did something that I know the folks over there would find difficult. After doing the research, after looking at the evidence, we decided that there was a better way forward, so we acknowledged that there was a better way forward. We made a different plan because that's what you do when you're trying to do the best thing for the people who elected you. You go with the research, you go with the evidence, and if you get it wrong, you admit it and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Mr. Jean: I will stay on failed programs. The opposition and business groups spent the fall telling this government that their job subsidy program would not work. Time and time again the Premier and ministers rose in this place and said that it was a great idea. The NDP listed it as one of their top three accomplishments in their January newsletter to members. Today they acknowledged the truth and killed this program. Let me save the Premier some time and trouble. Her carbon tax, the evidence clearly says, will also be a failed program, and she will have to kill it. Will she save Albertans the expense and abandon the carbon tax today? [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, when you're asking questions, please listen.

Madam Premier.

2:00

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, our government is very proud to be moving forward with a climate leadership plan that will lead the country in making progress on greenhouse gas emission reduction while repositioning ourselves for better economic diversification and for a more progressive, sustainable energy industry in the future, where we will be more effective at exporting our resources, not less. That's what good governance is about. It's not about denying climate science. It's not about challenging whether the dinosaurs walked with us. It's actually about using the research and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: This weekend the agriculture minister was talking about opportunities in agriculture. Apparently, he is really excited about having more greenhouse businesses to grow locally produced vegetables. This might be a good idea if it wasn't contradicted by the government's other bad policies. Last fall Hotchkiss Herbs & Produce greenhouses of Calgary announced that the carbon tax, this carbon tax that the NDP likes so much, was going to put them out of business. Owner Paul Hotchkiss listed several NDP plans that hurt greenhouses. Will the minister acknowledge that this government's carbon tax will kill more greenhouses in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found it interesting at the time that a carbon levy which was about 14 months away from being introduced was actually killing a business right at that point.

But, no. What we will do is that we will work with all Albertans. We will work with industries that are particularly impacted. We will also ensure that we're able to move forward in a way that is sustainable. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, we have an obligation to future generations to reduce our emissions in this province, and we have an obligation to future generations to lead climate change action across the country. That is what our government is doing.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This weekend the government's parent party, which they belong to, advanced support for a halt to pipeline construction and an end to all fossil fuel use by 2050. Since the NDP ideology includes putting Alberta's largest employers out of business, for many Albertans this may be the last straw that will break their family's back. To the Premier: although a select few of your cabinet may now be half-heartedly speaking out about how harmful NDP policies are, where were they this weekend, when it mattered for Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd be happy to refer the member opposite to the link that actually showed where I was. I was at the convention on Saturday, giving a speech about where we stood in Alberta on the issue of our energy industry. I was proud of that. I was proud of our members. Again, as I've said, we've completely repudiated that part of that document. It is not going forward. Albertans can trust us to have their back.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have had difficulty hearing the Premier's remarks, as has the rest of the House. Would you ensure that you keep your applause so that I can hear them.

First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also saw that the Premier was in Jasper on Sunday, when people were voting on this.

Last week the Deputy Premier said: "certainly be talking about opportunities to move our products east and west with our colleagues from across Canada over this very weekend." Well, Mr. Speaker, Albertans who watched the NDP convention did not see much of that minister on the microphone in their defence. To the Deputy Premier: what changed over the weekend, and why did you not speak up for Alberta when you had the chance?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to address the question. Certainly, I was at the convention. I was working the floor. I was meeting with people who'd signed on to Leap and explaining to them exactly how important this was to our whole country's prosperity, not just Alberta's. I find that I've made a lot of progress in those conversations. I was also addressing national media and making it very clear that our entire government, Alberta government policy, our party, are opposed to this, we repudiate it, and we are continuing to move forward to get a pipeline built.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no record at the convention of what the minister said, so it must have been voice mode.

Just before today at noon in a media conference the Premier called the Leap Manifesto thoughtless, naive, and tone-deaf and also said: it's not about how I feel. I think that Albertans may think it is about how you feel since it's the most important thing to them. And then the truth. The Premier said: I haven't read it. Premier, will you read the document so you can defend Albertans and actually stand up for them in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I believe, again, as I've already stated, that I have a clear record of standing up for the interests of Albertans on this particular issue, and I'm very proud to continue doing that because I'm fully aware how important it is to Albertans. When I said that it's not about me, the point was this. It's about how we help Albertans and Alberta families and those people who have lost their jobs and those people that are looking for jobs and those people that are building businesses and new businesses. That's what our job as government is, that's what we will focus on, and that was what my point was.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation Communications

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's been four months since the acrimonious passage of the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. While the benefits to the workers themselves are obvious, there remains misinformation and confusion about the benefits to the farm and ranch owners. Not only does the bill bring Alberta practices into line with the rest of the provinces in the country; the bill is essential to honour the Canadian Charter, our international obligations, and Albertans' opportunities to sell to international markets. To the minister of agriculture: given that the bill was passed in December last, when will the minister communicate more clearly and convincingly what the benefits of the bill ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It happens to be a very good question, a very timely question. We're still in the process of tweaking the membership for the technical working groups. It is important to remember – and I'm sure the member would agree – that this is about protection for farm workers, for nonfamily wage farm workers, and making sure that that remains the focus going forward, to talk to all working groups, for sure, getting input from the farm and ranch employers as well but making sure to remember that this is about the workers themselves. I'm very much looking forward to those technical working groups and their recommendations.

Thank you.

Dr. Swann: Again to the minister: given that Bill 6 protects farmers and ranchers against lawsuits, protects against criminal liability, and meets increasing international trade obligations around health and labour standards, when and how will the minister counter the misinformation with accurate public information on the benefits to farm owners and ranchers?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. There has been a lot of communication. I've had the opportunity to go to many different meetings, talking with many different stakeholders, some who were quite interesting, but, you know, going to many different stakeholders, talking to them as much as I possibly can to ensure that they know the benefits to them around WCB, around how the upcoming regulations will benefit their operations, will give them additional social licence so that they can market their goods worldwide that much more easily.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Labour because this is fundamentally a labour bill. What support is available to enable vulnerable paid agriculture workers to participate meaningfully in consultations, especially when many of their bosses oppose the changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are committed to supporting our farm workers. We know that farm workers are already benefiting from the passage of the farm and ranch worker enhancement act through the WCB system. As of March 19 106 farm workers had injury claims approved by the WCB, more than double the 49 approved claims throughout all of 2015. Of those approved claims, 45 were for lost time, meaning that those workers were compensated for an injury that took them off the job, where they could no longer work. We will continue to engage with farm workers and include . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Education Concerns

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that Alberta schools play a critical role in shaping Alberta's next generation of leaders. We know, too, that our students will continue to require an education that prepares them for their careers in a diversified economy. To the Minister of Education: what is being done to support our students?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. You know, we are all living in very difficult economic circumstances here, but our government is committed to public education from K to 12, funding for enrolment, and making sure that all of our kids get the education that they deserve. We do not depend in Education on the price of oil but, rather, on a moral obligation to make sure that kids get the education that they need. We're working with dual credit programs with our colleges across the province. We're working with career and technology models so that we have different possibilities for kids to make sure that they get the education they deserve.

2:10

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the economic difficulties facing our province, have we seen more families moving out of Alberta and a reduction in student enrolment as a result?

Mr. Eggen: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our ministry is monitoring and each of the school boards across the province are monitoring their enrolment very carefully. Of course, that's how they fund each of their 61 school boards. We are watching. We saw in this last year – we were estimating for about 1.5 per cent enrolment growth. Instead, we saw 2.7 per cent enrolment growth, which is very healthy. It's an indication that people are here with families. They're staying here. We're building the infrastructure to have our students in the facilities that they need and have teachers in front of those students as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've been hearing from parents in my constituency that they are worried about their children's job prospects when they graduate, to the same minister: what steps are you taking to prepare students for success in a diversified economy?

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you for the question. Certainly, it's important for us to be creative, to have those links between postsecondary education and our high schools. In fact, we've expanded that now in a more broad way for career and technology foundations for students between grade 5 and grade 9 to have some fundamental interaction with the possibilities for different jobs in the future. We want our education to enrich the lives of each of our children, but we also want them to have a clear understanding of where that can take them in regard to the career in the future working world in which they will live.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Environmental Policies

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had a member's statement in this House titled I Told You So, and unfortunately that's a message that I'm going to have to bring up again. In July 2015 the Alberta Conservation Association informed Environment and Parks about certain legal liabilities regarding the aeration of about 20 lakes in Alberta. Environment and Parks came up with a last-minute, haphazard plan for aerating these lakes this winter. It was a disaster. To the minister. A lot of those lakes have had massive fish kills, resulting in the deaths of tens of thousands of fish, possibly entire fisheries. Will the minister stand up and accept responsibility . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Is there a minister that will take the question? Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of some of the challenges with lake aeration this past winter, and we are examining the matter. We are taking it very, very seriously, and Environment and Parks will be working with the Alberta Conservation Association to get it right.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister assured us in this House on October 27 and again on November 18 in estimates that the matter was taken care of and given that the minister stated, "Of course, the Alberta Conservation Association is a delegated administrative authority of the Department of Environment and Parks" and given that it may take decades for a fishery to recover, to the minister:

what plans does she have to fix this ecological disaster and ensure the survival of these fisheries for future generations of Albertans?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the question. Of course, one of the first ways we're going to do that is to ensure that we do not cut the heart out of environmental budgets in this province. We are going to ensure that we've got the resources in place to protect our air, land, and water for future generations, which is not something that you can do with multibillion-dollar cuts.

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, this government can't seem to get anything right. Given the failure of their farm safety bill, their job-creation program, their oil projections, and the recent Balancing Pool fiasco and given this government's inability to simply keep fish from dying throughout Alberta, to the minister: how can Albertans trust this minister to manage Suffield elk, grizzlies, bighorn sheep, or any of our resources in light of this most recent environmental disaster?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we will be working with the department scientists and the ACA on this matter of the fish and fish hatchery resources.

Now, I know that the hon. member opposite takes a personal interest in hunting matters, being that he was an outfitter, so certainly I'm surprised that I'm finally getting a question on the environment. I'm not surprised that it's exactly within his personal interests, Mr. Speaker. We will be moving forward with a number of different initiatives over the spring and fall, and certainly conservation is a big part of that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Child Care Supports

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has one of the youngest populations in Canada. Working families are the key to the Alberta advantage, but with the economy in the state it's in, they need a government that's going to be there to support them. With a $3 billion carbon tax, job losses piling up, this government needs to take serious steps to make sure Alberta families are taken care of. One clear way is to support families and ensure access to child care and early childhood learning for children. To the Minister of Finance: will the 2016 budget contain the funding and planning for child care that your government promised back in May?

Mr. Ceci: We have a budget coming out in just a few short days. There'll be everything laid out there, including where we are in platform commitments, which I think is what the hon. member is asking about.

The Speaker: Supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous Alberta government created over 10,000 child care spaces with the intent of broadening Alberta's workforce and providing parents with the security they need to work and contribute to Alberta's economy, to the Minister of Human Services: what is your targeted goal for opening affordable child care spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As a government we recognize that providing affordable, quality child care is important from many different angles, for the better development of the children and for the better participation of women and parents in the workforce. We will make sure that with the coming budget we include plans that provide for these opportunities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With all due respect, I wondered how many. We all know how important it is.

Given that since the October budget the Minister of Finance has backedpedalled on commitments made during the election and given the silence of the government on child care, we need assurances that Albertans won't have to choose between child care and feeding their kids. To the Minister of Human Services again: what steps will you be taking to alleviate the financial burden on families with low incomes, families who rely on child care to work?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to assure the member opposite that, unlike their budget, we will not be further cutting from Human Services. The second thing: what steps we will be taking will be laid out in the budget, and I say, "Stay tuned."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Charter Schools

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I asked the Minister of Education why the ReThink charter school application was not approved by his ministry. The application met the requirements of the previous government, yet this minister replied, "Based on the way that we went through the process, some charter schools did not make the grade." Apparently, the ministry has made some changes with respect to charter school regulation. To the minister: what changes have been made to the regulation, and what made you decide that this charter, designed specifically for students with special learning needs, did not make the grade?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, our government has a wide range of different choices for education, and they all provide some value across the province. No, we had not made any changes to regulation in regard to the application of new charter schools. Rather, the previous government minister made a presumption, leaping over the regulation to make a promise for that particular school. Then with the proper application of the regulation, it was found to be wanting.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister stated last week, "We can reach out more to ensure that all students and their families in the city of Calgary and right across the province as well have all of the different opportunities available to them," when will this minister's rhetoric be matched by action? Will the minister contact ReThink charter administrators and work with them through the regulatory process so that parents can access this unique stand-alone and critically important special-needs program?

2:20

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question. Certainly, we've seen over the last number of years a dramatic increase in the breadth and the scope of our public schools in Calgary and Edmonton to provide unique programming to meet the needs of students in our school system in Calgary and right across the province as well. Mr. Speaker, this is part of the criteria that we use in regulation. Does the charter school provide unique programming that's not available in a public school or a separate school across the province? That was one of the reasons that, in fact, this one didn't make the grade. In fact, the public schools are . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one charter school in Calgary has reported that, quote, we have 11,000 additional children waiting to be admitted into our school, end quote, and since Albertans obviously want the alternative charter schools and given that there are two spaces for charter applications to be filled, will the minister support the right of parental choice and allow Albertans, including ReThink charter school, access to this valuable educational alternative?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. I think perhaps the hon. member is mixing up the idea of the right for people to choose and the right for charter schools to impose that they somehow have a right to have a new application come through and be approved just like that. There was confusion from the previous government because there was some leaping over the proper regulatory procedures. We do follow the procedures, and we continue to do so. We know that public education is serving a vast majority of parents and students very well – thank you very much – in this province, and there is choice . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Transportation Infrastructure

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP's recent Leap Manifesto dreams of uniting every community with high-speed rail powered by renewables, but we need this government to come back to reality and ensure our current transportation infrastructure is properly maintained. Albertans need a safe and reliable transportation network both now and well into the future. Will the Minister of Transportation commit to restoring the necessary operational funding for proper crack sealing, grass mowing, and ferry operations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would just indicate to the hon. member – and thank you very much for the question – that we are facing difficult economic times in our province, and the financial position of the government has deteriorated with the international price of oil, as the member is well aware. The reductions in last year's budget were unfortunate. We would have preferred not to have done them, but the opposition is constantly asking us to find reductions and to find cuts. Any cut is something that they will challenge, yet they'll want us to cut . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that farmers in my constituency have been informed that the Klondyke ferry across the Athabasca River may open late and close early this year due to budget cuts and farmers need this ferry to safely move their equipment, which cannot fit through the truss bridge at Fort Assiniboine, does the Minister of Transportation intend to keep this road closed unnecessarily, or will the Klondyke ferry on highway 661 be launched in time for seeding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I will take that under advisement, and I will get back to him.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Speaker, we all care about safety, and what we need are common-sense plans that help Albertans on a daily basis. Given that the 2015 budget cut operational funding to maintenance and preservation of the provincial highway system by almost $50 million and considering we saw accidents and close calls occur with wildlife and other vehicles due to reduced summer maintenance and grass mowing, can the minister advise when the summer maintenance directives will be given to the highway maintenance contractors so they can prepare their work schedule for the summer?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Well, as I indicated earlier, we have a difficult financial position in this province as a result of the drop in the price of oil. The difficult financial decisions that the government has to make pale in comparison with the difficult decisions that would have to be made if that party cut billions of dollars from our budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mandatory Country of Origin Labelling for Lamb

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard great disappointment from the Alberta Lamb Producers, which is one of Alberta's many sustainable and thriving industries. In December of 2015 the United States repealed COOL legislation for beef and pork but not for lamb. The expectation of Alberta's livestock industry is that the federal and provincial governments would fight for the U.S. to repeal COOL and settle for no less than its removal from the entire industry in Canada and Alberta. To the minister: what are you doing to ensure that Alberta's lamb producers are no longer legislated by COOL?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. You know, it gives great pleasure to know that the repeal of COOL was a great victory for Alberta, a great victory for Canada, and a victory for our livestock industry. It helps enhance our mutually beneficial trade between the two countries, it helps restore those markets for Alberta's producers, it helps agricultural products. It's important to note, Mr. Speaker, that agricultural products are our second-largest export sector, and the United States is our most important trading partner.

Repealing discriminatory labelling requirements was a good step in the right direction, and I believe we're working with our federal government on looking at other – thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta's lamb producers sought help of not only their MPs but of their Alberta MLAs and given that they were still included in the country of origin labelling, to the minister: how are you advocating for Alberta's lamb producers, and when will you listen to their concerns given these tough economic times?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It was my understanding that the Alberta sheep producers first raised concerns to our federal government about their requirements under COOL in 2015. At that time it was not legally possible for the lamb producers to get their concerns into that case for COOL. So I do, you know, encourage our lamb and sheep producers to contact the national Sheep Value Chain Roundtable and the Market Access Secretariat so they can address that very valid concern.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that COOL continues to discriminate against Canadian lamb and that this decision to repeal COOL for only beef and pork isolates the sheep industry as the sole livestock sector to be subject to country of origin labelling, which undermines the industry's position with the Canadian livestock sector, to the minister: what are you doing to re-establish equitable trade agreements with our U.S. trading partners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. It's important to remember that labelling requirements are still in place for poultry, lamb, and venison as well as fruits, vegetables, and certain nuts, you know, produced in Canada, so it's important that we continue working with our federal government to address those concerns. I couldn't agree more with the member that we need to do more for our lamb producers. It's also important to note that our sheep producers last year had one of the best years that they've ever had, and I hope that this year they continue to grow their industry both domestically and internationally.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Postsecondary Institution Governance

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from many postsecondary students in my constituency regarding concerns about their institution's governance. An institution's board of governors plays an essential role in the guidance of Alberta's postsecondary institutions, and their role as a public body only increases that accountability. These boards have also become essential in allowing institutions to meet the educational needs of Alberta's diverse population, yet there are dozens of vacant positions on these boards, including those of public members and board chairs. To the Minister of Advanced Education: why haven't these vacancies been filled yet?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank my hon. friend for giving me the opportunity to address this issue. It's no secret that our government intends to reinvigorate public boards. There's a thorough process in place for applications, in which there has been significant interest. It's important that we take the time to understand the needs of our colleges and universities to ensure that board members have the appropriate expertise to meet those needs, and we're working closely with colleges and universities to find and interview the right people to serve in those critical roles.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Minister, for that answer, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Given Alberta's diversity and unique needs of students and given that part of the government's mandate is to enhance the diversity of postsecondary boards, can the minister tell us what this means in a practical sense?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. My friend is right in saying that we want to encourage more diverse perspectives on our postsecondary boards, which flies in the face of the past government's practices of only offering these appointments to their friends. Our government believes that these boards should represent the gender, social, and cultural diversity of our college and university students and that of all Albertans, and we remain focused on appointing the best people for the job. That's why we're taking the time to interview qualified, respected candidates for these crucial positions.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the governance role these boards have, again to the same minister: how can Albertans be assured that public members appointed have the right experience?

The Speaker: The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to my hon. friend for this excellent final question. During our thorough interview process we assess four core competencies for all board opportunities, including senior leadership and governance, and then we assess additional competencies specific to the needs for each opening. Each and every applicant is assessed against these identified criteria. This is important to our government because postsecondary boards are responsible for guiding the future of our colleges and universities.

The Speaker: The Member for Airdrie.

Midwifery Services

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to see the Health minister respond to the Wildrose's call to recognize the importance of midwifery services to families and our health care system. However, midwives operating in clinics in places like St. Albert, Lac La Biche, and Cochrane are still worried. They need real evidence that there will be stable funding, not vague platitudes from the minister in the face of a late budget. Midwife clinics hang in the balance. Will the minister be straight with Albertans and commit to removing the cap on access to midwives and implement a stable funding model?

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. We value the role that Alberta midwives play in our system and the important role they play in the health of mothers and their babies. We're very pleased to be meeting with midwives across the province and mothers both here in Edmonton and in Calgary on various events that have happened in the last little while. This last year our government invested an additional $1.8 million for midwifery services, funding up to 400 more midwifery-supported births than the year before, and we continue to work with our partners in midwifery.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Associate Minister of Health says that the government is still working on the details of what funding for midwives will look like in the budget and given that the NDP Member for St. Albert has reportedly been requesting a meeting with the Minister of Health on the St. Albert midwife clinic for weeks, how can midwives and families trust that the minister's claim to be listening to midwives on this issue is genuine, and has the minister even met with her own NDP MLA to hear the clinic's concerns yet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As a matter of fact, I regularly meet with my colleagues on any of the issues that are a concern for them, and I am pleased to report in this House, particularly given our guests here today, that the Member for St. Albert and I have met and had a thorough discussion about this issue. As I said, we are continuing to work with our partners in the midwifery college, within the Alberta association of midwifery, as well as with practices across the province.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given the simple fact that midwifery care saves money and given that families deserve to have the option of midwife services and that there are 1,800 women waiting for a midwife right now, adding a mere 400 courses of care last year was just not enough. Does the minister recognize that she is breaking Albertans' trust by refusing to save taxpayer dollars and ignoring the growing demand for midwifery care?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and again thank you to the member for the question. Both myself and my hon. colleague the Minister of Health have restated our position that we are continuing to support choice for Albertans in childbirth. We have some good news coming in the upcoming budget.

I have to say that I find it very interesting that the opposition Health critic will tell one audience that his party would provide unlimited funding for midwifery clinics while at the same time their Finance critic constantly talks about cutting billions of dollars from our public services.

Foreign Trade Zones

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, under the previous federal government Port Alberta and the Calgary Region Inland Port were designated as foreign trade zones. By positioning these two cities as major international trade hubs, we can attract and leverage significant capital investment while allowing potential international partners faster and more efficient access to western Canada. To the minister of economic development. Preserving foreign trade zone status is integral to Alberta's competitiveness on the global stage, allowing greater opportunities for economic diversification. Given this announcement is less than one year old, have you received a firm commitment from your federal counterpart on Edmonton and Calgary FTZ status?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the hon. member for the question, a very good question at that. I am having dialogue and conversations with the federal government. At this point in time, to answer his question directly, no, I have not heard back yet.

But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that trade is very, very critical not only to Alberta but also to our country and to our government. We take it very seriously. That's why I recently returned from a trade mission to China and Korea, where we are looking at opportunities to leverage our successes. We had a number of concrete, tangible outcomes, that I'm happy to talk about momentarily.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the aforementioned authorities, Port Alberta and Calgary region, are noted experts in attracting and sustaining international investment and trade and given that their initiatives and strategies are integral to building the relationships we need to access global markets for a variety of our products, including oil, again to the minister: are you working with these authorities to develop an Alberta-wide plan, part of our engagement strategy, which seeks to leverage the strengths of both groups to maximize Alberta's competitiveness in the global economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question and remind the House that, again, you know, market access is a key priority for our government. This is why our Premier, our government created this Ministry of Economic Development and Trade, to have a focus on working with the private sector, the job creators, but also looking at opportunities to increase our trade opportunities. We will continue to do that.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take it that that means you are meeting with those organizations.

Given that the minister was recently in China and Korea for 14 days and given that these are the very destinations to which we need to market and sell these two ports, again to the minister: during your trip to Asia did you mention these two entities and their status as foreign trade zones, and did you seek feedback on how your government can assist in making Alberta even more attractive as a place for international business community investment?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again I'll thank the member for the question. Trade is absolutely critical and a high priority for our government. I can tell the House that, quite frankly, this trade mission to China and Korea was my first trade mission outside of North America. It was very intentional to go to our second- and fifth-largest trading partners for the province of Alberta. We recognize that there are incredible opportunities to increase trade, whether we're talking about agriculture and agri-food products, forestry, looking at our energy sector, as well as looking for opportunities to leverage tourism. Quite frankly, we were quite happy, and I was proud of the culture minister for announcing . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Child Benefit Program

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a community advocate for more than two decades I have heard and witnessed the effects a tough economy has on children, families, and communities. Given our government's commitment to stand up for Albertans in need, could the Minister of Human Services please update the Chamber on what our government is doing to support children and families in need throughout Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government knows that Albertans are feeling the shock of low oil prices. In tough times Albertans pull together. Our government has made a commitment to help Alberta families who are facing financial hardship. That is why we have created the Alberta child benefit, a new program that provides financial support to lower income families. The Alberta child benefit will help families make ends meet, support a better quality of life for children, and ensure every Albertan has the resources they need to reach their full potential.

Loyola: Thank you for the update on this initiative.

Given the current economic challenges my constituents will be pleased to hear that our government is being proactive to address economic hardship. To the same minister: could you elaborate further on what impact the Alberta child benefit will have on Alberta's children and families?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The Alberta child benefit will improve the lives of 235,000 children in 130,000 lower income families. The ACB, Alberta child benefit, will provide $195 million in annual benefit to Alberta families in need starting this August. All Alberta families earning less than $41,220 will be eligible for this benefit, including those families on AISH and income supports benefits. The maximum annual benefit . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents, especially those with difficulty accessing financial resources, have been in my office and have asked how they can receive the Alberta child benefit. Again to the minister: how can families take advantage of this important program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are basically four requirements: first, they have been living in Alberta for one month; second, they have at least one child under the age of 18; third, they have filed their tax return; and fourth, they meet the income threshold of $41,220. I would encourage all eligible parents to file their tax returns to CRA. There are many community organizations here in Alberta who provide free tax-filing services.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 15 seconds we will move to Members' Statements.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans agree the environmental impact of the oil sands must be effectively tracked and monitored. The previous government took steps to enhance oversight and ensure appropriate stewardship by creating the Alberta Environmental Monitoring, Evaluation, and Reporting Agency, or AEMERA, which was charged with the oversight of key air, water, land and biodiversity indicators. Establishment of this truly arm's-length, independent body removed potential for and optics of ministerial interference. In the House during debate one opposition member was particularly passionate and steadfast in calling for this independence. Was that just any MLA? No. It was the now minister of economic development. The minister was correct then, but can we count on him now to implore his own government to do the right thing by saving AEMERA, thereby reaffirming his principles?

Now, the government would have us all believe that AEMERA was a bureaucrat-heavy nightmare which accomplished nothing, except perhaps turning the environmental reins over to seasoned professionals and qualified independent scientists. They will tell you that an integral responsibility was offloaded and that by moving it back under the minister's control, they are doing Albertans a service. They've said again and again that they are on the side of science. Is this subjective ministerial science, characterized by the stone cold facts of the questionably funded Pembina Institute? Ten internationally recognized scientists recently signed a letter which says that the environment minister was naive in her conclusions, pointing to multiple inaccuracies in making this rash decision. This government has again put ideology ahead of objectivity, rejected professional stewardship, and it is revisiting the tired drone that all decisions of the previous government were bad, instead of doing what is best for Albertans.

As my colleague from Calgary-North West stated just last week, opposition does indeed have some valid perspectives and good ideas, and as right as your minister was in 2013 . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood.

Silver Springs Community Activities

Mr. Connolly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege to rise in this House and speak about Silver Springs Botanical Gardens Society and the Silver Springs Community Association, two great organizations in the best constituency in Alberta, Calgary-Hawkwood.

Mr. Speaker, we say that April showers bring May flowers, and for these two organizations 2015 applications brought 2016 grants. I want to congratulate the Silver Springs Botanical Gardens Society for receiving a community initiatives program grant so that they could conduct renovations and buy new gardening equipment and the Silver Springs Community Association for receiving a community facility enhancement program grant to improve the conditions of their community hall so that they could keep holding unique community events like the Silver Springs family barbecue, Christmas craft fair, and, my personal favourite, the annual Lego building competition. The community of Silver Springs and the Silver Springs Botanical Gardens are truly hidden gems of Calgary.

I had the pleasure of touring the botanical gardens just a couple of weeks ago and was able to see first-hand the incredible work that the volunteers have been able to accomplish in just a few years. As someone who loves literature, my favourite area is the Shakespeare garden, which features quotations from some of Shakespeare's greatest works, my favourite being the quotation from act 5, scene 1 of A Midsummer Night's Dream, which was my line when I was in the play in high school and reads, "O Wall, sweet and lovely Wall," placed beside the sound barrier that divides Silver Springs and Crowchild Trail.

It's these little heritage points that make Silver Springs so special. Silver Springs is one of five vibrant communities in Calgary-Hawkwood where neighbours and families work every day to make our little corner of Calgary beautiful. Due to the hard work of volunteers in the community of Silver Springs, everything is coming up roses. Mr. Speaker, April 10 to 16 is also National Volunteer Week in Canada, and I am proud of what these two organizations have managed to achieve for our community through dedicated volunteering.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Community Midwives

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and recognize a new midwifery clinic in the community of St. Albert, as my friend across the way mentioned. Midwifery is a holistic and science-based practice, based on the belief that pregnancy, labour, and birth are profound experiences for women and their families. Currently there are 85 registered midwives in Alberta.

In September of 2015 three brave women left their jobs at an Edmonton clinic to open a new clinic in St. Albert called the St. Albert Community Midwives clinic. One of these women, Jennifer Thomson, practised in the United Kingdom before moving to Alberta and starting her practice. It was very interesting to hear that midwifery in the United Kingdom is essentially a given. Any woman that would like to use a midwife has access. I hope that one day Canadian women will enjoy the access to midwives that women do in the United Kingdom. When I asked Jennifer why she chose midwifery, she simply said: it's all I ever wanted to do; it's not a job; it's my life.

Anna Gimpel, originally from the Ukraine, trained and practised as a midwife in Israel before coming to Canada.

Sabrina Roy received her education in Canada and practised in Ontario before setting up shop in Alberta. Sabrina is a brand new mom to the very beautiful Anja, who also happens to be the great-great-granddaughter of Tommy Douglas, father of medicare in Canada. So, of course, I'll use this to, you know, segue into one of my favourite Tommy Douglas statements: social justice is just like taking a bath; you have to do it every day or you start to stink.

Between them these three women have 32 years of experience in midwifery, and we are blessed to have them in St. Albert. I hope they'll be there for many years to come.

I am proud of our government's commitment to midwifery and empowering women to choose what is best for themselves and for their families.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Olds College

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Formal education is much different than real life. In formal education we learn our lessons to prepare for our tests. Meanwhile in real life we get tested and learn from those lessons.

Last Thursday my colleagues and I had the distinct privilege of attending the Olds College black-tie gala. For the unfamiliar, Olds College campus is a historical landmark dating back to 1911, when it was a demonstration farm. Two years later it opened and became known as the Olds school of agriculture and home economics. This college has gone from humble beginnings to becoming a world-class facility, developing hands-on training, applied research, and innovation. The scope and breadth of programs there has expanded to the fields of fashion, hospitality, and agribusiness. They recently added a brewmaster and brewery operations management course, where students have hands-on brewing experience. They also have their own retail store and market these fine craft beers.

Mr. Speaker, I was absolutely enthralled with these students' entrepreneurial spirit and the confidence that they exuded. It speaks to the very core of the agricultural sector. At a time when many young men and women are leaving the family farm, it really gladdens this farmer's heart to see such passion and self-initiative.

These qualities are exactly what Olds College is all about, from a small-town agricultural college to a modern, high-tech institution that all Albertans should be proud of. Like a family farm, it has grown and prospered in no small part through the perseverance of its students, faculty, and alumni. My colleagues and I were truly honoured to attend their gala and wish them another 100 years of continued success and tradition.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Bill 204 Alberta Tourism Week Act

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to rise today and request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 204, the Alberta Tourism Week Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 204 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(5) of the Election Act I would like to table five copies of the following report, the Report of the Chief Electoral Officer on the Provincial General Election, May 5, 2015. Copies of this report will be provided to all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there were two points of order I noted today, raised by the Government House Leader. The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think with respect to the first point of order that it was in regard to a member's statement. I understand that a point of order may not be permitted with respect to a member's statement, in which case I would withdraw that one.

The Speaker: The second point of order.

Point of Order Factual Accuracy

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During question period one of the hon. members opposite made a statement which I believe violates Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j), and that was – and I don't have the Blues in front of me – to the effect that all hon. members on this side would have voted for the Leap Manifesto or would have voted to shut down the oil industry had we not been in government. That is completely untrue. That is a smear upon the members on this side, on all of us, whether we're in cabinet or members of caucus.

I want to bring to the attention of the House and to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that since 2008, when I was the leader of our party, we've had clear policy in place to support the orderly and responsible development of the oil sands. We have spoken in this House on many occasions, in public on many occasions, and at our conventions through the passage of motions and the debate thereof to the effect that we support an orderly and responsible development of Alberta's oil sands and that we support pipelines that meet the criteria set out for environment, for agreement with First Nations and that we further support the maximum upgrading of products here in Alberta to create jobs.

For the member opposite, throughout question period and in Members' Statements, to use such provocative and insulting language, to impute motives to this side of the House is quite frankly a clear violation of the standing orders and the standards of dignity and decorum that have existed in this House. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it is an attempt to mislead the public as to the position of this government and this party over many years. We are clear on the record. We were supporting the orderly development of the oil sands and access to tidewater before their party was even a figment of someone's imagination.

Mr. Speaker, they can attempt to smear us, they can attempt to mislead the public as to our positions, but they can't do it here in direct violation of the rules of this House. I ask that you would rule that there is a clear violation of sections 22(h), (i), and (j) in this case.

The Speaker: Could I just clarify with the Government House Leader that when you said section 22, you meant 23?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did. Sorry. I misspoke.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and continue what clearly is a matter of debate. There are many things that happen in this Assembly and a wide variety of opinions. Not very long ago you rose in this place and gave the government permission to call this side of the House climate deniers. There is a wide swath of what should and should not be able to be spoken in this House. As shocking as many of the ideas may be to most Albertans, the Leap Manifesto and the ideas behind it are nothing new to NDP policy. The fingerprints of many in the NDP government can be found all over the ideas of the Leap Manifesto.

While the government would like to distance itself from itself, the Premier's chief of staff ran for the leadership of the federal NDP on a plan to end the use of fossil fuels right across the country. Our own environment minister here in Alberta sought and received the endorsement of the main author of the Leap Manifesto, Avi Lewis, prior to her election last May. A number of former anti-oil and antipipeline activists currently work in the minister's office, and that's been well documented both here and outside of the Chamber.

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you focus your attention on the government rather than the party.

Mr. Cooper: My point, Mr. Speaker, is that what we have here is a matter of debate. This side of the House has presented one perspective of the facts. While the hon. House leader may disagree with those facts, that is exactly what they are. We have this sort of back and forth all the time. In fact, on the 15th of March, at approximately 5:15, the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, as part of his maiden speech, stated that he'll be writing a book on his time here and said: if the Wildrose will stop lying about the NDP, he will not tell the truth about the Wildrose.

This is the exact challenge, Mr. Speaker, that they believe one thing to be true and we know another to be true, particularly around the issues that were debated here in the House. It's been well documented that if you are a member of the provincial NDP, you are a member of the federal NDP. We are merely discussing those important issues as they are important to Albertans, and they need to understand the nature of this government.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to offer some comments on this particular point of order. Very clearly, this is not a point of order. This is a matter of debate, and it's very clear within our standing orders and indeed within the traditions of parliament that the standing orders and the rules of procedure within our parliaments are not to be used to somehow shield or protect the government from issues that are to be debated within the House. The reference to the various standing orders in section 23, quite frankly, do not hold in this matter. They are clearly a matter of disagreement and not a matter of an infraction of any of the rules.

You know, it's interesting to me that one of the burdens of governing that the government is learning, one would hope – and they'll learn more as they go along – is that you have to become a little more thick-skinned. I find it actually curious that the Government House Leader is so vociferous when he himself would regularly participate in exactly those kinds of comments, and we had to just sort of sit quietly and take it because it is within the rules entirely. As long as we're borrowing Shakespearean phrases here: it's part of the slings and arrows of office. This government would do well to learn to accept the responsibility of the slings and arrows of office and to accept the fact that you will be criticized. You have to accept that criticism and defend those critiques rather than simply try to hide behind the rules of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, you had something you'd like to add?

Mr. Mason: I just wanted to add one thing, Mr. Speaker. I wrote down the quote, and you can check it against the Blues. It's specific to members, and it says: all members opposite would have voted for this had they not been in government. It's absolutely unfair and untrue.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have looked at the Blues. I also anticipated that 23(i) through (j) would be referenced, and in addition to the Blues, I also was listening carefully. I found, as has been mentioned, that the practice is to give "considerable leeway" to members, the widest latitude, as I recall a ruling by Mr. Zwodzesky in 2012. I would also draw your attention to page 510 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. There is occasionally disagreement on facts, a difference of opinion. I think in this particular instance that there is no point of order. However, I would draw to the attention of the members yet again that the intent of section 23, those specific references – you are causing emotion in the House which is not necessary to the important substance of the debate. I would therefore rule in this particular instance that there was no point of order.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 202

Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act

[Debate adjourned April 4: Mr. Cooper speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the few minutes I have left today on this piece of legislation, Bill 202, to just wrap up a couple of quick final thoughts for the Chamber on our roles and responsibilities when it comes to this important issue. There are many great issues that are facing us today. Certainly, Bill 202 touches on some of those very, very important issues when it comes to affordable housing – when you wrap that into some of the great organizations right across this province of ours that provide these sort of services to those in need. There is often no better solution to the issues of poverty and those that affect children than providing a home.

Let me be clear that my desire is to ensure that we can do the most possible when it comes to providing affordable housing.

Mr. Speaker, what folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills don't need is another study. There have been many studies brought forward to this place, a number of them very extensive, comprehensive, and all of those studies call for action. It's my hope that the government, upon the passing of a motion very similar to this piece of legislation and upon hearing the desires of the House, will in fact move on the issues surrounding affordable housing. But it will be difficult for me to support such a piece of legislation that will delay this important work. As I mentioned earlier, in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there are 20 available residences that are managed by Mountain View Seniors' Housing, 13 of which are not currently in a state that can be inhabited because of this government's and the previous government's inability to keep those up. What the people in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills want is for those 13 properties to be repaired and provided to those in need.

While I appreciate the hon. member's desires for this piece of legislation, while I appreciate the hon. member's intent in trying to move the needle, what the government needs to do is to take this intent, take this desire, and act upon the things that need to be done to ensure that there is appropriate affordable housing available across this province. It is with some sadness that I won't be supporting this piece of legislation in encouraging the government to do the right thing in the area of affordable housing.

The Speaker: Does 29(2)(a) apply here? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and speak on a topic which is close to my heart, that of affordable housing in this province. It is a subject which is on the minds of many of those stakeholders within the industry as well as those who are providing housing to individuals and families in support of families-first housing and affordable housing for seniors all across the province in different jurisdictions. The province's desire, of course, is to act on affordable housing.

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's been pointed out to me that, in fact, you have already spoken to Bill 202. You cannot speak again.

I would therefore recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise today to speak to Bill 202. I would like to say that I would like to commend the member for both the intent and the objectives of this bill. Of course, it's an important issue for all Albertans. It is about politics, of course, but it's not only about politics. It's not about partisanship, and it's not about pushing forth competing ideologies. It's really about people. It's about their lives, their stability, and their futures.

Often a key component and arguably one of the most important factors for all Albertans is safe, affordable, and appropriate housing for today and into the future. So we need to get on with that discussion, with developing viable, sustainable, solutions, not Band-Aids, not more talk when we need action, not controls, and not investment-killing measures. Let's strongly consider the opportunities that may lie ahead with respect to federally, provincially, or municipally owned lands that could be brought to the table to help to solve this problem, one of the other investments that the public sector can bring forth.

Is housing security a basic human right? Is 30 per cent or more of income onerous? And should we be only helping those that fall below the core need income threshold? These are many questions that are being discussed, as we speak, in the housing community. I would assert that bringing innovation, creativity, and collaboration to bear to address what I think of as the elephant in the province – having spent over a dozen years in the building industry myself, also engaged with both affordable housing and attainable home ownership, housing affordability is not just about homelessness. It's not just about low and middle income; it's actually an issue for all Albertans.

Does the government want to solve this problem? Is the government prepared to invest in, to plan, to build, to own, and to operate an adequate supply of affordable rental housing? Can the public purse meet these demands? I would suggest that that's not the case. I believe in what I often refer to as PPNP, public, private, and nonprofit partnerships, to leverage public investment from the various levels of government, not heavy-handed, ideologically driven controls. Those don't work. But we have a public responsibility, and there is an opportunity there. The public responsibility is there to invest in housing for our vulnerable and for all Albertans. The private sector brings forth capital and expertise, which is much needed and which we can leverage against. I found that the nonprofit sector brings passion and a lean-and-mean operating environment to assist with addressing this issue.

So I would assert that we need to find innovative ways to create more inventory – that's what this is about at the end of the day – but not only to create more inventory. We actually create more inventory by creating movement through the housing continuum, closing the gaps and reducing the barriers efficiently in cost-effective ways to leverage public investment, to help people to move through, which allows people to move up through that continuum as time goes by. Rent controls will further limit supply. I'll talk to that a little bit later, but it is proven that that is very often the fact.

I agree with investing during this economic downturn to maximize returns on the public investment and, as importantly, to stimulate job creation. Having been in that industry for many years and having watched the houses go from excavation to forming to foundations to framing, residential construction creates probably more jobs per dollar invested than almost any other type of infrastructure investment. Therefore, I would advocate and hope that both our Finance and Infrastructure ministers will put a significant percentage – 5 per cent would probably be significant – of the $4.3 billion of slush that we've heard about towards not only the huge economic stimulus that that would create but the delivering of much-needed housing stock and jobs.

The previous government had some good plans in place. I was able to actually engage in some of that, in some affordable housing initiatives, highly successful capital grants to stimulate affordable rental and ownership development for not only low- but middle-income working families in Alberta, who are sometimes forgotten in this discussion and in this argument. I think we need to take that into account here, that it's not just those that are homeless and low income but it's middle-income workers who are just scraping by and just going paycheque to paycheque who often need our assistance and are also those people who we need to attract here when we're lucky enough to have a robust economy.

Those are some of my key concerns. But with respect to the bill itself I do have some other concerns that I'd like to bring forward. One is that there is no specification that this is an all-party committee, and that concerns me.

Second, it's meant to include members of the public and specified stakeholders. If so, what is the representation? How many? How many relative to the – I'm hoping – all-party MLA members? How will we ensure transparency and accountability? Public stakeholder groups: assuming that public, private, and nonprofit representation will be included on that committee, how will they be chosen? What roles, authority, and responsibilities will they have? How and how much will they be remunerated? The cost of the committee administration is in the bill in remuneration for nongovernment members and travel and other costs, but they're not clearly specified, so we don't really know what the cost of this initiative is. All the costs will be borne by this Legislature, and the people of Alberta will demand transparency. Is this just to become another agency or board, and if so, why is it not just under Seniors and Housing as a permanent working group?

I have some other concerns. There is talk of rent regulation, rent subsidies, security deposits. I do not see any mention specifically for seniors in this plan. I'm concerned that this bill currently focuses on the symptoms rather than the root causes, not focusing, really, on the long-term, sustainable solutions that we require in this province.

Missing from the list of included representatives are developers. Anybody who's been in the business knows that there is a distinct difference between builders and developers in the building community, their focus and operations often significantly different.

The question of social engineering. Has this gone awry? Is it not meeting the needs of the community without significant and unjustified public investment?

Then I hear about rental caps and rental controls. I've got a document, which I'll table tomorrow, called the international experience with rent controls: a summary of studies and experiences. In short, it says that rent control inevitably leads to a rental housing supply shortage, rent controls make a short-term housing supply shortage permanent, overall supply of rental units to the market drops, and as we all know, units get converted to other uses, condominiumization. The other thing that can happen on the development side: demolition and redevelopment is accelerated because of the opportunity to move more profitably to other forms of use of the same land.

The other issue, of course, is security deposits. I agree. Let's put in a mechanism to protect against a few landlords who might abuse the system, but I can't condone putting in place a policy or law that protects or limits liability on those that may wilfully damage other people's property.

Failure to return damage deposits, I understand, is a Service Alberta complaint, but I'd like to know what that percentage is of the total number of rental units. Is it significant enough to put in heavy-handed legislation for? Anecdotally, from the Calgary Residential Rental Association: in a 2013 survey of 103 members there were $367,000 in landlord damages, increasing in 2014 to $492,000. If you're a small, independent landlord and you suffer one of those losses, that can wipe out that entire often not even a return on investment as we know that many of those people buy that property for long-term appreciation.

Inclusionary zoning is mentioned as well. Usually that's a 10 per cent requirement and a major initiative pushed by many whom again I would characterize as social engineers. This encourages meeting quotas, not developing the best and most innovative affordable housing stock within an integrated community, and may lead to ghettoization for low-income renters and owners. I don't think that's the way we want to go.

To me, innovation is key, and as we have hinted in our Engage document, we believe that co-location of seniors; affordable, attainable, and market housing; possibly along with services such as day care could be the wave of the future in innovation and in creating community hubs for housing and services not only for seniors but for families.

I have a motion coming down the road which I think is a little more prescriptive than what this bill is in terms of what the stakeholders are, but I can tell you that I think the best recommendation – and I was lucky enough to have spent some time with the Minister of Seniors and Housing this morning – is to create a permanent working group, which would include members of the private, public, nonprofit organizations, AAMD and C, and AUMA, to develop, really, initiatives and a direction for seniors' care issues and other identified affordable housing needs across this province, looking at demographic and geographic issues, doing the studies about where that inventory needs to be, and to put that in place with the leaders of this industry as a permanent working group.

Again, as I said, I am very appreciative and thankful for the member bringing forward what I think is a very noble initiative and objectives, but given the shortcomings there and the opportunity to create this within the ministry, I will not be supporting this bill today.

Thank you.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not stand to support this bill. As a number of my colleagues have said, this is one of the top issues from their constituents and certainly from my constituents. I would offer the following two stories. The first is about Daniel and his wife. They were thrilled to learn that they were to be parents. The baby was born, and they were so excited. They came home only to receive a notice of eviction in 30 days because it was an adult-only complex.

3:20

The second story is about Tim. Tim, 68 years of age, who's wife had recently passed away, received notice that his rent was increasing by a hundred dollars per month. That might have been fine except that it was the third increase in 18 months. He worked all his life at survival wages, but he worked, and he paid his bills, and he survived. He was receiving OAS, GIS, and a very small pension of a hundred dollars per month. While his wife was alive and also receiving a small amount, they could make ends meet. Now with the rent increase he had to make a choice about paying rent or buying some groceries.

It is for these constituents that I must stand and support this bill. No one in Alberta should be left in this position. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support Bill 202. As mentioned in my motion, housing is a fundamental human right, especially appropriate and affordable shelter. We need to make sure that all Albertans are looked after. I'm so proud of the fact that this government is protecting the most vulnerable even in these challenging times. What can be considered decent housing for one person is not necessarily for another. Without proper support systems in place many vulnerable Albertans are at risk of becoming homeless.

I would like to echo some of my colleagues with the latest census data from 2011. It found that over 23 per cent of renters in the province were in core housing need, that 10.7 per cent of all Alberta households, or 137,485 households, were in core housing need, and that some populations are more affected by housing challenges than others. Indigenous people and newcomers make up a higher percentage of renters in core housing need.

I also would like to address the issue of survivors fleeing from domestic violence situations. Of 3,631 women housed from April 1, 2011, to September 20, 2015, 49.9 per cent self-reported being exposed to or fleeing from a family violence situation.

You see, Mr. Speaker, housing is so fundamental, and it's just so important that we have adequate housing for our most vulnerable people here in Alberta. This is why I will be supporting this, and I encourage my other colleagues in this House to do same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today to talk about Bill 202 before us, the Alberta Affordable Housing Review Committee Act. I'll echo some of the comments of the other members of the House. I'm sure that the intent of the act is good. Affordable housing is a big issue. It's not a now issue; it's an always issue, and it always will be. It's something I'd like to think I know just a little bit about. During my time on Calgary city council I spent three of those years as chair of the Calgary Housing Company, which is the largest landlord in the city of Calgary. It was then, and I believe it still is now. At the time that I chaired the Calgary Housing Company, there were about 10,000 units under our care and about 25,000 people in those units under our care.

From that, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I know that this is a complex issue. One size does not fit all. Of the people that need help with affordable housing, there's probably a different explanation for every single one. Some just don't make enough money. Some have had a difficult event in their life. It could be a job loss. It could be an injury. It could be a mental or physical breakdown. It could be a family breakup. The point is that it's not entirely that simple to solve the problem.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we need to try. When I was on city council, we did launch at that time – it was about 10 years ago now. I guess I know that because one of the police chiefs was talking about it today. We launched the plan to eliminate homelessness. That was a well-intended effort that, with the help of a lot of people, has put thousands of people in a position where they have roofs over their heads, and that's pretty important.

In fact, I believe that the housing first plan is one that is certainly well worth supporting by us. Not only is it good on the human side, in that it looks after people; interestingly enough, as a fiscal conservative, it's actually good business. Mr. Speaker, not only does it give people more dignity to have their own address and a place where they can go at the end of the day and a place where they know they start from at the beginning of the day, but for those people that need extra help to maintain and improve their lives, it actually allows society to help them.

For those that might need financial support, it's a place to deliver the support to. For those that might need mental or physical counselling or help or other types of wraparound supports, it's a place to go to deliver those wraparound supports. In some cases it's a place to pick the people up from to take them where they can get the help. The point is that you can't help people if you can't find them, and giving them a home is the best way to be able to find them so that you can help them. Some people, Mr. Speaker, just need to get temporarily past the situation.

I will echo some of the concerns. The bill, while I'm sure it's well intended, falls short in some pretty important areas, Mr. Speaker. There is no indication that it would be an all-party committee. Affordable housing is not a left/right issue. It's not a Conservative versus a Liberal issue versus an NDP issue; it's a human issue and one that I would like to think that people in this House would want to work together on. I would like to think that looking after people that need housing doesn't belong to any particular section of the political spectrum. I think it's something we should all turn our minds and our efforts to together.

Mr. Speaker, this bill doesn't do it. Just the fact that the number of people on the committee doesn't allow for contributions from all parties: that's a concern. People that need homes should not be made a political football; they should be made something that we should all turn our efforts to together. Unfortunately, this bill doesn't really allow for that.

I'm a little concerned with some of the text in the bill. I can tell you, as one of my colleagues talked about, that rent controls – I think it's called "rent regulation" here in (2)(a) – typically make the problem worse. Rent controls can sometimes temporarily make the situation better, but where studies have been done, over time it takes away the incentive for investment.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but under Standing Order 8(7)(a)(i), which provides up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-East to close debate on Bill 202.

Ms Luff: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all my colleagues who took the time to stand up and speak to this bill in second reading. I just want to quickly reiterate the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is simply to create a committee that will look at solutions for affordable housing in Alberta. I think everyone in the House has agreed that affordable housing is an issue, that it's something that we need to address, and it's something that we need to address quickly. I don't think anyone disagrees on those facts.

The bill does leave it open in terms of the membership of the committee. It says it can be three members, but it could be more than that. I'm willing to look into that if that is a concern that folks have.

However, I do want to address some arguments from the opposition. When the official opposition was advocating their point on this bill, they accused me of not consulting on a bill that's about consulting, and then they said we didn't need more consulting. So you'll forgive me if I'm a little confused about what their points were. Really, all I want to do is to get people together who have the expertise to make good recommendations to this government to solve a problem that is a critical issue.

3:30

The other party has also accused me of, you know, ideologically driven social engineering. The topics that I included in this bill were topics that were drawn from the most important people to me, and those people are my constituents, Mr. Speaker. I would argue that opposition to a bill that seeks to provide solutions on affordable housing simply because it includes rent regulation would indicate to me that you are more ideologically driven than you're accusing me of being.

Mr. Speaker, I have a science degree; I was a science teacher. I am someone who values research, who values actual solutions that are proven based on research and evidence, and I believe that that is true of everyone else in this government. Now, I pride myself on being open minded, and I'm open to any solutions that the committee may put forward. That actually doesn't really have much to do with me; these are just issues that folks in my community wanted me to work on.

In terms of concerns, there were some concerns brought up surrounding the timeline. When I did speak with some groups, including the Calgary Housing Company, they felt that nine months was already quite a short turnaround and that three months would probably be entirely too quick. This committee's recommendation should certainly not be seen as something that's doing the work of the ministry. It does not in any way prevent the ministry from moving forward with actions and programs to improve the housing situation in Alberta. It should be seen as an opportunity for the public to engage with the government on a crucial issue, and recommendations the committee makes can support the ministry moving forward. But it's something that supports the work of the ministry; it certainly does not replace the work of the ministry.

I did hear today that the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation is starting work with federal colleagues on undertaking broad-based consultations on a national housing strategy, and this is good news. This is something we haven't had in a very long time, and it's something that I think we're looking forward to working on with our federal partners in coming up with some solutions.

I think everyone in this House, Mr. Speaker, agrees that affordable housing is a critical issue. I would argue that I have consulted with my most important stakeholders, as I have mentioned, who are my constituents, although they are not the only people that I have spoken to. They have inspired some of the provisions included in this bill. I also know that there are solutions out there. I know that there are plenty of people working on solutions every day in communities all across Alberta, and this bill is an opportunity for government to hear those solutions.

Mr. Speaker, given that every Albertan absolutely deserves a safe and secure place to call home, I would ask my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a second time]

Bill 203

Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy today to introduce debate on second reading of Bill 203, the Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016.

Other than buying a house, the purchase and maintenance of a vehicle is often one of the biggest investments a person can make. We need to ensure that we are doing everything we can to protect Albertans from undue and unanticipated costs. We can do this by enhancing consumer awareness and consumer rights as well as supporting all players in the industry.

We know that this is a competitive industry and that many business owners take great pride in doing things right for consumers. I am pleased to have met with several of them over the past weeks, and there is certainly agreement from them that consumer protections are important. There is, however, also concern that not every business is operating at the standard, and in fact these businesses that are lagging behind and not keeping pace with industry standards are causing harm to the reputation of the industry as a whole. This is causing difficulty for consumers when they are choosing where to have their vehicles repaired. I believe that consumers should never have to worry about being taken advantage of, especially when they may be in a position of financial vulnerability.

I've had many conversations with people in my community who are asking questions. I think there are a lot of additional avenues that can be explored to increase consumer protections in this area, but these are outside of the scope of this bill here before us. This bill will establish guidelines that increase transparency, accountability, and peace of mind for both consumers and business owners. With this bill I am working to ensure that these consumers are protected against potential unforeseen financial stress should they need to repair this important investment. The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that this bill is about consumer protections. I hope that the debate here today will be the start of a larger conversation about the need for increased and updated consumer protections here in Alberta.

Bill 203 takes steps to make sure all Albertans have the information they need about their rights as consumers when it comes to automotive repair. This bill creates a framework for both the consumer and the business that will reduce the potential for conflict between these two groups. This bill will establish a process that both parties can understand and can rely on and will provide consumer protection and a process that is easy to follow.

Both prior to and since the bill's introduction I have received a lot of positive feedback, and I certainly continue to welcome any and all input on the bill and look forward to additional suggestions for areas that might increase consumer protections. The goal here is to ensure that consumers have the greatest possible protection and to ensure that they have clarity and confidence that they will not be taken advantage of.

Mr. Speaker, I have met and continue to meet with a number of stakeholders in the automotive repair industry. It's been great to hear their perspectives on the proposed legislation, and I look forward to hearing more from them as we move through this process. I've had great discussions with organizations like AMVIC, who is the regulator for the auto industry here in Alberta, the AMA, the Canadian Independent Automotive Association as well as individual business owners and consumers alike.

My consultations with AMVIC have been extremely positive. We've had numerous conversations about this bill and how it would affect the industry and what we could potentially do to further strengthen the consumer protection efforts within this bill. I've had excellent feedback from the industry and have heard several suggestions on where we can strengthen this bill and areas where there is opportunity to create clarity.

I've also had very positive conversations with the AMA, who have been very supportive of the bill to date and have offered invaluable insight throughout this process. I'd like to point to a quote from an article in Collision Repair Magazine that I think really emphasizes what I'm trying to accomplish with this bill.

The move to pass bill 203 is a step in the right direction, according to [AMA] Senior Policy Analyst, Scott Wilson.

"It's an appropriate direction and echoes some of the provisions in other jurisdictions, which is what I think they were trying to achieve," said Wilson. "I think anytime you can provide a consumer with a little more certainty around a transaction at a collision repair facility, it's a good thing."

At the end of the day, this legislation simply will allow consumers and automotive repair shops to come to a written agreement on the estimated cost of work before it's started. Before a repair shop does any work, the business must offer to give the client a written estimate for the total work expected, and the client must sign off on the estimate before work will begin. In keeping with practices already followed by businesses in Alberta, the final cost charged can't be higher than 10 per cent of the quoted price unless the consumer specifically agrees to the new cost. Many repair shops already follow the practice of offering to provide an estimate to their customers. This just ensures that everyone is playing by the same rules. By asking every business to provide an estimate prior to work starting, this will help reduce the potential for conflict between consumers and businesses. Consumers will know up front the expected costs of the work, and business owners will have protection since the customer will have signed off on the cost before work has started.

After work is complete, the consumer will be provided with a clear invoice that explains all charges and costs. This will help customers feel confident that the work they were charged for was not only fair, but they will have a better understanding of what exactly was done and what the associated costs were. The intent is that this bill will help both consumers and business owners know what is expected of them during their transactions and will ensure clarity in the process.

Further, this bill will ensure that consumers' rights are posted in all repair shops as well so that parties know what exactly is expected of each of them. This is something that people have been very supportive of throughout my consultations.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, this bill builds on the best practices already in place in the industry both here in Alberta and in other jurisdictions like Ontario and Manitoba. Many repair shops are already following many of these initiatives laid out in the bill. By enshrining best practices into legislation, we're strengthening their effectiveness and strengthening consumer protection efforts here in Alberta. The hope is that this bill will be the first step in an ongoing discussion around consumer protections in Alberta, and I look forward to the opportunity to continue the debate about consumer protections here in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sorry, but I must have missed it when the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark did all of his introductions earlier and introduced all of the stakeholders. Maybe I just happened to miss that.

It is with mixed feelings that I rise today to speak to the second reading of Bill 203, the Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016. First off, I guess I'd like to thank the representatives, those who are the stakeholders in the auto industry, for attending this discussion on Bill 203 here today. It is critical that Albertans feel confident that when they need the service of repair, they will get it in an open, transparent, and honest way.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the member who is moving this proposed bill, the current Fair Trading Act, specifically section 12, automotive business regulations, positions Alberta as a leader in Canada and is certainly superior to that of Manitoba and Ontario, where it is clear much of this legislation has taken its inspiration from. Alberta is the only province in Canada with a regulatory body, the Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, AMVIC, to monitor repair services by operating under designated provincial legislation.

Before I get into the meat of what I want to say, I just want to touch briefly on the number of complaints the industry receives. From June 30, 2014, to July 1, 2015, the motor vehicles association of Alberta recorded only 45 consumer complaints that were submitted to AMVIC, and none of these resulted in any charges or fines. So let's put this in perspective, Mr. Speaker. This is 45 of over 5 million vehicles serviced. That is an absolutely minuscule number. Furthermore, throughout the 2015 cycle the Canadian Independent Automotive Association has outlined that AMVIC received 251 complaints specifically relative to the independent service and repair sector. This resulted in only 12 undertakings and no administrative penalties or warnings. Again, putting it into perspective and context, another minuscule number.

Mr. Speaker, this all tells me that our system is designed very well indeed. I am not one of those folks that will say, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it" because I'm a firm believer that things can always be improved. As legislators we should always encourage each other, especially Albertans, to do better and to always try and get the job done. This being said, I want to break down this legislation so that we can all see the faults in what is currently before us and so that we do not turn a system that is working relatively well into one where there is heightened confusion and unnecessary angst.

Let's start with the estimate fee section. Under the current Fair Trading Act repairs may not exceed an estimate by "more than 10%, to a maximum of $100," and consumers must be informed and consent given in advance of the fees that are going to be charged.

The proposed section 57.3 of the bill will mean that an estimate fee cannot be charged if the consumer agrees to and authorizes repairs because the definition of “estimate fee” is not clearly defined to distinguish between inspections and diagnostic services. One or both of these fees would have to be waived by the repairer.

Furthermore, an estimate fee should not be subject to a government-prescribed maximum. Repairers invest a considerable amount of time and money into equipment and labour to be able to diagnose and inspect vehicles simply to determine the cause and course of action to complete the repairs. Diagnosis requirements are so vast in scope that to prescribe a maximum would be illogical.

Again, to put this in perspective, the people that work on your vehicles are not mechanics; they are technicians. They are highly trained individuals that have to figure out what a problem is. To understand the vehicle is to understand that some vehicles have miles, if not several miles, worth of wires, and it is not a simple fix when we’re fixing the vehicles that we currently have on the road today.

Consider this, for example. A vehicle has an electrical issue and requires six hours of diagnosis time by a skilled and highly trained technician with high-tech equipment. A broken wire is found to be the problem, and 10 minutes of repair is then required. As this section of the proposed bill currently reads, a repairer could only charge for the 10-minute repair time, not the six hours of diagnosis time. Again, very illogical. This section must be taken back to the drawing board as to retain the current Fair Trading Act intent and to ensure that the language used to describe estimate fees clarifies that all fees that are going to be charged receive consumer consent prior to commencement.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on about other flaws that are evidenced in this proposed bill, and there are clear problems with section 57.7, additional work, as well as 57.9(3), return of parts, among others. However, in the interest of time and seeing that I am entering the end of mine, it is important I talk about the section of warranty. Currently, government does not impose mandatory warranties, but if a repairer extends a warranty and does not provide what they promise, they would then be in violation of the Fair Trading Act, and action from the consumer could be taken against them. This proposed bill looks to create a mandatory 90-day, 5,000-kilometre parts and labour warranty on all repairs, including new and reconditioned parts. The repairer will also have to compensate the consumer for towing costs when the warranty is applicable. The consumer will be able to take the warranty repairs to another shop if deemed reasonable, and the original repairer will have to compensate the consumer. Suppliers under this proposed bill will be responsible to the repairers for, quote, retail warranty reimbursement amounts.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the intent of the bill is to protect the consumer. I get that, and I agree with this notion in principle, but there are many complicated issues that contribute to the argument that the application of these laws in practice would be supremely detrimental. If we look at the current situation – we’ll take the example of a new vehicle manufacturer’s replacement parts, new or reconditioned. These parts are warrantied for, in most cases, two years. With unlimited kilometres, parts, and labour included, it is necessary to put an additional layer of red tape on this that would yield no positive results. Again, illogical. When other types of parts are used, whether they be used parts or jobber parts from other jurisdictions, it becomes vastly more complicated. There is already an element of risk for the consumer using, quote, used parts, and a judgment call is made by the consumer when balancing against the price. By putting arbitrary warranties across the board on these parts, we may in fact sacrifice safety of the consumer as more and more used parts are put back into service under perceived safety and warranty. Furthermore, how do we enforce compliance on warranties of parts that are made and constructed on other continents – again, something that is completely illogical – when their warranties are only good, for example, for 30 days?

Mr. Speaker, until more public consultation and industry input is considered, I believe that the future of this proposed Bill 203 is indeed very bleak. It would have widely felt negative repercussions that the member has clearly not anticipated, and I cannot support this bill in its present form.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am here to speak in support of this motion. I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has done some great work on this bill consulting with various organizations. I’d also like to thank the various members of some of those organizations that are here today. He has been going out and listening to feedback throughout this bill process, and his goal is to strengthen and improve the current regulations as set out in the Fair Trading Act and the automotive business regulations.

Now, as some of you may know, I have a mechanical background. I am both a car enthusiast and have worked in the industry. I just wanted to point out for some of the guests here who are mechanics as well that at this particular stage of the legislation we cannot do amendments. We are here just to speak on our thoughts of the bill.

Now, with that in mind, one of the goals of this is for peace of mind for the consumers. When a customer comes into a shop that is reputable, the customer is paying for the expertise of those mechanics or heavy-duty mechanic, whoever it may be, to solve the particular issue they are having with their car or whatever mechanical difficulties they may be having, in a quick and cost-effective way. That is the difference between a do-it-yourself mechanic, who may enjoy doing that in their driveway but would take a long period of time or may not have the resources to properly diagnose the problem. It is important that customers feel confident that the advice they’re getting from their mechanics about what the problem is is there for the customer.

However, when I worked in the industry, I know it annoyed me and my co-workers when we heard from customers of shops that were not being honest, stories of consumers who’ve gone to a shop, for example, had something wrong with their car that, to somebody who was a mechanic, had a very simple solution that should have been solved in a short period of time, and our friend comes back to us and says: oh, I took it in for an oil change, and they told me that there was a problem with my starter and some, you know, large amount of money later I also have a new rear axle in my car.

Now, stuff like that was annoying because it hurts the trust of the industry. For example, the Better Business Bureau: the list of their top 10 complaints actually goes toward automotive repair shops. Now, one of the other members brought up AMVIC and the complaints they had, and I don’t at all dispute that number. However, I would think that the general public often thinks of the Better Business Bureau first when they think of complaints as they result to the automotive business.

Now, this is not at all to knock on the integrity of good shops out there. As an automotive enthusiast I will be the first person to sing the praises of a shop. I can think off the top of my head of transmission shops, custom car shops, muffler repair, brake repair, and tire shops that I would not hesitate in a second to send any member of this House to should they happen to have car, brake, transmission, exhaust related issues in their car if they happened to be visiting Calgary-Currie.

What this law strikes to do is to normalize best practices. We've heard a lot of talk on the bill about estimates for repair. I will note that in the very first line of this bill it quotes "estimate" as meaning "an estimate of the total cost of the work to be performed on and repairs to be done to the motor vehicle being repaired." There was some concern from another member that perhaps that left too broad a definition about diagnostics. My interpretation of the word "estimate" is that it's indeed that, an estimate for the cost of repair.

In my experience in the shop I worked at, an estimate for repair usually came after some sort of diagnostic work, once we had an idea, potentially, from the service writer. Usually that's what I do, report to the service writer and say that I think this is wrong with said person's car or industrial engine, which was the field I worked in. They would go to the customer and provide an estimate of repair. It's going to cost X amount of dollars because your starter is gone, and that's the problem. That is normal, and that normally comes after some diagnostics.

If we had a situation where somebody came in and, frankly, it's not obvious what the problem is — as mechanics we've all had situations where somebody comes in and they're missing a driveshaft or their brake rotors are ground down to practically the venting fins, where the diagnostic work is: "Hey, look. It's broken. We know what the problem is." So it's easy to do an estimate. But when we have situations where, you know, perhaps it's a whistling sound, a ticking sound, the proverbial "it doesn't feel right," it makes sense that a diagnostic would have to take place that would take a meaningful period of time. It is true. As a mechanic I myself own several diagnostic tools. I have several tens of thousands of dollars' worth of tools in my tool box from when I worked in that industry. Those diagnostic tools are important. In that case, you know, the best practice would be that you let the customer know that there are going to be some diagnostic costs. I don't believe that this bill would be counter to that normal practice.

Now, one of the other things that this bill seeks to do is to have some signage in the shops so that those particular customers would know what their rights are. Often for most people who are coming to a repair shop, mechanics is not their specialty, so it is important to have that there so the customers are aware.

I'm going to go with another story about the importance of estimates. As somebody who, like I said, is a car enthusiast, I've had experiences where when I've gone out to a shop, it is always worth while for me, especially when I was new — I may have an expensive repair. I'd often ask the shop, "Hey, my budget to fix this is going to be this. I am fine with you taking a look at it, having a diagnostic, but if it's going to go over a certain price, that is just outside of the range of my budget for that particular car," especially when the car is older and more used and it may not be worth it to do an extensive repair on that. That is perfectly reasonable.

Again, going back to that idea that there are some shops that would take advantage of somebody by not giving an estimate, not letting them know how much it's going to cost because they think, "Oh, that $600 repair for front CV joints on a Honda Civic is going to be no big deal for that customer," well, for that customer, depending on their budget, that may be a lot of money. It is important that the customers have those estimates. Frankly, to go back to a point I made earlier, it annoyed me when shops would take advantage of somebody like that by not providing an estimate or giving an idea to that customer about what it would cost. Frankly, that makes other mechanics look bad. It's about helping customers understand what they are getting into for their repair.

I'm going to read a bit of a quote here about this bill. The AMA, for example, said that the move to pass Bill 203 is a step in the right direction, according to motor vehicle association Senior Policy Analyst Scott Wilson.

It's an appropriate direction and echoes some of the provisions in other jurisdictions, which is what I think they were trying to achieve . . . I think anytime you can provide a consumer with a little more certainty around a transaction at a collision repair facility, it's a good thing.

The hon. member, I believe, is sincere in his desire to carry forward a good bill that protects customers and protects mechanics.

I'm going to give you another story from when I was a mechanic. I was working on an engine. It was going to be a very simple repair. It was going to be adjusting valves. Unfortunately, for whatever reason, somebody else working on the engine had abnormally tightened down some bolts on the valve cover, and when I went to remove the valve cover, which should have been a simple job, I ended up snapping off a couple of them, which means that I turned a very simple repair job into a very long repair job. I'm sure the mechanics in the gallery right now can all relate to a story where they've had a repair job that's just not their day. That's what happens sometimes. So, of course, when I went back to the service writer at my shop, they went to me and gave me the: so, why did this take an extremely long period of time? I had to explain to them what happened. Of course, while I was doing this, the customer was calling, wondering where their engine was, why it wasn't ready, and why it was taking us an abnormally long amount of time to get it done. [Mr. Malkinson's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: Hon. member . . .

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

The Speaker: I was waiting with bated breath as to whether it would start.

The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to remind the member across, you're not the only mechanic in the room. Forty-five years ago I was licensed as a mechanic. I spent five years in the trade, so I know a little bit about it. Long before diagnostic equipment was available, it was much more of a manual process. [interjections] We even had running water.

Anyway, I rise today to speak against Bill 203. That I'm disappointed to have to rise to speak against this bill would be an understatement. I would have liked to have risen today to speak in support of a comprehensive jobs plan, a jobs plan that lowers small-business taxes, reduces needless government red tape, increases apprenticeship usage on government projects, empowers local economic development, reduces WCB premiums, and stops the NDP carbon tax. But, hey. Instead, I'm forced to stand opposed to a bill that would be more appropriately entitled the Needlessly Redundant Solution in Search of a Problem Act.

If my hon. colleague across the aisle had done a modicum of research before introducing this ill-conceived and needless bill, he would have found that the existing Fair Trading Act already protects consumers from the issues raised in Bill 203. Where the Fair Trading Act falls short, the automotive business regulation covers specific consumer protection concerns related to the automotive industry. Section 12 of the automotive business regulation lays out an extensive code of conduct, rendering Bill 203 needlessly redundant.

Bill 203 proposes to protect consumers from incurring charges for "work or repairs for which an estimate was given, an amount that exceeds the estimate by more than 10 per cent.” The Fair Trading Act, in section 6(2)(e), already does this. In fact, I’d argue, it does it better. Section 6(2)(e) protects consumers from incurring charges for goods or services that are more than 10 per cent, to a maximum of $100, higher than the estimate given unless the consumer has expressly consented to the higher price before the goods or services are supplied or the consumer and the supplier agree to an amended estimate.

Bill 203 promises to protect consumers by legislating that any parts removed in the course of work or repairs shall be returned to the customer unless advised by the consumer that they do not want the parts returned. The hon. member opposite should have taken the time to read the automotive business regulation before proposing Bill 203. They would have found that under section 12(n) automotive repair shops must offer to return all parts removed from the vehicle in the course of work or repairs to the consumer unless advised by the consumer that they do not require the parts returned. Now, to be fair, Bill 203 is broader in its scope and requires parts to be returned to the consumer to be kept separate from any other vehicles being repaired and that the parts be returned to the consumer in a clean container.

The independent automobile repair shops and the dealers’ association last year had over 8.8 million automotive repairs that were completed. Of those 8.8 million, only 296 resulted in complaints being filed. Of those 296 complaints, only 125 were deemed to be in need of further investigation. Of those 125, only one resulted in further action being taken. That means that just over three one-thousandths of a per cent of repairs resulted in complaints being filed. I find it very hard to imagine that of those 296 complaints, any of them were because the repair shops stored the parts too close to other vehicles or they returned the parts in a dirty container. It could be funny if it wasn’t so absurd.

Bill 203 mandates that repair shops cannot charge a fee for an estimate unless the customer or the consumer is advised that a fee will be charged. I think we can all agree that this is pretty reasonable. It’s a reasonable requirement, and it’s a wonder it took so long before it was included in our consumer protection legislation although – wait a minute. Hold on. There’s more. That requirement is already included in the Fair Trading Act in section 6(2)(f). It already prohibits a company from charging a fee for the estimate unless the consumer is informed in advance that a fee will be charged, has expressly consented to be charged the fee. Not only is Bill 203 redundant in this requirement; it doesn’t even mandate a repair shop to disclose the estimated cost.

Bill 203 proposes to amend the Fair Trading Act to be explicitly and needlessly repetitive. The automotive business regulation and the Fair Trading Act already include sufficient, broad consumer protection to the point that they include almost identical protections to what this bill would amend in some cases. The few abuses that do take place under existing legislation and regulation could be far more effectively addressed by educating consumers than by introducing this needless redundant legislation.

In fact, the government already has an agency responsible for this. The Alberta Motor Vehicle Industry Council, AMVIC, was established in 1999 with a mandate “to provide consumer protection in Alberta’s motor vehicle industry through mandatory . . . licensing for motor vehicle businesses and salespeople” and “to provide a fair marketplace for both [automotive] consumers and businesses.” Furthermore, it defines that its mission is “to protect the public interest and promote trust and confidence in the motor vehicle industry through heightened awareness and the fostering of a positive exchange of information among industry stakeholders.” If the hon. member opposite feels that AMVIC has failed to adequately protect Alberta automotive consumers, then they should have proposed a bill that addresses that issue, not propose needless, redundant legislation.

It’s become apparent that this government has not learned the importance of consultation. If there had been consultations, we wouldn’t be here wasting time debating a bill that has no support from industry stakeholders and does nothing but repeat what is already established in current customer protection legislation.

Now, I’ve met thousands of Albertans since being elected, and though my memory isn’t what it once was, I can assure you that not a single person I’ve spoken to has told me that we should be focusing on eliminating dirty automotive parts containers. Let’s say for a moment that this poorly conceived bill is passed. What is the government’s plan for enforcing these new, unnecessary measures? Can we expect the government to create a clean-container brigade that travels the province ensuring that repair shops return used parts in clean containers? To be fair to my hon. colleague across the aisle, the establishment of a clean-container brigade would result in the creation of more jobs than the government’s recently cancelled failed jobs plan, which created zero jobs.

The last thing Alberta businesses need right now is more red tape and more regulation. Albertans are already hurting from the NDP’s hikes on taxes and the minimum wage. Albertans are looking for a government that will stand up for them where it matters, not one that tries to reintroduce protections that already exist. Do not do that.

According to the government’s own website the unemployment rate in Alberta is now 7.9 per cent. For the first time in 27 years Alberta’s unemployment rate is higher than the national average. Since this government took office last year, unemployment has increased 34 per cent. It is estimated that nearly 100,000 Albertans have lost their jobs. That is 100,000 families that have experienced the devastation of loss of employment. According to StatsCan the average size of an Albertan household is 2.6 persons. That means that approximately 260,000 Albertans have already been directly impacted by job losses. We have nearly 100,000 Albertans out of work, more being laid off every day. Albertan families are struggling. The average Albertan has seen their personal debt increase to a staggering $27,000. Alberta’s three-month delinquency rate shot up over 13 per cent. The food banks are running out of food, usage has increased 23 per cent, and the shelters are at capacity.

Merriam-Webster’s dictionary defines a crisis as “a difficult or dangerous situation that needs serious attention.” If Alberta’s current economic situation doesn’t fit the definition of crisis, I’m not sure what really does. Albertans are looking to Edmonton for reassurance. Instead, what do they see? Debate on a needless and redundant piece of legislation that mandates that automotive repair parts be returned to the customer in clean containers. We can do better. We must do better.

For these reasons, I oppose this bill in second reading, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill, and I do so for several reasons. The first, of course, is that I believe that every single Albertan should be protected as a consumer.

Now, you’ve heard me speak to other bills, and I usually provide a personal anecdote or something about one of my constituents. I was living in Ottawa in January 2010 when I found myself in need of a new vehicle. I purchased a Volkswagen Golf TDI, which met my requirements for a vehicle: environmentally friendly, good gas mileage, heated seats for the winter, air conditioning for the summer, big enough for four people to sit comfortably, big enough for four sets of golf clubs, a roof rack to pack luggage for four golfers, and solid feeling when I'm driving on the road. Now, the golf is because that's what I do to keep myself healthy.

When I came to Lethbridge, I went to Lethbridge Volkswagen, the dealership in Lethbridge, and they looked after me and my vehicle. Yes, my vehicle was one of those vehicles that was identified with the emissions problem. As soon as the problem was identified, I received a letter from Volkswagen, and I received a phone call from either Mike or Craig – I can't remember which one it was – to advise me of the problem and to assure me that the company, in particular the dealership in Lethbridge, would walk me through the problem and that once the fix was identified, my car would be in and be fixed. I received some compensation, and I received regular updates from Mike and Craig.

Now, I came to need a new vehicle because my previous vehicle, which I had bought privately, was just a couple of years old, was in good shape, and had low mileage. I saw a mechanic when I bought it here in Edmonton, and he did a great job for me. Then when I moved to Ottawa, I had to find another mechanic. I did not have great luck. I went to a shop that looked after the make of vehicle that I had. At least, they advertised that they did. The first time I went – I brought it in for my spring checkup and to get my tires changed – it seemed like they did a good job. The second time I went was in the fall, and they told me that my brake pads needed replacement. That was done.

Very shortly after there seemed to be a clicking noise. I was having some difficulty with the car starting. I went back, and they told me that it was an alternator. I got that fixed. A few months later it was something else. Within a year and a half I had to get my brake pads replaced again. I asked if there was a warranty on the brake pads, and they said that they wore out more quickly because my wheels were out of alignment. Now, I couldn't figure out why they were out of alignment because I would have thought that when they fixed the brakes, they also would have made sure that the tires were aligned.

So the story went on, and I spent $2,000 to replace the brakes. Within two months the brakes failed, and I was advised that the warranty was only for 30 days because it was an older-model car.

Now, my car didn't drive in the wintertime when I was in Ottawa because I had a transit pass. It came out occasionally on the weekends, when I went to get groceries or had some errands to run. It took me to play golf in the summertime, but that was it. I didn't put very many miles on it, and I couldn't figure it out. I looked after this car. It just shouldn't be falling apart the way it was. So I thought: every time I get something fixed, something else seems to break. That's when I bought my Volkswagen. I talked to the mechanics at the Volkswagen dealership in Ottawa where I bought it, and I brought in the invoices for the work that I'd had done on my old car. They looked at it, and they kind of shook their heads, and they said to me, "I think you might have been scammed," but they weren't going to go to court with me on it.

Now, I didn't file a complaint, but I did talk to lots of friends, and I found out that this company, in fact, had done similar things with their vehicles. So even though it was mentioned across the way by the opposition that there weren't many complaints, it's probably because there were lots of people like me, who didn't go and file a formal complaint on it. I did talk to my friends, and I complained a lot about it, and I did pass the word on that I would never go back to that shop to have any work done on a vehicle again.

I'm pretty happy with my guys Mike and Craig. They always take the time to explain what needs to be done and any future concerns that there might be.

Now, I'm not a mechanic, but before I got my licence, my dad made sure that I knew how to change a tire and how to change the oil. My younger siblings actually got to learn how to change the engine, but he didn't do that with me.

I believe that this bill is about consumer protection. I urge you to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand to talk about this bill. I'll acknowledge that I'm sure the hon. member that put it forward has good intentions. But what I hear from people in the automotive industry, to be plain about it, is that it's kind of a Seinfeld bill. It's a bill about nothing. What I mean by that is that while what's in there seems to make sense, where it becomes a bill about nothing, as has been pointed out by a couple of people here, is that most of what's in there has already been done. It's already in the consumer protection legislation. So what we're contemplating doing is redoing something that's already done. You know, it's a little troubling here.

Here's an excerpt of something that a constituent of mine that owns an automotive shop said for my edification, but I'll read it for the House.

Alberta is the only province in Canada that utilizes a regulatory body such as AMVIC (which works under the arm of Service Alberta) ...

I'll come back to that when I'm finished.

... to monitor and mediate repair services under the ...

Wait for it.

... Fair Trading Act. To operate an automotive repair facility legally in Alberta you must have an AMVIC license and you must renew it each year. The money we as automotive shop owners pay to AMVIC is used to police our industry and protect the consumer. We are extremely fortunate to have AMVIC in our Province of Alberta and I feel Bill 203 does a huge disservice to the men and women on the AMVIC Board of Directors and the AMVIC Society Members.

There is always room for improvement but this Bill 203 has many flaws and it needs to consult with industry members to resolve them.

Wait for this.

Why not work with people that understand how the repair industry works, understands the terminology that is used in the industry, understands how warranty works and understands the difference between authorizations, estimates, and diagnostics.

I am all in favour of creating a better industry that protects both the consumer as well as the repair facility but let's involve the people and associations that understand the automotive industry. This is not something that can be done quickly but should be given the time to properly refine the legislation.

Thank you ... for taking the time to read this ...

Et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Speaker, I guess I would say that the mover, the sponsor of the bill might want to take a little bit of time to read the Fair Trading Act to find the sections that are extremely similar to what's in this act.

I would also suggest politely to the mover that they might want to talk to the AMVIC representatives to find where they're at. Just to make it a shorter trip, I would respectfully suggest that the hon. member talk to the Minister of Service Alberta, under which the Fair Trading Act resides, and maybe find out how much of what's being presented today is already there and how little of it is actually new. However, in the spirit of my constituent, who's in the automotive business, that sent it, what they did say – and I'll repeat it because I think that it's important – is: why not talk to industry members? There are probably some things that can be improved.

Mr. Speaker, I guess what I would say is that if the hon. member and his government colleagues could consent at some point to sending this to committee so he could invite industry members in, we could probably pull some value out of this bill. You know what? I would suggest that you do that. As a member of this House who's not on the front bench of government, in other words not a minister – I'm not one; you're not one – we don't get bills that often. We have to wait till our name gets drawn, so it means a lot more if you can have a bill go forward that actually makes Alberta better. There's still time for this one. There's still time, if this one went to committee, to go and search for those things that would be improvements on what's already happening. We could probably get advice from the industry. We could probably get advice for the minister who's in charge of the Fair Trading Act, the Service Alberta minister, and probably make something out of this inauspicious beginning. As I said, it's not too late.

Now, I appreciate that not everybody here in this room has been in Alberta that long and that some may not have driven for that long, but the fact is that there are a lot of people around in Alberta that have been here a long time and there are a lot of people that have driven a long time and there are a lot of people in the automotive industry whom we could get excellent advice from. So my polite suggestion is to get some of that excellent advice, that's probably very easily obtainable, and let's do it together. If we did it in committee, we could probably still make this into a bill that could improve Alberta without duplicating what Alberta businesses are already required to pay for by provincial legislation. We might actually be able to then, at the end of the day, if we go through this process, feel good about having made Alberta better when we're finished.

I'll stop now with that encouragement to work together. Let's get to a place where this bill could actually improve what's already on the books now.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I spoke with one of my colleagues, sidebarred with him recently, who knows how the industry works, and he told me about how his story ended, so with bated breath I can finish that off. Ultimately, the Member for Calgary-Currie did tell me recently that they did explain to the customer what had happened and that they would not be facing any extra charges. Then, moving forward, however, he did indicate to me that it would only take one individual to tarnish a shop's reputation. It would only have taken one shop out of the hundreds that are in Calgary to ruin the reputation of those hundreds by unfairly charging the customer for their time because of that bad day.

You know, ultimately, when I hear that story, one thing that I'm always reflecting on is that sometimes these protections can also protect the business as well. Having two parties sign on to an agreement can help protect the shop from an individual who is wanting to pull a fast one on that shop, who is going to change their mind after this job has been completed.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, going on to serve my side of these experiences, I spoke with my father after this bill was introduced because my grandfather was an automotive mechanic in Calgary after he served as a soldier in World War II. One thing that he and his peers really tried to work hard to develop was a society in Calgary that would set guidelines and best practices for the industry as a whole because they did realize that it does take just one person to ruin the reputation of all parties and all players.

To kind of sidebar and to give an example of that, when I started managing a seafood restaurant out in Ottawa, before I moved back to Calgary, they told us a story about how entire seafood restaurant chains all across the city, no matter what brand they were, almost went under. It was because at the time Ontario didn't have sufficient regulations in place to protect individuals and to set guidelines for how seafood restaurants conducted themselves. Basically, the short end of it was that someone got sick from eating spoiled oysters. It was basically one big outbreak that happened in the city of Ottawa at one restaurant, and it almost made all the restaurants that serve seafood in Ottawa go under because people stopped eating seafood. While it isn't automotives, it is an example of how one bad seed can ruin the entire scope of things.

Now, we live in a capitalistic, free-market economy – it's how I made my living – and as legislators it's our responsibility to protect consumers. To kind of give some sort of examples of legislation that came from the previous federal government to protect consumers, we saw the Harper government move for more transparent ticket sales by companies like Ticketmaster. They mandated that credit card companies show how long, if you paid the minimal payments, it would take for you to pay off that credit card. They mandated that airline companies could not provide hidden fees. They basically set a system in place to make sure that our industries were more transparent. So it is our responsibility as legislators to make sure that we provide as transparent a market as possible.

Now, in reflecting on my grandfather's scenario, he was a mechanic, and my grandfather Sucha, rest his soul, passed away. Subsequently my grandmother did not know a lot about cars because my grandfather always dealt with them. There was one time when my grandmother took her car in for routine service, and sadly it was one of those bad shops, one of the very few in Calgary, and they scammed her. They basically added new tires, which she didn't ask for, and then billed her for it. At the time my uncle and my father were not available to back her up on this, so at risk of not having her car, which she needed, she paid for it. She was on a fixed income, and this was very harsh on her. So, sadly, this one shop could potentially, as my grandmother shares this story, probably not even knowing the name of the shop anymore, ruin the reputation of an entire industry.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Ultimately, you know, we're all trying to find a more transparent way of ensuring that industry can help conduct itself. Reflecting back to even myself as a restaurant manager, some of the systems that we had in place to ensure that we were transparent – and this was mandated by the AGLC – were that we had to post and provide costs for every single amount of liquor and provide the ounce quantity for it so that, at the end of the day, we couldn't pull a fast one on our consumers. This was every restaurant, and if we didn't do it, we would pay penalties.

Ultimately, we want to ensure that we provide our industry players with the tools they need to be successful so that they do not have one small player ruining their reputation. That is why I am going to be supporting this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak against Bill 203. You know, when I reflect on the folks here who've joined us in the gallery and the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw and his comments talking about how essentially one bad apple spoils the bunch – I think what happens is that if someone gets a bad deal at one particular dealership or repair shop, they don't go back to that repair shop. They tell everyone about that particular repair shop, and everyone knows about that. It's not that you never go and get your car serviced anywhere else ever again. I can assure you that the people who are here in this gallery today as well as many others understand that fully. That is the nature of a market-based system, and I think it's one that we need to be very mindful in this House not to overlegislate.

I have many concerns about this bill, many of which my hon. colleagues have already spoken to. One of the things that I worry about when we come to this place is that sometimes we legislate. In fact, we often legislate; sometimes we overlegislate. The question I always challenge my staff with, my remarkable, tremendous staff, who support this big machine called the Alberta Party caucus . . . [interjections] It's quite an operation. I ask this question every single day: what problem are we trying to solve, and what's the right thing for Albertans?

The Member for Calgary-West brought up quite a remarkable statistic, that of 5 million possible repair jobs, 45 of them had complaints. That is 0.000009 – that's five zeroes – per cent of the time. The only thing that happens less often is a pipeline rupture. I have a real concern that this fixes a problem that doesn't exist, that is already covered by existing legislation, and that we're piling legislation one on top of the other.

You know, it makes me wonder. Of course, we need rules. I don't think anyone is suggesting that we have no rules. We need rules. Perhaps we can tweak those rules or improve them, but we have those rules. At some point we're going to have so many rules that all we do is follow rules and we never actually get any work done, and that's not helping anyone.

So I encourage my colleagues on all sides, on both sides of the House, to think critically about this bill as I think we ought to think critically about every bill but no more so than about private members' bills. All of us in this Assembly, barring the few members from the front bench who've joined us today, are private members of equal standing in this Legislative Assembly.

We can vote how we please on these bills, and I encourage each one of you to think very hard for yourselves on how you consider this bill. Ask yourself well and truly if you feel we're actually solving a problem here. I think it will be a great day in this Assembly when on private members' business there's perhaps a little bit of interplay, perhaps an opportunity for one or more members, in particular the government caucus, to say: "You know, maybe this doesn't actually make sense. I know it's my colleague that brought this up." I will be the first one to rise and praise you for doing so because you stood up for what you think is right, what you think is in the best interests of your constituents, and what you think is in the best interests of this province.

I'm going to talk now about some of the specific concerns I have with the bill, many of which have been raised here today. What I'm going to start with is concerns of unintended consequences, so let's take section 57.11(1), which talks about the 90-day warranty. Many parts only come with a 30-day manufacturer's warranty, so what you may find is that repair shops no longer stock parts that only have a 30-day warranty. What that means is that the parts they stock will be more expensive. This is not a zero-sum game. Somebody has to pay, and that somebody is the consumers of the province of Alberta. If people choose a cheaper part, that comes with a lower warranty. This section, 57.11(1), makes it less affordable for Albertans. That's the net effect of this. That's not helping Albertans.

The Member for Highwood talked about the Fair Trading Act, section 6, unfair practices, and section 12, the automotive business regulation general rules of conduct. The requirement for authorization, section 57.4, already exists in the Fair Trading Act. This is not new. This is again a very clear example of solving a problem that doesn't exist.

I want to come back to a point the Member for Calgary-Hays made, which I couldn't agree with more, and that is that I don't question that the member who's brought this forward is doing so from the best of intentions. I believe that absolutely this comes from a good place. I believe this comes from a place of wanting to help people. Perhaps a constituent has come into your office, written you a letter, visited your office, and raised a question and said: this happened to me, and it's a problem. That's entirely possible, but we have to look at the numbers. We have to look at the data. I'm sure you want to protect people, but until I see compelling data and evidence to the contrary, that this is in fact a problem that is rampant and not something that happens only on an occasional basis, not something that isn't already addressed through existing legislation in force and in place in the province, I simply cannot support it.

If we look at sections 57.6 and 57.7, the term "in writing": what does that mean? Does that mean that you need to leave your job, take a cab back to the repair shop, that you need to sign something, physically go back to do it? Can you give authorization over the phone? What happens if you do that and there's a dispute later? Who's at fault there? How does that work? Again, these are provisions that, broadly speaking, are already covered in the Fair Trading Act. What we're doing is not only making it more cumbersome for the repair shop and the business owners, those individual, very often small-business owners, entrepreneurs who run their own shops on a tight budget but who have perhaps struck out on their own and taken some entrepreneurial risk. We're also making it more cumbersome for the consumer as well. All of this takes time, and time costs money, so ultimately we make car repair less accessible and less affordable for the people of Alberta.

I will just try to jump ahead here to parts that have not already been spoken about. Section 57.11(9), talking about subcontractors. My understanding of the industry vernacular is "sublet," not necessarily "subcontract," but regardless, by involving the customer in that process, again we're perhaps burdening customers with more work or more risk or exposure than otherwise they may have had, again making things more complicated for consumers than perhaps they are currently.

In conclusion, I will say, then, that although I think the bill is well intentioned – I don't question that it comes from a good place – I think it tries to solve a problem that either doesn't exist or it doesn't exist broadly enough for us in this House to be passing legislation about it. It raises costs for consumers. It puts more laws on the books than are necessary because we've already got laws that cover this. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot support Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you. It's like my mom's in the room, with that kind of reception.

It's an absolute pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 203, Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016. I think we've heard a number of very, very good points this afternoon on the need for input from important stakeholder groups, the fact that there are some conflicting pieces of legislation, that perhaps there are already adequate protections. I know that the member opposite has moved this piece of legislation with the intention of trying to assist constituents and all Albertans.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you'll be quite familiar with my rising from time to time and speaking about the importance of committee, so it's my delight to rise today and propose, as the Member for Calgary-Hays and some other members on this side of the House mentioned, that we move an amendment that would in fact result in this piece of legislation being studied at committee and allow expert testimony and witness.

I have the appropriate number of copies. Do you mind if I continue with the amendment?

The Speaker: Please proceed as it's being distributed.

Mr. Cooper: I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 203, Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 203, Fair Trading (Motor Vehicle Repair Pricing Protection for Consumers) Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

Now, I know that we in this House all have some history together on referring bills 203 to committee; I know that at the end of the day we got there with the Member for Drumheller-Stettler's bill. It, in fact, was referred to committee and the subject matter studied there. It's my hope that all members of the Assembly will do that this afternoon.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that, and thank you to the hon. member for introducing this particular bill. I want to commend the hon. member for working diligently to prepare a piece of legislation and his clear desire to protect consumers, to make sure that people get treated fairly. I think this is a very important principle, and I want to stand in support of the principle of this bill, which is what second reading is about. It's to talk about the principles of the bill. I think that this is, in fact, something that we should be concerned about here. We need to be considering how people are dealt with to make sure that they are dealt with fairly.

I take the other points that have been made with respect to maintaining the reputation of the industry. I know that the vast majority of members of this industry treat people fairly, try to get the vehicles back on the road or maintain the vehicles at a fair price, and that they're diligent and so on.

A number of things have been raised with respect to this bill, and I think that it's a good bill. I think that there may be an opportunity to hear from members of the industry – a number of them are present here today – and to gather their input and find ways to improve the bill in its specific clauses, which is the role of committee. We have Committee of the Whole or, as the hon. Opposition House Leader has indicated, we have the opportunity to refer a bill to a standing committee, which provides a little more flexibility. It allows the committee, if it wishes, to hear from the public or to hear from stakeholders that may be affected by the bill and to make amendments that could improve the bill.

4:40

I think that that's probably something that we should do in this case, and I want to just indicate to all hon. members that I would encourage them to support the referral motion that has been moved by the hon. House leader of the Official Opposition. I think it's a good bill, and I think that with further input we can make it a better bill, and we can work together in this House to provide improved legislation to further the interests of the public and the industry. I would urge all hon. members to support this motion, and I look forward to the opportunity for members of the industry and members of the public to come forward and help us improve the bill and to work together with all members on all sides on that committee to do the right thing for consumers, to do the right thing for the industry, and produce a bill that actually will strengthen consumer protection and, at the same time, take into account the complexities of the industry, make sure that we are not creating any unintended consequences as a result of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'll take my seat. Hopefully, there are other speakers. We at 5 o'clock go to private members' motions, so I would encourage people to talk until then.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

We are speaking to an amendment on Bill 203, referring it to committee. The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, always wanting to co-operate with and accommodate the Government House Leader whenever I get a chance, I'm pleased to be on my feet, Mr. Speaker. Every morning I get up and say to myself: what can I do today to make the Government House Leader's life better? Today I am presented with an opportunity. Let me say that it's a happy occasion that I get to try to accommodate the Government House Leader today, and I appreciate his stated willingness to support moving this to committee.

As I tried to say in my earlier remarks, I think there genuinely is an opportunity for all of us here to improve this bill, to make it something that the hon. member who moved it, when it's all done through the legislative sausage-making process – if we all work together, which we can, and I think that there's perhaps a spirit in the House to do that, we could actually make something that we could all be proud of, including the mover.

When you get an opportunity like this – and I see here in the gallery that we even have members of industry willing to take the time out of their lives and their business to participate, to contribute, to share their expertise with those of us that may have less than them – then I think we should take that opportunity to hear from them. I also think that when we get a chance to work in a bit of a multipartisan way on something that could make a positive difference for Albertans, that's a good opportunity as well.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the process. You know, this can be a crazy place, but every once in a while you get to do something where, when you're finished, you can say: we did the right thing for the right reasons, we did it together, and we did it for the benefit of Albertans. I think we may well be heading for one of those instances here.

On that basis, I will sit down, but before I do, I will just state, to be perfectly clear, that I have every intention of supporting this amendment because I think, again, that it's the right thing to do for the right reason. I'm grateful for the Government House Leader's indication that they may well support this as well as my colleagues in the PC Party and the other opposition colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity, and I'm finished talking for now.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I'm understanding that the definition of luck is when opportunity meets circumstance.

Other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in support of the amendment. I think that it makes sense to engage more people like the experts that are up in our gallery. I had that wonderful opportunity. My community is great because I have people that have learned that they can reach out to me and talk to me about legislation that is proposed. A gentleman by the name of Frank Garritsen called me, and he knew that I would be able to come down and speak to the owner of Heartland Ford. As a side note, I have their cards in my pocket. I'm happy to talk about the fact that they are happy and willing to talk about legislation that comes from other parts of the country, about this very legislation. The owner, Kelly O'Connell, sees the intent to work on consumer protection for people. He knows that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark wants to do what's best for his constituents.

I think that once you start to engage these people – you know, these people sit on national-level boards and work with other provinces, so they have a real clear understanding of what needs to be looked at and what could be amended and what can be accepted. I think that there are good things in here that we could adopt, things like putting signs up in repair shops to understand what it is. I know that for dealerships, repair shops are hugely important to their industry. It's something that keeps them working with their customers. It's good customer service. It maintains relationships so that the next time you need a new vehicle, you go to the dealership where you know the owner and you know your salespeople and you know that you have good repair people that you can depend on.

I'm really happy that this amendment has come forward. I am glad that the Government House Leader is supporting it, and I intend to do the same. I hope that everyone in the House supports it as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is good when the Legislature is like this, and it's great to be a part of speaking to it. Some thanks, I think, are in order to the member for bringing forward the bill and certainly to the Government House Leader for his eloquent words and to the government caucus and all private members who have indicated that they will support this.

What I like about this idea, what I like about sending it to committee, is that it is an opportunity to quantify the problem we're trying to solve and to truly understand the scope and scale of the challenge that we're trying to solve. Is it a big problem? Is it not a big problem? Are there aspects of it that deserve more attention than others? I think that's always – always – a worthwhile exercise and in this case, I think, absolutely needed based on some of the feedback that I've heard from industry stakeholders.

Of course, we always want to make sure we're looking out for Albertans and consumers and identify any gaps that may exist in the Fair Trading Act or other legislation to make sure that what we pass in this House is appropriate and not simply piling onto other legislation that may already exist. But if there are gaps or things that need to be addressed, that's a wonderful opportunity for us to do that, to simultaneously ensure consumer protection, which, of course, has to be a big focus for us here in this House, but also to enable the continued viable and vibrant business operations for repair shop owners so that more people can choose to go into that line of business and do so knowing that the rules they need to follow are reasonable and appropriate and do not overburden them simply with bureaucracy and administration for its own sake.

I'm pleased, absolutely, to support the motion to move it to committee, and I certainly encourage others to support it as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A pleasure to rise to speak to the amendment. I can support sending this to the committee. As I was listening to the debate earlier, if there's a message that I could convey to that committee as they're talking about how to strengthen this bill, that the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has brought forward, and in the good spirit of making sure that we're putting together the best legislation we could, I did hear a couple of comments from the other side. You know, based on the number of repairs that we've seen and how many complaints have come forward and how many were actually dealt with and even quantifying as much as a percentage of, well, .0000, however many other zeros, those that were actually affected, I would hope that we would not think about minimizing those people's experiences when we're trying to create the best bill that we can. When you're not in that percentage, it might not necessarily be a big deal, but if you happen to have fallen into that .0000, or whatever, percentage, it could mean a substantial amount of dollar figures for them, which could present hardships. So I would certainly encourage that.

Again, I will support this to move it into the committee but that those committee members try not to use that kind of line of thinking as they're amending that motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to also rise in favour of the amendment sending this bill to committee. I was greatly impressed by the attendance in the gallery and the representation made by members of the industry who sought to gain the ear of government and by the mover of this bill to seek further input and improve the legislation, and I welcome the opportunity to do so by sending it to committee. I don't think that there's a member of this Legislature who does not have an automotive business repair shop in their riding. I myself have three, and I think that all three of those businesses have strong, positive reputations and, by and large, serve their customers well.

The bill itself, of course, is a consumer protection measure. There are issues of consumer protection which we should all be concerned about, but I think we can all agree that with the amount of time and energy spent by industry members to come here today and make representations to us, talking about their concerns with the bill, that should be respected and considered during time spent in committee debate. I look forward to hearing their concerns once the bill reaches committee should the amendment be passed.

Thank you.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to agree with my friends from across the way and suggest that this bill be referred to a committee. I have a lot of repair shops in my own riding, and I haven't had the time to speak to all of them about this bill, so I am delighted at the motion that was made by my friend from across the way, and I suggest that we all support the amendment and refer the bill to committee.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Other parties who wish to speak to the amendment to the motion? Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm sorry that I had to step away from the House for a moment, but this amendment certainly falls in line with consultation. Of course, consultation with stakeholders is vitally important to any sort of success with a bill or an operation, and certainly I'm proud to stand up and support this amendment. It is wonderful that we can work as legislators in a co-operative manner, both as opposition as well as government and opposition, to ensure that we come up with a bill that is certainly best suited for all involved, all stakeholders and all consumers, and certainly that will be in addition to my message going on to this committee as well.

I agree with one of the hon. members on the other side in that we certainly do not want to minimize anyone in regard to being a victim of any sort whatsoever, but I think it is vitally important that we come up with a solution, or that at least the committee comes up with a solution, that will certainly be in the best interests of all Albertans and all stakeholders involved.

I certainly support this amendment, and I thank you for your time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on the motion for amendment, are there any other members who would like to speak to the referral to committee?

[Motion on amendment carried]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent to call it 5 o'clock and move to Motions Other than Government Motions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Motions Other than Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Prescription Drug Costs for Seniors

503. Ms Kazim moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to consider measures that would further lower the cost of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors to ease their financial burden and reduce their health care costs.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to the issue of mitigating the cost of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors. As Albertans face the challenges resulting from the current economic situation, I remain proud to be part of a government that has maintained its commitment to ease the financial burden of low-income seniors and reduce the overall expenditures of our health care system. Mitigating costs for prescription drugs is a step towards meeting these goals. Therefore, on behalf of my constituents of Calgary-Glenmore, who have shared their concerns regarding costs of medication, and specifically on behalf of Alberta's seniors population, who have spent decades contributing to the growth and prosperity of our province, it is my privilege to debate this motion today.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans along with the rest of Canadians are paying among the highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. In 2016 Canadians will fill over 500 million prescriptions, at a cost of $30 billion. Of this, approximately $6 billion is paid out of pocket by Canadians and $12 billion is paid through public drug plan coverage, for which Canadians are still paying deductibles and copayments. Among the larger provinces Alberta spends the second most on drug programs, next to Ontario.

Currently the Ministry of Health sponsors affordable drug and supplementary health plans for all Albertans, including plans for seniors. Government-sponsored programs cover approximately 20 per cent of Albertans, private employers or insurers cover 57 per cent, and federal programs cover approximately 3 per cent, leaving roughly 20 per cent of Albertans without coverage. This 20 per cent includes vulnerable Albertans and seniors, who need a government to stand up for them and their needs.

Under the government-sponsored coverage for seniors plan, drug coverage is available to Albertans 65 years of age and older. Seniors pay 30 per cent of their prescription costs, to a maximum of $25, regardless of income. While a $25 maximum copayment may seem low, I urge everyone to put themselves in the shoes of low-income seniors, whose only income is their pension or a low-wage job. Seniors in my constituency have told me that this is not affordable. This is a $25 max copayment for medication, and many seniors require multiple prescriptions to manage their health. Having costly and inaccessible prescription medication is having a very real and adverse effect on their quality of life.

To all those I have spoken to and to all Albertans who share this concern: I am standing up for you today. I want to remind you that our government is committed to improving the quality of care and overall well-being of our seniors, families, and communities. The fact is that high costs for critical prescription drugs is not the Alberta way. Albertans, especially low-income Albertans, should not be in the position where they choose between their medication and food or shelter, but evidence indicates that 1 in 10 Canadians does not take their prescribed medication because of costs.

A study completed by Dr. Braden Manns from the University of Calgary's Cumming School of Medicine indicated that up to 30 per cent of low-income seniors reported not taking their medication to treat chronic health issues due to costs. Given that medications prescribed to seniors are primarily used to treat chronic diseases and given that the costs associated with chronic diseases represent a high proportion of total health care costs, this motion represents our government's commitment towards rectifying past mistakes, promoting good governance, and being fiscally responsible to taxpayers.

I would like to remind all Members of the Legislative Assembly that seniors are not usually prescribed one or two medications. In Dr. Manns' study it was found that seniors typically take six to 10 different medications. Again, given that Canadians are paying more than most other countries for prescription drugs and given the cost of copayments for those who are covered under a plan, high medication costs are coming at the expense of individual health, families, communities, and taxpayers.

In Canada studies have found that an estimated $7 billion to $9 billion is spent on health service because individuals did not take their prescribed medication, but by mitigating the cost of prescription medication to low-income seniors, this will reduce health service expenditures. Research shows that low-income individuals are less likely to adhere to their prescribed medication due to financial barriers. Often this results in additional health complications and higher costs to the health care system. Given the current economic circumstances I'm confident that all members of this Legislature can support a motion that supports low-income seniors and promotes responsible public finances.

There are a variety of mechanisms which the hon. Minister of Health can use to mitigate the costs of prescription medication. However, I am inclined to urge the Minister of Health to examine the benefits of pharmacare. Pharmacare must be viewed as a central pillar to mitigate the financial burden on seniors and Albertans as well as to reduce the spending in health care. Given that the cost associated with the coverage for seniors plan in 2014-15 for prescribed medication was over $523 million and given that Canadians pay higher prices, we can do better, and we must do better.

Governments throughout the world have implemented public drug plans that follow pharmacare values. The results have been overwhelmingly positive, with citizens having a system based on access, fairness, safety, and value for their taxpayer dollars. Mr. Speaker, Albertans deserve a system based on these values as well. Prescription drugs and supplementary health benefits are important in ensuring quality health care treatment and support important clinical outcomes for patients and the health system. Just because prescription drugs are not considered part of publicly insured services under the Canada Health Act, it does not mean that we as members of this Legislature should ignore this issue. Access to affordable medication is a human right and should not be determined by one's level of income.

I urge the Minister of Health and members of this Legislature to work collaboratively with organizations and other provinces and jurisdictions to ensure Albertans are getting the best prices possible in a system that is comprehensive, evidence based, and sustainable. Mr. Speaker, reducing the cost of prescription drugs, especially for low-income and vulnerable seniors, will reduce expenditures for government and households. During our current economic challenges this is what good governance looks like.

Having spoken to many seniors in my constituency, I know seniors are proud and independent Albertans. This motion is central for Alberta's seniors to maintain their health, quality of life, and sense of independence. From a government perspective, reducing the overall costs to the health care system ensures the long-term sustainability of a public service all Albertans rely on. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of a government that is protecting Albertans, their public services, and is fighting to ensure equitable access to necessary medications.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore for her remarks and for introducing a motion, a private member's motion, that, I have to confess, at times during her opening remarks sounded much more like a government motion than a private member's motion because, indeed, it introduced a great deal of additional material that I don't think is germane to the discussion that is specifically before us with regard to this motion. This motion is very specific with regard to the cost of drugs for seniors. I would suggest that we confine our commentary to that rather than getting into debating the merits of a pharmacare program and some of the other things that the hon. member raised during the course of her remarks.

There are a number of things that were raised by the hon. member, but there are a number of realities that we do need to know when we're discussing these issues. The statement that Canadians pay higher prices for pharmaceuticals: that is a true statement, but the thing is that you have to understand why that comes about. With a population of about 35 million people, Canada is, in fact, a small market. One of the things that we do have in Canada that I think we can be quite proud of is that we have a very strong regulatory framework for new drug approvals. Health Canada does a very specific and a very good job of protecting Canadians to make sure that all new drug approvals have to go through a rigorous and science-based mechanism to make sure that these drugs are, in fact, safe. That's part of what drives up the cost of drugs for Canadians. That approval process is costly, and it gives access to a relatively small market. We think of 35 million people as being a lot of people, but in point of fact it is not, from a pharmaceutical company standpoint, a large market. So the price of pharmaceuticals is a reality.

The other thing that is a reality is the burgeoning cost of pharmaceuticals as a major cost driver within our health care system. We want to encourage pharmaceutical companies to do research, to develop new and exciting medications, but that research is extremely costly. In order to recoup those costs, as we know, pharmaceutical companies are constantly bringing in new medications, new drugs, and in fact over the last 40 years the cost of pharmaceuticals as a total, nation-wide cost has gone from $1.1 billion to $30 billion in Canada. At that, it is the second-highest contributor to overall health care costs in Canada. It passed physician costs in 1997. The only other thing that costs the health care system in Canada more than pharmaceuticals is hospitals, and the percentage that hospitals contribute to the overall cost has dropped by nearly half in terms of a percentage. It used to be close to 50 per cent; now it's down to 28 per cent. So the issue with regard to the cost of pharmaceuticals is real, and it is one that, I would suggest, systemically we can't do a lot about.

But the hon. member did raise some important points with regard to how it affects seniors. Now, she mentioned very briefly in passing that seniors currently have a situation in Alberta where they are offered or afforded an opportunity through a copay mechanism of a maximum cost of $25 per prescription. It's 30 per cent of the cost of the prescription up to $83.33, and beyond that, the eligible senior pays nothing more. There are medications now that are used for a number of conditions. For example, the biological drug Remicade is used, and it's a very effective drug for a number of immune-related conditions. The individual cost of Remicade can be over $3,000. The cost to the patient, the cost to the senior, is $25. So, you know, while I appreciate what the hon. member is saying, the truth of the matter is that there is a great deal being done already to shield seniors and other vulnerable Albertans from the cost of these increasing pharmaceutical prices.

I think a more effective way to decrease the cost to seniors, which is the financial burden that the hon. member speaks of, is working on reducing the number of medications that seniors are on. That number of six to 10 medications is a huge concern to me because, quite frankly, as you increase the number of medications, you increase the risk of drug interactions, and you increase the risk of drugs that are working, in fact, in contradiction to each other.

One of my concerns is that sometimes some seniors are not fully aware of why they're taking certain medications. I know that that was the situation with my mother. When she was quite elderly, she was on three or four different medications, and when I asked, "Do you know why you're on them?" she was not entirely clear as to why she was on the different medications.

I would suggest that if we want to help our system, if we want to help, most importantly, our patients, one of the things we have to do is that we have to do a better job of medication management, and quite frankly an underutilized resource in this regard is our pharmacists. The pharmacists of Alberta are highly skilled individuals, and in this province we have been a national leader, Mr. Speaker, in giving them a broadened scope of practice to allow our pharmacists to do a better job in terms of co-ordinating the needs of patients and, in fact, speaking to patients and co-ordinating with their doctors to say: "Look, Mrs. Smith is on nine different medications. At least three of these, in my professional opinion, are unnecessary, and we could reduce them." By doing that, you reduce that $25 or whatever the copay amount is. To me, that is the better way to move towards a lessening of the financial burden.

To simply look at the cost of drugs, which is what this motion does, zeroing in on the cost of drugs, it is, I think, quite frankly, an incomplete analysis of what the cost drivers are. There's much more that goes into the overall cost both for the patient and for the system. While I certainly applaud the member for bringing forward the issues on behalf of her constituents, I think that it would be wise for us in the consideration of this motion and in the consideration of any situation where we're looking at cost drivers within the health care system to get the best advice from the people who are skilled in this area, who are trained professionals in this area, and certainly that would be our physicians, but it would also be our pharmacists.

Our pharmacists are very familiar with that, and certainly our pharmacists working in communities in Alberta, especially in rural communities, often provide the continuity of care that, unfortunately, has been a challenge to provide in Alberta. In many small rural communities they have difficulty retaining physicians for prolonged periods of time whereas the community pharmacist has often been there for 20, 25 years or longer. I think this is a resource that we should make full use of during the course of the rural health review. We spoke to the RxA, to representatives, and they have many, many good ideas as to how we can reduce the costs not just to the system but indeed to the patient, which is the goal of this motion.

So it is with some hesitation and some reluctance that I'm actually opposed to the motion. It's not because I don't think it's a good idea to reduce costs, but I think that the motion is incomplete. I think that the motion does not take a broadly enough based look at the overall cost drivers. The motion itself simply talks about reducing costs to reduce the financial burden. I think there are better ways of doing that. I think there are more broadly based ways of doing that. Therefore, reluctantly, Mr. Speaker, I will be voting in opposition to the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the following motion for consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mrs. Littlewood moved, seconded by Mr. Westhead, that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois Mitchell, CM, AOE, LLD, the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Motion carried]

Government Motions

Address in Reply to Speech from the Throne

11. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne be engrossed and presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor by such members of the Assembly as are members of Executive Council.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

Motions Other than Government Motions

Prescription Drug Costs for Seniors

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in support of Motion 503 and to speak to some of the work that the Ministry of Health is already doing to assist our seniors with the cost of prescription drugs.

As was noted, all seniors in Alberta are eligible for premium-free drug coverage that ensures they have access to essential medications at a more affordable cost. The coverage for the seniors' drug program is one of a number of provincial government sponsored drug and health benefit programs that were developed as targeted solutions to protect individuals and to provide access to appropriate medications. This program helps over half a million seniors in this province right now, but we know that these costs are not going down and that the need continues to rise.

Alberta Health will continue its work to give seniors access to appropriate medications while managing expected growth in drug program costs. We've already seen success with one of these medications. Lucentis, a drug used for the treatment of macular degeneration, is one of the most costly medications that Alberta currently covers. We have launched a pilot program that allows ophthalmologists to prescribe the drug Avastin for this condition at no cost to the patient. Through this program seniors get the care they need with no out-of-pocket costs and at a much lower cost to the province overall.

This is one area where Alberta has been successful at bending the cost curve while also improving quality and access for Albertans. We must remain diligent in our approach to continue to build on these successes. Joint efforts with drug plans across Canada capitalize on combined purchasing power, leading to increased access to drug treatment options, lower drug costs, and greater consistency of listing decisions for everyone.

Many Albertans face challenges with the cost of prescription drugs. Our government has drug coverage programs that provide access to needed medicines for many Albertans, but we know that these programs can be improved. We are working with our provincial and federal partners to explore an evidence-based approach for funding and delivery of drug coverage in Canada.

There are a number of ways to design programs that provide access to prescription drugs. A national pharmacare program that provides coverage for all residents with minimal or no cost sharing is just one option. Considering who would be eligible, what drugs they would be eligible for, and how much the program would cost is important regardless of the type of program being considered. Together with other provinces and territories our government continues to find new ways to improve review processes to make prescription drugs more affordable and to enable appropriate access to both brand name and generic prescription drugs.

I thank the member for drawing attention to this important issue, and I call on the members assembled to support Alberta seniors through this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this motion to the floor of the Legislature. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion 503, which would urge the government to consider measures to lower the cost of prescription drugs for low-income seniors.

I would like to begin by saying that I will be supporting this motion. Furthermore, I believe that good governance requires that we continually explore such matters and always work towards improvement. We know that Albertans are currently struggling a little more these days with our economic growth slowed and Albertans being asked to shoulder more and more of the load for our government.

This weekend in Medicine Hat I was talking to a gentleman, a small-business owner, an oil field services contractor, who relayed his struggles to me. He is making the exact same income as in previous years, but because of recent increases to taxes and fees, he is now taking home $800 per month less. Mr. Speaker, that's nearly $10,000 a year. While some may be tempted to label him a person who has not done his fair share, I can assure you that his contributions to his community, to charity, and, most importantly, to his family have always gone above and beyond. He, like so many Albertans, does not use the fruits of his labour to live lavishly or extravagantly. With his income, above and beyond business expenses and the cost of living, he has been supporting his elderly parents.

So when I consider this motion, that aims to consider measures to ease the financial burden of our seniors, I think also of their families, their caregivers, who willingly and lovingly carry so much of the burden themselves. It is only right and proper when we consider every way to ease some of the burdens on those in the greatest need that we do this. What forms these measures take remain to be seen, but I encourage the government to keep an open mind and truly explore all the options available at their disposal.

It's important to note, Mr. Speaker, that we currently have several programs available to low-income seniors for prescription medication on top of the universal coverage for seniors' benefits, which provides prescription coverage to all residents over 65 premium free. In my four years I continually find in my constituency office – and I'm sure other members in this Assembly can relate – that many seniors can become overwhelmed reviewing the various programs currently available to them. The forms can often be confusing, onerous, and numerous, and the process seems very disjointed at times. So if the government wishes to support low-income seniors, I would also suggest that the easiest thing they could do right away would be to streamline the programs and simplify the application process. Right away I think we could see improvements in the quality of life of seniors and added efficiency in government, that can serve all Albertans so well.

If the government does consider measures in line with this motion – and this consideration should, of course, already be ongoing from the minister – we as Albertans must continually ask whether we are getting the best value possible. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that improvement is not a destination but a never-ending journey. So I hope to that end we constantly strive – constantly strive – for the best value possible and the best use of Albertans' dollars. How well we do in achieving value will ultimately be measured in how well people are served and their quality of life.

Many words have been spoken in this House about the need for fiscal responsibility and sustainability, but as I consider this motion, it really drives home to me what these concepts mean. At the government level the sustainability of our system means having the resources in place long term – long term – so that they're there when we need them. It means not having this generation and future generations trapped under the weight of crippling debt and interest payments. It means having the means to cover our province's priorities, not lost to these bloated interest payments. At the personal level it means ensuring that the province's families have the opportunity to thrive. It means ensuring that folks like my constituent can give like no other to their family, to their parents, and to their community.

Mr. Speaker, I will absolutely be voting in support of the consideration of all measures to reduce the financial burden for seniors' health care. At the same time I encourage this government to consider how it may ease the burden on all families and caregivers across the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to speak in support of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore's motion, that encourages our government to reflect on measures that further lower the cost of prescription drugs for low-income Alberta seniors. We stand together because I, too, have seniors in the constituency of Red Deer-North whose well-being is adversely impacted by the financial burden of prescription costs. I thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak to the importance of this motion.

Alberta and Canada are paying among the highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. To some seniors this means compromise on various levels. Fixed incomes, low incomes do not have flexibility to sustain an increase to monthly expenses. As a result our low-income seniors' options are conflicting; that is to say that if I buy these prescriptions, I may have to decrease my food budget for the month. Our Alberta cannot tolerate that as a status quo.

Currently our government-sponsored plan for seniors makes drug coverage available to all Albertans 65 years and older. Through this program seniors pay 30 per cent of their prescription costs to a maximum of $25. This is not variable. All seniors have this available regardless of financial disposition. Mr. Speaker, as I have engaged with the senior constituents in Red Deer-North, I have heard many times as a constant concern that the unaffordability of prescriptions causes duress. On behalf of my constituents of Red Deer-North who have shared this concern, I am indeed proud to stand up in the House and speak in favour of them and this motion.

Seniors are prescribed medications that primarily combat chronic diseases; that is to say that without these medications, their health could and would deteriorate. If we refer to the numbers as presented in Dr. Manns' study, we are presented with the fact that seniors typically take between six to 10 different medications at a maximum of $250. In consideration of those low-income seniors who are extremely limited, the cost potentially represents the difference between health and hunger, as though either compromise is acceptable. It is apparent that we have placed our seniors in a position that is undeserving to them.

As we suffer through the economic challenges that Alberta is experiencing, our government needs to look at how we can mitigate the impact. With the current economy our seniors may experience less support from their families. As a result our low-income seniors may compromise their resources by not taking medications as prescribed. It is apparent that any compromise will certainly bring greater demands on our health system.

Mr. Speaker, this motion reinforces the government's commitment to protecting Alberta's vulnerable while remaining responsible public finance administrators. Today's motion is about protecting our low-income seniors. The constituents of Red Deer-North have been very transparent that the $25 maximum copayment per prescription is not affordable on their limited income.

Very often in the House we speak to the community mindedness of our Albertans. Let us acknowledge the decades of contribution to Alberta's growth and prosperity at the hands of our seniors, including our low-income seniors. Our province has been fashioned by their hard work, and regardless of our difficult economic climate, seniors deserve our protection. To ignore seniors, especially low-income seniors who depend on essential prescription medication, is not the Alberta way.

5:30

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this important motion before the House. I echo the statement made by the member that access to affordable medication is a human right and should not be determined by one's level of income. Reducing the cost of prescription drugs, especially for low-income and vulnerable seniors, will result in the reduction of expenditures for government and households. Considering our current challenges, this motion resonates sound governance, fiscal responsibility, and our ability to remedy past mistakes. Our government needs to look to responsible measures to reduce costs and barriers.

Mr. Speaker, may I say once again that I am proud to speak to this motion, presented by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore, and also proud to be part of a government that shares this commitment. We as members of this Legislature cannot allow income to determine the quality of health for low-income and vulnerable seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to speak on Motion 503, a motion to consider measures that would further lower the cost of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors to ease their financial burden and reduce their health care costs. For too long the government has not given the seniors' file the attention it deserves. Seniors' facilities went unbuilt, patients ignored. Palliative care centres were shut down in a manner which lacked both efficiency and compassion. It is good to see that these issues are now being discussed and that this Legislature is working to address some of the ongoing issues.

Our seniors built this province, and the Wildrose believes they deserve the best. Seniors are among Alberta's most vulnerable population and shouldn't have to worry about how they're going to pay for the medicine they need. When considering measures to lower costs, it is important to ensure they are fair across the board.

This is a debate that is happening because of the current system we have in place. Currently in Alberta the Alberta group coverage plan is charging a copay towards seniors accessing necessary prescriptions. It is the government who is charging a copay amount to our seniors of up to $25 per prescription. The current plan that governs seniors' prescriptions and drug coverage is in need of a full review to ensure that all of our seniors are incorporated into a plan that works with their individual needs. We also have to recognize that this is a very complex issue.

We believe it is important to reduce costs for our seniors whenever possible in a fair, transparent manner. We all know Alberta's seniors have worked hard to get where they are, and it is so important we help those who are accessing care. Too often I hear from seniors that they are struggling with costs . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I would just like to interrupt a sec.

I notice that there may be a telephone conversation going on, which is not consistent. I'm sure one of his peers may point that out to him, I believe.

An Hon. Member: No. There's no telephone conversation, sir.

The Speaker: No? It wasn't a telephone conversation? My apologies. Okay. Thank you.

Please proceed.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Too often I hear from seniors that they are struggling with the health system. Perhaps the government should also consider creating an independent Seniors' Advocate who would be able to provide information to address systemic problems and stand up for our seniors by helping them navigate these complicated government programs.

The fact that people live longer than ever should be celebrated as one of the biggest success stories in history. As the saying goes: getting old is better than the alternative. But we must ensure that we are creating programs that are reflective of these facts and that when we are debating these pieces of legislation, we are always cognizant of the most vulnerable.

There are many concerns about this motion and alternates to this motion that should be considered, ensuring that all pertinent groups are consulted, ensuring that this is sustainable. It is my hope that the government will bring in a reasoned, common-sense approach that will address the major shortfalls for seniors.

At this time I will support this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak to this important motion brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. As the member of this Legislature stated, considering measures that would lower the cost of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors to ease their financial burden and reduce overall health care costs is critical during the current economic climate. I am proud to stand beside the Member for Calgary-Glenmore and privileged to be part of a government that remains committed to protecting Alberta's most vulnerable. On behalf of my constituents of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who have also shared their concerns with me on this issue, I am proud to stand up in the House and speak in favour of this motion.

Mr. Speaker, as I door-knock in Wetaskiwin-Camrose or meet with constituents in my office, a constant theme I encounter is the unaffordability of prescription medication for seniors, especially low-income seniors. Reducing costs of prescription drugs, especially for low-income and vulnerable seniors, will reduce expenditures for government and households. During these challenging times it is how good governance functions.

Given that this motion aims at removing income as a barrier to health and seeks to improve the overall well-being of Alberta's low-income seniors while being fiscally prudent to taxpayers, I fully support this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for putting this forward. I really want to extend my appreciation to our colleagues across the way for the very positive comments that have been made about this. I think this is a situation where all of us can come together to recognize that there is a vulnerable population amongst us. Some of us have reached that vulnerability already, I could say. Maybe you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know. [interjections] In any case, this is a matter that the Legislature should be putting its mind to. This is a situation where there is hardship going on, and I'm hoping that with the efforts of the Member for Calgary-Glenmore and others that we will gradually improve the situation for our vulnerable seniors, particularly those that have a low income.

I did want to make some comments about some very positive things that are going on in our health care system at the present time. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster mentioned the important role of pharmacists in controlling drug costs, and I've been very impressed with meeting several pharmacists, including the head of the College of Pharmacists, who lives in my riding of Edmonton-Whitemud, along with several of the pharmacists who operate stores or outlets in Edmonton-Whitemud. All of those people are very interested in this vital issue. They every day see seniors who can't afford their medication, and as an association the pharmacists have been looking at ways that they can help deal with this.

Seniors have issues that really are compounded in this area. Many of them have chronic diseases: diabetes, chronic lung disease, chronic kidney disease, hypertension, chronic heart disease. I could go on and on. These conditions are not curable in the sense that I can cure somebody with leukemia with the appropriate chemotherapy or that we might be able to cure somebody's eye disease with an injection of Avastin. These conditions require a combination of several different medications. Often those medications have drug interactions. We count on the pharmacists as well as the pharmacy information network – that's one of the good things that we've got in health management in this province – to try to mitigate that.

I'm really proud as a physician that I can have access through the Netcare system to the pharmacy information network, and I can actually look at the list of medications that have been prescribed for the patient. It was mentioned by at least one other of the speakers that patients often don't get their prescriptions filled or that they don't take the prescriptions on a regular basis because of the cost, but at least you know what medications were prescribed. I think it's the responsibility of physicians like me as well as pharmacists to take a look at those lists and to try to limit the polypharmacy that is going on. What I do think – and I agree with the mover of this motion – is that we need to be looking at a national program, something like pharmacare, although I think that's sort of the golden temple on the hill. But there are things we could be talking about early on.

In cancer therapy in this province we're actually very fortunate. Very expensive medications, which are very effective, for instance, in treating leukemia, which is my area of expertise, are provided by the government through the drug benefit plan of the cancer program. Some of those medications – and I can give you an example from my own practice. If I treat a patient for chronic myelogenous leukemia with imatinib, which its brand name is Gleevec – I think some of you will have heard of it – the cost to the taxpayer is about $35,000 a year. I've been treating some patients for over 15 years, so you can do the math on that. Fortunately, none of my patients are noncompliant because of cost, unlike the experience in the United States, where about 30 per cent of the prescriptions that are given out for imatinib are never filled, and then the leukemia basically goes untreated.

We need a catastrophic drug program to deal with, for instance, multiple sclerosis, rheumatoid arthritis, Crohn's disease, dementia – that may be coming to me some day – chronic kidney disease. These medications, as was mentioned by another speaker, are catastrophically expensive. What I think we need to be thinking about as legislators are ways to get a catastrophic drug program, probably through federal-provincial co-operation since another component of this would be negotiation of pricing with the pharmaceutical companies through the 10 provinces and the three territories. Generic drug pricing is very important. It's a complex issue, and it's one that I think we need to collaborate with the pharmacists on as well as the pharmaceutical companies.

I do want to bring up one thing that relates to the policy of this government, and that is that the trans-Pacific partnership needs to be looked at very carefully in this regard. The trans-Pacific partnership would result in the lengthening of the patent period for medications. This will cost Canadian governments billions of dollars, actually, over the next five years if the provisions in the TPP are not covered.

In summary, there are lots of things that we could be looking at as legislators to try to improve the lot of the senior with diminished financial resources to ensure that the senior can live out their life in comfort and in good health.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I am happy to support the motion from the Member for Calgary-Glenmore. The issue of drug affordability for seniors is one that I often hear as I meet Sherwood Park constituents in my office or attend community meetings. Seniors are having difficulties paying for the drugs that their doctors prescribe to them. While seniors can access the government drug coverage plan, where they pay only 30 per cent of the prescription cost to a maximum of $25 per drug, this still leaves many seniors with the choice of affording drugs or food. Not taking the prescribed drugs not only endangers the life of the senior, but it also means additional costs to the health care system when they have a health setback or their health is seriously impaired just because they cannot afford the drugs prescribed.

This morning I spoke to local physicians, members of my local primary care network, about this issue. They told me that they are very well aware of how the cost of drugs impacts seniors, especially those with chronic diseases or those for whom a nongeneric drug needs to be prescribed. These doctors try to help by giving out drug samples or ensuring that they find a replacement generic drug if possible. The PCN even tries to find funds when all avenues have been exhausted for the senior. I have also spoken to pharmacists, who take great care to make sure that seniors do have access to the prescribed drugs by working with their doctor, the PCN, or other health care providers to ensure that the drug prescribed is affordable to the senior. I want to take the opportunity to thank the doctors, the pharmacists, and the PCNs who are helping seniors to afford the needed drugs when they cannot afford the drugs even though part of them are covered, and I think they need to be thanked, some of them.

Unfortunately, few seniors are able to keep the extended health benefits when they retire, which would help them to manage the cost of drugs. Few employers offer this option to their retired employees. I am fortunate that my husband's former employer did offer this option to its retired employees, so when it's my time to retire, we will have an easier time to manage the cost of our drugs. But this is offered to only a very small proportion of our seniors.

No one knows what chronic disease or health problems might strike them in the future and can therefore plan accurately for the cost of all their needed medicine. Some seniors, in addition to the cost of drugs, have substantial out-of-pocket costs for such things as diabetes testing strips or other supplies that are not part of the drug program. This seriously depletes their limited funds, making their ability to afford the needed drugs even more challenging.

Given the challenges that seniors face in affording the needed drugs, I would urge all members of this House to support Motion 503, that asks government to consider measures that would further lower the cost of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this motion. First of all, I'd like to thank her for highlighting Dr. Manns' study, which highlighted the seriousness of this issue. Having 30 per cent of low-income seniors unable to take their medication due to financial implications is putting a lot of stress on our health care system and public finances. Adherence to prescription medication is key for controlling and stabilizing health. As such, nonadherence increases the risk of developing additional chronic diseases and developing acute related symptoms. This worsens overall health and increases health care costs.

We are aging. Our population is aging. Our life expectancy is increasing, and more and more we are seeing seniors not just living with low incomes but living in grinding poverty. Women are living longer, and we know there is a wage gap, so it's not unusual to see – in my community I've seen older women who probably should have retired and spent time with their grandchildren, but they're working in low-paying jobs, minimum wage jobs like Tim Hortons or like Home Depot. I see it all the time.

I know from my own life, in my own work life, when people do not take their medications properly, there are all kinds of related problems. If people don't have access to medication that slows down the rate of Alzheimer's, there are huge implications for seniors and for their families. As well, failure to take correct medication results in injuries from falls.

My parents were entrepreneurs, I'll call them. They liked to try a lot of different businesses, and they liked to move around a lot. So they never had a pension, and financially they were not able to put a lot of money away to save for retirement. Now my folks are in their 70s, and life is tough. They live in a rental apartment, and they don't have a lot of extra money for anything. Thankfully, I and my siblings are able to help them, and I'm grateful that we can. However, I have seen the decision-making process. I have seen my father sort of wave off my mother about the diabetes test strips because "it's really not necessary," because they really need to contribute to the grocery budget. So it's real. I think the implications of not testing properly or not having the money to buy the correct food to manage your health is hugely expensive in the long run. Anything that can help is a good thing. Twenty-five dollars might not seem like a lot, but it's huge.

I can remember one time leaving the Cross. We were at the Cross for some treatment for my father, and they were going to try a different medication. I'm not sure what the name was. I think it was interferon. I might be wrong. It was hugely expensive, and even though he only had to pay a portion of it, he knew that that would not be possible. Now, there was a social worker there. Actually, we were able to stop, fill out some forms, and get some assistance through the Cross, which I will be eternally grateful for. That's a reality for far too many seniors in Alberta.

So it's my absolute pleasure and I'm very thankful that this motion was put forward, and I am overjoyed to support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd really like to thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for bringing this motion forward into the House. You know, I can't imagine living and working an entire life in this province and getting to that stage where I would then be a senior and not having the economic resources in order to pay for the medications that I would need. That would just be horrible. Perhaps there are even Albertans that are watching us right now, listening to us right now, that are experiencing that very reality. It bothers me so much that there are individuals that have given their lives to the service of this province, and that's the reality that they're going through. It's a shame.

Albertans and low-income seniors should not be in a position where they must choose between their medication and food or shelter. Given that the costs associated with chronic disease represent a high portion of total health care costs, this motion represents a step forward toward rectifying past mistakes, promoting good governance, and being fiscally responsible to the taxpayer. On behalf of my constituents of Edmonton-Ellerslie, who have also shared their concerns with me on this issue, I'm proud to stand up in this House and speak in favour of this motion. Mr. Speaker, as I door-knocked in Edmonton-Ellerslie and I met with constituents in my office, this was a constant theme I encountered, this unaffordability of prescription medication, especially for those low-income seniors.

That being said, you know, Albertans are community minded, and they value that our government is standing up and protecting those who are facing immediate financial hardships. To ignore seniors, especially low-income seniors, who depend on essential prescription medication is just not the Alberta way.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Calgary-Glenmore has shed light on the fact that Canadians pay higher prices for prescription medication than most around the world. In Canada Alberta is spending the second most on drug plans.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but under Standing Order 8(3), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore to close debate on Motion 503.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I couldn't guess that a collection of facts and thorough research on the matters especially identified as serious issues by my constituents could be perceived as not a private member's motion. I would like to thank the members of this Legislature for speaking today on this issue and having the voices of their constituents heard.

Mr. Speaker, vulnerable, low-income seniors need a government that is willing to stand up and protect them during these difficult economic times. Health and stable quality of life must not be dependent on one's income or whether they have a strong support system that is able to assist the seniors. Low-income seniors deserve the right to accessible and affordable prescription medication, which means the maintenance of health and independence.

Mr. Speaker, consideration of measures that would further lower the costs of prescription drugs for Alberta's low-income seniors represents a needed step towards easing the financial burdens faced by low-income seniors and a reduction in overall health expenditures. In other words, this motion represents a commitment to protecting Alberta's most vulnerable seniors while remaining fiscally responsible to taxpayers' hard-earned money as this province endures the current economic challenges. These are the recommendations Albertans expect and deserve.

This motion is not based on ideology, but it is based on practicality. The fact is that Canadians pay among the highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. Among Canadians Albertans are paying the second-highest prices on drug plans. We need to find solutions that reduce the cost of prescription medication. The current system is not built for the long-term sustainability of our health care system. As previously mentioned, approximately 20 per cent of Albertans remain without coverage. With higher than average costs 1 in 5 Albertans are unable to purchase their necessary medications. Many low-income seniors fall into this category, and the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot cast aside the issues facing Alberta's aging population.

All the Alberta senior population is eligible to be covered under the government-sponsored coverage for seniors. The costs resulting from copayments are still too high for seniors to bear, especially for low-income seniors. I have heard from constituents in Calgary-Glenmore who tell me that the cost of prescription medication is unaffordable. There are eight seniors' care facilities in my constituency, and I have been visiting them and talking to seniors on a one-on-one basis to listen to them and hear what their concerns are. They have mentioned that it has been unaffordable for themselves, unaffordable for their aging parents and grandparents, unaffordable for their neighbours and friends.

Mr. Speaker, as Dr. Manns' study highlighted, seniors rely on multiple prescriptions to manage their health. Sure, a $25 maximum copayment may not seem like much, but given that most seniors are paying much more than $25 every time they need a refill, it is clear why 30 per cent of low-income seniors are not taking their medications. The costs are simply too high. The results, of course, are obvious. Seniors are experiencing less comfortable lives and are at increased risk of losing their independence. This adds pressure to our health services. The costs associated with chronic disease represent a high percentage of overall health expenditures. Consideration of the measures that limit these services, that result in nonadherence to critical medication, is what we need in this province. This would represent effective and responsible management of public finances.

This motion also represents a commitment to all Albertans that as members of this Legislature we are standing up for their interests regardless of whether the province is in an economic boom or bust. Reducing the cost of prescription drugs, especially for low-income and vulnerable seniors, will reduce expenditures for government and households.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, April 12, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us bow our heads and reflect. Today, as we welcome a new member to our midst, let each of us take the time to build a relationship with him; to know him as a person, not just as a politician; to listen to his story about his history, his family, his hopes and aspirations for this province; to appreciate that we are all stronger now that he is with us.

Please be seated.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mr. Prab Gill Member for Calgary-Greenway

The Speaker: I would now invite the leader of the third party, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, to proceed to the main doors of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Calgary-Greenway containing the results of the by-election conducted on March 22, 2016, which states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Calgary-Greenway and that Mr. Prab Gill was duly elected as the Member for Calgary-Greenway.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. McIver escorted Mr. Gill to the Mace]

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you Mr. Prab Gill, the new Member for Calgary-Greenway, who has taken the oath as a member of this House, has inscribed the roll, and now claims the right to take his seat.

The Speaker: Let the hon. member take his seat. [Standing ovation]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 5

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

[Adjourned debate April 7: Mr. Dach]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung is not present. Is there another member to speak to Bill 5? The Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise in this House and am able to say how proud I am of our government and the work that we're doing around affordable housing and ensuring that everyone has an affordable home. In particular, I'm very, very happy to stand and speak about the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

In my riding of Sherwood Park we have a lot of seniors who have their own homes, and with their age and as their income has become limited, they have a lot of challenges in being able to maintain their homes to continue to live in them and also with the adaptations that they need to remain in their homes. The adaptations may be as simple as putting a ramp in their front yard or bars in their bathrooms or ensuring that the walkways between the bedrooms and the living room are accessible with a wheelchair. This is a big issue in my riding of Sherwood Park, and I would like to take the opportunity to thank groups like Seniors United Now, who have a big chapter in Sherwood Park, for all their advocacy on this issue. I also have a seniors' committee in Sherwood Park. I've brought together a group of seniors, and one of the main issues that they've been talking about is the challenge that they have in terms of staying in their homes and being able to afford just staying in their homes.

I'm delighted that the minister has introduced this bill because this bill will help the seniors in my riding to be able to stay in their homes and to not worry about leaking roofs or damaged doors or any other things that go on when you have your own single home. I'm especially delighted about this bill because I did studies around rural housing and rural homelessness when I worked in the county of Newell. One of the biggest causes of homelessness in rural areas was the fact that a lot of seniors had no place to go. When their homes were in disrepair, they had no funding and nothing to do, so their homes became condemned. It was no place for them to live. So I'm very delighted that this Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act will meet the needs of not only urban seniors but also rural seniors.

One of the really great things about this act is that the minister has ensured that seniors are protected. We all understand some of the challenges when older people enter into contracts and try to negotiate with contractors in terms of home repairs. A great deal of the act talks about the need to protect seniors and to make sure that they have some protection if the contractor does not deliver what was agreed upon.

I would like to urge all members of the House to support this act. This act will definitely meet the needs of seniors. I really appreciate that the income test is $75,000 for a single or a combined couple income and that the loan amount is $40,000 because I think that all the repairs that seniors will need – home repairs, adaptation for mobility, or other issues – will be managed under $40,000.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe, with the permission of the House, the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board has a brief introduction to make. We need unanimous consent to do that.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Thank you.

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Ceci: I appreciate that, members of the House. I'd just briefly like to introduce a dear friend of mine, a city councillor from Toronto, Joe Mihevc. He originally started political life as a city councillor in the city of York, I believe. Then when amalgamation happened in those seven cities, he moved over to the city of Toronto. I've known Joe since FCM. We met back at an FCM in some city in this country back in 1996, and we've kept in touch with each other. He's a big proponent of inclusion of people, low-income people, and support for those who need our help. He was the chair of the poverty reduction initiative in the city of Toronto as well as something called DiverseCity Toronto.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Assembly, it gives me great pleasure to introduce Joe Mihevc, from the city of Toronto, up there in the gallery.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

10:10

Government Bills and Orders*Second Reading*Bill 5*Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act(continued)*

The Speaker: I would recognize the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about Bill 5. Bill 5, the seniors' home equity loan bill, is a major piece of legislation that proposes to create a home equity loan program. It's very important that the seniors in our province are able to age in place in the communities that they have built and in a place that is safe and adaptable to their needs. The programs we debate and vote on here in the House will have long-lasting impacts on people's lives and on the economy, so I appreciate the chance to debate Bill 5 at second reading.

Having looked at this bill, I have a few concerns about how this government intends to approach this issue. The legislation as it currently stands sets a framework that will get this government, essentially, into the business of banking, and I can't help but wonder why and how. You see, Mr. Speaker, this is yet another bill that gives a minister the power to create all the substantive details in regulation. This is a massive government home equity loan program. We're debating putting in a program with vague details and with the possibility of high financial risk to seniors and taxpayers.

The speed with which this government is moving through legislation is unacceptable. Right now Albertans are already worried about the economy, and right now their concerns are mounting as they watch the actions of this government, a government with an attitude. The NDP hasn't even been elected one year, yet we have already seen it make the same mistakes bill after bill, with little or no progress on the learning curve. For instance, last fall's Bill 6, a bill which would force farms into subscribing to a broken WCB program and also which initially took aim at the family farm, promised that details would be in regulation. The government ignored consultation and broke the trust of farmers across rural Alberta.

I firmly believe that if I'm going to be voting in favour of any legislation, then I need to be able to get back to my constituents of Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and say: "Look, this is a bill. Here it is. Here's what it does. What do you think?" But this government is not interested in that. This government is not interested in respecting the time of other duly elected officials or in respecting Albertans, who expect a certain level of legislative policies. Governing through regulation allows the NDP to avoid tough questions, and Albertans deserve better.

Mr. Speaker, for many years I served as a firefighter, and I was always running from one fire to another. I have now transitioned out of that role but can see myself slipping back into my old habits because, you see, the only difference this time is that the fire is the NDP's ideology, and unfortunately their 911 line is ringing off the hook.

Mr. Speaker, we have not even entered into second reading of Bill 1. Bill 1, which is the government's flagship jobs bill, was tabled on March 8 but has received no time for discussion in this House though it has received plenty of time for consideration for a bill with a preamble longer than the legislation. Now we stand in the second reading of Bill 5, a bill to create a home equity loan program for, according to the minister, approximately a quarter million seniors in Alberta. A program of this magnitude deserves thorough discussion and time for consideration.

Having now had a few days to consider this, it seems to me that there are a lot of important details that are simply missing. This government must explain and put into place real legislation before any member of this Assembly should be voting on this. We must not fall into the habits of the old government, which gave sweeping powers to the cabinet to make drastic changes with the stroke of a pen.

Mr. Speaker, last May the people voted for change. They did not vote for more of the same old, same old with the added benefit of a manifesto. Therefore, I would ask the minister to rise and explain why she did not include the following elements inside of the legislation, things like grant eligibility, loan eligibility, grant amounts, loan amounts, grant definitions, loan definitions, a list of approved repairs and adaptations, loan repayment schedules. They even have to provide a list of winners and losers in regard to contractors who would be able to work on a lot of these projects.

There are key components of the bill that are notably absent, and it's actually quite staggering. How does the minister expect seniors to trust this government when the program terms, eligibilities, approved repairs and adaptations, and money amounts are all subject to the whim of the minister? I recognize that the minister has come forward in recent weeks with press releases and statements on certain aspects of the program, but these numbers are not substantiated in the actual legislation.

For example, on April 6, 2016, the minister released a statement, which reads:

Under the proposed program, a maximum home equity loan of $40,000 would be available to seniors with a qualifying income threshold of $75,000, and who have a minimum 25 per cent home equity.

Elsewhere I've heard that the qualifying senior must maintain 25 per cent equity after the loan is taken, so I'm unsure whether it is 25 per cent home equity to qualify or it's 25 per cent home equity that must be retained after the portion of the equity loan.

The government needs to understand the importance of putting these details into legislation and the importance of the wording of the bills because if this legislation is passed, this will be what the department relies on when it puts this idea into motion. I can't help but feel that many of the most important parts of this bill are going to be in regulation. Essentially this means that the government would be creating a loan with no defined maximums and a grant program with few details as well. I understand that it's common to put the finer points in place through regulations; however, it is not common to use them for the most substantial components of the legislation.

The intent of the bill is worth while and respectable. Seniors should be afforded every opportunity to age in place or age in communities in a home that is safe and comfortable. This is something that the Wildrose is very much in favour of. But how can we agree to a program when we have no idea what it is going to look like and when we have no idea what future risks it may unintentionally present?

Mr. Speaker, I also think that one of the most serious questions that must be answered is: what is going on with the grant program? The minister has not yet stated publicly or formally what this grant portion will be or how it will be enacted. The legislation is so broad that it literally points out nothing. It states:

5(1) The Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, make a grant to . . .

(c) the owner [who] does not qualify for a loan.

Does this virtually mean that all of Alberta's seniors are eligible under either the loan or the grant portion of the program? Again, why has the minister chosen to leave questions of eligibility up in the air, to be decided later in regulation? Don't seniors deserve to know who is eligible for this legislative program and who isn't?

This is a government that is constantly asking for trust from all sectors of society. Our seniors and most vulnerable deserve to know the details of this program and deserve to be reassured that this government can be trusted. I would love to see a program that actually encourages meaningful impacts and helps our seniors, and I encourage the minister to step up to the plate and answer these questions and put forth the government's policies in writing. Our seniors deserve better than this skeletal legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none – I'm sorry. I would recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 5. I think this is an important piece of legislation.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we are on 29(2)(a). Are you speaking on that, or is it to the ...?

Mr. McIver: I wasn't on 29(2)(a), Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I would be recognizing someone else, then.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. As has been noted, this proposed act will allow seniors to use their home equity to make modifications to remain in their homes and maintain their independence.

In Edmonton-Centre I have a number of specialized seniors' facilities, but I also have some neighbourhoods where there are a number of seniors who own their own homes, particularly the neighbourhood of Queen Mary Park, where we have a number of people who have lived in that community for many years and would love, I'm sure, to continue to do so. Having had conversations with many, that is, in fact, the case, and I know that many of those residents remain in those homes until they are no longer able and then pass them on to their children, so there are some families that have some very deep roots in that area. This program, I believe, is very important in supporting those constituents of mine, allowing them, as other members have noted, to be able to age in place.

As noted, this proposed program includes a $75,000 income test – that's either single or combined income – with a maximum loan amount of up to $40,000. I think that those are both very generous amounts, allow plenty of room for seniors to be able to make the accommodations that they need to in their home, and provide for people within a reasonable range of income to be able to do that. On average, we know that Alberta's seniors' homes are older than those of the general Alberta population. Certainly, I know that that's true in my urban neighbourhoods and downtown here. Many of these were the first neighbourhoods in the city of Edmonton, so certainly we do have some aging homes there that will be in need of assistance.

The bill reinforces our commitment to supporting seniors and reinforces our commitment to addressing the needs and priorities of Alberta's growing and aging population. We certainly recognize that we have a growing number of seniors in our province, both urban and rural. As my colleague the MLA for Sherwood Park noted, this is a program that benefits seniors across the province, both in our cities and in our rural areas.

Under this program seniors will not be required to make monthly payments, as they would with traditional loan programs. Instead, the loan and interest charges would be repaid upon the sale of their property when the senior passes away, when the senior moves, or earlier if the senior chooses to do so.

As noted by my colleague across the aisle, of course, this will require some new regulation, as is common with most bills, to support the new loan program. It's proposed that this program therefore be implemented on July 1 of this year. It's a good timeline, I think, that allows for regulation to be developed, for there to be some reasonable and significant stakeholder engagement to occur and would certainly be a time, I'm sure, when our colleagues across the aisle could submit their thoughts and ideas as well.

As we've shown, we've certainly been open to reasonable amendments on some bills or moving some to committee when necessary, as we did yesterday. I think this is something that we share common goals on, this is something where we all want the same effects. Certainly, if there are concerns about loan amounts or those sorts of things, we're open to discussion. I'm sure that the minister is happy to hear from you on that as well.

In that regard, however, I think the minister has clearly stated what her intent is in those regulations so far, proposing that the program be for those 65 years or older; that it be a maximum loan amount of $40,000; that we have the income test, as I noted, of $75,000; that in order to qualify, it would require 25 per cent home equity; and that it would be implemented on July 1 of this year.

In terms of the grant portion, that the member was concerned about, the new program does include a grant component for low-income seniors who do not themselves qualify for a loan. The grants will be limited to repairs or adaptations currently available under the special needs assistance program and would be subject to frequency limits, to maximum annual amounts, and to maximum lifetime amounts, those being $5,000 and $15,000. These are things, again, that I'm sure the minister would be happy to discuss. She's mentioned these, discussed them, and these are the things that will be negotiated and looked at during the process of regulation.

As was mentioned, the draft act that we're looking at today includes four sections to legislate consumer protections concerning the following: making sure, then, that the loan program will consider the reasonableness of the costs to the individual for the home repair, the renovation, or adaptation as part of the loan approval process; ensuring that contractors will be required to advise the consumer that the loan program is available to eligible individuals; advising the consumer of their cancellation rights if they are not eligible for the loan. It is important to ensure that seniors are provided with clear and proper information on the loan and the impacts it may have on them, including information like how the contract may be cancelled, how the consumer may notify the contractor, the effect of a contract cancellation, and the responsibility of the contractor to refund any money paid if the contract should happen to be cancelled.

I believe this is an excellent program. I believe this is a solid bill. I look forward to its implementation. This is a program that will increase the types of repairs and adaptations of the current special needs assistance home repair grants, expanding them to any reasonable repair or adaptation that will assist a senior who chooses to remain in their home. Those proposed adaptations or repairs will be deemed eligible if they improve or increase any of the following in a senior's home in support of aging in place, those being their physical safety, their mobility, their independence, or their health. I think that these are reasonable parameters, these are good supports.

I believe it's an excellent opportunity. We as a government can use the opportunities that we have and the levers that we have available to ourselves financially to be able to help seniors who are in need to be able to repair their homes, to be able to refurbish their homes and bring them up to a standard where they will be able to remain there for as long as possible, a benefit to themselves and to their communities.

I appreciate the opportunity to stand up and speak today in favour of this bill, and I look forward to further debate. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions for the Member for Edmonton-Centre under 29(2)(a)? I would recognize the Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, agree and have great and admirable respect for the seniors of our province, the people who are the fabric of our province and who have built this province. I do also recognize that there are different jurisdictions in the province and different relationships that are required for implementation of a provincial legislative regulation, that we're talking about here today. So with that in mind, to the Member for Edmonton-Centre. I'd like to understand. To my question about different jurisdictions, in a community similar to one in my constituency like Hanna, that has some 2,950 residents – and a good part of them, too, sir, are seniors – I'd like to know how a government agency would define a risk liability when they take ownership or take assets in that home to create loan eligibility and grant loan capability, a home that may not necessarily be of use when the population of that area declines to 25 per cent of what it is now.

Mr. Shepherd: I appreciate what you're saying. If I understand the Member for Drumheller-Stettler correctly, he's concerned about an issue which is certainly one of concern to us here in the province, the dwindling of the rural population in some areas. We're aware that we are losing population in some of our smaller towns, some of our rural areas as people move into the cities. Certainly, that can be the case as seniors age and may have to access other services that are no longer available or that simply have not been available to them in that community. So I can appreciate the member's concern for that.

Certainly, we want many of our seniors to be able to remain in the communities where they have grown up and where they have lived. As the member noted, of course, many of those seniors are the people who have built those communities, who have made those communities strong and ensured that those communities have been able to continue and where many of their family may continue to live and remain.

In respect to his, I guess, more specific concerns about the calculations and how the government agencies would determine precisely how they would calculate the value of those homes, how they would determine the equity, I can't personally speak to that. I am certainly not a realtor or a person who has that information. Again, that's, I believe, where the minister would be working with her ministry and those persons who have that expertise, who have that knowledge, who are providing her with the advice on this file. We'd be more than happy to hear from the member if he has any specific suggestions on how that should be addressed because I recognize that, yes, we can't simply treat all communities the same. We do have to recognize that home values do differ from city to city, certainly between city and rural. There are many factors that do need to be considered in that.

Certainly, in the process of drafting the regulation, I think it will be very important that we meet with all stakeholders, have the opportunity to discuss with persons who have more expertise in the areas of real estate, in home value, in looking at repairs and renovations, ensure that we find a way to make sure that we have a fair balance so that more seniors, who have helped build these important rural communities, who have contributed so much to this province, are able to continue to stay in their homes and have fair and equal access to this excellent program that's being put forward by the government and to the opportunities that it would provide, then, for them to be able to upgrade their homes, to be able to stay in their communities, and age in place.

Thank you to the member for the question.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hawkwood under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Connolly: Yes. I'd like to thank the member for his speech and his comments on the bill. Just a brief question. I'd like to know how he thinks this bill and the SHARP program will help his constituents in Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you to member for the question. As I mentioned, certainly within my own communities, particularly the community of Queen Mary Park although also the community of Central McDougall, I know that I do have a number of seniors who have lived in these areas for quite some time, who have contributed quite a bit to their communities and helped to build them up and to whom I'm very thankful for having inherited the opportunity to represent the communities that they've added so much to. Certainly, as I said, I think this will be of great help in allowing them to stay in their homes for much longer periods. Certainly, we are aware that allowing people to age in the community is cheaper in terms of health care. It helps people maintain better physical health, better mental health.

I think this will support my constituents.

10:30

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today on Bill 5. Let me say this. This bill has the potential to do good things. I think, again, it's long been an interest of mine. As I've said before, during my time on Calgary city council I chaired the Calgary Housing Company for three years. Keeping Albertans in their own homes, keeping seniors in their own homes, and providing homes for those people that have a hard time providing them for themselves is something that I think all members of this House should be concerned with. And, I dare say, I expect all members of this House are concerned with that.

Looking at the bill, Mr. Speaker, it talks about allowing seniors to make repairs to their homes and the government loaning the money, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. I will say that I believe the intention of the bill is good. At least, that's my sense of it. In this House we deal with a lot of money, and dollars and cents matter.

The other thing that we deal with is the way that we affect the lives of Albertans, Mr. Speaker. Beyond dollars and cents, quality of life is something important and something that members of this House should be thinking about all the time. Seniors, a lot of them that I have met along the way, have told me in no uncertain terms that staying in their own home is a big contributor to their quality of life. Now, there are some, too, that have said, "I just can't cut the grass anymore; I just can't do the yardwork; I just can't do the stairs anymore,” and they need to move on somewhere else by their own choice. But for those that want to stay in their own homes and for those that have made their own judgment as adult senior Albertans that they want to stay, giving them an opportunity to do that is, in my view, a good thing.

But what concerns me about the bill, Mr. Speaker, is that some of the details haven't been sorted out yet in terms of the regulations. Now, the bill talks about doing loans to seniors based on the equity that they have in their home, and I will say that that makes sense. At least, it does to me. I think it keeps the government from being at financial risk, and that seems prudent from the government's standpoint.

Where I'm not quite as satisfied with what's in front of me yet, Mr. Speaker, is from the standpoint of seniors themselves. Seniors, like other Albertans, have a variety of levels of financial literacy that are not the same from person to person. That's not just seniors; that's all Albertans. We all have a different level of financial understanding. When this bill talks about inserting seniors into a pretty important financial transaction, it's important that the steps be taken to make sure they understand it: they understand what their obligations are, they understand how they gain, they understand how they lose, they understand what could go wrong and, of course, what could go right.

Again, I fully expect that the government's side is wanting to deal with this in the proper way. I don't doubt that on this bill at all. What concerns me is how we explain it to seniors across Alberta in such a way that they will (a) appreciate it and (b) like it. The reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is because this isn't the first program that's been launched in Alberta that provides seniors with financial benefits based on the equity in their home. There have been opportunities before for seniors to use the equity in their home to mitigate the effect of property taxes that, due to their income, in their later years they may not be able to easily pay and still buy groceries and medications and pay the utility bills and other things that I think we can all agree are truly important.

The reason that I raise it, Mr. Speaker, is that those other programs which are, I dare say, similarly designed – I guess, what I'm asking for us to think about is the fact that with some of those other similarly designed programs, there hasn't been a lot of uptake from seniors. I believe they are pretty good programs, but there still hasn't been a lot of uptake. So what I don't see here in either the bill or in the government members' explanations so far is whether they've had enough conversations with seniors and seniors' groups in Alberta to understand adequately why they haven't taken up these other opportunities to mitigate the financial pressures of a shrinking personal income – because pensions don't always rise at the same rate as the cost of living – and rising expenses and allowing seniors to stay in their homes, which I think we all agree is a good thing.

Aging in place was mentioned. I think it's something we agree with. Having seniors stay in their homes saves society – this is one of those interesting places in government where it's kind of fun, one of those places where you can actually contribute to people's quality of life and save money if you do it right. You can actually do both. This is one of those rare things. Again, this is a suggestion. To me, what I haven't heard in the explanation yet and that I'm listening for is how you're going to get seniors to take the government up on this. I only say it because of the experience with other similar programs, which I also think are good, and the seniors aren't taking the opportunity on a very large-scale basis.

Now, I will say – and this is an anecdote. The plural of anecdote is not data. I get that. Nonetheless, I'm going to share an anecdote, knowing that I'm not representing it as being universal across Alberta. But I have talked to several seniors anecdotally that have said that they haven't taken the government up on the plan to take a loan against their home to mitigate property tax because they don't want the value of their home eroded. How can you argue with that?

I guess we need to take the time with people to talk about how – and, of course, there is no guarantee over time. There is an average, of course, that we can point to historically, but anybody that sells financial instruments knows that you can talk about historical trends and historical things that have happened, but you can't guarantee that those historical things will happen in the future. We know that historically, not every year but most years, the average value of homes in Alberta goes up. Technically, I suppose, if a senior stays in their home and they take a loan from the government for $10,000, you know, and a home is worth – I don't know the average price across Alberta. I think in Calgary it's around $450,000. In Edmonton it's probably something similar. So if their property goes up 10 per cent over three years, that's potentially a $30,000 or $40,000 lift, and if they take a $10,000 or $20,000 loan against that, they could have, well, not on a percentage basis but in actual dollars, an increased value.

The reason that seniors have told me they're concerned about this is not out of concern for themselves. What they always say is: I want to have something to leave the kids. Now, a line of thinking that I've heard, that is probably as wise as any, is to make sure that you spend the last dollar you have on the last day and, some even say, bounce the cheque to the funeral parlor. I'm not suggesting that anybody bounce a cheque. I'm just recounting a story, sayings that I have heard. Nonetheless, despite that, Mr. Speaker, a lot of seniors are truly interested and care about their children and their grandchildren and want to leave them something. Again, it's anecdotal. I'm not calling this data, but anecdotally I've heard a lot of seniors say that the reason they don't want to take the government up on loans like this is because they don't want to degrade the value of what they're going to pass on to their children. Completely selfless. Completely selfless.

So what's missing for me is that I haven't seen, again, either in the bill, in the black-and-white text, or in the explanation from the government that they have made the effort or taken the time or talked to enough seniors' groups to get them to the place where they say: “Oh, okay. I understand. This is a good idea. It will help my quality of life. If it will help my quality of life if I can stay in my home longer, then it will help my quality of life if it's not so drafty because I have new windows and doors. It will help my quality of life because my monthly bills will be lower if I can replace that furnace that's not working as well as it ought to. It will help my quality of life if the roof isn't leaking, and it might even keep the value of the rest of my house in good shape.”

All of these things are potentially good, and I give the government credit for thinking of these things. But it doesn't solve the one big question that I have, which I'm posing here – I hope they don't take this as a criticism of the bill but, rather, a place where I think some work needs to be done – and that is getting seniors to the place where they can say: I will accept this. If the government passes this bill as it is now, it's potentially a good thing, but my advice or my suggestion or my thoughts for the government are that a good thing is only good if it truly is good for those that take it up. Okay?

I'm thinking that the government members probably want to help – I don't know. I don't know what their target is. I'd be interested to hear what their target is and how many seniors they want to help and what their strategy is to get there. If they want to help half a million Albertans that are seniors over the next 10 years – that's an out-of-the-air number, so don't take that too seriously; I only use it for illustrative purposes – but only 10 Albertans take it up, well, it's a nice piece of legislation that didn't do any good. Still nice but just didn't do any good.

My counsel for the government is: do the work, talk to the seniors' groups, and try to make sure before you set this in stone that it is something that seniors will actually take the government up on. I'm sure that while everybody likes to have a piece of legislation passed with their name on it, they'd be more proud if they could say, "I helped a hundred thousand seniors," or "I helped half a million seniors." They'd be less proud if they said: we passed a bill 12 years ago, and we helped 10 seniors. That would be less impressive. I'm sure the people on the government side would agree with that as well.

So that's my concern. And because we're early in the debate, I'm not even saying that the government hasn't done this, but I am saying that if they have, I haven't heard it. I'm hoping before we're done here to hear that.

The other piece that is probably worthy of taking some time for, that my colleague in the second party talked about, is the regulations. Again, you know, seniors have been around long enough that almost any rodeo they go to is not their first rodeo. They've been to places where they've been treated fairly before, and they've been to places where they've probably been treated unfairly before. And if they're not sure that this is the place that they're going to be treated fairly, they're just not going to take the government up on the offer no matter how well intentioned it is.

Two pieces, Mr. Speaker, that I'm counselling on – and I hope the government takes it in the helpful spirit in which it's intended. One is that before they pass this, if they can make sure that the regulations are known to the public and seniors, in particular, to know whether they will be comfortable taking a loan from the government, guaranteed on their house value; and, two, just in general what do they need to see to give them comfort that this will be a good deal for them and that whatever concerns that they have, including, "Will there be anything left for my kids?" are satisfied.

With that, I will sit and listen. Perhaps by the time we get to the end of the debate on this bill, we will have some of those things resolved and – who knows, Mr. Speaker? – on this bright and shiny day perhaps even amicably.

The Speaker: On 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, thank you to the Member for Calgary-Hays for his kind comments about the intent of the bill, the focus of the bill. I'm glad that we are in this House, it seems, pretty much united in spirit and intent on moving forward with this legislation, which is an excellent place to be.

In regard to some of the other things he pointed out, I appreciate the thoughts that he provided. I think there were some very thoughtful comments on, first of all, the issue of consultation and, secondly, on the issue of communication.

First of all, on the area of consultation. Now, while I was not personally involved in the consultation process, which the minister undertook in the drafting of this legislation and in working with the ministry – and I don't know how long this has been at work in the ministry. It wouldn't surprise me if it may have even predated our government as many of these things often do. But that aside, I do know that we have spoken with some seniors' groups and had the opportunity to talk with some folks who do work with seniors closely, frequently consult with them, and have a good sense of what seniors' concerns are throughout the province.

Here in Edmonton-Centre I'm very proud to have the head office for SAGE, or the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton, who offer a great number of excellent programs for seniors throughout the city and at their headquarters, just off Churchill Square. Karen McDonald, the assistant executive director of SAGE, did come out and in our government press release was in support of this bill, stating that "research consistently shows that seniors prefer to age in their homes, so it is critical that [they] are able to adapt and maintain their homes" and that SHARP, the seniors' home adaptation and repair program, "is a crucial step towards making aging in the right place a possibility for all Alberta seniors."

We also did engage with Seniors United Now, another seniors' group here in the province, who also stated that they embrace the proposed program as it's written, believing that "a loan for needed repairs and modifications to seniors' homes can [in fact] assist them to remain in the comfort and safety of their homes for a longer period of time" to their greater benefit.

So some consultation has occurred, but I do appreciate that the member suggests that we do so on a thorough basis as part of the regulatory process to ensure that, in fact, if this program is enacted as of July 1, as is proposed, the program will best meet the needs of seniors and be something that they would want to participate in. Certainly, it's important if we're bringing forward programs in government that we want those to be taken up and used as much as possible.

In terms of the communications aspect I also really appreciate what the member had to say there. Certainly, having spent five years working in the communications field on such controversial topics as, say, the Metro Line here in Edmonton, I'm well aware of the importance of having good communication with the public. I'm well aware that, you know, how well a program functions, how well it's taken up, whether people are willing to participate is very contingent on how well the factors of that program, the uses of that program, the eligibility and accessibility to that program are communicated to the general public. So I certainly think the alliances we've already begun to build with these seniors' organizations here in Edmonton and across the province will be a very important part in communicating that information, working with all of our community partners to make sure we get that information out on the ground, particularly, as the member noted, on the issue of consumer protections to make sure the seniors are well aware of everything that's available to them and all the protections that they have in the operation of this program.

I appreciate the comments from the member there and his thoughts on that. In terms of that I guess I was wondering if he has any suggestions for particular groups or individuals that he would recommend that we approach to discuss this with.

Mr. McIver: Well, probably there are a number of seniors' groups that I could identify and get at. Perhaps the member would give me a day or two, and I could probably accumulate a note of some seniors' groups that the minister may want to consult with. Again, it's simply with – I think seniors understand that this is to loan them money to keep them in their house. It's the financial arrangements, in my view, that we need to make them comfortable with. I will take the offer up from the hon. member to have some seniors that I know, some representatives of seniors' groups, contact him and put some questions together that I think they will find necessary to be answered from the legislation. Perhaps we can get to a place where we'll not only have a piece of legislation that's passed and not only well intended but used.

Mr. Dach: It gives me great pride today to rise under 29(2)(a) and speak to Bill 5 and some of the concerns raised by the Member for Calgary-Hays, and I do ... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today in support of Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. I can tell you that during the election many people in my community were concerned with the fact that similar programs by the previous government were going to receive cutbacks, leaving many seniors wondering how they might afford important repairs on their homes. These costs are often unforeseen and can force people to move out of the communities which they've spent their entire lives in. We need to do everything in our power to keep these seniors in the comfort of their homes, and the broadened scope on repairs which is offered through Bill 5 will do exactly that.

I can think of many people in my community who will be able to access this program, in particular the many seniors in Meadowlark who are on fixed incomes. Our office sees many of these seniors, and it is sometimes and often a last resort for them. These seniors are often one unforeseen cost away from losing their homes, which they worked their entire lives to save for. I am proud that, if passed, I will have one extra tool to support them.

We know that aging in place is important for seniors and their families. Not only does it promote independence and a better quality of life, but it also benefits our health care system and our communities as a whole. This program will be available to about 260,000 seniors, and unlike a bank loan, seniors will only pay simple interest, not compound. The loan can also be paid on the sale of their house instead of month to month if the senior so chooses.

There are many pieces within this proposed legislation that I am happy to support. It broadens the scope of repairs and renovations, increases consumer protections for the contracting process, and promotes aging in place. The initiatives within this bill – increasing consumer protections, making life affordable for seniors, supporting the idea of aging in place – are all ideas that we as New Democrats campaigned on. We told our communities that we would support our seniors and their families, and that is exactly what this legislation will do. I think that we can all agree that our seniors deserve to live out their lives where they choose, with dignity and independence.

I am proud to support Bill 5. I know it will benefit the seniors and their families in the Meadowlark community. I know this because they have asked for programs similar to this. Seniors need help now. This is not about ideology. This is about doing the right thing for seniors in our communities today. I'd like to thank the Minister of Seniors and Housing for putting Bill 5 forward, and I encourage all members to support it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to stand up under 29(2)(a) and ask a question to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. I'd just like to touch on what my partner here from Drumheller-Stettler was alluding to earlier, when he talked about Hanna.

I'd just like to use an example that happened in the recent past in British Columbia, where the community of Tumbler Ridge was, you know, a very vast and vibrant community. Housing there went from an average starter home of about $300,000 and dropped down to $25,000 with the closure of the coal mine. So when you talk about a community like Hanna or Forestburg, where you have a senior that's lived in the house that maybe they only paid $40,000 for, and now the house is worth $200,000, and they go and apply for this loan, and they get approved for $40,000 – then we close the coal-fired generation and the coal mines in those communities, and housing drops through the floor like it did in Tumbler Ridge. I mean, that's an example that you can look up, and it's a fact. What do we do with these seniors? Does the member think that this could cause a financial stretch to the seniors living in those communities like Hanna, as previously mentioned? What does he propose the government do in situations like that?

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much to the member for the question. I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Centre who said: I apologize, but I'm not a real estate agent. Unfortunately, I definitely see where you're coming from. It's quite possible that situations like that could happen, I suppose. Well, they have been proven to happen, but unfortunately there's not a whole lot that we can do about that. I think that this program will support the seniors in my community, and it's up to the senior to really evaluate whether this program is right for them. It won't necessarily be right for everyone, but this is just another tool for them to have when they're looking at making life more affordable for themselves.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Cooper: Please. Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comments. I'm just a little bit seeking some clarification on, then, why we would want to be in the real estate business.

Mr. Carson: Thank you to the member for the question. I don't think that we are in the real estate business. I think that we're in the business of supporting seniors, and that's what this bill does.

The Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just reflecting as I was listening to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and, of course, listening to the important questions from our members opposite on some of the issues that they were raising and that were raised by the member here as well and then just sort of reflecting that, certainly, I think it's beneficial, then, that our government is moving forward with our climate leadership plan, which will be providing a transition for communities like Hanna and some of the others that have been mentioned that may be affected by coal closure so that when we're looking at situations where seniors do have their homes in these communities, these communities will be able to benefit from a transition to more renewable products, finding new economies, new businesses that can operate in these areas to ensure that we can continue to allow people to remain in these rural Alberta areas, to be able to support those communities, to be able to continue and themselves be able to age in place in those communities and then have the opportunity to benefit from this program.

I was wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark had any thoughts on the possibilities that that offers there.

Mr. Carson: Sure. Well, I agree with everything the member just said in terms of how these programs could help rural communities in terms of transitioning.

But, I mean, it's been said before that any opportunity that we have to support seniors aging in place – honestly, I can tell you that I've had conversations with our counterparts in the municipal government, who have been talking to me about programs that they would like to start that would directly benefit from this program.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake under 29(2)(a).

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, 29(2)(a). Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: are we to understand that when the people in Hanna, 500 of whom may be losing their jobs because of this climate action plan of this government, are going to lose their jobs and their real estate values are going to decline, this transition thing that this hon. member is talking about is going to completely replace those 500 jobs, which average $92,000 a year in income?

An Hon. Member: Is that the question?

Mr. MacIntyre: That's the question.

Mr. Carson: Well, thank you very much to the member for the question. You know, I stand here today in full support of our climate leadership plan, thank you. I believe that it will lead a way forward. As has been said before, our federal counterparts were unable to offer a solution to these communities that they were planning on phasing out in the first place, so we will make the transition, and we will help these communities.

Thank you very much. [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Mr. MacIntyre: Coward.

Point of Order Inflammatory Language

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite just called the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark a coward. I demand that he stand up in his place and apologize.

Mr. MacIntyre: I apologize for said comment. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for calling the hon. member a coward for not answering my question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. I didn't hear the last part of your comment.

Mr. MacIntyre: I will certainly apologize for calling the hon. member a coward for not answering my question.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, that still leaves an implication that the hon. member refused to answer the question. In fact, the time ran out, as that hon. member well knows.

The Speaker: Hon. member, are you prepared to make any other statements with respect to the point being made?

Mr. MacIntyre: I just withdraw.

The Speaker: Did you apologize, sir?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes.

The Speaker: Could you please stand?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes, sir. I apologized, and I withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Debate Continued

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for the opportunity to stand and talk to Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. I have a huge heart for all seniors and especially for the seniors in my community. I meet almost monthly with the region 2 Council on Aging, and I'm here to represent their needs and hope that you will truly take to heart what I have to say here today.

While I support the stated intent of this bill, which is to help Alberta seniors stay in their homes for longer, I have a few concerns I'd like to bring forward, one of which I brought forward in my question there. Seniors I have talked to so far would rather see government offer help with day-to-day services to help keep them in their homes rather than a loan program that allows them to renovate their homes when low-interest loans are already available through local banks if needed. With this in mind, I have to ask: what research and consultation led to this legislation? Can you please tell all of us here in this Legislature and all Albertans why the minister chose to introduce this new, untested program instead of focusing on improving existing programs?

I fully support seniors staying in their homes and staying in their communities that they've been part of for years. I know that this adds to their longevity and health and also to the value of our communities. We know from studies that when seniors remain in familiar surroundings close to family and friends, they generally fare better mentally and physically. Most important of all, we know that the majority of seniors want to stay in their homes.

11:00

Top-quality care and services for seniors is a Wildrose priority. While I'm sure this bill was brought about with good intentions, I certainly do have a few concerns with the structure of the program. I do hope that I'm able to get some answers from the minister and the government in response to some of these issues.

Just like all Albertans, seniors are worried about their futures and the future of this province. They're worried about the consequences of risky, ideological legislation and the effect it could have on their futures. Just last week I rose and spoke in this House about the 4.6 per cent increase to property taxes for the residents of Vilna due to the NDP government's inaction because they refused to reinstate the grants in lieu of taxes program. I know that a lot of residents have moved out to smaller communities because the houses are cheaper than they are in the city, and now the town has to raise their taxes because of these actions, or, rather, the irresponsible actions of this government. I'm hearing this concern often as I travel in my constituency. Municipalities, like all other forms of government, only have one source of income, and that is the taxpayer.

The government can't continue to download costs for provincial responsibilities onto municipalities. When it does, the NDP government forces municipalities to in turn download these costs, this time to the residents, many of whom are seniors on fixed incomes. On issues like these it's a matter of priorities. Wildrose believes that an efficient government should cut wasteful spending so that it can afford to meet its financial obligations. In other areas such as reinstating the grants in lieu of taxes program to ensure that seniors and other Albertans' property taxes don't go up, we need to support our municipalities. Our seniors deserve our very best. We're talking about our parents and grandparents, who have cared for us all our lives, and we have the opportunity here to ensure that Bill 5 does only the very best for those people, who have always tried to do their very best for us.

Some Albertans are fearful and have reservations about this bill and other decisions this government has made. I would like to take the time to express a few that I've heard or identified so far. I've heard concerns about the government allowing adequate time to consult with seniors to see if they truly think there is a need for a loan program like this. Personally, I know I would like to have much more time to speak with the groups from my riding such as the Council on Aging, that will be meeting in June. I'm scheduled to meet with them again. It would be really nice to sit down with them and discuss their thoughts on this.

I'm also concerned because there seems to be a lot of information missing from Bill 5. The bill states that "the amount of a loan, together with interest, is a debt owing to the Crown in right of Alberta." It also states that "a loan is subject to the terms and conditions provided for by the regulations." So the terms of the loan will be in the regulations, which could at any time change, under the sole direction and discretion of the minister after the bill is passed. This is a real concern for me, and it should be a very big concern for seniors.

It also states in subsection (6):

The Minister, in consultation with the Minister determined under section 16 of the Government Organization Act as the Minister responsible for the Financial Administration Act, shall periodically determine the rate of interest applicable to loans based on an estimate of the Government's cost of funding loans under this Act, including the cost of making and administering the loans.

Again, the government can change the interest rates on loans our seniors become responsible for when they sell their houses, and these changes will come through regulation, at the discretion of government, with no legislative oversight. These questions deserve our attention because taking care of our seniors is vitally important. The people who have built this province with their sweat deserve our best.

Another one of my concerns is that seniors have often scrimped and saved, have paid taxes their entire lives, and worked hard to purchase their homes. For many of them that home is their retirement plan. Anything that affects this major investment is a big deal and one that I know seniors will not take lightly. It's okay to take out a loan when you're in an advancing, growing economy, but when you're in one that's in flux and likely to decline, it's very, very risky.

With the taxes that they already incur in my riding, especially in one small village that saw an increase in their taxes last year of 80 per cent at one point, many of these people are on fixed incomes, and they simply cannot afford it. They will likely face increases to their energy bills due to the decisions this government has made in addition to increased taxes on their properties, all of these increases when they are on a fixed income.

There are precautions in this legislation to regulate and oversee the construction work that is being done and to make sure that the seniors are being protected financially. The desire to protect seniors from those who would take advantage is an excellent idea, but there are other acts and laws that also have provisions for this sort of protection. Could the minister assure this Assembly that there is no overlap or conflict with other consumer protection agencies?

Mr. Speaker, this bill needs to be done right the first time. We should take the time to get this right for the seniors of our province. So far the government has had a hard time monitoring infrastructure projects. How will it possibly monitor up to 140,000 new home renovation projects? Who will oversee this? Does the government really have the capacity to administer what could potentially be a very large volume of loans? The minister has claimed that it will be managed without any additional government resources, but will she clarify in this Assembly whether we will require government hiring to make this program a reality? We're very unclear on that.

I'm sure that the intentions of Bill 5 are good. We all agree with keeping seniors in their homes. I have an aunt who is 97 years old. She farmed all her life. She now lives in town, and she still gets out and gardens every year. Now, she doesn't need a loan to stay in her home, but she could sure use some daily help or even a couple of days when somebody would come and visit just to make sure she is eating right. You know, she doesn't need a loan to stay in her home, but a little bit of help from the government to assist with her living and to make her more comfortable would be great.

Let's make sure we work together to come up with some fair legislation and show the seniors of this province that we will take the time to get it right for them. Seniors are living longer and healthier lives than previous generations, and more and more seniors are able to live in their homes longer, a situation that is simply good for everyone. As I mentioned before, it's good for our communities to have these seniors as mentors for our children.

According to a government of Canada report, between 2014 and 2036 the average life expectancy for a 65-year-old is projected to increase by 1.8 years for women and by 1.9 years for men to 86 and a half years of age. Let's make sure that there are safety mechanisms in place to protect their interests and to help them succeed not only in their homes but also if and when they decide to sell their homes. Retirement homes are very costly, and we know that these seniors will rely on the sale of their homes and the profit from them on the day that they may need to leave their homes.

I look forward to hearing the continuing debate on Bill 5 in second reading, and hopefully we can come to some agreements on this. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a). The member opposite raised a number of issues and concerns with respect to the bill, and I'd like to respond to a couple of them.

In the spirit of supporting seniors, we know that we're talking about a quality-of-life issue and the ability of seniors to stay in their home for longer than they otherwise might by offering them, basically, a reverse mortgage type of program, which will not replace but will enhance the former grant program that was in place with the former government. This program will see a savings of about $6 million for this government by ensuring that the grant program is retained, a $2 million component, and offering an opportunity for seniors who are eligible to expand the types of repairs that they might be able to do to their home under this loan program.

The loan program that we're offering is expected to be taken up by probably in the neighbourhood of I would think about 5,500 people. The grant was adopted or taken up by around 7,000, so we expect that about 1,750 may take up the grant. We're estimating that a further three-quarters of that 7,000 might be willing to take up the loan.

As far as the uptake is concerned, we don't know for sure about it. Certainly, it definitely needs to be properly advertised and really communicated well to our seniors population. I understand and accept that the program whereby people who are seniors, eligible and owning their own home, could defer their taxes did not have a huge take-up on that opportunity for the reason that I and other members have indicated in the past, that seniors do want to protect their equity for their loved ones and pass on that asset to family members.

However, we do believe and have good reason to believe that the uptake will be higher here because seniors are not looking at an intangible here. It's a very tangible thing they're doing with this money. They're accessing the equity in their home to improve it and probably improve the value of their home so that when it does change hands upon their passing or upon their sale of the property, they'll have an asset that's worth more than it otherwise might have been. So there's also security in the investment that they're making in improving their home. It accomplishes a number of things. It allows them to stay in their own home longer, and it improves the property itself, increases the value of the property.

As well, another thing it does is that by keeping those seniors in their home longer, it also keeps them out of longer term care, which is a huge savings to the government. It's a quality-of-life issue as well because the average lifespan of somebody going into longer term care is shorter than that of somebody who is staying in their own home.

As far as overlap with other programs or with other legislation, we've determined that that won't be the case. In addition to the act that the member opposite referenced, this loan program will be established. The equity retention of 25 per cent is a safety measure for all concerned, particularly for the senior who may qualify for it. We wanted to ensure that seniors did manage to maintain at least 25 per cent of their equity after the loan maximum that had been applied for was applied to that equation, and this gives a measure of protection to seniors so that they don't end up having a situation where they're under water financially because of the loan that they've gotten.

There were some points raised by members opposite regarding properties that may be in smaller communities, where the value of properties is quite a bit smaller. The department will be paying special attention to those, but the same equations will apply as far as making sure that the home equity retention of 25 per cent is still applicable. It may be that in some cases where the home value is quite low, the grant portion of this program may be more applicable.

I could speak to a number of other issues, but in the interests of time I'll allow the member opposite to perhaps respond with questions you might have.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To be clear, I don't disagree completely with this bill, and I don't dismiss it in its entirety. We agree with it in principle.

You did mention – and it's been mentioned quite a few times – that there has been consultation on this, yet you state that you have no idea what the uptake is going to be.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this morning to speak in support of this bill, and I would like to say that my colleagues have made some excellent points on why this bill should be supported.

What I'd like to do in my few moments is that I'm going to talk about maybe a couple of issues that people haven't addressed so far. The first is that I don't think it's just about keeping seniors at home. It's also about keeping seniors safe at home, so I'm going to talk a little bit about why I think it's important in that regard. Then I want to spend a few minutes just dealing with some of the criticisms that the other side have made on the bill.

When I say that it's more than just about keeping seniors at home, I'm kind of drawing on my experience as an insurance agent in rural Alberta, where as part of my job I inspected, well, hundreds of homes, many of them belonging to seniors. We have to inspect homes for insurance purposes. We're basically looking at: what is the likelihood of this house burning down? What is the likelihood of having liability issues; for example, somebody falling down the cellar stairs and breaking their neck, and so on? We also look to issues like: is there going to be any degradation of the house because of a faulty roof, things like that?

Going out and inspecting, you know, some of these farms in my area sometimes would just create some real moral dilemmas for me as an agent. You'd go to a property that maybe 20, 30 years before had been in good condition but had degraded very considerably, and you'd have maybe an old widow staying in the house by herself and in unsafe conditions but without the funds available to be able make the necessary repairs but – and this is true of a lot of our rural folks – too stubborn to actually move, right? The dilemma would be: well, what do I do? Do I put in an accurate evaluation of the property and see this poor person's insurance get cancelled because the home is in fact uninsurable, or do I try and work with the family and work through other means to try and get it up?

I think it's a real misnomer for people to think that this is an issue about whether a person is going to be going into a home or staying in their house. A lot of these seniors are going to be staying in their homes regardless. This is just one more tool that we can have in our quiver to make sure that they have the funds available to be safe – right? – to replace that outdated electrical breaker box, to repair the roof so they don't have leakage and then get black mould and issues like that, to put on railings for going down into the cellar. I think it's really important that way. In that sense, we already have people that are living in dangerous circumstances, so I think the sooner, the better.

Also, I think another reason that sooner is better is because this is the ideal time for this type of program. Why is that? We are in a situation where, unlike just a few years ago, you have contractors that are looking for work and are prepared to do that work at very reasonable rates. I think this actually does speak as well to the Member for Calgary-Shaw's concerns about communication and uptake. Right now we actually would have a very motivated group of people to inform seniors about the existence and availability of the program, and these would be the contractors that are looking for work. I think that kind of addresses some of those concerns.

Just to step back for some of the concerns expressed by the Official Opposition about a lot of it being left to regulations, I'm having some difficulty quite understanding their argument because it seems like they're saying two contradictory things. The one thing they're saying is: well, we can't trust the government to put these through as regulations; we need to have this all in legislation because it all has to be up front. Now, of course, when you do that in legislation, we actually have to come back before the House in order to change it. It's something that's very difficult to change on the fly, to adjust for circumstances, that type of thing. That's the one concern: put everything up front.

The second concern: well, what happens if there are changes in home equity, you know, if the value of homes in particular neighbourhoods decreases, and what happens if the interest rate goes down? I mean, you have all these variables, so how do you have bills or acts that can actually adjust for things that are variable? You put them in the regulations so that they can be adjusted as they need to be.

It's for those types of reasons that I think this bill does make a lot of sense, and it makes a lot of sense to do it now. Now, we do have a consultation period, as the minister stated, from now until July 1, and there will be plenty of opportunities, I think, for seniors and other associated stakeholders to have a chance to work with it.

I'm in favour of this bill, and I really appreciate the minister thinking of our seniors and doing our best for them while at the same time not imposing undue burdens on the taxpayer. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. I certainly respect his input when it does come to seniors, but I'd also question the understanding that he brings forward of government involvement in legislation regarding seniors' development when in his own personal life he's come from a private industry relating to insurance whereas in other jurisdictions; i.e., Saskatchewan – recently, I guess, they've changed it – have only government-mandated insurance. It'd be my question as to why the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater on one hand would advocate for government involvement, government relationships primarily when it comes to seniors but not necessarily in an industry that he comes from.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you. I'd like to thank the member for the question. I'm not sure that I really see a conflict between my previous role in the private insurance industry and my support for this program. In fact – and this might be a bit of speculation on my part – I think that the private insurance industry could actually help alleviate some of the concerns other members have expressed over this.

Now, the reason why I don't think it's a conflict is because it actually speaks to an unfortunate catch-22 when it comes to private-industry home equity loans because what happens in your private home equity loan, just going beyond the terms and all that, is that generally you have an obligation to show an insurance certificate to be able to guarantee that the bank's equity in the house is protected in case of a fire or some other unforeseen event. Now, unfortunately, if you're a senior in a situation where your house is uninsurable and, in fact, that is the reason why you need to do these renovations, you're caught in this catch-22, right? You can't get the loan from the private company until you make the changes that you're borrowing to make. Whereas in this program – and I looked carefully, you know – unless this gets changed in committee, although there is a requirement to keep it at about 25 per cent of equity, there is no insurance requirement. So what this would do would be to provide an avenue for seniors who wouldn't otherwise be able to qualify for home equity loans in the private market to be able to bring their residences up to code. I think that addressed that.

Was there a second question? If so, I could cede the floor again to you, but I think I may have addressed it. If I haven't, I'm happy to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park. Under 29(2)(a)?

Cortes-Vargas: Yes. Thank you very much. It was really interesting hearing the member's experiences going to the different homes. I know that one of the changes with this bill from the previous program, the example program, the special needs assistance program, is that it allows for an increased cost of the loan. I guess my question to you is: do you see a benefit, having seen some of the houses, in seniors having access to more money in order to make, specifically, home repairs? That's also the difference with this one versus the previous program being offered. It had a limit to how much home repair they were allowed to make with that application.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah, I'd have to say that there is definitely a benefit, as my colleague has stated, in having this, where you don't have that limit on the home repairs.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the member to further expand on this concept of insurability. I would have thought that by putting improvements into the home, we would see increased levels of insurability. That that might include things like lifts in the home or accessibility things as well as fire protection.

Mr. Piquette: Well, lifts and that type of equipment, if I understand the question, wouldn't really impact the insurability either way. However, things like repairs definitely would.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just want to use the opportunity to remind the entire House, not just a few, under Standing Order 23 to be conscious of the language that we use and the respect for each other. That's what produces productivity here, and I just would like you to continue to keep that in mind.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. [interjection]

Mr. MacIntyre: Coincidental, I'm sure.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. This bill seems to be a well-intentioned attempt to help seniors stay in their homes for as long as possible, which is an excellent idea. Albertans are increasingly worried about how they're going to make ends meet, and as this slump continues and more people are out of work for longer periods of time, the government's lack of meaningful action, of course, is a huge cause of concern for Albertans. As one of the hon. members from across the way said, Albertans need action from this government now more than ever, but I do want to add: let's not leap into something before we've taken the time to have a thorough conversation with all of our seniors to make this bill a better one.

Bill 5 sets out to tackle a noble goal, and we know it's a goal shared by Alberta seniors, 91 per cent of whom state that they would prefer to stay in their own homes as they age. It's a goal we should work toward because they have a right to stay where they're comfortable, among friends, their family, and in familiar surroundings, which is very important to seniors' health, so that they can be independent for just as long as possible. Through their hard work and sacrifice, their years of patient perseverance and fierce tenacity our seniors built this great province. They and their parents worked to make our province the best place in the world to live and raise a family. Ensuring that seniors who need assistance can receive it in a stable, reliable, and efficient way is a priority for Wildrose, as it should be for any government, and giving support to seniors who need it to be able to enjoy their well-deserved retirement in the comfort of their own home for as long as possible should certainly be a priority, too.

Is this bill the best way to achieve that outcome? I'm concerned that it may not be as complete as it needs to be. A bill of this nature and of this scope, one that proposes to introduce an untested system, apparently the first of its kind in the whole country, deserves some time for serious consideration and broad consultation. We rely on this engagement to inform us about what Albertans want and what Albertans need, and there is no room in a democratic government for elected representatives to lose sight of their responsibility to fully engage the citizens who elect them.

We saw the response to that kind of governance just a few months ago with Bill 6. The government presented a bill before taking the time to hear from the very people it would impact. It tried to throw its weight around and shake things up in a very specific area on a broad mandate to govern, but Albertans across the province made it clear that the government could not act like this with impunity. They told us and they told this government loud and clear that they were not happy with a government that broke their trust and tried to push through legislation without broad, meaningful, careful consultation.

Unfortunately for the NDP and for Albertans, the comparisons to Bill 6 don't stop with this inherent discouragement of consultation. The government's approach to Bill 5 mirrors its original approach to Bill 6 in that it is trying to pass skeleton legislation, with the understanding that it will flesh out the details through regulatory changes after the law is in place, regulatory changes that will not be open to debate. This is exactly the same thing they tried to do with their ill-fated Bill 6. The NDP government is asking this Assembly and all Albertans to trust them to make wise regulatory additions to this legislation through the back door, so to speak.

Albertans have watched this government fumble on a variety of issues, with mistakes like the mismanagement of the power system, which will end up with Albertans seeing their power bills go up; by imposing ideological, job-killing policies like a $3 billion carbon tax, that they did not campaign on, that will raise the price of everything in this province; and by completely failing to present real action on any substantial plan to get Albertans back to work. I remember time and again members opposite claiming that 23,000 jobs were going to be created by their jobs action plan, and to date we have seen not one – not one – except for the minister's job.

Bill 5 doesn't even include the key points that will have to be clarified later on through regulatory changes, not even the headings. Can the government tell this Assembly how many seniors are going to be able to stay in their homes directly as a result of this legislation? We know how many seniors might qualify, but how many will actually succeed in staying in their homes through this legislation? Can they tell us whether the bill will really address the issues seniors have identified as priorities? Can the minister give us information about how much this program will cost to administer both in terms of operational cost and how much the government will expect to borrow?

I can tell you that in my riding, which is home to many seniors, the average age of farmers in my community is 60. We have, I would say, a higher than normal aging demographic in Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. And the biggest priority that they're telling me about, a higher priority than repairs or adaptations to their home, happens to be the need for people. They need in-home care, people who can be there for them, to support them, to help them when they need that help, whether that's family, friends, neighbours, or some extra helping hands. They're looking for people. That's the number one concern I hear from my constituents. I'm sure my colleagues will have other priorities to raise on behalf of their constituents as we continue to examine this bill.

Now, wouldn't the government agree that something as important as looking out for the people who built Alberta is worth getting right the very first time? Will the government consider slowing this process down to make sure that we truly help seniors where they tell us that they need that help and do so in a very transparent, responsible, accountable, and fulsome way? By sending this bill to standing committee, the government could ensure that this Assembly presents and passes a fully documented, well-thought-out program that would do right by our seniors. These people didn't build us a sloppy, haphazard province, and they don't deserve last-minute, rushed legislation like this. I am willing to believe the government wants to genuinely help seniors, but even the best intentions are no substitute for fully reasoned, sensible initiatives that can reliably produce positive outcomes. That requires the collective input that the standing committee structure was originally created to provide.

I'll close with this. Wildrose is fully committed to helping seniors live in the comfort of their own homes for as long as possible. Not only is it the wish of most seniors, but it also reduces strain on our health care system so that it's there when they really need it. It allows them to have a much better quality of life in the communities and surrounded by familiar surroundings. I would like to see a bill that addresses this issue effectively, and I wish it was more clear at this stage that this Bill 5 would actually do so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, today. I'd first like to share that I actually had some personal experience in the past. In 1994, when my father was 87 years old, he was in a position where he did not have a fixed pension and wanted to live in his own home for as long as he was able to. That was 22 years ago. We did after much research embark on a reverse mortgage for him, which did a little bit more than what this program does. It allowed him to take out a certain amount of cash, which was converted into an annuity, which allowed him to then access home care, live-in home care, which he required at the time. Again, I think it was a tough decision for him to make but easy for me to make because I didn't expect anything from his estate and wanted him to live in his home as long as he possibly could. Quite frankly, I didn't care if there was one penny left of equity in that home if he was able to live where he wanted to live.

You know, I think, as my esteemed colleague said before, there is a reluctance amongst the seniors to give up equity in the homes. This was a generation that burned their mortgages after 20 or 25 years of fixed 4 per cent mortgages and were very proud to do so and are very, very reluctant to give up that equity. They feel an obligation, I think, to pass on an estate to their children or grandchildren, which I would hope in most cases is not an expectation from most people – but in fact it is – and/or a feeling of obligation from this generation, which feels that they have that necessity to do rather than taking care of themselves.

I have some concerns. I mean, there are many programs out there. We've seen in the past from the federal government the HASI program, home adaptations for seniors' independence, which I did some research on. It does not appear to be in place broadly. The RRAP, residential rehabilitation assistance program, also does not seem to be in place, which also concerns me, that the federal government is not stepping up to do their part, but that's not the issue today. There is also the special-needs program, which is available through the Alberta government for special needs, more for adaptation for homes as well. So it's not that we're without programs, that there are not programs there.

In principle this is a very good approach and a very good opportunity, I think, to move forward. However, I do have some concerns. The tax deferral program as reported in the Calgary Herald in June 2015: that program was established in 2013. There were fewer than 2,000 people who had actually taken advantage of that tax deferral program, which is, of course, in my mind, a first step to assisting seniors with supplementing their income if they're on a fixed income to be able to live a better life while living in their homes. That concerns me.

This is versus an uptake in British Columbia of 36,555, with an additional 6,000 people per year taking advantage of that program in British Columbia. Now, they have a flat 1 per cent rate as opposed to a prime rate. Maybe there is a game here not only of education and concerns of the education of the program, which I do not believe that we've done as well as we could in this province, to allow people to at least consider this option, but there could be something about the fact of looking at the interest rates possibly being higher than what they're willing to accept, so that 1 per cent in B.C. The other thing is that they allow it for 55-plus, which is interesting. I'm not sure if that's something I would advocate for, but certainly that's what they do in B.C. and are able to move forward with that.

The other concern I have with this legislation in speaking with the minister, the proposing minister, is that there are current reverse mortgages. As I noted, 22 years ago those programs were quite fledgling at the time, but I did some homework, and the HomeEquity Bank and the CHIP, or Canadian home income program, were established in I believe 1986 in British Columbia. So that product has been available for over 30 years or about 30 years at this point in time, and I didn't get the sense from the ministry that they'd actually talked to the industry, and I think that we need to be cautious although again I agree with the opportunity to assist Albertans. But I also think that we should also talk to the private sector, who is already engaged in this marketplace in a deeper way. Of course, this is not just for home repairs and adaptation, but they can create equity and annuity programs to help people live in their homes for an extended period of time, up to a maximum of 55 per cent of the equity in their homes with no requirement to pay either on that particular program. In fact, it looks like this legislation was modelled after many of the private models we've seen.

I've put in a call to a former colleague who has been involved with the reverse mortgage business for about 20 years, and I'm hoping to get some insights from him on whether they're actually viewing this as government competing with them. I wonder, again, whether the cost of administration of this program is something that we need to take on as an additional expense to government during tough times when, in fact, we have an industry that is administering it. Having been myself in the building industry, buying down mortgages is not an unusual thing. The rates that I've seen are not usurious. It might be cheaper for the Alberta government not to get into the business of mortgages and to actually buy down the mortgages through companies that are already doing it or to negotiate with them to maybe saw it off for them to offer better rates and for us to buy down those rates at a much lower cost to the Alberta taxpayer.

It concerns me that maybe we have not done as much deep research on some of the other options to achieve the same result for Alberta seniors and possibly to allow them a greater breadth here not just to do home repairs but to have an income which will last as long as they are able to stay in that home, which, I think, is in many cases what is the challenge for many of these seniors. The repairs are one thing, but that's a one-shot deal. For many of them it's actually not having that income. So the tax deferral program would give them that additional income on an annual basis and/or having a longer term opportunity to get an annuity to help them to manage costs, possibly of increasing home care. Those components that are not handled by government assistance programs currently could be a big issue.

I think, as noted again by my esteemed colleague, that there's a bit more work to be done here and a bit more consultation with seniors. Again, we're not seeing that uptake on the tax deferral program. What are the reasons that we're not having that? Is it informational? Is it educational? Is it insuring? What I've heard from many seniors is that they don't get the full, robust information they require until they're in a crisis situation. When I'm hearing that, I'm hearing that the crisis counsellors have that information. Why are we waiting to get to that point? So the front line, the first line of attack, counsellors that are meeting with the seniors, is not able to provide them the full solutions whereas the crisis ones are, and there seems to be a disconnect there, that we can't provide all of those services until there is a crisis.

So it looks to me like we do need to do a little bit more research on this. I'm fully supportive of anything that we can do to help seniors stay in their homes. I think it is a positive thing. I also believe that when we talk about aging in place or seniors in their homes, it's not necessarily in the 50-year-old bungalow that they've lived in for their entire life; it's about appropriate housing. I'm currently going through a situation where we're moving my in-laws from a single-family residence into a seniors' retirement residence, which, of course, is another interesting challenge and initiative in itself. But what it is is that they've actually found a place where they're happier.

To me, aging in place is not necessarily, again, where you are today. It's about looking at and creating more innovative solutions and choice for seniors as they age so that they can have lower maintenance expectations and costs and those sorts of things, which will allow them to age in a place which is appropriate for where they are in their life and to maybe move through that aging in place within a community which has great choice.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to speak to this bill. Thank you to the minister for bringing this particular bill forward. I think it is a very positive initiative, needs a bit of work, but I hope that we can get to a point where we're offering the best options at the lowest cost to the Alberta taxpayer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Dach: Yes, under 29(2)(a) I plan to speak, and I appreciate the member opposite's comments with respect to Bill 5. The Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act is a targeted bill which is designed to assist seniors to stay in their homes as long as possible. Those eligible seniors, homeowners who wish to take advantage of the loan program, can do so, of course, voluntarily. It's not anticipated that we would turn this into some kind of annuity program. There may be other opportunities to discuss some type of program like that, but this was really designed to very quickly allow seniors to take advantage of a program which would allow those that couldn't otherwise afford to do these renovations to access the equity in their homes to take advantage of the opportunity to stay in them longer.

I don't think the uptake on this is something that one can a hundred per cent anticipate until the program is in place. The concern, of course, expressed by members opposite that the uptake will be similar to what was found under the tax deferral program I think is unwarranted because there is an actual, tangible benefit that will be realized by seniors who do access the loan program in that they will be making improvements to their property, increasing the value of their property while at the same time making it more convenient, comfortable, and livable for them to stay in, therefore saving the government money, of course, because they're staying in their own home and they're not accessing long-term care earlier than they might otherwise.

Now, as far as the communications process, the ministry will facilitate a targeted communications strategy upon the launch of the program. We publish as a ministry communications to seniors annually, and as cosponsor of the bill I also know that the ministry connects directly with seniors when administering seniors' benefits. The ministry's community partners and seniors' umbrella organizations will all inform their members as well.

As far as the outside factors that can contribute to or impact the equity in your home, to address concerns by other members who may have thought that properties in smaller communities would suffer because of perhaps a closure of a coal mine or other resource industry, lots of factors will affect home equity, not only this. They're certainly considered and anticipated in this bill. Outside factors can include many things that we're well aware of by taking a look at our annual tax assessment, knowing that that does go up and down.

We know that seniors and their families will ensure that they evaluate all the factors before applying. Certainly, those that do apply aren't going to be the seniors who have a ready lump of cash sitting in their bank account. They're going to be those seniors whose incomes have diminished because they're no longer in the workforce, whose homes still require maintenance, and who aren't able to afford it otherwise because they don't have the savings that they need in order to make the investment to improve the home. This is a very targeted program designed to assist those eligible seniors who wouldn't otherwise be able to afford to do the improvements to their home. It's not designed to be a be-all, end-all annuity program as the member opposite alluded to.

This targeted program, we think, will be very beneficial and will have significant uptake. We'll monitor that. As far as the capacity for the department to handle it, we anticipate that the department will be able to absorb the demand upon its resources as far as the application process. There's not going to be a huge surge of applications anticipated. It will be more of a flat line level. We've consulted with the department, and we're certain that the cost of the application process can be absorbed within the staffing levels that they have, and there won't be an operational increase required as a result of the implementation of this new loan program and the grant alternative as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Yes. Thank you to the member for his comments, and thank you for filling in some of the blanks there. You know, I've been involved in the past with some volunteer efforts. One was called paint the town, through volunteer Calgary. We actually went to seniors' homes and painted their houses and renovated some of the outside spaces. So we did what this program actually does on a volunteer basis. Maybe it would be really nice if we could see more of that happening in our communities as well.

You know, really, I think that this program is meant, as you said, for a short term and is meant for an immediate capital investment in the property. To me, that is also one of my concerns, that it does achieve that in the short term.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and speak in support of Bill 5. What we can't forget in this Assembly here is what this bill is really about, and that is about allowing seniors to stay in their homes and to age in place, and that is exactly what seniors want.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I'm going to tell a little anecdote about my own maternal grandmother and how this program may have benefited her. She lived to her last day in her own home. We made arrangements to find a seniors' housing arrangement that would allow her to live in assisted living with her modest means, but as many seniors want to do, she wanted to stay at home. They have their own furniture, their hobbies. They don't want to leave their possessions behind. How do you force somebody out of their own home? It's not possible. You don't want to do that to somebody, and they don't want to have it done to them. The best we could do for her was to agree to get her one of the medical alert bracelets, where she could alert us that something was wrong as well as go to 911 on that.

You know, this would have been perfect in her situation. It would have allowed her to actually use the equity in her home to make her home safe, because it wasn't safe at that point. We all knew it, and I think she knew it as well, but stubbornness runs in the family.

You know, this bill is going to, as we've said, allow 260,000 eligible seniors to apply for this, and for those that are not eligible, we have restored a grant program that will allow people to access grants to improve their homes when they're not eligible under the other part of the program. Now, what I see this loan program doing as well, as part of this act, is improving the quality of life for seniors without impacting their finances on a day-to-day basis, and that's simply because the loan and interest charges don't have to be repaid until the sale of the property, which I think is going to entice a lot of people to do this.

One of the members asked earlier: well, how are you going to entice seniors to use this loan? Well, I can tell you that I've heard anecdotally from other members of the Assembly and I've already had many people in my office inquiring about this. The reason is that if they can't stay in their home, they want to stay at least in their neighbourhood, and they're not able to do this at this time, particularly in ridings like mine, which are very urban. The seniors' housing facilities are full, and it's hard for them to get in. There are huge waiting lists. So this is the alternative to this to allow them to stay in their neighbourhoods and their homes. The sheer fact of the matter, Madam Speaker, is that we need to address as a government and as a province the aging population right now, and this is one way to have an immediate impact on this.

The timeline for implementing this, which is July 1, 2016, will allow for further consideration, further development of regulations, and further consultation. However, there has been extensive consultation done on this already, and many of these organizations endorse this. I'm just going to name a few here: the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, the Alberta Council on Aging, the National Association of Federal Retirees, the Edmonton Seniors Coordinating Council, Seniors United Now, and the Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton. So there have already been several consultations done on this.

Just to go back to why seniors would use this, one aspect, other than that it's a necessity to stay in their neighbourhood, is the fact that we have mandated in this act that contractors will be required to inform seniors of this program, which is going to be a benefit. Not only will they inform the seniors about this and help them with their needs at home, but we also anticipate that this is going to put more Albertans back to work in the construction and adaptation of these homes.

We are constantly hearing about scams, if you will, that happen a lot to seniors, of course, so I'm very happy to see that the act includes four sections of legislation of consumer protection in addition to the Fair Trading Act.

There was also mention from one of the members about the special needs assistance program. Perhaps seniors don't want to adapt their home, but what they need is services in their home. Well, that piece of the SNA is still available with this act. So you can still get health and personal supports under that section. That's still available.

Now, Madam Speaker, the issue of what happens if property values go down and towns are moving on, I guess. I don't know how to put that. The reality of this act is that it's not designed for the government to make money. Believe it or not, not everything has to make money. This is being done in an altruistic manner that allows seniors to age in place, to make their homes livable as their needs change. I think we have to never forget that that's what this bill is about.

I'm very proud that we are moving in this direction, and I anticipate maybe using this myself one day. I anticipate many of us using this one day. If you haven't experienced caring for a senior yet, we all will. Let's be clear on that.

Anyway, I applaud this act. I am very confident that there will be a lot of use and that it is going to make seniors' lives in Alberta better. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a question. We keep hearing about the uptake and the consultation, and you mentioned the Alberta Council on Aging. I deal with them on a monthly basis, and to my knowledge, at least, that branch hasn't been consulted on this. My question is that if we have a hundred per cent uptake, which has a potential of 140,000 homes at $40,000, it comes out to $5.6 billion. Where is that money going to come from? Are we going to be borrowing more again on top of what's already been stated in the upcoming, or potential, budget? Don't you think that if we wanted to address seniors better, we might give them some assistance in reducing their property taxes on a monthly basis and their utility bills on a monthly basis? Would that not be, maybe, better to keep them in their homes?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I didn't quite hear that organization that you mentioned. Can I just hear that again?

Mr. Hanson: It's the Alberta Council on Aging, that you mentioned, sir.

Mr. Coolahan: Oh, yes. Thank you. I don't know if they were in fact consulted. I don't have them. But they may have been, and if not, they can be. That's why we have that time, right? That's why we have that space between now and when it's going to be implemented.

In terms of costs, yeah, I agree. I think we should reduce costs for our seniors who are in need, and there are deferral programs for seniors when it comes to paying utility bills and these sort of things. But I think that this is, as somebody put it, one more tool in the tool box to help seniors age in place and have a better life.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: With a look at the clock, Madam Speaker, I suggest that we advance the clock by a minute and call it 12.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, April 12, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Welcome. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House the fabulous students of Meyonohk school, who are here for School at the Leg. and will be spending the week with us. I've had the pleasure of hosting them in my office. There were quite a few of them – it got very crowded – but they had lots of wonderful questions. I'd like them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of this Chamber.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Seniors and Housing.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 41 grade 6 students from Notre-Dame elementary school, located in the beautiful riding of Edmonton-Riverview. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Paulin Larochelle and Ms Monique McBride.

Maintenant en français. Il est un honneur de présenter 41 élèves de la sixième année de l'école Notre-Dame. Ils sont accompagnés par leurs enseignants, M. Paulin Larochelle et Mme Monique McBride. L'école Notre-Dame est une école française.

They're seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I ask that they all rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Bienvenue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Welcome.

Hon. members, I'm privileged on behalf of all of you to acknowledge, because I'm about to acknowledge him at the first point in the Alberta Legislature, the Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly my guests who are seated in your gallery. First is my wonderful wife, Harmeet. She is a constant source of inspiration and is a wonderful mother to our two boys. Without her I wouldn't be here today. My two sons, Arjun and Jeevan, are here as well. Arjun is in grade 6, and Jeevan is in grade 3, and both attend a science charter school. I'm so blessed to have them with me here today as well.

My aunt and my uncle, Sukhwant Sandhu and Surinderpal Sandhu, are here with me today. They have been integral to my successes and a source of strength over the course of my life. I'm honoured they could join me for this special day today.

Next is my brother, Kanwardeep Gill. He is both my brother and a close friend. As a result of my family, a great deal of any successes I have had, including my election as an MLA, wouldn't be possible without my brother.

Last but not least is Mr. Mandeep Shergill. Mandeep was my campaign manager and a point person throughout my campaign. Now he's working out of my constituency office in Calgary-Greenway, where he will have the difficult task of keeping me on schedule – as you know, Calgary-Greenway is a lot of fun – and making sure everything runs smoothly. He was an integral part of the campaign team, and I thank him for his tireless effort in getting me elected.

I ask them to please rise, which they already did without my permission, and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome, and welcome to the new member.

The Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly many individuals from the Alberta Federation of Labour who are here for a lobby day event. The focus of this year's lobby day was child care, something we can all agree is important to this government and important to all Albertans. They met this morning with a variety of MLAs over breakfast and in meetings, and I trust that their conversations were productive. Our government is working to meet the early learning and child care needs of Alberta families. There are quite a few here in the gallery, so I will simply ask them to rise together and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House my husband, Scott Payne, who, actually, many of you already know. It is no exaggeration to say that I wouldn't be here today in this House if not for his love, support, and encouragement. I am eternally grateful to have him as my life partner and as coparent to our one, soon to be two daughters. Scott is a tireless advocate for workers' rights and social justice and a steadfast campaigner for progressive values in our province. Many of my colleagues had the opportunity to work with him during last year's election, and I think I speak for all of us when I say that we're happy he could join us today to watch our government in action. I would ask that he now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly two sets of guests. The first is Dr. C.V.B.T. Sundari. Her full name is Dr. Chintalapati Venkata Bala Tripura Sundari. She is the retired principal of an undergrad college in Nellore, India, and is visiting Canada these days. She has a PhD in English literature and is an avid artist who specializes in the Tanjore style of painting. She is also the mother-in-law of my constituency assistant, Roop Rai. Joining them today is Arohi Rai Elapavuluri, the four-year-old daughter of Roop Rai. They are also joined by Gurpal Gill, a friend and a firm supporter from my constituency of Calgary-McCall.

I also would like to introduce three Calgary Sikh youths representing the Basics of Sikhi, an organization. We are joined here today by Harman Singh Dhillon, Parmeet Sidhu, and Yog Sadra from that organization. The Basics of Sikhi is a Sikh educational campaign that uses digital and printed media to tell the story of Sikhi at faith-based and multifaith events. They are working to spread a spiritual and social message and to effect change by making educational resources free. They are supported by Everything's 13, a registered Sikh education and humanitarian charity.

I ask all my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As Minister of Transportation and of Infrastructure I'm blessed to have a hard-working, very diligent public service to serve the people of this province. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly staff from the strategic services branch of Alberta Infrastructure. They are Correna-Lyn Kerich, Kieren Trimbee, Martijn Groen, Jacqueline Lee, Bev Ricard, and Francis Santiago. They are visiting the Legislature as part of their public service orientation, and I would ask these guests to please now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two individuals, Linda Stewart and Merrill Stewart. Linda and Merrill were constituents of Sherwood Park for 28 years, from 1976 to 2004, before they moved to Belleville, Ontario. They were very active in the Sherwood Park NDP riding association, and both worked in the NDP Legislature office for the Hon. Brian Mason and for Raj Pannu, who was the former leader of the NDP here in Alberta. In 2001 Merrill was the provincial NDP candidate for what was then called the Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan constituency. Merrill ran again as the NDP candidate in the 2014 Ontario provincial election. They returned to Alberta to attend the NDP convention, held last weekend, and to visit their son and his family. As the MLA for Sherwood Park I am very honoured to introduce them to the House today. Would Linda and Merrill please rise to receive the customary welcome from the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Dr. Trent Keough. Dr. Keough is the president and CEO of Portage College, and he's here today in his capacity as lead partner in the Boyle pipeline training centre, which is the subject of my member's statement later today. He is joined by Mr. Stan Delorme, vice-president of Metis Settlements General Council, a board member of Portage College, and the former chair of the Buffalo Lake Métis settlement. Buffalo Lake Métis settlement is a charter partner in the pipeline training centre. I now ask both gentlemen to rise and receive the customary warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm so pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Miss Krysty Munns, a friend and fellow advocate for affordable and safe child care. Krysty moved to Lethbridge from B.C. in 2004 to complete her bachelor of science degree and then her master's of science in molecular biology from the University of Lethbridge. She is a scientist at the Lethbridge agricultural research centre and an active member of her union, the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Today she is very involved within her community advocating on women's and aboriginal issues. I ask that Krysty rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to stand up and share a beautiful story from my constituency, Lethbridge-East. There is a lovely building on 13th Avenue and 18th Street north in Lethbridge. It is the home of Nord-Bridge Seniors Centre, one of two seniors' centres in Lethbridge. The centre is a home away from home for its 1,300 members. On Monday morning the doors are opened at 8:30, and members begin to trickle in slowly. However, by 9:30 the rooms are packed because it is the Monday morning jam session. One can listen, sing along, or be the lead entertainer. As the music plays, coffee and tea are served, and sometimes people have breakfast. Above all, what you see and feel are comradery and pure enjoyment. There is so much energy in the air.

There are always events happening. It could be the first Wednesday of the month for the breakfast buffet, or it could be the president's dinner. The Dunford dining room is always packed. If you step into the hall, you can feel the energy buzzing with activity. It may be yoga or table tennis in the gym, a card game, a game of chess, or selling raffle tickets on my Irish whiskey bread pudding with Irish whiskey caramel sauce.

On the first Friday of the month you would probably see myself, as the MLA for Lethbridge-East, and one of the city councillors there meeting with the membership. On any day you would see volunteers helping out, seniors helping seniors with OAS . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Government Policies

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's grass fire season again. MDs and towns all across this province are already putting on fire bans and restrictions. Towns in my riding all have concerns about the damage fire can do. As a firefighter I've seen grass fires grow from small, controllable flames into a wall of flames 12 feet tall in just seconds. Frankly, that's scary and dangerous.

Similar to grass fires, municipalities across this province are also concerned about what this government will have done in less than a year and what it will do with their upcoming budget. For instance, the costs of grants in lieu will cause towns not to go up in flames but in taxes. They are being burned nonetheless. In fact, this will cost Holden over 2 per cent in tax increases and will result in the removal of grants in lieu. The accelerated shutdown of coal will torch Forestburg and singe Heisler and Killam by turning down the coal-fired heat and turning up the tax heat. Not only these towns will get smoked but so, too, will Hanna and 10,000 Albertans who rely on these good-paying jobs.

The royalty review made oil companies see red, and many fled. The NDP government is putting accelerants on this fire to the tune of a projected deficit of around $18 billion, with a record debt sure to be announced this Thursday, leaving Albertans feeling like they're going from the frying pan right into the fire. The leap of flames from a grass fire is like the Leap Manifesto, that could potentially cause damage all across the province, killing oil field jobs. The combustion caused by the carbon tax will make many jobs go up in smoke and smother a thousand dollars out of every Albertan's pocket.

On behalf of Albertans I ask this government not to fan the flames of economic disaster with further bad legislation. Please put out the fire.

The Speaker: I continue to be impressed by the hidden talents in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Homelessness in Calgary

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2008 the homelessness rate in Calgary was growing exponentially. We saw an increase of 35 per cent every two years. Using those calculations, we should now have more than 10,000 homeless Calgarians, but we don't, and the reason is the 10-year plan to end homelessness.

In 2008 Calgary became the first city in Canada to create a plan to end homelessness, and the results have been phenomenal: 7,000 people have found permanent housing, and we've seen a 17 per cent reduction in Calgary's homeless population. This is a remarkable achievement considering the phenomenal rate of Calgary's growth. Even with over 200,000 new people moving to Alberta, the rate of homelessness in Calgary has slowed. Since 2008 more than 12 cities across Canada have adopted Calgary's strategy.

Recently I saw comments from Edmonton's police chief giving the homelessness plan a failing grade. I could not have been more disappointed. Those comments undermine and devalue the heavy lifting done by government staff, front-line professionals, community organizations, and, most importantly, the Calgary Homeless Foundation and its CEO, Diana Krecsy, who have dedicated their hearts and souls to this critical endeavour.

I am privileged to contribute to the Calgary council on homelessness, which is a nonpartisan systems check on homeless supports in this province. Along with my esteemed colleague the Member for Calgary-Elbow we are charged with identifying gaps in the system and looking for solutions. I would ask the government to consider the work we are doing on the issue of homelessness in Alberta. We believe the answer to this issue lies not in criticizing current efforts but in building on successes like Calgary and Medicine Hat and sharing our resources and information by working together through collaboration, not criticism.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier announced her carbon tax plan last fall, she said that the $3 billion price tag that Albertans would pay was simply the cost of a social licence we need to build pipelines. She claimed a buy-in from the energy industry and the radical environmentalists who have opposed our pipelines for years. Since then a billionaire energy CEO has moved away due to the higher taxes, and this morning the Premier's environmental ally is claiming that Energy East would poison the drinking water of eastern Canada. Premier, what are Albertans getting exactly in exchange for the $3 billion carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, our plan is helping to change opinion around the country and internationally. It is not something that will happen overnight; difficult things are not, but good governments take on difficult tasks. We have been working on this for five months; that member over there worked on a plan for 10 years and got nowhere. Suggesting that our five-month-old plan has failed, while it fits into their political objectives, is not helpful and quite frankly denies the kinds of good governance that we are demonstrating, which will get us to yes on a pipeline and improve our record on climate change.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: That's simply not true, Mr. Speaker.

It seems the only buy-in the carbon tax has gained is from the former pipeline opponents in the Premier's caucus. Unfortunately, it's going to cost Alberta families $1,000 a year to keep her backbench from protesting. The unelected opponents, however, continue their opposition. Energy East risks our drinking water, they say, while the federal NDP debate how to keep our oil in the ground. Why does the Premier continue to try to appease our opponents instead of calling them out for their outright lies about our energy industry?

Ms Notley: Well, speaking of outright lies, the member opposite has been misinformed and has incorrect information with respect to the implications for families around our carbon levy. That being said, as I've said before, we are going to move forward with our carbon plan because it's the right thing to do for our environment, for future Canadians, and also for our energy industry. These folks over there want us to react, to panic, to stop doing anything, and to go back to the 10 years of failed policies that have gotten us nowhere. We will not do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean: So let's actually review the Premier's progress from that day in November when she proudly announced her new social licence for Alberta. A billionaire who she linked arms with thinks taxes are too high now to stay in Alberta, and the environmentalist who joined her on the stage continued to campaign and fund raise against our oil sands. Her own party – her own party – signs on to a plan to end all oil and gas development in Canada. Premier, if this is the social licence Albertans have paid for, can they please get a refund?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let us review the member opposite's progress on the issue of a pipeline. Ten years, no pipeline. And you know what? Albertans asked for a refund, and they got one. They have a government that's taking action, and that's what we will do.

The Speaker: The second main question.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: Yesterday we found out the Premier was against the Leap Manifesto. Well, actually, I should correct myself. The Premier's statement says that the government of Alberta repudiates the sections of the Leap Manifesto that addressed energy infrastructure. End quote. I'm curious to know how the Premier feels about the rest of the four-page, large-font document. Why didn't the Premier reject the section that says that the drop in oil prices isn't a crisis but a gift or the part calling for financial transaction taxes or even the increased resource royalty request?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I've been exceptionally clear from coast to coast on our position with respect to that manifesto.

Interestingly, as I mentioned in this House yesterday, conservative supporters have actually come out and called building a pipeline a doomsday scenario. I asked the hon. member to repudiate that comment, and interestingly, Mr. Speaker, he has not because they are still willing to put their political interests over the interests of Albertans because they want Alberta to fail for their outcomes.

Mr. Jean: I would reject any supporter that suggested pipelines are that, but I would ask the NDP leader to reject the NDP federal party for all their ridiculous comments.

Another section of the manifesto calls for an end to the animal agricultural industry as we know it, saying that it relies too much on the energy products extracted by our number one job-creating industry. The Premier's qualified repudiation of the Leap Manifesto didn't mention that part. Does the Premier agree with the sections of the Leap Manifesto that pit our number one wealth-creating industry, oil, against our number two wealth-creating industry, agriculture?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the member opposite ought to do his homework because, in fact, in my speech on Saturday I specifically addressed that issue, and I did specifically repudiate that issue.

You know, I'm hearing from a former MP who sat in government for 10 years and failed to do anything to build a pipeline. We have no lessons to learn, Mr. Speaker, from the Official Opposition on this issue. They want us to do nothing. They want us to walk away from our plan to deal with climate change. They want to cut $2 billion. They want to just sit in their offices and cross their fingers and hope that things change. That's not the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Jean: That's simply untrue, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of thousands of kilometres of pipeline were built across this country.

But capitalism is "designed to extinguish our dreams before they have a chance to be born." I haven't heard a repudiation of that statement from the manifesto from anyone on that side of the House, nor have I heard anything about the Leap Manifesto's desire to replace, quote, profit-gouging private corporations with co-operatives elected by, I assume, NDP members. Is there anything in either of those two statements that the Premier doesn't agree with?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I've answered this question over and over and over again. Albertans know where we stand. We have been very clear that the Leap Manifesto – and I will say it again – is naive, is thoughtless, is ill informed, and is tone deaf, and we will not be moving forward on any part of it. What we will be moving forward on is a progressive climate change policy that moves the ball down the field, across the country, that supports the development of a diversified, progressive energy industry that is more successful in the decades to come.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Mr. Jean: While the Premier cautiously, slowly, and quietly distances herself from the Leap Manifesto, the fingerprints of many of her government can be found all over the ideas behind it. Her chief of staff, for instance, ran for the leadership of the federal NDP on a plan to end fossil fuels in Canada's cities, and the number of former anti-oil and antipipeline activists working for her ministers has been well documented and reported. Does the Premier recognize that the federal NDP is simply picking up the mantle formerly carried by members of her own caucus and cabinet?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, that is the most ridiculous premise I've ever heard. I believe that Albertans and Canadians have heard very clearly what the position of my government, my cabinet, my caucus, our party is on the Leap Manifesto, and they have heard very clearly that we are on the side of Albertans, that we will continue to push for progressive, successful, sustainable energy . . .

The Speaker: I suggest that I should remind members – and you can go to the procedures book, page 502 – that we ought not to be seeking opinions during question period.

The first supplemental, I believe, hon. leader. Is that correct?

Mr. Jean: The Premier's own environment minister sought and received the endorsement of Avi Lewis, who is the main author of the Leap Manifesto, just prior to last May's election. Cabinet ministers and government backbenchers alike have campaigned for NDPers with radical opinions about Alberta and our energy sector. We're happy that the Premier's social licence has apparently convinced her own caucus to change their tune, but will the Premier acknowledge that what happened at her party's convention was as much the making of years of past efforts from members of her own government as it was anyone else's?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite suggests that he believes that climate change is real, but his environment critic ran under their banner at a time when the party suggested that climate change wasn't real and the science wasn't settled. So, you know, I would suggest that the member opposite might want to focus more on what the statements are of the elected representatives who are here on behalf of the people of Alberta and what they say is the position of their government because the waters start to get a little murky if we start looking at statements made by supporters of parties in times past, not too far past.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the Government House Leader argued that under his leadership the NDP tried to be more positive towards Alberta's energy industry. Some argue that they simply became less adversarial – as the Speaker ruled, this point is debatable – which is why Albertans are concerned that the Premier filled her government with NDP advisers from outside of Alberta who have a history of working against Alberta's interests. Were there no qualified or moderate Albertans ready to serve in this government?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of the staff who we have working for our government. We have managed to attract some of the best minds across the country to support us, and I would suggest that perhaps the folks over there might want to think about the same kind of recruitment drive. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, please.

The leader of the third party.

Environmental Monitoring

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, clearly, when the environment minister reviewed AEMERA, her mind was already made up. She refused to meet with AEMERA's leadership despite their repeated attempts to reach her. No amount of truth or facts was going to change her mind. It was set on something much more powerful, political ideology. Why else would she ignore advice from well-respected scientists and dissolve AEMERA anyway? To the minister: why are you ignoring credible advice from industry-leading experts?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. You know, there was a third-party external review conducted of AEMERA by the former deputy minister of Environment Canada which found a significant amount of overlap and administrative issues that were already being dealt with within the department. In addition, we ensured that there was independence maintained through the role of the chief scientist and the legislated role of the Science Advisory Panel. There was no need for an extra board or an extra layer of administration in this matter, and that's what we've committed to.

Mr. McIver: Well, that's not true, Mr. Speaker. Last week top Canadian scientists raised questions and concerns about the environment minister's plan to dissolve AEMERA and move its functions back under her direct control. Not only does this discredit her, quote, independent review, which was actually a tightly orchestrated charade with a predetermined outcome, but they raised concerns around internal manipulation and politicization of scientific monitoring data. To the minister: now that you've shot the credibility of yourself and your ministry, how can Albertans trust anything that you call data that you present to them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that the Science Advisory Panel will be reporting directly to Albertans and providing the advice to the chief scientist in a peer-reviewed fashion on how we might fill some of the gaps of analysis and data collection within environmental reporting.

Now, what the scientists did flag was the future of environmental reporting. They did not want to go back to the failed past under the PCs, Mr. Speaker, and that is something that this government has pledged not to do.

Mr. McIver: Well, Mr. Speaker, the scientists discredited what that minister calls an independent review.

I find it curious that when the NDP was in opposition, the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview said, "When you don't have an independent arm's length, a distance between government and a body that they're selecting, questions arise, questions about judgment." Well, in government now it seems that the NDP no longer shares that same commitment to transparency and honesty. To the minister: when did your government decide that providing Albertans with independent scientific data was less important than your left-wing bias?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that the independent arm's-length reporting to Albertans continues within the act. It will continue by maintaining the Science Advisory Panel and the traditional knowledge panel within the act. They will report directly to Albertans in a more timely and regularized fashion than the previous monitoring agency, which had some problems getting that moving, would have done. Now, the fact of the matter is that we've also maintained the role of the chief scientist and the role of the chief of monitoring in this matter. What we have eliminated is the previous government's penchant for appointing their friends to boards.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Rural Health Care

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For too many years the health care concerns of rural Albertans have gone unheard. Albertans want to ensure that our government will invest not just in health care in our cities but ensure that access to services is strengthened and protected in rural communities, too. How is the Minister of Health, after hearing concerns of rural Albertans, going to provide quality health care close to their homes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the important question. Our government is absolutely committed to protecting health care for all Albertans no matter where they live, and that's why, immediately after being elected, we cancelled cuts that were proposed by the outgoing government and refused to move forward on cuts that were proposed by the Official Opposition. We think that it's important to work on listening to rural Albertans. That's why during the constituency break I toured communities like St. Paul, Bonnyville, Lac La Biche, Fort Vermilion, Vegreville, High Level, Olds. We're out on the front lines getting opportunities to meet with rural Albertans and to thank the public service for their excellent . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplementary.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister has been on tour and given that there is a need for quality care in rural Alberta, will the minister highlight some real health initiatives that will have positive impacts, and can she discuss any local programs that are working from the bottom up?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much to the member for the question. Certainly, there are a few announcements we did in the opportunities we had to tour during the break. One excellent example is the dialysis unit that will be permanently integrated in Lac La Biche. I'm also really proud of some of the work happening in the Lakeland regional health care initiative, where communities are working collaboratively. As well, High Level is doing excellent work around mental health. In terms of having an opportunity to be involved at the local level, Alberta Health Services launched just last week a recruitment initiative for 70 public members to the health advisory councils.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the opposition parties are calling for significant cuts in health spending and given that we need to ensure that rural Albertans have access to those professionals and the physical health infrastructure, equipment, and facilities to deliver quality care, can the minister outline her approach to ensuring that this happens?

Ms Hoffman: The member is right that opposition cuts would lead to rural hospitals closing and for our nurses and other health professionals being available for Albertans where Albertans need them most. On my most recent trip, of course, Lac La Biche received an announcement of their much-needed dialysis unit. These are the kinds of things that we're moving forward on because this government, this side of the House, voted for a budget that has new money and the infrastructure maintenance plan and will continue to move forward on making sure that Albertans get the care where they need it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Job Creation

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government confirmed that they are finally ending their failed job scheme. Job creators, economists, and Wildrose were skeptical from the start. The NDP government doubled down, with the Finance minister saying that it will be, quote, good for business. Finally, yesterday the Premier said that the cancelling was based on evidence. Given the state of our economy, why isn't the government conducting economic impact studies first, not in hindsight? Is it because they don't care or because they don't want to see the results?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. You know, our government is responsive to Albertans. We've listened to the private sector and decided to pivot on a program that, quite frankly, wasn't going to deliver the outcomes that were originally intended, but I can tell you that jobs and the economy are the number one priority of our government, of our Premier. The opposition will have to wait for budget day to hear more details.

2:10

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that economist Jack Mintz has said that the failed job scheme is, quote, not going to be very effective, and the Calgary Chamber of commerce questioned why they were doing it at all, it's clear that the government didn't do their homework. Now they tell us that Thursday's budget will include new initiatives for job creation. Will the government commit to sharing all internal economic impact assessments so that Albertans know that these new initiatives will actually work this time?

Mr. Bilous: Mr. Speaker, let me start off by saying that our government will not exacerbate a situation by cutting billions of dollars from the front lines: nurses, teachers, health care professionals. Our government is committed to working with the private sector, the job creators. On Thursday the opposition will have to wait for a number of initiatives. But I'll remind the opposition that our government has already been proactive since last fall, announcing $34 billion in infrastructure over the next five years as opposed to the opposition, that would cut more than $9 billion.

Mr. Hunter: Apparently, Mr. Speaker, it's easier to come up with accusations than an actual job plan for Albertans.

Given that this past February Alberta's unemployment rate hit its highest level in 20 years and that weekly wages are plummeting, it's clear that when it comes to job creation, this government's record speaks louder than their assurances. We still don't know what Bill 1 will actually do, and neither does the government as they let it wither on the Order Paper. Will the government finally admit that their approach to putting ideological experiments over sound policy simply isn't working?

Mr. Bilous: I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker, our government has a jobs plan. It is being proactive in acting on this as opposed to the opposition that, first of all, thinks that you get pipelines approved by jumping up and down and berating people over Twitter and social media.

The other thing that's quite interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the member talks about the unemployment rate. Well, again, the Wildrose solution to unemployment is to create more unemployment by laying off thousands of public-sector workers. Our government values our public sector, and we will continue to invest in the economy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Environmental Monitoring (continued)

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we saw the NDP government take an unprecedented measure by folding an independent, arm's-length organization back into the ministry. AEMERA provided a scientifically structured, industry-funded watchdog over energy development; however, the minister says that it cost too much. For a function that took up less than 3 per cent of the department's budget, it is not acceptable to sacrifice transparency and accountability to save minuscule amounts of money. To the environment minister: can the minister explain how these dollars will be repurposed, or is this just another time where we have to wait until the budget?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for the question. In fact, when we made the announcement, we made it very clear that savings that were realized would be reinvested back into front-line monitoring services. You know, the reason why we did it: the analysis showed that previous administrations failed to fully consider the implications of transferring the bulk of scientific capacity from [Environment and Parks] to AEMERA and the impact such a transfer would have on AEP's ability to carry out its environmental stewardship role.

That's why we made the decision. We'll be reinvesting those dollars back into monitoring.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given that you said in your press conference that this measure to roll an independent, arm's-length body into two ministry-led panels will save money and given that you also outlined that all money saved will be recycled back into the environmental monitoring, evaluation, and reporting, which one is true, Minister? Are you saving money, or are you actually spending the same amount?

Ms Phillips: I'm sorry, but the hon. member just actually doesn't understand the structure of the issue here. We have a Science Advisory Panel, which advises the chief scientist on gaps in a peer-reviewed fashion. There was then a board, which we have dissolved, Mr. Speaker, and a full executive team of various VPs and so on to do the actual management of the day-to-day operations of AEMERA. So he's wrong; we're right. You know, that's really the explanation.

Mr. Ellis: Wow. That's all I can say.

Given that industry has funded more than two-thirds of the budget of AEMERA in 2015-16 through the joint oil sands monitoring initiative and given that many Albertans believe it would be inappropriate to take money provided by the energy industry and expense it to everyday department spending, to the same minister: how will you justify the redirection of the spending towards two new panels, how many panels has this government now created, and will these new panels be reviewed by your current review of Alberta's ABC system?

Thank you.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, you have to forgive me, but I think it's a little weird that the previous government is asking me about how many panels when they were the ones who put them in the legislation in the first place. So it's the science advisory panel, the traditional knowledge panel, which will report to Albertans. They will flag various gaps in analysis and data and so on with the chief scientist. They will report to Albertans on the matter.

You know, I'll just read from what the McMurray Métis have said: the mandate was wrong from the get-go; core issues that were frequently raised by McMurray Métis and other communities just never made into their mandate; AEMERA needed to change. There you have it from the source.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Adoption

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wildrose believes that strong families build strong communities and that every family should have the opportunity to thrive and grow. When families decide to reach out and grow through adoption, the last thing they need is to find this government standing in their way. Adoption profiles are often the easiest way for biological parents to connect with those wishing to adopt. Unfortunately, current regulations prevent Alberta families from posting those profiles online. To the minister: why is this regulation still in place, and when will it be removed?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Our government is committed to making sure that when children are not safe in their homes, they have homes to go to where they can stay and flourish. We will take steps to make sure that we review the policies in due course and make sure that we consult the relevant stakeholders and all Albertans going forward when we put into place a new policy, so we will work with Albertans and stakeholders.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, adoption is an issue that is near and dear to my heart, and it's something that parents and families face with equal parts of both sadness and joy. The decision a biological parent makes to allow another family to raise their child can be agonizing, yet their generosity gives incredible joy to an adoptive family. What is the minister's department doing to help biological parents and those who may have signed a permanent guardianship order to ensure the adoption process is as smooth as possible for all involved?

The Speaker: Hon. member, was there a preamble in there somewhere? I'll just remind you that after question 5 you are to manage that differently.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. As I've stated, our government is committed to working with the foster parents, with all of the stakeholders to make sure that when children can't stay in their home, we'll find them a home where they can flourish and where they'll have opportunities to succeed in their lives.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that we're talking about all types of adoptions and not just ones inside the department and given that we recognize that checks and balances must obviously be in place but there are significant hurdles that stand in the way of anyone that wishes to grow their family through adoption and given that in some cases the costs are high and there is often bureaucratic, stressful delays with little to no accountability, why isn't this minister's department doing more to break down those barriers so that families can more easily welcome adoptive children through public, private, or international adoption?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would have been nice if the member, in the name of disclosure, had disclosed his personal interest in that.

Every adoption case is different. There are many issues that need to be looked into, and every adoption case is looked into, the particular circumstances of the case. Our government is committed to making sure that all children in Alberta have all the needed and necessary resources to flourish in their lives and succeed in their lives.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Canola Diseases

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clubroot is an extremely serious soil-borne pathogen that has already been found in well over 30 municipalities in Alberta as of 2014. Given it has devastating effects on canola yields and is so pervasive, it is declared a pest in Alberta's Agricultural Pests Act – it's been a problem since the 1970s, when it was first reported in Edmonton area greenhouses – to the minister of agriculture: what is your department doing to update their management plan on this dangerously pervasive pathogen?

The Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. He's absolutely right that clubroot and Fusarium – there are a lot of pathogens out there in the landscape that we continue to monitor, working with our agriculture services boards, with counties right across the province to ensure that pests don't spread and that we can control what we can right across Alberta. It's important to our producers and important to the industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that Canada exports nearly $2 billion worth of canola to China and given that as of September 1 this year the Chinese will impose stricter standards on foreign material to our canola exports, can the minister tell us what programs and protocols are in place to ensure that other canola-based diseases such as blackleg don't end up destroying crops here and reducing trade with some of our largest partners overseas?

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. Absolutely, canola is very important to Alberta. Our agricultural sector is our second-largest sector in the province. Recently I returned from China and Korea, where at every opportunity that I had I engaged with officials in China to talk about this issue and the fact that we are looking for science-based, evidence-backed decisions and are advocating very, very profusely for our agricultural sector. We recognize that China is an important market, and we will continue to grow that market.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that clubroot spores can survive in soil up to 20 years and given that landowners are seriously concerned that energy construction projects, including renewable energy projects, increase the risk of transferring infected soil, can the Minister of Energy tell this Assembly why there are no biosecurity protocols currently in place to reduce the spread of these dangerous pathogens across hundreds of acres of farmland?

The Speaker: The minister of agriculture.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I agree with him wholeheartedly that we all need to do what we can to stop the spread of pathogens, the ones existing. Perhaps there are new ones on the horizon that we haven't even yet recognized. Knowing that the producers are doing what they can around rotation of the crops, knowing that the energy industry as well needs to take responsibility for that, I will ask the member to give me some leeway to get back to the Energy minister to find out exactly what we can do about this issue because I would agree.

Thank you.

Energy and Environmental Policies

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, the circus was in town this past weekend. On Saturday the Premier walked the tightrope. On Sunday the acrobats did a triple somersault and landed on the Leap Manifesto platform. On Monday we watched the contortionists. Well, actually, it was the NDP government caucus desperately trying to distance itself from this document. Now, we've seen this sideshow before. Just last week the environment minister was forced to defend her attempts to politicize AEMERA after harsh criticism from prominent Canadian scientists. To the minister: when will you stop flip-flopping on issues that have a profound effect on the energy sector and Alberta's economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm pretty sure I was clear in the national newspaper on Friday where Alberta stands with respect to our climate leadership and our access to tidewater, but I welcome every available opportunity to underline the matter to Albertans that this province and this government has energy workers' backs. No problem.

Now, as to AEMERA, Mr. Speaker, we have acted on good external advice from the former deputy minister of Environment Canada, and I thank him very much for his advice. He found duplication. He found ways in which we can do better on monitoring. Certainly, indigenous peoples have welcomed this approach as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a difference between having workers' backs and stabbing them in the back.

Mr. Speaker, every caucus has a ring, every circus has a ringmaster. Given that the Alberta NDP takes its policy marching orders from the federal NDP mother ship and given that the federal party has proven once and for all that they care nothing for the well-being of Albertans and our key industry, to the same minister: was the decision to make environmental monitoring in Alberta less transparent and less accountable a product of your own personal ideology or were you acting on a mandate from your federal bosses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the mandate that we were given last May 5, that the hon. member's caucus was not given, was a very, very clear mandate to review agencies, boards, and commissions given all of the silliness that had been happening under the previous government with ABCs. That is why we will see more action on this matter within the budget.

Now, the fact of the matter is that we found duplication, we found ways to do better with our environmental monitoring. And when we know better, Mr. Speaker, we will do better.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, you can always tell they've run out of answers when they start talking about the ABC review.

Given that the environment minister believes that a $3 billion carbon tax and dissolving independent monitoring agencies will give her government the social licence to build much-needed pipelines and given that her government was unable to convince even their most vocal supporters of the merit of these decisions, to the minister: if you can't persuade your own comrades who share your ideology to stand in solidarity with you, how do you expect to convince people outside your circus tent, you know, the ones who actually have the authority to approve these projects?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not super sure if there was a question in there, but let me give it a try. Okay. I think we were pretty clear over the weekend that this government is committed to a climate leadership plan that will lead the country, stop being a laggard, that will embrace the science of climate change, unlike some of our friends or those who would propose that we do nothing. That's a form of rejecting the science. We will move forward on a plan that is thoughtful, that is carefully calibrated to respond to the existing environmental conditions, and we will make sure . . .

Job Creation (continued)

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, last year the government announced in Budget 2015 a job-creation incentive program as a way to help businesses hire new employees. I am pleased to ask the Minister of Economic Development and Trade about an issue that is very important to my own constituents in Sherwood Park. Could the minister please explain why the government decided not to proceed with this program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. First and foremost, creating jobs and diversifying the economy is the number one priority of our government. I can tell you that that priority has not changed from last year's budget to this year, but I'll tell you what we did do. We heard feedback from businesses, from chambers of commerce, from industry, and what we've decided to do – the focus of the job-creation program is the same, that we are going to support the private sector to create jobs – is to retool that instrument and instead have a . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for listening to the business community.

Given that business owners throughout the province are continuing to look at our government for ongoing support to help get Albertans back to work, can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade explain what incentives the government will provide to start-up companies and entrepreneurs to support innovation and job creation?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, quite frankly, in challenging economic times people tend to seek new opportunities and to explore starting up their own businesses and to innovate. That's why yesterday I announced a $10 million investment that will be provided through Alberta Innovates to Innovate Calgary, to TEC Edmonton, and as well to regional commercialization organizations to support start-up companies, innovation, and job creation.

Mr. Speaker, our government is committed to tangible, concrete action. There is a suite of initiatives that we'll be rolling out on Thursday, and there will be more news to come.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade explain why expanding funding for incubators is important as part of the government's plan to create jobs and diversify the economy?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the very pertinent question. We have great assets in our province with two of the best university-based business incubators in the world. They are already at capacity. That's why our government is providing $10 million in new funding to these initiatives and strengthening their supports and the support that they give to businesses.

I want to give a quick statistic here. TEC Edmonton's clients have grown an average of 25 per cent per year in revenues and employment compared to the national growth rate of 10 per cent for early-stage Canadian companies. This is a success story which needs more support.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Agriculture and Energy Policies

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Leap Manifesto has farmers and ranchers in my riding worried. The Premier says that she rejects the pipeline components of this manifesto, but she hasn't said anything about agriculture. Meanwhile, the Leap Manifesto document states, "One single industry is destroying the planet more than any other. Animal agriculture," and calls for an end to the entire industry. Will the Premier give our farmers and ranchers some peace of mind and clearly state her opposition to this component of the manifesto right here and right now?

Ms Hoffman: It's always fun to be able to take an opportunity to clarify and reclarify and say it yet again. Our government repudiates the entire Leap Manifesto, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, there were many provincial delegates there who voted in opposition to it, not just from Alberta but from across Canada. We're going to keep making sure that they understand the importance of having wide industries, including strong energy, agriculture, forestry. The list goes on. We're going to fight for workers.

The Speaker: First supplemental question.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the issue of trade is also very important to ag producers in my riding. They're worried about access to foreign markets given that the Leap Manifesto calls for an end to existing free trade deals. Does the Premier understand the importance of trade to producers, or, like her federal brothers and sisters, does she think that these deals should be thrown out?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, this is an opportunity to debate government policy, but I'll make it very clear yet again. A document that was debated this weekend by a different party, not by the provincial NDP, was passed. [interjections] It is not government policy. We repudiate it. We will continue to stand up for Albertans. I was proud to do so throughout the weekend and will for the rest of my days.

The Speaker: The volume in here is getting excessive. Could you please listen to each other?

Second supplemental question.

Mr. Stier: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Well, the Premier says that this manifesto has not been adopted, but she also says that it will be discussed. Given that the Leap Manifesto calls to end trade deals, oil and gas, and our farming and ranching industries, why doesn't the Premier fight hard for these industries instead of discussing such radical, anti-Alberta ideas?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, every day our government is working to increase market access to make sure that we get a fair price for our commodity, get workers back to work. The opposite members' sole priority is to make this government fail instead of making Alberta succeed. That's irresponsible. We're going to stand up for Albertans, and I'm proud to do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past week the environment minister received a letter from well-respected scientists from clear across Canada warning her about dissolving AEMERA. These experts stated that the minister was mistaken in her assumptions regarding public trust in government science. Now, by ignoring this advice, the minister has demonstrated that she believes she knows more about environmental monitoring than trusted experts. Minister, please clarify while all Albertans are watching. What was the exact methodology utilized in this review of AEMERA, and why was it completed by an economist and not an environmental monitoring scientist?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be very clear, the problems with public trust were under the previous government's approach to environmental monitoring, which were found so wanting over a period of years that the only, the last idea that they could think of was to outsource core government business. That is not the way to govern this particular matter. We are committed to independent reporting to Albertans to ensure that that piece stays in place. The chief scientist and the chief of monitoring of AEMERA move over into the department.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
I will recognize the second supplemental.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, with respect, that's not what the scientists said.

I wonder: are Albertans actually asking the NDP to stop blaming and start governing? Given that the predetermined review was neither robust nor a fair analysis of the so-called arm's-length agency and given that just because the minister rejects something over and over again and repeats it over and over again to herself doesn't make it true, to the same minister: your commissioned review highlighted a number of other options to improve AEMERA instead of dissolving it. So please tell us: why are you throwing the baby out with the bathwater and refusing to even consider other options over ideological preferences?

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that environmental monitoring is core business of government like public health and public safety. The accountability for monitoring rests with government, not an outsourced agency run by a board with a former PC environment minister as its chair. So we have retained the best aspects of AEMERA's work, including the chief scientist, including the chief of monitoring, and including the best parts of the enabling legislation, the Science Advisory Panel and the traditional knowledge panel, which indigenous peoples in the lower Athabasca have embraced.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: In the words of the minister, given the fact that the scientists are pleading with the minister – they're leaders in the field from across the country; they've refuted every aspect of the minister's dubious report such as the fact that AEMERA was working hard to build stronger working relationships with the federal government and the fact that their salaries just happened to be comparable to or less than other public servants in the same rank – will the minister utilize this opportunity to take the professional, expert advice from these scientists, to put their respected opinion over personal political bias?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Mr. Speaker, thank you. You know, environmental monitoring in the lower Athabasca has been governed by the joint oil sands monitoring agreement between the federal and provincial governments. It actually became quite difficult to negotiate that agreement between an arm's-length agency, that was outsourced, core government business, and the federal government and, I would argue, a government-to-government-to-government relationship, which is why indigenous peoples had so many questions about AEMERA. We are going to fix that and ensure that we've got the appropriate governance in place so that we've got a monitoring system that everyone can agree on.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Calgary-Bow.

Services for Seniors

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that we are all concerned about the difficult economic times in our province and the impact on Albertans, especially on more vulnerable people like low-income seniors who live on strict incomes with little flexibility. To the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is our government doing to protect vulnerable seniors and provide them with the financial and social support they need?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for advocating on behalf of seniors. It's true that low-income seniors have restricted incomes and often face the challenge of dealing with limited funds. The Alberta seniors' benefit helps protect low-income seniors most in need by supplementing old age security and the guaranteed income supplement provided by the federal government. Alberta's benefit program supports about 150,000 low-income seniors each month here in Alberta. This summer we will be adjusting qualifying thresholds to ensure that seniors don't see a reduction or clawback of their benefits because the cost of living . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many seniors have told me that remaining in their communities for as long as they choose or are able is vital to their independence and well-being, again to the same minister: how is the government helping seniors to stay in their own communities and remain independent?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many seniors have told me that remaining in their communities for as long as they choose or are able is vital to their independence and well-being. How is the government helping seniors stay in their own communities and remain independent? We're doing this through supporting them with programs like the seniors' home adaptation program, that supports seniors' staying in their home through home renovations that they couldn't afford otherwise, and we're very proud of ourselves for doing this.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: A point of order.

The Speaker: The point of order is noted.
Second supplemental.

Ms Drever: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that many seniors are struggling to find transportation to get to medical appointments, to buy groceries, and to get around their communities, back to the Minister of Seniors and Housing: what is your ministry doing to help seniors with transportation challenges?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that affordable and accessible transportation options help seniors remain independent and active in their communities. Seniors may need to get around town, go to medical appointments, run errands, or visit family and friends. I was pleased to announce in February the launch of the new tool kit to help communities build their own seniors' transportation programs. The Wainwright and District Handivan Society built a successful program that provides 150 rides per month for local seniors. It served as a pilot project for the tool kit. I encourage communities across Alberta to get involved.

Statement by the Speaker

Decorum

The Speaker: Members, one of the members of the Legislature pointed out to me and I have noted in the past that when members are speaking in the Members' Statements portion, there has been a practice, as I understand it, to not be disrespectful and disruptive. There have been conversations throughout the House on various occasions, and I'd just like to remind you of that practice. I believe it's a good one.

The Speaker: The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Portage College Pipeline Training Centre

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to rise today and recognize a world-class pipeline training facility in my constituency. Portage College's pipeline training centre is located on 130 acres near the village of Boyle. The college provides a live-in learning environment with a 40-person camp. Eventually the college hopes to accommodate as many as 300 students at this facility.

Portage College is currently in the design phase of a process loop, a pipeline track used to train workers by simulating operations, maintenance, loss and leaks, and design testing in a real-world environment. This project will make technology-based education available in the north and provide students with hands-on experience on an environmentally secured pipeline. The project is also the first of its kind in Canada and represents an estimated $25 million investment.

Portage has an exemplary record when it comes to aboriginal engagement over their nearly 50-year history. In the college's heavy equipment operator program, which shares the same site as the pipeline college, approximately 75 per cent of the graduates have been aboriginal students. These students have an 85 per cent rate of posttraining employment. Seven First Nations and four Métis settlements were consulted on land use for the pipeline training college, and they have supported the project, with the Buffalo Lake Métis settlement being a charter partner in the site.

Portage College pipeline training centre not only trains Albertans for the economy of today and tomorrow, but it also makes sure that Alberta's pipelines workforce remains second to none in the world for technical ability and commitment to safety. I'm extremely proud that my hometown will be able to make this contribution to our province's and our nation's economies.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud to be a member of a party that stands up for pipelines, stands up for First Nations, and stands up for Albertans, and that's why I'm proud to support the Portage College pipeline training centre.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Volunteers in Edmonton-South West

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week is national volunteer appreciation week, and it's my privilege to rise today and talk about the amazing, hard-working people who volunteer in my constituency of Edmonton-South West. Their contributions can be especially felt in newer areas such as my constituency, which is experiencing such phenomenal growth. Parents and neighbours work hard every day to promote community development in our area, especially when it comes to gathering resources for building facilities like playgrounds in our neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-South West currently has six schools, with another eight schools being slated to open in just the next two years. In these schools parent council groups have taken an active role in fundraising and in developing resources for their children. To give you just a little bit of an idea of how hard these parents work, it took the parent council of Sister Annata Brockman school over five years to raise enough money to build their playground, and the Bessie Nichols school group has spent the last four years fund raising for theirs.

Mr. Speaker, I really do want to take this opportunity to thank the Minister of Culture and Tourism for making funding available for playground and community projects through the community facility enhancement program grants and the CIP programs. Building a playground or a facility is expensive, and it takes years for these groups to raise the hundreds of thousands of dollars required for these services. These grants make our neighbourhoods and schools much more family friendly.

I want to thank all the volunteers of the community leagues that I represent as well. Edmonton-South West has Glastonbury, the Hamptons, Twin Brooks, Greater Windermere, and Blackmud Creek community leagues, that rely on countless volunteers to run programs, to raise funds for halls, playgrounds, sporting facilities, and other community activities. In Edmonton-South West we simply could not have achieved all that we have without support from these tireless, unsung heroes. I'm proud to dedicate my time today and honour all the volunteers that make Edmonton-South West the best place to live in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Grain Rail Hopper Car Fleet

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertan and Canadian farmers are experiencing record harvest, but now they're worried about a new issue, a lack of railway hopper cars for their grain. There are 21,000 hopper cars for grain between our two railways; 9,000 of these cars are owned by the governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan, or Canada. Alberta bought 1,000 of these blue-and-yellow cars over 35 years ago with money from the heritage fund to ensure that Alberta farmers could get their crops to market. Those hopper cars also serve as rolling billboards for our province, advertising Alberta's productivity across the country and around North America.

CN and CP combined have 6,000 hopper cars of their own for grain. Those cars are forecast to reach the end of their useful life by 2020, only four short years from now. Between the years of 2022 and 2027 the 9,000 government-owned hopper cars, including Alberta's, will also reach the proverbial end of the line. Within 10 years, Mr. Speaker, there will only be 6,000 hopper cars left to move our grain unless orders for replacement cars begin to be placed soon. If they're not, we risk a situation where the hopper car fleet is reduced to 28 per cent of its current size at a time when crop yields are growing. There's no denying that the industry needs new hopper cars, but there is no certainty on who is responsible to replace them.

The longer we delay orders for new hopper cars, the longer they will take to make and deliver, which will put the livelihood of farmers at risk. One thing is certain, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture and Forestry is in the perfect position to help bring all of the stakeholders together to find solutions on the best way forward for this critical issue. I encourage the minister to start these conversations now and stop this crisis in its tracks.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Bill 7

Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce first reading of Bill 7, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Amendment Act, 2016.

Bill 7 proposes amendments to the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act in order to authorize appointment of an Electoral Boundaries Commission on or before October 31, 2016, which is earlier than is currently allowed under this act, and to clarify the commission's authority to consider recent information respecting population that is not collected on a province-wide basis such as municipal population information. This information would be used along with the federal decennial census of the population and the more recent province-wide census.

A commission's role is to review existing electoral boundaries, hold public hearings, and make recommendations for the Legislative Assembly to consider. Under the current wording of the act the commission cannot be appointed before July 31, 2017. If the act is not amended to allow earlier appointment of the commission, there will not be enough time for new electoral boundaries to be drawn before the next general election. This change was necessitated as a result of the early election call.

Bill 7 also seeks to clarify the current section of the act dealing with information the commission must and may use when determining population in Alberta.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 22 of the Auditor General Act I would like to table five copies of the report by the Auditor General titled Report of the Auditor

General of Alberta April 2016 Education and Infrastructure: Systems to Manage the School-Building Program. Copies of this report are being distributed to all members today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's been requested by the Minister of Human Services that he would like to make a comment about a question that was asked earlier in the House. If I can do that now.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. Could you just wait a second?

Again, a sequence of events I might have missed. There was another item that the Clerk was to be drawing to. But now that you have the floor, hon. minister, let's proceed on it.

Member's Apology

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During question period the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills asked me an important question that certainly impacts the lives of many Albertans. He certainly as an elected representative has interest in that important issue. I may have misunderstood the question, and in response the reference to his personal interests was not appropriate, was not respectful, and I would like to apologize without any reservation.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I appreciate your apology, and I accept it without reservation.

The Speaker: There are, I believe, two points of order. The first one was raised by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Point of Order

Factual Accuracy

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today in question period members of the government side – I guess I should begin with that I'm rising on Standing Order 23, in this case 23(i): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member." During question period today and, in fact, for a large number of days in the past number of weeks we've heard government members stand up and spread untruths about the Leader of the Opposition, and I could no longer stand idly by while these untruths and statements, that are not based on fact, were made.

The government likes to say that while the Leader of the Opposition spent time in Ottawa, 10 years, that he did nothing. These are the exact words that they like to use. Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, over a 10-year period, between 2006 and 2015, there were a number of major pipelines that were built in Canada, including Keystone phase 1, Hardisty, Alberta, to Illinois in June 2010. The Keystone pipeline phase 1 delivers oil from Hardisty, Alberta, over 3,400 kilometres, or 2,147 miles, for those following along at home, to the junction at Steele City, Nebraska.

The Alberta Clipper was April 1, 2010. Alberta Clipper, also known as Enbridge line 67, is an oil pipeline in North America. It is owned and operated by Enbridge and is part of an extensive Enbridge pipeline system. The pipeline runs from Hardisty, Alberta, in Canada, to Superior, Wisconsin, in the United States, integrating the company's Canadian oil sands pipeline system with the Lakehead system in the United States. Construction of the pipeline began in the summer of 2008. The pipeline was placed into service on April 1, 2010. The first shipment was moved October 2010. It has pump stations at Hardisty, Alberta; Kerrobert, Glenboro, Viking, Clearbrook, and Deer River, Minnesota. The diameter of the pipe is 36 inches. That's 910 millimetres.

The major pipeline expansions in the time while that government . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, can you speed it up a bit?

Mr. Cooper: I'm clearly making the point that they have been saying untruths about the Leader of Opposition. That's disrupting the House.

There is additional expansion of the Kinder Morgan anchor loop, the Trans Mountain expansion, Enbridge line 9 reversal, and so on.

The Speaker: Hon. member, could you speak to the . . .

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, what happens is that in this House disorder is created by that side when they spread untruths and, some would go as far as to say, lies about the Leader of the Opposition doing nothing during his time in Ottawa. I think it's clearly an untruth and should not be spoken in this place any longer.

The Speaker: Are there any other parties?

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I've been listening to him very carefully, but I do not hear in what he is saying any argument for a point of order. This is a matter of debate over the facts. The fact of the matter is that when he was in Alberta, the Leader of Opposition didn't get done over decades something that he is criticizing us for not getting done in ten months, and that is actually a pipeline to tidewater.

Another, I think, point we need to be aware of, Mr. Speaker, that I know that you've ruled on before, is that a point of order can't be made for something that happened weeks and weeks in the past. I don't think that argument is being made . . .

Some Hon. Members: It happened today.

Mr. Carlier: It just wasn't today. It was, you know, previously as well, the matter that we are arguing.

As a matter of the fact, the Leader of the Official Opposition, you know, wasn't able to while in government get a pipeline to tidewater, and we stick by that. It's matter that we're debating, and it's matter of facts. It should not be a point of order.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:00

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the point of order raised by the Opposition House Leader?

I, in fact, am provided with a copy of the Blues with the comment that was made, as I understand, that was the point of order that was raised. "That member over there worked on a plan for 10 years and got nowhere." That was the phrase that I think the member was addressing. In my opinion, this is somewhat similar to the issue that we dealt with yesterday. It doesn't appear that this is really a point of order; it's, rather, a difference of opinion. I would again draw the House's attention to page 510 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, the second paragraph. This is a dispute amongst members on the facts surrounding the issue, more a question of debate, not a point of order.

To that end, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, I believe, also had a point of order. Is that correct?

Point of Order Anticipation

Mr. Cooper: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll rise on the point of order that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks called towards the end of question period. I specifically speak to a similar section in the standing orders, Standing Order 23. The letter in this case is (e), anticipation: "contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day."

During the end of question period the Member for Calgary-Bow rose and asked – and I don't have the Blues in front of me – something very, very similar, asking specifically about programs that the government had announced on seniors' housing issues, which is Bill 5, and the name of the bill escapes me at this point in time.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Bill 5.

Mr. Cooper: Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act.

It's my belief that the member was asking specifically about programs that were announced in Bill 5, which is on the Order Paper to be debated later today. Under Standing Order 23(e), anticipation: "contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." Clearly, Bill 5 is on the Order Paper for today. She was speaking about Bill 5. I believe that the question should be ruled out of order.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Opposition House Leader. On this matter I have a tendency to agree with him, so on behalf of the Minister of Seniors and Housing I would offer an apology and do what we can to endeavour that that will not happen again.

Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the apology and will consider the matter dealt with.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 6

Securities Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016.

I'd like to take this opportunity to say a few words about this bill and our government's approach to securities regulation. As members of this Assembly are likely aware, our government recently announced that we will continue to regulate our own capital markets right here in Alberta instead of joining the national securities regulator. [some applause] That's a first from that side.

We will be sticking with the Alberta option, with our first-class provincial regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission. We firmly believe that our unique capital markets, driven by the enormous needs of the resource sector, are best served by a street-level regulator in Alberta, a regulator that knows the industry and can provide local oversight right here in Alberta, not thousands of kilometres away on Bay Street.

Our government was also pleased to announce a new chair of the ASC, Stan Magidson, an accomplished securities expert with roots right here in Alberta. Stan is an excellent choice to lead the ASC as our government ensures that we have a robust framework for capital formation while ensuring strong investor protection. Stan is an Albertan.

This bill, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, is an important piece of legislation. It codifies our government's commitment to ensuring that our capital markets are well regulated and done so within the framework of a provincially led regulator.

As members of this Assembly are well aware, the securities landscape is becoming more complex, sophisticated, and international in scope every year. It is being driven by technological change like never before. Therefore, our system of securities regulation must keep pace. We must keep pace with evolving international standards and global regulator reform initiatives.

As part of the government's commitment to effective oversight, we have been working with our partner regulators in other provinces to create a more harmonized regulatory framework across the country. The proposed amendments in this bill will further update and harmonize our laws and meet international standards while still respecting our decision to continue with a provincially led regulator in the ASC.

Before I address the most important aspects of the bill, I should state that it is common for the Securities Act to be amended every year. It is just good governance. The act has been amended every year since 2003 with the exception of 2012. Amending this act will ensure that we have effective investor protection, strong market integrity, and an efficient system of capital formation.

Now let me draw the members' attention to the more important items in this bill. First, the bill will update definitions of a derivative, a reporting issuer, and a security in section 1 of the act. Updating the definition of a derivative will allow the Securities Commission to regulate hybrid products, those with characteristics of a security and a derivative, more effectively and on a harmonized basis across the country. Updating the reporting issuer definition will eliminate a gap in section 2 of the act as the current definition is not necessarily complete, and updating the definition of a security will ensure that a security that is prescribed by rule to be a derivative is not also captured in the definition of a security. These are the common-sense reforms to this Securities Act. They are supported by the ASC, regulators across the country, and, I hope, by all members of this House.

Second, Mr. Speaker, amendments to sections 29 and 42 of the act will allow our regulator to act more quickly when there is risk of potential illegal activity. Currently the ASC is required to follow the Alberta Rules of Court notice requirements before a witness can be summoned to appear before a hearing or an investigative interview. While these rules are appropriate for civil matters, the 20-day notice requirements are just too slow when it comes to the rapid nature of our capital markets. Therefore, the ASC is proposing a shorter time period of a 10-day notice period, and our government agrees.

Third, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will amend the wording of the halt-trade provision of section 33. The halt-trade order is a new tool and one that ensures investor protection. It allows the ASC to quickly and temporarily halt trading in securities.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, the act proposes an amendment to section 42 which will allow a justice of the peace to issue search warrants rather than a Court of Queen's Bench judge. This will allow the ASC to move quickly again and free up the courts so they can deal with more pressing and substantive matters.

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, the act will update regulation provisions related to exchanges, self-regulatory organizations, trade repositories, and clearing agencies. These updates will make the provisions more consistent and easier to understand and are part of this government's commitment to keeping securities regulation current.

Sixth, Mr. Speaker, as part of this government's mission to harmonize regulatory provisions across the country, through our work with the CSA we are proposing changes to part 17 of the act related to civil liability provisions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this act will make amendments to the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulation-making powers to assist Canada in meeting the G-20 commitments relating to the use and trading of derivatives. This is a fine example of how we can work together with other regulators across the country to meet national and international standards while maintaining a provincially led regulator here in Alberta.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we're on the right track. We're sticking with our provincial regulator, but we're also ensuring that we have a world-class regulatory framework. Alberta is doing its part and more to ensure that we are protecting investors, and we are ensuring that the Alberta spirit will continue to thrive with one of the world's most vibrant and efficient capital markets.

It is in the interests of all Albertans that we adopt this bill. I ask for all members of the House to support the proposed amendments.

Thank you very much for listening.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016. This might be one of the rare times where I find myself mostly in agreement with the Minister of Finance. Even a broken clock is right twice a day. I will congratulate and thank the minister for standing, I think with all-party support in this House, in support of an independent, Alberta-based Alberta securities regulator to ensure that Albertans control their own financial destiny right here. This may not be the most exciting and colourful bill we've debated before the House, but it is an important one nonetheless.

Securities and derivatives are complex financial vehicles. Most people aren't familiar with what exactly they are or how they work. A show of hands from members in this House as to who here has ever bought or sold a security or derivative.

An Hon. Member: I don't think you actually get to do that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, perhaps I'm not allowed.

Well, it is a rather small minority of the House who have traded securities or derivatives, so for the record I would like to lay out exactly what we're talking about here. A security is a financial instrument that represents an ownership position in a publicly traded corporation, or stock; a creditor relationship with a governmental body or corporation, a bond; or rights to ownership as represented by an option. A security is a negotiable financial instrument that represents some type of financial value. The company or entity that issues the security is known as the issuer. In other words, when you invest in stocks and bonds and mutual funds, you are buying securities.

A derivative is a security with a price that is dependent upon or derived from one or more underlying assets. The derivative itself is a contract between two or more parties based upon the asset or assets. Its value is determined by fluctuations in the underlying asset. The most common underlying assets include stocks, bonds, commodities, currencies, interest rates, and market indexes. In other words, derivatives are not real, but you can buy them. It's like making a bet on someone else's bet, if you will, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 6 is talking about the regulation of our capital markets here, and the market works best when everyone is playing by the same rules. In capitalism the market thrives on innovation and ingenuity. What would happen if we took a security and bundled it with a derivative and then sold this hybrid investment vehicle? What would this hybrid be? A security? A derivative? Is it neither? Is it both? This is what the core of Bill 6 is about, and may I say that it is a significantly less exciting Bill 6 than the last one this House debated.

The Alberta Securities Act is being amended in order to accommodate these rather exotic financial products of hybrid securities and derivatives. This is in keeping with the passport system of the 13 provincial and territorial securities regulators to enable harmonization across Canada given what we do not have and Alberta does not want, one single national securities regulator. It is also in keeping with international agreements that Canada has made with the G-20 on the international financial system. Alberta's investors need these amendments in order to ensure the Alberta Securities Commission is able to regulate and police these products and protect consumers from fraud.

Now, besides changing these definitions, the Securities Commission will also be allowed to go to a justice of the peace to obtain a search warrant for an investigation instead of waiting to see a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. This change aligns with the criminal law process. In addition, there will be some changes and definitions amended.

Wildrose has approached a number of stakeholders in the financial services industry, who have reported no concerns with Bill 6 but have encouraged additional amendments to the Securities Act to further protect consumers. Securities laws can be very difficult for the layperson to follow. They can be very dry and boring, yet they are fundamental to our capital markets, that we enjoy and rely on to produce wealth and prosperity in this province.

We need to align ourselves with our provincial and territorial cousins, and we need to be able to regulate the various products that the market engineers in order to protect consumers. But we also want to make sure that with every change we are enhancing a competitive advantage for Alberta's investors and encouraging more investment here. Given the complexity of these issues and our desire to fully understand and assess them, we believe the minister should consider our recommendation that all bills go to committee and allow us to have a little more time to go through this carefully with expert witnesses to ensure that we are getting it right for Alberta's securities market.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that members will consider this referral to be in the best intention, to make this bill right. The Wildrose supports the principles of it, in fact even the contents of it, but we hope that when a member of the Official Opposition comes forward soon with a motion for referral, all members of this House will support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today to speak to the government's Bill 6, Securities Amendment Act, 2016. I suspect that we may have more points of agreement on this particular bill than the last Bill 6 that was put forward by this government. My caucus doesn't expect that there will be people from all corners of Alberta standing on the steps of the Legislature, carrying placards that say "Kill Bill 6" in this instance.

Now, on its surface this is a housekeeping bill, generally administrative. The proposed changes would update the legislation and keep Alberta operating in a co-ordinated way with other Canadian provinces. It speaks to a certain need in the world of securities. Most sections pertain solely to updating and harmonizing definitions. More substantively, the proposed legislation before us today looks to authorize a justice of the peace to issue search warrants under the Securities Act; this instead of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, as is the case in criminal law. This move would shorten the time taken to potentially catch criminals in the act.

The market has put forward something as it pertains to securities and derivatives, and it appears that the regulators are just catching up. But given the subject matter and the economic climate that we find ourselves in, this bill certainly deserves proper scrutiny. The reality is that the securities regulatory landscape, not just across Canada but globally, has become more complex, and it has become more sophisticated. It is understandable that the government would wish to undertake a regular view, a regular update of its securities laws in order to simply ensure that the securities order of the regulatory system reflects the realities of today's markets and then that it stays in line with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. So it makes sense that in section 1 of the bill we seek to update the definition of a derivative, the definition of a reporting issuer, and the definition of a security.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that over the last two decades the focus of Canada's securities regulatory system has also been changing. I believe that this is an important context whenever we are discussing any proposed changes to the Securities Act. For better or worse, the regulatory environment has in many Canadian jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, been tightening. For a time regulatory authorities, well, in most Canadian jurisdictions, anyway, only resorted to regulation when a clear problem presented itself, one that the market itself could not resolve. Now this has been replaced by a new approach – a new approach – that resorts to regulation first before a clear need arises, a system wherein a solution is identified before there is a manifest problem.

For these reasons, legislation of this nature, however much it's a technical, housekeeping bill, should not be waved through the legislative process without asking proper questions. It seems to me that we should have the opportunity to put questions to officials from Finance or Treasury Board. It is not adequate to simply ram this legislation through this place.

I would hope that the government is able to answer this question: how do the proposed changes to this legislation compare to other Canadian jurisdictions specifically, and how is Alberta's securities climate taken into consideration here? Part of the Alberta advantage stemmed from the fact that Alberta had its own securities regulator and made decisions conducive to a good environment.

The role of this place we sit in today is not to give rubber stamps to whatever proposed legislation members of the government and their ministries have put forward but to give whatever has been put forward the due scrutiny that it deserves. Members, the government should refer this bill to the proper standing committee. The relevant departmental officials should be able to speak to this bill, this bill that contains very specific and complex suggested protections for those that invest. It would be helpful to have other subject matter experts speak to this bill. This is not only for matters pertaining to this bill but more broadly than that.

Mr. Speaker, I've had the privilege to represent my constituents in the great riding of Little Bow for just about one year now. I have to be honest. The frequency with which the government lets proposed legislation receive due scrutiny in the proper standing committee is astonishingly minimal. What we have witnessed since we first sat in this House as members of the 29th Legislature is a government that has demonstrated a profound disregard for doing due diligence on their legislative initiatives. We saw this with the last Bill 6 that was put forward in this House. Imagine the mess that could have been avoided if they'd actually done their due diligence beforehand and actually bothered to consult with farmers and all those affected. Regrettably, this government's inability to properly consult with Albertans and those most affected by prospective legislation has poisoned the well for anything they're trying to put forward.

Mr. Speaker, it's difficult not to be skeptical. When this government is in a hurry, it is amazing how fast they can pass a piece of legislation. Consider Bill 4, which pertained to essential services. Very impassioned speeches were given throughout this House from members across that had strong opinions on the content or potential content of that bill. It was introduced on a Thursday, which is the last day of the week that we sit in this House. By the end of the following Thursday it had passed its final vote. Alternatively, when this government is not in a hurry, they have a way of dragging legislation out. We saw this with Bill 1, which was allegedly a job-creation bill, that the government paraded as a priority. It withered for a month on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's recent economic situation, as we all know, is startling. In many ways this is the worst economic situation in a generation. This proposed legislation before us today deals with securities and investment considerations for Alberta at a time when we have before us a shaken economic climate. We owe it to ourselves to be familiar with the subject matter and speak in the best interests of our constituents.

While speaking about this proposed legislation, one point that I do want to acknowledge is that I appreciate, as should all members of this House, that we are able to have this debate here today in our Alberta Legislature. Successive federal governments in Ottawa have been seeking to establish a single, centralized regulator. It is something they've been trying to do since the '60s in one form or another.

Looking forward now, it is integral that Alberta develop its own expertise when it comes to Alberta's securities regulation, something that helps build Alberta's own financial services sector. Each of us as members of this place would likely have significantly less information to deal with if matters pertaining to securities were not made here in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and at the Alberta Securities Commission. Discussions about security amendment acts such as this would be more difficult if they were done through long-distance first ministers' conferences, held regularly probably down east somewhere, in which Alberta would be but one voice among several.

Recently Bill Rice, the former chair and CEO of the Alberta Securities Commission, addressed this issue, and he said, I quote: I believe the independence of the regulation of that territory becomes more important when times are tough because certain adaptations can be made, local imagination can be used, and certain changes or differentiations can be undertaken in the province to accommodate difficult circumstances. End of quote. I would say that the fact of that matter is, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans know Alberta best. I'm sure that the members on the government benches can sympathize with this concept given what went on at the convention of their federal organization here just this past weekend.

Alberta governments of all stripes have stood proudly in favour of Alberta's jurisdictional right to regulate its own securities. Therefore, it was a relief, quite honestly, to see the current Finance minister do exactly the same thing. This is not just an isolated Alberta concern. Six years ago Alberta's Finance minister and Quebec's Finance minister stood up jointly to Ottawa's attempts to centralize security regulators in Canada. Given the inclination of Ottawa to pursue a single, centralized regulator, we should not take what we have for granted.

If we are simply to fire through this House the matters pertaining to securities regulations without the proper scrutiny, are we not helping to make the case for the next attempt by Ottawa to encroach on this matter? We make the case for Alberta to maintain its own regulator not through complacency but by having a successful and thriving system, a system where we maintain a vigilant eye, recognizing both what's best for the market and what is needed by international obligations.

Accordingly, I strongly urge the government to ensure that this bill finds its way to the appropriate standing committee before it becomes law. After all, when it comes to our securities regulator, we want Alberta to be an example to other provinces. This is relevant and should be at the top of our minds in any situation where we find ourselves with a proposed change to the Securities Act such as the one in front of us today. Having a routine housekeeping bill in front of us should never be an excuse to not give legislation the due scrutiny it deserves.

Any discussion about securities in Alberta should be seen in the broader context of the ongoing debate on a national securities regulator. The new federal Finance minister made it clear in January that the new federal government supports a national securities regulator. It was something they did not campaign on, something they had no mention of in their platform. This was, of course, also supported by previous federal governments and supported by many in provincial jurisdictions as well. To this effect we have British Columbia, Ontario, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Yukon, who last year announced a draft capital markets act, one that would form the basis of a new co-operative regulatory system. This means that Alberta's geographic neighbours on both sides as well as Canada's largest province, an Atlantic province, and a territory are all on board with a centralized approach. As that plan moves from draft to reality, there will be an increased pressure in Confederation upon Alberta to not hold out.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we make the case for Alberta to maintain its own regulator not through complacency but by having a successful and thriving system. We do that by paying attention, by giving scrutiny where needed to any proposed change to the Securities Act.

Mr. Speaker, we saw in this House just yesterday a private member's bill that some in the House suggested, firstly, had not seen any consultation with the industry that the bill would affect and, secondly, contained verbiage that industry was offended by. We saw that this House can and indeed did refer that bill to committee for the proper input and scrutiny that it requires before pushing that particular legislation through this House. Shouldn't a matter as delicate as securities undergo the same examination?

With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity.

The Speaker: Any hon. members under 29(2)(a)? Please proceed.

Mr. Orr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to both respond and maybe ask a question. I think this is an extremely important issue in spite of the arcane boringness of it all in some ways. Truthfully, securities markets transact millions if not billions of dollars a day or even in an hour nowadays, and this is an issue of the highest risk to Albertans, to Alberta pension funds, to Albertans' savings, to seniors, to anyone who might be invested in the market.

While I am encouraged to see some language here with regard to consequences for those who engage in criminal activity in the markets, I'm still a little bit concerned about issues of prevention. I think it's important to remember that this crime can actually be some of the most costly and most destructive of the criminal activity that is out there. We only need to recall Enron and some of the subprime mortgage scandals and other things that have been in recent history. So I do have a concern.

I appreciate the member's comments with regard to the importance of consulting experts in the field. I guess I want to push that a little further and ask the member: do you not think it would be important to have market risk experts review not only the legislation but also the systems that are in place, particularly with regard to the fact that most transactions today are millisecond software transactions? We need to ensure that we have the highest level of software encryption to work on this issue of prevention, not having to deal with consequences after it's too late.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to my friend to my right. Yes, of course. And I think all members of this House would agree one hundred per cent that most transactions are probably done electronically in today's day and age. The more security you can have to protect securities would be something that's advantageous.

I definitely want to cautiously support Bill 6, but as the member to my right said, having more eyes scrutinize any bill is always advantageous and something that this side of the House or at least this party certainly recommends, seeing more legislation passed through committee without going through the House in a hurried manner.

With that, I'll leave that alone. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other hon. members under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a privilege to stand in this House and address all the members of the Assembly. It's quite an honour, I would say, and I'm sure that the members from across the way completely agree with me. It's wonderful that, you know, we're here discussing Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, and that we have agreement yet again. So I want to thank the members across the way for that.

I would also like to share with them perhaps something that they don't know about me personally, and that's that, you know, when I graduated from university, I actually ended up working at RBC Dominion Securities as a marketing associate. I had the opportunity to work with many stockbrokers there at RBC Dominion Securities and learn a great deal about how markets work. It was at that time that it really became imperative to me that securities regulation – at the end of the day what we're talking about and what we're focusing on is ensuring effective investor protection, number one – right? – ensuring strong market integrity, and ensuring an efficient system of capital formation. So I'm glad that the members across the way agree with Bill 6 at least in principle. As they like to say: I agree in principle.

This bill will continue to regulate the province's capital markets right here in Alberta instead of joining the national securities regulator. I mean, I think on that we were in complete agreement, on no to a centralized federal regulator, which is interesting because, you know, my understanding is that it was the Conservatives at the federal level that were trying to push this through, as I'm sure that the members across the way will agree, right? So this bill will stick to the Alberta option, with the first-class provincial regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission, as the unique capital markets, driven by the enormous needs of the resource sector, are best served with a street-level regulator. As the Minister of Finance stated in his opening remarks, a new chair of the Alberta Securities Commission was appointed, Stan Magidson, an accomplished securities expert with roots right here in Alberta.

It's important to update this piece of legislation to keep pace with a rapidly changing international market, as we have also agreed upon. In order to ensure that Alberta's securities regulator system reflects and evolves with the realities of today's international regulatory landscape, Alberta must undertake a continuous review and updating of its securities law. As the Minister of Finance also stated in his opening remarks, it's common for the Securities Act to be amended every year. It's just good governance. So there's already a practice of amending this act on an annual basis as we go forward.

Hence, we're creating some common-sense reforms to the Securities Act. The bill will propose to bring amendments in seven key areas: firstly, to update the definitions of "derivative" and "reporting issuer" and "security" in section 1 of the act, as has already been stated; secondly, to amend sections 29 and 42 of the act to allow our regulator to act more quickly when there is a risk of potential illegal activity by proposing a shorter notice period from 20 to 10 days; thirdly, to update the wording of the halt trade provision in section 33 to ensure investor protection; fourthly, to amend section 42, which will allow a justice of the peace to issue search warrants rather than a Court of Queen's Bench judge, as has already been stated by the Member for Little Bow; fifthly, to update provisions in regulations related to exchanges, self-regulatory organizations, trade repositories, and clearing agencies; sixthly, to update part 17 of the act, related to civil liability provisions, to harmonize regulatory provisions across the country.

Here's where I'd like to stress something really important. The Member for Little Bow asked a question: well, how does Alberta compare to other jurisdictions across our great federation? The truth is that Alberta is actually the leader when it comes to securities regulation here in the country. Something to be proud of, right? Indeed.

Lastly, it will bring amendments to the Lieutenant Governor in Council's regulation-making powers to assist Canada in meeting its G-20 commitments relating to the use and trading of derivatives. We've been working with our partner regulators in other provinces to create a more harmonized regulatory framework across the country, as I've already discussed. These amendments will update and harmonize our laws, meeting international standards, and uphold our decision to continue with a provincially led regulator in the Alberta Securities Commission. Alberta made a commitment with other provinces and territories and their securities regulators in 2004 to the ongoing support of the modernization, streamlining, and harmonization of securities law in Canada, and since then Alberta has typically reviewed and updated the securities laws on an annual basis, as has already been stated.

It's so wonderful to see the members across the way agree with what's being stated in this act. But, again, we've come to that crossroad, where they want to refer it to committee. I understand that you would want to have a consulting process in order to really look into it. I believe the Member for Little Bow called this a housekeeping bill. I wouldn't necessarily refer to it that way. We have industry experts not only from Alberta but in other provincial and territorial jurisdictions that are constantly working on bringing forward new recommendations so that they can be introduced into what eventually becomes the act. This is ongoing practice not only here in our own jurisdiction, but we're working with others across the land.

I would recommend to all the members of this House that they strongly support the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, and that we pass it. In future if there are more recommendations, they can be brought forward again in another year. We're ready to move forward on this, and I strongly recommend to all the members to vote in favour.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise on this bill. It's the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, which is Bill 6. The last time we had a Bill 6, it was a little more action-packed than this particular rendition.

Mr. Speaker, when the Finance minister stood in the House and introduced it, I think you heard people from all sides of the House pounding in approval because, basically, there's general agreement that this is a good idea, and I'm not going to vary from that. I'm just going to make a few comments because I think it's important.

A good thing that needs to be said – and you can't overemphasize it, in my mind, Mr. Speaker – is that there is an element here that will see investors receive slightly more protection in regard to misleading prospectuses, and that is important. It can't be overstated because not all who invest – you know, it's been said to me that if you put money in the stock market, then you are to some degree gambling. But you should be protected by having true and accurate information when you place that bet on a company or a group of companies. That is a protection for consumers that can't be taken lightly, and I think this bill is true to that.

It also allows for more ability for the government to act faster when they see something that looks suspicious, which I think is important. I think that's a good improvement by the government in this particular bill. It enables cabinet to make regulations around derivatives. While I'm not expecting anything bad, as long as they do that right, that's a good thing. Again, there's no subtext of a negative there. I'm just saying that as long as cabinet is careful, then that can be a good thing. It does explicitly point out some minor details of the Securities Commission's implied powers, clarifies the liabilities for parties issuing misrepresentative prospectuses and responsibilities in order to receive protections for correcting incorrect prospectuses. It clarifies the limitation period for purchasers of misrepresented securities to take action, which I think is important. If you happen to be – and, hopefully, Albertans in the future won't be, but some in the past surely have been – a victim, somebody that invested money on a prospectus that was not accurate, either through an inadvertent error or a fraudulent misrepresentation, either way, having a clarification about when you can take action on that is important, so I thank the government for that, too.

It also clarifies liabilities and penalties for insider trading. The sad truth, Mr. Speaker, is that while Alberta's system is a leader in Canada, as the member opposite said, we have not been without bad actors from time to time in Alberta. There are certainly a couple of shining examples of where Albertans lost money because they were taken to the cleaners by fraudulent misrepresentation. So for clarifying the penalties and the liabilities for insider trading, again I'll say: good work. It's something surely worth doing.

It repeals an unproclaimed part of the act that the previous government passed in 2011 in regard to definitions of a clearing agency. I would say that since the previous government between the period of 2011 and early 2015 didn't see fit to proclaim it and the definition that served Albertans well not only up to 2011 but thereafter until today is still in place, I don't see any harm from the government getting rid of the unproclaimed portion. That might be one of those things that falls under the category of housekeeping, and there's someone in my life that would tell me that housekeeping matters. If you leave one coffee cup on the counter, Mr. Speaker, that's probably not a big issue, but if you do it constantly, it soon gets to the point where it's a problem that's not so easily solved.

While I will call some of the changes in the legislation housekeeping, I will try to make it clear while I'm standing here that that in no way demeans those changes, because if it's something that is better for the future, it's better to make those housekeeping changes before one or more of them create a bigger problem. While it may not make the headline on the evening news, it is nonetheless important to keep up with these things as they crop up and as those people that look at legislation take the time to discover them and recommend those improvements.

The bill does nothing, in our view, that would promote inbound investment. On the other hand, I'm not sure that that would necessarily be the proper thing for this bill to do. This bill's purpose, this legislation's purpose, is to make sure the financial transactions that take place are accurate, pure, true, and fair to all involved. That's a good thing.

Overall, I congratulate the government on this. The only not entirely positive point that I will make is that this is important because it does clear the way for people to invest in our province, and investment in here is what creates jobs in the future for Albertans. Of course, we've talked in this House, all of us, about how there are 100,000-odd Albertans that are out of a job right now, and investment really matters. Investment loves certainty. Investment loves honesty. Investment loves the rule of law. Accuracy and the rule of law I think are supported and bolstered by this legislation and even the changes from today. Some of the benefit of new investment coming in here may wait until there's a government in place in the future that does other things outside of legislation to promote investment more so than the current government has. So Albertans might have to wait for those benefits, but that doesn't change the fact that this piece of legislation the government is putting in place is a good thing even if there are other issues.

Mr. Speaker, overall, I have to say that I think it's a positive event, what we have here. I think protecting the security of Albertans who invest and protecting the security of people from outside of Alberta that choose to invest within our province should never be taken lightly even though this bill may be in the top five or six this year under the boring category. Nonetheless, it's still important. Important doesn't have to be exciting because when you're investing and you're talking about investing legally, none of us wants to be the investor when the rules make it exciting because then somebody gets hurt, and then somebody who doesn't deserve to lose their money loses their money.

On that note, I will say thank you to the government for this boring bill. Thank you for keeping it boring. I think that's the right thing to do in this instance. I think that in this instance that's a compliment, and I hope the government accepts it as such.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will stop talking.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills, do you have a question under 29(2)(a), or are you speaking to it?

Mr. Kleinsteuber: My apologies. I am speaking to it.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here today to speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act. This bill signals our commitment to the continuous improvement of Canada's existing securities regulation system. The changes in this act will update and further harmonize Alberta's securities law with the securities laws in other provincial jurisdictions in Canada. The bill will enhance investor protection, minimize systemic risk, and promote the operation of a fair and effective Alberta capital market.

Mr. Speaker, our local regulator understands our local market. This has been and will continue to be an advantage to Albertans. There is value in having a street-level regulator, a regulator that is on the ground where the activity is taking place. With this bill we are committing to stick with the Alberta option and with our first-class regulator, the Alberta Securities Commission. Alberta deserves and is best served by a local regulator who understands our unique capital markets and who understands the enormous capital needs of our resource sector. Let me clarify that our government will not be joining the national securities regulator, and we will continue to govern and regulate our capital markets right here in Alberta.

As we stick with the Alberta option, our government has also recently appointed a new CEO of the ASC to lead our world-class regulator. Stan Magidson is an accomplished securities expert and has deep roots in this province. We are confident that under his leadership Alberta will continue to have one of the most vibrant, innovative, and well-regulated capital markets in the world.

In closing, let me add that as we continue moving forward with the ASC, the government is committed to ensuring that our capital markets work efficiently and in tandem with those in other provinces. Therefore, this bill will continue to modernize and harmonize our securities laws with those of other provinces right across the country, and we will continue to work with other provinces through the Canadian Securities Administrators to modernize and harmonize.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be supporting this bill. It's a strong piece of legislation that ensures we can continue to effectively regulate our world-class capital markets. I strongly encourage all members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise in the Assembly to discuss an important piece of legislation. There's nothing more riveting and engaging than hearing the Member for Little Bow, with his silky smooth voice, speaking about such an important piece of legislation.

I think that one thing we've seen here today is some agreement upon many parts of this legislation, and if the former government did things well, this was probably one of them, when it comes to having this securities legislation amended on a very regular basis to ensure that we are remaining as current as possible and to be addressing the challenges at hand.

Having said that, shortly after the election, about a year ago, the Official Opposition proposed some changes to the way the Assembly works. While there is widespread agreement on the vast majority of this particular bill, there certainly are a few nuances, some might say uniqueness, around a couple of the clauses in this bill. I think it's important that on every piece of legislation there is the opportunity for experts in the field to provide feedback and education to members of this Assembly so that they can be assured that, in fact, everything that is presented is exactly as can be expected, that there are not unanticipated consequences or unintended consequences of legislation like this, and that we have a full and robust debate.

In that document from approximately a year ago we proposed the need for a change to our democratic process here in Alberta that would allow for more pieces of legislation to be studied at committee. In addition to the items that we agree on in the legislation, the other thing that I believe we can all agree on is that this piece of legislation and certainly securities and the regulation of those is a very complex and technical field that not all members of the Assembly have the benefit of experience on that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie does. When it comes to his previous employment at RBC Dominion Securities, I wasn't sure in his remarks how many times he was going to be able to work that in, but I commend him for his efforts while he was there.

Given that we don't all have that background and a fundamental belief on this side of the House that the work of committees is valuable work – in fact, we had an acknowledgment from many members on the government side of the House just yesterday on the importance of committee. The Government House Leader indicated just yesterday that we have the opportunity to refer a bill to a standing committee, which provides a little more flexibility. It allows the committee, if it wishes, to hear from the public or to hear from stakeholders that may be affected by the bill and to make amendments that could improve the bill.

I couldn't agree with the hon. Government House Leader more. I think that that's probably something we should do in this case. Now, he was speaking yesterday specifically to Bill 203, but the principle remains the same, Mr. Speaker.

I want to continue quoting from Hansard from yesterday. "I want to just indicate to all hon. members that I would encourage them to support the referral motion that has been moved by the hon. House leader of the Official Opposition." I do make it a bit of a habit to move this particular motion, and that's because I believe that this is important legislation and that value can be added.

4:00

Now, typically speaking, and often under the former government, while I am willing to heap praise where it's necessary, I'll also point out some shortcomings. While, typically speaking, in this Chamber committee was the place where bills went to die – we certainly saw that in the past with the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler's Bill 203 – I don't believe that that was the intention yesterday when we sent Bill 203 to committee. We've seen in the past the former government send bills to committee that became too contentious or a challenge, and they went there forever. So in light of that and the recognition that this is important legislation that needs to be passed this year, I've also included a timeline in which the committee could and should report back.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move an amendment, and if it's fine with you, I'll have that distributed and continue while that's happening.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Mr. Cooper: Notice of Amendment. Bill 6, Securities Amendment Act, 2016. Mr. Cooper to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 6, Securities Amendment Act, 2016, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 6, Securities Amendment Act, 2016, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 and that the committee report back to the Assembly no later than October 31, 2016, if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Mr. Speaker, here we have an opportunity to send an important piece of legislation through to committee, a reasonable timeline that doesn't add any undue stress to the work of the Resource Stewardship Committee and still allows the legislation to be passed this year. In fact, October 31 is currently the first day of the next scheduled sitting. The amendment does provide some flexibility should the House not be sitting on October 31 but then allows the committee to report back to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, one of our responsibilities is good governance, and we have that opportunity to provide good governance at every stage of the bill on every piece of legislation. Even when there's agreement amongst the members – and I think back to, if I'm not mistaken, the very first bill that this government introduced. It was Bill 1, an act to ban corporate and union donations, I believe. Even when there is significant agreement amongst members in this Chamber, as on that piece of legislation, the Official Opposition still feels it is our duty, responsibility to Albertans to strengthen legislation wherever possible. In that particular case we offered an extensive set of recommendations and amendments. We offered the opportunity to close some loopholes that, unfortunately, the government left in place when it came to Bill 1. I say all that to say that we agreed with Bill 1, but we all have a responsibility for due diligence. We all have a responsibility to ensure that the legislation that's passed in this Chamber is done in a manner that reflects the needs of Albertans and, in this case, the securities industry, those who are investing and those who are providing those securities.

While I appreciate the fact that we have this great agreement amongst members on the intention of the bill, I think it would be great for us all to be able to hear from stakeholders, not just the Minister of Finance, although he has done many things in the past that are reasonable, some more reasonable than others. My point is not just to hear from the Minister of Finance on the things that he has heard from stakeholders and industry players as well as those who utilize securities as an investment vehicle but for all members of the Assembly, particularly members of that committee, to be able to hear from those same stakeholders so that it allows us all to make a good, solid decision for the long-term viability of our province.

That's why I encourage all members in the Chamber to vote in favour of the amendment. I think the timeline is reasonable. It meets all of our needs and will allow the legislation to be reviewed in a manner that is appropriate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will refer to the amendment as RF1.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having been alerted by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks that there was an intent to move this to committee, I believe that in my initial statements I addressed the issue – right? – number one being that Securities Act amendments are something that happen on an annual basis.

I also want to bring light to what the leader of the third party said in terms of what we're really focused on here. The real question at hand is ensuring effective investor protection, ensuring strong market integrity, and ensuring an efficient system of capital formation. Now, as far as I know, the best of the best that deal with securities regulation all across this province are dealing with these issues on a regular basis, and we're harmonizing what is occurring across different securities regulators.

What's happening is that good recommendations that are coming forward in B.C., in Quebec, in Ontario are then – you know, the Alberta Securities Commission and the CEO are taking a look at that along with other stakeholders, and they're saying: okay; well this makes sense that we would do this as well here in Alberta. Again, I want to remind all members of this House that Alberta is the leader in securities regulation as it is. If our primary concern is ensuring effective investor protection – I could read through all seven sections again, but I'm going to be easy on you guys. I'm going to be easy on you all.

We already have some great recommendations here that need to be implemented. Let me just stress a couple, though. The halt-trade provision: I think this is something that is incredibly essential. If we do see something illegal occurring, the Alberta Securities Commission needs the power in order to stop trading on a particular stock and address it so that nobody continues to lose money.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Loyola: Agreed. We're all in agreement with that.

I think these are things that just need to be implemented right now. Another example is amending sections 29 and 42 of the act, that would allow the regulator to act more quickly when there is a risk of potential illegal activity by proposing a shorter notice period, from 20 to 10 days, right?

I'm sure that all the members in the House would agree that we need to move forward on this. We need to pass this. So, perhaps without regret, I will not support this amendment, and I highly encourage all the members of this House to vote this amendment down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

4:10

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Hearing none, are there any other parties that wish to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I'd just like to echo the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie when he said that, basically, we need to take a more prudent approach to this. The timeline that applies to this bill is somewhat essential because, I mean, the amendment here basically puts it forward to October 31, and that's nearly November. That's eight months away. Earlier we talked about the timeline on this bill, and it was mentioned that it comes up annually for these things to be reviewed. So it would make sense to me, then, with such a tight timeline that it just echoes what the leader of the third party said, the Member for Calgary-Hays, that kind of rings true, where I think he was quoted as saying that the passage of this item – and I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I'm just taking it from memory – clears the way for people to invest in our province, and the sooner the investment comes, jobs will follow.

On that note, I think that's all the more important reason why we need to proceed with this in a more timely fashion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to amendment RF1? The minister – the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm pleased to rise as the minister for Strathmore-Brooks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the referral motion before us here. I'm not sure why members across would be opposing this. There is all-party support for the bill in this House. The government, the Official Opposition, the third party are in support of both the intent and, from what we can tell, even the contents at this time. The Wildrose had consulted with stakeholders before we took a position on this bill. We made sure we spoke to people who know what they're talking about. I spoke to many people in southern Alberta and in Edmonton who understand capital markets, and they could find no major, significant problems with this bill. And I imagine that even sending this bill to committee would not significantly delay the bill.

The government did the right thing yesterday when they sent one of their own private member's bills to committee. Now, I really hope that sending things to committee here is not just a way for the government to shelve bills that they don't want to pass without actually having to vote against it. No one wants to vote against a private member's bill from your own private members in the government. I understand the politics of that, but that shouldn't be a backdoor way to kill a bill. Sending something to committee – it should be sent there to be legitimately studied, to listen to experts and witnesses, and to debate the bill in more detail. In fact, it would probably, almost certainly, speed up the operations of this House. If bills were to go through individual, specific committees, we wouldn't have to spend time on the floor of the House here in Committee of the Whole. It would make our whole program more efficient.

Now, I thank the NDP for the most boring bill that they've brought forward so far. As far as I'm concerned, a boring bill is much better than the less boring bills they've brought forward. I'm grateful when their bills are relatively unexciting. I think that it's probably better for Albertans. We're talking about getting things right. I think that members would have the assurance of the Official Opposition that if this went to committee, it wouldn't be used to drag out the process. It wouldn't be used to even filibuster. I mean, this is a bill that has the support, I believe, of every member in the Legislature. I wouldn't be surprised if the bill received unanimous support.

Yesterday the Government House Leader stood right across from me here and spoke to the need to get things right, to consult with stakeholders, to consult with experts. Well, the Wildrose has consulted with experts and stakeholders, but I think that it would be appropriate for us to do so in a public forum. I hope that the hon. Finance minister has consulted with experts. I hope that the government has started to get in the habit of speaking to people, witnesses and experts in their fields, before introducing bills. We know that the private member's bill that yesterday was sent to committee for study very obviously had not seen consultation with stakeholders. They were absolutely shocked to see the contents of the bill before it was introduced in this Legislature. It's my opinion that the government has done a little more homework on this bill, and they're to be congratulated for that.

We are talking about having a public forum, where witnesses could come and speak before us. I think the bill would receive a relatively speedy passage through a legislative committee of this Assembly. I'm asking members to vote on the same principles of the way they voted on a bill just yesterday to send it to committee for study.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks?

The question is called with respect to the amendment moved by the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, identified as RF1.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 6 lost]

The Speaker: We're now back to the original motion. Are there any members to speak to the motion?

Deputy Government House Leader, would you move a motion to close debate?

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to make a motion to close debate on second reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 6

Securities Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to speak to, really, the implementation and implications now of the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, a bill that proposes to establish new, low-interest . . .

An Hon. Member: We're on Bill 6.

Dr. Swann: We're on 5?

The Chair: No. We're on Bill 6, hon. member. Apologies.

Dr. Swann: Oh, I'm sorry.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act? Go ahead, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm Liberal. I'm flexible.

I'm very pleased to instead speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, a bill proposing to amend the Securities Act to provide for continued modernization, harmonization, and streamlining of Alberta's security laws and the ongoing reform of the Canadian securities regulatory system.

The Securities Act has been amended regularly for several years: Bill 15 in the spring 2015, Bill 5 in the fall of 2014, Bill 3 in the spring of 2014, Bill 42, which apparently died on the Order Paper in the fall of 2013, and Bill 4 in the fall of 2011. The bill is lengthy, technical, and somewhat esoteric for many of us, but a general overview suggests that it's vital to get on with the job of bringing us again up to date and consistent with the rest of Canadian securities law. It bolsters the investigative and enforcement powers of the Alberta Securities Commission. It proposes to authorize a justice of the peace to issue search warrants instead of a judge, to reduce the notice period required for people being summoned to attend an interview with the ASC's investigators or to appear at a hearing, and to amend the section of the Securities Act dealing with halt trade orders.

Other aspects of Bill 6 will update civil liability provisions, revise the provisions that deal with recognition of exchanges, clearing agencies, credit-rating organizations, and trade repositories, and it proposes to expand the ASC's ability to make rules to enhance derivatives regulation. An annual review and updating is required to support the ongoing reform of our Canadian regulatory system, and the process is largely internally driven by our Treasury Board and Finance. It's not that political. Ongoing amendments proposed by both former PC administrations and the NDP are consistent in tone and intent.

The memorandum of understanding regarding securities regulation that was passed in 2004 included all except Ontario in these regulations, and it recognizes that securities regulations in Canada is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, that the securities regulatory system requires constant innovation and reform to keep pace with the rapid evolution of capital markets. The council of ministers is committed to maintaining and enhancing the status of Canada's securities regulatory system, which is already ranked by the OECD and the World Bank as one of the best in the world. One of the key objectives of the 2004 MOU was to establish a passport system, providing market participants with a single window of access to Canadian capital markets.

With respect to derivatives regulation, following the summit, the G-20 issued a formal declaration calling for common principles for the reform of financial markets, including derivatives. In the ensuing period there has been considerable and ongoing regulation around OTC, or over-the-counter, derivatives that pose significant risk to many unwary investors. Since Canada, unlike most countries, has a decentralized securities regime, it must rely on its provincial governments to enact legislation providing for increased oversight and regulation, specifically on over-the-counter derivatives, through individual provincial securities regulators.

My full support and that of my caucus will be put forward for this. Canada, unlike most countries, has had a decentralized securities regulatory regime. The changes proposed in Bill 6 are part of a national effort to harmonize securities rules, and they mirror those being made in other jurisdictions. Bill 6 builds on the earlier regulatory changes that caucus supported during the spring of 2015, the spring and fall of 2014, and earlier. As a province, as a country we need to be doing everything possible to protect investors and maintain the integrity of our capital markets.

If the 2008 global financial crisis taught us anything, it's that complacency and lack of regulatory vigilance can quickly and catastrophically shake world markets and all of our economies. No country or jurisdiction is immune from the effects of market collapse; therefore it's important that we do all we can to support the health and stability of the world financial system.

Alberta Liberals acknowledge that the proposed changes are necessary for Alberta to be able to honour its national and international commitments to improve regulatory security.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I wanted to take this opportunity to share with members of the House a couple of quotes referring to the very issue at hand that we're all speaking about right now. I wanted to touch a little bit on this whole issue of the centralized federal regulator.

I have a quote here from Eric Spink from the Financial Post, where he's quoted in an article called Why Alberta's New NDP Premier Rachel Notley Is Not for a National Regulator.

An Hon. Member: Uh-oh. Name.

Loyola: Oh, pardon me. The Premier. Well, I'm quoting the name. I'm quoting the name.

Okay. I'll go ahead with the quote.

Canada already has one of the best regulatory systems in the world; the current proposal is a massive constitutional power grab, again referring to a centralized federal regulator, and Alberta should work together with Québec and other provinces to strike it down, as they did with the proposal that was struck down in 2011. From an Albertan's perspective, those are compelling reasons, and Tedesco's suggestion that our "affable" new premier might sign on to the current proposal (in effect, selling the constitutional farm) seems to underestimate her political acumen.

Bill Rice, the former chair and CEO of the Alberta Securities Commission, quoted in an Alberta Venture article by Robbie Jeffrey published on February 16, 2016, states that the oil and gas industry consumes huge amounts of capital, so the raising of capital and the structuring of an environment in which capital can be raised and traded appropriately is a very significant issue for Alberta. I believe the independence of the regulation of that territory becomes more important when times are tough, because certain adaptations can be made, local imagination can be used and certain changes or differentiations can be undertaken in the province to accommodate difficult circumstances.

Again, we're all in agreement with how important this issue is and how we need to move forward on it.

Terence Corcoran, National Post columnist, business writer, quoted in a National Post article published on December 22, 2014:

Key industry associations, including life insurers and public sector pension funds, also weighed in on what they see as an unwarranted expansion of regulatory power. The Ontario Teachers' Pension Plan and other pension funds balked at proposals to add them to the list of institutions that should be regulated by the new authority, due to their potential contribution to "systemic risk." The pension brief said pensions are "concerned about the potentially onerous regulatory requirements."

I've saved the best for last, especially for the members across the way. Former Wildrose Finance critic Rob Anderson, quoted on the party website on May 7, 2013:

This government needs to immediately strengthen the Alberta Securities Commission and beef up enforcement measures so Albertans don't fall victim to predatory fraudsters. The livelihoods of thousands of Albertans are at stake. It's up to the government to do something to address this serious issue.

4:30

An Hon. Member: What year was that?

Loyola: In 2013, Member. There you go.

Albeit it's important that we move forward with this legislation – we're all in agreement on that – I think that we should have, you know, a buy-in from the members from across the way. I don't know if the members of the third party are – they're not speaking too much.

The Chair: Hon. member, please, through the chair.

Loyola: Pardon me, Madam Chair.

Again, I will highly suggest to all the members of this House that they vote in favour of the Securities Amendment Act, 2016. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Dr. Starke: Are you going to quote Rob, too?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, interestingly enough, I don't have a quote from the former Member for Airdrie ready this afternoon, but I can raise my fist angrily when I need to.

Well, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 6, the Securities Amendment Act, 2016, here in Committee of the Whole. Of course, Madam Chair, our caucus recognizes the need for administrative updates on legislation from time to time such as the Securities Act, but as previously mentioned, we would have appreciated seeing this bill go to the proper standing committee for adequate study to ensure members understand this particular legislation in greater detail.

The reality is that our securities legislation does not exist in isolation, and there are numerous factors at play. This includes changes in the markets. It includes what goes on in other jurisdictions. While I appreciate that we are a leader on securities regulation, it is important, or would have been important, that we take the necessary time to ensure the legislation allows us to continue to lead. In an economic climate like this one any amendments to securities legislation do not just exist for the purpose of housekeeping. They could potentially affect the draw of Albertans for business and investment where securities are concerned.

In my opinion, any legislation that pertains to securities, however routine or robust or modest, should be carefully scrutinized. In fact, the federal government sends virtually every piece of legislation to an all-party committee. For almost every legislative item that goes forward, officials from whichever department is affected will appear and speak to the proposed changes at that committee in the federal government. These are subject matter experts. They're able to explain and go into details on the implications of the proposed legislation in a way even some ministers cannot.

Those discussions, those committee proceedings, are a matter of public record. It means that we can have a more open Legislature. It means that Albertans can get the same sort of feedback that we get when we speak to industry experts and stakeholders, but then that feedback can also be on the public record as these issues around securities affect Albertans and their livelihoods, their future, and their past. Those discussions at committee are of critical importance to Albertans. They are of value to constituents who want to learn why a certain piece of legislation was introduced. They are of value to researchers and subject matter experts. It is a disservice to Albertans whenever the legislation here is fired through without the standing committee stage.

After 40 years of single-party governance in Alberta we find ourselves in a system where this resource of proper scrutiny is used far too infrequently, far too rarely. The rare use of committee for study seems to have been inherited by the new government, that was elected last May, just like the previous government, who also didn't believe in a robust committee system.

I have only seen the current government, nearly a year into their mandate, refer legislation to committee twice, once yesterday and once on a previous private member's bill, Bill 203. We recognize why the government put forward this bill, and we support it, but we would have liked it to go to committee to receive that proper scrutiny. Simply put, pushing securities legislation through in mere days or a short afternoon is bad precedent. We saw this particular piece of legislation introduced last Thursday under Introduction of Bills, only to be debated today at second reading. Now we are already in Committee of the Whole, and quite possibly this bill will become law tomorrow.

It's important that any changes sought in the Alberta Securities Act do not undermine competitive advantage in any way. The ability to have officials speak to this particular legislation would have been of immense value. Whenever any amending legislation is proposed, the first question we should ask is not merely about what is being changed but also about what is not being changed. The officials who advise the government on matters such as securities are no doubt aware of matters pertaining to securities in other jurisdictions. They are no doubt well aware of the regulatory changes that have or are having a positive or adverse effect in other jurisdictions. That sort of subject matter expertise is invaluable to us as legislators, especially when we need to be thinking about what's best for Alberta in the long term.

Now, this bill is an excellent example of the importance of an independent securities regulator for Alberta. I appreciate the ability to discuss this legislation in the Assembly without having to consult a national oversight body and try to find relative agreement amongst nine other provinces before we're able to debate the legislation. I suspect that the government appreciates this ability as well, and we've certainly seen that in their support for a made-in-Alberta solution.

In no uncertain terms the federal government has made it clear that they will want a national securities regulator. The previous federal government had stated their ambition, and now we have a new federal government. In recent years some provinces have gone to court to fight this. The idea of a national securities regulator itself is not a new one. It's been discussed by Canada's various federal governments with various levels of intensity throughout the last number of years. There are certainly areas where harmonizing securities rules could make sense. It is, of course, advantageous to be harmonizing our securities rules with the provinces while still maintaining our independent control over securities regulation.

Breaking down any sort of provincial barrier is most often a net benefit to all Albertans, but it is important that Alberta ensures its independence when it comes to a securities regulator. In a recent Financial Post column it was noted that interprovincial red tape costs Canadian households over $7,500 per year. Anything we can do to work against this costly red tape, regardless of whether it's trading securities or more straightforward commercial trade, makes for a stronger and more free Confederation.

But harmonization should not be confused with amalgamation or sharing of information. Having our own regulator means that decisions can be made with regard to Alberta's best interests. It has allowed investment in Alberta to be a consideration in how securities are regulated. It is responsible to conclude that a regulator that is headquartered on Bay Street in Toronto may not have the same priorities as one headquartered here in Alberta. The fact is that a great deal of Alberta's capital markets pertain to the natural resource sector. An Alberta-based regulator understands that sector. An Alberta-based regulator knows how to respond when those markets change; a Toronto-based one does not.

This government and this Finance minister have said that they will maintain an independent securities regulator. As long as they keep their word this time, our caucus will be happy to see our securities rules harmonized with other provinces' to improve interprovincial flow of capital. That's good for Alberta. That's good for Canada.

Whether or not Alberta is joining a national regulator, of course, is not what's being debated in this particular bill. If we're simply here to go through the motions, if we are simply here to wave this bill through without due scrutiny, we would be setting a bad precedent for matters pertaining to how securities are handled. Regulation is not the answer to every problem, of course, Madam Chair, but if we are to take pride in the fact that Alberta has its own securities regulator, if we are to think of ourselves as a successful jurisdiction in this regard, then we should take securities and the matters around securities seriously here today.

I note that the Finance minister recently wrote a newspaper article favouring Alberta having its own regulator. The third party, when they were in government, also spoke in favour of having its own regulator. So if there's actual agreement here on the source of strength for Alberta, to have our own regulator, we should be paying particular attention to the matters pertaining to securities that come before us.

That said, this bill itself seems to be a responsive one. It's a response to market needs rather than telling the market what it needs from a top-down approach. The changes this bill introduces respond to the confusion in market trading surrounding hybrid securities and derivative products.

It would be immensely helpful if the government were able to answer a few questions on the legislation. Which experts were consulted? I know that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has mentioned some of those. On the need for amending legislation, presumably those experts had particular concerns in mind. On the securities or derivatives themselves, are any of those individuals potentially involved with a conflict of interest? This is speculative on my part, but it serves to illustrate why proper scrutiny is needed, even on matters where we deem them to be housekeeping such as the Securities Act. It is important that we debate and robustly discuss these important issues.

Madam Chair, as we have noted, there is a need for administrative updates to legislation. The Official Opposition has proposed in a number of cases in the past additional clauses to legislation that would require updates to legislation where necessary, and this particular legislation is an example where those updates are needed and required. On the surface there doesn't seem to be anything untoward or amiss, but given the subject matter it makes sense that we should have studied this at a committee. The decisions made pertaining to the Alberta Securities Act are important as it relates to Alberta's competitive advantage, and more broadly, as the saying goes, the devil is in the details.

I am pleased to support this piece of legislation at Committee of the Whole while I would have preferred the opportunity to hear from expert witnesses and testimony at a policy committee.

Madam Chair, it was my pleasure to speak to the bill today, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? Questions? Comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know it's not customary to ask questions when you're in committee, but I wanted to ask specifically the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. As soon as I got my hands on this bill, as soon as it was presented, one of the first things that I did was that I sat down with friends who are stockbrokers to ask them: what do you think about this? Like the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, the stockbrokers that I spoke to didn't seem to have any issues with any of the regulations that were being brought forward. I don't have the Blues in front of me, so I'm paraphrasing, but I believe your statement was that the stakeholders you consulted with didn't seem to have any issues with any of the regulations that were being brought forward. I was hoping, if he's so inclined, that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks could speak to that issue.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I look forward to the days when the member can ask me more questions in this House, perhaps about two hours earlier in the daily Routine.

The member is quite right. On this side of the House we've consulted with stakeholders. In fact, during this invigorating debate I've been corresponding with certain stakeholders involved in our capital markets, who know what they're talking about, and most of them have said that this is a bill that they have not seen any issues with.

I think the point that we've made on this side of the House is that every bill – every single bill – contentious and noncontentious bills, should go to committee. I contend that this Bill 6 would go through a committee rather quickly. The last Bill 6 may have been held up a little bit longer, and if that last Bill 6 had gone to a committee, it probably would have saved a lot of the members across a lot of sleepless nights and headaches.

I think that it's a basic principle that every single bill should go before a legislative committee, the way we do in Ottawa. When federal NDP members wish to make their views known on a piece of legislation introduced by the former Conservative government or the present Liberal government, they're able to bring stakeholders and witnesses and experts to testify at committees that develop a degree of expertise and knowledge. I mean, the number of members in this Legislature with any expertise on this bill is going to be rather slim, as it would be on many topics, and committees have people who develop a degree of expertise on topics, and we can bring witnesses forward. I think it's the process that we're talking about, not that there's any particularly disagreeable part of this bill.

Again, I have been speaking with stakeholders. I've not found anyone who had any negative problems with the bill. In fact, the only feedback I heard was from a single member, and I'll speak about this soon. I heard from a member who wanted the bill to be toughened up, potentially, on a particular part of the bill, who wanted it to actually go a little bit further. That's not to say that I agree or disagree with that position but that I would like to hear from witnesses like that so that they could bring their views forward to us and we can hear expert testimony. I think that bills should not be written only by the executive branch of government and rubber-stamped by the legislative branch. It should be that when the executive brings forward a bill to this House, this House has meaningful input into it, that this House has the opportunity to bring stakeholders forward, and that the only opportunity for stakeholder engagement should not be in the minister's office before the bill is actually written.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

4:50

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to speak to some of the concerns that we've been hearing, I guess, from the Official Opposition, basically, with regard to some more comments about why there might be a need to further delay the bill for further inquiries and discussions. In the spirit of what the Member for Strathmore-Brooks just mentioned – I think he just mentioned there that he hadn't heard any direct disagreements to the bill, not to say that they couldn't come up. But, quite honestly, I just don't see the need to further delay this bill.

We just saw an amendment, which was RF1, that proposed kicking the can down the road, so to speak, on the bill nearly eight months, to the 31st of October. But what we're really talking about here is November. It kind of speaks to the point: why does the Securities Act need to be updated so frequently? I think one of the points here is that Alberta must ensure that its securities regulatory system reflects the realities of today's capital markets and evolves with international standards and global regulatory reform initiatives. This requires continuous review and updating of securities laws.

Another point is that today's financial environment is more complex and more sophisticated and more international in scope and more driven by technology than ever before. The proposed updates would further harmonize Alberta's securities laws with those of other jurisdictions across Canada as part of Alberta's commitment to improving Canada's existing securities regulatory system.

Finally, the changes will also enhance the protection of Alberta's investors and foster the operation of fair and effective Alberta capital markets and minimize systemic risks.

As we've mentioned here about the timelines, basically, one of the concerns is: what would happen, I guess, if these amendments were not passed? Maybe not too much in the extreme short term, but one of the points that we're trying to make here is that if these amendments do not promptly proceed, Alberta could jeopardize its leadership role in securities regulatory reform. Without continued modernization and harmonization of the Alberta Securities Act it would be difficult to ensure a continued vibrant capital market. This will require enhanced market transparency and investor protection along with the detection and mitigation of possible systemic risks and market abuse.

It's for these reasons, I think, that it is more prudent at this point to proceed with Bill 6. I just thought I'd make those comments.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It has been truly an honour to hear about the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's passionate commitment in defence of capitalism and market regulation.

I rise today to speak to Bill 6. I have some questions for the Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board about this legislation that I hope he is ably able to answer, specifically on the origins of the amendments to the Securities Act before us here. This bill does not look like a traditional piece of legislation, thank the good Lord. We want to know where it came from. Can the minister explain the process for developing these Securities Act updates? Did the financial services industry request these changes, or was it the Alberta Securities Commission who asked for the changes in our law? Or was it officials in the minister's department who diligently did their job and this is just an annual update? Was it, in fact, stakeholders reaching out to the government asking for this?

We spoke with stakeholders involved in the financial services sector about Bill 6. One industry member indicated that they would be personally in favour of more stringent rules that protected investors around offering memorandums being placed in the Securities Act. For those who don't know, an offering memorandum is a legal document stating the objectives, risks, and terms of investment involved with a private placement. This includes items such as financial statements, management biographies, a detailed description of the business, et cetera. An offering memorandum serves to provide buyers with information on the offering and to protect the sellers from the liability associated with selling unregistered securities.

Sometimes investors are being sold a product by offering memorandums when they really shouldn't have been sold the investment to begin with. I understand there have been an increased number of enforcement actions against real estate promoters who frequently try to rely on the offering memorandum exemptions although they might prepare deficient offering memorandums. We would like to know if the minister could tell us if he has heard this concern as well.

Another piece of feedback we received involves dealing with limitation periods, Madam Chair; that is, the time in which legal proceedings are brought forward for a transaction gone sour. It is my understanding that the Securities Act places this at six months presently. This is a very short period of time to take any action for damages. This needs to be extended to a minimum of one year, or more appropriately it ought to accord with the time period set out in the Limitations Act, which is two years.

These are a few of the changes the government may want to examine and consider changing in the near future. This is a technical bill with much to wade through about securities that are not securities, derivatives that are securities, securities that are derivatives, and derivatives that are not derivatives. Are members confused yet? I'm sure this is an exhilarating way for the new Member for Calgary-Greenway to spend his first day in the Legislature.

I'm glad that we have professionals like those at AIMCo who manage the heritage fund and pension funds, who understand all of this in depth and understand its ramifications. Those people can navigate all of the risks associated with these products and do a good job of creating a steady rate of return for these products. I'm also pleased to see the time and cost-saving measures brought in to allow the Alberta Securities Commission to get a search warrant from a justice of the peace instead of waiting for a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. It is my estimation that this will increase the likelihood of halting a crime in progress.

Wildrose recognizes the need for periodic or even regular administrative updates to legislation such as the Securities Act, and we recognize the importance of our Securities Act in providing a competitive advantage for Alberta while protecting Alberta's investors. This government has said that it will maintain Alberta's independent securities regulator. As long as it keeps its word, we are happy to see our securities rules harmonized with other provinces' where it is needed to improve the interprovincial flow of capital.

We would caution, however, that we should always take time to reflect on whether these changes are actually good for Alberta. The ability to make that decision for ourselves based on our own province's need is the biggest reason for having our own regulator. Again, Madam Chair, I will repeat my call that legislation that is this serious, however much it may receive the potential unanimous support of members in this House, should be studied properly to allow for stakeholders and outside experts.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question on Bill 6?

[The clauses of Bill 6 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do now move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

The Chair: The committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 6.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the committee concur in the report? All in favour, say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, say no. So ordered.

Bill 5
Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

[Debate adjourned April 12]

The Deputy Speaker: Any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 5? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really am looking forward to discussing this vital piece of legislation. I think that looking after vulnerable seniors is one of the major responsibilities of any legislator, and I think that this bill really does go a long way to improving the situation, particularly for our low-income seniors.

The proposed seniors' home adaptation and repair program – and I'll call that SHARP in the future – will allow seniors to use their home equity to make modifications so that they can stay in their homes and maintain independence. More seniors will be eligible to access these funds to do a much broader scope of work than what was available under the special needs assistance program. SHARP will include consumer protection measures to ensure seniors know their rights when hiring contractors or having to cancel contracts. The SHARP program promotes effective and responsible governance, and it's anticipated – this is important – the proposed program will save this government about $6 million a year. I think that for all of those reasons, all of us should be in support of this.

This is social justice. As I said the other day, all of us in this Legislature are interested in social justice. I know some of you across the floor might not want to be called socialists, but in this case I know you are all in favour of promoting social justice.

At the same time as we're promoting social justice, particularly for vulnerable Albertans, we're actually promoting the creation of jobs for Albertans, jobs that the contractors will create through the funding that comes out of this program. These are jobs that might not have been made for Albertans without this legislation being passed. It's a stimulus to the economy. Again, I'll go back to the importance of countercyclical investments. When the economy is at a low point, it's our time to actually invest in the economy, to promote job creation through programs such as this. For all of these reasons I'm fully in support of this.

It is a very important program that's being suggested here. A key part to this is the consumer protection. We have to recognize that low-income seniors may not have the financial literacy that we would like them to have. What this bill will help do is protect these consumers, these vulnerable seniors, from predatory activity by unscrupulous contractors. This is an important issue. You hear news reports of this all the time. It's a regular occurrence here in Edmonton, which I'm most familiar with, but I'm sure it happens across the province. It may even happen in rural areas and smaller cities more often since the consumer protection services that we have available in large cities sometimes don't reach out to the outlying areas.

As a physician I also am interested in this. I have a lot of experience looking after patients in their later years, and I can tell you that people that might develop a stroke or might have cancer or might have a heart attack or might, for instance, develop kidney failure are often kept in our acute-care hospitals for very long periods of time solely because sending them home is not an option. Their homes are not capable of taking them back. With this kind of program we might actually be able to get some of those patients who are sitting in the hospitals for long periods of time back into their communities, and I'm sure that they would be much more comfortable there than sitting in the hospital or in a long-term care facility if it were available.

What this program is going to do is actually increase, for instance, accessibility to a home. That means putting in bars in the bathrooms, putting in lifts so that a person might be able to get from the first floor to the second floor if that's where their bedrooms are. I'm sure the security of the home could be increased. We could put in video cameras and other security equipment that would make the home safer and the person more comfortable in their home. It's even possible – and I would look at my own situation and hope I'll never be in the financial situation to qualify for this program – in my own home that if I were to have a stroke, I would actually need to do some renovations to allow the creation of a first-floor bedroom with bathroom facilities. That would mean that I could still age in place at home with this sort of thing.

It's going to help people stay in our communities, and, like the elders in indigenous societies, the seniors are a very important component of that. If we don't have seniors in the communities, we lose all that wisdom that they've accumulated over the years. I'm hoping that in some small way this legislation is going to improve the quality and quantity of life for seniors so they can stay in their communities and age in place.

I was interested to hear from my colleague in front of me about the insurance issues. I think this was a very important observation that was made. These homes often need renovations to meet codes or other things that the insurance companies require, not to mention just, say, replacing a roof or fixing a furnace or perhaps doing some alterations to the kitchen or to the bathrooms that would make the house livable.

I would urge all of my colleagues on both sides of the House to vote for this legislation because I think it is really an important piece of legislation. I'm proud to be part of a government that is promoting this program so that our seniors can live in dignity, can be proud of their own homes, can continue to contribute to the welfare of this province, and also that we as a government can save money – the $6 million, I think, is not an insignificant amount – and we can get at one of the real problems in seniors' care, which is the overuse of acute-care facilities for our elderly patients.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche . . .

Mr. Hanson: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

The Deputy Speaker: . . . St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Just say dialysis. We're good.

Thank you very much. The question is to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. You mentioned a couple of times the savings of $6 million. I was wondering if you could expand on that a little bit and give us some details on how we're going to save $6 million with this program.

Also, while we're talking about money, I had mentioned earlier in the day and had asked the question about where the money was going to come from. We're going to be potentially exposing Albertans to $5.6 billion of debt with these loans, you know, based on 140,000 homes at $40,000 per. If we maxed it out, that's what we'd be looking at, $5.6 billion. So if you could expand a little bit on where the $6 million savings is coming from and if you could share with us where the $5.6 billion potential is going to be coming from as well.

Thanks.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much for the question. I appreciate the opportunity to respond. This legislation basically allows us to make the approach to seniors' housing a lot more efficient. The special needs assistance program really has a lot of limitations, and what we're going to be talking about is a much broader scope of work than what was available.

We're also going to be saving money when you look at keeping persons in their own home in the community. This legislation really is all about making the senior who doesn't have the financial resources more capable of directing their own existence and adding to the quality of the communities as well as to the qualities of that individual's own existence.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on 29(2)(a).

Mr. Orr: Thank you, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud. Just a further question, curiosity in a way, but I think it helps to dialogue. I'm interested in the discussion between the home adaptation needs for seniors and the home services needs for seniors, home-care kinds of issues. Yes, there definitely will be homes that need adaptation, but I think we also all realize that seniors get to the point where they can't mow their lawn, maybe they can't care for themselves adequately, those kinds of things. I guess my question relates to: have you been able to do any studies or are you aware of any studies that would help us to understand sort of a cost-benefit analysis between the benefits and costs of home adaptation versus just providing home-care kinds of services, that would allow seniors to stay in their home for a longer period of time as well?

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. I think he's raising an important issue. There are a lot of varying needs for our seniors population. We need to look at, for instance, the whole area of consumer protection and the area of supporting what I heard about earlier today, the sort of community centres that provide support. I think it was the MLA for Lethbridge-East that was talking about a really vital program in that community to support the integration of seniors into the community. That sort of thing is very important. We need, probably, some changes in the traffic laws to slow down traffic in areas around seniors' facilities or in residential areas. That might apply to the seniors' care as well.

Certainly, I think that looking at programs to improve home care, to improve access to other community services is vital. But what we're talking about here in this legislation, in my opinion, is looking at home adaptation as a way to make sure that the individual can stay in that home and can . . . [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Madam Speaker. It's my time to get up again and give my support to this important innovation. To be fair, the past government had funding for renovations for seniors; however, it didn't carry the kind of weight and implications that this does. It's been alluded a little bit earlier by some of the members opposite that this could take a very sizable budget to cover if everybody jumped on board. Obviously, it would be a good deal to have an interest loan at prime to the tune of $75,000, recognizing that it has to be paid back at some time. But it's pretty good. As my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview indicated, these are important and cost-saving renovations that could keep people in their homes for much longer, could get people out of institutions, whether it's long-term care institutions or hospitals, or in some cases perhaps even prevent them from going into a lodge or secondary assisted living program.

Tremendous leadership on this, I think, but a little bit uncertain about just how one might deal with a huge influx of many, many people taking advantage of this. So I hope that there would be some careful scrutiny of applications and that we don't get too far ahead of ourselves with this. Clearly, issues like widening doorways and hallways, installing walk-in tubs, roof repairs, and electrical repairs: these are essential, and obviously many people in our province, perhaps 10 or 15 per cent at a minimum, don't have the money to make some of these very basic changes that would keep them safe and keep them longer in their homes.

Section 2 of the bill authorizes the minister, then, to make low-interest home equity loans "for the purpose of making repairs, renovations or adaptations . . . reasonably necessary for the maintenance, structural integrity or energy efficiency . . . or for the health, safety or mobility of the occupants." That does give the minister and the department some discretion about approving or not approving some of these very generous offers.

Section 3 authorizes the minister to file a caveat in the land titles office against the certificate of title for an eligible residence in respect of the loan.

Section 4 contains provisions regarding loan repayment.

Section 5 permits low-income seniors who don't qualify for a loan to apply for a grant in accordance with the regulation. The government has suggested that $2 million in grants will be available annually as a separate aspect of this. I don't understand fully how that would enhance some of the rest of the loan program, but again I would hope that there would be very careful scrutiny of that.

Section 6 allows an individual who was refused a loan or a grant to request a review of that decision in accordance with the regulations, and sections 7 and 8 offer measures to protect consumers, including provisions to review the reasonableness of the costs of a home repair as well as the right to cancel contracts.

The government has estimated that about 145,000 households will be eligible for the program. That, again, amounts to a very sizable potential budgetary item. The cash for the loans is coming from Alberta's general revenue fund, so it'll be interesting to see how this relates to the budget coming up this week. The program is believed to be the first of its kind in Canada. If passed, it will take effect on July 1 of this year. This will be the second home equity program available.

Senior homeowners have also got access to the seniors property tax deferral program, which was a progressive element that the last government put into place.

Dr. Starke: Bravo.

Dr. Swann: Yes. You can take credit for that.

I have no hesitation in supporting this bill given the caveats that I've mentioned. Anything that will keep seniors in their homes for longer and remove seniors from institutional care and the extremely costly implications of that as well as give them quality of life and much higher potential for rehabilitation in their own home, for mental health issues, for longer term connections with their community and family. So I'm very pleased to support this and will take my seat and wait for the rest of the debates.

Thanks, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Dach: Yes. Thank you. I rise under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Madam Speaker, to bring clarification to some issues raised by the hon. member opposite regarding certain matters about the program. One number that was mentioned by the hon. member was that he thought the maximum loan amount would be $75,000 under this program when it is actually a $40,000 maximum loan, so that number should be clear.

He was right that the program does offer a lot of leeway to the government department members who are analysing these loans and requests for these loans to determine and positively grant such a loan because we're not looking to minimize under the loan program. After all, it is the senior's own money that they'll be lending; it'll be their equity that they're accessing.

In terms of what types of home adaptations or repairs will qualify for the loan program, the program will increase the types of repairs and adaptations over the current special-needs program, which was a grant. As far as being reasonable to repair or adapt to assist a senior who chooses to remain in their home, the proposed adaptations or repairs will be deemed eligible if they improve or increase any of the following in a senior's home in support of aging in place: their physical safety, their mobility, their independence, and their health. So within those wide-ranging parameters a lot of discretion is involved, and it was put in there on purpose so that we wouldn't be unnecessarily limiting what a senior thought might help with their ability to continue living in the house.

It could potentially mean painting the kitchen, and sometimes it's just something that they couldn't have afforded to do otherwise, and this could make that house more liveable. It's their money that they're accessing. We wanted to give the maximum amount of choice possible in this program to allow seniors to improve their property so that they would feel better living in it as long as possible because, as the hon. member will know, especially the member opposite who just spoke to the bill, it costs a whole lot more to have a senior in long-term care or acute care than it would to have them continue in their home.

Other hon. members have asked how the program will save the government $6 million, and I can tell you exactly how it will do that. The current special needs assistance program provides about $8 million a year in grants to low-income seniors for essential home repairs. Now, with the introduction of the new loan program, the special needs assistance program will no longer provide these grants. Thus, the government will save about $6 million. As well, $2 million is being retained to provide grants to those low-income seniors who need essential home repairs but don't qualify for the loan. That's where the $6 million in savings is realized.

One might ask: is the government trying to save money on the backs of seniors? Well, we recognize the demographic shift and the current economic reality. We wanted to maintain supports for seniors. The program not only allows us to do this, but it expands the range of supports to more seniors, gives them the choice of what improvements they want to make to their property to satisfy their physical safety, improve their mobility needs, maintain their independence, and look after health needs while they remain in their home, using money that basically is their own.

A program where people access the equity in their home isn't something that is going to be available or would be readily available through a typical home equity loan program. This is more generous, and it was designed to be more generous. Interest rate wise, it's going to be prime. Right now it's about 2.7 per cent. The 55-year-old minimum-age senior who is the surviving spouse of the initially eligible senior who got the grant can stay in the home as long as they live, and the loan will not have to be repaid until the surviving spouse passes away or sells the property. That's a bit more generous than what you typically find in the normal home equity loan market.

On top of that the home equity loan program typically will have a higher interest rate than what we offer at 2.7 per cent. You'll find also that there may be a variable rate, which could have a really onerous effect on the amount of equity or amount of debt that piles up in a regular home equity loan program, so it's designed to be generous and effective.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before I call on the next speaker, just a little clarification. With 29(2)(a) the intent is that it could be a point of clarification for the previous speaker, not a response to other speakers in general, so if you could kind of keep it in that spirit. Thank you.

Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to second reading of Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. One thing that we have certainly seen today is a sense amongst members of the Assembly that the intention of assisting seniors is of critical importance. We have also seen some significant concerns on this side of the House to . . . [An electronic device sounded] Some sort of legislative fine, I think, comes with whatever just happened there.

We have seen some concern, certainly from this side of the House, around the government's ability to administer the program. We've heard that no additional resources will be required to administer the program but that it's possible that up to 140,000 seniors would access the program or at least that that would be the number eligible. Now, the member across the way has said that they guesstimate a significantly smaller number than that, but the risk still is there.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I am of the firm belief that these types of pieces of legislation need to be studied. I know that the government has written into this piece of legislation that they would like to have the regulations dealt with by the 1st of July, which doesn't give committee a whole ton of time to study, but there is certainly time between now and even before the end of the session. Keeping in mind the fact that we have a couple of weeks of estimates to debate the budget, where committees can't sit, immediately following that, the week of what's likely to be the 17th, 18th, 19th of May and the following week, because there's no constituency week in the month of May thanks to the government's schedule, there is time in the month of May to allow the committee to sit.

One of the reasons why it would be so important is that we've heard from stakeholders, particularly those in the banking industry and those who have provided this kind of product in the past, that they were quite surprised that this piece of legislation was being brought before the Assembly and that they didn't have an opportunity to provide any sort of feedback to the government on this particular legislation or even on the concept of the legislation. I think it's important that we hear from folks just like that.

I've also heard from some seniors' groups that while they are pleased with some portions, particularly the intention of trying to keep seniors in their homes, they're concerned about whether or not this is actually going to get to the core of what keeps seniors in homes. One of these groups in particular has said: you know, while it's important that seniors may be able to use some equity for a new roof, a new roof isn't going to provide the care that they actually need to keep them in their homes. These are the types of stakeholders that it would be important that we hear from.

5:30

Also, it would be important that we could hear from members of the public service and those in the Finance department because there does run a certain risk of significant liability that the government would be taking on: whether or not the government has the appropriate checks and balances in place to assess risk, whether or not they have the appropriate checks and balances in place to determine the viability of the home or the project. All of these sorts of things are significant exposures.

While I fully support the intent of trying to keep seniors in their homes, it's a good opportunity to stop and take stock about: is this the best path forward? I'm not talking about delays of months and months and months.

I would like to propose an amendment – and then I'll speak specifically to the amendment – to send this bill to committee. It's my personal favourite of all amendments that I rise to make. It's a notice of amendment, and if it's fine with you, Madam Speaker, I will send it out and proceed when you're ready.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member. The amendment will be known as RF1.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. Mr. Cooper to move that the motion for second reading of Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Families and Communities in accordance with Standing Order 74.2 and that the committee report back to the Assembly no later than May 31, 2016, if the Assembly is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Madam Speaker, while we recognize that the government would like to move forward on this bill, passing this bill by introducing it last Thursday, when there was one speaker in debate, then debating the bill this morning at second reading, spending probably only close to an hour at second reading today, then Committee of the Whole, likely tomorrow morning, and quite possibly third reading tomorrow afternoon is passing legislation at breakneck speed. Often when that happens, there are errors or omissions or challenges that occur. We're not asking for the legislation to be delayed in such a manner that it would prevent the government from accomplishing their task of regulations by the 1st of July but certainly ensuring that we can get some experts to come and speak specifically about the bill and some of the potential risks that are included in the legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung on the amendment.

Mr. Dach: Yes, on the amendment. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak against the amendment. I feel almost like I'm back in the real estate business on a referral marathon. The opposition members seem to be intent on installing a practice in this House of referring pretty much every motion it can to committee. Next we'll be asked to have a referendum on every motion that gets through this House. It seems to please opposition members.

However, the bill is rather straightforward, in my view, and this referendum simply looks to stall it and unnecessarily send it to committee. It's not rocket science. It's a straightforward bill which allows seniors to access the equity in their home and improve the property while they live in it so that they can avoid going into long-term care. It gives them lots of consumer protection that is above and beyond what would have been found under the grant program in that the contractors must inform the consumer that they have rights of cancellation. The rights of cancellation extend quite extensively beyond the time frame as to when they actually got the invoice, but as long as the work has not been started or supplies have not been made, the cancellation still can be made within, I believe, 30 days of having been approved for the loan. There are consumer protection elements in it. There is an ability to access home equity, which gives a senior a wider range of abilities to make different improvements to their home that will allow them to stay in it longer.

There's no need to delay the process. We'd like to have people working on seniors' homes very shortly after the bill is proclaimed.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm very pleased to rise again to speak to the referral motion on Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. There are so many unanswered questions that I have. I was very pleased that we got an explanation finally from the Member for Edmonton-McClung in regard to the $6 million in savings that they expect from this new bill. He made it quite clear that it would be due to grants no longer being provided to seniors, but they will now have to apply for loans. As I said, I found it very interesting, and I'm sure that the seniors will as well.

We've heard from Albertans that they are worried about their future. They're worried about their parents' and grandparents' future. This government shouldn't be adding yet another concern that could potentially hurt Albertans' future. This is just going to end up being another mistake that we can add to the long list of risky mistakes that have already been made.

People are worried that our seniors will lose valuable equity in their homes and have to face even harder choices down the road when it comes time for them to sell their properties and move into retirement homes. What if the senior passes away? Will the family have to wait for the government to take their share before the estate is divided among family members? What if money that was meant to provide for that senior's bills is tied up in the estate? Will the family have to take care of the cost of the funeral and other bills the senior has until the government has taken its share, all because the government has placed a lien on the property?

Madam Speaker, this bill definitely needs to go to committee and be discussed further before we can possibly pass it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would have to stand against this request for referral to the Families and Communities Committee. As many of the members in the House will know, there is actually already work that's being done within this committee, with the amendments to the Mental Health Act, and that report is required to be done just soon after the May 31, 2016, date. They're in the middle of doing their consultations and looking at ensuring that they are calling witnesses and working on that process. In addition to that, we also know that they have to do the estimates process, which can take up to a couple of weeks. The timeline within this amendment is not a realistic timeline, so I would at this time have to stand against this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) does come into effect now should anybody have any questions or comments for the previous speaker.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the amendment?

Mr. MacIntyre: Just a comment or maybe a question. It seems to me that the savings that this government is claiming they're going to realize from this thing are on the backs of the senior citizens in this province. I mean, this is unbelievable. You know, you're taking an $8 million grant system, which I understand is an expense to the government, and turning that into a loan environment, which is actually an asset to the government. So, yeah, you can do some fancy bookkeeping now and look like you actually did something good, but it's on the backs of our senior citizens, for crying out loud. This is unbelievable from a, quote, socially democratic government over here that seems to claim to care for people.

Furthermore, it's apparent that the members opposite haven't learned their lesson from Bill 6. The Member for Edmonton-McClung was talking about how this isn't rocket science, that this is so straightforward, that this thing just needs to be approved because we need to hurry up, and we need to get this out there. Those are the identical, same kinds of comments that we heard about Bill 6, that they wanted to get shoved through in just two or three days. And then, after the farmers in this province – God bless them – rose up, this government woke up to the reality and issued six pages of amendments to a bill that they originally claimed wasn't rocket science, was just fine, and could be passed just like it was. And that turned out to be bogus. Now we're hearing the same kind of rhetoric from over here: "There's nothing wrong with this bill. We did our homework. Let's just push it on through the House here."

We have standing committees in our legislative process for this very reason. What will the senior citizens say if they could come to a standing committee and you presented to them, Madam Speaker: "Okay. We're going to take an $8 million grant program, that is just money that we give to you, and we're going to change that to a $6 million loan program on your back. Tell me something, Mr. and Mrs. Senior Citizen. What do you think about that?" I guarantee you that this government did not consult on that issue with our senior citizens, or they would have heard, loud and clear: "Don't you dare. We're on fixed incomes. We need those grants. We don't need to go deeper in debt. Thank you very much."

The committee process would solve these kinds of silly problems that this so-called not-rocket-science bill is going to create. This thing has to go to committee. It's the right thing to do for the good people of Alberta, for them to come into this building and talk directly to the lawmakers and fix this bill before it just gets shoved down their throat, like they have attempted to do with every single piece of legislation that's come through this House. Shame.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members under 29(2)(a)? Previous speakers?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the amendment.

Mr. Orr: I'll make it quick. I do think that this is going to come back and that it is not straightforward. There are a hundred questions here. How is the government going to administer this? I mean, are we going to create a legal loan corporation to manage this kind of money? How are they going to deal with defaults when seniors don't pay their interest? Are they equipped to deal with defaults? How is it going to look, taking seniors to court because they haven't paid their interest? What about approvals? How about terms? How about renewals? How about rates?

The real question, for me, is that this is going to come out of the lives of seniors: 2.7 per cent, which we just heard a few minutes ago, times $40,000 is $1,800 in interest per year coming out of seniors' income. And if you factor into that inflation – and the average senior lives today until their mid-80s – and they take this out at 65, the inflation factor is going to reduce their income even more. And if you take that over the 20 years, it comes to $21,000 out of a senior's income in their senior years. If you multiply that by the 140,000 households we've been talking about here, we're taking $3 billion over the next 20 years out of seniors. It's another tax on seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Yeah, under 29(2)(a). I have to rise to challenge some of the comments that were most recently made with creative math by the member opposite. It was a calculation that I had a little trouble following, that's for sure. It didn't add up, that's for darn sure.

The loan program is one that doesn't have to be repaid until either the senior sells the home or passes away or the surviving spouse sells the home or passes away. It's not a matter of the senior making payments while they're still living in the home. It's a home equity loan program. It's not one that you make payments on at all until the home is either sold or until the homeowner passes away and the home is therefore disposed of by the estate. So there's a bit of misinformation there that we should correct right away.

Should this bill pass – and I hope it will – when the loan program is offered to seniors, the expectation is that seniors will say: yes; where do I apply? Beyond the grants that were available under the former $8 million program, which were rather limited in their scope, what we have here is a program that allows seniors to do a whole panoply of things which are much more suited to their taste than the limited grant program might have offered them. So it's a whole lot more choice that they have to use their own equity to improve their own property.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other speakers to the amendment?

I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment RF1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the main bill. Are there any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am happy to speak in favour of this bill. I proudly represent the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, and one of those municipalities, being Vegreville, has a large aging seniors population. Twenty-five per cent of the population is actually made up of those over 65, so my constituency office is very busy. My constituency assistant has a large caseload, and she's out there working with seniors all of the time and is a huge asset to the community.

I know that one of the things that she talks to me about is how she runs out of the seniors' benefit program application packages all the time because seniors know where to go when they need help, and they know that we have things that make their lives better. Also, one of the reasons why they know about these programs is because of FCSS. They're a huge asset for sharing info, and these are just some of the ways where we want to make sure that seniors are aware of all of the options that they have.

You know, one of the issues in a community like Vegreville is that the housing stock is a lot older. Unfortunately, one of the things that happens is that when these houses are not renovated on a regular basis, they have a lower value, so it makes it much more difficult for them to be able to make home repairs against the value of their houses. They also have a greater need for repair. The figure I have is that 56 per cent of houses that seniors live in were built over 35 years ago.

Some of the concerns that are most often shared with me when I meet with constituents is that they're concerned that they are not going to be able to live in their homes anymore, and that impacts them being near their family. One of the hugest issues in my constituency is that there is not enough assisted living, there is not enough affordable housing. This is one of those ways that we can try and bridge the gap that needs to be bridged now. We're looking for ways to help seniors in the meantime, you know, between budgets, between infrastructure announcements.

You know, there's a lot of things that we know need to happen, but things like this can help seniors stay in their homes for longer periods of time. In small municipalities that are rural municipalities they're always concerned that they're going to be taken further away from their doctors. These relationships that they have, that lend to their quality of life, are incredibly important. They don't want to be sent to large urban areas where they don't have access to their regular doctors.

There is also the fact that they don't often have enough money to do repairs. I often hear from seniors that they're limited in the projects that they can do, the maximum amounts are restrictive for them to be able to actually do these renovations on their homes, and of course this just further leads to negative impacts on their lives.

I know that my grandparents have owned a home in Jasper Place for about 55 years. It's a community that they have strong ties to. They belong to the Lions Club. You know, my father grew up there, and my grandma does everything humanly possible that she can to keep her and my grandpa at home. She's lucky that she has children that are invested in their parents, that have experience with renovations.

I've shared in this House before that my dad is a master painter, but he's also a jack of all trades. So he's been able to do things over the last 25 years, renovating the bathroom to have the accessibility for my grandparents to be able to use it, to be able to use the shower, to be able to use the toilet, to be able to use the sink. It's incredibly important. Really basic things that we take for granted all the time. Also, the kitchen is something that is a huge expense. Without having family or friends or the means to do renovations, these things, if left to deteriorate, make quality of life very difficult and dangerous. My dad also was able to install handrailing down the hallways. He was also able to install a wheelchair ramp out the front door.

This is a means for these seniors to be able to do this, to be able to find good, qualified contractors. A huge part of this is that we know that we need to make sure that we protect our most vulnerable populations, so we need to be really concerned when we put these sorts of things into effect in our province. We need to make sure that they're protected as consumers.

Some of these points here are incredibly important, you know, that the loan program will consider the reasonableness of the costs to the individual for the home repair, renovation, or adaptation as part of the loan approval process. Contractors will be required to advise consumers who are entering into a contract that the loan program is available to eligible individuals, which is a huge issue. We want to make sure that people who are accessing this are not being pointed in the wrong direction, to advise the consumer of their contract cancellation rights if they are not eligible for the loan.

Also, another point is how contracts can be cancelled and how the consumer can notify the contractor, the effect of a contract cancellation and the responsibility of the contractor to refund any money paid if the contract is cancelled. Really simple things that we know are important to protect our seniors. We know that, unfortunately, these populations can be targeted unfairly. Other members have mentioned things like phone scams. Unfortunately, the seniors population has a tendency to be isolated because of lack of mobility, isolated because of a lack of transportation, and these things make some of our populations really vulnerable to exploitation.

I'm really happy to stand and talk some more about my grandma and my grandpa. They lost their licence, so they couldn't drive anymore. We don't want to continually have to negatively impact these people. They're our grandparents, they're our parents depending on what age we are. You know, my grandpa volunteered at the Edmonton public library downtown, helping other seniors learn how to use the Internet. He volunteered at the Edmonton Space and Science Centre for decades, teaching kids science. The Telus World of Science is what it's called now.

When he lost his licence, he couldn't do the things that he wanted to do. He couldn't be involved in volunteerism. And I know all of the members in this House know that we need to keep supporting our volunteers. It's very difficult to recruit, and we need to have these people that have, you know, a real core passion. We need those people so that they can bring up the next generation of volunteers. So we need to not be putting these extra barriers for our seniors to having a good quality of life.

With that, I will say that I am happy to support this bill. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill?

Seeing none, hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Dach: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Home means comfort and security for all of us. Our homes and communities contribute greatly to our sense of well-being. Seniors have told us that being able to stay in their homes and communities as long as they choose or for as long as they are able is enormously important to them. Being able to live in a place they've called home for years or even decades is often critical to an older person's quality of life and sense of independence.

We as a government want to support seniors to be self-sufficient in their homes for as long as possible, and it is our responsibility to address the needs and priorities of a growing aging population. This bill helps address those needs and is a great example of how we can help more seniors remain independent in their own homes.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I really enjoyed the debate today. I think we've done some very good work, and I would move that we adjourn until tomorrow morning.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

9 a.m.

Wednesday, April 13, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. Let us be diligent in our work today in this Assembly. Let us work towards protecting and preserving our great province for generations ahead of us, just as was done by those who came before us.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 5

Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, good morning, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly this morning and discuss this important piece of legislation. We have had some good discussion on this bill over the last 24 hours. I think it's a little unfortunate the speed at which the current government is choosing to introduce pieces of legislation and then pass that legislation through. This particular bill was introduced last Thursday with one speaker, and then, as we all know, Mondays are private members' business, and then yesterday this was passed through second reading, and now here we are in Committee of the Whole and quite likely going to be passing this bill later this afternoon.

You know, this is the exact sort of thing that the members on the opposite side, at least their returning caucus members, used to rally against in this Chamber. I remember times when the Government House Leader rose in his place, quite a ways to my left there . . .

An Hon. Member: Quite a ways to the left.

Mr. Cooper: Quite a ways to the left.

. . . rising and speaking about how the then government was passing legislation at a speed that didn't allow for proper consultation, that didn't allow time to connect with stakeholders and constituents, or allow the appropriate diligence and due diligence on pieces of legislation. It's unfortunate that we're here today.

I understand that there may even be debate on Bill 7 later this afternoon, which was only introduced in the House yesterday. I think that's a big shame, particularly in light of the fact that Bill 1, Madam Chair, was introduced on the first day of the session, yet for whatever reason the flagship piece of legislation, the jobs creation plan that this government introduced, has yet to see the light of day in this Chamber. I know that this side of the House is very excited about talking about jobs, talking about the economy and the role of the minister. We would love to be debating that flagship piece of legislation that is going to give the minister the ability and the authority to do everything that he needs to do. I don't know what the minister of economic development has been up to over the past couple of weeks. He needs a piece of legislation to be able to deliver on their promises, which is what Bill 1 was as it was presented to us.

It would have been great to be able to debate that. Instead, the government is moving quickly on the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. While there are some very noble goals in Bill 5, Madam Chair, this bill in many respects falls short of meeting the actual needs of seniors. There are a number of items in this piece of legislation that are concerning. Particularly, we on this side of the House are interested to know about the consultation process that took place to arrive at Bill 5.

I know that I have reached out and members of our caucus have reached out to those in the banking industry, those who provide very similar products to what the government is going to be providing should this bill pass. I wouldn't want to prejudge the success of a bill like this, but should this bill pass, the government in many respects is going to be fulfilling the role of private institutions. We reached out to some of those institutions just to find out if they had any comment or desire to provide feedback, and one of the most surprising pieces of feedback that we received was that they were totally unaware of the government's direction.

Now, while they were happy to provide comment around some of the noble points of the bill, they did have some apprehensions about whether or not the government was best placed to be able to deliver those programs, whether or not the government was in the best place to assess some of the financial realities that come along with this piece of legislation. These are the types of conversations that create pause on this side of the Assembly. These are the kinds of conversations that make us believe that perhaps we should stop and reflect and ask pointed questions about whether or not this particular piece of legislation is exactly what's needed to keep seniors in their homes and particularly to keep a wide range of seniors in their homes.

We've seen that the government has made statements that they see this piece of legislation as a way that they could save $6 million from the grant programs that used to go to support seniors. You know, it's interesting because the opposition sees it quite differently. While we are always in support of reasonable fiscal management, what we don't think is appropriate is that the government is going to be saving dollars on the backs of seniors, and shrinking the grant program to then drive seniors in the direction of this particular program should cause us all to pause, cause us all to take stock about whether or not that is the direction that is going to best affect our seniors. One of the concerns that I have, Madam Chair, is that those who aren't homeowners, who don't have access to the loan program and only had access to the grant program, are going to have a reduced capability to in fact access those grants.

Now, I know that the grant isn't going from $8 million to zero; it's going from $8 million to $2 million. But my big concern – and I know that in the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I have lots of seniors who arrive in my office who are concerned about access to government programs. Now we see a program that has been working fairly well, that has been getting resources to seniors, being cut from $8 million to $2 million, a cut on the backs of our seniors. So it is concerning, particularly with those who haven't had the fortune of owning a home, who are tenants in our province but have just as equally provided to our province. Many have worked diligently and built this province but for whatever reason didn't purchase a home or were unable to under the circumstances, and now we run the risk of those individuals not having access to the grant program. There are challenges around that.

There are certainly other risks and concerns with respect to the role of contractors in this new program. It seems to me that the government is taking steps to download some of the responsibility onto the contractors when it comes to informing them of the program. I know that I've heard from some contractors and some home repair providers their concern about who is going to be responsible for the forms that are going to be required for this program. Will seniors have the support that they need, or will the contractor come to the senior and say: "You know, we could do this and this and this in your home. The good news is that there's a loan program that can assist you with that. In turn, here's a giant stack of paperwork that needs to be completed."?

Listen, I believe that there needs to be the checks and balances on our programs, so there's naturally going to be that paperwork, but who is responsible for administering that? Is it the senior, who already may have challenges navigating the bureaucracy that we have, or is it going to wind up at the desk of the contractor?

It brings us to another point. I know that the government's intent is to provide some consumer protection inside this bill with respect to contractors, but there is some significant risk of predatory contractors and contractors that really go out of their way to advertise specifically to seniors around this program. Perhaps there are times when seniors may or may not need what the contractor is offering, but they make a great case for that, so the senior decides: well, maybe I should do this even though there isn't the need. They wind up carrying some debt because of pressure that was applied by a contractor.

While I appreciate the fact that there are some consumer protection points in the legislation, part of my question is: is there going to be additional enforcement around contractors that may be a little bit more predatory because of the ease of access to the loan? That's a big concern because, you know, we need to be doing the things that we can to ensure that our seniors aren't being taken advantage of. Listen, I know that there are a lot of great contractors out there who have a desire to help, but I also know that we've seen specifically in the seniors bracket more fraudulent behaviour, more untoward behaviour than in many of the other demographics.

I think of just a number of years ago in the town of Carstairs. We had a significant hailstorm that came through, and as a result all sorts of contractors, roofing and siding contractors, were popping up out of the woodwork because literally every home in Carstairs had to have their siding and roof replaced. I personally know a number of seniors who wound up being taken advantage of by a contractor that wasn't as skilled or as experienced in the industry as they claimed. The challenge is that that contractor is now long gone, nowhere to be found. They got into business just to chase the hailstorm, and they got their money and their deposits and left. This is one of the potential exposures when we have such broad eligibility.

I'm not naïve enough to think that everyone wants to take advantage of seniors, but part of the government's responsibility, because they are going to be the deliverer of the program, will also be to ensure – the flip side of that is also taking care of the consumer protection, some of which is mentioned in the bill, but also the enforcement of that. We're making 140,000 seniors eligible for this program, which on the surface is excellent, but whether or not there will be the enforcement tools and departments there is a concern.

Then, when we get to the size of the eligibility of the program and the enforcement side, we've heard from the government that there will be no additional costs to administer this program. Well, if 140,000 seniors – while I acknowledge it's highly unlikely that every senior that owns a home that's eligible in the province would in fact take advantage or engage in the program, even if only half of those people did, 70,000 seniors, there is no way that within the context of the current structure the government would be able to deliver the program.

To say that there are no costs or that it can be managed within the current confines of the department is a bit concerning because we don't know the exact number of uptake. We also don't know the capacity of the department. Part of my concern is if there's been a cost analysis done within the context of the department, and if there has been, is that information available to the opposition? We have heard that they expect approximately 5,500 seniors to engage in the program, but what if it's twice that much? What are the costs associated with administering the program?

Then we get back to the start of this discussion as to whether or not the government is in the best place to do that or whether partnering with industry, be it ATB or engaging in a project with all financial institutions in the province, because only engaging one institution may not be the best given that we can assume that seniors bank with all sorts of different institutions – this question about whether or not the government or industry is in the best place to do that. And will this program significantly increase the size of government or not? When the government increases, there are costs, and that means that the costs associated with a program sometimes mean that seniors who actually need care can't receive the revenue from that, which is very similar to the discussion around whether or not we should be cutting the grant side of the issue on the backs of low-income seniors or heading directly in the direction of the act.

As you can see, there are unfortunately more questions than answers. And let me be very clear that I speak in strong support of doing things that honour and respect those who built this province. I speak in strong support of ensuring that our seniors have access to the care that they need, particularly when it comes to the delivery of health care in their homes. You know, often there's nothing that's more important to a senior than staying in their home, and more often than not . . .

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm seeking unanimous consent of the House to revert briefly to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the House. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some of the leadership of the Equis rural electrification association. Equis REA provides safe and reliable electric distribution services to commercial and industrial developments, production facilities, and farms throughout 26 Alberta municipal districts and counties and is the largest member-owned utility in Canada. Here today are Glen Fox, board chair; board directors Ed Beniuk, Allan Nimmo, Doug Drozd, Dave Wigmore, Wanda Okamura, Ben Vanden Brink; and CEO Pat Bourne. In my constituency and in many across this province Equis is contributing to a stronger, more diverse, and more prosperous economy, and I thank them for their work. I'd ask them to now stand and receive the traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

Bill 5
Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act

The Chair: Continuing on with Bill 5, are there any further speakers to this bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the government's Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. How we take care of our seniors, our most elderly, speaks volumes about ourselves. Top-quality care and services for seniors are a top priority for my colleagues and I. We're talking about our parents and grandparents, those who raised us from infancy and were there for us when we needed them throughout our lives. Many seniors have worked hard their whole lives, guided solely by the certain knowledge that when they reached their golden years, their families, friends, and their communities would be there for them. For these reasons we respect the good intentions of this particular bill.

As I said, we do appreciate the intentions of this bill. The government here is trying to set up a home equity loan and grant program for eligible seniors to make modifications and repairs if they are under an income threshold. The bill also wants to include a grant component for seniors who do not qualify under the loan program but need financial support for critical home repairs. Essentially, what the government is doing here is creating a de facto bank.

The proposed legislation states:

5(1) The Minister may, in accordance with the regulations, make a grant to . . .

(c) [an] owner [who] does not qualify for a loan.

This raises a few questions, Madam Chair. Does this mean that all Albertan seniors are eligible under either the loan or the grant portion of this program? Again, why has the minister chosen to leave questions of eligibility up in the air, to be decided later in regulation?

There are several serious elements of this legislation that are left to regulation: grant loan eligibility, grant loan amounts, grant loan definitions, lists of approved repairs and adaptations, and loan repayment schedules. Perhaps the very question of whether this program is worth while can be found not in the legislation that the government is putting forward but later on in the regulations they are able to pass into effect without the scrutiny of this Assembly. Don't seniors deserve to know for sure who is eligible for this program and who isn't?

So far the government seems to be confused about the eligibility numbers as different members are giving conflicting answers about it. The minister first said that 145,000 households would be eligible, and then her colleague contradicted that yesterday and said that the actual uptake is expected to be closer to 5,000. These questions of eligibility are part of a much broader question of sustainability. It's a level of uncertainty that seniors don't need at this time of uncertainty. Will there be money for this program if 100,000 seniors sign up, or will this be like the failed jobs incentive program, where businesses started hiring because the government said that they were going to do something and then recanted on that?

Given the ambition and the scope of what this proposed legislation is actually trying to accomplish, it should be reviewed and studied by the appropriate committee, but the government members did not care to take that step when my colleague proposed it yesterday. The lack of details and what appears to be an attempt to rush this bill to debate do nothing to reassure Albertans that this government can be trusted or that they will get this right. Our seniors deserve deeper consideration, Madam Chair, and forethought than this.

The manner in which this government is yet again firing legislation through the Assembly and into law is worrying. There's an opportunity to make all legislation better through proper study in a committee, but that seems to be particularly true for legislation of this magnitude. What would you find if you went to committee? You would find that the experts in the field have a better chance of getting it right than bureaucrats in Edmonton. Given the number of key details that are missing in the proposed legislation, deferred to regulations, an opportunity to further study this proposed legislation would greatly benefit Albertans.

There's a lot of uncertainty for seniors already, and I don't just mean the elderly today but for all of us who will eventually retire and be seniors ourselves. A few years ago the age of eligibility for old age security was changed from 65 to 67.

An Hon. Member: By a Conservative.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you very much.

The former federal government had justified this decision by saying that there simply weren't enough Canadians of working age to sustain the program. They had explained that in the 1970s there were seven workers for every one person over the age of 65. Twenty years from now there will be only two. Whereas in 1970 life expectancy was about age 69 for men and 76 for women, it is now 79 for men and 83 for women. All the while Canada's birth rate is falling. The most recent federal budget lowered the age of eligibility back to 65. Of course, it's good news for Albertans that they have to work less before retiring and that they have more time with their loved ones, but the new federal government did not fix the worker-to-retiree ratio problem when they moved OAS eligibility back to 65.

So, Madam Chair, there is yet a looming uncertainty over the long-term sustainability of that program as well. It's an uncertainty that will affect every seniors' program: the increase in older Albertans, the falling birth rate, and the question of whether our old age programs are sustainable in these circumstances. The reality is that a lot of seniors' programs depend on an assumption that government programs are all working as they should be and that they will be there when they are needed. That is an interesting assumption that I think legislators need to take into consideration very seriously.

9:30

Just this past February we learned that thousands of low-income Alberta seniors had not received their guaranteed income supplement payments because of a technical error. It was a technicality that federal officials referred to in media reports as a misunderstanding at their processing centres, but it made a huge difference to thousands of seniors in Alberta and across Canada who depend on these payments. I say this because it is in this climate of uncertainty that this government is now introducing this program.

By their own admission this provincial government is looking at running a deficit over $10 billion. According to the Finance minister last month, the government has no idea when it will be able to balance Alberta's budget. That means bigger long-term borrowing costs and bigger interest payments on our debt. That means more of what we could be spending on helping Albertans and especially seniors is instead going to paying off interest payments. Members on the government benches like to fearmonger about the cutting of programs, but the fact is, Madam Chair, that the surest way to invite deep cuts to programs is by running long-term deficits and being unable to control spending. That is not sustainable, and that is not something that seniors want to hear. The government's predilection for long-term deficits and increased program spending simply invites higher and higher cuts in the future.

Now, one of the questions that I have to ask is: what is the real need for seniors? Is it in-home support services? Is it cost-of-living increases? You know, it's really tough, when someone is on a fixed income, to have to deal with these cost-of-living increases. Maybe this is something that the government needs to take a look at. In committee we might hear from expert witnesses that the real problem seniors are facing isn't access to infrastructure but perhaps aging-in-place supports. These are some of the things that I believe this government needs to address.

This bill is filled with good intentions, but there are some overarching questions that it leaves unanswered. Looking at other Canadian jurisdictions, this loan program appears to be as yet untested in Canada. Other provinces offer a combination of grants and tax credits. It would be helpful if the government could make a case for how they arrived at the conclusion that this legislation is what is missing.

Because what they are also doing here is moving on an accelerated timeline, I believe there is substantial merit in studying this legislation before it moves any further. Alberta seniors are already worried about the economy and their future. Many are trying to do what they can to help their children and grandchildren who are struggling in the job market. Governments shouldn't be adding to their concerns with an untested program such as this without allowing for a thorough study of its potential ramifications. An opportunity to examine this legislation accompanied by subject matter experts from relevant departments and agencies as well as seniors' organizations would greatly benefit Albertans and especially seniors at this time.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 5, the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. Opposition members have raised a number of their concerns, and I'd like to respond in kind with some information that might satisfy some of their worries.

Of course, the program was designed to target a specific population of Alberta senior homeowners who may not otherwise have the financial capacity to alter their home to make it more suitable for them to continue living in it as they age. It was not designed to be, as I mentioned yesterday, a be-all and end-all program. Its specific purpose is to ensure that as many seniors as possible who wish to take advantage of this voluntary program can do so by accessing their home equity if that's something they wish to do.

Concerns were raised about whether this will be a program that will suffer a limited amount of uptake in the same way as the tax deferral opportunity has suffered. I mentioned yesterday – and I'll repeat it again today – that, no, we don't believe this will be the case because the tangible result of the senior accessing their equity will be the improvement of their property, thus gaining more livability for the home, the ability to live in it longer. Also, from the government's standpoint and from the standpoint of the protection of taxpayers, it improves security for the loan as well in that the value of the property is secured. In the meantime a minimum equity, 25 per cent, must be maintained during the ownership of the property, including the amount of the loan that is finally approved.

As far as the types of home adaptations or repairs that will be allowed to qualify for the program, the new program increases the types of repairs and adaptations from the current special needs assistance home repair grants to any reasonable repair or adaptation that assists a senior who chooses to remain in their home. Leeway will be granted to departmental officials looking to make decisions about what will be accepted or not.

Basically, we're not looking to have any luxury items financed under this program. Even though it will be the senior's own money, we think maybe a tub cut-out or an accessible tub will be something inside the house that might be allowed, but a hot tub outside the house for bubbly enjoyment on the weekends isn't something we'd consider. It's really to improve the physical safety of the senior in their home, the mobility of the senior in their home, to allow them to be maintaining their independence in their property and also in consideration of their health.

Now, is the government trying to save money on the backs of seniors? Absolutely not. The former program, the special needs assistance home repair grant, had an $8 million annual amount that could be accessed, and this program that we are enhancing right now will still have a $2 million grant component.

Members opposite thought that maybe this would be a limitation upon seniors who otherwise might not qualify for the loan, but in fact what we're doing and what we're anticipating is that the uptake on the access to the home equity will be taken up by some seniors who otherwise might have applied for the grant because the home equity loan portion allows the senior to do a much wider range of things to their home than they would have been allowed under the grant program, which had a limited scope of items that could be repaired such as things that were directly related to urgent health and safety matters.

The savings of $6 billion is a fiscally prudent thing to do. Also, we don't believe that the $2 million in grants that is still going to be available is a limitation. If indeed we find that there's a high demand still and the subscription for the grants is taken up really quickly, it may be something that we could reconsider. But the anticipation is that we won't have much more than a $2 million demand for the grant component.

The administrative cost was another question that the hon. member opposite rose to express concerns about. Now, there is no new funding for the administration of this loan program. The administration of the new loan program will be leveraged through existing resources, specifically shifting those resources that administered the home repair grants provided through the special needs assistance program. Department officials have expressed confidence that because of the balancing of different loan application periods, resources within the department can be shifted so that extra expenditures aren't needed to administer this new, enhanced program.

Wondering whether or not the grant program being proposed is unfair to seniors who worked hard to save money and build equity in their home by only offering them loans as opposed to grants is a concern that people really shouldn't have. This change will improve seniors' access to home adaptation and repair assistance as under the program significantly more seniors will be eligible for low-interest loans than the current benefit. Further, loan recipients will be able to access supports for a greater range of eligible repairs and adaptations and loans that cover a greater portion of the cost of repairs.

Now, the program will help us address the needs and priorities of a growing and aging population by allowing seniors to use their home equity to remain in their homes and preserve their independence. It's not going to be something that will appeal, necessarily, to the full range of seniors that are out there. Those with savings will use those savings to improve their homes as they so choose. What this loan program targets are those seniors who, for whatever reason beyond their control, haven't been able to save money to effect home repairs that are necessary as they age in their property, and they are faced possibly with the choice of having to move out because they no longer are able to function in their homes.

We focused on this group of seniors so that we could save money in the long run as well by keeping seniors in their homes and out of longer term care. It will help us address the needs and priorities of a growing number of seniors, who not only by population demographic are becoming a larger percentage of our population, but our older seniors are actually aging as well. Their average age is getting higher, and the need to adapt their homes to be able to stay in them is greater. That's where we're targeting the program.

We believe that the savings to the government in making these changes aren't an attack upon seniors. We're enhancing a program that will allow greater opportunities for seniors to access their home equity, and we'll probably see a diminished demand for the grant program. If indeed when the program is rolled out we see a massive leap towards it and 143,000 families jump towards it, we'll obviously have to readdress things, but we don't anticipate that type of a huge demand because, as has been noted before, seniors do wish to maintain the value of their homes and pass along a good chunk of their equity to surviving generations.

The program that existed before had about 7,000 subscribers to the grants, so we anticipate that kind of a number for the combined grant and loan program. Once we roll it out, we'll know for sure. But we believe, quite confidently, that the staff capacity will be able to handle the demand and that we won't be needing to empty the treasury to finance the uptake of the program. We think it will be quite within our expectations.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Sure. Thank you, Madam Chair. Just a quick question, and I'm not sure if the hon. member will choose to respond or not. He mentioned that the bill's purpose wasn't for luxury items, so I'm making the assumption that there's some threshold of what is going to be considered luxury and what isn't. I'm curious to know if the government, then, will also be involved in determining quality or any of the other items around what a contractor may or may not do. For example, if one senior would like to install a $10,000 sit-in tub and another senior would like to install a $5,000 sit-in tub, are both going to be eligible? Who determines the criteria of eligibility of the expenses and that? Some of the issues that would surround those types of decisions may, from the sound of things, have to be made by a staffperson in Edmonton.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would be happy to respond to those concerns of the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Departmental staff will be scrutinizing applications. There are charts and information and data available which very readily show the range of costs for certain types of repairs and supplies that may be asked for under this loan program. If indeed they fall outside of the parameters, that will trigger a response by the departmental officials to contact the senior and say, "Hey, what's happening here?" or to dig a little deeper, to contact a contractor, to be a guardian, actually. This is one of the consumer protection elements in the program. So there indeed will be a means of having red flags show up if the costs are outside certain ranges of normality for various types of repairs or supplies.

The word "reasonable" is found in a lot of contracts; in fact, it's quite a common word to find. This is basically the type of yardstick that will be applied by departmental officials when they're considering what will be approved under the loan program or the grant program. If it's reasonably going to assist a senior to stay in their home comfortably and safely and allow their physical mobility within the property, it's going to be allowed. Lots of leeway is going to be granted because, after all, under the home equity loan program it is the senior's own money.

However, it is a government program, which is going to be accessing money loaned from the government treasury, so we will be responsible with it. If there are things that just really seem outside the realm of reasonableness, they will be red flagged and dealt with. But by and large, the rule of thumb will be to be lenient as far as allowing the senior to improve their home in a way they wish as long as it just doesn't get a little bit silly. We'll let the word "reasonable," the yardstick that is found in lots of contracts, be the one that rules here as well.

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have one question, for clarity, for the Member for Edmonton-McClung, who just spoke. He said: we're not worried about having 100,000 or 145,000 people get involved in this. My question is: just seeing the failed jobs incentive program go from spending of $178 million down to $10 million, which seems to be a little more within their ability to do, wouldn't it be more prudent for the government to set a threshold on how many people are going to be able to access this? If 100,000 people access this or, I think, 145,000 people, we're talking about $725 million. Wouldn't it be more prudent for the government to set a threshold for how many people will be able to take up this program? I'd just like to ask the member that question.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, hon. member, for the question. I don't believe that setting a threshold is a necessity at this point. As I mentioned, the uptake on the previous grant program was around 7,000. We anticipate that numbers will be somewhere in that neighbourhood as well. There are, for those seniors who wish to and could afford them, more expensive home equity loan programs in the open market. If there was that attractiveness of those higher interest rates of private loan programs, there would be an uptake that would be noticeable. The expectation is that we will have, hopefully, a strong uptake of the loans program, but there will be numbers that are similar to what the grant program had over the past number of years. We're confident that the numbers won't be exorbitant, and we'll monitor it over time.

The Chair: I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to again discuss this very important bill. I think this is one of the most important pieces of legislation that this Legislature is going to deal with in this current session. It's important to my constituents in Edmonton-Whitemud and, I dare say, to every legislator in this Assembly. There is a need for improvements in our housing stock. There is a demonstrable lack of maintenance of our core housing stock, and a lot of that is occupied by seniors.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills commented that not a lot of consultation had gone on. I really want to dispute that. I think there was consultation as we were running during the election. I certainly heard about this problem frequently, and it's a real pleasure for me to be able to go back to my constituents and tell them that we're actually doing something that they asked about. I know that it will look good on all of us no matter what side of the aisle we're on.

The Edmonton Social Planning Council in 2015 reported that the number of households in core housing need was trending upwards and that the census data from 2011 showed that over 10 per cent of Alberta households, or approximately 135,000 households, were in need of improvements. The Edmonton area community plan – and, again, this is part of the consultations that you're asking about – forecasted a gap of 22,000 affordable housing units in the city by 2015. This legislation is going to help close that gap. It's not going to close the gap entirely, and there are certainly other things that we need to do to assist our seniors in living in their homes, but this legislation will be very important in doing that.

I'm really surprised that the opposition is interested in delaying this. Let's get this going by July 1, and let's get the seniors more comfortable in their surroundings. Let's get some jobs created in the renovation industry. I found it passing strange that the Opposition House Leader was complaining about the possibility of predatory contractors when just a couple of days ago, in discussing Bill 203, he was so sure that no businessman in Alberta would ever do such a nefarious thing. I think that we have to trust our contractors and other businessmen. There's the Better Business Bureau. There are the sorts of safeguards that the Member for Edmonton-McClung has talked about.

I also found it passing strange that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills would suggest that we go to the banking industry for information on this. The banking industry has failed us in this regard. The reason that we need this legislation is that the banks won't provide an equity loan on these terms to our seniors. They're in the business of making money. This legislation will provide support to seniors that couldn't access money through the banking industry. So it's no surprise to me that the banks would say that this isn't a good idea. I think that's the role of government, to actually take the lobbying and sift the chaff from the wheat and try to come up with a reasonable plan.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

I just want to remind the House of what the government is actually proposing because there have been a lot of questions about: who qualifies, and what are the loan limits? You qualify if you're 65 years of age or older. Survivorship is permitted as long as the spouse is aged 55 or over when a loan exists at the time of the senior's spouse's death. The maximum loan amount is $40,000. There were some queries about this; $40,000 is the maximum amount. There will be an income test on this, and the income test limit is $75,000. As the Member for Edmonton-McClung was speaking about, there is a requirement that there be 25 per cent home equity. And, of course, we want to get it going by July 1.

In my opinion, what we're talking about is a very fiscally responsible income-based program to help, in particular, our low-income seniors. The grant part of this program is going to be particularly useful to those low-income seniors who wouldn't qualify for a bank loan, who face basically being evicted from their homes if they can't have access to this sort of program.

I would urge all of the members of this Legislature to proceed with alacrity through this process and get the bill passed as soon as possible so that we can provide this sort of assistance to our seniors.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Comments or questions? Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud: I'd like to ask for some clarification. In his comments he said that the banking industry has failed us. I'd like to ask not the hon. minister but the member what his thoughts are on the people of Alberta owning ATB. I'd like to ask him why he thinks that the banking industry, with their years and years of experience, their well-trained personnel, wouldn't have the ability to administer such a type of loan.

Dr. Turner: Thank you to the member for the question. I think this is an important aspect of this legislation. We're talking about low-income seniors who would not have a good credit rating and who actually may be ineligible under any banking system. I was referring more to the major chartered banks than to ATB or to the credit unions, but all of those banking institutions do have fairly strict limitations as to who they will lend money to. That credit rating, which is done through people like the Dominion credit rating system, et cetera, in my opinion, often has a very arbitrary view of what a good credit rating is or how that's created.

I really, basically, want to bring this up. I'm sorry that the folks from Equis aren't here, but this morning several of us had the opportunity to meet with the Equis folks. They have two initiatives in their service area, which, I think, includes your area of the province. Their staff actually has collected over $100,000, just the staff of Equis, and that $100,000 is used to pay low-income folks' power bills that run into trouble. I heard a story of somebody this morning who had an $800 power bill, and I think this was a senior. The reason that they had the $800 power bill was that the gas had been cut off, and they had to use space heaters. Now, I'm not saying that this new legislation is going to fix that particular problem, but that is an example of the systemic need throughout the province to help our low-income seniors.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm like the Whac-A-Mole. I keep popping up here on this Bill 5. I wanted to add some clarification and information to respond to questions from members opposite with respect to the consultation process that's taken place regarding Bill 5 and what level of consultation there was. There have been extensive meetings with industry stakeholders or stakeholders with respect to seniors' housing concerns.

There were two minister-led round-tables with the following groups in Calgary and in Edmonton. It's an extensive group. I won't read through all of them, but I'll say: Frank Hoebarth, region 6 representative for the Alberta Council on Aging; Luanne Whitmarsh, executive director of the Alberta Association of Seniors Centres and president of the Kerby Centre; Louise Yarrow, the committee of Alberta retired people, representative of CARP, Public Interest Alberta seniors' task force, and a senior adviser for Alberta Health Services; Alanna Hargan, chair of the Calgary chapter of Seniors United Now; Katherine Christiansen, team leader for seniors at the city of Calgary, helping to make Calgary age-friendly by 2020, also a member of the Older Adult Council of Calgary; Raynell McDonough, project manager for age-friendly Calgary of the city of Calgary; Lisa Stebbens, representative of Older Adult Council of Calgary and of Carya; Orrin Grovum, a semi-retired chartered accountant who worked in financial services for the last 20 years; Edmonton consultation round-table member Rick Brick, Canadian Association of Retired Persons, chair of advocacy group with over 4,500 members north of Red Deer; Donna Durand, Alberta Council on Aging; Noel Somerville, Public Interest Alberta, chair of seniors' task force; Ed Hamaliuk, Seniors United Now board member; Al Kemmere, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties; Karen McDonald, Seniors Association of Greater Edmonton; Kelly Santarossa, policy analyst, Alberta Urban Municipalities Association; Wayne Sorenson, Seniors United Now. So there were a number of individuals who attended these round-tables.

10:00

On top of that, hon. members, the department was also in consultation with these groups throughout the creative process during which this bill was designed and drafted. So extensive communication has taken place with stakeholders, and it wasn't a simple process. There was a lot of communication back and forth.

There have been a number of different drafts, as is often the case with legislation before it reaches the floor in the form of a bill, and I've been privy to some of that process. I know that the communications, departmentally, were extensive in order to draft this bill right. I was quite impressed, being cosponsor of the bill and privy to the process for the first time, with the amount of consultation and energy and departmental consultation and stakeholders that have to come together to produce a piece of legislation in a form that is ready to be presented as a bill in the House. It has undergone a lot of consultation, and we believe the bill is in a form that is ready to be passed in order to satisfy the aims of the legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Chair. To the hon. member. I'd like to ask if that was an exhaustive list of all the consulting that went on. I didn't hear a single contractor mentioned of the many, many thousands of good contractors we have throughout Alberta. I didn't hear ATB on the list. Our credit unions in so many communities – big communities, mid-sized communities, and rural Alberta – provide so many good services. I didn't hear that on the list either. Maybe in light of what was said earlier by one of the NDP backbenchers about our banking system failing us, I wasn't surprised to not hear any of our banks on your list. Was that an exhaustive list? Did you talk to contractors? Did you talk to bankers that understand this business already?

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: I can respond to that. No. I can say that it's not an exhaustive list. Should the member wish, I will endeavour to see what other elements were contacted and report back.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair, and welcome to the chair for what I believe is the first time since your uneventful election. I'd like to welcome you to it. In all seriousness, it is nice to see you there.

Just a quick question and comment. I want to sort of remind the House, in light of some of the comments about passing this bill speedily, quickly, whatever the comments were, and that this side of the House is a Whac-A-Mole and keeps popping up and keeps asking questions, that this is an important part of the process. No one in Alberta sends their MLA to the Legislature to rubber-stamp legislation.

While it may be disappointing or sometimes boring to sit in the Chamber for extended periods of time, we have debated this piece of legislation for less than four hours. It is a meaningful piece of legislation that has good goals. But questioning legislation and discussing some of the finer points about definitions or expressing some concern about the fact that we're going to make more of this bill in the regulations than in the legislation: this is not untoward. This shouldn't be disappointing for anyone in the House. This is a very critical portion of what we all have been sent here to do, both the government in defence of the legislation and the opposition's intent, which is often to strengthen legislation that we agree with and oppose legislation we don't agree with.

It is not entirely clear, certainly, for members of the opposition exactly where we will end up on Bill 5, but the point is that this is a very, very important part of that process and one that I'm proud as a member of the opposition and as an elected official representing the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to be here to do on their behalf. It's not a matter of delaying legislation but more so of speaking to the importance of that legislation. It is why we have questions and seek clarification, because we don't do this in a policy committee to review the legislation, where we more likely ought to. It has to be done here in the Chamber, which is our only opportunity and location.

With that said, I just have, at this point anyway, one additional comment or question to the hon. member who was speaking about utilizing the "reasonable" clause in the legislation as the barometer for decision-making in that if the proposal falls outside of the "reasonable" clause, there will be checks and balances and red flags will be raised, were I think his words, and someone inside the bureaucracy will try to sort out what's going on.

My question for the member is: if the red flags are the regulations or processes that are going to be put in place to protect seniors, if the red flags fail, who is responsible? Is that then the bureaucracy, who allowed the expenditure to continue, or is it the senior because at the end of the day it's the senior's money? You know, are we opening up doors for a system that fails, and then ultimately the department will be responsible? I think it's a fair question to ask because if I was the senior who was taken advantage of by a contractor and there were supposed to be systems in place to protect me, I would be concerned if they are in fact not in place. I'm just a little bit curious to know a little bit more detail around those checks and balances that the minister assures us are in place.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise and address those concerns of the hon. member regarding consumer protection items in the legislation. The departmental officials will of course scrutinize the applications and look to ensure that the cost parameters don't exceed norms, that are readily ascertainable within certain schedules and data that the departmental officials have access to. But in the final analysis, hon. members, with respect to any contractor who might be trying to take advantage of a senior and who flips through the system and it ends up that a senior ends up paying more than they should for a particular service or maybe gets renovations done that they didn't really need, I think under the Fair Trading Act, that exists already, you will find that there's ample ability for penalties.

As well, under this legislation it's relatively difficult for that to slip through the cracks. If indeed in the unforeseen circumstance that we do have somebody who is unscrupulous, there are penalties that already exist under legislation, which will stay in place as well, to protect consumers such as the Fair Trading Act. That would be most likely where redress would be sought.

10:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you very much. I do wish to ask the member a question regarding the financial burden of this. I recognize that math is difficult for the other side, but if they recognize how many households are available for this program and how much money is allocated for each household, if they can do the math and tell me what the total is and whether this is budgeted or unbudgeted in this upcoming budget we have tomorrow.

Mr. Dach: Well, as the hon. member knows, I can't speak to budgetary matters. We all anticipate tomorrow's budget with great excitement and look forward to the Finance minister's announcements and proposals for Alberta's economic future tomorrow afternoon.

With respect to the program and the debate at hand we do anticipate that enrolment in the program will be lower while the program is newer but will increase as the communications roll out and outreach of the program is announced. So we expect that the enrolment will increase over time as awareness of the program increases.

As far as the precise numbers, that's certainly something we're going to be monitoring. As noted already, the former grant program had a subscription of about 7,000 people, so to suggest that we're going to have an uptake of a hundred thousand in the new program that we're enrolling people in now or are offering now is unrealistic. We expect the numbers will be somewhere in and around the same that the grant program anticipated or that it had as a subscription number. We'll see.

If indeed there's no uptake on it, we'll know that the program needs to have another look. But we do expect and hope that seniors will take advantage of this as those that the market isn't satisfying, those that don't have the savings, who still need to improve their home to be able to stay in it will be the target market for this program. That, we anticipate, will be attractive to those individuals who don't have the savings. If you do have savings, you're going to spend them yourself on your own home to satisfy the needs that you have to improve the property. But the program itself is designed to target those individuals who live in their own home, are now retired, are 65 years of age or older, a couple or a senior, with a maximum $75,000 threshold income, and they have to keep 25 per cent of their equity in place during the program with respect to value of their home.

We anticipate that the amount of uptake will be similar to the 7,000 or so individuals that did take advantage of the grant program, and we'll be monitoring numbers. We hope that at least that many will take advantage of this program because we'll know then that it is properly targeted.

On top of that, it'll have increased savings to the government not only of the $6 million which is going to be saved as a result of the grant program being changed to $2 million but also in terms of keeping seniors out of long-term care and out of acute care. Having them in their own homes, having a higher quality of life is going to be a huge savings to the government and taxpayers as a result of this home renovation and adaptation loan program.

We think that, all in all, net value to taxpayers will be a lot larger than what is actually seen on the face of it because of the number of seniors that will end up staying in their own homes longer. We hope to be able to tabulate that savings as well. It's something that we are looking into to try to determine over time which seniors are actually taking advantage of the program and what cost savings as a result of their not being in long-term care is realized.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and also welcome to your first time sitting in the chair today as well. I have some questions and concerns on this bill. On the surface, of course, we see that this bill is a positive step and can assist home-owning seniors. I've been through this situation myself before in helping my father and, more recently, some in-laws that have looked at moving from their own principal residence, a single-family residence, to a seniors' facility. I think that these are all positive opportunities for us to help those seniors.

Some of my concerns are around the fact that far too much of this bill is pushed into the regulations, and that's always a concern when things are left unprescribed and they're not laid out not only for the benefit of this House but for the benefit of those hopefully accessing these programs.

I have some concerns with the low uptake, which has been referred to on the tax deferral program, which is of concern. That was highlighted in a June 2015 article in the Calgary Herald. The program not only was not living up, possibly, to expectations but was under some scrutiny as to whether it should even continue. My concern is that it's now nine months later, and we have not seen any significant efforts to either communicate that opportunity for tax deferral more broadly to Albertans, to educate the public, or to enhance the program.

For example, in British Columbia that program only has a 1 per cent interest on the accrued tax deferral balance for those individuals. They have some 36,000 individual households taking advantage of that. So that's of concern, that we have a program in place, we are now layering another program in place, and we have not even taken steps in the last nine months to enhance the opportunity for Albertans to access that nor even to know about the viability and access to that to enhance their lives, which is what this is about.

We also don't know if this new SHARP program will allow flexibility with respect to market reverse mortgages. I spoke just yesterday to a fairly senior representative here in Alberta of the HomeEquity Bank, which is part of the Canadian home income program, which has been in operation, as I referenced yesterday, since 1986 and at least 1994 in Alberta. A group that has 30 years' experience: I didn't hear that on the list of those stakeholders that were addressed. So it is of some concern for me that not only were they unaware of this legislation, which they are now taking a look at, but I'm assuming that the industry, which has been active in Alberta and is quite well known, I think, amongst those individuals, and mortgage brokers – that they're brought forward to mortgage brokers is, actually, a lot of where the referral business comes from – have not been adequately consulted. So I look at that from two sides. One, they haven't been consulted on how we can make this program better, but also we're competing with the private sector, and I think we always need to know when we're doing that as government, particularly with taxpayers' dollars.

I have some questions with regard to the bill as well, that is sort of pushing so many things into the regulations, which concerns me. Again, pushing everything into regulations is a problem. We have reference here to a $75,000 income maximum for singles and couples. I guess one of my questions here is: if an applying household is doing so and there's a combined income of the two members of the household over $75,000 – let's say, for example, two people with incomes of $40,000, so individually they would qualify, but combined they would exceed the threshold; however, both of their names are on the title – would they still be eligible? That's one of my questions.

The second one relates to my comments about the tax deferral program. In British Columbia not only do they have lower fixed interest rates, but the private market reverse mortgage companies are allowed to do a reverse mortgage concurrent with the tax deferral program. That is not allowed in Alberta either. That is a problem because we're dealing with seniors who are facing issues. If they're going to tax deferral, they may also have income shortages for other needs in their lives, which may mean that they need to move to another program, not necessarily for home adaptation and repairs but maybe to allow them to hire a home caregiver or live-in home care that can stay in their house, which will allow them to then do that. If they do that now in Alberta, they have to then pay off the tax deferral loan, which, really, then, is handicapping the handicapped, in my mind, as well.

The question with regard to the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, of course: is it going to be allowed concurrent with a reverse mortgage? That is a big question, again. They've now repaired their house so that they can stay in it, but now they can't afford to live in it because they need to access more of their equity, of course, assuming that they would still meet the equity requirements as laid out in the regulations and in this bill. Those are some concerns for me.

You know, I guess the other side of this is that even if we had a 5 per cent uptake, which, given the numbers given to us by the government, would be about 7,250 clients, that would be about 10 times larger than Calgary's largest home builder, which would probably employ about 130 people. They don't actually do the work; they contract out the work. Those are the people that actually are there to estimate and ensure that the finances and everything are going forward. That concerns me, that we are going to set up this entire infrastructure here in which, in fact, it looks like we will have to have somebody go through each individual homeowner's contract to ensure that we're not putting in the hot tub versus the accessible bathroom; that we are putting in the ramp and not the fancy, huge deck on the back of the house; that we are putting in things that are not termed luxuries. I don't think that's what this bill is intended to do, to provide access to cheap money for luxuries. It's meant to allow somebody to put in a new furnace, a new roof, to allow them to stay in their homes longer.

I'm concerned that the costs of administration of this program are going to be such that even if we get a 5 per cent uptake of this, we will need to put into effect an infrastructure that is 10 times larger than that of the largest builder in Calgary. That could number into the hundreds and maybe even thousands of individuals to administer a program, which could be done in the private sector if we possibly investigated the opportunity to let them administer a program, to assist them with allowing access to equity in people's homes as well.

Those are some of my questions with respect to this. I'm not against this; in fact, I think this is a good bill. I think any opportunity for seniors to be able to stay in their homes – and, as I said, I've been involved with some programs. We went and helped seniors to paint their houses and repair their fences and things like that – these are good things – and I did it for a 93-year-old woman in Ramsay in Calgary years ago and numerous other households. It's gratifying to see that you can help someone stay in their house, and I think that that's the intent of this bill, but I do have some concerns and certainly would welcome any clarification of that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: I can stand and speak to some of the concerns and questions expressed by the hon. member as far as the flexibility and so forth and getting the private banking industry involved. We're not competing with the private sector because we're going to be providing a loan opportunity that is something that's not offered by the private sector in terms of the equity requirements. You'll find that the home equity loan programs will need the consumer to retain a higher level of equity in their home. The 25 per cent is not something you'll find as an industry standard. Usually, you'll find that 45 to 55 per cent is the amount of equity that they will lend up to as a maximum. Also, the interest rates that are being offered are advantageous, and that's something that we as government are able to do as a support to seniors, to allow them to access these loans and take advantage of an opportunity that's affordable to them to effect repairs and stay in their homes longer.

As far as competing with the banking industry, no. We're doing this as a means of supporting our seniors in a way that governments can and private industry really can't necessarily be expected to do.

The income eligibility requirements: I mean, we had to set a threshold somewhere. We're looking at median incomes of couples and individual seniors and finding that the median income for the couples was – I believe the last figures we had were for 2013, so we upped it a little bit – about $69,000, so we figured that the $75,000 mark would be a reasonable level at which to set it. So that was the threshold that was used, and we believe it's a reasonable number.

As far as the uptake – again, it keeps arising as an issue – it seems that hon. members opposite really are concerned in two directions. Some hon. members are concerned that nobody will take advantage of the program and it'll be a program that has limited uptake, similar to what some of the tax deferral programs have. Other hon. members are concerned that the department will be flooded with applications. So I take it from that that hon. members across aren't certain as well as to what the uptake will be. We're not positive either, but we expect the demand should be similar to what the grant program was, in and around there.

We hope that seniors find it an attractive program, those that are targeted, those that don't have savings but have a house which needs repairs that will allow them to stay in it longer. That targeted market of individuals who will be served by this program are those that will save taxpayers and Albertans a lot of money by staying in their homes longer, but it in turn improves their lives. We think it's an excellent program that saves money for the government but, in the meantime, allows seniors to really improve their quality of life, to stay in their communities, to have communities with a wide range of age groups in their population. All kinds of good things happen as a result of this bill.

We are in the middle of the construction season right now. Not all of the projects that will be undertaken, that are anticipated under this program, of course, will be seasonal types of construction projects, but there are some that will be reliant upon good weather to be done, so we don't want to miss the opportunity of having projects started within this construction season, to get shovels in the ground and hammers and saws going and to get your neighbours to work fixing your house. We look forward to having this bill passed and implemented by July 1 so that construction activity can take place and you can get your brother-in-law to work on your mother's house.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.
Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Oh, thank you, Chair. I'm very happy to be able to hopefully give a little bit of a slightly different perspective on the whole issue. I appreciate the detail and the information given. I'm looking at it from the point of view of kind of a microcosm of rural Alberta and how this bill may have impacted some of the people that I have had the pleasure of getting to know over the years.

I married into a very large family, a very large but very close family, seven sisters who came up to this part of the world, west of Edmonton, in the '30s, when they were dusted out of farming from the Consort area, so they thought this was like Eden on Earth. They stayed in the area, they grew up, they married, they settled. Some farmed, some coal mined. They were all very proud, very hard-working people. With seven girls on the farm you can imagine that everybody took a turn at working hard and doing what needed to be done.

The houses were basically home-built, and they all, even the ones that were in town because they worked at the mine, were very proud of their houses, of their land, of their property. They were very capable people. They grew up. Their children grew up, finished school, got married, moved away.

Over the years, of course, they got older, but because they were such independent and hard-working people, they always tended to want to do everything themselves. If there was something that needed to be done, if the well needed to be shocked, they would be the ones that would be down in that well, doing what needed to be done. It started to make my blood freeze when I would see one of them up on a ladder to be doing the shingling at 75 or 80 years old. They saw no problem with that.

But the thing is that they were hard-working, but they didn't have a whole lot in the way of pension. They had their land. They were land rich, cash poor, as so many people in rural areas still are, and that took a toll. They did not extravagantly go and hire people to do work. Their children were occupied with their own children and their lives, so it was hard for them to find a way to get work done without endangering themselves – of course, they never saw it as endangering themselves – and it was hard for them to appreciate that there was another way of getting it done.

This would be perfect. They could use the equity from their properties. They all wanted to stay in their homes for as long or longer than humanly possible. It would be a way for them to do it, maintaining their independence, maintaining their dignity, maintaining their ability to make the decisions about what happened to them, and they would be the force behind anything that was done. This wasn't too much of a problem for them, usually, in getting legitimate and competent contractors because, as you'd know, in rural areas everybody knows everybody else, and if there's somebody who's out there to scam people, they're usually identified pretty quickly. Especially in a close-knit community and a close-knit family, if somebody spread the word that somebody was not terribly trustworthy, that word would spread pretty quickly. As with anything else, it is something to be wary of, and I like the provisions in the bill to make sure that the contractors are reputable and will do what they promise to do.

I just wanted to mention that to help people be independent and safe in their homes, in the living that they have chosen, is really important, and I support this bill because of that. Thank you.

10:30

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. My pleasure to stand up and talk about Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. I want to start off by saying that top-quality care and services for seniors is and always has been a Wildrose priority. I'm very, very proud and pleased that in the four years I've been fortunate enough to represent the good people of Cypress-Medicine Hat and the Wildrose Party, we have consistently stood and talked about improving the quality of the lives of our seniors, whether it's been the expansion of home care, money for home care from our budgets, money for home care reallocated from the layers and layers of bureaucracy that can make the lives of our seniors better, even down sometimes to those crucial, crucial daily care situations, where in the past Wildrose members have stood up when food in seniors' homes was inadequate, when baths weren't properly taken care of, when beds in institutions weren't in order for the quality of care that seniors deserve. It's been the consistent theme of the Wildrose for four years.

With that, I respect the good intentions of this bill, but I'm very, very concerned about this government trying to use this bill to yet again introduce a very expensive, risky, centralized experiment.

We've heard – and we're guessing a lot because the bill is fairly thin and fairly limited – that bureaucrats in regulations are going to determine much and most of this. We're hearing about a government that wants a big bureaucracy, huge administration costs, potentially, to handle lending, to administer and control contractors, to develop and control oversight, and of course doing this without consulting, without involving what our taxpayer-owned ATB could offer, what our tens and tens of good, strong credit unions already with great reputations and interfacing through all parts of Alberta, big urbans, mid-sized urbans, and rural Alberta, could offer, and of course our chartered banks, which understand the risks, understand the costs, and understand the opportunity. We're seeing a government that once again thinks they know better than individual Albertans, individual businesses, individual Alberta companies.

Let's not stray too far from the main point. The main point is what we all owe senior Albertans for, my goodness: how they built our province, how they turned Alberta into the best place to live, work, raise a family, and be strong in our communities. We owe them what we can to ensure that they have the opportunity to have quality of life, to stay in their homes as long as possible, and to take every benefit of the advantages that Alberta can offer.

This experimental program is untested in Canada. That concerns me greatly. Every single piece of legislation has unintended consequences, never mind one where the government wants to create layers and layers of bureaucracy, become another layer of lender, oversight on contractors, and oversight on the programs.

Most of the details are coming through regulatory change. We all remember the reaction to Bill 6 – thousands of people on the steps here, thousands of people throughout rural Alberta, thousands of people signing petitions – and it's still not done. I was at the meeting last night of the Alberta school boards, and one of the consistent things I heard was complaints about the regulations put into Bill 8. Well, colleagues, we didn't get a chance to debate that in this House. We didn't get a chance to represent the 4.2 million Albertans that we represent, the 41,000 Cypress-Medicine Hatters that I represent. When that bill was on the floor, those regulations were nowhere in sight. This legislation that could go so far to help our seniors, this legislation that could go so far to take advantage of our good businesspeople in credit unions, ATB, and banks and has been totally ignored and totally neglected by the NDP government, could be full of unintended consequences, could be full of administration costs at a time when deficits, interest costs, and the burden on taxpayers and families are already at a peak.

You know, when I bump into a senior in Cypress-Medicine Hat, I hear the story several times about how, when they were a baby or maybe just before they were born, their parents got off a train and walked five, 10, or 25 miles to a half section of land that nobody had ever seen and built a homestead, built a life, built a community. I think: my goodness, how strong are these people? What are they made of? Then a week later one of them on a limited income will come into my office and show me their utility bill, show me their bill that they can't afford, show me the transmission costs rising, and they now have a fear of where the generation costs may go with this government's other risky concerns and risky experiments.

There are many, many ways to help seniors, but in each and every thing we do, we have to get it right. Anything that strengthens their independence, allowing them to keep more of their money and allowing them to stay in their home longer, we owe it to them to do, but we owe it to the taxpayer of Alberta to do it in the most efficient and effective way possible.

You know, I asked earlier for the government to elaborate on the research and the consultation that led to this legislation. I appreciate their promise to get back to me, but here we are at Committee of the Whole. The bill is moving along, and it was mentioned from the other side: "Seniors need this quickly. We need to hurry." At this point in time there was no consultation with our contractors as to what may be out there, what the opportunities may be, what they may be willing to provide, what their suppliers may be willing to provide in terms of – you know, it ranges from bulk buying to discounts to opportunities to new services. Let's get it right. Let's not let the unintended consequences and the inefficiencies add to the burden of the hard-working Albertan. Let's work hard to get it right, and if that means taking more time, if that means referring this to a committee, if that means more consultation, please, I ask the NDP government to do it.

You know, I'd also like to know why the minister, why the NDP government chose to introduce a new, untested program instead of improving the existing programs that already have the infrastructure, already have the administration costs in place, and, most of all, providing increased access to home care.

I've talked to several good front-line workers about it, professionals, from doctors to nurse practitioners to nurses to good home-care providers to many people who were on the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung's list, you know, seniors' groups and people who work very, very hard and diligently for our seniors. We have huge gaps in seniors care, money that could be reallocated from high-level bureaucracy, money that first of all has to be put into ensuring that we have enough training, that we have enough qualified people, that we have enough people there to provide and meet the needs. But in almost 11 months I've heard nothing from this government to do something that could have immediate benefits.

You know, as well intentioned as this bill seems, there is a reality that this NDP government has probably already faced; they don't need me to remind them. The reality is that we have a government that is building a reputation for breaking trust with Albertans. It tried to push through Bill 6 with minimal consultation and then put farmers at a huge disadvantage when it launched its consultation panels.

Mr. MacIntyre: I wonder why.

Mr. Barnes: Yeah, I wonder why. A foregone conclusion.

What I hear in Alberta is a government with an ideology, a government bent on a certain way. It launched a needless royalty review that destabilized investor confidence at a time when we could least afford that. It is still refusing to back down on their carbon tax, which will raise the price of absolutely everything for all Albertans, seniors and otherwise, and this week it will release a budget with a deficit of over $10 billion, clearly abandoning the principles and the pretense of any fiscal responsibility. As our interest costs hit a billion dollars a year – we're almost there now – I think of the services that that money could provide. I've said it in the House before. I think of how opposite that is to the NDP ideology. Those that receive interest are the rich. Paying interest makes the rich richer; it costs all Albertans all of their services.

Yet despite these facts here we have the NDP government again asking Albertans to trust it, this time to flesh out the legislation that concerns citizens who are among our most vulnerable and the most deserving. The most deserving and vulnerable are seniors, the people who built our province, built our economy, started our social programs. And now again you're asking them: "Just trust us. We'll get it right in the regulations. We can control our bureaucracy."

Adding key details regarding eligibility and amounts for this home equity loan and for the grants through regulations means that the government will not be accountable for it, not accountable until next election. Even interest rates on these loans will be set through regulation, maybe because we don't trust our banks, maybe because we don't trust our businesses. We'll see. Furthermore, there has been no substantive detail released regarding the grant portion. The NDP government owes it to those of us who represent 4.2 million Albertans to have the chance to debate this, to have the chance to make it as good as possible, and the sunshine that that would provide for all Albertans – all Albertans – to know what's available to them.

In fact, the legislation broadly points out in section 5(1) that the minister may in accordance with the regulations make a grant to an owner who does not qualify for a loan. That last part is in section 5(1)(c). What does that really mean? Does that mean that all Alberta seniors are eligible for either a loan or a grant portion of this program? Demographics, of course, being what they are, the economy being what it is, do we dare leave this to the bureaucracy in the regulations? Do we dare trust the administration to be anything close to efficient? The importance of efficiency is that the more efficient this program is, the more we can help seniors, the more we can actually put the money to the front lines to help seniors stay in their homes, which, of course, is what the Wildrose wants.

Again, why has the minister chosen to leave the questions of eligibility up in the air, to be decided later? Does she want to decide? Does she want it chosen in regulations? Don't seniors deserve to know who is eligible and who isn't? The broader question must be asked: why has the government felt the need to leave all the important details out of the legislation, where Albertans' elected representatives can have a say and a voice? If the minister is confident enough in certain details about own eligibility to announce them publicly, why are they not set out in the legislation for debate? Why has she been so silent on the issue of grant eligibility? Albertan seniors, Albertan taxpayers, and Albertan communities need to know.

Last week this bill was scheduled for debate 24 hours after it was introduced. Thankfully, concluding debates and other business meant that we had a little more time to come to a reasoned position after all, but the impression still remains that the government wanted to push this through despite the bill's lack of details. What is the rush? Let's get it right. Let's consult with experts, all experts, to make sure this program is as effective and as efficient as possible so we can do the most good with our tax dollars. The lack of details and what appears to be an attempt to rush this bill to debate does nothing to reassure Albertans that this government can be trusted. It does nothing to reassure Albertans that this government has learned anything from the Bill 6 mess.

Madam Chair, our seniors deserve better than skeletal legislation and leaving all the regulations to bureaucracy. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Any additional comments or questions?
The Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act. Let me be clear right off the bat. Seniors built this great province of ours, and I believe we need to respect our own seniors. I'm sure all the Wildrose members here and, I think, everybody in this Chamber believe that we need to respect all seniors.

I feel like I must start out by saying that I, too, am very disappointed that we're here talking about Bill 5 when, clearly, the government's flagship bill, Bill 1, seems to have been left to collect dust. Bill 1 addresses jobs, and right now Albertans are hurting. Each day more and more Albertans are without jobs. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that this is their most important bill, so why wasn't this Bill 1 if it's their most important bill? I'm kind of confused about that.

At the same I want to be clear that ensuring our programs for seniors are working well for seniors is very important to me and to our caucus, and I appreciate the chance to talk about this. The protection for seniors and the home adaptation and repair concept is a positive idea; however, this bill has raised some concerns for me as I've listened to the debate so far. The bill requires that the government provide loans to seniors, which will be paid back upon the sale of the home or the death of the senior and which will incur interest in the meantime.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

I appreciate that it's simple interest and not compound interest; nevertheless, this could be a significant amount of debt as time goes on. Just looking over the numbers we were provided, the government says that they think there will be around 5,000 loans, I believe. I understand that this is just an estimate. There was a press release that says that there could be up to 145,000 households that could qualify. You know, according to my calculations if all who qualified were to receive loans, that could cost, well, frankly, an awful lot of money. I wonder if the government has really taken into account how much money this really could cost.

As my colleagues have mentioned previously, it seems unlikely that the department will be able to administer this without adding increased staff, especially given the goal of monitoring the costs of the projects to protect the seniors. The point that I'm trying to make here is that there are some real unknowns about the uptake of the program and the costs of the program.

My colleagues asked for this bill to go to committee so that more details like this could be worked out, but the government was not interested in doing that. The more we need to weed out these concerns, the more I believe we need to do this. We need to take that and bring it back, and it should go to committee. Bills this important should be looked at very closely, in my opinion.

In Bill 5 the government is acting like a bank. Perhaps we could hear whether any banks or credit unions or financial institutions were consulted on Bill 5. If yes, I would like to know what issues they raised. The starting of a bank could really take years, and there are many details that would have to be worked out. While this might be a little different than starting up a bank, the fact is that acting as a lender is a complex undertaking, and we should not take that lightly.

I'll just review a couple of things and some of the basics. You'll need a department to take applications. You'll want to find out who the people are that want to have this. Then they have to go through these applications to determine if the client meets the criteria.

They've got to make sure that the client has ownership of the property. But that's just the beginning of all this. Madam Chair, I could go through all the different steps to getting a loan or even a grant. These steps are time consuming and complex. The administration of these loans is considerable. Does this government have the people in place to put together these loans? Does it have the necessary infrastructure?

I truly do see the benefit of having seniors stay in their homes longer; of that I have no question. In fact, most seniors today say that they want to stay in their homes as long as possible. With seniors living that much longer than they did, say, 50 years ago, living longer at home just seems to make sense. Many seniors may be able to benefit from physical alterations to their home such as widening doorways, building ramps, and doing maintenance such as shingling a roof or replacing flooring. If these renovations to enhance their lives and make their homes safer are truly what makes the difference between them being able to stay at home or having to go elsewhere, then the seniors' home adaptation and repair program may have potential in the area that they've identified as a priority. But does this government have a thorough grasp on how many seniors will be able to stay at home because of renovations made with this?

Basically, this bill is like a book with a great title. That is, if you don't actually crack open the book and read it, you can easily believe that it has great potential, but once you get past the introduction, the details emerge. These details make me very nervous, and at this point I have to say that I don't support the bill. Most of the time the government should not be in the business of business. Whether or not this is an exception, I'm afraid, remains to be seen. It might be, but in fact we have too many questions at this point about details to be supportive.

I believe it's less expensive to have seniors live in their homes as long as possible and that not only is this actually better for the seniors but less expensive for long-term home care.

You know, I have a few more additional questions. This program will use prime lending rate, but what prime lending rate? Is this an ATB prime lending rate, or is it a Bank of Canada prime lending rate? I kind of have a question on that.

Will there be inspections before or after to see what work should be done? If you look at Bill 203, they talking about that being a very important aspect of that bill, looking at what has to be done and what should be done and all estimates to make sure the proper work is done. I'd like to know how that's addressed. I would like to know: if you're going to do home renovations such as widening doorways or removing a wall, has an engineer been involved in this? I would hate to see one of these roofs collapse as a result of: yes, we gave them money, and, yes, they had some repair done by Joe, the neighbour next door. Was it a qualified repair? Did they have an inspection before and after? I don't know. That's my question. Is the government going to do something of that nature?

Are they going to have appraisals on the homes? If so, whose cost for that appraisal to determine what the value of that home is? Does the minister know how much this will cost taxpayers? Because in the end the government will have to provide the money to create these loans. Does the minister have an estimate to put together this program, with all the necessary layers to do a great job, a job that taxpayers expect? Will this program cost a hundred million dollars to put together, a billion dollars, $5 billion? I would like to hear an answer because if they've done their due diligence, they should know what that cost is to put this together.

Are there any other programs that will be cut besides the grant program that the Member for Edmonton-McClung told us about yesterday? You know, provide this. We know that one is being cut, so are there other ones?

Where has this piece of legislation been used? Can you give me an explanation of where in the world this has been used, and successfully, or at least in Canada? Canada would be a great place to start because we have very similar laws and legislation. This looks to be untested and unknown. What study has been done to see all the potential consequences that could happen if it's not done right, all the unintended consequences?

July 1 seems to be too soon with all the questions that are surrounding this bill. I'm sorry. Members of this House, I'm afraid that without a more comprehensive examination of this concept, it's not wise to proceed, and I will not be supporting Bill 5.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to propose a motion, an amendment to this act, if I could. I've got the requisite copies here available to table for the House here.

I'd like to move that Bill 5, Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, be amended in section 2 by adding the following after subsection (6):

(7) Notwithstanding any other provision in this Section, loans made by the Minister under subsection (1) to an owner with an annual income for the preceding year that is equal to or less than $24,600 shall be subject to the rate of interest determined under subsection (6) minus one per cent.

Hon. members, this is intended, really, to recognize the fact that we are here today under this act to help primarily low-income seniors who are in their houses and prefer to stay there. These individuals may face other challenges as they go through this. Obviously, the opportunity for them to adapt and repair their home so that they can live and age in place for longer periods is of great importance to us. However, they may also require further access to the equity in their homes at a later date, and we certainly don't want to have them in a situation where the 25 per cent requirement is accelerated too quickly for them to do so.

11:00

We believe in helping seniors of all ages and all incomes in actually achieving independence, aging in place, aging in community, and, most importantly, maintaining their dignity and their health and their safety as time goes on. However, we need to recognize that there are many of them on fixed incomes, that they're facing increased civic and other taxes, and that these costs could accrue to them over time, which may ensure that they have to go forward for other equity opportunities. Again, as mentioned earlier, I would hope that in the regulations we can address the fact that a reverse mortgage could be actually held concurrent with the Bill 5 opportunities.

I'd like to encourage members of this House to work closely with low-income seniors, to support this bill so that those that are earning very much, arguably, in the low-income regions will be able to stay in their homes longer, that that accruing loan that will be against the value of their property will be reduced over time, and that we'll be able to help them for longer periods of time.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View on the amendment.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's eminently sensible to make special concessions to those who are lower income taking on another loan, in fact, what may be a loan on a loan if they still have a mortgage to pay. It would make a tremendous amount of sense to stimulate both our economic development and ensure that more people at lower incomes are able to take advantage of this opportunity. So I will be supporting this amendment.

Thanks, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Are there any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to the amendment. I think one of the important things to highlight here from my perspective on this amendment is that when we create legislation that is so heavily focused on regulation, it makes it difficult even to provide meaningful solutions to the legislation. I think what we saw from the hon. member is exactly that, that we have an amendment here that ultimately is based upon something that's to happen in the future, and that is the development of regulations. It will always be determined under subsection (6) minus 1 per cent. While subsection (6) may ebb and flow, this is really an amendment of intent to help even lower income seniors than the bill recognizes.

But when we do this, make legislation that is heavily reliant on regulation, it's more than a little concerning, not specifically to the amendment, because the intention of the amendment is noble in its cause to assist low-income seniors, but the consolidating of power, if you will, into the minister's office, which ultimately develops the regulations, should always be a concern to every member of the Assembly. We've seen this in a number of pieces of legislation that the government has proposed. The government used to stand in its place and fight tooth and nail against exactly what we see in this bill, and that is broad-based, sweeping regulations and a skeleton, if you will, of legislation.

So while I support the amendment in principle and its desire to assist low-income seniors, the ramifications of what this actually means in terms of costs, in terms of total amounts, what this is going to mean to the budget – because it's prime less 1, I believe. We don't know what that number is. If the legislation gave more clarity to the House and the regulations weren't going to be developed at a later date and, quite frankly, at a speed which is very fast, by the first of July – it's certainly concerning to this member of the Assembly. You know, Madam Chair, we are here to stand up for constituents and to try and ensure that we are doing what's right, and when we make legislation that is regulation focused, this is exactly the risk that we can open up.

While I look forward to some continued debate to have a better sense and perhaps some more time to determine whether or not I can support the amendment as proposed, I think it's important that we keep those factors in mind as we move forward.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise in opposition to the amendment for a couple of reasons. We do believe we're being fiscally prudent by offering prime as the interest rate benchmark under the program.

I did have a question, actually, for the member opposite, the mover of the amendment, regarding the $24,600 amount that was mentioned in the amendment. It indicates "an owner with an annual income for the preceding year that is equal to or less than $24,600," and so on and so forth, but it doesn't say anything about couples. There are those distinctions. I'm wondering if the member has taken into account that there's a means test for couples as well as singles. The amendment doesn't address that, and I think it's a flaw in the amendment.

But on the main issue of the fiscally prudent decision by the government to stick with the prime rate for the benchmark interest, I think for that in itself the amendment does not deserve my support.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I stand to support the amendment made by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Fish Creek. You know what? We've had some discussion in here, and the discussion has all been around helping seniors stay in their homes. Not only do I believe that's the case; the debate and the discussion in the House, in my view, supports that case. I think that all members of all parties have demonstrated with what they've said when they've been on their feet that their intention truly is to help seniors stay in their homes, to be independent, to have dignity and a good quality of life.

While there's been apprehension with some elements of the bill expressed, particularly the lack of regulations, we certainly give the government credit for wanting to do something good for seniors, to help them to be independent and make decisions about their own future, particularly when as they age, the cost of living in this world sometimes rises faster than a senior's income rises. Of course, that can easily happen because many seniors are on a fixed income. They don't control the rate at which that fixed income increases, and of course none of us individually control the rate at which the cost of living increases.

What we have here is an amendment from my colleague that really says that we should actually protect seniors and make it even just that little bit easier for those of particularly low income. As we've discussed before, this is one of those bills that I've been happy thus far to support the government on because sometimes we have to choose here in this Legislature and the government has to choose between saving money and increasing Albertans' quality of life. Here is one of those rare cases where we actually have the ability to increase Albertans' quality of life and save money because, of course, by keeping seniors in their own homes, there's a very good chance that they, obviously, won't be in government-supported, -funded, -provided housing of another format. So any efforts that we can make to make this bill more widely usable by a greater number of seniors.

My colleague wisely picks on – and by picks on, I mean picks on in a positive way – seniors of particularly low income, saying: these people need more help, so let's give them more help. It's been said by even some members on the government side that a lot of seniors find themselves, again, when they're past their working careers and are on that fixed income, to a certain degree while using the word "rich" a little bit liberally, asset rich and cash poor, where they perhaps are living in a house that they paid for through their or their family's toils and labours over sometimes 25 or 30 years. I suppose having a home paid for doesn't make you rich, but if your income is below $25,000 a year, or $24,600 as this amendment says, you're surely not cash rich. When you compare that to a home that could be worth $400,000, $500,000, $600,000, or even $200,000, this is about allowing the seniors to use the wealth that they have created by the sweat of their brow and the work of their mind over, in many cases, decades to remain independent.

I would implore people in the House to support this because it really takes those seniors that have earned their way into having paid for that asset to the point where there's enough equity there that even without an increased working income, they could use it to increase their quality of life and stay off of the taxpayers' dime. Again, the legislation the government has put forward truly is not the government paying for seniors' housing. It's a loan from the equity that the seniors have paid for. This isn't charity. This isn't even necessarily a hand up. This is a recognition of the work the senior has done over decades, a recognition of the equity that the senior has built up through their own good management of their financial affairs. This is only a financial mechanism. It is not putting the taxpayers at risk because, of course, the loans are backed by the equity of the senior's own home, and it is not a gift, just a genuine recognition of what the senior has accomplished in their life and a mechanism by which the government can help the senior use that equity to maintain their dignity, maintain their choice about where they live and where they stay.

What we have here before us, hon. members, is a slight improvement. That's not a criticism of the government's bill. Nonetheless, it's a slight improvement, and it's one that is well worthy of our support. I would encourage all members of this House to give this amendment that support.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, go ahead.

Mr. Gotfried: Sure. Am I allowed to respond to the question from the Member for Edmonton-McClung with respect to the income?

The Chair: Sure.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you. To the hon. member: thank you very much for your comment. In fact, our original amendment had included a qualification for both a single and a couples applicant. However, as noted in previous conversation, nowhere in this bill at this point in time is there a reference to coapplicants. It's just a single applicant; hence, the fact that there's only one single maximum income allowed in there, not an allowance for a coapplicant or household income. Hence, we were advised by Legislative Counsel to remove that.

In fact, we had suggested that that lower income for individuals be at $26,400, which is the number referenced in much government documentation and income thresholds, and $40,000 for coapplicant members of a household in that regard. So that was something. However, we've seen so much of this bill pushed to regulation that we would allow that to obviously be addressed as regulation in interpretation of this as an amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Then we will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to speak to the Seniors' Home Adaptation and Repair Act, Bill 5. I cannot express strongly enough how important it is to get this right. I do want to talk a little bit about the process that we've seen this government conduct themselves by and suggest an improvement even in that. It seems like when this government conceives an idea, a policy idea, they convene a limited group of people most of the time, and over many weeks and months they create this policy, a bill. The bill hits the floor, and then this government is suddenly in a great big rush to push the bill through the House and not give the Official Opposition, whose job it is to scrutinize these things, a whole lot of time to take a look at this. Then when we do start raising questions, we get accused of delaying some vital piece of legislation.

Well, if that's a problem for this government and they don't like to be scrutinized, then I would honestly suggest a little bit of a change in their process. How about this? When you conceive a policy idea, use some of the legislative processes that we have in place here called standing committees, which I know this government absolutely is loath to make use of, and have the standing committee call witnesses, call experts, and go through a very thorough and fulsome investigation process to ensure that all Albertans, not just the select number of witnesses that the government likes to hear from but all Albertans, even those the government doesn't like to hear from, can come in and address this.

I noticed in the extensive list that the hon. member gave for the people whom they claim they consulted, there was this organization from Calgary, that organization from Calgary, and an extensive list also from Edmonton. Well, I have a news flash for you. Alberta is bigger than Calgary and Edmonton. There are people all across this province who, no doubt, would have loved to be part of this process, in particular senior citizens that come from the wonderful riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who were obviously not consulted and who form a significant demographic amongst the 43,000 blessed people that I am so pleased to represent here in this place.

If the government is unhappy with the Official Opposition questioning them here, well, that's part of the process. You can fix that a little bit by making use of the legislative systems we have called standing committees, that I know you just absolutely hate to use.

Now, our seniors are indeed the fabric of our society. This bill has excellent intentions to help our senior citizens. As was stated yesterday – I'm not sure what riding the hon. member is from – and I'm quoting from Hansard, page 534:

The current special needs assistance program provides about $8 million a year in grants to low-income seniors for essential home repairs. Now, with the introduction of the new loan program, the special needs assistance program will no longer provide these grants. Thus, the government will save about $6 million.

And on and on he goes.

Under the current program, though, some of that money, as I understand it, was for people to help our seniors. One of the needs that was expressed to me by the seniors in the riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake was: yeah, home improvements are great, but we actually need people to come in and help us. That, for many, is the greatest need. They have maintained their homes, if that's where they are, and my concern – and perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung can elaborate on this in a little bit – is that with the cancellation of the special needs assistance program, we are also seeing a cancellation of funding for people, home-care people and staff, to come and help our senior citizens. If that's the case, we have a serious problem. We're taking away a program that helps our seniors who have a need for people to come in and help them and instead are telling them: go get a loan and fix up your house. I don't think that's a fair swap at all.

Another issue I have here is that we heard today from one of the members opposite that our financial institutions have been a failure, that they have failed. I'm sure the financial institutions in Alberta are surprised to hear that. I just want to point out something here, some of the other things that we heard. We heard words like "we anticipate," "we expect," "we have an expectation," and "we are confident that." That tells me that there is a significant amount of uncertainty about this bill and what it may or may not do and that a lot of unintended consequences have not been considered throughout this consultation process.

The other thing that concerns me, going back to "The banking industry has failed us" – I believe those were the words from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud – is that there is a fact, and the fact is that government administration of most things is rarely efficient, always becomes cumbersome, it seems, and always becomes very expensive. I would say that the financial institutions in our province are run as efficiently, as effectively as any financial institutions anywhere in the world and, for sure, more effectively and efficiently than this government could possibly run a banking set-up like what we're talking about that this bill is going to do.

Secondly, we were told repeatedly by the Member for Edmonton-McClung that department officials – how are we going to put this? – will scrutinize, that department officials will assess, that department officials will oversee. Madam Chair, I have a document here called the Auditor General's report, and the Auditor General had some things to say about the government's ability to oversee, assess, scrutinize, and manage projects with regard to schools. The things that the Auditor General had to say were not very nice. They pointed out that the government has been rather inefficient in these areas, and now some of our most vulnerable people, senior citizens, are being told by this government: just trust us to care of you; trust us that we know how to assess your needs, that we know how to scrutinize these projects. Then the government is saying: well, we're going to have the contractors involved in making sure that the seniors know exactly how this thing needs to roll out.

This is just craziness. There needs to be a use made of those institutions in this province, like financial institutions, who have the experience for these sorts of assessments and scrutiny. Let's, you know, understand that when we go for a student loan, for example, who do you suppose administers that? Who takes care of that? I mean, we've got institutions in place that have the skill, have the staff, have the means to already administer this, and if the financial institutions, as one member pointed out, don't want to make these loans, it's a simple matter for the government to underwrite them, and then the banks would. It would be significantly cheaper on this government than the government creating a banking bureaucracy within itself, which will be hugely ponderous, enormously inefficient.

In my studies in my MBA we were studying banking institutions in Europe, I believe it was, and in one of the reports that I read, banking institutions there have an efficiency in the administration of loans somewhere between 1.4 and 2 per cent. I guarantee you there's no way this government could possibly administer this program for that low a price. It's not going to happen. Taxpayers are going to be on the hook for an enormously ponderous bureaucracy to become a bank.

This government's particular performance when it comes to rolling out programs: well, let's have a look at the $178 million that was given to a certain minister, with the minister pulling down a salary as a minister. How many jobs of the 23,000 we were repeatedly told he was going to create got created? One, his own. That's the performance of this government's ability to roll out a program in an effective, cost-effective, and jobs-effective manner. Now they're saying: "Okay, seniors. You're the most vulnerable group in our whole province, practically. Just trust us. We're going to create a bank, we're going to assess your needs, we're going to scrutinize projects, and we're going to take care of all this." Just as well as the 23,000 jobs that were not created? Good grief. You want Albertans to trust you. It's not going to happen, not any time soon.

Going on, again I'm going to say that it would have been a wonderful thing to send this bill to committee to allow senior citizens to come to this House and help make this bill better. That is the process of those standing committees. I would like someday, personally, to see all bills at second reading go to standing committee just as a matter of course. We are living in very turbulent economic times. We have legislation without studied economic implications here.

Also of note here, the hon. member was asked about the subscription limit to this program, and if I understood him correctly – and the Member for Edmonton-McClung can correct me here if I misheard that – there was no subscription limit. There was no subscription limit. Now what we have is an unbudgeted liability on the taxpayers of our province with no subscription limit. There isn't going to be a limit annually. As many or as few can subscribe to this. So now we have a government going forward in these very difficult times with a significant debt load already, and the government is saying: well, you know, for whoever applies, we'll just take care of it with no limit. That's called an unfunded and unbudgeted liability, which in the world of financial management is very irresponsible financial management, especially when you're managing the money of the good people of Alberta.
