Mr. Speaker, the government has blown it. They’ve blown it in a really serious, offensive way that you cannot come back from.

3:50

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Calgary-North West.

Ms. Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to ask my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays to expand a little more on the four months that the government likely had an idea of what they were looking at in terms of regs and what could have been accomplished in those four months had those been made available to the rest of the members of this House and had we perhaps had the opportunity to go out and have those conversations in our constituencies. It seems like a massive amount of time, and now we are down to the wire, and it’s just a little hard to wrap my head around that. I’m wondering if you could expand on that.

Mr. McIver: Thank you to my hon. colleague from Calgary-North West for the question. Mr. Speaker, again, we’ll wait for an explanation, which we may or may not get, from a minister on whether it was four months, but it should have been at least four or six months. There’s no excuse for it being less. In four or six months members of this House, on all sides, could have talked to people in our social and personal and business circles, including medical staff, including family members and loved ones and friends that have had to make these incredibly gut-wrenching decisions, and said: “What about this? What have we missed? What would have made your loved one more comfortable at the end of their life? What in the regulations could have made your loved one’s decision different at the end of their life? What step should the doctors, the nurses, the medical people, the family members take in order to not make the wrong decision?” To the hon. member, that opportunity has been lost. Again, it’s too late. It’s blown so badly that there’s no coming back from it because there is not time now for that opportunity.

There are so many stories – there are so many stories – of every Albertan who’s died from a serious disease, be it cancer, be it some other debilitating affliction, where an Albertan has suffered greatly and deteriorated greatly at the end of their life, and they and their loved ones had to make incredibly difficult decisions. There are so many stories that the people writing the legislation could have learned from about how you can make a right decision, how you can avoid making a wrong decision, how you deal with the ethical aspects of it, the potential feelings of guilt, the potential feelings of joy at being able to help your loved one. Gone. The government has left it too late with their I-know-better attitude, and I find this incredibly crass and the worst political move I remember ever witnessing.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. Under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Gottfried: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Everything that the Member for Calgary-Hays said is resonating with me. It reminds me of the MLA cafés that I hold in my constituency and the number of people, dozens of people, that came through on another issue that was not well communicated and not well consulted on in this community. That was the best practices guidelines, which caused a lot of concern. We were able to deal with that and address that and inform people well about that issue. I think that’s an important opportunity for us and, I think, not only a responsibility but a commitment and an expectation of our constituents that we have the ability and the time to do that.

I just want to ask the member what he felt about the opportunity for all members of this House, from both sides of this House, to do what is the right thing, which is not only to honour the privilege of representing them but to give them the opportunity to share their concerns, to share their opinions, to share their ideas of what is best for society so that we may bring those thoughts back to the House. I would like to hear his comments on how he feels that that could have been a great opportunity, that has been missed by us in this House, to do the right thing on behalf of all Albertans and our constituents.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, all I would say to the hon. member – and I thank him for the question – is that there are issues that, because of my life’s experience and one thing and another, I’d feel pretty qualified to advise this House on, whether I was on the government side or the opposition side. This isn’t one of those, and that’s why we needed to be able to ask Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, I just want to remind the House that this is very sensitive and very emotional and, as many of you have said, a personal issue. I would encourage you to be cautious about emotion, your management of emotion, and the words you use so that this House can hear that emotion, but let’s also be conscious of the other people in the House and the difficult decisions that as individuals they are having to make.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we talk about people leaving, it’s nice to actually have a baby in the House.

I wasn’t actually planning on speaking to Government Motion 17 – due to some personal experiences I’m quite torn on the issue – but due to the way this motion has been presented, I feel compelled to speak out against it. The way it was initiated was unfair to Albertans and unfair to all members of this Legislature. I’ve never actually been presented with a formal copy of the motion. I actually received a bootleg copy from one of our staffers, and I think that’s a little bit shameful. [interjection] Excuse me?

The Speaker: Hon. members, through the chair, please, both of you.

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago we lost my dad to Alzheimer’s-related complications. Over a five-year period we watched a once extremely intelligent man deteriorate to the point where he actually forgot how to swallow. Visiting him was very troubling, both for him and for us. While you were there, he would be angry and frustrated because he knew that he should know you but didn’t. By the time you closed the door, he forgot that you were there. He ended up aspirating and dying from complications. I know that given a choice, he would not have wanted it to end that way, and I know that I don’t want to.

This spring we also lost my mother. She lived on O<sub>2</sub> due to COPD for the last 10 years or so. She signed a personal directive denying any intervention at all. She passed quietly, under her own terms, surrounded by family.

Over the last five years I watched my father-in-law and two very good friends die painfully over a long period of time from cancer. In all cases their last days were spent basically incoherent, on morphine for pain, and mainly cared for by family members because we were out in the country and don’t have access to the same palliative care that my mother experienced at the Royal Alexandra hospital. I commend the people that work there; they treated us very well. We don’t always have the same access to palliative care in all areas of this province, and I think that is a failing.

What I'm trying to say here is that every case and every individual is different. Both of my children are in the medical field. One is soon to be a graduating doctor, and one is a nurse. I would not want to see either one of them legislated into making decisions or participating against their will. I think it's imperative that any legislation include a personal directive that would be honoured if a person, myself included, became incapacitated and couldn't make that decision on their own but had made it prior to that. This is a far too complicated issue to take lightly, and it needs to be fully, lengthily discussed with all Albertans and given proper time in this Legislature. We can't afford not to get this right.

The member said that this is too late. I agree; it probably is. But it is still my recommendation that this Government Motion 17 be withdrawn from this House.

The Speaker: Are there any questions to the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in support of this motion, and I do so because of the feedback from many of my constituents, including the Lethbridge group of Dying with Dignity. I believe the first public forum I attended on physician-assisted death was almost three years ago. The previous two local MLAs were not in attendance. The first meeting that I had with a constituent was actually last August or September – I sent a message to my CA to check the actual date, but I haven't heard back yet – but I've been listening to my constituents for a long time.

The document What We Heard: Medical Assistance in Dying provides the responses from groups and from 15,000 Albertans to the survey. Actually, that's quite a number of people to respond to a survey. In the comments I received from constituents and a recent group-written submission in response to the federal bill, Bill C-14, to amend the Criminal Code, they expressed that they were in agreement with most of the recommendations of the College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta, the CPSA. Should the federal bill not pass by the June 6 deadline, the Criminal Code prohibitions against assisted dying will be struck down, and the provinces will have the responsibility for implementing the Supreme Court of Canada's decision without a federal legal framework. The emphasis from those who spoke with me was that they are relieved that the CPSA has taken the initiative to implement many of the Carter recommendations regarding the provision of medical aid in dying to Albertans.

The Lethbridge group felt that advanced consent should be considered valid when made by a competent patient who at the time of the request has a diagnosis for a condition that is or could become grievous and irremediable. Another comment was with respect to waiting periods, which they felt should be flexible. I note that both of these areas are being framed in the federal legislation.

During my lifetime I have witnessed the excruciatingly painful lingering wait for death of a couple of people in my sphere of family and friends. I have listened to them begging their Maker to let them die and be relieved of this earthly pain. My dad died in 1993. I was with him for six days before he died, and I was there when he took his last breath. He was in so much pain that even to touch his bed he winced. This was certainly a tough time for me because I had a really good relationship with my dad, and we certainly did lots of things that I loved to do. He took me fishing. He taught me how to hammer a nail properly. He taught me how to put things together.

All of those things were pretty special in my life. Even though he died in 1993, I still have conversations when I am doing a project at home, and he certainly seems to guide me in the right direction.

I think that when somebody is in that kind of pain – my dad was diagnosed 13 months before he died. The doctor told him that he probably had three months to live, and it wasn't; it was 13. It was 13 really very difficult months. My dad would not have made the choice to die, I don't think, but I know that my dad is really pleased that I am standing here to speak to this motion because he always believed that people had to make their own decisions. But they have to make decisions where there's a framework where they can make those decisions.

I think it's cruel and unusual punishment for somebody to have to go through this and not have the ability to make those kinds of decisions. When dad died, he didn't have the ability to make that decision. I've heard some say that it is God's choice when one dies. I agree because I believe God is speaking through that person when they request medical assistance in dying.

Each of you has to make a decision here on how you're going to vote. I urge you to support this motion and understand that this decision is what is needed and necessary.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Then I'll recognize the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'd like to thank the government for bringing these regulations forward to debate in the House. I'll be supporting the motion. I agree with medically assisted dying. I have some very personal reasons for that, which I don't think we need to get into.

And I think I support the regs. You know, I know we're not here to debate the issue about medically assisted dying. That's been done by the Supreme Court and by the federal government. That's really not the issue. We're here to talk about the regulations, which I just saw yesterday at 4:30. I'm not sure what the associate minister was trying to say there, but they weren't handed out in the House. I know that two of our guys got it, but I never did get one.

Nonetheless, it doesn't really matter what I think. I would like to have been able to discuss it with my constituents and bring their thoughts forward to the House as well. I know I won't be able to do that now, so we'll debate it. I know there were a couple of good doctors in the House that, with the associate minister, went around and consulted with people – I heard 15,000 people – so I think that was good. But at the time I don't think they had the regs to discuss with people. I don't think they showed them the regulations, so people are waiting to see what they are.

You know, I know this is better than a lot of the provinces, and I do appreciate the opportunity to discuss it here. A lot of them won't even get this much. I think it's great that we pass this. I won't go on because it's been said lots here. There's no sense in repeating what everybody has said, but I do need to be able to say to my constituents that I got up and spoke on their behalf, so that's why I'm speaking. When I get asked, "Why didn't you speak up for us?" I can say: "Well, we were presented with the regulations. They got passed. I didn't have time to consult with you, but I got up and portrayed that message to the House and to the minister." So I've done that, and I'll tell that to my constituents when they ask why they didn't get a chance to speak on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate the opportunity to speak on this profoundly important matter, in fact, one might say, a matter of life and death. The matter of life and death is perhaps the most consequential and significant decision that we here will debate and make a decision on as members of this place. It is no understatement that a society is judged by how they treat their most vulnerable, and indeed much of this discussion is shrouded in sentiment and compassion and benevolence.

There is a fundamental question that underscores this debate, which is to ask: what is more humane, to eliminate suffering or to eliminate the sufferer? That is at the heart of this matter, Mr. Speaker. That death can be prescribed by a doctor as a treatment option is more than just nonsensical. That we should accept the wilful ending of life as an act of health care speaks volumes about how we treat our most vulnerable.

We should be discussing how we can improve palliative care, not facilitating the desire for death of those who are at their weakest. We should be reflecting on what it is that makes an individual seek the end of their life sooner than the course of natural death.

In another Supreme Court ruling, the Chaoulli versus Quebec decision – I apologize; I don't speak French, so I hope I didn't butcher that name – the Supreme Court found that a faltering health care system is indeed a breach of the right to life itself because “access to a waiting list is not access to health care.” That Chaoulli decision was even mentioned in the recent Carter decision, which noted that state action could cause death or increase risk of death.

As legislators we need to examine whether failings of the health care system, either in the availability of end-of-life care or in broader access to health care, are to some degree complicit in making suicide appear to be a desirable solution for those who are suffering. To simply accept the Supreme Court's decision as ubiquitous is perhaps the high-jurisprudence equivalent of the naturalistic fallacy that exists in philosophy. To accept that the Supreme Court has spoken, that the matter is closed, causa finita, would not only be intellectually dishonest and, frankly, lazy, but it would also be a profoundly inadequate response given our roles as legislators and given the immense gravity of this subject matter.

4:10

High courts in western nations have in the past made what we all recognize today to be completely heinous, atrocious decisions. We all know precisely what these decisions were: those that perpetuated profound inequalities that undermined the dignity of the human person. Simply put, high courts are not infallible by virtue of being high courts. It is integral to this matter that we recognize this, Mr. Speaker.

The same Supreme Court ruled in 1993 in the Rodriguez decision that the right to life does not extend to legalized assisted suicide. In that decision the court wrote:

To the extent that there is a consensus, it is that human life must be respected and we must be careful not to undermine the institutions that protect it.

This consensus finds legal expression in our legal system which prohibits capital punishment. This prohibition is supported, in part, on the basis that allowing the state to kill will cheapen the value of human life and thus the state will serve in a sense as a role model for individuals in society. The prohibition against assisted suicide serves a similar purpose. In upholding the respect for life, it may discourage those who consider that life is unbearable at a particular moment, or who perceive themselves to be a burden upon others, from committing suicide. To permit a physician to lawfully participate in taking life would send a signal that there are circumstances in which the state approves of suicide.

That was the Supreme Court, Mr. Speaker, in the majority decision in the Rodriguez versus British Columbia case in 1993.

Of course, the more recent Carter decision overturns that verdict. But it would be erroneous to assume that the Carter decision is definitive. In paragraphs 44 and 45 of the Carter decision the court mentions that the Carter case in question was bound by stare decisis, or what they criticize as the condemning of a law to stasis as a result of previous precedents. However, they did so by saying:

Trial courts may reconsider settled rulings of higher courts in two situations: (1) where a new legal issue is raised; and (2) where there is a change in the circumstances or evidence that “fundamentally shifts the parameters of the debate.”

Matters of assisted suicide warrant numerous incredibly sensitive considerations. These include questions of mental health, questions of self-interest of loved ones serving as proponents or opponents of a decision, questions about devastating physical illness, questions over the appropriateness of suicide as a response, and questions about how the complexities of individual cases align with previous court rulings and existing law.

Given the immense complexity of this matter it is not unreasonable that we may find the Supreme Court revisiting this decision for the same stare decisis reasoning they chose to revisit the Rodriguez decision and the Carter decision. It is not uncommon for the court to revisit decisions in subsequent cases. That the right to life extends to an inverse negative, the right to death, is a new interpretation, one that breaks with many other decisions by the same court and many others.

It is also worth noting that in the Carter decision, paragraph 127, the court said, “The scope of this declaration is intended to respond to the factual circumstances in this case. We make no pronouncement on other situations where physician-assisted dying may be sought.” All of this is to say that the very premise of this government motion, that we need to be taking the court's ruling together with any law by Parliament at face value, is, as this motion is worded, inadequate. Simply put, we need to be looking at ways to protect our most vulnerable, the heart of the matter, not ways of merely appeasing a contemporary piece of jurisprudence.

If we truly recognize the inherent value of human life, we need to be asking how we can help those who are suffering. For those who are suffering, we should be seeking those measures that can provide a genuine hope of a benefit. We should of course not be seeking treatments when there is no such hope or when there is a greater burden imposed upon the patient. Withdrawing care in recognition of the inevitability of a natural death is not the same as wilfully assisting with suicide.

One aspect of the motion put in front of us states that the rights of individuals who object to providing medical assistance in dying on any grounds are to be respected. The government needs to be clear up front on what they intend through this. Freedom of conscience and freedom of religion are protected Charter rights, Mr. Speaker. A concise moral objection against assisting with a suicide is likely to arise from the foundational objection to the wilful termination of life in such a manner. A mandatory obligation for a physician to refer a patient seeking assistance with suicide to someone eager to help facilitate it would likely be just as consequential and thus just as disrespectful of the initial objection. Alberta does not need to be looking to give physicians reasons to leave. Respecting the conscience rights of physicians properly is not incompatible with any aspect of the Carter decision or the current draft of Bill C-14 currently before Parliament.

There are two parts of this motion before us today that are arguably on a collision course. One of these is the section of the government motion that says, “appropriate safeguards be put in place to protect vulnerable Albertans.” The other is in the preamble itself, which says that the government of Alberta would be doing so in compliance with “any legislative measures approved by the Parliament of Canada.” The very legislation that is the subject of this debate is still being debated before Parliament.

In Ottawa the majority Liberal government defeated numerous reasonable amendments aimed at protecting the vulnerable. These included requiring a prior review by a competent legal authority before someone can be killed. This included defeating an amendment requiring a psychiatric assessment of those with mental illness who request euthanasia. These included an amendment reaffirming the freedom of conscience of medical professionals. These are reasonable amendments aimed at protecting the vulnerable and still permissible within the scope of the Carter decision by the Supreme Court. If the members on the government benches opposite from me are sincere about the text of the motion “appropriate safeguards be put in place to protect vulnerable Albertans,” then the legislation that derives from this motion will look to put in place the safeguards that Parliament shamefully failed to include.

In looking at preventing harm to the most vulnerable, we need to look at other jurisdictions where assisted suicide is legalized and there are systemic case studies available. We should be looking at the failings of those systems with an eye to ensuring that we do not fail Albertans in the same way, Mr. Speaker. I was deeply saddened when a report emerged earlier this month from the Netherlands about the type of suicide that is approved. I want to read a few paragraphs from Britain's Daily Mail newspaper.

A former victim of child sex abuse has ended her life under Dutch euthanasia laws because she could not live with her mental suffering.

The woman, in her twenties, was given a lethal injection after doctors and psychiatrists decided that her post-traumatic stress disorder and other conditions were incurable.

It went ahead despite improvements in the woman's psychological condition after ‘intensive therapy’ two years ago, and even though doctors in the Netherlands accept that a demand for death from a psychiatric patient may be no more than a cry for help.

I cannot for the life of me conclude how legalized assisted suicide was helpful in this circumstance.

Now I want to speak to the haste with which this government is choosing to push this motion and accompanying regulations through, draft regulations that only saw the light of day yesterday, leaving scarce time for assessment, input from constituents or from experts in the field. On any other matter this would be disappointing, but it is so much more than that where it concerns a consequential moral matter. If we look at the significant debates that occurred in Parliament in Ottawa over the past century, moral matters pertaining to life and death were never subject to a rush, never subject to forced closure of debate by a government majority. In all of those circumstances members had the time they needed to speak on the significant matter of moral conscience and discuss due implications, Mr. Speaker.

The rushing of this legislation is a direct affront to the ability of members to speak on matters of moral conscience, to represent our constituents. Rushing this motion through here and removing the ability of elected representatives to speak on a grave matter like this are affronts to our western democratic traditions. Any decision on life and death is perhaps the most consequential matter that we will face. The fact that the Supreme Court, by all means not an infallible institution, has concluded that a right to suicide is, paradoxically, a part of the right to life should not mean that we should accept legalized suicide as a new moral or new normal.

We have an obligation to serve Albertans, to protect the vulnerable, to protect Albertans' rights. Studies have shown that those seeking suicide change their minds when their pain or depression is properly treated, and that's what a humane response here should be, that we find ways to increase the availability and quality of support for those Albertans who are suffering. It is understandable that we would want to look at a case of immense suffering and discomfort and ask why someone would want to carry on living in such a circumstance. Instead, we need to ask if we as a society want to seek an end to suffering by merely eliminating the sufferers. I would hope that the answer is no.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions or observations for the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe that this is, unfortunately, an irresponsible approach to life-and-death legislation, and I also believe that it's incumbent on us to show great respect to the residents of Alberta and, more importantly, to their opinions, which we have not had a chance, since we received these regulations yesterday, to consult with. I personally feel that having that opportunity to speak with my constituents is of great importance to me and to the role that I've taken on and the privilege that I've taken on on their behalf.

In a debate where we hope to respectfully regulate what I hope would be the flight of people on the wings of angels, indeed the devil is in the details.

It should come as no surprise that the vulnerable rarely have a strong or outspoken voice. They rarely have that opportunity or even that capability to do so and rely often on society and governments and social workers and other people to be their voice, and this is our opportunity to do that as well.

[The Deputy Speaker in the Chair]

With great irony, the date that this legislation, the federal legislation, comes into effect, June 6, is the first day of Alberta's 30th annual Seniors' Week. How ironic. I hope to be able to spend time during that week with the seniors in this community, and were we not forcing this legislation through on short notice, in an irresponsible manner, with inadequate time to consult, I would be talking to them. I would be asking them for their time to sit down for a cup of coffee, maybe have a bit of a round-table with them to find out what they feel, what they're thinking.

These are wise people, Madam Speaker. On the government's own web page for seniors we are asked to celebrate Seniors' Week.

Seniors make a difference in our communities every day. From supporting family members and friends to assisting charities and volunteering, seniors are deeply involved in our communities and their contributions benefit Albertans of all ages.

I think that when we're honouring them, we also need to honour their opinions, their futures, their challenges, and their dignity.

Madam Speaker, I also, sadly, have experience in compassionate end-of-life care. In 1978, when I was attending the University of Alberta, my young 61-year-old mother, a registered nurse who set up the first public health nursing system in Thailand, far away from the home that she grew up in, Parry Sound, Ontario, was diagnosed with inoperable, untreatable terminal cancer. With sincere appreciation for the compassion of so many medical professionals at that time, I believe that the end-of-life care that she received allowed her to pass with the minimal amount of pain possible, and for that I am grateful.

I also reflect on the condition of my own father, who before his death at age 87 suffered from Parkinson's disease, congestive heart failure, had a hip replaced, had suffered a perforated bowel years earlier. Were he not the stubborn, proud man that he was, would he have easily fallen into the description of grievous and irremediable medical conditions? That concerns me.

Madam Speaker, I'm very supportive of the Supreme Court provisions for a compassionate and dignified end to life. In fact, I have to say that I often think that for people to suffer indignities at the end of life is the ultimate cruelty. I think that there are people that need to be able to make that decision, and I think that that is a dignified and respectful option that is being put in place now by that Supreme Court decision. Again, we're not here to debate that. That has already been decided by our Supreme Court.

But I worry about the vulnerable, the mentally or physically infirm, and, even worse, the danger in these regulations of a non terminally ill individual who's having a bad month or even a bad year or even a bad several years exercising this option. Madam Speaker, those of us that have the privilege of working with those less fortunate in our communities have helped those people. We've talked to those people who have been hopeless at one time in their lives or another. I'm sure that everybody in this room has had a chance to see someone dig themselves out of those holes. In many cases we've had the privilege of seeing them recover and thrive in our communities.

I think that that's a commitment that we have, to help them. It's our responsibility to let them have that opportunity. It's our responsibility and our commitment not just to create an environment and a society in which Albertans can thrive but to fully support them, when they're down, when they're feeling hopeless, in achieving their fullest potential. I'm not sure that we find that in these regulations, Madam Speaker. I think we need that time to find out how we can ensure that those protections are in place while also ensuring that people, the terminally ill and those who want to have a dignified end to life, have that option as well.

Madam Speaker, I cannot support this motion until I have adequate time to consult my constituents, including giving time to the wise seniors I spoke about, possibly during next week's seniors' celebrations, and giving them the honour of listening to their wisdom. I will not be supporting this motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Oh, my apologies; 29(2)(a) comes into effect if there's anyone who has questions or comments.

Seeing none, go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak on Government Motion 17. This is a very interesting time that we are faced with in Canada and within Alberta, and we need to take the time to do this right. This motion urging the government to implement measures to regulate medical assistance in dying is asking Members of this Legislative Assembly to trust the Executive Council with getting the regulations right. I'm sorry. I will not be able to do that. Assisted dying is far too complex to leave the very regulations that will take Albertans down this path in the hands of so few without proper legislation in place to protect us. This government has shown complete disregard for the seriousness of this topic. Here we are with a government motion that appears to be hastily thrown together in order to quickly get this done before session is over, yet I am supposed to trust that the government has taken this issue seriously.

Madam Speaker, I believe that life is precious. I believe in the sanctity of life, and for that reason natural death is the route I have decided to follow. But that being said, I believe each person has the right to choose whether to live or to die. The decision to live or die is a deeply personal decision. It must be recognized that the decision to live will have limited impact on the rest of society. The decision to live is generally considered to be the normal course of action.

Madam Speaker, medical treatment has come a long way. Today we are able to extend life significantly through all of our medical advancements. These treatments have allowed us to interfere with natural death, allowed us to therefore choose life. We also have a right to choose not to interfere with the natural dying process. We have the freedom to refuse medical treatment; therefore, we can choose to live or we can choose to die. The question here is: does having the right to die constitute having a right to have someone else assist me, to be an accomplice in my premature death? I would suggest it does not.

Madam Speaker, I am concerned that if we go this route, where I have the right to have someone else assist me in my choice to die, our current view on the sanctity of human life will forever change. I believe this is not in the best interests of a civil society that respects human life. Regardless of what I believe, we appear to be heading down this road. Therefore, there are many issues to consider on this topic, and we need to properly protect all Albertans.

One issue we face if we take this route is to properly protect conscientious and religious rights. By no means should any individual be forced to participate in any manner if he or she cannot do so in good conscience. I have talked to medical professionals that feel they would be an accomplice to murder if they were required to refer a patient to someone who would assist their patient to die. How can we ask that professional to refer their patient?

What about proper consultation? Patients must be protected from being coerced into assisted dying. By no means should this ever be offered to a patient that has not asked for information about assisted dying first. Doctors are highly respected individuals in our society. Assisted dying may have never entered a patient's mind, but in the case where a doctor they respect has offered it as an option, they may now consider it. This could be understood as coercion.

What about a cooling-off period following a diagnosis, a time for the patient to reflect on the seriousness of this decision? What about requiring a second opinion from another doctor not affiliated with the initial diagnosis? How about a review panel to ensure the transparency of the system? Madam Speaker, I believe many checks and balances must be in place to ensure that this choice is not to be made lightly.

Madam Speaker, it must also be clear in legislation that we will protect vulnerable members of our society. I think about children. Should someone that is not yet capable of making mature, well-thought-out decisions be given the ability to ask another person to assist them in dying? Other countries are doing this. We do not hold youth criminally responsible for decisions they make that may end someone else's life because society has deemed them not fully mature and therefore not fully responsible for their decision.

The same could be said for people suffering from mental illness. We must protect the vulnerable who feel they are a burden on others, whether that is seniors or individuals with a long-term disability. We must continue to improve education and awareness for doctors and nurses surrounding palliative care.

Madam Speaker, I've had many discussions with family and friends as well as people within the health profession. Most people have taken very little time to thoroughly understand the possible consequences of assisted dying legislation and the regulations that will be put into place. When professionals in the field, individuals that have spent a great deal of time working through the intricacies of this topic, appear to be split on which direction is the right path forward, I believe we must be very cautious. We must take the time necessary to properly understand the topic in order to protect the rights of all individuals. There is a lot to be considered here.

I know that many of these questions are being considered by our federal government, but the decision on this motion is far too important to be pushed through this Assembly. Hastily crafted wording on the motion and the subsequent draft regulations have proven to me that the government has not recognized the seriousness and the scope of this complex issue. I believe this Assembly needs more time. I believe this government has not been able to properly prepare and also needs more time. This is a very serious and complex topic dealing with the very sanctity of human life. We need to take the time necessary to do this right.

Therefore, I will not support this motion that would empower this government to implement measures to regulate medical assistance in dying. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, here we are on Motion 17, and I'm not going to stand and debate doctor-assisted suicide. That decision was made by the Supreme Court. I fully realize that. That is not our job to do here today.

Governments across Canada, though, have had a year to prepare for this ruling, and now, all of a sudden, it's a panicked rush. Physician-assisted death in this country, and no laws in place. That leaves us in a very uncomfortable spot right now. We have so many unanswered questions, and we need guidelines; we need regulations.

You know, it's interesting that my colleagues across the way, when they have risen to talk, have talked about the fact that: oh, we've had questionnaires out there, so folks have had a chance to weigh in. Yes, they've had a chance to weigh in on doctor-assisted suicide. That decision was made. Now the conversation is about what the regulations look like, and the fact is that we are seemingly not allowed to have more than a few hours' discussion about what those regulations look like. That is wrong. It's incredibly wrong.

We are thrilled, though, that the government decided to share the draft regulations, the orders in council, the directives. It's a shame that when those draft regulations were done, which was a significant amount of time ago – had those been provided to us, we could have had some very fruitful discussions within our communities of stakeholders who are very interested in having a conversation about this and did not get the opportunity to have a discussion about the regulations, which are extremely important.

There are so many questions floating around. What are the rules around mental illness? What are the rules around disability and dementia? None of those are clear, and people shouldn't have to wait to read an order in council to know what the rules are.

Now, I'm going to relate to you a bit of a conversation I had with a former colleague of mine who knows this subject all too well, and she is sitting in the gallery today. We know that in the last Legislature she had risen and spoken passionately many times and talked about her brother's struggle with Huntington's and the two-year journey that they went through as a family dealing with his Huntington's. He had actually said that he wished to have access to end-of-life options, and those weren't provided. So she was certainly glad to see that that was an issue that had been addressed.

But here is someone who has a history of Huntington's in the family, who, God forbid, one day would face the spectre of dealing with this herself, who is a passionate stakeholder and wants to have that conversation about what the regulations look like because she is someone who has dealt with this, who has a lot to add to the conversation. And she doesn't get to be a part of the conversation.

You know, I have to say this to the government. There are so many opportunities that you have to include people who have this lived experience in a conversation about what these all-important regulations need to look like, and you're not listening, and it's not the first time that you haven't listened. What we see here is an eleventh hour pass to address an issue that we have had over a year to talk about and what those regulations might look like. These are difficult, difficult, emotional decisions. I do not envy the government for having to draft these, but the fact is that they did not have to draft these alone. There are some pretty amazing people in this province who wanted to come to the table to talk about these regulations, to talk about it through the lens of their lived experience and to be able to help put together regulations that would have a meaningful impact on the lives of the people who will be faced with this terrible, emotional decision.

Make no mistake that this is a critical place to stop, to assess, to decide right now what consultation looks like because having no consultation on the regulations is unforgiveable. Please do not make that mistake.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll call on the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I rise to speak about Government Motion 17, it's come to my attention that this is a serious and incredibly important piece of legislation that is to be debated in the Legislature. As I reflect over this, I am of the mind that our position in this Chamber is one of legislators but that we also have roles and responsibilities, and our responsibility is as representatives of our constituencies and to represent Albertans. When we are only given a small amount of time with the presentation of any piece of legislation, it gives me cause for consternation and concern.

It reminds me of the conversation that I – this subject matter of life and, as many of us know in the rural community, death, brings me to the conversation where, in a 29(2)(a) situation, I spoke to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster about his occupation and working with animals and treating them in life-and-death situations. When it comes to human life-and-death situations, it kind of makes me think: who in the H do we think we are to define and come to a point where we are going to make or legislate or regulate human life and death?

I've seen human life come forward in absolute squalor. Absolute squalor. People in those countries would live in the quality of bathrooms that we have in this society and think that they were in some magnificent location. Here we are in a relatively wealthy society, and we think that in six hours we're going to stand here and debate and talk about the end or decide upon the end of someone's life and dictate or decide on the quality of how that is ended? We are only a small percentage of a global environment, where people come and go from this global situation that we live in, in squalor and opulence. It's difficult. It's difficult to relate to this.

In my case I was elected as a representative of the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler, and I'm proud and pleased and happy to be here to do that. But we are thrust into these situations and concerns where we're not given exact and opportune times to relate to our constituents. So it thrusts me back to a discussion about vulnerable people. This is a discussion about ethics and personal convictions, and we cannot properly get feedback from our constituents as to how we are to properly represent them.

I have personal life convictions. I, too, in 1985 stood at my father's deathbed and watched him perish. As other members have given heartfelt and life-yielding experiences of their personal convictions and their personal experiences as to how their parents came to life's end, I certainly understand the passion of that.

Madam Speaker, we need to get this exactly right. This is not simply some condition that the physicians are being presented with. This is final, and this is of great magnitude. Pontiffs and people with great platitudes throughout the world in other societies have made decisions on that. I want to have a chance to hear from my constituents and stakeholders on the specific provisions that these regulations bring forward. This is important. This is final. This is not simply a condition of health care treatment. We do not need to let ourselves slide into some sort of a poor choice of words.

I've seen and heard – and I'm repeating myself here somewhat – personal experiences and perspectives of others in this House, and it's with great respect that I do see and hear that. As an agriculturalist and as a person that has done hunting, I've seen wild animals begin their life cycle and I've seen them end their life cycle. In some regions of the world those animals are treated with some sort of dignity equal to human life.

Who in the H do we think we are to be able to decide this at some sort of a basic level or at any sort of a higher level? Madam Speaker, I'm actually glad to have this opportunity to speak about this and, hopefully, impregnate the minds of members across and members with me with the idea that this is a serious issue. It's massive. It has profound significance for Albertans and families and indeed for our Albertan society as a whole.

Since this debate began to unfold in the public sphere, I have heard from some of my constituents, about this many, by text and by e-mail and written. Five people, Madam Speaker, have had a chance to have input on this, and there are varied opinions. Many of these people, though, are churchgoing people. Does that provide special insight into it? I don't know. They feel it does. It gives them insight into what they believe is another sphere.

One thing is clear, Madam Speaker – and I'm hoping I am conveying some of it – that this invokes strong personal convictions and deeply held beliefs. There are many complexities and nuances to this discussion, and each deserves to be heard and openly explored. I would invite this government to allow Albertans to have a referendum on this subject matter. This is something that's been discussed by the Supreme Court of Canada, but it's not something that couldn't be singularly effected by the people of Alberta, not necessarily through the supposed greater knowledge that is in this Chamber but by going out to Albertans and allowing them to individually and singularly exercise their right on the answer to this question.

I think it's important, Madam Speaker, to note that every member of this House, with their due diligence to the issue of their responsibilities, should have given some thought over the weight – and I'm hoping to evoke that weight – of what we're here to decide as we go forward in our conversations. They've heard the stories, hopefully, on all sides as well, and I know there are a variety of opinions and stances that reflect the variety of thinking of Albertans at large.

I reiterate, Madam Speaker: is there a fear of allowing Albertans to have a referendum on the subject of this matter, that we're being thrust into six hours of debate on? Is there a simple level of mismanagement? If that may be the case, let's put it to the people. Open and free debate is perhaps the most important thing we can offer Albertans on the topic of assisted suicide. We owe the province a transparent conversation that fully explores all facets of this issue.

Because this is a matter of personal conviction and conscience, I'd like to express my desire to see these conscience rights protected for health care officials and professionals. I've heard the presentation of a physician who has moral and ethical objections, and those should certainly be respected.

Madam Speaker, I understand that there was a poll commissioned by the Canadian Medical Association that showed 63 per cent of physicians would personally refuse to perform this procedure themselves. Even more recently, 29 per cent of doctors surveyed by the CMA said that they did not even believe in referral. This is not, in my opinion, going to put access at risk, if that is what this government is concerned about, but it is a large segment of the health professional population.

We cannot ignore the input of our quality front-line practitioners who work in the medical field day in and day out and see these things with their own eyes daily, if not regularly, unlike each and every one of us in this case. I would speak only for myself, but I've heard from the self-testimonials of others in the Chamber that this is a singular, once in a lifetime, two or three times in a lifetime experience.

These people have great personal experience with this. They deal with it on a more regular basis. These people sometimes tell me that they cannot take part in good conscience. These are good, honest, hard-working health care workers who are anxious, worried, and fearful about how they may have to involve themselves in the process, especially in the absence of any conscience rights provisions in the federal legislation.

This is a vast change in the way medical practitioners approach medicine, and I would note that an overwhelming majority of the health care profession framework does not appreciate the conduct that they are being forced to involve themselves in. They're trained under such conditions that do not allow for this education, and we must all appreciate that their concerns are for professional changes that they have never been exposed to. I believe that this issue is so deeply personal and emotionally taxing on the mind that to require the participation of conscientious objectors would be grossly mistaken.

Furthermore, I do not see adequate safeguards in place for those suffering from mental health conditions. It reminds me, Madam Speaker, of an apology that was given by this Chamber for the treatment that was given to people that were in mental homes in, I believe it was, the '30s or '40s, where people were given a treatment that at that time was believed to be medically proper for their condition. It was not a terminal treatment, but the government then down the road, as recently as a few years ago, was actually forced to apologize for the medical treatment that those mental patients received.

The associate minister herself cited thousands of Albertans who want to see strong safeguards to protect the vulnerable. Madam Speaker, I am fearful that there could be broad and significant unintended consequences going forward. This profoundly significant motion should be presented to all Albertans, and I will not be supporting it.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am very pleased to be able to speak about the issue of the medical assistance in dying topic. I've read through the material that we've had, I read through the report on what we've heard, the results of the survey. A lot of the questions, a lot of the points that were brought up, I think, if not totally answered, at least have certainly been addressed reasonably. I'll just go through a few of them with you.

The question about age was brought up: would there be people under the age of 18 being involved, or would there be any possibility of them having access to medical assistance in dying? The consensus was that, although more than half of the people surveyed supported the idea that people younger than 18 might be eligible, really, there was also a lot of concern that determining minors' abilities to understand the nature of the request and its consequences could be challenging. I think it's far more likely and reasonable that, in line with the Supreme Court ruling and the federal government, medical assistance in dying in Alberta would be limited to mentally competent adults aged 18 or older.

Of course, that introduces the topic of competency along with age, and an assessment of competency would be essential to determine if people qualify for medical assistance in dying. A number of survey responses talked about how applicants would need to complete an assessment of competency or mental capacity while they were cognitively competent enough to choose to request medical assistance in dying. There would have to be proof that people were able to make the decision, they could think through it and make the decision on their own.

Stringent assessments confirm if the applicant is able to fully understand the nature and consequence of their request. It would not be a rushed process. It couldn't be. It would have to be careful enough to be sure that people understood what it was they were asking and the consequences of it. The type and scope of the assessment and deciding who will administer it would be very important, and that's one of the processes still to be completely determined as we go along.

Every person who applies for medical assistance in dying support would be referred to a physician or other health care professional who could make the arrangements for the assessment and the rest of the process. An end-of-care team was recommended as possibly being very helpful because that could include a physician, a psychiatrist or a psychologist, a social worker, and, if the person wanted it, a spiritual care provider. All those people could be a team to help make the process suitable and effective for the person requesting the support. One survey respondent suggested that having staff trained in psychosocial end-of-life assessments would be a valuable support. Someone who has worked on end-of-life planning would know something about it.

Finally, the person making the request for medical assistance in dying would need to be certified as being competent by more than one physician. This might require having one of the physicians meeting with the person by teleconferencing, okay? In that way, the process would be accessible to those living in rural and isolated areas. It's absolutely true that otherwise that could be quite an obstacle. Having to meet face to face with two different physicians, for a lot of people, would be very difficult. That would make the playing field definitely uneven.

Another important part of the process is for the person to have a reflection period after the initial request during which he or she would have time to consider the request that they had made. At all times – and this is so important in all assessment – and at all points in the medical assistance in dying process the person at the centre of the process has the right to change their mind. This is vitally important, and it's essential in making sure that people are acting with informed consent so that nobody is rushed or pushed into anything.

One area that needs to be dealt with and was talked about was the issue of people who are experiencing mental illness and seeking medical assistance in dying. This is a very tricky area. I totally agree. One of the ways that some of the respondents in the survey addressed this was by saying that special cautions are needed in these situations, with the worry being that mental illness and addictions may potentially impair judgment, understanding, and appreciation of the consequences of their action. How exactly the cautions would have to be formulated is something that would be developed down the line, but we all know that that would be an area that needs to be particularly addressed. It may not be possible to establish some people's autonomous decisions if they're experiencing mental illnesses or addictions. That's a reality, too. It might just not be possible from the outside to tell if they are capable and are making a really good, informed decision for themselves.

Another concern having to do with people having mental illness or addictions is whether these illnesses or conditions are remediable or not. In other words, a person may believe that they will never recover from their condition, but most mental health workers believe that irremediable cases are rare. That, again, would need to be looked at very closely.

The conclusions reached by survey respondents were that additional time is needed to more thoroughly understand the issues of administering medical assistance in dying to people with mental illnesses. It was also recommended that if medical assistance in dying was made available to people with mental illnesses, at least one of the assessing physicians would need to be a psychiatrist. That would go a long way in helping to make sure that the person's mental illness was not being a factor, not making them unduly lean toward a request that they may not have truly appreciated.

I hope that helps something. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to join in the debate on Government Motion 17. From the outset I want to thank the Associate Minister of Health for providing this opportunity. On April 6, some eight weeks ago, I asked if we were going to have a debate in the Chamber. I didn't get an answer at the time, but here, now, in the dying days of this spring session, we are given that opportunity, and I would like to thank her for that. Yesterday I urged the minister to table the draft regulations and allow us to debate those in the House, and she has done that as well. Again, it would be wrong for me to not acknowledge that and thank her for it.

But I have to say that the late timing and the rushed nature of this and so many other aspects of this debate have revealed that this government is badly fumbling this vitally important issue. It's not like you didn't know it had to be dealt with. It's not like this came up as some sort of surprise. Ever since the Carter decision of February 2015 it's been clear that the provinces would be responsible for the regulatory framework that would establish the parameters for physician-assisted dying. That's been on our agenda since that time. In British Columbia shortly after the Carter decision they established an all-party committee to develop the regulations on this issue because it is complex. It's a complex medical, legal, ethical issue. You know, while I'm grateful for the opportunity to debate this issue, I have to say that I am very frustrated that it's happening in such a rushed and disorganized manner.

You know, Madam Speaker, I've really been thinking about making this speech since 2012. Shortly after I was elected in 2012 was the first mention in this Chamber of physician-assisted death, physician-assisted suicide. I knew there would come a day when I would have an opportunity to speak on this. I have strongly held opinions on this. There are hundreds of questions that need answers, but I'm going to focus on four. First, what has been the experience in other jurisdictions? Second, what provisions are in place to protect vulnerable Albertans? Third, what does this do for palliative care? Fourth, what about the effects on medical professionals?

It's called now medical assistance in dying. It seems that we've had a progressive shift in the euphemisms to describe this. It used to be called euthanasia. Then it was called mercy killing. Then it was called physician-assisted suicide and then, up until recently, physician-assisted death. The Carter decision has set Canada on a path that other jurisdictions have already travelled; namely, Oregon in 1997, Holland in 2002, and Washington state in 2007. In every case the decision to take this first step on this slippery slope was made with the noblest of intentions, the relief of unrelenting and unrelenting suffering for patients for whom a cure was not possible. As a veterinarian, Madam Speaker, I understand the desire to provide that relief.

In all cases the intent was, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow has indicated, that this would be rare and that there would be rigid safeguards and that vulnerable populations would be fully protected. But that hasn't been how it has worked out in real life. In Oregon since 2005 the number of deaths by assisted suicide has doubled, and lethal prescriptions have increased by 76 per cent. During that same time frame the population of Oregon has only increased 7 per cent. In Washington in the period from 2009 to 2012 assisted suicide increased by 130 per cent while the population increased by 18 per cent. In Holland, a nation of only 17 million people, in the five-year period from 2005 to 2010 assisted suicide numbers increased 64 per cent, from 2,319 to 3,809, and in that same five-year period prescriptions for what they call terminal sedation went from 11,000 to 17,000 per year.

Madam Speaker, the numbers show that instead of being rare, in jurisdictions where it is now legal, physician-assisted death is becoming increasingly commonplace. Even more troubling is the relaxing of the original restrictions that were placed on this practice to protect vulnerable populations. This has happened in virtually every jurisdiction. Looking specifically at Holland, for example, the eligibility criteria have shifted from those that are terminally ill to those that are chronically ill, from those that suffer from physical illness only to extend it to mental illness, to mental suffering, to physiological distress, and now to where it is available to those over 70 who are simply tired of living.

5:10

In a troubling paper in the journal Current Oncology, noted University of Ottawa palliative care specialist Dr. José Pereira noted that "euthanasia has moved from being a measure of last resort to being one of early intervention. Belgium has followed suit," and so has the state of Oregon. The situation has progressed so far that the United Nations has found that the euthanasia law in the Netherlands is in violation of the universal declaration of human rights "because of the risk it poses to the rights of safety and integrity for every person's life."

Madam Speaker, you can understand why there's concern. You can understand why Albertans want to see the regulations that will govern this practice in Alberta and that will guard against the disturbing trend that has happened elsewhere.

Now, many other jurisdictions – Scotland, England, France, South Australia, the state of New Hampshire – have all decided to not go down this road because they don't want to see this tectonic shift in the relationship between patients and doctors. It's because of the inability to adequately protect against this inexorable slide.

Now, this is not the case in Canada. The Supreme Court has ruled, and it is left to us as legislators to establish the regulatory framework to govern this practice. And here I must disagree with the associate minister when she said in her opening comments, "Our responsibility in this matter is actually quite small." With the greatest of respect, Associate Minister, it's not. It's not small at all. In fact, a number of Canadian Senators, who started debating Bill C-14 today, some of whom have served in public life for decades, have stated that this will be the most important issue that they have ever debated in their careers as public representatives. Madam Speaker, I agree with that. As elected public representatives it's imperative that we take that same responsibility that we have been given on this matter and that we learn from the lessons that others that have travelled this road have tried to teach us.

What about protecting the vulnerable? Well, Madam Speaker, as I've outlined, other jurisdictions have gone down this road, each embarking on that journey with assurances that vulnerable persons would be protected and that no one would make this decision under duress. Everyone starts out with good intentions, but in practice the safeguards have progressively been watered down and subverted.

In our order in council, that we were given yesterday, under clause 2.2(c) it requires two independent witnesses to sign and date the request for medical assistance in dying. Now, that seems eminently reasonable. In fact, it has been used in other jurisdictions. But in Oregon, for example, 58 of 61 persons that requested medical assistance in dying received one of the required signatures from a physician who was a member of a pro assisted suicide lobby group. In Holland and in Belgium networks of physicians offering consultations on medically assisted dying have formed even though they have no specialized training in palliative care and no personal connection to the patient. The proposed regulations as we're debating them today do nothing to prevent this situation.

Madam Speaker, advocates for persons with developmental disabilities are also justifiably concerned, so much so that a coalition of advocacy groups has formed to develop the vulnerable persons standard. This standard argues that our constitutionally protected core values and rights in this country impose on government an undeniable obligation to make sure that vulnerable persons are protected with real safeguards. Suffice it to say that the Vulnerable Persons Secretariat will be watching the Senate and every provincial Legislature, including ours, in an attempt to protect those in our society who rely on us, on those of us in authority whose job it is to protect the most vulnerable.

Third, what about palliative care? Well, Madam Speaker, we need to focus on the quality of life, and that includes the quality of the final days of that life. Palliative care needs to be improved, made more accessible. We need to have those critical conversations about end-of-life care available, and we need to have that care available throughout the province. Recent statistics reveal that most Canadians do not receive palliative care as their life's journey reaches its inevitable conclusion. In Ontario four times as many patients die in intensive care than palliative care. In that same province 10 times as many patients die in acute care as in palliative care. In fact, in Ontario only 6 per cent of patients that die pass away in palliative care.

Now, palliative care can and should be a beautiful thing. Even veterinarians, who have always had the option of euthanizing their patients, can and do seek to offer palliative care to their patients. In fact, a recent study showed that veterinary students receive three times the hours of instruction in analgesia and pain control that human medical students do. So we need to focus more on palliative care. We need to make sure that patients are supported and loved so that they never feel that they are a burden, which is easily one of the greatest fears that seniors face when they get sick. We've all heard it from our elderly friends and relatives. They say: I just don't want to be a burden.

Finally, what about medical professionals? My colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed quoted from the Hippocratic oath in his eloquent speech yesterday on this issue. Doctors take that oath when they earn their medical degree, and no doctor practising today entered the profession with the knowledge that at some point they might be called on to assist with the death of their patients. There's not a doctor anywhere who knew that that was part of the deal. People enter the medical field because they want to care for patients. They want to heal. They're trained to heal. They're trained to care. None are trained to assist with the death of their patients. I'm worried about the physicians in this province who are about to take on this burden, and I'll tell you why.

Veterinarians have always been called upon where it is appropriate to end the life of our patients. I will tell this Assembly that this is a profound experience. It changes you, and it may come as a surprise to members that veterinarians as a profession have always had a suicide rate higher than the general population. In fact, that suicide rate is four times higher than the general population. Our rate of mental illness and suicide is twice that of other medical professionals.

So what makes us different? Well, there are a number of things, but one issue that always comes up in the discussion is that veterinarians are the only health care professionals that are called upon to end the lives of their patients. That takes its toll. Nearly everyone in my profession knows a colleague who has taken their own life. In my case it hits close to home. The veterinarian who hired me as a fresh-faced, newly minted, 22-year-old city kid to work in an 80 per cent rural large-animal practice some 33 years ago committed suicide in 2002. I gave the eulogy at his funeral. There is something that is so very profound about the toll that it takes on ending the life of your patient. I don't think anyone in this room can really understand that, and there's no way that I can describe it adequately. But I guess I can tell you that my wife, who is also a veterinarian, could always tell the days that I had performed a euthanasia because she would see and she'd say: you had one today, didn't you?

I know many people who have told me that they didn't want to become a veterinarian because they couldn't bring themselves to euthanize a patient. Whether directly or indirectly, prescribing the death of a patient will have an effect on our physicians. This is especially true for physicians in small rural communities. I've known doctors that have delivered two, three generations of the same family. These doctors become an integral part of their community, and how much more difficult will it be for them to be called on to sign the papers, to assist the deaths of those patients that they have cared for.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to conclude my comments by saying this. The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled, and physician-assisted death is the law of our land. I'm not debating that. Whether I agree with that law or not, as a law-abiding citizen I respect that law. It is our job, though, as legislators to ensure that the law is upheld and that we place safeguards that are fully maintained and safeguards that are workable to protect the vulnerable in society. That's the other half of the Carter decision. These regulations simply do not do that. While the College of Physicians & Surgeons has developed a 19-paragraph, six-page document of advice to the profession on medical assistance in dying, it quickly notes that "this advice does not define a standard of practice, nor should it be interpreted as legal advice."

There are still many, many unanswered questions that these hastily prepared draft regulations simply do not answer. Madam Speaker, this is a profound subject that has understandably created a great deal of anxiety for many Albertans. As legislators we have the opportunity in a free vote – and I stress that this is a free vote; I certainly hope that none of the caucuses have been whipped on this vote – to vote freely on the wishes of our constituents and our own consciences. For me and my constituents I cannot support this motion, and I urge members of all parties to vote to defeat it.

The Deputy Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a). Questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak on Government Motion 17. My constituents in Little Bow have, in no uncertain terms, made clear that they have profound concerns with the assisted-suicide legislation that is currently before the federal Parliament.

There are two particular concerns that I wish to speak to, that we look to ensure there are adequate protections in place for those who are most vulnerable, those who have the most to lose as the result of this legislation, and the second is that we adequately respect the conscience rights of medical professionals in our province. The matter before us involves the government enacting a policy on the wilful termination of human life. I cannot think that there will ever be a more significant matter before us as legislators, and it is peculiar that the government is rushing this.

I want to bring to the attention of members here the recent comments of Dr. Kevin Hay, a family physician from Wainwright, Alberta. This physician served his profession for over a decade as the representative forum delegate for the north area of the central zone, formerly the East Central health region. Since the Supreme Court's Carter decision on February 6, 2015, the physicians' representative forum spent all of 20 minutes – that's right, a paltry 20 minutes – on this issue. When a motion taking a stand on the matter was tabled, it was tabled indefinitely, meaning that it would never come up for debate. What this means is that even physicians have not had adequate time to debate this incredibly grave moral matter. Without their input, the AMA opted simply to adopt the Canadian Medical Association position.

Madam Speaker, the frenzied hurry to push this matter through at all levels of government has left physicians without proper time to weigh in on the matter, and by rushing this legislation through here, without giving adequate time for us to consult with our own constituents, with our own communities, this government is depriving Albertans of the precious few opportunities that exist to weigh in on this delicate matter.

At the core of this debate is a question about the value of human life and how we as a society value human life. What does compassion really mean? Does it mean that we do all that we can to help those who are in pain, or does it mean that we do all that we can to end the pain by ending those who have it? Simply put, we are devaluing human life if in the course of this discussion we are not giving due consideration to the adequacy of care that is available in our health care system. It says more about our society that someone in a time of suffering has concluded that they no longer have dignity, that the dignified option is the wilful ending of human life.

A September 2000 article that appeared in the Toronto Star discussing the international gathering of palliative care physicians that took place in Montreal noted that “studies have shown that most people who ask to die change their minds after being treated for physical pain or depression. But about 4 or 5 per cent continue to want euthanasia or physician assisted suicide.” If we are to accept those studies, it means that 95 per cent of those seeking assisted suicide are doing so as a result of not being adequately treated in the health care system.

The motion put before us by the government does not go nearly far enough in protection of the vulnerable. The mere mention that there be “appropriate safeguards” is simply not enough. What we are dealing with is the inversion of the duty of medical professionals to care for the most vulnerable, their obligations to provide health care now being transformed into an ability to terminate life, by definition the precise opposite of health care.

The consequence of the Carter decision by the Supreme Court is the termination of section 241(b) of the Criminal Code, which prohibited assisted suicide. As Parliament is debating a law on assisted suicide, it is worth particular note that the majority government in the House of Commons has been defeating amendments that had aimed to protect the most vulnerable. We have an onus to protect Albertans, and while the Supreme Court may have struck down a section of the Criminal Code pertaining to assisted suicide, that should not and cannot preclude us from doing what we can so that the wilful termination of life is not normalized.

This government motion should be looking at ways to encourage proper treatment of those seeking assisted suicide so that their suffering is properly alleviated. At its current stage in debate the federal legislation does not include a proper mental health evaluation for those seeking assisted suicide. In other words, it is possible that untreated depression is leading someone to conclude that their suffering, their illness, can only be remedied through death. We need to ensure that there are proper safeguards, especially with regard to those who are unable to speak for themselves.

A recent opinion piece that appeared in the National Post contained the following, which I wish to convey to members here:

Once you have normalized suicide, from a tragedy we should seek to prevent to a release from suffering we should seek to assist, it is logically incoherent – indeed, it is morally intolerable – to restrict its benefits to some, while condemning others to suffer interminably, merely on the grounds that they are incapable of giving consent.

Once assisted suicide becomes the law of the land, we as Albertans are faced with a choice. Do we become complacent with normalized suicide, or do we continue to recognize it as a tragedy to be prevented? In simple terms, this is a time for choosing, and we must also ask whether we are a society that respects freedom of conscience or if we are a society that does not.

The motion presented by the government speaks to respecting the rights of those in the medical community who disagree with assisted suicide. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms recognizes freedom of conscience as a fundamental freedom. It was recognized in the Canadian Bill of Rights before that. It's a right that traces back to the Magna Carta of 1215 from England, part of a legacy of ordered liberty on which our freedoms and indeed our country are founded.

Indeed, it goes against the grain of over 800 years of history to force our physicians to act against their conscience in carrying out the wilful termination of life. Not only does it arguably undermine the very definition of what constitutes health care; it also undermines the original wording of the Hippocratic oath, the pledge that has guided physicians throughout modern history. Freedom of conscience must be universal because we have to recognize that a conscientious opposition to assisted dying is likely founded on a conscious objection to the termination of life in that wilful manner prior to the onset of natural death.

It is equally against the grain of that freedom to force someone to refer for such a service if they do not wish to carry out that service. Either we recognize freedom of conscience or we do not. Some issues are indeed clear. As provincial legislators we need to recognize that there are some developments, higher court rulings for example, that are beyond our jurisdiction, but health care is very much a matter of provincial jurisdiction. What we have before us are clear questions of how we take care of our vulnerable, how we respect a fundamental right such as freedom of conscience, and, most importantly, how we value life.

If we are a compassionate society, if we want to have a compassionate society, it's difficult to believe that we can become complacent and welcoming to the wilful termination of life. How we treat and how we respond to Albertans who are suffering is the legacy that we leave behind.

Madam Speaker, I will not be supporting this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed under Standing Order 29(2)(a).

Mr. Rodney: Madam Speaker, it is indeed under 29(2)(a), so this is comments and questions. Fifteen thousand Albertans indeed have responded to this issue. That might sound like a lot, but it is not; 4 and a quarter million other Albertans have not had the opportunity to have their say. Yesterday the government told us that our job is to be the voice of Albertans on this. However, they have not given us the opportunity to return to our constituencies to discuss the regulations, that were tabled just yesterday. I've been told by many that this is a travesty of democracy.

That being said, Hansard will show that every single member of the PC caucus has spoken to this bill, often very passionately, with great life experience. Obviously, in listening to our speeches, you know that our members are not being whipped, and that is a good thing.

I was very happy to hear the thoughts of the leader of the Alberta Party and the leader of the Liberal Party and many members of the Wildrose but only two of the NDP private members and the Associate Minister of Health . . .

An Hon. Member: That's wrong.

Mr. Rodney: Through the chair . . .

An Hon. Member: Three.

Mr. Rodney: Oh, wow. It's a whopping three. Think about that. [interjection] Who has given the time and application – I will go through the chair because I have some things to say, and I want to hear from this member. I challenge that member right there to stand on his feet and represent his constituents.

I was even happy to hear from the Deputy Premier and Minister of Health. She asked me a question under 29(2)(a), took four of the five minutes. That's fine. I'm very, very disappointed that given her rank and her portfolio she's not taken the opportunity to address this House on the issue in the time allocated to her. I wonder how the hon. member feels about this. I also wonder how the hon. member feels about the fact that despite his rank as the longest serving member of this House, we've not heard from the Government House Leader.

As you know, as the second-longest serving MLA of this House I jumped to my feet to speak to this motion at my very first opportunity. I apologize that I had to fight back some tears, but I trust that you will respect the fact that it was very balanced with research, and I felt honoured to contribute the little that I could to the tip of this iceberg.

I wonder how the hon. member feels about the fact that given that this is a life-and-death issue, we've not heard from the Minister of Education, the Deputy Government House Leader, the President of the Treasury Board and Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the intent of 29(2)(a) is to respond to comments made by the previous speaker. I think you're drifting a little bit beyond that, so if you could stay on topic, please.

Mr. Rodney: I know that you worked with Hansard, but it's actually to offer comments, and this is part of a preamble to a question.

. . . the ministers of Human Services, Seniors and Housing, Indigenous Relations – you see that these are all related to this issue intricately.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Rodney: . . . the minister responsible for democratic renewal . . .

The Deputy Speaker: We've had a point of order, hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: That's very nice. We'll deal with it in due course, right?

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Have a seat, member.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, we'll deal with the point of order.

Mr. Rodney: Well, you know what, sir? I'm not referring to an absence, and don't waste our five minutes.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member.

Go ahead, hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, the member is talking about who has and who hasn't spoken. We wanted to provide an opportunity particularly for the opposition to comment with respect to this matter. We had discussions with the House leaders in which we agreed to cede most of the time to the opposition so that they could make their comments with respect to that. That hon. member knows nothing about what he's talking about, and he is abusing his position. He's abusing the five-minute question-and-answer period to try and cast aspersions on the members of this government.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, did you wish to respond to the point of order?

Dr. Starke: Yes, Madam Speaker, I do wish to respond. Well, there is no point of order here, and that is because under 29(2)(a) the Speakers, both yourself and Mr. Speaker, have allowed tremendous latitude in the use of 29(2)(a). We've seen that throughout this Legislature. We've seen 29(2)(a) used for a variety of different ways and reasons. I would submit that my colleague was moving towards asking a question of the previous speaker, which is entirely within the realm of 29(2)(a).

With regard to the comments of the Government House Leader on the discussions that we have had, we have encouraged at all times – even in the discussions that we had as House leaders, there was indication that there would be debate, and there was never any specific indication as to how many members from each caucus would specifically speak although, you know, in the case of our caucus, I indicated that I suspected that all of our members wished to speak, and they have.

However, there is no point of order here, Madam Speaker. My colleague is using 29(2)(a) well within the bounds of the already established, very lenient guidelines and the great deal of latitude that has been established within this Legislature during this session, and I would ask that you allow him to continue to the conclusion of his remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the point of order?

Well, I agree that there has been a great deal of latitude given on the use of 29(2)(a) in terms of comments. I'm a little concerned, hon. member, that your comments were starting to stray into relatively personal comments towards individual members, and I think that that could be a rather dangerous area to get into, so I would urge you to get to your question.

Let's move on. I would say that there's no point of order on this particular issue.

Mr. Rodney: Happy to. I will share with you – and you may know this from your time sitting upstairs, Madam Speaker – that this corner of the room has been far more personal in these sorts of attacks. This is not an attack, but in the past we have been called out by name of constituency. I have not done that, and I will simply say this: the ministers in these ministries are directly related to this issue.

I was asking if this member would like to hear from some of them, and I was listing some of the ministries so that people could hear that, for instance, when it comes to democratic renewal, Service Alberta, Status of Women, Minister of Advanced Education, or perhaps the Premier – as they have challenged us to represent, perhaps they would like to represent their ministry.

Actually, it's too bad I couldn't get quite to the end of my question because I wanted actually to pay tribute to people back there for their backgrounds in nursing, telecommunications, broadcasting, journalism, LGBT community, nonprofit community, indigenous communities, activism, social work, sociology, mental health – you see how this is related, don't you? – Canadian Cancer Society, public policy and analysis, Good Samaritan Society, community development, collaboration analysis, homelessness, Children's Heart Society, insurance agents, developmental disabilities, search and rescue, occupational health and safety, school counselling, a union representative or two, and, of course, more than one member, including the chair, of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. This is ringing bells, isn't it? You have experience and expertise that you can share.

Madam Speaker, as you know from my speech yesterday and, obviously, from today, I have very strong feelings, and I am challenging that side to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, the time is finished for this order of business.

Are there any further members wishing to speak to the motion?
Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to start by offering my sincere thanks to the members who spoke on this very important and personal issue for sharing their concerns and suggestions for ways to navigate this new and evolving area of law and medicine. I would also like to extend a deep and heartfelt thank you to all members who shared their personal stories and experiences with family members and loved ones at the end of their lives as well as some very touching stories of personal professional experiences.

The Supreme Court of Canada's ruling on medical assistance in dying comes into effect this Monday. The federal government has the primary responsibility for legislation in the area, and we intend for any framework we put forward to fit within their legislative framework. Unfortunately, that framework isn't yet set and may be subject to court challenges. In the meantime Alberta must be prepared. Alberta Health and Alberta Health Services have been working diligently on this issue, and supports and processes are in place for Albertans.

It was really important for our government to hear from the opposition, to have this conversation in this House in whatever form we were able to. This is in addition to the thousands of Albertans that we have heard from, including a variety of stakeholders such as faith-based institutions, regulatory colleges such as the College of Physicians & Surgeons, and individuals with direct, first-hand experience in medical assistance in dying.

Madam Speaker, medical assistance in dying is an evolving area of law and of medicine, and our government will continue to hear from Albertans on this deeply personal and difficult decision.

Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

7:30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 1, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 20

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

[Debate adjourned June 1]

The Speaker: Anyone wishing to speak to Bill 20? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in this Assembly with my grave concerns around the impact of Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, and the impact it will have on my constituents in Chestermere-Rocky View if passed in its current form.

My constituents are stewards of Alberta's environment in the truest sense of the word. They take actions every single day to reduce their impact on Alberta's landfills. My constituents care for their land. Many of my constituents partake in alternative fuel options. I myself have the privilege of operating my home with solar panels, and that is why I know how much my constituents and all Albertans, for that matter, care about this province and about environmental stewardship. Albertans want to leave Alberta beautiful for their children and their grandchildren. Many of my constituents work in Alberta's world-class oil and gas industry. They strive every day – every day – to meet the high environmental requirements made necessary by our province's regulatory bodies at the request of the industry.

I know that my fellow Wildrose members know that Albertans want common-sense action on the environment. These are actions that take into account the progress that they have made on protecting our environment while acknowledging the difficulties of living in a northern province with infrastructure that is spread across large swaths of land.

My riding is filled with families, families that are struggling in these tough economic times. Many of my constituents rise early in the morning to travel into Calgary. These long commutes are daily, and they require a vehicle. They require a vehicle which, obviously, requires gasoline. Just by virtue of choosing to raise their children in a tight-knit rural and urban community within the riding of Chestermere-Rocky View, these families will be punished by this carbon tax.

The Alberta lifestyle is one that encourages mothers and fathers to remove their children from densely populated cities and out into the country, where their children can grow up to appreciate all of the things our beautiful province has to offer. Mr. Speaker, we would be remiss to take actions that discourage families from choosing to raise their children on acreages and farms, where they experience first-hand the majesty of our environment. Chestermere-Rocky View is a beautiful constituency, and it spans the entire perimeter of Calgary. We have a little bit of everything in this constituency. It's a beautiful, beautiful place to raise your children, and they learn their roles as the next generation of stewards.

Many of my constituents are farmers who, by the nature of their profession and this province's beautiful geography, are regularly forced to drive long distances, Mr. Speaker, for non farming related activities. Simple actions like running their child's forgotten lunch to school, picking up formula from the grocery store, driving their sons and daughters to hockey practice take a little bit longer. Everyday activities simply take more fuel for a farmer.

Their drives involve back roads that are on unpaved gravel, and driving these roads requires a sturdy vehicle. A truck or four-wheel drive is a meaningful choice out where I live, and it is a requirement of the rural lifestyle in southern Alberta. My constituents have no choice. They have no ability to just change their vehicle to something else at this point that cannot haul what they need to haul from place to place.

Many Albertans feel that this government has done enough to punish farmers. The significant increases to their regulatory burden, soon to be forced upon them by Bill 6, will be costly in a lot of cases. Mr. Speaker, now, the government has proven no understanding of how Albertan farmers live their lives by imposing more onerous burdens on these families. When will this government stop increasing the cumulative burden they insist on imposing on Albertans? The government has done little more than make life harder for these hard-working families, and to what avail?

I dare to say: find me a farmer that does not care about the environment. Find me a farmer that does not understand the vital impact clean air, water, and soil has on his crops' productivity. These workers are amongst the most sturdy environmental actors in our province. They cherish this Earth, and they live outside, with their connection to the land. Each action the farmers in my riding take is a calculated necessity of their everyday reality.

This action by the government is ill planned and poorly timed. This punitive tax, that is at the core requirement of the carbon tax, is designed to punish families into changing their behaviour. It seeks to modify how Albertans live their day-to-day lives. We don't, however, see the members on the other side of this House rising to explain to the good people of Chestermere-Rocky View why they're wrong about their need to drive a pickup truck down gravel roads over another choice like a Smart car. We don't, however, see the members on the other side of this House rising to explain how driving one's child across the province to hockey practices and games and tournaments is a cardinal sin and in need of behavioural correction. We don't, however, see the members on the other side of this House rising to detail for us how commuting to work every day is something that Albertan breadwinners need to take more actions to avoid.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this House all know why the members opposite are so quiet on the punitive implications of the tax they support. If they did rise to detail the actions they are seeking to change through this tax, they would come across as a little bit more than detached from the realities of everyday Albertan life, and that is exactly what this tax is in this form at this time. This tax is detached from the realities of everyday Albertan life, just like the government that is seeking to implement it.

The families in my riding of Chestermere-Rocky View are not all in a position to buy new cars. These families are not in a position to shell out money on underfunded energy efficiency programs. Many of the families, actually, in my riding have two family members that are out of work right now, not one member but two. Two breadwinners in many, many families are out of work right now. I just want you to think about that as we're going forward with this. We have yet to see the parameters for these families that are struggling through an extremely difficult economic downturn.

The breadwinners for these families, Mr. Speaker, don't have an option of working closer to home. I think I mentioned yesterday that a good chunk of Chestermere empties out into the city, as do the other areas within Chestermere-Rocky View. Most of them work within the city of Calgary, so this isn't a choice for them. This is part of how they live.

I can honestly say that it's sad for me to see that the government won't acknowledge how regressive and harmful their actions will be for Alberta families. The government hasn't even considered the full impact of the tax. We know that because there has been no release of the numbers to us. Yesterday we talked a little bit about the economic realities of this. Well, some of the economic realities, like I had mentioned yesterday, are these small businesses.

As we go forward with this and look at this bill and as you see the fallout from what's going to come as a result of this, how are you going to explain to my families and your families in your constituencies about the decision that was made at this time? I can honestly say that there are probably going to be some families within your constituencies telling you about how they're suffering. Then what are you going to say? What are you going to do at that time?

Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely imperative, as we create legislation in here, that we are actually able to stand and able to defend that and able to help the families understand that. Obviously, when we're creating legislation, we can't possibly make everybody happy – I realize that – but this government is going to have to be able to explain to families about what's going on in their constituencies and how the accumulation of all these taxes is going to impact their daily lives.

We are wondering why the environment minister, without any citation or foundation, is not willing to give us any numbers on this. They're not willing to see their numbers scrutinized. The question is: are they far too low? We need to know these things. The typical Albertan family will see a $1,000 increase in expenses due to things like higher prices at the grocery store and the clothing store, high prices on food produced in greenhouses in the province, higher municipal taxes as the towns and cities struggle to keep up with the rising cost of powering municipal infrastructure.

When you increase the cost of transporting food, you increase the cost of food. I know that this government is maybe having some difficulties understanding the economics of this, but Albertans' demand for food is largely inelastic. Everybody here has to eat. Albertans need food to survive – that is obvious – and that is a dependence that they as individuals are going to be paying for, the extra fuel costs to transport their food into this province.

Mr. Speaker, this tax has hugely regressive implications. It will harm Alberta's most vulnerable. The equity redistributions that this government is promising are insignificant compared to the costs and, worse, are structured in a very, very – we don't understand the manner in which this is coming forward. Why will two roommates receive more money than a married couple? Right? It's quite interesting when you take a look at the little bits and pieces of this. The implementation of this carbon tax framework will hurt families.

We've all said it in this House – every single one of us had the opportunity to stand here – that Alberta is a province of innovators and entrepreneurs. We all know how fortunate we are to live here with the Alberta spirit and the immense talent and everything we have to work with here. I can hear it when the government speaks about how proud they are of the province that they live in, and I know that. That's why this is so disturbing. I honestly believe with all my heart that every single person that sits in this House knows the incredible people which they have the privilege of being here for.

Upon saying that, I would hope that the government would want to foster that spirit, not stamp it out. Think about what is possible. I know you have. We have, for sure. What is possible here? Where can you put those dollars? How can you get those dollars back into the pockets of Albertans so that those innovations, those things that we talk about, everything that's possible in this province can actually happen. We all know the kinds of people that live here and the immense amount of talent that is here. We need to foster that.

The actions taken through this act and the subsequent complementary acts and regulations will serve to increase the cost of electricity and drive out business. Now, I've heard the government say over and over again that business is looking to come and invest here for electricity and renewables. Well, I would love to understand how that's possible when we have taken away our competitive edge. I look forward to hearing from the government how that is feasible when we have industry migrating out of this province faster than we can keep track. We have people leaving this province finding jobs elsewhere. I have two friends right now that are looking outside of this province.

So if we are looking at keeping our expertise here . . .

The Member for Airdrie under 29(2)(a).

Mrs. Pitt: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I treasure the moment to rise with questions for my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View. We're actually neighbour ridings, so it's very exciting for us to be able to do many different things together between our constituencies. It was absolutely wonderful – actually, a sort of fun fact I have to throw in: Airdrie-Chestermere used to be a riding back in the day. Maybe it will once again as well. Who knows? Wouldn't they be lucky.

It was a very, very fascinating conversation because I know that my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View has extensive knowledge within the energy industry and especially in regard to renewable energy. The knowledge that she has, especially in terms of where we are currently and where we need to be in regard to economics as well, is absolutely fascinating. I was just really hoping that you could maybe expand a little bit more with some information in regard to, you know, the technology that's available and how feasible this is and if it's responsible, if it's not responsible, if it's going to work. Right? We all want to pay our bills and feed our families, but of course we need money to do that. Entrepreneurs certainly aren't going to invest in a business that isn't going to put food on the table at the end of the day. That's just how it is. Is it responsible to be offering, you know, government taxpayer dollars to fund these ventures when they really will just flop in the end? I was just really hoping that my hon. colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View could just talk a little bit more about that.

The Speaker: The hon member, and you will direct your comments to the bill.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, I will.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, sir. One of the things that I think is imperative when we go forward, Mr. Speaker, with regard to renewables is the time that it takes to get one particular product offline and another one online. As we've seen throughout many, many other parts of the world when we're looking at those feasibilities, there is a mechanism by which to do that. The hon. member from the third party mentioned today about our clean coal and where we're at with that and about how the phasing out of that at too fast a mechanism is like a boulder rolling downhill. We already had a mechanism in order to phase out coal because Canadians care about that. Canadians care about lowering their carbon, and Canadians care about the health and well-being of their children.

So this was already taken on by our previous federal government. I truly believe that as we're going forward with renewables, especially with the amount of talent and technology that we have in this province, we are absolutely set to bring on people who are completely capable of actually taking us into that part of the world, where we can bring renewables online. It is a difficult situation to try and come up with understanding of how those are going to work. How do we take out one kind of electricity to bring it in with another? There are many, many things, and that would require a plan. I think, to go back to what the hon. Member for Airdrie was talking about, that to come up with that plan takes time and it takes an immense amount of understanding of the assets that we already have here and knowing how to make sure that the people who are already really invested in this province and in our electricity and in low-cost electricity – I mean, we are so fortunate here.

In order to make sure that that happens and that the ratepayer is not going to be absolutely squashed by a system that comes in that could triple or quadruple the amount that they're paying for electricity – there are a lot of families here, even as we stand right now, who are struggling. I can't even fathom for those families what it would look like if this program doesn't have a plan to come online and keep things as cost-effective as possible, but again to my hon. member, that takes a plan.

I think that probably one of the most concerning things is that we have not seen, Mr. Speaker, a natural gas plan. We have not seen a plan that shows any sort of retrofits to mechanisms that we have right now for natural gas. In fact, I think the thing that's even more concerning is that there are other provinces in this country that are looking at actually not even putting natural gas in and potentially going just to wind and to hydro. That bears the question, then: how are we going to bring that all together?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the indulgence of the House if maybe we couldn't stop for a second and have an introduction if that would be possible.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Please proceed, Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise real quick and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly George and Paula Muller, who are from the city that some of us call home and the rest of us call our second home while we are here far away from home debating important matters of this province, the city of Edmonton. It was nice to visit with them outside. I'm proud to report that they are definitely Wildrose voters, and I ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. I hope he didn't eat too much at your house.

Government Bills and Orders

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Speaker: We're on the main motion right now, I'm told.

Mr. Mason: Sorry. We're on the main motion, Mr. Speaker? And that is to give second reading? Why isn't 29(2)(a) . . .

Mrs. Aheer: I think I talked too long.

Mr. Mason: That was the five-minute period? Oh.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm glad that we have some young people at the table because some of the folks with grey hair had forgotten that. They are always correct.

Anyone else wishing to speak to Bill 20?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:54 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson, S.	Goehring	Miller
Babcock	Hinkley	Miranda
Carson	Horne	Nielsen
Ceci	Jabbour	Notley
Connolly	Kazim	Renaud
Coolahan	Kleinsteuber	Rosendahl
Cortes-Vargas	Loyola	Schreiner
Dach	Luff	Shepherd
Dang	Malkinson	Sucha
Drever	Mason	Turner
Eggen	McCuaig-Boyd	Westhead
Feehan	McKittrick	Woollard

Against the motion:

Aheer	Drysdale	Pitt
Anderson, W.	Gotfried	Smith
Clark	McIver	Starke
Cooper	Nixon	Strankman
Cyr	Panda	van Dijken
Totals:	For – 37	Against – 15

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order. I'm glad everyone is in such a great mood.

Bill 20 Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Chair: Are there any questions or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise and speak in Committee of the Whole on the government's Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. We've had some considerable debate on this, and I don't think there is any mystery as to where I am on this.

The fact is that the bill doesn't really do what it's advertised to do. It doesn't actually do anything beneficial or nearly enough that's beneficial for climate. It's unfortunately more of a bill to create revenue for the government to fund their pet projects, to do some income redistribution and other things. There are many problems with the bill, but that is one of the big problems with the bill, Madam Chair, that it's not revenue neutral, that the bill actually takes a lot of money out of the economy without returning it, actually puts it into government programs rather than recirculating it in the economy. As a result, the bill in its current form is unsupportable.

But in the spirit of improving the bill and improving the environmental results that the bill could produce on behalf of Albertans, Madam Chair, I would like to move an amendment. I'd like to move it on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-South East. I have the requisite number of copies, which will arrive at your desk shortly, Madam Chair. I'll be surprised if you will let me speak before it gets there, so why don't I just wait for that.

The Chair: That would be great.

This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise on this amendment. I move that the Climate Leadership Implementation Act be amended in schedule 1 by striking out section 3(2) and substituting the following:

- (2) The revenue from the carbon levy may only be used to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions.

My intention with the amendment, Madam Chair, is to make the carbon levy revenue neutral. Of course, that would do several things that I think would improve the bill dramatically. First of all, it would actually focus the money taken from Albertans in the form of a tax – I know that the government calls it a levy – and it would make sure that it gets used in the economy. In other words, the amount of tax that comes out of the economy goes back in in other tax cuts, making it truly revenue neutral.

This would actually retain all of the benefit that the government's current plan has for the environment, but I think it would very much improve the effect of the government's current plan on the rest of the economy by making sure that the dollars go back into the economy. Then it's truly revenue neutral. The dollars would be there to provide businesses with incentives to spend. It would give households the ability to – somewhere in the economy there would be goods and services bought, which would create jobs for people, and of course they would work at those jobs, collect a paycheque, and spend money further into the economy as well. We know this is kind of important.

There are other examples where plans like this have been successful, and probably the most obvious one and the one closest to here is in British Columbia. Well, let's come back home here for a minute, and I'll move on to British Columbia in a little bit.

I don't doubt that the intentions of many members of the government were good with Bill 20, but the Progressive Conservatives believe that climate change is real. We know this and you know this because a decade ago, when we were in government, we of course instituted the first price on carbon, an industrial price on carbon, the first jurisdiction to do so in North America. It looked to address the emissions intensity of our largest emitters and put a price on what they emit, thereby incenting them to emit less.

Madam Chair, the carbon tax as it currently exists will not work for Alberta or Albertans. Page 6 of the government's own budget shows that more than $6 billion of the carbon tax revenue over the next five years will be used for government priorities, projects, and initiatives. Another way to say the same thing, put differently, is that the government is only returning 29 per cent of carbon tax revenue to Albertans.

If the government truly wanted to avoid expensive and cumbersome procedures, there's a simpler answer. You could have the same emissions reductions, whatever they will be, purely related to a price on carbon, and again we could follow the lead of British Columbia. This is intended, not exactly but in a manner, to use that model, which has been somewhat successful. British Columbia put in their revenue-neutral carbon tax in 2008. Under their system every dollar earned through the tax is returned to the people through a tax cut. Within the confines and deliberation of Bill 20, a bill that we believe will pass because the government has a majority, we think that this is the best way to make the bill more manageable for all Albertans.

Really, again, we think the carbon tax is too aggressive on Albertans. It takes too much money out of the economy, too much money out of households, too much money from businesses, too much money, actually, from nonprofits and schools, too much money from seniors with what they have to pay for things, too much money from Albertans that have a low income.

Making the tax, or the levy, if the government prefers, revenue neutral, we think, would well and truly improve what would happen. It would make the carbon tax more efficient and transparent and ensure that government finds other ways to fund their other projects, potentially through finding efficiencies, giving government employees, through our PC caucus, through our Engage process, the $4 billion challenge, or going straight to the government employees themselves and saying: how could you recommend that we save money in each department and each ministry? We believe that doing this is what good legislators ought to do to meet the government's goal of making the environment better but taking better care of the economy while so doing.

One of the outcomes from what British Columbia has experienced: their per capita use of fossil fuels decreased by 17 per cent during the first four years after their price on carbon. I know that in the current government the minister has said that they're not expecting a real curve or bend in emissions here till 2030. When you think about it, this would actually improve the government's current plan for environmental improvement over if they don't support the current amendment before the Legislative Assembly, Madam Chair, so I think it meets the government's goal of wanting to do something good for the environment.

Over the same period in British Columbia per capita greenhouse gas emissions declined by approximately 10 per cent right across the province. Statistics seem to show for British Columbia that because their carbon tax is revenue neutral, they've actually returned more money through tax cuts and rebates than they had collected in the scheme's revenue. Kind of a pleasant surprise for British Columbia, and wouldn't it be nice if Albertans could experience a similar pleasant surprise, where the tax reductions may turn out to be more than the taxes taken out of the system, which is a good way to grow the economy, which the government has said they want to do.

The idea is to better achieve the results the government wants, give Albertans a better chance to grow their economy, to retain their jobs, to have a great quality of life, and indeed to meet those environmental targets that the government says often that they're very fond of. The tax as it's currently written here, without this change, will promote carbon leakage, which means you'll have people buying goods and services from other jurisdictions and bringing them here, from places that don't have the artificial inflation that the government's carbon tax would cause. It wouldn't encourage people to leave the province because we believe that by taking less money out of the economy, there would be more jobs and more opportunities for them here.

Madam Chair, this would fix what I think is a major flaw in Bill 20, and the nice thing about it is that the government would be able to meet the objectives that they want in terms of improving the environment and improving the economy. This will do everything that the government's unamended bill will do for the environment, but this will do a lot more for the economy.

With that, I will sit down and listen to the debate and discussion and encourage all members of the House to seriously consider what is intended to be an improvement to the current Bill 20.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to enthusiastically support this amendment. It is one of the core tenets of the Alberta Party's climate change plan, called Alberta's Contribution, which I have a copy of here for any member who would like to read it. I've given out many here in the last few days. We do have a plan for climate change, and I think that it's important to be able to say that as either a government or an opposition.

You know, in all seriousness, it is important, I think, that Alberta take action on climate change. But even being in support of a carbon tax, I think it's very important to be in support of the right carbon tax. One of the most important aspects of that, in my opinion and, I think, in the opinion of many Albertans and many experts, is revenue neutrality. This carbon tax as proposed by this government is in no way revenue neutral. There's talk of revenue recycling, which seems to be some new terminology, that I've never heard before. But the idea of a revenue-neutral carbon tax, where all of the dollars are sent back to Albertans through direct tax cuts, I think, is a very important aspect of any carbon plan so that it is not perceived, either in perception or reality, as a tax grab.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays, who moved this amendment, talked about B.C.'s plans, and I'd like to talk about B.C.'s plans here in a little bit more detail. I have a recent budget from the province of British Columbia – and I think this is very informative in terms of what revenue neutrality really means – and I quote from the B.C. budget: "Revenue neutrality means that tax reductions must be provided that fully return the estimated revenue from the carbon tax to taxpayers in each fiscal year." You tell me if, quote, unquote, revenue recycling meets that test. It doesn't in any way. It does not. This amendment, on the other hand, would allow that test to be met.

When the province of British Columbia puts out its budget every year, they do a carbon tax report and plan, where they run down in great detail – all of us in this House know exactly the level of detail that a budget will go into – where that money in the carbon tax comes from and where that money goes to and how it is spent.

Some of the things that B.C. does – and I really admire their transparency here. That is another problem I have with Bill 20, a total lack of transparency. It is simply a framework that allows this government to implement policy through regulation at some point, undetermined, in the future. I have a very difficult time supporting a bill where I don't know what the outcome is going to be. When you have a government that says, "Trust me; it'll be fine," my first instinct is to not trust the government. I want data. I want numbers. I want details. I'd love to see draft regulations. That would be wonderful. We had a debate earlier today where we at least saw some draft regulations. I'd love to see that for Bill 20. I don't expect that'll be forthcoming.

Here are some of the things that B.C.'s revenue-neutral carbon tax report and plan covers. They have a B.C. low-income climate action tax credit. They have a reduction of 5 per cent in the first two personal income tax rates. There's a northern and rural homeowner benefit of $200, a B.C. seniors' home renovation tax credit, a small-business venture tax credit, a training tax credit for individuals. On the business side the general corporate income tax is reduced from 12 to 11 per cent and then to 10.5 per cent and then to 10 per cent effective January 1, 2011, and increased again to 11 per cent in 2013. I seem to remember some history around that one. The small-business corporate income tax rate is reduced. The corporate income tax small-business threshold is increased from $400,000 to $500,000. These are very specific items that then have the associated amount of money that goes back to British Columbians as a result of making their carbon tax truly revenue neutral.

I'll continue. An industrial property tax credit, an industrial property tax credit for school taxes, school property taxes reduced by 50 per cent, an interactive digital media tax credit, a training tax credit for businesses, a film incentive B.C. tax credit, a production services tax credit: all of these are things that result directly from the $1.1 billion that British Columbia collected. I believe I have an older budget – I believe the budget I'm looking at is for 2014 – but the principle stands. This is very clear and explicit and specific about how the province of British Columbia returns the carbon tax in a truly revenue-neutral way to the people of British Columbia.

Now, this is not something that we have seen in anywhere near that level of detail in this budget. What we have are line items that say things like $645 million for Energy Efficiency Alberta over five years. For what? What is that going to be? Is it going to be a home renovation tax credit? Is it going to be discounts on high-efficiency furnaces? Is it going to be rebates for better windows? Is it going to be an electric vehicle credit? What's it going to be? Is it going to be geothermal heating installations? What is it going to be? How do we know that that $645 million is going to be well spent? We don't know that, and Albertans don't know that. Those are the questions that I'm getting from my constituents and from the people of Alberta. What I would expect to see from this government is a very detailed, by line item, itemized accounting of how the carbon tax will be revenue neutral.

Now, I remind the government once again, in closing, before I hear from some other hon. members on their views on this issue, that I am in favour of a carbon tax. I believe the climate science, I believe that climate change is human caused, and I believe that Alberta has not only an opportunity but an obligation to address it. But we have to get it right. If we don't get it right, Albertans will not have faith in the carbon tax.

For those who don't know their history, our friends in Australia tried this. They rolled out a carbon tax, that was very unpopular, and had to roll it back because they didn't do their homework ahead of time.

So what I would encourage this government to do is to think very long and hard about accepting this amendment, making your carbon tax truly revenue neutral. If you do that, the closer you get to that, I'm certainly much more inclined to support a carbon tax that is well and truly revenue neutral.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to the amendment put forward by my hon. colleague in the third party to substitute the following:

The revenue from the carbon levy may only be used to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions.

Now, this amendment would limit the revenue from the carbon tax, which may be better used, and ensure a somewhat better revenue management structure compared to what is currently in the bill. Let me be perfectly clear, Madam Chair, that this is the wrong tax at the wrong time. But what this amendment will do is that it will eliminate the creation of the giant green slush fund that the current bill tries to create. The amendment will make this huge tax that the NDP has seen fit to impose on all Albertans marginally less egregious in the long run.

Currently the wording under section 3(2)(a) is extremely vague. What exactly does – I hope that you write this down because I'm truly looking for an answer – “initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases” mean? It really could mean anything, and therein lies the problem. It could mean money going to the NDP's friends to study how to mitigate carbon. It could mean sending money to the anti oil sands Pembina Institute for studies of such. It could mean hundreds of millions of dollars spent on outreach projects dreamed up by the minister's college pals at Greenpeace. Really, we have no idea what the NDP has planned for this.

Madam Chair, this leaves the NDP in charge of a vague, brand new, billion-dollar fund with no accountability. And that in the hands of any government is very, very scary. “Trust us; we're the government,” right? Yeah.

Madam Chair, we've seen this with Bill 6 and now with Bill 20. The NDP fails to consult. It failed to consult farmers on Bill 6, and it failed to consult anyone on the carbon tax. You may have done the legwork before, a bit, but when the bill actually came out, you didn't put it back to the people to consult. If you did, that's sort of a breach of privilege because we just recently saw this, so I'd have some concerns there as well.

You didn't even consult your own Finance department to come up with an economic impact study on this tax. So it's pretty clear, Madam Chair, that this NDP government will do what they want, without consulting anyone, whenever they want. Leaving this vague wording in the bill just gives the NDP further wiggle room to spend the money on anything that could be related to carbon emissions, absolutely anything. This is mind boggling. This is ridiculous, unworkable, wasteful government programs that we might see come down the pipe. No accountability. This amendment that has been proposed would prevent the NDP from using any of these new revenues to come up with ridiculous, unworkable schemes with carbon tax money. Let's be clear. Let's be honest. Let's be straightforward. That's what Albertans want to hear.

Instead, that money will be used for rebates to consumers, businesses, and communities that are hit hard and for tax credits that might offset some of the damage that this tax will do to the entire economy. This amendment would put money back in the pockets of Albertans.

Now, of course, we in the Wildrose have long maintained that lower income families will be hurt most by this tax. The rebate will not fix that scenario. They're the ones who wince at the gas pumps already right now. We talked about this earlier today. That extra $10 increase for one bus pass this year has a significant impact on families. They're the ones who worry about their busing fees, and the NDP refuses to believe this. However, this amendment will lead to more money in poor families' pockets and less money in creating bureaucracy, creating red tape, and creating new government programs.

Unfortunately, what this amendment cannot do is to undo all the economic damage imposed by implementing a $3 billion tax grab during a recession which has already caused many in Alberta to lose their jobs and their sources of income. I believe there's more to come once this is implemented. As I've said before and I'll say again: this is the wrong tax at the wrong time, Madam Chair.

As the Alberta NDP has noted, Alberta is not the only place with a proposed carbon tax. B.C. has a carbon tax, as we all know. However, in a comparison between the two provinces B.C.'s tax is slightly easier to stomach because it does not allow for the creation of a massive government boondoggle with the carbon tax revenue. Now, why might this be? Well, first of all, B.C.'s carbon tax also only pulls about $1 billion out of their economy, even with a bigger population, where ours will pull out closer to $3 billion. Madam Chair, the part that is related to this amendment is the way they set theirs up to strictly guard against it being used to fund more government spending. That's extremely important not only to myself and my colleagues but to Albertans.

Now, this is probably because British Columbians had quite a lot of experience with NDP-funded government boondoggles back when the NDP was in power, in the 1990s. Any British Columbian could go on at great length about the waste and mismanagement that the B.C. NDP imposed on that province. It is no wonder that British Columbians sent them back to the political wilderness for a period that is now just over 15 years. And 18 years from now we will be saying the same thing.

One of the B.C. NDP's worst boondoggles was the fast ferries project. The B.C. NDP decided to speed up the crossing to and from Vancouver Island. In the process they managed to build new ships that were double the cost, years overdue, and were so unreliable and difficult to load with vehicles that any gains made by a faster crossing were negated. Even an NDP government minister called the ferries a failed experiment. We can stop this before you have to come back and admit to the failed experiment. What this B.C. NDP minister neglected to add was that the NDP's risky experiment had cost the taxpayers of B.C. literally hundreds of millions of dollars. Just think of all the other wonderful programming that we could finance with that kind of money.

Alberta is facing a $10.4 billion deficit right now thanks to the NDP government. What Alberta does not have the money to do is to create a green slush fund that will go into funding risky NDP experiments. I don't want to see my province in that state, Madam Chair. We've seen how the NDP experiments end in other provinces right across this country: millions of dollars wasted, stuff that doesn't work, cost overruns, work delays. I could go on and on and on.

This amendment will ensure that money from the ill-conceived, ill-thought-out, and ill-timed carbon tax will at least make its way back to Albertans in some way, shape, or form and not to the government or those with a so-called NDP mindset or world view. This will not make the tax good, as has been documented extensively by our members here in the Official Opposition. Imposing a regressive $3 billion carbon tax during a recession is one of the most foolish things anyone could do right now. This amendment is a good amendment in that it could at least protect taxpayers from the fast ferries, like the B.C. NDP's boondoggle, using carbon tax money. We may save Albertans one NDP misstep with this amendment, and that's what the goal of this amendment is.

Madam Chair, I support this amendment. I urge all members in the House to support this amendment. Let's make this the best this scenario could possibly be. It's okay to accept an amendment in this House from a nongovernment member. It's a good amendment. I certainly think this side of the House is likely in agreement with this amendment, so you would have the support there.

This is a very damaging tax in front of us, that hasn't had any studies. There have been no economic impact studies. It's going to be really hard for the government members and all members of this House to lend a shoulder to cry on to our constituents, Madam Chair, when they're not going to be able to afford to live in Alberta, and that's for the ones that choose to stay. I really hope people do. I really hope that Albertans stay here and hold on and stand up and have their voices heard. I hope that representatives are listening to their constituents as we were all elected to do, as we all promised to do when we got elected. The constituents in Airdrie are certainly telling me: "We do not want this carbon tax. We cannot afford this carbon tax. It will hurt us extensively. Here's exactly how this is going to impact my company, my industry. My employer has already said that this is what's coming down the line, so expect some cutbacks."

This is very, very dangerous, and perhaps with this amendment to make it revenue neutral, we can achieve both goals of being responsible for our environment and being responsible to the people that live in this province. I urge all members of this House to read it, to ask questions, to maybe answer some questions. I mean, I certainly have some concerns about the direction of the carbon tax funds. Where are these going? We don't know.

We know that the NDP government is an ideological government. Right across this country they have played games with taxpayer dollars, have failed over and over and over again, and now we have this problem here. Maybe, Madam Chair, this NDP government is just a little bit better than the other ones. Maybe they're a little bit better. [interjections]

You know, some on the government side say that they don't support the Leap Manifesto, that was passed by their party. Some. Some may say that only two of their members may have actually spoken out against it publically when they had the opportunity in front of their members. [interjections] Some may say that it's a little bit — you can see why I have issues trusting this government, Madam Chair, and trusting that this government will actually use the carbon tax dollars for the greater good . . .

The Chair: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Airdrie has the floor, please.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair.

I was just saying that it's hard to trust a government that passed the Leap Manifesto, which very clearly goes against the economic driving force in this province, yet this bill says: "Don't worry. We're the government; trust us. We're going to do great things with these dollars, with these hard-earned dollars. It's okay if some jobs are lost. It's okay if some people take pay cuts, you know. Don't worry. We're going to be really responsible with this, but we're not going to tell you what we're going to do with this."

This amendment offers an opportunity for the $3 billion to not only offset the carbon footprint but to not harm the people as much as it would without an amendment like this. It's extremely important, when we create pieces of legislation, that we thoughtfully debate, and this is what this is about. This is about me trying to change your mind, you trying to change my mind. I haven't heard anything other than a very one-sided argument from the NDP government, which doesn't involve any impact on the people that it absolutely will impact.

I have a hard time understanding why we can't achieve both goals, why we can't be proper stewards of our environment and proper stewards of the taxpayer purse. I just don't understand why we can't do both. This amendment offers that opportunity to make this bill a little less worse than it is but to come to a middle ground. I kind of think that's what our constituents would say to us, too; don't you think? Oh, wait. They have. "Find a middle ground. Work with the government. We should work together. We should get things done for the betterment of people."

Madam Chair, I feel like this government just doesn't care. They don't care about the constituents of mine in Airdrie. Airdrie feels like this government just doesn't care. They are really hurt by the implications of this carbon tax. Just today I was messaging with a friend of mine who works at a trucking company, which has gone very, very lean right now already. They're at barebones staff. She said, "We are just calculating the impacts of this carbon tax, and I'm scared. I am the only administrative staff left, and I may not have a job in 2017." I'm not quite sure who else is hiring at this point. Coupled with so many ideological policies from this government, there are not very many avenues to go.

This amendment offers the opportunity to make this bill just a little less worse. Until this government can show an economic impact study on the price of this carbon tax, I really feel that this should be put on hold. This government has no evidence of the impact that it will have on people, that it will have on the economy. It is irresponsible of any government to do something so significant but fail to produce any evidence.

I am not fearmongering, Madam Chair, like the NDP government claims this side to be. You hear that. They don't know what else to do because they can't produce any evidence on the impact of this carbon tax on the people, so they're scared. I think they're going to be a little bit upset when their constituents start talking to them and they can actually hear them. They will understand the impact on people's lives, people's families, people's children, and the generations to come. I am very concerned.

I would actually encourage the government to let this House know what their constituents have been saying about the economic impact on their lives. That is the side of the conversation that this government has yet to answer ever, and it's so disheartening. Like I said earlier, Madam Chair, this NDP government was perceived to be the government that really, truly cared about people in all ways, shapes, and forms, and this is the kind of bill that goes against all of that.

Things are tight. Budgets are tight. I don't know if you know what it's like to barely make ends meet and know what an extra $20, $50, $100 is, know what an extra $1,000, $2,000 is, what kind of impact that has on your yearly budget. You will never catch up. You will never make ends meet. There are many people in those situations here today that are getting worse because this mess isn't stopping. This train wreck appears to have no end.

Let's throw Albertans a bone. Let's make this a revenue-neutral tax. This is extremely important to consider. Think about it, listen – I don't know – maybe open your minds because this is very serious stuff. We cannot be doing experiments on our province.

I urge all members of this House . . .

The Chair: I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do want to get some things straight here. Some hon. members introduced amendments, and I think there are some misconceptions about what's going on here. When we look at this amendment, it says: "The revenue from the carbon levy may only be used" for certain means. What this does is that it fundamentally changes what we are trying to do with this bill. This bill is something that has come out of a report, that has been through extensive consultation processes, including over 25,000 submissions, over 920 people attending public open houses, and over 535 submissions from NGOs and industry. These ideas were all compiled and boiled down by renowned economists like Andrew Leach, people from the industry like Gordon Lambert, and people that have great economic expertise like Linda Coady.

When we look at this, Madam Chair, we can say that the plan that's presented here and the way in which it's being implemented is actually very tangible and very core to a very strong message. It's a very strong bill that's going to be able to accomplish a lot of things. I think what this amendment does is that it really takes away from this made-in-Alberta solution. It really takes away from all the very hard work that the climate leadership panel had generated with the report, and it takes away from the revenue recycling that we're going to be seeing being done through the existing programs that are in the bill.

We know that we're going to be creating over 3,000 jobs by investments of over $6.2 billion in the economy. Madam Chair, $3.4 billion of that is going to be for large-scale renewable energy resources, bioenergy and technologies; $2.2 billion of that is going to be for green infrastructure like transit opportunities across the province; and $645 million of that money is going to be for energy efficiency corporations over the next five years.

When we look at all these things as a whole and the revenue recycling that's going in, this amendment would really take away from our ability to do that, take away from the government's ability to really invest in the economy and create those 3,000 jobs we're talking about for Albertans. We're talking about something that really fundamentally changes how we're approaching the issue, how we're approaching climate change and using the levy as a way to diversify our economy, as a way to move forward in a meaningful way on climate change in a thoughtful and carefully thought-out way that we see. There were experts from the economy, there were experts from industry, there were experts from NGOs. Madam Chair, there was quite a significant amount of consultation and development that went into this legislation. There was quite a significant amount of consultation.

When we look at all these things together, we say that absolutely we agree with, for example, Canada's Ecofiscal Commission, who uses the term "revenue recycling" quite extensively because we know that the term "revenue recycling" really does mean that we are spending that money back into Alberta's economy. That's the number one thing we want to talk about when we speak about the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. It's that this money that we are collecting from the levy is absolutely going to be spent into our economy. It's going to develop our environment, it's going to develop our industry, and it's going to develop and work with our partners. That's why we have endorsements from people like the concrete associations and endorsements from people like Jack Mintz, who are talking about how a carbon levy, when you're looking at large investments in Alberta, is absolutely something that you want because it's a fixed price that we know about going forward in the future.

Madam Chair, what this amendment would do is take away a lot of those assurances. What this amendment would do is take away a lot of the ability for us to plan for the long term as a government, to ensure that there are these reliable, renewable technologies being invested in, to ensure that we are supporting Albertans by doing things like investing in the energy efficiency corporation. It would take away from our ability to ensure that we are rebating to two-thirds of Albertans. Sixty per cent will be receiving a full or greater than full rebate, and up to 66 per cent of people will be receiving a partial rebate.

Madam Chair, it's very important that we are able to do all these investments and we are able to do all these things to help Albertans across the board in a very dynamic manner as we move forward with this legislation and move forward with things like working on performance standards and whatnot. What this amendment does is take away government's ability to do that. I think that would be detrimental to all members of this House if we took away the ability to invest in our economy and took away the ability to really invest in diversification because, again, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act is absolutely something that's there to help improve Alberta's climate leadership and improve on Alberta's reputation internationally and get our product to market. But none of that's going to do anything for us if we can't use those funds to then invest into our economy.

Madam Chair, those investments are what is going to create a green market, a green economy, and green energy technologies that we can move forward with as we move forward with climate leadership. I think it's really important that we keep all these things in mind and we definitely shape the conversation and say that this amendment really does fundamentally change what the climate leadership plan would be able to accomplish. This amendment would take fundamentally away from what the climate leadership plan would be able to do with investments, would be able to do with the energy efficiency corporation, would take away from what the government would be able to do to help Albertans' lives, to help Alberta's reputation internationally, to help Albertans reduce their emissions and improve their health. What we're talking about here, quite frankly, is that this amendment is short-sighted and that we cannot move forward on the energy efficiency programs and on the green renewables programs that Albertans, frankly, want.

This is really important because if members across the way vote for this amendment, then what we're going to see is that the ability of the government to achieve what we have set out to do, which has been named internationally as a leader in climate change across the world – it's been referenced by the President of the United States of America. It's been referenced by the Prime Minister here in Canada. What this amendment would do would be to take away from all that hard work that's been done. It would take away from all the amazing opportunities, the awards that the government has received for social policy. It would take away from all these things. I know members across the way wouldn't want to impede the ability to invest in our economy and to create those diversified markets because we understand that we have to get off the revenue roller coaster of the traditional revenue streams.

I do want to boil it down to this. The program that the Climate Leadership Implementation Act has already does address all these issues through things like revenue recycling, diversifying the economy through investments, the Alberta energy efficiency corporation. All these things taken together cannot really be possible with the amendment. I think the amendment doesn't necessarily address what this bill is actually trying to do, and for that reason, Madam Chair, I really do implore and I urge all my hon. colleagues from both sides of the aisle to please vote this down so that we can go forward with the great climate leadership programming that we're going to be rolling out this summer.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's certainly a challenge to speak after the Member for Edmonton-South West, just the sheer youthful energy of his address, not to mention the words per minute that would rival any auctioneer at Alberta's many auction marts. I would like to thank him for his remarks, and I do appreciate his passion on the subject.

Madam Chair, if you would allow me just a minute or two, I would like to just say that I note that the Premier has arrived this evening, and I know that she spent . . . [interjections] I don't want to get two points of order in one day.

An Hon. Member: Go for four.

Dr. Starke: Go for four.

I do just want to say on behalf of the members of our party – I think I speak on behalf of all Albertans – that I know that she was in Fort McMurray earlier today, and I just want to thank her on behalf of all Albertans for her leadership. I said this, Madam Premier, in estimates, where, of course, you had to be absent. The Deputy Premier sat in very admirably on your behalf. Both yourself and the Leader of the Official Opposition have shown tremendous grace under fire, and I do appreciate that leadership. I know from some degree of personal experience, although I wasn't nearly as directly involved three years ago during the southern Alberta floods where, you know, Albertans truly did face another great crisis, that we can all be proud of all Albertans for the efforts that they made and the contributions from all Albertans. I thank you, Premier.

Madam Chair, I do want to move on to the discussion on the amendment here this evening, and I just want to make a couple of things very clear from the outset. I've not yet had the opportunity to speak on Bill 20, and it seems that when we make addresses on this particular issue, it has now become necessary to make a certain amount of a disclaimer statement or some sort of mea culpa statement at the beginning of our address. I want to say from the outset that as a person who has been involved very much in a scientific profession over the course of my career, I've looked at the evidence, and I believe that climate change is real. I think the scientific evidence is quite compelling in that direction.

You know, even when sometimes there's conflicting scientific evidence, I look at evidence from my own career, if I can beg the indulgence of the Assembly to hear one more boring veterinarian story. Where I see it, actually, which is kind of interesting, is that when I was in veterinary school in the late '70s, early '80s, one of the things that we were told quite frequently – believe it or not, it was on the subject of parasitology – was that in western Canada, because of our climate, there was a whole long list of parasites that we really didn't have to worry about because no self-respecting parasite would live in our climate because it was simply too cold and too dry and it just did not support the presence of many parasites. So there was a long list of diseases that we were told that we would likely never encounter, never experience, during the course of our professional careers if we practised somewhere in the prairies of Alberta. That's where I spent my entire veterinary career, in Lloydminster.

But what I actually found in the course of 1983 to 2011 was a difference in the types of parasites and the distribution and the range of the parasites that we saw. I'll use one simple example, the simple dog flea. Now, fleas are a very common parasite, but they are not common in western Canada, or at least they didn't use to be common in western Canada. There was a time in the mid-80s where the only fleas I ever saw on a patient were on the two miserable chihuahuas that came every year to Lloydminster with the midway that came to the Lloydminster fair, and for one reason or another the lady from Texas that owned these two miserable chihuahuas brought them to see me every year. After they tried to bite me, I would have to pick the fleas off these two dogs. That wasn't necessarily really pleasant, but the owner came and sought veterinary assistance, so I provided that.

What's interesting is that that was the only patient at that time that I can ever remember seeing fleas on. We were told in school: "You won't see fleas in western Canada. You'll see them maybe in the lower mainland, but you won't see them in western Canada." Lo and behold, over the course of 30 years in veterinary practice we started seeing dogs with fleas. We saw it in farm dogs mostly, and we'd usually only see it in the late summer – August, September, maybe into October – and then once the first killing frost came, the fleas were gone. Then over time we saw more and more fleas. We saw it year-round. We saw it not just in farm dogs; we saw it in domestic indoor dogs. It's a concern because, of course, fleas cause a great deal of irritation and a lot of skin, dermatology problems. You know, I saw that.

It wasn't just fleas. There were a number of other things, but it was primarily in the field of parasitology. Given that parasites are very specific in terms of what kind of climatic conditions they can survive in and that I saw in a span of 28 years a difference in the parasites I was seeing, just from that, to me, at least from a veterinarian's standpoint, from a simple cow doctor from Lloydminster, climate change was something real.

That's my perspective on climate change. You know, I would really appreciate it if members during the course of this debate don't ever say that I doubt the science of climate change or anything like that.

The second part, of course, of the equation is anthropogenic climate change. What effect is man having on the overall climate change effect? Madam Chair, I'll suffice to say on that matter that, quite frankly, it is difficult to perhaps know exactly what the effects are. That exact answer probably won't be known until all of us are gone from this Earth. But the truth of the matter is that we can't afford to make the mistake that we might be wrong. What I mean by that is that we cannot afford to not take action because the consequences of doing that in case we're wrong are catastrophic. It behooves us as occupiers of this planet to take care of the planet.

You know, Madam Speaker, you would certainly remember this. In the '80s our greatest threat was the tensions at the conclusion or the waning years of the Cold War. There were days that, literally, I would go to bed wondering if we would wake up only to find that the big one had started. There was so much tension between the United States and the Soviet Union in the days of Yuri Andropov and Ronald Reagan, and we wondered if that would be what finally put an end to our Earth. Thankfully, that never happened, and we backed away from midnight on the doomsday clock.

But now a new threat is on our planet. Quite frankly, that threat is not a global war threat. I believe that that has waned somewhat. I think the greatest threat that our planet as a whole faces right now is an environmental threat. We aren't going to bomb ourselves off this planet; we're going to poison the planet to a point that the planet will no longer be habitable. So it does behoove us all to take the kinds of measures that we can that will make a difference, to try to go about making a difference in climate change. I'm not against the idea of trying to do something positive to address climate change. You know? This is perhaps where the greatest divergence is: what can you do, what is the most effective way to do it, and what is a way to do it that will work?

Now, the government has presented a plan. This is clearly a plan that, you know, came about as a result of the Leach report, which really was a well-done overall report. Lots of consultation, lots of input, certainly.

In terms of the four major tenets we can debate on some of them. Certainly, one that I have absolutely no debate on is to reduce the production and venting of methane. Methane is 27 times more potent a greenhouse gas than carbon dioxide. Quite frankly, we have to address issues like flaring, like venting. We are a petroleum producer. Quite frankly, I think we almost have to put more of an emphasis on methane reduction, especially as it relates to our oil and gas production in this province. I believe that that would make a huge difference in terms of our contribution overall to greenhouse gases. I know that people in my constituency that work in the oil and gas industry are frustrated that we are not doing more about the venting of waste gases.

You know, we got rid of flaring – I get that, and I understand that – but replacing flaring with venting is . . .

An Hon. Member: It would make it worse.

Dr. Starke: Well, in many ways you're absolutely right. In fact, our local gas utility in the county of Vermilion River won an ecological award for devising a system whereby vent gases could be collected and actually are used to provide heating, natural gas, to a hamlet in my constituency. Now, it's a very small hamlet, not a large population. But that was something that they did, and, you know, clearly, they feel that that's something that could and should be done on a larger scale. I'm pleased with that aspect of it.

This amendment specifically addresses the revenue neutrality. This is something that is talked about early in the budget, early in the government's fiscal plan. On page 6 there's a breakdown of the carbon levy. I'll call it a levy because that's what it says here. You know, we can call it whatever we want. That levy is scheduled to collect $8.7 billion in net revenue. Now, I will note and I have to confess that I find it a little bit amusing that the adjustment in the small-business tax from 3 to 2 per cent is taken out against the levy. I find that rather interesting because, really, how that all of a sudden became part of the overall climate leadership plan, I'm not entirely certain.

The other thing I'll just say parenthetically that I find curious and interesting is that when the small-business tax was cut from 3 to 2 per cent, the government is very proud of saying that that is a 33 per cent tax cut, which, you know, certainly it is. But when you increase corporate taxes from 10 to 12 per cent, which is a 20 per cent increase, you call that a 2 per cent increase. [interjections] No, I'm not going to suggest anything about the relative difficulty of mathematics. That can get us into trouble.

When you increase the corporate tax from 10 to 12 per cent, that's not a 2 per cent increase; that's a 12 per cent increase.

Mr. MacIntyre: Twenty.

15 per cent, that's not a 5 per cent increase; that's a 50 per cent increase. Let's make sure that when we're talking about these things, we get the math the same way both directions. It may be attractive to talk about a 33 per cent tax cut. I understand that, and that math is quite correct. But if you're going to talk about a 33 per cent tax cut, you'd better talk about a 20 per cent tax increase, because that's what it is.

As we move in to the breakdown on the climate leadership plan, I note that 71 per cent of the spending on the $8.7 billion that's going to be collected over the next five years goes into very vague and very undefined spending like Green Infrastructure (Capital). Some $3.4 billion over the next five years is going into something called Other Investment. Madam Chair, that, quite frankly, is not good enough for Albertans. That level of detail is not good enough.

You know, $3.4 billion here is very close to the amount – if you go to page 50 of this document, all of the spending on all health care facilities capital for the next five years in the province is a total of $3.473 billion. When I tell constituents that something called Other Investment is going to have the same amount of spending over the next five years, funded through the carbon levy, as all of the health care facilities in the province for the next five years, people are angry. If nothing else, they want to know what exactly is going to be bought with this Other Investment.

The list of capital projects in the capital plan is very well laid out on page 50, all of the different community hospitals and clinics and that sort of thing. It's well laid out, yet Other Investment is all we get. Other Investment. Those are the kinds of, if you want, vagaries that create a great deal of concern. That is why, as my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays has moved, we believe that instead of placing all of these funds and all of this money into the hands of the government when it has been so poorly laid out, so poorly characterized, it is important that this levy be truly revenue neutral, as it has been in British Columbia. It has allowed for meaningful reductions in their consumption of fossil fuels. That surely must be the goal of this government.

I would urge members, therefore, to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A1?

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, Madam Chair, I rise tonight on behalf of the wonderful people of the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to speak in favour of this amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-South East although I am going to bring up one issue that I do have with it. But I'm willing to overlook this one issue that I do have with it. If we just read briefly the amendment:

the revenue from the carbon levy may only be used to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions.

I take issue with the issue of tax credits, Madam Chair. Generally speaking, tax credits only get applied against profit for businesses. As you know, at least as I hope all the hon. members know, profit is going to be scarce this year and next year and probably the year after that. So offering a tax credit to a company that actually can't use that tax credit because, frankly, they have no profit anyway is really a moot point to them. It's not that attractive, and it's not going to accomplish anything for those small and medium-sized enterprises. So that's the issue that I have with tax credits as being any form of incentive for anything to do with this particular amendment.

Now, if we all think back to when this government rolled out their first discussions, I'll say, on their climate leadership plan, they were using the term "revenue neutral," and it's been pointed out in this House on numerous occasions just how false that statement really was, that, in fact, there was nothing revenue neutral about it. I find it kind of interesting that the hon. member who was speaking earlier here so passionately was saying that this amendment was short sighted.

This amendment is an attempt to take this bill and move it as close as can be had toward being revenue neutral. It can't get this bill all the way there because, really, frankly, if you read the bill through and you have a look at it from the point of view of, say, a chartered management accountant that might look at it – I've talked to some of the stakeholders out there in industry that have read through this bill. Their financial experts have read through it, and we've talked about it at length. Frankly, in my opinion and in their opinion there isn't any way to get this bill all the way towards revenue neutrality without actually gutting it completely, just taking it from the title and reworking the whole thing, you know, kind of like a car that's just beyond repair: just jack up the horn and put a new car under it.

This amendment tries to get us there, towards revenue neutrality. Now, the hon. member that was speaking so passionately earlier was talking about how short sighted this amendment was, yet there have been members on the opposite side, ministers on the opposite side that are pointing to B.C. and their carbon tax as something laudable. The reason it's laudable is because it is revenue neutral. I don't quite understand why the hon. member would be so passionate in calling this amendment short sighted when it's trying to get this bill towards revenue neutrality, which is what we were told we were going to have at the very onset of this conversation many months ago.

Another issue that I have, which was raised already by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, is regarding the $3.4 billion on the Other list, that it is a big empty box with a $3.4 billion price tag on it. Unfortunately, the way things are going, this government can put anything in that box they want to once the legislation is passed.

You know, the good people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake are a little bit concerned that this government can put $3.4 billion earmarked towards a box named Other, but they can't seem to find a nickel for an urgently needed urgent care facility in Sylvan Lake. They're concerned about the health of Albertans, shutting down all these coal plants under the excuse, "Well, we're going to save hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of lives," but they can't find a nickel to put an urgent care facility in a community that's just about 22,000 people, a community that has 700,000 to 900,000 tourists coming through it every year.

This government claims that, you know, we're going to saddle Albertans with a multibillion-dollar carbon tax in the name of health. Frankly, that's rather hypocritical, in my opinion, Madam Chair, when we can't come up with – and the ask this year, by the way, for the urgent care committee in Sylvan Lake was $200,000. That was it, $200,000. Yet we've got a box marked Other that's going to get $3.4 billion. And this government is crying the blues to the good people of Sylvan Lake that they can't afford $200,000.

For goodness' sake, Madam Chair, this government spent $700,000 advertising the previous failed budget, the one they ended up having to turf after four months; another $700,000 advertising the climate action plan; and another $700,000 advertising this last budget. That's $2.1 million on propaganda, but they can't afford to give the good people of Sylvan Lake $200,000 for an urgently needed health facility, yet we've got this carbon tax in the name of health. Where exactly are your priorities? This does not compute. It does not compute.

Now, as I said, I support this amendment. And I want to also make it clear that our impassioned colleague across the way – and I'm sorry; I forgot what riding he's from . . .

Some Hon. Members: Edmonton-South West.

Mr. MacIntyre: Edmonton-South West.

. . . was going on and on and on at length about the climate action plan and how the climate action plan was some sort of an economic assessment. It reveals the hon. member's lack of understanding about what an economic assessment really looks like. The climate action plan is a high-level, almost philosophical document, and that's fine. There were a great deal of people that had a lot of submissions to the panel, but a lot of people making submissions to the panel does not mean that a lot of people's submissions got into the panel's report.

I should also point out that there are elements within the climate panel's report, that this government continues to say is the foundation of Bill 20, that this government is ignoring. Ignoring. For example, I have just a piece of it here on – here we go.

An Hon. Member: Do you want me to get IT?

Mr. MacIntyre: Well, we'll see how it goes first.

It says:

Without our proposed consumer credits in place, the average Alberta household would likely see additional costs of approximately $40/month in 2018, rising to $80/month in 2030 assuming increases. Energy efficiency incentives and financing can reduce consumer energy bills, and programs can be tailored for the distinct needs of low-income households. However, these programs will not provide a sufficient counteraction to the new costs imposed on Albertans. Because of this, we propose a consumer rebate to households in the bottom 60% of income which would be sufficient to offset the impact of carbon pricing on them, which we recommend to be provided via a twice-yearly consumer credit. We also recommend that the government examine means to similarly protect the most impacted small and medium-sized business through similar mechanisms.

It's interesting to note, Madam Chair, that we heard earlier from an hon. member across the aisle that these rebates to low-income families were actually only partial when the climate action panel clearly said that they need to fully offset the impact of the carbon tax. This government is not even following the advice of the experts that they tout repeatedly as being the authors of a report that is the backbone of Bill 20. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The climate action panel laid out a plan, but Bill 20 is not a plan other than a tax plan. That is all it is, a tax plan. Read the table of contents, read through that bill, and what do you see? Taxes, how to collect the taxes, how to apply the taxes, how to punish people who don't pay the taxes. On and on it goes, without any GHG mitigation strategy contained within it whatsoever. To adamantly claim repeatedly that somehow the climate action panel's report lies at the backbone of Bill 20 is a myth, and it's continually being perpetuated by people who either have not read it or don't understand what it has to say.

Mr. Strankman: Can't connect the dots.

Mr. MacIntyre: Cannot connect the dots. Good one.

In addition, we had this government the other day telling Albertans that indirect costs as a result of the carbon tax – and please correct me if I'm wrong – were, I believe, between $75 and $100 a year. Well, news flash: the climate action panel said that $40 to $80 a month – $40 to $80 a month – was going to be the impact.

In addition to that, even if the government's numbers are correct – they are not. But let's just assume for a moment that their $100 a year in indirect costs is a correct figure. Well, let's just look at that. I believe the city of Calgary has already released numbers – oh, it's got to be even a month ago already now – as to the increases in property taxes. Then we had a couple of school boards releasing numbers as to the increased cost of transportation, broken down on a per-student basis. Just those two figures, Madam Chair, eat up that hundred bucks, and that doesn't include the indirect costs we are going to be facing for food and everything else that we consume, that we produce in this province.

Those figures of $50 or $75 or $100 per year as being the indirect costs to Albertans is another myth being perpetuated by a government that hasn't taken the time and refuses to take the time to actually do an economic impact assessment of the full impact of this carbon tax on every sector in our province and every demographic within our province. That is shameful, that is irresponsible, and it is intellectually lazy on the part of a government to do something like that to our people without going through the process of determining what it's actually going to cost us.

They claim they're going to pull in about $3 billion out of this thing. Well, we've got – what? – about a million families in this province. Just do the math. Do the math. It's a whole lot more than some $400 or $800 or even $1,000 per family. It's thousands of dollars.

In addition to that, there are what are called lost opportunity costs. Some of those who've taken maybe some basic economics over there understand what I'm talking about, lost opportunity costs. We are going to have some other social costs that are going to be a result of this such as raised unemployment levels. We already tabled in this House two letters from school boards who informed the Minister of Education clearly – clearly – that the carbon tax is going to impact the transportation and facility costs to such an extent that it's going to impact the learning environment in the classroom through reduced staffing levels.

The carbon tax has now been connected to job loss directly, something that this government continues to claim will not happen. They are the great savior of front-line workers. They are the bastion of teachers and nurses, yet here we have a carbon tax from this government clearly impacting front-line workers. Educational assistants in the classrooms are going to be suffering job loss or cutbacks in hours because the school boards aren't going to have the money. They're instead paying carbon tax back to this government. It's shameful.

This amendment, frankly, in my opinion, doesn't go far enough, and I'm not sure that any single amendment possibly could improve this bill to the point that it needs to be improved. The best improvement for Bill 20 would be to send it to the shredder, frankly, but of course that isn't going to happen. This government has an agenda, and they intend on following through with that agenda roughshod over the people of Alberta whether they want this thing or not.

I am mindful of a poll recently taken. Granted, it was an online poll. Nevertheless, it was a poll, and this government hasn't conducted one of their own as an independent poll to counter it or refute it. That poll indicated that well over 60 per cent – I believe it was 68 per cent; correct me if I'm wrong – of Albertans are not in favour of a carbon tax. They're not in favour of a provincial sales tax by some other name. Albertans never have been. It's, I think, part of our DNA to be tax averse. However, here we are, debating this thing.

In short, Madam Chair, I support the hon. member's amendment. I would hope that all members will support this as we attempt through amendments to make some kind of improvement to this terrible bill, and I will be voting in favour of this amendment.

I thank you for the time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. It gives me honour, too, to speak to this amendment, and I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-South East for the opportunity to speak to a positive amendment, that we have in front of us. I believe that a majority of the Chamber should be supporting a positive move to this amendment. I think we can all agree that this is a very important piece of legislation and it helps in many ways to make the lives of Albertans better. That's why we're here, to represent our constituents. That's why they've placed us in this Chamber and indeed in this room.

Unfortunately, this amendment is making our lives better only by reducing the harm of the legislation that it amends. What I'm saying is that this amendment only makes Bill 20 a little easier to swallow. There's a cartoon that's gone around that I've seen. It's kind of an interesting adaptation of what I'm talking about. There are two characters in the cartoon holding the piece of legislation. One says, "I don't think I can swallow this piece of legislation," and the other cartoon character says: "Well, you don't have to. It's a suppository."

Even amended this way, Madam Chair, Bill 20 places a burden on our economy and on Albertan families and especially on the most vulnerable people in our communities. This amendment strives to make it less burdensome. This amendment reduces the sting a little bit by enforcing a measure of revenue neutrality on a carbon tax. This ensures that the revenues collected from this new general tax are all returned to taxpayers and especially to those hardest hit and least able to afford it. This revenue will be returned, not simply recycled, a fancy, misleading way to say that it's spent. It will be returned to families struggling to make ends meet in this unfavorable economic environment that Albertans are now facing. It will be returned to charities seeing their operating costs soar. It will be returned to small businesses that want to help diversify our economy but increasingly can only barely stay afloat.

This bill is bringing in the wrong tax at the wrong time. If this amendment is passed, this will still be the wrong tax at the wrong time. A good friend of mine says that it is never the right time to do the wrong thing. If this is the only change we can make to this legislation, Madam Chair, at least it's a change for the better.

This carbon tax is only going to make things worse for Albertan families and businesses, punishing them while they're already struggling with increased costs of living and operating in our province. It will increase those costs of living more. The amendment will ensure that there is more relief to those who will need it most by dedicating all of the revenue collected to tax rebates and credits instead of just some of it. Previous speakers, Madam Chair, have efficiently and effectively described the methodology, how those inaccuracies will be affected.

This has been a pattern of the government, a consistent pattern to make things, in many Albertans' minds, worse, worse for Alberta families, worse for Alberta businesses, worse for Alberta communities, and in many cases worse for Alberta charities. The members opposite can rightly say that they have no control over the global price of oil or the intricate workings of the global economy, but no one has ever made the argument that they do. What this government does have control over is the legislation that they propose here in this House and, with that, the regulations that they implement outside of this Chamber. There are those with tools at their disposal. This is where they have been making things worse and worse for all Albertans during an economic downturn. This amendment makes one of their policy proposals slightly less harmful.

I don't know whether it should be swallowed or used as a suppository, but they've done things to make things a lot worse already. The scheduled minimum wage hikes are making it even harder for businesses to make ends meet and for students and low-skill workers to find employment, even temporary or part-time. Corporate tax hikes are being passed on to employees, regular, hard-working Albertans, through wage stagnation or cuts, hiring freezes or layoffs. Increased tax and regulation costs to businesses are being passed on to consumers as well through increased prices on the goods that we buy. The hike in fuel taxes has everyone paying more at the pump.

Albertans would have to pay more and more all the time because of this government at a time when they simply can least afford it. Those least able to afford these new costs have to face them every day and exceedingly more, with the high levels of unemployment that we have in the province, Madam Chair. This bill threatens to increase costs on everything. It's making things worse, which, frankly, at this point is really no surprise for legislation coming from this government. Given this, the very least we can do here together is to let Albertan families and businesses know that their hard-earned money collected from them under this new tax will go back completely and unequivocally to Albertans and not to unaccountable initiatives, programs, and projects designated as Other.

This amendment ensures that all the revenue, not just some, is used to fund tax rebates or tax credits. It will ease the burden of the tax on everyday Albertans, the people we're supposed to be looking out for when and while we sit and work in this Chamber. This amendment still leaves the government with the ability and the flexibility to decide who receives a release from the tax. It ensures that more relief can be offered to more people or that those that need it most can receive even more than what the government had originally proposed. It simply removes the ability to divert revenues to new projects and initiatives that the friends and donors of the members opposite might prefer; in other words, Madam Chair, picking winners and losers. The government can't spend this revenue. It will be forced to focus on providing relief to the victims of this legislation – again I repeat: charities, families, school boards, greenhouses, small businesses – instead of giving unneeded subsidies to its special interests and corporate friends.

Let me again be crystal clear, Madam Chair. Bill 20 is meant to implement a tax that's wrong for Alberta at the worst time for Albertans. This amendment goes a little way to making it a little less harmful, and I hope and truly expect that members of the Assembly will support this amendment. It refocuses this tax on making the lives of all Albertans a little better, especially those who need the greatest help.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this amendment, amendment A1, to the Climate Leadership Implementation Act.

Madam Chair, I think that it's become pretty obvious that from our perspective on this side of the House we believe that this is a bad piece of legislation, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, that this is bad because it is filled with clauses and sections that will tax an already weak economy and place burdens on consumers and businesses and taxpayers and families across this province, because the taxes through a carbon tax on fuel, et cetera, make the price on everything more expensive.

While there's no way that we can support this carbon tax and this piece of legislation, I guess it is our duty to try and ensure that maybe we as the opposition can come together, convince the government to try to make this piece of legislation at least a little better.

I think back to a few weeks ago, when the government tried to place what I would characterize as a hostile amendment before this House and the hon. member down the way from me here had an unfortunate run-in with the Speaker and when this whole House was really not in a very good mood as a result of this hostile amendment. I would not want the government to consider this a hostile amendment. As a matter of fact, I believe that this amendment is a positive amendment, a friendly amendment, that this amendment actually attempts to take a piece of legislation that, from our perspective, is not positive and tries to make it a little better.

We would argue that any revenues that come from this carbon tax should be turned back towards Albertans, that it should be relatively neutral to the province and to the taxpayers and to the citizens of this great province. Taxing Albertans on the essentials of life simply to pad a government's slush fund is unacceptable, especially during a recession. We know that in this recession the citizens of Alberta need as much income in their pockets as possible.

I've stood up in this Assembly many times in the last few weeks explaining to the government just how significantly hard this recession has been on the citizens of Drayton Valley and Devon and in my constituency, the number of businesses that have shut down and have closed down, that we need at this time, rather than taking money out of the pockets of businesses, rather than taking the profits away from business, rather than making it harder on communities to be able to provide the services to the people of this province, rather than making it harder on families to be able to find the money for their mortgages, for their rents, to instead allow the people of this province to maintain and to keep the profits of their labour and to maintain the income that they need to survive.

In this amendment it asks that the revenue from the carbon levy be used only to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses, and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax reductions. In other words, the money that is going to be coming in, that $8.7 billion in funds collected by the carbon tax over, I believe, something like five years, that money that's being pulled out of the pockets of businesses and communities and consumers, Madam Chair, should be turned back into the pockets of these individuals in a way that would allow them to cover the costs they will be facing because of this carbon tax.

If you make it a revenue-neutral tax, then the citizens of this province would have a different view of this carbon tax than what they are presently telling me, which is that if this was a revenue-neutral carbon tax, they wouldn't be as concerned about those schools. They wouldn't be concerned about the transportation costs and the heating costs that schools are going to be facing and how those school boards, that they have elected, are going to be able to deal with the costs of this carbon levy, this carbon tax. They would be less concerned about the fuel costs that they are going to face.

Madam Chair, I don't know if the people on the government benches, that tend to come from the cities, are as concerned about this as my rural constituents are. In a rural constituency, where there is no bus service, where travelling to Edmonton costs a significant amount of money, when you start piling on carbon taxes, 4.5 cents per litre coming up this January, when you start to place the kinds of taxes that we're going to be placing on diesel, that make it more difficult for the already struggling oil industry to travel across my constituency: these are serious concerns, Madam Chair.

We know that a truly revenue-neutral carbon levy, tax, and a Climate Leadership Implementation Act that is truly revenue neutral would probably have the support of the people of Alberta. Instead, we've heard so many of the hon. members talk about the increased costs that families are going to have. We've argued a little bit about what those costs are, but we know that at the end of the day they're going to be significant, especially in this time of recession. So we need to make sure that in this House we are seriously considering the costs that this tax and the Climate Leadership Implementation Act will place on the citizens of Alberta.

I was appreciative of hearing the hon. member in my caucus here talk about the lost opportunity costs and that idea that when you take money out of the equation and you spend it on one thing, there's a lost opportunity to have that money spent in another area of the economy. Rather than seeing it spent on teachers and aides and doctors and nurses, we're going to be seeing that this money is being placed into a general slush fund. Now, I don't know. That, I would think, would be of concern to the members across the way, but so far we haven't heard anything like that from their lips. We can see – well, at least for me; and I can speak only for me, but I think I can also speak for the members of the opposition – that the case of being able to try to maintain front-line workers in their positions is important.

And how we spend our money: we are going to have a $10.4 billion deficit this year. It is going to be, I believe, by 2019 somewhere around $60 billion. How are we going to be able to afford teachers and doctors and aides and nurses? Where is that money going to come from? You can only borrow so much. We know that this government has taken away the debt ceiling. Regardless of that, the economic facts are still there. You can only borrow so much money before it seriously begins to impact the economy of this province and the pocketbooks and the standard of living of the people of this province. If you want teachers in classrooms, if you want nurses in hospitals, if you don't want to see front-line cuts, then you'd better get control of your spending now, and you'd better make sure that the funds that are being accumulated by this government through revenues like the carbon tax are being spent wisely.

This amendment is asking us to ensure that the monies that we take in come back to businesses and communities and consumers in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions, which would make it revenue neutral and which would then minimize the negative effect of this carbon tax and this Climate Leadership Implementation Act.

Now, there may be on occasion a place for the government to use some of our tax revenue for seed money, but I believe that one of the differences between our side of the House and the government side is that we believe that money is best left in the pockets of businesses and of private citizens, that it's better there than in the pockets of the government and expecting the government to use those funds to build and grow an economy.

On this side of the House we believe that private investment is what is going to build the economy of this province, not government investment. While there may be a place for some government investment, I think that anybody that is fair, who looks at a fair history of this province, can see that it's been private investment that has always, always been the engine of the economy of this province. It's been the vehicle that has grown this province. It's been the hard work and the industriousness of Albertans and the wise choices they've made as businesses that have allowed them to invest their money and to create new technology that has grown this province.

Money that is left in the pockets of private Albertans, of private companies, will increase 10-fold the business climate and the investment climate in this province so that wealth is generated and wealth is created. I think that's a significant difference between how we view this province, how we see this province as being successful, and how a socialist, NDP point of view is in this province. I believe that we know and we have seen through the history of this province which has been better.

We just need to compare Saskatchewan to Alberta and the histories there. I think we can see, even though I believe that Saskatchewan is God's country and that Saskatchewan is the place of the greatest football team in the CFL, while there are many things of worth and of value from Saskatchewan, that one of the best choices we made in Alberta was diverting ourselves from the path of socialism towards that of private investment, private industry, capitalism, and a strong belief that that will grow a strong democracy.

Well, Madam Chair, we believe, then, that this amendment will make this bill a better bill and therefore this province a better province if this Legislative Assembly would choose to follow and vote in favour of this amendment. You know, I said that we believe that money left in the people's pockets for them to invest is better than giving it to the government to pick winners and losers. This green investment fund, that's going to have billions of dollars in it, is just a recipe for disaster.

Madam Chair, we can see that Albertans in private companies have invested their wealth into technology and into companies that have changed this province, where too often money left in the hands of bureaucrats within the government has simply left us with money that has been wasted and lost. Need we bring up for the members here the recollection of one entrepreneur who wanted the government to invest in Gainers and how that money was lost so very quickly? I'm sure that the members across the floor would support me on this idea that money that was invested by the government of the day into that individual and into that company was not in taxpayers' interest, was not within the interests of the citizens of Alberta, and should never have been done.

We can see, even if we go to the beginning of this province, Madam Chair, if we go all the way back to 1910, that there is a historical event that occurred in this province called the Alberta and Great Waterways Railway scandal. We can go back to one of the early Premiers of this province, a gentleman by the name of Alexander Cameron Rutherford. I think that those of you that have gone to the University of Alberta have heard of the Rutherford Library. We know that that name is a very prominent name in the history of this province. But Premier Alexander Cameron Rutherford was a Liberal. Now, I don't care if you're talking about a Progressive Conservative or a Liberal or even after 2019 the Premier of this province being Brian Jean of the Wildrose, okay? I don't care which political party is in power.

Some Hon. Members: Name.

Mr. Smith: Sorry. Sorry. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Conklin.

You know, really, it doesn't matter which political party you belong to. When a political party makes a mistake and starts to choose winners and losers and begins to invest in speculative practices, it's going to be a problem, Madam Chair.

What we've got with the Alexander Cameron Rutherford Liberals: they began to produce loan guarantees that exceeded the cost of the construction of the railway, loan guarantees that were never going to be able to be paid back, loan guarantees that had insufficient oversight. At the end of the day, because they had been so unwise in their investing, they fell as a government. This can be seen over and over again in Canadian history, and it is a lesson that we need to remember.

One of the earlier comments made by one of our opposition colleagues talked about the $3.4 billion Other Investment line in the budget and questioned whether or not that was a good thing to have. You know, we need to consider how the monies of this government are going to be spent. We need to ensure that they are not being put into just general slush funds to be used at the discretion of this government or any other government. That is a bad practice regardless of the political party that you belong to.

You know, it's probably important that we stop for a second to figure out what we actually mean by a slush fund, and that's what our concern is, that the monies that are being set aside from this carbon tax are going into this big puddle of money that's going to be spent as a slush fund, an account that's used to buy influence and power, a fund that's used to bankroll the pet programs of the party in power. Political parties of all stripes, at all levels, have often been accused of setting up slush funds.

You know, for example, we are coming up to the 150th birthday of Canada. We are going to be celebrating that. In May 2015 the Conservative government federally set aside money and created the Canada 150 community infrastructure program. It sounds like a great idea. This government of the Conservatives set aside $150 million for 1,800 communities across this country to have infrastructure projects built as a result of trying to celebrate the 150th anniversary of Canada. As they began to roll this program out, the opposition parties began to see that there were some problems. Number one was that the time to apply for this program was so short that many of the opposition constituencies did not seem to be able to get any kind of applications in to the program to be able to take advantage of that money.

Now, it was amazing that for some reason Conservative MPs didn't seem to have a problem. They had advance knowledge of this program, and their constituencies seemed to be able to be at an advantage over the opposition MPs'. You know, people were rightly skeptical of this program because they began to wonder why that was. That's the problem when you start to put out slush funds, monies that are supposedly targeted for certain programs but seem to have the ability to have strings attached and be used for the benefit of the government. Of course, that's one of the things that this amendment is trying to make sure doesn't happen. By making it revenue neutral, by having tax credits and tax rate reductions, we can see that it is even across the board. It can't be used for pet programs and for slush funds that create problems for government.

You know, it reminds me of another example, the Clinton Foundation, the monies that are famously abused and misused by ...

10:00

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment. Let's face it: this is a bad tax, and it's made even worse by bad timing. Obviously, the economy is suffering, and we have massive job losses in this province. This isn't helping. This is just going to make things worse. So there's no way that we can support this carbon tax. There's just absolutely no way. So what we'd like to do is try to soften the impact to Albertans' pocketbooks. Now, the revenues from the carbon tax should be exclusively directed back towards Albertans, but that's not the case. The actual fact is that a lot of this money is going to end up in some sort of green slush fund with very vague directives on where it's going to be spent. This is taxing Albertans on everything that they do, everything that they buy. Everything in their life is going to be taxed by this carbon tax.

There's no clear definition in section 3(2)(a) of what these "initiatives" are. What we have is a tax bill here with no information on where it's going to go. The very vague wording in this bill lends itself to abuse automatically. Now, there could be some worthwhile projects, things like the retrofit programs, but these big companies won't even have an opportunity to take advantage of this because these retrofit programs have to be done by January 2017. These big companies don't have the means to change so much, even to make plans to change so much, and to find funding for these big changes before the term has expired on their opportunity to do it.

The government has broken trust with Albertans too many times. This is a tax that they never campaigned on, so how does the government expect Albertans to trust that the funds they collect from this tax will actually go into initiatives that won't spiral into cronyism and go into rewarding the NDP faithful? We've seen who they've hired, who they've given top jobs to, mostly from outside the province, actually, and that's a shame, Madam Chair. And when we talk about trust in this government, I think it's important to look back at Bill 18, where the government says one thing and does another.

Now, here is a quote from the now Minister of Education.

If we're not forced to absolutely maintain independence, we have a tendency to end up with the wrong people at the job, and things just turn out worse than we originally had intended.

Madam Chair, that's the Minister of Education talking about the previous government's bill to take AEMERA to an arm's-length organization. He goes on to say:

They approve a board who then appoints and reviews scientists. Any arm's-length or independent argument has to be attacked at this point. It's clearly an attempt to have control, then, of what the data and the endgame will actually be regarding the environment. We've seen problems with this already.

Now, the minister – we'll call him the minister of jobs, I guess. This is a quote from October 31, 2013.

We have a few suggestions for this bill, and there are a couple of concerns that I have, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we've been calling for an independent body ...

Did you hear that, Madam Chair? This is the minister calling for an independent body, called AEMERA, and now, of course, the government has taken it back in. There's been a pretty dramatic change in this minister's opinion over the years. Actually, it's only three years. In fact, since it's October 31, it's probably only two and a half years. He's all of a sudden decided, in the two and a half years since his government came into power, that they don't want an independent body for AEMERA.

He goes on to say:

... a body that's arm's length from the government, to be able to make decisions that are completely free from political interference.

This completely contradicts what this government just did and what that minister supported. This calls into question trust, the trust of Albertans.

Now, he goes on to say:

The challenge with this bill at the moment, with the way it's written, is that it's not going to be an independent, arm's-length body making these decisions. We're relying on the minister to appoint people to this process or to this agency who will then select the scientists to participate.”

Well, this Bill 18, that they just passed, did that exact same thing. Here he is complaining about the minister having control over who to appoint, and what did they just do? They passed a bill where the minister appoints everybody.

The secondary challenge with that is: based on which credentials are these scientists going to be selected? How can Albertans be certain that they are independent, free thinking, and not influenced whatsoever by the very board that selected them?

Doesn't that sound familiar? [interjections] I think that sounds familiar.

The Chair: Hon. members, can we please keep the noise down a little bit? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has the floor.

Mr. Loewen: This government has just passed a bill and argued the exact opposite. The exact opposite.

This speaks to the problem of appointments, to begin with, in any capacity. When you don't have an independent arm's length, a distance between government and a body that they're selecting, questions arise, questions about judgment.

We raised those same concerns, questions about judgment. And this government, of course, in 2013 said one thing and in 2016 did the exact opposite, a complete flip-flop.

Going on:

Again, if we're trying to put forward legislation that will in fact monitor and protect our environment, then we need some distance.

Well, Madam Chair, they just removed all the distance, all of it. They asked for distance in 2013, and in 2016 hammered through a bill to bring everything right back into government.

It goes on to say:

If this government isn't forced to colour between the lines, then they appoint the wrong people for the job.

So here they are again saying one thing and doing another.

The caution here is that the bill provides authority to the minister to appoint board members, and we want to make sure that the people that are on this board represent all Albertans and not simply PC interests or friends or friends of friends.

Again, Madam Chair, a clear example of a minister of this government saying one thing when in opposition and doing the exact opposite when in government.

Now, I'll go back to the Minister of Education.

Further to this independence and transparency of the agency, the agency being seemingly still dependent on ESRD and government for allocating funding based on some unknown plan or formula: really, again, how could they, Mr. Speaker, be seen as moving forward?

So here he is complaining about the independence and transparency because it's being dependent on ESRD, and this government just passed a bill to bring the whole thing right back into ESRD.

Madam Chair, when this government does something and they wonder why Albertans don't have any trust, it's things like this, saying one thing and doing another over and over and over again. To quote Mark Twain, it's never the right time to do the wrong thing.

Madam Chair, the Member for Edmonton-South West has been fairly vocal in this debate, and it's always good to hear the members in the government actually get up and speak and say some things because it does give us lots of things to talk about. Now, I mentioned before that he talked about full and partial rebates. Of course, we know now that we'll be lucky to have partial rebates when we look at the full effect of this bill.

He talked about that the bill had been out for weeks. Of course, as I've already said, the bill has only been out for one week. I talked about Bill 1, three pages long. The flagship bill of this government, three pages, was on the Order Paper for 80 days from the time it was first introduced to the time it was actually passed. Now this bill: one week, over a hundred pages, and it's going to be pounded through.

Now, they talk about all the consultation they've done for Bill 20, but actually I don't know how much consultation they've been able to do in the last week. They went around the province talking about the Climate Leadership report, and that's great, but that's not Bill 20, Madam Chair.

I know that it doesn't matter who I talk to in Alberta and ask if they're concerned about the environment; everybody is concerned about the environment. Nobody wants to see poor air quality. Nobody wants to see dirty water. We're all concerned about the environment. We're all concerned about wildlife. We're all concerned about fish. We're concerned about all those things. There isn't any Albertan that I've ever talked to that's not concerned about those things. But the question is: does Bill 20 address any of these things? There are no standards in here. There's nothing in here to tell us what could be accomplished, what the goals are. It's all about taxes.

The intention of this amendment is clear. It's to make sure that the people of Alberta know where this money is being spent. But I think the intention of this bill is also clear: it's a tax. That's all it is, a tax. There's no plan here at all, Madam Chair.

Now, we did have some discussion earlier about the experts that looked at this bill. Of course, I would like to hear which experts looked at this bill. I don't want to talk about the Climate Leadership report but this bill itself. The Member for Edmonton-South West read a few quotes out of this Climate Leadership report. Of course, he cherry-picked a few sentences to take from it to make his points, and I guess that's his right. But I want to read a full paragraph, Madam Chair. I'll read this whole paragraph. There's no cherry-picking of sentences here. This is a full paragraph.

From the beginning, we've engaged with our elected officials. From day one, our mandate was wide-open: what should Alberta do about climate change? No policy parameters, specific targets, or levels of ambition were imposed on us, with the exception of four areas for which we were asked to examine potential policy options: reduce emissions, improve energy efficiency, accelerate the phase out of coal, and increase the deployment of renewable power.

Now, that's the whole paragraph, Madam Chair. This is right out of the report. It says, "From the beginning, we've engaged with our elected officials." Well, I would like to find out which elected officials because these people never engaged with me. I don't know if anybody else on this side of the House was engaged on any of this with this committee that made this report. So which elected officials did they engage with? [interjection] Yes. Maybe with NDP elected officials. Maybe. I don't know. There are no names here. But we know who they didn't consult. They didn't consult with anybody on this side of the House. But, obviously, they were involved in communications with these elected officials right through the preparation of this report.

Now, it says, "From day one, our mandate was wide-open." The whole world, wide open: that's the mandate that they had. Then it says: "No policy parameters, specific targets, or levels of ambition were imposed on us," and then we get to the next part here, "with the exception of four areas." Oh, so all of a sudden we went from the whole world is our oyster here and we can go in and look at anything in the whole world, no policy parameters, except that we've got to keep to four areas, which are: "reduce emissions," great, “improve energy efficiency,” great, “accelerate the phase out of coal” – we’re getting smaller – “and increase the deployment of renewable power.” So we went from the whole world to getting narrowed right down.

Are we surprised that they came up with the idea to accelerate the phase-out of coal? Well, that was in their parameters; they had to. Increase the deployment of renewable power? Of course, they had to. We learn a lot when we read these documents, Madam Chair.

Now, I’ll go on to Bill 20 here, and I’ll just read a little bit about this: schedule 1, Climate Leadership Act, part 1, carbon levy on fuel, division 1, imposition of carbon levy. We had a discussion already about the word “levy.” We know what that word means. It means tax. That’s clearly the definition in any dictionary. A levy is a tax. It goes on here: carbon levy on certain fuels, carbon levy on fuel used by interjurisdictional carrier, carbon levy on locomotive diesel, carbon levy on aviation gas and aviation jet fuel, carbon levy on natural gas. Natural gas: that’s what everybody uses to heat their home in Alberta. I don’t know what the percentage is, but I know that an extremely high percentage of Albertans use natural gas to heat their homes. Then: carbon levy on miscellaneous fuels, carbon levy payable by direct remitter.

We’re talking about a Climate Leadership Act, Bill 20, and as we go through, all we see is tax, tax, tax, tax, tax. It talks about carbon levy exemption certificate, duty of vendor, licence for exemption, rebate of carbon levy, prohibited sale, prohibited use.

We get into part 2 of schedule 1, and it talks about assessments: assessment of carbon levy to be remitted, assessment of amount owing, assessment of penalties, effect of assessment, interest, liability of directors for failure to remit. Again, we just continue talking more and more about collecting taxes.

We go on to part 3. Listen to the title of part 3: Investigations, Enforcement and Offences. Does that sound like something about climate leadership? Enforcement and offences. Under part 3: authority to enter on land, general powers respecting inspections, authority to stop and inspect motor vehicles, copies of records, demand for records and property, offences and penalties re direct remitters, offences and penalties re vendors and retail dealers, offences and penalties re consumers, offences re documents and records, failure to file returns or maintain records, general offences and penalties. Penalties, searches, offences, authority to enter land: that’s part 3, Madam Chair.

Part 4, administrative provisions and regulations, again talks about records, security for amounts owing, limitation on prosecution, waiver or cancellation of penalties or interest, regulations.

We go on to part 5, transitional provisions, related amendments, and coming into force. Here we are. We’ve gone through schedule 1 just roughly. I haven’t covered all of them, but I don’t see anything about the environment here. I see lots about taxes, how they’re going to collect them and how they’re going to penalize anybody that doesn’t pay them and how they’re going to police this, but I don’t see anything about climate.

Now, if we go to schedule 2, Energy Efficiency Alberta Act . . .

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’m pleased to be able to speak to amendment A1. In the midst of all my homework here, I’m digging to find the actual amendment, amendment A1, essentially recognizing that the revenue from the carbon levy may only be used to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions.

I want to be clear. I believe that this is a bad tax, but one thing is for sure. We are implementing a new tax at a very bad time. If ever there was a time for this tax to actually be revenue neutral, it would be at this time. At a time in Alberta’s history when many, many families are struggling to make ends meet, when many businesses are struggling to stay afloat and to actually keep their businesses solvent, to introduce more expense to these institutions, to families, and to businesses at this time is not fair.

I believe that it’s critical, if we are headed down the road of a carbon tax, that we recognize – I believe the Member for Calgary-Elbow made very important points. In order for Albertans to buy into this new tax, this carbon tax, it needs to be recognized that they’re not necessarily wanting to put themselves at a disadvantage in their competitiveness in a global trade environment. By adding a new tax, another new tax, we will be adding to the costs of these businesses.

Many people don’t understand that to a business, tax is just another cash expense. This is a tax on consumers, and this is a tax on consumable products that businesses use to be able to run their operations. At the end of the year, when they do their annual report, they look at their total cash costs, their total fixed costs. These taxes are just another expense that they need to take out of their profits. So in order to stay solvent, they have to find a way to be able to pay these new taxes. Many businesses are going to very much have to try and pass those new taxes on to their consumers. Businesses have the option where they try to reduce the expenses that they have in their operation by possibly reducing the salaries that they’re paying to their employees. It just becomes very difficult to stay competitive when we have new taxes that are needing to be managed.

The amendment is speaking to the need to be revenue neutral, and it’s critical that this tax be only used to provide rebates or adjustments. To allow the carbon tax to do other things, it’s not revenue neutral. I guess we’re trying a new terminology about recycling revenue. The fact that this is a new tax that is going to be invested back, so the government says, into projects in Alberta does not make this tax revenue neutral. What it does is make it a tax that the government is taking out of the pockets of Albertans, out of the pockets of Alberta businesses and deciding what they’re going to do with the tax as opposed to allowing Albertans to decide what they will do with that money. If we were to make this truly revenue neutral, Albertans and Alberta businesses would be able to continue to revolve that money in our economy and continue to make wise decisions.

I spoke last week about a couple of government ventures out on the east coast with regard to boondoggles that were started by government, all sounding very good and all sounding like really good investments, but because they’re government operations – governments have a hard time recognizing when to step back and when to withdraw from poor investments, and they continue to put in good money after bad and make the situation even worse.

British Columbia has a carbon tax. I’m sure we all recognize that. But what British Columbia did was ensure that they did not damage their economy and their ability to compete by instituting a carbon tax, a new tax. They instituted a carbon tax with this very parameter, that all revenue would be put in place to provide rebates and adjustments.

When we look at the initial act, we have wording where revenues would be spent on “initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases or supporting Alberta’s ability to adapt to climate change.” This is the problem. This is where we run into trouble with this tax. This is where I believe many Albertans will have difficulty accepting this tax. This is essentially an open door for the NDP government to support those with an NDP world view through their slush fund, and we have no idea what the plans are there. We can see that this could easily turn into what could be considered a green crony fund, a green crony boondoggle. I would be very concerned if that's the direction this government is going. History would tell us that that is the direction we're liable to be going in. Governments have a very poor track record of investing in different initiatives.

We are headed down a path, I believe, that is going to lead us to investing in failed projects, sinking money into operations that have not had proper discovery on business viability and economic evaluations into their sustainability. We have to be very careful on how we move forward with this tax. If we don't get it right, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned, it will put a very foul taste in the mouths of Albertans, and there will be no appetite to ever discuss a carbon tax again.

So let's be sure that the carbon tax is truly revenue neutral so that it does less harm to all those small businesses out there struggling to make ends meet. Like we said previously, if a business is already struggling and we add another expense with a new tax, it is going to put them in a very difficult situation.

We need to take the time to hear from experts so that we can get a ruling on the revenue neutrality. The NDP turned down an opportunity in second reading to send it to committee so that the committee could essentially have discovery on revenue neutrality. I think they already know the answer to that, so they turned that idea down because they recognized that they are not following what would be considered good practice when instituting a carbon tax.

As it stands right now, Bill 20 creates this Energy Efficiency Alberta corporation, a whole new entity where we will be seeing a new board, more bureaucrats, more investigations into looking at opportunities. It's going to make grants, contributions, or loans or issue loan guarantees. It's there to raise awareness; promote, design, and deliver programs; promote the development of the energy efficiency services industry. Are these investments? When we take money out of the economy and use it towards promoting and educating, is that truly investments that will return back? I guess if we can find some way to make these projects that we're educating for and promoting be viable business opportunities, maybe we can recoup the money that we invest in them.

But if we have a situation where we are promoting, designing, granting money towards these types of discovery mechanisms only to find out that there is no business case available that would prove to us that this is a good investment and that it's going to have a good rate of return and be able to be sustainable and replace itself over time, I believe that we've then taken tax money out of an economy, and essentially it's gone. We've burned it. If we haven't had any kind of discovery that has allowed us to recognize business opportunities in these areas, we will get into a situation where we are just, again, wasting money.

I guess one thing: I do believe that many Albertans do not have any idea what this Energy Efficiency Alberta corporation really is. They would like to have a little more clear understanding as to what this NDP government is planning to do with many of these billions of dollars that come into their slush fund with no direction as to how they are going to spend it.

Apparently, other members have alluded to the fact that there is $3.4 billion that is being earmarked to be spent under Other. I don't know about you, Madam Chair, but to me Other does not necessarily give me a real clear indication as to what that is. We have no idea on this side of the House. I'm not even sure if the government members have any idea as to what that $3.4 billion that is being earmarked for Other is going to go towards. Are we padding the pockets of those that would have the NDP world view, making sure that they're taken care of? Or are we actually truly investing in future sustainability, where all Albertans will be able to benefit from the money, the $3.4 billion that this government wants to spend on Other? I'm not even sure that the government has any idea how large $3.4 billion is. It seems like we toss around the word "billion" a lot these days. All I know is that it is an awful lot of money.

A concern I have many times, too, Madam Chair, is with regard to how this carbon tax is going to affect agricultural businesses. What are the agricultural businesses going to be able to do to try and offset some of these extra costs? We live in a northern climate. I spent many years raising hogs in the hog industry, and it was critical that we kept our facilities heated. We had a lot of electricity costs. At the end of the day we are in direct competition with other producers around the world, especially to the south of us, that are not faced with many of these costs. The natural gas that we burned in our facilities, in our boiler units, will now be going up in price. I'm concerned with the rate that it is going up.

Many livestock producers are burning coal, and we're going to see the rate of coal go up significantly. As of January 1, 2017, high-heat coal will have a carbon tax on it of $44.37 per tonne. That's a significant increase when you take a look at what is going to be needed to heat their facilities. The time it will take to retrofit all of the facilities that possibly could retrofit to natural gas: will they be able to have that completed by January 1, 2017? I fear not.

So I would hope that this government would recognize the need to help to retrofit some of those operations, and possibly some of that money will come out of Other. I have no assurance that this government will use it to rebate agricultural producers. The government has made it fairly clear, unless they have a change of heart, that they will not even be rebating our schools and our hospitals and all these facilities that are funded with public dollars.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I know it's a long night. Everybody kind of feels it, and I can see that you want to get out of here. Sorry. I'll try to keep it brief when I talk about this.

You know, we're talking about:

The revenue from the carbon tax levy may only be used . . .

- (b) to provide rates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rebate reductions.

It seems like, well, that certainly is a better step towards what's been going on, with what the bill has, because we have a slush fund that's being built. It's a slush fund of $3.4 billion, where, frankly, we just don't know what that money is going to.

This carbon tax at the very best should only be revenue neutral. It should not be implemented at all at this time, but at best it should be revenue neutral so that the monies that come in go back out to other businesses or people or individuals, cycled right through the system to be used as a behaviour modification tool. That's what the intent of this is. But when you're taking in that much more money, what are you intending to use that money for, Madam Chair?

What I'm concerned about is that because this is not revenue neutral, you could be driving businesses right out of this province. That's a concern. I've had people that, frankly, ever since we've been talking about the taxes that we have – and this is just another one of those taxes, the way the government has been working here in the past while with their programs, their ideology on these items. They're leaving. I have people all over my riding that have just picked up their businesses, moved them out, or they're just trying to sell. They're trying to get the best dollar. They're taking pennies on the dollar to get out because, frankly, they don't see a whole lot of hope.

Even if this government in three years is defeated, which I believe it will be, how much are we going to be in debt? Looking at Bill 10, that's going to cost we don't know how much money in debt, along with this carbon tax, along with all sorts of other programs and spending, a debt ceiling that has no limit to it, and we're into a position where people have no confidence. I'm hearing that day in and day out. I keep getting e-mails and letters, and they're expressing their concerns to me.

I'll pick up the phone, or on the weekends, when I have time off, I'll go over and visit places like Provost. I go to Irma. I go to Edgerton. I go to Bashaw, to Bawlf, to Ohaton, Ferintosh, Forestburg, any number of them, like Hardisty. Hardisty is a really good example. You know, they have a lot of oil that goes through that town. That town is a small town, probably 800 people, maybe a thousand. It's, like I say, a very small town. But the majority of the oil in this province flows through that town. It's got a tank farm there that's absolutely huge. It's a wonderful facility. If people think that oil is dirty, that it's unclean, you should come down to Hardisty. We can arrange a tour. Come down to Hardisty – I would be more than happy to work with that – and meet the people I know. You can go to the USD station, where they put the oil onto the trains to ship it out. They have the oil tank farm there holding literally hundreds of millions of barrels of oil. If you go around there, you cannot find any oil that's sitting on the ground. If they find something, they look after that.

You're trying to create a carbon tax that is kind of punitive to people that use it. Frankly, they've become very clean users of this carbon, the ones that are working with it, and they're very responsible. I'm very proud that we have these people in Alberta.

We've gone from a position where 20, 30 years ago people were much more sloppy. Oil was spilled on the ground. Nobody looked after it. Programs have been put in place, and rules and regulations have been put in place. Frankly, Madam Chair, they've made this environment so much cleaner, and it didn't take any punitive action to be able to do that. They were able to do that just through discussions with the oil companies. If you go around to businesses, they're responsible now for what they're doing.

Frankly, I find that homeowners have become much more consistent with being clean. As you get new homes, to reduce the carbon taxes, people are starting to put in high-efficiency furnaces. All you had to do was say that you cannot have these mid-efficiency furnaces. So any new build of a home or any replacement of a mid-efficiency furnace will have to go to a high-efficiency furnace. You're achieving carbon reductions, but you're achieving it not by putting in a carbon tax but by putting in measures that actually change the behaviour. I'd say that it's not punitive. It's just something that people have to go to in the future.

It's not been a problem. People have changed from single-pane windows to you know, nowadays dual-pane with argon-filled glass to triple-pane windows with sunscreen to ones that actually adjust. If the level of light that's coming in from the sun is coming in at such an angle because we're in the wintertime, you will actually be able to benefit from the heat coming off the sun. But when the sun is up at a certain angle, it actually deflects it, and it stops the sun from entering, so then it has a cooling effect. It, in fact, accomplishes two things, the glass itself.

You can have programs in place that accomplish what you want to do. You want to change the behaviour. You want to change the mindset. What we're saying is that we don't believe that you need to punish people, especially beyond what revenue neutrality is.

This is, again, what this bill talks about. It's making sure that it has a revenue-neutral kind of a base to it. It provides rebates or adjustments related to the carbon tax to consumers.

An Hon. Member: The amendment.

Mr. Taylor: The amendment. I said "bill." Thank you to my fellow member here beside me, who corrects me when I make mistakes like that.

We have $3.4 billion to be used for environmental projects. We don't know where those projects are going.

Mr. MacIntyre: They're called others.

Mr. Taylor: They're called others. What does "others" mean?

Mr. MacIntyre: They're expensive.

Mr. Taylor: It sounds awfully expensive. You know, I once did a calculation, and I put loonies side by side all across Canada – a loonie is about an inch, or 25 millimetres, long – and you go not just across Canada, but you go across Canada and a half. You'd be looking at this thing five and a half times, a row of five and a half loonies going across Canada. It would be just an amazing number of loonies if you stacked them up high. I didn't do the calculation on that, but obviously if they were actually end to end, we're talking 6,000 or 8,000 miles going upwards. It's going to be huge. That's what we're talking about for this.

How is this going to diversify the economy? I was kind of curious. How will this diversify the economy by putting in this revenue tax? It would be very interesting to me to find out if there's any way that spending money would do that.

Right now we're in the enviable position of being one of the cleanest producers in the world, right here in Alberta. If you want to look at dirty oil, if you want to look at pollution, go to California, go to China, or go to India. Those places are dirty. You know, we have technologies here that are great. As it stands, I think that we should be working on using the technologies, using the information and the knowledge that we have, and exporting them out to the world. The world then can be a cleaner place.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, I'm requesting unanimous consent for one-minute bells.

The Chair: Unfortunately, according to the standing orders in committee the first bell has to be 15 minutes, and then the next ones are one minute automatically. That's in committee, not the Assembly.

Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:53 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

9 a.m.

Thursday, June 2, 2016

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect. As we continue our work on behalf of the people of this province, let us always seek a healthy balance between our role as legislators, our family responsibilities, and our own well-being.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise here this morning to discuss Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. Of course, the climate is changing, and Alberta has to do its part to mitigate that. Alberta's independent climate panel sought measures that did not overly involve government subsidy or other government interference, but of course that's not what Bill 20 is about. Bill 20 is about taxes. It's about increasing taxes on everything in Albertans' lives.

Now, it mentions in this report, the Climate Leadership report, that Alberta is perceived by many to need stronger policies to persuade others that we're serious about climate change and serious about the environment. But, Madam Chair, that's a perception. It's not a reality. Alberta has always had strong environmental standards, stronger than the rest of the world. We have nothing to be ashamed of here in Alberta. Our Premier likes to describe us as embarrassing cousins, but that's not the fact. The fact is that Alberta has a great record. Can we improve? Of course. That's what we do here in Alberta. We constantly strive to improve everything.

Due to our strong resource industry Alberta is second only to Saskatchewan's CO<sub>2</sub> emissions per capita and draws considerable emissions attention due to 38 per cent of the national output, but we produce most of the energy here, Madam Chair. It's no wonder that it's shown that when the fire in Fort McMurray shut down oil production there, it had an immediate, significant effect on the Canadian economy. That's how important Alberta is in its energy industry. Because of that, we need to have respect for that industry.

Now, they talk a lot about the rebates to offset the effects on many households. They talk about how it's going to affect 60 to 65 per cent of the households in Alberta, who will be getting rebates. But, Madam Chair, those are partial rebates. They don't take into full account the actual cost to Albertans of this carbon tax.

Of course, the government came up with a reduction in the small-business tax, but that's not much consolation to the businesses that are going to be paying more and suffering because of this carbon tax. Right now Alberta is struggling economically, and this carbon tax will make things worse.

I think Albertans need to know that this government isn't going to all of a sudden just keep increasing this tax and carrying on with that sort of agenda. They need to have some assurances that this government will come back to the Legislature if they want to change this any further.

Of course, Madam Chair, we would hope that this government would, I guess, come to its senses and realize how damaging this carbon tax will be on everyday Albertans and that they will leave it, not go ahead with it, do an economic impact study so that Albertans have a true understanding of what it will do to them.

Madam Chair, I would like to propose an amendment to Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. Now, I have the appropriate copies of the amendment here.

The Chair: If you could get the copies to me, please.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. I'll wait for your approval to carry on.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A2.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by (a) adding the following after section 10:

Adjustment of carbon levy rates

10.1 Notwithstanding section 79(1)(e), the carbon levy rates set out in the Table in the Schedule may not be increased by regulation; and (b) in section 79(1)(e) by adding "subject to section 10.1," before "respecting the determination of the amount of carbon levy payable".

Now, Madam Chair, this amendment speaks to 79(1)(e) on page 66, where it says that not only rebated amounts but amounts payable can be set in regs. So this amendment ensures that, like fuel taxes, carbon taxes cannot be hiked in regulations like some others, like sin taxes and stuff like that, can be. I think it's perfectly reasonable to have this carbon tax go through the same process as fuel taxes, which means it has to come back into the Legislature to be properly debated.

Of course, we would like to see some robust public consultation on it, too, but this is at least a minimum, that at least it comes back to the Legislature to be discussed. Then the people of Alberta can have at least some opportunity to see what this government has planned when it's raising these taxes. There should be no hike in taxes without legislation and debate in this House. The government should not be able to increase carbon taxes overnight through regulation. Saying that regulations can determine, quote, the amount payable sounds like they can be raised.

It is not clear that the table in this schedule is binding, at least beyond 2018. If the government did indeed not consider this or had something else in consideration on this, then this amendment will make it very clear. And if they had intended that any increases to this carbon tax would come back before the Legislature, again, this amendment makes that very clear to us and to all Albertans.

I think the clause that exists in there now gives the government too much power to make changes to an economy-wide tax with no accountability or debate. The so-called sin taxes – alcohol, tobacco, those types – are able to be raised through regulation. Now, whether that is fair or not, that's different. This carbon tax is far closer to fuel taxes because of course, Madam Chair, fuel taxes affect everybody and everything, just like this carbon tax.

Madam Chair, you're aware of how things are, especially in the northwest part of the country where we live. We travel great distances all the time. Any tax on fuel, this carbon tax, will have a great effect on us. I know that when I'm here in the city, in the Legislature, in meetings here and everything, in any month of the year I'll see people riding their bikes, January, February, travelling to and from work, whatever they're doing, and I think it's great. It's great to see people out there, fresh air, exercise, not driving cars, not even riding in buses, just out there on their bikes.

But in my constituency there's only a small number of people that have that opportunity. For one, of course, the weather tends to be a little harsher in the northwest. In the majority of my constituency people are travelling 10, 15, 20, 30, 40, 50 miles to get to their job each day, so it's just not realistic to expect them to be riding their bikes to work every day. Obviously, this is going to have a greater impact on those people in our province, and those people are just as important as anybody else in the province, Madam Chair. Again, I think it's really important that we have robust discussion on any changes now to this carbon tax, that this government seems determined to push through.

Of course, this carbon tax applies to heating, too, and there isn't anybody in Alberta that doesn't rely on heating their home in the wintertime and, actually, just about any time of the year. When you start increasing taxes on the form of heat that the vast majority of Albertans use, then it becomes very important to every Albertan. How carbon tax increases are determined afterwards, after this bill passes, if the House so determines it will pass, should be open for debate and not just hiked in regulations.

Now, Madam Chair, Alberta is struggling economically. We know that. Over a hundred thousand job losses, and we don't even know the number of jobs lost for people that can't claim unemployment, contractors and small businesses that are out of business now that have no opportunity to collect unemployment. They're sitting there with payments on their equipment, payments on their homes and no income. This isn't being helpful. This tax is just making it harder for everybody.

This government has brought in the minimum wage hike, a personal income tax hike. Corporate taxes are rising. Now we have the carbon tax. Gas taxes have already increased under this government. This tax will make everything – everything – more expensive, Madam Chair.

Now, we talk about the rebates. Again, as time goes on, it seems like the government is coming to more of a realization that these rebates aren't going to cover the cost to lower income Albertans. Just some rough figures we've talked about are that with this carbon tax on low-income Albertans these rebates won't cover all the costs because not everything was considered when they were calculating these rebates. They thought: well, just the fuel costs, some heating costs. But there's far more than that, Madam Chair. Everything that we have has to be transported. Of course, in the northwest, well, in any part of Alberta there are transport costs for everything everywhere – our food, groceries, everything – so this tax makes everything more expensive. The calculation that the government had on rebates: it doesn't cover all the costs. We've now seen cases in the public sector where tax dollars that were dedicated for education, for health care, caring for the vulnerable – that money will end up in the climate fund, not where it was intended to go, not for education, not for health care.

Now, we know that for municipalities, cities, towns, MDs, and counties everything will become more expensive, too: all the fuel costs, all the heating costs, all the trickle-down effects of everything that's raised. They'll have no choice but to pass on these costs to the people in their constituency or reduce their services to their constituents. Madam Chair, that's not fair.

Again, we're all concerned about the environment, every one of us here. I don't believe there's any person in this House that doesn't care about the environment. In fact, I know that's the case. To suggest otherwise is just not true. And there's nobody here that doesn't want to improve how we do business here, how we operate, how we can help improve how we do business, and how it affects the environment. We're always looking for ways to do that, Madam Chair.

Now, I had a small town send me some figures that in 2017 they will be taking from the people in their town $400,000 more for natural gas. That's a town of 2,000 people. That's $200 per person just for natural gas, and that's in the first year, Madam Chair – the first year – before the full increases hit in 2018. These impacts are huge. This is definitely a case of the wrong tax at the wrong time.

Now, we talk about the rebates, but rebates aren't available for nonprofits. They're not available for schools. How about charities, Madam Chair, organizations that rely on volunteers, that help the most vulnerable in our society? How about those charities, who have to pay more money for everything they do, too?

Small and medium-sized businesses, Madam Chair: their costs are rising, too. What can they be expected to do with the increased taxes? They have two choices. I guess they can fold up shop, or they can raise the fees that they charge their customers. If they raise the fees to their customers, what does that do? Of course, that just makes everything more expensive for everyday Albertans.

For school boards the cost of busing, an enormous cost in rural Alberta, transporting children to and from school: more expensive.

For municipalities the road grading, transporting gravel to the roads, all the different things that they do that require gas or diesel: more expensive. Again, they're forced to either raise taxes to recover that or reduce services.

We talked some yesterday, I believe, about large businesses that are in a world-wide, competitive market and whose headquarters might not even be in Alberta. They'll have to make a choice. With the increased cost of natural gas, should they close their business down? Should they move it elsewhere? Those are decisions these companies are going to have to make. There's a retrofit program, but there's not enough time for these large corporations to plan on retrofitting, never mind getting the job done and having the revenue to do that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other questions, comments with respect to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I believe that this amendment brings accountability to an act that is lacking on any real metrics, any real transparency, and it's allowing the government to make regulations on the fly. This is a concern. Whenever you have a tax that the government can just move up and down at will, this is something that brings instability to all of the government that's involved and all the stakeholders that are involved.

Let's talk about some of the effects that this is going to have. In the end, what we need to be encouraging here is for the government to show that it's going to move in a direction and that it's going to stick to that direction, and if it's got the ability to be able to go into regulations and just change its mind at a moment's notice, that puts worry in the people that need to know that they can actually move forward with their businesses.

I know that the government has been moving Alberta in a direction that is showing that they want to, I guess, start to address the climate change concern, and that's commendable. We need to start doing our part to make sure that our environment is actually something that we can know we've got a balanced approach to. Now, what I'm trying to get to here is that that word "balance" needs to come into play here, and balance comes through everybody that is involved with the carbon tax, the government included, knowing that they are able to count on a certain structure. That's what this amendment does.

Now, I like to read these because it's not always clear exactly what it is we're talking about. In the end, sometimes they can be a little bit more difficult to get through by what we're trying to bring in. This here is adding a clause, adjustment of carbon levy rates, to section 10. Again, we can argue whether this is a tax or a levy – a tax or a levy – but in the end what we're saying is that when you're taking money out of Alberta businesses, from Albertans that are taxpayers, your most vulnerable, we need to know, whether it is a levy or a tax, what exactly it is that they can expect.

Now, it says:

10.1 Notwithstanding section 79(1)(e), the carbon levy rates set out in the Table in the Schedule may not be increased by regulation.

I think that's quite reasonable. I believe that, in the end, we bring these rules into play so that we can't just go on the fly and say: "Well, you know what? Why 30? Why not 40? Why not 50?"

The fact is that we already do have taxes out there that are controlled by regulation. A good example is the sin taxes, the alcohol and tobacco taxes. We see those ones being adjusted quite regularly through regulation. I do understand that there is a component to discourage the use of alcohol and tobacco and to bring money into the treasury, and I can feel that the government is moving in that direction. If they price it too high, then what happens is that we end up with a lot of criminal activity bringing in the alcohol and the cigarettes. So it's a balancing act – it's truly a balancing act – on exactly: where do you want the tax? Are we competitive with other jurisdictions? If we're not competitive with other jurisdictions, then what happens is that the business goes to those other jurisdictions, and if there's money to be made or profit to be made at it, that resource or that service will actually flow through those jurisdictions into Alberta.

That's one of my concerns. You know what? Let's put in some reasonable expectation so that the government can't go in and unilaterally start raising these levies or taxes just on a whim. "We need $50 million. Let's just raise this tax, or let's just raise that tax." That is a valid concern that I and my colleagues have, saying: let's actually make sure that if we are going to be adjusting something that is going to be impacting not just a small number of Albertans but almost every industry and every business, every resident of Alberta, there should be a discussion held. There should be something that Alberta is actually sitting down and debating. That's what we're saying: let's bring debate. Let's bring this somehow so that what happens is that the government can actually say, "We are raising this levy, and here is the intent; here is what we're going to do with that money," not that the money is just going to go into general revenues.

We need to be accountable. We need to be transparent. It needs to be reasonable. There needs to be a business plan. We haven't seen any of that so far with this bill. But you know what? Let's bring some limitations. Let's say that you just can't unilaterally start adding to the taxes.

A good example is something that we talked about over the last week, which is Bill 10. Bill 10 was getting rid of the debt limit that Alberta had. We were saying that there should be some accountability to taking on debt within the province. Now, you're saying: "Well, Scott, jeez, you know what? We'll be responsible with regulations. We wouldn't want to start raising the levies that we've set here because we know better." Well, Bill 10, again, is a good example. We saw a 15 per cent of GDP cap set for Alberta four or five months ago, and last week we were already removing that cap. We didn't even extend it anymore. We didn't say: let's go to a higher number. We didn't say: well, let's examine what that number should be. It was: let's just get rid of it. That essentially is what this Bill 20 is doing. It is saying: trust us; we will set it at what we want, but we'll be responsible with it. That I find offensive, that we don't have any accountability for what these rates are actually going to be.

As a person that has read the federal Income Tax Act a lot, there is a reason why that book is this thick. It is to address and bring clarity and bring stability to governments across Canada. What happens if that clarity isn't there is that we end up with a lot of businesses taking advantage of the situation or, specifically, individuals starting to work outside the laws, which is why these things are being brought forward. Now, with regulations, these things can be changed very easily, and nobody would know. That's the problem. Nobody would know.

Now, in the end, you could raise the carbon levy against something very, very quickly, and because the industry that's affected doesn't want to get into a confrontation with the government that is moving Alberta in its own direction or ideology, then what happens is that they will actually not say anything because they're fearful that they are going to have some kind of reprisal. That is a concern. Suddenly we'll see businesses passing on this cost even though they have concerns. They will know that they are no longer competitive.

This brings it back to my original point. They know that they're no longer competitive with jurisdictions outside of Alberta, but because of the fear that they might have reprisals, they will do it anyway. They know that, in the end, they may not end up with a business. That is a concern. That truly is a concern. What we need to be doing is making sure that it is a playing field that is fair for everybody within Alberta. That includes the taxpayers: the residents, the businesses, the large companies. All of these stakeholders need to know that they can count on a structure that brings stability.

Now, it seems like every time we bring a bill forward in this House, there's something that has a component to it that brings instability to Alberta. The fact is that when we look at the amount of consultation that Alberta is doing when it comes to these bills, it is almost zero. Then what happens is that because we get these bills and we pass them within one or two weeks, there's not enough debate. Even when we do debate and move amendments like the one that we've got before us here that says, "Let's be responsible and put a limitation to what we are able to do by enshrining this in legislation," we see that the government is saying: "You know what? We know the direction we're going. It doesn't matter what arguments you bring forward. We are going to go in this direction." That is where the troubling part of all of this is. We end up with people having wonderful visits out on the front doorsteps, like with Bill 6. You know, the fact is that a lot of these things could have been prevented.

We see that a bill regarding the MGA review is being put forward. We have ministers going out to the communities within Alberta right now, and that's admirable. It's great to see that we actually have some engagement being done by the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. They're saying: "You know what? Let's table the act that we're looking to push through. We will give Albertans the ability to see it, to read through it and find out where they fit into this legislation.” Then they’ll be able to maybe go back to the minister and say: “Have you considered this? Have you considered that?”

That is the concern here, that a lot of times what happens is that when we go through these things so fast, the unintended results are what we end up with. Now, I will say that when we look at the unintended results, they bring on instability, which brings unstable government, which, in the end, as I’ve mentioned multiple times in this House, brings unemployment. That is where my riding is right now. We’re seeing a ton of unemployment. We are seeing a ton of vacant houses.

Now, this carbon tax, or levy, whatever way the government wants to phrase this, is going to continue to bring instability, but by bringing in the fact that the companies can know that before these rates can just be changed on the fly, at least there’s going to be some warning of it, they’ll be able to voice their concerns to the MLAs where their businesses or corporations reside. That is where we’ve got a very fair system, where if we do have an increase in a levy, we can actually have the MLAs saying: “Wait a second. We need to do more of an economic study to make sure this is what we’re trying to do.”

Nobody wants to pay taxes. I will acknowledge that. We all will pay taxes. It comes down to: how are we being treated, and is it fair? With this loophole in the current Bill 20 legislation, being able to change something on the fly doesn’t make any sense. It creates the exact opposite of what we’re trying to do, which is to bring stability back to Alberta. That is what the government continues to say, that with Bill 20 we will have the social licence to do all of the things that we want to do. We can make more oil. We can get pipelines. We can do all these wonderful things. But you can’t do any of those things without stability. Stability is always the key. An unstable government is always an unfair government, and that is something that I will live and die by.

The fact is that when we start looking at that, we’ve got an ability right now to change these levies. Are we going to be doing the necessary research to ensure that we are not going to have these businesses leaving Alberta? I’ve already mentioned that we’ve had increases in several of the taxes within Alberta. Again, as I’ve said several times – you know what? I agree fully and wholeheartedly with the NDP that these tax increases were not a secret. This was on their website. This is just a fact. They were elected as government with many of these tax increases. Whether it was accidental or on purpose that they were elected is debatable, but in the end they were elected. They had it in their platform. But this carbon tax was not there. I will ask the question: how can we state that this is the crowning framework for Alberta? It wasn’t even in their platform?

My comment here is that the reason it wasn’t in their platform is because the government knew that Albertans wouldn’t accept a carbon tax. They wouldn’t accept that. They demanded a balance to the environment; that I will agree with. That is something that the NDP did bring forward. They were very adamant on that, and so was the Wildrose because it is important that we are in the environment and able to have future generations enjoy what we currently enjoy or what our parents enjoyed.

Now, to get back to this amendment, we need to be looking at ensuring that Albertans can see stability coming forward. With the tax increases that we’ve already seen, which, I’ve just said, were on the platform website, we still haven’t seen the repercussions from this. I’m hoping that the tax increases that the government has pushed through, which were clearly on their platform, are where they end, that we’re done with tax increases. I’m hoping that this carbon tax is the last tax that gets implemented because, in the end, this is hurting my riding.

The fact that we have left a gaping hole in being able to raise this tax whenever we want is a concern for me. There is no way that we should ever have such a large-impact piece of legislation going through like this, with such a gaping loophole. It isn’t reasonable that we are looking towards making sure that Alberta is not going . . .

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. While we all sort of digest this amendment, I really feel it prudent that we go back and kind of discuss the premise around carbon pricing. You know, as we were talking about this climate leadership plan and as we were moving forward, I felt it prudent as a former business operator, who operated several different restaurants that made multimillions of dollars in revenue annually, to do a bit of homework and compare it to what is done in a lot of other nations. When I did some digging around carbon pricing, it’s not like we’re inventing something new that’s extraordinarily scary, that destroys the world. This is in place in 40 different countries and nearly 20 different cities and states. This covers a 13 per cent global emissions reduction, and this is citing the World Bank’s statistics that I’ve been able to pull up here. Forty countries. At the end of the day, if 40 countries are doing it, it seems like there must be some effective means about what is occurring here.

Now, I and many of the other members here generally speak about a very passionate member who used to sit in this Chamber. While there were certain policies of his that I respectfully disagreed with, there are many other merits and his business acumen that I actually respect immensely. I compare it to the great things that he did as a former chancellor of the University of Calgary. With pride I always say that he is a former Member for Calgary-Shaw. I’m speaking of former Alberta Treasurer Jim Dinning, who cited that carbon pricing is cost effective, meaning that it achieves emissions reductions at the lowest possible cost to the economy.

They cited in this report:

The Alberta government could have chosen to regulate emitters to use specific low-carbon technologies or to achieve a given level of emissions performance. But in fact, regulations cost more than a carbon price, because they reduce the flexibility emitters have to find the cheapest way to reduce emissions.

A carbon price encourages emitters to find innovative ways to avoid paying the tax, because the gain goes straight to their bottom line. In addition, a carbon price provides an ongoing incentive to find ways to reduce emissions, and this can be a powerful force for driving long-run innovation.

In my span as a former restaurant manager I had a very great opportunity to work for an American-based company at a very fortunate time. It was when California implemented their ways to reduce greenhouse gases. So the company took an approach, and they decided that across their company, internationally and nationally, they were going to put systems in place to reduce their output, to try to make sure that they could find cost savings. They built habitual changes. To me, in fact, it was a very engaging time to be at that restaurant because there are always so many different ways that you can reduce your emissions costs.

To throw back, I’m sure many of the members in this Chamber have looked at their energy bill. I remember that when my wife and I first bought our new house in the gorgeous constituency of Calgary-Shaw, we did a lot of things to try to reduce our outputs. We changed all of our light bulbs. We got that film where you use hair dryers to put it over your windows to try to reduce leakage. The challenge I had was that when we saw our bill the next time, we saw a very small decrease, maybe a buck or two, and we were shocked. The reason is because the majority of our electric bills are service fees. So when we try to change the habits that we have, we don't see any return.

Now, going back to my time in the restaurants, one of the things that was very intriguing during that time that we were building on habitual changes was that there were a lot of stickers all over the place because we talked about firing times. Restaurants utilize a lot of natural gas. They use a lot of energy. You have light bulbs all over the place. You have restaurants that open – you know, you're usually there at 8 o'clock as you're opening at 11. One of the major habits that we all used to have going into these restaurants that we worked at was that you would walk in at 8 o'clock with your chef; you as manager would turn every light in the restaurant on even though there wasn't anyone in those spaces, and your chef would turn on every piece of equipment. He would turn on every stovetop, and you'd get going on your day, when in reality some of that equipment didn't need to be turned on for another three hours. There are also cases where you have your natural gas burners and you're leaving every single one of them on for a solid three hours when you only have five or 10 guests going into your restaurant. It's not very necessary, but the impact of doing this is so minute for these businesses that there is no incentive for us to really change our habits.

The thing that was very remarkable during this time was that we were able to find ways to really change our habits, whether it was changing our firing times so that instead of turning on the burners and the stovetops at 8 o'clock, we were turning them on at 11. That was three solid hours that we weren't pumping and burning natural gas through those lines. With our lights, instead of turning every light in our restaurant on at 8 o'clock, we were turning them on at 10, when our service staff got in to set up.

If you look at sort of the large scheme of things, in some cases we were reducing our outputs by 50 per cent, especially on a slower week. If you're to even look long term – because the restaurants that I operated could have been defined as a small business, so you have a small-business tax reduction, so we are going to be working towards finding our efficiencies – in theory, if I was to go back to one of my restaurants, we would actually be making more money next year.

You know, we have to find these ways to make sure that we work together to encourage these growths and changes because one of the major challenges that we really face with trying to tackle climate change is the convenience factor, and looking long term, I think there's a great opportunity for businesses to be those innovators that Jim Dinning talks about, for us to really lead the way. If you look at sort of the global spectrum of Alberta here, we have a lot of businesses that are founded or centred in Alberta.

Now, as we unroll this new climate change plan, it reminds me of the time that I worked for a U.S.-based restaurant, where because one state changed what they did, every restaurant across North America changed their habits. Since we have several Calgary- and Edmonton- and Alberta-based businesses, us changing our policy could potentially cause businesses across the nation and across North America and, potentially, across the world to change their habits and be ready for carbon pricing, which we are seeing start in several different jurisdictions, not only our own.

You know, I'm happy and look forward to seeing many fulsome debates, but I really felt it was important for us to pull ourselves back and look at the context of this entire thing here as well.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka, followed by Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would just like to comment on the previous member's statement. Good for them. Great for them. I just need to point out, though, that that was done by private industry prior to a $3 billion tax grab, without any pressure from the government to force them into changing their behaviour. They did it for good, solid economic reasons. They did it of their own free will. Business everywhere is trying to find ways to be like this. I don't understand what the point of adding a $3 billion punitive tax to them is going to help. It just kills business in Alberta. Anyway, they were doing it on their own already. What the point of this is, I'm not sure.

But I'll get to the amendment. Madam Chair, do we have a number by which we're referring to this amendment? I didn't hear that.

The Chair: A2.

Mr. Orr: A2. Thank you very much.

Carbon pricing clearly is valid. It works. There's never been much question about that. The challenge that we have and the problem that we have is the fact that unilateral taxation is not. This is actually an amendment that simply asks the government to exercise some restraint as it moves forward. Without this amendment the government is giving itself too much power. In fact, it's a very undemocratic situation we're beginning to find ourselves in. I would like to remind the House that the whole point of democracy, the whole point of the evolution of democracy has been to limit the power of the Crown, especially, if you go back to all of the early documents and all of the early fights in Britain, in regard to taxation. It's a limitation on the powers of the Crown.

I'm not a constitutional lawyer, but I would almost begin to think that we are approaching a point here where there could be a constitutional challenge that this grants powers to the Crown of taxation without any proper accountability at all. Essentially, every time the government wants to increase its slush fund here, all it has to do is decide in council that, well, we need a little bit more money. There's no consultation. There's no discussion in the House. There's nothing. They just do it. According to democratic principle in order for the Crown to increase the taxation that it takes from people, it has to have the authority of the House. It has to have the confidence of the House. It has to bring that money bill into the House. It has to request permission of the House. It has to win the vote, and if it doesn't, the government falls.

Here we have a tax grab that just increases itself in incredible kinds of ways. I would like to remind the members that this, in fact, is a carbon levy, which is just another word, as we've seen, for taxation. We're having unilateral taxation here without going back to the House. The Crown is going back about 800 or 900 or a thousand years and abrogating to itself the powers of taxation without representation in the House, without the vote of the House, without even having to bring it forward into the House. It is extremely, extremely troubling that we should be going this far.

The levy table that we're talking about, that would increase the levy rates, is, in fact, a bill that is taxation. This is troubling. This is problematic. This is as antidemocratic as you could possibly ever become. This is a real question of the Crown abrogating to itself the powers of taking funds without having to even speak in the House about it. This is troublesome. Every time the government wants money, it just takes it.

Furthermore, I think that it should be understood in another way. The use of electricity, of fuel, of heating fuels is essential to our lifestyle. We can't just turn off the heat in homes. We can't just tell people, "You can't have any fuel. You can't drive anymore" because then they can't get to their jobs. This becomes a job-killing spinoff. In labour negotiations we reserve some things as essential services and rightly so. We should. Some things are essential in life. The government needs to protect the essential services of power and fuel for transportation, heating people's homes. But having the unlimited ability to just tax without restraint is counter to every principle of this House.

Of course, we see that with this government moving in this way endlessly. We have a budget in which they have raised the funding incredibly. They've removed the debt ceiling. We had a debt ceiling in this province, but the government wants the power of unrestrained taxation, and here we see it in a second form. First, we remove the debt ceiling. Now we give them absolute powers to raise the levy fees, the taxation fees, that are assessed to people. We're not just talking about small amounts of money here. This isn't just small fees in Service Alberta. We're talking about $3 billion, which rises from there in the years to come. This is utterly and completely undemocratic.

This carbon levy, this carbon tax, is a burden upon the people. As we saw yesterday, the word "levy" is synonymous with "burden." Tax burdens were the whole reason for battles in England and in parliament to create democracy, and it virtually created, actually, revolutions in that country. The years between 1780 and 1820, as I've said before, were times of great social reform in Britain. They were driven by higher taxation. It was the high taxation of the Crown upon the people that drove much of the social action that actually led to the creation of social action and labour unions and all kinds of things. Here we have a government that wants to raise billions in levy fees at whim of parliament, at the power of the Crown without so much as even bringing it into the House for discussion. I think it's not only antidemocratic; it actually pushes the edge of being anticonstitutional.

Furthermore, the government ties up burdens for all kinds of other people that it doesn't lift a finger to resolve itself. How has the government actually shown others by example that it's reducing its own carbon footprint? Has the government done anything to reduce the number of miles that are going to be driven by government vehicles? Is the government going to turn down the heat in government buildings? Is the government going to do anything real and actual that actually reduces the carbon footprint in this province, or are they just going to set heavy burdens that require everybody else to do it and continue on their merry way, raising taxes and making them pay for it?

They set carbon footprint targets for industry. Where are the carbon footprint targets for government expenses and government vehicles and government buildings? They tell the people to suck it up and change their behaviour. I have yet to see a government footprint baseline and government footprint targets to quit their own carbon emissions. There are no directives to reduce the heat or the mileage or anything. What about all the government ABCs? Has there been any direction to them to actually reduce their carbon footprint? How will this government change its own behaviour if they expect the people to change their behaviour?

We are here asking if the government would amend its arbitrary powers, arbitrary powers of the Crown to tax the people. We have here carbon zealots burdening the people without consultation in an antidemocratic way that they aren't even practising themselves. This is the ultimate in hypocrisy. There are all kinds of people that are going to suffer immensely in this.

In my own riding just this last week I have a charity that is shutting down. Loaves & Fishes is the charity. They are ceasing to operate on July 1. They're transferring their assets to someone else. They've been there for more than 20 years. They provide meals, soup kitchens, school lunches for children, all kinds of other services. They have facilities there, but they're so stressed for finances and are now seeing all of these increased expenses that are coming at them. They're not going to be able to pay their carbon tax. They're not going to be able to pay the increased costs. They feed 350 students a day, and in the economic downturn their income has just been too difficult to get. They say that grants are tight, donations are down, costs are escalating. So they are shutting the doors. They're asking someone else to see if they can take it over. Maybe they can do it, because they can't do it anymore.

Here's a case where the government was contributing about 30 per cent through grants and contracts and getting a hundred per cent social benefit, but now we have a carbon tax that essentially pushes them to the tipping point, where they are not going to be moving forward on this. This is not social licence to tax charities, my friends, to push them into insolvency. They're already on the razor's edge, and now we push them on this.

The authority to give the government absolute, unrestrained, arbitrary, unlimited powers of taxation is completely and entirely and totally wrong. If I could see the government actually changing their own behaviour, I might be a little bit more inspired with this particular kind of a bill. This carbon tax bill is nothing but hypocrisy to the core. I don't see the government practising their own efforts.

They accuse us constantly of not doing anything. Well, I'd like to share with you that I, in fact, spent the money just recently to build a house. It's a smaller house. I spent the money to insulate it to more than double the code. I bought the very best windows possible. Every single light that I put in is an LED light. I did not even put natural gas into my house because I built it oriented to the sun; I get solar energy. I did this all without the need of shrill screaming by the opposition, without the need of a $3 billion punishment tax to persuade me to do this.

People understand this, and to sit over there and say that we don't understand any of it is the ultimate in lunacy. I have probably done more than many of you have done, yet you accuse us constantly of not participating or understanding or being involved. I think you're the ones who don't understand, who don't participate, who just want to scream and yell, yet personally I don't see any leadership or example on the part of this government doing these things.

You know, global warming has been around for a long, long, long time. I remember being in grade school in 1960 . . .

An Hon. Member: What?

Mr. Orr: In grade school in 1960.

. . . and hearing that there was global warming.

I'd like to share a couple of numbers with you. They're kind of quirky little numbers. When I was born, there were 2.7 billion people in this world. If you multiply the population of 2.7 by its inverse or if you just square it, you end up with 7.2. The population of the world today is approximately 7.2 billion. What that means is that the population of the world in my lifetime has increased by 2.7 times, almost three times. If I am fortunate enough to live a few more years, it will be three times in my lifetime, and then for you to sit over there and say that we don't know anything about this — you know, the population of the world in my lifetime has essentially tripled. You don't think that has an impact on the world we live in? Of course. What do you think? Did you guys just figure this out? Is that why you're so panicked? I mean, this has been going on for years and years.

It's the shrill finger pointing and the chicken clucking and all the rest that discredit your entire message, your entire thing. If you would take a more balanced, sensible approach – there are many people, including the businesses that have just been outlined, including individual people, who are doing everything they can. A $3 billion punishment tax just to try and win your political points doesn't win you any friends or any support in this province. No wonder many of the people in this province look at you and feel like that.

On top of it, I don't know if any of you have been outside this last winter. We just had the warmest winter we've had in years. Everybody loves it. So what does that tell you? Is the world getting any warmer? I mean, this has been going on for – like I said, since 1960 I've known this, and you sit over there and say that we're deniers. You're the deniers. You're the ones who don't get it. [interjections] Glad you're waking up. Glad you're waking up.

I think you've just discovered a reality, and all of a sudden you're panicked. What needs to happen is sane and sensible and realistic solutions, but a $3 billion tax grab, rushed through, that punishes everybody in this province is not a helpful solution, especially when business and individuals are already trying to do it.

Thank you.

Mr. Clark: Wow. That is a tough act to follow, my friends. I'm not sure where to begin. I'm not sure if that's an argument that climate change is real and human caused or that climate change is real but not human caused. I'm not clear on that. Perhaps I'll have to go back and read the Blues, and we can determine for ourselves later.

You know, I wanted to pick up on the comments by the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I want to indicate that I am speaking in favour of this amendment. I think that there's some merit to putting some brakes on future increases to a carbon tax.

The arguments made by the Member for Calgary-Shaw really were around the need for a carbon tax in general, speaking about Mr. Dinning and his comments recently. I don't think, on this amendment, certainly from this seat, that we are in any way, that I am in any way questioning the need for a carbon tax. I've said it before, and I'll say it again: I support a carbon tax in Alberta. I'm not sure that I support this carbon tax. I think we need to not selectively read the comments of Mr. Dinning either. It's important to read the entire article and his comments around carbon taxation. The fundamental economics that he's talking about I absolutely agree with and I embrace. If you want to incent innovation, if you want people to avoid a cost, you make it cost more. That is really what Mr. Dinning and what the Ecofiscal Commission are talking about, and that is a carbon tax but not necessarily this carbon tax.

Why I support this amendment is that I think it's a good compromise. I think what it allows is for this government to pass a carbon tax with some assurance – and we will be bringing further amendments. I will be bringing a further amendment myself, hopefully this morning. But this as a part of a suite of amendments, I think, could get me onside with actually supporting this carbon tax.

One of the challenges Albertans have is a worry that passing this carbon tax with a government that through regulation could raise this carbon tax at will at some undetermined future date creates concern in the minds of Albertans. If any future increases to the carbon tax needed to go through the Legislative Assembly, I think that's a good compromise and builds trust, builds trust of Albertans that this carbon tax, in fact, will not have unintended consequences. It also allows us, which I think is the intent of the government by scaling in the carbon tax first at $20 and then at $30 a tonne, to figure out exactly what this tax is going to look like in practice, how it actually works.

Some of the concerns we've heard from our friends in Wildrose, some of what I would frankly say are more fantastical concerns, that I don't think are likely to happen – I don't think that the world is going to stop spinning. I'm fairly confident that on January 1, 2017, the sun will still rise, and I think there will still be economic activity. But I think it's a fair question: what if? What if things don't go according to plan? What if this isn't as successful? I think Albertans deserve some opportunity to really understand what this particular tax means for them and to have some assurance that the tax rate will not go up beyond $30 without a proper review by the Legislative Assembly. As the legislation is written now, via an order in council Executive Council can simply, with a stroke of a pen, increase the carbon tax. That's what this amendment addresses.

There has been talk, in fact, if you read the Leach report, of indexing the carbon tax over time. Now, I imagine that what the government envisions through the way their legislation is currently written is to in fact index and incrementally increase to ensure that the carbon tax keeps up with inflation and cost of living. But if that's the case, put that in the legislation. I don't see it in the legislation. I will stand to be corrected if it's in there. Regardless, I think it's important that any future increases to the carbon tax are brought before the Assembly so that all Albertans have an opportunity to debate that and not simply passed by an order in council, which is why I support this amendment.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I just want to rise and clear something up for the House. I appreciate all of the points that have been made, and I appreciate the opposition's desire to ensure that if changes to these rates need to be made, they would need to come through this House in order to do so. I just want to assure the House that that is in fact currently the case in the legislation.

On page 79 of Bill 20 there is a table that sets out the carbon levy rates. It has one column that says "Carbon levy rate for 2017" and then another one that says "Carbon levy rate for 2018 and subsequent years." The rates in this table, being in the legislation, in the schedule, cannot be changed without amending the act. That would require bringing an amendment proposal back to the Legislature. So in order to change the rates that have been set out – $20 a tonne in 2017, $30 a tonne in 2018, continuing into the future – we would have to bring the legislation back. It would have to be opened up, and we would have to have another discussion in the Legislature.

With respect to section 79(1)(e), which was discussed in the amendment, about having the ability to change rates in the regulations, we've confirmed with Treasury Board and Finance officials that this regulation-making power does not apply to carbon levy rates. Basically, the carbon levy rates are there in the legislation, page 79. If you want to change them, we have to come back to the House to do so. So I would say that this particular amendment is unnecessary. As it is unnecessary, there's no point in passing it, so there we go.

I do appreciate the opposition members' desire to tell us that they believe climate change is happening now. I appreciate that. However, I would ask them to go a step further. If you believe that it's happening – and I also appreciate that you've been doing things in your own homes to, you know, make sure that you're using energy efficiently. I know that many of us on this side do, so that's fantastic, but that's not enough. It's not enough to reduce our emissions.

Mr. Taylor: What?

Ms Luff: Well, individuals – we have to do it as a whole society, and we're not doing it.

If you believe that climate change is real and that we want to preserve the environment and that we want to do something about it, my question to you is: what do you propose to do about it? There is broad-based consensus in the economic and scientific community that a carbon price, an economy-wide carbon price is the most efficient way to do this. It's the most effective. It's the most efficient. It's going to have the effect that we want, which is to reduce our emissions, which will help us combat climate change, which will help us adjust our economy in Alberta, adjust to what is a new global economy.

We are dealing with a situation in the economy where we are moving to a carbon-constrained future, and we cannot – we absolutely cannot – continue to do things at the status quo if we want our economy to adapt and diversify and for people to be able to have jobs moving forward. We need to do something to allow our economy to adapt. By saying, "We believe in climate change, but we don't want to do anything about it," you are not helping.

In summary, I would ask the opposition – okay. You believe that climate change is happening. Well, do you want to reduce emissions? Do you want to reduce emissions? Then, if you want to reduce emissions, do we want a more competitive, more efficient, less carbon-intensive future? We live in a particularly resource-based, trade-exposed economy, so in order to minimize carbon leakage and enable us to access markets, we have to show leadership in climate change. This is what we are doing. We are creating jobs. We are reducing emissions. We are making Alberta healthier for Alberta's children.

The amendment is not necessary. You have to open it up. We don't need it. It's already in there.

Thanks very much.

Mr. Hanson: Just very briefly, that clause is not clear. It does give the government an out. If you truly believe that that legislation is already in there, then you should have no problem at all voting for this amendment, which clarifies that. If we really want to do something about climate change, we should be taking our industry standards and bringing them out to the rest of the world and helping them get up to Alberta's standards.

That's all I have to say.

The Chair: Any further speakers to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the main bill.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, there's been a lot of discussion in this House, or some discussion in this House last night, anyway – and it's certainly something that we talked about previously, under the last amendment – about the importance of the perception Albertans have on this particular initiative, on the carbon tax, and, I think, the merits of a carbon tax as a whole.

I've said it before, but again for the record I'll state that I am in favour of a carbon tax. The Alberta Party this past weekend, at our policy convention, in fact, voted in favour of a carbon tax as part of an overall suite of initiatives to ensure that Alberta has a sustainable and economically prosperous future, especially as it relates to electricity generation. This is something that I know is on the minds of not only many Albertans but many around the world as we try to grapple with human-caused climate change. How do we here in Alberta as an emitter but also as innovative, thoughtful citizens address those challenges? How can we truly lead in this area?

While I clearly have said that I am in favour of a carbon tax, one of the most important principles of a successful carbon tax, I believe – and I will make a case here this morning that I believe the evidence shows that for a carbon tax to be successful, it should be truly and genuinely revenue neutral.

With that, I would like to move an amendment, Madam Chair. I will hand this out now and wait for the table to get a copy before I proceed.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 3 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

- (2) The revenue from the carbon levy may only be used
  - (a) for initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases, supporting environmental innovation and supporting Alberta's ability to adapt to climate change, subject to the requirements set out in subsections (3) and (4), or
  - (b) to provide tax rebates, tax credits or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses, and communities.
- (3) For the fiscal year ending March 31, 2017, the revenue from the carbon levy directed to the initiatives outlined in subsection (2)(a) shall not exceed 50% of the total revenue collected in that fiscal year and the revenue directed in the subsequent 4 fiscal years to the same initiatives shall be reduced to the following levels:
  - (a) 40% of total revenue collected in 2017-18;
  - (b) 30% of total revenue collected in 2018-19;

- (c) 20% of total revenue collected in 2019-20;
- (d) 10% of total revenue collected in 2020-21.
- (4) For the fiscal years commencing 2021-22, and thereafter, there shall be no revenue from the carbon levy directed to initiatives outlined in subsection (2)(a).

I will unpack that for you. Just for those of you following along at home on Bill 20, I'm talking about section 3, starting on page 11. It's a long bill, and hopefully that will help.

Really, what we're driving at here – and I would argue that the amendment discussed and defeated last night was to in fact strike subsection (2)(a) entirely, which is probably preferable, where we would make the carbon tax revenue neutral out of the gate. This, I think, is a compromise and, I would hope, something the government would seriously consider, which would gradually make the carbon tax revenue neutral, allow the government to provide direct transfers and to support infrastructure-type projects or other initiatives but to only do so for the first five years of the carbon tax and wean the government's reliance off this over time.

Now, some may say: but, hon. member, shouldn't we be doing things like supporting environmental innovation and an ability to adapt to climate change, et cetera, by doing things like green transit and that sort of thing? While I absolutely, unequivocally support those sorts of activities, I don't believe that the carbon tax is the appropriate way to fund those sorts of activities. I believe that things like transit especially are initiatives that ought to be funded out of the existing capital plan.

What this does is that it enforces fiscal discipline on the government. It avoids the temptation, either real or perceived – and I would argue in this case it's real – for the government to borrow from the carbon tax, to use the carbon tax, to lean on that to fund what really ought to be core government programs. It resists that temptation. In reality it resists that temptation. In the perception of Albertans it's equally and, I would even argue, perhaps more important that Albertans then believe that the carbon tax is not a tax grab. Now, remember the frame that I'm coming at this from. I believe a carbon tax is a good thing. I believe it's time. I believe it's the right tool, but it has to be deployed the right way.

If Albertans don't have faith in the carbon tax, it's going to become a real mess. It's going to become a mess for this government, and there's a risk that what happens here in Alberta will be the same thing that happened in Australia. Australia implemented quite an aggressive carbon tax. A government subsequent to the more left-leaning government, the Labour government, that implemented the carbon tax, a much, much more conservative government, was elected as a result of backlash to that government's carbon tax. Unfortunately, as a result, they've scrapped it entirely, and now Australia is seen as a global laggard on climate change and carbon emission. That's a problem. I don't want my province to be in that position. As a result, I would genuinely encourage this government to consider supporting this amendment.

Now, I want to talk briefly about some argument for why a revenue-neutral carbon tax makes a lot of sense, and I'll refer again to the School of Public Policy briefing paper, volume 9, issue 15, April 2016, by Kenneth J. McKenzie entitled Make the Alberta Carbon Levy Revenue Neutral. It makes the case that I have made now, that a price on carbon emissions . . . (at least partly) reflects the social costs of emissions. Viewed through this price lens, the carbon levy plays an important role in incenting firms and individuals to change their behaviour and move towards less carbon intensive activities.

I'm sure we all agree, and certainly the government side would agree, that that is the objective of a carbon tax. Those are good things. That's what we want.

He talks about:

The second lens . . . of a carbon tax [being] a part of the broad revenue system. Viewed through this tax lens, a carbon tax is not a very good, or efficient, way of generating revenue . . .

I think that's really important for the government to understand, and that is the driving purpose behind my intent here to make this carbon tax revenue neutral.

. . . the carbon tax is applied to a narrower base than . . . [other] taxes. Moreover [those] carbon taxes interact with other taxes in the economy, exacerbating the economic costs associated with those taxes . . .

I want to talk about the economic costs of corporate income tax, and I want to talk about the economic costs of personal income tax.

. . . research shows that the total cost to the economy of raising an additional $1 in revenue through the corporate income tax in Alberta is $3.79 . . .

I'll pause there for a minute. What that means is that every dollar increase to corporate income tax has a negative impact 3.79 times higher. That's not good. For personal income tax the negative impact of each dollar raised through personal income tax is $1.71.

These taxes . . . impose higher costs on the economy than they [generate] in revenue.

That's a negative impact on the economy, corporate and personal taxes.

So if we swap the carbon tax revenue for reductions in personal and corporate tax revenue, that's a net positive to the economy just simply in a straight economic frame, but it has the dual benefit of incenting reductions in carbon emissions and creating a frame where innovation can happen. Let me tell you that if this province is good at one thing, it's innovation. We have a tremendous entrepreneurial culture. We have tremendous technical people, tremendous engineers and scientists and academics and finance folks, who know how to pull that all together. This is a tremendous opportunity for this province. I see that a carbon tax done right can be a tremendous opportunity.

I want to talk briefly about what that actually means in terms of impact on GDP. The Ecofiscal Commission has done a report where they evaluate the effects on GDP growth of various carbon tax options. By far the greatest negative impact on gross domestic product in Alberta is transfers to households. That has a negative impact of .12 per cent of GDP. Comparing that to a corporate tax reduction, it has only a negative .02 per cent impact on GDP. A corporate tax cut has by far – by some measures some would say that it's six times less of an impact on gross domestic product than to use the carbon tax transfers to households. Personal income tax cuts are also better than transfers to households as are investments in clean tech and transitional support to industry. The essential point is that the cut to corporate income tax is by far the best use of carbon tax revenue.

Let's talk, then, about carbon emissions reduction and what we actually expect to achieve, because one may wonder: all right; if we're cutting corporate tax, does that, in turn, increase carbon emissions? Of course, we don't want that. Well, the good news is that cutting corporate tax has very little – actually, if you look at the report, you need to really zoom in on the bar graphs to determine which line is higher. The cuts to corporate income tax actually result in exactly the same or perhaps even greater greenhouse gas emission reductions by the year 2032, direct actual reductions in emissions. The household transfers, corporate income tax, and personal income tax reduction in greenhouse gas emissions are essentially identical. There are substantially more actual reductions of emissions than spending the money on transition support for industry. Technology investment has a slightly higher greenhouse gas emission reduction.

Now, emissions lost from competitiveness or carbon leakage: that would be either individuals or industry choosing to operate in a different jurisdiction yet continuing to emit, which I think, obviously, is an unintended consequence that we really want to avoid. The corporate income tax, in fact, is better than household transfers in that regard, but it's really not material. If you look at this chart – and I'm happy to share it with anyone who would like to see it – it is not a material difference. They are essentially the same thing.

What I'm saying is that if we're going to do a carbon tax, let's do it the right way. By using carbon tax revenue in a truly revenue-neutral way, we will find that we not only reduce carbon emissions; we have the least impact, the least negative impact on our gross domestic product and therefore on our economy.

Let's talk about British Columbia and their revenue-neutral carbon tax. In their budget they produce a very helpful, very simple, very transparent one-page summary of how British Columbia's carbon tax revenue is spent. In fiscal 2015-16 they forecast to collect $1.2 billion in their carbon tax revenue, and they're going to offset that through personal income tax cuts, broken down by low-income climate action tax credit, that they're spending $192 million on; reducing their personal income tax rates by 5 per cent in the first two brackets – that will use $283 million – a northern and rural homeowner benefit; a B.C. seniors' benefit; a small-business venture capital tax credit; a training tax credit.

The general corporate income tax rate has been reduced to 11 per cent from 12. The small-business tax rate has been reduced through the course of the carbon tax from a high of 4.5 per cent in 2008 to 2.5 per cent. The corporate tax small-business threshold was increased from $400,000 to $500,000, which means that that lower corporate small-business tax rate applies on the first $500,000 of earnings, not the first $400,000 of earnings. A digital media tax credit, a training tax credit, scientific research and experimental development tax credit, film incentives, production services tax credit enhanced and extended from an earlier tax credit: again, this is a very transparent, very clear, very straight line from the higher tax that British Columbians pay at the gas pump. Those of you who have travelled to B.C. know what I'm talking about.

That's exactly what the experience is going to be here in Alberta. On January 1, 2017, Albertans will see a 4 and a half cent increase per litre and then a 6 and a half cent increase per litre on January 1, 2018. That is something that they see every single day and that has a direct impact on their pocketbook. Probably, if all goes according to plan, that will in fact impact the choices they make and will have, I would hope, a positive impact on carbon emissions, and that's the goal of this.

If this government can say, "Good news; I am also going to reduce your personal income tax so at the end of the day you keep more of that hard-earned money," Albertans will understand. They'll say: "You know what? I understand what we're doing here." What we're doing is that we're shifting a tax burden from one hand to the other because it's been determined that not only are there societal, social, moral benefits to reducing carbon emissions, but there's also an economic benefit in doing so. It makes sense. We want an incentive for people to work hard. That's a good thing. That's why people come to Alberta, why they stay in Alberta, that tremendously competitive tax rate.

On the corporate tax side I think it's remarkable to note that the least impact on our economy is through corporate tax reductions. I have a real concern that this government has raised corporate taxes from 10 to 12 per cent and, in so doing, I think, has chased away investment. Now, we don't need to be reducing that perhaps even back to 10 per cent, but what if we were able to reduce it by a single per cent? What if we were able to make Alberta's large corporate tax rate tied for the lowest in the country? What if we were able to do that without a negative impact on the economy, in fact, perhaps even a positive impact on the economy? We reduce the risk of tax leakage, of companies choosing either to relocate or to file their taxes legitimately and legally elsewhere in Canada where there's a lower tax rate. At 12 per cent that's a risk. It's a real risk.

Many, many, many accountants make a very good living ensuring that their clients legitimately and legally file their taxes in the lowest cost jurisdiction. For a long time Alberta benefited from that. That is no longer the case with a 12 per cent corporate tax rate. What if we were able to use the carbon tax to reduce the corporate tax rate by even 1 per cent? What I think you will find is that that actually increases the take of corporate taxes in Alberta because it will generate more economic activity. It will result in more companies choosing to file their taxes in Alberta even if the economic activity is the same, but I think that it would ultimately benefit Alberta.

This, my friends, is a win-win-win. It's good for the province, it's good for the economy, and it's good for the Earth. I think that it's good for the government to be able to say: "Not only have we made this carbon tax revenue neutral over time, but we listened to an argument from the opposition. We looked at this amendment, and we said, 'You know what? That does make some sense.' We were thoughtful in how we implemented the carbon tax." Let me tell you, it's sure going to make it a lot easier for me to support your carbon tax.

I'm in favour of a carbon tax in principle. I'm not sure that I'm in favour of this particular carbon tax as it's written because I don't think you've taken the opportunity to benefit Alberta nearly as much as you could have. There's a real opportunity here to do the right thing, not just to accept an opposition amendment for the sake of accepting an opposition amendment but to really be thoughtful about whether or not the carbon tax, as laid out in Bill 20, is in fact the very best it can be. I don't believe it is. There are some elements of this that I really like, but there are elements of this that need fixing. What I suggest that this amendment does is that it fixes a big problem with this carbon tax.

With that, Madam Chair, I will return to my seat. I look forward to the debate and discussion and really, truly encourage the government to adopt this amendment and to move forward on it.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise to speak to amendment A3. There are a couple of things that I have concerns about with respect to the amendment that's before the House here currently. One is the rate at which the Member for Calgary-Elbow is proposing to phase out the amount of revenue that the government is able to spend on initiatives outlined in section 3(2)(a). He's proposing that after five years none of the carbon levy funds that the government collects can be spent on any of the initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases, supporting environmental innovation, and supporting Alberta's ability to adapt to climate change.

My primary concern with this amendment, Madam Chair, is that I think that this phase-out is much too fast. I'm referring back to Dr. Leach's Climate Leadership report, where he says, "Successful implementation of these [kinds of] initiatives... could yield emission reductions of... up to 3 MT/year by 2030.” He is suggesting that we spend money on initiatives related to reducing greenhouse gas emissions over a period of 15 years in order to achieve real carbon emissions reductions. If we were to adopt this amendment, I think that we would limit the government’s ability to spend the money necessary to achieve the reductions that Dr. Leach set out in the climate leadership plan.

I don’t share the Member for Calgary-Elbow’s optimism that if instead of directing the money towards greenhouse gas emissions reductions, we targeted corporate income tax reductions, that would necessarily reduce greenhouse gas emissions as much as the three megatonnes per year. I know that he quoted from the Ecofiscal Commission, and if he were to read the report that they produced in April of 2016, Madam Chair, of course he would see that their recommendations for what to do with the carbon levy fund recommend that personal and corporate income taxes actually be a lower priority than transfers to households and spending on greenhouse gas emissions reductions. I would refer the member to that particular document for that.

Madam Chair, the other issue is, of course, to make sure that those who can afford to pay for these emissions reductions are the ones who are asked to pay for them, right? We are, of course, a progressive government, and I remember during the election campaign that the Alberta Party also ran on a relatively progressive platform. Unfortunately, it seems like they’ve abandoned that since they’ve been elected. Regardless, the idea around introducing these income taxes with the transfers that we’re proposing is that it shifts the burden of paying for the carbon reductions from those who can least afford to pay to those who can most afford to pay, right? Progressive income taxes are something that is broadly supported by the people of Alberta.

When I walk around my riding and I talk about our climate leadership plan, people are very excited about the fact that we have a government here in Alberta that’s finally taking action on addressing climate change. They are looking forward to the government using the carbon levy revenues to actually undertake these kinds of initiatives, that are outlined in the legislation and that the Member for Calgary-Elbow doesn’t want to spend money on after 2021. I would suggest that if we were to adopt this amendment, we would be offside with the opinion of the majority of the people of Alberta because they want the money that we collect, this revenue, to be spent on these kinds of initiatives.

Broadly speaking, Madam Chair, the people of Alberta are in favour of government revenue collected from this levy being spent on energy efficiency programs, being spent on community energy initiatives. You know, the people in my riding are looking forward to seeing solar panels and windmills on rooftops and in fields all across the province, and if we adopt this amendment, we won’t achieve those things. Instead, we will continue to give the corporate tax giveaways that the people of Alberta voted clearly against in 2015.

For those reasons, because this amendment before us would severely limit the ability of the government to achieve the emissions reductions that Dr. Leach set out in his report and because it reverses the progressivity that we have built into the carbon levy program, I urge all of the members in this House to vote down this amendment.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. My apologies to the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who brought forth the amendment, but while we recognize the attempt to compromise here with an ideological government bent on amassing a virtually unlimited slush fund, we cannot support even a phased-out slush fund. That said, if this government can’t even limit themselves to this generous allotment, they simply show just how greedy they are.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you. I want to address some of the issues that the Minister of Advanced Education took with my amendment. You know, we absolutely need to be spending money on green initiatives – absolutely, we do – and we need to be doing that in a way that is transparent for Albertans and very clear to Albertans. One of the great concerns I have with this particular bill is that we have $3.4 billion to be spent on, quote, other initiatives, which the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster last night very eloquently pointed out is precisely, to the dollar, exactly how much we’re spending over the next five years on health facilities. On health facilities we have a very detailed outline in the capital plan of specifically what projects are going to happen, how much money is going to go to each one, where they are, and Albertans are clear on what those benefits are.

I’m really, genuinely – and I hope you take this in the true and sincerest sense in which it is intended – trying to help you succeed with the carbon tax because I believe a carbon tax is a good thing. It’s the right thing to do for Alberta. It’s the right thing to do for the world. I disagree with the Wildrose opposition. I don’t think you’re trying to create a giant slush fund, but the perception of Albertans is that that’s exactly what you’re doing.

It is incumbent on the government to answer these questions before the bill is passed. Like you did with medical assistance in dying, show us the regulations. What are you going to spend the $3.4 billion on? What is Energy Efficiency Alberta going to specifically do for Albertans? How are we going to create incentives for renewable energies? What are you going to spend that money on? When are you going to spend it? Who are you going to spend it on? Does it mean that this government is going to get directly involved in business? Are you going to reregulate the electricity industry to compel renewable energy production? There are so many questions.

You know, with some of the language that was used by the minister, I worry. She talks about corporate tax giveaways. It’s a clear indication of the anticorporate and, I worry, anticapitalist bias of the people in that caucus. When you use language like that – those are your words, not mine – you can see how members on this side and, more importantly, the people of Alberta would get the sense that you’re out to get those evil corporations as opposed to trying to make Alberta truly better by trying to work in true partnership, a sense, from this NDP government, that government knows best: “Trust me. The money will just come from somewhere.” My huge concern with this government is that there’s very little sense of where the money actually comes from.

Why would investors, both within Alberta or from outside Alberta, the rest of the country, and the rest of the world, anyone or any institution, put money into Alberta to generate economic activity and to create jobs? There is a sense over there that money just happens, that investment just happens: don’t worry; those rich folks will just take care of themselves. Well, you know what? If we don’t create the right frame for economic activity in Alberta, those companies and that investment will go somewhere else. Right now there are billions of dollars – billions of dollars – on the sideline waiting to invest in renewable energy somewhere. Those dollars don't necessarily need to flow to Alberta if we don't create the right frame.

I have so many questions on renewable electricity. We absolutely ought to have renewable energy built in this province. We have tremendous assets. We have a lot of wind, and we have a lot of sun, in southern Alberta especially. There's a lot of opportunity. We have opportunity for geothermal production here. If there's anything we know how to do in this province, it's how to drill a hole in the ground. We can do those things. If we get it right, there's great opportunity. But how? When? We're being asked here to pass Bill 20. What I'm trying to do is narrow the focus of the bill to ensure that Albertans have faith that we get this thing right on renewable energy.

How much government support is going to be required to incent the over $8 billion in private-sector investment required to overcome the coal retirements? By the way and for the record, I'm on the record as being in favour of eliminating coal-fired electricity in Alberta. It's time to do that for all the reasons that we've heard outlined in this House. But if we don't get it right, with the proper mix of gas and renewables, we will not achieve the objective without either compromising Alberta's electricity grid or costing Albertans millions if not billions of dollars.

How do you ensure that we don't jeopardize the reliability and competitiveness? How much support will you provide to natural gas fired generators or cogen or something else to provide that baseload? How will you manage that coal retirement bulge between 2025 and 2030? The federal regulations will still see six coal-fired plants on stream by 2030, but most of them are going to drop off a cliff, if you will, after 2025. What happens? Are you just sort of crossing your fingers and saying, "Well, that's nine years from now; we'll figure it out"? These are important questions that we need answers to before we can support this bill.

What about those coal PPAs, those power purchase agreements? I worry that this government is about to file suit against the PPA companies returning their power purchase agreements against advice of counsel, which is saying: look, we're going to spend hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars on fighting these PPAs being returned, even though we know we're going to lose, just so the government can save face. Is that really what you're going to do?

Will the carbon emissions from this plan actually meet our Paris commitments? This government hasn't been clear on that. We don't know. We know they're going to reduce carbon emissions – we hope – by 2030. Will it actually get there? Will we need more? How are you going to actually measure, physically measure, and report carbon emissions? Have you done modelling on the economic impacts, good and bad, of a carbon tax? If you've done that, will you release the details to Albertans so we can all see it?

What is the role of Energy Efficiency Alberta? What specific programs are you going to deliver? Are Albertans going to get a rebate to buy a Tesla? Are we going to get rebates to retrofit windows or put geothermal energy in our home? When is that going to happen? That's $645 million, $45 million of which is going to be spent in this fiscal year. What's that for? How can we support the bill if we don't know that?

How are you going to achieve that 30 per cent renewable energy target? What if 26 per cent is the sweet spot where costs are not too high, reliability is still there, and we still achieve carbon emission reduction? Does that make sense? Or are you locked in on 30 per cent because it's a nice round number? What if 28 per cent makes more sense? What if 35 per cent is possible? Is that a hard-and-fast number? How do we know? That's the problem.

Back to the amendment. What I am trying to do through this amendment is increase the faith of Albertans in this legislation. By saying that Albertans will be rewarded by reducing personal and corporate tax and by having the economics to back it up, that's going to help this bill be seen as more palatable to Albertans, and it will make this government's job easier to sell the merits of this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Moving back onto the bill, the hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm rising today to speak about the climate leadership implementation, and I was very glad to see something put forward. I will say this: I agree wholeheartedly that we need to act on emissions. Our caucus fully accepts the science of man-made climate change. We believe that climate change is real, it's happening now, and we need to have a plan in a province that is a high emitter.

You know, one of the things that concerns me a little bit when we all stand to speak in this House is that oftentimes there is a level of intolerance in the conversation – and it happens on both sides – but the idea that opposition folks in here would question Bill 20 is not akin to questioning the science of climate change. It is a conversation for those of us who think that carbon pricing should be a policy in Alberta – in fact, Alberta was the first jurisdiction in Canada to do that already – not a conversation about whether we think there should be carbon pricing but a conversation about Bill 20 and whether we think Bill 20 actually hits the mark.

You know, in that conversation I think one of the things that I have struggled with – and, of course, the Member for Calgary-Elbow put it very eloquently as well – is some of the issues around outcomes. We and Albertans have to have confidence that the tools are in place to measure the outcomes, and this bill, of course, has to definitely deal with the questions that we have now. You're assuming that this bill takes care of all the questions that Albertans have, and those of us on this side still feel that there are questions. Are we having a conversation about greater efficiency, are we having a conversation about reduced utilization, or is this a blend of both? Is this bill dealing with both of those things?

Now, I would argue that a conversation about greater efficiency is a hugely important conversation to be having right now and also a conversation about fairness. Does this bill make sure that everyone is sharing the burden of responsibility for carbon emissions? That's another question that I'm not sure we have answered. You know, when we talk about a cap on private vehicle emissions or power plant emissions or, you know, as the Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned, we talk about reducing income tax, we're talking about fairness. Any piece of legislation we talk about here has to strike a balance. So when we stand to talk about where we think that balance hasn't been met, we are not disputing whether we should have a bill that deals with climate leadership. In fact, we welcome a bill that deals with climate leadership. It's whether this bill is effective in doing it the way it needs to be done in this province.

Certainly, you know, I've had concerns about the fact that the majority of people who are getting a rebate in this province don't realistically have an incentive to reduce their emissions at all. Sixty per cent of people get a rebate in the province but only after the Alberta government creates a huge bureaucratic infrastructure to collect and then redistribute this money. You know, it just doesn't seem exactly – I'm not sure what the word is – efficient. It's cumbersome to the people receiving the rebate and expensive for those who are paying the freight on that. Sure, you're getting money back, and if you spend less on, say, fuel for your vehicle, it's a double win, but I'm not a hundred per cent sure that's going to be the end result here.

I think that with some amendments this is a workable plan. I'm not standing here and saying that this is a terrible plan and walking away without any opportunity to say: hey, we have some amendments, and we are honestly here to sit at the table and to help make it better.

You know, when we talk about – I think that the Member for Calgary-Elbow mentioned it – coal, certainly that's a concern for us. I absolutely agree we need to move away from coal-fired electricity, but we also need to make sure that we focus on making sure Albertans' power bills aren't an undue hardship as a result. That's what we talk about when we talk about balance. The carbon rebates will be a very cold comfort when electricity rates explode. So the question is: are we seeing something here that tells us that electricity bills will be kept at a reasonable rate? I'm not sure that that question has been answered here, too.

Was a cost-benefit analysis done? Was it done before the decision was made to move forward? If so, where is it? Why can't we see it? The cost of implementing renewables is high. What is the economic impact of the early phase-out of coal? All of these are questions that we are struggling with here, for those of us who absolutely embrace the idea of a climate leadership implementation but just wonder how this plays out.

Yes, we are moving to a low-carbon future. Yes, it is a great thing, but we need to do this with a sensitivity to the balance that keeps our province healthy. We need to be responsible stewards of the environment, yes, absolutely, but we also need an energy industry that knows it has the support of our government and the acknowledgement that the standard of living we enjoy here in Alberta is a result of that industry.

So we are offering up amendments, and we hope that you will consider the amendments and take them seriously because they are brought forward with the idea that we want to be at the table for this discussion and that we want to make good things happen.

To that end, I have an amendment, and I'm going to give everyone a chance to eyeball it.

Madam Chair, should I sit for a moment?

The Chair: Just give me a half a second to sort out the amendment.

This will be amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will read the amendment, first off, that you all have in front of you. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by adding the following to section 79:

Minister to report

79.1(1) In this section, "Climate Leadership Plan" means the Government's Climate Leadership Plan announced on November 22, 2015.

(2) No later than 15 days after the commencement of the first sitting in 2019, the Minister shall lay a report before the Legislative Assembly that includes a cost impact assessment of the carbon levy established under this Act and an update on the current status of emissions in the province and how this compares to the emission reduction targets identified in the Climate Leadership Plan.

Review of Act

79.2 Following the tabling of the Minister's report under section 79.1, and no later than January 1, 2020, a committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act and the regulations made thereunder and must submit to the Legislative Assembly, within 6 months after beginning the review, a report that includes the committee's recommendations for amendments to this Act, the regulations made under this Act or any other enactment.

Basically, this amendment calls for the minister to do a full analysis of the carbon tax one year after it's implemented, and it also calls for a legislative standing committee to fully review the carbon tax and to present recommendations two full years after the tax is implemented.

We can stand here all day talking about what could possibly happen down the road. "What if we don't do this amendment? What if we don't do that amendment? What if we haven't changed things? What if we go the way of, you know, word for word, what the government wants to do?" But if it's in the legislation that we have to do an analysis a year from now, we have the opportunity then to look over everything that's happened and to say: "Aha. This isn't working. Here are the unintended consequences. Did we think about those? Is there a point now at which we can amend, going forward, to deal with those unintended consequences?" It is important to make sure that the legislation we pass in here is doing the job it's intended to do, to make changes if that legislation isn't working or if it ends up disproportionately affecting certain groups of Albertans. That's a conversation we are tasked with taking part in all the time in this Legislature because that's our job.

Our caucus is bringing this amendment forward because we believe that climate change is real. It requires action. We need to deal with it. We understand we have a bill here – we have looked very carefully and thoughtfully at this bill – and we have come up with amendments that we feel make the bill stronger. We are realists, we are pragmatists, and we know the government is intent on passing this legislation. We want to help make that legislation better. The government has accepted amendments like this one on Bill 5. They are common sense. They do absolutely nothing to dilute the bill. That is not their intent. We think there is no reason why the government and opposition would not be able to support this reasoned look back a year and two years from now.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, I hadn't talked to the hon. member before she presented this amendment, so I didn't know it was coming, but this is a brilliant idea. I think it's exactly what we need. I would really hope that the government, again, does give this some thought.

What we're trying to do on this side of the House is make this a better bill and improve the chances of it being successful, because success on carbon reduction, action on climate change, is important for our province. I think it's, hopefully, important to the government as well. I think it's important on the face of it. It's important because that's what we're trying to do in this Assembly. I genuinely believe that all of us on this side, all of us in this House, those of you on that side of the House, those of us on this side, are all here because we want Alberta to be a better place. I really think that this legislation comes from your desire and your perspective. Your world view: I believe those are the words that have been used in this Chamber.

But, you know, in all sincerity, you're trying, I think, in your own minds, to do the right thing, and if Albertans don't believe that, you're not going to be successful. This amendment helps Albertans believe that you're doing the right thing because you've put in a thoughtful review, once the act has been put in place, to look back formally, to bring it back before the Assembly in the full view of Albertans, and say: "What works? What doesn't? What intended consequences have worked? Which haven't? What unintended consequences have we learned about, positive and negative?"

When you are bringing in a change this monumental, the risks of unintended consequences are severe, and there have been some real concerns raised on this side of the House. Some of them, I think, are legitimate, some of them perhaps a little fantastical, but we don't know. It's a vacuum. We have no idea. You have no way of defending what might happen, what may be possible, because it hasn't happened yet. Why don't you take the opportunity to pass this amendment, to put this review in place, so those of us in this Assembly and future Assemblies can review this important piece of legislation to make sure it's actually doing what you think and what you claim it's going to do?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm just looking at this amendment, and, you know, it seems to be a reasonable amendment when I take a look at this because we're putting in place this full cost analysis. The member sitting next to me – well, the member that usually sits next to me – had talked in depth about a cost analysis. What had the government done for a cost analysis to go ahead with this? How is it going to impact things like hospitals and schools and businesses? What I like about what's happening here is that it puts in place the review of a full cost analysis on this carbon levy or tax, whichever way you want to look at it, and this whole process when you bring in such a major bill, that's going to affect all Albertans.

This seems to be, to me, a very reasonable, very thoughtful approach to what we should be looking at here. It's got:

A cost impact assessment of the carbon levy established under this Act and an update on the current status of emissions in the province and how this compares to the emission reduction targets identified in the Climate Leadership Plan.

And it shows a sunset clause, that we have to go and review it after that period of time, and if it's not working, then there's a way to stop something if it's a bad bill that comes in.

For these matters, yeah, I can support what they've got on here. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I want to thank the hon. member, my fine colleague for Calgary-North West, for bringing forward a really common-sense sort of amendment. I would like to hear if there is any opposition. So far I have not heard that. Perhaps in the spirit of all-party co-operation this is an amendment that will be received with the intention in which it was given and eloquently stated, as I may suggest, by the hon. Member for Calgary-North West. I appreciate the previous speakers from the Wildrose and also from the Alberta Party, as is often the case, speaking very clearly.

Rather than taking the time of the House to go into many, many details that I would love to go into – I'd like to see this pass – I will simply mention a few quick points. I believe and I've experienced over four terms that it's of the utmost important for any government on any bill to have a mechanism in place for every plan simply to determine whether policies in theory are actually succeeding in practice. With something as important and as fundamentally changing as this is, we need to determine whether after two full years the carbon tax is working after it's been put in place.

It would provide for the minister, whoever the minister happens to be, this government, other governments, to investigate what's been done, what's working, what's not. Let's face it, folks – and you don't have to take it from this side of the House – it's something that all Albertans are going to be very curious about. With often the best of intentions, they want to be able to see. If we talk about new and different ways of doing things and continuing to move towards a transparent sort of not only government but society, there should be nothing stopping us from doing that. Even puppy-monkey-babies, on those silly commercials, know that this is a no-nonsense sort of thing.

Additionally, having a committee of the Legislature – and I would not encourage any of those three stakeholders I mentioned earlier to be part of the committee – will allow us to go back to the bill and see what can be done to make it better. That is the intention of this bill, and I encourage, with great respect and friendliness, all members of this House to get together and vote for this common-sense amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Many speakers on this side have talked about the need to do a cost impact assessment. In fact, we heard that from a lot of municipal leaders at the first MGA meeting last night in Two Hills. They're very concerned about the fact that an assessment was not done, that affects them and reduces their ability to raise funds. All it is: it is really going to cost them money without any real thought as to where they're supposed to come up with the oversight.

We would have preferred that the cost assessment would have been done prior to this bill being introduced rather than in 2019, but that being said, the bill is about accountability, and we do support accountability in government.

My other comment on this amendment is that it suggests that there's a target. All that I can really find in Bill 20 is that it is actually going to result in an increase in carbon to big industry, and I don't really see any reduction plans or specific targets in here that would show a reduction. So we really don't have anything to measure against.

What I do see in the bill are a lot of tax rates, penalties, assessments, warrants for entering property, that kind of thing. I don't really see anything about targets other than the implementation of climate leadership in the title.

That being said, we will be supporting this amendment because it does provide some accountability to this government, and I believe we really do need that here. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment also. I think this is a minimum requirement for a bill of this magnitude. Actually, the minimum should have been that this was done before the bill was brought in, but obviously this government is bound and determined to pound this through. I can't imagine why the government would not support this amendment also.

We're talking about a cost impact assessment "no later than 15 days after the commencement of the first sitting in 2019." By then, Madam Chair, we should have lots of time to have figured out what the impact of this is. I think Albertans would deserve to know what the impact is of such an enormous tax on each and every Albertan.

Of course, it also talks about "an update on the current status of emissions in the province." Now, this government talks about science all the time. This would be just pure science. What did we accomplish with this? What is the status of the emissions? This is just common sense.

Again, it's about analysis. It's about accountability. When you bring in a bill of this magnitude, that's the bare minimum requirement. Really, this is just a little bit of accountability. The analysis should have been done before. We shouldn't be waiting for analysis after. We should have at least some idea of the direction this bill is going to take the province of Alberta.

Of course, this bill is going to create an enormous slush fund for the government, so they have to be held accountable for that, for how that money is spent. Madam Chair, if the government can't do at least this, then I think that obviously would raise even more bells and whistles for Albertans.

Now, when we look at all the other things that this bill can cause as far as trouble for industry and jobs in Alberta, you've got to realize, Madam Chair, that there are a lot of industries in Alberta that rely heavily on natural gas. Food processors, for instance, rely heavily on natural gas for the processing of food. Any time they're working with, say, you know, potatoes or sugar beets or anything like that, where they have to take all that moisture out of the product – of course, we talk about value-added product all the time in this House.

Here in Alberta we would like to take the raw product from the agriculture industry, value add, process it here, but of course this carbon tax doesn't lend itself to encouraging businesses like that to operate here. It's actually a discouragement. It'll only help to drive away these businesses and this investment in Alberta. Should they want to expand their operation, they have to now decide: "Okay. We have a new fiscal environment to work in right now. This is a huge change. Do we make the investment here, or do we make the investment elsewhere, outside the province?" A lot of these large corporations already have their offices outside of Alberta. They chose to have their businesses here in Alberta based on the fiscal reality at the time they set up the business.

We have an enormous advantage here in Alberta. We have cheap natural gas and lots of it. Of course, there are other jurisdictions that have lots of natural gas, too, but we have it right here, and it's clean burning. It's the best energy that we have right now as far as a nonrenewable resource. Why would we want to tax that so heavily and risk driving even more business and more jobs out of Alberta? I don't quite understand that.

Now these companies are going to have to decide not only whether they're going to expand their businesses here or their plants here or whether they want to build a new plant or a new company that might want to come in – "Do we go to another jurisdiction or not?" They can also decide now, some of these companies that have an opportunity to import products from outside of Alberta, either partially or fully produced – what are they going to do? Are they going to choose to do that, to import their products into Alberta because it's not economically feasible to do it here in Alberta? Really, we have no evidence that this cash grab will be effective at carbon reduction.

Now, we talk a lot about diversification. Everybody wants to see an economy that's diversified. Everybody wants to see that. But why can't we leverage what we have here in Alberta to diversify the economy? I always call it, like, killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. We have the goose laying the golden eggs. We have this enormous energy sector here with all the infrastructure to produce this wealth for our province. We can do it two ways. We can take those golden eggs, the revenue from this resource that we have, and we can use that to help diversify the economy, to help create opportunity for corporations to come in and invest in Alberta, create jobs, replace these jobs that we're losing now. Or we can kill the goose. We can crush the most important sector in our economy and then sit here and try to decide: where is the money coming from now? Where is this tax revenue coming from now?

I see that the other side, of course, are laughing and rolling their eyes and everything. I find that offensive, Madam Chair, and I think the people of Alberta feel the same way. We have an enormous problem in this province, over 100,000 job losses, not including the people that are contractors, who don't have the option of collecting unemployment and are sitting at home, not working right now. So we can sit here and laugh about that, but I don't think that they're laughing. I don't think the people of Alberta are laughing at all.

Madam Chair, again, I will be supporting this amendment. The best thing the government could do would be to do the assessment before. They could send this to committee so that we could gain as much information as we can from experts so that we and Albertans can make an informed decision. But the government has chosen not to do either of those, so I think the absolute minimum Albertans could expect from this government on this, if they seem like they have no other agenda but to pound this bill through, the least they could expect is to have an analysis afterwards to find out what it actually did and to show a little bit of accountability.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to the amendment introduced by the hon. member. I think it's really important for us to note that when we're talking about the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, we're looking at a piece of legislation that's gone through thorough public consultation and was developed by economists and people who really do understand the Alberta economy. It's a made-in-Alberta solution that we can be proud of because it's going to diversify Alberta's economy. It's going to create jobs in Alberta, over 3,000 jobs. That's why people like Michael McSweeney, the president and CEO of the Cement Association of Canada, are saying:

Premier Notley and her government have shown leadership in ensuring the Alberta government consults in a meaningful way on climate change with industries across the province. This will ensure that climate policies are designed and implemented correctly from the start and thus can protect the competitiveness of industry and the integrity of the environment. Our environment and our economy needs a price on carbon.

Madam Chair, when we look at these quotes and we look at what people have said about the Climate Leadership Implementation Act and how the act was developed by economists that have suggested things like investing $645 million in the Alberta energy efficiency programs and investing in the economy and revenue recycling throughout our programs, we can be very proud of what this plan accomplishes and how we're going to be moving forward with this.

Of course there's going to be ongoing assessment, Madam Chair. Of course we're going to be reviewing the policies and ongoing matters, but really what we're doing as we move forward is that we've created a plan that will meaningfully reduce emissions in Alberta. What it's going to do is to recycle the revenues from the reduction of those emissions, and it's going to create meaningful renewable energy programs in this province.

All these things taken together are something that we can look at and say that there was absolutely thoughtful and thorough economic analysis put into this because we had Dr. Leach on the panel, because we had Linda Coady on the panel, because we were endorsed by people from industry, from NGOs, from both sides of the aisle, from the economy, and by people like Jim Dinning, the former PC Finance minister.

Madam Chair, when we look at all these pieces together, as a whole, we can see that the Climate Leadership Implementation Act as it stands is absolutely a good way to diversify our economy, will absolutely create 3,000 jobs in the long term, will absolutely invest over $6 billion in the economy over the next five years, and will rebate to two-thirds of Albertans a partial or full rebate on what they're paying on the carbon levy.

Madam Chair, we look at this diversification piece, we look at the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, and we can see that there was very thoughtful and very thorough economic analysis done. This is a plan that isn't just put together and hobbled together; this is a plan that's been well thought out, that from the beginning has been designed with economic analysis in mind, that's been designed to make sure that we would diversify our economy. Its been designed to make sure that we would create green jobs in Alberta, that we would put Albertans back to work, that we would help develop a new industry in Alberta, that we would help develop and foster existing industries in Alberta.

Madam Chair, this plan is a way that we can be proud of our economic and our environmental reputation on a global scale. It's something that makes us proud to be Albertans, and we can put this forward as a piece of legislation that will really further the environmental interests of Alberta and the economic interests of Alberta.

I think that there are a number of things in this amendment that aren't necessary because of all the very thorough economic analysis that's already been done. We've already seen very in-depth analysis and consultation with over 25,000 Albertans and hundreds of people in focus groups through the Climate Leadership report. Because of all this, I must implore all hon. members to please vote against this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, followed by Calgary-North West.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. I would like to speak in favour of this amendment. It seems clear. Based on the lack of acceptance of any of the other amendments, we know the road that we're travelling here. I would just suggest that collaboration is key here on a bill of this magnitude. I'd highly recommend that as we go forward, there's some active listening to what's being said on this side of the House to try and help this bill be better.

I'd like to bring up a point of the hon. Member for Calgary-North West, something that resonated with me specifically. You said: it is doing what it is intended to do. I'd like to expand on that. We're talking about accountability, transparency, and something that the hon. member from across the way just mentioned, something to be proud of. Truly, if that is the intention of this House and of the government, wouldn't you want to show what you've achieved? Truly, wouldn't you want the opportunity to say, "These are the goals, this is what we did, and that's how we did it," and to have those metrics? You are setting the bar for new metrics on an aspect that has never been seen so far with a climate action plan: your plan, your metrics, for the first time at this level.

I would love to know why you would not want to take an amendment that, seriously, gives you the opportunity to show all of Alberta why this worked or, even better, why it didn't so that it can be improved upon. Isn't that the point? Isn't that why we're all here in the first place, for heaven's sake? I'm absolutely mortified that you wouldn't take – this is your ability to say that you did the right thing or, even better, to admit that you were wrong and to fix it. For heaven's sake, like, this gives you an actual way of showing your metrics and what you created.

I'll go to the initiatives here. Maybe I don't have them all, but I'm going to go through a few things here. I've heard this: spearhead innovation of cleaner technology. Isn't that what you want? Wouldn't you like to know where you started, where you went, and how you ended up?

Let's go to another one: invest in cleaner choices. Well, that's wonderful, but I would think that Albertans would want to know how you did it, where you went, how you got that information, what we can learn from that, and improve from there. I've heard in this House a thousand times: we must do better. Okay. Then let's show better or, if you didn't, give Alberta the opportunity to help it be better. That's called collaboration, something that is highly, highly being missed in this discussion right now.

The third thing, leaders in energy efficiency. Show some leadership. Take responsibility for the decisions you're making in here right now, and show us some metrics in a year. It's a year after it's implemented. That's all Albertans are asking for. Show some leadership, show that you made the right decision, and show Albertans that this works. That's called transparency.

The fourth thing is cutting-edge clean technology. Well, just in case you didn't know, we have an excellent record already. Perhaps you could take some lessons from the record that's already presented, go from there, build on what's already there, bring some new ideas forward, and show Albertans what you did. That's called accountability.

The fifth thing is to pursue a low-carbon infrastructure. What plan have we seen so far where that is coming forward? Where is the plan? All we're asking for, all this amendment actually asks for, is for you to show where you started, how you got there, and how we can improve. Take it to heart. The government has that responsibility. It is your job.

That's all I have to say. Thank you so much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View for saying it so well. I wasn't going to rise and respond to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-South West, but I was trying to wrap my head around what he said in response to my amendment.

Now, let's keep in mind for a moment that this amendment is simply a call to do an analysis of this carbon tax a year from now and then for a legislative committee to review it two years from now. If what I'm understanding is correct, the Member for Edmonton-South West said, in a nutshell: the reason we're not even going to consider this amendment is because our legislation is so good that we don't have to look at it a year from now. That was sort of my take-away. I'm not sure if that was anyone else's take-away. I would say this. If that is the only argument against this amendment that you can come up with, you're kind of going for the bronze here.

You know, there are a number of us standing here and saying: "Yes. Let's talk about climate leadership. We're happy to be a part of that conversation. But – hey – how about this? Because we have concerns, let's turn around a year from now and do an analysis and see if it's hitting the mark where you say that it's going to hit the mark." But then you turn around and say: "Guess what? This bill is so good that we don't care what happens on the other side. It's so good that we don't have to listen to a word you say." It just sets off all sorts of alarm bells for me because I'm sure there is at least one person on the other side of this Chamber who actually thinks that makes sense. Why don't you prove you're not a whipped caucus, and why doesn't someone stand up and say: "Hey. Actually, we're okay with doing an analysis of a piece of legislation we brought forward a year from now and taking a look to see if it works"? How about that?

The Chair: I'll recognize Calgary-Elbow, followed by Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think the Member for Calgary-North West said it very well. My challenge to the Member for Edmonton-South West and to this entire government is: how do you know? The best decisions are made with good evidence.

Now, I think there's good evidence that a carbon tax makes a lot of sense, but what if this doesn't have the intended consequences that you want it to have? What if? Each and every one of you on the government backbenches or even the front benches feels that we should just simply take it as an article of faith that this is going to work. How do we know? Once this has been in place for a year, what if it isn't working the way you thought it would work? How will Albertans know and be able to trust that you're not simply ramming through legislation? And you're just going to sit there reading Facebook or tweeting or doing whatever you're doing while we raise objections or ask questions that I think are legitimate questions.

The Official Opposition accuses the government all the time of not consulting Albertans, of ramming through legislation, of just sitting there quietly while we waste our time and our breath on commentary in this House. I don't want that to be true. I want this place to work. I really hope the government does, too. This is the sort of amendment that I think – let's just talk politics for a moment. If you're able to walk out of this House and do a press briefing afterwards and say, "You know, we thought about this amendment, and we accepted some opposition amendments, and we wanted to make the bill as good as it could be; we listened to the opposition because they represent an awful lot of Albertans, too; look at us; aren't we a thoughtful government," isn't that a stronger position? Doesn't that make this a stronger bill? On the face of this amendment it makes it a stronger bill. On the political side, by accepting this amendment, that's also a win for you. So, Brian Topp, if you're out there listening, please, this is a good idea. This is a good idea. Politically I can make that argument, but on the face of the amendment, it's far more important than the politics. On the face of the amendment this is a good idea, to review the legislation.

I'll ask you again: what's the downside? Each and every one of you: listen to your heart of hearts on this one. As private Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta you represent the people who elected you to do the right thing for them and the right thing for the province. This is not a difficult amendment to pass. This is not fundamentally changing the intent of the bill. This is not changing the flow of dollars. This does not change the material impact of the carbon tax. All it does is that it brings it back to the Assembly after a year to ask a very fundamental, simple, and important question: does it work? What have we learned? Albertans get an opportunity to hear that debate in the full view of the Assembly and in the public. That's what we should be doing in this Assembly.

So I'd ask you to please reconsider and support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is an opportunity for the government once again to try to embrace the concept of accountability. If there's anything about this government that's become a pattern, it's that they will not be accountable. I find that absolutely baffling for a party that presents itself as wanting to be a new face of government, new accountability, openness and transparency, but every time we have an opportunity to do that, they take exactly the opposite path. I mean, we had the opportunity for them to embrace a little bit of personal accountability with the debt ceiling. It didn't take long for them to completely retreat from that and end up taking the path of no accountability whatsoever. Here we have in this bill the same situation with permission, authority, freedom to raise the burden of the levy rate. They won't be accountable for it. They just voted down that amendment.

So here we have another opportunity. I mean, this amendment makes complete sense. It's so obvious. The one thing we've asked for again and again is some sort of economic impact assessment, some sort of actual measurement of emissions. If we can't have it before, surely, at least, we could have it after. I would like to suggest that what the government should be doing now is building some baselines to be able to include the actual emissions, even of the government footprint, so that they can begin to show people they've actually reduced some emissions. Here's another opportunity to make themselves accountable to the people, but they've rejected every single amendment in that direction, and here they're about to reject another one, it seems. They're speaking against it.

This bill has huge inequalities, but they refuse to even consider any of those things. Now we hear them saying that the bill is so perfect that they don't need to even look at it after. Will they allow the opportunity to confirm the effectiveness of their own bill, or are they just going to continue in intransigence about all of this? This is a massive tax appropriation by the Crown, without allowing any debate in the House over it in terms of the rate that's raised. They refuse to accept all the amendments. Truly, I mean, this pushes democracy back hundreds of years. This is taxation without representation.

If we can't at least have the debate before on some of these things, why will they not allow it after the fact? It's a great amendment. I can't imagine why anyone wouldn't support it. It's an opportunity for the government to show themselves to the people of Alberta, that they actually do believe in democracy, that they actually are willing to come forward and be seen and be known and be transparent in government. Or not.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. members, pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to adjourn the House until 1:30 this afternoon.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, June 2, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the great honour and privilege of introducing to you and through you to all members of this Assembly Mr. Balbir Choudary and Mrs. Shobha Choudary, the parents of my dear friend Raj, who is like a brother to me in many ways. I'm also happy to introduce Mr. Dheeraj Chawla; his wife, Ruhi Chawla; and their son Samarth Chawla. Dheeraj is a valued friend who has helped me immensely in a variety of areas. I would ask my guests to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my absolute pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly grade 6 classes from St. Benedict school in Leduc in the STAR Catholic school division. Students from each class have recently written to me regarding their upcoming field day that they're all very excited about, and from the sounds of it, it should be a fantastic day. The students are joined here today by parent helpers Dawn Fereday and Mrs. Sherrill Gering and teachers Ms Mandy Hauger and Mrs. Vanessa Jones. I'd ask that all the students, teachers, and parents rise, and can we please give them the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups today?

For guests, the Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Jayson Miller. Jayson is here representing Building Hope, a Nazarene compassionate ministry. He and his colleagues help families in need with hot meals, clothing, and drop-in activities. Building Hope started in the Beverly neighbourhood more than 15 years ago, and they build meaningful relationships and create a sense of community. I thank Jayson for his incredible dedication and ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Les Landry and his service dog, Annie, from Cypress-Medicine Hat. Les has used his personal experience with posttraumatic stress disorder to serve the community through the various organizations he is very active in. Les is also the founding president of Respect the Service Dog, an organization to raise awareness about service dogs in society, and also started the Medicine Hat trauma and stress network. The support network holds weekly meetings and offers a support line for people struggling with PTSD. If Les and Annie could now rise, I ask that all members join me in welcoming him and Annie and wishing them all the best in all their efforts to serve Albertans.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure today to introduce to you and through to the members of this Assembly the Jardine family, who are visiting me from beautiful Calling Lake in Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater. This visit was actually occasioned by Robert Jardine, who is a grade 8 student at Edwin Par composite school, keenly interested in politics, and actually campaigned and won the student vote for me at Edwin Par school. It's great to have supporters like that. He's joined here by his sister Anna, who's a grade 6 student at Landing Trail intermediate school; his mother, Charity Jardine, who is taking a master's in cultural studies from Athabasca University and is the recipient of the Queen Elizabeth scholarship as well as the aboriginal graduate student award and wanted to have an opportunity to thank the government and the people of Alberta for supporting her in her studies; and finally, Ken Jardine, who operates the water treatment plant in Calling Lake. I would ask the Jardines to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you'll indulge me, I have two groups of guests today. The first is Joshua Buck and Blaire Christensen, who are my two very dedicated, hard-working constituency assistants. They do the hard work of making sure that the e-mails, telephone calls, and occasionally a fax get answered when I'm here in session. If they'd please rise. I would like to point out that, much to my being very upset about this, Blaire is actually going to be leaving me this fall to pursue her master of social work at the University of Calgary. If the House would please give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a second guest, thank you very much. It's my good friend Matthew Reeves. I've known Matt for a number of years here. Back at the U of A when I was in the Delta Upsilon fraternity, he was my president. He completed his kinesiology degree at the U of A. Why I really wanted to introduce Matt today is that I consider him to be a hero because over the last few weeks and months – he is a wildfire firefighter – he's been fighting in the Peace River and Slave Lake regions, actually just returning home from his shift last night. He'll be redeployed on Monday to continue to do the good work of protecting Albertans. Thank you, Matt, and could he please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly as well.

The Speaker: Welcome. Hon. member, those staff: do they write those speeches for you?

Are there any other guests today, hon. members? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to other members of this Assembly Mr. Alf White, who is the president of the Boyle Street Community League association in my great constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. He does good work on behalf of his community. I would like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Mason: I have a second, Mr. Speaker. Also today attending the session is Mrs. Angela Johnson, who is a social work student at NorQuest College. She is presently doing her student practicum in my constituency office and has been doing an outstanding job helping my constituents. I'd like Mrs. Johnson to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Now the hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a school group here doing School at the Leg. this week from Good Shepherd in Peace River. They were formally introduced on Tuesday, but they had such a great time here that they're back again today. I would just like to have them stand and receive our welcome again. Thank you for coming back.

The Speaker: Are there any other guests? Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to be able to introduce my lovely wife and daughter, who are here today. This time I actually get to introduce my daughter as well. She's graduated, now, with her education degree from Ambrose college. Would you please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you today staff from Service Alberta who worked on two significant pieces of legislation this session, the Fair Trading Amendment Act, 2016, and An Act to End Predatory Lending. These public servants have worked diligently to provide their best advice and to protect Albertans. Although they are a small group, they have done very heavy lifting to ensure higher standards of fairness for all Albertans. I am very pleased to have them here with us today, and I'll ask them to stand as I call their names. They are Colin Lloyd, assistant deputy minister of consumer and registry services; Di Nugent; Nathan Stelnicki; Sarah Leonard; Claudette Dunsing; Twyla Job; Brent Kornack; Katherine Olson; Trevor Bergen; Robert Whittaker; Scott Seymour; Marty Schwartz; Deb Wagar; and, last but not least, Rob Phillips.

I've saved Mr. Phillips for last not to embarrass him but to point out that this past Tuesday he retired after 34 years of exemplary public service, Mr. Speaker. Rob, with a lifetime of professional achievement now behind you, I want to express the gratitude of myself and this Assembly for your years of diligent public service to the province of Alberta and to all Albertans. Nowhere was this more evident than in your efforts and work on the consultations for and drafting of An Act to End Predatory Lending. We all wish you a long and happy retirement. I'll ask that this House please join me in celebrating these officials and Rob, on his retirement, and give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Farmer's Day

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 100 years ago United Farmers of Alberta recognized the importance of setting aside a special day each year to honour farmers, declaring that every second Friday in June would be Farmer's Day. Formal acknowledgement has not been widely observed, but this year UFA is leading the revitalization of Farmer's Day on June 10. It will be a day to celebrate the unwavering spirit, hard work, and contribution of Alberta's farmers. I have the utmost respect for farmers, and I am proud to come from a family who worked and continue to work the land.

Agriculture in Alberta is our shared history. Sharing this story is more important than ever as we seek to raise the profile of the industry in a challenging economy. My constituency of Leduc-Beaumont is home to an incredibly rich agricultural history, and I'd like to share some of it with you today. The Ellett farm, north of Beaumont, has been growing grain and raising hogs for 129 years, Mr. Speaker. For five generations the Wedmanville farm has raised horses, produced beef, dairy, and grain. We also have the home of the Villettard egg farm. The Goudreau farm near Beaumont was started by some of the first homesteaders to arrive in the area from Montreal in 1894. The Bérubé family dairy farm is home to one of the founding families of Beaumont, operating since the late 1880s.

Mr. Speaker, we must recognize the contribution that farming families like these have made. This province was founded by farmers, it has been built and grown by farmers, and it continues to be supported by farmers. Demand for Alberta's agriculture products is high, and our farmers are world class. This is truly an industry worth celebrating on June 10. So please, everyone, make sure that you recognize our farmers and thank them for working so hard, day in and day out, providing the backbone of this great province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Minister of Municipal Affairs introduced the long-awaited amendments and the new, modernized Municipal Government Act. The MGA hasn't had a thorough review in nearly two decades, and it was high time it was dusted off and looked over.

I've been an active member of my community for more years than I care to admit. I spent several of those years as an active member on boards and as a councillor for the MD of Foothills. Unfortunately, the issue of critical importance that still remains today is the lack of long-term, stable, predictable funding that accounts for inflation and population.

Municipalities are the level of government closest to the people, and Wildrose believes that more decision-making authority should rest with local elected officials. That's why our approach is to empower cities, towns, counties, and municipal districts to meet their own individual planning needs and to take the politics out of funding decisions at the provincial level. I was hopeful that the years of stakeholder consultations and research would have addressed this glaring issue; however, I along with the municipal leaders across the province were disappointed to see that this glaring issue remains today completely ignored by the proposed legislation. Until this issue is addressed in a meaningful and purposeful manner, our municipal partners will continue to bear the burden of this government's neglect.

Albertans deserve to know just how much more they will be paying because of this review. Albertan municipalities deserve better. Albertans deserve better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Edmonton-McClung Summer Fest

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The number of indigenous people living off-reserve in Alberta forms one of the largest and fastest growing segments of our urban residential population. This is certainly true in my suburban constituency of Edmonton-McClung. For example, some elementary schools in my riding comprise 30 per cent First Nations students.

Mr. Speaker, I think our most important responsibility as MLAs is to serve our constituents and bring them together. We should be the bridge between diverse communities by encouraging people to share their food, culture, and knowledge. I'm happy to say that on what I hope will be a bright, sunny afternoon, Sunday, July 10, I will try to do just that by hosting the inaugural Edmonton-McClung summer fest.

Mr. Speaker, organized out of my constituency office, this unique summer fest will feature indigenous drummers, dancers, singers, a hip hop artist, an authentic teepee with elder storytellers, and stick games. We want to share the beautiful First Nations music, dance, ideology, language, and history with our community. We hope that our brothers and sisters from the First Nations will attend in large numbers to celebrate their indigenous heritage and culture. I want to make everyone in my riding fully aware that we have a significant indigenous population living with us and that they bring tremendous value to our community.

One year ago the final report of the truth and reconciliation committee was released. As we honour the truth and engage in a reconciliation of our country, all Canadians should make a special effort to really get to know their indigenous neighbours. Beyond the dancing and drumming, behind the fabulously colourful regalia and elder storytelling, you will find a beautiful people with a rich and rewarding history and an ideology that should occupy a larger and more important space in our Canadian mosaic.

Come discover this for yourself at my first annual summer fest on July 10 in Edmonton-McClung at the Callingwood skate park. We will have bannock, a bouncy bus, and food trucks, too. Bring your whole family for a totally enriching experience and to get to know your First Nations neighbours.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Cultural Heritage Celebrations

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These past months in my constituency have been marked by a number of colourful and vibrant celebrations of culture among different communities. While each festivity was unique, they all involved gathering families eager to share traditions brought to Canada and with the aim of keeping them alive.

One member from a South Asian heritage expressed to me recently that 31 years ago they realized that none of the children in their community knew their traditional songs and dances. Because of that observation, the adults taught the children their traditions, with the end result that I and many other community members had the privilege of watching the enthusiastic youngsters cheerfully demonstrating their heritage, to the delight of their parents and grandparents.

Most of us here have come from somewhere else, and some of us brought with us the traditions of our homeland. I was fortunate to attend an event at the Ukrainian cultural village last summer in which a genealogical project was being celebrated. Plaques were presented to members of families whose home villages and some family history about leaving Ukraine and coming to Canada had been uncovered. As part of the celebration there were Ukrainian dancers, food, and traditional music.

It brought home how important it was to maintain traditions and avoid losing them, as is the case in many cultures. I married into a family with a strong Scottish background who celebrated all things Scottish at regular ceilidhs. However, now that the older family members are gone, the celebrations are mostly memories.

Having the opportunity to witness these celebrations has made me realize how valuable it is to be able to keep and share our traditions with others.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Centennial High School Leadership Conference

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week I had the opportunity to attend the opening ceremonies for the senior high student leadership conference hosted by Centennial high school in the beautiful constituency of Calgary-Shaw. This was the second time that the school has hosted this very important conference, and the timing coincided with the launch of the new Star Wars film, dubbing this event as A New Hope. There's a connection about this particular timing. The school believes that students are the leaders who are going to make this province and this country a better place for the future, hence a new hope.

Opening with dance-offs and cheering chants, this lovely event focused on developing leadership qualities, networking, and building effective, positive relationships among student peer groups. Students had great opportunities to develop skills by listening to distinguished guests and participating in important breakout sessions.

When I visited Centennial leading up to the conference, I saw students diligently preparing for the big event, planning activities for visiting students from neighbouring Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and even as far away as Nunavut and the Northwest Territories. Sadly, due to the wildfires in Fort McMurray the students from those high schools were unable to attend, but, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to share that these students, with their quick thinking and consideration, fundraised approximately $2,000 for their friends in Fort McMurray. This was matched by the Canadian Youth Speakers Bureau as well.

Centennial high school's leadership has always taken an active role in leadership. I saw this during the 2015 election, where they advocated for improving the quality of public education. As I met a few students from around the province, it made me feel great to know that this province will be left in good hands. These students will cherish these memories that they created over the past three days.

I want to thank the leadership teachers from all across the province. Thank you for your time and efforts in organizing and attending this great event that Centennial was very proud to host. I also want to give a special thanks to instructor Brent Dickson from Centennial high, who supported these students throughout the conference's organization, and special recognition to all the students and the parent council, who put in a lot of hard work to make sure this went off without a hitch.

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we begin Oral Question Period today, I'm now prepared to rule on the point of order raised yesterday by the House leader for the third party concerning comments made by the Deputy Premier. This point of order relates to the Deputy Premier's response to the leader of the third party's second supplementary question. As I mentioned yesterday, I opted to defer so that I could review the exchange in Hansard, which can be found on page 1378 of the June 1 edition.

The third-party House leader indicated that the Deputy Premier used unparliamentary language in her answer. I have reviewed the Hansard, and what the Deputy Premier said in response to the question from the leader of the third party is as follows: "Mr. Speaker, the overdramatization of what's happening in this House, if it wasn't so serious and if the misinformation wasn't so out to lunch, would actually be quite funny. But it is so out to lunch and so inflammatory and not honest."

The Deputy Premier characterized the statements by the leader of the third party and perhaps by other members of the Assembly as well as "inflammatory and not honest." However, these comments were in response to the member's statements and perhaps other statements made in the Assembly and not, in fact, directed at the member himself. It is for this reason that I find there is no point of order.

I would like to point out for the . . . [interjections]

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. Could you repeat the last two sentences? It was too loud, and I really want to hear what you . . .

The Speaker: Please don't stand while I'm standing, sir. I believe everyone else heard it. You could read it in Hansard afterwards if you like, sir.

I point out for the information of all members Beauchesne's paragraph 494, which states in part that "it is not unparliamentary temperately to criticize statements made by Members as being contrary to the facts; but no imputation of intentional falsehood is permissible."

I would, however, caution all members of the House, as a general principle of good parliamentary practice, to be conscious of the time and context of phrases such as "and not honest" or, as I have heard told to me but have not personally heard them, statements like "tell the truth" that are being passed across the aisle. Please, hon. members, let's have a better time in this place and be respectful of each other.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP's carbon tax will take billions – billions – out of Albertans' pockets, and where will the money go? A mysterious slush fund that this government has vowed to recycle into unknown programs and initiatives. To be clear, this Premier is asking Albertan families to hand over a thousand dollars a year to the NDP, and there are no standards in place to assure the billions of dollars she is syphoning from the economy will have any direct benefit for this province. How can the Premier take billions out of the pockets of hard-working Alberta families to pay for her very own slush fund?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me begin once again by correcting the record that the number the members opposite continually – continually – insist on using, notwithstanding that they have been provided over and over and over again with the actual real information, is in fact inflammatory and not helpful to a very important debate that we need to have in this House and across this province about how to tackle the issue of climate change. I am very proud that this government is leading that debate not only here in the province but across the country.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, folks across Alberta are losing work. Their personal budgets are shrinking, and the NDP are asking them to forfeit a thousand dollars a year to an unaccountable expenses slush fund with absolutely zero accountability. It's more of the same: lazy and poorly thought-out laws we have come to expect from the NDP government. The Premier did not campaign on this, and now she's asking Albertans to hand over billions of dollars with zero accountability. Again to the Premier: what mechanism will this government put in place to show Albertans that their money will be handled responsibly?

Ms Notley: Well, let me begin, Mr. Speaker, that as we go forward reporting to Albertans on the progress of our plan in diversifying the economy, reducing emissions, and moving Alberta forward in terms of its development of a more progressive, sustainable nonrenewable energy industry, we will do so by using facts, which is exactly what the members opposite refuse to do, and it is no wonder that nobody – nobody – has any faith in these guys on this issue and why they believe that they are all people who deny climate change.

Mr. Smith: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a member of this Assembly was once quoted as saying that good Legislatures are interested in restoring the trust between them and the citizens of the province by moving forward on promises around transparency and accountability. That member was our very own Premier when she was in opposition. But today her government is trying to ram through a bill that rips billions of dollars out of the economy with almost no strings attached. Premier, why should Albertans trust this government to handle their money properly when this government won't answer basic questions on how it will be spent?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, we'll answer questions that are premised on the actual facts. None of the questions that have been asked so far have been, so that is difficult and challenging. What we have talked with Albertans about and what we will continue to do in as open and as transparent a way as possible is how our plan will move Alberta forward, ensuring that low- and middle-income families, indeed 60 per cent of Albertans, get rebates; how we incent better choices in terms of reducing greenhouse gas emissions, both on the part of individuals and companies; and how we move our province forward as a climate change leader and do our part to reduce damaging greenhouse gas emissions, which threaten the health and future of our . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Support for Business

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In February there were over 1,100 personal and business insolvencies in Alberta. In March there were another 1,200 added to that number. These are people's hopes, dreams, and lives going up in smoke. This trend line does not bode well for Albertans who right now are barely holding on. These figures represent an increase of over 40 per cent over the same time last year. Consumer debt in Alberta is on the rise. The numbers don't lie. Premier, why won't the government stop their high-tax, anti-jobs agenda and help their fellow Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We understand that families across this province have in fact been very significantly impacted by the dramatic drop in the price of oil, and we are very concerned about that. That's why our government has taken a balanced, careful approach to addressing the issue. We've maintained public spending and maintained important front-line public services, which Albertans rely on. We've invested significantly in capital construction to stimulate the economy and stimulate our GDP, something that all experts agree on. We've also introduced a very robust jobs plan, which through a number of different programs is going to incent small-business development.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Hunter: Albertans expect this government to do no harm to Alberta's economy. This should go without saying. However, under their watch manufacturing in Alberta has dropped by 15.5 per cent, and now according to Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters there is risk of even more shutdowns. These jobs won't come back if this government raises the cost of manufacturing in Alberta through a punishing carbon tax and soaring electricity bills. Since this government took office, Alberta has lost 25,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector alone. To the Premier: when will this government stop punishing job creators so Albertans can get back to work?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What our government is doing is working with all Albertans to stabilize the slowdown in the economy and to work together with them to build resilience, to promote diversification, and to ensure that we are less vulnerable to the kind of commodity price shocks that we are dealing with right now. Members opposite wanted to take billions of dollars out of the economy through cuts. They wanted to cut teachers. They wanted to cut nurses. They wanted to cut services. They wanted to cut $9 billion from our capital budget. Those things would have hurt jobs even more. We will not go down that path.

Mr. Hunter: Action in a year is not what Albertans need now. Job creators aren't buying this government's empty assurances.

A recent survey by Restaurants Canada found that 75 per cent of Alberta member restaurants expect sales to drop in the next six months. Restaurants Canada specifically cites increased taxes and this government's aggressive minimum wage hike as contributing factors to struggling restaurants. Job creators and everyone else, for that matter, have lost confidence in this government's ability to stimulate growth and create jobs. When will the Premier start listening to the very concerned people of Alberta?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that when the price of oil was a hundred dollars a barrel and our economy was on fire, these folks were also against raising the minimum wage. The fact of the matter is that they don't care about the people who are very vulnerable, whose lives and family are suffering as a result of a very, very low minimum wage, one of the lowest minimum wages in the country. It is abysmal. We will move forward because raising the minimum wage will stimulate the economy, it will ensure greater equality, and it will reduce poverty. Those are the things that we care about.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Alberta College of Paramedics

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, a judicial review of the actions of the Council of the Alberta College of Paramedics has commenced in connection with the termination of the members of the college registration committee on January 22, 2016. The members were terminated without notice or reason and had previously raised concerns to the Minister of Health over inappropriate college governance. Could the minister avoid the expense of a trial in the courts and use her authority to resolve the issues through a Health Disciplines Board investigation instead?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, this is a serious matter, and it is before the courts. That certainly is where the matter rests currently, and I think it's appropriate for it to proceed according to the current process. Commenting further about the specifics around this situation, of course, in the middle of a trial wouldn't be conducive to good legal proceedings.

Mr. Barnes: Given that the minister could – also, section 4 of the Health Disciplines Act requires the director of health disciplines to produce an annual report, and furthermore the act requires that the minister table the report in this Assembly, and the act and its regulations also require the College of Paramedics to produce an annual report by March 31. Now, in June, none of these legal obligations have been met. Will the minister step in to increase transparency and investigate the lack of public reporting and other outstanding issues surrounding this?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm reluctant to trust Wildrose research given the history of things being conveyed that aren't totally untrue but are partially conveyed in a way that could lead somebody to believe that something is improper. I will certainly follow up and ensure that I have received the report and in due course ensure that it is shared publicly. Again, I respect the role that the college plays in providing oversight and governance.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is reluctant to answer the question and the termination of registration committee members followed their sending of a whistle-blower letter to the Deputy Minister of Health in October 2015, this letter allegedly caused retaliatory action against the whistle-blowers, and these whistle-blowers have been required to pay significant out-of-pocket legal expenses to fight this complaint. A review found the complaint against them without merit. Will the minister ensure that whistle-blowers in organizations established by the government of Alberta are protected and specifically address . . .

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It would be inappropriate to go into the very specifics of an HR situation, particularly in this House. I think that both members, employees and employers, deserve respect, and debating specifics of instances in this House is certainly not becoming of the Legislature.

In terms of the policy question that was asked, certainly there is whistle-blower legislation, and our government will ensure that we continue to move forward in a way that honours that, protects those who are vulnerable and who are doing their best to make sure that things are appropriate and forthright, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Correctional Officer PTSD and Suicide Incidence

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, studies show that correctional peace officers may be exposed to 28 critical incidents during their career such as assaults, suicides, and murders. For some officers their career is cut short because of mental health issues and, in too many cases, suicide. [interjections] I'm talking about suicide, and I'm being taunted by the government side.

I'll go straight to the Premier. Given that data is needed to fully understand PTSD and suicide among Alberta correctional peace officers, will your government commit to tracking and collecting data on it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I actually began my legal career doing exactly that, working on behalf of corrections officers who were suffering from PTSD, so I'm very aware of the issue. It's a very important issue, and I'll certainly look to see where the data is on that.

I will say that the issue that was sort of thrown out from this caucus is a good one, though, the degree to which there was an opportunity to talk about PTSD as it impacts corrections officers and the fact that this government specifically rejected that issue and rejected the import of that issue when the matter was brought forward a couple of years ago. We will certainly look to resolving that issue going forward.

Mr. McIver: Well, let's try again, Mr. Speaker, and see if the Premier is interested in helping.

I'll ask the same question again. I'll make it really clear. Will you ensure that data is collected and tracked on corrections officers in regard to the incidence of PTSD and suicide? Will you?

Ms Notley: Well, I think I did answer the question, Mr. Speaker. I actually believe it probably is already tracked, but certainly if it's not, I'll look into it. In fact, that whole issue of the safety of corrections officers is one that's very important to us and one that was missed by the previous government when they addressed the issue of presumptive coverage of certain staffpeople with PTSD. I thank the member for bringing it forward. We will certainly make sure it is tracked. I think it probably is, but if it's not, it would be very easy to make sure it is.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I just wanted to remind you that spring has sprung, and I can feel the flowers growing in the room. As we go through these next few minutes together, I hope we can think about the weather outside.

Mr. McIver: Well, we've had strike 2, Mr. Speaker. The Premier hasn't answered the question twice. She said yes, and then she said that she wasn't sure. I'm going to give the Premier a third chance before she strikes out.

Will you commit to making sure the statistics are tracked for PTSD and suicide for Alberta's corrections officers, and will you report back to this House? I would appreciate a yes or no in the answer.

Thank you.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe I actually said yes in the previous answer, but to be clear, the answer is yes.

One of the things that's really important to understand is that right now many corrections officers do not have their PTSD acknowledged by the very agency that would track it because it is not covered under the legislation that this government brought in and failed to include them in. The presumptive coverage of PTSD does not extend to corrections officers as first responders because the members opposite chose to exclude them. Some of the statistics are difficult to get because many claims have been rejected.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Highway 63 Road Condition and Services

Cortes-Vargas: Mr. Speaker, the voluntary re-entry of Fort McMurray started yesterday, and highway 63 is expected to be incredibly busy as people from Fort McMurray begin to return home. With workers and residents starting to make their way home, it's important that those travelling on the highways to Fort McMurray can also do so in a safe, manageable way. To the Minister of Transportation: was the highway affected by the fire, and can it handle the traffic expected over the next few weeks and months?

The Speaker: The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that the highway infrastructure was not damaged by the wildfire at Fort McMurray. The RCMP removed all barricades on highway 63 yesterday morning. We're tracking vehicle traffic volumes on highways 63 and 881. As of noon today roughly 3,000 vehicles have travelled to Fort McMurray.

I'm pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, that the twinning of highway 63 is now complete, and I think that this will aid us considerably in the smooth reoccupation of the city of Fort McMurray.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that highway 63 is the main way in and out of the city and given that there were understandable but extremely long delays in exiting from the highway when the victims fled their homes, again to the Minister of Transportation: what is the minister doing to ensure that the re-entry process goes as smoothly as possible?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we have more than 100 Alberta Transportation staff that are working closely with the RCMP and the other stakeholders to monitor the traffic flows and the overall conditions on the highway during re-entry. Our traffic management plan is in effect from Anthony Henday Drive all the way to Fort McMurray, with digital message signs along the highways to update drivers with road condition information. We have traffic counters in place, and this will allow us to distribute any information about traffic conditions to the public very quickly.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that some residents who evacuated either had to leave their vehicles along the way or may no longer have access to the vehicles to get back, again to the same minister: what transportation supports and services will be available to help people return home?

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. Though many evacuees do have access to a vehicle, we know that a lot of people had to leave their vehicles behind when they evacuated the city. The Red Cross is there to provide regular bus service to Fort McMurray for people who had to leave their vehicles behind. We've been working to connect people with their abandoned vehicles for the last few weeks, ever since the initial evacuation. People who have abandoned vehicles on the highway can call 310.4455 or visit emergency.alberta.ca for details on how to retrieve their vehicles.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Alberta Serious Incident Response Team

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, 2015 was a record year for the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team, or ASIRT. The oversight agency investigates police misconduct and the deaths of people who are in police custody. The backlog of investigations has led to victims' families waiting for years for answers. Yesterday the executive director admitted that she doesn't know what could be done to speed up the conclusion of ASIRT investigations. To the minister: what is your department's plan to bring closure to the victims' families and address the mounting problems facing ASIRT's backlog?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I can take the question on behalf of the Minister of Justice. In the 2016 budget we have increased funding to ASIRT. That funding will help them add capacity and more employees to their staff, and the availability of that resource will help them deal with the backlog. We are working with our partners to make sure that things are dealt with in a timely fashion.*

Mr. Cyr: Given that the time spent waiting for these investigations to close can be tormenting for victims' families and given that 46 of the 78 cases from 2015 are still open and since the executive director has said that this isn't about staffing levels, again to the minister: how can your department ensure that resources are being properly deployed to remove this backlog?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again, Member, for the question. On behalf of the Minister of Justice I can assure you that it was an issue of capacity, and that's why we have added $3.5 million. We know that they can add more staff with that money and hire investigators who are more experienced in dealing with those issues. I can also assure you that we will work with our partners to make sure that these issues are dealt with in a timely fashion.

Mr. Cyr: This is about ensuring our justice system is efficient and respects the victims and their families. Given that this is a mounting problem, that appears to be getting worse each and every year, and given that the minister has the power to solve this problem, will the minister commit: how will conducting a review of ASIRT develop a path forward in eliminating this backlog?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I think the delivery of justice and the justice system are fundamental to a just society. I can assure you that our government is committed to making sure that we use all of our power and resources to make sure that we get this right.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale Assessments

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In question period yesterday the Human Services minister said, "I will review the SIS." This is great news and a decision that I and many of the stakeholders who reached out to me applaud as it seems their concerns are finally being heard by this government. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the timeline for conducting this review, and when will it be made public for Albertans?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. Yes, I did say in question period that I will review the SIS, supports intensity scale. I also mentioned that it's a huge undertaking that involves 11,000 people on those supports. So we will take the needed and necessary time to make sure that we get it right.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, given that in question period yesterday the minister also said, "We are not keeping the SIS," and given this is a concern that I and the stakeholders that I've been working with have been advocating for, this is a move we applaud. To the Minister of Human Services: will you commit today to immediately suspending the SIS program until your review is complete?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will again reiterate that there are 11,000 people who have gone through the supports intensity scale interviews, and their supports were determined by the previous government through this scale. This was the policy brought by the previous government, and it will take time to change it. I would suggest that the member was in government; she knows it takes time. The only responsible thing would be to help me communicate that these things take time. And I will take that time.

Ms Jansen: I wasn't asking about the review in that question. I was asking you to suspend SIS. It's a simple yes and no.

Mr. Speaker, again, given that yesterday in question period the Minister of Human Services said that he was committed to "bringing in a policy that's more respectful in gauging the supports that people with developmental disabilities need," again to the minister. You have admitted that it's disrespectful. You have said it's going to stop. Will you commit right here and now to meet the families, to stop SIS, and to consult with these very important stakeholders?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. Yes, SIS was disrespectful and brought by the previous government without consulting. [interjections] What I will do: I will work with the stakeholders. I will consult stakeholders. I will consult all those who were impacted by this . . .

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Mr. Sabir: . . . scale and bring in a policy which is more respectful towards persons with disabilities and that gauges their support in a respectful manner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The maintenance enforcement program, or MEP, protects single parents and children after a couple separates. It ensures equality in spousal compensation so financial responsibility is fairly divided between the parents. Section 7 of the MEP includes guidelines for sharing nonspecific health and education expenses, but during a recent review process the government stopped processing these expenses in response to "feedback from the courts and the legal profession." To the minister: why were families left in the lurch during this review, and what safeguards can spouses who have left abusive or unsafe relationships now expect to see?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I can assure the member on behalf of the Minister of Justice that the department officials will work with our community partners, with our police partners to make sure that we put in policies and procedures that work for families.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government responded to the written question, "How many maintenance enforcement accounts were in arrears" as of February 29 of this year? Given that the answer was that, shockingly, more than 34,000 accounts are in arrears, with a balance of almost $650 million owing, and given that this is completely unacceptable, to the Minister of Justice: what is your government doing to get this money back into the pockets of Alberta's single parents, where it belongs?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you. Thank you, Member, for the question. I think it remains a priority for our government to help those in need.

As I stated earlier, we will work with our community partners, and we will work with our enforcement partners to make sure that we bring in processes and policies that work for Albertans and that provide them the supports they need.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, my heart is breaking for single parents right now. Given that the current economic conditions are making things difficult for parents to provide for their kids and given that single parents need child support payments now more than ever and since the minister has stated that a crossjurisdictional MEP enforcement agreement has been signed with other provinces, again to the minister: when will the province start collecting these overdue payments, and when can Alberta families finally expect to see some results?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the member that people who are single parents deserve and need the supports. That's why I mentioned that we will work with our enforcement partners to make sure they have the needed supports. At the same time I want to mention that our government also introduced the Alberta child benefit, which families will start receiving this summer. That will go a long way in helping single parents to bear the costs of raising a child.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Provincial Park Administration and Staffing

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last budget estimates this government repeatedly discussed provincial parks in Alberta. When asked last month about whether the contracts to run these existing parks were tendered or serviced by provincial employees, the answer by the assistant deputy was that Parks uses both depending on cost effectiveness. To the minister: are all provincial parks in Alberta now actually open and fully staffed by either private contractors or provincial employees?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm filling in today for the minister, and I'm afraid I don't know that answer, so I will commit to getting back to you on that.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that for close to 40 years the Cypress Hills ski area was operated by a private contractor who operated and maintained the ski area and given that they ran a successful business that provided consistent rent for the government but that the government chose to run it themselves recently, to the minister: why did the government turn a profitable facility, that saw taxpayers receiving fair rent and good service, into a potential loss? Is this cost effective?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, again, on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Parks I will commit to getting an answer for you on that question.

Mr. Orr: Whereas Consort's Gooseberry Lake Rodeo, near Gooseberry Lake provincial park, will be hosting Canada's largest amateur rodeo in two weeks and given that this park and campground has been run alternately by both private contractors and public employees in the past, again to the minister. This year it appears this park has been downgraded in both quality of maintenance and operations. Why the lack of on-site management this season, and does this mean your government is planning to close or redesignate this park?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Well, thank you again for the question. Mr. Speaker, I actually know where Gooseberry Lake park is. I spent many years there as a child visiting my grandparents, so that one will be of interest to myself as well, and I will get an answer to you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Assisted Dying Regulations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Four days from now Alberta must begin providing medical assistance for what used to be referred to as euthanasia or assisted suicide but is now referred to as assisted death. In the past two days we've had an extraordinary debate on the proposed regulations which will govern this pivotal process. Members of all opposition parties provided a great deal of feedback to the government, so to the Premier: based on the incredible insights that you have been offered in the six hours that were allotted, what specific sections of the regulations will you amend?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We were very pleased to have the debate in the House as well as being the only provincial Legislature in our country debating this at the moment. The cabinet will be reviewing the regulations shortly, and I look forward to sharing them after that discussion.

Mr. Rodney: Given that Alberta will likely approve regulations for medically assisted dying before federal legislation is in place and given that based on the draft regulations Alberta's medical assistance for dying is more closely aligned with the Supreme Court's decision, or the Carter decision, than the proposed federal legislation, Bill C-14, which offers more protection for vulnerable Albertans, to the Minister of Health: what aspects of the regulations are you prepared to change to ensure that they will align with C-14 if it's approved in its present form?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As of Monday the Carter decision on this issue is the law of the land, and all of the regulations that we have put forward comply with that. At the time that the federal government finishes passing their regulatory and legislative framework around this, we will amend any of our regulations that are required to be, to comply with the federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Rodney: Mr. Speaker, we are looking for specifics. Perhaps we'll try it this way. Given that the legal ground for medically assisted death is expected to shift due to the differences between C-14 and Carter and given that Alberta's regulations governing the process of medically assisted death may well have to be changed to reflect future court decisions, to the Associate Minister of Health: will you commit to fully consulting with Albertans about any and all future changes to the regulations?

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. As we've said before, the federal government has the primary responsibility for legislation in this area, and we intend for any of the Alberta framework to comply with the federal legislation. It is the Criminal Code they have jurisdiction over. It's not passing the buck; it's just the way it is.

We will continue to hear from Albertans on this very important and deeply personal issue. It is a very new issue in both medicine and in law, so we will be watching very closely as the situation develops in the coming months and years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

2:30 Mental Health Services for Postsecondary Students

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One in 5 Albertans will experience mental illness in their lifetime, and 1 in every 10 Albertans will struggle with drug or alcohol dependency. Unfortunately, many of these Albertans – our friends, our neighbours, and our family members – will not reach out for help. Given that this can be even more complex for students in college and university, to the Minister of Advanced Education: how is this being addressed?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government has heard first-hand the concerns of Alberta students and administrators on this particular issue, and we recognize just how important mental health supports are for our college and university students. That's why I'm pleased to say that Budget 2016 provides over $3 million to extend mental health grants on campus through to the end of July 2017. These four grants would have otherwise expired very soon. Our government knows that promoting and supporting mental wellness builds a more resilient community and ensures that Alberta students remain healthy and successful in their studies.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that mental health is a pressing issue for many of the students in my constituency attending university and given that they have been lobbying for these mental health supports, can the minister tell the House how these grants will be used?

Mr. Schmidt: Mr. Speaker, the grants will extend previous commitments, and that includes more than a million dollars to the University of Alberta as well as support to the University of Calgary, the University of Lethbridge, and the Alberta Students' Executive Council. This is on top of existing commitments to Mount Royal and MacEwan universities.

These grants are used in a variety of ways. Some fund psychiatrists and psychologists as well as community social workers. Our government continues to work so that mental health and addiction resources can better serve all Albertans, including postsecondary students.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Minister.

To the same minister: given that all of the grants included in Budget 2016 are set to expire after the 2016-2017 school year, how does the minister plan to address this in the long term?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government has heard loud and clear that these supports are important to students, so we intend to create and maintain healthy, supportive campuses over the long term. I'm proud to say that we're committed to learning from the great work that's already been done on campuses across the province. Together with our partners in Health we'll begin building a long-term approach to mental health supports, to be implemented by the time the existing commitments expire.

Carbon Levy

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government just cannot stop bragging about all the endorsements they're getting for their $3 billion carbon tax. They trot out quote after quote from big energy companies, some of our largest emitters, who just love this plan. Why? Well, because they're all exempt from it. Meanwhile families, small businesses, charities, schools, hospitals are all bracing for increased costs on everything. Why is this government making everyday Alberta families foot the bill for this tax on everything at the time when we can least afford it?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, more and more conservatives are coming out in support of having a price on carbon, and they're urging others to join them as well. For example, in an interview with the Calgary Herald former Ralph Klein era Finance minister Jim Dinning said: we as conservatives ... [interjections] We as conservatives should stop dragging our knuckles on this issue. I'd encourage the members opposite to do the same.

Mr. MacIntyre: Yet 68 per cent of Albertans do not share the NDP world view on this, I might add.

Given that this government was elected on a platform of everyone sharing the economic pain and given that this carbon tax is certainly going to bring down a giant helping of economic pain on families and small and medium-sized businesses, why does the minister think that it's fair to ask everyday people to pay more just because she made what the Financial Post calls secret deals to exempt the largest emitters?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish I could thank the member for the question. However, certainly, the language that's being used doesn't reflect the world view of scientists or the majority of Albertans, who actually want us to acknowledge climate change and move forward. I wish the members opposite had a world view that respected climate change, that it's man-made, and that we are moving forward to address it responsibly, including many well-respected conservatives who are urging them to come out of the Stone Age and join the 21st century.

Mr. MacIntyre: Mr. Speaker, there's nothing more ill-timed than an NDP tax grab without public support.

Given that on one hand the environment minister, who helped pen a radical book on protesting our energy sector, stands up in this House and accuses opposition members of denying the science and then, according to the Financial Post, strikes secret backroom deals with the largest emitters to exempt them from the very tax that is supposed to curb their emissions, will anyone other than the minister of anything over there stand up and defend this government's apparent gross hypocrisy in the matter?

The Speaker: I think I see a third point of order.
The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. They are not exempt. Members opposite say that this is going to cost everybody more. What it's going to do is show that we're all doing our part – all doing our part – except for the people who, as former Conservative Finance minister Jim Dinning says, continue to drag their knuckles. [interjections] He also went on to say that carbon levies are the most conservative and business-friendly way to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. I don't know what you have against the business community, but they're onboard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Twice yesterday and twice today we heard the Minister of Health mention the fact that Jim Dinning supports the NDP carbon tax. Then the Member for Calgary-Shaw doubled down and tabled an article again commenting on how great it was to have Mr. Jim Dinning's support for the NDP's carbon tax. Now, this government has never been afraid to ignore facts to strengthen an argument. Mr. Dinning has stated that he supports a revenue-neutral carbon tax. To all the ministers, whoever wants to answer this: is your carbon tax ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Dinning joins a chorus of conservatives like Patrick Brown, Brian Pallister, and Michael Chong, all of whom served in Ottawa with the Leader of the Official Opposition. Certainly, a price on carbon that is going to be reinvested in the local economy to ensure that we move forward on economic diversification, something, I know, that members opposite, the third party, did very little to move forward and the Official Opposition has no intention of doing – instead, we're doing what Albertans want, which is reinvesting that money in diversifying our economy, and I'm very proud of that.

Mr. Gill: The answer is no.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a revenue-neutral carbon tax utilizes the money collected to pay down other taxes to stimulate the economy and given that a $1 decrease in corporate taxes results in almost $3 in increased economic activity and given that a similar $1 decrease in personal income tax results in an increase in economic activity of about $1.40, again to the minister: why not utilize the revenue collected to stimulate the entire economy instead of just the project you deem worthy?

Ms Hoffman: Certainly, we've had conversations in this House around countercyclical funding, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like the third party is pushing for the same thing they did over and over again when they were in government, which is that when times are tough, cut public services, cut revenue, lay off teachers and nurses, and that certainly isn't what Albertans voted for. [interjections] Albertans voted for a stable government that's going to move forward reasonably, that's going to take opportunities that we have to show our leadership by giving rebates to two-thirds of Alberta households and also investing in economic diversification. This is the right way forward.

The Speaker: Maybe I should remind the members: we'll soon be able to get out of here. You can have time together, and won't it be nice to enjoy the warm – very robust today. Very, very robust.

I think we're on the second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that various noted economists have calculated that at $30 per tonne of CO<sub>2</sub> the carbon tax will raise a total of $6 billion in revenue – gentlemen and ladies, hon. members, $6 billion – and given that the government reports $2.6 billion in net revenue, it would seem that the government is not being entirely forthcoming with the rebates already built into the system. Again to the minister: why not clearly share the full details of these rebates with Albertans? If everything is above board, there should be no reason not to.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are many ways that we'll be continuing to communicate with Albertans in an open reporting process as we move forward.

I just want to clarify what I heard in the second question. It sounds like today the third party is in support of a price on carbon. It's nice to hear that they're ready to step up and move forward. But I want to be very clear that what they're saying is that they support a carbon price, but unlike our government, they want to use that revenue for tax breaks for the very rich and for profitable corporations. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, that's not what Albertans voted for.

The Speaker: Members, please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Short-term Personal Loans

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from countless constituents who've reached out to thank our government for taking action to end predatory lending. The stories from these constituents and their experiences with the cycle of poverty are often heartbreaking, and many still have outstanding loans. While they're happy that this new legislation is here, they're anxious about what will happen next. To the Minister of Service Alberta: when does the $15 limit come in, and when do instalment payments come into effect?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm proud to have had Bill 15 passed in this House and to take action on exploitive payday-loan interest rates with widespread support from both sides of this House. I'm proud to report that as of August 1 Alberta will have the lowest cost of borrowing in the country at $15 for every $100 borrowed. That's the max borrowing rate. Lenders won't be able to add on any additional fees or surcharges to customers. We are responsibly phasing in this approach and these changes to payday lending. In November payday borrowers will be able to pay back their loans in instalments with no penalty for early repayment. This will dramatically decrease the annual percentage rate on these loans. These are fair rules that ensure Albertans don't get trapped in vicious cycles of debt.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Given that these changes are coming into effect soon but given that some of my constituents still need supplementary funding to get their families through to their next paycheque and they are interested in the new alternatives that will be available, again to the Minister of Service Alberta: what kinds of alternative credit options are on the horizon for these Albertans?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We know that Albertans need access to short-term, small-dollar loans that won't exploit or gouge them when they have unexpected expenses. That's why we're working with Alberta's credit unions, ATB, community groups, and others to put in strong alternatives. First Calgary Financial Credit Union is leading with their cash crunch loan. This is a microloan product that was piloted in Calgary. They will roll this out in August. It's exciting that Servus Credit Union will also offer short-term loans at significantly lower rates than payday lenders by the end of this year.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that my office has heard from many constituents who are in support of these changes and given that these same Albertans have had many good ideas about additional initiatives that may be helpful, again to the same minister: what has the minister heard in terms of support for these changes?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We've heard loud and clear from Albertans that they wanted us to take action on predatory lending practices. I had the opportunity today to speak with many of our community partners. We took this opportunity to pass An Act to End Predatory Lending and bring in fair rules for responsible lending. Municipalities, mayors, city councillors, local BRZs, credit unions, and community groups all support these changes as well as many of our hon. colleagues from across the aisle. They all agree that this bill, which requires payday lenders to provide financial literacy information to borrowers, offers pathways out of poverty for many who find themselves trapped in a cycle of debt.

Highway 63 Road Condition and Services

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to correct an answer that I gave earlier today in question period. I indicated that the number of vehicles that had entered Fort McMurray was 3,000. Actually, that is just the number so far today. As of this point there have been nearly 8,000 vehicles that have travelled into Fort McMurray as part of the repopulation of the city, and I can tell the House that there's plenty of capacity on the newly twinned highway 63. Traffic is moving smoothly and safely. God willing, that will continue.

The Speaker: Any additional comment?

In 30 seconds we will continue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Special Areas Water Supply Project

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The special areas water supply project has long been studied as a potential irrigation project.

In this dryland region of southeast-central Alberta irrigation is a way to increase economic activity and create financial stability. In that diverse and sometimes difficult if not extreme area the challenges of life can often be overwhelming. Recently the social and human costs of these difficult times in my constituency near Hanna have been high. Like most regions in Alberta, the downturn in the oil and gas sector has had a very real impact on the area this irrigation project would improve. The downturn, when coupled with the impending phase-out of coal plants, would be a one-two devastating economic blow against this region.

We are all genuinely concerned that if agriculture takes any sort of economic hit to add to these challenges, it could become as bad in this region as it was in those Dirty Thirties. That is why this project is so vital to southeast-central Alberta. Mr. Speaker, this large, sustainable, renewable, job-creating irrigation project could be the very lifeblood of renewed hope for this region. It could provide economic leadership and become a shining example for much of Alberta. Responsible agricultural developments such as this could be the new benchmark of broad future development and good environmental stewardship. Irrigated land also has the benefit of establishing reliable, increased plant growth that conventional tillage cannot provide, and therefore it leads to significant increased carbon sequestration.

I encourage any members of this Assembly that wish to learn more to engage with me.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 34(3) I'm rising to advise the House that on the next available Monday written questions 17, 18, 19, 20, and 22 will be accepted, and Written Question 21 will be dealt with.

Also, on the next available Monday motions for returns 36 and 37 will be accepted, and motions for returns 38, 39, and 40 will be dealt with.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to request leave to introduce Bill 23, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been circulated to the opposition parties, and I believe that there is consensus on all of the clauses of the bill. It's our hope that it can be passed, therefore, without debate in the House.

Bill 23 contains a number of noncontentious provisions. I will just briefly list those acts which are affected by this bill: the Business Corporations Act; the Chartered Professional Accountants Act; the Condominium Property Act; the Condominium Property Amendment Act, 2014; the Conflicts of Interest Act; the Fair Trading Act; the Health Care Protection Act; the Health Information Act; the Historical Resources Act; the Insurance Act; the Lobbyists Act; the Mines and Minerals Act; the Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act; the Personal Property Security Act; the Provincial Court Act; the Regulations Act; the Residential Tenancies Act; and the Statutes Amendment Act, 2015.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. I'll try to be brief. The first one is Hansard from November 1, 2012. The Premier made remarks today about Bill 1, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2012, and Hansard shows that it was supported unanimously, including by NDPs.

This report is an article from CBC that indicates that PTSD numbers are not tracked in Alberta though the Premier said that they were at one point today.

I also have the requisite copies of a CBC article entitled PTSD Taking Its Toll on Canada's Prison Guards.

Also, an article by TransAlta essentially challenging the assertion that the health quality issues in Alberta are related to coal-fired generation.

And a Regina Leader-Post article on carbon capture and storage, where Minister McKenna, the federal Liberal minister, says that carbon capture is part of the solution to climate change.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and table the requisite number of copies for a question that was asked on May 25 by the MLA for Calgary-Greenway. He asked an important question about mental health supports for newcomers to Canada, and we've provided information here that is available for all MLAs to share with their constituents. If you have any other questions on the matter, please do reach out to my office. We'd be happy to provide additional information.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms McCuaig-Boyd, Minister of Energy, response to Written Question 12, asked for by Mr. Clark on May 16, 2016: "What is the status as of March 15, 2016, of the approval process for phase 2 of construction for the North West Redwater Partnership upgrader?"

The Speaker: I believe we are at points of order. I think we have three, the first one to the Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of my hon. colleague and speak to the point of order that he raised just before 2 o'clock. The Premier made some statements with respect to the opposition that, in fact, were dealt with yesterday. While I don't have the benefit of the Blues, I believe the statement that the Premier made was something to the effect of: Albertans think you are all climate change deniers. I'll leave it at: Albertans think you are all climate change deniers. Or something to that effect.

Just yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in your ruling from June 1, 2016, on page 1385 of Alberta Hansard: “I would caution you on future use of that particular word, please. It clearly does on occasion create disorder, and I would ask that in the future you be more conscious of when and how it is used.” While the ruling may or may not have determined if it was a point of order, I think what we saw yesterday was clear direction on this very topic, of the government making false accusations against the opposition about the opposition being climate change deniers. I think that the key language here is around “climate change deniers.”

While the Premier may have tried to have been a little bit creative by utilizing the words “all Albertans say,” Mr. Speaker, you as well as all members of this Assembly surely know that many Speakers have ruled that you can’t do indirectly what you aren’t allowed to do directly. What I think is that, in light of your very thoughtful words about members of this House needing to use caution around this issue and the very fact that it’s going to create disorder, the Premier is trying to do indirectly what she may or may not be allowed to do directly. This is not the type of language that is going to create order inside the Chamber.

Part of the other challenge: if, in fact, the Premier is allowed to continue utilizing this new technique in order to be able to call the opposition climate change deniers, what else, then, would the Premier be able to say by saying that all Albertans say that the Official Opposition are liars? Would that then be appropriate? Given the fact that you clearly provided caution when it comes to making false allegations against the opposition just yesterday and then to see the Premier the very next day – it is more than disappointing because it will continue to create disorder when the government makes false allegations against the opposition.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’ll start off by saying that this is not a point of order. This is more of a difference of opinion. Quite frankly, I wrote down what the Premier said as soon as she finished. Now, I don’t have the benefit of the Blues, so this may not be word for word. She said something along the lines of: no wonder Albertans don’t take them credibly and believe they are climate change deniers.

Now, first of all, Mr. Speaker, this is a difference of opinion. This wasn’t an allegation against a member. On June 1 you yourself ruled that it doesn’t apply, 23(i). I quote you from Hansard on page 1385.

I don’t believe that applied because there was no specific reference to a member.

Now, I appreciate where the Opposition House Leader is trying to go with this, Mr. Speaker, but let me just start off by saying that the Premier was speaking from her personal experience. In conversations that she had with Albertans, they told her that they do not take the Official Opposition credibly and believe that they deny the science of climate. The Premier was citing from her personal experience from conversations with Albertans who believe what I just said.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, when the Opposition House Leader talked about using Hansard, basically, the House leader is accusing the Premier of using a lack of caution. Now, the last time I checked, that’s not a point of order, a member using a lack of caution.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a difference of opinion. This is not a point of order.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’d like to offer just a few comments on this matter. I’m actually surprised and more than a little bit disappointed at the comments by the Deputy Government House Leader because what he’s indicating, of course, pending your ruling, sir, is that basically any statement that is indicated in a quote, in a third-party quote, could be used in this House with impunity at any time. It is very clear that the language that is to be used in this House is such that it does not create disorder.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that we have had more than our share of disorder in the House recently and, you know, actually, quite a bit of it. As the hon. Official Opposition House Leader just said, it is not in order to do indirectly what is out of order to be done directly. You know, when the hon. Deputy Government House Leader indicates that the Premier was simply quoting from conversations, that’s not good enough. In fact, if that is ruled to be in order, then all manner of statements could be made in this House by hearsay, stating, “Well, I heard somebody tell me that,” and then continue the statement.

Very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that could create all manner of disorder because then it throws the floodgates wide open to any manner of statement under the sun. Clearly, that’s not a road that we want to go down in this Chamber; therefore, in this situation, given the context of the comments, I believe there is a valid point of order in this case.

The Speaker: I’m sure the hon. members would allow me a moment to read some notes. I’ve been involved in the House with you trying to keep the place a little more . . .

Hon. members, the Opposition House Leader I think used the phrase “creative” to describe circumstances and events which happen in here. That would not be my first word that I would use to describe it. As I indicated just yesterday, I reminded the House that the timing and context with respect to this use of language is an essential part of ruling in these matters, and I was surprised to hear reference in another time, in another context, of similar language. It could be that there needs to be – if I could ask the Deputy Government House Leader that he remind all of his members about the signal that I sent and cautioned yesterday with respect to those phrases and those words in the future and that he ensure that all members of the government caucus are aware of that.

I would remind all of the members. It happens in this instance that we were dealing with the government side versus the opposition. I’ve also sensed and experienced and seen in this room where the opposition was using language which would have the opposite effect. I would therefore caution again. I wish to the Deputy House Leader to please ensure that the message is received by all members. My caution with respect to this matter is that it’s obvious, depending on the interpretation of the receivers, that it is in a high-risk category of causing an uproar in this House, and therefore I would, hon. member, request that you heed that caution.

I will be again applying the principle of time and context. I have on several occasions ruled that it was in order, but as it continues to be brought forward, evidence seems to suggest that it may have an impact on disorder.

I think we have another point of order to rule on, which I have not yet had the time to read.

Mr. Rodney: So that’s a point of order or not a point of order?

The Speaker: I’ve cautioned, hon. member.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you.

The Speaker: There was a second point of order, I believe, by the Government House Leader. Are you prepared to speak to that, hon. member?

Point of Order

Remarks off the Record

Mr. Bilous: Yes, I am. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order on behalf of the Government House Leader. Around 2:20 p.m. the Member for Calgary-Hays shouted across the aisle, "That's not honest," to a response that the Minister of Human Services was delivering. Now, it's bad enough that the Member for Calgary-Hays shouted that once. He shouted it five times in succession: that's not honest; that's not honest; that's not honest; that's not honest.

3:10

An Hon. Member: One more time.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please.

Mr. Bilous: That's not honest.

Mr. Speaker, that allegation wasn't just made to the House; it was made specifically against another member. Standing Order 23(j) – sorry. That's "to create disorder," absolutely. Also, 23(i): "imputes false or unavowed motives to another Member."

Now, on this point of order, Mr. Speaker, I need to clarify, first of all, that the minister's response was talking about a program that was created by the previous government when they were government. So the Member for Calgary-Hays shouting, "That's not honest," first of all, is incorrect. It is wrong that the previous government didn't create a program that the minister was referring to. Second of all, it was directed at a member, not at a party but specifically at the member in his response. Quite frankly, that can be interpreted as the Member for Calgary-Hays calling the Minister of Human Services a liar. If he's saying that he's not honest and he's calling and questioning the integrity of the minister, that can be interpreted as calling the minister a liar.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of rulings that this is unparliamentary language: back on May 8, 2000, Speaker Kowalski – now, the member voluntarily withdrew the remark – March 15, 1995, Speaker Schumacher; February 22, 1995, Acting Speaker Clegg, to which the member voluntarily withdrew; on May 23, 1990, Speaker Carter; on July 21, 1989, Speaker Carter; on November 22, 1983, Speaker Amerongen. These are numerous examples of a member accusing another member of lying or calling him a liar. Again, shouting "That's not honest" at a member when they're answering a question is outright calling them a liar. You know, back on May 23, 1990, the Speaker said,

Hon. members have enough sense to be able to refer to Beauchesne. Shouting "liar" across the Chamber is inappropriate, unparliamentary, and exceedingly rude. Please refrain from doing so.

Mr. Speaker, I request that the Member for Calgary-Hays apologize to the House and the minister for his comment and to withdraw all said comments. Thank you.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to confess that I'm a little confused because just a little earlier this afternoon, basically about an hour and 20 minutes ago, you made a ruling, and it was using the exact same phrase: not honest. I will also point out that my colleague used that exact phrase. He did not say: that's not honest. He said "Not honest" in order to use the exact same phrase. He was very judicious in that.

Some consistency in rulings, of course, is something that we rely upon within this House. I'm familiar with all the precedents that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader just reeled off with regard to honesty. I thought I had made that case yesterday when I raised the point of order when the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Health used the phrase "not honest" to refer to my colleague. You see, Mr. Speaker, earlier this afternoon when the ruling was made that "not honest" could be used in a context when it was not specifically applying to a member but to something that was being said, that seemed to indicate that there is a new standard in our Assembly.

I guess why I'm saying that I'm confused is that, you know, certainly, I had understood that there was a standard in place prior to today, and clearly that standard has, at least in the case of the phrase "not honest," changed, and that's fine. But I would rely – and I'm quite certain that I can speak without risk of contravention here, that surely if a phrase that's spoken by a government member that is ruled parliamentary and is ruled to not be out of order, the same principle should apply to my colleague the Member for Calgary-Hays.

As a result of that, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that based on the ruling that was made just earlier today, I think that the comments are entirely consistent with your rationale. I just feel that if it was not a point of order at 10 to 2, it can't be a point of order at quarter past 3.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a good reminder to all members of the Assembly of what happens when we don't right the wrongs that we've made. The hon. deputy House leader has laid out a very consistent case of the words "not honest" being ruled out of order, and this whole challenge today could have been prevented if the Deputy Premier stood in her place and withdrew the comments that she made yesterday. But, for whatever reason, the government chose not to do that. There is a very true reality that rulings in this Chamber have consequences, and sometimes that means that what is deemed parliamentary will wind up being used by members inside the Chamber. That, I believe, is what happened here today.

I am in complete agreement – while it's my hope that the statement "not honest" won't continue to be used, because I don't think that it's helpful for the overall tenure of the place, the challenge is that we find ourselves with different sets of rules. When that happens, from time to time politics breaks out and members will use those rules to their benefit or to try and get a point across. I am in agreement that this is clearly not a point of order as the context certainly didn't change in the last hour and a half, so I would concur with my colleague from the third party that this isn't a point of order.

The Speaker: I'm sorry. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: No problem. These are trying times for all of us, Mr. Speaker.

It's certainly not every day that I would agree with the hon. Official Opposition House Leader. Sir, I will not waste the time of the House by repeating any of the remarks that have been made. You know, those who might be watching, looking forward to great debate probably are rather irked, and they might be thinking things like: what is good for the goose is good for the gander. The truth of the matter is that yesterday our – oh. Maybe I'll just wait until the Speaker is ready.

The Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. member. Please proceed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much. I won't reiterate the comments. I'll just pick up where I left off.

Yesterday in this House there was a point of order, and the third party House leader apologized and retracted statements even though, sir, he did not have to. He did do so in a matter of seconds. The hon. Official Opposition House Leader mentioned that if that had been done today by the Deputy Premier, we would not be in this place. This is getting deeper and deeper. I think everyone in this room knows that we're having bigger and bigger problems. I dare say that that is the reason why the spring session is usually done in the spring before Victoria Day, with great sincerity, sir. And that's why we have constituency weeks, so we can get out from under the dome.

I wish you good luck in this ruling, sir. The phrase that I used earlier I do believe applies. We're going to be hearing people say: what is good for the goose is good for gander. So I'm anxiously awaiting your ruling on this one.

The Speaker: Hon. member, thank you for the use of the word "luck" in making the decision.

I send the message again: time and context. But I did not hear the comments by the leader of the third party. I could not hear it because there was so much noise in this place that I could not hear it. It is not the first time that I haven't heard these kinds of statements being brought forward. Therefore, on this particular one – but I've got to tell the government again through the deputy House leader: let us try to avoid the use of those kinds of wordings in the House, please, to all of you.

Hon. member, I have to rule that I didn't hear it. It's not in . . .

Mr. McIver: I said it.

The Speaker: I noted that earlier, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: I cannot tell – I said it.

The Speaker: Hon. member, please. Thank you.

Point of order 3. The Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Epithets

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise because at 2:37 the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, in asking a question, said: "the minister of anything over there." I will refer you to House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 613, references to members: "A Minister is referred to by the portfolio he or she holds." That's from Beauchesne's, fourth edition, page 126. For examples: Debates October 6, 1997, page 530; September 16, 2003, page 7446-7447. In the House of Commons Procedure and Practice: "A Member will be requested to withdraw offensive remarks, allegations, or accusations of impropriety directed toward another Member."

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake very intentionally – this wasn't a slip-up. This wasn't wrongfully calling a minister by their improper portfolio. Saying "the minister of anything over there" was done deliberately. It's spelled out very, very clearly. I mean, I could address the fact that this was done to create disorder. It was intentional, and I believe the member should apologize for that. Again, that was intentionally used to cause disorder, as I mentioned. The member should apologize to the House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, on this particular point, I think we need to be cautious about judging the intent of other members. I think, given this particular instance, in this time and context, again I would rule there is no point of order.

Mr. Nixon: You're done the point of order?

The Speaker: I'm done.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek . . . [interjection] I'm not on a point of order anymore. I thought we were moving on.

I seek unanimous consent to quickly revert to introductions for some guests.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be quick. I know there's lots to do this afternoon, but I was out a few moments ago taking a picture with the grade 6 class from Eckville, in the middle of my constituency of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I always enjoy seeing faces from back home, as I know all of us members do, particularly on Thursday, when we get the opportunity to go back home. Eckville is a great place, a great town, and has always treated me well. Interestingly enough, they have the shortest mayor in the entire province and, of course, they have the tallest MLA in the entire province. I would ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Government Motions

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move a number of motions on behalf of the Government House Leader.

Committee Membership Changes

19. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mason:
Be it resolved that the following changes to
  - (a) the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund be approved: that Mr. Coolahan replace Ms Miller;
  - (b) the Standing Committee on Families and Communities be approved: that Ms McKittrick replace Mr. Westhead.

The Speaker: Hon. member, proceed.

Mr. Bilous: With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I'll read the other two motions to the House. No, I will not.

The Speaker: I'm advised that it's one at a time, hon. member.

Is there anyone who wishes to speak to the motion?

[Government Motion 19 carried]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Committee Referral for Child and Youth Advocate Act

20. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mason:

Be it resolved that:

1. The Child and Youth Advocate Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 23 of that act;
2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. In accordance with section 23 of the Child and Youth Advocate Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within one year after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to this matter?

[Government Motion 20 carried]

Committee Referral for Lobbyists Act

21. Mr. Bilous moved on behalf of Mason:

Be it resolved that:

1. The Lobbyists Act be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship and the committee shall be deemed to be the special committee of the Assembly for the purpose of conducting a comprehensive review pursuant to section 21 of that act;
2. The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned or prorogued;
3. In accordance with section 21 of the Lobbyists Act the committee must submit its report to the Assembly within one year after beginning its review, and that report is to include any amendments recommended by the committee.

The Speaker: Anyone wish to speak to the motion?

[Government Motion 21 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Chair: We are on amendment A4. Are there any further speakers to this amendment? The hon. leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise on the amendment to Bill 20, the climate change leadership plan, the amendment, of course, put by my hon. colleague from Calgary-North West. It's an amendment to schedule 1 by adding the following section 79. Of course, it just makes it clear which legislation it is.

Madam Chair, what this will happen to clarify is that a ministerial report would be required one full year after the $30 carbon tax takes effect. I think that this is wise. It's often been talked about and, if not universally, almost universally accepted that a government ought to review its legislation from time to time. That's just good parliamentary practice. It doesn't matter which party is in office. It doesn't matter which province or if it's a federal government or a territory. It's just good legislative practice to do that because, as you know, Madam Chair, as time goes on, societal standards change, technological standards change, incidents happen that change legislators' and members of the public's opinions on how things should be done. So it's good to check in with the world, for lack of a better word. It's good for legislators everywhere to check in with the world once in a while to see if their legislation is still pertinent, whether it's still viable, whether it still makes sense.

Of course, there are a lot of things that, you know, you would think should be checked even though it's fairly self-evident that they don't. I will just give a fairly extreme example for illustration purposes: the fact that you've got to stop at a stop sign. You know what? We should review that once in a while. I don't think the meaning of that, in my view, is going to change for a long time, but legislative practice dictates that something as simple, straightforward, and undeniable as the fact that you need to stop at a stop sign – even that legislation should be checked in on once in a while to make sure that it's still pertinent. I suppose in some world – I may be dead before it happens – when vehicles fly instead of go on the surface, then that actually might be a legitimate thing to check. But my point is that as simple as a stop sign law is, that legislation should be checked out once in a while, too, to see if it's still pertinent.

Flash forward if you will, Madam Chair, to the climate change bill of this government, a complex piece of legislation taxing almost everything that moves in Alberta, affecting all the energy that gets consumed, designed to reduce energy consumption, reduce carbon emissions, designed to transfer massive amounts of wealth from one part of the population to the other, and a whole bunch of other contingencies in there, and it's new for Alberta. It's breaking ground. This isn't an update, in many ways, of previous legislation. It's something very, very new. When you consider that you ought to update from time to time the most rudimentary, basic, obvious, probably-will-never-change legislation like the stop sign legislation, then it seems multiple times more obvious that you should review once in a while some complex pieces of legislation like the climate change legislation.

Right now the government is reviewing, for example, the Municipal Government Act, another complex piece of legislation, and I would say that that probably should have been reviewed at an earlier time than it is. I won't say that they've got it right yet because I haven't had it in my hands long enough, but I will say that that's something the previous government, that I was part of, should have reviewed earlier than we did. I see government members nodding, yes, you should have. They're kind of making my point, Madam Chair, that legislation should be reviewed from time to time. It's good legislative practice.

It seems completely reasonable, completely reasonable to me, that in a complex piece of legislation like the government's Climate Leadership Implementation Act, if I got that right, or climate leadership plan – I think that's what they call it. It's a big piece of legislation. To say that it doesn't need to be reviewed is ridiculous. It's completely ridiculous. In fact, I hope that the government doesn't say that. They should support this because to say that a piece of legislation that new and that complex is perfect – although I think that the Member for Edmonton-South West might have actually said that – would be a little bit arrogant, to think that you couldn't possibly have made any mistakes.

I can assure you, Madam Chair, that I'm not picking on the government. I make mistakes every day. Listen; I don't think anybody in this House will argue with that. I make mistakes every day, sometimes on the simplest of tasks and tasks that I perform every day. I make mistakes. So to ask the government to admit that as great as they think they are and as hard as they say that they've worked on this and as many people as they say that they've talked to, for them to consider whether there's no possible way that they could have made a mistake – one would hope they wouldn't dream of being that stuck on their own perfection. I sincerely hope not.

When you add all of that up, this amendment is to simply take a look after we've had a year's experience with this legislation. I guess it's after the carbon tax goes up to $30, so potentially we'd have more than a full year's experience with the legislation. After we've lived with this legislation for a year or two, why wouldn't you take a peek? Why wouldn't you take a peek? It's just obvious. It's common sense. It's good legislative practice, which is why I'm going to support it. I don't know why any member of this House wouldn't, unless, of course, they think they're perfect.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm really happy to see this amendment for a couple of reasons, and I thank the hon. member for it. This is great stuff. In the world of energy management we have a couple of subdisciplines within that. One of them is known as M and V, and it stands for measurement and verification. In the world of energy management one of the most important things to do is to measure the changes that you have made and verify that the results meet the targets that those changes were intended to meet. If in the measurement and the verification of results it is determined that you have not met what you engineered this change to accomplish, then you go back to the drawing board and you fix it.

As we look to the plans that this government has regarding this carbon tax, they are going to up this carbon tax after the first year. If they do not hit the pause button and actually conduct some serious measurement and verification – measurement of the impact that this carbon tax is having and measurement to determine that it is in fact reducing greenhouse emissions – and then forge on ahead and increase the carbon tax another $10 anyway, that is absolutely a recipe for disaster. Absolutely. It is completely contradictory to all of the principles of energy management.

The people who are certified M and V experts in the world are laughing at what this government is doing. This amendment might quell a little bit of that laughter, but my colleagues that are out there in the field of energy management are laughing at what's going on because this climate action plan, really, in our mind, is an energy management plan. If you do not follow the sound principles that have been proven over time with regard to energy management master planning, the master plan will fail. This plan will fail.

I think this government at the very least owes it to the people of Alberta, given the enormity of this tax, to conduct, I'm going to say, an economic assessment one more time but, more than that, an environmental assessment, too, to determine that, in fact, this carbon tax is resulting in a change in emissions, a sustainable change in emissions, that they are meeting their targets, and that it is actually worth the pain that they are going to be inflicting upon our citizenry, 68 per cent of whom, if you believe the polls, do not support this carbon tax.

In addition to M and V, there is another concept that I want to just pass along here tonight, and that is a process called alpha, beta portfolio-wide. It interconnects with measurement and verification in this way. When you have an idea for an energy savings opportunity or an emissions management opportunity, the concept within the field of energy management is to take this perceived energy savings opportunity or emissions management opportunity and in a very small way enact the changes that you think you want to put in place. That's the alpha test. If the alpha test proves positive, the targets that you determined as you engineered this EMO, emissions management opportunity – if you meet those targets in the alpha test, you go to another site and duplicate the alpha test. Sometimes when we would perform alpha tests, we would say, "We need to tweak it this way," or "We need to tweak it just a little bit that way," and we would.

Then we would take our alpha test plus the tweaks and perform a beta test. Again, during and after the beta test we do M and V, which is measurement and verification of the results. If after the beta test it proved positive, then, and only then, we take those measures, those emissions management measures or energy savings measures, and we duplicate them what's called portfolio-wide, which is right across the full spectrum of, say, this corporation with 18 different branches or this manufacturing company with five different plants that were the same.

In the alpha test we put our theories for improvement to the test. If they prove, we do it again. It's called the beta. If they prove positive again and the results are just as good as the alpha, we go portfolio-wide. I realize this is slow. It takes sometimes many years to do an alpha, beta portfolio-wide, but the whole goal of it is to not waste money, to not waste resources or people's time because these things take an enormous amount of time. The third thing is: don't make a mistake that's irreversible. That's the purpose for alpha, beta portfolio-wide as a protocol for the enactment of energy savings opportunities or emissions management opportunities.

Everything that I just mapped out to you, Madam Chair, this government isn't doing. None of it. Even principle number one in energy management, which is to begin by using less, is not what this government did.

The very first thing that this government did after taking power was to increase the carbon tax under the specified gas emitters regulation by 33 per cent without even conducting any analysis of what that would result in. They still don't understand what that did because it wasn't very many days ago that I heard the Minister of Energy once again saying that the reason why the PPAs were returned to the Balancing Pool was because the cost of electricity is so low when, in fact, all the documentation from the PPA holders to the Balancing Pool all referenced section 4.3(j), a change in law, and the Balancing Pool adjudicated that and said: yes, you are right. That is why. And you have the right to return those PPAs to the Balancing Pool. The lack of understanding, the profound lack of a grasp of PPAs by the Energy minister, by this government is astounding.

Coming back to my original point here, if this government really, really is interested in greenhouse gas reduction, if that's the mission here, and we're going to be taxing Albertans to the tune of billions of dollars, they have an ethical responsibility to measure and verify that they're getting the results that they're supposed to be getting, especially before they go ahead and hit our province with a substantial increase in carbon of $10, from $20 to $30. If they increase the carbon tax from $20 to $30 without proving to anyone that it's doing what they claim it's doing, that is beyond irresponsible. That is unethical. It really is.

I am fully in support of the hon. member's amendment here. Is it going to make Bill 20 palatable? No. Bill 20 is a terrible bill, ill-conceived, ill-timed, and without any targets in it. It's not a plan to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. It's really just nothing more than a tax bill.

Mr. Hanson: It's a tax grab.

Mr. MacIntyre: It's a tax grab. A tax grab. When our province is down, they're hitting our people with a $3 billion tax grab.

In any event, in and of itself, just looking at the face value of this amendment, it's a great amendment. I support it fully. I thank the hon. member for this very wise amendment. I still recommend to every member on the other side of this House that they go enrol at NAIT in the alternative energy program. You need it desperately; desperately you need it.

I could go on, and I'm sure you want me to.

An Hon. Member: I do.

Mr. MacIntyre: You know, when we're in Committee of the Whole like this, the hon. member wants me to continue. Maybe I should bring in the curriculum.

An Hon. Member: Do it.

Mr. MacIntyre: Just do it? If they won't go to school, we'll bring school to them. It's looks like I have some support for that. Madam Chair, it would save them at least about $8,000 in tuition per year, and they could have that course for free. It might be fun, but I'm a hard marker. I'll tell you that right now.

In any event, Madam Chair, we have here an amendment that I wholly support, especially the review part. "Following the tabling of the Minister's report... no later than January 1, 2020, a committee of the Legislative Assembly must begin a comprehensive review of this Act." I honestly and emphatically support the concept of committee work. All of us in this place were sent to this place by the good people of Alberta to do a good job for them. [interjection] Thank you very much. I'm not done yet. I'm just thanking him. He's buttering me up for something, and I'm not sure what it could be.

In any event, Madam Chair, I support both parts of this amendment. I think they're valuable. I would encourage every member to support this, and I will sit down.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to speak in support of this amendment introduced by our hon. Member for Calgary-North West. I think it's a very good amendment, which has been also noted by other members of this House. It doesn't change the original intent of the bill. The amendment introduced simply allows the government to take an honest assessment of where they are at any given time pertaining to the carbon tax. You know, it's an old saying: what doesn't get measured doesn't get done. It's important that we measure, every step of the way, which way we're going.

What I can't understand is why the government would oppose this amendment. It's beyond my scope of thinking. I know the Member for Edmonton-South West is convinced that Bill 20 is the greatest thing since sliced bread and that there are absolutely no faults whatsoever within this document. He and others who remain silent would have us believe that the bill as originally drafted is so perfect, so beyond reproach, and so impervious to any analysis that to even consider a review would be a waste of time.

Here again is where we differ. If the government is so proud of themselves, so convinced that they have changed the landscape of our great province of Alberta, that they are taking leaps and bounds towards a low-carbon economy while reducing emissions and creating jobs, then they should have no problem proving it. If you're so convinced of your inevitable success, would you not want to take a review and hold it in your hands so you can wave it, like: "Look what I created; look what I created"? I think that's fair. "Look at how much better off Alberta is because of our action on this issue."

An Hon. Member: It's almost too easy.

Mr. Gill: Thank you.

If you're afraid of doing this review, then you must not be confident in what the result would be. It is the only logical conclusion, in my opinion. No one is afraid of taking a test where they know the answers. It's the person who didn't study and winged it; that's the person who's afraid.

Also, we heard of all the assessments that this government has done and how they are convinced beyond a doubt that the impact of this tax on hard-working Alberta families will be minimal. Just a short while ago, on May 25, the minister of environment noted that, based on the internal economic analysis they have done, they have estimated that the indirect cost of the new tax to Alberta families will be between $70 and $105 per year. Now, this seems to be a manageable number. The problem is that no one has seen this analysis yet. Have you? I haven't.

The government is taking the approach, "Trust us; trust us; we've got this" instead of being up front, open, honest with the facts. This attitude only becomes clearer as the government speaks against this motion, which only requires a review. We're not changing it. Just review the program. That's it. You haven't been forthcoming with the information you possess. You sell numbers as if they're facts yet will not demonstrate how you came to these numbers so that they can be analyzed and confirmed or debated, like they would be in any other practical approach, any other academic situation.

This amendment is good public policy.

Mrs. Pitt: It's transparency neutral.

Mr. Gill: Absolutely.

It affords the government the opportunity to improve on its failures and celebrate its successes. If something is wrong, we can fix the problem, and if something is going well, keep on going on the same route. Nothing wrong with that. It allows an all-party committee to truly examine the bill and its impact to ensure that this is what's best for Albertans.

If you're really a champion about climate change, if you really want the world to see the NDP world view, why would you oppose this amendment? If we really want to be a leader on climate change and reducing greenhouse gas emissions, why would you oppose this amendment?

Madam Chair, it makes this bill better, and really that's why we're here right now. Everybody has left their families to sit here to make this province better. Why are we not agreeing on something which is really practical?

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. It was interesting to hear the comments earlier from the Member for Edmonton-South West. He talked about how thorough the consultation was, how it was a made-in-Alberta solution, though I wonder why they don't hire more people from Alberta into the government brass there. Anyway, that's what he said about this bill.

He said that it was going to create jobs. Well, that remains to be seen. He said that the leaders in the community around Alberta spoke in favour of this. Of course, those are some of the same ones that stood on the stage with the Premier and the environment minister when they told everybody in Alberta that this was going to be revenue neutral. They seemed to be all onside at that point, but of course they obviously didn't have all the facts.

Now, this review is pretty simple. I mean, this is a thing that businesses do all the time. Even government does this all the time, or it should. It should review the things that it does to see if it was effective in accomplishing the goals that it was supposed to. Let's face it. Hindsight is 20/20. Why wouldn't you want to look at something afterwards with the full advantage of hindsight and do an analysis on it?

Just for instance, if I wanted to travel to the lovely city of Grande Prairie next week, a week from today, June 9, and I wanted to find out: what is the weather going to be like on June 9? I go check out Environment Canada, and I look for June 9, and I see what the weather is going to be like. They do a great job. I mean, that's what they do. Obviously, forecasts are sometimes wrong, but they're gathering the best information they can to get the best data they can to give us the best information. But do you think that it would be even better if I asked Environment Canada on June 10: what was the weather on June 9? I think they would be bang on.

This is what we have here. We have an opportunity to be bang on. We can look at this afterwards and say: "Did this work or not? What did it accomplish?" I think that this is very reasonable. It doesn't change anything in the bill other than to do an analysis on it afterwards.

Now, we can't comment on when we're going to be voting on this amendment, shortly, but this recorded vote – I just want to remind everybody in the House – on whether you supported accountability, transparency, analysis on a bill that you're going to pass yourselves will be in Hansard forever. I just want to make sure that everybody's very clear about that. This is going to be in Hansard forever.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just rising briefly to quickly note that, of course, all major government initiatives are reported on and assessments are provided. For example, the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act requires that all ministries prepare business plans and annual reports, which are presented to the Assembly. These annual reports contain the consolidated financial statements, comparisons of performance results to the business plan, and explanations of any variances between the two. These annual reports also include a report of the Auditor General on the departments' financial statements.

I appreciate the member bringing this amendment forward and the member's intent. Of course, it is the responsibility of specific departments to look after this legislation and to report on their work as part of that. However, as there are reporting mechanisms in place, I will be voting against this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A4 lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:59 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

Mr. Bilous: Madam Chair, I move that we rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Woollard: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. There's been some good debate today, but in light of the fact that there are some severe storms in southern Alberta and that we have many members from all sides of the House that reside throughout the province – they'll be travelling, and we wish everyone to travel safely – for that reason, I move that the House stand adjourned until Monday at 1:30.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:17 p.m.]

Bill Status Report for the 29th Legislature - 2nd Session (2016)

Activity to June 02, 2016

The Bill sponsor's name is in brackets following the Bill title. If it is a money Bill, ($) will appear between the title and the sponsor's name. Numbers following each Reading refer to Hansard pages where the text of debates is found; dates for each Reading are in brackets following the page numbers. Bills numbered 1 to 200 are Government Bills. Bills numbered 201 or higher are Private Members' Public Bills. Bills numbered with a "Pr" prefix are Private Bills.

*An asterisk beside a Bill number indicates an amendment was passed to that Bill; the Committee line shows the precise date of the amendment.

The date a Bill comes into force is indicated in square brackets after the date of Royal Assent. If a Bill comes into force "on proclamation," "with exceptions," or "on various dates," please contact Legislative Counsel, Alberta Justice, for details at (780) 427-2217. The chapter number assigned to the Bill is entered immediately following the date the Bill comes into force. SA indicates Statutes of Alberta; this is followed by the year in which it is included in the statutes, and its chapter number. Please note, Private Bills are not assigned chapter numbers until the conclusion of the Fall Sitings.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, June 6, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. It's a beautiful day.

Let each of us in our own way reflect. Today marks the beginning of Ramadan, the holiest month for Muslims around the world, including thousands of Albertans. Let us reflect on a passage of Ramadan. Fasting has been prescribed for you as it was prescribed for those before you so that you may learn the piety of patience, compassion, gratitude, charity, and flexibility.

Hon. members, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Robert Clark.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature Sobia Shahid. Sobia Shahid is a member of the Provincial Assembly of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Pakistan. She is the chairperson of the Committee on Right to Information and a member of the standing committee on revenue in that Legislature. She has focused her work on improving education and health care in her province, and she also heads the women's youth wing of her organization. She has certainly inspired a new generation of women in politics in Pakistan.

Sobia Shahid is joined by Dr. Muhammad Nauman Zafar and Dr. Shazia Zahir, two physicians related to her. Shazia Zahir is her sister, who just recently migrated from Pakistan to Canada. I welcome them to Canada and this province as well. They are also joined by a family friend, Abdul Hameed Khan, who has been instrumental in getting them here to the Legislature. I ask Mrs. Sobia Shahid, Dr. Zafar, Dr. Zahir, and Abdul Hamid Khan to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members, as some of you may be aware, four long-serving members of the Legislative Assembly security service, or LASS, will be leaving us at the end of this session. The LASS provides a vital service to each and every one of us, keeping the Chamber precincts, the Legislature Building, and the committee meetings safe and secure as well as interacting with the hundreds of visitors who attend session each day.

I'd like to introduce each of the retiring members in turn. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names. Mike deVarenes started with the LASS in May 2006. He formerly spent 27 years with the Edmonton Police Service, working in patrol and the intelligence unit. Paul Warechuk began working with the LASS in January 2001. He came into the position after a 33-year career with the RCMP, which included 16 years with the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. Paul is joined today by his wife, Barbara. Russ Jackson began his employment here in February 2000. He previously spent 32 years as a front-line officer with the EPS and a further five years in communications. Finally, the procession today was led by Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms Gordon Munk. Gord joined the LASS in February 2000, having spent a varied 30-year career with the EPS. Gord has served in his current role since October 2009 and has attended this House with dignity and dedication. Watching from the Speaker's gallery is Gord's wife, Cecilia, his daughter Tracy Neufeld, and her husband, Cody.

In terms of combined years of service with the LASS, the total is 58 years and two months, on top of a further 122 years of aggregate police service, a staggering 180 years of total experience. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that all members please show their appreciation and gratitude to all of these gentlemen for their many years of devoted service. I wish them health and happiness. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Welcome. I know I speak on behalf of all of the Assembly that that applause was very sincere. Thank you for your public service.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the other members of this Assembly several guests from my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood. Mr. Abu Bakr Al-Rabeeah is a grade 9 student at Highlands junior high. He's also a Syrian refugee and is the subject of the book Homes, which tells his story of that horrific experience as well as the challenges and possibilities that he has discovered here in his new home. Accompanying Abu Bakr today is his mother, Nihad Addullah Saadon Al-Tameemi, as well as his ESL teacher from Highlands, Ms Winnie Canuel, who wrote this book based on Abu's story. Also in attendance is the principal of Highlands school, Mr. Brad Burns. I would ask Abu Bakr, his mother, Ms Canuel, and Mr. Burns to please stand and receive the traditional warm greeting of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Kristie Schneider, director of operations for Ghost River Rediscovery Society, a program we'll be hearing more about in my member's statement. I ask Kristie to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you Perrin Michalyszyn, who was a page at this Assembly from 2011 to 2015. He was also the head page from 2014 to 2015. He is currently attending the University of Alberta, pursuing his bachelor of science, in his third year. I would ask him to rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the distinct honour of rising to introduce to this House a group of dedicated individuals who have been advocating for improvements to the PDD system in Alberta. I am honoured to know them and proud to introduce them to this House. I ask them to rise as I call their names: Gary McCallum, Katie McCallum, Sydney Goss, Elizabeth Pollock, Brian Pollock, Ward McRorie, Taisa McRorie, the persistent and amazing Leah McRorie, Jessica Wells, Sheila Roth, James Bannatyne, Leah Lyons, Mike Lyons, Bev Hills, Jamie Post, Kelvin VanDasselaar, Marty Normand, and April DiVito. A warm welcome from all of us in the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Carbon Levy Public Debate

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta we have the right to engage in a vigorous and passionate debate on issues of public policy, but last week nine members of the Official Opposition took that debate to a place that was disappointing, at the very least, and hurtful to 300,000 Albertans. In a blog post they compared the Holodomor to the carbon levy.

I have been honoured to stand witness to the survivors and the victims of this atrocity, and it defies simple logic or basic human decency to compare a crime against humanity to a public policy measure that has already been successfully adopted in many jurisdictions. They have since apologized for the offensive statement and have deleted the post. Regardless, I believe this sad episode is a reminder to all of us of the impact of what we say or write.

The Holodomor was an act of genocide that took the lives of millions of Ukrainian women, men, and children, and 300,000 Albertans are survivors or descendants of those who survived this crime against humanity. When we speak of or write about this atrocity, it should be in one context and only one context. We need to remember the suffering of our fellow human beings, with a unified resolve to prevent it from happening again.

I believe that everyone in this House has come here for the same reason, to serve Albertans to the best of their ability. But when people hear such hurtful and obviously wrong statements by elected officials, they question the motives of us all. That is why I want to be on record today to say that I deplore what happened last week. When members of this House apologize, we accept those apologies at face value, but their sincerity will be judged on their future actions and whether they have learned anything from putting such bizarre, hurtful, and simply wrong comments on the public record.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Ukrainian Heritage

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely proud of my Ukrainian roots. I was a traditional Ukrainian dancer for over 10 years. I was born in and still reside within a vibrant Ukrainian community. My family still follows many of the customs and traditions of our Ukrainian ancestors. As a born and raised Albertan I'm especially lucky to have been able to learn about my heritage from first-generation Ukrainian migrants.

My great-grandmother was born in Kiev. She was part of the first wave of Ukrainian migrants who came to this country in search of a better life. It was only a few years later when genocide was committed against the people of her land. My ancestors narrowly escaped this atrocity.

The men and women who formed this first generation of Ukrainian migrants faced discrimination when they arrived. Anti-Ukrainian sentiment was rampant, and life was not easy as these new settlers established themselves in early Canadian society. They didn't know it then, but they were building a keystone of Canadian life, and they would go on to become one of our most vibrant and proud groups.

My great-grandmother, like so many others, lived through warfare, famine, and discrimination. Her life was defined by the evils of war and hardship. When she saw her generation carry on the traditions of our ancestors, she knew that she had prevailed and that everything she went through was worth while. Today Ukrainian culture is woven into the fabric of our communities.

Recently a column went out with my name on it that inadvertently made light of not just my history but the story of Albertans of Ukrainian heritage across this province. This was wrong, and I speak for all members involved. We apologize unreservedly for this post. We believe that for any political party to try and push an agenda or an attack using the tragedy of the Ukrainian people in the Holodomor is deplorable. Our caucus honours the victims of the Holodomor genocide and stands firmly with the people of the Ukraine as they continue to work against forces who object to their freedom both today and always.

To the Ukrainian people: please accept our heartfelt apology. Thank you.

Ukrainian History Remembrance

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, in my maiden speech, four years ago this week, I related some of my family history. Most members know that I'm very proud of my German heritage, but there's more to that story. My mother's family was German, and she grew up in a village of German Lutherans. But the village wasn't in Germany; it was in Ukraine.

The atrocities suffered by the people of Ukraine at the hands of Joseph Stalin are well known, or at least I thought they were. The Holodomor was cultural genocide of horrific proportions, death by starvation, imposed by a brutal dictator who had no compunction to cause the deaths of millions of innocent men, women, and children. But the atrocities did not end in 1933.

I never met my grandfather, whose name I bear. On November 11, 1936, trucks loaded with Russian soldiers rolled in to my mother's village, and all men aged 16 and older, including my grandfather, were loaded up and taken away, never to be seen again. The German word is "weggeschleppt," which means dragged away. My mother was 14 at the time. For the rest of her life she was haunted by images of that night, until she passed away three years ago.

The suggestion that the Holodomor or the other atrocities carried out on innocent people living in Ukraine are somehow related to a bill that we are debating is an outrage. It insults the memory of those who died, it insults the suffering of those who survived, and it insults the efforts of those who have sought to educate our people on this dark and detestable chapter of human history. To suggest that the Holodomor was somehow the fault of the victims is shocking in its inaccuracy and disrespect. To make that suggestion for political gain is heinous.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, political discourse in this province has not sunk so low.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Medical Assistance in Dying

Ms Luff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to take this opportunity to honour a former constituent of mine, Donna Delorme. Donna was one of the first people who contacted me after I was elected, and her e-mail read:

Congratulations on your win. I'm thrilled for you.

Now, this is a difficult topic I know, but I am one of those disabled people who suffers incredibly 24/7 and want to be first on the list of those allowed doctor assisted death come February 6, 2016.

Donna was a fierce and persistent advocate for medical assistance in dying. She had been diagnosed with MS in her late 20s, and this, along with other complications, led her to being completely bedridden. She spoke out bravely, honestly, and passionately for the right of people to choose their own death. Through interviews, social media, and her blog Donna shared her day-to-day experiences, and I encourage all members of the House to take the time to read it.

Donna was thrilled with the Supreme Court of Canada decision to allow medical assistance in dying in Canada, thrilled that someone had finally listened to the voices of many who struggle and fight through insufferable pain every day. However, the laws did not come soon enough for her. I heard from Donna for the last time on August 25 of last year. She explained that even if change didn't come in time for herself, she would speak out in the hope of helping others. Donna ended her life a month later.

In a blog post that she wrote just five days before her death, Donna wrote, "On February 7, 2016 people like me can have access to our right to physician assistance to die . . . Please help me and those like me end our suffering by being as vocal as you can."

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of a government committed to a range of options for Albertans so that patients and their families can experience this process with the least amount of disruption or distress.

Thank you, Donna, for your bravery and passionate advocacy. You are missed, but we know you are happy.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Ghost River Rediscovery Society

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to tell you about the Ghost River Rediscovery Society. The Ghost River Rediscovery Society is a unique leadership training program that has offered traditional and cultural-based leadership learning since 1997. The leadership program is aimed at First Nations youth, although it is open to all applicants who grew up in Calgary and haven't had the opportunity to explore a relationship with nature, helping them to strengthen and learn about relationships between themselves, community, and the natural world.

Leaders teach participants the importance of the natural world around us by conducting hiking and camping excursions that can be up to five days in length. When not exploring the natural world, the leadership program educates and engages participants with the message that we strengthen our community through connection and celebration of both our commonalities and our diversity. Exploring the vitality of the past and the excitement of the present, they reach towards the future together, building strong and healthy communities.

Ghost River believes that by educating and engaging youth both on the land and in urban settings, it provides opportunities for youth to develop and learn new skills as well as offers guidance as they obtain a strong sense of self and explore connection to peers and cultural leaders.

In addition to the great work that they've done with youth over the years, Ghost River Rediscovery also offers aboriginal awareness training for individuals, businesses, and social services agencies as well as international groups through its affiliation with Rediscovery International.

I had the pleasure of visiting Ghost River's office, located in Calgary-Klein, and meeting Executive Director Adam Ross and Kristie Schneider, the director of operations. I'd like to thank Ghost River Rediscovery Society for its important work in engaging our future leaders.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I would recognize the Minister of Health.

Members' Apologies

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with regard to a point of order that was made last week and that you have provided your ruling on. I do respect your ruling; however, I acknowledge that some members of this House were offended by my remarks. I want to clarify that I did not intend to accuse any member in this House of making dishonest statements. Regardless, if that's the way those remarks were interpreted, I do apologize for that.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Hays, the leader of our caucus, I also would like to apologize to the House and withdraw the comments that he made on Thursday.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Carbon Levy

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November Albertans were shocked as the Premier announced an expensive new carbon tax that would hit them hard in their pocketbooks at a time they could least afford it. They are frustrated this NDP government will be taking more of their money to hand over billions to new corporate welfare experiments. The Premier did not campaign on this. She knows that if she did, she would not be sitting on the government side of the House today. Will the Premier get a mandate from the people before implementing her expensive NDP carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that in the last election our party stood very clearly on the platform and on the position that we would take real and substantive action on climate change. That is what we're doing, and that was the referendum. I appreciate that it's awkward for the other side to talk about the election because half the time half of them didn't know if they actually thought climate change was real during that time. Nonetheless, we were very clear. We do think it's real, and we think it is our obligation to take action on it.

Mr. Nixon: With this carbon tax Alberta will have the highest fuel taxes in the prairies. Diesel will now be more expensive here than in Ontario. Families who have to drive to work or take kids to hockey practice will now be poorer because of it, all at a time when Albertans are struggling to find work. This NDP government has failed to be honest with Albertans about the full impact of this tax increase. Why won't the Premier let Albertans have their say, whether or not they want to pay this expensive NDP carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as I've indicated, the people of Alberta have had their say. In addition, as we talk about and we consult, which we did extensively after the election as well, with Albertans from all walks of life, we're going to do it on the basis of the best evidence and the facts. We will not engage in the kind of fearmongering hyperbole that we saw from this opposition just last week, which precipitated the round of apologies that we had to see today. We will not engage in that kind of debate. We will focus on the facts because we know they support our plan.

Mr. Nixon: Economists have weighed in. The impact of the NDP's carbon tax is roughly the same as a 3 per cent sales tax across the economy. Alberta has legislation on the books, called the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act, that handcuffs any Alberta government from bringing in a sales tax without a referendum. Albertans support this legislation. If a government is going to bring in the largest tax increase in Alberta history, they should follow that. Given that the Premier did not campaign on this NDP carbon tax, why won't the Premier at least commit today to the spirit of this law and hold a referendum on the NDP's carbon tax?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I believe I've answered that question now twice. But I will say that I was very pleased this weekend to see an opinion piece that was run in the Calgary Herald from the former Republican mayor of New York, who stated that Alberta is leading the nation and indeed the continent with our work on climate change and who identified the fact that this is what is necessary in order to promote economic diversification and economic growth and to prepare our economy for the future low-carbon economy, that all jurisdictions need to be ready for. I'm very proud of that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, it's a lovely day outside. It's a beautiful day outside, and the sun is shining outside.

The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, the NDP carbon tax will have a negative impact on the transportation costs for Albertans, particularly those who live and work in locations without public transit alternatives. According to Statistics Canada fresh fruit and vegetable costs rose 11 and 12 per cent respectively, year over year, in April. Just going to get groceries, running the children to school, sports, or music class, or travelling to work will cost all Albertans more. Rural Albertans, folks in small urban centres and across our major cities will end up paying more at the pumps. Why does the NDP insist on taxing working families at a time they can least afford it?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member opposite probably knows if he's read even some of the information that we put out, our climate leadership plan effectively recycles money to two-thirds of Albertans through rebates, so as a result, these costs are not necessarily going to be as dire as the member opposite suggests.

We also lowered the small-business tax so that small business can adjust to our new low-carbon economy, and we will reinvest revenue from the carbon levy into the very strategies that will create jobs, reduce our greenhouse gas emissions, and reposition our economy to be competitive in the 21st century, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, the NDP carbon tax will also send the costs of municipal services higher, costs that will inevitably be passed down to property taxpayers, working families. Services like busing, firefighting, police, and garbage collection will all need more to cover their day-to-day increases. To the Premier: what analysis was done on the impact of this carbon tax on ordinary Albertans, who will be facing higher costs for day-to-day municipal services?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, as I said, there was an extensive analysis done through Dr. Andrew Leach's work, that consulted widely with the people of the province, across the province last year. In addition, we've heard, for instance, from the mayor of Edmonton that he supports this plan. In addition, as I just mentioned, we heard on the weekend that the former mayor of New York supports the plan and actually identifies that their climate reduction initiatives created jobs and stimulated more growth in the city of New York than anything that was going on in the rest of the country at the same time and effectively repositioned that city for better economic ...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, it is not just municipal services that will cost more. Provincial services like snowplowing and highway maintenance, whose budgets have been cut $33 million over the last two years, will also cost more. This means a further deterioration of services and worsening road conditions, as witnessed by the minister's own performance measures. Highway maintenance will cost more as a result of the carbon tax. Since the contracts have already been negotiated, will the minister have to open up those contracts in order to ensure proper maintenance will not be affected?

Mr. Mason: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month the Minister of Infrastructure admitted that his department hadn't done a proper study of how the carbon tax could negatively impact Alberta's construction industry. If the carbon tax isn't accounted for, it means that amounts listed in the capital plan for important projects like the Calgary cancer centre are now insufficient to cover the actual project costs. To the Premier: does the government intend to provide revised capital plan figures that take the carbon tax into account, or will much-needed projects be delayed as a result of the carbon tax eating up infrastructure dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we've seen, our Wildrose friends over there like to light their hair on fire about the impact of the carbon tax and grossly overestimate its impact. I would point out to hon. members opposite that there'll be about a 6 and a half per cent effect on the price of gasoline, but gasoline prices have come down in the last couple of years over 30 per cent. Obviously, these costs are lower now than when the economy was booming two years ago, so I'm sure there's going to be no shortage of ability to handle the situation.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Labour was asked about where the jobs in the government's jobs plan were to come from, she said, "I would recommend that you talk to the Minister of Infrastructure with that question." Now, the government might be betting on the capital plan to create much-needed jobs, but after a year vague assurances and broken promises just won't cut it for Albertans anymore. To the Premier. We know that Infrastructure didn't bother to study the effect of the carbon tax on Alberta's construction industry. Did anybody bother to assess the impact on job creation?

Ms Notley: Well, indeed, Mr. Speaker, as I've said several times, we know that the climate leadership plan will have a positive impact on job creation. Actually, in the construction industry itself it's remarkable. I had the fabulous opportunity and privilege last Friday to engage in an announcement involving an ecosolar tour and to talk with a number of people in the construction industry who are very excited about the opportunity to engage in efficiency investments as well as renewable energy investments as they relate to construction. In fact, what we're going to do is that we're going to create more opportunity . . .

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in their desperation to draw in revenue after their credit-disintegrating budgets, this government couldn't be bothered to exempt even schools from their job-killing carbon tax. Edmonton public alone has estimated that the carbon tax will result in over $600,000 lost per year. That's just from one board in our province. Why does this government think that education dollars are better used in a slush fund for pet projects rather than for funding schools or for building new ones?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you that when I think about the impact of our climate leadership plan on the province of Alberta and on the future, one of the things that makes me proudest is the degree of support that we have amongst the very kids inside those schools that the member opposite is talking about. They want a government that will move forward, be innovative, take bold action, and protect their environment for their future.

Mr. Schmidt: Because they're listening in science class.

The Speaker: Did I hear the Advanced Education minister say that someone was listening?

An Hon. Member: He's having trouble today.

The Speaker: Yeah. I know. I know.

Was it the accordion lessons they took you away from?
I'm beginning to see a little bit of sunshine in here.
Calgary-Greenway.

PDD Supports Intensity Scale Assessments

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have all heard how SIS is a contentious evaluation system which many PDD advocates, including our guests in the gallery, have been trying to get rid of for some time now. An additional concern which has been brought to my attention is the prohibitive cost of administering SIS. To the Minister of Human Services: can you outline for the House how much money it costs to administer SIS on an annual basis and how this compares to other models you're exploring?

The Speaker: The hon Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I would like to begin by saying that the SIS was brought in by the previous government, and at that time I am not sure if they did any monetary calculations. But as of last Wednesday I said that we are not keeping the SIS.

Mr. Gill: Again with the excuses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Human Services has said that he needs to review 11,000 files before he could even suspend SIS. Eleven thousand files is a lot of work, especially given that these files are not simple yes/no issues; these are human beings whose entire livelihoods are affected by these decisions. Again to the hon. minister: what extra resources are being specifically dedicated to this monumental task?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I'm happy to report that $22 million extra has been added to that in addition to reversing the cuts that were proposed by the previous government. We have enough money allocated to that program to provide persons with developmental disabilities with needed and necessary supports.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think $22 million is not going to go far.

Anyway, one concern that we have continued to hear from our PDD stakeholders is that they can't get timely responses. This is no disrespect to the minister or his hard-working staff. Human Services is a monumental task, and I'm sure you're all doing your absolute best. However, timely responses are critical in this area. Again to the minister: what specific processes or changes are you implementing to ensure a timely . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Which minister, hon member?

The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I think it's very important that people contacting my ministry get a timely response, and that's what our priority is. We have resourced our office well, and we have added money to the PDD budget. We will make sure that everybody gets the needed information and response in a timely fashion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Oil and Gas Well Land Reclamation

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Court of Queen's Bench ruled that the federal Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act takes precedence over provincial law. Now, this means that money from the sale of bankrupted companies' assets will go first to the companies' creditors instead of being used to pay for the cleanup of abandoned or orphaned wells. This will have far-reaching implication for the province's energy sector and for all Albertans. The current liability rating system is already creating headwinds, and any changes to make it even more stringent could further hurt an industry that's already suffering. To the Premier: are you considering any changes to the LLR system?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we're working collaboratively with the oil and gas industry to work at the issue with respect to the orphan wells problem as well as the other matters that were raised by the member opposite. We will look at, obviously, the evolving legal status as it exists and ensure that we can come up with a plan that works for everyone that takes into account the current status of the law.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: My apologies. First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It sounds like I may have caught the Premier by surprise on that one, so I'll try again.

The Orphan Well Association is funded by the oil patch through levies and security deposits based on well abandonment and reclamation liabilities, but their current funding only allows them to remediate barely 5 per cent of orphaned wells every year. Again to the Premier: with the number of abandoned and orphaned wells expected to increase in light of this ruling, will you commit to adding more funds to the Orphan Well Association to find a solution to this economic and environmental problem?

Ms Notley: Well, there's no question, Mr. Speaker, that the member opposite raises an important issue and, indeed, a much larger issue, which is that over the last 20, 30 years this liability has been allowed to exist and to grow, and we haven't taken action at the appropriate time to insist that the polluter-pay principle be properly implemented in Alberta. It's quite true that after 20 or 30 years we now have a growing liability. We're looking at ways to address it. As the hon. member opposite knows, we have a number of financial pressures within our budget right now, and we have to address this carefully amongst those priorities. We understand this is the outcome of many, many years of a failure to act.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's easy to say that it's industry's responsibility to reclaim the wells, but the fees already charged have, especially to smaller producers, a very negative impact. Instead of penalizing companies that want to rebuild our provincial economy, we should be enabling their success and at the same time getting highly skilled oilfield service workers off the unemployment line and back to work. Again to the Premier: will you add to the orphan well fund to get Albertans with oilfield experience back to work while solving a significant environmental problem?

Ms Notley: Again, Mr. Speaker, as you're aware, we know that this was an ask that was put to the federal government as part of their overall economic diversification and capital investment plan. That was an ask that was put by Saskatchewan. We've indicated that it's worth reviewing. Again, as I say, the liability is huge, and the question becomes whether taxpayers of today should be paying for profits that were not applied to making these fiscally and environmentally responsible decisions in the past. It's a difficult issue to manage. We will certainly look at it. We're talking with our federal partners, and we'll consider the options that are there to balance those taxpayers' needs along with the fact that we now have an environmental . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to hear from constituents and members of the community of persons with disabilities on a daily basis, actually, about their concerns around the supports intensity scale. They told me that SIS was implemented with little consultation, and I know first-hand that it is a needs-based assessment. Given our government's commitment to ensuring all Albertans receive the supports they need in a respectful and timely manner, to the Minister of Human Services: what is our government doing to address these concerns?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this important question. First, I would like to thank the member for her passionate and continued advocacy for persons with disabilities. Since we were first elected, the member has been raising concerns about PDD safety standards and the supports intensity scale. Her work and contribution certainly have helped our government to make a real difference in the lives of persons with developmental disabilities. I'm also pleased to report that we will end the use of supports intensity scales.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister. I know that members of the disability community will be happy to hear this news. Given the anticipation of seeing these changes, to the minister: when will our government move ahead with these policy changes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member. As of today persons with developmental disabilities are no longer required to go through the SIS. My department will work with the persons with developmental disabilities, their representative organizations, the Member for St. Albert, and all stakeholders to make sure that we are bringing a solution that is Alberta-made and that is respectful to the persons with developmental disabilities.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Renaud: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is certainly good news. Given that our government is committed to working closely with people with disabilities in our community that have continued to express concerns about PDD policies, what else will the minister be doing to support persons with disabilities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the member for the question. Since coming to office, we have been listening to the concerns from the PDD community about overly restrictive safety standards and the use of SIS. We have listened carefully to the advocates and their concerns, and we are taking action. When it comes to supporting persons with developmental disabilities, we are doing something that the previous government did not: listening to the PDD community and taking real action to address their concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Premier's Office Expenses

Mr. Cyr: Another week, another story about how out of touch the Premier's office is with everyday Albertans. The NDP government has taken a page out former Premier Redford's handbook and has spent nearly $340,000 to run her office in 2015. Times have never been better to be staff in the Premier's office; all the while Albertans have seen unemployment spike. My question is to the Premier. Can we expect to see more Redford-era spending but just underneath your banner?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. It's a fair question. Certainly, we were looking at expenses that were incurred by the previous government some 40 years into their many terms. When our government assumed office, we certainly did have some extraordinary expenses, including technology as well as relocation, that we covered, but we do not expect to have that same level of expenses in future years.

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that while tens of thousands of everyday Albertans are looking for work and the NDP government is carting in hyperengaged partisans from out of the province and given that the cost of moving all of the NDP partisans came with a price tag of over $80,000, will the Premier acknowledge that NDP values are so out of touch with everyday Albertans that they simply couldn't find the staff to support her risky ideology in this province?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the staff that have stepped up and want to make sure that we continue to support Alberta as we move forward under our new government – this includes many, many, many Albertans who stepped up and who are filling the political positions – as well as selecting some of the best from other jurisdictions, who had experience with things such as major flood conditions in terms of natural disasters in Manitoba and other jurisdictions. That's certainly valuable to our government, and we want to make sure that we have the best. I will not apologize for making sure that we did hire them.

The Speaker: The second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the many issues managers hired by the NDP government are attempting to manage the issue of their bloated and out-of-touch Premier's office. Given that 7 out of 8 people hired as issues managers by this NDP government were hired from outside of Alberta at a price tag of almost a million per year, how can the Premier justify hiring so many non-Albertans to institute the NDP world view, that nobody in Alberta wants?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly important to us that we have the right people in the right offices. Rather than relying on people in the public service to do issues management work that certainly had a connection to the Premier's office, we thought it was appropriate to house them in that area. It is also the same complement of political staff in the Premier's office currently as it was under the last government, one that is much smaller than it was under Redford's reign. Certainly, we've moved forward in a cautious and thoughtful way in making sure that we staff the offices appropriately. I'm proud of the people who are working in the Premier's office in issues management. We're supporting Fort McMurray and continuing to bring people back home.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I can even yell at the Human Services minister today. This is a good day. This is a fantastic day. I am so honoured to be joined by so many guests in the gallery today who represent the diversity within the PDD community. They are a nonpartisan group of people whose lives are personally impacted by decisions made by this government. So thank you to our Human Services minister. Please, if you could take this time to tell us what the plan is moving forward now that we have ended SIS.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for not yelling. The problem is that every once in a while, when she would look at her own government's policies, she would feel like yelling. As I said, the supports intensity scale was used only to measure the amount of money people get. There is functional assessment in place, and we will continue to work with our partners in the community to make sure that we get it right.

2:20

The Speaker: The first supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Human Services minister: we have some really wonderful advocates here in the gallery, and I will ask you respectfully if you can take the time to speak to them so that, going forward, the process we do put in place is respectful to everyone.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member. I can assure the House that that has been my approach. I have been working with the advocates. I can point to safety standard 8, where we consulted almost 2,000 Albertans, and I'm pretty sure that all of these advocates were part of that consultation. Going forward, that's the thing I'm committed to do.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't really know what to ask next but to say thank you on behalf of all the people we've worked with in PDD.

Thank you.

Mr. Sabir: You're welcome, and thank you.

The Speaker: More sunshine.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Alberta families are hurting, and they know that the NDP government is just making things worse. Albertans are angry. The NDP carbon tax is taking billions away from working families for an unaccountable green slush fund. The one thing Wildrose understands and the NDP doesn't seem to understand is that the money spent in this Legislature is not our money; it is the wages of working Albertan women and men. With no outcomes, transparency, or accountability for how this money will be spent, how can Albertans possibly trust this government to spend this money wisely?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, there was plenty of opportunity to query the budget during budget estimates. I did notice that the Official Opposition took until minute 48 of their allotted 60 minutes to discuss climate change in the budget estimates because they were not interested. Clearly, this was building on not being interested in the climate change file through the entire consultation process, on which they took a complete pass. Utter silence from the Wildrose opposition. They don't have any alternatives because they reject the science of climate change.

The Speaker: I just want to caution again the House about the use of certain language that might cause an uproar in this place. Hon. ministers and members, I hope we abide by that.

First supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't realize that working Albertans were a detriment to a question at all since that's what we're speaking of.

Since the new NDP slush fund will create over $6 billion in new government spending over the next four years and given that that's more money than will be spent on hospitals and schools during that same period, how can the Premier or anyone in this government justify rolling out billions of new spending without any protections or accountability for how the money is going to be spent?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've made significant commitments to Albertans, in particular on the innovation and technology side. As the Energy critic the hon. member will know that such job creators as CNRL, Devon, ConocoPhillips, Suncor, Cenovus, ARC Financial, Total, and Statoil all support the climate leadership plan. It allows us to ensure that our economy, in particular our oil and gas industry, is resilient in a low-carbon future, which is a reality, just like climate change.

The Speaker: I see more clouds coming.

The second supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. My question was actually about transparency, but I'll move on.

Since the NDP refuses to commit to being fully transparent with Albertans about how the carbon tax will be spent and given that Albertans right across the province will see their costs skyrocket for their gas and heating bills and given that Alberta families need to be able to see how this tax impacts their bottom line if they're going to be able to change their behaviour, will the NDP at the very least adopt some Wildrose suggestions to have every fuel receipt and bill for natural gas list the full amount of the carbon tax?

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've outlined a number of job creators who support the climate leadership plan, which is going to reinvest money back into our economy to ensure that we're resilient. Actual job creators support this initiative. These are the folks who are focused on a serious appraisal and evaluation of climate policy, unlike the Wildrose Official Opposition . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Stop the clock. Please, if you ask the question, allow that the House can hear the answer.

Hon. minister, start again.

Ms Phillips: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've outlined a number of job creators who support the climate leadership plan, and that is because we will be making investments in innovation and technology and diversifying the economy with energy efficiency. Those are actual job creators that support this. These are the folks who are focused on a serious appraisal of climate policy, unlike the Wildrose, who are apparently . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. You've had your time.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Children in Care

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Wildrose believes in strong families and safe communities. The safety of children in care must be of paramount concern to this government. Stability for the children should also be a guiding principle when it comes to placing children in care. While keeping families together is always the goal, it is not always possible. To the Minister of Human Services: what current practices are in place to ensure that the safety of the children in care and a stable home life are the top priorities?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. The member raises very important questions and concerns. We are certainly committed to making sure that every child in Alberta has the resources to flourish and succeed and for safety, permanency. These are the fundamental things that we work on with families. When it's not possible, we do have a rigorous process of selecting kinship parents, foster parents to make sure that they have a place to call home.

Thank you.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that when a child becomes a ward of the process, there can be a fluidity between going from mom and dad to a foster family then back to mom and dad over and over again and given that this sort of back and forth can create instability and further difficulties for the child involved, can the minister please clarify if there is a current cap in place for reunification attempts, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. I certainly agree that stability is very important in a child's life. There is no cap on the attempts, and the reason for that is that every child is unique. Every case is assessed based on the best interests of the kid, so there is a subjective analysis, which we deal with based on the best interests of the kid in every situation.

Mrs. Pitt: Given that, as I've already mentioned, safety is paramount in these situations, Mr. Speaker, and given that we've seen many tragic episodes in our province where children were harmed because of failed reunification attempts, what is the minister doing to fix the reunification problem and provide assurances and a framework to show that the safety of the children in care is a top priority?

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. When a child dies or gets injured in our care, certainly that's the most concerning situation. That's why the focus of our services remains on the safety of the individuals first and foremost. We make sure that whenever we intervene, we secure a safe environment for the children. I will mention that we have increased the budget for child intervention services. We have hired more staff to make sure that we can work with families, kinship providers, and foster parents to make sure that we provide . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Assisted Dying Regulations

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A full year ago the Supreme Court made a ruling on assisted death with a deadline of today, but the federal Liberal government failed to finalize a law for all Canadians, and the provincial NDP government failed to finalize regulations for all Albertans. Alberta's draft regulations involving this literally life-and-death issue were rushed through in this Legislature and are still not approved by this cabinet. To the Premier: when will you be passing the regulations, how will you be protecting vulnerable Albertans, including those with mental illness, and when will you be clearly communicating this to all Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm very proud of the fact that our government brought draft regulations forward in a public and transparent way and that we had our debate in this Legislature, unlike what was happening in other provinces. I think it's important that we get feedback on the record. There were some comments that were given with regard to the actual regulations themselves, and we're certainly taking those into consideration as we work our way through cabinet. I expect that we will be able to provide clarity very soon, but I do want to make sure that cabinet has an opportunity to reflect on the feedback from this House and the What We Heard report, which gave feedback from 15,000 Albertans.

Mr. Rodney: As the minister has indicated, given that this cabinet has not yet made a final decision on the regulations, which will create critical guidelines for Albertans seeking medical assistance with dying, and given that last week the Health minister made it clear that cabinet would take two to three weeks to approve the regulations, to the Minister of Health: what possible reason could cabinet have for allowing this astonishing procedural gap, when exactly will cabinet approve regulations, what exactly will those regulations look like, and how exactly will they be communicated to Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: The questions that are asked are exactly the reason why this needs to go to cabinet, so that cabinet can have an opportunity to receive my recommendation. As members of any government, ministers bring forward a recommendation, but it's up to cabinet to decide what exactly gets approved. That's why we have a democratic process, Mr. Speaker.

What I did say was that it could take up to a couple of weeks. We're certainly working to have it done as quickly as possible. Regardless, we have a plan in place so that as of 12:01 tomorrow morning people can make sure that they have their rights respected and a process in place. We are moving very quickly with the regulations, and I will be happy to update the public as soon as those are finalized, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rodney: I believe the minister meant 12 midnight this past night.

Given that Alberta must now provide medical assistance with dying, which makes the lack of provincial regulations particularly concerning, and given that it's critical to monitor this sensitive, complex procedure, which may have already begun to occur, to the Associate Minister of Health: what specific data will be collected to track the number of Albertans who seek medically assisted death and the procedures used to take their lives, and will you commit to reporting this data in this House on a quarterly basis on an ongoing basis from now on?

Ms Hoffman: The law comes into effect, the Supreme Court decision, at 12:01 tomorrow morning, so after midnight tonight it becomes law for the country of Canada.

We are certainly ready to move forward. We have a number of pieces in place, including consultation that we did extensively with the College of Physicians & Surgeons, who are very supportive of the process that we have mapped out. We've worked with the medical examiners office to make sure that we can move forward in a way that tracks the instances moving forward. They've been very compatible with us in making sure that we can do that. As well, the motion that we did pass by government members in this House and one opposition member spoke to the fact that we are going to review this and make sure that we have a legal document that . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Off-road Vehicle Safety

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta remains the last jurisdiction in Canada with no law requiring off-highway vehicle riders to use helmets on public land. This government's previous commitment remains unfulfilled in this regard. There are now an average of 16 deaths per year in Alberta due to off-highway vehicle use, with almost 20 per cent being children under the age of 16. Almost 70 per cent of riders killed were not wearing a helmet. A public survey in 2008 showed over 80 per cent of Albertans support helmet legislation for off-highway vehicle use. To the Transportation minister: when will your ministry bring in legislation demanding . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much to the member for that very important question. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a tragic accident this weekend involving two fatalities, including a very young man who apparently was wearing a helmet at the time. Helmets are not the only issue in terms of off-road vehicle safety, but they are an important one. I'm happy to tell the House we will be bringing forward legislation that includes mandatory helmets for off-road vehicles in the fall session of this Assembly.

Dr. Swann: Good to hear, Mr. Speaker. I've heard that before.
Given that 1 in 5 deaths on off-highway vehicles are children under the age of 16, when will your ministry regulate ridership by children on off-highway vehicles that are designed for adults?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another very important question. I can assure the hon. member that we're concluding our consultations, which have been extensive, over the summer. The issue of underage drivers of ATVs and other off-road vehicles is certainly something that's under very serious consideration.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Dr. Swann: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the environment minister. Given the supreme value of Alberta's eastern slopes for water and tourism and numerous studies indicating that off-highway vehicle watershed destruction already exceeds standards, can the minister tell Albertans why unregulated off-highway vehicle use continues to be the norm on our eastern slopes?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. What we have moved forward with is the following. We are engaged in linear footprint planning in the Porcupine Hills and Livingstone Range areas. We are working with the Crowsnest quad squad and others on the planning for the whole Castle region. We are moving forward with a number of initiatives that will regulate more carefully and encourage more responsible use of off-highway vehicles on Crown land.

Openness and Transparency in Government

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, this NDP government was elected in part on a promise to be more open and transparent. During the government's transition last May there was significant controversy around the shredding of documents, to the point where the Premier herself issued a directive to cease all shredding. What has the Minister of Service Alberta done to ensure that such an event will never happen again?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I've been working very diligently along with the department in order to ensure that our protocols are sufficiently in place across government and that all departments are following equivalent standards. It's a matter of working across government with all departments to ensure that we're all meeting sufficient levels of standards. There will be more information coming your way on this particular issue in the near future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't want to start my hair on fire on that one.

Given that the current fee to file a freedom of information and protection of privacy request is $25, one of the most expensive fees in Canada and a fee that deters citizens from seeking information, and given that the federal government has moved to ensure all Canadians have the ability to access information by waiving all fees beyond the initial $5, when can we expect this government to stand up for transparency and lower the $25 fee?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. This is the first I've been hearing of a request for lowering of a fee. It's certainly something that I will inquire about in my ministry, and I'm happy to bring back more information to the member with respect to how fees may be prohibitive to individuals accessing information. Additionally, I look forward to the work of the subcommittee, that all members of this House are participating in, with respect to transparency in government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that more often than not this government provides requested FOIP material as image files and given that many FOIP requests end up being hundreds of pages long and photocopies and picture files that are not specifically user friendly and seeing as the federal government has issued a directive to all federal FOIP officers that they must reformat requests in formats that are user friendly, will the minister commit to making sure that the data issued through FOIP requests is provided in a user-friendly format?

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. With respect to all FOIP requests and transparency our government is moving in a more open way than perhaps past governments have. We are looking at additional ways, and I have had some proposals brought to me with respect to how we can make the process easier and more transparent for Albertans and also to make sure that we're in line with other jurisdictions as that is an important aspect of this issue.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week during question period it was noted that former PC Finance minister Jim Dinning supported a carbon tax provided it was revenue neutral, and much to my surprise this received a thunderous ovation from the government benches. To the Premier: please set the record straight. Does your government support a revenue-neutral carbon tax, and if you do, why was your party the only one that voted against amendments which would have made the carbon tax revenue neutral?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the climate leadership plan, that we released in November, allows for a number of different ways in which the carbon levy revenues will be used. One is a broad rebate for up to 66 per cent of Albertans; another is to lower the small-business tax rate.

In addition, we will be making investments in green infrastructure and clean technology, which precisely mirrors the recommendations of the Ecofiscal Commission, of which Mr. Dinning is a part, in their Choose Wisely report, that was released earlier this year, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that on Thursday last week the Deputy Premier equated a revenue-neutral carbon tax with cutting public services, including firing nurses and firing teachers, and given that Bill 20 does absolutely nothing to fund teachers or nurses, leading one to question whether government ministers fully understand the concept of revenue neutrality, to the Premier: did you create a model for a revenue-neutral carbon tax in Alberta, and if so, why did you reject the model which has been effectively utilized in British Columbia?

Ms Hoffman: Just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, what was being proposed by a member of that caucus was that the revenue that we are receiving through the price on carbon be reduced in equivalence for the very wealthiest of Albertans, for profitable corporations, and what I said was that we were not elected to do that. While the Official Opposition was advocating for us to return to the proven methods of the '90s, which did result in significant layoffs, so would cutting taxes to the most profitable Albertans and to the major corporations. That's not what we were elected to do. We're reinvesting this money in diversifying the economy.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, given that Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson is taking his battle against Kinder Morgan to Ottawa and that Montreal Mayor Denis Coderre still thinks that Energy East will destroy Montreal and given that Alberta's climate change plan was supposed to garner social licence to gain approval for such projects and given that Mr. Robertson and Mr. Coderre seem intent to stick with their attitude of no pipelines ever under any circumstances, Premier, have you asked the federal government for assurances that they are prepared to utilize their authority and override municipal politicians, that have no say in pipeline decisions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I will say about the relationship with the federal government is that they are pleased that a jurisdiction such as Alberta is exercising climate leadership. It certainly helps with conversations across this country about our market access and about the relative responsibility of our energy resources. In addition, what we have done is worked with them on things like the methane reduction strategy, which has been noticed by the rest of the continent. We're very proud of that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm advised that the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General wishes to supplement an answer given to a question on Thursday by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

The hon. minister.

Alberta Serious Incident Response Team

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday of last week the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake requested information regarding the Alberta Serious Incident Response Team, or ASIRT. The hon. Minister of Human Services was kind enough to provide a reply and included a reference to the budget increase we have provided to ASIRT to assist them in the essential work that they do. For the record I just wanted to provide clarification. ASIRT's total budget for 2016-17 is $3.5 million, an increase of $480,000 over last fiscal. I thank the member again for the important question, and I appreciate the opportunity to provide this supplemental reply.*

Carbon Levy

Mr. van Dijken: Mr. Speaker, sin taxes are the kind of taxes that governments levy on products they think people can do without, the kind of products, such as alcohol and tobacco, which could cause potential harm to the consumer. Governments have decided that for the well-being of individuals and society in general these products must be taxed.

This NDP government has now introduced legislation on a whole new era of carbon sin taxes, but unlike other sin taxes this carbon tax penalizes Albertans for consuming products that are essential to their family's everyday way of life: taxing the fuel necessary for mom and dad to get to work and for driving their children to school, music lessons, or soccer practice and taxing the natural gas families need to keep their homes warm. These are essential products Albertans need. This appears to be nothing more than a new tax grab.

As if that is not enough, through this new legislation the NDP government has arranged to funnel these new carbon sin taxes right into their NDP green slush fund. While other sin taxes go into general revenue, where priority is given to the needs of Albertans, whether that be health care, education, transportation, or similar programs, this carbon sin tax will be siphoned off and sent right into their new fund. At a time when this government is unable to pay all of their day-to-day expenses and is saddling Albertans with a mountain of debt, the NDP believes Albertans should trust them with a $9 billion green slush fund. This government is willing to gamble these taxes on their pet projects without any clear economic analysis. This is not a credible plan. This so-called plan has very little potential to help create significant prosperity in Alberta. If this is a plan, it is a bad plan for Alberta. This government didn't campaign on it, and Albertans should not have to pay, especially at a time when they are already struggling. This is not what Albertans voted for.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a petition with over 1,300 signatures gathered from the citizens throughout the Banff-Cochrane constituency who are concerned with watershed values and are urging the government to "place an immediate moratorium on clearcut logging operations in the Ghost Sub-basin.”

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) that at the appropriate time I will rise to discuss the breach of privilege that occurred by the government prematurely advertising their climate leadership plan. I have the appropriate number of coffees – clearly, I need a coffee – the appropriate number of copies of the letter that was provided to your office by the appropriate time this morning.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Mason: It’s my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of my responses to each of the following: the Infrastructure Committee of Supply, the Transportation Committee of Supply, Motion for a Return 19, and Written Question 10.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the benefit of the House, I am just speculating that I will be referring to a number of documents at the appropriate time when the point of privilege is heard. In anticipation of that I would like to table the appropriate number of documents from the government’s website with respect to information on the carbon levy tax and rebates.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I’m pleased to rise and table the requisite number of copies of the Legislative Assembly Office 2015 annual report, Thriving on the Challenges of Change.

Statements by the Speaker

Legislature Security Staff Retirements

The Speaker: Hon. members, if I could take a few moments of your time to acknowledge the retirement of four of the Legislative Assembly security staff as well as 11 of their pages. I want to reiterate the words by our Deputy Speaker today about the LASS staff for their unwavering service to this Chamber, this Legislature, in fact the entire office. The work those folks do for all of us to make this place safe and secure is very, very much appreciated. Thank you again for your many years of service.

Page Appreciation

The Speaker: I would also like to recognize today 11 pages who are retiring this year by reading out a letter that they have asked that I share with all of you. Do we have all of the pages here? Could you please go get them?

Come. Come in. The door is not secure now.

This is the letter that they asked that I share with you.

The end of Session signifies something different for everyone. Although many of you are excited to return to your families and constituents, for the Pages this is a bittersweet time. The end of the Session is accompanied by the realization that for some of us our time on the Chamber floor has come to an end. We would like to express our sincere appreciation for the incredible opportunity we have had to serve the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

There are countless people who have made this into such an unforgettable experience. We would like to thank the Sergeant-at-Arms for teaching us the meaning of leadership; the Table Officers for their sense of humour and guidance; the staff in 315 and 412 ...

Those would be room numbers.

... for their constant support, words of wisdom and kindness; and the Security Staff for showing us that it’s important to find a job you look forward to, with people you enjoy working with. As well we wish to extend our gratitude to you Mr. Speaker and all Members of the Legislative Assembly, without whom, our role in the Chamber would not exist. It has been an honour to serve every member of this Assembly, each with their own unique talents, coffee preferences ...

This looks like one that should be framed.

... and comments under 29(2)(a).

Some of you folks could leave and write a book about that.

None of us could have anticipated the amount of knowledge we have gained throughout our time here. We now truly understand the good that parliamentarians and the parliamentary process does for society. We now appreciate that members are regular people, forming relationships, entering into negotiations, and resolving conflicts. Letting these members stand as an inspiration for ourselves, we wish to never cease striving for more than we ever thought previously possible.

As we reflect on our experiences at the Legislature, we recognize how fortunate we are to have had the “best seat in the house” to witness history in the making, along with previous generations of Alberta Pages. A 1913 Edmonton Journal article describes the Pages as “bright streaks of mischief,” and we are honoured to join the ranks of Pages whose laughter has echoed under the dome.

For many of us, walking into the Chamber on our first day here felt like walking into a history textbook ...

There’s no need to make fun of my hair.

... and we feel extremely privileged to have played even a small role in that story. Through every point of order, amendment, and early morning divisions, our time here has been unforgettable. The generosity and hard work of all the Members in this Assembly has shown us the type of leaders we would like to become and the future we hope to aspire to. For many of us this has truly been more than a job, it has been our second home. It has been a great honour and privilege to serve on the floor of the Assembly and as we close the door to our experience in the Chamber – holding it firmly shut ...

The wisdom of youth.

... we would like to say a sincere thank you for this incredible experience. Farewell, and don’t forget us.

Yours sincerely,

Joely Bragg, Josie Salmon, Erin de Kleer, Lindsay Hauser, Batul Gulamhusein, Cara Au, Azan Esmail, Samir Esmail ...

Those would be the two guys that look alike.

... Richard Mallet, Lily Zheng, Morgan Stang, and Lucille Bergmann.

I would now on your collective behalf call upon the Deputy Speaker to present a small token of our appreciation to the head page on behalf of the Members of this 29th Legislative Assembly. [Standing ovation] Thank you, hon. members.

I have no doubt – and I believe this is the thought that is in everyone’s mind – that some, in fact I expect many, of you may well be back in this room at a different time in your life. Thank you again.

I believe we may have had a point of order which has been withdrawn. Is that correct? Thank you.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Privilege Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 15 to raise a point of privilege due to the actions of the government having offended the dignity and authority of the Assembly by running radio ads which presuppose that Bill 20 has already passed.

I'd like to start, first, with preliminary matters. Points of privilege must be raised at the earliest opportunity. The first I heard of this advertisement and the first time I heard the advertisement was on Thursday afternoon as I was driving back to the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. As such, I believe that this is the first opportunity I have had to raise this point of privilege, and therefore it is in order according to Standing Order 15(2).

Secondly, I provided the Speaker's office with a letter where I advised him of my intent to raise this point of privilege under Standing Order 15.

Mr. Speaker, let's get to the ad. The ad – and I'll do it with my best radio voice, I might add – is as follows: what would you say if I told you that Alberta families were about to get more energy efficient? Sounds good? Oh, yeah; keep talking. But what about my family budget? Introducing Alberta's climate leadership plan, a concrete action for change that strengthens Albertans' leadership on energy and the environment, and the transition will be made easier – this is an important part – with energy efficient programs and cash rebates for households that need them. The climate leadership plan: because it's the right thing to do. Learn more at climate.alberta.ca. A message from the government of Alberta.

Now, I shudder to think what the cost of this message is, but that is not the point of privilege today. The point of privilege today, Mr. Speaker, surrounds the fact that this government has presupposed a decision of this Chamber. As you know, points of privilege are not to be entered into lightly because they are of a significant nature.

Presupposing a decision of this Assembly has been ruled on in this place on a number of occasions. One of the reasons why previous Speakers have ruled that this type of advertising is wildly inappropriate and presupposes a decision of the Assembly is because the advertisement of the day, including this one, didn't include any type of caveat with respect to what would happen. An example of that would be: subject to parliamentary approval. We wouldn't be here in this place at this time discussing this issue if the government had shown a wink of respect to the parliamentary process and approval that is yet to take place.

Now, the Government House Leader may stand up and argue that it merely says that it is introducing the climate leadership plan and that therefore it doesn't presuppose a decision. Or he might get up and say that Bill 20 isn't the climate leadership plan, that it is the climate leadership act, but without the act, the plan is nothing. The Government House Leader may argue as well with respect to the language around "introducing," but, Mr. Speaker, it's his job to try and defend the government. Sometimes he does it very well, and today I suggest to you that he may try to provide some wiggle room for the government. But let's be clear. Unless Bill 20 passes, then none of what they are advertising can occur. As a result they are communicating to Albertans, utilizing government resources, on a decision that has yet to be made in this Chamber.

Now, the ad goes on and asks us to check a website, so I did, Mr. Speaker, and imagine my surprise that the government has put up details on their carbon pricing plan which basically directly rely on the passage of Bill 20 through the Assembly. Perhaps someone in the minister's office wasn't checking details as appropriately as they ought, or they weren't paying attention to the procedures here in the Assembly that would authorize this type of publication. Perhaps all of this information was released on Thursday afternoon given that the government – as we all know, the sessional calendar was to end last Thursday, and as far as I understand it, the ads all started running on Thursday, so it is quite possible that they then presupposed that the House would have risen and as a result purchased ads in advance of and in anticipation of that.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that this action by the government has presupposed all of our role here, and it is a clear breach of privilege.

I might just highlight for you, Mr. Speaker, what it says, or at least what it said this morning, on the website in case there have been changes to such website to provide some further wiggle room for the government. On the website it speaks specifically about how the carbon tax will affect my family. Now, on the website it says "levy," but as you know, there's some debate about whether it's a tax or a levy. In this case it speaks about this mythical levy, and it says on the website that 6 of 10 Alberta households will – not may, but will – receive a rebate that covers the average cost of the carbon levy that they will pay.

Now, you know that there's a significant amount of debate around whether or not it will actually cover it. But the fact of the matter here today, sir, is that that rebate is not possible to be executed without the passage of Bill 20. As a result, not only does the advertisement presuppose the decision of the House, but also the backup documentation on a government website presupposes the decision of the House.

The other thing that the Government House Leader may rise and speak to is the fact that some of these measures may have been covered in Budget '16, but Budget '16, Mr. Speaker, does not implement the rebates for households, and if you check the website, the ad refers to just that. The website also references that starting on January 1, 2017, the carbon levy will be applied to fuels at a rate of $20 per tonne and that one year later they will be increased to $30 per tonne. Budget 2016 does not authorize the collection of a levy or a tax, yet it states on the government's website and in that ad that those things will be taking place. Now, I did spend a significant amount of time on the website looking for a small asterisk or something that would communicate that it is subject to the passage of Bill 20, and it certainly did not exist.

The Government House Leader is likely going to argue that Budget 2016 allowed them to do all of this. But, Mr. Speaker, if they've presupposed the decision of the House, what is the point in debating Bill 20? The Official Opposition has a significant number of amendments that may directly affect how the rebate program could be rolled out. I know that many of my colleagues are very strong in the gift of persuasion. It's quite possible that members on the other side will heed the wisdom of the opposition and, as a result, make a change to this. What the government has done is presupposed that all of the debate in this House has no value.

Now, don't get me wrong, Mr. Speaker. We have from time to time had debate on needless legislation in the Assembly, including Bill 1. But I find it offensive to the people of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who expect members of this Assembly to be able to debate pieces of legislation free from the presupposition of the government making these decisions. You can correct me if I'm wrong, but as of this moment Bill 20 still sits in Committee of the Whole, where there are various amendments that are being suggested, which may, in fact, alter various items that the government is advertising.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, Erskine May says about privilege:

Generally speaking, any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his duty... directly or indirectly, to produce such results, may be treated as a contempt even though there is no precedent of the offence.

Just as a reminder, this isn't the first offence of this nature that's been brought forward. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you cautioned the government on November 2, 2015, when, on page 401 of Hansard, you said:

While this is not a prima facie question of privilege, I would caution the government not to prejudge the actions of this Assembly or its committees into the future. It's my hope that this would not arise again, and I would stress to members that this Speaker, on behalf of this Assembly, does not take these matters lightly.

Mr. Speaker, I will give the Government House Leader credit that when you ruled on this particular occasion on November 2, there was a little more wiggle room than there is today. The government was much more cautious with how it used its language with respect to the decision that a committee may or may not make. In this case the government has thrown caution to the wind and clearly prejudged the actions of this Assembly.

In Beauchesne's, sixth edition, on page 25, it has this to say about privilege:

It is generally accepted that any threat, or attempt to influence the vote of, or actions of a Member, is breach of privilege.

Clearly, these advertisements are an attempt to influence the vote or actions of a member.

Mr. Speaker, I might just mention that Speaker Zwodzesky ruled on December 2, 2013, when he found a case where the government was advertising when they ought not. I know that the Premier on November 27, 2013, made some suggestions of the House that included this:

... members of this Assembly by including on the billboards the phrase "if passed." I would suggest that that is not the situation in this case because, needless to say, the brochure, which has quite irresponsibly and in an entirely inappropriate and overly political way – but nonetheless that's not in your purview – been sent out to Albertans' households, says simply that public-sector employees will take a wage freeze, and the only way that can happen is through the passing of Bill 46.

In 2013 the Premier argued that an advertisement that had been sent to Albertans' homes presupposed a decision of the Assembly. While this advertisement wasn't sent to people's homes, it was clearly heard on many radio stations all across this province, and that decision presupposed this Assembly's actions.

Mr. Speaker, if you find a prima facie case example of privilege here, I would be prepared to move that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for study and to allow the opportunity to report back to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this case is clear. This government has not treated the Assembly with the respect and in the manner it deserves. It's my hope that you, too, will find a case that the privileges of members of this Assembly have been breached by this government.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the Erskine May page: are you able to identify that?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not cite the page in my arguments, but I would be more than happy to provide it if you think it would be of assistance to your table officers.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While we received notice this morning from the hon. Official Opposition House Leader of his point of privilege that he wanted to raise in connection to radio ads, which have been airing on behalf of the government, we did not receive notice of extending that point of order to documents appearing on the government website. Therefore, I don't believe that appropriate notice has been provided with respect to that, and I am not prepared to speak to that. If you were to rule that we are going to be dealing with the point of privilege outlined in the notice that we received this morning, which is with respect to the radio ads, I am prepared to proceed.

The Speaker: Government House Leader, if you would like to proceed with respect to the matter that you have before you, that you understand that you did receive with adequate notice, I would welcome you to proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to clarify, you're ruling that the point of privilege that the House is hearing strictly relates to the radio advertisement. Is that correct?

The Speaker: Government House Leader, if you would proceed with the matter that you've addressed with respect to the radio ads, I would then intend to give the Opposition House Leader an opportunity to add the connection, possibly, between the two, and there may be others in the House that wish to speak to that. Could you proceed on the basis of the radio ads that you cited in your first comments?

Mr. Mason: I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, my view that proper notice with respect to the government website has not been provided.

I want to begin, Mr. Speaker, by stating what the chair has repeatedly stressed in times past, that accusations that members have breached privilege are very serious accusations that ought not to be made lightly. Erskine May's Treatise on the Law, Privileges, Proceedings and Usage of Parliament defines parliamentary privilege as "the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively ... and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions." This is cited in Beauchesne's 24. The House of Commons Procedure and Practice, 2009 edition, edited by O'Brien and Bosc, goes further to lay out the categories of rights and immunities enjoyed individually by members. It lists freedom of speech, freedom from arrest in civil actions, exemption from jury duty, exemption from being subpoenaed to attend court as a witness, and freedom from obstruction, interference, intimidation, and molestation.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure all members that I as Government House Leader and indeed this government as a whole take this Assembly as a most serious, deliberative body and that we have the utmost respect for the practices and institutions of this Chamber.

With regard to the case at hand, the ads in question refer to this government's climate leadership plan, a plan that has been discussed at length in the public and in this Chamber. Let us review these timelines. On June 25 the government launched a review to be chaired by the Alberta School of Business professor Andrew Leach. On November 22, 2015, the Premier stood with Professor Leach as well as numerous employers such as CNRL, Cenovus, Suncor, and Shell and representatives from First Nations and environmental organizations to announce our government's climate leadership plan. On March 8, 2016, the Speech from the Throne further outlined our plan, including plans for an energy efficiency agency to help diversify our economy, reduce energy costs and greenhouse gas emissions. On April 14, 2016, the budget clearly outlined further details on how our government was preparing to implement the climate leadership plan, including investing the carbon levy in Alberta through rebates to up to 60 per cent of Alberta families, efficiency programming, and much more.

Throughout this process the government has made numerous announcements and directly communicated with the public on the plan. The ads mentioned by the opposition reference this broad plan. Radio and online advertising began on May 25, and I was going to read them as follows, but the House leader of the Official Opposition did such a fine job, Mr. Speaker, that I could not hope to match his ventricular skills, whatever they are.

Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, is just one part of the broader plan outlined by this government. Specific measures set out in the legislation include a carbon levy and a carbon rebate, revenue recycling for those funds raised by the levy, and the establishment of Energy Efficiency Alberta.

I would note that there are elements of the plan not explicitly enacted by the bill. Notably, our work with communities impacted by the phasing out of emissions from coal-fired generation has already begun. I will indicate the other aspects of the plan, Mr. Speaker, that are not contained in this bill: the phase-out of coal-fired electricity in favour of 30 per cent renewables, methane reduction of 45 per cent over 2014 levels by 2025, an efficiency strategy, an economy-wide price, an emissions cap at 100 megatonnes, and an allowance for upgrading. In addition, the Leach panel discussed rebates to 60 per cent of Alberta households. Budget 2016 contained the budgetary aspects of Bill 20. All of this is part of the fact that we've been transparent with Albertans since the beginning, and I want to indicate just for the record, although it's quite obvious, that the budget has received final approval from the House.

In terms of precedents, two recent questions of privilege are directly relevant to this discussion. In October 2013 a point was raised regarding Bill 32, the Enhancing Safety on Alberta Roads Act. At the time it was alleged that advertising about this bill took place prior to its passage. A photo was submitted to support the point of privilege. The Speaker noted at the time:

It is difficult to conclude on the basis of a picture of one sign that the government had disregarded the Assembly's role in passing legislation.

The Speaker noted:

Any prior advertising about the nature of a bill must be undertaken very, very cautiously, if it is undertaken at all, so as to not create any impression that the contents of the bill are already law when the Assembly has not even seen the bill yet, much less debated it and passed it.

It is very clear from this ruling that the practices of this House do not preclude any and all advertising relating to a bill yet to be passed, let alone the advertising related to a plan of which a bill is just one part. Further, I would submit that these ads do not create the impression that the contents of the bill are law. They do not refer to the bill's passage, and they do not invite applications for a yet to be approved program. They merely provide overall, general information about the government's ongoing plan. Furthermore, it should be noted that no prima facie case of privilege was found in this case.

In December 2013 the Speaker did find a prima facie question of privilege. At that time the question was about a government brochure, entitled The Building Alberta Plan, which was alleged to prejudge the actions of a committee of this Assembly as well as prejudging the passage of certain bills. At that time Speaker Zwozdesky ruled that this was a prima facie case of privilege as the brochure created the impression that legislation was in effect concerning public service salaries when, in fact, the bills had not been introduced.

In making this ruling, the Speaker made reference to a ruling in Ontario whereby Speaker Stockwell, referring to a previous ruling, stated:

In ruling that there was no case for contempt, Speaker Fraser appears to have accepted the submissions of government ministers that the government had never intended the advertisements in question to be anything more than "informational" and that it had never been "the government's intention to suggest that legislation would not be submitted to Parliament for debate."

As stated above, it is my view that the ads referenced in this question of privilege are purely informational. For these reasons I submit that this is not a question of privilege. To find that this is a matter of privilege would be to find that the government cannot communicate with members of the public regarding virtually any matter that it intends on bringing forward until that matter has been passed in the Assembly. As noted, the ads make reference to the government's plan, of which Bill 20 is just one part, the ads are informational, and they do not leave anyone with the impression that the Assembly has concluded its consideration of Bill 20.

That is my submission, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The House leader for the third party.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, very briefly on the point of privilege, we have seen this before, this exact sort of situation or very similar situation, where the government uses its considerable resources to begin advertising something that is still before the Legislative Assembly. Now, the Government House Leader outlined a number of things that are within the climate leadership plan that are not within Bill 20 and that can be advertised, I would suggest, because they are part of the government's plan of attack, if you wish to call it that, part of the climate change leadership that he mentioned; for example, methane reduction and some of the other measures. These are not items that are currently up for debate.

I think, really, there's a very specific area here that the Official Opposition House Leader is referring to – and I do think that it is important that that not be included yet in government advertising because it presupposes the decision of the Assembly – and that has specifically to do with the rebates. There could be amendments made to the suggested rebates, that are very much part of Bill 20, and if those rebates are adjusted in some way or a decision is made, for example, to alter them significantly, then the advertisements that have gone out are in fact not accurate.

In this situation I certainly concur with Speaker Zwozdesky's ruling on December 2, where he did find, in a really, very closely parallel situation to what we're dealing with today, that the government, the previous government in this case, had committed a breach of privilege in that the advertising of portions of a proposal that had not yet been dealt with by committee or indeed by the Assembly was already going out as a fait accompli to the general public.

That clearly is not the way we should be conducting business here. Under the current circumstances and with what we're dealing with today, I do think that there's a very strong prima facie case of privilege in this particular situation, and I would ask that you rule accordingly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the question that you asked immediately prior to the Government House Leader rising as to whether or not a case could be made for the use of the website within whether or not notice was provided, I would just add that the advertisement in question clearly made reference to the website. As such, it is not the role of the opposition to ensure that the Government House Leader is prepared to defend the actions of his government. It is our role to provide notice of the concern. Our concern was specifically about the ad and, as such, the content in the ad, which included the website.

I might just add that the advertisement isn't just talking in generalities. It says that the transition will – not maybe but will – be made easier with energy efficiency programs, which, I might add, Mr. Speaker, are not possible unless the carbon levy is collected, and cash rebates, which are not possible unless the bill passes. When you say that the transition will be made easier, you have clearly presupposed the decision of the Assembly.

I know that you'll have an opportunity to review the decision of December 2, when Speaker Zwozdesky speaks specifically about this. In light of the time that we've used, I'll leave that for your reading pleasure.

3:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, let me begin by saying that I intend to defer a decision on this matter because of the fact that it is, first of all, a point of privilege. It is significant and requires complete knowledge of all the background referenced in the various arguments put forward. It may well be that after, as a result of that review, I may wish to hear additional arguments that may need to be addressed tomorrow as a result of the second point that the Government House Leader is making. There may be a requirement to hear additional information after I have a better understanding of the case put forward today. I would defer the decision until I've had time to review the background.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would respectfully request that we get unanimous consent for the following motion: that the Assembly proceed to consideration of Government Bills and Orders rather than private members' business, which would normally be considered under Standing Order 8.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure and Transportation.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'll move second reading of Bill 23, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

As I indicated at first reading, this bill has been circulated in all its parts to all parties in the Assembly and should receive passage without debate.

The Speaker: Are there any members who would wish to speak to the motion for second reading of Bill 23?

Hearing none, would the hon. minister wish to close debate?

Mr. Mason: No. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

The Chair: We have under consideration Bill 23, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today for what I'm sure will be the first of many times this evening to begin to discuss Bill 20. [interjection] Oh, we're on 23? Sorry. I changed my mind.

The Chair: Do we have any other speakers wishing to speak to Bill 23?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Rosendahl: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 23.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, I'd like to again beg unanimous consent of the House that notwithstanding Standing Order 77 the Assembly proceed immediately to third reading of Bill 23, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

The Deputy Speaker: We've had a request for unanimous consent to waive the standing order. Is anyone opposed to this request?

Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'll move third reading of Bill 23, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2016.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to this bill?

Hearing none, hon. minister, do you wish to close debate?

Mr. Mason: No. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

3:40

Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Chair: We have under consideration Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies, and I'll begin reading once the table allows me to proceed.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A5.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 as follows: (a) section 54 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2).

(2.1) If any record or property is provided to the Minister or an officer pursuant to section (1)(c) or (d), the Minister or officer shall give a receipt to the person who provided the record or property for any record or property provided at a location other than at the premises at which the record or property is kept.

And (b) section 58 is amended by adding the following after subsection (3):

(3.1) If any record is removed by the Minister or an officer pursuant to subsection (3), the Minister or officer shall give a receipt for the records to the person who provided the records.

This amendment, Madam Chair, would require an inspector under part 3 to provide receipts for records that they take for the purpose of copying them. Receipts enable both the person being investigated and the inspector to keep accurate track of the records removed for copying. An amendment would be required to the following clauses which concern the minister or an inspector or investigator to remove records: 54(2)(b) and 58(3).

A clause like this exists in several other pieces of existing Alberta legislation; for example, the Employment Standards Code, Oil Sands Conservation Act, tobacco and smoking reduction regulations, Drug Program Act, Scrap Metal Dealers and Recyclers Identification Act, Funeral Services Act, Occupational Health and Safety Act, and the Pharmacy and Drug Act.

When we told the minister's office about this amendment, we were clear to state that this is not intended to have any political overtones. This amendment will make the act more effective by improving the process of inspections under this act. Hon. members, it is important that we, of course, get legislation correct. Even if we do not all agree with the overall intent of the bill, this amendment will make any circumstance in which the above scenarios come to fruition easier for Albertans and enforcement alike to manoeuvre and feel confident in.

Of course, I encourage all to support this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the amendment. Indeed, it mirrors legislation in other levies and so on. Certainly, there's no problem with it, and we will be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes, looking at this amendment – of course, I just received it in my hands now – it seems like it's a fairly common-sense initiative to have an amendment where for any of the records that are removed by the minister, you know, the person that they're removed from gets a receipt so that they know what's been taken. I think, obviously, that would make sense.

You know, we're talking a lot about the different effects of Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. Of course, there are a lot of negative effects to the people of Alberta when it comes to this tax, that's really a burden at a time when it's just, really, not great for Albertans. A lot of jobs have been lost, and a lot of people are hurting. A lot of people have taken cuts in wages and that sort of thing. So we're bringing in this bill – the government is putting forward this bill – at a time when Albertans really are suffering.

I think that as we go through this today, just like we did last week, there are going to be a number of amendments brought forward, and we would like to see the government, of course, look closely at all of them. It seems like there may be some support on this bill itself, so hopefully the government will look closely at some of the other amendments that we'll be bringing forward.

Now, we've talked about this before, where Alberta is perceived by many to need stronger policies on the environment and climate change and that sort of thing. We do need to really point out that Alberta is very strong in its environmental regulations as it is right now. Of course, rather than, you know, calling ourselves down or calling us embarrassing cousins or whatever the Premier and the government like to call us, as Albertans we need to really be trumpeting our stance and our strong environmental record. We can always do better, and we would strive to do that, but we feel that this bill, Bill 20, is brought in at a time when it's really just going to hurt the economy and hurt Albertans.

We have a strong resource industry in Alberta, of course, and we have to protect that, too. We need to make sure that that industry gets the support it needs. We've talked a lot about pipelines and that sort of thing in this House. We've seen, of course, where the fire in Fort McMurray shut down some of our oil production there and how it has an effect on the entire economy in Canada. We need to really have a chance to trumpet our successes in the industry and to really, I guess, draw attention to the positive record we do have. I think it would be great if the rest of the world could catch up to some of our standards and the things that we're doing here.

Now, the government, of course, has talked about the rebates that they want to give back to households in Alberta. You know, as we went along here, I think even the government realized that those rebates aren't full rebates. The cost of this tax is going to be a cost on everything that Albertans rely on. It's not just the gas to drive, but of course that's a big part of it. Everybody needs fuel to get somewhere or go somewhere to receive the goods that they receive, so a tax on fuel is incredibly burdensome. You know, the government has said: well, the price of gas is down compared to what it was a year or two ago or whatever. You know, compared to its height, it is down from where it has been in the past, but it's rising right now, Madam Chair. As the price of gas goes up, when we add on these extra taxes, it just makes it even more burdensome for people. I don't think it's fair to sit here and say: well, the price of gas is lower now than at the height a year or two ago. I don't think it's fair to look at that and say that if the price is lower than the highest it's ever been, therefore it's fair to add tax onto it and make it even more.

I think we need to realize the total cost of all this and really be able to make Albertans aware. As far as making Albertans aware, we've talked about studies to show the actual cost, economic impact studies. This government has voted those down. We don't know the full cost. We're coming up with the best analysis that we can. We would have liked the government to do a proper economic impact assessment on this to see where we're headed with this so Albertans would really know what they're up against as far as this tax.

In this bill also is the increase in tax on natural gas. Of course, a large majority of people in Alberta heat their homes with natural gas, and raising that price is going to be a burden to everybody. Of course, that cost of heating goes to all the businesses, to homes. It goes to hospitals, schools, everything. This kind of tax hike on heating affects everybody, too, and every part of our economy. This tax will virtually make everything . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, are you referring to this amendment?

Mr. Loewen: Yes, I am, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Thank you.

Mr. Loewen: What I'm getting to, Madam Chair, is that we're looking for ways to improve this bill. We've tried a lot of things to improve this bill, but the government hasn't been agreeable to any of these things. This is an amendment that could really help this bill, and we would like to see this amendment pass. If the government is in agreement, of course, it would pass.

I guess we'll leave it at that, and again I'll add my support to this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A5? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. First off, I'd like to say thank you to the member for bringing this forward. I believe this is actually a strong addition to Bill 20, and this shows that the opposition can work hand in hand with the government to make legislation better.

I myself have had dealings with this sort of process before in working as an accountant in my past. The fact is that the Canada Revenue Agency regularly writes receipts to the taxpayer that they're taking records from, and the reason is that when a receipt is given, that protects both sides. It protects both the government and also the citizen or the resident that the records are being taken from.

This is an important point, and I will bring up a good example. What happened was that I had a Canada Revenue Agency agent take records out of my office. We used to host audits done in my office. What happened was that we didn't know that the agent had taken those records. She just put them in her carry-on bags there, and what happened was that when those documents had left, because of the way that she had done it, there was no way for us to know that those documents were no longer there. The reason this is important is that if original documents get misplaced, then who is to blame? Is it the government? Is it the resident? The resident no longer has the ability to state that they have the ability to prove or disprove the position that they are in.

Now, in this case what happened was that that agent in the end refused to acknowledge that they had done wrong. We moved through a process saying that taking documents away from an audit site without written permission was wrong, and I went through the process of going through the complaint process. Now, I'm uncertain, and I would love to hear from the hon. member if there is going to be a process in place. If there is a breach in not writing one of these receipts, how exactly is it that this resident is going to be able to hold the government to account?

Now, in this case there was a board that the CRA had put forward, and you would have a form that the CRA agent would fill out and that they would hand to you. If they didn't have that form, then they would have another form for you to complete the complaint saying that there was no form. It seems a little bit red tape-ish, but there was still, at least, a process there. My concern here is that we've got a bit of an open hole here if there is no process to make that complaint. Now, I don't know. Maybe this is something that could be done through regulation or something along those lines, some process that's already in place that I might not be aware of.

The concern for me is that if we do have one of these agents of the government deciding that they will unilaterally either give no receipt or, in the case of some CRA agents, that they would take records, well, it isn't very clear exactly what they took. I would say that that's probably not sufficient. A lot of times what happened was that when they actually did up one of those receipts, we would make them detail exactly what they took so that we could identify it later. The reason is that in the case of the CRA the taxpayer is responsible to be able to provide the records to be able to show their case.

Now, in this case, if these documents are, say, misplaced or shredded – in some cases, because of the fact that the government is such a large entity, with the CRA the problem was that they would accidentally shred things. I know it's horrific, but you've got to remember that we're talking about a big government here, right? If this does, say, hit the wrong desk and into a shredding unit, how exactly is it that we're going to be able to resolve that these documents actually existed? That is a point that I would like to bring up here.

I think that this is great. I think that this is actually a good move in the right direction, but I would like to bring up that there should be a process if there isn't one. I would like to know: who would be responsible should there be accidental shredding or lost documents or, let's say, even a breach in privacy?

That's what I wanted to say. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka on the amendment.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd just like to speak in favour of the amendment. I think it's definitely an improvement to the bill generally, precisely because it protects Albertans from loss of their property, from loss of evidence in the case of a dispute, from loss of funds in the case of fines or whatever recourse is being administered to them. Quite frankly, it's an abuse of power for the government to take documents without this kind of an amendment in place because it destroys the right of recourse for the individual involved in a dispute.

I definitely speak in favour of this amendment, and I'd like to suggest that all the other amendments to this bill are so intended as well, to make it actually better than it was in spite of the fact that it was referred to the other day as being so perfect that it did not need any review. The reality is that the amendments are intended to make it better, to make it more just, to resolve some of the inequalities that are in it, and to soften some of the costs to Albertans.

I speak in favour of the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 carried]

The Chair: Back on the main bill, are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I have already gotten to speak, of course, on this bill in second reading, and I think it's well known to my colleagues on the other side that I don't support this bill, mainly because it's a massive attempt to drastically shift our economy, to carve out billions in new spending at a time when our economy is struggling. In addition to that, this government did not campaign on this carbon tax. They did not. They'll try to say that they did, but they did not. Most of the constituents I'm speaking to feel that it is nothing more than a provincial sales tax, just with a different name.

Quite frankly, Madam Chair, if the government is so confident that the people of Alberta support them in this move, they would be quite happy to take this carbon tax and bring it to a referendum and show it to the people. As such, I have an amendment that I would like to move, and I have the appropriate copies, which I will send to you.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 as follows: (a) by adding the following after section 78.

Referendum

78.1(1) After the date on which this Act receives Royal Assent, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall order a referendum under this section, and sections 4 to 10 of the Constitutional Referendum Act are deemed to apply.

(2) The question to be put to electors in a referendum under this section shall be the following:

Do you approve of the Climate Leadership Act and the carbon levies imposed by that Act?

(3) An order under subsection (1) is deemed to be an order under section 5 of the Constitutional Referendum Act.

And (b) by striking out section 82 and substituting the following:

Coming into force

82 This Act comes into force on the later of the following:

(a) January 1, 2017;

(b) the date on which the results of a referendum under section 78.1 in which the majority of the electors who voted in the referendum voted in the affirmative are announced by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Repeal

83 If a majority of the electors who vote in a referendum under section 78.1 vote in the negative, this Act is repealed on the date on which the results of the referendum are announced by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Madam Chair, this government likes to call Bill 20 a levy when in reality it is a tax. This bill will tax every litre of gasoline and every joule of natural gas. It will tax Alberta's energy consumption, and because energy is input into every product and service that is delivered in our economy, this tax will effectively be a sales tax. Bill 20 – or, as some have called it, the NDP PST – is a backdoor way for this government to sneak their sales tax past Albertans, and this is unacceptable, especially since our province has legislation in place to deal with the decision-making authority of a sales tax.

The Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act clearly states:

A member of the Executive Council may introduce in the Legislative Assembly a Bill that imposes a general provincial sales tax only if, before the introduction of the Bill, the Chief Electoral Officer announces the result of a referendum conducted under this Act on a question that relates to the imposition of the tax.

Madam Chair, by not honouring the spirit of the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act, the NDP are completely sidestepping the laws of our province. Instead of playing games, this government should do the right thing and honour the laws of Alberta. Albertans deserve to decide if they can trust this financially irresponsible government to take an extra thousand dollars a year out of their pockets.

This amendment makes the question as clear as it can be: do you approve of the Climate Leadership Act and the carbon levies imposed by that act? It's a very simple question, Madam Chair. I believe that this government has refused to put this bill to a referendum because they know that the people of Alberta do not trust this government to manage more of their money.

Let me be clear. I'm not advocating for every bill that goes in front of the Assembly to be put to a referendum, but in this instance the law is already very clear. A PST needs to go to a referendum. As I'm certain the minister responsible for democratic renewal would agree, the government has an opportunity to make this right and empower Albertans. Economists have speculated that this carbon tax will be the equivalent of a 3 per cent PST, so why won't the government honour the spirit of the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act?

Madam Chair, I asked the hon. Premier these questions earlier today in question period, but I received no answers. I'm hopeful that through the discussion on this amendment, we'll be able to hear from more government members as to why exactly they want to keep this important decision-making power away from Albertans.

Now, Madam Chair, I look forward to hearing other comments from other members of the Assembly on this amendment, but one thing. Going back home, as I'm sure all of you will agree, for the weekend is always a way to clear your mind on what you see in the dome and to talk to constituents that you represent. Every constituent that I saw back in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre thought that this was a PST and was unanimously against this and unanimously against the direction of this government.

So if this government truly feels that the people of Alberta are with them, they should not fear a referendum; in fact, they should endorse a referendum so that they could clearly have a mandate for their tax agenda. But they know, Madam Chair, that the people of Alberta are not with them, and they are trying to avoid answering to the boss, the people of Alberta, the taxpayers that are actually going to be expected to pay for these ideological agendas of the NDP government.

My constituents and constituents all across Alberta expect better from this government, and it's time that we give them a chance to have a say in a tax that is being attempted to be imposed on them by this NDP government.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you. I appreciate this amendment to Bill 20 because, frankly, it truly needs to have a referendum that speaks to the people, that speaks to them about what the implications are going to be of what's happening here, a referendum on the sales tax mandated. And whether you call it a levy or you call it a tax, it really comes out to the same thing.

The previous government had put in a law that said that if you're going to make any changes, you have to make them through a referendum. This levy looks and sounds and does everything – it quacks like a duck, walks like a duck, so it must be a duck, you know. That's what it's doing. It is imposing a tax. This carbon levy is a tax. The law that was passed in this Legislature was clear that when you introduce a PST, this has to be done through a referendum.

This is going to affect the economy across Alberta. It's going to affect everyday Albertans. Everyday Albertans look at this as being a tax, as being like a PST. It's going to cost literally hundreds of dollars out of the pockets of every Albertan. It's not revenue neutral. If this was a revenue-neutral one – it may not be looking that way, but it's going to be taking money out of the pockets, not in a revenue-neutral way, and it's going into the coffers, into this green slush fund that the government is setting up.

It's important for us to be able to look at this referendum as a way to clearly identify to Albertans what this government is doing, what we as legislators are doing in this House. We need to be able to take a step back and show Albertans exactly what's happening in here. Because this comes into force as of January 2017, we'd have time to be able to do this if the government just got to doing it.

The fact is that it's going to cause higher fees for schools. It's going to cost in higher fees for all Albertans. It's going to be higher fees for our food. The tax is going to be imposed on hospitals. It's going to be imposed on, like I say, schools, the school busing. It's going to be imposed on all sorts of food and services and, of course, the gasoline that's being used by everyday Albertans.

So asking for a referendum on it I don't think is unreasonable. It's the right of Albertans to be able to have a say, that we can have an honest opinion on this.

If there's nothing that the government is afraid of about what they're doing, what they're proposing, if they're not afraid of what they're bringing forth with Bill 20, well, this carbon tax referendum, I think, would speak to it clearly. This is a way for Albertans to be able to say yes. This is a tax. It looks just like a PST, acts just like a PST. They have a right to be able to say that, yes, they want this or that, no, they don't want this. Clearly, if Albertans want this type of a PST thing, then they will vote for it, but they deserve to have the opportunity to be able to say that this is going to be a yes or a no for them.

On that, I am in favour of this motion and of it being amended as has been written down here. With that, I'll just quit and say thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. I'd like to speak in favour of this amendment. I think it only makes sense that since the government didn't campaign on this, they actually ask the people of Alberta how they feel about it. They seem to have a lot of confidence that the people are wanting this and are supporting this. Of course, I don't see it myself. I think there's one way to show Albertans that they actually care about what they think, and that's to ask them.

There's an act in place already, the Alberta Taxpayer Protection Act. It was passed by Premier Klein, and it says: no general sales tax without a referendum. I don't think anybody believes that this is anything but a sales tax. Based on this government's new-found love for Ralph Klein, I think maybe they should pay attention to the bill that he brought in. In fact, maybe we need to get some I Love Ralph buttons for all the NDP members of caucus there because they seem to talk very favourably about the Finance minister during Ralph Klein's era. They quote him all the time now. He may even have been the Finance minister when they passed this Taxpayer Protection Act.

You know, they were quoting from an article about the previous Tory Finance minister, but there are some things that they haven't actually included as quotes of what he said. Dinning said that he has reservations about how the NDP plans to use this revenue from the carbon tax. So as much as they like to quote him as loving the carbon tax and everything, they don't quote everything that he says. They just selectively choose the words that they want to use to support their view. There's a quote from the previous Finance minister, and he goes on to say a few other things, too. Dinning said that he would shrink the rebate program and put the money towards tax reductions in an effort to make the levy truly revenue neutral.

Now, of course, we all remember, Madam Chair, that when the government announced this report, the Climate Leadership report, this was going to be revenue neutral. Of course, the people that stood on the stage with the minister and the Premier obviously had to have believed them, what they were saying, that this was going to be revenue neutral. Obviously, we've found out since then that that wasn't the case. This tax is not revenue neutral. Now, I'm not sure if they had a misunderstanding of the definition or if they were just trying to lead people down the wrong path, but clearly it's not revenue neutral.

Now, he goes on to say that he's also concerned that the government may end up in the role of picking winners and losers as it decides on investments with the tax revenue. Of course, that's a huge concern. The government talks about how they're going to be giving rebates from this tax revenue, but there's an enormous amount of that money that isn't going back in rebates. Where is it going? Now, we just came through a question period here where we saw the environment minister asked three times regarding how this money would be spent, and exactly three times we received absolutely no answer. In fact, it was basically on to rhetoric and no answer to the questions. It didn't even come close to answering the questions, actually. Of course, things like this make people even more concerned about what this government plans to do with that money. It is a lot of money, Madam Chair. It's a lot of money.

Now, they also like to quote an article that talked about revenue recycling. I just want to quote a couple of paragraphs out of that article. It talks about carbon pricing having two clear challenges. "The first is related to the fact that carbon pricing invariably leads to changes in product prices." There's the first sentence for you: carbon pricing invariably leads to changes in product prices. That's true, Madam Chair. The price of everything will go up because everything involves oil and gas to either be produced or transported.

It goes on to say:

In particular, the price of carbon-intensive energy will increase. Since it is usual that lower-income households spend a higher fraction of their income on energy-related products than do households with higher incomes, carbon pricing has the potential to be regressive and thus unfair.

Madam Chair, we've brought this up multiple times now, and I guess it needs to be brought up again that this carbon tax is going to affect lower income individuals the most. Of course, the government talked about the rebates, but we now know that those rebates are not full rebates. They're partial rebates at best because the government didn't take into consideration all the factors of all the prices that would increase. So this is going to obviously affect lower income households the most, and that's not fair.

It goes on to say:

While carbon pricing is not necessarily regressive, this possibility is more likely in provinces with electricity-generation systems based on the burning of coal and other fossil fuels.

It just so happens that Alberta relies a lot on electricity generation based on the burning of coal and other fossil fuels. Therefore, Alberta is going to be even more damaged than other provinces would be by bringing in this carbon tax.

Now, it goes on to say:

The second challenge follows from the fact that different jurisdictions are not equally far down the road of carbon pricing, and differences between carbon prices across jurisdictions can create problems.

Madam Chair, what they're saying there is that there's a challenge because if Alberta raises its carbon tax higher than everywhere else, that puts us at a competitive disadvantage to other provinces and other jurisdictions. We compete with the U.S. for a lot of industry and that sort of thing.

It says:

Specifically, a more aggressive carbon pricing policy in any one Canadian province can lead to competitiveness pressures for businesses in that province, especially ones that are both emissions intensive and actively competing with firms from jurisdictions with a lower carbon price.

Madam Chair, that explains even more clearly the problems with raising our carbon tax and not having other jurisdictions follow suit. We need to use what we do as leverage to encourage others to do the same.

The Premier got up today in question period and commented on how the former mayor of New York loves our carbon tax. Now, I'm not sure how much carbon tax the former mayor of New York is going to be paying here in Alberta, but I'm going to guess that it's not very much. I don't know if he's got any friends and family in Alberta that are going to be affected by this carbon tax, but I'm going to guess very few, if any. It is interesting how far this government will go to find a supporter, and I would suggest that if it's not going to cost the former mayor of New York anything, then I'm not sure if Albertans are really concerned about what his opinion is on this.

Now, I would guess that the eastern U.S. has a lot of natural gas, and I would guess that if ours is priced higher than theirs, that'll make theirs easier to sell, so he may really, really like this carbon tax. He might really like it because it might be really good for the economy there and for the people that he knows and does business with. One thing I know for sure is that I don't believe it's going to affect his pocketbook at all, but I know it's going to affect everybody in Alberta in their pocketbooks.

We've seen the government run expensive ads selling this carbon tax to Albertans. Now, if Albertans support this so much, I'm not sure why this government is spending all this money supporting this and trying to sell it to Albertans. Albertans should just be accepting it. I'm not sure why they would need to be inundated with ads on the radio regarding this.

Madam Chair, when we look at this referendum, I think it's a really good idea. This amendment will allow Albertans to have their say, and I don't see why we can't give the opportunity to Albertans to have their say with such a huge, huge bill.

When I look through Bill 20 – of course, we've gone through it before, and we can go through it again – it's all about tax collection. It's all about taking tax from Albertans and how they're going to do it and what they're going to tax, how they're going to collect it, how they're going to enforce it. But there's one table in here called Carbon Levy Rates, and this gives an idea of what this is going to cost. Aviation gas: 4.98 cents a litre. That's in 2017. Come 2018, it will be 7.47 cents per litre. Aviation jet fuel: 5.17 cents per litre and, come 2018, 7.75 cents a litre. Bunker fuel: 6.36 cents a litre, going up to 9.55 cents a litre. These are all increases on top of the already existing prices of our fuel.

Butane: 3.56 cents per litre, and as of 2018 it increases to 5.34 cents a litre. Coal coke: $63.59 per tonne in 2017, increasing in 2018 to $95.39 per tonne. Coke oven gas: 1.4 cents per cubic metre and, in 2018, 2.1 cents per cubic metre cube.

Diesel fuel. That's, of course, what we use the most of in Alberta for transporting our goods, for transporting everything, you know, our food, our groceries. Every product that we use in Alberta has to be trucked in from somewhere. It has to be brought in from somewhere else. It's going to go up. As of 2017 it's 5.35 cents per litre. So every time you fill up with diesel as of January 2017, there will be an extra 5.35 cents of tax, and that's on top of the already existing tax on diesel fuel. Come 2018, it'll be going up 8.03 cents per litre. Again, that's an increase on top of what you're already paying for gas or diesel fuel in Alberta and on top of the already existing taxes on it.

Ethane: 2.04 cents per litre as of 2017, 3.06 cents per litre as of 2018. Gas liquids: 3.33 cents per litre and, as of 2018, 4.99 cents per litre. Gasoline. Of course, that's what the majority of Albertans will burn when they're travelling around Alberta: going on holidays, taking their kids to hockey, taking their kids to school, travelling to and from work. As of January 1, 2017: 4.49 cents per litre. Again, that's on top of what we're already paying for gas. I think right now in the city it's almost $1.10 per litre. Well, if we are sitting at $1.10 per litre on January 1, it'll be over $1.14. Come 2018, we're going to go up 6.73 cents per litre. Heating distillate oil: 5.51 cents per litre and, as of 2018, 8.27 cents per litre. Heavy fuel oil as of 2017: 6.35 cents per litre and, in 2018, 9.53 cents per litre. High-heat-value coal: $44.37 per tonne and, as of 2018, $66.56 per tonne. Kerosene: 5.14 cents per litre and, as of 2018, 7.71 cents per litre.

Locomotive diesel: 5.94 cents per litre, 8.9 cents per litre as of 2018. Now, obviously, locomotive diesel is how farmers transport their grain to other jurisdictions where we sell. That's the most common way for grain to be transported. We have to compete in the world market selling our grain. Obviously, we'll become less competitive in the world market as it costs more money to transport our products to the markets that need them and want to buy them. So locomotive diesel is huge. Again, that's something that can affect everything. You know, we see on the trains the different products that are being hauled. We have automobiles quite often being hauled by trains. Any increase in fuel will obviously increase the cost of that product.

Low-heat-value coal: $35.39 per tonne and, as of January 1, 2018, $53.09 per tonne. Methanol: $2.18 per litre and $3.26 per litre as of January 1, 2018. Naphtha: $4.49 per litre and, as of January 1, 2018, $6.73 per litre.

Natural gas. Now, this is the big one, really, or one of the really big ones. Of course, that's what the majority of Albertans use to heat their homes. It's used for heating businesses. It's used for heating apartments. It's used for heating hospitals, schools. An enormous amount of the heating that goes on in the buildings in Alberta goes on with natural gas. Of course, natural gas is used heavily in industry, any products that need to be dehydrated. Farm products that need to be dehydrated use an incredible amount of natural gas. Processing sugar beets, potatoes, all those things: an incredible amount of natural gas goes into dehydrating those products. It's $1.011 per gigajoule as of January 1, 2017, and as of January 1, 2018, is $1.517 per gigajoule. So there's a huge increase. Obviously, that's something alone that's going to affect every person in Alberta because everything will become more expensive because of it.

Raw gas: $1.15 per gigajoule in 2017 and, in 2018, $1.72 per gigajoule. Pentanes plus condensate: an additional 3.82 cents per litre as of 2017 and 5.73 cents per litre as of 2018. Propane: 3.08 cents per litre in 2017 and, in 2018, 4.62 cents per litre. Refinery gas: 3.77 cents per cubic metre and, as of 2018, 5.65 cents per cubic metre. Now, Madam Chair, these are increases in the prices of all of these different products brought about by the carbon tax.

Refinery petroleum coke: $63.86 per tonne as of 2017 and, as of 2018, an increase to $95.79 per tonne. Finally, we get to upgrader petroleum coke: $58.50 per tonne, increasing in 2018 to $87.75 per tonne. These are all the increases that the government has in its Bill 20.

Madam Chair, there's really nothing in our economy that isn't going to be affected by this. Nothing. It includes everything. We have a bill here, Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, and it's a tax act. It talks about nothing but taxes, how much and how to collect it.

There isn't anybody in Alberta that doesn't believe the environment is important. There isn't anybody in Alberta that doesn't believe we need to be leaders when it comes to dealing with climate change, but we have to do a couple of things. We need to consider the economy we're in right now, and we also need to consider those around us, that need to follow us. We can be leaders, but we have to make sure that people are behind us because if we don't, then we're left alone.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A6?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of this referendum amendment. I think it's extremely important. The government claims over and over again that they have a mandate from the people although this was not part of what the people were asked to vote for, this massive tax grab. They didn't even hear about this until after the election.

The reality is that in politics oftentimes the vote is a vote against what they don't like, not necessarily a vote for. To say that they have a complete mandate to proceed with this is a bit of a stretch, but if they're that confident that they do, then a referendum would actually verify that and give them even more confidence to be able to move forward. It would be a strong assurance to them that they do in fact have the mandate of the people. I suspect that the reason they won't adopt this amendment is because recent polls seem to indicate the contrary, and they're probably afraid that they wouldn't in fact have the mandate of the people if they actually put it to the people and asked them.

If they really want the mandate of the people, then it would be very appropriate that they seek a referendum from the people and let them have their say on it. This is a massive, massive tax grab. It is not a direct reduction of carbon tax. It is, quite frankly, a massive tax grab. I would like to remind the House of the report to the minister on this, the actual supposed guiding document that led to the direction of this entire bill. In that document the authors of the document actually point out that they have taken great care to ensure this is a progressive policy that offsets impacts on [most] Alberta households and small businesses, while [also] protecting our core industries and supporting the transition needs of affected workers and communities.

Here's an issue of taking great care to protect the very, very people that we're saying should have, actually, the opportunity to express their opinion on this: the households and the small businesses, the core industries, the workers and the communities that are directly affected by this. The Climate Leadership report actually brings this into the fore and states that there needs to be great care taken with regard to this. I suspect that this government is rushing ahead, not willing to allow the very people that are identified in this report to express any concerns, to have their vote and their voice and their say in this thing. I find that quite troubling, Madam Chair, that that, in fact, would be the case.

Then if you go to another page, under the carbon competitiveness regulation part, page 5, part (b) talks about the "rebate to mitigate the impacts of carbon pricing on low- and middle-income Albertans." Maybe we should just ask low- and middle-income Albertans what they think about this, if they feel that it's an adequate rebate, if they feel that the cost that it's going to charge them – why not just give them an opportunity to express their approval or give their vote on it? I think that would be extremely important.

On the same page section (c) talks about the need to "improve the mechanism by which trade-exposed industries are protected." Why would we not ask industry, by means of a referendum, whether or not they think that in this bill they are protected "to ensure their competitiveness while encouraging and rewarding top performance"? What possibly could go wrong with a perfect bill by giving the people their vote and their opportunity to express their opinion on it?

Then I also would like to draw attention to a further page if I can get my fingers to it. Here we go. I'm looking at page 9, and I see there, just close to the middle part of it, that "successful implementation of these initiatives (based on a $125M/year investment) could yield emission reductions of up to 1.5MT/year by 2020." That's an interesting couple of numbers. If you just do the quick little division there, it boils down to $83 million a megatonne, or $83,333 a tonne. We're asking Albertans to pay for each tonne of emissions $83,000. That's a very, very high price for carbon, especially when the assessments will be set at $20 and $30 a tonne. I think we should give Albertans the opportunity to have a vote on whether or not they feel that's a fair price to buy carbon at so that it goes out of the system. That's a pretty expensive price per tonne, $83,000 per tonne. Why should Albertans not have their opportunity to voice their opinion on that?

Then further on in the Climate Leadership report, page 11, there's quite a bit there on that page. The authors of the report actually acknowledge that these more stringent policies "would come at significant cost to the province due to lost competitiveness, with negligible impact on global emissions." Then they go on and talk about the fact that if they put in more stringent requirements, it would not be tenable at all “until our peer and competitor jurisdictions adopt policies.” Then they talk about “not sacrificing wealth and prosperity [of Alberta] to emissions leakage.” Then they say that this “is the most stringent approach we felt we could recommend.”

I wonder how Albertans feel. I wonder if we should give the opportunity for Albertans to look at the plan, look at the legislation, and see if they agree with this: we felt this is the best approach to take. It's a pretty subjective approach, and I think it's something that Albertans ought to actually have the opportunity to speak on.

Then they go on to talk about how “greenhouse gas policies are often painted as win-win” – I'm reading right out of the carbon leadership report to the minister – “yet, at the granular level, they may not be.” You know, I think Albertans should have the opportunity to at least express their opinion. In fact, they may be a win-win, but maybe Albertans don't have that same opinion or don't have the same feeling about that since this is based on a “we felt” approach. The opportunity for them to express their vote in a referendum would only be fair and democratic.

During the campaign the government party opposite spoke strongly of democratic renewal, spoke of democracy in glowing terms as if they were going to bring back democratic renewal and democratic process and democratic openness, all these things, but, you know, the actions of this government betray the people. I don't see that democratic renewal, and as well I don't think very many people out there do.

People should have a say on one of the biggest policy and economic shifts in the history of Alberta. This is the kind of tectonic bill that actually does call for a referendum. Referendums aren't really that rare. They are, quite frankly, part of the democratic process, and many jurisdictions use them quite regularly. I don't see why, on such a major bill and such a massive economic bill, the opportunity for people to express their opinion would not be granted to them.

I strongly vote in favour of this referendum amendment and encourage everyone in the House to do the same. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I support this referendum amendment wholeheartedly. This government constantly chants the myth that on the 5th of May 2015 a majority of Albertans voted in support of the NDP's platform of change and in support of the NDP world view and that they somehow have a mandate for this tax by default, I suppose. Well, let's have a fact check. Only 40 per cent of Alberta voted NDP in that election, which means the vast majority, some 60 per cent, did not vote in favour of the NDP world view of things. They voted for someone else.

The inconvenient truth, Madam Chair, is that the NDP do not have any honest mandate for anything, not really, not with 40 per cent of the vote – not with 40 per cent of the vote – but especially a new and invasive and aggressive, society-transforming tax such as this one. They have no mandate whatsoever for such a tax as this. At no time did charities or school boards or farmers or restaurateurs or anyone else in Alberta go: “Yes, yes, tax me some more. Tax me as much as you want. Yeah, bring it on.” No one voted for that. This government does not have such a mandate.

You know, Madam Chair, one of the other principles of sustainable energy management plans – and I know they are going to get sick and tired of hearing me on this, but that's just too bad – is a concept known as universal buy-in. Now, I've spoken at length to this House about sustainable and workable and successful energy management plans. One of them, of course, was to begin by using less, which this government did not do. On another one an hon. member – you know, I wish I knew where she was from – introduced an amendment on measurement and verification, I called it, but she called it something else. But that's all right. The government side voted it down because they do not want accountability in this thing. Nevertheless, that is a principle of successful energy management, a principle which, if not followed, will lead to ultimate collapse and failure of that energy management plan.

Another principle of sustainable and successful energy management planning is a concept known as the universal buy-in. Now, when it comes to buy-in, there are two ways of accomplishing buy-in in any organization, whether it be your house, with your own little family, or whether it be an entire region like the province of Alberta or maybe a multinational corporation. You can either have voluntary universal buy-in, or you can have forced universal buy-in, buy-in by decree, buy-in that does not take into account the people. It simply issues a decree: this is the way it's going to be, and you'd better buy into it.

However, when we're talking about sustainable, successful energy management master planning, of all the concepts and of all the principles – I'll call them the laws of a successful energy management plan – universal buy-in is the most difficult one to achieve because you're dealing with people. You're dealing with people, who have opinions, who have feelings about things. Sometimes people are afraid of change, so voluntary buy-in becomes a difficult thing to achieve but certainly not impossible. There are literally thousands of successful energy management plans out there that have been executed well, that are saving companies, multinational companies and small companies, literally billions of dollars in energy costs because they got universal buy-in and did it in a voluntary way. The voluntary method of achieving universal buy-in is slow. It does take time because you are having to take the time to listen to other people's concerns and, rather than invalidate those concerns, to listen honestly, empathetically to what their concerns are.

This government has not done that. They have forced a carbon tax on the people of Alberta with no mandate to do so, no mandate to do so at all. They have done this under the guise of saying: we need to bear this pain in order to eliminate emissions or reduce emissions in this province. But they never took the time to actually educate Albertans and really ask all Albertans to consider a tax as the mechanism by which we will reduce emissions in this province. That was never asked of Albertans. As I said earlier, the restaurateurs, the school boards, the charities at no time stood up and said: “Rah-rah. Tax me some more.” None of them, not one, and they still don't. They still don't. There is no universal buy-in, which means that this energy management plan is doomed to fail.

Now, the reason why universal buy-in is so important goes this way. When you're talking about an energy management plan within an organization and you achieve universal buy-in, every person in that organization, right from the bottom to the very top, is looking for ways to save energy. Everybody is involved in the process, and all those little things that everyone does achieves the goal. It works toward achieving the goal. Everyone is on the same team; everyone is pulling in the same direction. That's the value and the power of universal buy-in. That's why in the field of energy management so much time is taken to achieve buy-in.

Now, universal buy-in is achieved by lots and lots of communication. Universal buy-in is also achieved by something else I pointed out just the other day, and that is the alpha, beta portfolio-wide concept of introducing changes within an organization: either taking advantage of energy savings opportunities or emissions mitigation opportunities, ESOs and EMOs. If you start with a small one like an alpha test like I outlined the other day, you prove your point. You prove to the general population within your region or your organization that, hey, this is actually working. Then you do that test again as a beta, and you say: "See? We've done it twice now, and it works." That goes miles, Madam Chair, in achieving buy-in because now people see tangible results, results that are measured, that are verified and communicated to people, measurement and verification, which the other side voted down.

I found that rather odd, that they would not want measurement and verification, because the very act of measuring and verifying the results proves your point. It proves your point that what you're doing is actually accomplishing what you claimed it would do. The other thing that M and V does is that it allows you to say: "Oh, Well, you know what? We achieved 80 per cent or 70 per cent of what we were trying to achieve. If we just make this little change and that little change, we can get ourselves closer to 100 per cent." That's the value, the huge value of measurement and verification. It allows you to tweak things on the fly. Then as you duplicate what you're doing in other jurisdictions across the province, you duplicate it with the new changes, the changes that get you closer to achieving 100 per cent success. All along the way you're communicating the good and the bad.

Part of the communication methods that we utilize within energy management is through newsletters in corporations or sometimes governments. These newsletters point out the successes, the failures, the changes that are going to be taking place in order to achieve an even greater success. The most successful ones, that I've researched, anyway, are those where in the communications they spell out: "You know what? We did really well here, but it didn't work right there." And they're honest about it: "Okay. It didn't work right there because of this and this and this, and we're going to institute these changes, which will help us." Then when they run the beta test with the changes, they report back again and say: "Well, guess what? You know, half of our suggested improvements did lead to a higher success rate." And maybe they'll need to do, you know, another beta test.

The goal is to get your plan tweaked to the point where success can be achieved and, once you get it there, to then go portfolio-wide right across the entire jurisdiction. Whether it be a company with 17 branches across the world or whether it be a region with 100 or 200 counties and towns, you do an alpha, a beta, a portfolio-wide, lots and lots of communication all along the way, lots of education all along the way because your mission is to achieve universal buy-in.

What we have seen from this government from the get-go is a complete lack of understanding about how to achieve universal buy-in. We saw it with Bill 6, where they rolled it out and told us: it's fine the way it is. The farmers revolted, and the opposition dug in. We fought hard, and out came five pages of amendments to a bill that we were assured was just fine in its first iteration. Again, no understanding of how to achieve buy-in and, instead, using their majority to force things on Albertans and denying even standing committees the ability to bring in witnesses and to pick these bills apart and come up with solutions that would make them better. None of that. Instead, it's like rule by decree, using their majority in this place to have a forced buy-in, and that right there dooms this whole thing to fail.

The people of Alberta do not support this carbon tax. The people of Alberta deserve to have a referendum and deserve to have a say in this thing. The last government we had was thrown out on the grounds that they were not listening to Albertans.

Mr. Rodney: What was that?

Mr. MacIntyre: They were thrown out on the grounds that they were no longer being compassionate and listening to the good people of Alberta, and Albertans took them from a 70-seat majority to where they're at today.

This government is following in the very same footsteps. They are acting in a manner that is not considerate of the views of Albertans, and the fear that they are currently demonstrating in not approving accountability amendments demonstrates to me that they know full well that they do not have a mandate from the good people of Alberta for this carbon tax. They demonstrate thoroughly that they do not have that mandate, and they know it.

If they really, really believe that Albertans are in support of their NDP world view when it comes to this carbon tax, then I recommend they put their money where their mouth is. Let's see a referendum of the good people of Alberta and make that question a very straightforward question. Let's put it out there to the people. Or are they afraid of the very people that they claim have given them a mandate to put this tax upon us? Put your money where your mouth is. Let's have this referendum. Let's see what the people of Alberta say, and then listen to what the people of Alberta have said.

Madam Chair, this government had within their platform in the election that they were going to do things differently. You all remember that? You all remember that there was going to be better government, government that listened to the people, more accountability? Do you remember more accountability? I remember that statement. Yes, more accountability. Well, here's your opportunity to demonstrate more accountability. Let's have some accountability with the good people, the voters of Alberta, on this carbon tax. Let's have some accountability right on this issue right here. If you don't have the intestinal fortitude to go to the people of Alberta and ask their opinion on this, then you genuinely reveal what you already know, and that is that you don't have any mandate whatsoever for this invasive, oppressive tax.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. There was such passion in that last member's address. It was a rallying cry, I think, for all Albertans. A rallying cry. I would like to congratulate the previous member on getting us so inspired when it comes to governance in this province. [interjection]

Now, while the member from the opposite side may feel that his witticism is leading Alberta down the path to greater democracy...

An Hon. Member: Albertans disagree.

Mr. Smith: I would suggest that when I first stood up to speak, Madam Chair, to this issue, I brought to the attention of the government that legitimacy was going to be a problem for this government, that because they had not campaigned on this, that legitimacy, knowing that they could actually with a straight face stand in this Legislature and say that they had the will of the people behind them, was going to be a problem. You know, legitimacy is an important thing. [interjections] You know what? I'm not sure that that's a topic fit for this Chamber, and I will let this hon. member deal with that between himself and his wife.

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Smith: I'm not going there. I'm sorry. I'm going to assume that the hon. member across the way is as much in love with his wife as he said he was earlier in this session.

You know, we had a situation earlier in the session where we brought up a bill that really wasn't a bill: Bill 1, a Potemkin bill, a facade. When you bring forward a bill that really doesn't do anything, that gives the minister, supposedly, the ability to do his job when having appointed him as a minister has already given him the ability to do that, you've got to ask yourself: why are you bringing this before the House? You see, governments don't have to worry about legitimacy, I suppose, for a bill when that bill doesn't do anything, but when the bill actually does bring forward significant issues and significant changes to the province of Alberta and to how we're going to live our lives as the people of Alberta, then the government actually needs to have some legitimacy, and that bill needs to have legitimacy. That's the argument that we brought earlier, that when you actually are trying to pass a significant piece of legislation and you have not campaigned on it, you need to think about whether you have the legitimacy to actually pass that bill.

Now, this bill does make significant changes, and many hon. members have spoken to those changes. This climate leadership plan is going to create a series of taxes on everything, and that's going to hit the average Albertan family for at least a thousand dollars and probably a whole lot more.

This is going to affect school boards and hospitals in very significant ways. When we take a look at the heating costs, we know that the school boards have already published their best guesses as to how much this is going to impact their bottom line, yet when we look at the Education budget, we see that they have not built in the appropriate monies to be able to cover these very serious carbon costs. Heating costs: every single school, every single hospital, seniors, all of these are going to be affected by the increase in the price of heating. We know that that's going up about $1 per gigajoule.

We know that transportation costs are going to be rising. All of those buses that all of those kids ride on for sometimes an hour to an hour and a half a day: they are going to have to find some way of paying for those costs. We know that this is happening. We know that it's going to occur, yet this government has not built into these budgets, the Education budget or the health care budget, these costs. So you've got to ask yourself: well, where's the money going to come from? Well, I think we know that potentially it could come from that green slush fund. You know, we know that it's going to create pressure on the purchasing of supplies for hospitals and schools because everything that is transported under this bill is going to be costing more – everything that is transported by rail, everything that is transported by truck – because there's a diesel tax that's going to be affected.

It's a little hilarious – well, it's hilarious if it wasn't for the fact that it's hurting our economy so badly – for this government to come back to us and say: well, at least 50 to 75 per cent of the costs of this carbon tax on businesses is going to be covered by the businesses themselves. What? When was the last time a government raised its taxes on gasoline and you saw the oil companies covering the costs of that increase in taxes? I would love to be able to see in detail how they came up with those figures. Businesses won't eat these costs. Businesses are going to have to compete both against businesses trading into Alberta from outside of Alberta, coming in from the United States, as well as against other Alberta companies, and they're not going to be able to swallow those costs just because this government would like them to.

Everything is going to cost Albertans more, and because this is putting so much pressure on the rest of the business world, that we have to depend on for jobs, this government should be considering how it is going to get the legitimacy to be able to pass this bill and be able to say that they actually have Albertans' support. This government could call an election. If they really wanted to see if they had the support of Albertans, you could, on this issue, call an election and let the people of Alberta decide whether or not they will give you the support that you need in order to pass this piece of legislation. That is one option.

Now, I can understand – I can see the hon. minister across the aisle, smiling at me, and looking: oh, how could we ever do that? But, you know, I mean, governments have called elections on significant issues, and this could be one of them. However, you know, it would allow Albertans to decide whether they want $3.4 billion in increased taxes being taken out of their pockets. They could make the decision on that election, but I don't think that's probably going to happen because this government understands that it might not get elected – it's almost a certainty – on this particular issue. This is a significant issue. I can actually understand that. Self-interest does usually reign supreme in the hearts of most people.

Our suggestion would be that this government consider a referendum or a plebiscite, Madam Chair, that would allow Albertans to speak. Now, when I was in my classroom – referendums and plebiscites are a little bit different. A referendum is a question that is put before the people where they get the opportunity to vote yes or no on a particular issue, and then the government is legally bound to actually implement the choice that the people have made, yes or no, on that issue. Plebiscites are a little bit different. A plebiscite follows the same process. You have an issue. You have a question. The electorate is allowed to vote on it, but the government has some wiggle room. They have the ability to decide, based on the results of the plebiscite, whether they're going to follow through with it or not.

We would suggest a referendum. However, people sometimes have different ideas about what the question should be in a referendum. Now, that's purely in the government's hands. The kind of question that they could put forward is entirely in their hands. However, the idea behind a referendum is that the question would actually be crafted in such a way that the people could clearly understand the issue, clearly see what the issues are that surround it, clearly get the knowledge and the understanding of what is surrounding it, and then would be able to make a clear yes-or-no decision as to whether or not they wanted this climate leadership plan.

You know, we do live in a democracy. I realize that for most decisions it's a representative democracy, but when you're a government that has not campaigned on this major issue and you're lacking legitimacy, a referendum would allow you the ability to move forward with some sense that the people of Alberta are behind you. You know, you could ask a question as to how you want to spend that $3.4 billion worth of taxation. Do they want a climate leadership plan that is truly revenue neutral, or do they want one where they just are creating a great big giant slush fund, with the government able to dole out the money as they wish? You can ask the question, but you need to get the direction of the people if you want to have legitimacy on this issue.

Now, there's a long history in this nation of having referendums and having plebiscites. This is not something that is being devised by somebody that's outside of the NDP world view. This goes beyond left wing and right wing. Referendums have been used by political parties from across the spectrum, and this should not be something that the NDP should be able to reject simply on political grounds. We have a long history of referendums.

Now, for a Baptist like me – I looked it up. I didn't realize it, but one of the first plebiscites in the history of our country was on Prohibition in 1898. Now, you know, I guess . . .

Mr. Mason: How did it go?

Mr. Smith: Well, it's interesting that you should ask. It was actually quite interesting. If we look at Prohibition in 1898 – I looked it up on Wikipedia here, and it said that in Alberta and Saskatchewan, because we were one territory, 68.8 per cent of the people were for Prohibition and 31.2 per cent of the people were against Prohibition. Now, if you had wanted a drink, hon. member, you could have moved to Quebec because Quebec was the only province to vote against Prohibition: 81.2 per cent of the people. I guess there was only about 18.8 per cent of the people that were Baptists.

Well, you know, interestingly enough, the government, because this was a plebiscite, decided that the support in 1898 for Prohibition was too close – the vote, even though it was a majority vote for Prohibition, was too slight a margin – and that there were too few people that had voted, so they chose not to adopt the measure. I guess, from the view of most of the people in this House, that was a good choice.

You know, we have a long history, as I said, of having referendums. We could go back to World War I, when we had to make a decision about whether or not we were going to have conscription, and the decision on conscription was so controversial, Madam Chair, that it tore this country apart. In 1917, in the middle of World War I, when, quite frankly, the allies were losing the war, this conscription crisis tore the country apart.

It set the stage so that in World War II Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister of the country at the time, was again faced with this issue of going into a war that was going to be a total war. He knew that. He knew that we were going to have significant challenges when it came to manpower – we were a country of, I think, something like about 12 million people – that we were going to have to put together an army that was going to have to be capable of fighting for a significant period of time. He went into the war knowing that he was leading a divided country.

Dr. Starke: What was his famous quote?

Mr. Smith: His famous quote: "Not necessarily conscription, but conscription if necessary."

Dr. Starke: And he got that from his dog.

Mr. Smith: Or maybe after a seance with his mother.

What we've got is a situation here where in order to solve the problem – as the war progressed, by 1942 it had become obvious to our Prime Minister and to the government of Canada that they had a significant problem. We were running out of volunteers.

We have a long history or tradition in this country of volunteer armies, Madam Chair. It's probably the reason why the Canadian armed forces have always been able to punch above their weight, the fact that a volunteer army is an army made up of people that see the need or the cause for the war. They're fighting because they understand the need for it and they understand the justice of it. They are there, putting their lives on the line, in order to stop whatever the forces are that they're fighting against. We have a long, proud tradition of a volunteer army.

He understood that if he was going to have to bring in conscription at some point in time, he was going to have to have the support of Canadians and that a referendum was going to be important if he was going to have the legitimacy to be able to enact conscription. So Canadians went to the polls in 1942 in a referendum that said, "Are you in favour of releasing the government from any obligation arising out of any past commitments restricting the methods of raising men for military service." A very clear question: will you allow us to get out of our pledge not to have conscription? Canadians had to consider in this referendum – and in a democracy that's not a bad idea, asking the people what they would like to do.

On conscription in 1942 Alberta voted 71 per cent in favour and 28.9 per cent against, Madam Chair. Again, the only province that was different: only 27.9 per cent of the people in Quebec voted for it, and a total of 72.1 per cent were against. Again, a wise Prime Minister looked at the results, and even though the vast majority voted in favour of it, he went back, and he said to the people of Quebec: I'm going to do everything I possibly can to not bring in conscription. Of course, it wasn't until about this time in 1944, when we'd invaded Europe and when we started to take casualties in France and moved into Belgium and finally Holland, that the Canadian government was forced to bring in conscription. But it was not nearly as divisive because not only did the government have the legitimacy of the people through a referendum, but the people of Quebec could see that this government had done everything that it could not to bring in conscription. See, referendums, while they can be divisive, are also very good at drawing together consensus as well.

We know that referendums in this country have occurred not just in our far distant past but are actually being used, and used quite frequently, all throughout and across this country. We know, for instance, that in the federal election of 2004 the federal NDP came out with a policy that said that if the Liberal government of Paul Martin were elected in a minority government, they would press for electoral reform if the Liberals would be willing to use a referendum to get the support for that electoral reform. Of course, the electoral reform that they wanted . . .

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Of course, I'm in favour of this amendment, but I was so enjoying the previous member's discussion that I thought maybe we could have him continue and carry on. Thank you very much.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have the hon. members across the way into this history lesson, and I really think that if they just listen to this history lesson, they will understand the wisdom and the value of this amendment.

Now, let us break into history again, and let us be helpful, as we always try to be, and help you to understand that this is not a particularly partisan thing. The reality is that the NDP in 2004 were willing to work with the Paul Martin government and bring in proportional representation if the government would find the legitimacy to do so by asking the people of Canada in a referendum. You see, this isn't left wing. It's not right wing. It's called democracy. It's called going back to the people and asking the people about a major issue, something that's going to radically affect their lives, something that's going to have a huge impact on their lives. You go back to the people and you ask them.

If you have campaigned on it, that's one thing. If you have not, then you need to go back to the people. That's what democracy is supposed to be all about. I think we've established quite clearly that this government did not campaign on the length and breadth and width of this kind of legislation for this climate leadership plan, so it really has a moral obligation to go back to the people of Alberta through a referendum to be able to ask their opinion about whether or not they would like to be taxed in the way that this government is asking them or going to be taxing them.

You see, Madam Chair, we can see that referendums are used across this country. We've had referendums in British Columbia. We've had referendums in Newfoundland. As a matter of fact, if we take a look at Newfoundland, Newfoundland entered Confederation because of a series of referendums that asked the people of Newfoundland: do you want to become a part of Canada? Will this solve the economic problems that Newfoundland was struggling with and the poverty that Newfoundland was struggling with? Rather than being a self-governing colony, could they become a part of this country? You see, even though it was divisive, even though there were some people on one side of the issue and another side of the issue – democracy doesn't claim that you're not going to deal with divisive issues; it only claims that the issues will be decided based on the will of the majority as long as that majority does not infringe on the rights of the minority. That's important. I agree with the hon. member across the way.

When we take a look at a history of referendums, we can see that there's been referendums in New Brunswick. We can see that there's been referendums in Nova Scotia. We can see that in 2007 there was a referendum in Ontario. We've had referendums in Prince Edward Island. We've had referendums in Quebec, of course, the famous referendums in Quebec in 1980 and 1995.

See, the idea is that wise government understands that there are times when it needs to go back to the people to achieve the legitimacy that it needs to move forward in another direction. For the people of Quebec: did the government of Quebec have the legitimacy to pull the province out of this country? You can't make a decision that important without the consent and the will of the people. We see in 1995 just how close we came, Madam Chair. In the 1995 referendum on national unity, on whether or not Quebec would stay in this country, it was 49.42 per cent for yes, they would leave, and 50.58 per cent for no, against leaving this country. We were so close to losing this valuable part of our country.

What many people don't understand or believe is that the Premier of the day had written a letter the evening before the results were in and was waiting to post a letter to the Prime Minister that said: if the results of this election are in favour of separation, we are immediately claiming the Canadian armed forces that are stationed in Quebec as Quebec forces. Madam Chair, I can hardly – it shakes me to the core to believe what could have happened to this country if the Premier of Quebec had been so irresponsible as to continue to send that letter to our Prime Minister.

Referendums are important. Referendums decide serious issues. Referendums allow the people to have the say, and in this democracy, in this country, and in this province we still believe that the people should have the ultimate say. I've heard people say that referendums are too divisive, that we should never have a referendum because they divide people.

I've heard people say that we should never have referendums because they allow ignorant people to be able to have a say on things they don't know anything about. You know what? Even though there may be members on the other side that believe, "Oops; too late," the reality is that the people and the common sense of the common person in this province through a little over 100 years of democracy have made good choices. They are not ignorant people. They understand their own self-interests. They can deal with these issues. They deal with them in a civil, civilized way, and even though our emotions may get tied up into things, we deal with this in a way that breeds tolerance and respect. Once the decision is made, we move on, and we proceed to try to figure out how we can best lead each other in this democracy.

I would argue that this government does not have the legitimacy to pass this legislation and that it needs to go back to the people. You did not campaign on it. This is significant legislation, and you either need to call an election or you need to have a referendum of the people.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Mason: Well, that was a very interesting and enjoyable speech. I have always liked history, and, you know, I think the hon. member across the way is probably a pretty good history teacher.

What I'd like to say here is that it's true that there have been referenda on any number of very important issues, but I think what's happened here with the so-called carbon tax, in terms of our friends in the Wildrose, is that there's a loss of perspective. I think we've seen that. It was a very unfortunate thing that happened the other day, which we all dealt with today, but mostly that was just a matter of not seeing things in perspective.

The opposition has been lighting its hair on fire over this. You know, we've talked about any number of other things, other aspects of the climate change plan, dealing with methane, putting a cap on absolute emissions – there are many aspects – phasing out coal, and the carbon tax, which is what they like to call it, which is moving towards $30 a tonne on carbon. All of the experts who are serious about climate change and who are serious about the economics of dealing with climate change are shifting towards favouring these types of levies or taxes on carbon as a way of accomplishing the goal of reducing emissions.

I think that members opposite, whatever their views are with respect to the science of climate change, probably realize that we do have to reduce our carbon emissions and that Alberta as a province needs to do so. We have invested billions and billions of dollars in oil sands, and that's going to continue for some time, and hopefully there will be more upgrading here in the province, more diversification in the petrochemical industry and in other areas. The point being that you need tools and you need mechanisms.

But it's about perspective. The hon. member has mentioned a number of referenda that have been held in this country on whether or not liquor should be banned, like, made illegal in the country as a whole, whether or not we should conscript men to go fight in world wars, whether a province should join Confederation or whether a province should leave Confederation, or the very form of our democracy. All of these are very large, important, and critical issues of a great magnitude and great importance, and I believe that that's where referenda may have a use, depending on the circumstances.

Again, it comes down to perspective. The Wildrose is concerned – and it's fair ball – that we're going to put a 6 and half cent tax on gasoline. Yeah, that's a totally legitimate issue to argue whether that's a good thing or not and what goals or what things will be accomplished by doing that versus what the costs are – totally legitimate debate – but it's not on the same order of magnitude of whether the country breaks up or whether we go to war. That, I think, comes back to the lack of perspective with our friends in the Wildrose. They're lighting their hair on fire about the carbon tax, and, sure, it's a great issue for you guys. You know, I can see that. But let's keep the thing in perspective, right?

Let's talk about the real issue facing us in this country and in the world, and that is the ongoing impact of the change in the world's climate and the unusual and destructive weather events that come as a result of the changing climate, the potential for rising sea levels in some of the most very, very productive and populated areas of the world. You know, it's not just Bangladesh; it's also New York City. It's also London. It's also Vancouver. We need to be addressing this, and if not our way, then what way?

Let's talk about what the Wildrose alternatives are. You know, we accept their statements on the face of it that a number of them, anyway, do believe in the science of climate change, that it's a human-caused activity and that it's potentially threatening to billions of people who live on this planet. Then what is the answer that you propose? This is really what I would like to talk about.

In terms of this amendment, you know, my view is that it's not appropriate because it's not on the same level of magnitude as the issues that the hon. member talked about in his history lesson for us. You know, let's get on with a good debate. Are the costs, which I think our friends in the Wildrose have vastly inflated, of this carbon levy worth the results that we get? That's a legitimate debate. We believe it is; you obviously do not. But it is not a world-ending situation. It's not comparable to man-made famines in history. It's not comparable to the conscription crisis that almost tore this country apart. It's not the same thing as whether or not Quebec is going to break up the country.

So let's have a little perspective, and let's get the debate back to what I think is a very legitimate debate. Are the results that we're going to get from this worth the costs? What are the costs, and what are the results? That's a good debate to have. I'm glad we're having it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Let's talk about perspective for just a moment. Alberta is a democracy – that is, a participatory democracy here – with the people of Alberta determining our own future. The mayor of New York doesn't get a vote, yet he was quoted earlier today as though he's got something to tell us. In addition to that, whether there are experts that say this or experts that say that, the issue is and the perspective is that the people of Alberta are to determine their own future themselves, for themselves. This is not an aristocracy. It is not a monarchy. It is not a New York-archy or anything else. We are a democracy, and Albertans are the ones who are supposed to have the say here. Your fear of going to a referendum points out the fact that you're afraid of the very people who are supposed to determine their own futures, and that is shameful.

That's all I have to say.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't be as passionate as my friend from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. But I think in terms of putting this in perspective, you know, I'm going to keep going back to the Climate Leadership Report to Minister. The Climate Leadership report actually quite heroically tried to warn the government that there would be concerns, and to minimize the concerns, to say that the concerns are trivial or not important is, I think, completely unrealistic.

I will quote again from the portion entitled What We Heard. What did they hear in the public open houses? Albertans shared some ambitious goals, for sure, but then there were also "concerns about the state of Alberta's economy and the impact of new policies."

Then with regard to the online survey, it "demonstrated the more polarized views of engaged citizens, while polling showed the wider population to be more pragmatic and diverse in opinions and beliefs." To say that this is a small, little issue, that it's out of perspective – you know, even the Climate Leadership report tried to say that this is going to be a controversial issue. There are very diverse opinions. There are very wide opinions, and they will be different.

I go on a little bit further, the next paragraph, the fact that more were "concerned that efforts from Alberta will have costs to the province which outweigh the benefits." So, I mean, we're not bringing up unrealistic things here. The Climate Leadership report says these things.

Then with regard to First Nations and Métis communities and the organizations that responded to that: "many comments we received centred on the impacts these communities will feel." Then they go on to say that this is "something we encourage government to address alongside the implementation of their response to our proposals." Well, I think we've seen that the government is more than happy to implement the proposals, but I don't see very much caution here even with regard to the very warnings in the report to be careful about this and to be cautious about how it happens.

Then I notice on the previous page, page 14, that in addition there were public open houses held in Calgary and Edmonton. I find that very interesting because Calgary and Edmonton combined are only half the population of this province. The other half of the population, the half that is most impacted, that will feel the costs the greatest, wasn't even included in those open houses. That was really a biased sampling of people making contributions. Now, I know there were all kinds of other ways by which to contribute, but the truth is that the open houses were a very biased sampling, and the people who were most affected were probably not even there.

I just think that we do need to put it in perspective. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A6 lost]

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I have one of two amendments to put forward. [interjection] Yeah. It doesn't matter. We can do it after.

The Chair: I already recognized the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View. Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Okay. Madam Chair, I'll just circulate the amendment, and we'll take it as it comes. I'll wait until it's distributed.

The Chair: The amendment is A7.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise and give notice of an amendment to Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, to amend it under section 77. The topic is establishment of performance measures.

77.1(1) Within 6 months of the coming into force of this Act, the Minister shall establish and make public performance measures to assess the effectiveness of the carbon levy and any initiatives funded by its revenue, including but not limited to those developed by Energy Efficiency Alberta, in reducing emissions of greenhouse gases or otherwise supporting Alberta's ability to adapt to climate change.

(2) The Minister shall make public a report at least once each calendar year on the progress towards the performance measures established under this section.

I think, Madam Chair, the amendment speaks for itself. We're talking about a lot of money. We're talking about a major shift in policy in Alberta. We're talking about trying to impact not only carbon but jobs. We're talking about employment. We're talking about electricity prices. We're talking about costs of all kinds of activities, goods, and services in the province and so far haven't seen a lot of evidence about what we're going to be measuring and how we're going to assess the benefit and the cost of these measures. I think it behooves the government, if they're making such a dramatic change, to provide some indications of what the criteria are for measuring success, that they be identified explicitly in the bill, and that we, all Albertans in fact, have some sense of where success is going to be measured and who's going to be measuring it.

It's a challenge for any government to embark on a new direction. I've applauded the government already on the need for a carbon tax.

I think that in principle I support this bill, but I can't support any bill that asks for billions of dollars without any performance targets. It's just the basic requirement of all legislation and all good legislators, that we have some sense of what we're going to be measuring. Is it jobs? Is it carbon? Is it electricity prices? Is it the cost of food? That's basic for assessing the cost benefit of any public policy.

Mr. Yao: Even the Liberal caucus gets it.

Dr. Swann: Yeah. Thank you. I'm not sure whether that was a compliment or not. I take everything as a compliment; it's the least I could do.

I'm very pleased at this late hour to encourage people to discuss this: if not, why not? Why not have some explicit indicators so that all Albertans know what we're going to be measuring, how we're going to assess success, when we're going to say: no, this isn't what we had hoped for; we're going to make some changes. I think most people here have had this discussion to some extent already, but I think this is a little more clear, a little more explicit.

My constituents are saying: we don't see evidence that they've thought through the whole process and that they have some accountability measures there. I'll be having another amendment later that has to do with who should be measuring these and who should be overseeing some of the accountability measures as well, but for this particular amendment it's all about performance measures.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to thank the hon. member for his amendment. Certainly, I thank him for his consideration of this bill and for his appreciation for the seriousness of climate change.

There are a couple of issues with this. First of all, Madam Chair, we already have performance measures within the Department of Environment and Parks and the climate change office's business plan, and reporting on those is contained already within the annual reports. That information is consistent with the fiscal transparency act and the operation of the government of Alberta all told. Of course, there are a number of different times during which all members of this House may query the details within those reports, not the least of which is during budget estimates but also upon the release of the annual reports, which happens each June.

In addition, one of those performance measures is, of course, greenhouse gas emissions. The Auditor General has asked for some stock-taking of the previous government's specified gas emitters regulation, Madam Chair, and in our ...

The Chair: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(4) the committee will now recess until 7:30 tonight.

[The committee adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 20 Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Deputy Chair: The Committee of the Whole has under consideration amendment A7. Are there any members wishing to speak on the amendment? The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll just continue my thoughts from before 6 o'clock. I commend the hon. member for his interest in matters related to climate change and, certainly, matters related to governance, and I commend him for his attention to detail within the act. The fact is that performance measures are already contained within the business plan, and reporting on them is contained within the annual report, which comes out each June. All of those pieces, in addition to the budget estimates, are open to query by Members of the Legislative Assembly at budget estimates time and at Public Accounts. This will duplicate those efforts that already exist within legislation, potentially with unintended consequences.

Moreover, the matter of performance measures will inevitably have to do with GHG reduction targets. While we do know that the work ahead of us that is proposed by Dr. Leach and within the climate leadership panel certainly forecasts a reduction of greenhouse gas emissions in the near term, a bending of the curve, if you will, there are a number of pieces that remain outstanding on this matter of measuring and reporting on greenhouse gas emissions. What has happened in the last year within Canadian politics is that, of course, we've had a reinvigorated sense of understanding and urgency around climate change at the federal level, prompting the federal government to take a number of initiatives and make a number of commitments with the United Nations in Paris last November and December. With that will come a great deal of negotiation and a great deal of resources from the federal government, indeed.

There has already been one first ministers' meeting on this matter. There will be another one, I believe, in October and in the intervening period a Council of Ministers of the Environment meeting, Madam Chair, which will have an effect on both what the federal commitments are from a resources point of view and also what Canada's targets look like because, of course, the matter of targets is federal. That is another intervening factor that we want to make sure that we are weaving into our work here in Alberta. Having said that, we already have established our own climate leadership policies, and we think that they are certainly sufficient in terms of Alberta doing its fair share.

While I can appreciate the spirit of the amendment, I think that it is already contained within existing government of Alberta legislation, including, Madam Chair, querying and reporting upon the activities of the energy efficiency agency. Not unlike any other agency board and commission that reports to a minister, that information is contained within business plans and within annual reports.

With that, I shall close my remarks. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. minister – or the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Close but not quite yet. Very soon, I'm sure. Three years max.

Madam Chair, I rise to support this amendment. I think this is precisely the sort of thing that would make Bill 20 so much stronger. As the minister knows, as the House knows, as I've said before, but it's important to say again, I support action on climate change in the province of Alberta. I believe climate change is real and human caused, and I believe, in principle, in a carbon tax as an important tool in the tool kit to achieve action on climate change.

It's very important that when we talk about transparency – there's this word that we throw around in this House on a regular basis, but what does that actually mean? What it means is that not only is the government taking action, not only is the government doing something, but it is seen to be done properly by Albertans, that for something as important as this we establish these performance measures.

I have a question for the minister. When you talk about the reporting that will be done within the annual report and within the business plans, will there in fact be a stand-alone annual report for the office of climate change, or will it be embedded within the Department of Environment and Parks? If so, will it in fact get the attention it deserves?

Now, I know, without question, that this file is of importance to your government and a focus for your government, but I have a very difficult time supporting a bill where I don't know what those performance measures are going to be. I don't know what Energy Efficiency Alberta is going to do with $645 million. I would challenge the government to come up with those specific performance measures before you bring that bill to the House. It makes it very difficult for me to support a bill, although the principle of which, broadly speaking, I agree with, when my constituents come to me and say: "How is that money going to be spent? How is $645 million over five years going to be spent? Is it money well spent? How are we going to know?" That's one of the most important questions any government or, frankly, anyone in a position of power or in charge of any sort of organization ought to be asking themselves. It's a fundamental question of governance. How do you know? What you're asking us to do in this House is say: "Just trust me. We're going to spend $645 million over five years. It's going to be great."

Well, really, how do we know? What is the $3.4 billion currently earmarked for the grandiose subject and title of Other Initiatives – how do we know what that money is going to be used for? Is it going to be used to pay off coal-fired power generators? Is it going to be used to provide an incentive for renewable energy? Is it going to be used for this government to start a Crown corporation to make investments directly in the marketplace in renewable energy or other things? I don't know. I don't know. The Minister of Infrastructure and Government House Leader's eyes lit up when I said that. Perhaps that is what's going to happen. Who knows? That's my biggest challenge with this bill.

I have to say that in my heart of hearts I do want to support a bill like this, if not exactly this bill, because I do think it's important that we take action in this province. But, hon. members on the government side, if you can't convince me to support a bill like this, who wants to work with you on climate change and to make things happen, you're going to have a pretty difficult time convincing the rest of the province who are skeptical about the need for action on climate change and the massive change this is going to bring.

I think that in establishing performance measures and being incredibly clear with Albertans on what it is we're trying to achieve, how we know whether or not we're achieving that, tracking that along the way, reporting frequently and transparently with Albertans, and then if you need to, changing tack, maybe you're going to end up doing better than you think in certain areas. That's wonderful. Wouldn't that be a great thing? But if you're not doing as well as you might like, to be able to identify that fact early on – to report it transparently and say: “You know what? We thought it was going to go this way. It turns out that's not how things went, and as a result we're going to change course” – is the sort of governance and leadership that Albertans expect.

I would really encourage the minister and encourage the government to reconsider what I think is a very reasonable amendment, a thoughtful amendment, from a member who I know also shares your goals as they relate to action on climate change. I also think you ought to consider not only the content of the amendment, which I think stands on its own as a strong amendment, which only adds to Bill 20, but I also think it's important to consider the source of that amendment and the intent of the member, which is to strengthen the bill. This is not some political trick. No one's trying to pull the wool over your eyes. No one's trying to get one over on you. This Member for Calgary-Mountain View I think is trying to do the right thing. I think he's trying to make the bill stronger. If we can make this bill stronger, it's good for Alberta. Certainly, those of us in this corner of the opposition side are trying to do that through amendments like this.

I would really encourage the government to reconsider that and would very much encourage all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. I was glad to hear the minister stand up and speak because I had listened to her just prior to 6 o'clock and she referred to the business plan and that this amendment would not be necessary because performance measures were already clearly laid out there. I'll read to you what I could find in here. I have it with me, so if you'd like to enlighten us by reading it to us – under performance measure you have municipal solid waste to landfills and a target of reduction to 2018-2019. Then there are performance indicators that show actuals from 2010, 2011, and 2012, and they give us something from 2013-2014 but no actual performance measures. Minister, I'd be happy to lend you a copy. Oh, there is one other thing under performance measures. It's hunting and fishing licence sales.

I don't see anything there at all about greenhouse gas reduction in your business plan. You did mention that there was no need for this amendment to be put forward because the performance measures were already in the book. Could you help us out here?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member.

The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Yeah. As I was saying before the break, the Auditor General provided some thoughts on the performance measures that govern specified gas emitters regulation in his last report. He put it out in early July. So the Budget 2015 business plan contained within it the greenhouse gas performance measures, but what we did was that we essentially said in response to the Auditor General that we would be putting forward new performance measures that would align with the new climate leadership plan. That's what I indicated at budget estimates debate either in the fall of 2015 or the spring of 2016. I can't quite recall. It's possible I said it at both.

That is what we are doing right now in order to fulfill the recommendations of the Auditor General that were released almost a year ago now and to ensure that we've got the right performance measures in place for the new plan. That is to say, the performance measures around the performance standards; the output-based allocations that ensure competitiveness for our trade-exposed industries, for example; the GHG reductions that we can achieve through energy efficiency and demand-side management; and also an appraisal of the GHG reductions that we can achieve through the phase-out of coal-fired electricity. Those will all be contained. What we've done in response to the AG's recommendations is that, essentially, we are in the process of a brand new set of performance standards in order to fulfill exactly what the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View is asking for, which is a set of credible performance measures that are consistent with the climate policy that we have now, not the old one, and that can chart good, credible, transparent progress on our actions.

The final thing I'll say is that all of these matters that are contained within this amendment are already also within the Auditor General Act, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: You know how I hate to disagree, but you stood up just before 6 o'clock and then again in the last 10 minutes and said that this amendment was not necessary because the performance measures were already there. You said that they were in the business plan as well as other places. Which is it? Now you're saying that you're implementing these new performance measures. Which is it? Are they done, or are they not done? If they're not done, why can't we put this amendment forward?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to echo the sentiments of my hon. colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills regarding these performance measures. I realize the performance measures that the hon. minister of environment is referring to in the business plan – I believe the hon. minister is not understanding the kind of performance criteria that we've been asking for, which is the reason why we've seen these kinds of amendments asking for performance measures time and again here so far, and that is sector-by-sector performance measures. If we're going to tax the daylights out of our school boards, what kind of emissions mitigation can we expect for the dollars spent?

There has to be a demonstrated cost benefit to the people of Alberta to spend the kind of money, billions of dollars, on emissions mitigation. There have to be some sorts of targets that we're going to achieve with this expenditure. Is the cost benefit really there, again, for charities, for hospitals, for municipalities, for average Albertan homeowners, for every sector of our economy? I think it's fair to say that Albertans have a right to expect some sort of criteria for this carbon tax because of the invasive nature of it, because of the breadth of it, because of the cumulative effect of it. It is so pervasive throughout every element of our society that I believe it's only fair to Albertans that they can see some performance measures from this government that make it worth the pain that's being inflicted upon them, and we have not seen that. That's not what's contained in the business plan.

Then the hon. minister of environment says that we're working on those performance measures, which is a direct contradiction of what she had just replied to my hon. colleague moments ago, that it's all in the business plan. Obviously, it's not. We're getting two stories here.

Then earlier, just moments ago, the hon. minister was referring to federal targets coming down. Well, if we're waiting for federal targets, why in the world are we introducing a carbon tax now, when we don't even know what the federal targets are going to be? None of this is adding up here, and I think the members opposite owe it to the good people of Alberta to put the brakes on this thing or accept some amendments to try to give Albertans the assurances they need.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, I will put the question.

[Motion on amendment A7 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We'll now return to the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the original bill? The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Yes. I have an amendment, Madam Chair. I'll give my copies and await circulation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Go ahead, please.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. This is notice of an amendment to Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, that it be amended by adding the following after section 79:

Review by Auditor General

79.1(1) Within 2 years of the coming into force of this Act, the Auditor General shall conduct a comprehensive review of the carbon levy payable under this Act, the rebates and tax credits relating to the carbon levy and the effectiveness of any initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases that are funded by Energy Efficiency Alberta or any other revenue from the carbon levy.

(2) The Auditor General shall complete a report within 6 months of commencing the review under subsection (1) and shall present the report to the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices, who shall lay the report before the Assembly immediately if it is sitting or, if it is not sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

(3) When the Assembly is not sitting, the Auditor General may deliver copies of the report under this section to the Speaker, who shall immediately distribute the copies to the office of each Member of the Assembly.

(4) After the Speaker has distributed copies of the report pursuant to subsection (3), the Auditor General may make the report public.

I think it's become clear from the lengthy debate and the contention around the Climate Leadership Implementation Act that there's a lot of concern around the bill, a lot of support for the principle of the bill, and, in my view, tremendous support for a look not only at supply but at demand for energy in this province. We have to reduce our demand.

I'm pleased to see that there's an energy efficiency body created under this act, but I think that, like most people, we want to know that this will be properly measured, that there will be some transparent indicators that all of us can understand, even debate. Indeed, as I've indicated here, at the end of two years there should be a comprehensive review, before we get too far into this major initiative, by the Auditor General himself, whose role is to conduct value-for-money audits and who has gained a lot of credibility around the ministries in this government and, I think, from the point of view of the public gives a lot of assurance that what we're doing, well intentioned and well defined in general terms, is showing cost benefit, is showing where we're benefiting, where we're perhaps losing value or losing carbon progress in this case.

Indeed, if one of the unspoken political agendas is just to show more jobs, if that's considered to be one indicator and the carbon is not reducing at the level at which it is targeted to achieve progress, then surely we need to know that. If, in fact, for political purposes natural gas fired cogen is not considered a priority because it wouldn't achieve in the short term the kind of political advantage that would be hoped for even though it's the better transition in terms of some of the indicators, including carbon – by the way, natural gas cogen delivers almost as much carbon savings as wind would in replacing coal – then one has to raise questions about the cost benefit of what we're doing.

I guess that for all of us the Auditor General is the figure we look to for credibility, for accountability, for value for money, and all of us, I think, including the public, would have a sense of comfort, shall I say, with a very challenging and very ambitious bill, that surely is trying to take leadership but lacks a certain amount of accountability because the measures, the performance measures, the targets simply aren't clear.

It's quite possible that the government itself will say, "These are the indicators that we've ultimately decided on, and by the way, they're all improving, and we should all feel very happy about this" when in fact a value-for-money audit might say, "Well, this other direction – for example, natural gas cogen – in the next two years could deliver much more of the cost benefit and deal with our struggling natural gas industry and natural gas surplus as well as stimulating another side of our economy.”

I’m not saying that I know all the indicators, but I am saying that we as legislators and the public at large deserve to see what kind of performance measures we’re talking about. Clearly, this isn’t building new roads. It isn’t paying out the coal-fired power generators. Those are not legitimate calls on this carbon tax, so what is? Can we get some assurances that at the end of the day the value for money is there? I think that’s all we’re asking for.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. With respect to this amendment much of what is being requested is already covered in other government acts. First, this amendment would require review by the Auditor General, but that is already covered by the Auditor General Act. The Auditor General Act sets out:

11 The Auditor General

- (a) is the auditor of every ministry, department, regulated fund and Provincial agency.

The office of the Auditor General of Alberta can examine and report publicly on government’s management of and accountability practices for the public resources entrusted to it, which would include a review of the carbon levy.

The Auditor General Act also sets out how a report of the office of the Auditor General is to be shared with the standing committee and the Assembly and requirements to make reports public. I think that the decision as to what to audit and at what timing and so on should be left in the hands of that officer of the Legislature given that he reports to this entire body and serves this entire Assembly rather than simply the government.

Furthermore, I will direct the members of the House to section 3(2) of the act, which indicates:

The revenue from the carbon levy may only be used

- (a) for initiatives related to reducing emissions of greenhouse gases or supporting Alberta’s ability to adapt to climate change, or
- (b) to provide rebates or adjustments related to the carbon levy to consumers, businesses and communities, including adjustments in the form of tax credits or tax rate reductions.

Madam Chair, what we’ve done with this is to build straight into it uses of the levy that must be directed towards specific undertakings of the government either to mitigate against climate change – that is to say, to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions – or, on the other hand, to ensure that our economy can adjust to a carbon-pricing environment, which we’ve provided for through the reduction in the small-business tax rate and the rebate system, with 66 per cent of households receiving some form of rebate.

Madam Chair, we believe that the spirit of the amendment already exists within various acts, including the Auditor General Act but also the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which requires us to report on progress, and the act itself under section 3.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, that precisely is my point. If the Auditor General decides, for example, that paying people who earn $100,000 a year a rebate for their carbon levy doesn’t make sense from either a fiscal point of view or a carbon reduction point of view, I guess the question is: how will you know that without measuring that particular impact on the middle class, who, in my view, don’t need the rebate? It will not incent them to change their behaviour.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A8? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I understand the intent of the hon. member in introducing this amendment, but I cannot support it, and my reasons are different from what the hon. minister of the environment may have brought forward. My reasons are that by the time two years transpire, it’s going to be too late. We need some answers earlier than that. To wait for two years for the Auditor General to complete a comprehensive report on something as invasive and oppressive as this tax is to wait far too long. By then we will have the carbon tax sitting at $30, not $20, and we will not know whether that was even the right move to make. It’s simply too long a period of time.

I don’t see this amendment as being what we need to try to improve this bill, so I will not be voting in favour of it. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I rise to support this amendment. I think that when we have a change as fundamental as a carbon tax, notwithstanding the fact that the Auditor General has the power to audit, it is important that we formally review whether or not the bill or the legislation that is passed and put into force actually achieves what we want it to achieve. The Member for Calgary-Mountain View asked the fundamental question: how do we know? Again, this government is asking Albertans simply: trust us.

You know, I wonder. That’s a couple of amendments here in a row where the Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office has said: “We’re waiting on some other things to happen. We’re going to come up with these metrics and measures later. Trust us. We’re going to get some information.” It makes me wonder if this government is acting too hastily on a very, very important file. Does the fast pace of this implementation, absent the knowledge of exactly what it is you’re trying to achieve, absent the knowledge of actual measures, absent the knowledge of what the federal government will do and what other jurisdictions will do both in other provinces as well as other countries, in fact, undermine what I believe to be your sincere efforts to do the right thing here? Are you risking the success of a very, very important file simply because you want to go ahead quickly? What’s wrong with taking the time to make sure you get it right? Why couldn’t we wait until you knew the details of Energy Efficiency Alberta before bringing in this bill?

Nothing is going to happen in the intervening six months between now and the fall sitting. Perhaps we could even move the fall sitting forward, a little ahead of the scheduled start of October 31, if the government believes that there’s some compelling information they’d like to bring before the House in terms of the details. It would give all of us a lot more information, would make it, frankly, a lot easier for myself – and I don’t want to speak on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mountain View – and perhaps for him as well to support this legislation, to support the government’s work.

The other point I’d like to make to the government members is that I’ll ask you just to consider again the source of this amendment, that it is a thoughtful amendment from a thoughtful member who’s trying to do the right thing, whose heart, I know, is in the right place, and I’m quite certain it is aligned with what you’re trying to do.

Let's compare that to some of the heated and, frankly, shameful rhetoric that we've had from the Official Opposition, comparing the carbon tax to horrible, horrific incidents in history. The fact that that was even written in the first place, frankly, is shameful. There's no other word for it. The fact that someone would sit down and actually write those words and then put them out and then have nine members put their name to it is truly shameful. I'm not only speaking as someone who's a proud Ukrainian-Canadian – my mom is a Warnyca – but, irrespective of my background and personal beliefs, to not just draw the conclusions on that terrible, terrible incident in human history.

This is a carbon tax, which will add 6 and a half cents at the pump, which will add a dollar a gigajoule, which will have a variety of other taxes, aviation fuel and locomotive fuel. While I think that we can quibble in this House about the scale of those changes – some members may not believe that those sorts of changes are warranted in a difficult economic time, and that's a legitimate discussion – the sun is still going to rise on January 1, 2017, and I suspect that, with good fortune, it will rise on January 1, 2018. This carbon tax will not destroy the province of Alberta. Whether or not it's exactly the right thing to do, whether or not it has appropriate and positive consequences for our province I think is the essence of this amendment, of exactly what the member is trying to drive at.

So I would really encourage the government to think seriously about supporting this amendment when you've got thoughtful members here who are trying to help the government truly be better.

My belief, speaking for myself, is that our job on this side of the House is not to simply oppose what the government does for opposition's sake. I want you to succeed. I want this government to succeed because if you succeed, Alberta succeeds. Conversely, I do not want the government to fail because if you fail, Alberta fails. That is not what we should be here to do. What we should be here to do is to make Alberta a better place. The job of opposition is to enable the success of government. That's what I believe the job of thoughtful opposition is. We're not here to tear you down.

I really would encourage you, members, to think seriously about accepting this amendment because it does make Bill 20 a stronger bill. We're trying to make progress on a file very important to your government and, I think, to the future of this province. If we can succeed with this, Alberta is going to be a better place. That's what I think we should be trying to do here. So I do encourage members on the government side to please think very seriously about supporting this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A8?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A8 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm happy to rise to speak to Bill 20 here in Committee of the Whole. There have been a number of good ideas, good amendments put forward. It's unfortunate that so far we've just had the one that's been approved, but I'm going to propose one and give the rationale for why I would like to see this amendment go ahead. So if I could hand this off to the page. The original is on top. Perfect.

I'll just wait a few minutes for those to be distributed, but I'll say in general terms, Madam Chair, that the amendment I'm proposing has to do with the carbon tax as it applies to aviation fuel, recognizing, as the Minister of Environment and Parks has stated, that the carbon tax will be waived for flights that either originate outside of Alberta or, you know, are leaving to a location outside of Alberta but that for, shall we call them, domestic flights or intraprovincial flights, commercial flights, the carbon tax will be applicable on those flights. If I could just read the amendment into the record now.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Dr. Starke: I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 as follows. In part A section 7 is struck out; in part B section 25 is amended by striking out subsection (1)(i) and, in subsection (2), by striking out "7"; in part C sections 27(1)(a)(xii) and (xiii) are struck out; in part D section 61 is amended by striking out "7"; in part E the schedule is amended by striking out sections 1(1)(a) and (b); and in part F the table to the schedule is amended by striking out the following:

Aviation gas	4.98 ¢/L	7.47 ¢/L
Aviation jet fuel	5.17 ¢/L	7.75 ¢/L

So what's the rationale behind this amendment, Madam Chair? Well, I'd like to say that I'm very pleased to see that the minister has recognized that having a carbon tax on aviation fuel is a fundamentally noncompetitive move. They're absolutely correct in recognizing that. In fact, Canada as a nation is particularly uncompetitive when it comes to the costs of aviation.

Now, it is known that we are the second-largest, by square kilometres, country in the world and that we also are one of the most sparsely populated countries. Because of those realities – and those are realities that won't change anytime soon – aviation is, in fact, a critical aspect of transportation in Canada. It could be argued, certainly, for northern Alberta and for our northern territories that without aviation it would be indeed very, very difficult for those parts of Canada to even be reasonably habitable.

Because of that, we have to recognize and try to do everything we can to reduce the impediments to aviation and civil aviation within the country. There have been numerous studies – well, actually, the World Economic Forum annually publishes a travel and tourism competitive index. I have a fair bit of familiarity with this from my time as tourism minister. While Canada as a nation does very well in terms of our airport infrastructure, sadly, we don't do very well as far as our cost competitiveness. In fact, out of 140 countries that were ranked in the 2013 World Economic Forum's travel and tourism competitive index, Canada ranked 136th. In other words, we only beat four other countries. As far as travel and tourism price competitiveness we ranked 124th.

It is something that has held back our tourism sector. It is something that has resulted in Canada as a tourism destination falling from second to 17th since 1950. It's because, quite simply, it is expensive to fly to and from Canada. In fact, 21 per cent of Canadians now choose to go to an American destination or an American departure airport to start their journeys rather than flying out of a Canadian airport. Now, Alberta is not as directly affected by that because our larger population centres are somewhat farther away from American departure airports. But, for example, in Windsor over 90 per cent of departing traffic drives across the border to Detroit to start their journey from Detroit. Abbotsford: over 90 per cent travel to Seattle to begin their journey. So this affects the ability of these airports to provide service.

We have a situation where competitiveness is definitively affected not so much by our base charges but by our fees and other charges. A study done by the Canadian Airports Council for the Conference Board of Canada in 2012, for example, showed that the fees for a round-trip airfare in Canada are roughly double the cost of the additional fees for the U.S. and that these fees constitute some 43 per cent of the overall ticket cost for Canadian travels whereas in the U.S. that percentage is only 14 per cent. So we have a situation where additional charges – taxes, fees – create a significant disincentive to travel, and what bothers me about this is that this creates a specific disincentive to travel within Alberta.

Now, as tourism minister one of the things that we always talked about was promoting Alberta to Albertans and trying to get people to stay home or at least stay within their province and discover Alberta. We have a beautiful province, Madam Chair. You come from a part of the province that most would consider somewhat isolated, and I'm sure that the fact that the plane flies to High Level is something that you appreciate. A lot of people might not otherwise travel to some of these destinations if it were not for the availability of flights. This measure, especially given that this measure unfairly disincentivizes travel within the province, makes no sense at all.

Let me talk a little bit more about the general thought behind aviation taxes. In January 2014 the C.D. Howe Institute issued a commentary entitled Full Throttle: Reforming Canada's Aviation Policy. In that study the C.D. Howe Institute talked a little bit about changes that airlines make because of differential taxation in different parts of the province. This is a somewhat long quote, but I do want people to listen very carefully.

Fuel taxes also lead to airlines trying to arbitrage between provinces or internationally, a practice known in the industry as "tankering." An airline can lower its after-tax fuel costs by loading extra fuel in the low-tax jurisdiction, but at the cost of carrying extra weight in-flight and therefore burning more fuel. Airlines engage in this practice if the cost of burning more fuel is less than the additional cost of taxes upon refueling, but the economic cost of the distortion in terms of wasted fuel and environmental harm can be substantial.

Madam Chair, I just want to be sure that we understand some of the consequences that can come about – and they are, I would say, unintended – because of the levying of these additional charges on aviation fuel for flights within the province.

The recommendation of the C.D. Howe Institute in this study was:

Provincial governments should . . . reduce their aviation fuel taxes so that the amount of tax they collect is no more than what they finance for aviation infrastructure. Given current levels of provincial investment in aviation infrastructure [are low], this recommendation means that provinces should largely eliminate their aviation fuel taxes.

The challenge here is that this is not eliminating aviation fuel taxes; in fact, it's raising them.

Well, does it make a difference? Well, I guess there are two sides of that coin that we should look at. First of all, we should look at: does it affect the number of flights? I can say to you unequivocally that it does. A couple of years ago, when I was tourism minister, the province of British Columbia made a decision that it would drop its aviation fuel tax. Now, this resulted in a hit for the province of British Columbia on the revenue side, and it recognized that, but what it did was increase the number of flights in and out of Vancouver substantially. More and more airlines chose Vancouver as their port of call to come into North America because it became more cost competitive.

At the same time, the province of Ontario chose the opposite approach, to raise its aviation fuel taxes. Even though Toronto is the largest gateway airport in the country, the price, for example, of landing a 767 in Toronto with all the fees and charges included is more than double that of the next highest cost airport in North America. Madam Chair, these are the kinds of considerations that we need to take into account when we are looking at making these kinds of changes.

Again, as I said before, I think we want to be doing everything we possibly can to encourage Albertans to stay within their province, to travel within their province and see everything that Alberta has to offer. I know that Travel Alberta works very, very hard on this. One of the things we always talked about in the tourism department was: what can we do to reduce tourism leakage? What can we do to reduce the number of tourists that travel outside of our province, and what are the things that we don't have that we would like to offer? Well, unfortunately, we don't have oceanfront property – we know that – and we don't have beaches. I was looking, as an April Fool's joke, at the possibility of annexing Maui, but they had some problems with that. I will tell you that Alberta has just about everything that tourists are looking for, but if we, to our own Albertans, make Alberta a less attractive destination because we increase the cost, we're not helping our tourism industry. It's not just tourism; it's general aviation travel.

The city of Lloydminster has an airport, and we do have commercial flights in and out of Lloydminster. We've had for a number of years now only one place that you could fly to, and that was the city of Calgary. Now, that's great, but Central Mountain Air, which operates the service – and it used to be Central Mountain Air plus Peace Air; we had two airline companies that served us. We now only have the one. Central Mountain Air used to have 14 flights a week. There was no service on weekends, but Monday through Friday there were either three flights or just two flights a day. I just checked this afternoon. The number of flights that Central Mountain Air now operates is only seven per week. In talking to the airport personnel in Lloydminster, they've told me that the number of passengers that they are carrying to and from Calgary has been reduced by approximately two-thirds.

Airline competitiveness in an industry where the cost margins, especially when you're flying aircraft that are not completely full, something as small – and I'm sure that some are going to say that this is just such a small thing that it wouldn't affect the decision. It does. It absolutely affects the decision. Perhaps we would be better off in Lloydminster if the airport was in Saskatchewan, but as luck would have it, the Lloydminster airport is in Alberta. It would apply to this situation whereby the aircraft would have to pay the aviation fuel tax.

Aviation fuel taxes are not a help to the tourism industry, and they're not a help to general aviation. In fact, this is another one of those situations where there are consequences to what you're doing, and I'm quoting now from a seminal report that was done by the Canadian Senate. It was done in 2012, and it was called The Future of Canadian Air Travel: Toll Booth or Spark Plug? It talked about the lack of competitiveness of Canada's airports and our aviation industry in general. It says:

Aviation is critical to growing the . . . economy, supporting jobs, enabling investment and facilitating trade. . . . In these times of need for job creation and job protection, expanded air services offers a low cost, low risk, high reward way to grow and diversify our economy, allowing us to reach our full potential.

Madam Chair, placing a disincentive on increased use of aviation and commercial aviation makes absolutely no sense and runs directly counter to a number of the stated goals of the government. They want to diversify the economy, and they want to create jobs, but if you put a tax on aviation fuel, you will have exactly the opposite effect. We've already gone from 14 to seven flights in Lloydminster, and if it drops to five or four, at some point we may even see a situation where that service is cancelled completely. How is that helping with job creation? How is that helping with diversification of the economy? Well, the simple answer is that it's not.

If the minister or someone else is responding to this, I would really like to know: what is the projected amount of income that is going to be raised from this portion of the carbon tax, just on the domestic fuel carbon tax part? Unless it's a huge amount of money that the government is going to forgo – I understand that they would like to bring in revenue from this. I really question whether anyone has done a cost-benefit analysis to determine whether the measure that is being put in place here, selectively targeting domestic intraprovincial travel, will have the desired effect. Will it end up costing more than what it's going to bring in in revenue? Very clearly, if it is not going to bring in more revenue than what it costs the economy, then it makes no sense to go ahead and do it.

Madam Chair, I hope that I've provided the Assembly this evening with a number of arguments that they will carefully consider with regard to these two areas of taxation. Again, I applaud the government for leaving out-of-province travel and those flights out of the carbon tax. Clearly, they've recognized that that makes us uncompetitive with other provinces. I also want to point out to them – and I hope that they will take this in the manner in which it's intended – that creating a disincentive for aviation, for airline travel within the province is also a negative on our economy. It will work against job creation, it will work against diversification of the economy, and it will hurt our overall competitiveness.

It is not a measure that we should go forward with, and I would urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: This amendment is A9. Are there any further members wishing to speak to amendment A9? I'll recognize Calgary-Elbow first, followed by Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. At the risk of sounding repetitive, I imagine that if we do go, in fact, as late tonight as it sounds like we might, that may become a bit of a theme for all of us in terms of repetitive arguments. You know, what I like about this amendment is that it is seeking to solve what I would consider an unintended consequences problem. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has done a very good job of researching the impacts of this, and I think it's going to help, again, with the credibility of this carbon tax. Anything that we can do on this side of the House to make this a better bill I would hope the government would consider. I don't imagine this is going to end up costing a tremendous amount of money in terms of the overall carbon tax. In fact, it may be one of those situations where the loss of economic activity avoided by not disincenting the air travel domestically within Alberta would in fact offset any losses to government revenue from the carbon tax. I think it's a thoughtful amendment, I think it's something definitely worth considering, and I would strongly encourage the government and all members to support this amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Rodney: In the interest of time, tongue firmly planted in cheek, I will say – and I quote – that he had me at “Madam Chair.” With all great respect, this is not about politics; this is about making it better. The hon. House leader of our party has definitely done his homework, and I would really, really like to know from the other side if there is a reason to vote against this amendment because I can't find a single one. In the interest of time, perhaps after the next speaker we could call the question.

Thank you.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief. When we're talking about our economy here in this province, often we forget that there is a part of our province, the northern reaches of our province, that faces very unique challenges both on the business side of things and on the personal side of things. For remote communities, for remote First Nations communities, and for Métis communities in the north, they face unique challenges that are, quite frankly, foreign to Albertans who don't live there and experience these challenges on a day-to-day basis. One of those challenges is the increased cost of living just by virtue of the fact of their remoteness. In another life I was responsible for distribution of goods into our north, and many times we had to airdrop those supplies into communities in the north.

Now, this is not a luxury item. Air travel in Alberta's north is often a matter of survival. Sometimes we have situations where there are flights that are medical in nature, and all the time it is expensive. It's very expensive. So there is an unfair economic burden already on Albertans living in the north of our province, and aviation to them is a lifeline. It is not a luxury item, where they're taking a trip to Maui or somewhere like this. This is a lifeline for them for cargo that comes up there. It brings food, it brings fuel, and it brings medical supplies all winter long into these remote communities. They bear already what I would say is an unfair burden, and to add this carbon tax upon them is adding insult to injury. They already have a tough go. I don't believe it's fair at all to be hitting them, you know, with any kind of an increase or anything that could lead to an increase in the cost of living in the north.

Furthermore, if this government is very serious about economic diversification, we have untapped resources in the northern half of our province that are enormous. It's going to require a significant amount of aviation in order to capitalize on it. Hamstringing them through any kind of an economic distortion like this is simply wrong.

I am fully in support of this amendment. I thank the hon. member for it. He has done his homework. I would hope that every member in this Assembly will support this amendment simply because aviation for many Albertans is not a luxury; it is an absolute necessity. It's a necessity for businesses, not just in the north either but right across our province. I would like every member in this Assembly to vote in favour of this good amendment to try to help improve a very bad bill.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A9? The hon. minister of environment.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and I thank the hon. member for his careful work and for his previous service to our province in promoting tourism and so on. I certainly have benefited from his insights on more than one occasion as parks minister, and I'm sure I will continue to do so.

Madam Chair, having said that, there are a couple of issues with this amendment. One, the exemption for interjurisdictional flights is standard across jurisdictions in Canada. There are, in fact, interprovincial agreements on this matter, and that's why this legislation was written in the way it was.

Additionally, this is an economy-wide price in the same way that B.C. has an economy-wide price. Certainly, they still have an aviation industry in British Columbia, within the province, and certainly a very robust tourism economy. They have had a price on carbon that is economy-wide in nature since 2008. Certainly, their carbon levy is economy-wide and is phased in at $30 per tonne currently. Of course, they do different things with the proceeds of their levy, Madam Chair, but we are reducing small-business taxes with ours, consistent with what British Columbia has done although our small-business rates will be lower than theirs when we are done with this. Of course, we have a different structure to our economy than British Columbia does. We have a much larger chunk of our economy that is trade exposed and energy intensive and requires that investment in public research and development in order to ensure that we remain competitive.

Madam Chair, that is why the Leach report recommended an economy-wide price and to address many of the competitive pressures that would come through programming and through a small-business tax reduction. We took that advice seriously, so that's why we have structured this the way we have.

I thank the hon. member for his work. Certainly, we will work with the airline industry going forward. This is not the only place in Canada or the world where carbon pricing is a reality, Madam Chair, in fact far from it. The aviation industry is working hard to work with other jurisdictions that are bringing in either cap-and-trade or economy-wide price arrangements within their jurisdictions. Certainly, they are also working very hard to reduce their fuel costs and their emissions. Canadian airlines have improved their fuel efficiency by 13 per cent since 2005. Certainly, they are aware that carbon pricing is a reality that is going to be in all of the jurisdictions in which they operate. Carbon pricing is the most market-efficient way to ensure GHG abatement, but it is also going to be phased in across Canada and around the world. We know this. Most jurisdictions are moving now because climate change is real, Madam Chair, and action is therefore necessary.

Thank you.

The Chair: Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Madam Chair, thank you. Oh, we have a floor-crosser here. That happens. We're used to it. We've seen it before.

I'd like to thank the minister for providing some commentary. I appreciate that, and I appreciate the sort of more broadly based, generalized view that the carbon tax, in the view of the government, needs to be or should be economy-wide. That's the theory, and I get that that's the theory.

A couple of comments, I guess, I'll just make sort of parenthetically before I get to the two specific questions that I want to ask about. The first is with regard to the effect of the carbon tax on aviation in British Columbia. Yes, aviation in British Columbia certainly does continue, but one of the areas that a carbon tax has definitely had an impact on – and I know this from conversations with the tourism minister of British Columbia – is interprovincial flights. Central Mountain Air and Air BC, which are, you know, airlines that have and do operate in British Columbia, have had to alter what they're doing in terms of availability and frequency of flights because of cost competitiveness. While perhaps it could be argued that the one single factor of a carbon tax on airline fuel was not the straw that broke the camel's back, it certainly is a factor.

I would like to ask the minister, though, two questions that I raised during the course of my speech, and if she can answer, that would be great, and if she can't, perhaps she could communicate back to me at some later date. The first is: what is the analysis as far as the effect on tankerage? I outlined why tankerage can potentially be a major problem and why tankerage actually serves to work against the goal of reducing emissions. If aircraft are flying out of province in order to fuel up and then return to Alberta and in the process are burning more fuel because they're more heavily laden with fuel, how exactly is that fulfilling or meeting the objectives?

The second area. I note with a certain amount of interest that she mentioned that Canadian airlines have reduced their overall fuel consumption by 13 per cent since 2005. It's interesting. It sounds to me like Canadian airlines are changing their behaviour, but of course that behaviour has changed without the benefit of a carbon tax. I would suggest to you that for the most part airlines, because fuel is one of their largest single cost drivers, have been looking towards more efficient aircraft for many, many years. Certainly, for the manufacturers, whether we're talking about Airbus or Boeing or Bombardier, these companies have all, as one of their main drivers, been looking for aircraft that are more fuel efficient.

My second question to the minister – and I'm hoping that I can obtain an answer – is: what is the projected revenue that the carbon tax on aviation fuel for domestic commercial flights will generate for the province? I'd appreciate it if she could provide that information just in terms of an estimated number.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, the second question I'll take first. We do have that figure, and we'll get back to you on that, hon. member, and I'll table it in the House for the benefit of the House.

The second piece, on arbitrage: we will follow that matter closely. This is why we will be working with the aviation industry and others to ensure that we've got the appropriate oversight on this matter, and we'll report back to the House on our progress on that matter.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A9 lost]

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Chair: Moving back to the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to rise today to put forth an amendment. I'll provide the applicable copies, and I'll carry on once it's been distributed. Just let me know when.

The Chair: Just wait until I get the original, please.

This will be amendment A10.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by adding the following after section 3:

Accountability reporting

3.1(1) Prior to any revenue from the carbon levy being applied to an initiative under section 3(2)(a), the Minister shall make public an estimated quantity of emissions of greenhouse gases the initiative will reduce.

(2) Before May 31 and November 30 of each year, the Minister shall prepare and make public a report summarizing the effectiveness of each initiative under section 3(2)(a) for which the carbon levy has been used including an estimate of greenhouse gas reductions achieved by each initiative.

Madam Chair, the members opposite bemoan the fact that the previous government had no sense of accountability to the taxpayers at large. However, this government has shown numerous times that it is no friend to open and transparent government. Vague legislation that is long on promises and short on details has become a hallmark of this government. This government insists that this bill is all about changing behaviour and protecting the environment and not implementing another crippling tax upon hard-working Albertans. Unfortunately, many see this as just another tax.

This amendment, if passed, should help to reassure Albertans that there will be some tangible method of reporting and accountability before the government starts throwing around taxpayer money. It is entirely reasonable that this government be held to a reporting standard on such an unprecedented initiative as this carbon tax.

As I've already mentioned, given this government's record on passing legislation without the details being fully written and public, Albertans simply can't trust this government to get it right. We've seen that with Bill 6 and multiple other bills that this government has passed. Albertans deserve to know where this money is going, what it's being used for, and who is benefiting financially from these initiatives. That's a minimum standard, Madam Chair, that Albertans should expect.

We simply cannot afford the mistakes being made in other provinces, where green energy initiatives have already caused skyrocketing electricity rates and a renewables industry built upon a shaky foundation of government subsidies. People often ask why this technology has to be so dependent on subsidies if the technology is so sound.

Madam Chair, we need to ensure that proper measures of accountability are in place for the taxpayers' benefit. By reporting twice a year, before the end of May and November, it almost certainly assures that these reports can be tabled in the House while in session. This will allow for the proper scrutiny and accountability of every initiative that has utilized taxpayers' money from the green fund. More importantly, it allows the public to be fully aware of the process. Considering that according to some polls more than half of Albertans oppose this tax, this would give some validity to this bill should the government choose to put in some transparency measures.

Now, we've seen here several amendments brought in to increase transparency, and of course this government has voted down every single one. But there is no reason that this amendment should not be passed if the government truly believes in being open and transparent. I sincerely hope that all members of the Assembly remember that it is the taxpayer that ultimately pays the price, and it would be nice if they knew exactly what they're footing the bill for.

Madam Chair, as I look through Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, the only place I can see any kind of reporting is under schedule 2, sections 10 and 11. I'll read section 10.

Business plans

10 The Corporation shall annually complete and provide to the Minister, in a form and at a time determined by the Minister, a multi-year business plan approved by the board, which must include

- (a) the budget for the fiscal years to which the plan relates,
- (b) the goals, objectives and targets for the fiscal years to which the plan relates, and
- (c) any additional information requested by the Minister.

Now, this contemplates a business plan. It contemplates a budget, goals, objectives, targets. We don't know what these goals, objectives, and targets are. This is pretty vague wording, that I believe this amendment will clarify.

This amendment will make public the cost and estimated quantity of emissions of greenhouse gases that the initiative will reduce. If this truly is a Climate Leadership Implementation Act and if it truly is to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases, which is what we've been told multiple times, then there should be no problem making public the cost and the estimated quantity of emissions that this will reduce. I think that only stands to reason.

Of course, what's contemplated in section 10 here does nothing of the sort. It's a business plan, a multiyear business plan, so it could look into the future who knows how many years. Of course, all this information can be determined by the minister. Madam Chair, when we're passing a bill in this Legislature, we should have some clarity on this, and this amendment will help provide that.

Now, section 11 says:

The Corporation shall, at such time as the Minister determines, submit to the Minister any reports, records or other information required by the Minister, including any information required for the purposes of a review of the Corporation.

Again, Madam Chair, it doesn't say anything; it's just reports and records that the minister determines, whenever the minister determines.

This amendment, Madam Chair, will clarify that, too, because in part (2) of this amendment:

the Minister shall prepare and make public a report summarizing the effectiveness of each initiative . . .

So it's actually determining what the effect of the initiative is and actually reporting on it so Albertans know what their money was spent on and whether they got full value for it. It goes on to say:

. . . under section 3(2)(a) for which the carbon levy has been used including an estimate of greenhouse gas reductions.

Madam Chair, this is a great measurement to be used in the effectiveness of this act, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. If it truly is about greenhouse gases, then why wouldn't we want to include some sort of measurement afterwards to make sure that the initiatives were effective? We don't want to repeat the same things over and over again if they're not working. I think that stands to reason.

I think it only makes sense that we have this opportunity to show Albertans what this legislation will do, with some actual measurables for emissions, and what it has done because there are going to be multiple initiatives undertaken by this. We don't know what they are, necessarily. They're not really spelled out in the legislation here. But I think it's very fair to ask that we be able to measure them, of course, estimate what will happen, and then afterwards confirm what did happen. I don't think that's too much to ask on this one.

I would encourage all to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10?

Mr. MacIntyre: Again, Madam Chair, this is an accountability measure, an attempt to have the government do some measurement and verification proving that, indeed, this pain that they're inflicting upon our people is resulting in something good. To date, with a number of amendments that have been proposed and this government using their majority to shoot them down, I believe it's becoming quite apparent that this government doesn't want to be held accountable for their actions with regard to this carbon tax on our people.

This measure, I believe, is an extremely important one. It is: "Prior to any revenue from the carbon levy being applied to an initiative . . . the Minister shall make public an estimated quantity of emissions of greenhouse gases the initiative will reduce." Here, this amendment is asking for a target. If we're going to be going through this pain, if this government is going to have such an invasive tax as this upon our economy, then let's have some targets. Is this pain worth it? That's what this is all about: is this pain worth it? Can the government back up their claim that this is worth it? So prior to the expenditure of money from this carbon tax being applied to any initiative, the minister, in all fairness to Albertans, ought to make public an estimated quantity of emissions that this measure is going to reduce.

If the government is so certain that this carbon tax is going to result in a significant reduction, there must have been or there ought to be some sort of assessment done, some sort of technical assessment done, emissions assessment done on just what that impact is going to be. Otherwise, this tax is nothing more than a tax, with no real reason for it other than a money grab. To put out actual targets like this amendment is asking for: all right; here is an initiative. The government figures this is a good expenditure of Albertans' tax dollars. Okay. Fine. What's the ROI on this? How many millions or tens of millions of dollars per tonne of CO<sub>2</sub>-e are we actually reducing here? Or none?

You know, I've done a lot of case studies on different corporations and some of the energy-saving opportunities that they have tried to use or execute within their companies and some of the failed experiments. For a savings of maybe $150,000 the company ended up spending four times that and five times that and six times that, so from a bottom-line perspective, well, that was not a good idea. But, you know, that's the reason for alpha, beta, portfolio-wide as a concept. This government is forging ahead with a tax. We've asked repeatedly for assessments, for economic assessments and so forth, technical assessments and what have you. The government refuses to bring them forward, if they've even been done.

I believe this amendment as an accountability mechanism is absolutely vital for the credibility of this government's climate action plan, and it's all about, as I said earlier today, achieving universal buy-in. Here is an opportunity for the government to achieve some real buy-in. If we're going to have this tax, let's have this thing be measurable. Let's have some targets that we can measure against to see that this expenditure is actually worth it in the end. Without that, then this government really has no credibility for what they're imposing upon the good people of Alberta. It's just a tax for the sake of a tax under the flag of reducing greenhouse gas emissions, without any measurement, without any target to shoot at, no target to measure against. That is just patently wrong, and it's unfair to Albertans.

This is a massive tax. I call it invasive because it invades every corner of our economy, every corner of our society. No corner will be left untouched by this tax. It is worse than, say, something like a GST. You know, there's an offsetting mechanism for businesses under GST. There's no such thing under this tax. It's going to be cumulative in its effect. It's going to be compounding in its effect. It's going to do all kinds of things to every sector of our economy, and without the studies that I have repeatedly asked for, this government is flying blind. They have no idea, Madam Chair, what the impact of this thing is going to be on every sector of our economy and on every sector of our society.

This amendment is a friendly one. This is a friendly amendment that gives the government an opportunity to provide credibility for their claim that this carbon tax is going to result in emissions mitigation. If the government is going to refuse to support this amendment, then what are we left to conclude? We're left to conclude and Albertans are left to conclude, Madam Chair, that the government is playing a smoke-and-mirrors game, that they just don't want the whole story known, that this is just a tax for the sake of a money grab.

We need this. It's a desperately needed part of this whole process so that Albertans can have confidence that the money that is being extracted from their pockets, especially during this economic downturn that we are struggling under – the people of Alberta deserve to be treated with much more compassion here and much more respect. This is their money, their hard-earned money, Madam Chair. These are people, many of whom have lost their jobs, many of whom have had hourly reductions. Some have taken pay cuts.

I was talking to a fellow, an executive, just a couple of weeks ago. His company put a 20 per cent payroll reduction right across the company just to hang on so that they didn't have to lay off workers. They're also employing job-sharing to try to reduce the amount of hours so that they, again, don't have to lay off workers, so that they're holding on to Albertans, important workers, key people. They're doing everything they possibly can to hold on, hoping for a better day, hoping that the Alberta economy will rebound in time. The don't need to have this government come along and extract $3 billion out of an economy for a teeny population of only 4 million people. Madam Chair, it's grossly unfair.

We come to this accountability reporting amendment. Those precious people of Alberta deserve the respect and the kindness to at least be assured that the money that is being pried out of their paycheck through this carbon tax is at least going to accomplish something that this government claims is the reason for the necessity of this carbon tax. This government claims that it's an absolute necessity to hit us with this carbon tax and to put our businesses in this province at a distinctly competitive disadvantage as to the rest of the country and even the world.

You know, I want to read something, if I may, from a document entitled Canada's Ecofiscal Commission. It's been referred to by the hon. minister of the environment. Correct me if I'm wrong, Madam Chair, but I think this document has already been tabled some time ago. The title is Provincial Carbon Pricing and Competitiveness Pressures. I just want to read a couple of things here. "Significant differences in carbon prices across jurisdictions generate the possibility that some firms in some regions will experience a competitive disadvantage." This is the report that the hon. minister of the environment waves, figuratively, as being supportive of this carbon tax, the way this government is rolling it out, yet it clearly states in the introduction that "significant differences in carbon prices across jurisdictions generate the possibility that some firms in some regions will experience a competitive disadvantage."

We're in a global economy. We have to look at our competitiveness around the world for Alberta products. Alberta, of all jurisdictions in our country, is trade exposed way beyond other jurisdictions. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe it's around 18 per cent trade exposed. That's a significant amount of our products being trade exposed. Differences in carbon pricing aggravate that. It causes distortions, a market distortion. It causes a competitiveness problem.

I'll read on.

In the context of carbon pricing policy, competitiveness pressures can arise when there is a higher carbon price in one Canadian province than in other jurisdictions—either foreign or domestic. In these cases, provincial firms competing in national or international markets might experience a "carbon disadvantage" relative to firms outside the province. Given that Canadian firms have traditionally focused much of their trade within the North American market, it is the policy differences between the various Canadian provinces and between Canada and the United States that are particularly important for this discussion.

My question, then, to the government would be: did you do any comparative analysis on this trade exposure and what kind of inhibitor this carbon tax was going to be on our trade-exposed industries?

In short, carbon competitiveness pressures come from carbon-price differentials between trading partners, not the absolute level of the carbon price. Under a uniform global carbon price, for example, there would be no competitive disadvantage between [Canada's companies, Alberta's companies, and any other companies].

However,

differences between carbon prices at home and abroad can have both economic and environmental implications. When we talk about competitiveness pressures in this report, we refer only to competitive impacts on industries between jurisdictions with carbon prices of different stringency.

It should be noted that that was the focus of this report. Not every jurisdiction around the world, of course, has carbon pricing, yet we're in a globalized economy. Alberta products have to compete on the global stage. It's important, therefore, that Albertan companies have an advantage, a competitive or comparative advantage, out there. That is job creating. By its very nature it is job creating. But this carbon tax is putting that at risk. It's putting it at risk, and there is no measurable accountability reporting to ensure that this expenditure and this risk that we're putting our products at are worth it.

In short, Madam Chair, I support this one hundred per cent. I thank my hon. colleague for the thoughtfulness that he's put into this, and I would hope that every member in this Assembly will support such an excellent amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's always a pleasure to speak after the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. I do have to take this opportunity to take a look at this and say that there absolutely was some very sound economic research that went into this policy, and that's why policy-makers, scientists, and industry have endorsed a carbon price as simply the best way to reduce emissions. That group includes influential and prominent Canadians like Preston Manning, and even the World Bank can be cited as saying that carbon pricing is the best way to ensure the overall goal is achieved in the most flexible and least costly way to society.

Here in Canada British Columbia saw a 6 per cent reduction in emissions after four years of having a carbon price, Madam Chair. Really, we can look at this and say: what did we do for the research? The Climate Leadership report does come out and absolutely say that we will see absolute declines of emissions by 2020, and these declines could be as high as 30 to 35 megatonnes by 2020. That's through things like phasing out emissions from coal-fired plants, increasing our renewables use, putting a price on emissions, and establishing performance standards.

I want to touch a little bit more on performance standards, Madam Chair, because performance standards do exactly what the hon. member across the way was talking about, which was to ensure that the trade-exposed industries in Alberta are able to be competitive in a global marketplace. That is exactly what the economists recommended, and that's exactly what this government is implementing because we recognize and are cognizant of all of these concerns. Doing things like reducing methane emissions and investing in energy efficiency and investing in innovation in technology with hundreds of millions of dollars is simply what is going to get us to this 30 to 35 megatonnes. As we work with our stakeholders to finalize the implementation of these plans, we absolutely do believe and understand what the report suggests, which is that the 30 to 35 megatonnes are what you're going to see. I do think that really does succinctly account for this first point in the amendment.

Secondly, Madam Chair, there's a point about how there should be reporting and public accountability. There are already a lot of these steps in place in the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act, which requires all ministries to prepare a business plan and an annual report. The annual report includes the consolidated financial statements and a comparison of performance results to the business plan and any explanations of variances between the two. These annual reports also include a report of the Auditor General on the department's financial statements. Really, I do believe that this is very sufficient for our purposes, for an audit of the ministry and moving forward from there. That is simply why the Fiscal Planning and Transparency Act was brought in.

Madam Chair, quite simply, 30 to 35 megatonnes are what we're going to be seeing in reductions by 2020, and that's been done through thorough consultation and thorough expertise from our industry partners, from our economic partners here in the government and the research academies in this great province. Really, there are already a lot of accountability measures built in place in this government, so I really don't think that, necessarily, this amendment is needed at this time, and I would implore all members to vote against it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

9:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Chair. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment. I know you'll be surprised that I will be speaking in favour of the amendment.

You know, Madam Chair, a little over a year ago the government changed. When people in Alberta voted for change, they were hoping that a new leaf would be turned over, that the new government would shed some of the ways of the previous government, that had become not nearly as responsive and accountable to the Alberta people. I think you'd even find, if you looked in a number of media reports or even in this House, that the third party has acknowledged that, that they had strayed, if you will, from some of their core principles of accountability and responsiveness to the Alberta public.

The sad thing – and I mean this genuinely because I, too, had this renewed sense of hope that when it came to being accountable, to listening to the needs of Albertans, to being responsive to that, the government of the day would turn back to the people, if you will, and be accountable to them. Obviously, there's a vast chasm between that side of the House and this side of the House, and there are a lot of varying opinions on Bill 20. But what I've been most surprised about is that the government has little to no desire to ensure that within the context of Bill 20 it is as open and accountable as possible.

While the Official Opposition does not like the direction of Bill 20, in this amendment we aren't even trying to make significant changes to the implementation of the bill but only, Madam Chair, to provide a level of accountability that Albertans expect. I think we'll find that over a period of time not only will Albertans expect it, but Albertans will demand it. This amendment is about being accountable and transparent to Albertans. The government wants to fund emission reduction initiatives with taxpayers' dollars, and taxpayers deserve to evaluate the success of their investments in the form of emission reduction reports from each initiative. If, in fact, we're going to be investing in reduction of emissions, then we should be able to measure the emissions being reduced. And as members of that caucus once believed, it's important that that report come back to the Assembly. It's not just a report for the inner workings of the front bench but a report that all Albertans can have access to.

Now, Madam Chair, we will continue in our position that this is a bad tax made worse by bad timing and by failing to come anywhere close to revenue neutral, but if the government is insisting on making these new tax initiatives, then we ought to make sure that they are accountable to the people. It's important that as we move towards reductions, there is accountability for Albertans and to Albertans. It's unacceptable that the government would impose a heavy carbon tax on Albertans and not be clear about how those funds are used, and that's exactly what this amendment does. It provides a vehicle for Albertans to know how and where these funds will be used, that they won't just be used for the political gain of the NDP, that they won't just be used in funding special-interest projects that are a net benefit to the NDP or their friends. An amendment like this provides the accountability to this Chamber that Albertans expect and deserve.

Madam Chair, my hon. colleagues from Grande Prairie and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake made some significant and persuasive arguments. I think it's important that we ensure that there is transparency for all Albertans on such a significant amount of resources. We're not just talking about 10 million bucks here, and even if we were speaking of 10 million bucks, Albertans should have accountability and trust and the knowledge of how dollars are being spent. But we are talking about billions of dollars.

I know that the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills want me and this Assembly to be accountable to them, to be accountable to the people. What Bill 20 does is that it allows the government to hide behind legislation, to hide behind the inner workings of cabinet and not bring the types of accountability that Albertans know and deserve. That's exactly what this amendment does, and that's exactly why every member in the Chamber should support this amendment this evening.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A10?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A10 lost]

[Motion on amendment A10 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. Are there any further amendments, questions, comments? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Before I begin, I want to assure everyone that I've very carefully read my remarks, and like Don Cherry, Hansard is operating on a 30-second delay today.

Madam Chair, I've been itching to get back here and fight the carbon tax with my colleagues because that's what Albertans elected us to do. Now, a $3 billion ND PST carbon tax on everything is bad enough, but there's another twist to this story, and that is that there will be a tax on tax in this.

An Hon. Member: Tell us more.

Mr. Fildebrandt: The plot thickens.

This NDP carbon tax is going to be a buried cost as a good. Therefore, in the way the federal GST is applied, the GST will tax the carbon tax. That is a tax on tax. Now, a $3 billion carbon tax is going to hit Albertans hard enough, and my colleagues on the opposition side of this House have very ably spelled that out, how this is going to punish families and hurt our economy. But beyond that, now the GST will be applied to the carbon tax: a tax on tax.

Now, not only is this grossly unfair to the taxpayers of Alberta as a concept, but it is going to be a tax that we are paying for which we will receive virtually zero return. We're going to be paying extra taxes to Ottawa, essentially a voluntary giveaway to the capital. We're going to send more money to Ottawa without any requirement that a single dollar of that be sent back. Now, Madam Chair, I know that some members are very happy to send more money to Ottawa, but I know that the people of Strathmore-Brooks and, I believe, the people of Alberta believe that we send enough money to Ottawa, and we should not be doing this.

Now, at the very least – at the very least – if the government is going to go ahead with this, they should demand a rebate from Ottawa for this. If they are saying that we are acting in partnership with Ottawa to deal with climate change, that's fine. I can accept that. But if we're doing our part for climate change, why should we be handing more free money directly to Ottawa without receiving anything back for it whatsoever? The reasonable thing to do would be for the Premier to request of the Prime Minister that they rebate this money to the Alberta government. I think that is an entirely reasonable request.

That rebate money should be put back to Albertans in the form of tax cuts, or if they refuse to go the road of tax cuts, which they obviously are, they should increase the rebate on that front so when Albertans go to the pump or when Albertans buy groceries or they buy any product that could have the GST applied to it and they're sending more money to Ottawa, that money should be sent back to Alberta. The government insists that this entire scheme is about social licence, but, Madam Chair, it's very obvious that this is about wealth redistribution. This is not about social licence; this is licensed socialism. It is a tax grab, it is a money grab from Albertans, and it's going to send even more money to Ottawa without a penny of it coming back. That is why I and the Wildrose are proud to vote against the carbon tax.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: I was just simply going to ask the member: how much tax could a carbon tax tax if a carbon tax could tax tax?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 20 in Committee of the Whole, and I'd like to move an amendment. I have the requisite number of copies, and I will wait for you to have a copy at the table before I continue.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 as follows. (a) Section 4(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (c):

(c.1) fuel used in connection with the forestry industry or commercial tree nursery industry in the circumstances set out in the regulations, and

(b) Section 79(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (b):

(b.1) prescribing, for the purposes of section 4(1)(c.1), the circumstances in which fuel is used in connection with the forestry industry or commercial tree nursery industry.

Madam Chair, this is a relatively straightforward amendment. It looks to provide a little extra bit of support for those in our forestry industry and commercial tree nursery industry. This amendment would mean fuel use in the forestry industry and commercial tree nursery industry would be exempt from paying a carbon tax under section 4(1), and the circumstances would be prescribed in the regulations. The regulations would have the power to outline what, exactly, could be exempt.

Forestry plays an important part in Alberta's economy. It contributes around $5 billion in economic impact to our economy and provides more than 10,000 jobs. It is also our third-largest manufacturing sector. The forestry industry is already being hit by carbon tax on transportation and locomotive fuels. These additional costs would mean many small producers would be forced out at a time when Alberta is really looking for this industry to lead and continue to diversify our economy.

Just as importantly, commercial tree nurseries have a vital impact on our province. It is also the industry that leads the planting of seedlings for oil sands reclamation. Early indications are that the carbon tax along with other recent policy directions from this government will mean a cost increase of 18.5 per cent to the industry. If some of the worst-case scenarios were to eventuate as prescribed, this industry could be forced out of Alberta within three to five years. The average natural gas bill for one nursery is approximately $250,000 annually. It is estimated that the gas bill alone will increase to between $350,000 and $500,000 annually once the carbon tax is fully implemented at $30 per tonne of CO<sub>2</sub>. I would ask all members to see the importance of this amendment and the positive effect it would have on the industry.

You know, the forestry industry along with the ag industry does a lot for the reduction of carbon in our province. They both have a carbon sink. With added technology – like in farming, the zero tillage has reduced our carbon footprint by a whole lot more than this carbon tax will. Now by punishing those two industries where we're looking for diversification and industries that could lead the carbon sink – I think it's unnecessary to punish them. The PCs support putting a price on carbon, but the way the NDP government has structured their carbon tax will hurt Alberta families and businesses.

There's no denying that climate change is real and that we as legislators can play a role in fighting it, but we do not believe this bill in its current form will achieve that goal. Bill 20 lacks important details about how the carbon tax will be implemented, how the new energy efficiency agency will be structured, and how much all of this will really cost Albertans. The NDP need to be much more transparent with Albertans. Bill 20 in its current form is deeply flawed, and our caucus has brought forward a series of amendments that will reduce carbon emissions without hurting the taxpayer, including an amendment to make the carbon tax truly revenue neutral. Without passing these amendments, we will not be able to support this bill.

Hon. members, I encourage you to support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to offer my enthusiastic support to this amendment. I think it is very consistent with what the objective, – at least what I would hope is the objective – of Bill 20 actually is. If the objective of the Climate Leadership Implementation Act is to in fact reduce carbon emissions in this province, then there are, I guess, a couple of ways they can go about that. If the government intends to support important industries like forestry and seedling nurseries in their efforts to sequester carbon by growing more trees, one would hope that that's the sort of thing precisely we want to be doing in this province. Unfortunately, the way the carbon tax currently works is that we're actually going to increase costs on those very producers, and there's significant risk that we end up driving those companies out of business and out of the province, especially to places like British Columbia.

Now, that could lead to the second way that this government could end up reducing Alberta's carbon footprint. By putting companies out of business, I guess they're not going to be working anymore and producing no carbon. We don't want that. That, I can assure you, from this end of the House, anyway, is not what we want, and I would hope, in all sincerity, that that's also not what the government wants.

But this is a very good example of some nuance and subtlety that would be very important to build in to this bill, and it is a perfect example of the unintended consequence – at least I hope it's an unintended consequence – from the government as they work through Bill 20. I don't think that they intend just to punish nurseries and seedling companies, but when you add up the cumulative costs of carbon tax, of the minimum wage increase, of compliance costs with Bill 6, you're going to find that a lot of these companies are now moving from a very thin position of being profitable to a position of being not profitable. You may find – I think that there's significant risk that you'll find – that you put these companies out of business in a short period of time. They have choices. They can in fact move across the border to British Columbia, where they do have substantial exemptions for carbon-neutral or carbon-negative business. That's something I think this government should really consider as you work through the details of the bill.

An amendment like this is going to substantially strengthen the bill, improve the perception of the bill in the minds of Albertans, and gain the credibility which I think this government badly needs for this carbon tax and beyond.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I, too, rise to voice my support for this amendment and thank the hon. member for bringing it. Cypress-Medicine Hat is an extensive greenhouse part of our province, and there are many, many good growers. The nurseries for seedlings is a very strong business, as the hon. member said, for reforestry in the oil sands area, throughout northern Alberta, and of course it's a great job provider.

I've been sitting here for a little while listening to many, many parts of the debate, and it is a bit hard to add anything new. Starting with the old part, I'm still amazed at how regressive this tax is going to be to all Albertans, with the unintended consequences, the hidden costs, the horrendous timing, when areas like Medicine Hat have almost 10 per cent unemployment, and how far reaching this tax is going to be for all aspects of our society and our economy.

One of the things that rolled through my mind, though, with this forestry bill and the, you know, attempt to have the carbon tax excluded from aviation is that if we're going to have a tax, no matter how bad a tax is, the tax base should be as broad as possible. That means shared as widely as possible. But I think in the case of the carbon tax, that makes absolutely no sense. It's because the money goes to a slush fund. It's because the money gets handed out directly to the government's friends and those insiders. So it's not going to be like a true tax, that actually goes into health services or education or roads and that are there for the use of every Albertan. I think that, yeah, there's really no way to spread this tax fairly across as many Albertans as possible because at the end of the day the recipients of the tax money are going to be specifically involved with the government. Of course, we saw that on the stage months ago. That's a great, great concern to Albertans.

I'm concerned, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow talked about, about the harm that this is going to have on the economy. Although it's an amendment or two ago, I remember one of my friends, who was very, very successful in the technology business, who is located in a city in British Columbia. I was talking to my friend, and I said: "Why not Medicine Hat? Why not Alberta?" He said: "Because of the airport. Because of the cost of flying out of here." I think back to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. His point is bang on. It's going to make an already expensive industry, that already is in decline, even that much harder to survive, to be competitive. It's the type of industry that is exactly what we need to diversify our economy, to provide jobs, you know, to provide those high margins where companies and employees can pay taxes for the services we need like health, education, roads, and our social safety net.

Again, I thank the member for bringing yet another proposal forward of one of our strong, strong industries that is going to be so unduly affected as it affects, you know, other competitors and other provinces. I spoke last week about carbon leakage and how I think all we're really doing is giving a cost and a competitive advantage to Montana, to B.C., and to Saskatchewan. Because they'll be more competitive, we'll actually do the opposite of what the government intends and increase carbon but at the same time hurt the Alberta economy.

Madam Chair, I'm very much in favour of supporting a strong industry like forestry, strong environmental stewardship, like nurseries and seedling greenhouses and growers, and very, very much in favour of not doing Albertans and the Alberta economy any more harm.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you.

An Hon. Member: You again?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yeah. Me again.

Thank you, Madam Chair. I am in favour of this amendment, and I will illuminate the reasons why. Forestry as an industry is entirely trade exposed. Entirely trade exposed. Not only is it entirely trade exposed, but the margins that the softwood industry in our country have been experiencing over the last number of years have been declining. It's been tough.

10:00

Forestry is one of those industries. I'm sure everyone in this House can remember the NAFTA wars in the softwood lumber industry. Our softwood lumber industry has spent literally millions and millions of dollars protecting itself. Being so terribly market exposed and having margins so terribly reduced over the last number of years has put our lumber industry at a significant disadvantage.

Another thing that we need to consider about this is that the boreal forest, which is, you know, the source of lumber in our province and in our nation, is one gigantic carbon sink. But as trees rot, they actually emit methane through the process. The only way trees are actually a hundred per cent carbon sink is if we harvest them. So the harvesting of trees in our province is actually helping the provincial government meet its greenhouse gas emissions reduction targets.

To then come after this very same industry, that is being such an enormous help, and hit them with a carbon tax on fuel used in connection with forestry or commercial tree nursery operations is actually fighting against the very industry that could be helping. This is absurd, absolutely absurd. Here is an industry which, of the many industries in this province, is being enormously helpful in harvesting trees, these huge, beautiful carbon sinks that we have, and this government is penalizing them. Hello? What sense is this?

Furthermore, to take an industry that is 100 per cent trade exposed like this and to put them at a competitive disadvantage – and I pointed out from the Ecofiscal Commission report, that the hon. minister of the environment likes to wave around this place, that carbon taxes have the ability to damage competitiveness across jurisdictions – here's an example of that. Our lumber industry is going to be put at a competitive disadvantage, and it is totally trade exposed to the United States lumber industry. So not only are they being put at a competitive disadvantage, but let's remember that under NAFTA it is just as easy for a lumber distributor in Calgary to order out of the United States, out of Oregon or Washington, as it is for him to pick up a phone and order lumber out of High Level or to order lumber out of Grande Prairie. He can order lumber from wherever he wants to. NAFTA allows for that.

Now here we are putting our own lumber industry at a disadvantage. Now, you might say: oh, it's just a tiny little disadvantage. No, it is not. Fuel is an enormous input cost to our lumber industry because of the transportation cost necessary for moving our lumber to market. We move our lumber to market both by truck and by rail. By truck and by rail. And where is this carbon tax being applied? To transporting by truck and by rail. We have a locomotive tax. We have tax on fuel now. This is crazy. Here is an industry that is going to be hurt by this carbon tax. That means jobs. That means profitability.

Mr. Hanson: They're taxing baby trees now.

Mr. MacIntyre: And now they're taxing baby trees.

Now, just to show you that I'm not an angry Santa all the time, that I do indeed have a sense of humour, it really does something to me to see a group of people who are tree huggers taxing trees. Where does this come from? My goodness.

Mr. Connolly: What's next? Bushes? Flowers?

Mr. MacIntyre: You're probably going to be taxing flowers. Yes, florists are going to be taxed.

An Hon. Member: This is about greenhouses.

Mr. MacIntyre: You know, greenhouses are going to be taxed.

Mr. Connolly: Succulents? Cacti?

Mr. MacIntyre: Yes. Like, come on, you guys. It's terrible. I have pictures in my mind of little girls and their little tree: oh, it's taxed now. Like, come on.

However, in all seriousness, Madam Chair, we have a tax on a very trade-exposed industry. This tax is going to put them at a competitive disadvantage. It is going to result in more difficulty in moving Alberta's softwood products to market, softwood products that have to come from way up north in our province and get shipped all the way south in our province. The cost of transportation is one of the more significant inputs into softwood lumber. This is a terrible idea, and I would hope that all members in this House, especially those that love to hug trees, can support the exemption that this amendment is attempting to put forward.

Thank you for your applause, and I trust that you will provide support if for no other reason than you liked my speech.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. I don't know how to follow that. It's not even that late.

In any case, what we're doing here with this carbon levy, with our climate leadership plan: we are not putting a price on trees; we are putting a price on carbon emissions. It's been designed to be an economy-wide price on carbon. We want to reduce emissions, which is why the price on carbon has been designed how it has been, to be economy-wide. It's something that is designed to be fair across all industries. This does not work if it is applied unfairly. We could be here all night . . .

An Hon. Member: We will be.

Ms Luff: We will be here all night while you try to exempt individual industries and individual aspects of individual industries at a time, but the premise of the price on carbon is that it is applied universally across the economy.

As such, we are not creating efficiencies and we're not encouraging efficiencies if we allow various exemptions. The thing with the price on carbon is that it really is a fundamentally conservative solution to something that we don't want. We don't want carbon emissions. Hank Paulson, the former U.S. Secretary of the Treasury, said: the solution is a fundamentally conservative one that will empower the marketplace to find the most efficient response; we can do this by putting a price on emissions of carbon dioxide.

Every industry in Alberta is important, and we as a government support every industry in Alberta that is working to create jobs here in Alberta, which is why we are going to work with industry and have been working with industry here in Alberta by using the funds from this carbon levy and putting back that money into industry to enable them to adapt to our carbon-constrained future, to be able to adapt and find efficiencies in their operations.

We cannot be here all night trying to exempt individual industries. This has been designed as a province-wide, industry-wide, economy-wide price on carbon to reduce emissions, which is what we want to do because it is the right thing to do, because it will help us diversify our economy. It will help us move Alberta forward. We are going to work with all industries. Every industry is important. Every industry will get assistance through Energy Efficiency Alberta, through various programs that can be provided.

I would urge all members of this House to vote against this amendment.

10:10

The Chair: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair. A couple of quick questions here. First off, on this question of trade exposure there has been some selective quoting from the Leach report and from the Ecofiscal Commission this evening. The performance standards that we are phasing in as we phase out the specified gas emitters regulation is exactly the mechanism, the public policy mechanism, that we are using to address these competitiveness concerns.

I know it's technical and hard to understand, but, you know, that is the reality, that what we are phasing in is an output-based allocation for trade-exposed industries like fertilizer, cement, certainly oil sands and other large final emitters, Madam Chair. Now, that is so that we can maintain a level of comparability with other jurisdictions because certainly other places, whether they are pricing carbon or instituting a cap-and-trade system, are increasingly using the performance standards in order to account for competitiveness concerns and carbon leakage concerns.

In addition, I've heard quite a bit of very strange comments coming from a party that purports to, you know, have the back of the oil and gas industry. However, I've heard a tremendous amount of hand-wringing over the composition of the stage on November 22. I've heard comments about big oil and this sort of stuff, Madam Chair, which is entirely inappropriate. These folks are job creators, and they contributed meaningfully to this process and continue to do so. Certainly, Alberta remains an energy economy and will be so for the foreseeable future. What we need to make sure of is that we are competitive moving forward. Certainly, the oil and gas companies recognize this if the Official Opposition does not.

Now, as for the amendment here with respect to use by the forestry industry, Madam Chair, I will say, first of all, that we have proposed to make reinvestments in the bioenergy program. That is a program that we are continuing to review. We have of course listed it in the budgetary allocations. That is an initiative undertaken jointly by the climate office, the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, and the minister of economic development. Certainly, we know that we can be leaders on bioenergy, just as we are in other sectors. We're going to make sure that we are designing really smart, lean, efficient bioenergy programs that achieve those greenhouse gas reductions while ensuring that we are diversifying the economy.

I will just make the final point that for off-road use the forestry industry can use and does use marked fuel. It's not just for the agriculture industry but also for construction and forestry. They will indeed, for that off-road use, benefit from that exemption, Madam Chair, in addition to the investments that we will be making through reinvesting the carbon levy and through the in-compliance standards for the large final emitters. When we invest in innovation and technology, we fully anticipate that some of those initiatives will build on our strength as Albertans in the bioenergy sector.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's rather obvious to the House that there seems to be some misunderstanding between the hon. minister of the environment and the hon. Member for Calgary-East. The Member for Calgary-East said that this is economy-wide and that it's fair because it's economy-wide. Then the hon. minister of the environment gets up and says: well, you know, there's this exemption and that exemption and this other exemption. So what's it going to be?

It's interesting that the very industries that the hon. minister of the environment says are supportive of the carbon tax are the very industries exempt from it – no surprise – yet the very industry that could be helping with mitigation of greenhouse gases through the growing and harvesting of trees is being penalized for the industry that it is.

Insofar as off-road fuel, obviously, the minister of the environment hasn't worked in a logging operation. The more significant fuel use is in transporting the finished product all the way to market. Secondly, there's also the cost of natural gas to fire the kilns to kiln-dry the lumber before it's even stuck on a truck or a train. Obviously, no economic impact assessment was done on the lumber industry, for goodness' sake. This is terrible. Such a lack of understanding of an industrial sector that provides so much employment in this province and provides so much greenhouse gas mitigation – it's just terrible that this government is going to penalize this industry when it is already struggling under low margins and significant barriers to trade.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

[Motion on amendment A11 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the main bill. The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I, too, have an amendment to present. I will hand this to the table and wait till you receive it.

The Chair: This will be amendment A12.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will read it out. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 as follows: (a) Section 4(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (c):

(c.1) fuel used in connection with an industry that produces a net negative emission of greenhouse gases in the circumstances set out in the regulations, and

(b) Section 79(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (b):

(b.1) prescribing, for the purposes of section 4(1)(c.1), the circumstances in which fuel is used in connection with an industry that produces a net negative emission of greenhouse gases.

The purpose of this amendment, hon. members, is to simplify the determination of what is and is not a net negative emission industry, perhaps not singling out one, as the previous member attempted to do, but addressing some of the concerns and questions that the minister had raised about picking winners and losers, or targeting, in particular.

I think that it's important to recognize that the purpose of this bill, as we've said previously, is to reduce carbon emissions. In doing that, we ought to be providing appropriate incentives as broadly as possible for any industry that does not produce carbon emissions and that, in fact, is net negative. I think that agriculture zero-till methods are one very good example, and there are many, many more examples of industries that are, in fact, carbon neutral or carbon negative. Those industries not only ought not be punished; they ought to be rewarded for their work. Those are the sorts of industries we want to see in this province.

The objective here is to reduce carbon emissions. If, in fact, we find that we're sending these sorts of industries out of Alberta, then we are going to find that maybe our carbon emissions go up in a way that we had not intended. The goal here, of course, is carbon reduction, and to spur new industries that are carbon negative or carbon neutral ought to be the intent. It's important that we recognize that there are industries that we have not yet identified that may fit into this category, and every one of those industries is important.

I would sincerely hope that given the importance of reducing carbon, if that is, in fact, the goal of the government, they would consider supporting this very important amendment, which I do believe will improve the bill and help raise the profile and the appreciation for the bill in the eyes of Albertans.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise in support of this amendment. You know, we hear a lot about carbon emissions in Alberta and how the oil sands are one of the highest emitters in the country, but we never look at the net difference of Alberta. The amount of carbon that's sunk in our ag industry and our forest industry is huge. I wonder if this government has done the calculation on the amount of carbon that's sunk in Alberta with ag and forestry compared to the number of emissions, and I wonder what the net difference would be.

This amendment is a great amendment, and I think that the industries that sink carbon should be rewarded, not punished.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you. Just to the hon. member's point, I've had ranchers and agriculturists call me and tell me that they feel that the value of carbon stored in our good rangeland and our agricultural land is $13 billion a year, an incredible environmental record for our good producers.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to this amendment? The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in favour of this fine amendment from my hon. colleague. It seems to me that if this government is genuine in its drive to implement a tax which has been described around the world by experts as one of those behavioural modification mechanisms and we have a sector of our economy that's actually contributing to the sinking of carbon just by virtue of what that industry does and that industry or that sector is resultant in a net negative, they should be rewarded, not penalized. It doesn't make any sense whatsoever to penalize an industry that's actually helping in the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

If this government is being honest with Albertans and honestly believes that their carbon tax is going to result in a reduction of greenhouse gas emissions, if they really, really believe that that's the reason for this carbon tax, then any industry that's already contributing positively to the solution shouldn't be penalized. It only makes sense. For this government to penalize any industry, whether it be forestry, whether it be ag, whether it be greenhouses – anybody that's doing something that sinks carbon ought to be rewarded, not penalized. Yet they are not some, you know, that are being exempted under this thing.

I wholeheartedly support this amendment. I would encourage all members of this House to support this. I would encourage the government side to support this because this amendment right here will tell the truth on whether you really are interested in greenhouse gas mitigation or simply out there to grab a bunch of money out of the pockets of Albertans. If you're really serious about greenhouse gas mitigation and we've got industries that are actually doing this stuff and reducing greenhouse gases, then I expect that this government would be rewarding them. This amendment will allow you the opportunity to prove that you really are serious about GHG reductions. If this amendment is voted down, then that really will tell the story on what you're about with this carbon tax.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to the amendment. I do want to set some things out very clearly from the beginning about this amendment. I think this amendment by the hon. member across the way is really well intentioned, but what it does, again, is that it carves an emissions group out of that economy-wide price.

What we're looking at here is that we already have in the legislation, in the bill, an offset program. There's an offset program where we have the opportunity for industries that are large emitters to buy offsets from approved smaller emitters that aren't emitting. So what the hon. member across the way is talking about, there is already a program in place to address those sorts of issues. I believe that the offset industry that will come up as a result of Bill 20 is really a viable way to target that. That's in line with what the Climate Leadership report talked about and in line with the intents of the bill and the intents of this amendment, really, I think. There is an opportunity for industries that are not emitting as much to really benefit from Bill 20, as is the intention of this amendment.

As we move forward, we can also note that in a lot of the industries we're talking about, there are already some exemptions such as the marked fuel exemption for farm use, Madam Chair. As we develop programming for microgeneration and energy efficiency in this province, we're going to be working with our partners in agriculture and in other industries to develop programming to make sure that we are capitalizing on these offset programs, capitalizing on generation in the province and reducing emissions across the province. That's why this bill, I think, and the offset program that we have already really do address a lot of the issues that are found in this amendment. When we talk about this and we talk about being competitive in a global market, I think that it's important to keep those things in mind, that we are shaping this legislation in a thoughtful way to make sure that as we move forward, it's an economy-wide reduction. That's why we have an economy-wide price. It's a reduction across the entire province, across all industries.

When we can find those optimizations and when we can find those efficiencies – we're working with our industry to develop those programs, and the offset program is one of those pieces, Madam Chair. That's why we have things like the performance standards piece, which allows trade-exposed industries to be able to compete in a world market without having to worry about the carbon levy in the same way as other industries, and that's why we've made sure that this is a very thoughtful and thorough piece of legislation.

Madam Chair, at this time I'd have to ask the members, because we already have programming in place for this, to vote down this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A12?

[Motion on amendment A12 lost]

The Chair: Moving back to Bill 20, the hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 20. I think it's time for us to talk about a very important issue to me, and that's charities. Charities come in all shapes and sizes, from your local food bank, as we've discussed here before, ensuring that families have access to basic food needs, to the larger national organizations like the Red Cross, who've supported so many in Fort McMurray as we speak and ongoingly, I'm sure.

Now, Madam Chair, all charities in Alberta are about to see a significant rise in their operating costs for fuel, heating, food, and travel, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, not to mention that those who use the food banks will see a rise in their costs as well. As I've referenced in this House before, these rising costs come at a time when charities are already facing a double-edged sword. On the one hand, due to the economic climate and the fact that many Albertans are struggling, charities are seeing an increased demand for their products and services and a decrease in the actual donations that are coming in.

This climate is only made worse as a result of this bill in its current form. This is specifically in regard to charities in our province. We have asked this government many times for a full market assessment – many times this has been shot down – and, in particular, for the effects that will be placed on charities in this province. It is also so important that as we as legislators debate bills, that we take a broad look at all aspects of society that are potentially affected. This would be the important, responsible thing to do when we're creating legislation. A government shouldn't be implementing broad-based taxation schemes without having all the answers first, Madam Chair. The result is that things like charities get missed from the equation. That's what we've seen here. Charities have been missed. Ultimately, it is Alberta's most vulnerable people that will suffer the most from a tax like this.

Now, this is why, Madam Chair, I come forward with a solution. I would like to propose an amendment which will include charities and charitable activities in the rebate scheme. While we know that the actual costs associated with this tax will undoubtedly raise the cost of everything, I believe that allowing charities to have some mechanisms for a rebate is a positive step towards ensuring that their important front-line social services are unhindered by this tax policy. We need to be responsible. We need to make sure that our most vulnerable are protected. I'm sure that this was just an oversight in such a large piece of legislation, and I'm certain that all members in this House recognize the importance that charities have in our society and for the people within Alberta and those who rely on our charities so much. I am pleased to rise to introduce Wildrose amendment 3, an amendment to extend the rebate to charitable organizations.

I have the appropriate number of copies here signed by Parliamentary Counsel. Shall I proceed?

The Chair: Let me see the original first, please.

This will be amendment A13.

Go ahead, hon. member.

10:40

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am absolutely pleased to introduce this amendment. It reads: Mrs. Pitt to move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 19 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The purposes and uses prescribed under subsection (1) for which a rebate may be paid must include charitable activities engaged in by registered charities.

Now, Madam Chair, this is an amendment, I feel, that all sides of the House can support. This is certainly something to strengthen the bill, to show our commitment to the most vulnerable people in Alberta by really protecting and promoting the work that charities do in our province and really supporting them and the activities that they engage in.

I just would like to stress, Madam Chair, that in this climate, this economic crisis that we are in, there are so many of us here in Alberta that rely on charitable organizations for day-to-day living: the food banks, Meals on Wheels. There are so many charities that need our support, and this is an opportunity for this House to show these hard-working individuals that we support them, that we've got their backs.

I will plead with members of this House to please support this amendment. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I wish to rise and speak in favour of amendment A13. Charities, I think, are the backbone of our society. Charities are very near and dear to my heart. I've been involved in charities for several years in my constituency, and I've had the privilege for the last two and a half decades to be involved in a philanthropic organization called the Shriners. Yeah, we wear those little red hats, we get in parades, we ride around, and we kind of look like we're having a lot of fun, but I'll tell you what we do. We raise an awful lot of money to take care of the vulnerable, the vulnerable people in our society. We provide financial support and personal support to many organizations.

These people are the most vulnerable in our society, and right now, in very tough economic times, what I've noticed in my own constituency is that the SNAPS organization, that deals with autistic children, is running into financial difficulty. The food banks in both Okotoks and High River: their demand is up well over 50 per cent. This carbon tax is going to impact the amount of capitalization they'll be able to receive. There's only so much money that we can raise on their behalf. Rowan House, a personal charity that I've been involved with for several decades in both my constituency and others, is a women's shelter. Right now they're turning away 10 to 12 families a month. They can barely keep the lights on. This tax, without an opportunity to provide them with any sort of rebate, is going to cause hindrance and a difficult situation for a lot of women and children who are in abusive relationships.

These are very tough economic times, and additional taxation is not a great thing to be doing to these organizations. I think that by refusing to exempt them, this government, in my opinion, is showing a profound disinterest in providing for the most vulnerable individuals and charities working within our society and, especially in my constituency, within this province. Charities need a break.

For the sake of the kids, for the sake of the children I deal with as a Shriner every day, I request that you please support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A13? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thanks, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this amendment, brought forward by the hon. Member for Airdrie. I am most certainly in support of this amendment. One of the interesting things in the last election that I think we can all remember was when the PCs – and they brought it back; to their credit, they reversed it – started to mess a little bit with our charities across this province. I know that all of us remember the outrage that we were hearing at the doors or in town halls or wherever you might have been campaigning while that was going on. It was pretty clear that Albertans were upset.

Now, this House knows that I have a long history in the charitable sector. I know that members on the other side of this Assembly also have a long history in the charitable sector. I know that those members know that we rely on charities in the province of Alberta to help with our social needs. That's the reality. We have charities working with all demographics across our province that we depend on. Some of them have already been mentioned: Meals on Wheels for our seniors. I know the work I did with the Mustard Seed is going to be affected by this, and that's important.

What we have seen this evening over and over is the government standing up and saying that they're trying to make it fair or trying to justify the decisions and the overwhelming tax burden that they are about to put onto families, municipalities, schools. While I completely disagree with that and have made that very clear on the record, I think that, at the very least, this government should take a step back and look at what they're doing to charities because we depend on charities. That's something that this government stands up on quite often and tries to say that they want to support charities or at least the causes they're working on, but this clearly does not support charities.

I also would like to hear from the government side on what kind of consultation they have done with charities or the charity sector to understand what the impact of this new tax is going to be on their operations and what the impact is going to be on social issues all across this province and all across many different types of social issues.

Now, my dad – I talk about him lots because I'm proud of him – has left the Mustard Seed now. He's retired. He's in his well-earned retirement. For him, that meant that he went and became the executive director of Oxford House in his retirement because it was a little bit smaller than the Mustard Seed and, you know, he could work more closely with the addicts that he likes to work with. What they do at Oxford House is that they have houses where ex-addicts live together within communities independently within those houses. I was talking to him on Sunday. He was at my house, and before I came back up to Edmonton on Sunday night, Madam Chair, I asked him what their math is just on what they think the increased heat, electricity costs are that they're going to see because of this government's policies. He says that their preliminary math is showing that they are going to lose 1 bed per 3 houses because of this.

Now, think about that. The decision this government is making could cause one person not to have a bed just in that organization. That's just one organization of many organizations across the province that are depending on donations and are trying to help people, that we depend on as a province to be able to meet the social needs of our province. Now, I can assure you, knowing my dad and knowing the team that is around him, they're not going to allow that person to lose their bed. They're going to have to go out and fund raise extra money to pay for the carbon tax that this government is bringing forward.

However, our charities right now, all across the charitable sector – it doesn't matter which area they're working in right now – are facing the perfect storm. I think we should all acknowledge that.

They're facing the perfect storm. They're seeing an increased demand for their services because of the economic downturn in our province, whether it's food banks or any type of social issue right now. They're seeing a lot of increase in demand because of what's happening economically in Alberta right now. At the same time, the other end of that perfect storm is that people are losing jobs. People are scared. They're trying to keep their money closer. They're trying to be smarter with their money and ride out this economic downturn, and that means donations are down.

So now you have these charities that we depend on – and we depend on them as a province – to help those most vulnerable and most in need in our society, and they have to meet that increased demand, and they can't get the donations to meet that increased demand because of what's going on with our economy. That's the perfect storm. Now, this government under this Premier: their answer to that is to tax them. It's to tax them. It doesn't make any sense, and it needs to be explained.

This amendment right here allows the NDP government to correct what I hope is an oversight. I know the hon. Member for Airdrie also indicated that she hopes it's an oversight. I suspect that it's not, but we're going to find out here pretty quickly when we vote on it. If the NDP government is really committed to working with our charities, really committed to working to address the many social issues that we see all across our province, they're not going to let charities be punished by this carbon tax. Instead, they're going to support charities. They're going to support the important work that they do.

Now, I don't understand how the government could be shocked by this or could not know that that would affect charities. Do they not realize that charities have facilities that they have to heat? Do they not realize that they have facilities that need electricity or vehicles that need fuel?

You know, we stand up in this Legislature and have asked over and over questions about municipalities and what this government is going to do with this carbon tax. We haven't had many answers on that. We've been to school boards. I know all of the hon. members have been contacted by school boards, and we see the calculations on the impact this carbon tax is going to have just on getting kids to school on buses or heating schools. And, again, not many answers from this government.

We've brought forward concerns about the transportation costs throughout Alberta but particularly in rural Alberta, for parents to get kids to sporting activities or just to be able to get to and from work, and the answer from the Premier was to get a new car. You know, I have talked in great detail about how well that will work for communities like mine because Smart cars aren't going to be driving around Sundre very well in the snow or up and down the hills like we have to do.

But putting all that aside, at least on this issue we should be able to agree that we need to support our charities and our nonprofits, and particularly all the government backbenchers on the other side need to be asking themselves right now why this Premier and this government do not want to support charities. I think that's alarming. I know my colleagues think that's alarming. I think my colleagues in the third party think this is alarming as well as in the Liberal and Alberta parties, I am sure.

So this is our chance. This is our chance to stand up for our charities, to recognize the important work that they do for our communities, to cast a vote to make sure that we're able to protect that work and to help them continue to do it, particularly in light of the perfect storm that they are facing right now. I know that they're depending on us for that support.

I think that anybody who would vote against this amendment has to seriously be asking themselves why and be prepared for many questions from the charities inside their constituencies and across Alberta that are going to suffer as a result of the decision of this Assembly today. The people that they help are the most vulnerable in our society. They will be kids, homeless people, women's shelters, Meals on Wheels, as said before. That is important. That's important to me, and I think it should be important to everybody inside this Assembly.

With that said, I will take my seat and let somebody else speak to this amendment. But I encourage you to think about the impact your decision tonight will have on the most vulnerable amongst us.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to offer my enthusiastic support to this amendment as well. You know, I really believe that despite some of the more heated rhetoric which can come from this side of the House, this is an amendment that is intended to make the bill better. I truly believe that.

I don't believe that the government is trying to hurt the charitable sector, but this is, unfortunately, one of those unintended consequences that can come from legislation such as this. As I'm sitting listening to the debate and thinking about what I'll say in my remarks here, I can't help but think again that had we passed one of the amendments previous that would have incorporated a report, a formal report, back to the Assembly at some point shortly after the implementation of this new legislation, this is exactly the sort of thing that we would learn more about, the impacts on the charitable sector.

Now, I've talked with many in the not-for-profit sector in my constituency of Calgary-Elbow and all throughout the province, and there's a tremendous amount of concern not just about the carbon tax but about the cumulative impact of the minimum wage increase up to $15 an hour compounded with the carbon tax. All of these things are piling cost upon cost upon cost, and much if not all of the not-for-profit sector to one degree or another relies on donations.

In this challenging economic time, as I'm sure you all know, charities are very stretched. As Albertans have shown in their true Albertan way, we do step up and we do help our neighbours in time of need. So while many not-for-profits have seen reasonable stability in the donation levels that they're seeing this year over last, there's a great deal of concern about what next year looks like. Now, even this year many have had some real challenges in raising money. Some are struggling to keep their doors open. This could very well be the issue that tips the balance.

I don't think the government is trying to harm the charitable sector, the not-for-profit sector, but unfortunately there's a big risk that that's exactly what happens with this bill. We have an opportunity here tonight to improve the bill. That's what the purpose of committee is. That's why the opposition and perhaps occasionally the government will bring in amendments, to improve the bill. This will improve the bill by addressing a real flaw that is going to have a negative impact, a substantial, significant negative impact, on one of Alberta's most important sectors. And it is important at all times.

The work that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has done and that his family has done over the years at the Mustard Seed and beyond: I've a tremendous amount of respect for the work that they've done. They are truly a cornerstone institution in the city of Calgary that has made the lives of countless hundreds, thousands of people so much better.

I don't believe that you're trying to hurt that sector, but unfortunately, with the way the bill currently is worded, you do exactly that. You're hurting the charitable sector, and we know that's going to happen. We know that to be a fact. That's the reason that I would like to see a report come back to the Assembly within perhaps a year after this bill has become law, to ensure that we're not seeing unintended consequences in the charitable sector or in other areas of the economy, other areas of the province. We talked earlier about carbon-neutral or carbon-negative companies. Are we going to see those companies being put out of business or pushed out of Alberta? That's a real risk.

There are significant risks from this bill. It is being, I think, pushed through at a time when we don't have sufficient information. I would be very interested to hear if there's anyone from the government side who's willing or able to stand up and defend why you would vote against this amendment. I haven't heard from anyone on the government side, so I don't want to presume what your perspective is on this.

Given that we're on amendment 13, however, and 12 of them have been defeated – the only one succeeding was one rather technical amendment – I have to say that I don't hold out tremendous hope that you will support this one, but as a born-and-raised Albertan I do find myself always living in a positive and optimistic frame. I live forever in hope that the government will see the light on important amendments. We have yet to see them do that here tonight or through the course of debate on this bill, but I do live forever in hope that, in fact, the government will see the light.

I will return to my place, Madam Chair, and I will give a member of the government side the opportunity, I hope, to rise and explain to us if, in fact, you're going to accept this amendment. If not, I'm sure Albertans would love to hear why it is that you're not going to accept this very reasonable amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister of the environment.

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak to this amendment. It was the recommendation of the climate leadership plan that the price on carbon be economy-wide but also that a number of adjustments would be provided. A large part of that is through the energy efficiency efforts and efforts to phase in microgeneration, smaller scale renewables, and so on.

With respect to the charitable sector we had many conversations with many different groups over the course of last fall, Madam Chair, and many did provide their input into the public consultations last fall. There were many submissions, and some of them were from this particular sector. It certainly formed part of our deliberations and part of the consultations.

Where we landed on this, Madam Chair, where the panel's advice was helpful, was that many of these abatement issues can be addressed through efficiency programming. In order to facilitate that, I have had some conversations with many folks in the charitable sector in this new year, since the release of the plan in November, and we're going to work with them in ensuring that we are tailoring some of that efficiency programming directly to the voluntary sector and work with them in a working group kind of way as the efficiency work moves forward and as we stand up those programs. So that is how we chose to move forward on this given that the variability in this sector meant that a straight exemption would become very administratively difficult if not impossible on some level and given the position under the tax act and so on.

That is the choice that this government has made based on good advice and based on the evidence of what has happened in other jurisdictions, Madam Chair. For that reason we will be voting against this amendment, or I'm going to recommend that we do that. It is for that reason that we are ensuring that we've got a robust consultation, working with groups in the charitable sector to ensure that we've got appropriate programming tailored to their needs.

Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I have to say that I'm a little bit taken aback by the minister's comments. Efficiencies? Well, it's important long term that we would probably bring that forward and move towards that. I would not argue with that. It clearly shows no understanding of what the infrastructure is in the nonprofit world that we depend on right now to take care of the most vulnerable in our province. Now, I'll stick to just the issue I know well, which is homelessness. If we're saying that efficiencies is the way to do it, that means that you are now proposing that we are going to renovate all of our homeless shelters immediately in this province, all of the buildings that we have built already in housing first.

Efficiencies? We already can't get people into treatment for addictions right now, and they're dying because of it, something that this government wants to stand up all the time and act like they're a champion of and then meanwhile will stand up inside this House and say efficiencies? It's a ludicrous thing. It shows that the minister did not consult with anybody in the nonprofit world and has absolutely no clue what our nonprofits need, and she should be ashamed of what she just said.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to amendment A13? The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. W. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Once again, I'm taken aback, like my hon. colleague, by this minister stating that efficiencies are going to provide a break for charities. Ten to 12 families a month are being turned away from the Rowan shelter in High River alone. These are women and children in a vulnerable situation. How do you tell a woman and a child who are being abused by their father or their parent that efficiencies are going to give them relief in their life? That, to me, is absolutely ridiculous. I don't believe you consulted with the number of charities that you said you did. I can't understand that. I've been involved in charitable organizations for almost 25 years. I couldn't think of one of them that would specifically state: if you make my furnace more effective, we'll be able to save children and women who are in abusive situations. Children and women. For the sake of the kids, come on.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to this amendment?

Seeing none, we'll call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A13 lost]

[Motion on amendment A13 lost]

The Chair: We're back on the bill. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'm going to say that I'm going to do this amendment as efficiently as possible because the hon. minister of the environment is encouraging charities to solve all of their challenges by being efficient. So perhaps if I propose this amendment in a very efficient manner, it will have the attention of the government and, as a result, will be passed.

I'd like to propose an amendment, and I'll just wait until you have it.

The Chair: This will be amendment A14.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you.

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Well, we have seen some robust discussion this evening around particular areas of our province that will have a significant impact on their industry. We unfortunately just saw charities and the amendment around charities – that would have provided an exemption to those charities to continue the good work that they do. In fact, if there's one thing that I know about the outstanding constituents of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, it's that a well-meaning group of individuals will outperform government every day of the week. It's unfortunate that the government doesn't recognize the good work that they do, particularly around this carbon tax and how they're quite likely going to be more affected than others while doing much of the work that, if they aren't there to do it, will ultimately fall on the government to do.

There are other areas like that that are negatively impacted by the carbon tax disproportionately. That's why I want to propose this amendment. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1, section 19 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The purposes and uses prescribed under subsection (1) for which a rebate may be paid must include fuel used for the production of food in a greenhouse operated for financial gain.

We have seen this government already heading down the road of identifying areas that would have a negative impact on a certain industry or another. A perfect example of this would be purple fuel. I know that many people in rural Alberta are appreciative of the purple fuel exemption and the negative impact that that would have had on our second-largest industry, which we all know is the agriculture industry. So I find it a little peculiar that the government has chosen to provide an exemption for certain areas of the ag sector but not all areas of the ag sector.

Commercial greenhouse operators are farmers, and the fuel which they use to provide locally sourced food, something that I know the government whip is very passionate about, providing quality, locally sourced food – the fuel that they use, predominantly, is natural gas. Because of the carbon levy and the significant increase to the cost of natural gas – $1.50 a gigajoule on natural gas – means that their heating source is going up 50 to 70 per cent. At the end of the day, a commercial greenhouse operator is just as valuable inside the ag industry as my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler is in terms of the end product. My colleague from Drumheller-Stettler grows a significant amount of grains. In the case of greenhouses, I know that in Cypress-Medicine Hat and down in that part of the province there are a lot of greenhouses. Instead of providing grains for us to consume, they will provide produce, and the gas that they use to do that is natural gas.

Now, I know that I have raised this point here in the House before, but I think specifically of an outstanding operation in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills called Shirley's Greenhouses. Shirley's Greenhouses employs anywhere between three and five people plus the operator. They do a wonderful job of providing natural, pesticide-free, locally sourced cucumbers, predominantly, but also peppers and some other vegetables. Their costs are going to increase by close to $3,000 a month, between $2,500 and $3,000 a month. It's around $30,000, and $30,000 dollars is a significant impact, one where that business will need to make a decision, that the cost of produce will increase. As you can well imagine, Madam Chair, the margins inside the greenhouse business are often fairly tight in our northern climate because of the amount of input costs that they have that some other areas of the country and certainly south of us don't. Increasing the costs to greenhouses will not only have a negative impact on the business owner, who may struggle to stay in business, but certainly if they are able to stay in business, it's going to have a negative impact on all of us because the cost of food will be increasing.

Just today or yesterday the fact came out that year over year the cost of food is up between 10 and 12 per cent. This is a major, major concern. Not only are those costs going to increase at a time when Albertans can least afford them; it also has a significant negative impact on local businesses. Greenhouses have already been burdened with increased business taxes, minimum wage, costs associated with WCB and the enhanced protection for farm and ranch workers. There is major impact on this industry. While a traditional farm has the major cost of purple gas, for greenhouses it's heat. An estimated increase of approximately one-third of additional costs may be the difference between a viable business or not.

This sort of tax, Madam Chair, really undermines any claim that the government likes to make about buying local, supporting local marketing strategies when they're hitting these greenhouses with a 50 per cent hike on their natural gas costs. We saw in private members' business at the end of last session a significant discussion around the production of local food. If, in fact, the government's goal is to encourage that type of production, taxing greenhouses will have the opposite effect.

There are certainly other jurisdictions, including the province of British Columbia, that include an exemption for greenhouses in what is already a revenue-neutral carbon tax. This is a very good opportunity for the government to listen to stakeholders, to ensure that the production of food – we're not talking about a luxury. I know that the government likes to discuss curbing behaviour, but if the government's goal is curbing food production, it is counterintuitive.

I believe that my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake is going to expand on some of the positive impacts that greenhouses have in terms of their role in reducing emissions and the critical role that they play in being part of a larger project. [interjection] It's with that that I'll encourage all members of this Assembly, including my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, who would be well served to pay very close attention to the very important debate that's happening here in the Chamber, to support a solid amendment that moves food production forward, that treats farmers equally, that respects the role that our food producers have, not just the good, not just those who are in the business of using purple fuel but those who use other fuels to provide food for this great land that we all enjoy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West, followed by Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. It really is my pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment today in the House and, for once, before my hon. colleague from across the way. I do want to make some points on this and say that rather than debating what are the plain facts of the matter, the opposition is more concerned about spreading their half-truths and disingenuous information here. Either they do not understand what the plan is or they are more interested in scaring Alberta.

In my opinion, Madam Chair, we are looking at the simple facts, and the fact is that when we're talking about greenhouses and we're talking about these types of operations, natural gas prices are at absolutely historic lows. Even with the carbon price, consumers will be paying less for natural gas than they have on average in the last 10 years. An average household in Alberta in 2008 paid $1,015 for natural gas in heating. With the carbon price in place this year those households would still only be paying less than $360. A small business on average in 2008 paid $5,300 for natural gas, and with the carbon price these businesses this year would pay less than $2,500. Quite simply, if the members opposite have a crystal ball that allows them to see the price of natural gas in the future, you'd think they would have used that crystal ball to craft a shadow budget.

Madam Chair, what we are looking at here is an economy-wide price on carbon, something that economists came back with, industry came back with, nonprofits and NGOs came back with and said: absolutely, an economy-wide price on carbon is the way to go. We are pricing that carbon at the smokestack, not at the consumer. Industry is absolutely the best equipped to be able to find efficiencies in their own markets and their own produce. When we look at this, we want to say that government is not interested in picking winners and losers here. What we are looking at is that with an economy-wide price the industry will react, and we'll be able to move forward on tangible, viable emissions reductions moving forward to 2020 and 2030. When we look at this, we can see very clearly that this doesn't actually move towards that goal. What this does is that it spreads mistruths as we can see that natural gas prices absolutely are at the lowest they've been and are absolutely lower than the last 10 years on average.

Madam Chair, given all these facts and given all this information I really do think that all hon. members should be voting against this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Chair. Just to correct the record, while it is a fact that natural gas prices are at a low point, it is also a fact that Shirley's Greenhouses will see an increase to their natural gas bill because of the carbon tax of $30,000 a year.

The Chair: Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. MacIntyre: Thank you, Madam Chair. Well, the Member for Edmonton-South West has once again demonstrated a profound lack of understanding of the business world. The Alberta greenhouse operators are trade sensitive in that food producers from B.C.'s lower mainland, from Mexico, from the United States, from American jurisdictions are competing with our greenhouse operators for food sales. The price of natural gas is low all over the place. What this tax does is that it effectively doubles the per unit cost of natural gas to just our food producers – just our people – which puts them at a distinct competitive disadvantage to everybody else that they're competing against, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West obviously doesn't grasp how this works.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Now, I'm going to go on. I just want to demonstrate the absurdity of this bill and the advantage of this particular amendment to help our producers of food, the greenhouse operators in Alberta. We haven't had this government perform an economic assessment sector by sector, which has been very clear, but let me demonstrate just for a moment the absurdity, using the greenhouse operators as an example. The growing of food plants captures carbon dioxide. In other words, growing plants creates a carbon sink, and the growing and harvesting of repeated crops provides an enormous carbon sink. This government repeatedly touts the carbon tax as some sort of saviour of our environment, but their ignorance of the photosynthetic process of absorbing carbon dioxide is rather evident. Because this government refused to seek the input of all Albertans and didn't give greenhouse operators an opportunity to speak to this bill, the results are that this government is actually going to be punishing greenhouse operators with a tax on carbon when they are in fact providing a service to this province in providing a carbon sink, crop after crop after crop. It is absurd, absolutely absurd.

Another absurdity demonstrating the ignorance of some members opposite regarding the impact of this tax is the statement from the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West regarding food banks and comments from his colleagues that – this was the other day – people needing food bank food can just take a bus. Well, obviously, the members opposite have no clue about life outside of large cities. In the magnificent riding of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, for example, we have a dozen small towns and villages such as Elnora, Delburne, Lousana, Penhold, Springbrook, Spruce View, Gleniffer Lake, Pine Lake, Sylvan Lake. All of these communities are small, all have persons needing food bank services, and none of them have bus service.

We have greenhouses throughout this entire riding of ours because the people out there really love locally grown food, but in our winter climate a substantial amount of heat is needed for these greenhouses to operate. Yet now they are going to be hit with a carbon tax when, in fact, they're producing a carbon sink, just like with forestry, that we mentioned earlier. It's just absurd that this government is penalizing the very industries that are helping with greenhouse gas mitigation. Furthermore, it appears the government doesn't understand the challenges faced by other people and are refusing to listen to them, refusing to give compassion and consideration to the unique challenges faced by certain sectors of our economy.

They're failing to achieve buy-in, which I talked about earlier. The greenhouse industry isn't going to buy in to this because they understand the value that they're providing this province in providing a carbon sink. They get that, but their own government doesn't get that. Oh well.

The lack of proper study, Madam Chair, and the very clear demonstration that this government doesn't understand the food supply chain is clearly evident. This government seems to think that just exempting purple fuel is all that is needed to offset the impact of this tax on our food supply chain. Well, I'm going to walk this House through the food supply chain so that they understand, so everybody understands.

Here we go. From the dirt to the kitchen an accumulative impact of this tax and what it's going to have on food looks like this. Seed needs to be treated, trucked. Fertilizer needs to be manufactured, in part from natural gas, and trucked to a distributor. Then the distributor loads it on a truck or a self-propelled spreader and hauls it to the farm. Tax is going to be added all along the way here. The farmer seeds and harvests his crop. Granted, his purple fuel will be exempt, but then a truck is going to come and haul that grain to market. That fuel is going to be taxed. It's hauled to an elevator or to a buyer. The grain is then hauled to a processor and taxed, perhaps to make pet food, perhaps to make livestock feed or cereal for our children or a malting plant to create malt for brewing. All of these processes will be taxed. They all use natural gas. They all use fuel in great amounts.

From here the grain, now processed into a food like pasta or cereals or enriched feed for pets and livestock, is going to be trucked again to a retail outlet and taxed again and sold to us, the end user. Of course, at every step of this process the food had to be stored in a factory or a warehouse or a refrigerated storage facility. Each of these consumes massive amounts of natural gas or diesel, and the carbon tax will be added to the cost of their products. In this whole food supply chain we're seeing the cumulative effect of this tax.

This government's claim that indirect costs to Albertans will be a hundred dollars or less is a myth, a shameful attempt to sucker Albertans into believing that this carbon tax is relatively benign when, in fact, it is not. I just mapped out one sector of our economy, food. Whether it be from the greenhouse to the end user, whether it be from the farm to the end user, the cumulative impact of this tax is going to be enormous. This claim that indirect costs will only be a hundred dollars is an absolute, how shall I say – I can't use the L word. I'll put it this way: it is an economic use of the truth. Because I can't use the L word, I'll use that one. I trust that the chair is okay with being economical with the truth.

Well, Madam Chair, the cumulative effect on our food that I just spelled out is horrendously large, and had this government taken the time to do the kind of impact assessments I keep hammering and hammering away at, they would have realized this and could have put measures in place to mitigate that impact.

Now then, coming back to the issue of fresh food, our greenhouse operators are going to be damaged. Every one of us that is a parent or a grandparent understands the value of fresh fruit and vegetables for our families, especially through our long winters. We have a choice. We either truck it in from far, far away, or we grow it in greenhouses here, but whether we truck it or whether we grow it in greenhouses, it is expensive here. That's just one of the realities of living in this northern climate and living in this province that we love. However, parents and children should not be penalized with a carbon tax on something as essential as fresh fruit and vegetables.

Furthermore, the greenhouse operators in this province provide an absolutely essential service to our families, providing us not only with fresh fruit and vegetables, but it's locally grown. These are industries that employ Albertans. These are industries that pay taxes right here. These are industries that provide us – and in terms of greenhouse operators, the majority of them, I think, are even organic. It is wholesome, it is healthy, it is far healthier than the stuff that gets trucked in here. Even on a good day lettuce out of Texas is a three-day truck ride. Having been a former trucker, yeah, I've done that, too. That lettuce had to be hauled a very long ways to get here – it's sold as fresh, but, you know, fresh is a relative word – whereas if you go to the greenhouse operator and if you buy it at the gate, it was picked, like, 10 minutes ago. There's nothing more nutritious than that.

These industries like greenhouse operators should be applauded for the service they're providing to our children. They should not be penalized with a carbon tax. Their fuel inputs in the cold weather is the largest input they have. Although the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West claims, "Oh, natural gas prices are the lowest they've ever been," that is not an excuse to go and tax them to death. That's no excuse to go and hit them with a tax that doubles the cost per unit, for crying out loud. Come on. They ought to be exempt. They ought to be applauded. They are our carbon sink.

I've spoken to a director of a natural gas co-op, who called me up not long after the carbon tax was revealed. Her administration people did some calculations, and the current tax is going to double the cost per unit of natural gas at its current market price. The impact on greenhouses is going to be profoundly devastating. As I said earlier, they are competing with other jurisdictions that are also able to have low natural gas and some jurisdictions that actually don't need it, like B.C.'s Lower Mainland. What we're going to see is our greenhouse operators put at such a competitive disadvantage that they are going to go out of business, and we're going to be losing Alberta jobs, losing Alberta taxpaying businesses, and losing the precious value of locally grown organic food for our people. This government should be supporting greenhouse operators, not hurting them. This is a terrible consequence.

Well, I've talked about, you know, the value of greenhouse operators and forestry industries as a carbon sink. I've talked about the localized, healthy, often organic, high-quality fresh fruit and vegetables that we can get from greenhouses. This food requires very little transportation, so from the point of view of pollution in general, which can come from transportation using diesel fuel or gasoline, having it grown locally is a huge advantage. If this government is really concerned about global emissions reductions, why would this government put locally grown food in jeopardy and prefer food grown 3,000 miles away, that has to get trucked all the way here, and all of that pollution per load of lettuce, per load of carrots, per load of whatever that's coming from Mexico or the southern U.S.? Why would they prefer something like that over locally grown, with no 3,000 miles of transportation needed, no pollution from all those miles of transportation, that leaves a very tiny carbon footprint? I would suggest that it's perhaps even negative from our greenhouses.

But without a proper environmental assessment, we won't know, and the government refuses to do that. Nevertheless, we do know that the carbon footprint of a head of lettuce grown in Lacombe and sold in Lacombe is going to be significantly less than a head of lettuce grown down in Yuma, Arizona, and trucked all the way up to the store in Lacombe. There's no comparison to the carbon footprint, yet this government is demonstrating preference here for out-of-Canada produce by hitting our local growers with such a tax as this. It is absolutely absurd. It's absurd.

Now, it should also be made clear that a lot of these fresh fruit and vegetables that are being trucked in here are coming from and coming through jurisdictions that do not have a carbon regime like we do. In the Ecofiscal report the authors of that report specifically stated that if the government isn't careful about how they apply carbon tax, they may be putting Alberta firms at a distinct competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis companies in jurisdictions that don't have the same kind of carbon regime. That is precisely what is about to happen by taxing our greenhouses, who are competing with producers from outside our jurisdiction. Yet they wave the Ecofiscal report as being some sort of foundational document for what they're doing when, in fact, that is simply being economical with the truth, very economical with the truth, maybe Scottish with the truth. Being a Scotsman, I can use that.

If we had an economic assessment analysis done, Madam Chair, we would know these things. We'd know these things. We could have foreseen these things. We could have avoided this. We would not be putting our greenhouse operators at risk, and neither would we be inadvertently causing a gigantic carbon footprint on every head of lettuce or cabbage or anything else that we're having to import from jurisdictions 3,000 miles away. We could be growing it locally, providing jobs locally, providing taxes locally. But no.

Again, on account of this government's dogmatic insistence on not supporting this amendment, it is more evidence in support of my position that this is not about greenhouse gas mitigation. This is about taxation, nothing more than taxation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to take two or three minutes, and I'd like to talk a little bit about the greenhouse business as well. Of course, it's a very, very important and predominant part of Cypress-Medicine Hat, and I've been around it for a long time. One of the things that I really liked about the greenhouse business, when I talked to many of our good producers in it, was that many of them would talk about what a great family business it was. It was an opportunity for them to work with their children, with their spouse, an opportunity to do things together, an opportunity to work together and grow a much-needed commodity.

Of course, this is exactly what we're harming. This is exactly what we're putting in greater jeopardy by increasing their main input, the cost of natural gas. It was interesting that when I was fortunate enough to be first elected, in 2012, one of the big issues that greenhouse operators were concerned with was that they had just weathered a storm, going from $15 to $17 a gigajoule for natural gas, driving a lot of these family businesses out of business. So when an hon. member says, "Oh, natural gas is low; it's okay to pile on because it's low now," I'm sitting here thinking, "You know, my goodness, that's only five or six years ago that a lot of these families, a lot of these small businesses had their retirements harmed, their balance sheets hurt, the possibility of paying for their children's education or paying for some aspect that their family needed absolutely harmed. They finally get a break – they get an opportunity to make a little bit of extra money, to rebuild – and the NDP government steps in and, worse than not even thinking about it, takes it away with a gleeful laugh. It's a shame. It's a shame.

Alberta producers, Alberta families need the equity and fairness that come with a government putting in the right policies.

The hon. member talked a lot about the carbon footprint and, you know, not accessing vegetables and stuff from here. Well, let me tell you how it worked with flowers. Redcliff used to be a strong, strong provider of flowers for Medicine Hat and all of Alberta. Some side of eight or 10 years ago I noticed that very, very few flowers were being grown in Redcliff and Medicine Hat anymore even though we've acres and acres under glass, so I asked some of the operators why. Guess where they come from, cheaper, on a jumbo airplane? South America. Apparently, how our flower industry works now is that these flowers are grown in South America, flown overnight to Calgary or Edmonton, and then trucked to Medicine Hat and Redcliff cheaper than we can provide them. Madam Chair, to me that sounds like a heck of a step backwards when it comes to the carbon footprint. Every time you raise the cost of producing goods, every time you raise the cost to our suppliers, they are going to produce less.

The hon. member from the other side also talked about the fact that it was applied equally and that there was no sense in going into exemptions because there were no exemptions. As far as I know, that is erroneous as well. For good reason the oil sands industry is exempt up to 100 megatonnes. Why can't this be looked at in other areas? Why can't this be looked at in areas when it comes to food production, when it comes to strong family businesses?

I'm also concerned, though, talking to some of our oil and gas producers the other day, Madam Chair. I understand that because of the uncertainty around this carbon tax, because of the uncertainty as to how offsets are going to work, and because of, you know, the fact about what's going to happen when 100 megatonnes is hit – how's the next step going to happen? I don't think there are any new projects in our oil sands at all right now. That is of great concern when you think of the people employed in Nisku, in Leduc, in Calgary, in Athabasca, all around Alberta, when you think of what will happen as we lose yet more jobs because of the uncertainty that the new NDP government has created.

We have exemptions. We don't have clear rules. We have unfairness. We have a lack of equity for Albertans in good family businesses. Surely to goodness – surely to goodness – we can look at a rebate for the fuel used for the production of food in the greenhouses operated for financial gain. I seem to remember a motion from this government a short time ago trying to enhance local food production. Well, instead of talking about it, let's do something about it. Let's continue to ensure that Alberta families and Alberta food production stay as competitive as possible.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Yes. Just while we're on the subject of greenhouses, I got an update from a business owner out in the St. Paul area that is in the reforestation tree nursery business. I had told her that we were possibly going to, or someone was possibly going to put an amendment forward to try and exempt the reforestation tree nursery business from this carbon tax. I had to call her and inform her that, unfortunately, the government had unanimously voted against that amendment. Her comment was that that will be the straw that breaks the camel's back. This is a business that's been running for many, many years, very well established. She said that between the carbon tax and the minimum wage hikes she'll have to lay off her workers. She has typically close to a dozen full-time, and then in peak, when it comes to shipping the trees out, they employ a lot more people than that. So this is a business that's going to be closing down, and those people will have to, if they can in a small town, find a job somewhere else.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A14? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. I wanted to speak in favour of this amendment, too, dealing with greenhouses. I think the word that's been used most is "bizarre," and I think that's still fitting. The Member for Edmonton-South West was getting up and talking about: since the price of natural gas is low, then now is the time to just hit it with taxes. I guess that's the answer to everything. If the price of fuel is below an all-time high, then we should just tax it right up to where it's as high as it's ever been or higher, I guess. I don't know what the plan is if prices recover and prices go higher. I don't imagine they're going to be lowering the taxes. I've never seen even a hint of that out of this government.

But I think what the Member for Edmonton-South West fails to realize is that because the prices are low here in Alberta for natural gas, the prices are also low in Saskatchewan and in Montana and in British Columbia, so by raising the taxes here in Alberta, that puts us at a competitive disadvantage to these other areas, these other jurisdictions right around us. When we have markets that rely on export and we have a government that insists on punishing the people and the businesses right in our own province, then obviously they don't understand how business works, how an economy works, how the world economy works. Now, the Member for Calgary-East said that this carbon tax was designed to be fair. Well, unfortunately, it's not fair to companies that export and have to go into the world market to try and be competitive. When they're not competitive, then, of course, they have to shut down shop. I mean, they have no choice, or else they start up their business somewhere else or do their expansion somewhere else.

We also saw here earlier this government vote down an exemption for charities. Of course, the minister gets up and suggests that these charities could maybe find some efficiencies. She suggested that this would be an administrative nightmare, to exempt charities. Are you serious? An administrative nightmare? These charities are registered charities already. They're already registered with the federal tax act. Are you telling us that it's too burdensome to recognize that on a simple tax form, that they can't all of a sudden receive some sort of benefit as a charity? These are charities that are taking care of the poor and the vulnerable in our communities, and this government insists on taxing them and then suggests that they cannot find an exemption for these charities because they just could find some efficiencies; it's an administrative nightmare.

When I look at this carbon tax bill – you want to talk about an administrative nightmare? – that's an administrative nightmare. The airline companies, the train companies have to calculate how much fuel they use while they're in Alberta, whether they land and take off and all these different things. There's a nightmare. You want to talk about red tape? There's red tape.

Madam Chair, the discussion gets more and more bizarre all the time here listening to people on the other side. It's actually good when they get up and speak – I'd encourage more to get up and speak – because then we can fully understand what they're really thinking. I think Albertans are actually, probably the proper word would be stunned to hear what they're saying on the other side, how they're supporting this carbon tax, when it makes absolutely no sense at all.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A14? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I haven't had the opportunity to speak on this bill yet or any of the amendments, and I was hoping to be able to speak to this bill. The amendment that I see here is a reasonable amendment, that I will be supporting.

In my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner we have greenhouses. We have a lot of produce that is produced there, and, in fact, farming is our mainstay in that area. I had the opportunity probably about six months ago of being able to go and take a look at one of the greenhouses in my riding, and I was impressed with the innovation. I was impressed with the entrepreneurial spirit. I was impressed with the ability of this entrepreneur to find markets globally, and I just took my hat off to him. I said: you know, this is the sort of thing that Alberta needs, and this is the sort of thing that will make Alberta great again.

Now, what we're dealing with here, Madam Chair, is a situation where this government out of one side of their mouth are saying: you know, we want to actually promote local, we want to promote local growing, and we want to promote . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Members, I would just like to remind everybody that although we are in Committee of the Whole, you still need to respect the speakers, please. The volume is increasing quite a bit on your side. Thank you.

Please proceed, Member.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. Anyway, the issue here is that the government out of one side of their mouth are trying to say that they want to promote local growing, that they want to have entrepreneurs, businessmen and -women come to the table with investment, come to the table with their innovations, come to the table with their dreams and aspirations, that they should trust this government, start a business here and be able to grow locally. Unfortunately, the message is not being received very well. Unfortunately, we're in a situation where these entrepreneurs in my riding are telling me that even though they say that they want to have local growing and local produce, with this tax it actually disincentivizes these entrepreneurs and these businessmen and -women from setting up shop here or from continuing to expand.

Now, I actually am sad to hear the Member for Edmonton-South West say that this is not what we need. I'm sad to hear that he and his colleagues, it sounds like, would not be interested in exempting greenhouses. This is a duplicitous argument on their side. If they really do believe that they promote this concept of local growing, then don't disincentivize these entrepreneurs. I don't understand the argument there.

You know, I have to represent my riding, and it's a pleasure to be able to do so. As the south is known for their growing and their heat units, their ability to be innovative in that industry, I can tell you that this carbon tax is going to affect them in a terrible way. Madam Chair, I hope that the members opposite will rethink the concept of an economic impact study, that they will rethink doing first and then finding out what the consequences will be of their actions. There are unintended consequences to not truly thinking things through and not truly being able to assess what the damage is going to be.

I have had people that have contacted my office. One situation that I would like to point out is that a gentleman, who is 57 years old, contacted my office. He's not from my riding, but he contacted my office, concerned about what this carbon tax is going to do. He said that he was concerned because he had been an engineer in the oil patch and, obviously, had paid taxes for many years and had been a contributing resident of Alberta. These are the types of people that we want to have in Alberta. That's what made Alberta great. Unfortunately, because of the low oil price and because of some of the punishing programs and laws that have been brought in by this government, he now is no longer employed in that industry.

Being a strong Albertan and a resilient Albertan, he didn't just sit down and say: "That's enough. I can't do anymore." What he did, Madam Chair, is that he said, at 57 years old: "I need to retrain. I need to be able to get back on the horse. I need to be able to actually be a productive member of society." He was looking for options, so he contacted his MLA – he's from Calgary – and contacted the Ministry of Labour and one of the other ministries, the ministry of environment, I believe, and said: what kind of things do you have for me to be able to retrain, to be able to fit into this new economic environment of Alberta? What he was told is shocking. He was told that there's nothing that they can do for him. He was told that at his age to take the time to retrain would not really work in his situation. Unfortunately, Madam Chair, this is the unintended consequence of pushing too quickly to try to reinvent or redefine what Alberta means.

Now, change does happen to a society. It always happens, and, generally speaking, it will be embraced. But my colleague from Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who some of the members on the other side like to call Santa Claus, which I don't think is very appropriate, made some really good points. What he said was that you need to get universal buy-in. You need to get universal buy-in so that the people can come with your innovations, with your – I wouldn't say ideology but with your ideas for change. Unfortunately, when this sort of thing is pushed through like it is, we find that a lot of Albertans are actually left wondering: "How do I fit in? How am I going to be a contributing member of society in this new environment called Alberta, in the new way of whatever we define Alberta as with the green initiative?" So he talked a lot about being able to get universal buy-in, and I thought that was an excellent argument.

One of the examples or ideas about universal buy-in that I can say that I watched happen was the recycling program. I remember when it first came out. I remember my wife being absolutely ecstatic about it, and I said: I don't think this is going to go anywhere. I wasn't a visionary guy when it came to that – I admit it – yet my wife got involved. She got excited about it. She started doing the recycling, and a whole bunch of other people did as well, and now we have a very robust and strong buy-in to this recycling program. That's a good example, that when it's an initiative that can get that universal buy-in, it will actually promote something that's valuable to society. This is something that is a good example about how to be able to get that universal buy-in.

The member also talked about measurements and verification. He talked about being able to say, you know, that if you're going to bring forward a program, if you're going to bring forward a new way of doing something, how are you going to be able to measure that? How are you going to be able to verify that it's actually something that's accomplishing the goals that you're trying to accomplish? Again, that's a very good question.

I like to call it in business the plan, do, check, and adjust process. The best plans oftentimes don't take you in the direction that you want to go, so you have to do it, check it, and adjust. Unfortunately, with this plan I don't see anywhere where this government is going to actually do those other parts of this process, and if you don't do that, then you have no way of being able to determine whether or not it's accomplishing what you're really looking for.

I guess the other concern that I have is that this whole carbon tax is not actually going to decrease carbon emissions. I've heard the argument many times, actually, from the Member for Edmonton-South West in talking about how we're going to decrease carbon emissions with this, yet your plan doesn't specifically show that it's going to decrease emissions. If you're selling it as a program to help Albertans and the children of future generations to decrease carbon emissions and global warming – I've heard the hon. Minister of Infrastructure say that it's about our children and grandchildren – if that's the truth, then why is this plan not specifically decreasing carbon emissions? I would imagine that if you're going to bring forward a plan and you're going to bring forward a strategy of being able to help our children and grandchildren in this way, at least you'd have that kind of measurable. But we don't have that measurable here. This is maybe one of the big reasons why we have 68 per cent of Albertans that are against this plan.

The Deputy Chair: Member, you are speaking to the amendment, just to clarify.

Mr. Hunter: Absolutely.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Mr. Hunter: As I told you, I haven't had an opportunity to speak to this, and I had a lot on my mind.

The amendment talks about a specific aspect of this, of being able to help an industry or a sector of our society that provides a value to Albertans: fresh, locally grown produce. The government has said that they're not willing to accept this as being revenue neutral. They're willing to pick winners and losers. Well, I would say that a good pick on this part would be greenhouses. The greenhouse industry would certainly be a great pick for this government to say: "You know what? Other industries, heavy emitters, need to be penalized in some way to be able to make it work." But when it comes to actually growing, we've got a situation where the greenhouse industry is providing exactly what this government's plan is looking for.

I'm very much in favour of this amendment. I consider it to be in the wheelhouse of this program, of decreasing carbon emissions, so I am most heartily going to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A14?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A14 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Any members wishing to speak to the original bill? The Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you so much, Madam Chair. What a pleasure it is to speak to Bill 20. Good morning, everybody. Wow. We are earning a paycheck today.

I'm beginning to think that this government really doesn't want to change this bill in any way, shape, or form. I'm really disheartened that this government does not want to support charities in our province. That was probably the low point of what is now yesterday. I'm really, really sad to see that. It's very apparent, Madam Chair, that this government is actually quite proud of the carbon tax or, in other words, the tax to tax everything, including charities. I don't really think that's showing leadership in that area, that's for sure. It's very much disheartening, right?

This government is very proud of what they're doing. I disagree quite heavily, and we've put forward many amendments to offer to make the bill just a little bit less bad. We tried to put the bill forward to Albertans so that they would have their say in a referendum, so that they would get a chance to actually have their say on a tax that will impact every single person, every single industry, every single charity in such a huge way.

This government refuses to put forward any type of measurable. We don't know what targets they want to reach. They won't report back to this House even with a simple air quality test. It's really quite disheartening. I feel in a way like I'm dealing with a stubborn child that just won't budge, that just won't reason, that just sits there. I have two children. I bang my head on the wall. This is really, really tricky.

Madam Chair, I would like to put forward an amendment, and I would actually like to offer it as a challenge to this government, who is so proud of the carbon tax, the tax on everything. I believe along with my colleagues that in your moment of pride you should get to print this everywhere we go. I would like to propose an amendment right now. I have the appropriate number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: Just wait till I receive the original, please.

Mrs. Pitt: I'll wait until you have indicated for me to proceed.

It's a wonderful amendment. You guys are going to like this one, though.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, this amendment will be referred to as A15. Please proceed.

Mrs. Pitt: All right. I will now read the amendment. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by adding the following after section 10:

Disclosure of carbon levy on bills and receipts

10.1 Any vendor that prepares a bill, statement of account, receipt or similar record for the purchase of fuel by a consumer for which a carbon levy is payable under section 4(2)(a) or 8(5) shall indicate separately on that record the amount of the carbon levy paid or payable in respect of the fuel purchased by the consumer.

Madam Chair, this is an extremely important amendment. If this tax is to be used to change behaviour, perhaps the behaviour that they're trying to change should be notified. I certainly think that consumers will look at their receipts and see this tax on its own separate line item, just like the GST is, just like the other tax that we have. I think it's responsible. We should let people know what they're paying for so that maybe it will curb their behaviour. If this is actually what the bill is intending to do, I see no reason why this wouldn't be an amendment that's supported. This government is very proud of their tax-on-everything bill, so let's let the people know that they're being taxed on everything.

This is extremely, extremely important. We've seen this in other sectors. The restaurant industry just came to my mind. You're going to start to see them clearly label the minimum wage increase on the receipts because people need to know what they're paying for. Those $50 nachos need to be clearly labelled: this is where your costs are going. I digress.

I want to speak to the amendment, though, Madam Chair. I think it's very important that when you're proud of something – and this is a simple PR strategy. This is what you're taught; I come from the world of marketing. When you do something good and something that you're proud of, you're supposed to tell everybody about it. This government is very clearly proud of the carbon tax bill – they're very, very proud of it – regardless of the fact that we don't have any measurables or any indication that we will ever see any measurables in relation to this carbon tax bill. It would be extremely important for this tax, or levy, whatever you want to call it, to be clearly labelled on the fuel products that the everyday consumer is going to be purchasing. This is important. It's real. If we want to curb behaviour, people should clearly see that.

I think we're going to see on our utility bills that come into the house a clearly labelled carbon tax on those heating costs. That's what we're going to see. I want people to see them at the pumps. I want them to see that so that they can figure out how to carpool a little bit more, so that they can figure out how to save some money for a smart car or whatever the strategy is here, possibly riding a bicycle in the wintertime. Maybe that's a strategy. I'm not really sure. All those commuters from Calgary to Airdrie and Airdrie to Calgary, I'm sure, would be really interested to know how they will cycle from Airdrie to Calgary in rush-hour traffic twice a day in a three-piece suit.

It is the most responsible thing, for this government to let people know what they're trying to do and help them to get there. It is actually very helpful to have this type of line item on the receipt for the products that they are purchasing, which, certainly in my opinion and in the opinion of my colleagues, if I may so speak on their behalf, is the right thing to do. It would be the right thing to do, to let people know what you're trying to do. If this government is truly so very proud of this carbon tax, I don't see why they wouldn't support having it labelled on everything they possibly could.

An Hon. Member: Like a PST.

Mrs. Pitt: This is exactly like a PST. This is exactly like a PST. This is exactly why it should have gone to a referendum, but, alas, here we are.

I just think that this line item, the carbon tax levy, should be clearly labelled on receipts for the goods that people purchase. I would encourage all members to support this. I certainly don't see any reason why the government wouldn't support this amendment. I just really don't understand. You know, such pride is coming across from the other side, and it would be very confusing if this government didn't want to promote this.

I hear on my radio station all the time the climate change ads, and all I can actually hear is: ching-ching, ching-ching, ching-ching. That's what I hear. Really, it's horrible. Again, it's the boulder rolling down the hill. What a complete waste of tax dollars. If you're so proud, why don't we expand your reach a little bit more? This would actually be a very good advertising promotion idea for you guys. The government would benefit from additional marketing through legislation by having clearly labelled the carbon tax on the fuel that consumers purchase. It's all about reach. It's part of the overall marketing strategy. Perhaps you could save some money on the radio ads.

I encourage all members to support this bill. I really don't see why they wouldn't. You're welcome, for putting forward such a wonderful amendment. Please vote for this.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any members wishing to speak to amendment A15? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak on amendment A15. We have had many amendments come before this House in trying to make a bad bill a little bit better. I believe that this is a very good amendment, that will help Albertans to recognize the carbon levy that they will be putting forward in regard to the climate plan in this province.

I do believe that when I pull up to a gas pump to fill up my truck, I want to know how much of my fuel bill is for gasoline and how much is for taxes. So often people are quick to blame the oil companies for the increases in the price of their gasoline. It's critical, Madam Chair, that we get in a position where we allow them to recognize how much is actually being paid for the gasoline product and how much is being paid for the taxes on that gasoline product.

Come January 1, 2017, taxes on a litre of gasoline will look something like this unless there are going to be other increases to the federal or provincial fuel tax. Currently we have 10 cents federal excise tax on gasoline; we pay 13 cents in provincial fuel tax. As of January 1, 2017, we will pay approximately 4 and a half cents provincial carbon tax, which will rise to 6.73 cents per litre in 2018. On top of that, we have the 5 per cent GST tax on the gasoline and all the other taxes. So we've got tax on top of tax on top of tax.

If the total price of my gasoline is a dollar a litre, for simple figuring – I come to the pump; I buy 50 litres, and I pay $50 – of that dollar per litre, 32.25 cents will go towards tax. This is important for Albertans to understand and to know. Almost a third of the price come January 1, 2017, is going to be tax. Only 67.75 cents of that price of gasoline will be going to the producers of that product. It is time to be completely transparent with Albertans.

If we look at the taxes on a litre of diesel fuel come January 1, the federal excise tax is 4 cents, 13 cents is the provincial fuel tax, and then adding 5.35 cents of provincial carbon tax and in 2018 all of a sudden 8 cents per litre for the carbon tax. Of course, then we add the 5 per cent GST. We add GST on the actual diesel fuel, and we add GST on the tax, so a tax on the tax. In this case, if the total price of a litre of diesel fuel is a dollar, then a little over 27 cents is tax, and the price of the diesel fuel is just shy of 73 cents a litre.

Having the tax displayed on the fuel receipt provides the transparency in pricing so that consumers are fully aware of what they're paying in tax and what they're paying the producers to produce that product. Given that all the cash registers and the gas pumps will have to be reprogrammed anyway to handle this new carbon tax, I believe this would be a relatively simple fix, relatively easy to administer, and totally transparent with the disclosure of taxes on the products that we're purchasing. I don't understand who would not want to know how much tax they are contributing. Cash registers already have the GST amount on it, and I think they can easily have the carbon tax as a line item also.

We have had great success in transparency of billing in Alberta. For instance, take the electricity that we consume in our homes and in our businesses. The generation of the electricity, the transmission of the electricity, the distribution: all of these are broken down so that consumers can easily see what parts of their bill go to what producers, to the distributors. It's very easy for the consumers to understand what areas are being broken out.

Even my hotel receipts: when I come to Edmonton and stay at a hotel, they break out the tourism levy. It's very simple to do. A line item: tourism levy. So I get to understand where those dollars are being spent.

The same can be done for the fuel charges on the receipt from the gas pumps. This amendment will do this, and I would urge my colleagues from all parties to support this, support transparency in the disclosure of taxes on our receipts at the fuel pumps. I believe that for retail gasoline it's important that we have full disclosure there. Then, also, if we're going to charge a carbon tax, or sales tax for that matter, we need to see the breakout on the consumers' natural gas bill so that they know what they are paying for. I'm not completely clear if that's already in the plans, but it is important that the consumers of these products are aware of the taxes that they will be paying on these products.

My gas rate for April was $1.47 per gigajoule. For May the gas rate is $1.22. Here we've got in January 2017 where this government feels it necessary to put in a carbon tax of a little over $1 per gigajoule, just about doubling the current gas rate.

Mr. Nixon: How much?

Mr. van Dijken: Over $1 per gigajoule. In 2018 that goes up to $1.517 per gigajoule. That is more than what the actual gas costs at my home.

Madam Chair, one of our staff members actually brought in their gas bill, and that particular month they used 15.86 gigajoules of natural gas. If this had been January 2017, the $1, one penny, one-tenth of a cent carbon tax on this bill would have cost this staff member $16.03, increasing their bill by $16.03. In January 2018, when that comes around, the carbon tax on that natural gas is going up to $1.51 and seven-tenths of a cent per gigajoule. This means that gas bill would cost $27.27 in carbon tax.

It's important that we have full disclosure on this so that Albertans know what part of their bill is carbon tax. These have very serious implications, especially for residents and some of our most vulnerable people that are on fixed incomes. These kinds of incredible shocks from these price jumps can affect them dramatically, so we need to see these price spikes on utility bills broken out.

Now, there was a situation a few years ago when natural gas prices were very high. I will admit that the price is relatively low at this time, but at that time the government of the day chose to pay $1.9 billion to everyone in the form of a natural gas rebate to combat the high gas prices. Those natural gas rebates were applied and noted on people's natural gas bills. For transparency and accountability's sake, just like the rebates were itemized on those bills, I believe it is important for full disclosure that the consumers are informed of this carbon tax. It is only fair that the carbon tax now show up on the natural gas bills in the homes. This will show transparency and accountability.

It's important to recognize that Albertans deserve full disclosure and transparency. I urge all my colleagues from all parties to support this important amendment to Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think that this amendment comes forward with some very good intentions here. I see that a lot of the interest was in the pride of this bill, and I think Albertans are proud of this bill. I think Albertans do want to be part of the solution, and that's why Albertans are proud of the government for finally bringing in an Alberta energy efficiency corporation. We're the last jurisdiction in Canada to do it, and I think that's something that we can all in this Assembly be proud of when we pass this legislation. That's why Alberta is taking a leadership role internationally on climate change.

Speaking to some of the specifics of this amendment, Madam Chair, officials in the Alberta climate change office and Alberta Energy are working together to make sure that all the incremental costs are made clear to consumers when this rolls out. The Alberta climate change office and Alberta Energy are ensuring that everything that we see moving forward will be clear to consumers and that this will be in a transparent way for Albertans to be able to move forward. That's why the amendments to the regulations to enable the line items to be displayed in things like receipts are going to be made this fall in regulations.

With respect to that, I think that knowing that, Albertans can be very proud of this legislation, with things like the Energy Efficiency Alberta corporation. They can be very proud of Alberta taking a leadership role moving forward, knowing that the officials are working very hard in the Alberta climate change office, that the officials are working very hard in Alberta Energy and are moving forward on making sure that these incremental costs are going to be visible, are going to be transparent, and are going to be available to all consumers. These regulations will be made this fall.

We should hold off on this amendment for now, Madam Chair. I'd urge all members to take that in mind as we vote on this amendment and to vote it down so that we can move forward on those regulations.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any more members wishing to speak to amendment A15? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would be remiss to not stand and allow the colleagues from across the way to understand that the Member for Edmonton-South West is proposing that what is essentially being proposed here will be put into regulations this fall. If that is the case, then I would suspect that this would be a very good time to put it into place now just for the very fact that it allows us to have a little bit more trust in this government going forward. There is a certain amount of trepidation that I move forward with in trusting that this type of regulation will actually be coming forward. If we do this now with this very clear amendment to the bill, then we will be certain that that's going to happen, and this government will not have that on their work papers to do it come fall. This allows them to just move forward on many other priorities that they might have.

I would really encourage all members to vote in favour of this amendment, that will give clear disclosure on all bills that the carbon levy will have an effect on. I'm trying to help them recognize that this should actually reduce their workload come fall.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A15? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to amendment A15. A colleague on this side was just telling me a story about how he had been preaching in a church and had got a little exuberant and a little long. At the end of the service a little old lady comes up to him and says: "I've got a really good watch from my ex-husband. I think you need it." I'll try not to take too long. I'll try to be succinct in my comments.

Mr. Connolly: Too late.

Mr. Smith: Too late. Yes.

We've already heard people talk to this amendment and suggest, Madam Chair, that receipts that show how much of the total price is accounted for by GST and PST are already available and that we should allow the carbon tax to conform to this pattern. There's real wisdom to that, that I think we should consider. I was glad to hear the member opposite talk about how they're considering doing this a little later on. I guess I would encourage the other side of the House to support this amendment. If you understand that this is a valuable path to pursue in just a few months, then why not begin right now?

You know, I believe that Albertans have a right to transparency when it comes to the taxes that are levied on them. We know that this is what is already done for the GST. When you purchase things, the GST is automatically added on, and you can see it on your bill. It helps to shed light on the effects of this tax on consumers' lives, and this would do the same thing.

As a basketball coach sometimes we had to make sure that the kids understood that there's a consequence for the actions that they have on the court, and I think that in some ways this transparency is very much like that. You know, it's not just for the gas that we would pay for at the pump; it's also for the natural gas bills that we will receive as consumers. When Albertans open up their utility bills, Madam Chair, they would be able to see the effects of the carbon tax on those bills. That actually helps to affect the way that they would start to live their lives. That's what the goal of this government is and what this carbon tax is all about. It's to try to change behaviour and to try to mitigate the way we live our lives and the way we consume carbon. You know, we all understand that, but when we do things that can begin to mitigate and change the way we live, there are times when we need to know what those consequences will be.

We see labelling on soup cans and on medicines. Why? Because the ingredients in those things can affect the way we live our lives. They can have a serious effect on our health or on our ability to be strong and healthy. I believe that, in that same way, knowledge with regard to the medicines that we consume is important. It helps to inform our choices, just as this carbon tax would help to inform our choices when we go to the pump.

Albertans have come to expect this kind of transparency. It's a good thing. We've moved away from a hidden manufacturing tax towards a transparent GST, and I believe that this would be an appropriate thing to do with this carbon tax.

You know, I guess I would just come back to my last point here. When you're coaching basketball and you see these kids come out on the court, sometimes they just believe: you know, if I just work a little harder – if I just work a little harder – we'll be able to win these games. Sometimes that's the truth, but sometimes they actually have to break it down. Sometimes you have to break it down to the fundamentals of the game.

I can remember trying to teach my girls' team a pick and roll and having them understand that, you know, you have to set your feet, and you have to make sure that you're in good position so that when that person comes into you, you're not moving – it's a not a moving screen – you then have to roll, and you have to do a reverse pivot, and then you have to move towards the basket because you're going to get the ball back, and you're going to get that ball in that pick and roll if you're open.

I think that in some ways these kinds of sound teaching principles apply to this amendment. We need to make sure that the people of Alberta understand: what are the basic foundations of the taxes and the money that they're spending, where is it going, and why is it being taken from their pockets? Transparency helps them to understand that and then to be able to change their behaviour or mitigate their behaviour and mitigate the problems with the carbon footprint that we have.

I would speak to this amendment. I think that this government needs to demonstrate to the people that it's accountable for the monies that they collect. That means that the people have to understand where that money is coming from and why it's coming out of their pockets. So I would speak to this amendment.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, you're speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Clark: Yes, I am.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is with regret that I rise to speak against this amendment. I've spoken to many amendments this evening – this morning, I suppose, now – often speaking in favour of amendments brought by the opposition side because I think the intention, of course, of these amendments is to make the bill a better bill. I'm sure that is the intention. The hon. member, I'm sure, believes that that is what they're trying to do with this amendment.

Unfortunately, I just can't imagine the burden that this particular amendment will put on small-business owners in particular, to have to update their systems to display the specific information of a carbon tax, which will change 12 months into the implementation of that. You know, it's a bit interesting from a party that, I know, purports to be supportive of business.

I do understand that you're trying to create some headwinds for the government in terms of their ability to pass the bill and to bring in some amendments. I understand that. You're trying to put some speed bumps in place perhaps. But this one, unfortunately, would be a speed bump not on the government or on the bill but on the very small-business owners that you purport to support. If there is going to be a carbon tax, I think that it ought to be just rolled into other prices, as with other taxes. We don't see a specific spelling out of the fuel tax on our gas receipts as it stands now and the cost to business owners, especially small-business owners, I think.

You know, the other thing I guess I'd point out is the seeming desire for the opposition to want to reduce or eliminate red tape. This seems like the opposite of that. This seems like a giant ball of red duct tape that you'd wrap up business owners in.

Unfortunately, I cannot support this amendment because I feel that it just increases the burden on an already overburdened business sector. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to just build on the comments from the Member for Calgary-Elbow if I could. He's quite right to point out that the provincial sales tax on fuel is not already listed on the receipts that are distributed when people purchase gas. Of course, provincial taxes on cigarettes and alcohol are also not on receipts when people purchase those products.

You know, to the Member for Airdrie's original argument that she made when she proposed this amendment, that people need to understand the choices that they're making in order to change their behaviour, of course that's only true in part with respect to the transparency that they're promoting here with the sales tax – or the carbon levy. [interjections] Forgive me, Madam Chair. It's 10 to 1 in the morning, and my energy isn't what it was three hours ago. I've spent a lot of it heckling these guys.

My original point, though, Madam Chair, was that cigarette taxes and alcohol taxes have been proven to discourage the use of those products. It's quite clear from all the studies that have been undertaken by people that have looked into the matter that when cigarette taxes go up and when alcohol taxes go up, the consumption of those products goes down. It doesn't have to be explicitly printed on the bill. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: I have already cautioned you once in the House today around respecting when other individuals are speaking. I would appreciate it if the other side would also respect that, please.

Mr. Schmidt: I'm glad, Madam Chair, that somebody still has the energy required to heckle.

Back to my original point, the consumption of those products, alcohol and cigarettes, goes down when taxes go up, and it's not necessarily linked to whether or not the amount of those taxes is printed on the receipts. You know, we are advancing this carbon levy to reduce the use of energy. We are confident that the implementation of this carbon levy will do that, whether or not it's explicitly stated on the bill.

Furthermore, on the point of openness and transparency, I appreciate the members opposite wanting the government to be open and transparent about what we're achieving with this carbon levy after its implementation. Of course, the minister of the environment has said a number of times what measures will be in place to ensure that that transparency and that openness and that accountability are achieved.

What I am looking forward to – and I understand that we're going to be here for several more hours – is the opposite side being open and transparent about what they would do about climate change, Madam Chair. We have been debating this now for – what? – 30 hours. We have not heard anybody stand up on that side of the House and say what it is they would do to reduce carbon emissions. So I encourage the members opposite, you know, to bring forward some amendments that would actually show the people of Alberta what they would do to reduce carbon emissions. I eagerly await those amendments. I suspect that they won't come, but in a world filled with unicorn farts, I suppose anything is possible.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to respond quickly to that. One of the main mandates, I think, for the carbon tax, obviously, is about modifying behaviour. I honestly think that if that's the direction the government has on why we're doing this and, obviously, if we're wanting to change the footprint, if it matters to people not just in their pocketbook but if they actually see where that's going, that's a bit of transparency that helps to bring forward the whole mechanism. It provides that transparency for the mechanism and gives all the reasons in the world for people to see that what you've put forward works, right? I don't think it's too much to ask.

We've given a mountain of amendments – mountains of amendments – and that's what this is about, just so you remember. This is about collaboration, hence the reason we have Committee of the Whole. Just to remind you, it is your responsibility to come up with these ideas, and it's our responsibility to help you make this better. Just to clarify our positions here.

An Hon. Member: Well, we're still waiting for you to do that.

Mrs. Aheer: Actually, we've had some great amendments. I'm actually extremely proud of the amendments that we've brought forward.

Having said that, this amendment actually goes to exactly what we've been talking about. If behavioural modification is key in this situation, then you need to show people how it's working so they understand, so they're actually seeing it. They can modify based on the numbers that they're seeing. In your own climate action plan and in the discussions that you had leading up to the action plan, you stated specifically in your statements that Albertans are savvy, that they understand the mechanism for change. It actually says that right in your own statements. So if they're savvy, why don't we give them the opportunity to actually see what you're doing so that when they're making the decision to change their behaviour, they actually have the metrics to fall back on?

With all due respect to the member – I don't know where he moved to; he was over there a few minutes ago – I think that we owe it to Albertans to regulate this. The fact that transparency could be put on hold because it might cause some work for a business – I own a small business. I have a couple of small businesses with my husband. I know, for myself, that it's just like when you have the GST or anything else. We had to change for that. So I don't know if that would be a good enough argument for me to suggest that that's not a good reason to do it. In a lot of ways it would provide the automatic metrics that we're asking you for to see if the intention with which this bill is put forward is actually being fulfilled.

Thank you so much for allowing me the chance to speak.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Member for Battle River-Wainwright. You're speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, to the amendment. Thank you.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise and speak on this amendment, the disclosure of the carbon levy on bills and receipts. You know, this amendment doesn't necessarily make this bill better, but it adds clarity, clarity on what this bad bill actually has for consumers. It adds transparency and full disclosure, and that's something I think Albertans deserve.

This tax that's coming on here with Bill 20 makes everything more expensive at a time when Albertans are facing layoffs and cutbacks and are struggling to make ends meet. Businesses all across the province are hurting, and they're only going to hurt more with the implementation of Bill 20. We need to add clarity and transparency, and that's what this will do. This will give Albertans the full impact of what's happening with this bill.

I have to speak to a couple of points that I felt urged to just because a couple of members were speaking to them here. Edmonton-South West said that Albertans are proud of this bill, and I suppose the member doesn't count this government as being Albertans that are proud of this bill. Otherwise, he would be proud to be able to put the carbon tax or carbon levy on these receipts. If he was proud of it, if he was truly proud of this carbon tax, this carbon levy, it would go on the bills. He's kind of saying one thing and meaning another. I'm not sure where he's coming from on that, but I think that needs to be noted.

You know, another member talked about cigarettes and alcohol, that it curbed the behaviour of people with cigarettes and alcohol. However, when you have a house to warm, how do you curb that behaviour? How do you restrain that behaviour? This is an essential service in this province. You try cutting back or not using it at 40 below. The suggestion was that it cuts cigarette or alcohol use. Well, you try not using any natural gas or any electricity, the majority of which is driven from a carbon base. Does it make any sense that we want to be doing that as well? It makes absolutely no sense to me.

This government has provided us with several what I would call bad bills, and this is just another one in a long line of them, so we need to put transparency and full disclosure into this. It's been sobering to speak with my constituents and going on to other bills, but I haven't had to go too far out to actually ask my constituents about their opinions on bills because, frankly, they're mailing me and they're e-mailing me and they're phoning me. I don't have to go out of my way for them to want to talk about bad bills. They ask us: well, what can we do? We're putting in amendments, amendments that can bring transparency to this. This is an important aspect that we have to do.

You know, I have a person in my riding. His name is Ken. He's a small-business owner. Ken is a baker in Lougheed, a small town in my riding. He wrote me a letter and told me that if we factor in the cost of natural gas to power the oven, the cost of oil to lubricate the gears, the cost of oil product used on a belt-driven system, then the fuel cost to physically deliver a loaf of bread to the shelf, not to mention vehicle costs, road costs, et cetera, the cost of a loaf of bread would have to go from $2 a loaf to at least $3.75 to accommodate the energy increases. Because taxes never go down, in a way inflation can and will take root.

This goes for everything that's produced currently, from carrots to apples to grain to ice cream. You know, Ken went on to say that instead of offering us real leadership in a real crisis – and frankly we are in a real crisis and on the threshold of a new agricultural revolution – we are seeing a new method of taxation being implemented. Give us an alternative to taxation. Give us an alternative to carbon tax credits. Throwing money at a problem doesn't work if the government is using money inappropriately. The bottom line: more taxes do not equate to different or better results.

You know, Madam Chair, while Ken can try to anticipate how this will impact his business, he has no real way of determining the wider impacts of this bill. If you're able to put that transparency, the full disclosure of this carbon levy, on bills and receipts, he knows how much more he has to charge for that loaf of bread. It's fairly simple in that way. He has to do this work, but you're asking him to just try to fudge around here. Now he can explain to his customers: well, this is how much I had to pay extra as a result of a carbon levy that was placed on this.

It's making everything more expensive. It's making fuel more expensive. It's making a loaf of bread more expensive. It's going to make the cost of the flour that he's getting to his shop more expensive. It's going to make the sugar – they have to produce sugar if we want to buy local, made-in-Alberta sugar. We've got sugar beets. Sugar beets have to go through a rigorous, high-energy, high natural gas system to be able to produce sugar from a beet. That's just part of one of the ingredients. That, flour, yeast, all these different ingredients, salt, lard, whey powder: they all require this energy. If he has all these different facts, he can then know how much he should be charging.

If we bring this in, we bring in transparency. It's only fair for Albertans. It's fair for the Albertans that have automobiles. They can see what it is. It's fair for people that have homes. They can see how much that's costing them. And it's fair for people that have to produce food. All these people, right down the line, need transparency. They need to have full disclosure of the carbon levy on bill receipts, just as this amendment says.

Madam Chair, I am in favour of this amendment, and I hope everybody here votes in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, you're speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Cooper: Just very briefly, Chair. I'm not sure if the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West will have the opportunity to respond or not. Just really seeking a little bit of clarification on the amendment in terms of the government's intention. The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West said: don't worry; we're going to do this in the regulations, so there's no need for this in the legislation. But the Minister of Advanced Education said that it's way too hard and that this is ridiculous.

So I'm just hoping that we can have some clarity. If it's not going to be in the regulations, clearly everyone should in fact support the amendment because they've said that it will be. From time to time the government sends mixed signals about what they will or won't do, and I know that some of the folks in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills have a hard time trusting what they say because it's sometimes all over the map. I'm curious. I understand that they may not choose to respond – and that's reasonable – but it has created some uncertainty on this side of the House with what their actual intention is here.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A15? The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make one comment. I had heard earlier the Member for Calgary-Elbow talking about how he would not be in support of this amendment due to the fact that it would increase red tape on businesses. Now, I think the reality is that bringing in a carbon tax is certainly going to add a lot of red tape to businesses and is something that businesses would not be in support of. So the argument is a little late in that way.

However, one thing that I wanted to point out to that hon. member and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West is that one of the values of being able to bring in this transparency is that it provides the consumer with the ability to, say, do a comparison. So if they were buying an apple one week and then the next week the carbon tax came in, rather than the retailers having the opportunity to – I wouldn't say price gouge – add some money or cost to that apple, they could say that there's a direct comparison, that the cost that the apple has increased is directly related to the carbon tax versus an increase in the cost applied by a retailer.

The value to this transparency amendment that I see and the reason why I'll be supporting it is because it provides the end buyer, the consumer, with the ability to see where the costs and the increases in those costs are for themselves. We've seen an increase in produce – as a family man I've seen it, being able to buy produce – extensively over the last little while. It's just always nice to be able to know where those costs come from. So I think that having this transparency at least provides for the consumer that transparency that they're looking for in being able to figure out and understand where those increases are.

This is the reason why I'll be in support of this amendment, Madam Chair, and I'd ask that all members support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in front of the members tonight about this carbon tax amendment. Now, I would like to go back to my past occupation, which was accounting, and give us some insight on exactly what it is that this amendment is looking to do.

For the consumer, obviously, this carbon tax will be passed down indirectly through, say, apples or oranges, but for businesses – what they're trying to do is they're trying to capture what their cost of doing business is. For many businesses the cost of doing business, the major one, would usually be their employees. That's usually your biggest cost. The next cost is usually something along the lines of – well, for trucking companies, for instance, it would be fuel. For a restaurant or a warehouse or any business that has got a building of any sort, it would be natural gas.

Now, this is important because what we're trying to do is we're trying to find out where the business is and where it needs to be. What happens is that a lot of times the larger companies are on top of their margins, with a monthly and in some cases even a daily total. What happens here is that there are some businesses like the small businesses – I mean, your farms and your restaurants and all the small businesses that make up Alberta – and those businesses only do their taxes at the end of the year. A lot of times they don't know how much money they've made until they've progressed through the year.

What's going to happen, as January 1 hits, is that they're going to feel that they're doing fine because in 2016 they've made it through the tax increases that the government has implemented – the personal taxes, the corporate taxes, the minimum wage increases, all the other little taxes that have accumulated on top of them – and they've adjusted to show that they can actually remain profitable during this. It's been hard on these small businesses. What happens is that in order to do that, they have to raise their prices to be able to still be competitive and be able to make a profit.

Now, it's easy to say – it's easy to say – let's just raise the cost of a hamburger; let's just raise the cost of a truckload of grain. The thing is that it's easier said than done because a lot of businesses would have already raised it to what the market can bear. The whole thing about business is that it tries to be competitive with its neighbours, the businesses that it competes against. What happens is that – I fear that a lot of businesses aren't going to know that this carbon tax is going to kick in or know the effects of this carbon tax until the end of 2017, when they have done their taxes.

Why is this important? The reason is because a lot of businesses have razor-sharp profit margins. This amendment will give the businesses who do monthly bookkeeping the ability to be able to see how much carbon tax they're actually contributing to the Alberta government. This is important because what happens is that these businesses, if they can't react fast enough, go out of business. This is the nature of business.

It starts really simply. At first it seems like: "Gee, you know what? I have a hard time maintaining my bank account balance." So what is the next step? "Well, gee, I'd better go and get a line of credit with the bank." What happens is that they fill up the line of credit, and then they start to stop paying other necessary bills. That is where they get behind, and that's where we end up in a place that they can't recover from.

Now, I don't see anywhere in Bill 20 that says that they're going to help businesses that get into trouble because of the implementation of the carbon tax. We actually aren't keeping track of its effect whereas this amendment is asking that the tax be transparent. It's being shown to all of the business community. It also is important that we see exactly how much they're paying in carbon tax so that they can say: "You know what? Maybe this is an area that we need to work on. We see that we are putting out a large amount in actual carbon taxes, so this is a place that we can address and work towards to be able to reduce our carbon footprint."

That is something that the government can actually see a result from because what happens is that nobody wants to pay taxes. That is just a fact. Now they will go out of their way to make sure that the gas use is brought down by being more efficient, and it will be driven because of the fact that they are trying to drive down their costs. I hear where the government is going with this, that they want to drive down their costs. In the end, this is a good vehicle for our small-business community to see exactly what it is that is going out of their businesses. What we need to do is to make sure that we support our small-business community, and until we can actually give them a tool, this is a great amendment to do it.

I support this amendment, and I would ask everybody in this Legislature to support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A15? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Alberta Party, a table for one. Yes. Thank you. I have a question for the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. You referenced that one of the reasons you would like to see this particular amendment move ahead is so that Albertans could see the true, transparent cost of the carbon tax on all of their bills. Could you give us some indication as to how much per orange or apple you believe a carbon tax would add? Would it be one-fiftieth of a cent? How much do you think we're going to see on a grocery bill, for each apple and orange, from the carbon tax? My point is that at some point it gets a little bit silly.

I understand where you're trying to go with the transparency, but frankly I think this would add overhead to businesses as opposed to streamlining things. You know, Albertans are going to know that their costs have gone up in certain areas, but I don't think it's going to have a material impact, necessarily, on the price of fruit and vegetables, for example, to the point where we would want to see a government force business owners of all sizes, big and small, to add that to their receipts. I think the burden of doing that is pretty extreme.

So I'm curious: how much per apple, how much per orange will the carbon tax add, do you think?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on amendment A15?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A15 lost]

[Motion on amendment A15 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the main bill. Any members wishing to speak to the main bill? The Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm honoured to rise today in support of Bill 20, the climate change leadership plan. We Albertans are known as go-getters. When we believe in something, we do it. Climate change is something we believe in. We believe in the science, and we know that climate change is real. If we believe in it, that means we need to do something about it. That's why our government has Alberta's climate change leadership plan.

Madam Chair, I'm very proud of our government's decision to take real action on climate change. Our government is committed to moving Alberta forward, moving past the inaction and towards leadership on climate change. The climate leadership plan is the right thing to do today and for future generations. The climate leadership plan diversifies our economy and creates new jobs. As well, every penny raised will be rebated to Albertans and reinvested in our economy.

Madam Chair, I would like to talk a little about sustainability. Sustainability is a complex concept. The most often quoted definition comes from the UN Brundtland commission. Sustainable development is "development which meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs." From the National Geographic: they refer to sustainable development as a process for meeting human development goals while sustaining the ability of natural systems to continue to provide the natural resources and ecosystem services upon which the economy and society depend.

The climate leadership plan will also improve Albertans' health by phasing out harmful coal pollution in favour of cleaner energy. Pollution and greenhouse gas are two terms that are oftentimes used, and they overlap with each other quite a bit. The definition of pollution is: "Generally any substance that people introduce into the atmosphere that has damaging effects on living things and the environment is considered air pollution." Again, this definition is on the National Geographic website.

Greenhouse gas is a gas that absorbs infrared radiation and creates greenhouse effects. For example:

Carbon dioxide, a greenhouse gas, is the main pollutant that is warming Earth. Though living things emit carbon dioxide when they breathe, carbon dioxide is widely considered to be a pollutant when associated with cars, planes, power plants, and other human activities that involve the burning of fossil fuels such as gasoline and natural gas. In the past 150 years, such activities have pumped enough carbon dioxide into the atmosphere to raise its levels higher than they have been for hundreds of thousands of years.

Again, this is as clearly defined on the National Geographic website. That means that carbon dioxide is a pollutant.

Research has been done all over the world on the impact of a carbon tax on the economy. There is a lot of information available as well, with many examples of other countries successfully implementing the approach. Although it is an unprecedented approach in Alberta, it is not a primitive approach. We are not only catching up with the rest of the world but creating a plan that is even better. The climate change leadership plan will actually make Alberta the leader in sustainability.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Mr. Chair, let me share with you an example. Dublin, Ireland, is a great example, where Dublin proved itself by recovering its economy through a carbon tax, or penalty, for environmental damage. It drove prices up for oil, natural gas, and kerosene. Ireland has seen its emissions drop more than 15 per cent since 2008. It used to be one of Europe's highest per capita producers of greenhouse gas emissions, nearing those of the United States.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Because of the taxes they shifted to greener fuels and cars and began recycling ferociously. Automobile manufacturers such as Mercedes found ways to build powerful cars with emissions as low as small Nissans. With the higher cost of fossil fuels, renewable energy sources became the supreme source of energy. That led wind power energy to soar. Mercedes and Volvo have high-efficiency cars that shut down instead of idling.

Further to that, Europe's strongest economies – Sweden, Denmark, Netherlands – have all had carbon dioxide taxes since the 1990s. Japan and Australia recently introduced them as well.

A resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, Aparna Mathur, said that a carbon tax is a good idea. She also said that according to some economists, "a carbon tax could [potentially] raise $400 billion annually in the United States."

Madam Chair, our government is progressing by all means through this plan. I'm very proud of the extensive consultation and work that went into the development of our climate leadership plan. Indigenous communities, for example, also were consulted on the climate leadership plan, to fully utilize their wisdom. They strongly believe in taking care of Mother Earth, and having them onboard with this plan is one of the biggest assets for our province.

Our plan, Albertans' plan, will have a global impact. It has three parts. First is the carbon levy, which is a bank account for sustainability. It's the penalty for damaging our air, water, food; thus, the sustainability of human beings. So every investment towards the carbon levy is basically an investment towards sustainability. Energy Efficiency Alberta, the second phase of this bill, is the reward for taking care of our environment, that has an impact on the well-being of human beings. Rebates will be issued to offset the costs of insulation, retrofitting, and rebuilding across the province. Small-scale energy, microgeneration, energy efficiency, and conservation of energy: everything will be promoted. From the funds collected and invested in renewables, alternative energy and better technology will be created to create more jobs and to give Alberta an edge globally.

Madam Chair, this bill is the right thing to do for Albertans, and I would strongly encourage all members to join me in supporting it as well.

My personal story is that I immigrated with my family to Canada from an upper middle-income family, and we started our lives in Canada as a low-income family, basically starting at the bottom. The reason we migrated was because we wanted to pursue a higher quality of life. The definition of a better quality of life is to have access to better air quality, water, food, health care, education; overall, my own well-being, which is a combination of all these factors.

In our case, when we started our lives after moving to Canada, I had my struggles based on the change of culture and the financial situation and everything, but I was highly motivated because I still defined my life to be the best while being in Canada and being a Canadian. I had access to all the great things that make a society a better place to live and which define that nation to be successful. A successful nation or a developed nation is different from a developing one just because they have better access to all the things I defined: health care, education, air, water, food, and overall well-being of the human beings. That makes our nation superior or the best place to live in.

Having such a plan that is originating from Alberta and that will help make Alberta the leader globally is our government's excellent move towards that. Through this bill, Madam Chair, we are being valiant and vigilant as we are taking this bold and unprecedented step to secure the future for our future generations. Therefore, I would highly encourage all the members to support this bill because this bill has a lot of information based on thorough analysis and a lot of research and consultation. It's a complete bill that will lead to the bright future of our province and for our future generations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. Climate change needs actions and solutions. I know and we on this side know that climate change is real, it's happening, and it is affecting the entire world. We're not debating whether climate change is real or not. We should be debating solutions to lower global emissions. Instead, we are debating a punitive tax on hard-working Albertan families.

The idea of putting a price on carbon is to change the consumption behaviours of people and reduce the carbon footprint. It's a great idea, but we need more carbon reduction in the most cost-effective way. At the same time, we do not want to reduce our ability to compete in the global market. We should not ignore the fact that our contribution to global emissions is less than 2 per cent, and we are already the leaders in monitoring and controlling emissions world-wide. But we should always aim to do even better. Instead of creating something better, the members opposite are constantly trying to avoid answering questions on their legislation.

Instead, they want to know what we would do if we were in the government. The backbenchers on the other side have begged us for a Wildrose plan over a dozen times according to the Hansard. Today even the member from the fifth party, sitting in the Member for Edmonton-South West's chair, was asking me: what's your plan? He said in the past, too: "What would you do? What would you do about that? What would the Wildrose actually do?" Even with his pamphlet of a plan, he is begging us for a better plan, which, to me, is a bit surprising.

The reason why we are debating the NDP carbon tax plan and not a Wildrose carbon tax plan is because we campaigned on not bringing in a single new tax. I think our leader said that many times, anyway. That's the first and most obvious reason why we have not proposed a tax to replace this NDP tax. We're not criticizing this tax because we think we can tax better; we are criticizing this tax because it's a tax and we do not advocate for higher taxes. The members opposite can beg us to put forward a tax, but we will not, no matter how hard the members opposite beg.

Another reason we are debating the NDP's climate change plan is because the NDP are in government. If the NDP are so intent on debating a Wildrose proposal, then step aside and let us be the government. We would be happy to take over government and put forward legislation for this House to debate. If the NDP would like to debate our budget, then step down and let us be in charge of the finances of this province. The members opposite are constantly asking for a Wildrose plan, the Wildrose budget, the Wildrose this, the Wildrose that. Well, the time to debate party platforms is during election time. If the NDP want to debate party platforms, then call an election today. The reason I am here is because we did debate our platforms during the by-election, and – guess what? – I am here. The Member for Calgary-Greenway is here. Now we are here to debate the government's plans and government legislation. The title that is being broadcast across the screen is Government Bill 20, not Wildrose Bill 20, so not the opposition climate change plan.

I know most of the members across the aisle have never been in government before. I appreciate that, but this is the parliamentary system. The opposition cannot submit bills that spend taxpayers' dollars or increase taxes. Therefore, no matter how badly you want us to put forward a bill that increases taxes or spends money, we are legally not allowed to do so. I would suggest that the members opposite stop asking for something that is not legally allowed to happen and focus on the bill in front of us. Now, perhaps they would like us to create a plan that is not in the form of a bill but encompasses the same size and scope as their 95-page climate tax plan. Perhaps this government knows their plan is so bad that they hope we present a better plan that they can copy and take credit for. That's why you're asking for our plan. Reducing small-business tax is just an example, and you're welcome to take our plan and do that. I appreciate that.

There is another reason why we cannot create a plan the same size and scope that the government has presented. The Wildrose operates with about 27 staff members for 22 MLAs. Madam Chair, Wildrose operates with 27 staff members, just 27 staff members for 22 MLAs. That's barely one assistant per MLA. Instead, we have spent our time presenting plans that will help this government fix the economy. We have presented plans that will save money and get people back to work. We have presented a 12-point jobs action plan. We presented a budget sustainability plan that provided $2 billion worth of savings without firing a single front-line worker or reducing services. Without firing a single front-line worker or reducing services. We found experts to provide feedback on equalization with the creation of an equalization panel.

We also were first out the door with a plan to assist Albertans to fight the problem surrounding fentanyl. Meanwhile the government has the entire bureaucracy behind them. Most of them may not even be from Alberta, anyway. Thousands of people working for the government: the whole department has more staff members than the Wildrose staff and MLAs combined.

If this government is so intent on putting forward a plan, then give us the exact same resources that were available to the government when creating this plan. Give us access to an entire department to research our own plan. If the government is unwilling to give us access to any of the staff members who are from Alberta – we'd prefer staff from Alberta, anyway – to create a plan, then we'll have to stick to debating this plan, the NDP's carbon tax plan. If the government is still looking for ideas, they can look at our members' past policies on the environment. We do have them if you want to look at that. You ignore looking at that, and you keep asking us: "Where is it? Where is it?" Go spend some time looking at our website. You'll find our plan.

The government has not even released the regulations that will be a major part of this tax plan. There are so many reasons why this bill needs to be withdrawn or at least postponed. That's why we'd use legislative tools to send this bill to a standing committee for scrutiny, so that none of the good people from Calgary-Foothills ask me: what's our plan? They're asking us to help the government make their carbon tax bill a better bill. That's why we are using all these legislative tools. We are proposing reasonable amendments, and you just ignore them, even the reasonable amendments. You are answerable to your constituents. The tools are in place to get more input from MLAs and stakeholders, but this government refuses to use those tools. That's why we are here at 2 o'clock at night discussing your bill, not our bill.

You would expect this government to look at provinces that have a better public service delivery model, that spend less per capita and deliver more efficiency. This government should take a look at provinces that have a better performing economy and have implemented a carbon tax. B.C. implemented a truly revenue-neutral carbon tax. Now, all taxes are spent by the province on some sort of program that is used by Albertans. One could say that if the definition of revenue neutral is tax revenue that is spent on people, then all taxes are revenue neutral, but that is not the definition no matter how many times the government says so.

B.C. has a revenue-neutral plan, revenue neutral by B.C. law. It states that the policy requires equivalent cuts to other taxes. B.C. has cut millions in income on other taxes to offset carbon tax revenue. The B.C. government has a transparent spreadsheet, which is balanced between cuts and revenue, to ensure that the tax is revenue neutral. This balance sheet is published yearly so that everyone can see where the money is given back to the people. This tax that's proposed by the NDP does none of that. Bill 20 does none of that. The money taken from Albertans goes into a slush fund, that could be used for who knows what.

If this government is looking for suggestions that are better than the plan up for debate in this House, then I suggest they use the tools available to them and make a better plan themselves. We're giving you the tools to make your plan better, if you want to use them. It's only available for another seven hours or so; then it expires. If you want to use the tools we're proposing, use it or lose it. Take this plan back to the drawing board and come back with something Albertans will not be harmed by. The government could start with an economic impact study on Alberta's economy and how this tax will affect Alberta's economy. That would prove to this House once and for all how this tax would affect Albertan families. The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka broke down the bare-minimum costs that would affect the typical Albertan and showed that the NDP's math is so far off. It is so far off. Thank you for doing that.

The rebate that the NDP advertises will cover all the costs created from this tax is nowhere near the true amount. My fellow colleagues have pointed out cost after cost that the NDP refuse to admit will affect Albertans. The awesome people of Calgary-Foothills do not want increased school fees because of this tax. They do not want increased food costs because of this tax. Albertans and Canadians expect that we'll have a reasonable debate in this House, Madam Chair, on the cost-benefit analysis of Bill 20. In this bill you'll find all information regarding tax collection and tax avoidance punishments but no benefits to the taxpayers. After paying $2.6 billion in taxes, what is the return on investment for Albertans? We haven't heard from any of the government benches what the benefits, tangible benefits, are for Albertans.

The fantastic people of Calgary-Foothills are asking: how many new jobs will be created with this initiative? No answer. We've asked them so many times. When will these jobs be created? In 10 years? In 20 years? Nobody knows. But people want jobs now. They are looking for jobs now, not in 10 years or 20 years. We do not have a single detail regarding what type of jobs it will create.

Will this gain us market access? No one can tell us that so far. Will this gain us the mystical social licence? No answer. Dead silence on the other side. Will this bill reduce red tape as it creates new Crown corporations to implement red tape? Will this reduce our wait times in the health care system? Why is this bill not revenue neutral when it was first advertised as such? Why will it not fix the problems Albertans actually have?

This climate tax plan wants to cap the emissions at 100 megatonnes. We are already at 70 megatonnes, so who will get the allocation of the balance of 30 megatonnes? These are the questions, Madam Chair, that I'm being asked in my riding of Calgary-Foothills. Is this government giving preferential treatment to whoever backs their plan? That means that others who don't back their plan won't get any allocation, so that means there won't be any new jobs. If the 30 megatonnes is simply allocated to the existing producers just because they stood with you, will that reduce competition? Will there be no new projects if this government allocates these 30 megatonnes to their friends instead of allowing for a competitive marketplace?

The only thing this bill will do is increase the tax burden on Alberta families. That's why, Madam Chair, I'm not in favour of this bill unless – unless – the government addresses my questions and concerns above in a satisfactory manner. Again, the government has another few hours left for debate today, Tuesday. If they want to make use of the time and answer our questions, then I'm open – I'm open – to hearing your answers to make up my mind whether I support this bill or not.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to begin just by briefly once again citing the Climate Leadership report to the minister. On page 17, on what climate leadership means to the panel personally, Stephanie Cairns begins with this short sentence. She says, "Alberta climate leadership presents a profound design challenge." Now, I do know a little bit about design challenges. I've been on some major construction projects in various places around the world. If there's any reality at all, it's that if you go into the construction management office, you will find against the wall a big tub, basically, full of blueprints, drawings, design drawings drawn by the designing engineering company. The interesting part is that there will be revisions upon revisions upon revisions upon revisions at a construction site. It just is a reality. To design anything perfectly the first time is absolutely unheard of.

I would suggest that this climate leadership plan does in fact have profound design challenges. In fact, we would argue that the design is deeply flawed and has significant problems that are going to make it ineffective and therefore a problem for Albertans, and that's why it needs to be improved. So, Madam Chair, in that regard I would like to introduce an amendment because the design of this plan is flawed, and we can't seem to make the members opposite understand how detrimental this tax plan will be to the province. They've refused to be responsible for the taxes they already have in their possession, and they insist on constantly raising taxes of all types. Since this government is determined to get this tax passed, the best that we can do is to hope to mitigate the damage.

That's why I would like to present the following amendment, of which I have the requisite number of copies, and the original is on top for the chair.

Thank you.

1:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Member. If you can wait till I get a copy.

Members, we have an amendment. The amendment will be referred to as A16.

Please, go ahead.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to move that the Climate Leadership Implementation Act be amended in schedule 1 as follows. In part A section 6 is struck out; in part B section 25 is amended (a) by striking out subsection (1)(h) and (b) in subsection (2) by striking out "6,"; in part C section 27(1)(d) is struck out; in part D section 61 is amended by striking out "6,"; and in part E the table to the schedule is amended by striking out the following:

Locomotive diesel	5.94¢/L	8.90¢/L

Now, I'd like to say that, as everybody realizes, Alberta is a landlocked province. This is something that everybody has acknowledged in one form or another in this House. Of course, the pipeline debate wouldn't be such a large issue if our province was situated on the coast or at least with some sort of direct access to the coast.

The major way that our resources are exported out of this province is via rail. Without the railroad even our oil and gas industry would not have been able to grow to the size it is today, yet the oil and gas industry is hurting. Oil prices have dropped dramatically. This government has raised taxes on oil companies. The fires in the Fort McMurray area have stopped production for weeks, and now this tax is going to hurt them even further. The fuel tax increase for locomotives will damage our already fragile oil industry. I'm a bit baffled as to why the government insists on kicking our oil and gas industry while they are down. The tax already gets a share of revenue from the oil companies, and there's no need to be double-dipping. There is no need to tax oil and gas companies twice.

But it's not only our resource sector that uses the railroad. Manufacturers of all kinds that import goods into Alberta, not only goods but also equipment that is used in the development of many kinds of industries and manufacturing – these goods are all imported. The majority of them come in on rail in order to create new products for Albertans. These products will all become more expensive thanks to the carbon tax. Companies that use the railroad to export goods will have to pay more now to ship their goods, making them less cost competitive. Our economy is hurting, and this tax is aimed at our importers and our exporters. Albertan companies will incur higher taxes because the railroads will simply pass on their costs to Albertans.

Railroads actually can't easily find efficiencies in order to reduce their emissions. They can't find a more efficient route to take, in most cases. If this tax is supposed to encourage better stewardship of the environment, I don't quite understand how a railroad is supposed to change its environmental footprint. [interjections] Their ways are literally nailed to the ground.

The Deputy Chair: Members.

Mr. Orr: A railroad can't replace their diesel-electric engines with pure electric motors. The infrastructure simply is not in existence for a railroad that stretches across Canada. The government needs to explain how this tax on locomotives is going to change the ways or the habits and therefore the emissions of the railroad industry.

Furthermore, this tax is going to punish agriculture and farming and farm-related industries in Alberta. There's a good deal of agricultural implement manufacturing that goes on in this province. Most of it is shipped out by rail. The big one, of course, though, is the delivery of grain crops to market. Millions of tonnes, actually, are shipped to market by rail, and there is no price flexibility in that for farmers, producers. They are just going to have to take this out of their pockets. They are going to be punished again: first Bill 6 and now this. I think this government just doesn't understand the impact that this bill is going to have on our farm industry in Alberta. We talk about wanting to diversify the economy, about wanting to expand away from oil and gas, and here we are punishing probably one of our best likelihoods, which is the agricultural industry.

This amendment is something that should be a priority for all members in this Assembly if they care about Alberta businesses that export and import products for Albertan families. This amendment also assists our oil and gas sector, that has been taking a beating after the prices lately. We should not be taxing our industries when they're already down.

I ask all members to please vote for this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we all know, rail is vital to our key industries – agriculture, manufacturing, energy, forestry – so it's disappointing that the government wants to make things harder for those job creators during this downturn. Alberta, as my colleague said, is a landlocked province, and rail is necessary in order to export the products that we produce here. Certainly, as a farmer I understand that. Without the railway our energy and ag industries would not have been able to grow to the size they are today.

You know, Madam Chair, a carbon tax is supposed to be a behaviour-modifying piece of legislation. Where I come from – I'm not sure that I understand what behaviour will be able to be changed on a farm in southern Alberta. Farms, in truth, at the end of day, are actually way ahead of this anyway. We began using zero-till and minimal-till equipment to seed crops about 25 years ago. As a result less fossil fuel has been used in the seeding process on farms for years. The capacity and size of equipment for other processes on farms have also increased, so less fossil fuel is used to cover the same number of acres that we used to cover.

Farmers that grow grain other than grain to feed their own cattle or to ship to a feedlot mostly ship it for sale, and that means that it has to be sent by rail. Rail already saw an increase in diesel fuel during the last budget, so it's disappointing that locomotive diesel will take another hit on fuel with this tax. As far as ag is concerned, the cost for getting grain in export position just went up, and farmers don't have the opportunity to control their income, that being the price of grain.

Oil moves by rail daily in this province. Pipelines are a better, safer way to move our energy, but rail has been used for years, and it has increased, actually. Rail has allowed the energy industry to diversify. Now, all of a sudden it will cost more to ship oil. This tax will hurt our resource sector when they are already hurting. Why does this government insist on hurting our oil and gas industry when we're already down? This is a very depressed part of the cycle for oil and gas. The tax already gets a share of revenue from the oil companies. There's no need to double-dip. We should not be taxing our industries when they're down.

You know, Sea-Cans bring goods through Alberta from the coast as part of trading partnerships that we already have. The price for these goods just went up. Automobiles are moved by rail – we see that all the time – so the price of a vehicle just went up. Those costs to the railway have to be passed on. All types of manufactured goods imported into Alberta will become more expensive. Everything. Our economy is hurting, and this tax is aimed at our importers and exporters.

The railways have confirmed that they'll pass on the carbon tax to consumers. They're certainly not going to eat it. It means increased costs to farmers to move their grain, increased costs for automobiles to get here, increased costs for tourists to travel by rail. It costs 35 cents to move one tonne of grain one mile. One grain car holds 90 tonnes. That's $31.50 to move one car one mile. Trains today are about 150 cars.

An Hon. Member: We adopted the metric system in 1974.

Mr. Schneider: Sorry, Mr. Scientist. I can't catch you over there.

If you move 150 cars one mile at that price, it's 4,725 bucks a mile. That just went up 9 cents a litre.

This amendment is something that should be a priority for all members in this Assembly if they care about Alberta businesses that export and import products for Alberta families.

That being said, Madam Chair, I will be supporting this amendment, and I encourage all members to do so. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the amendment? The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Chair. I think it's very important that we all have an opportunity to speak to this amendment. I think it is important to recognize what this legislation does when we are talking about a carbon levy, when we are talking about the climate leadership plan and the Climate Leadership report. We're talking about an economy-wide price on carbon. We're talking about something that is designed to reduce consumption, designed to find efficiencies through industry, and to do that we really do need to work on an economy-wide scale here. That's why it was developed by renowned economists, and that's why it was developed by people in research and industry that have heavy backgrounds in these sorts of issues.

We're really looking specifically at a carbon price on locomotive fuel. We can see that the policy mirrors the fuel tax that we have here in Alberta and that we've seen in Saskatchewan. We can see that on top of that, the Railway Association of Canada reported that the industry saw a 9.8 per cent decrease in taxes in 2014. Even the locomotive industry, Madam Chair, is concerned about reducing their emissions, and that's why the Railway Association of Canada's 2015 report stated that investments in modern locomotives, among other fuel-management technologies and policies, have allowed Canada's railways to make substantial emissions reductions, and to improve their fuel efficiency by 27.5 per cent since 2005.

Madam Chair, in addition to that, the president of CN, Claude Mongeau, even said that environmental sustainability is a strategic priority for CN, which is focused on lowering emissions, increasing energy efficiency, reducing waste, and encouraging environmental stewardship among their employees.

Clearly, industry understands the importance of taking action on climate change, and that's why we've been moving forward on this economy-wide price, and that's why I think it's very important to understand that in accordance with the Climate Leadership report and in accordance with all the thorough consultations and research that's gone into this, we are moving forward on this economy-wide price.

At this time, Madam Chair, I do have to ask and implore all the members of this House to vote against this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak on the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on amendment A16 lost]

[Motion on amendment A16 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original bill. Anyone wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. Good morning, everyone. Investing in cleaner choices, making green initiatives more affordable, to be leaders in energy efficiency and cutting edge in clean technology: these are the primary strategies, as I understand them, for this bill. Just a couple of things I'd like to clarify, too.

With all due respect to the Member for Calgary-Glenmore – and she made some great comments about some jurisdictional comparisons between Alberta and Ireland and what they're doing – I just wanted to clarify a few things. Please correct me if I'm wrong. Dublin is sort of in a similar situation to us, where we're in a recession and seeing some downturn and whatnot. I'm pretty sure that some of their targets are being met as a result of defaults because of the recession. That's very similar to here. We may very well see some of those numbers here as well due to the simple fact that there is a downturn in the economy. I'm just saying that it might be part of the reason. That doesn't mean that we shouldn't try and do better. I'm just suggesting that that might be part of the reason you'll see those numbers decline.

As far as I know, they are not quite on target yet to reach their 20 per cent. That could change. Of course, theirs is agriculturally based, right? Their big thing in Ireland is beef. It's beef. I think it's close to $1.5 billion a year in beef. That is what they sell. That's their big export, agriculture. It's a different group of things.

Nevertheless, it was very nice to have some jurisdictional comparison. The good thing about that is that you can actually take some information and actually compare it across the board, so I really appreciated that. Especially if we're actually going to look at how the numbers are being impacted from one place to another, it's nice to have some information. Again, please correct me if I'm wrong, but that's what I understand to be true about Ireland.

We want to make sure that the accountability factors are there. Again, I know we've said it a hundred times, but I think it's worth saying again: all of us ran on that. As many times as you may say what your plans are and all of those kinds of things, you are the government. I actually really look forward to these collaborative discussions, and I'm hoping that at some point collaboration will actually occur.

There have been some really, really great amendments in here. I think my favourite amendments have actually been the accountability amendments. What those do is give a lot of information to Albertans to show that the government is actually interested in not just waving around a document but in actually standing behind it and being able to show that it worked. Personally, I would appreciate that, and I know that I speak on behalf of many of my constituents in that they would really appreciate the ability of the government to show foresight, that they care about what Albertans think, that they care about the impression that they're leaving behind. This is part of your legacy. I don't know. I would consider potentially maybe looking at some more of these accountability amendments.

I'd also like to bring forth an amendment if I could, please. I believe I have the requisite number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 19 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The purposes and uses prescribed under subsection (1) for which a rebate may be paid must include fuel used for the transportation of students by bus provided by a school board to or from the site of a school.

Madam Chair, this government is seeming to rush through a very, very punitive tax on Albertans. In the process of introducing the bill, the government, I believe, failed to understand the full ramifications. It seems like you're cherry-picking from a plan without looking at the full impact of this tax. Many, many of us have said this over and over again, that the cost-benefit analysis and the impact analysis are really, really important for Albertans to understand. Albertans are intelligent people. They are interested in what's happening and in what's going forward, and they're interested in being engaged.

In your own statements from the engagement process leading up to the climate leadership panel, you had a thousand people come to where they were able to come in and be engaged with this process, and many, many people also responded online. With that engagement process it's hard to understand why within that process, after being able to see what Albertans want, you would pick the part that has become a regressive tax grab. Oddly enough, the tax is going to hurt the people, Madam Chair, that the government seems to want to most protect, and that's the vulnerable. That was shown tonight. It was so disappointing to see the government turn away charities in this and accountability amendments, that will do nothing to alter what you're trying to do other than to show Albertans that what you've done is correct or that if you've made a mistake, we can fix it. That's the whole point. When you are hurting the vulnerable, you can't sufficiently correct the onerous impact of that tax.

The environment minister has been asked about the government's failure to study the economic impact. Also, you've said in the climate action plan that it must provide an incentive for everyone. Well, I'm not sure how the vulnerable are being incentivized here. I'm not sure how charities are being incentivized here in this tax on Alberta. She's replied with a variety of what feel like very ill-informed comments. The Ecofiscal report, that she keeps referring to as the economic impact study: it seems to the Wildrose that it fails to agree with the government's exceedingly low revenue-recycling numbers, and it fails, actually, to satisfy the criteria of the economic impact study.

The government is offering low-income families – these are families that are earning less than $108,000, give or take, combined. The rebate under that is $855 in 2018. The report, however, notes that the percentage of carbon pricing revenues required to fully compensate those households with those income levels in the other part, in the second income quintile, so the other 20 per cent of the population, well within what the government considers to be a low income as earnings in this quintile are averaging around $40,000, a rebate of $1,130. The government will be offering in 2018 a rebate of $855, Madam Chair, to low-income families that are spending $1,130. That's just not good enough for Alberta's poorest families.

The government is using the numerous reports by Ecofiscal to prove that they're getting this carbon tax right and all the while not adhering to their own recommendations from the Ecofiscal plan. I mean, the report is not an economic impact study. It gives parameters by which to try and create this process, but it's not an impact study. There's no assessment on the added cost for groups vulnerable to the regressive nature of the tax like school children, particularly in rural Alberta, that have no option but to take the bus to school every morning.

I grew up in Chestermere. I've been there since 1979. It's grown substantially since then, but it's a long, long, long, long, long way to school. In fact, the bus that I took in the morning circled around the entire outside of what was considered Rocky View at that time before it even got to school. Even now, even with the growth of the city and the number of people that are there, the school is still on the outskirts of the city. In fact, because we're on the outskirts of the city, if people, especially teenagers, are wanting to work in the city of Calgary, how do you think they're going to get there? I'm just curious. I mean, if we're thinking about the tax base, just the relative tax base, and getting people working and getting to the city, like I mentioned before, most of Chestermere and, in fact, my entire constituency empties out into Calgary to work. So it's very punitive to a community like mine where the choices are very limited. There are not enough jobs in Chestermere to provide for everyone who lives there. There's no way. Most of the people do travel outside the city of Chestermere in order to work. If we're talking just about children, I mean, they have no option but to take a bus in the morning.

The minister keeps waving it around and using it as Canada-wide numbers. Well, the numbers the Wildrose used to estimate the impact, which the minister claimed, don't even apply to Alberta. These numbers don't apply. I mean, how can you use numbers if they're not relevant to our jurisdiction? The matter required further study, and instead of facilitating the study, the government has decided to ignore every report that disagrees with them. Failing to offer the proper numbers is not fair to Albertans, and they're angry about this.

I know you've said over and over again that your constituents are fine with the carbon tax. I don't know how that could be so different. My constituency is full of a diverse group of people, a very, very diverse group of people, and they're not all just one stripe or one type. There are many, many different people in my constituency. I have yet to receive a letter promoting this carbon tax, not one, and we have asked.

Again, I know that you think that doing a referendum should only be reserved for certain large-ticket items. I would wager that this is large enough in order to ask Albertans what they think. I think that the matter requires further study, and Albertans are left wondering if the environment minister understood the reports, because while their elected representatives debate in the House right now, in the wee hours of the morning, the government seems to irresponsibly and recklessly push through an ill-planned bill. Why? Because nobody's watching right now? I can't imagine how it is that you look at some of the amendments that have been given to you in collaboration, in the spirit of trying to make this better . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Can I clarify that you are speaking to amendment A17?

Mrs. Aheer: I am. Thank you very much.

I want to make sure that when we're talking about accountability, when we're talking about transportation and school boards, you have to understand that everything else that's been put in front of you hasn't even been given a second look. Now you're given an opportunity to rebate to schoolchildren, especially in rural areas. I would really, really, highly recommend that you take a look at this one. It's good for everyone.

Madam Chair, the reason I've risen in the House today to introduce this important amendment is simply to make sure that the government has the opportunity to look at maybe a small portion, a thumbprint, of this that they maybe hadn't considered. The NDP failed to consider my constituents in Chestermere-Rocky View when they drafted this bill, and the government failed to take into account that the school boards would be saddled with the high cost of this tax and little option beyond cutting programs and increasing the already high and already regressive fees that they are forced to levy on parents.

I'm going to just give you a few examples here. The Calgary Catholic board, which my riding is a part of, has done some analysis of the financial impact of the proposed carbon tax. The following information was shared during their public board meeting, so I'm sure that the members opposite also have this information as well, but I'll still share it anyway. This board meeting was on April 27, 2016, and the meeting disclosed that Budget 2016 contained the implementation of the carbon tax, which is budgeted to increase the cost of transportation and utilities by $350,000 in 2016-2017 and just over $500,000 in 2017-18 and beyond. Is that correct? I mean, I actually read those numbers, and I was flabbergasted. The impact on the public board, that my constituents are educated through, again, is estimated at $231,000.

Mr. Yao: Sorry. How much?

Mrs. Aheer: Estimated at $231,000 for the upcoming school year and $557,000 when it is fully implemented in January 2018.

An Hon. Member: No way. Wow.

Mrs. Aheer: Yes, it is.

Again, I would love to be proven wrong here. How many arts programs will this momentous bill cost our children? I think of one program in particular that's been cut in our area, Trickster. My son is part of Youth Singers. They really rely on the grants and other things that have come from the government in the past. The children are going to be asked to sacrifice not only the quality of their education but other programs that help to make life wonderful in this province.

Mr. Yao: Why does this government not support the arts?

Mrs. Aheer: I don't know.

Why haven't we asked Albertans in a referendum if they consider that this sacrifice is worthwhile? Or maybe it's just not a big enough deal. I'm assuming it's just not a big enough deal to ask Albertans what they think.

Mr. Nixon: You've got to roll with it.

Mrs. Aheer: I'm rolling.

The polls tell us that nearly 70 per cent of Albertans are opposed to this tax. How will this bill impact children educated by other boards? There are questions that each and every member of this House should be asking themselves when they vote on this amendment this morning.

Our schools and our children's education should be exempted from the punitive impacts of this tax, and I would implore you to all vote in favour of requiring exemption for school boards. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A17? The Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, this is another amendment that is the same, more or less, as most of the amendments that have come before it. We countered the previous ones by saying that this is an economy-wide carbon tax. It is applied to everybody.

If we're talking about children and we're talking about students in Alberta schools, there is no one in this province who wants us to move on this more than those kids. I have taught kids in schools, and they care passionately about climate change. They know it's the issue of their time, and they want us to do something about it. They absolutely want us to do something about it. I have talked to school board trustees who are aware that, yes, this will have an impact, but they are onboard. They're onboard with this change. [interjections] Yes, they want to be part of this. There are schools that want to be part of this. They want to work. They want to be part of the solution. [interjections] I am speaking. You know, through the chair, please.

In any case, children want this. They want us to do something about it. They're passionate about it. They care about it. There is no one who cares about it more. There is no one who wants this more. We must apply this fairly. This, like I said, is the same amendment that has come before. We are doing this primarily, you know, for the future. I am doing this for my children. We're doing it for our children, so to say that we're impacting children negatively I think is unfair, and I would encourage everyone to vote against this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much. Thank you to the member. I completely agree with you. Kids are totally onboard with this. I completely agree with your statements. I think, however, that any vision – I mean, I've taught kids my whole life, and they're my biggest teachers, no holds barred, by far the biggest teachers I've ever had. The wisdom of children: it's absolutely imperative that we take it into this discussion. Kids especially, I find, when you have these discussions with them, are so intelligent that given all of the facts they're also going to understand that there is a cost and a balance to everything, and that's what this discussion is lacking. Nobody is disagreeing with you about what needs to be done for the environment. Not one bit. However, what we are lacking in this discussion is balance, and the kids would give you a balanced understanding of that, too, given the opportunity to discuss all parts of this.

Nobody is disagreeing that kids are passionate about this. They are. I talk to them about it all the time, too. But it's one of the three pillars; there's environment, there's economics, and there are also the energy aspects. Those three things in conjunction, in stewardship, have to be discussed all together. Those kids know that, and you would know that because, obviously, you've talked to them as well. Please, as you're bringing forward thought processes like this – that's fantastic – let's actually talk to the sincerity of the full discussion because our kids all deserve that, and they're smart enough to understand it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A17 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original bill. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today with a notice of amendment. I have the requisite number of copies here for the chair.

The Deputy Chair: Give me a moment to get the original. We'll refer to it as amendment A18.

Mr. Gotfried: I'll wait until the chair has copies in her hand.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to propose an amendment to Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, with the act to be amended in schedule 2 by adding the following after section 2(5):

(5.1) Any grants, contributions or loans, or loan guarantees provided or issued by the Corporation pursuant to subsection (5) shall prioritize innovation, energy efficiency and the reduction of greenhouse gases by small businesses.

Madam Chair, this amendment would see the newly formed Energy Efficiency Alberta prioritize the sustainability of small businesses when providing grants, loans, and pilot programs. This gesture will help small businesses by providing assistance as they address increased costs associated with the carbon tax. It will lead to meaningful cost and emissions reductions, achieve energy-conserving efficiencies, and prioritize entrepreneurship, innovation, and competitiveness amongst the small-business sector.

The incoming carbon tax will negate one of the few positive aspects of the NDP's budget, the small-business tax reduction, and we're greatly concerned about the impact on many small businesses who are struggling and, in many cases, teetering on the edge of bankruptcy and failure, which would then, of course, impact jobs and the vibrancy of our economy. Essentially, by imposing a carbon tax on small business, the government has undone the modest goodwill and the small shot of hope that they gave these risk-taking entrepreneurial Albertans when they thankfully listened to our repeated calls for reduction in small-business taxes, which, of course, we were thankful for.

In fact, the amount that small businesses must pay in carbon tax, if indeed any of them are lucky enough to actually turn a profit in this very difficult economy to be eligible for a reduced tax bill, appears set to greatly exceed any cost savings or benefit derived, which, Madam Chair, is of great concern to all Albertans. In fact, as we all know, it's the local businesses, the small businesses, the family-owned businesses that will suffer from that.

It's important that we understand the challenges faced by small businesses going forward and also put them in the best position possible to remain at the forefront of leadership and best practices in regard to the emissions, which this government says that they are so committed to, and the emissions management and, of course, energy-saving business practices, which will then affect climate change and the consumption of hydrocarbons.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

While the government has indicated that they intend on providing carbon tax revenue to small businesses through some as yet unidentified initiatives, this can be said of a number of other rumoured or inferred commitments, some positive and some, of course, negative in their impact. Amending the bill so that small businesses are directly referenced in this legislation I think is highly important so that they know because we all know that it's the confidence of businesses that will affect their ability to invest, their desire to invest, thereby creating jobs and increasing the activity in our economy. We need them to be directly referenced under the legislation, meaning that the government would continue to acknowledge, reflect upon, and react to the challenges facing this all-important job-creating sector. There's no escaping their monumental impact on our business, and it is often said that small business is big business, particularly in entrepreneurial Alberta.

2:40

Mr. Chair, I've spoken to many small business over the last year. Some are teetering on the edge. Some are deciding whether it's worth continuing to operate in this environment. Some have said that they've hired. They have three students on staff. Some of them, because of having a small business, have a nanny. I've spoken to one in particular who says – she's very close – that she doesn't pay herself a wage as the owner of that company but is looking towards the future, when she retires from her wage-paying job and has that opportunity. She's done the math on it, and at this point already, before this transpired, it's not worth running that business, taking that long-term risk anymore. Hence, she'll lay off four people in the process of doing that.

To the chair: this is a situation which we need to do everything to combat. We need to build confidence in our small-business sector.

We need to give them the opportunity to survive this downturn. Our future depends on that. The vibrancy and the diversification that we hear so much of depends on it. So let's work with them and support them rather than looking at them as a low-hanging source of revenue. Let's serve Albertans and support Albertans, their jobs, and this economy, which means so much to us.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other speakers on amendment A18? The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I just want to speak really briefly to this because I do want to recognize – the hon. member did mention it – the 1 per cent tax cut that this government brought in as part of the climate leadership rollout. As we move forward on those, we absolutely are interested in supporting small business. When we look at things like how the Energy Efficiency Alberta corporation – and we are the last jurisdiction to bring in an energy efficiency corporation – is absolutely going to be focused on finding energy-conscious savings for our businesses and our partners in industry and consumers as well so that we can help small businesses find those savings, I think this is absolutely the intent of the corporation.

The intent of the bill as a whole is absolutely to help find savings by reduction of emissions overall, so I don't think that this amendment is really necessary at this time. I think that the Energy Efficiency Alberta corporation absolutely will be doing a lot of this work moving forward. I think that the climate leadership report and the Climate Leadership Implementation Act do a lot of this work moving forward by those contributions and grants that we're going to be seeing as is, so at this time I'd like to ask all members to please vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Calgary-Greenway.

Mr. Gill: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm proud to rise here to speak to an amendment to Bill 20 by my colleague. There's no question of whether or not Alberta's economy is hurting. I mean, we've all seen the numbers. We've all seen the job losses, and we all know somebody – our neighbours, our friends, our relatives – who've lost jobs in this economy. The one sector that is hurting very badly in Alberta is our small businesses. We know this because our constituents, Alberta's entrepreneurs, have reached out to us and talked to us and said, you know, that their small business, the mom and pops and those shops, are hurting.

A small business is a company that employs 49 employees or less. In Alberta just a few short years ago small business made up almost 95 per cent of all the businesses in this province. That's a huge, huge number. Of the total employment in Alberta small businesses employ about one-third of Albertans in the private sector, and that transcends quite a big range of industries as well: agriculture, forestry, oil and gas, and construction, just to name a few. In addition, in Alberta we're among the leaders in the country with nearly 40 small businesses per thousand people in the province. That's important to note, that critical role that small businesses play in hiring Alberta's youth. Studies show that businesses that have fewer than 20 employees have the highest percentage of employees aged from 15 to 24. Those are our youth that are going to universities while they're working. You know, that's helping them get through those stages in life. As you can see, small businesses are essential to Alberta. When small business struggles, Alberta struggles and our economy struggles. That's why I fully support my colleague's amendment to ensure that small businesses are provided the support they need to weather both the carbon tax and the tough economic times.

Now we've seen this NDP government vote against a number of common-sense amendments that have been put by this side of the House, our caucus and other parties, amendments that would have made Bill 20 better for Albertans and for our economy to handle this new tax. We saw this government vote against a revenue-neutral carbon tax. We saw this government vote against supporting sustainable forestry jobs. We saw this government vote against supporting our tourism industry with the flights coming in and leaving the province. But I hope this government recognizes the incredible importance of small businesses as employers and as economic drivers.

Energy Efficiency Alberta needs to have the capabilities to support small businesses in Alberta, to support programs that are designed specifically for small businesses by providing grants, loans, and pilot programs that will lead to our province being able to maintain our competitiveness on the global scale. As mentioned by my colleague, Bill 20 will undo one aspect of the NDP budget, when this government took the advice from the PC's Engage initiative and lowered the small-business tax. On the one hand, this government offers some help to businesses in their time of need, and on the other hand they hand them the carbon tax, which will undo that help that they need. You know, it doesn't make any sense to me.

As members of this House we must serve as responsible legislators. This means ensuring we have the best interests of Albertans in mind when we sit here, when we, you know, make those important decisions. When our small-business sector survives, that means Albertans stay at work. They stay in jobs, and they feed their families. That means that our economy comes through these tough times intact and that, most importantly, as I said, Albertans stay working.

Mr. Chair, our role as representatives is to act on behalf of Albertans. If that's not our role, I don't know what our role is. I think we all know the truth. It lies within us. Just dig a little deeper and rise above the party colours and make the right choice. As Abraham Lincoln once said: the ballot is more powerful than the bullet. So let's use the ballot today and support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Are there any other speakers on amendment A18?

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to propose an amendment to Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. I have the number of copies, and the original is on top. I'll wait to continue.

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be referred to as A19. Please go ahead, Member.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you. I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 79 by striking out subsection (3). The intent of this amendment is to remove 79(3), on page 71, which says that "a regulation made under this Act is, if it so provides, effective with reference to a period before it was made." In other words, this section allows for this act to be made effective retroactively.

Now, maybe it's just me, but that sounds just a little heavy handed and undemocratic. Imagine if a government in power decided it was okay to make other pieces of legislation retroactive. It may be that this is just a wording error, or maybe there's some clarification that the government could give on this. As it is right now, we just don't believe it's proper that the government have the ability to jump in their DeLorean and make these regulations retroactive.

I will support this amendment and look forward to any discussion on it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, recognizing the hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I am going to move an amendment. I have the appropriate number of copies.

3:00

The Deputy Chair: This amendment will be referred to as A20.

Mr. Nixon: I will start with your permission, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead, Member.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by adding the following after section 3:

Interjurisdictional initiatives

3.1 The revenue from the carbon levy may not be used for an interprovincial initiative under section 3(2)(a) unless

- (a) the total estimated costs of the initiative and the estimated reduction in greenhouse gases in Alberta are made public by the Minister, and
- (b) the Minister lays before the Legislative Assembly a letter from the government of each province participating in the proposed interprovincial initiative indicating that government fully supports pipelines that will be used for the transmission of oil, gas or any other commodity originating in Alberta.

Madam Chair, we've been promised that all funds will be spent in Alberta, yet the Premier has already signed a MOU with Ontario. This makes us nervous. At first, we wanted to dismiss this out of hand, but there's a possibility that collaboration could be productive. The last thing that we want to do is to send the carbon tax funds to work with a province that is holding up or opposing our pipelines. We are supposed to be getting social licence out of this, but it would just be too offensive to see carbon tax, slush fund dollars going to any kind of a partnership with a province who opposes Alberta's prosperity.

With that, I would ask all members to support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A20 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. Anybody wishing to speak – sorry, hon. member.

Mrs. Aheer: That's okay.

The Deputy Chair: The Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's 3:04 in the morning. We're doing really good.

I would like to propose an amendment as well to Bill 20. I have the requisite number of copies, which we can pass to you so that you don't have to come all the way down.

I rise in the House to move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 3 in section 4(2)(b)(ii) by striking out the proposed section 10(3)(g.1) and (g.2)

The Deputy Chair: Member, do you have the original?

Mrs. Aheer: No, I don't. I pulled the very bottom one.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. We'll just get you to sign one so that I have an original signature.

Mrs. Aheer: Okay. Sorry about that, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Okay. Thank you so much. By passing this amendment, the assembled members would be removing from Bill 20 the section amending the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act which irresponsibly extends the mandate of the CCEMF to include:

- (g.1) education initiatives, including education programs, research programs and scholarships;
- (g.2) outreach initiatives, including initiatives to provide information to stakeholders and the public.

The CCEMF has been given a clear mandate with good reason. The taxes levied on our energy producers have negatively impacted their ability to compete and attract investment from outside capital. This is a deal that they made in order to make this fund work, the losses in competitive advantage and losses of their ability to attract outside capital. The fund for outreach initiatives has no ability to reduce GHG emissions in the province, and the additions of these clauses are signs of the government's intention to mismanage the CCEMF. Industry is happy with the mandate of the CCEMF, and it should be left alone. These lines do little more than to allow the minister to turn the CCEMF into Alberta's newest billion-dollar slush fund. The climate action plan has posed serious challenges for Alberta's energy industry, challenges that will require serious investment into research and development and outreach, that they need to overcome.

Alberta has two of the cleanest coal facilities in the world, Keephills 3 and Genesee 3. These facilities provide jobs, and the companies that run them have invested significantly in clean-coal technologies like scrubbers for their facilities. Instead of helping the industry move forward, the NDP is using the carbon tax to financially decimate the coal industry and, with this clause in particular, to divert funds away from the industry's goal of reducing their environmental impact. Long before the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was Premier, she was pushing for the shutdown of coal with a private member's bill. The Albertans in these communities are already convinced that this government doesn't care about their livelihoods and doesn't have an interest in working with them towards further progress on clean coal. Voting down this amendment will only serve to reaffirm that.

The coal industry needs the funds made available to them by the CCEMF to progress towards their zero-emissions future. It has been estimated that the cost of retrofitting the average coal-powered electricity generator with carbon capture and storage is over $700 million. That's just for one unit, not the six coal-fired facilities in Alberta but just one of the 18 physical units employing Albertans across this province. Our coal industry needs help bringing the costs down on the estimated $1.5 billion needed to refurbish Sundance 1 and 2 with Japanese clean-coal technology.

The Coal Association of Canada estimates that these industries provide direct employment for 31,000 Albertans and indirect employment for 10,000. Without fast progress, the employees of these units are looking at losing their jobs in 15 years. It is prudent that this House remember that the 15 years only applies to those facilities that are not taken out by the government's irresponsible changes, via order in council, to the carbon tax rate charged against specified gas emitters last June, that led to the serious legal problems and the mass cancellations of power purchase arrangements. These irresponsible, poorly-thought-out changes to the specified gas emitters regulation means that many facilities will have less than 15 years.

While the government turns important research and technology funds into slush funds, Albertan communities that rely on the employment that these coal facilities provide prepare to turn into ghost towns. The funds should only be used for the purposes related to reducing emissions of a specified gas or improving Alberta's ability to adapt to climate change. This fund was set up with the industry in mind, and through the co-operation of the fund, it achieved a shared goal. Our industry wants to lead on the environmental file, and this House should be facilitating that desire, not impeding it.

I encourage all of you to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak on the amendment which is referred to as A21? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I find it strange that only 10 or 12 or a hundred hours ago the members across the way there were chastising us for not doing enough to advertise what we're doing with the climate leadership plan, right? They wanted to have it published on every gas receipt and natural gas bill in the province so that the people of Alberta would know what we're doing with our climate leadership plan. Now, at 10 after 3 in the morning, they want to take away our ability to engage in education and outreach initiatives to do the very thing that they wanted to do 10 hours ago, which was to tell the people of Alberta what we're doing with our climate leadership plan.

You know, I understand that at 3 o'clock in the morning the things we believe in are maybe not necessarily the things we believed in at 10 o'clock the previous night. It's not true on this side of the House, Madam Chair, but it is apparently true on that side of the House, well, except for our dear friends from Leduc-Beaumont and Calgary-Shaw.

If the member is honest and truly wants the people of Alberta to know what this government is doing with our climate leadership plan, she would withdraw this amendment, Madam Chair, so that the money in the climate change emissions management fund can promote and educate the people of Alberta about the good things that we're doing with our climate leadership plan. In case she doesn't want to withdraw the amendment, Madam Chair, then I would recommend that everybody in the House vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. If I'm going to be in the House at 3:14 in the morning, I'd better at least be in Hansard to prove to the world that I was here. More importantly, I will be very brief. I know it's been a very, very, very long day, and we're well into the next day.

There are many things about this bill that I don't like, and I think there's a lot of work that needs to be done to make it better. I've said many times before – and I'll say it again for the record – that I support a carbon tax in principle. Climate change is real and human caused, and we ought to do something about it. Done properly, I think it can provide a real source of economic opportunity for Albertans.

You know, I think that this is an important aspect of the bill. If I were proposing a bill like this, which we likely would given that we are the only party on this side of the House to propose an actual idea as it relates to climate change – we have a climate change abatement plan. We're the only opposition party to do that. We know what other parties on this side are against; we don't know what they're for. I'm very clear on what I'm for.

I think the education initiative aspect of this bill is a very positive thing. I will therefore be voting against this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I rise to move an amendment. I have the requisite copies.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. The amendment will be referred to as A22.

Mr. Panda: Can I go ahead?

The Deputy Chair: Wait till I get the original, please.
Member, please go ahead.

3:20

Mr. Panda: I move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 by striking out section 82 and substituting the following:

Coming into force

82 This Act comes into force on the later of the following:

- (a) January 1, 2017;
- (b) 30 days after the date on which the Minister lays before the Legislative Assembly an economic impact assessment of the provisions of this Act.

This amendment outlines one of the core issues that we have with this bill. As you can see by the amendment, this bill does not change the date as to when the carbon tax can come into effect. This amendment does not change what will be done with the carbon tax. This amendment simply asks for more information on how it will affect Albertans. We want to be certain that this carbon tax will not harm Albertans.

Madam Chair, when I worked in the industry, I dealt with logistics and impacts of multibillion-dollar deals on a regular basis. To make sure that those deals were risk averse, we used to use some tools like life cycle value assessment. Those were required before a project was put in motion. It was common sense to evaluate how the project would affect the company and the people around the project. The assessment would show flaws in our plans. It would show how we could improve our plans. The study would show us many of the problems that we thought we had addressed in the first place and many problems that we had never thought of. Those studies saved the companies I worked for many millions and millions of dollars simply by doing our due diligence.

This economic impact study that I am proposing through this amendment could save taxpayers far more than just a few million dollars. If every member other than the NDP is correct, this study could save the livelihoods of thousands of Albertans. On the other hand, this economic impact study could show that everyone on this side of the House is totally out to lunch. Either way, this would be a very good thing for the NDP to vote in favour of. This could provide Albertans the legitimacy that this bill desperately lacks. The only reason for the government to vote down this amendment would be because they know that this study will prove that their carbon tax will not be beneficial for Albertans.

In the end, the ball is in the government's court. They can choose to vote down every single amendment we propose in an attempt to help Albertans, or they can choose to help make Alberta better. If this government wants Alberta to be a better place for everyone, then vote in favour of this amendment, and find out what can be done to improve this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Are there any members wishing to speak to amendment A22?

Mr. Taylor: You miss him so much, I'm sure.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment will be referred to as A23.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Cooper to move that Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 19 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) The purposes and uses prescribed under subsection (1) for which a rebate may be paid must include fuel purchased by a municipal authority for municipal purposes as defined in the Municipal Government Act.

Rebates for municipalities only make sense. The costs incurred by municipal governments are in the service of everyday Albertans. These taxpayers rely on government for the services which provide safety, convenience and, indeed, which allow us to live in northern climates comfortably. The cost of heating our public buildings, including libraries, town halls, fire halls, police stations, is astronomical.

I ask all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I have an amendment to Bill 20 with the appropriate copies.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment will be referred to as A24. Please proceed.

Mr. Nixon: Madam Chair, I move that the Climate Leadership Implementation Act be amended in schedule 1 in section 3 by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) During a pre-election period, the revenue from the carbon levy may not be used

- (a) for new initiatives under subsection (2)(a), or
- (b) to provide rebates or adjustments under subsection (2)(b) at rates that exceed those in place prior to the pre-election period.

(4) For the purposes of this section, “pre-election period” means the period commencing 6 months prior to the commencement of the 3-month period during which a general election must be held under section 38.1(2) of the Election Act and ending at the end of polling day for that election.

Whether you’re a member of the opposition or a member of the government caucus, the concentration of power and the possibility of abuse are alarming. This Premier is asking members of this House to vote in favour of a bill that has absolutely no system to hold spending accountable, period. The least this government can do is to commit right here and now that they will not be using this slush fund as their own personal precampaign fund. It’s that simple. Well, Madam Chair, at least it is simple for the members of this House who are tired of seeing the government take advantage of their political position for the benefit of themselves over the benefit of all Albertans.

I encourage all members of this House to support this amendment and put in place some sliver of accountability in this slush fund for the Premier. I encourage all members to vote in favour.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: We are back on the original bill. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. On behalf of the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I would like to introduce an amendment. I have the required number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: This will be referred to as A25. Please go ahead.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended in schedule 1 in section 55 by striking out subsection (3).

Section 55, of course, deals with warrants when “there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence against this Act or the regulations has occurred and that evidence of that offence is likely to be found.” Subsection (3), which this amendment seeks to remove, allows for warrantless searches. Now, a warrantless search is a serious matter. Essentially, it’s a breach of property rights based predominantly on suspicion. This amendment strikes this section granting the minister the right to warrantless searches.

Maybe I’m missing something, but this reads like it comes out of a spy novel. Now, I’d love to hear why the minister thinks she needs these sweeping powers. Let me be perfectly clear. I really don’t like tax cheats, but I don’t think that they should be allowed to take this overstep in this section. If we were presented with a recurring problem where suspected tax cheats were regularly deleting important information after a warrant was done, I might be interested, but I just don’t see the problem this is addressing.

This section, in context, says that a warrantless search may be executed if the delay in obtaining a warrant would result

- (i) in danger to human life or safety, or
- (ii) in the loss, removal or destruction of evidence.

Now, as to the first aspect, regarding a danger to human life and safety, if there is any risk of danger to human life and safety, the appropriate response, Madam Chair, is through emergency responders. The carbon tax shouldn’t even factor into it.

With the second, context is entirely important. Regrettably, section 55 speaks about offences to this act or its regulations. Of course, we haven’t seen the full regulations yet. It is substantially troublesome that the government would ask that we here approve warrantless searches on the grounds that they may be in breach of regulations we haven’t seen yet.

Matters concerning private property should always be treated carefully, and any scenario where a government should enter private property, especially without a warrant, needs to be examined very carefully. Remember, Madam Chair, that when we asked them about the fentanyl issue, they said that that was unacceptable, yet here we see it now. The clear definition of private property and the enforcement of that definition are matters integral to any free society.

If there are members on the government benches who want to defend the subsections in question, I am very interested in hearing why they are bringing this forward.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I will be incredibly brief in speaking to this amendment. The reason why the bill was drafted in the way that it is is because these provisions are quite standard. There's nothing particularly nefarious here. It's usually fairly standard to have provisions allowing one to obtain evidence if there's a risk that that evidence will be destroyed.

So those are the reasons, and with that, I will sit.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A25?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A25 as proposed by the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner on behalf of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

[Motion on amendment A25 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill.

Seeing no speakers, are you ready for the question on Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act?

Hon. Members: Question.

[The remaining clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill with some amendments: Bill 20. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Does the Assembly concur with the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 20

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Acting Speaker: The Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office to rise and move third reading of Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act.

Given the lateness of the hour, Madam Speaker, I think I will be brief. The reasons for this bill have been, I think, canvassed in depth. This government is responsible not only to the people of today but to the people of this province tomorrow and into the future. That is why we are taking action to combat climate change.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Any other speakers on the motion? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

3:50

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to move an amendment, and I will pass out the copies here.

The Acting Speaker: Please go ahead, Member.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting "Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker: Having heard the motion as proposed by the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View . . .

Mrs. Aheer: I'm sorry. I was . . .

The Acting Speaker: Oh, you can speak to it. Go ahead.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We have proposed a number of amendments – I think that's an understatement – and the government has shown that it is unwilling to co-operate, and we feel that we just have absolutely no choice but to try and hoist this bill.

I rise today to bring to this House the concerns of my constituents in regard to the impact of the carbon tax and what will happen during these difficult economic times. As a representative of the beautiful and extremely diverse constituency of Chestermere-Rocky View I have many rural constituents that feel that the exemptions will not be sufficient.

Many of the farms in my riding are market exposed. They will be transporting their grain and other products to markets outside the province on trucks and trains. Just to be clear, too, farmers are already efficient. They use so many new tools and knowledge to be as efficient as possible. With any business or anything we have to keep in mind that efficiency is going to help us all with our bottom line. So, just to be clear, Albertans want to do this, and they are already showing an amazing ability to do this. They will be transporting their grain and other products to markets outside the province on trucks and trains.

I've received a number of letters about the carbon tax. One such letter notes what most Albertans are well aware of, that our farmers are stewards of the land, yet their behaviour is being penalized. This resident details in his letter:

Since the 1980s we have reduced our fuel consumption by reducing tillage at seeding time by 56 per cent. This reduced tillage increases the soil organic matter and therefore sinks carbon. We have done this by investing in new precision seeding technologies. There are many other new technologies to invest in like variable rate fertilizer. This takes the new tools and knowledge and new services, all of which take further investment.

These are Albertans that truly care about the environment and their impact on the water, soil, and air that allows them to prosper.

In the letter this resident goes on to detail:

On the livestock side of business we have invested in fencing equipment and labour to increase production through improved grazing management. We have much more investment to make to get all of the pastures properly managed. By limiting grazing duration and increasing rest time of pastures, production goes up by 25 per cent or more. As well, organic matter is trampled into the soil and carbon is sunk.

The resident has taken proactive steps to decrease the footprint of his family farm without any sort of punitive actions imposed on him by the government.

He goes on here to point out that this carbon tax will impact his ability to reinvest.

The carbon taxation reduces farm income.

And this is his quote.

Reduced income equals reduced investment. Reduced investment reduces efficiencies. Reduced efficiencies increase the carbon footprint and reduce the amount of carbon sink, a likely unintended consequence of the NDP's great economic experiment. Leave the money in the producers' hands to invest instead of in the hands of the government to invest, most likely, into the white elephant of economic experimentation.

There are individuals on the other side of this House that, we hope, understand about farming, and we would assume that with their understanding about farming, they would understand that exempting them on purple gas is not enough. It truly isn't. Rural Albertans are going to be harshly penalized by this tax, and we've gone into many of those explanations. Their electrical rates will go up due to the tax on specified gas emitters, and, Madam Speaker, the cost of moving the products they produce to market will go up. My constituent has a valid concern about the cyclical impact of this tax. This is the wrong time to be taking punitive actions against Albertans.

Exemptions for market-exposed industries are insufficient. It is not just the farmers, Madam Speaker. It is not made clear in this bill that the trade-exposed sector will qualify for an exemption needed to keep their businesses alive. At this point it is up to the minister.

This government is picking winners and losers with this bill. In the process this government is driving away much-needed investment dollars. This level of uncertainty is troubling, and that doesn't seem to follow the mandate of what this carbon tax is intended to do at all.

Case-by-case applications show that it will expose Albertan industries to unnecessary amounts of uncertainty and red tape. This will mean that some companies do not invest in Alberta because they're worried about the fact that they will not receive the exemptions that they need from the minister. That is at the mercy of the minister. Furthermore, they were worried that those exemptions are only partial.

Industries may leave as well. Every time I drive to Edmonton, I notice the Labatt brewery, and I wonder what will happen to the operation of a large international business with mobile capital, capital that is completely fluid and mobile and can leave this province at any time. They have no reason to stay here without the incentives to stay and the stability of a government that understands the importance of investment here.

This international business with its mobile capital: I wonder what the people that work in that factory will do if this radical high-tax agenda becomes too much for their employer. Ontario actually experienced a mass exodus of business just shortly after the implementation of its rapid, radical renewables agenda.

Electricity costs in Ontario are too high. Manufacturers find it difficult to open operations and keep their operations going in Ontario. I am assuming that this government does not want that.

Breweries like the Labatt brewery use significant amounts of heat energy in the processing of their products. Their production costs will go up significantly. Worse, they won't qualify for the small-business tax credit.

Alberta is filled with multinationals that locate their manufacturing here because of our competitive advantage. That's amazing, and the government has done nothing but erode this advantage. Now we're facing rising electrical costs under this bill.

Alberta has a clear competitive advantage in natural gas. This is an advantage that attracts industry, and we are undermining that by artificially increasing the cost of natural gas. Alberta is risking carbon leakage. Many businesses, actually, would choose relocating to a lower tax jurisdiction over upgrading equipment necessary to avoid this carbon tax. Don't we want to keep that investment here? I have to assume that that's not what this government wants to see, investment leaving the province.

Food processing provides another clear example. Plants like McCain Foods in Coaldale, Alberta, could leave, and Albertans would lose jobs. I don't think that the government quite understands that this is a wrong course of action to be implementing. I think that we're trying to grow our jobs market. I would hope so. This government specifically is desperate to increase the level of value added in the province. We've heard that over and over again as well, yet you're raising the electrical costs.

Bill 20 is a tax bill. This isn't about the environment. This is a wealth transfer, and worse, it's a regressive wealth transfer because the government has refused to calculate the full indirect and direct costs. On top of that, there have been some really, really fabulous and thoughtful amendments that have come forward that have seen absolutely zero collaboration. It's really hard for us to go forward and tell our constituents and Albertans that this is something that we got to work on together. They're going to be able to see for themselves that these amendments haven't been accepted or even spoken about in any way that is collaborative.

With that in mind, I cannot support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, June 7, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Hon. members, let us, each in our own way, reflect as we together pass another milestone in the 29th Legislative Assembly. Let us reflect again on the great responsibility it is for each of us to hold public office. As we return to our constituencies, let us reflect on our past decisions, words we have spoken, and, most importantly, listen to the people we serve. Please be safe.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 20

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

Mrs. Aheer moved that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

[Adjourned debate on amendment June 6: Cortes-Vargas]

The Speaker: Is anyone wishing to speak on the amendment to third reading of Bill 20? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I once again rise in this House to discuss Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act. Unfortunately, there has been very little leadership and a great deal of ideology shown in this bill. The opposition has been diligent in providing numerous amendments that would see this bill include reasonable measures to ensure transparency and accountability. Once again the government has wielded its majority like a hammer and is banging this act through the Legislature with little regard for any unintended consequences it may bring about.

I’m going to share a quote by a favourite conservative former President of the United States, Ronald Reagan: “Government’s first duty is to protect the people, not run their lives.” This government would be well served to heed that advice.

The opposition has done its very best to ensure that the concerns of Albertans have been heard in this House, and it will be those same Albertans that will ultimately hold this government accountable. Polls show that Albertans in general are split on this carbon tax, and there was a great deal of vocal opposition to this proposed act. Despite the work done by the Leach panel, there are still too many unknowns in this act.

The public consultation engaged in here was done under the guise of climate leadership as opposed to taxing and spending, which is truly what it is. There may have been a completely different discussion had this been clarified. The NDP did not campaign on this carbon tax. At least there was more consultation done here than for the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, which put the cart before the horse and chose to legislate first and leave all consultation for later.

The major flaw with the work that went into this act, however, is the lack of any comprehensive economic impact assessment. This tax will affect every part of our economy, and there are no external forces dictating that this has to be done for January 1, 2017. We should only be looking at implementing it ahead of our competitors if it genuinely makes sense for our economy, but of course it doesn’t. Just as with other tax hikes and the minimum wage, this government continues to have complete disregard for engaging in a robust review before implementing a significant piece of legislation. We saw it on the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act and again with Bill 18, An Act to Ensure Independent Environmental Monitoring. In both instances government chose to ignore numerous reasonable motions brought forth by the opposition and instead relied on what could be construed as ideology over economics, a position that supported their own beliefs despite any sort of economic rationale. Albertans cannot afford to allow a piece of legislation with such huge implications on all aspects of Albertans’ lives to simply be pushed through without the proper economic review.

This government did not even discuss possible trickle-down costs associated with the biggest tax grab in Alberta’s history until the opposition brought it up. Even then they downplayed it as minimal. Will it be minimal when companies faced with huge increases in costs choose to shut down and take the jobs and move to a more business-friendly environment? Several other jurisdictions are already trying to poach businesses from Alberta, and this carbon tax is just one more boost to the antibusiness climate that this government has created. We are experiencing climate change in more than one way thanks to this government.

Businesses simply aren’t going to wait around for these utopian green initiatives to be rolled out in coming years. They have to make plans now based on facts, not platitudes. I can’t help but wonder what this government will do when job losses continue to pile up and they can no longer blame it on oil prices or the failed policies of a previous government. Already we know that the low-price-of-oil excuse for the credit downgrade is not supported by facts. The price of oil has been rising, but the downgrades continue. This government will be held accountable. The people of Alberta will ensure that.

This bill is a poorly considered piece of legislation, fraught with unforeseen consequences. This bill will harm everybody: charities, nonprofits, the agriculture industry, the manufacturing industry, and food processing, just to name a few. Businesses and municipalities have been sharing stories about how badly just the fuel and natural gas increases are going to hit them. Municipalities are sharing estimated fuel and gas increases of a third between 2017 and 2018, and – no surprise – fuel will go up by more than 5 per cent, and natural gas will go up by more than 50 per cent.

The same hikes are looming over job creators in Alberta. Businesses are shelving expansion plans and cannot say for sure just how long they will be able to continue in this less than competitive business climate. National and international businesses that have facilities elsewhere may simply choose to increase production elsewhere and fold up shop here. Others will most certainly have to offset these costs by raising prices or sending more workers to the unemployment lines. Either way, once again Albertans will pay the price. The government will dismiss these arguments as fearmongering, but they are facts. They have chosen to provide no economic assessment of any type to clearly identify what these costs will be. Only time will tell, and if the government is wrong in its decision, as they say, the buck stops with them.

I just can’t see how this government can hang their hat on the belief that the rebates proposed will cover these trickle-down costs, everything from driving your car to buying groceries, and at least 40 per cent of Albertans will see no sort of offset to these costs. Many more will be losing money. The rebate was originally designed to cover increases to natural gas rates, gasoline, and diesel but ignored the fact that this tax will have a domino effect, hiking prices on everything from electricity to groceries, rent, and goods and services. These costs will be absorbed by the taxpayer, the end-user.

Despite the assurances by the government that rebates are a little higher to help low-income Albertans deal with the costs passed on to them by businesses for goods and services, the government failed to bring up these extra costs before Wildrose started pointing them out. It's almost as if they hadn't considered it. Of course, had they actually completed an economic impact assessment, maybe Albertans would have been given a more accurate notion of how much the so-called levy will really cost.

10:10

Even Mayor Nenshi stated in an April 14 article in the Calgary Metro that a carbon tax isn't going to fly. He said:

The City of Calgary fills many, many, many tanks of gas every single day. Our best estimate is that not being rebated the carbon tax on all those tanks . . . that we fill every day, the first year in 2017 will be about $2.6 million or $2.7 million, rising to $6.5 million. To put that in context, that's a half point increase on the property tax – only for paying another order of government its taxes.

Nenshi went on to say:

Unlike the provincial government, the city does not, cannot and will not run a deficit . . . Our goal would be to shave that amount somewhere else, but that's hard to do on fuel. Police cars, fire trucks, garbage trucks and buses have to be out there, so as a result the only thing to do is go to the taxpayer for it.

Imagine trying to run a business in a climate that has already seen hikes in personal and business taxes. Now increases on fuel and natural gas, not to mention how those increases will affect purchases of raw materials and transportation of those goods and services, will further burden an already hurting sector. If this government really believes that there will be minimal trickle-down effects with this bill, then show us the proof. Show us any economic study or report that disproves these costs. Mr. Speaker, the government won't because they can't. Doing so would prove the damaging effect of this tax.

We in the opposition have spoken repeatedly about why this bill is such a bad idea. The Wildrose has gone to great lengths to propose common-sense amendments. It is not too late to take a step back and really consider the consequences for Alberta and to do right by them and reconsider this bill. At the very least, the government should let the people who will be paying this carbon tax, Albertans, make the final call on whether they support this radical change. Hold a referendum in the fall, and if Albertans support a clear question and authorize this carbon tax, I'll willingly move on to discussions on the best method to implement it. As of now you don't have a mandate for this, and neither I nor my colleagues will support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, are there other members who wish to speak to the amendment to Bill 20? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked a question to the hon. member just to my right, if you'll pardon the pun. I asked it in a rather flippant way, but there was something to it. I asked: how much tax could a carbon tax tax if a carbon tax could tax tax? Of course, we're referring to the multiplier effect that this indeed does have. So it sounds like it's funny, but it is not.

I will refer to the words of a different American President. You would think that he was speaking about today. He said:

You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift. You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong. You cannot lift the wage earner up by pulling the wage payer down. You cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than your income. You cannot further the brotherhood of man by inciting class hatred. You cannot build character and courage by taking away a [person's] initiative and independence. You cannot help [people] permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves.

That's, of course, by Abraham Lincoln.

Now, did I say that this is in direct reference to this bill? I would say that it's in direct reference to this debate and a number of things that have happened in this House and beyond its walls in the last number of weeks. So I'd prefer to not be misquoted on that, Mr. Speaker.

It's been very disappointing that this government has shot down nearly every Bill 20 amendment that has come from this side of the House. It's obvious that the NDP are eager to end the discussion on the carbon tax and get out of the Chamber. Now, sadly, this is not new. We've seen this a number of times before, including as late as last week, when the government left the debate on the medical assistance in dying motion as late as they possibly could. Many believe that this was an attempt to divert attention away from Bill 20. [interjections] You may want to hear this. If it did, that would be fair to some extent since medical assistance in dying is indeed an absolutely critical issue. That being said, obviously, we're here to speak to this motion on Bill 20.

At every turn our PC caucus offered attempts to improve this bill because this bill, as it currently reads, does not serve Albertans. Amendments were brought forward that would have made the bill at least manageable for Albertans and provided much-needed accountability to the legislation, that our constituents have been asking for. For instance, the Member for Calgary-Hays moved an amendment that would have made Bill 20 a revenue-neutral carbon tax. The government said no. The Member for Calgary-North West moved an amendment that would have made the carbon tax more accountable by requiring that the minister and a committee review the impact of the tax. What do you think the government said?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodney: The Member for Calgary-West moved and passed an amendment that will increase the accountability of the government's carbon tax inspectors by requiring that they provide a receipt for any information taken. Thank you, Government, for accepting that motion. You could say yes to this motion as well.

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, the hon. third-party House leader, moved an amendment that would have ensured the strength of the tourism industry, one of our powerhouses right now, one of our few. We know that the government said no to that as well. How about the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who moved an amendment that would have protected our forestry sector? The answer again: no. The Member for Calgary-Fish Creek moved an amendment that would have provided supports to help small businesses deal with the carbon tax. The same answer. A bit of a trend, Mr. Speaker. These were very well-researched, well-intentioned motions, and I really believe that the government missed huge opportunities.

But it's not just from this side of the House that there are suggestions being made. Just in a quick conversation with a constituent just a couple of days ago – he's well studied; he's insightful. He would have loved to ask the NDP just three questions if he was given the time. Will you simply allocate the projected revenue from the carbon tax to offset the operating deficit? Will you dial back the number of individuals that are likely to receive credits or exemptions since those only undermine the energy conservation goal of the carbon tax? His third question that he would have loved to ask you is: will you minimize the use of the projected revenue for expensive green energy projects, that are not feasible without significant government money as we've observed disastrously in other countries?

I guess the question is: would the government like to talk to this individual, who happens to be a voter, and/or entertain perhaps a sober second thought on any of the thoughtful, well-researched amendments that have been put forward, considering, of course, the fact that this doesn't take effect until January 1? We know that department officials are scrambling to get the regulations done in time. What is the rush, ladies and gentlemen? Take your time and do it right. That's just a word to the wise. That's not a threat. It's encouragement.

Even though the NDP would not accept our amendments, I would challenge any government members to answer any of the questions I just asked because that member of the public, that voter, would like to hear from you. He really would.

I think it's a shame how the government has approached the discussion on Bill 20. They've tried one of two strategies. First, they've tried to frame the debate on this bill as the full climate leadership plan. Now, essentially, almost every time a government member has spoken, they've referred to the report by Dr. Leach. While there's some excellent work in the report, Mr. Speaker – that cannot be denied – it's certainly not all reflected in the bill. Bill 20 is about the carbon tax, Energy Efficiency Alberta, and mandating the CCEMC to be in complete unison with the climate leadership plan, which is one of the biggest concerns of this side of the House.

This bill doesn't make reference to their escalated coal phase-out, for one thing, something that's already revealing numerous problems – you can't deny that – that will come to the fore in the years to come. In fact, we're still waiting to hear from Terry Boston. Why don't we wait for his report? How much are coal generation companies going to have to be compensated by the government? We're told that the report will come later this year. Estimates are upwards of an additional $10 billion that will have to be provided for stranded capital and lost revenue, which will inevitably have to be covered by the taxpayer. And, as I say, that number is not going to be right. If you're saying, "Then don't say it," well, I'm saying that we need to talk about this, and we can't make decisions until vital pieces of information like this are in. It's just wise.

The bill also fails to talk about another key strategy from the climate leadership plan, that was revealed in November 2015, the oil sands emission cap. It's vital that we use technology to reduce emissions per barrel in the future. We've already reduced emissions per barrel by about a third in the last 15 years alone. That's a good-news story. Now, however, using the command-and-control system may not provide the outcomes that the province is actually looking for. As new projects come online, we'll gradually move up to this emissions level. Now, basically, it's saying to investors: "No new capital investment is required in the Alberta oil sands. Go away. We don't need you. We don't want you." I ask: is that the message that you were actually hoping to deliver? Maybe it is. I hope not.

Furthermore, it doesn't talk about the methane reduction strategy. Thus far all we've seen are its goals, a 40 per cent reduction of methane emissions below 2015 levels by 2030, and that's actually my favourite part of the plan. We know that methane emissions are 25 times worse than other emissions, and it's important that we have better reporting and reduction strategies around venting and flaring.

It's certainly something that the previous government was developing, so we're very glad that the current government is continuing with that great work. Good job. However, the Member for Edmonton-South West has been parading this part of the climate leadership plan in debate on Bill 20 as if it was somehow relevant to what we should be discussing, and it's not. Just because our Prime Minister and the President of the United States have been talking about it doesn't make it any more relevant to the 95 pages that are sitting before us today.

The second strategy that the government has employed is to frame this whole debate, both in question period and during debate on this bill, with whether or not one believes in the science of climate change. Constituents have told me that that's a dirty political trick, and they thought that the government would rise above that. I hoped that they would. All hon. members of this House know that Progressive Conservatives understand that climate change is real and that human activity has impacted how the effects have been felt globally. Some say that the difference on this side of the House is that some here might consider it real and some might consider it just a problem. In any case, Mr. Speaker, we've known this since before 2008, when we were the first jurisdiction in North America to put a price on carbon. Pricing carbon can be effective, and we're on record upholding this fact.

However, Bill 20 is not the right mix. That's the problem. It's not the right balance, and it certainly does not meet the high legislative expectations that Albertans are demanding of us. This bill is about the carbon tax, and it's about setting up the new body to spend revenue on their priorities. In short, this is a tax-and-spend bill. Hon. members, we were hoping that there would be fruitful debate on Bill 20, but all we've had are puppy-monkey-baby answers in retort to serious and thoughtful amendments that would have made a very bad bill a little bit more palatable. This bill shows, with respect – and it's just the nature of time – that the government, this government, is definitely in its infancy. Albertans don't deserve to pay for another $6 billion rookie mistake.

You know, I've been so honoured to spend 12 years in this Chamber. On the other side it's been closer to 12 months. I certainly am learning things every day; I trust that they are, too. I trust that one thing that can be learned here today is that they can indeed push the pause button. I've seen it before on many occasions. When something was exploding before our eyes, on a number of occasions we actually sent it back out to the real world and found out what was going on. I challenge each of you to do that. I challenge you to be in your constituency offices and talking to people, going to the grocery store, going to events.

Actually, I wish you well because you are going to get more than two earfuls. People are irate. In 12 years, Mr. Speaker, I've never seen them this mad – I thought it was the farmers' situation right before Christmas – and I've heard words like "arrogant" being used like they've never been used before in such a short amount of time. I encourage this government to get back on track – get back on track – do what you came here to do, the best for Albertans, but test it out there. Find out what people are really thinking. Don't pass this. You don't legislate and then do consultation later. That's not how this should work.

By the way, I mentioned $6 billion. Yes, that's a number that has been thrown out, but as I started out by saying, that's just the beginning of the multiplier effect. I shudder to think what it's going to be. I'm concerned about not just my kids and, perhaps, grandkids one day but about every one of yours and of everyone's beyond these walls. I'm concerned about all the people who built this province who are leaving and/or shutting down their business. When I get calls – and I'm guessing that you get them, too. Grown adults are crying: the family business that we took generations to build is gone.

Am I blaming the carbon tax only? Absolutely not. It has not taken effect yet; I know that. But when you add up, literally add up, all the changes that that side of the House has pushed upon Albertans – read the paper, folks. God bless you, media; sometimes you get it right. The stories are all over all of the papers. I never thought I'd live to see this day in this province, to be really honest with you, sir.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and many, many more that I wish we had time to go into and, in fact, wish we had a whole fall session to discuss, I will be absolutely voting against this bill. I am happy to vote for any motion to hoist this so that we can do the right thing, press the pause button, do the research, make the necessary adjustments. I'm happy to vote for a bill that has a lot more of these amendments that have come from this side of the House, that reflect the attitudes and actions, the very livelihoods of Albertans. Because I'll tell you that it's one thing for people to say, "I've lost my business," but I'm hearing other people say: "You know that great job that I had for 15 or 20 years? It just got extinguished."

Then it gets worse. I don't know if it's because of my previous portfolio in wellness or as chair of the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, but people are telling me: "You know what? I've turned to a little self-medication. I'm in a lot of trouble," and/or "My spouse and I are disagreeing to the point where there's domestic abuse." You talk to any policeman out there, and they will tell you everything is up, including break and enter. If you shudder and you shake your head, look at it historically. In other places where economics go downhill, so does everything else.

You're here to raise Albertans up. So are we. Let's do this together. When these folks were on this side of the House, they talked about all-party co-operation. We're offering it. Please accept it. It's in the spirit of helping Albertans.

That's all the time I have for now, sir. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions or observations for the Member for Calgary-Lougheed on the amendment under 29(2)(a)?

Hearing none, are there any individuals who would like to speak to the amendment? The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I just want to briefly respond to the hon. member opposite, who habitually prefaces disrespectful comments with the words "with respect" . . .

The Speaker: You're speaking on 29(2)(a), correct?

Mr. Mason: No.

The Speaker: Oh. Okay.

Mr. Mason: I'm speaking to the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

. . . thereby rendering it respectful, and I find that offensive, Mr. Speaker.

I did want to just correct the hon. member. There's an article here by David Mikkelsen, who writes that Abraham Lincoln did not author a list of maxims, beginning with "You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift."

One of author Ralph Keyes' axioms of misquotations is "Famous quotes need famous mouths," and the fulfillment of that need has, for the last several decades, put on the lips of Abraham Lincoln words that were not written until more than fifty years after Lincoln's death, penned by an obscure personage whose name is unknown to most living Americans.

The Rev. William John Henry Boetcker was a Presbyterian minister and notable public speaker who served as director of the pro-employer Citizens' Industrial Alliance, a position he held when, in 1916, he produced a booklet of "nuggets" from his lectures, which included maxims such as "We cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong" and "We cannot help the poor by kicking the rich." Boetcker's collection of maxims eventually crystallized as the list of ten now familiar entries . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, I would encourage you to speak to the amendment. You might have wished to speak under 29(2)(a) because everything I've heard seems to be with respect to the last comment. I urge you to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just felt that since the hon. member had brought in the formidable reputation of Abraham Lincoln to support his arguments, it would be better to show that it was simply humbug, and that's what I was trying to do. Thank you.

Mr. Rodney: That sounded like 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: I determined, in fact, hon. member, that it was not under 29(2)(a). I explicitly acknowledged that, and the member acknowledged it.

Are there any questions to the Government House Leader under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Rodney: Yeah. Absolutely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very simple. Are we here to debate whether a quotation has been misquoted by people throughout time since that time, or are we here to debate this bill and, particularly, this motion? I wonder if the hon. member is aware of so many Albertans who have spoken out on Bill 20 in their confusion and their concern. Have you heard this about the impacts to themselves and their families and their businesses? I wonder if he knows that part of the confusion is due to lumping together pieces of policy that really should not be pushed through as one piece of legislation. Does the hon. member know that we support a tax on carbon, which is the first part of the legislation? But we don't know – no one knows – enough about the second part, the opaque, mysterious, unspecified use of funds on assorted climate initiatives, because the government has not seen fit to outline to us or to Albertans exactly what those will be.

Ms Jansen: But the bill is so perfect that we don't need oversight.

Mr. Rodney: Oh. I've been told the bill is so perfect that we don't need oversight.

Back to 29(2)(a), the government – this is the Government House Leader we're speaking of – has repeatedly stated that additional funding will be provided to researchers and innovators supporting the greening of Alberta's energy economy. To paraphrase, you know, because he has a colleague in his caucus, the environment minister said: although we have a vague idea of what the government intends, we cannot be sure there will be no unintended consequences for overlapping with the existing funding initiative towards energy research and innovation. I'd be interested in an answer to that.

Now, after the summer the bill can be amended so that we can legislate on what this government has marketed this bill as, which is a piece of carbon tax legislation for emitters, by omitting the elements of the bill that have nothing to do with taxing emissions and by thinking thoughtfully about how revenues from the carbon tax can be applied to benefit Alberta and Albertans in a sustainable, revenue-neutral way. I'd be curious to hear what the hon. member has to say about that.

A year earlier the current Premier spoke to an omnibus bill that tied together three pieces of legislation – I remember it very well – just as this bill does in its three schedules. She noted that the general rule is for each issue to have a separate piece of legislation. I'd be curious to see what the House leader has to say about this from May 8, 2013: "By putting three pieces together, of course, we cut that opportunity [for the time for discussion] by two-thirds."

Now, two years ago his other colleague – I'd be curious to hear what he has to say about this – the Minister of Economic Development and Trade said in his capacity at that time as opposition critic regarding the Condominium Property Amendment Act, which was on the table at the time, that passing legislation but leaving many decisions to regulation left Albertans in the dark as to what the new rules would be. How is this different? Well, it's different in many ways. This is a more than $6 billion question, for one thing. Again, for me it's not just the dollars; it's the people and their livelihoods that I'm concerned about, and I know that others are as well.

To the Government House Leader, some of the members opposite believe that decisions would be swept into a dark corner – it sounds rather Machiavellian; it's not the way I like to think of it – where they'd be, you know, developed away from the light of day.

This member I was just speaking about stated:

Changes that impact people's homes should happen in the Legislative Assembly through, you know, our robust debate, through different points of view, and through adequate oversight.

He ended with this:

Well – you know what? – nobody said that democracy is the most expedient form of government, but we do live in a new Westminster-style democracy, and details that affect condominium owners should be discussed in the light of day, not behind closed doors in the cover of darkness. That, I think, is a very legitimate concern.

And it always is. It is with assisted dying, it is with this, and it is with everything that comes across our table.

If the minister and the House leader stand by sentiments like this, why are they prepared for this government to do the opposite on issues that are critical to Albertans who happen to use energy, which by last count was every single one of the more than 4 and a quarter million people in this province?

Albertans are asking, respectfully I might say, for a fulsome debate in which the government does not use political expedience to shy away from the hard work that is indeed required or, at the very least, Mr. Speaker, with a government that can provide the time and respect for this House to at least debate amendments brought forward from Albertans who don't necessarily share – and these are their words – the NDP world view. They don't want it just in voice mode. They really don't.

There are other members of this House, and as I've noted all of my career, not any particular party has a monopoly on good ideas. What we saw in the closing hours of debate in Committee of the Whole just a short time ago . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the amendment to Bill 20? The Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Could I ask for clarification, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Swann: Will I be able to speak to the bill after this amendment is voted up or down, or is there no further debate after this? The question comes right after? I thought that was the case. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It's my pleasure to stand to speak to the amendment to Bill 20, the final level of debate. I really, really want to support this bill. This is, to me, a sea change that has been so important in my political life. Of course, I was unceremoniously fired back in 2002, 14 years ago, because a government wouldn't listen to any criticism about the lack of action on climate change. Ralph Klein and Lorne Taylor – Lorne Taylor was apparently in the House yesterday and stayed quiet. Through the security they mentioned to me that he was there. He just was curious to see how the Legislature operates these days, but he didn't come to see me. As a public health officer representing all the medical officers in the province, we had passed a resolution saying that we have to get moving on climate change, and I was looking for a new job the next day.

It's been quite a run. I applaud the government for taking some serious steps towards this important initiative. The carbon tax is an important step towards reducing carbon use and changing behaviour, but it is one tool among many to change human activities. There is no single item in this bill that's particularly egregious, that I would say individually would prevent me from supporting the bill, but the amalgamation of a number of weak points in the bill leaves the bill open to becoming as ineffective as the previous PC attempts at a carbon intensity tax that was roughly $2.50 a tonne in Alberta and had the predictable outcome of no change. It was business as usual for the last 12 years.

Fundamentally, there has been no indication so far that the government has actually identified the benefits as well as the costs associated with this important change. The carbon tax is an important step, and it seeks to achieve the change in industry and individual activities to reduce carbon and other greenhouse gases. It seeks to reduce, in fact, through coal phase-out, human health impacts, which is a laudable, important goal that I think future generations if not this generation will applaud. But the devil is in the details. Process matters. Details matter. It's not entirely clear what the goals of this, besides carbon reduction and greenhouse gas reduction, are.

There's no indication of the impacts on electricity pricing in this province, on jobs, on small and medium-sized business. We've heard questions around the nonprofit sector and charitable foundations and what impact this is going to have. A cost-benefit analysis, even though it would be preliminary, even though it would be open to a lot of uncertainties, would give us some sense that there's been some thoughtful analysis about where we might expect to see extra costs, which we all must pay if we're going to have a change, and where we would expect to see benefits.

There's a lack of performance targets for this government to evaluate itself against. I've referred to some other legislative business goals. No amendments requiring accountability, therefore, on this sweeping bill were supported, not even a commitment to an independent review of value for money, which, yes, the Auditor General could do, but he has many things to do. This may not be a priority for the Auditor General in the next three to five years, depending on how many resources he has and where his priorities fall.

This is supposed to be an incentive program to change behaviour, but there don't appear to be incentives for two-thirds of the population. We're giving them back whatever they have to pay in extra costs. I don't understand why someone of middle income, up to $100,000 a year, should get a rebate when we're trying to incent them to actually change their behaviour, not just get more money for carrying on with the same old, same old.

Lastly, perhaps most importantly, the bill is not revenue neutral such as the B.C. model, which I have some affinity for. Instead of returning the tax expenses associated with the carbon tax, it's giving a pot of money to government to spend where and when it chooses. It's not clear to me what's in and what's out. I was unable to get any clarity around what would not be acceptable funding for this carbon levy. It provides a pot of cash to be disbursed at the government's discretion.

I must say that this is a new government. They're trying to do the right thing. I don't know about the next government, though. What are they going to do with a pot of money that's $3.6 billion in a year? We're basically trying to think not only about this government but the next government and whether there are checks and balances in place, whether there is accountability. [interjection] Yeah. That's why I'm really concerned. You guys might get this in three years, and then we're in real trouble.

The intentions are good; I have no doubt about that. But circumstances change. We've seen the government have to roll back on its commitment to a debt ceiling, for example. It's not enough to say: just trust us. There are too many variables. There are too many uncertainties at play.

I and the Liberal Party, then, have been calling for a carbon tax for years and a real carbon fee that provides incentive for reduced carbon fuel use, but putting a price on carbon is just not enough. On behalf of all Albertans we deserve a plan that includes explicit goals, performance measures, monitoring, a reporting commitment that's independent and that ensures that whether it's a New Democrat government or not, there's full accountability to Albertans, who are being asked to pay for this.

It's with a heavy heart that I must say that I cannot support the bill at this time. I can only hope that future sessions of the Legislature will be able to refine and remake significant portions of the Climate Leadership Implementation Act.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-North West.

Ms Jansen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I want to take a moment as well under 29(2)(a) to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for fighting for a carbon tax and fighting for the environment all these years. I think it's got to feel especially bittersweet to get to a point where there finally is a plan and the plan doesn't measure up. It's like waiting 20 years for Christmas, and then when it finally comes, you open the present and there's nothing inside.

An Hon. Member: Except coal.

Ms Jansen: Or coal. That's right.

I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View because I think he has shown leadership on this issue for many, many years. I think it certainly deserves our admiration.

I want to ask as well: you know, when we talked about oversight and we brought up amendments and we looked at ways – frankly, I was very happy to have a conversation about a carbon tax because I have no problem with it at all either. I was just concerned about the oversight. Well, there were a few things that I was concerned about, but I was concerned about the oversight picture and what that looked like. I thought we had a pretty good amendment there, but even if it wasn't to everyone's liking, I would like to ask the member what he envisioned in terms of oversight that might have been a better option than what we're seeing now, which is basically to trust the government; they know what they're doing. I think that's the gist of what we got.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much. Thanks for the question. I guess the bottom line is: independence, clear goals, and measurable outcomes. This is what I think all of us want in any program, whether it's a social program, an economic program, or an environmental program. Who does that best? I know of no one better than the Auditor General to look at value for money, based on criteria which, one would hope, had been created in the bill. The criteria that we want to evaluate this bill on should be explicit. Then the Auditor General can either agree or disagree with those criteria and add more, but he can at the very least monitor and evaluate the outcomes on those indicators that have been identified as part of the goals of the bill and then report independently to the Legislature.

He's an independent officer of the Legislature. I trust his team. I trust his abilities to assess value for money. It would give, I think, all Albertans some comfort in saying: "Yes. This is a reasonable plan. We are willing to pay the extra money to do this, to start shifting our culture towards a lower carbon future." We have a man or woman, depending on who the Auditor General is at the time, who's going to report on this on an annual basis to say where we could tweak the thing and make some different decisions around where the money is going, what kind of value we're getting in energy reduction, energy efficiency, conservation, education, just exactly what we are looking for.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Official Opposition leader.

Mr. Jean: On the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We're still under 29(2)(a), hon. member.

Any other members with comments under 29(2)(a) to Calgary-Mountain View?

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To be respectful, I won't be taking all of my time this morning, but I do have some things to say, and certainly there are a lot of people that want an opportunity to speak about this bill because it is something new.

I did have an opportunity to hear the PCs earlier suggest that they've been waiting for some period of time for the carbon tax, and I know that if they had another 44 years, they probably would have got it done. Certainly, that didn't happen. I don't know why, Mr. Speaker. I'm still wondering why everything else didn't happen that they were planning on getting done, and here they are today supporting the NDP on this bill and on many other previous bills on a consistent basis. It's quite shocking that they would do that at this stage, after they've lost power, but they have done it.

I know that I'm fairly excited about this carbon bill because I think it's going to hurt our economy a lot. That's why I will be opposing it and, of course, all the Wildrose members will be opposing it. There could be a possibility for a carbon tax sometime in the future, Mr. Speaker, but I can't see me ever supporting a carbon tax at all, ever, that would be out of step with the rest of the world and certainly out of step with the rest of our country and North America as a whole.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that I noticed that the PCs, you know, liken this carbon tax to Christmas and to waiting for an opportunity to sit around the tree and be with family and open up the presents. I always liked that. My kids love opening up presents at Christmastime, but opening up a coal tax that's going to take, you know, at least $1,000 out of every single family's pockets during the next year is not what I'd call a Christmas present. I'd call it more like coal in the stocking.

Unfortunately, we're not going to be able to provide coal in the stocking anymore either because, of course, the NDP has banned coal, so we're going to have to import coal from China or the United States in order to put it in our stockings. Now, that is, of course, something else, and only the NDP could come up with a plan like that, of course, with the support of the PC Party.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are three particular parts of this bill that do cause me some stress. The most important one – and that's why I put it first – is the hurt to families. Although we hear the PCs talking, you know, on the side there about families, they don't seem to care about the fact that this is actually going to pull at least $1,000 from every household in Alberta.

Now, they say that it's only going to be about $300, Mr. Speaker, and that 60 per cent of Albertans are going to get a full rebate. Well, you know, by the time you calculate that out – $3 billion, one million households in Alberta – any way you look at it, that's $3,000 per household. When you calculate it out, it's $3,000 a household. Now, we've said $1,000 because we might have large emitters and there might be some rebates, but the truth is that every single household in Alberta is going to have a thousand-dollar bill that they are going to have to pay out of their current earnings while they're being laid off, while they're receiving wage reductions of 10 or 20 or 30 or 100 per cent, as the case may be. They get an extra, added Christmas present. It's not even Christmas, but they get it from the NDP by way of a carbon tax. I don't think that's helpful.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, we're so adamant against it, because this carbon tax will make heating more expensive. Yes. Just the very fact that you heat your home in Canada, in Alberta: it's particularly cold here, and over Christmastime they are going to receive a higher heating bill. Maybe that's the Christmas present that they're talking about with this carbon tax.

Or maybe they're talking about the Christmas present of clothing. For every family member that receives clothing during Christmas, those clothes are going to be higher. Now, they say: "Oh, no. It's not going to affect that. Those are indirect costs that aren't going to happen." Well, Mr. Speaker, transportation is a big part of our economy, and when you increase prices of gasoline and diesel and all of the other things that go with transportation, that increases the cost of doing business for those companies, and they pass that on to consumers. Maybe that's the Christmas present that they were talking about. Maybe the Christmas present is that clothes are going to be more expensive, so people can't afford as many clothes.

Or maybe it's the fact, you know, that everything they buy at Christmastime is going to cost more money. That's because this is a tax that is going to hit every Albertan – every Albertan – on everything. That's what happens when you transport – 90 per cent of our goods are transported by truck in Alberta, and we manufacture very little here. That means that everything we buy, whether it's a television set, whether it's clothes, whether it's a suit, whether it's this binder – not to use props, Mr. Speaker, but I like yellow highlighters, and this yellow highlighter is going to cost a lot more money because we import them. That's what people forget. When we make our oil and gas sector and our economy less competitive, people have less money to buy things.

Another reason that I'm so upset about this, Mr. Speaker, is because it's not just hurting families, especially young families that are on fixed incomes and are living month to month. They don't know, sometimes, if they've lost their job, and they don't know if they're going to be able to afford something, even as much food. I went to the food bank here in Edmonton just a couple of weeks ago, and I had an opportunity to take some food from Edmonton's Food Bank up to Fort McMurray just late last week. The number of people that were coming to the food bank here, locally, in Edmonton and in Fort McMurray was unbelievable. Now, Fort McMurray is a bit of an anomaly right now because we do have some problems, but the number of Albertans relying on food bank resources is unbelievable. I'm worried about that. Ultimately, it comes down to families hurting, and our families are hurting. The fact that Albertans have to go to the food bank is just unacceptable.

That's because the economy has been managed badly. There's no question that we have low oil prices, Mr. Speaker – and I fully accept that – although they are a lot higher than they have been in a long time. You know, it might come as a surprise to the NDP, but Saskatchewan's oil is sold at the same price as Alberta's oil, and there are still companies, international and multinational conglomerates, that are investing in Saskatchewan. They're just not investing in Alberta because it's not competitive.

We do compete with Saskatchewan, North Dakota, Texas, Pennsylvania. When we bring in a carbon tax – and people may not realize it, and they want to do their part for the world, which I do, of course, and I think that we need to be in lockstep with the rest of the world and, certainly, in lockstep with the rest of Canada and North America – for 4 million people that makes us totally uncompetitive in the oil and gas sector, that means that nobody is going to buy our oil and gas. Nobody is going to invest in the oil and gas sector in Alberta, and our competitiveness ultimately is going to be judged on the basis of whether people want to invest in North Dakota or Saskatchewan or British Columbia or Alberta. Right now, Mr. Speaker, it's totally evaporated.

They're not investing in Alberta not because of low oil prices but because of the policy decisions made by the NDP government. Mr. Speaker, I don't think it's any surprise because everybody has agreed to that. You know, they have said that there are low oil prices, but everybody also acknowledges the fact that investment has not dried up in Saskatchewan. Husky has invested just this year in Saskatchewan in the oil and gas sector, but nobody has invested in Alberta. Very few people have, and very few people will continue to invest in Alberta as long as the policies that this government puts forward are so antipipeline, are so anti oil and gas sector, and make our resources uncompetitive.

The final part that I want to talk about, Mr. Speaker – and why I left it to last is because it's so shameful. I've been involved in the nonprofit sector for many, many years, and the very fact that we would put forward good amendments, solid amendments, amendments that make a lot of sense – one particular amendment was to remove charities from this tax to give them an opportunity to not have to worry about gas when they, for instance, provide shelter, to not have those added heating bills. When they take Meals on Wheels around to people that are needy, the most vulnerable in our communities in Calgary and Edmonton and other places, that live on the streets, those people will not be able to afford to drive as far to put those meals to those people without added expenses.

Mr. Speaker, this money does not grow on trees for charities. I know that. I've talked to a lot of charities because I'm involved in charities, and charities are having a very tough time right now. They've been having a tough time since 2008. The number of charities that have gone bankrupt in Canada since 2008 would stagger most people's reality. It's shocking. This means that these groups, that do so on a totally nonprofit basis usually, just don't have the money anymore. That's why I just can't believe that this government is being so mean-spirited as to not provide an exemption for charities and nonprofits in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we have a homeless problem in Alberta – and I applaud some of the different innovative solutions that have come forward from different communities in Alberta – but whether it be homeless shelters or women's shelters, these groups need special attention. This carbon tax, that's bringing in a tax on everything for everybody, is just simply not helping those people, the most vulnerable, and the people that help those people.

Ultimately, there's only one taxpayer. Even though this $3 billion carbon tax, that is taking money out of our economy, is going into the coffers of the NDP, the truth is that they're not going to efficiently get that back to the people, and they're going to take a cut out of it. That's right. Every piece of money, every bit of money that comes in the government here takes a piece of to administer it, and usually governments don't do that very effectively or efficiently.

We would suggest leaving more money in people's pockets, making sure that some of these exemptions do actually happen, whether they be for charities and nonprofits or even schools, Mr. Speaker. Like, why are we taxing schools? Why are we adding taxes to schools? It does not make sense. We think there should be an exemption, obviously, for nonprofits, for charities, for schools, for hospitals, for municipal buildings, for municipalities, for all of these things because they're just taking the money from one side and putting it to another in their own slush fund, and we don't think that's helpful.

Now, in the interest of time and, Mr. Speaker, to show respect to all the other people that are here today, I just want to say that we will be voting against this carbon tax. We don't think it's helpful for Albertans. We think it's going to be very, very tough for charities and for the not-for-profit sector, especially now that the economy is so bad. We're just saying to this government right now: please, this is not the time. There's a time for everything, every season, but this is not the time to punish Alberta families with higher taxes that are ultimately going to take money out of our pockets and make life much more expensive and less easy to afford than it has been.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a)?

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just curious, and I would like to ask the Leader of the Official Opposition: when he said that the bill was mean-spirited and unhelpful, on a sliding scale is it mean-spirited and unhelpful like not having any of your MLAs walk in a pride parade is mean-spirited and unhelpful? Or is it mean-spirited and unhelpful to take off your Wildrose pride T-shirt because it affects your brand? Just maybe you could clarify for us.

Mr. Jean: You know, Mr. Speaker, I really appreciate the leadership candidate for the PCs. If I had a PC membership, I would vote for her, and I encourage all Conservatives to vote for her because then, obviously, they'll only have one choice of a conservative party in Alberta.

11:00

What I'd like to talk about is the mean-spiritedness during this time – and that's what I was referring to – when people are out of work. I don't know, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure you're aware that there are over 100,000 people in the oil and gas sector that are out of work. You probably know that since the NDP formed government a year ago, 80,000 Albertans have lost their jobs. That's what I call mean-spirited, when people are losing their jobs by the thousands. In March 82 jobs every working hour were lost; 82 Albertans lost their jobs. What is their solution? Let's give a $3 billion carbon tax to Albertans. That's not a solution; that's mean-spirited.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the amendment to Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act. I want the House to know that I believe in a carbon tax. I believe climate change is real, it's human caused, and Alberta should take leadership on this file. I support a carbon tax, but I cannot support this carbon tax.

This carbon tax should be revenue neutral. It's been very clearly shown that the impact of a carbon tax can be best offset not through big rebates for two-thirds of Albertans but through cuts to personal and corporate income taxes so that Albertans can keep more of their hard-earned money, so we can create an attractive investment climate for our province. As other successful provinces have done with their carbon tax, like our friends in British Columbia, we ought to make this carbon tax revenue neutral.

In doing that, Alberta can and must lead on innovation, innovation to abate the impacts of climate change. We have in this province some of the best engineers, some of the best scientists, some of the best academics, some of the best finance people of anywhere in the world. What we have more than anywhere else in this world, anywhere else in the country, is the entrepreneurial spirit that ties all that together. In this province we can address climate change by creating companies and technologies that we can sell to the rest of the world to help the world mitigate and deal with climate change. In so doing, we will diversify our economy and we will enable the continued success of our core industry in oil and gas. That is what's possible from a properly structured carbon tax.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, that's not what this is. We on this side of the House, myself included, certainly tried to bring amendments to make this bill better. I believe in the Alberta Party that our job is not just to tear down the government. Our job here in opposition is not just to oppose for opposition's sake. Our job is to propose ideas, and we have proposed ideas. I brought amendments to gradually phase in revenue neutrality, to allow the government some time to transition and to create some technologies, but they rejected that amendment. I brought in an amendment to exempt carbon-neutral or carbon-negative companies from the carbon tax, but that, too, was defeated. I supported amendments from this side of the House, several different amendments, to add performance measures to the carbon tax bill so that Albertans know whether or not it's being successful, to support a formal review after a year to ensure that we're not ending up with unintended consequences from the carbon tax bill. But, again, those were all rejected.

There are too many gaps in this bill, Mr. Speaker. Albertans don't know what the $645 million allocated to Energy Efficiency Alberta over the next five years will be spent on. Is it going to be home efficiency tax credits? Is it going to be low-emission vehicle credits? Is it going to be geothermal heating? Is it going to be transit passes? We don't know. Is it going to be none of those things? We have no idea. It's very difficult, impossible frankly, to support a bill that I want to support in principle without that information. There are too many gaps.

What about the $3.4 billion allocated over the next five years to, quote, unquote, other initiatives? That's a blank cheque, Mr. Speaker. What is that money going to be used for when you compare it to the $3.4 billion that's going to be spent to build Health infrastructure over the next five years, where we know there are 50 projects and we know where they're going to be built and we know when they're going to be built? There's total transparency. This carbon bill is a blank slate. What initiatives is this government not going to fund with $3.4 billion? They couldn't even tell us what they're not going to fund. That's disappointing and unacceptable from a government that claims to be ready to govern.

It is important to have a plan. Any opposition party – any opposition party – that aspires to govern, any party that expects credibility from Albertans ought to tell Albertans what their plan is. I challenge the Official Opposition: what would you do? If you were government tomorrow, what is your plan to address climate change? What would you do? They've been silent on that. We know what they're against. We have no idea what they're for.

The Alberta Party presented a very clear climate plan, Alberta's Contribution, because I believe Alberta has a contribution to make in addressing climate change. We can reduce our own carbon emissions. We must reduce our own carbon emissions. But just reducing Alberta's carbon emissions does not solve global climate change. Alberta's best contribution to global climate change abatement is Alberta ingenuity, Alberta entrepreneurs, Alberta technologies to help the rest of the world address climate change. That's what's possible in Alberta. If we do it right, if we allow the market forces to operate, we can succeed. That will diversify our economy, create great Alberta jobs, support our existing energy industry, get pipelines built. That's what's possible from a proper carbon tax.

Now, I'm not cheering against this government. I don't want the NDP to fail, because if this government fails, Alberta fails. I wonder about other opposition parties, whether they in fact want this government to fail. I think they do. I don't. I want you to be successful because if you're successful, it's good for Alberta. Unfortunately, we just can't know. We don't know enough from this carbon tax, whether or not you're going to do that.

There are simply too many questions, Mr. Speaker, with this carbon tax. I support a carbon tax, but I cannot support this carbon tax.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions for the Member for Calgary-Elbow under 29(2)(a)?

The Government House Leader. Are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Mason: No, Mr. Speaker. I would like to request unanimous consent of the House to set the bells on the hoist amendment at one minute.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I have one further request of the House. I'm requesting unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday was a bit of a significant day in Alberta in that at our Provincial Operations Centre, up in northwest Edmonton, we officially dropped the operations level from the highest level of 4 to 3. This by no means, of course, means that the work is over or that in fact the work in any way is any less urgent, but what it does mean is that as a province we are moving out of the emergency response phase of the Fort McMurray fire.

Over the last month or so, Mr. Speaker, many people have spoken about the extraordinary response of government to the horrible disaster that we saw in Fort McMurray. While there are many people to thank – and there will be many thanks over the course of the next few months, and indeed we all know that we owe a tremendous gratitude to the first responders who live and work in Fort McMurray – I'd like to take this opportunity today, as we are moving from that level 4 to that level 3, to actually also thank and make special note of some key people who have led the provincial government's response to this emergency in a way that has earned our province, I believe, international recognition for the good work that has been achieved.

It's a tremendous honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of very special people. Alberta is blessed with an extraordinary public service, women and men who have devoted their careers to making Alberta a better province. We ask a great deal of them, and they deliver even more in return. This is never truer than when our province is facing the most dire of circumstances.

Today we are privileged to be joined by five public servants who have been key to organizing the province's response to the wildfires in Fort McMurray. Experts in their fields, they went above and beyond the call of duty. Let me begin. Bruce Mayer is the assistant deputy minister in the Department of Agriculture and Forestry, who was instrumental in co-ordinating the government's firefighting efforts. This is never an easy job, and during a hot and dry spring like we've had, it's a Herculean effort. Every day there are new wildfire starts, and every day Bruce's team meets them head-on.

One member of his team is Chad Morrison, the senior manager of wildfire prevention and someone who is known now to many Albertans simply as Chad the Fire Guy. Chad has done an extraordinary job briefing me, briefing my cabinet, and briefing members of the media and through them hundreds of thousands of Albertans about wildfire behaviour, fire weather, and how you go about fighting a fire that seems impossible to fight, that has become a beast. It's been a first-class education.

We also have with us today Scott Long, the executive director of provincial operations at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Many of you who have seen the press conferences that were held by our government over the course of the fire wouldn't know that Scott Long is the executive director of provincial operations at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency except that every time he stood up to answer a question, he would say: Scott Long, executive director, provincial operations at the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Every single time. As well, with him is his boss, Shane Schreiber, the managing director of the Alberta Emergency Management Agency. Shane briefed our cabinet and our wildfire task force every morning for the last several weeks and has co-ordinated and been a constant source of information for me personally.

Together Scott and Shane co-ordinate a team of people that springs into action when disaster strikes. They partner with all government departments, regional or municipal emergency operations, other partners such as the RCMP, the Canadian armed forces, and the Red Cross. They kept the government and the opposition fully briefed on events that were moving at incredible speed. There wasn't a single question you could ask them about what was going on in Fort McMurray that they didn't know the answer to.

Finally, Sonya Perkins, director of emergency social services. In a devastating crisis people are vulnerable, and they have unique and special needs as they cope with circumstances beyond their control. Sonya and her team stepped up, providing the kind of care and support that Albertans deserve from their government when they need it most.

Thank you. Bruce, Chad, Scott, Shane, and Sonya are here, and I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Guests, it's really a privilege to see TV stars in our House and particularly TV stars who are heroes. On behalf of all of the Assembly – I think they would have stood for another 10 minutes had I let them – thank you very much.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 20

Climate Leadership Implementation Act

The Speaker: Are there any other individuals who wish to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy today to rise to speak to this amendment on Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, a.k.a. the carbon tax. No one can or should dispute the fact that climate change is a serious issue about which we should all be concerned, and this concern should result in responsible government action. Now, this is the tricky part, where many of us in the House have differing opinions.

The government will tell us that Bill 20 is a be-all and end-all in terms of addressing climate change in Alberta. They will say that they must implement every piece of this bill as it is written because the previous government simply sat on their hands and did nothing. I'll come back to that in a minute.

As I was reading through this bill, I looked for ways to offer constructive feedback based on my personal and professional background and, most importantly, what I've been hearing from my constituents, and there was one section which stuck out to me right away. On page 93 this bill amends the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. This act, of course, governs the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation, or the CCEMC.

This fund was created to serve as a key part of Alberta's climate change strategy, with the money being directed towards a stronger and more diverse lower carbon economy. I noted that this government must be a fan of the fund because they are including it as a key piece of the puzzle within their climate change strategy. Now, you might ask: was this fund created after May 2015? It must be, right? If not, then the tales of the previous government sitting on their hands and doing nothing about climate change must be false.

Well, if you take a quick peek at the CCEMC website, you will note in their About section the following:

In April 2007, Alberta became the first jurisdiction in North America to pass climate change legislation requiring large emitters to reduce greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions. Two years later the Climate Change and Emissions Management Corporation (CCEMC) was created as a key part of Alberta's Climate Change Strategy and movement toward a stronger and more diverse lower-carbon economy.

The CCEMC is an independent organization that supports and builds on the strategic direction established by the province.

Well, Mr. Speaker, therein lies some pretty good work done while the government was apparently sitting on its hands doing nothing.

Now back to the CCEMC as it is amended within Bill 20. The amendments to this piece of legislation ensure that the spending parameters of the fund align with programming in the climate leadership plan. These new parameters now include education and outreach, new partnerships, and administrative costs associated with the implementation of the climate leadership plan. Here is where I begin to have some grave concerns. I have concerns that monies paid and directed into the fund by industry will be redirected towards outreach, which by any other name might be called PR or maybe even spin. Is that where your doctors of climate change science will reside given that recently a noted Alberta political scientist stated – and I'm paraphrasing – that the climate leadership plan has been a triumph of PR but certainly gives us no confidence in any measured success with respect to greenhouse gas reductions?

I am concerned that these monies will be used to sell this government's plan to Albertans instead of being directed towards initiatives which actually reduce our emissions. It seems clear that it is okay to use the science of stone cold facts to justify this legislation, but there has been little appetite to use science in the clear rejection of many amendments directed at true accountability in the verification of the outcomes promised. Accountability should be something that this Assembly and all Albertans come to expect from us, from this Legislature and from this government, but alas this is not the case with the rejection of so many well-reasoned and legislation-improving amendments from the PC caucus and others on this side of the House.

Next, I am concerned that the administrative costs associated with the implementation of the climate leadership plan will also be paid for by the CCEMC fund. This essentially means that industry will be funding the government's operations because they could not or would not find the money to do so within the department of environment. If this plan is so important, I would think that this government could find the money, albeit from within the buckets of red ink they've planned to spend on the shoulders of Albertans, within the department's existing budget to pay these costs.

Additionally, new partnerships are listed as a funding priority here. What does that really mean? What kind of partnerships, with whom, and with what goals in mind? If you're going to spend money, you better have measurable outcomes in mind and measure them before you get there.

Now, this fund will provide $175 million to other investments under the climate leadership plan, but there are no grants to the corporation. This begs the question: will the fund still have the ability to provide grants to initiatives that the corporation suggests and that have been vaguely referenced in the legislation despite our attempts to tighten some of those clauses up, or will all of the decisions now go through Energy Efficiency Alberta or the climate change office? If the control over how grants and monies are distributed is taken away from the CCEMC, Mr. Speaker, that would be a tragic mistake.

This fund has been able to partner with a variety of different stakeholders, and through this work they have received over a 5 to 1 return on investment, with 425 and a half million dollars being turned into a $2.2 billion total value in projects. The work done will result in an estimated 11.8 megatonnes of GHG reductions by 2020. In six years of operation there were 10 rounds of funding, which have resulted in 13 projects funded to completion, 16 biological projects, one biological program, three adaptation projects, and 109 clean technology projects amongst a variety of other successes.

It would seem that the fund is quite effective and efficient in how they operate already, which is why I do not understand why this government seems intent on giving a great deal of control over this independent organization to the minister of environment. Mr. Speaker, the minister's control of these mechanisms and independent initiatives, quite frankly, frightens me. I would suggest that the accountability and independence to do the right thing in working with industry and on behalf of Albertans may well be lost. Nothing against our current minister, as this will be the case on an ongoing basis, subject to the perhaps misguided terms of this legislation giving inordinate latitude without accountability to the seat occupied by just one individual.

Much of the success within this fund has been through industry-based partnerships, which leads me to my next point. When you phase out an industry, you phase out the research that goes with it. As this government has waged a war on coal, the investment and research dollars in this area have and will continue to dry up. Why would someone continue to invest in a moribund industry or, sadly, in the towns and regions where that industry has been a driving economic engine? Why would anyone or any corporation in their right mind want to spend money on coal technology when they know that even if they develop the most innovative and groundbreaking technology the industry has seen on this planet to date, they would still be phased out?

If the government were to allow the six newer plants to operate to 2050 and beyond, as allowed and approved by federal legislation, the government could then partner with industry. Interesting proposition. They could give them an emissions target and a timeline and tell them that if they do not meet this ambitious target within the specified time frame, they would have to cease operations. I think it's a challenge Albertans are up to. This gives industry the chance to innovate because it gives them a reason to.

Right now, with this plan and this bill, there is no reason to innovate in the coal industry or perhaps in any other hydrocarbon-based industry as nobody really knows who or what sector of the industry might be targeted next. For example, will we one day live within the Kathleen Wynne view of natural gas in this province? There are lobbying forces and manifestos from this government's friends across the country that would make it so.

Did this government ever think that if we could develop world-class, industry-leading clean-coal technologies, we could then export this technology and tie it to high-quality Alberta coal export contracts to meet that demand around the world? Like it or not, 40 per cent of the world's electricity comes from coal. Developing countries continue to use coal because it is cheap and it is reliable. Four hundred million people in India do not currently have electricity, and they aren't building windmills today, that I know of, to meet that demand. Two thousand new coal plants are planned to be built around the world, and we have now said that we will do nothing in the way of technology and innovation to help the global community protect that global environment. Is that responsible action, as we also kill Alberta jobs and communities, Mr. Speaker?

In recent conversation with the Chinese consul general it is clear that China could be a strategic partner in such an inspired endeavour. Is this not what economic diversification and valuing our scarce natural resources should look like, those partnerships that you reference so clearly in your legislation? If we were able to export this technology around the world, it would have a real, significant, and measurable impact on greenhouse gas emissions on a global scale. A novel idea, indeed. I hope that is undoubtedly the real target here, unless I am seriously confused by the climate leadership plan. Developing, patenting, and exporting technology fits really well into a lower carbon, knowledge-based economy, things this government claims to be a champion of.

Mr. Speaker, I guess that in closing, I would just like to ask that this government look at the bigger picture, respect our rich natural resources, balance environmental stewardship, give Albertans what they desire – a vibrant, healthy, and sustainable economy – and come to the table with industry to work towards promoting Alberta as a hub of balanced and responsible industrial innovation, which will absolutely align with what, I am confident, reflects Albertans' desire for impactful leadership on a global scale.

I beg of this government, Mr. Speaker, please, please do what I am hearing Albertans say. Yes, protect the environment, but let's be balanced and responsible by also fiercely defending and rebuilding the Alberta advantage, which past governments, PC governments, have so often been blamed for creating. Was it really such a bad thing? Let's allow Albertans the stone cold facts that they need in the years ahead to judge the outcomes of your unamended climate leadership plan – oh, sorry; one amendment; thank you to the Member for Calgary-West – as it takes hold with both the intended and, sadly, with the many unintended consequences. You owe that to Albertans, and our future depends on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek?

Seeing none, the hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to be able to rise and speak to some extent on this bill. I was here until early last night, or, I guess, early this morning, but I didn't get the opportunity to speak to it then. I had a little bit more to say than what I normally get to say in answer to questions, in 35 seconds. So it is a pleasure for me to be able to take, my House leader tells me, roughly 10 minutes to speak to this.

I want to say that I'm extremely proud of this piece of legislation and extremely proud of this government's climate leadership plan. Action by this government with respect to climate change is one that is long, long, long overdue in this province. It is an action that we committed to Albertans we would take in the last election.

Albertans told us in the last election that they were worried about climate change, that they were worried about the state of the environment, that they were worried about Alberta's reputation internationally and nationally, and that they were worried about their future as a result. At that time we said: "We will take action on climate change. We will develop a balanced plan. We will consult with Albertans. We will go on the basis of the best evidence, and we will have that work done to present that plan to the climate change leadership conference in Paris in November." And, Mr. Speaker, we delivered.

This spring, as a result, we are now in a position of being able to bring in the enabling legislation for large parts of our climate change plan, but let me just talk a little bit about that plan. As much as we've heard the opposition here debating whether climate change is real or whether, in fact, it's just a product of I believe it was unicorn farts at one point, as one person suggested, the fact of the matter is that climate change is real, and we need to act. Leaders around the world understand that we need to act. So that's why I'm so pleased that already our climate change leadership plan has received the endorsement from a number of key people, not only in Alberta, not only even in Canada, Mr. Speaker, but from around the world.

I was very pleased to meet yesterday with the governor of the Bank of England, who indicated that he was pleased that Alberta was taking action and showing leadership on our climate change plan. As many members have already heard us talk about, Michael Bloomberg, the former mayor of the city of New York and also a chair of an international committee which is dealing with the financial effects of climate change world-wide, also said that Alberta was not only introducing a good leadership plan but that, in fact, we were leading the way with this climate leadership plan.

Experts on this issue from around the globe who are worried about the state of climate change believe that by Alberta's action to put a price on carbon across the economy as also a nonrenewable energy leader, a province which remains committed to promoting sustainable growth of our nonrenewable energy product, we have shown a level of leadership that has not been seen in many places across the world. So we should be proud. Not only should we be proud, but what it does is that it is fundamental to repositioning our nonrenewable energy sector, our oil and gas sector, as a progressive, sustainable producer world-wide. It allows us now, Mr. Speaker, to have conversations with people we were not ever able to get in the room with. It allows us to have conversations with allies across this country and across the world, that weren't prepared to listen to us before, because now we are acting.

We are working, in fact, very collaboratively with industry to ensure that not only will we, when this plan is fully enforced, be continuing to export our nonrenewable energy product to other jurisdictions and to a greater diversity of markets but that we will also export a level of technological expertise that is driven by producing barrels of oil with less and less carbon in each barrel. We will lead the way in reducing the carbon in each barrel because we have a plan to work with industry in a co-ordinated, well-funded fashion. This will actually help transition our economy to not only being a leader in producing that product but also in how to produce that product and in the technology associated with producing that product in a more environmentally sustainable and responsible way. So I'm very proud of being able to do that and having been able to work with the energy industry on that part of our climate change leadership plan, Mr. Speaker.

In addition, what we are also doing is that we are moving towards incenting fundamental behaviour changes throughout our society because Albertans know that we need to take action on this issue. They know that we cannot continue to do things exactly the way they were done in the past, as much as the opposition would like that to be the case, but that we need to reposition ourselves for the future responsibly and reduce the degree to which we create emissions across our province.

So where we once were a province – in fact, we were the only province in the country – without a co-ordinated, thoughtful, well-researched, well-funded energy efficiency plan, we will now, through this plan and through this act, move into the forefront in this country, Mr. Speaker, with a robust, thoughtful, well-researched, well-funded energy efficiency strategy that will support small business, charities, low-income families, school boards, hospitals, and businesses as we all work together intelligently, thoughtfully, on the basis of the best evidence towards reducing our emissions as a province, as a community, as an economy, Mr. Speaker.

What we also have been able to do, notwithstanding the comments of those opposite, is that we have been able to develop a plan where we will be able to slowly phase out of coal, Mr. Speaker, and that is something that is long overdue in this province. We produce more emissions from coal in Alberta than the rest of the country combined. The fact of the matter is that the science is unequivocal. It is not good for our health. We need to find a way to phase out of that particular way of producing energy, and that will produce significant reductions in emissions in this province. To be clear, we are only doing that which is going on around the world. It is, again, time for us to understand that we need to take action, that we need to show leadership, that we need to be bold, that we cannot simply look backwards, cross our fingers, close our eyes, and hope that the world doesn't change around us. That is not leadership, that is not standing up for Albertans, and that is not giving them the kind of government that they voted for and have been desperate to have for many, many years.

One thing that we haven't spoken a lot about, of course, is our methane reduction program, another element of our climate leadership plan. Our methane reduction program, which I'm sure members opposite will recall, formed the basis of the conversation between Prime Minister Trudeau and President Barack Obama when they met a couple of months ago. They talked about a methane plan that will be introduced and adopted continentally based on the model developed here in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. In fact, you know, a couple of weeks ago – maybe it was a month or two or three weeks ago; I can't remember – when I visited Washington, I heard from the President's special adviser on the environment and I heard from high-level government officials across Washington that they understood that that methane reduction program was Alberta's methane reduction program. In fact, they are moving forward in terms of a significant public policy move based on the work of the people of this province as a result of the broad, thoughtful, intelligent consultations led, of course, by the minister of environment and also by Dr. Andrew Leach and his fabulous panel, who did so much work for us last summer.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is so much in this plan to be proud of. There is so much in this plan that will ensure fairness, that will ensure low-income and middle-income families are protected as we move towards a transition, that will ensure a responsible, clear, economically sustainable path to economic diversification and energy diversification and, at the same time, buy that ever so important social licence for our nonrenewable sector to diversify our markets. All of that is wrapped up in this plan. It is one of the most ambitious policy agenda items of any government in this country for decades, and I'm so proud that our government has been able to bring it in for a partial landing today, a mere 12 months and two weeks into our mandate. We have more to come, but let me just say on behalf of our whole caucus that we are very, very proud to be voting on this bill today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Premier under 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There's just one comment I have. Again, there's no disputing that climate change is a serious issue, but what I wonder is this. If we're demonizing hydrocarbon here in Alberta, what makes it okay to ship that product around the world and to the Third World so that they can take that demonized product and use it freely?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe that we are demonizing any product. We're simply acting responsibly. As I've said before, we're working very closely with many leaders in the nonrenewable energy sector, and we'll continue to do so.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, October 31, 2016

Prayers

The Speaker: Let us reflect and pray each in our own way. As we commence proceedings today in this Assembly, let us contemplate about our opportunity to once again work together. Let us find a way in which our collective efforts will make our province and our country better. Allow us to find hope, not fear; to co-operate, not compete; to be inclusive, not exclusive.

Hon. members, as is our custom, we pay tribute on our first day to members and former members of this Assembly who have passed away since we last met. As we reflect on these former members, let us keep in mind the family members who shared the burdens of public life.

Mr. Douglas Clifford Cherry
September 22, 1932, to June 16, 2016

The Speaker: Mr. Doug Cherry served the Legislative Assembly of Alberta as the Member for Lloydminster for two terms from May 8, 1986, until June 14, 1993. Mr. Cherry served in the Canadian Army from 1949 until 1961 and saw active service in the Korean War. In 1961 he began farming in the Durness district, Lloydminster. His community involvement included service on the Lloydminster Co-op, president of the Lloydminster Music Festival, councillor for the city of Vermilion River, and director of rural electrification. His service in this Assembly contributed to the establishment of the Lakeland College campus and the Husky Lloydminster upgrader. He was a recipient of the medals of honour for his military service and the Alberta centennial medal in 2005.

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC
July 20, 1956, to October 13, 2016

The Speaker: Mr. Prentice served as Alberta's 16th Premier, from September 15, 2014, to May 24, 2015. First elected in a by-election on October 27, 2014, he served the constituents of Calgary-Foothills until May 4, 2015. During his term in office he also held the portfolios of Minister of Aboriginal Relations and Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Prior to his service in our Assembly Mr. Prentice served as the Member of Parliament for Calgary Centre-North from 2004 to 2010. He held the important portfolios of Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 2006 to 2007; Minister of Industry, 2007 to 2008; and Minister of Environment, 2008 to 2010.

Mr. Prentice had a long-standing dedication to resolving indigenous issues. As a lawyer he had specialized in property rights and in First Nations land claims, and for a number of years he served as commissioner and later co-chair of the Indian Claims Commission of Canada.

His expertise and his service were recognized widely. He received the Alberta centennial medal in 2005 and the Queen Elizabeth II Diamond Jubilee medal in 2012. In 2013 he was the recipient of the honorary doctor of laws from the University of Alberta. Most recently he was a global fellow at the Canada Institute of the Woodrow Wilson Center in Washington, DC.

Out of respect for the wishes of the family and based on discussions with the caucuses, I expect further opportunities for tributes in the Chamber in the coming days for Mr. Prentice.

Mr. Ralph Andrew Jespersen
May 9, 1925, to October 17, 2016

The Speaker: Mr. Ralph Jespersen was elected to the Legislative Assembly as the Member for Stony Plain on May 23, 1967, and served until August 29, 1971. Mr. Jespersen followed in his father's footsteps, farming the dairy and grain farm established by the family in 1903. During his tenure he used his experience to strengthen relationships between the agricultural industry and the government. After his service as a member he represented Alberta's agricultural interests provincially, nationally, and internationally through tenures as president of Unifarm, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the Dairy Bureau of Canada. Over the years Mr. Jespersen received many honours and awards. In 2012 he was presented the Governor General's caring Canadian award for his long-standing contributions to his community.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember Mr. Cherry, Mr. Prentice, and Mr. Jespersen as you may have known them.

Hon. Members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Mr. Joel Crichton, and I would invite all to participate in the language of their choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, with our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of the families who shared the burdens of public office and public service. Today I would like to welcome members of the Cherry and Jespersen families who are present in the Speaker's gallery. Please rise as I call your name, and remain standing until all have been introduced. First of all, from the Cherry family: Brenda Cherry, daughter of Doug Cherry; Adam Brown, grandson of Mr. Cherry; Paul Natland, grandson of Mr. Cherry. From the Jespersen family: Bernice Jespersen, wife of Ralph Jespersen; Darcy Torhjelm, son-in-law of Mr. Jespersen; Delnita Torhjelm, daughter of Mr. Jespersen; Debi Mills, daughter of Mr. Jespersen. Thank you for being with us today and for the public service you have provided.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of individuals from across Alberta whose actions during and after the Wood Buffalo wildfire last spring demonstrated great courage and compassion. They represent a broad spectrum of organizations and municipalities from across this province: the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, Red Cross, our partners in industry, municipalities, and others. The actions of these individuals inspired a province and gave residents hope, and many more continue to work tirelessly in the long-term recovery of this community.

From the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo we have Fire Chief Darby Allen and the director of emergency management, Bob Couture. From the provincial wildfire team we have Bernie Schmitte, forest area manager, Fort McMurray forest area; Jennifer Zentner, wildlife operations manager, Fort McMurray forest area; Chad Morrison, wildfire compliance and investigations manager; and Bruce Mayer, assistant deputy minister, forestry division, Alberta Agriculture and Forestry. From the Alberta Emergency Management Agency we have Shane Schreiber, managing director, and Scott Lang, executive director of the Provincial Operations Centre, and from provincial emergency services we have Sonya Perkins, director of the provincial emergency social services team, and Eric Winterburn, deputy director of the provincial emergency social services team.

From the RCMP we have Deputy Commissioner Marianne Ryan. From Alberta sheriffs we have Sheriff Alex Moring. From Alberta Health we have Dr. Karen Grimsrud, Alberta's chief medical officer of health. From Alberta Health Services, Verna Yiu, president and CEO, and David Matear, senior operating director, area 10 and AHS incident commander for the Fort McMurray fire response. From the Canadian Red Cross, Jennifer McManus, vice-president, Red Cross Alberta, and Melanie Soler, vice-president, disaster management.

Mr. Speaker, these individuals are just a few of the thousands of Albertans who came to the aid of the region of Wood Buffalo and its residents, some risking their personal safety and having suffered loss themselves. While they may not seek recognition, today we say thank you on behalf of a grateful province. We are honoured by their presence here today.

I ask my guests to now please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to the Assembly today guests visiting from Forest Heights elementary school, located in my riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar. They are here to attend School at the Legislature this week, and they are accompanied by their teachers, Frau Marion Fritz and Mr. Dean Jaster, and are chaperoned by Mrs. Beverley Fenton, who is also known as Grannie to the students. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some social studies students from NorQuest College and their professor, Ms Diane van der Gucht. These students are exploring what it means to be an Albertan as well as perspectives of Canadian national identity and after their recent tour of the Alberta Legislature were so inspired that they asked to return to attend the opening session of the fall sitting. I ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other guests? The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three men from Edmonton, who are in your gallery today, whose actions during the evacuation of Wood Buffalo last spring demonstrated tremendous courage and compassion for their fellow Albertans. Jeff Fafard, Alex Frost, and Kavin Ban took it upon themselves to co-ordinate the collection of fuel, food, and water to displaced residents and then drove through the night delivering supplies to evacuee centres on the way to Fort McMurray. Going home, they were caught in the long line of traffic themselves, so they continued to provide supplies to others waiting on the highway. The actions of these three men ensured many families and individuals received the supplies they needed and lifted the spirits of so many during a tremendously stressful time.

Mr. Speaker, these men are just three of more than 200 people who were nominated as heroes of the wildfire, an online program that encourages Albertans to recognize others who have gone above and beyond to support the people who were affected by the Wood Buffalo wildfire. Today we say thank you on behalf of a grateful province, and I ask Mr. Fafard, Mr. Frost, and Mr. Ban to receive the traditional warm welcome and thanks of this Assembly. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I'm advised that there is another guest to introduce. The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an old friend of mine. Jason Kenney was a Member of Parliament for 18 years. During several of those years he held senior portfolios in the federal government. Many of those years he served as my MP, and for some of those years I served as a city councillor at the same time he was my MP. He is currently a leadership contestant for the PC Party, and I would ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation.

Responders Way

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to pay tribute to the first responders who worked during the Fort McMurray fires for their outstanding work battling the fire and keeping families safe. These hard-working people emerged as heroes for tens of thousands of Albertans who were forced to flee their homes in May and who are now rebuilding their lives and their homes. First responders during this devastating event proved their sense of duty and their desire to help others. They put themselves between danger and Albertans. They successfully helped families to escape and worked tirelessly to put out the fire.

While the fire destroyed 2,400 homes and businesses, firefighters saved about 25,000 buildings, Mr. Speaker, roughly 85 to 90 per cent of the city. All of the critical public infrastructure in Fort McMurray was protected, and the evacuation of 80,000 people was completed successfully, with one terrible vehicle collision with two fatalities. It's difficult to thank these courageous people enough.

Over the last seven months the outpouring of support from Albertans and Canadians has been tremendous and reveals the respect and admiration for the responders who dedicated their time and efforts to saving Fort McMurray. During the fire Albertans stepped up and demonstrated the strength and resolve that always gets us through difficult times together. Now as Albertans we are coming together to recognize and thank the first responders in a more permanent and visible way. On June 1, the first day of re-entry, firefighters used cranes to raise the Canadian flag above the King Street overpass in an arch of welcome. The bridge was the unofficial welcome home point as residents returned to their city and their homes, preparing to rebuild their lives and their community.

Last week our government announced it is naming the overpass Responders Way. Our commitment reflects the impact made by the many responders who willingly assisted under extremely challenging circumstances.

I wish to thank the mayor of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, Melissa Blake, and her council for their support of this initiative, and I want to recognize Councillor Keith McGrath for contacting the province and asking to have this bridge named.

Finally, to the first responders, on behalf of all Albertans we hope this gesture is accepted as a small but heartfelt token of gratitude.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have an opportunity to honour the heroes of the Fort McMurray fires. Through their service and sacrifice they've given so much to our community, and it is an honour to rise today and thank them for their tremendous effort.

I know these brave souls don't like being called heroes. They'll tell you that they're just doing their job. To run into a burning city when everyone is running out is incredulous to most people. To fight to save their neighbour's home even while their own was ablaze, they'll say that they were just doing their job. To live for days with almost no sleep, no food, and not enough air tanks to go around and a water supply that was dwindling, it was simply adapting to the job at hand, to keep fighting even when the smoke was so thick, visibility was impaired, and breathing was difficult. If people might imagine sitting around a campfire and the wind shifts and the smoke heads to you in your chair, that's what it was like 24 hours a day, seven days a week for these men and women. To improvise and organize the largest evacuation in our province's history is phenomenal.

Condolences to our friends who did lose family members during the evacuation, the Ryan and Hodgson families.

The main communications tower for the fire department was lost on the first day. For emergency services to co-ordinate so many crews throughout that community was a feat unto itself. These outstanding men and women are heroes.

On the day of re-entry our first responders welcomed home the people of Fort McMurray by flying a flag on top of our overpass at the entrance to the city. After being driven from their homes, our people returned to a sight of reassurance and endurance, and that is why this bridge has been rightly renamed Responders Way, and, to you, thank you so much for that. While there is no way the people of Alberta could ever thank you enough for your dedication and steadfast commitment to Fort McMurray, we hope that they will accept this symbol of our appreciation.

Finally, I do wish to thank those that volunteered in supporting our community and the emergency responders: the people who did drive up that highway to provide that gasoline and food to those that were stranded, the homeless guy that walked over to Mac Island, where emergency crews were staged, and started cooking what little food was available. That guy is a hero, too. To the folks that did drive into town, past every security block somehow, and then brought in water, food, coffee, whatever it was, they helped our responders just so they could have the basics so that they could continue on. Those guys are heroes. To the volunteers who tirelessly worked to lend a hand by whatever means they could, whether it was taking a displaced family into their homes right across this province, right across this country or providing money, clothing, and support: Fort McMurray thanks you all.

To the communities and organizations in support of the displaced, from Lac La Biche and Boyle all the way down to Chestermere and Medicine Hat, from Northlands to Samaritan's Purse and so many other organizations: thank you so much.

Our community was tested, but the resolve has never been stronger. After many years of our community being the embarrassing cousin of Alberta communities, it's heartening to see that our province stood together, united with love and support, and for that I thank you, all, in tears.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I rise to request unanimous consent from the House to allow a response from the Progressive Conservative Party as well as the independents from Calgary-Mountain View and Calgary-Elbow.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am privileged to rise and pay tribute to our first responders, the brave men and women who put themselves in harm's way to defend the community of Fort McMurray from the devastating wildfires of this past spring. These responders were led by the phenomenal Darby Allen, who was introduced earlier, but Darby would say that it was a team effort and that all first responders and all Albertans were part of that team, once again proving that as Albertans our theme song is We Are Family. When one member of the family hurts, we all hurt. These tremendous souls worked tirelessly to make sure that not one life was lost to the fire and that property damage was kept to a minimum. Sadly, they did this while some of their own homes were in flames. We can never thank them enough for that. As residents returned to the damage on the first day of re-entry, local firefighters used their trucks to hoist the Canadian flag above this overpass in a welcoming arch, truly a beacon of hope.

I want to thank the government for the naming of the overpass Responders Way – now you have me on Hansard, too, Premier – reflecting the significance of the impact of these brave responders. I also want to thank Mayor Melissa Blake and the council of the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo for their support of the initiative, in particular Councillor Keith McGrath, who made the request to the province. Again, to the first responders on behalf of all Albertans: it's small gestures and big that make a big difference. In our caucus we're proud to have two past first responders, our members for Calgary-South East and Calgary-West, as well as our Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who actually looked after animals – of course, he's a veterinarian – as they were leaving the wildfire.

Mr. Speaker, on this particular day on this particular issue we're family, we're all in it together, and I thank the government. This is a wonderful gesture to pay tribute to our very, very well-deserving first responders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as a preamble to my remarks on the tremendous efforts of our first responders I want also to add my comments for the record congratulating this government, this new Premier for the extraordinary leadership they showed in this once-in-a-lifetime, I hope, event.

As all the world knows, the first responders of Fort McMurray are a breed apart. For weeks these men and women battled a fearsome beast and emerged victorious. Through their quick thinking and dedication nearly a hundred thousand residents were but for one tragic vehicle accident safely evacuated under the King Street Bridge. Then, with others, Fort Mac first responders threw themselves at the beast and would not back down. Through the eyes of the media we watched these responders struggle with hope and despair, triumph and tragedy, but above all we witnessed their determination to stand fast no matter what the cost. Their families, too, must be honoured and remembered. We witnessed several cases where families were evacuated while husband or wife or mother or father remained behind so that others might be protected.

Months later as the residents of Fort McMurray approached their city, unsure what to expect, they found their saviours welcoming them atop the bridge that now bears the name Responders Way. Though much was lost, many of these residents passed under this bridge to find homes and businesses safe from the flames. For residents of Fort McMurray and for all Albertans Responders Way will stand as a symbol of courage and hope and thanks from all Alberta. We will forever be in your debt.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If you ask an Albertan to describe a hero, it's pretty simple. They will almost always talk about first responders. They will talk about the people who run toward danger while the rest of us seek safety, the people who are highly trained and ever ready. But if you ask a first responder the same question, they don't consider themselves heroes. The answer is always the same: just doing my job. It is that humility, bravery, and commitment to others that defines a hero. So make no mistake; in the hearts of every Albertan each and every first responder is a hero.

Now, having myself lived through a natural disaster, my most vivid memories are not of what was lost in the 2013 southern Alberta flood but of the tremendous outpouring of support from Albertans. The one image I will never forget is the hundreds of firefighters and police from Edmonton and beyond streaming down the QE II to help, of the Edmonton Police Service patrolling my neighbourhood to make sure it was kept safe while their colleagues from Calgary could take a break or serve elsewhere. That is the true embodiment of what it means to be Albertan.

So today it is my great honour to recognize and thank the first responders present here today and throughout Alberta. Renaming the King Street overpass Responders Way will remind all residents and visitors of Fort McMurray of the heroism that went on in May 2016. The people of Fort McMurray have been served by these remarkable people, including the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo, with little fanfare. They did it because they're Albertans, and Albertans look out for each other, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Policies

Mr. Jean: While tens of thousands of Albertans were losing their jobs this summer, the NDP were busy hammering Albertans with a radical economic agenda. They waged war on power companies, they are taxing businesses out of existence, and their new carbon tax will kill Alberta jobs, make life more expensive for everyone, and hurt our top industries. I've seen first-hand the damages these policies are having across the province from Calgary to Grande Cache. What does the Premier have to say to these Albertans who are suffering because of this NDP government's policies?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is actually extremely proud of our climate leadership plan. It is long overdue, and it's a fundamentally important initiative to do three things. First of all, it's to protect our environment and the health of our children and our grandchildren. It's also important because it's the right thing in terms of transitioning us to a more renewable energy based economy. Thirdly, it is important because it will finally help us break the landlock that climate denial has resulted in, getting no outcomes on that. So we are taking a different approach, and that's . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: A new report is actually out, warning that the NDP's accelerated shutdown of coal will cost Albertans $8 billion. That's not including the social costs of destroying livelihoods and communities right across Alberta. The only economic impact study we've seen from the government on any of these policies is a leaked memo saying that the carbon tax will wipe out thousands of Albertans' jobs. Will the Premier release the government's own studies on the damage of all these NDP ideological policies, or have they just not done the work?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, the internal studies that we've done, which show that, in fact, our climate leadership plan will be a benefit to Albertans and to Alberta jobs and to the Alberta economy, will be released today.

Mr. Jean: Well, most Albertans disagree.

There are actually over 150,000 Albertans currently employed in the restaurant industry just in Alberta, but because of NDP policies, over three-quarters of operators will cut their hours while nearly half are planning layoffs. Instead of doing anything meaningful to help low-income families, the NDP is taxing them out of jobs that they need right now. And with the NDP carbon tax set to kick in in just two months, things are going to get a lot worse for Albertans. What does the Premier have to say to the thousands of Albertans in these industries who will now be out of a job?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, interestingly, there was a recent study that came out that showed that notwithstanding that we have gone into the most significant recession as a result of the drop in the price of oil that we've had in many, many years, restaurant sales are almost the highest they've ever been, and that is after we put in an increase to the minimum wage. So the fact of the matter is that when you pay workers fairly and they contribute to their local economy, it grows the economy and it grows fairness. Those are our values, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, it can be hard to figure out which NDP policy mistake is doing the most damage to Alberta's economy, but this government taking itself to court over power purchase arrangements has to be very high on that list. We have the NDP suing government agencies and taxpayer-owned power companies to rip up a 17-year-old, multibillion-dollar contract. Nothing says, “Don’t invest here” like ripping up existing government contracts. To the Premier: is her government still sticking to their ridiculous story that they didn’t know anything about the change in law provisions in the PPAs?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, when the previous government embarked upon a deregulation and privatizing of a fundamentally important utility that Albertans rely on, they said that we needed to do it because industry would take the risk. But then they went behind closed doors and negotiated a deal so that taxpayers would take the risk and consumers would take the risk should things be lost. [interjections] It seems to me that the members opposite in the Official Opposition also want to stand behind having corporations put those costs onto Albertans rather than standing up for Albertans. We’re going to stand up for Albertans.

The Speaker: I would remind both sides of the House to please keep your comments constructive. And a little quieter, please, both sides.

Mr. Jean: The financial markets and the investment community notice when governments try to rip up contracts. When this government changed the emitters tax on power plants, they changed the law and made these plants even more unprofitable than the bad NDP policies already have. The companies surrendered their PPAs, but the government is suing, saying that that part of a 17-year-old contract is invalid. How can this government claim they didn’t know what was in the PPAs when those rules were mentioned in submissions to the Leach report and, of course, when Enmax briefed them on it last December?

Speaker’s Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Hon. members, I rise to remind the House, all of you, of Standing Order 23(g), also known as the sub judice rule, which governs statements made in this Assembly about legal proceedings before the courts. Members should not be engaging in debate or asking questions which may prejudice a civil proceeding that is “set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding.” I understand that an application was filed in July of this year by the government of Alberta seeking a declaration with respect to several power purchase agreements.

It’s extremely challenging to make a determination on whether statements made in this Assembly might prejudice those proceedings without knowing all of the particulars of the case, and I must rely on members and ministers who have greater information about the possible prejudicial effect of a question or an answer. Members are referred to pages 627 to 629 in O’Brien and Bosc and pages 153 and 154 in Beauchesne’s for a discussion of the sub judice principle and the application to statements made by members in the House.

I would also note that Standing Order 23(g) states that “where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate.” I will therefore allow some latitude with respect to this matter, but I would also urge members to exercise discretion when engaging in debate, asking questions, or giving answers on this matter or any other matter which may or may not be subject to the sub judice rule.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In deference to your concern I will speak generally about the carbon levy, which some people might argue had something to do with this particular matter. It didn’t, but let me just say this. Many of the members opposite are still not sure about the science of climate change. The members opposite actually voted this weekend to hand over to the federal government the power over Alberta’s carbon levy. We are going to act on behalf of Albertans. We are going to work with Alberta businesses, with Albertan communities to move this province forward on something that has been long overdue.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we either have a problem with incompetence in this government or no one is telling the truth. Enmax in documents makes it clear that they told this government about the more unprofitable clause in December. They put it in their cancellation letter to this government, yet the Premier’s top adviser swore that no one in the government knew about it until mid-March. The Premier needs to set the record straight. When did she personally know about the PPA exit clause? Is it her position right now that Enmax is lying?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I’m not going to offer up my opinion about the state of positions put forward by parties to a legal proceeding. I will, however, say that the matter of moving forward on long-overdue climate change policy is something that we needed to do. It is critical to the future of our economy. It is critical to soliciting support and social licence in jurisdictions across this province, to get support for our efforts to get our products to tidewater, and it is important for the future of our environment and for the health of our children, and we will not back down on it.

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Home-schooling

Mr. Jean: Many Albertans are concerned that the NDP government has mismanaged the Trinity Christian and Wisdom home-schooling file. It looks like the government will now be in yet another complicated legal battle, that will take, actually, months to resolve, while thousands of families’ and children’s lives have been thrown into uncertainty. It’s not acceptable. Where everyone agrees that taxpayer dollars need to be spent wisely, parents are asking why there weren’t more interim measures taken to avoid the frustration and anger created by this closure. Surely an administrator could have been appointed to run the school board. Can the Premier please explain why this wasn’t done?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, our government supports the ability of parents to choose the best form of education that they would like to give to their children. However, it is important that when public dollars are involved, those public dollars are expended in alignment with the law and with the rules that have been set out. So when we find that that is not the case, it would be irresponsible of us to allow these children to continue to attend places where the very public dollars that are dedicated to their education are not getting to them. Our government has worked closely to come up with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: This board has nearly one-third – one-third – of Alberta’s home-schooling population. That’s 3,500 children. Many are asking if a public board would have received the same harsh treatment for accusations of misallocated funds. It's like shutting down two large public high schools in mid-year. Barbara Duteau, one of the parents impacted, feels that the government has actually very much mishandled this file. She wants any problem with administration fixed and believes a solution exists outside of court. Once again, can the Premier please explain why they did not do all they could to ensure students' lives would not be thrown into chaos? Because they are.

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. It's incumbent upon a government to make sure that public money is being spent where it's meant to be spent and that there's transparency there to see that. The home-schoolers by definition are being schooled at home, so they continue with their studies. They sign up with another affiliate, and they get the money that they deserve, that they're entitled to to make sure the kids get the education they deserve.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, there were other options available, not just shutting down a school system in mid-year.

The allegations raised by the government are alarming and need to be resolved. No one disputes that. But the fact is that thousands of Alberta parents and children right now are nervous about parental choice being eroded throughout our educational system. They want assurances from this Premier that the parent-driven models of education they have chosen for their children will be protected and always be in place in Alberta. Will the Premier please reassure Albertans right now that her government is not on a mission to wipe out home-schooling in Alberta?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, part of the reason that on the day the announcement was made, the officials from Education got on the phone and did a telephone town hall to all these parents to give them other places where they could continue their home-schooling was because our government is committed to allowing them to continue their home-schooling in a way where they receive the public dollars to which they are entitled. That is exactly what we did because we are absolutely committed to supporting those families and the choices that they have made. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Now, I know, hon. members, that it is Halloween and you want to knock on doors and you're expecting to get a candy bag tonight, but if you are all speaking at the same time, the individual in the house won't be able to hand out the candy because they're not sure why you're there. Please contain that till you're able to knock on doors tonight.

The leader of the third party.

Job Creation and Retention

Mr. McIver: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, all over Alberta people are concerned about their jobs. They're looking for leadership from this NDP government, and so far there's been none. This morning Jack Mintz said that this government is going to need a specific set of policies to attract private investment to Alberta or else – and I quote – we're not going to get the jobs back in this province. To the Premier: since you must hear the same concerns in your office that I hear in mine, are you ready yet to reverse policies like the $15 minimum wage, the early shutdown of coal plants, the carbon tax, and cancellation of contracts, all of which have driven jobs and investment out of Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, our government has been working collaboratively with a number of leaders in industry to do exactly the opposite. What we are doing is trying to bring more investment to Alberta through a number of innovative programs. This session you'll be hearing about tax credit programs, asked for by business leaders, that would incent investment and incent innovation. We've worked with ATB and AIMCo to make more capital available. We are making more investment income available. We're doing everything we can, and we're pairing that with massive investment opportunities in capital and in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, people are starving because it's not working.

This government recently increased its use of the term "person-years of employment" to cover up the fact that their policies are costing more jobs than they are creating. When they opened the northeast Anthony Henday, for example, a PC-started project, they said that it created 10,000 person-years of work, which is true. Of course, Albertans know that that's a thousand jobs for 10 years or 2,000 for five years, not really 10,000 jobs at all. Meanwhile over a hundred thousand Albertans have lost their jobs. To the Premier: will you speak to Albertans in plain language about how you plan to replace those hundred thousand jobs?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying, of course, that our government is acutely aware of the number of families in Alberta who are hurting as a result of job losses caused by the drop in the international price of oil, over which we have no control. Notwithstanding that, we know that it's our role to work with them. So we're not going to cut services. We're not going to add more job losses. We're not going to do any of that stuff. What we are doing is ensuring stability in public services while working on a number of different initiatives to create and generate employment, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. McIver: Mr. Speaker, they're in denial of the fact that their policies are failing Albertans.

The Premier and her ministers like to drag out the old chestnut that opposition parties will lay off teachers and nurses. So here's an easy question for the Premier on the first day of session. Given that your government ministers and MLAs are the only ones talking about firing front-line workers, will you commit today to not lay off or reduce the hours of teachers or nurses during this term of office?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, I really have to take umbrage with the premise of the member opposite's question. Quite clearly, the budget that the member opposite ran on in the last election had a billion dollars being lost and involved not hiring something like 1,100 teachers, so for him to suggest that we are somehow going to reduce teachers makes no sense. We are supporting public services. We are funding enrolment increases. We are maintaining public services, and we'll continue to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Opioid Use Prevention and Treatment

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week Alberta Health finally heeded the calls of public health and mental health experts, social agencies, police, and, yes, the opposition by making meaningful changes in the way the opioid epidemic is being handled in Alberta, now more than one death per day in Alberta. But there can be no assumptions that this crisis is abating: the still increasing numbers of dead, increasing ER visits, and months-long wait times to get into treatment. To the Associate Minister of Health: given that the Valuing Mental Health and addictions report 10 months ago highlighted our inadequately funded and dysfunctional system, when will Albertans hear on the progress . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Since the Valuing Mental Health report was adopted by our government, we've worked very strongly on a number of the key issues, including working in partnership with First Nations, Métis, and Inuit communities on a comprehensive opioid addictions plan. That plan now includes support for the research around supervised consumption services across our province as well as an expansion of the opioid dependency treatment in order to help save lives.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, given that thousands of Albertans with opioid addictions currently wait several months on average to get into addiction-specific treatment, when will we see timely, integrated access to medical, mental, and social supports for these people?

The Speaker: The associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. When dealing with an opioid addiction, there are particular treatment methods that have been found to be most effective, and those are the opioid dependency treatments. Our government has invested in additional programs across AHS, including several specialized clinics, one of which opened a few months ago in the Cardston area and serves the surrounding First Nations reserve.

The other thing we're working on is working with family doctors across our province so that as specialized opioid dependency clinics are able to stabilize those patients, their patients are going to get transferred back into the community, where they will receive the treatment that they need.

Dr. Swann: You've got a lot to catch up on, Minister.

Given that your own data show that First Nation citizens have twice the rate of opioid prescriptions, five times the rate of emergency department visits for opioid addictions, and a recently eliminated federal program for HIV prevention across this country, when will we see evidence that Alberta Health Services and Health Canada are going to address this ongoing devastation among our First Nations?

The Speaker: The hon. associate minister.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Our government has been working closely with our federal partners on this issue. We know that enhancing access to naloxone will reduce deaths from fentanyl and overdoses within indigenous communities and have been working with our indigenous communities, both on- and off-reserve, to ensure that naloxone kits are available where they're needed and that there are trained people available to help people who are experiencing an overdose.

We know that access and system navigation are issues for many First Nations people, and we're continuing to work on this. We have provided a $1.5 million grant to Alberta Health Services to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. associate minister.

The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Vegreville Immigration Centre

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour and privilege to represent the community of Vegreville in this Legislature. It's a beautiful, vibrant town of 6,000 hard-working people. Last week that town received sad and shocking news that the federal government plans to close the immigration, refugee, and citizenship case processing centre. It means the loss of 280 family-supporting, mortgage-paying jobs. To the Minister of Labour: what information do you have on this closure?

The Speaker: The Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for this question. I think I can say with certainty that all members in this House are deeply concerned about this announcement and its impact on a vibrant community in rural Alberta. There's no doubt that this is the wrong decision for the people of Vegreville. We are asking the federal government to reconsider. Upon learning of the closure, my office contacted Minister McCallum's office in Ottawa to convey the impact that this closure will have on the community and the families who live there.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the loss of 280 jobs would be difficult for any community to face and given that the loss is especially difficult for a smaller rural community of 6,000 people, to the same minister: what can you do to support the efforts to convince the federal government that this decision should be reversed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question. I'm deeply concerned about the impact that this decision is going to have on the town of Vegreville. I have written to my federal colleague the minister of immigration to express that concern about this decision and to ask him to reconsider. I believe we need to be united in this House that this service needs to remain in Vegreville, where these workers live.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this issue is so important to the community of Vegreville and that the leaders of Vegreville also agree that the decision should be reversed, to the same minister: what support can our Legislature provide to the people of Vegreville in hopes of convincing the federal government to reverse this decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to urge all party leaders to write to the federal government asking for a reversal of this decision. I also want to congratulate the member for her advocacy on this issue. Thanks to your leadership the NDP Provincial Council voted unanimously to support the town of Vegreville in its efforts to reverse this decision. This issue should transcend partisan politics. We need to get behind Vegreville to preserve these jobs and the benefits they provide to this community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Support for Agriculture

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I travelled around rural Alberta this summer, I saw the potential for historic bumper yields. Sadly, Mother Nature disagreed. Summer hail and an early fall snow have caused crops to be destroyed or to lay unharvested on the ground. To the minister: with the potential for insured losses to be in the hundreds of millions, do you have an estimated value for these unharvested and damaged crops?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the question. I absolutely share his concerns about this year. It's been a real heartbreaker of a year. We've seen really dry conditions moving into some pretty good rains, potentially a bumper crop, as the member mentioned. I'm confident that their suite of insurance products through AFSC are robust and that they will be able to supply the needs of the farmers who aren't able to get their crops off because of the high moisture content.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given that Bill 6 is one of the most contentious bills ever brought forward by this government and given that round-table consultations for employment standards and labour have just finished and OH and S ones have barely begun, again to the minister: with so much uncertainty around this legislation already, do you have a firmer timeline for these Bill 6 regulations other than late 2017?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the question, added as a supplemental to the crop question he asked earlier. You know, we've had the opportunity to have our tech working groups. They've worked very hard. I'm very proud of the work they have done. I'm happy with the work they've done. All along we've been saying that we'll take the necessary time needed to make sure that we get this right, and I'm happy with the timeline we've had and the work they've done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Given the overwhelming burdens farmers have faced this year with hail, unharvested crops, falling cattle prices, and feedlot closures due in no small part to this government's ideological policies, here is the $64,000 question. Again to the minister: why, at the end of harvest and the beginning of session, have you planned your junket to Asia while farmers and ranchers are suffering from conditions out of their control?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the member for the question. I'm hoping that the member realizes the potential that China and other overseas markets have for our producers in Alberta. I will not apologize for doing the work that this government can do to increase those markets right across the world and for having the opportunity to do so. That AFSC will somehow not be able to issue their insurance products because of standing markets is nonsensical.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Starke: Mr. Speaker, last week Alberta Education revoked Trinity Christian School's accreditation amidst serious allegations of financial misconduct. Now, to be clear, our caucus does not condone the alleged activities, and we support the actions taken to protect Alberta taxpayers, but this closure has left roughly one-third of Alberta's home-schooled students, 3,500 children, without an accredited program. Despite assurances from Alberta Education that they are doing everything they can to assist these families, I'm hearing that quite the opposite is true on the ground. To the Minister of Education: can you assure this House that these families are being provided with the option to continue home-schooling their children?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. It's very important for everyone to understand that we do support home-schooling here in the province of Alberta, and we will try to facilitate as easily as possible those families that were with Trinity and can register with another affiliate. We have Alberta Education on the ground, and if there's any discrepancy or any rough spots, I'm glad to hear about that so that I can help to facilitate these students getting the money they deserve for their education.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the minister that there are all kinds of rough spots and that we'll be in touch with him.

Given that this investigation has been ongoing since even before you took office and given that you've been aware of this situation for quite some time and given that home-school students and families are experiencing understandable anxiety, stress, and confusion two months into the school year, to the minister: why wasn't this action taken in the summer months rather than during the school year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. I know that this is not an easy thing to do, and I did it with a heavy heart, certainly. When I did receive the information, we went back to make sure that we did look at the numbers and audited again. It was a double check to make sure that we were in keeping that the irregularities that we saw were coming through on multiple audits, including on-site audits, so it was my duty to act because, after all, this is public money. I'm glad that the member recognizes that and home-school...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given concern over the NDP's past opposition to parental choice in education and to home-schooling in particular and given that the abrupt action taken partway into a school year clearly shows a callous disregard for the educational well-being of home-schooled students and given that this further raises questions as to the NDP's commitment to home-schooling as a viable option for student education, will the minister stand today in the Assembly and tell Albertans: does he support home-schooling, or does he plan on ending home-schooling in our province?

Mr. Eggen: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker – thanks for that question – that I made it clear in my second comment that we do support home-schooling here in the province of Alberta to the tune of $1,670, I believe, per student, and it's important that that money gets to the education that these kids need. If someone is registering – they can register at their convenience with an affiliate – it's not difficult to do. You know, all of these notions about anything else: there are certain groups, I believe, that are throwing gasoline on the fire, making it even more difficult to communicate because they're simply telling half-truths.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Human Trafficking

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The NDP just can't seem to help themselves when it comes to spouting the importance of the NDP world view. We've seen it with the Leap Manifesto; we've seen it with the hiring of someone who refers to our province's oil sands as Mordor, and now we're seeing it with the very deeply troubling comment about the very real issue of human trafficking. The executive director of Progress Alberta and a close friend of the NDP trashed the Wildrose for raising awareness of the obvious and increasing number of victims. He called human trafficking a debunked fantasy. To the Minister of Human Services: does this minister also buy into the NDP world view of belittling those who suffered . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: For the opposition to try and hold this government responsible for the tweets of any individual, regardless of their political views, is absolutely absurd. Can you imagine if we held them accountable for the tweets of their supporters? Oh, my goodness, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I believe, Chestermere-Rocky View, first supplemental.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you. Well, thank you for that answer for these families that are suffering.

Given this horribly out-of-touch comment about this debunked fantasy of human trafficking, it's now time to shine a light on how serious this problem of human trafficking is in Alberta. Given that the executive director of ACT Alberta, a group that works to fight human trafficking, says that there's been an explosion in the number of cases reported and given that human trafficking threatens the safety and security of our communities, what steps is this government taking to address this growing problem in our province?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for what is really a very important question. Our government is committed to ensuring that we fight all forms of crime. We have met with ACT Alberta, and we are aware of their concerns about the increase in human trafficking. One of the most fundamental principles in ensuring that people are not vulnerable to this sort of human trafficking is ensuring that they have access to necessary government services, to jobs that pay decent wages, and things like that. Our government is absolutely committed to supporting those things.

Mrs. Aheer: Given that we need to ensure that men, women, and children are not trafficked for the purposes of labour exploitation, sexual exploitation, or the removal of organs and given that recently in Okotoks a 23-year-old woman was charged with human trafficking for exploiting teenage girls aged 13 to 16 whom she met on social media, what specific initiatives are in place right across our province to protect those that are being recruited for human trafficking on social media?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. In the last budget our government supported the ALERT team. That team includes the ICE team, the integrated child exploitation team. They work with all different police services across this province to ensure that everyone is sharing information and to prevent people from being solicited or trafficked online.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary-Foothills.

Energy Policies

Mr. Panda: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago Enbridge announced cuts to 5 per cent of their workforce, laying off another 530 positions. This round of layoffs is more pain and suffering for hard-working Albertans. In Calgary we have a 9.5 per cent unemployment rate, the highest in any metropolitan region in Canada, and expected to reach double digits by Christmas. In light of these sobering statistics will the NDP government postpone the risky carbon tax, that will only hurt Calgary families?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. There's no doubt that the sustained international price of oil is having a significant impact on all families and communities and workers across this province. That's why our government this spring introduced our Alberta jobs plan budget, which has a number of initiatives to help set the right conditions to support businesses and industry and get our economy back on its feet. There are a number of things that we've done in the areas of access to capital, support for start-ups and small businesses as well as helping businesses expand markets.

Mr. Panda: Given that the NDP has created an economic environment where people are unable to give, which has led to the shelves of the veterans' food bank in Calgary being empty, and since on November 5 I am holding my annual veterans' food bank drive – and I hope MLAs on all sides will support this because the need is so great now – and given that when the carbon tax comes into effect it will hurt the charities even more, will the NDP government acknowledge the damage their policies are having and cancel the charity-punishing carbon . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Well thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. Again, what the opposition needs to recognize or acknowledge is that when you are a province that has been overreliant on one commodity with one buyer for one price for so many years, when we have a collapse in that price, we are going to be hit harder than most other jurisdictions, which, quite frankly, is the case. We understand and sympathize with Albertans that are going through a very difficult time. This is why we've introduced a number of initiatives. Quite frankly – I will tell you more shortly.

Mr. Panda: The list of NDP policies that are hurting Calgarians goes on and on and on. Given that this summer they have launched a risky and expensive lawsuit against Enmax, which is owned by the city of Calgary, and given that they have begun an accelerated coal phase-out that will hurt hard-working Albertans and given that once fully implemented the average family will be paying a thousand dollars more because of the carbon tax, what will it take for the NDP government to use common sense, not ideology, and cancel those policies and drop lawsuits?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to clarify. First of all, our government's climate leadership plan puts Alberta at the forefront when it comes to doing our part regarding the environment. This is not only what a responsible global citizen does. There is an incredible amount of opportunity within our green jobs and transitioning workers from that phase-out of coal. We are investing in innovative solutions, working with business and industry as well as with not-for-profits. We have an advisory committee that is informing our government on how to help with this transition, but quite frankly . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The Member for Calgary-North West.

PDD Service Delivery

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Human Services has been asked time and time again about his plan to deal with the wait-list for PDD. The community is still waiting to hear answers. The wait-list is still growing. We've heard one plan from this government, that is to put PDD clients up for bid by service providers, potentially even those from out of the province. To the minister: is it still your government's plan to openly tender supports to the lowest bidder anywhere you can find them?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member, for the question. I will begin by saying that our government is committed to working with the sector to ensure that they are listened to and their perspective is reflected in our policies, unlike – I know the members won't appreciate it when I remind them of their record – imposing solutions like PDD safety standard 8, supports intensity scale. I have been engaged with the sector over the last year and a half to deal with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Yeah. I like that, "working with the sector."

Given that when asked about procurement previously, the minister said that he had consulted with the community, and when I asked him about that consultation, he said that if I wanted to know what the community thought, I could ask them myself. Well, guess what? I did, and they didn't like it. Again to the minister: are you going to exempt the PDD community from this humiliating process? And guess what? They don't feel consulted at all.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the question. One thing I want to clarify is that we are not auctioning PDD services. It's misinformation, and it's wrong. We will not auction PDD services. That's not happening. I have been working with the PDD community. Over 2,000 Albertans participated in our consultation around safety and inclusion. Whatever they will tell me, I'm . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'd just remind the member about no supplementary preambles.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that a major platform of this government has been to increase the minimum wage and they've been lauding it from coast to coast and given that the government has not offered PDD providers more funding to increase their own workers' pay to meet the new minimum wage, to the minister: did you forget to budget the minimum wage increase for PDD service providers, and if not, why does the minister believe that disability workers don't deserve a living wage? That's right. A $10 minimum wage . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We have increased funding for PDD by $22 million as opposed to cutting $40 million back when you were in government. In terms of relationships going forward, we are working with the advisory committee which is looking at how we will fund the PDD services. We are in complete consultation with the PDD community, advocates, and service providers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Economic Development

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade: given that we are all painfully aware of the way the sustained low oil price has impacted our province, can you please give an update as to how your economic development policies have led to jobs for Albertans?

The Speaker: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I'll start off by talking about how the more than $34 billion that our government is investing in infrastructure is the largest infrastructure spend in Alberta's history and will sustain and create about 10,000 jobs a year for the next three years. The summer temporary employment program employed about 2,700 students this summer. That had been cut by the previous government. The Alberta Enterprise Corporation investments have supported about 1,100 direct and 1,400 indirect jobs. The modernized royalty framework has led to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. member, your first supplemental question.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again to the same minister. There are a number of small businesses in my constituency facing the challenge of today's economic climate. What are you doing to support entrepreneurs and small-business owners so that they can access the supports they need to maintain and grow their businesses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. I want to start off by thanking the member, who's been an incredible advocate for small businesses in her riding as well as around the province.

Our government has been meeting with business leaders, industry leaders, and entrepreneurs around this province, and there are a number of initiatives. We've reinstated self-employment training programs. We have provided over $10 million for small-business incubators throughout the province. We've also reduced the small-business tax by 33 per cent in this province, and that will take effect on January 1. [interjections]

The Speaker: You're not going to have time to go out there.

Hon. member, your second supplemental question.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. We know that access to capital is crucial for many of these SMBs. How is your ministry ensuring that capital is available to them?

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the member for the question. First, last fall we increased ATB's capacity to lend to small businesses by $1.5 billion. I signed a historic MOU with the Business Development Bank of Canada in March of this year where BDC is committed to providing $1 billion in new business loans. We also will be introducing legislation in this very House for two tax credits, the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit, that provide incentives for Albertans to invest in Alberta companies to help grow our economy.

Health Care Decision-making

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, last week doctors from the Red Deer hospital came forward to ask the NDP government why central Alberta is being overlooked for cardiac catheterization services. Quick access to cardiac care saves lives in the event of a heart attack. In fact, we could save 30 lives per year. We could shorten hospital stays, cut down on transportation costs, and improve quality of life. Is the minister going to commit to getting the community what it so acutely needs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Albertans, no matter where they live in our province, deserve to have the right care in the right place at the right time and, of course, with the right information. I've had the pleasure of working with AHS and with the Red Deer local community. I'm actually meeting with a number of the local advocates for this specific project on Tuesday, I believe – it is this week, for sure – and we're going to continue to make sure that we're making decisions in the best interests of all Albertans. I understand local desires among community, but we need to look at a province-wide system.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that other patients, families, and community leaders support this while health professionals across the province are calling for better access to heart attack care and given that donors are willing to contribute millions towards getting cardiac cath for Red Deer and seeing that every part of the province pays into the system with their tax dollars, will the minister respect the local priorities of Albertans, restore true local decision-making in health, and let people do what is best for their communities?

Ms Hoffman: I'm really proud of the ongoing working relationship we have with folks in the central zone. In terms of Red Deer in particular, we've done work to expand access to operation capacity in that facility and we're certainly building on the cancer corridor, Mr. Speaker, because it's important that no matter where you live in the province, once again, you have access. Making sure that we take our time to do proper consultation, that there's something done on a system-wide or province-wide basis, is an important value, and it's one that I'm proud to live by.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this summer has seen the NDP embark on some truly bizarre priorities in health care and since their fascination with centralization and AHS control will cost us hundreds of millions extra to deliver laundry and lab services, when will our two ministers of Health stop letting their NDP world view cloud their judgment and start finding innovative ways to improve efficiency, access, and care for patients?

Ms Hoffman: Déjà vu, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to be back and to have the opportunity to respond to the allegations that were expressed from the member opposite.

We do not make decisions on an offhand basis, in a campaign style, much like what was done by the now third party under the former government, what seems to be what's being advocated for by the members opposite. Certainly, we aren't planning on moving forward with billions of dollars of proposed cuts that would impact patient care all across our province. We're being stable, responsible, and we're moving forward with the mandate Albertans gave us, Mr. Speaker, and I'm proud to do so.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Orange Shirt Day

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was the first day of school. Like children everywhere, Phyllis Webstad was excited. She was six years old, and grade 1 held such promise: learning new things, making friends, enjoying new adventures. Like children everywhere, she got dressed for her first day of school in her very best. Her grandmother had bought her a beautiful orange shirt, and Phyllis wore it with pride.

For far too many First Nation children like Phyllis, however, the reality was quite different. School became a place where culture and language were stripped away, a place of separation from parents, from family, from everything familiar, a place of pain, isolation, and loss. Beautiful clothing, lovingly made by grandparents in honour of the first day of school, was garbaged. Hair was chopped. Children were bathed in chemicals to cleanse them of their aboriginal taint. Phyllis never saw her orange shirt again.

As these children learned the realities of the school they were forced to attend, some tried to escape, to run home to family and loved ones. We know the stories of Chanie Wenjack, Phillip "Bean" Swain, and Roderick Taypaywaykejick, who lost their lives in the frozen wilderness far from home. Many others died at school, often from unknown causes. Their parents never saw them again. Others endured years of unimaginable abuse and neglect.

Although most children managed to survive this experience, residential schools left profound and lasting generational scars. Children returned home to an environment and a culture where they were lost and unable to adapt. They often coped with alcohol and drugs, and when they had children of their own, they did not know how to parent them.

On September 30, Orange Shirt Day, people across Canada and children in our schools wear orange to remember the thousands of children who were once told that their lives, their culture, their language, their heritage did not matter. We share their story not only in recognition of the harm the residential school system did to innocent children like Phyllis but to encourage awareness and compassion and support for healing. Orange Shirt Day is an opportunity to unite together in a spirit of reconciliation and hope to affirm our commitment to future generations of children that every child matters.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent of the House to continue with the daily Routine past 3 o'clock.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Loewen: Mr. Speaker, this has been an extremely trying year on farmers and ranchers. Heavy rain, hail, and early snow have harmed crops, many of which are still left in the field. Beef prices are falling, feedlots are closing, and now we have a confirmed case of bovine tuberculosis from a herd near CFB Suffield, in southern Alberta. This disease has the ability to be passed from cow to cow, from wild game such as elk to cow, or to humans in rare cases.

While this does not affect Canada's rating as being a TB-free country, this incident could be catastrophic to some ranches' viability. Once the cow has been traced to its source, that herd and all animals on that ranch are quarantined. The source herd will be destroyed for safety reasons, and compensation will be paid. Any commingling of cows will mean other herds may also need to be quarantined as well.

It is now reported that approximately 30 herds may be under quarantine, which presents major financial burdens for those affected. Numerous ranches have these cows and calves presold, and if they are forced into quarantine, they can't fulfill the contract nor can they be sent to feedlots. The onus to continue to care and feed for these herds falls entirely on these ranch families, all of this without their regular income from sales, never mind not having adequate corral space, feed, and water to care for these animals that they normally would have sold by now. This is an animal welfare issue, Mr. Speaker.

As if this is not bad enough, this area is also known for its hunting. Rumours and fears of this TB incident are already rampant in the hunting and outdoors communities, and the lack of accurate information from Environment and Parks to these communities is troubling.

The U.S. has had its share of bovine TB cases over the years, with dozens of such events being reported. While this is not a disastrous trade issue, producers do need some real clarity of the process from this government. This government needs to work closely with the federal government on this serious matter and present their plan to these affected ranchers now.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Hon. Peter Eric James Prentice, PC, QC

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Progressive Conservative caucus and, indeed, Progressive Conservatives across this province to remember the hon. Jim Prentice. Like all of us here and all who knew him, I was truly shocked when I heard the news of the tragic incident that claimed Jim's life.

My thoughts immediately went to his wife, Karen, their daughters, and grandchildren. They shared him with the public as their husband, father, and grandfather served his country and his province with such distinction, and they had just recently got him back, so to speak. I know that in the 17 months since he retired from public life, they enjoyed the extra time they had together. In fact, when I spoke to Karen last week, she told me just how much she enjoyed that time out of the public spotlight. I know that all Albertans and Canadians join us in thanking the family for sharing Jim with us all those years.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Prentice was a great many things: husband, father, grandfather, capable cabinet minister, trusted adviser, business leader, First Nations advocate, environmentalist, friend, and mentor. But above all of this, he was at his core a public servant. While he was also a skilled politician, he knew when to put partisanship aside for the betterment of the people he served. Jim had an ability to put differences aside and work with anyone, even when it wasn't easy, if the job was important to get done. That's why over the past few weeks we've heard politicians of all stripes describe him first and foremost as a gentleman. Jim spent only a short time in this Chamber as Alberta's 16th Premier, but it was clear that he had a profound impact on all those who had the honour of serving alongside him.

Mr. Speaker, our thoughts and prayers are with Jim's family as well as with the families of the three others who lost their lives in the incident as they mourn this tragic loss. All Albertans join them in their grief today.

The Speaker: Hon. member, as I indicated in my introductory remarks, at some point in the future, in consultation with the family a more formal opportunity will be presented for that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Education System

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to tell you about a series of consultations I held at the elementary schools of Edmonton-Manning this fall. Here in Alberta students begin to learn about local government in grade 6; they learn about the history and process of democracy. I visited the elementary schools of Edmonton-Manning to encourage students to brainstorm, with myself, their teachers, and their families, ideas to make this province a better place for Albertans now and for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, the grade 6 students from my constituency have demonstrated an eagerness to engage in the democratic process and become future leaders in their community. These young students and all Albertans, regardless of their age, can enact change, and it is my belief that the leaders of tomorrow need to be encouraged and supported today. Therefore, it is our responsibility to guide them to what engages their minds so that they are better able to discover their unique genius and contribute that to the community they live in, for the mind is not a vessel to be filled but a light to be kindled, a light to illuminate the path forward for all of us.

Mr. Speaker, education is the passport to the future. Tomorrow belongs to those who prepare for it today. I am proud to be part of a government that is investing in our schools and recognizes that education is the cornerstone of a healthy economy. We need to be future-ready, and the future starts today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Soccer Without Boundaries

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is good to be back in the Legislature. Today I want to talk about a man and his mission to provide a place for children to belong, a place to feel safe, and a place to have fun through sport. Jean Claude Munyezamu found inspiration in volunteerism both at home and abroad to found Soccer Without Boundaries. Soccer Without Boundaries is an award-winning organization aimed primarily at immigrant and low-income children throughout Calgary. Running year-round, the program stands on the strength of its wonderful volunteers – coaches, assistant coaches, and helpers – as well as those who donate soccer gear. This organization is an example of the generous spirit found throughout Alberta.

A variety of programs are offered and are designed to instill a sense of ownership, belonging, and pride in community in those children who are so often left to their own devices for many hours of the day. Mr. Speaker, by giving these children a safe, fun place to be after school and on weekends, Soccer Without Boundaries plays a key role in keeping children out of trouble. As you know, idle hands are the devil's playthings. I am so glad that the children of Calgary-Currie have these angels from Soccer Without Boundaries on their side, keeping them engaged in productive and constructive pursuits.

I was also privileged to join Jean Claude and Soccer Without Boundaries at their end-of-summer barbecue, where a simple children's sporting event brought out the entire community. It was a family affair, Mr. Speaker, and it was a community affair.

To Soccer Without Boundaries and everyone who makes it possible, thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Wildrose Education Policies

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proud to be a Wildrose member. As the Leader of the Official Opposition said over the weekend at our AGM, we are unapologetic in our love for Alberta, and we fight for our policies and principles because they have proven time and time again to be the foundations of a society where all can benefit. Wildrose is a member-driven party; we take direction from Albertans to lead and direct our work.

I'm proud that our members' past policies show Albertans that our party will always be on their side, policies like repealing the carbon tax and Bill 6, giving Albertans two free hours of parking at hospitals, and affirming our commitment to parental choice and parental rights. Wildrose has a bedrock education policy that reads:

[We] recognize that parents are the primary decision-makers for their children and their children's education, and protect parents' right to choose the education their child receives whether it be through public, separate, public charter, private school or homeschooling.

It rightly recognizes the supremacy of parents to be in charge of their child's education while recognizing the substantial effort and work that teachers across our province do every day to support our children.

When I talk to Albertans across the province, they tell me time and time again that they are worried about steps the NDP is taking to erode parental rights across this province. They see a government that tries to interfere with and amend private members' motions intended to protect parental choice. Parents have watched the government reject the application for a new charter school to help special-needs students. The only step they are seeing the government take to consult parents on new curriculum is a vague and misleading online survey.

Albertans deserve better. They can know Wildrose will always stand for a world-class education system. Wildrose is steadfast in supporting parental choice in educational opportunities.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices and in accordance with section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I would like to table five copies of the following report: Elections Alberta 2015-16 annual report on the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. Copies of this report will be provided to members.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to introduce Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. Bill 24 will strengthen Alberta's legislation that supports wildfire prevention and firefighting activities. The measures include improved authority to restrict high-risk activities during hazardous fire conditions and tougher penalties for violations of the act. The bill will also further enhance wildfire-fighting efforts by clarifying operational processes, roles, and responsibilities. The devastation in Fort McMurray earlier this year is a solemn reminder of the incredible damage that wildfires can cause. Our government is committed to the protection of Albertans and their communities from the threat of wildfire, and this bill will enhance the tools available to help keep our communities safe. I urge all members of this Assembly to support this important legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have six tablings today. I rise to table five copies of the office of the Child and Youth Advocate's special report Voices for Change: Aboriginal Child Welfare in Alberta.

Secondly, in my capacity as chair and pursuant to section 39(3) of the Legislative Assembly Act I would like to table with the Assembly five copies of the following orders, which were approved at the September 26, 2016, meeting of the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services: Revised Members' Services Modernization of Language Amendment Order, No. 1, being order 05/16; and Transportation Amendment Order, No. 13, being order 06/16.

In addition, as chair I would also like to table five copies of the October 2016 Special Standing Committee on Members' Services subcommittee on family-friendly workplace practices and policies final report, titled: Review of Family-Friendly Practices and Policies for Legislators.

I have received a resolution from the National Assembly of Québec as it relates to the federal health transfers. They request that this motion be brought to the attention of all members of the Assembly, of which I am now tabling five copies.

I am tabling a copy of a news release from earlier today announcing the appointment of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. This five-member commission was required to be established by October 31, 2016, pursuant to section 5(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, which was amended by Bill 7, approved by the Assembly last spring.

Finally, further to the purported question of privilege that was raised on June 6, 2016, I would also like to table five copies each of recent correspondence on this subject: firstly, my memorandum of October 11, 2016, to the Government House Leader; the Government House Leader's response, dated October 21; the Official Opposition House Leader's e-mail, dated October 24; his letter of October 25; and an e-mail dated October 25 from the Progressive Conservative House leader. I will give the pages an opportunity to circulate the documents.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: Hon. members, you will recall that near the end of the spring sitting, on June 6, 2016, the Official Opposition House Leader raised a question of privilege concerning government radio ads and whether those ads presumed a decision of the Assembly on Bill 20, which had not yet passed through the stages of the Assembly. I heard arguments from the House leaders for the government and the Official Opposition and the third party on June 6, 2016. The Assembly adjourned for the summer at 11:51 on June 7.

During debate on the purported question of privilege the Government House Leader objected to the Official Opposition House Leader making arguments with respect to a government website, climate.alberta.ca, as this website was not referenced in the notice submitted to my office. I have determined that as the radio advertisement in question referenced specifically the website climate.alberta.ca, it was open to the House leader to make arguments as part of his presentation that the website as well as the radio ad contained content that constituted a breach of privilege.

In an effort to expedite the process over the period of adjournment, I offered the Government House Leader the option to make written submissions to me concerning the website. The other House leaders were to be copied on the Government House Leader's written submissions, which were received by my office on October 21, 2016, and which have now been tabled for the members. My office forwarded the Government House Leader's submissions to the other House leaders for comment. Given that the Government House Leader has now had the opportunity to comment on the website content, which, I note, supplements his arguments made in the Assembly on June 6 and can be found at pages 1476 and 1477 of the Hansard for that day, I will now ask if anyone else has anything new to contribute to the debate.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate you tabling some of the information in the Chamber today. As you will note and as members will read the correspondence with enthusiasm, I'm sure, it will be noted that I take these points of privilege very seriously, so I'm glad that they're being done in an open way, where all members are able to provide comment on what is a very serious matter.

I would just like to reiterate the position that the website as well as the radio ad were clear breaches of privilege. They presumed the passage of the legislation. I think that it is of critical importance that we see the government being respectful of the Assembly and respectful of the privileges that each of us enjoys in this House. I encourage you to recognize that the government hasn't addressed the issue of the website. As such, you mentioned that it would be included in the ruling, but I encourage you to rule that this, in fact, was a breach of privilege, and if you see fit, I would be happy to move it to the standing orders, privileges, and printing committee following your ruling.

The Speaker: Are there any other members who would like to speak to the point of privilege?

Thank you, hon. members and Opposition House Leader. I have been attentive to your comments, and I would intend to take some time to consider them further. I hope to be able to do that very, very soon.

Orders of the Day

Written Questions

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

[The Clerk read the following written questions, which had been accepted]

Debt-servicing Costs

Q15. Mr. Clark:

What has been the impact on Alberta's projected debt-servicing costs since the downgrade in the credit rating by Standard & Poor's, and what has been the impact on the debt-servicing costs since the notice of a credit review by Moody's and by Dominion Bond Rating Service during the 2015-2016 fiscal year?

Bond Yields

Q16. Mr. Clark:

What has been the impact on Alberta's provincial bond yields since the downgrade in the credit rating by Standard & Poor's, and what has been the impact on the debt-servicing costs since the notice of a credit review by Moody's and by Dominion Bond Rating Service during the 2015-2016 fiscal year?

3:20

Trip to Toronto and New York

Q17. Mr. Fildebrandt:

What are the deliverables from the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance's trip from April 25 to 29, 2016, to Toronto and New York?

Trip to Washington, DC

Q18. Mr. Cooper:

What are the deliverables from the Premier's trip from April 27 to 29, 2016, to Washington, DC?

Alberta Health Services Overtime Payments

Q19. Mr. Barnes:

What was the total cost of overtime payments to all part-time employees of Alberta Health Services for the fiscal year 2015-16?

Surgery Postponement

Q20. Mr. Barnes:

For the fiscal year 2015-16 how many surgeries were postponed in each Alberta Health Services high-volume surgery site due to system capacity issues?

Alberta Health Services Employee Earnings

Q22. Mr. Barnes:

As of April 1, 2016, how many Alberta Health Services employees were earning more than $200,000 per year in annual salary and total benefits combined?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Disaster Recovery Program Claims

Q11. Mr. Clark asked that the following question be accepted.

How many disaster recovery program claims arising from the 2013 flood event that were previously approved have since been deemed ineligible?

Ms Ganley moved that Written Question 11 be amended as follows:

How many disaster recovery program claims from the 2013 flood event have been deemed ineligible, and why were they deemed ineligible?

[Debate adjourned on amendment May 16: Mr. Clark speaking]

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I will just take a few brief moments to recap some of the comments that I've made previously on this I think important question, but before I do so, I just want to welcome back all of my colleagues in the Assembly. It seems far too long, my friends, since we've all been together, and I look forward to a good few weeks of being together.

Now, the government has proposed an amendment to this which amends out the words "previously approved." I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that we know that 2,647 claims were deemed ineligible. What this amendment seeks to do is to provide the Assembly with information that is already publicly available and fundamentally changes the information that I was seeking in this question. The information I'm seeking in this question comes from a number of very specific incidents in my own constituency but also in High River and other parts of the province where Albertans were approved for disaster recovery program funding and then subsequently disintitled from that. Now, I'd like to know how many there were. I'd like to know why. I think that's in the public's interest.

Now, I certainly hope that the vast majority – and I understand this to be the case, the vast majority – of claims for damage resulting from the Wood Buffalo wildfires are in fact covered by insurance or are eligible for insurance and therefore would not be eligible for the disaster recovery program. However, should there be claims arising related to the devastating wildfires or in the future when claims arise out of disasters unforeseen but, unfortunately, seemingly common in Alberta, it is very important for all of us in this Assembly, and through us to the people of Alberta, to understand why it would be that claims would be declined after having been approved.

I know of at least one case of that happening, and I know others have given me anecdotal evidence of that happening, and if, in fact, that's happening, we ought to know about it. I'd like to make sure that the Alberta Emergency Management Agency and all of the folks in Municipal Affairs who are responsible for this important program understand fully how it's working and also, especially and most importantly, understand how it's working from the perspective of the end users of the program.

Taken to its logical extreme – and this is, in fact, a scenario that was facing one of my constituents. She had been paid a sum of money under the disaster recovery program and then through appeal found that Municipal Affairs and the government were actually trying to claim that she, in fact, was not eligible for those funds. The money that she had received, which is not a substantial amount relative to the damage that she had, was long spent on the recovery process. Now, should she have found and had the Municipal Government Board found through the appeals process that, in fact, she was not entitled to DRP, having already spent the money, she would have been on the hook to give that money back to the government.

When we put people in situations like that, having faced a devastating natural disaster, I'm sure the members of this Assembly can well understand why we'd like (a) to know how often that happens and (b) to shine a light on why that might be happening. That puts Albertans in a very, very difficult position.

I would really encourage this government to reconsider their amendment because we certainly care about the people who have received this funding. I worry very much that if we find in Fort McMurray and Wood Buffalo that there are DRP claims forthcoming, they would be handled with the knowledge of why it might be that someone would be deemed eligible at one stage and then, in this case 18 months later, the government potentially deciding: we made a mistake; we actually don't believe you should be entitled to DRP.

If it's not very widespread, that would be wonderful. I'd love to know that. If it is widespread, that's not a good thing, but we need to know that. So I would again encourage this government, please, to reconsider your amendment and to revert to my original question of: how many that were previously approved have since been deemed ineligible? I think that's in Albertans' interest.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Further speakers to the amendment? Hon. member, go ahead.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good afternoon. I won't take too long on this matter, but it is one that is home to my heart as well. We've had an awful lot of issues dealing with the flooding in the past few years in southern Alberta, and certainly the differences of opinion on some of the investigations have put residents into situations where they become victims of all kinds of different rules and so on. It's been a fight for a lot of individuals, with some heartbreaking situations.

So it surprised me, frankly, when this was drawn to my attention because it seemed to me that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow had asked a very important question, and I think we know what that question was. It was: "How many disaster recovery program claims arising from the 2013 flood event that were previously approved have since been deemed ineligible?" That is such an important question because there were a lot of people that struggled through this situation, got to a situation where they thought they were going to have some final reconciliation, and then suddenly it changed.

You know, to now see that they've struck out the "previously approved" section and reworded it and brought it back to say instead: "How many disaster program recovery claims arising from the 2013 flood event have been deemed ineligible, and why were they deemed ineligible?" That is a totally different thing.

I reiterate and agree with all that's been said by Calgary-Elbow. This is not the same question. If anything, if it were me and this question was to be amended, it could have been worded more strongly. But this "previously approved" situation does need to be addressed, and I would hope that that would be something that the House would agree with.

Thank you.

3:30

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it's been a long summer, so I think it's worth while to remind members what the amendment is. The original question, as noted by the Member for Calgary-Elbow, was asking simply: what was the number of claims that had been deemed ineligible after being previously approved? The amendment that had been put forward by my ministerial colleague was to say not just how many claims had been deemed ineligible but why they were deemed ineligible. Frankly, I think that the amendment goes to providing a little bit more information to Albertans about the application of this program, how it's been used, and ensuring that Albertans understand where that money is going.

Amending this question allows for a better response, more accurately reflecting the two-stage process that all DRP files go through. The first stage, of course, is determining whether an application can be accepted under the established program criteria, things such as whether the losses occurred during the prescribed timeline of the event, whether the applicant owns the property in question, and if the losses were uninsurable in nature. The second stage of the process determines whether the items being claimed are eligible for reimbursement under the disaster assistance guidelines, and that can include lost or damaged items, cleanup hours and expenses, repair and replacement of structural damage.

Additionally, it's important to remember that funding under the disaster recovery program cannot be provided if other sources of funding are available to that applicant. So it's not meant to duplicate other forms of financial assistance that may be covered.

The 2013 program received more than 10,600 private-sector applications, and more than $144 million has been provided to individual Albertans with respect to this disaster. All of those applications have been carefully considered. It's important, I think, to show not just how many claims have been re-evaluated but also the reasons for that to ensure accountability and transparency for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further speakers to the amendment?

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:33 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

For the motion:

Anderson, S.	Kazim	Phillips
Babcock	Kleinstaub	Piquette
Carson	Littlewood	Renaud
Coolahan	Loyola	Rosendahl

Totals: For – 37 Against – 20

[Motion on amendment carried]

3:50

The Deputy Speaker: Now we're on Written Question 11. Are there any further comments on this?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow to close debate.

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I voted against the amendment, obviously, and am disappointed that it passed. I just want to say this, that what this written question now will answer are things that we already know. Information is already publicly available. We know that 2,647 Albertans were deemed ineligible, but we also know that there are certain criteria by which the disaster recovery program applies. The hon. minister had enumerated some of them: whether the damage happened during the course of a disaster, whether someone was an owner or a landlord, whether the losses were uninsurable. Those things we know. So we're going to find out – I actually suspect that if I dug deep enough on some of the government's websites, I may even be able to find out those specific breakdowns right now.

The reason I had asked the original question was because certain Albertans, including a constituent of mine, were originally approved for the disaster recovery program in relation to the 2013 floods and were then subsequently told that they were going to be disentitled or unapproved, if you will, and declined. If this is rampant, if this is something where Albertans are being approved for a program and then later on are told, "Sorry; actually, we made a mistake, and we think you're not approved," that's something worth knowing. So that's why I'm very disappointed that the amendment has gone ahead, and I cannot support the written question as amended because it no longer conveys the spirit which I was intending to capture with the original question.

So I would encourage all members of the Assembly to vote down this written question because it is not what I was intending at all and frankly does not, I believe, give any new information to Albertans which is not already publicly available.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Written Question 11 as amended carried]

Blood Plasma Costs

Q21. Mr. Barnes asked that the following question be accepted.
For each of the fiscal years 2013-14, 2014-15, and 2015-16 what was the per unit cost of blood plasma purchased by Alberta Health Services, broken down by each supplier?

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me to introduce this written question. This issue of where we source our blood products entered the public discussion earlier this year when a donation supply company announced it would like to offer its services to Albertans. Donors would be compensated a small amount for their time to donate plasma blood, a product in high demand and limited supply.

Madam Speaker, I'd like to tell the House why Canada does buy plasma. Canadians need plasma for two main purposes: transfusions, requiring about 50,000 litres annually; and, secondly, manufacturing plasma protein products, requiring 1.1 million litres of plasma a year. Currently Canada is a volunteer blood donor only country and collects about 190,000 litres of plasma a year, more than enough to cover transfusion needs, but not anywhere close enough to cover plasma protein products.

The minister doesn't seem keen on this idea, but there are a couple more facts that should be known here. First of all, as many patient advocacy groups in Canadian Blood Services itself have said, we rely heavily on paid donation services to meet global demand for blood plasma and manufactured blood plasma products. To meet our demand, the demand I just mentioned, we rely on imports from jurisdictions that do allow and do use paid plasma donations. Canadian Blood Services has increasingly accessed paid sources from North America and Europe, including Germany and Austria.

Madam Speaker, in 2013 Canadians paid $670 million for this plasma; $670 million. In a public statement from this year Canadian Blood Services said, "Drugs made from plasma donated by paid donors are just as safe as those made from plasma from volunteer donors." "Access to the commercial paid plasma market is essential in ensuring enough supply so that Canadian patients," Albertans, our friends and our neighbours, "continue to receive the life-saving therapies they need."

Now, having said these things, I thought it was informative that during our last go-round with Health estimates the Minister informed us that part of the reason for our very large increase in spending on the blood services line item was due to an increased cost in buying it from abroad. Madam Speaker, the weak Canadian dollar has been identified as a contributing factor by the minister. Even worse, over the past two years the line item has grown by nearly $30 million, or about a 23 per cent increase. I certainly accept that her answer was the truth given how the growth in this line item seems to correspond with the general trend of the Canadian dollar's value.

We know that blood plasma from paid donors is safe and essential. I think it is absolutely essential that Albertans know where our blood products come from and how much they cost us. Is this an area of health where we could be doing things more efficiently? Is this an area where we could be keeping the money in our country and in our province?

Madam Speaker, I understand that the government will be amending this written question. I hope that the result of the amendment will be good information for the public, transparent so we can better understand our blood supply in detail, including all that it costs and where it comes from.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Written Question 21 be amended as follows: by striking out the phrases "each of" and "per unit," by striking out the word "plasma" and substituting the phrase "components (red blood cells, platelets, and plasma)," by striking out the phrase "Alberta Health Services, broken down by each supplier" and substituting "Alberta Health for use in Alberta, and for the same fiscal years, what was the cost of plasma protein products, broken down by product?"

The amended question would read as follows:

For the fiscal years 2013-14, 2014-15, and 2015-16 what was the cost of blood components (red blood cells, platelets, and plasma) purchased by Alberta Health for use in Alberta, and for the same fiscal years what was the cost of plasma protein products, broken down by product?

I'm proposing these amendments in order to provide a more readily compared product and spend by category. The cost of transfusable plasma alone cannot be accurately calculated because the transfusable product line is a negotiated cost between Alberta Health and Canadian Blood Services, that includes an allocation of operational costs for the national blood program. Plasma costs as reflected in the product line reflect a calculation based upon an awarded market share contract between the manufacturer and Canadian Blood Services. This calculation is then combined with the actual utilization by the province to generate the price per unit. This is a complex breakdown that does not yield results for unit costs that can be accurately compared year by year. It is, however, possible to report product total spend per purchased product per year, separated into blood components. Again, that's red blood cells, platelets, and plasma.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Cypress-Medicine Hat, do you wish to speak to the amendment?

4:00

Mr. Barnes: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've had a chance to read it. I appreciate some of the clarification around the language, but the amended version does seem to be missing one key element captured by the intent of my original question, and that is the source.

I appreciate knowing the cost of all types of blood products by fiscal year. We did already, however, have a sense from the government's Health estimates of how considerably they have been rising. If it is true that we indeed have been paying more, specifically for international blood plasma products, I would hope that the government could provide where they originate and figure out exactly how much of this is attributable to the falling Canadian dollar. Perhaps the information the government intends to provide us will in fact list products by supplier and source. I certainly hope it does. I certainly think that this is a key requirement so Albertans know the truth and the facts as to where their blood is coming from, how it is accessed, and what it costs. Albertans deserve to know more of the ins and outs of their health system.

Madam Speaker, in the hope that this information the government intends to provide will in fact list the products by supplier and source, I will accept the amendment and ask the House to do the same and hope the government will actually be legitimate in increasing transparency.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills on the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I might just say that I appreciate the government's willingness to seemingly try and do their best to provide more information not just on the plasma side but on all types, including red blood cells, platelets, and plasma purchased by Alberta Health Services. I think that's a nice gesture to try and provide the opposition with some additional information.

However, one thing that I perhaps am more concerned with or certainly not quite as reconciliatory on as my colleague is around this issue of supply. It's unfortunate that in the minister's comments around what changes they would like to see amended to the question, the minister didn't provide a very robust answer as to why they have no desire to provide the information around supply – the suppliers, the types of suppliers, the amount of money that's spent at each supplier – which I think would have come in the initial question because it was very prescriptive in “broken down by each supplier.” We have a wide range of suppliers here in the province, and it's important that Albertans have a clear understanding of this critical piece of our health system.

It would have been great to hear from the minister exactly why they're unable to provide or, as my guess is, Madam Speaker, unwilling to provide the information around the supplier because if we look at the health system generally, we see a real challenge between the current government and private service providers. We've seen that in linen and we've seen that in other places, lab services, where the government has this real desire to centralize. All that my colleague was asking for is a real understanding of where the resources are going, to what suppliers.

The great thing about information, Madam Speaker, is that it shines light on situations for Albertans. There may very well be a number of Albertans that are concerned or would like to be reassured on the places that we're spending money when it comes to suppliers of these very, very important products. For the minister just to say, “Hey, listen; don't worry; we're going to provide you with all this extra information” – I'm paraphrasing here – but to not answer the entirety of the question, it seems that we're going to see a pattern this afternoon of the government making amendments to questions to provide the answers that they would like us to have but not provide the information that they would prefer we didn't have.

This is not the type of transparent, open government that this government was elected on. This is not the type of government that the hon. member or the Minister of Infrastructure and of Transportation – when he was on this side of the House, he used to rise and speak on issues just like this, about the opposition and Albertans needing to have access to the information that is rightfully theirs.

So while I again say thank you to the minister for providing the information that we didn't ask for and clarifying the language so that we could get the information around that particular issue, they're still hiding information around the supply, and that should be a concern to every member of this House. I'll be happy to support my colleague in accepting the amendment, but know that this is not the right path for us to begin going down around this very important private members' business, amending questions so that the government can provide the House and the opposition the answers that they would like us to have, not the answers to the questions that were asked.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: We're back on the written question itself. Are there any further members wishing to speak to the question as amended?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to close debate.

Mr. Barnes: Thanks to my colleague for again pointing out to this House and to all Albertans how crucially important transparency is. The number of a 23 per cent increase and $30 million more for just Albertans, money that could go elsewhere – I would hope that the hon. minister and the government do actually go the step that they've left possibly open and actually provide this information for Albertans so we can have a clear, concise look at an important element of our health system.

Thank you.

Motions for Returns

[The Clerk read the following motions for returns, which had been accepted]

Ministerial Meeting with Credit-rating Agencies

M36. Mr. Fildebrandt:

A return showing copies of all documents prepared for the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance in preparation for meeting with Standard & Poor's, Dominion Bond Rating Service, and Moody's Investors Service in Toronto on April 25, 2016.

Alberta Health Services Severance Payments

M37. Mr. Barnes:

A return showing a list of all severance payments made to Alberta Health Services employees at the management and executive levels, broken down by each individual position, for the fiscal year 2015-16.

Ministry Legislation Plans

M18. Mr. Cooper moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of the most recent three-year legislation plan for each ministry.

[Debate adjourned May 2: Mr. Mason speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any further members wishing to speak to this motion?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close debate.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd just like to take a little bit of a trip down memory lane, if you will. I know it's hard to believe that these very important questions... [A cellphone rang] That is like a total party foul. A phone ringing in the Assembly? How could it be?

The last time that this particular question was debated was way, way, way back, on May 2, and I will quote very briefly from Alberta Hansard of May 2, 2016, pages 782 and 783. Madam Speaker, this is a very, very important question. The people of Alberta have the right to know what the plans of this government are, and the reason why they ought to know what the plans of the government are is because, seemingly, day in and day out they surprise Albertans. They ran on one thing, and in many respects have introduced significant pieces of legislation that they didn't campaign on. Albertans deserve the right to know what, in fact, are going to be the plans of this government. That's why I moved the question.

Unfortunately, the Government House Leader rejected that question. You know what? He said: we want to keep our plans secret, and we're not going to provide information to Albertans that they deserve to know. In fact, he insinuated in his remarks that by me drafting the question, it was sheerly political. The quote here, Madam Speaker, is:

Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. While I hate to disappoint the hon. Official Opposition House Leader on this point, I know he had a sense that we might be rejecting it. Might I suggest that he probably drafted a question that he knew would be rejected.

I take some offence to the fact that he would go as far as to say that I drafted a question intentionally that he would reject when merely what our side of the House makes an effort to do is to get information that's important to Albertans.

The plans of this government, I can tell you, are important to Albertans. While many, many, many, many Albertans disagree with the plans of this government, they do have the right to understand what the future holds with respect to those plans. Worse yet would be no plan at all. Sometimes the lack of preparedness of the government makes me think that maybe there isn't a plan, which may in fact be worse.

Now, Madam Speaker, the government has the right to inform Albertans of the direction it's taking, and that is merely what the three-year legislative plan would do. It would give Albertans a sense of what is next, what they can be planning for, preparing for. It is more than a little disappointing that the government – perhaps it has a secret agenda. The problem is that we don't know. They could alleviate a lot of concerns of Albertans and certainly a lot of concerns of opposition members if they would just do the right thing, provide the information to the House and provide the information to Albertans so that we can ensure that this government has the best interests of Albertans.

[Motion for a Return 18 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Health Electronic Record System

M20. Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of internal working documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Ministry of Health into creating an electronic record/information-sharing system, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Well, this is a very, very important topic and, of course, an ongoing topic of importance for Albertans and for our province, that was conducted and carried on through the previous government, the previous administration. To date I understand that somewhere between $800 million and a billion dollars has been spent on Netcare electronic records, and the oversight, the accountability, and the effectiveness makes one wonder. My hope would be that the government would accept this motion to ensure, you know, secondly, that we can get value for our tax dollars but, most importantly, that we can help Albertans, that we can make our system better, that we can make it so the technology and the expertise that are available in many, many other jurisdictions and many other organizations have an opportunity to help Albertans.

I want to talk about a couple of examples. I've heard from, as I think many in this House have, Albertans whose adult children – adult children – unfortunately passed away or sicknesses worsened because of a situation in our system where we didn't have patient-facing, patient-interfacing electronic health records. Information was not available. Information wasn't conveyed. People weren't made aware of or didn't have the access themselves to understand or to know what the initial diagnosis was or the secondary diagnosis. They didn't have the ability to see that an appointment from a GP to a specialist wasn't happening in a timely manner and were not understanding the system, not able to have the interface, not able to have the contact. My goodness. The fact that it's costing Albertans their lives is not acceptable.

I want to talk about the efficiencies and the effectiveness for a second. Alberta Innovates, actually right over here at the Matrix

Hotel, brings in speakers from around the world from time to time, and I've been to a few of them. A short time ago they brought in an administrator of six hospitals in California and Arizona that have wonderful electronic health records. The effectiveness is what I want to talk about a bit. The administrators, the managers in the system, would take a look at the success or the areas of help that different health care professionals needed or were working with, and they would use best practices. They would share this information in a way that electronic health records made possible by making the information more timely and, you know, more pertinent.

Madam Speaker, this is the kind of thing that can save Albertans' lives, can make Albertans' quality of life better. This is the kind of thing that can get us more value for the money, the 21 and a half billion dollars that we're putting into our system now. It's being done in many other jurisdictions. Previous administrations and this one have spent $800 million to a billion dollars, and we didn't get best practices. We still lack a truly comprehensive patient-facing side where Albertans could easily and securely access much of their own information, and we lack the best practices in sharing this information so that all health care professionals can get better and Albertans can benefit.

Of course, I see that the government has now added a $400 million line item to the capital plan to address some of these issues. I assume that the major capital spend in this area was accompanied by some sort of thorough internal ministry review of progress, needs, and goals. And because it's Albertans' system, because it's Albertans' health – our families, our friends, our neighbours, our community – because it's our money that goes in there, the intent behind this motion was to ensure that the government is putting in the oversight to make sure that we get the best we can for our money, especially given the enormous expense of the past and the projected future spending. I think it's only right, Madam Speaker, that we see how the dollars will be used and how they will be prioritized towards an electronic health record system, making it better.

We've also spoken extensively about performance measures and accountability metrics, and timelines for major projects are part of this. What are the timelines going to be, especially in technology, where we're behind some other jurisdictions and it changes so quickly? This House and, through us, 4.3 million Albertans deserve to see what this government hopes to accomplish and when.

Madam Speaker, I would ask the House to accept my motion for a return. Let's ensure that Albertans get the quality of health care we deserve, especially for the money we spend on it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

4:40

Ms Payne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I move that Motion for a Return 20 be amended as follows: by striking out the phrase "internal working" and by adding "excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister" after "government," so that the amended motion for a return would read as follows.

Mr. Barnes moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of documents or reports prepared by or on behalf of the government, excluding documents that constitute confidential advice to the minister, from May 22, 2015, to March 7, 2016, pertaining to the review conducted by the Ministry of Health into creating an electronic record/information-sharing system, as referenced during consideration of the Ministry of Health's main estimates on November 16, 2015.

Madam Speaker, I'm proposing this amendment to reflect our responsibilities under FOIP section 22(1) regarding cabinet and Treasury Board confidences. That section states:

The head of a public body must refuse to disclose to an applicant information that would reveal the substance of deliberations of the Executive Council or any of its committees or of the Treasury Board or any of its committees, including any advice, recommendations, policy considerations or draft legislation or regulations submitted or prepared for submission to the Executive Council or any of its committees or to the Treasury Board or any of its committees.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat on the amendment.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you again, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the associate minister for rising. Each party here acknowledges the importance of our commitment to a publicly funded health care system. As such, I want to challenge all members here to really consider who owns the health system. It isn't the government. It isn't the Ministry of Health. Of course, it isn't Alberta Health Services. It's the people. It's Albertans. It is our system. It is 4.3 million Albertans' system, and this system is ultimately accountable and beholden to the people and not the other way.

I find it interesting that under the umbrella of this public system, the internal working documents will not be provided and that there is a drive to defend secrecy and a push for less transparency and not more. Madam Speaker, it's especially important when we think of the accountability and the oversight that the already $800 million, soon to be somewhere around $1.2 billion, that has gone into this system has not achieved what other jurisdictions have achieved with less money, has not achieved everything we need so that some Alberta families suffer grave, grave consequences. Accountability and oversight depend on transparency between the government and the public. The information must flow to the owners of the system, all of us, and that is not just those in the House.

I found the associate minister's comments on FOIP interesting. My goodness. I think of how long it takes to get a FOIP request back. I look at, you know, how much it costs. Sometimes you can prove it's in the public interest and get your money back; sometimes you can't. Either way it's a time and a money constraint. Madam Speaker, FOIP is typically a tool of last resort. It's typically a tool of last resort to access information that is not already available. Besides, it's not the FOIP rules that we're discussing here today. What we're discussing is how transparent governments should be. In theory, with more voluntary openness from government FOIP should be less necessary. FOIP exists to access the information government, obviously, doesn't want to get out in the first place. Fortunately, a lot of times it comes out, so people can have a better look at the system and what their tax dollars get them or don't get them.

This government could just step up to do the appropriate thing by offering all Albertans, through the powers vested in this House, a greater degree of transparency, control, and accountability over their systems. But the government has decided to not provide some internal working agreements that, Madam Speaker, could go a long, long way – a long, long way – to ensuring that Albertans with expertise in this area, Albertans that have families and friends that have paid a huge price because we haven't been as good as we could have been could go some distance and make that happen.

Madam Speaker, I will be against the amendment, and I would hope and encourage the government to be more open in their dealings.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to this very important question. As I alluded earlier, we are continuing to see a trend of the government answering the questions that it would like to provide the answers to and not the questions that are asked by members of this House and a real deflection of getting information out to Albertans.

As my colleague so eloquently spoke about, the importance around these electronic records and information-sharing systems and the great expense to very little results that we've seen thus far – the minister referenced the fact that there was a review under way. It's my guess and expectation of Albertans that they should be privy to the information that's included in that review. While I know that we've heard from the Minister of Health that they prefer to operate in voice mode, the very fact that – I mean, it's unlikely that any of these documents that they're claiming caucus confidentiality on actually exist because they likely operated in voice mode anyway. The real point here, Madam Speaker, is that these are very important pieces of information that ought to be produced and provided to the House.

Madam Speaker, I might just point out that while the government would like to use the FOIP legislation as cover, it in fact isn't required to apply to an Assembly's ability to require the attendance of a witness or order the production of documents. I would just, you know, like to briefly point out in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition, 2009, page 136:

The Rights to Institute Inquiries, to Require the Attendance of Witnesses and to Order the Production of Documents.

By virtue of the Preamble and section 18 of the Constitution Act, 1867, Parliament has the ability to institute its own inquiries, to require the attendance of witnesses and to order the production of documents, rights which are fundamental to its proper functioning. These rights are as old as Parliament itself . . .

The only limitations, which could . . . be self-imposed, would be that any inquiry should relate to a subject within the legislative competence of Parliament, particularly where witnesses and documents are required . . .

Then it goes on to talk about the penal jurisdiction of Parliament, of contempt.

This dovetails with the right of [the] House of Parliament to summon and compel the attendance of all persons within the limits of their jurisdictions.

It's critically important.

The fact of the matter is that the government has the ability to produce the documents that the Assembly has asked for, and all that needs to happen is that the government members need to say: "You know what? This is important to Albertans, and the Assembly is going to require the production of documents."

But my guess, Madam Speaker, is that while we are clearly on private members' business, government members on that side of the House will choose today to not respect the tradition of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice and not require the government to produce the documents because the Assembly has summonsed them and that they will agree with the associate minister and say: "Oh, you know what? There's the FOIP Act, so we, you know, don't really want to provide the opposition members with the information that they asked for."

I think it's unfortunate. I think that Albertans expect better from this new government. I know that when this government was elected, they were elected on a ticket of transparency, of openness, and what we're seeing is the same thing that we saw from the dying days of the previous, third-party's government. It's more than a bit disappointing. I will be pleased to support my colleague in his efforts to get information that Albertans so richly deserve.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow on the amendment.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise to support my colleagues on the opposition side here and speak against the amendment. The information that the hon. member is seeking is of urgent interest to the people of Alberta. The project which we are discussing here, the electronic health record project, has been going on for far too long, has cost far too much money, and Albertans are left wondering why it is that we can transact business online with our banks, our most sensitive, private financial information, with great ease from anywhere in the world, yet this government is still unable to put together an electronic health record. Now, I don't deny for one second that there are many considerations around security and privacy, that are absolutely urgent, to be dealt with, but this is not the first time something like this has been done.

While I am sure the government has an instinct to try to hide as much of that behind freedom of information or perhaps the lack of freedom of information as they possibly can, it is disappointing that when a party moves from this spot in the Legislature where I stand currently to that side of the Legislature, they seem to adopt an entirely different mindset. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that when I move to that side of the house, I will be as open as I possibly can. I will do that following the next election, when the people of Alberta select the Alberta Party as their next government.

But in all sincerity, I think that open data and open information ought to be a hallmark of government. Far too much information is hidden behind freedom of information. Again, it seems to be the freedom to withhold information for the government for their own purposes. I would like to see a model where information in government is open by default and only closed in rare exceptions. I think Albertans would not only find that there's a lot of very interesting information hidden behind there, but I think it makes for far better government. You might be amazed by what the people of Alberta could do with that open data. They could write apps; they could come up with all kinds of ideas and ways of making government more efficient and more effective if only you would listen.

This is a situation, a scenario which is calling out for the government to be more open, and I'm profoundly disappointed that the government chooses to amend questions to suit their interests rather than the public interest of the province of Alberta. So I will vote against this amendment. I encourage all members on the government side to perhaps surprise everyone on Halloween and scare their House leaders and vote against this amendment and support the importance of open data and open information.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Cyberbullying Awareness

507. Mr. Dang moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take steps to increase awareness in Alberta's schools of the effects of cyberbullying.

[Debate adjourned May 30: Mr. Smith speaking]

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in favour of this important motion. According to a 2016 Angus Reid poll one-third of Canadians who use social media have been harassed or bullied online. For members of the LGBTQ-plus community and for visible minorities these numbers are even higher, with 58 per cent of respondents that identify as members of the LGBTQ-plus community reporting online harassments and 38 per cent of visible minority respondents experiencing harassment. These statistics are appalling, but it's even worse for Canadian youth. According to the Ipsos-Reid survey more than 50 per cent of Canadian teenagers reported negative experiences on social networks.

Canadians are facing sweeping sociological problems, and our leaders are failing at a structural level to give our youth the tools that they need to grow into socially responsible and well-adjusted adults. Bullying during youth can have a wide range of negative effects well into adulthood. Bullying can lead to depression, aggressive behaviours, low self-esteem, social anxiety, loneliness, isolation, stress-related health problems, school absenteeism, academic problems, and, tragically, too many teens are contemplating, attempting, or committing suicide in response to the strain of intense cyberbullying.

The world that our children are growing up in is becoming increasingly complicated. Our children are increasingly connected online. The value that our youth place on online connections is also ever increasing. In cases of intense cyberbullying the comment to "just turn it off and go outside and play" isn't a solution. Teens use their computers for homework, to interact with their friends, to play games, to stay in touch with distant relatives. It's not just a choice to go online, but to some degree it's a requirement of modern life.

As this race to embrace new, constantly evolving technologies moves forward, Canadians are becoming increasingly vulnerable. Social media is a world in itself, and that has changed so rapidly and continuously defies conventional social boundaries. As a mother of two young men I'm acutely aware of the asymmetry of information between even myself and my sons when it comes to technology, and I know that I'm not alone. There's a significant information asymmetry at times between students and their parents or their guardians or their teachers or authority figures. This divide in technical expertise can leave some adults completely in the dark when it comes to our children's online realities. We need to give our teachers, parents, and students the tools to deal with online bullying.

It's really important that young Albertans know how and when to remove themselves from online conversations that have turned unhealthy. Our youth need to learn to identify these conversations and how to communicate their issues with a trusted adult or anonymously through the Kids Help Phone. Those adults that the youth confide in need to have the technological literacy to ask the right questions and offer real solutions. Our youth need to know how to track these conversations through screenshots or just to simply write things down. Our youth need to be educated in what constitutes a criminal offence, like a threat or even sexual exploitation, and, even more importantly, to whom and how to report these offences. Many social media sites offer options to users to report bullying, as do telephone service providers, and our youth need to know what their options are for dealing with these cyberbullies.

I think probably one of the most important things that our kids need to be taught is the role of the bystander and how that can help. When they see victimization, they are able to act on that as a bystander. Cyberbullying occurs in a variety of ways, as we know. There are websites that mock individuals or the posting of embarrassing videos or photos. According to the Red Cross 85 per cent of bullying incidents happen in front of other people. According to research by the Kids Help Phone 60 per cent of the time that bullying will stop within 10 seconds when someone steps in. This is the type of information that our youth need to be empowered with.

There is a recent story about a team of Alberta high school students, and they developed an app that was designed to curb cyberbullying, called the Sentiment Keyboard. It was developed by Jacob Reckhard, Christopher West, and Ibrahim Elmallah. The app was designed to detect negative language, and it gives the sender the option to reconsider their choice of words, and the algorithm actually analyzes the sentences and formulates a total negativity score. The Sentiment Keyboard was created to add a layer of awareness, encouraging the user to think about the impact that their words might have on others. It actually places the responsibility on the person who is using those words, and it also empowers the writer to make better choices by having that added layer of conscience.

It was a very inspiring story to read, and I think it speaks, more importantly, to empowering our youth to make good decisions. The youth actually – I mean, they're the ones who are promoting this. They are very much our teachers in this. They want to do more, and we need to help them with the tools to do more. I believe that together we can make a positive impact and increase awareness in Alberta of the effects of cyberbullying, and what can be done to help them is an important step.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the Minister of Human Services.

5:20

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to stand today to support Motion 507, which encourages the government to take steps to increase awareness of cyberbullying and the effects of this unsavoury practice in Alberta schools. I have watched this issue evolve from my time as an officer on Alberta streets, where at first I used to deal with basic uttering threats and bullying complaints. This behaviour then moved to the Internet, where bullying became prevalent, especially on Facebook and then Twitter. It was during this time that complaints about threats increased exponentially.

Now what I see is that bullying has gotten completely out of hand, in politics, too, as many of us know. Through fake online accounts people can abuse and manipulate others anonymously. I often wonder if cyberbullies even realize that their targets are people with feelings and families. It has become so serious that citizens, most notably young people, have committed suicide because the attacks have injured and humiliated them to their core. Something has to be done to gain control over this societal scourge. There is no one solution, but there are various avenues that we can take, and they involve – I know that I’m sounding like a broken record – three key pillars: education, prevention, and intervention.

Motion 507 suggests that we focus education and prevention programs on children, and I agree. Teaching children about cyberbullying is critical because they are at such an impressionable stage in their development. Educating them may help them deal with it if it happens to them. It may also curb their interest to engage in it. Furthermore, when we educate our children, they in turn educate their siblings and their parents. Young people who believe in a cause can become our society’s most effective lobbyists, and I mean lobbyists in a good way.

Online bullying took most of us by surprise because we did not grow up with the technology and programs that have allowed it to occur and proliferate, but our children are growing up with it. Do we want bullying to become part of their expectations of life? Of course we don’t. We must teach them early on that some of the behaviour evident in this world is wrong and hurtful. I would argue that we have an obligation to do this. Because young children are vulnerable and easily influenced, we have a responsibility to keep them safe. We have an obligation to teach them well.

My friend Rick Hanson, the former chief of police in Calgary, was a man ahead of his time. He, for instance, placed police constables in all levels of schools. This step was never about putting a seven-year-old in jail; he did it because when a child is facing a crisis, an officer is available to help that child. Police can tap into a whole complement of support for a child, from health care to social workers to mental health supports and much, much more.

I believe there are few larger responsibilities in our society than ensuring the welfare of a child. It hurts me to see children hurt either physically or emotionally, and because of my time on the streets as a police officer, I have seen too many young people hurt. My experience has taught me that if we can intervene and help a child at a young age, then we are helping society in the long run. When you deal with a 17-year-old who has gotten themselves into trouble with the law, it is difficult to intervene and turn them around. At this age a young person has usually been on a path towards a crisis for many, many years. But if we reach out to them early, there’s more of a likelihood that they will take a positive path, and when that occurs, all of society will benefit.

Through our Education Act we already have policies to curtail and deal with bullying in our schools, and I see Motion 507 as a natural extension of the previous work, and I fully support it. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today and speak in support of Motion 507. Cyberbullying refers to using technology or social media to engage in actions or behaviours intended to cause harm, fear, or distress. Let me begin by saying that such actions or behaviours are unacceptable.

Social media has changed how we communicate with each other, and it has changed the way bullying may occur because social media offers a false sense of anonymity. Some may be inclined to say things through social media which they may otherwise not say.

Cyberbullying can spread instantly and can remain online indefinitely, and there are studies and evidence that shows its existence and prevalence in our society. As many as 70 per cent of youth report having been cyberbullied, and 40 per cent of youth admit to being mean online according to the Canadian study Cyberbullying: Our Kids’ New Reality. Further, the 2016 prevention of family violence and bullying survey, that was referred to by my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View, revealed that 58 per cent of Albertans believe cyberbullying occurs in their communities. A couple of things that came out very positive from that survey were that the parents who say that they encourage their children to be respectful of people who are different from themselves have increased by 2 percentage points this year, making it 100 per cent. Also, awareness went up 6 percentage points to stand at 92 per cent.

Cyberbullying takes a toll on its victims, their families, and communities, and it comes with a high cost that we all pay in one way or another socially, emotionally, and economically. Because cyberbullying affects us all, we all have a role to play in ending it. In the same survey 81 per cent of respondents believe bullying prevention should be an urgent priority for the provincial government.

One way to prevent bullying and cyberbullying is by promoting healthy relationships. The province is continuing to develop resources that promote healthy relationships. At the same time we also provide resources for those who are being bullied or know somebody who is. There is 24-hour toll-free bullying helpline at 1.888.456.2323, and alberta.ca hosts an online chat line and numerous info sheets. There are several web-based resources that provide information to school-aged children and youth and their parents. Community-based supports are provided through six taking action on bullying sites that partner parent link centres with local schools to teach children, youth, and adults strategies to address bullying. Funding is provided to train youth to promote healthy relationships through the Shift healthy relationship plus program. Since 2012, 35,600 Alberta youth have graduated.

But we can always do more to promote inclusion and ensure welcoming, caring, respectful, and safe environments for our children. This is why my ministry supports the mental health capacity-building sites provided in partnership with Health and Education. This includes staffing and supports to implement integrated school-based community mental health promotion, prevention, and early intervention programs. More recently we also provided funds to 14 projects through the family and community safety grant program, totalling $1.6 million. These projects focus on promoting healthy relationships and prevent bullying.

Madam Speaker, I believe that we all have a responsibility to promote healthy relationships and prevent bullying in our schools, workplaces, homes, and in our community, and our government is committed to doing just that.

Thank you. Thank you very much.

5:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in favour of Motion 507. I look forward to this whole Assembly supporting the ongoing work that is done by strong, dedicated Albertans. They're already working hard to fight cyberbullying, and we are working together to bring that awareness to that very, very serious, very real problem.

People like my new neighbours, Bailey Dunbar and her mother, Natasha Dunbar: they have taken up the fight because Bailey is a suicide survivor. One day when she came home, she knew that something was wrong with her sister. She felt something in the pit of her stomach. This is her identical twin sister. She came home, and she found that her sister had died by suicide. Morgan was bullied all through school. She was called terrible names. Her mom, Natasha, tried to get her daughter help, but unfortunately she fell through the cracks.

They could remain angry, but they don't. They work. They worked hard by starting Morgan's Mission, a nonprofit that strives to raise awareness of cyberbullying in an effort to save others. They work with the city of Fort Saskatchewan, and just this past September the mayor, Gale Katchur, signed a proclamation from the city to recognize World Suicide Prevention Day. They held a candlelight vigil that night to remember the lost, and they walked and rallied to remind us all that the battle continues.

Natasha and her daughter Bailey struggle at times, but they're often visited by Morgan when a ladybug lands on Bailey's face while waiting for the bus or when Natasha finds Morgan's favourite stone in a purse of hers, that she thought she had lost.

I rise to tell this story because we need to remember who we're fighting for and that we're all connected. Through this, we believe in the values of inclusion, and we believe in the value of having healthy workplaces, healthy schools, and healthy homes and communities. It's these stories that we need to be reminded of, that there is a real cost, a human cost, when we work to do this.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 8(3) the mover of the motion has five minutes to close debate, so I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to start off by thanking all the hon. members who spoke today in the House because this is an issue that is so close to my heart. This is an issue that I care so deeply about because this is something that we are seeing every single day in our schools, in our communities, and in our families. When we talk about cyberbullying, we're really talking about promoting healthy relationships and preventing bullying all through our society. As was made clear today, every member of this House understands that probably more than anybody else as we see online harassment throughout our jobs and throughout our lives every day.

When I first came up with the idea for this motion, Madam Speaker, I said: I have to go to the people who are affected by this the most, and I need to talk to them about this. That's why I went to talk to principals. I talked to teachers, I talked to parents, and then I went and talked to students. What I learned when I talked to students was that something needs to change.

Education and awareness are essential, but beyond that, technology has absolutely changed the game of how we see bullying. I say that as somebody who was in school not too long ago, Madam Speaker, but even since then – when I was in school and in my younger years, we used MSN Messenger, and then you'd have to get off MSN Messenger when your sister wanted to make a phone call. Then when I moved into my junior high and high school years, you were on Facebook, you were on Twitter, you were texting. Whatever it was, you were using some form of communication.

When I was in school, I saw every day my friends engaging in so much of this communication, engaging in so much of this discussion, and some of that was negative. Some of that was so negative that I saw my friends struggle with mental health. I saw my friends struggle through making sure they were performing well in their classes and trying to ignore it.

The discussion that says, "Well, just turn off your phone and ignore it" or "Just turn off your laptop and walk away" is not the reality, Madam Speaker. We need to be working with our educators. We need to be working with our parents, our teachers, our friends to be able to have those conversations about: what is cyberbullying? How does cyberbullying affect our students and our peers? That reality is different today, Madam Speaker.

The days of cyberbullying are just beginning. The conversations that we need to develop and have moving forward are just in their infancy right now, Madam Speaker. Technology isn't going anywhere. This is the future, and when I go out and I see my friends still in university right now and they have these conversations – as we move forward, we know that there needs to be a lot of change. Last week there was a suicide attempt at the University of Alberta. Last year one of my friends committed suicide at the University of Alberta. What we see every single day when we go out into our classes and into our friendships and our relationships is that we need to take action.

That's why I do want to thank everybody who commented today because these are the issues that are going to be affecting our youth for years to come. These are the issues that we as government and we as educators and people that care really do need to act on. It's really my pleasure to be able to introduce this to the House today, and it's one of those issues that is, I think, going to make a difference for Albertans across this entire province and something that we need to lead on as a province.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 507 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. On that very positive and constructive unanimous note I think we may as well not tempt fate and call it 6 o'clock. So I move that we adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:38 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

10 a.m.

Tuesday, November 1, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

Prayers

The Speaker: Good morning.

Let us commit ourselves to work together with determination but also with compassion and understanding as we carry out our duties to serve Albertans and those who visit us in this great province that we proudly share and call home.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Motions

Adjournment of Fall Session

22. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 3(9) the second session of the 29th Legislature 2016 fall sitting of the Assembly be extended beyond the first Thursday in December until such time as or when the Government House Leader advises the Assembly that the business for the sitting is concluded, and at such time the Assembly stands adjourned.

[Government Motion 22 carried]

Constituency Week

23. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that, notwithstanding Standing Order 3(6), the only constituency week for the 2016 fall sitting shall be held the week of November 14, 2016, with the Assembly reconvening on Monday, November 21, 2016.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In speaking to the motion, I would just note that per Government Motion 22 the government expects to sit past the regular rise date of December 1 in order to complete the business of the House. Motion 23 simply ensures that the extension is not interrupted by a constituency week.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The House leader for the Official Opposition.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good morning. I rise to speak just very briefly to the motion. I encourage my colleagues to support the motion; however, I just would like to address a couple of quick comments from the Minister of Justice. She said that the session not be disrupted by a constituency week as though meeting with our constituents is a disruption to the legislative process. I think nothing could be further from the truth, that these constituency weeks are, in fact, a very important part of the process. I just hope that that wasn't the minister's intention.

The other thing that I might just briefly add is that it would be very helpful in the era of, from what I understand of the government, trying to be a much more family-friendly Assembly – these legislative sessions are not a surprise to the government. They know that they are coming. It would be helpful if when the calendar is set out at the beginning of the year, they would do a much better job of working towards those dates and making sure that the necessary arrangements are made in advance of the first day of session.

Those things would be helpful in the future, but I do encourage all my colleagues to support this motion.

The Speaker: Are there any other persons wishing to speak to Government Motion 23?

Hearing none, the Minister of Justice on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think that there is anything additional to add.

[Government Motion 23 carried]

Morning Sitting Adjournment

24. Ms Ganley moved on behalf of Mr. Mason:
Be it resolved that on Thursday, November 3, 2016, the morning sitting of the Assembly stand adjourned at 10:45 a.m.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is in order to allow us to attend a Remembrance Day ceremony.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to rise because this doesn't happen all too often, where I publicly thank the ...

The Speaker: Hon. member, I neglected to tell you that this is a nondebatable motion.

Mr. Cooper: It's okay. I didn't want to thank them anyway.

The Speaker: Nice try. I didn't go trick-or-treating last night as long as you did.

[Government Motion 24 carried]

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce the Modernized Municipal Government Act, or Bill 21, for second reading. I tabled the Modernized Municipal Government Act last May so that hon. members and all Albertans had time to review the changes, to ask questions, and to provide their feedback on the proposed amendments.

Over the summer my team and I travelled across this great province, from Peace River to Medicine Hat and 18 other communities in between, to meet with the public, municipal leaders, business, and industry to get their thoughts and feedback on the proposed changes. More than 2,400 Albertans attended the sessions in communities both large and small. We also received over 2,300 survey responses and 122 written submissions from municipalities, businesses and industry, civil society groups, and members of the public. My team compiled all of that feedback and released a what-we-heard summary on our website last month.

Because the MGA touches every single Albertan in some way, it was valuable to have so many people attend our engagement sessions and to hear their feedback both in person and online. I want to thank everyone who took the time to provide their input and for their interest in ensuring that municipalities have the tools and resources they need to build strong, sustainable communities for Alberta families.

10:10

Alberta has been in the process of updating the Municipal Government Act for more than three years now. The last major review of the MGA prior to that was completed more than two decades ago and does not reflect new economic realities, changes in technology, or evolving municipal roles and responsibilities. Municipalities are at the grassroots of creating stronger, more dynamic communities, and we know that they need robust, forward-looking legislation to meet the changing needs of Albertans. The act is Alberta's second-largest piece of legislation and touches the lives of every single person in this province. It guides how we pay for our roads, where we build our schools, and how we develop strong communities to raise our families.

This Modernized Municipal Government Act is a culmination of nearly four years of comprehensive review and consultation with municipalities, local citizens and businesses, community organizations, the oil and gas sector, builders and developers, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. This forward-looking and innovative piece of legislation contains a number of policy shifts. Municipalities will now form regional partnerships to better serve Albertans. Municipalities will have new tools to build better, more complete communities. The act will also support small business and increase industry competitiveness, and it will enhance municipal accountability. Colleagues, with this modernization of the Municipal Government Act we are turning a new page and beginning a new era of local government in Alberta.

As I noted, a key focus of the Modernized Municipal Government Act is on working together, growing together, and making Alberta better together. The previous structure of the MGA led to municipalities working against each other instead of working with each other. Instead of duplicating costly services, the revised MGA will require municipalities to come together through municipal partnerships to find new and innovative ways to integrate services, manage growth, and use land to become better environmental stewards.

Fundamentally, we recognize that our communities are interconnected and that they transcend municipal boundaries. It's very important that political leaders both in municipal government and provincial government recognize this because Albertans recognize this. Albertans are not focused on where lines are drawn on a map. They want efficient, effective services. Period. It is time to collaborate on the planning and funding of services that have a regional benefit whether they exist in municipality A or municipality B.

The Modernized Municipal Government Act will usher in a new era where municipalities are required to form regional partnerships to better serve Albertans. The metropolitan regions of Calgary and Edmonton will do this through mandatory growth management boards. Those two regions are the fastest growing in Alberta, with nearly 75 per cent of the population living in the Calgary or Edmonton area. This creates increased pressures both on the natural and built environments. Growth management boards will address these issues by developing collaborative approaches to the delivery and equitable funding of services.

These boards will also develop a growth plan for the region to help ensure the preservation of agricultural lands and the wise use of the environment. These boards will take a collaborative and co-ordinated approach to economic development, which will strengthen regional economies and support Alberta jobs, because increasingly regions and municipalities must collaborate to compete on a global scale. Growth management boards are a step forward. They're a step forward for smart growth, a step forward for economic development, and a step forward for protecting agricultural lands.

Outside of the metropolitan regions of Calgary and Edmonton, municipalities will develop intermunicipal collaboration frameworks. These frameworks will ensure that neighbouring municipalities partner on land-use planning, co-ordinate services of a regional benefit, and equitably fund those services. With a growing number of families in our provinces, a collaborative approach to service delivery and land-use planning is needed now more than ever before. Instead of unnecessary duplication of services, municipalities will now work together to deliver more effective, efficient services to their communities.

During challenging times Albertans expect their governments to manage the public purse and avoid duplication of services. Municipalities should work together to ensure that every dollar goes as far as possible. Greater regional collaboration through the MGA has been celebrated by municipalities, business, and the public as a step forward. Albertans are served better when their leaders work together, and that is just what we're going to ensure happens.

Alberta continues to grow. More than 4 million people now consider this province home, and our population is expected to jump by another million within the coming decade. As our population increases, we are facing a number of growth pressures, and one of the most complex and most pressing is affordable housing. Every person in our province deserves a safe, affordable place to call home. Affordable housing is an important part of the social and economic infrastructure of municipalities. It helps to attract and maintain a diverse workforce, which in turn ensures economic development and sustainability. There are more than 30,000 Albertans on waiting lists for affordable housing, and our government is taking action.

Through the modernized MGA our government is keeping another platform commitment and will enable inclusionary housing, which will allow municipalities to reserve a portion of new development for affordable housing. This important tool is used across North America and around the world to increase affordable housing and promote inclusive, complete communities. We want to ensure that Alberta's municipalities have strong, diverse housing markets that support not only their economic and social well-being but also their sustainability. Affordable housing is a critical need that has long been ignored. This step will allow municipalities and developers to work together to find solutions to this enduring problem.

Colleagues, Albertans want more than just houses; they want real neighbourhoods to call home. Changes to the MGA will help to make this happen by giving growing municipalities tools to ensure that new communities are built in a way that creates real neighbourhoods for families, Mr. Speaker, neighbourhoods that are kept safe by police and firefighters at nearby stations and ones where hockey practice is held around the corner and not across the city. To do this, off-site levies will see an overhaul. These one-time fees paid by developers are currently only collected for roads, water, sewer, and storm sewer systems, but Alberta's growth has created a demand for community facilities and services outside of these four infrastructure pillars.

The MGA is being amended to allow municipalities to collect off-site levies for community recreation facilities, fire halls, police stations, and libraries. Levies for these facilities can only be applied if the new development receives at least 30 per cent of the benefit of those facilities. This balanced approach will make sure the fire halls, swimming pools and services that Albertans need are there when they move in. These changes to the MGA will result in more complete, inclusive communities for Alberta families, communities where Albertans have an affordable place to call home, access to the infrastructure they need, and where growth is funded in a collaborative way.

Supporting Alberta business is one of the four key pillars of the Alberta jobs plan, and the modernized MGA supports this initiative. Right now all businesses are charged the same property tax rate regardless of their size. Changes to the MGA will empower municipalities to create a more flexible property tax framework between small and large businesses. This change will make life easier for small businesses and allow them to do what they do best, which is to support their communities and create jobs. Small businesses comprise 95 per cent of all businesses in Alberta and are responsible for 35 per cent of all private-sector employment in the province. This policy change, supported by many local leaders, will give communities another tool to build strong local economies tailored to their local realities.

Supporting our municipalities also means supporting the industries that their residents depend on. The updated MGA will increase industry competitiveness by linking nonresidential and residential tax rates. Municipalities currently have complete flexibility to set tax rates for different types of properties. This has created situations where nonresidential tax rates are significantly higher than residential tax rates, in some cases more than 10 times higher. The new MGA will take steps to end this imbalance and promote more accountability. We will be establishing a maximum ratio of 5 to 1 between nonresidential and residential property taxes. These changes to the MGA support Alberta businesses as we build a more resilient, diversified economy for the future.

One of the things we heard clearly from Albertans in the MGA review was a need to improve transparency and enhance municipal accountability. Like British Columbia did in 1995 and Ontario did in 2015, we are expanding the mandate of the Alberta Ombudsman to include the investigation of complaints about municipal actions or decisions. This will allow Albertans to bring matters of concern to the attention of an impartial third party that can investigate issues as necessary. It creates an additional accountability mechanism for municipalities and gives Albertans another resource to have their local concerns addressed in a fair, efficient, and transparent manner.

I am very proud of all the work that has gone into this review and of the progressive, forward-looking policy shifts in the Modernized Municipal Government Act. After second reading and debate on Bill 21 we intend to introduce House amendments to strengthen the Modernized Municipal Government Act. These amendments will reflect the feedback we heard this past summer. Many of these proposals are based on smart suggestions from engaged citizens and stakeholders we heard during our summer engagement tour.

Before any of the changes and amendments are proclaimed, there are approximately 45 regulations that will need further review and development before the Modernized Municipal Government Act is complete. These regulations will be developed and drafted over the coming months and posted online for public review and feedback in 2017 prior to final adoption. This will provide another avenue for local leaders, business, industry, and the public to help shape the future of municipal governance in Alberta. All changes to the MGA, including regulations, will be proclaimed before municipal elections in the fall of 2017.

This modernized MGA empowers local governments and strengthens community collaboration. It is a piece of legislation we can all be proud of. It is one that takes us from a winner-take-all approach to where all of us win. I'm confident that Alberta will set the bar for outstanding, forward-thinking municipal governance legislation in Canada with Bill 21. Bill 21 will support municipalities in their work to build a stronger, more prosperous province for all Albertans, and I hope for all-party support in its passage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, I believe, has a request.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to request unanimous consent to revert to some introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

Mrs. Schreiner: Good morning, Mr. Speaker and fellow members. It is my distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you several members of the board of governors for the 2019 Canada Winter Games, being hosted in Red Deer 821 days from today. Visiting us today are Lyn Radford, board chair, 2019 Canada Winter Games; Scott Robinson, CEO, 2019 Canada Winter Games; Scott Fraser with Alberta Sport Connection and 2019 Canada Winter Games board member; Tom Quinn, chairman of the Canada Games Council; Mary Anne Jablonski, 2019 Canada Winter Games board member. I would ask that my guests please stand and receive the traditional recognition of this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome and thank you for your contributions.

Hon. members, for those who may not be aware, a former Deputy Speaker of this House.

Thank you for being here.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and good morning to all. It's my pleasure this morning to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, at second reading.

Before I begin my comments, actually, Mr. Speaker, on the bill specifically, I want to start by recognizing that Bill 21 is the culmination of years of review, study, and feedback. The entire process involved thousands of people and thousands of hours of debate and discussion across the province. I'd like to take a quick moment to acknowledge the dedicated work of Municipal Affairs' staff, local municipalities and their staff, industry stakeholders, and all the individual Albertans who worked so hard on this bill. Thank you. It is also important, I think, to mention that it was the previous government that began this review, and it's important for them to be recognized for their important work on this file. Thank you very much for that as well.

The Municipal Government Act, or the MGA, I've spent many years on. I will refer to it today as one of the largest pieces of legislation that Alberta has on the books, so it's somewhat fitting that Bill 21, which proposes to amend large sections of the MGA, weighs in at 123 pages. It is a huge, huge document to be looking at. While it's impossible for me to provide in 20 minutes comment and feedback on all the different changes, proposals, and edits, I will offer as much insight as I can in the time I have remaining and allow my esteemed colleagues on their own to look at and focus on specific areas of the bill which we have identified, which I hope will allow for deeper debate and discussion in both second reading and Committee of the Whole.

To start, then, the government has organized the proposed MGA changes into three broad groups based on the following: firstly, how municipalities govern themselves; secondly, how they plan to develop and grow; and thirdly, how municipalities are funded.

First, then, I will begin my comments by addressing the question of governance. According to the MGA website, "the amendments that fall under this question aim to improve municipal accountability, transparency, and viability, as well as reframe the relationship between municipalities and the Province." Well, that is for certain. It does attempt to do that. My caucus colleagues and I welcome some of these proposed changes and feel that the preamble that is suggested adds an important improvement to the language of the MGA, and it establishes more explicitly the type of relationship the province will foster with its municipal partners. I would like to make an important note, however. Just as the language and tone set by the preamble are an important improvement, there must be real, concrete actions by the provincial government that follow, for words without action are meaningless.

There are a number of additional items that fall under the governance category which I will take a moment to mention here, as my caucus colleagues will be more detailed, as I've said. First of all, the province proposes to expand the mandate of the Alberta Ombudsman to include municipalities. There's already a system in place, as most of the people in this room know and most of the Alberta municipalities know, of how municipalities govern themselves and what kinds of communications are available to residents. But this would provide, despite all of that, Albertans with an additional avenue to address their concerns with procedural fairness without having to undertake the onerous task of obtaining a petition, as an example, signed by 20 per cent of the municipal electorate before anyone in government will review a complaint about a municipality.

It's important to note that the municipalities have already worked, again, in many ways to address this issue themselves. As an example, a number of the larger municipalities have municipal auditors, and in the case of Calgary an integrity and ethics officer. Notwithstanding the work done by some municipalities, we must, though, ensure there are mechanisms that ensure that decisions by their local government are fair. I suggest that this is probably why the Ombudsman has been suggested as one alternative.

I personally believe there's an education gap sometimes between the citizenry and the elected officials themselves with regard to council roles and responsibilities. I'm happy to see that the province identified this issue as well through their proposal to establish minimum standards for elected official orientation and training. The current proposal is that municipalities must offer their elected officials training and orientation after all municipal, general, and by-elections.

As a former municipal councillor for the MD of Foothills I don't like that the province has left the municipalities to determine whether they should make it mandatory for their elected officials to attempt. A lot of the feedback that we have received expressed a desire to see mandatory training, and I may have an amendment actually to table during the Committee of the Whole to reflect that.

The other major proposed changes that fall under this category are strengthening the impartiality of local appeal boards by prohibiting municipal councillors from forming the majority on any municipal appeal board or individual hearing panel. I hope that all members will join me and support me with this change. I think this is a good idea. It's long been indicated that the apprehension of bias and so on is so important, and I think this really, really puts this into a concrete form. However, I'm wary of the proposed changes to municipally controlled corporations. While my caucus and I agree that there is a place for a municipality to own its corporations, specifically utilities, I'm concerned that the province's removal of many of its approval mechanisms will result in municipalities entering competitive markets, which will only serve to hurt Alberta's already struggling economy, in our view.

Moving forward, I'd like to move on to the second category, how municipalities plan, develop, and grow. The MGA review website describes amendments that fall into this category as aiming "to improve municipal relationships, planning processes, and local decision-making," yet there are serious concerns across Alberta from several quarters on that statement. This category of amendments arguably proposes the most fundamental change to the planning division of the Municipal Government Act. The introduction of mandatory growth management boards, compulsory intermunicipal collaboration, and removing the small municipality exemption from the requirement of municipal development plans are just three examples of the many changes this government has proposed on how municipalities plan to grow and develop.

Firstly, and most importantly, the Capital Region Board is the only mandatory growth management board, or GMB, legislated by the MGA today. Now Bill 21 proposes a mandatory growth management board for the Calgary metropolitan area, yet the details, including membership, mandate, and scope, have yet to be released. This presents a significant change in how municipalities around Calgary may interact and relate to one another and, in fact, as it stands today without the details, removes some flexibility and autonomy from municipalities' ability to govern themselves. These are serious concerns by municipalities in the Calgary region.

Again, as a former municipal councillor I understand the importance of regional collaboration. Let me underline that. I understand the importance of regional collaboration, and so does Wildrose. We are and I am a strong believer in regional co-operation. Let me underline that. However, I have some serious concerns and questions regarding the growth management boards, including: which municipalities will be members? Will any member municipality hold an actual or de facto veto? What type of voting structure will be used? Will member municipalities be able to abstain from voting? Is there a dispute resolution process? If not, why not? What will be the mandate and scope of this new growth board?

Mr. Speaker, therefore, unfortunately, until these questions are answered and the rules around growth management boards are established by the government, it's impossible for us and our caucus and municipalities in the region to remain anything but skeptical and very concerned on this proposed change, and it has been that way for years.

As the minister knows and her department knows and a lot of people in this room know, this particular item has been one that has been argued for over a decade and a half. It was a system that they're returning to that was flawed in previous times, and therefore a lot of people involved today still remain worried about returning to a system that didn't work before.

I had actually hoped that the governance details would be included in the bill, but so much is left to the regulations and backroom negotiations that it's hard to really know what is going to happen. All stakeholders remain very confused on this. For such a major policy proposal I would have hoped, like in the rest of the MGA, that they would have addressed some of these concerns and included the details in the legislation itself. Let's be clear. In the original MGA, as it is prior to this amendment, many, many of the functions and processes for municipal governments are very clearly defined. In this occasion it is not. This type of forced regionalization was problematic, as I said, in the '80s and '90s, and unless these adverse effects are properly addressed, this form of centralized control will remain problematic, just like it was in the '80s and '90s.

As I just mentioned, another major policy change proposal in this Bill 21 is the introduction of intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, or ICFs. Under the current MGA municipalities are not obligated to collaborate or co-operate with one another at all, yet they do. While most municipalities do have intermunicipal development plan agreements, or IDPs, outlining how they plan to develop and collaboratively work over the medium- to long-term solutions, it's not universal across the province. That is for sure. In fact, there are a number of municipalities that for one reason or another have no relationship with their neighbouring municipalities whatsoever. It is these outliers that the proposed ICFs plan to address, I'm thinking. Bill 21 provides municipalities with two years to negotiate these, which must address land-use planning in addition to planning, delivery, and funding of regional services and infrastructure. Should the municipalities fail to agree, as is proposed, to an ICF in that time, the third year is provided for arbitration, which will impose an ICF unilaterally, I understand.

I will repeat what I've said previously. I'm a big believer in regional collaboration; however, there are simply too many variables here, again, left unaddressed for me to approve this proposal as it stands at this time. Once again, a lot of these kinds of processes are very well and heavily described in the existing MGA. This one has no detail.

Some of the major concerns were raised by small municipalities, those with fewer than 3,500 people. Not only are these smaller municipalities now required to negotiate ICFs, which will undoubtedly cost tens of thousands of dollars, but the government is removing their exemption from having to establish a municipal development plan, or MDP. This is kind of like a double hit, and this will result in even more pressure on the municipalities' administration staffs. While I recognize that the department has suggested that there will be some mechanisms and templates to work from and support in some manner, these too are yet not known.

All these costs being piled on top of our smallest communities all at the same time is likely to challenge the viability of many of these municipalities to conduct their business in a proper fashion. Big Valley, in their feedback on Bill 21, described the issue they face:

There are numerous changes in the proposed MGA changes that we feel are disturbing to smaller municipalities. The significant increase to the amount of statutory planning that will be necessary over a very short [period of time] will cause capacity issues. Developing an MDP, IDP, & ICF when you do not have a planning department will be extremely difficult.

While one might argue that many of these communities would not likely survive long term as it is, I believe that to be a very pessimistic and unhelpful philosophy. Many of these communities predate the province, and it is incredibly distressing to see the provincial government saddle them with even more onerous and costly regulations. It seems to me that for the past few decades they have existed without MDPs and some of these other things, and to thrust all these extra requirements on them is somewhat, I think, a little bit over the top.

It's for this reason that I will be submitting an amendment at Committee of the Whole that will extend the timeline for municipalities to develop an MDP from three to five years, and we may look at other amendments in this area. I hope all my hon. colleagues in the House will support this reasonable amendment when it gets tabled.

To move on again, then, Mr. Speaker, to the proposed amendments on conservation reserves, another part of the planning process, currently municipalities empowered by the MGA and its regulations can create environmental reserves in order to prevent pollution and/or allow for public access to waterways and to protect natural drainage courses and water bodies, et cetera. Because this is undevelopable land in most cases, municipalities are not required to compensate developers for environmental reserve land taken as ER. Unfortunately, there is little a municipality can do legally, though, to conserve land that falls outside of the definition of environmental reserve.

The proposed remedy is the creation of an additional type of reserve called a conservation reserve. That could be used to conserve environmentally significant areas: tree stands, grasslands, et cetera. Because this might remove or would remove land that could be developed, the municipality would have to compensate the developer in this proposal. As a long-time property rights advocate I appreciate the government ensuring that property owners are compensated for any conservation reserve taken from their land. I want to underline that. I appreciate that there is finally compensation for lands being taken.

My concern is largely that I believe that this type of problem might be better utilized through an environmental reserve easement, which exists already today, registered against the title of the land. By establishing the ERE, the title of the land does not change and the developer would still be able to establish a development using density calculation based on the entire land area. While development would be restricted on the easement, the developer would potentially benefit more under an easement than losing the title outright through a conservation reserve.

I realize I haven't touched on all the different topics, actually, that fall under the planning and development category as I'm limited in time, Mr. Speaker, but I'd like to touch on a couple of topics that fall under how municipalities are funded. The third grouping is to apparently "aim to improve municipal funding models to ensure a balanced, consistent, and efficient collection of municipal revenue sources." And I'd like to add, by the way, that the MGA did not address municipal funding in any large degree. But one of the proposed amendments is to centralize the assessment of all industrial properties by the province.

The province states that this is a requirement because of the complex nature of regulated industrial properties. Currently only linear properties are assessed by the province while the remaining industrial properties are assessed by the municipality in which the property is located. I found it interesting that the Assessors' Association in their feedback on Bill 21 amendments specifically advocate against the centralization of industrial property assessment. These are the experts in the field, the trained experts. I look forward to proposing amendments, therefore, during Committee of the Whole based on their advice and recommendations, and I hope that all of my colleagues in the House seriously consider the recommendations of the Alberta Assessors'

Association before passing judgment on the government's proposed centralization model.

Moving on to another proposed change is granting municipalities the ability to split the improved nonresidential property assessment class into subclasses. Municipalities already have the ability to split residential properties, of course, and apply a different tax rate. My caucus colleagues and I largely support the move by the province towards greater local autonomy and in turn in determining subclasses of nonresidential properties. However, I'm particularly interested in the potential to promote small-business development at the local level with this.

One of the most critical amendments proposed by this government that has given me the greatest pause, though, is the proposal to link residential and nonresidential tax rates at a maximum ratio of 5 to 1. This has been shown to be of concern across the province as well by most of the municipal associations, including the administrators' association or CAOs. This proposal would restrict municipalities from charging nonresidential properties at a tax rate that exceeds the lowest residential rate by more than five times.

According to Municipal Affairs most municipalities are well below the 5 to 1 ratio. That certainly is recognized. And this would only affect a handful of municipalities. According to stakeholder feedback, though, there are around 19 municipalities that exceed that ratio to varying degrees, and one of the largest reported variances, of course, is the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, which currently has a nonresidential property tax rate that is 18 times higher than its lowest residential rate.

According to the research we've been able to do over the course of the summer, most of our fellow provinces have established ratios, most significantly lower than Alberta's proposed, actually. Ontario has established an acceptable range between 6 and 1.1 times. British Columbia has a ratio of 3.4 to 1 for major industrial and light industrial properties, and New Brunswick is 1 to 5.1. While a ratio does result in an erosion of local autonomy, I believe consensus is possible.

I'd like to quote the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, who in their feedback expressed the following sentiment: "While noting that this change does limit local autonomy and flexibility in setting mill rates, the AAMDC recognizes the proposed changes as reasonable and acceptable."

I want to point out at this time that we recognize the grandfathering clause on different municipalities like Wood Buffalo, but we certainly have concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I didn't realize my timer was off a bit, but I will carry on at another time with more. Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Any other members who wish to speak to Bill 21? The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to speak to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. To begin, I would like to thank all Albertans who have taken the time to provide input on Bill 21. Their voice on this matter is crucial on drafting a piece of legislation that is beneficial to all Albertans. Their expertise and knowledge are invaluable. Alberta's strength is reflected in the resiliency, vibrancy, and diversity of our municipalities, and it is important that the government maintain a respectful two-way relationship with our municipal leadership and stakeholders. With that being said, I would hope that this government has consulted appropriately with Albertans and adequately considered the proposals they have put forth with the intent of improving the Modernized Municipal Government Act. I suppose we'll have an answer to that question in the coming weeks.

Mr. Speaker, a theme of Bill 21 is intermunicipal collaboration. Collaboration between municipal partners on the surface, I think, is something everyone in this House can agree to. This concept is evident through the creation of the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks, municipal development plans, growth management boards, as well as others detailed within the legislation.

However, I think it's important that we bring to light some possible issues related to this concept and assist the government in areas where they will have fallen short, beginning with municipal development plans, which will require that all municipalities, regardless of population size, create a plan that helps guide important matters such as land development. It is important that government remain cognizant of the fact that these plans take time, money, and resources to develop. In some cases rural municipalities may lack the resources required to complete the plan in the given time frame as mandated by this government. In fact, without sufficient resources the requirements of developing a municipal development plan could hinder the operations of rural municipalities.

Additionally, there are concerns with respect to election timelines. Some of these planning timelines fall within the municipal election cycles. This could negatively impact and delay how plans are constructed. It is the finer details such as these, Mr. Speaker, which the government must keep in mind when imposing mandatory deadlines on local governments for municipal development plan completions.

Given these circumstances I hope this government is sensitive to the needs of rural municipalities and Albertans, something they've shown a slight disregard for in the past, and the individuals who work in local municipalities responsible for developing these documents. If completion of the plans within a mandated time frame becomes an issue for smaller municipalities, I would hope the government would consider increasing the time limit on proposal submissions or provide resources to municipalities to help facilitate the objective of meeting the timelines.

Staying with the theme of collaboration, Mr. Speaker, I would like to turn my attention to the growth management boards. Growth management boards will be required for Edmonton and Calgary regions with an expanded mandate to address land-use planning and the planning and delivery and funding of regional services. The government intends on using regulations to mandate some crucial nuances with respect to the scope of services being provided by these boards. As far as I'm concerned, the more time we can give these boards to plan for such crucial service delivery, the better. With that in mind, it would be my hope that the government is conducting appropriate due diligence with these entities to ensure seamless transition and not catching anyone off guard when the regulations are developed.

Yet another piece of legislation being determined in part through the regulation is splitting of nonresidential property classes. The revised MGA, Mr. Speaker, will determine categories for subclasses within the regulation. There is currently no direction on the types of classes or how many will be included. For the benefit of all Albertans during these troubling economic times some clarification would be appreciated, especially with matters pertaining to taxation, a favourite topic of this government.

This provides some examples whereby key sections of the MGA are to have important components determined via regulation. Mr. Speaker, it would be conducive to the development of the legislation if we could have some thoughtful, transparent, and respectful debate on these issues for the sake of all Albertans instead of having important details determined in cabinet behind closed doors.

Mr. Speaker, another area of concern that I think we could work to improve upon in Bill 21 is definitional clarity and, really, clarity in general. There are some rather key concepts that need elaboration; for example, affordable housing. There is no clear definition with respect to this term or what it encompasses within the context of the legislation. Given the magnitude of this policy and its inherent effect on inclusionary housing, it would be nice to have lucidity around this topic.

Yet another example of subpar definitional clarity, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to off-site levies. The scope of off-site levies will be expanded to community recreational facilities, fire halls, police stations, and libraries where at least 30 per cent of the benefit accrues to the new development in the defined benefiting area. Where this threshold is met, developers will contribute to the cost on a proportional benefit. It is important that the government provide clear definitions of the defined benefiting area and appeal process regarding these levies. It is also equally important that we have clear language around what constitutes a 30 per cent benefit. How will this be calculated? Conveying this information is important as it will assist land developers in identifying costs, ensuring the financial feasibility of their companies and in turn helping to protect the jobs of numerous Albertans who are employed in the construction industry.

When we look at the language regarding environmental reserves, we have a signal from groups that are affected by this legislation that they would like to see changes in the language to provide – guess what? – better clarity. Specifically, developers and municipal stakeholder groups have requested that the definitions and purpose of environmental reserves be clarified as land unsuitable for development. This change in language is significant in that it would allow municipalities to preserve environmentally significant features without having to resort to designating the area as a conservation reserve.

These groups are also requesting that the government address the fact that the definitions relevant to environmental reserves aren't harmonized across different pieces of legislation. Where Bill 21 defines that it includes a body of water, it leaves out wetlands, which puts it out of alignment from the Alberta wetland policy, some would argue.

These are the kinds of issues that really start to frustrate municipalities. We are really just looking for some consistency and clarity in how these rules are applied.

When it comes to the rules regarding conservation reserves, municipal stakeholders have come to our caucus with some measured requests for changes to the bill. These are grounded ideas from people that work closely every day with our municipal leadership. We have municipal stakeholder groups advocating for a strong, efficient dispute resolution mechanism to deal with disagreements between municipalities and developers, and that, I think, is in the interest of all concerned parties. We would like to see the government's plan on what such a dispute resolution mechanism would look like and, more importantly, how the two groups will have their concerns addressed with respect in this manner.

Mr. Speaker, an area where the government does deserve a bit of credit is in the push to incent brownfield development. We absolutely need to do what we can to remediate these sites so that they can be put to productive use again. It is unfortunate that so many of these properties are sitting vacant, not contributing to the local economy, so we need to do everything that we can to make remediation and reclamation of these properties happen. The government is working towards this, allowing municipalities with these sites to provide conditional property tax cancellation, deferrals, and reductions to make developing these sites more attractive. So kudos on that point. Let's just hope the NDP tax increases don't hinder potential development of such developments, making this policy change moot.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to see municipalities will be required to list and publish all nonstatutory planning documents and describe how they relate to one another. We're all in favour of greater transparency in land-use planning. This is a good proposal. A list like this increases the accountability of municipal councils to their voters and helps residents engage with their council to make informed decisions.

Mr. Speaker, groups like the AUMA and the AAMD and C are telling us that they agree with the need for greater transparency around land-use plans. They want to be part of this positive change. However, for them and other municipal groups and leaders to truly be effective partners in this, they need to know what exactly is being required of them. So we have these groups come to us, and they ask us, "What exactly is included in these nonstatutory policies?" because they are looking at that legislation, and they are not finding any clarity. Further, when they are being required to explain how all these policies relate to one another but there's no prescription for that, what the process looks like, they start to worry about how to actually accomplish that. So what they would like to see is the government come forward with some clarity about what exactly is being asked of these municipalities. That clarity, or lack of, is something that we are seeing a lot of in response to this government's attempt at modernizing the Municipal Government Act.

There are just so many areas in this bill where we look at it and we see what could be a good idea if it wasn't weighed down by questions about scope and implementation. Legislation like Bill 21, which proposes to change so much about such complex legislation, is bound to have a number of unforeseen consequences. I think that we need to keep in mind as legislators and representatives of Alberta that it is our responsibility to do our due diligence and eliminate as much of that uncertainty as possible. I hope the government will strive towards this objective as the bill passes through the House and continue to work with all Albertans in this bill's development. I know the government has consulted this summer with lots of municipalities and stakeholders, so I look forward to the amendments that they will bring forward to address the concerns they've heard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any questions of the hon. member under 29(2)(a)? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the remarks from my colleague from Grande Prairie. I just wondered. I heard him speak a fair amount on the fact that there were consultations over the summer and introducing a piece of legislation and then allowing municipalities to comment on it. I know that hasn't really been a trademark of the government, but I just was curious to know if he felt like that was perhaps a step in the right direction and that more of this sort of consultation instead of rushing bills through the House would be beneficial to Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course I support that more consultation is always better. I know this government did go around the province this summer, and I attended some sessions.

Unfortunately, the session I attended was overcrowded, so some of our mayors and reeves weren't allowed to come. That's unfortunate, but they did have a good showing, and the government heard lots of concerns from municipal leaders and stakeholders around the province. So I'm looking forward to their amendments. If they were truly listening to the stakeholders this summer, they should be bringing some amendments forward. We've yet to see those. I guess if they don't bring them, we'll have some amendments to bring on our own, but we'll wait to see what amendments they bring forward. That's exactly the right way of doing legislation: introduce it, consult with people, take it around the province, and then pass it. Good job on the government.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments to the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, I would recognize the Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just trying to set my clock here. I apologize.

I certainly appreciate the opportunity to stand in the House today and speak to Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act. I'd also like to thank, as my colleagues before me have, all Albertans that took the time and all those in the province that took time to make comments and suggestions to build this important act. Those of us inside the House that have spent some time on council – there are a few on this side; I don't know how many on the other side of the House – we certainly recognize how important the Municipal Government Act is. It is the law that sets out guiding principles for municipalities, and we need to make sure that we get this right. Municipalities are our partners. That being said, this is a huge act, and the proposed changes are also huge. Like I said, we need to get this right.

I'll speak today, I think, about municipal development plans. A municipal development plan is a long-range statutory planning document. "Statutory" refers to something that is related to a formal statute or law such as a by-law in a municipality. A statutory planning document provides a municipality – well, their elected officials, the administration, the ratepayers of that municipality, and potential developers – with a framework or an outline or an agenda of policies for making important decisions for that municipality regarding future growth and development opportunities within that municipality that creates the municipal development plan.

Statutory plans allow councils of that municipality to create wide-ranging development policies. Now, these policies of development can refer to the entire municipality in the plan or just a portion of that municipality. The policies of a municipal development plan tend to be put inside that document in order to shape and outline the potential or expected growth as well as profile the development or the progress of a municipality.

As the Municipal Government Act sits right now, municipalities with a population of 3,500 people or more are required to adopt a municipal development plan. Alternately, municipalities with less than 3,500 are simply encouraged to do so. Now, we all know what happens when you're encouraged to do something. You kind of say: "Well, thank you very much. I'll let you know. I'll take it under advisement." Probably not much happens. In the case of municipalities under 3,500 I would suggest that a large majority of those municipalities have not completed a municipal development plan.

You know, "encouraged" isn't generally a word that would drive a municipality to get on with developing such a hefty little document. Don't get me wrong. There are certainly municipalities that have probably gone the extra mile to put together their municipal development plans. These things, like I say, can be considered hefty documents, certainly, for smaller municipalities, 300- and 400- and 500-person villages, that will now be required to create their own municipal development plans and, quite frankly, expensive too. We can talk about that a little later.

Now, the other thing about statutory plans such as the municipal development plan is that statutory plans at the end of the day absolutely must be aligned with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act regional plans, and in no way, shape, or form can the plans not be consistent with each other. The statutory plan and the regional plan for whichever area the municipality is in must be consistent. Regional plans set out land-use intentions and definitions and possibilities for a specific area of the province. They also offer the structure for land-use decision-making within that precise area.

Another consideration of the regional plan is the individuality of the particular area as well as the important parts within those individual areas within the regional plan. For instance, where I'm from our development and planning must be aligned with the South Saskatchewan regional plan. If I quote from the Alberta Environment and Parks website, I am told that the South Saskatchewan regional plan ranges from the Rocky Mountains to the west, the Canada-U.S. border to the south, the Alberta-Saskatchewan border to the east and north to the tip of the Municipal District of Bighorn.

That's a very diverse area: mountains to the west, then down gradually through the foothills, out to the prairie, and gradually from the prairie towards a city like Lethbridge, where we traditionally see a drier area. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, you're aware of anything east of that. You know, a little drier area there and then you can drive 50 or 75 miles to the north and see completely different vegetation, where a more moderate climate would prevail. So these regional plans certainly have to be regional because there's so much diversity going on.

Compare that to the North Saskatchewan region, which is what Edmonton sits in. It's described as bordered by the Alberta-Saskatchewan border to the east, Alberta-British Columbia border to the west; it peaks at the north boundary of Smoky Lake County and includes Banff National Park. It includes Edmonton and seven other cities.

So you can see the unique differences in the regional plans that are put forward.

Down where I live just about every tree that you run across was planted by a man or a human. A human. I'm not going to get in trouble here.

Mr. Cooper: A person.

Mr. Schneider: A person. Sure. I'll say the word.

Up here, 400 or 500 kilometres away, trees in the past have been removed for development and removed for farming, et cetera. I mean, up here there's brush everywhere, which encourages more wildlife or at least different wildlife than I would see down south and may encourage areas that need to be protected.

There are seven regional plans in Alberta: the lower Athabasca regional plan, the lower Peace, the North Saskatchewan, the Red Deer regional plan, the South Saskatchewan regional plan, the upper Athabasca, and the upper Peace regional plan. The lower Athabasca and the South Saskatchewan regional plans have been approved. The others have either not been started or are in various stages of development.

That brings us to another small issue. Just a few moments ago I suggested that all statutory documents, or in this case municipal development plans, must be aligned with the Alberta Land Stewardship Act regional plans. So if the regional plans aren't developed, what then happens? In regions that do not have a functioning regional plan as laid out by the government of Alberta, all municipalities in the province inside of those regions will continue to use the provincial land-use policies developed pursuant to section 622 of the Municipal Government Act to guide land-use planning and development decisions until regional plans are developed in their regions and are approved by the provincial government. At that point the regional plans will replace the provincial land-use policies. So you can see how an MDP, a municipal development plan, and the regional plans actually fit together.

Just one other thing. In the event of a conflict or an inconsistency when we do get into planning, in our case using a municipal development plan here, any kind of inconsistency between that and the regional plan, the regional plan will always trump to the extent of the conflict.

Content of a municipal development plan will hold and reflect some common portions for a lot of municipalities. The Municipal Government Act says that a municipal development plan must address such issues as future land use and development within a municipality, also the delivery of municipal services and facilities as well as intermunicipal issues such as future growth areas and the co-ordination of transportation systems and infrastructure.

The municipal development plan helps council evaluate immediate situations or proposals in the context of a long-range plan. There is usually a list of objectives that the municipality sees as paramount, perhaps a statement about protecting quality farmland in the case of a rural municipality while allowing for subdivision and development to occur. A small urban municipality may speak of responsible growth management, environmental stewardship, and economic vitality and such, but what is common among municipal development plans for small municipalities is the fact that they can be very expensive to put together.

As I look through submissions from stakeholders, I generally start with the two biggest associations that represent municipalities throughout Alberta, those being the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. These groups are in business to bring concerns of municipalities to government. It turns out that both associations believe that mandatory municipal development plans are a good idea regardless of the size of the municipality. It's important for all municipalities to have this statutory plan to ensure that there is a long-term, transparent approach to land development. But as I stand here and say those words, there is a reality. I alluded to this earlier in my short speech. I'm coming back to the fact that these municipal development plans can be a little expensive, and they're rather hefty tasks to undertake for these smaller communities.

We know that the municipal development plan must be consistent with the regional plan. Reality suggests that a lot of small municipalities – and I can think of several within my own riding – simply don't have a planner or a development officer sitting in the back room waiting for something to do, waiting for something to come across his desk so he can earn his salary. Those just aren't realities in small communities. They rely a lot on a bigger municipality that may offer little bits of help, whatever they can manage, to get their planning done. These little municipalities are doing their best to stay alive. They have income issues every minute of the day. I mean, there's lots to spend money on, a never-ending list, believe me, but having the wherewithal to be able to spend that kind of money for issues that are ongoing within small communities, for example, and to keep a development officer around just can't happen.

In the south, back where I come from, many municipalities let their planning work be done by an organization, actually a commission, called the Oldman River Regional Services Commission. ORRSC is what everybody calls it. Those folks certainly do fine work. They are on top of the regional plans, and they're on top of any potential amendments to the regional plans. Their work is quite accurate so that decisions about planning for statutory documents like municipal development plans align with regional plans, as we talked about before. This is a great organization that helps dozens of municipalities on a daily basis. I'm not sure there aren't just under 30 municipalities that use ORRSC to do all their planning, but the truth is that it's expensive to hire someone like ORRSC to create a document like a municipal development plan.

Where does the money come from for a small municipality to have a municipal development plan created? I've already kind of talked about the fact that it can't be generated from within. These little guys just don't have that ability. The possibility of templates and resources made available to municipalities to assist in the process of developing a municipal development plan is something that both AAMD and C and AUMA think is appropriate. Of course, those municipal associations wouldn't be able to fund something of this magnitude on their own. I would say also that the timeline requirement set forward in the amendment is perhaps not practicable.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just on the edge of my seat there with this very important information about MDPs and how they interact with regional planning and some of the costs that are associated with those in smaller municipalities. I am just a little bit curious to know if perhaps the member had a tiny bit more information to share with us on that very important file.

Mr. Schneider: Well, Mr. Speaker, I live to create speeches that put people on the edge of their seats. Really.

I would say that the timeline requirement – I think I said that – may not be practicable. We've already talked about small municipalities not having the capability of developing statutory plans like intermunicipal development plans, you know, which are coming up, and we'll talk about them at a different time. Intermunicipal collaboration frameworks on top of municipal development plans. It's somewhat overwhelming for some of these small villages, that anybody can argue shouldn't be around, but they are around. They have their own government. They're proud of that, and they're proud of what they do within their villages and their municipalities. This is a mountain, I would say, for these municipalities to be trying to climb.

Mr. Speaker, you know, to be perfectly honest, I can see some possible amendments coming forward to see if there are some possibilities of making this particular requirement something that is a little more in line with what small municipalities are actually able to do. That being said, I have every intention of supporting in second reading the ability for mandatory municipal development plans to be put forward in every municipality. But as I alluded to a moment ago, I expect that we will be providing a few amendments later on that will be well intended to make a document such as this just a little bit better.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I couldn't help but note that you made an observation that the wildlife that you see is different in this particular part of the province than in our south area. I just wanted to caution you. Don't put too much determination in the House that this House is necessarily the definition of wildlife.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great privilege to rise in the House this morning to speak in favour of the Modernized Municipal Government Act. I think this is the way legislation ought to be done, and I want to really congratulate our minister and her staff for the fine job that they did. I think that we've got a real jewel in Municipal Affairs. I've had a chance to meet a lot of people that are working there, and I think they do a fine job.

I had the great pleasure to be able to participate in the consultations in Two Hills, Lac La Biche, Athabasca, and Rocky Mountain House, you know. And through mine as well, of course – I represent a large rural constituency – I've had an opportunity to speak on multiple occasions with councillors from Smoky Lake, Athabasca, Thorhild, and the MD of Opportunity.

One thing is that one of my prior careers, at the university, was to do qualitative research, and there's usually a kind of a guideline for when you know you've done enough research. It's when you reach what you call the saturation point. The saturation point is when you start hearing the same things from different quarters again and again. I'm quite gratified, listening to members of the opposition speaking on the bill, that I've also heard similar concerns from stakeholders and councillors from around the region. I mean, these are valid concerns.

I guess I would want to take a moment to congratulate, first of all, the obvious diligence and collaborative spirit that the Official Opposition is taking towards this bill. I think this is something that is critical to the future of the province, especially critical for those of us in rural areas, and I really appreciate the tone and the attempt to be helpful. I mean, that's kind of what the opposition normally is supposed to do. I think this could be a wonderful thing to see us put this together.

Also, I think that some congratulations are indeed in order to the former government for setting this consultative process up. You know, being part of the process, I think this is something that, as I said, is an excellent way to make sure that all the stakeholders are treated with respect and that when we put these things into force, they serve Albertans well now and into the future. It's especially important because, of course, I mean, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, I think, was saying that it's one of the largest pieces of legislation. It's, in fact, I think, the second largest that we have.

Now, that being said, I guess I want to go over and just do a quick overview. I think our minister made an excellent, excellent speech, so maybe I'll just fairly quickly, you know, highlight what I think are kind of the key points or objectives of this legislation and then speak on a preliminary basis to some of the concerns that the hon. members in the opposition have raised. I mean, I think that this bill has three main focuses which I'll pick up, which are, of course, governance, planning and development, and revenues. What we're intending to do, of course, is to work to strengthen the municipal-provincial partnership by enhancing municipal accountability and transparency and to strengthen municipal capacity and viability.

Governance is something – unfortunately, I think it's been long overdue – where we do make some changes. I mean, I can actually speak from experience from just even around my own area. Actually, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills might remember some of the issues that the county of Lac La Biche had some years ago with municipal governance, problems around that. Within my own constituency, of course, we had issues with the town of Gibbons, the county of Thorhild, the town of Athabasca, neighbours, you know, to the west in Barrhead, Morinville. Of course, the county of Westlock has been having some issues.

These are actually real tragedies in these small communities because, I mean, unlike maybe some of the large metropolitan areas, when you have these types of conflicts that are not being resolved, you know, within municipal government, you're talking about friends and families fighting with each other. You're talking about long-term divisions in communities that are going to hell. It's really painful to be involved in them. So I think the problem we've had is that the MGA, to this point the only tool that citizens had when they've had concerns about issues in governance, was essentially a sledgehammer. As the opposition members highlighted, you had to go out, you had to get a petition, and then the whole long process sometimes took years in situations where, really, it was more about municipalities actually enforcing their own bylaws and regulations properly, right?

The Ombudsman being able to help in those situations, I think, is going to help a lot with that. I think that's a really positive part of this act that's going to make a lot of people's lives a little bit better and less stressful, especially in rural Alberta, when these changes come into effect.

Now, the other thing that I agree with – and I'm glad they highlighted it – is that when you deal with I believe it's council when they have these issues, very often the problems have stemmed from where councillors overstepped their boundaries, let's say, where they're not quite certain what their proper role in municipal governance is. You know, very often it's very well meaning, but they end up being involved and intervening in areas that perhaps they shouldn't, causing conflict of interest and causing all sorts of problems, and then things start to escalate. This very often, I think, comes from councillors not quite understanding just what their mandated role is. I think that having that training component is also going to make it, perhaps, that citizens will have less recourse to have to go to the Ombudsman to resolve these issues because fewer of these issues are going to be arising in the first place.

I think those are excellent things. I think that we actually have pretty close to unanimity on this issue. I'm trying to confirm if the opposition has actually brought up any major objections. That's a good thing.

Now, coming to the things around growth, one thing that I did also hear was some concerns around the mandatory growth management boards. Now, just so members of the opposition are aware, did we listen to the consultation? Did we listen to feedback? Well, of course, we did. You know, on the online survey over 50 per cent of respondents were in favour of these growth management boards. Now, those are the online respondents from the survey.

We need to make sure that the type of development that goes around our two major metropolises is appropriate, co-ordinated, and sets us up for the future. You know, how can we have responsible growth and development of Alberta's metropolitan regions if we don't have frameworks where the different partners have to sit down at the table to work things out? I mean, we really do need to work together to deal with increased pressures on our natural and built environments in order that we can capitalize effectively on increased opportunities for economic prosperity.

Now, there are a lot of really tangible benefits that can come out of this. For example, instead of duplicating costly services, municipalities will be able to work together to develop more effective, efficient services. I think that will be a real plus and give us some real cost savings. They can also, you know, work to encourage collaborative approaches so that we can develop infrastructure services that are used at our municipal and regional level. It's kind of hard to see how these things can be done effectively unless you have enduring bodies that do have some type of framework in order for these discussions to be able to go on into the future.

Now, what are these things not about? They are not about reducing the autonomy of rural municipalities. You know, they are about empowering them to be able to work effectively with their rather larger neighbours. I mean, there's also absolutely zero conflict within these growth boards, making sure that agricultural lands are preserved, that you can't have granular approaches to service delivery and to other things.

Of course, change is always a bit unsettling, and I mean, there are going to be concerns, but because of the excellent collaborative relationship the province has been able to develop with municipalities, you know, this open-door policy, I'm very confident that these are going to be worked out satisfactorily and that down the line our municipal partners – Edmonton, Calgary, and the surrounding regions – are going to be very satisfied with the results, with the continuing help of the opposition in case we miss any of the concerns.

Now, the other concern – just give me a moment here. I know that with the intermunicipal planning agreements there are some concerns, especially from the smaller rural municipalities. The idea is that these are going to be onerous exercises. I just want to assure, you know, any municipal leaders that might be listening to this as well as the members of the opposition that, I mean, nothing could be further from the case. I think that there might actually be interested elements that are going around and telling some of these municipalities that they need to hire all sorts of expensive support – accountants and lawyers and so on – and spend tens or maybe twenties of thousands of dollars in order to put these things into place.

I would say that they might want to take that with a very large grain of salt. I mean, these are basically things that can be very simple, direct, straightforward. If municipalities have ones already existing, there's probably very little work that needs to be done. If they need a place to start, I mean, as the days unfold, you'll see that I'm quite confident there will be plenty of support and assistance for municipalities to get those into place. The results, I think, are going to be wonderful.

I mean, for far too long, especially in some parts – well, many of the members across the floor, as far as some of their own, know that sometimes rural Alberta hasn't been particularly good at collaboration. It tends to be that, in fact, your nearest community is your long-standing rival. I know that if you're from a small town and there's another small town there, you know, if we can do something that helps us and at the same time harms them, maybe that's not a bad thing, right? But that beggar-your-neighbour philosophy is one that we can't afford anymore. I think most of us have gone beyond that, but there are a few exceptions out there that might need some encouragement to sit down at the table.

What I've found is that even though sometimes you have these municipal leaders – because, of course, some are actually doing this already in advance. You know, I have municipal leaders in my own riding that maybe haven't spoken in quite some time that have been motivated to pick up the phone and start working together. What they find out is that once they actually sit down and start trying to work out these agreements, they realize they have a lot more interests in common than they might have thought and a lot of wonderful avenues where collaboration will allay all parts.

I think this is really, I guess, an excellent balance. I know that there were a lot of people concerned with these changes that thought what we were going to do in actual fact was to enforce amalgamation. Now, nothing could be further from the truth. So having a model that encourages and helps facilitate co-operation while still preserving autonomy for municipal officials, I think, is the best way forward. I'm glad that the other members also agree with it in principle. Just like anything else, of course, change is a bit uncertain. You know, the devil is in the details, that kind of thing, and I'm sure that we will be working to satisfy them as the days go on.

Let's see here. Now, as far as having mandatory development plans for municipalities under 3,500, this is something where I've also heard, of course, from municipal councillors who say: "Well, look, we have two staffpeople in our office. They've got 500 other things to do. This is another layer of difficulty that you're..." [Mr. Piquette's speaking time expired] Oh. I had so much more to say.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Under 29(2)(a) are there any questions of the Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you. I'll be very brief. Just more of a comment, I guess, and if the member would choose to respond, he's more than welcome to. It's just with respect to those plans and the costs associated with the plans and how simple they can be. I know that as a small municipality of 3,500, approximately, the community of Carstairs in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills – I once was on council and went through the process, and they aren't just small, one-page documents that are quite simple. They're, in fact, very involved.

I notice that we saw the government release an economic impact assessment yesterday, a one-page document on a $3 billion carbon tax. But specifically to the MDPs and other intermunicipal agreements, Mr. Speaker, I actually take a little bit of – "offence" is the wrong word. But I am concerned that the member would say: "Oh, they're very simple. They're quite easy." In fact, municipalities take these planning documents seriously, and as a result they are costly and do require resources and professionals. So if we're asking them to be professional, we need to be cautious about how flippantly we speak about the importance of these documents.

The Speaker: The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Yeah. Well, thank you to the hon. member for the question, and I guess, well, commentary would be more apt. I was referring more to the intermunicipal agreements and, you know, updating existing ones. When you're talking about the municipal development plans, that's an entirely different matter. If I gave the impression that I was saying that those are simple and that you could do it on the back of a napkin, I apologize. That was not at all my intent.

Now, that being said, I mean, the concern for the small rural municipalities is that they're saying: we don't have the resources and the time to be able to implement these. Of course, as days progress, we're saying that I'm sure there will be assistance or that I'm confident of that. I can't speak for the ministry, but I'm confident that these concerns will be addressed.

However, I mean, you have to think of the contrary. What does it mean if a municipality doesn't have a plan for its sustainability, if it doesn't have any idea of where it's going to be in five years or 10 years or how to get there? Now, how does that impact their sustainability and viability if they're so caught up in the day-to-day minutiae of just keeping these communities running, which is very time consuming, that they don't have any sort of strategic idea of how they are going to be sustainable into the future? That is of critical importance for a lot of our smaller communities where, you know, you've got issues of declining employment and you've got an aging population. We do have serious, serious issues without easy solutions to keep these communities sustainable. I really don't understand how we could reach a solution if they're not making sure that they're thinking about that future. I guess that would be my response.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions of the member under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I did want to rise briefly to take the opportunity here at second reading of this bill, Bill 21, I believe, if my numbers are correct, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, and just echo some of the comments that have already been made about the process and how that's been such a positive process, a process that has gone on for some time. I remember participating in 2013 or '14 in some round-table discussions in Red Deer, and that was my introduction to the process. So it's great that we're finally here, that we've had a chance through the summer to talk to municipalities in our constituencies, for the government themselves to go around.

I give the Minister of Municipal Affairs a great deal of credit for the work that she and her staff have put in travelling the province and doing so while battling the most devastating natural disaster in Alberta history, for certain, if not in our entire nation. I want to just acknowledge the tremendous work of the minister and, you know, those unsung folks who work in the background. I think all of us in this House know what that means, the impact that that not only has on their lives professionally but personally when travelling the province of Alberta. It's a big place. At the same time, it's, I'm sure, a nice opportunity to get to see the entire province.

So I did just want to acknowledge the tremendous amount of work that went into that process. It is good that we're finally here. The same thing on the opposition side. Some very good questions have been asked. It's nice, though, to know, at second reading anyway, that it looks like we have some consensus that we should move forward.

On the bill itself, I'm pleased to see that the government has raised questions about affordable housing. It's something I'm personally very passionate about, and it has been a big challenge throughout the province. Certainly, in my own constituency it's a challenge. That may not always be the perception of Calgary-Elbow, but I can tell you that it absolutely is a challenge for the people specifically in Calgary-Elbow but, of course, beyond, in the city of Calgary and all throughout the province. So if there are things that we can do through the Municipal Government Act to help address that, I'm all for it.

Having said that, I have some questions about the specifics of how this all works, the mechanics of this. I imagine those are questions, I would hope, that could be addressed at the committee stage, and I look forward to learning more about that. Growth boards and regional planning, of course, have been a challenge in many municipalities around the province, so having some framework which municipalities can work from, I think, can only be a positive thing.

On the opposition side, of course, our job is to find improvements. I certainly don't want to bring the mood down too much, but I do want to sound a note of caution that, really, the essence of this bill, I believe, is likely to come out through the committee stage. I know, again, that in listening to some of the debate this morning, there have been a lot of very fair questions raised. The Official Opposition has indicated that perhaps they will consider bringing some amendments. I can well imagine that the government also, I believe – I certainly would not be surprised if we were to see some amendments from the government side as well. It does make it a little challenging at this stage for us to have what amounts to almost a hypothetical discussion. If some of the concerns that we are raising here on the opposition side are going to be addressed by the government in amendments – and I imagine and hope that they will be – I would urge the House to move as quickly as possible to the committee stage so we can have that discussion.

I also just want to put our friends on the government side on notice. Further to the very brief debate this morning on Motion 22, about extending the time of session, what I hope we don't see happen this time is what happened last session, in the spring, where not a lot was accomplished legislatively early on in the sitting and we found ourselves up against the clock at the end, sitting till late, late at night just to simply get through the legislative agenda. I hope that we don't find ourselves in that position again. As we are on day 2 of the fall sitting, we have the opportunity, I think, to move relatively quickly now without, obviously, shortcutting debate and to ensure that we have a thorough analysis and review.

Really, my point is: let's get to this legislation as soon as possible. Let's get to committee stage on Bill 21 in particular as soon as possible to ensure that we can have fulsome and robust debate and do so in a reasonable time frame and that we don't find ourselves up against the clock, bumping into the holiday season. I imagine it can be tempting for the government to do that at times, to perhaps rush through some things that may be a little more controversial than Bill 21. I just want the government to know that those of us on the opposition side are paying very close attention to the scheduling of the proceedings in the House, and we think it's quite important that we move relatively quickly through bills that we can and get to the heart of the matter.

With that, I certainly will support Bill 21 at second reading and look very much forward to seeing what amendments come forward at committee. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Before we go to 29(2)(a), I'd like permission of the House as I think the Minister of Justice has a request.

Ms Ganley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to request unanimous consent to revert to introductions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my extreme pleasure to introduce in this House today sheriff recruit class 961. We have 13 sheriffs with us here today. The rest will be coming by tomorrow. They started their training on October 24 of this year, and they will graduate in February of next year. They are here touring the Legislature Building. Thank you very much for joining us.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

The Speaker: Are there any other questions under 29(2)(a) for the Member for Calgary-Elbow?

Seeing none, the Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's nice to have the sheriffs here. Hopefully, we don't talk you out of sticking with the government after you hear how we operate in here.

Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief today. There's a lot more to say when we get to the amendments, but I will touch on that. We'll start off with the positive. I would congratulate the minister and the government for getting this here to the House. It's been a long time coming. I know the previous government tried for years and years to get this here and could never get it quite right. Don't be offended, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the minister is not offended when I say that the minister and the government didn't get it quite right. I don't know, with a piece of legislation this big, that you can ever get it exactly right. I guess what I'll appeal to the government on and part of the reason that I'm going to be brief is because I think we need to spend a lot more time in committee than we will on a lot of bills so that we can get it more right.

I'm happy, you know, to give credit for the efforts that the government and the minister have made travelling the province and hearing a lot of feedback. Even through that feedback, I think, and even with some of the amendments the government has pretty much publicly acknowledged they're going to bring forward because of what they've heard – that's good. There's a lot more that we need to talk about, and I sincerely hope that the government will take the time and let the opposition side of the House participate in this because this is an important piece of legislation.

After spending myself nine years on Calgary city council and eight of those on the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association board, I think I have a reasonably good understanding. Here's one thing I know for sure: the group of Albertans who elect people to the municipalities in Alberta is exactly the same group of citizens that elect people to this Legislature. If there was ever a piece of legislation that is political in nature, that we shouldn't take lightly, I think the Municipal Government Act is that.

There's a lot to be said here, I think, that we need to talk about. Affordable housing is a big issue. I think we need to be cognizant, as we go through this, that every time you pile a cost onto a municipality or allow a municipality to pile a cost onto a development project, then those costs, that cost of housing, that cost of land, can only be recovered from one place. We need to be aware of that.

I know that it talks in here about the off-site levies for fire halls and police stations and all of that. I think I heard in some of the government contact earlier or from the minister that it'll be more collaborative, and I would suggest that, in my opinion, it might be more collaborative. I can tell you that when I was at the city of Calgary, we collected levies for a lot of these things even though we weren't allowed to in the Legislature. "How would you do that and have that be legal?" you might ask. It is because we actually negotiated with the development industry and got them to voluntarily pay those levies, by negotiating with them.

I think we need to talk about this in Committee of the Whole. I know that many municipalities are in favour of this, so I'm cognizant of that. It may be fine, but I think we need to talk about that. One of the things that this will do is change the power structure, which might be a little bit less collaborative. Because of the fact that we had to negotiate as a municipality with the development industry to get these levies before, that meant that both sides were at the table. We were fairly equal in power, if you will, in that the city needed the development industry to develop the land and do things, and the development industry needed the city for the land-use approvals to get things done. The only way to do that and pay for all the things with the levies was to come to an agreement.

Now we will be in a position where municipalities will be able to basically have all of the power, and that's fine until those that they depend upon go somewhere else because it doesn't make sense to work there anymore. I'm just asking that we be sensitive to that. I understand why municipalities want to do that, and I'm not against it per se, but I just think that this is one of many issues where we need to tread just a little bit carefully.

When we talk about the inclusionary zoning, again, it's one of those affordable housing things in that it sounds good to say that a certain percentage of land or a certain number of units in a building have to be affordable housing. The reduced cost received on one piece has to be charged somewhere else, so what you'll end up with is either less affordable housing somewhere else or less affordable business development areas somewhere else, which could make the municipality less competitive.

You know what? I'm not going to pick on the government here because this is complex, it's big, but my appeal is that the government take the time in Committee of the Whole. I think that if we work together in this Legislature, we can make a pretty good effort, started here by the government, even better.

I know the government has published just recently their What We Heard document, and they put it online. Thank you. It's always good when we don't have to look for it, when you push it right out there to us. That's very helpful, and I thank you for that, Minister. The government document What We Heard is a good document, but members of the opposition, the other side of the House, probably have a what-we-heard document, too, or at least pieces of it that we might have heard differently. I think that if we commit to working together on this, we can make it the best it can be when we're all finished. Again, when you're looking at something that affects every municipality in Alberta, which by definition it does, if ever there was a piece of legislation where we should take the time and hash it out clause by clause if necessary, Mr. Speaker, I think this is that piece of legislation.

I hope I haven't taken too long. I hope the minister and the government side will seriously consider this because I think that if we do work together, we can get the best result for all of us.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments for the Member for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)? The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'll thank the Member for Calgary-Hays for his comments. I couldn't agree more that there is a significant amount of work to be done here on this piece of legislation and that all voices in this House are important in getting it right. I just wonder. I know that members of this Assembly will be familiar with our desire to have important pieces of legislation like this referred to committee . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you are under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Right, where I'm making a question or a comment, and I think that the standing orders allow for about five minutes for that to take place, whether it's me or other members inside the Chamber.

We like to make recommendations that these types of pieces of legislation are referred to committee. I know that the member spoke at length about the importance of Committee of the Whole. Do you think, Member, that while all the consultations that took place over the summer were important, if a piece of legislation like this had been referred to committee, from that committee, then, we could have all received the same information, we could have all heard from all of the witnesses at the same time, and then gone through a process of potentially amending the bill there instead of what is likely to be quite a rapid-fire, back-and-forth discussion on amendments coming up here in Committee of the Whole?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for the question, and I think it's a good question. Because of the complexity of this legislation and all the variables – and, again, I'm not pretending that it's easy, and again I'll compliment the government for getting it here. But to answer the member's question, yes, I think this would benefit from a committee. While the collective wisdom of 87 minds is good, lots of times the conversation can be less stilted with the collective wisdom of 15 in a committee. Things can move a little bit faster. You can have a more fulsome discussion. The process isn't quite as formal in committee as it is here in the Legislature.

In my opinion, to the hon. member, I believe that this legislation – and again I'll compliment the government on getting it this far – could probably even benefit from having some committee work done on it, not in the spirit of any partisanship but, rather, quite the opposite. I think that would actually make it more able to be looked at in a more fulsome, nonpartisan way because I think that on all sides of the House there's legitimate wisdom and legitimate input that would benefit the legislation, and that, of course, would benefit all of Alberta.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or observations to the Member for Calgary-Hays under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to stand today and speak to second reading of Bill 21. I'd like to thank my colleague from Little Bow for the brief geography lesson that we received today. It was quite interesting.

It looks like I'm going to run out of time here pretty quickly. In my consultations with local municipalities, of which I represent quite a few, both rural and urban, kind of a common theme was sustainable, predictable funding. You know, much of that concern came from linear taxation, some of the losses that we've had in the last year; for instance, the loss of grants in lieu of taxes to urban municipalities.

One of the main ones that we've found with the rural municipalities when it comes to linear is the issue of noncollectible taxes. We've got quite a few small gas and oil companies that are facing insolvency and leaving a lot of our municipalities with unpaid taxes, and in some instances these municipalities have been forced to rely on local residents, transferring it on to property owners as a separate line item on their tax assessments, some of them to the tune of anywhere from $80 to $200 extra over and above what they pay on their taxes.

Like I said, we've already seen this issue coming up in rural municipalities, and there's been some concern that this wasn't addressed as part of the MGA. What they would be looking at, rather than having to pass this on to their residents, which is very unpopular, I might add, is that they might see some assistance from this provincial government under this MGA to assist them in instances where they've planned for this taxation as part of their budget and then, at the end of the day, the oil companies have moved on and these taxes are uncollectible.

There's also been a lot of talk about the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks and municipal development plans, all very good ideas, and I'm seeing a lot of support from my municipalities in regard to that, you know, more from the urban municipalities than the rurals, of course, because the rurals are expected to share a little bit with the urbans as far as infrastructure goes.

The question that arises is: how do you commit to an MDP or an ICF or even develop one when you don't have a sustainable, predictable funding model? Right? You try to plan ahead. There are concerns over the MSI funding, that there's no real predictable model there, and they're facing these delinquent industrial taxes. In some of our urban areas we've got people that are moving out, losing their houses, and who can't afford to pay their taxes. We've had instances where residents have come to the municipality and negotiated payment plans for their taxes because they're going through hard times. All of these are issues that affect the development of the MDPs and ICFs with regard to sustainable, predictable funding.

12:00

Another thing with the MDPs and the ICFs – and I know that my colleague from Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater spoke on it – is that they do require extensive work and commitment by both urban and rural municipalities. Some of the smaller municipalities and villages may not have the funds available. Just adding this burden onto them may push some of these folks over the edge and make them unsustainable, where they'd have to be amalgamated in with the urban municipality, which puts another burden onto the urban municipality that's already done their MDP and hadn't planned on absorbing this other community. Their question is: will there be funding available to assist ...

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I might interject.

We're at noon. A motion to adjourn till 1:30?

Ms Ganley: I can make that motion, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 12:01 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, November 1, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of introductions to make today. First, it's my honour to introduce to you and through you two classes of students from the Victoria school of the arts, who are seated with us today in the public gallery and the members' gallery. With them today are their teachers Mrs. Nancy Adamson, Ms Hilary Mussell, Ms Annette Fraser, Ms Krystal Kulka, Mr. Remi Desjardins, and Mrs. Stacey Taylor as well as Mrs. Susan Hammett and Mr. Dan Mackie. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

I have one other introduction. With us also today are some students from NorQuest College in the transitions to employment program: Brenda Chwyl, Ellen Robb, and Irena Darrah. I would ask that they also rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other school groups that we have as guests today? The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you members of McArthur elementary school with their teacher, Ginette Larocque, and adults Mark Marchand and Brett Hudyma. I think they're coming a little bit later, but I just wanted to get it in that they're here because they're such an awesome group. Ms Larocque is their teacher; she also was my daughter's teacher years ago, so it's kind of a cool coincidence. Let's give them a hand for being here.

The Speaker: Welcome to them as well.

Are there any other school groups, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great honour of introducing to you and through you four former heritage interpreters who've served at the Legislative Assembly Office's visitor services for a total of 35 years together. We have Mrs. Janet Scott, who served for 12 and a half years, from Riverbend, Edmonton; Mrs. Cathy de Frece from the constituency of Sherwood Park, who served for seven years; Mr. Charles Grelle from Spruce Grove, who served for seven years; and Ms Arlene Kissau, who served for eight years and resides in the community of St. Albert. I should also note that their service here at the Legislative Assembly coincided with that of six of our Premiers, including our current Premier. I would like to ask the four of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

To the schoolchildren who are here: these individuals have spoken to many, many groups, and they know very much, far more than I do, about this institution.

Thank you for your public service.

The Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to introduce to you and through you a constituent of mine, my younger brother Camilo Esteban Cortes-Vargas. I want to take a moment to recognize that he's a strong and articulate and very thoughtful young person. We get along most of the time although I was told today that in his mock Legislature he was the Leader of the Official Opposition. Later on I found out that he was advocating for lowering postsecondary education costs, so I believe that we're on the same page. I would ask Camilo to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any others? The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Tim Grover and Mr. Ryan Maxwell. Tim is the CEO of Terrapin Geothermics; Ryan Maxwell is the executive chairman. Tim is also the former executive director of the Alberta Party and a tremendously bright guy. I just wanted to acknowledge them here today and recognize them for their fine work on diversifying Alberta's economy and bringing remarkable new technologies to our province. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other guests for introduction today? The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some very special guests who have joined us in the gallery today. November is Family Violence Prevention Month in Alberta, and this year marks the 30th anniversary of when it began, in the town of Hinton. What started in Hinton in 1986 has since united Albertans to put an end to family violence in our province.

Today I would like to acknowledge a group of inspiring Albertans who are true community champions. I'm honoured to introduce Rasheal Charles and Carol Siziba from the elder resource and support team for helping elderly adults experiencing abuse and neglect. Also in the gallery are Amy Jeannotte from Youcan Youth Services, an organization dedicated to providing supports to youth who are impacted by bullying, and, lastly, Mr. Len Rhodes, CEO and president of the Edmonton Eskimos, who played a key role in starting the CFL's leading change program in partnership with Alberta Council of Women's Shelters. Through this program players go to the local high school and mentor younger men on gender-based violence prevention. Your presence here today is a reminder to all Albertans that everyone can do something to prevent family violence any time and any place. It's my honour to ask the distinguished guests to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

2019 Canada Winter Games

Mrs. Schreiner: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker and fellow members. It is my distinct pleasure to draw attention to the 2019 Canada Winter Games, being held in my hometown of Red Deer. To date this will be the largest event hosted in Red Deer and one of the largest multisport and cultural events held in Alberta in more than two decades. From February 15 through March 19 Alberta's third-largest city will be the gracious host to over 3,600 athletes and coaches; 20,000 visitors are anticipated to generate an economic impact of over $132 million and stimulate the social and cultural essence of my pride, Red Deer. The dedication of over 5,000 volunteers, an 18-member board led by chair Lyn Radford, and an experienced and driven administrative staff will no doubt produce the most successful Canada Games in history.

Embracing the social, economic, and cultural impact, these games have stimulated several contributions: the Red Deer regional airport, the Gaetz/QEII interchange, and the legacy of the G.W. Harris Canada Games Centre. This directly enhances the economy for the community-minded citizens of Red Deer, Red Deer county, and Albertans alike.

These games are a fantastic occasion for the over 100,000 Canadian athletes who have showcased their physical talent and spirit since the games' inception in 1967. I wish to thank the 2019 Canada Winter Games board of governors for their dedication and leadership in ushering in such a monumental sporting occasion. Additional pride goes to Red Deer's very own legendary Ron MacLean, co-host of Hockey Night in Canada, and his wife, Cari, the honorary chairpersons.

With breadth of engagement reaching our true north strong and free, Red Deer's 2019 Winter Games will resonate the pride of our Alberta. Go, team Alberta.

Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner 2016 By-election

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate my friend and Conservative candidate Glen Motz on his victory in the Medicine Hat-Cardston-Warner federal by-election last week. Mr. Motz grew up on a family farm just north of Hanna, Alberta. While attending Hillcrest Christian college, he met and married his wife, Sue, and they have had two children, and now they have six grandchildren. Mr. Motz began a policing career in Medicine Hat in 1980. He went on to receive numerous accolades and service awards. My colleagues and I are very much looking forward to working with Mr. Motz on important issues facing Albertans.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are immensely concerned about the lack of jobs and a reeling economy. They're worried about how they're going to come up with the money that they need to pay for these new taxes that these provincial and federal governments are saddling them with.

Mr. Speaker, I've heard some NDs criticize the 1 per cent and talk about how they represent the 99 per cent or, as they like to say, the majority of Albertans. However, I couldn't help but notice something very interesting about the last election. The NDP received 350 out of 34,000 cast votes. I believe that works out to about 1 per cent. I don't think it's a coincidence that only 1 per cent of the voters thought that the Leap Manifesto NDP are the best representation for them. Since the NDP can't be that excited about these results, perhaps they should re-evaluate their position and consider whose interests they really are representing.

This government continually claims that Albertans support its agenda, but seeing as we are here to help, we'd like to offer some friendly advice: you might want to get out a little bit more. Mr. Speaker, the results of this by-election send a crystal clear message to both the federal Liberals and the provincial NDP that in our neck of the woods we are most and still resoundingly strong and free, and we are still conservative.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Fraser: There's a saying that when you think you're leading and you turn around and nobody's following, it really tells you where you stand. We saw that this summer when the government decided to forge ahead despite the warnings from private industry, all opposition parties, and the public service. The result: power companies having the legal right to return power purchase agreements to the Balancing Pool because of a clause that was clearly visible and well known for over 15 years. We saw this government try to pin perfectly legal contracts on the previous government and vilify power companies who have made tremendous contributions to our communities over the years. Instead of honouring legal contracts between government and our job creators, the government doubled down and launched an ad campaign in local papers across the province.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans know better. Because of PPAs we've had a reliable supply of energy over the past many years, and in fact Alberta has had the cheapest energy among the provinces historically. Albertans know about the contributions made by these power companies because they work for these companies: investments in capital utility infrastructure and green energy initiatives, just to name a few. Albertans are proud of the fact that these companies have invested significantly in renewable energy, and in fact 15 per cent of our grid is already from renewables. Thanks to these companies we are well on the way to the government's goal of 30 per cent renewables by 2030.

Enmax and Capital Power are owned by Albertans. Premier, you're suing Albertans. They know that no matter the outcome of this case, they will be on the hook for this costly litigation when they can least afford it. But rest assured that the PC caucus has Albertans' backs and will hold this government accountable and put forward solutions to avoid issues like this one in the future. The NDP have clearly lost in the court of public opinion. It's time for this government to own up to your mistakes.

The Speaker: Allow me to remind all members that there is a courtesy in this House that is practised: when members' statements are being made, comments are not made.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Treaty 7 First Nations

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On September 30 I and many of my constituents attended a theatrical performance called Making Treaty 7. I attended this artistic show at the Grey Eagle Resort and Casino, which is on the Tsuut'ina Nation reserve lands adjacent to the constituency of Calgary-Glenmore. This amazing performance meticulously tells the history and story of First Nations communities, with a focus on the experiences of the people of Treaty 7. The performance took the audience back to the days when numbered treaties between First Nations and Queen Victoria were signed, from 1871 to 1921. It highlights the implications of what happened during the 137 years after the agreement was signed, in 1877.

Making Treaty 7 is also the name of a nonprofit cultural society responsible for the theatrical production, that conducts events serving the interests of people of all ages and backgrounds. Making Treaty 7 events not only appeal to Calgarians but also to Albertans and to all Canadians to pursue together a bright and sustainable future for all. The performance itself was at times profound and intense yet can raise the hope found in diversity, unity, and the story that we're all treaty people.

Calgary is built on Treaty 7 territory, and as the city grows, so does our culture. Hence, Making Treaty 7 is a window to view the history of Calgary, this province, and to understand First Nations' experience of it. It is also a gateway to experience the evolution of our society as we all grow together as treaty people in the great city of Calgary.

I would like to congratulate the team of Making Treaty 7 for their outstanding and valuable contributions in our communities. I'm very proud to say that I am the MLA for Calgary-Glenmore and neighbour to the Tsuut'ina Nation.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Day of the Dead

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [Remarks in Spanish] As one of the first three Latin Americans elected in the province of Alberta, it gives me incredible pride to stand in this Legislature today to speak on one of the most important celebrations of Latin America, a celebration founded on an indigenous world view that later was combined with the Catholic tradition brought by the Europeans that arrived on this continent. Day of the Dead is a tradition focused on our ancestors, highlighting for us the importance of our history through our familial and personal relationships, a celebration that allows us not to forget those who walked this Earth before we did. [As submitted]

Day of the Dead is a celebration where we honour our dead because of the indigenous belief that if we do not honour them, we will forget them forever. To me, this celebration is so incredibly important because it highlights a different understanding of the world. Some may ask themselves, "How is it that you may celebrate death?" but I will remind people that to the indigenous people of Abya Yala, or Turtle Island as our sisters and brothers here in the north call it, death is not something of which we are afraid. As we continue to explore each other's traditions and cultures, we begin to understand that we have much more in common than we have different.

On this Day of the Dead may you all reflect on those in your life who have passed and have left a resounding influence on the person that you have become. The more we understand our lives as being relational, the more we will understand the importance of how we all need to work with one another for unity so that we may build a better world for all.

I ask all the members of the Legislature to please join me and my colleagues in the rotunda at 6 p.m., after our session is over, for the official Day of the Dead ceremony. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Seniors' Housing in Fort McMurray

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to a matter of great importance for the residents of the municipality of Wood Buffalo, from Fort Chipewyan to Conklin. My friend and colleague Brian Jean fought hard for two years in Ottawa to get the federal government to grant six acres of downtown Fort McMurray real estate to the province under the condition that it be used for the development of seniors' housing and long-term care delivery. Alberta's last three Premiers had promised to complete this project, yet this land remains empty today. This is a project that both the Wildrose and the NDP campaigned on.

People will retire in Fort McMurray. There are people who were born and grew up there. Their families are ingrained in our community. Grandparents in Newfoundland and Ontario are moving there because their kids and their grandkids are there. Our indigenous communities are asking why this isn't built. The elders of our region desire to retire there as this is their ancestral land, and they wish to be close to their families so that they may pass on the culture and the language of the Cree and the Dene.

The last government committed to delivering 1,500 long-term care beds in the province, and this government has promised 500 more than that. I encourage this government to work with the people of our region and get Willow Square built. Consult with the community, and I promise you that you will not have an adversary but a knowledgeable and innovative partner that will help create a viable solution that will address our seniors' housing issues for the next 30 years.

This facility would be in the heart of Fort McMurray and has the potential to allow our people to age in community. Did I mention that it would also free up an entire floor of our hospital? Let's get this right. Support a seniors' facility in Fort McMurray, and fulfill a promise to our senior citizens.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements

Mr. Jean: Earlier this year the NDP government decided to completely undermine investment confidence in Alberta by going to court to rip up 17-year-old contracts. My questions are not about the court case but about whether this government is competent or telling the truth. Today the Wildrose proved that Enmax briefed senior political staff and civil servants of this government about the change-in-law clause in the PPAs, and they did that before they used that clause to turn back the PPA. Does the Premier still stick by the government's fiction that they didn't know about this clause in the PPAs until three months later?

Speaker's Ruling

Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Hon. members, I feel the need to once again remind the House about the sub judice principle. I wish to remind you of Standing Order 23(g), also known as the sub judice rule, which governs statements made in this Assembly about legal proceedings before the courts. Members should not be engaging in debate or asking questions which may prejudice a civil proceeding "that has been set down for a trial or notice of motion filed, as in an injunction proceeding."

Let me say again that I understand that an application was filed in July of this year by the government of Alberta seeking a declaration with respect to several power purchase agreements. It's extremely challenging for me to make a determination on whether statements made in this Assembly might prejudice those proceedings without knowing all of the particulars of the case, and I must rely on the members and ministers who have greater information about the possible prejudicial effect of a question or an answer. Members are referred to pages 627 to 629 of O'Brien and Bosc and pages 153 and 154 in Beauchesne's for a discussion of the sub judice principle and their applications to the statements made by members in this House.

I would note also that Standing Order 23(g) states that "where there is any doubt as to prejudice, the rule should be in favour of the debate." I will therefore allow some latitude with respect to this matter, but I would also urge members to exercise discretion when engaging in a debate, asking questions, or giving answers on this matter or any other matter which would be subject to the sub judice rule.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreements (continued)

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To begin with, there is absolutely nothing new in the documents that the member opposite referred to today. They've already been made public. I do congratulate him on his growing use of Google. Having said that, I think that, generally speaking, the matter is getting into a level of detail that is more appropriately reserved for the attention of the courts. This is not the appropriate forum for that detail. In general, our government will take every opportunity outside of the courts to stand up for consumers, both industrial and residential, and we won't stop doing that.

Mr. Jean: Every shred of public evidence shows that at the very least this government's bureaucrats knew of the change-in-law provision as early as last September, a year ago. Now the elected officials claim that they didn't know until a full six months later. It's unbelievable. The NDP excuse is that they were ignorant and that their staff was incompetent. Why does the Premier think that Albertans should pay for this colossal billion-dollar mistake, and why hasn't anybody been fired for incompetence?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, as I've already indicated, the information on the matter that the member opposite is raising has been in the public sphere for some time. Generally speaking, getting into the kinds of details that they're talking about is not appropriate for this forum, and what we are going to do is stand up for consumers, residential and industrial, because those folks should not have to be paying costs that are not rightly theirs.

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, ripping up a long-standing government contract on the flimsiest of arguments is something that is beneath a democratic country in a modern economy. It will scare away investment in Alberta just when we need people to invest in our electricity industry. The government's handling of this is either incompetent or dishonest or simply both. Why is this Premier taking us down this path that will have long-term negative implications for Alberta's prosperity and short-term negative implications for getting anyone at all interested in investing in our electricity generation?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we are about to commence a great deal of consultation on the matter of incenting investment into our energy sector and into our electricity sector, something that needs to be done because the current system set up by the previous government is not sustainable to attract investment into capital in the electricity sector. So we're doing that. We're doing that in good faith, and we will continue to have those conversations on behalf of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Economic Impact

Mr. Jean: Yesterday the NDP government released an analysis on their carbon tax that looks like it was scribbled on the back of a napkin. It was totally void of potential job loss numbers. It had zero information about what the carbon tax's impact would be on our most important industries. In no case did it cite the damage that it would cause for our farm and energy sectors, and nowhere did it calculate the devastation that the accelerated coal shutdown will have on communities across Alberta. When will the Premier release the full report and be honest with Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We released our most up-to-date conclusions yesterday, as the member identified. They show what most other reports also show, that under the worst-case scenario there would be a very modest negative impact, not taking into account the cost of doing nothing, which is significant. Our plan will diversify the economy, it will create jobs, it will protect the environment, and it will help Alberta reposition itself as the modern, progressive energy producer that it needs to be.

Mr. Jean: And, of course, almost triple the electricity rates for every Albertan.

The Premier's office is trying to hide behind a ridiculous excuse that the full analysis is subject to cabinet confidentiality, which is code for they don't want to release the numbers. The fact is that it took a year for the NDP to produce a single sheet of paper on the damages that this carbon tax will have on our economy. The fact is that the government isn't releasing their full analysis and is not giving Albertans the truth about what they can expect and the higher costs. When will the Premier release this government's report that shows all the numbers and come clean to Albertans?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, this is actually quite super rich coming from an Official Opposition where the fact is that they weren't able to release a shadow budget. The fact is that they weren't able to release their own response to the climate change issue. The fact is that they have no plan to deal with the climate change problems threatening our whole province and our economy. Very rich coming from that side.

Mr. Jean: The government's one-page brief says that the NDP carbon tax will cause only a, quote, modest drop in GDP, that modest drop at a time when Alberta has seen over 100,000 jobs vanish under the NDP's watch. A modest drop in the GDP means thousands more Albertans will be out of a job or they won't be able to find one. The fact is that the NDP's flagship economic policy is wreaking havoc on our province and hurting the working families who we are supposed to help and defend. How, then, can the Premier justifiably intentionally shrink our economy and cost so many Albertans more jobs and more quality of life?

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I think that at a time of the kind of challenge that we have right now, the kind of hyperbole that we hear from the members opposite is not really helpful.

I'd like to point to another report done, in fact, by a minister in the Leader of the Official Opposition's former federal government and staff from the former Prime Minister's office, which concluded, actually, that "for energy producing provinces, an Alberta-style hybrid carbon price model ... improves economic performance by 1.43%." Not everybody, it appears, has their head firmly buried in the sand, just the Official Opposition.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
First question.

2:00

Justice System Delays

Mr. Jean: There is a very serious problem in Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Sexual assault victims are watching attackers walk away scot-free. One woman suffered an assault that required multiple blood transfusions and surgery to recover from her injuries. Her attacker is now walking free around Alberta without any consequence. The NDP has been in power for nearly a year and a half, but the fact is that it has taken far too long for action. Our courts are starved for resources, and we've seen barely any public effort by this government to push Ottawa to appoint more judges. Why didn't the NDP act sooner so that we can see justice for the victims in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying that our government feels very strongly for those who are the victims of crime, and we understand that it matters a great deal to them to see the matter addressed quickly, as it does to all community members, because, of course, those kinds of things shouldn't be allowed to go unaddressed within our community and our society. Since we've been elected, our minister has worked very hard to push the federal government to appoint more judges. Indeed, we just recently saw, I believe, seven more judges appointed as a result of her efforts. We've also appointed, I believe, nine additional...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: While we welcome these new judicial positions, the fact is that we are still waiting for Ottawa, and the NDP failed to address this as soon as they came into office or soon enough. In my home of Fort McMurray a young mum of two watched the man accused of assaulting her walk free just last week. She had to listen to the attacker's lawyer actually say, and I quote: you're free; we won. This is totally unacceptable. What meaningful action will this government take, will anyone in this government take to sound the alarm to Ottawa and start giving our courts the resources they need to hold criminals to account?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I very much sympathize with the people that the member opposite describes, but I think it's important to understand that part of the delay that we're dealing with is the fact that Alberta has had significantly fewer judges per capita than any other province in the country, and that difference arose under the watch of the previous Conservative government, of which this member was a member. You know, the matter has been allowed to fester for about a decade, and addressing the deficit in judicial services takes time. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. government members, I hope you contain your comments and volume.

Mr. Jean: I notice that with this government it's always somebody else's fault. They're in power, and they have to do it.

In Calgary there are potentially 400 cases that could be thrown out right now due to delays. Two murder cases are at risk of being tossed out. The fact is that resources for our courts and for our prosecutors are too low. There are not enough judges, and now the province is in a position where we are having to triage criminal cases. This is unacceptable. At a time when crime is rising across Alberta, this has significant ramifications for Albertans and all of our communities. What can the government tell the scores of victims about why they haven't acted sooner to fix this problem?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated, just two weeks ago our government did announce that we were funding 10 additional judicial positions. We've also added significantly to the rosters of Provincial Court judges. We also increased legal aid by 20 per cent. We also increased the budget to ALERT after the federal government cut funding, for a total of $30 million. We are working diligently on this matter. The Minister of Justice is working diligently on this matter. We care very much about the communities that are worried about their safety, and we will continue to do that work.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care and Education Funding

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I asked this question and didn't get an answer, so I will try it again today. To the Premier: will you commit today that your government will keep its promise to not lay off or reduce hours of teachers and nurses during this term of office? Yes or no?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for his question, and I certainly hope that our exchange today doesn't put any of his guests to sleep. Let me just suggest that our government will continue to invest in public health care, and we will add more front-line services every year. There will be no layoffs, absolutely no layoffs. We will not go back to the slash-and-burn cuts of the 1990s, overseen by members of that caucus in the past, that hurt families and undermined our public services. We will continue to support our health care and our education.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.
First supplemental.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Premier, for that answer.

Mr. Speaker, my question now to the Premier is: is it your contention that up till now, between the time you were elected and today, you haven't reduced hours or laid off teachers or nurses during this term of office so far?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've indicated, there have been and will be no layoffs. What we have done is that we have cancelled the unfair health premiums from the previous government, we've partnered with physicians and signed a new agreement to save half a billion dollars to help slow the rate of spending growth and deliver better care, and we've moved forward on enhancing the use of affordable generic drugs, where appropriate, to bring in cost savings. We do need to control the rate at which our health care costs are increasing, and the Minister of Health is working diligently on that within the context of understanding the extreme value of our public health care system to all Albertans.

Mr. McIver: Well, this is instructive, Mr. Speaker, because up till now the Premier and her front bench have all said that they couldn't possibly reduce any expenditures anywhere in their budget without laying off teachers and nurses. [interjections] No. They've said it repeatedly. So I will say to the Premier: in between, would you consider perhaps not spending $200 million on a laundry service for AHS that they don't need and $50 million for a laboratory? Those are other ways that you could actually save the taxpayers money without laying off teachers or nurses.

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, apparently, the members opposite want to lay off nurses, teachers, and laundry workers. Nonetheless, I would urge the members opposite to read the budget that was introduced last March because, in fact, we made it very clear there that it was our plan to try to slowly reduce the rate of increase in the health care sector. Under the previous deal, signed by members opposite, with respect to physicians, for instance, we were scheduled to see an 8 per cent a year increase in 10 per cent of the budget because of the AMA deal. We understood that it was necessary to reduce that rate of . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Power Purchase Agreements and the Balancing Pool

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In September I released a detailed financial analysis showing that the Balancing Pool will be bankrupt before the end of this year. Now, I have a simple question for the Minister of Energy. When will the Balancing Pool run out of money, and what will you do when it does?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. We are working with the Balancing Pool and with the PPA matter right now, and we will have more to answer about that in the next while.

Mr. Clark: I guess we've learned why this is called question period, not answer period, Mr. Speaker. But I will try again. I will try again.

It is an indisputable fact that this government's policies have put the Balancing Pool on a path to bankruptcy. In fact, it may already be bankrupt today, right this minute. Again to the Minister of Energy: when the Balancing Pool goes bankrupt, will you commit here and now that you will not use taxpayer money to bail out the Balancing Pool?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the question. Again, to reiterate, we're working with the Balancing Pool and the finances going forward. It's a complex issue with the PPAs and all the different pieces of the puzzle. They do have money today, and we're working to make sure they have money in the future.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, with respect, it's actually a very simple issue. The Balancing Pool may have already been bailed out by this government. This government is going to use taxpayer dollars to bail out the Balancing Pool to cover their own incompetence. The answer is simple. They could have chosen to accept back all of the PPAs and allowed the Balancing Pool to mitigate financial losses to Albertans. Again to the Minister of Energy: will you drop the damaging lawsuit, accept back the PPAs, and set about the hard work of rebuilding Alberta's reputation as a great place to invest?

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, actually, the member across the way is incorrect in his assumption that we have given money. We have not. We, again, are working with the PPA issue. The Balancing Pool has funds right now, and we will continue to work with them to ensure that there are funds moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Craft Breweries

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Minister, this summer you spent some time on the road touring small breweries across the province and meeting with local entrepreneurs. Given that the founders of Troubled Monk Brewery in Red Deer were pleased that government policy is supporting local businesses and employing Albertans, can you report back to the House about the tour and feedback you heard from other Alberta small businesses?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much to the Member for Red Deer-South. Yes, I did go around the province, to about six or seven different communities, and met with small brewers. I can tell you that they're very happy with the small breweries development grant and what we've put in place. That grant supports capital investment and allows them to hire on people, and they are doing that. I met the new person at Troubled Monk. There are over 43 small breweries as a result of the investment back in and 23 new licences as of May 2016. So beer is good, beer is fine in this province.

The Speaker: The first supplemental, please.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the important steps this government has taken to promote jobs and diversify the economy, to the same minister: can you explain to the House how Alberta's liquor market compares to other jurisdictions in Canada?

Mr. Ceci: Thank you to the Member for Red Deer-South. Mr. Speaker, our model is an open system. Anybody who wants to fill out a two-page application and give $75 to AGLC can get their beer marketed in this province. There are over 7,435 labels of beer. All I can say is that there's so much beer and so little time.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have heard from the opposition that they don't agree with this policy and prefer to see the government go back to the old way of doing things, to the same minister: can you tell the House why our government rejects this out-of-touch, backward-looking approach?

Mr. Ceci: You know, the Member for Red Deer-South is totally correct in that assertion. We are standing up for breweries, small beer development, on this side. On that side they're standing up for breweries in other provinces. I don't understand that. We heard loud and clear that brewing in this province is good. It creates jobs. It needed a change. We listened; they don't want to listen. We're going to continue to drink Alberta craft beer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie.

PDD Service Delivery

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On June 1 the Minister of Human Services removed the criteria which determined the level of funding and supports received for persons with developmental disabilities. According to the department's website it says that the SIS, or supports intensity scale, is currently under review. To the Minister of Human Services: what is the status of this review, and when will it be published?

The Speaker: The Minister of Human Services.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We know that that's an important issue for the disability community, service providers, and families, and it is critical that we listen to their feedback and work collaboratively with them. The feedback over the past year: we heard that SIS was not the right tool, and it was rejected unanimously by the entire PDD community in the consultations. That's why we removed it, and we will work with the community to bring in a tool that is more respectful and that works for the community.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mrs. Pitt: No timeline, I guess.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that aspects of SIS were dehumanizing, but given that over the summer I've heard from numerous PDD care providers that their funding has been cut as a result of having no funding guidelines for government agencies and given that these caregivers often provide around-the-clock, life-sustaining therapy, when can we expect the regulations to govern PDD support funding?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Speaker. Thank you, Member, again. SIS was only one such tool with many other tools to determine the funding and to determine the supports. SIS primarily was used to determine the supports and outcomes. If there is a specific case where funding was cut, I will certainly look into it. SIS doesn't determine funding levels. Funding levels remain the same as they were before.

Mrs. Pitt: It's a half-truth, Mr. Speaker.

Given that families who depend on this funding are becoming increasingly frustrated with this government throwing money at layers upon layers of bureaucracy with little to the front lines and given that according to the ministry's website there are over 10 pages of senior VPs, VPs, directors, and other middle managers, what is the minister doing to ensure that public dollars are being effectively administered to the front-line care workers and the vulnerable Albertans they serve?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the question. We are absolutely committed to making sure that public dollars are spent in a transparent and accountable manner. Ever since I've been minister, I have been working in consultation with the PDD community, their representative organization, and their guardians, who know best their problems and the solution to those problems, and that's what we will do going forward to make sure that the PDD dollars reach to where they belong.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is not about the ongoing PPA court case but about the choice in counsel. The NDP has launched a court action against its own government to declare a portion of the PPA invalid. In doing so, it chose to not utilize its own legal counsel at Alberta Justice, nor did it hire an Alberta law firm. Instead, it retained a lawyer in British Columbia who has strong connections to the NDP. To the Premier: why are you using Albertans' tax dollars to hire NDP friends in B.C.? Is this not an insult to Alberta's legal community?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and, in fairness, to the member for asking the question as well. It's of course important to make sure, especially when we're in items of such high stakes, where we're standing up for Albertans – companies who've been very successful and making $10 billion worth of profits now are at a point where they want to return potential losses back to taxpayers. It's important that we hire the very best lawyer in the country who has a track record of standing up for the public interest and for citizens. And that is who we absolutely chose in this case.

The Speaker: First . . .

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans have expressed surprise that the NDP is challenging its own government's PPAs and given that Albertans need to have faith that their government is working in their best interests and given that there has to be qualified legal expertise in the province of Alberta to handle this court challenge, again to the Premier: is the reason you went outside the province to hire Mr. Arvey because you could not find any competent lawyers in Alberta who share the NDP world view? Was no one qualified here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you for the question. In our world view taxpayers shouldn't be on the hook for something that the third party, who's asking the very question, allowed to be negotiated and potentially this loophole driven through by Enron, Mr. Speaker. That does not fit with our world view. Mr. Arvey has a proven track record of standing up for the public interest. The third party has a proven track record of putting in secret loopholes behind closed doors. I'll take Mr. Arvey any day. [interjections]

2:20

The Speaker: Just relax, folks.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been on the public record for 15 years.

Given that it is incomprehensible that not one legal counsel in the government's contingent of lawyers is capable of handling this court challenge and given that it is equally incomprehensible that no Alberta-based lawyers in our many experienced and respected law firms could have handled this case, again to the Premier: what was the process the government used in selecting Mr. Arvey to handle this important Alberta court case? Is it a sole-source contract, and how much is he being paid?

Ms Hoffman: Many years ago the previous government did pass a regulation to say that they shouldn't have to publish the Enron clause publicly . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Could you start again?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Years ago the third party today, then government, passed a regulation to say that they shouldn't have to publish the Enron clause, which, clearly, certainly wasn't in the public interest in any way. They certainly made covert efforts to make sure that this wasn't going to be well known by Albertans and for good reason. This doesn't reflect what they told Albertans when they talked about moving away from having liability on ratepayers' responsibilities towards having a shared responsibility with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Federal Equalization Payments

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, last week a blue-ribbon panel commissioned by the opposition released a report on Canada's equalization system. The report confirms what most Albertans already know. The system is broken. Ottawa took $190 billion more out of Alberta than it sent back to Alberta between 2007 and 2014. Albertans can no longer subsidize cheap government programs in other provinces. Minister, let's put partisanship aside. Will you stand with the opposition and demand a better deal for Alberta?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the equalization payments report I haven't had the opportunity to read it yet. It came out last week, and I'll get a chance to take a look at it, I'm sure. You know, talking about standing with Albertans, the Leader of the Opposition, when he was in government for all that period of time, never raised equalization as an issue. The former Prime Minister never raised the issue of equalization the whole time that he was in government. So it's pretty rich, as the Premier was saying, that now it's being brought up and being seen as something that has to change immediately when it's up for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, now we know why the NDP is more popular in Quebec than in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, given that Alberta will not receive a penny of equalization this year despite being the largest per capita contributor for decades while Quebec will collect more than $10 billion this year to subsidize cheap daycare and tuition – in 2011 Quebec put out a position paper making the case for their own interests. Will this government put forward a position representing our interests and stand up for Alberta?

The Speaker: I want to remind all members: after question 5 no preambles on supplementaries.

The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to remind the members on the other side that this side fights for Albertans every day, and we get things done. We get things done. We've gone after federal funding with regard to the wildfire situation. We've gone after the employment insurance changes for this province, and we are working with the federal government to get pipelines approved and built so we can get access to tidewater. [interjections]

The Speaker: Was it that you all ate too much candy last night? Ease it down, folks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that every recipient province makes the case for why they should get more but that we hear nothing but deafening silence from this government when it comes to defending the interests of the people of Alberta, who are hurting right now, you have to wonder if this government is more interested in representing the confiscatory federal transfer system over the people who have paid into it for so long. Which is it, Minister? Are you going to stand with the broken status quo, or are you going to stand with Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: I don't know what confiscatory means, Mr. Speaker, but I will tell you what I do know. This side is standing up for EI changes, pipelines to tidewater, more infrastructure funding so Mason can go out there and build. [interjections] We're doing the things . . .

Ms Hoffman: Masons. Masons.

Mr. Ceci: Masons.

We're doing the things that are putting people back to work, diversifying the economy, and they're talking about something that won't happen for review until 2019.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I just want to know. Have you been travelling a lot to visit pubs of late? It would be the first time that I saw the opposition and the government stand and agree on the same point of order.

Affordable and Special-needs Housing

Mr. Cooper: In April, seven months ago, I rose in this very House and asked the minister of housing: why was it that in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills well over half of the available low-income housing had been determined to be uninhabitable and sitting vacant? Instead of acting, the situation has gotten worse. Now a total of 14 units, over 65 per cent, are unavailable to be rented out. The fix is easy, Mr. Speaker. It's a no-brainer. To the minister of seniors: when will these units be fixed?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'll have to get back to him in writing about the specific case he mentions, but since I have 20 other seconds, let's comment on what the opposition's proposal was with regard to infrastructure: cutting $9 billion from the infrastructure list. I'm pretty sure that would cause a great deal of backlog throughout the province. Instead, our province is moving forward with a reasonable investment that's responsible and forward-looking to make sure that affordable housing is available throughout our province.

Mr. Cooper: Given that in early October I asked for an update from the minister and at the end of October I was told by the minister's office that they were reviewing the needs of the province yet all we hear this government talk about is the $1.2 billion investment in low-income housing and given that this is an issue that doesn't need reviewing – it needs action – and given that I know of one central Alberta charity that in the past few months has assisted in 80 applications for low-income housing, without blaming anyone else, will the minister fix these units?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will have to get back with regard to the specific question. I'll be happy to table a response to the House about those specific units.

In terms of moving forward, we're moving forward on a plan to build 2,000 new long-term care beds throughout the province as well as dementia beds. We're also increasing affordable housing, as was mentioned by the member opposite. In terms of affordable housing, an investment of $1.2 billion: that's a big difference from a proposed cut in infrastructure of $9 billion. I'd say that moving forward with investment, putting bricklayers like masons throughout the province to work is certainly a move in the right direction.

The Speaker: Deputy Premier, that would be the second time that a name was mentioned in the House.

Ms Hoffman: No, no. Masons.

Mr. Cooper: Again, all we hear about is their investment when we need action now, and we need action for victims of domestic violence. Given that Mountain View region currently has no shelter for women or children while there are 41 bedrooms that sit vacant in this region and given that strategies, paperwork, waiting lists are not action, will the minister at least consider turning over one of these assets to a local charity so at least they could fix up the unit and provide the safety that women and children need when fleeing violence? What will it take for this minister to act?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Human Services.

2:30

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Member, for the question, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. We recognize that there are many social deficits that we are dealing with throughout the province, homelessness, housing shortages, and that's why we have increased funding for women's shelters as well. This budget was increased $15 million to make the budget a total of $49 million, the most significant investment in a long time. We have also allocated capital money, $1.2 billion, to look after these social deficits. We will continue to work with partners and the community.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been talking to Alberta beef producers who are concerned about the 30 ranches currently under quarantine in southern Alberta. In September the Canadian Food Inspection Agency found bovine tuberculosis in an animal sent to the U.S. for slaughter. It's been implied that the elk herd in Suffield may be a potential source. To the minister: can you please explain what's currently happening with this situation and what your government plans to do to control the outbreak?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to reassure the member that we have been in close contact with beef producers about the issue. We know that it is causing some producers a great amount of stress. We know the beef industry in Alberta is strong and resilient. We are monitoring the situation closely and looking at options we may have to support producers and urging the federal government to do the same. We will continue to listen to producers and to support our beef industry.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the first herd was quarantined on October 19 and given that the situation has escalated to 30 herds since that time, this ongoing situation is a growing concern for industry producers. To the minister: how will this situation affect our Alberta beef producers and their ability to sell their product to foreign markets?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Incidents such as this do happen at times, which is why there are processes in place. There are isolated cases of bovine TB periodically reported in Alberta and other provinces. We do not anticipate any market disruptions as a result of this situation. However, as previously stated, we are monitoring the situation closely, and we'll continue to be in close contact and conversation as we move forward and continue to support our beef industry.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Industry producers have assured me that there's no risk in eating Alberta beef. To the minister: can you explain what human health risk there may be due to this TB outbreak?

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a public health nurse I can tell you all about human TB and the implications. However, I don't think I could tell you the exact implications of bovine TB, so I'll be happy to get some information on that and get back to the member.

CFIA is leading this investigation. It is a federal matter. We have offered our support in this. At this point we've not been asked to help with the trace-out to determine whether TB is present in the local wildlife or any of those pieces, but we are monitoring the situation. We will continue to work with the federal government and producers to ensure we get product to market as soon as possible moving forward. We're not expecting any market disruptions, however.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore.

Calgary Southwest Ring Road

Ms Kazim: Thank you. I have a question for the Minister of Transportation. Recently there has been a big project going on in Calgary-Glenmore for the southwest ring road. What steps are being taken to ensure that commute times are reduced and that my commuters are able to attend family events as well as get to work on time? And how is this project going to unfold? Please provide the details in terms of what is going to be done to implement the project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. We're delighted to be moving forward with the construction of the southwest ring road in Calgary, which is an important job, that will help create jobs and stimulate the economy. It will also ensure improved transportation options and reduce commute times for the people of Calgary. Preliminary work started in July, and we finalized our contract in September. Construction is happening on-site and will last five years, a targeted opening date of 2021.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgarians are expecting to see the west section of the ring road completed, to the minister: why can't this section be completed at the same time as the Calgary southwest ring road?

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the question. I'm aware that there are some who believe that both sections of road should go at the same time, but the capital costs of doing so would exceed our capacity, and it would require an enormous amount of resources in terms of manpower, equipment, contracts, and so on. Quite simply, we have to build this road one section at a time.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms Kazim: Thank you, Minister, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Calgary's transportation infrastructure is expanding along with its population and given the fact that commute times are also an issue and the fact that the Calgary southwest ring road is one of the ways to improve the commute times and, as well, the public transit projects that are coming at the same time, I would like to get some more information. How will the government ensure that the completed ring road fits into Calgary's long-term transportation plan, including public transit?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, our government is committed to transportation infrastructure throughout the province. I'm happy to announce as well with respect to Edmonton that we have now approved our share of the Yellowhead project, with a contribution of $242 million as our share for the completion of the project, that I know city council and the mayor have been very anxious to see. We're looking to the federal government as well. I know that this is a project that all of us want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Home-schooling Providers

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Education. We have heard reports that parents are having difficulties finding alternative schools to register with because there are issues with picking up a program mid-year. The minister has encouraged families to find other options, but we are hearing repeatedly that it's just not that simple. To the minister: what are you doing to help these families?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much for the question. Certainly, I'm very interested in ensuring that all families get a new affiliate so that they can get the money and the assistance that they deserve for home-schooling. We are fully in support of home-schooling and want to provide that assistance. I've sent a letter out to all school boards to reiterate their commitment to ensure that they take students in their area. They have a responsibility to do so. Our school boards do a great job, and I want them to do right by these home-school families.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We had one parent that was rejected seven times.

Yesterday you glossed over the impacts on families by suddenly shutting down their school. Given the minister has said that the parents will need to be reimbursed by Trinity Christian School for the costs that they may have already paid, what does the minister say to the family with five children that is waiting to get their fees back and now is forced to start all over with a new educational provider?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, thanks for the question again. It's very important that we move the money that is due to each of these families, so for September and October we put Trinity on a shorter payment schedule because we knew there was a problem. We have the money for the rest of the year. We also expect a forensic audit to be completed for Trinity by auditors, and any of the monies that they had spent over will be returned to families. We're working very hard. If you can give me information specifically, hon. member, for individuals who are having difficulties, we will be there to help.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forensic audits aren't going to help right now.

People are calling the right place, and the resources are just not there. Will you admit that you are unprepared to communicate with parents, to support families, and to deal with this fallout that you have created with the school, and will you answer the question that was not answered yesterday: what alternatives were there to outright closure?

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks for the opportunity to reiterate that we are also calling every single family that has not registered as of yet to offer what assistance we can to get them the affiliate that they need. There are lots of options, and we can make it easier for them.

In regard to the audit and the closure this, again, is a fundamental responsibility of a government to ensure that public monies are being spent the way they should be. We had evidence of irregularities, so my office did the right thing.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Bill 25

Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

Ms Phillips: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce Bill 25, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act.

If adopted, the act will establish a hard cap on greenhouse gas emissions, providing certainty to Albertans and to industry that in any given year the emissions from facilities in the oil sands will be below 100 megatonnes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk: on behalf of the hon. Ms Phillips, Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office, responses to questions raised by Mr. Loewen, hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky; Dr. Swann, hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View; and Mr. Clark, hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, on May 3, 2016, Ministry of Environment and Parks 2016-2017 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: I noted a point or order was made at approximately 47 minutes by the Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order

Oral Question Period Time Limits

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a point of order with respect to order and decorum, Standing Order 13(2). "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member."

During question period today, Mr. Speaker, you took the opportunity to stop question period and reiterate a point that you had made yesterday on sub judice. I just have a couple of quick questions around that so we can seek to understand better. One, I'm curious to know if the clock is stopped during the time that you are providing a point of clarification around sub judice as for the last couple of days we have not reached into questions, where we quite often get to 14.

I fully recognize that the government was poorly behaved today, and that may have added to the delays in question period. Maybe the opposition was loud as well, so it may not have only been your interjection that provided that. But I'm curious to know if in the future you'll stop the clock.

The Speaker: So the question is time. Is that your very first point?

Mr. Cooper: Yes, that is my very first point.

The Speaker: And your next one?

Mr. Cooper: That if you have stopped the clock.

Then I might just add that there are other areas on sub judice. Perhaps we won't get into the debate around sub judice today, but for purposes of clarification, is the clock stopped during that time given that we've now heard that two times?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I really do not know the answer to that question. I believe it is not; however, to be confirmed, I'll report back to you on the matter tomorrow.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Bilous: Deputy. Thank you for that promotion, Mr. Speaker.

I just wanted to rise to address this. First of all, I'm not sure if this is a point of order, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, or if a point of order is the appropriate mechanism, as opposed to speaking to you outside of the House, when we're debating important matters.

But I just want to reiterate, Mr. Speaker – and I think it's worth while for members – that, as you pointed out, it's a long-standing convention that members should avoid excessive discussion of issues in litigation, particularly those which will likely be determined by the courts. Now, I recognize that primary responsibility does fall to members and to ministers to avoid such discussion. It's well written as the function of yourself, Mr. Speaker, your role, to remind members of this rule when a member seems to be trying to elicit a response on an issue that is to be decided by the courts. Quite frankly, I recognize first of all that the Premier did respond to the question, but at the same time I think you are very much within your rights to remind the House of being very cautious when we are answering or asking questions.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

To the question asked with respect to the time issue, I'll address that tomorrow.

There is another point of order that I believe was yours as well.

Mr. Rodney: Just a question of clarification if I may, Mr. Speaker, and this will take a short amount of time. I appreciate that the previous question was asked to clarify if indeed the clock was stopped. We had a couple of stopwatches here yesterday and today, and we noted it. Mr. Speaker, you have every right – and I'm glad that you reminded all of us in the House about sub judice. That's very important. But it took three minutes yesterday, two minutes today, and I'm sorry to report that that meant two of our questions, which were, you know, important for our constituents, were not asked. That's my recommendation, that it's not . . .

The Speaker: Thank you. You're noted.

I must remind the House in its entirety that when those reminders are required, I do it in the best interests of this House. If you're concerned about the time, I would advise all of you to use the other time, which doesn't require my interpretation, in a more efficient manner.

The second point of order.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will withdraw.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. members, I raised this question yesterday – I'm sorry?

Mr. Nixon: He just withdrew my point of order.

The Speaker: Yeah. We're agreed. I'm sorry. I didn't intend to raise the question of the name. I think it was obvious to all.

Privilege

Obstructing a Member in Performance of Duty

The Speaker: I mentioned the issue yesterday about giving a last point for the question of privilege which originated on June 6, 2016. I've now had an opportunity to consider the comments made by the House leader for the Official Opposition, which can be found on page 1572 of Hansard for yesterday. I have also been attentive to arguments made in the Assembly during the spring sitting and in written submissions, and I'm now prepared to provide my ruling on this matter.

Hon. members, you all will have had an opportunity to see questions of privilege argued in the Assembly and rulings delivered. As has been indicated on numerous occasions, questions of privilege are of a serious nature, not to be taken lightly. I tell you personally that I do not take them lightly. These questions are dealt with under Standing Order 15.

The Official Opposition House Leader met the procedural requirement of that standing order to provide notice of the question at least two hours prior to the commencement of the afternoon sitting by providing my office notice at 11:03 a.m. on June 6. I also confirm that June 6 was the first opportunity available to the House leader in raising this matter before the Assembly as he indicated that he had not heard the radio ad in question until the preceding Thursday afternoon.

I understand the facts of this matter to be as follows. Radio advertisements from the government of Alberta were aired on at least one Alberta radio station as early as Thursday, June 2. The radio ad discussed the government's climate leadership plan and went on to explain that the transition will be made easier with energy efficient programs and cash rebates for households that need them. The ad then directed listeners to the website climate.alberta.ca. At the time the ad heard by the Official Opposition Leader aired, Bill 20, Climate Leadership Implementation Act, had not completed Committee of the Whole consideration.

The Government House Leader did not dispute the accuracy of the verbatim content of the ad as recited by the Official Opposition House Leader. I would also add that the Government House Leader was afforded the opportunity to comment on the climate.alberta.ca website, the contents of which were filed as Sessional Paper 217/2016. The website discusses, among other things, how, starting on January 1, 2017, the carbon levy will be applied to fuels at the rate of $20 per tonne and how the levy will be increased in 2018 to $30 per tonne. The website does go on to discuss how the levy will reinvest in the Alberta economy and how it will affect Alberta families and businesses.

At this juncture it should be pointed out that technically the matter before us now is a purported contempt of the Legislative Assembly as noted at pages 82 and 83 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, second edition. I quote:

There are . . . affronts against the dignity and authority of Parliament which may not fall within one of the specifically defined privileges. Thus, the House also claims the right to punish, as a contempt, any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or the dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its officers . . . In that sense, all breaches of privilege are contempts of the House, but not all contempts are necessarily breaches of privilege.

While the Official Opposition House Leader made an argument that the matter at hand also constituted a question of privilege in that the actions of the government were an attempt to influence the vote or actions of him or other members, of this I have not been convinced. I am persuaded by the Government House Leader's argument that members were not prevented from doing their duty as a result of the information contained within the ads. Therefore, I will proceed to consideration of the matter solely as a purported contempt of the Assembly.

This is not the first time during the Legislature that this particular variety of purported contempt has been raised. My November 2, 2015, ruling was cited by the Official Opposition House Leader in his arguments on June 6. That ruling can be found on pages 400 to 401 of Hansard for that day and concerned a news release issued prior to the delivery of the Budget Address. Members may recall that I did not find a prima facie question of privilege in that case, but I did caution the government not to prejudge the actions of the Assembly or its committees in the future.

On a matter similar to that one that I ruled on last November, a prima facie question of privilege was found by Speaker Zwozdesky on December 2, 2013. In that ruling, which concerned brochures published by the government at that time, Speaker Zwozdesky made reference to prior rulings from the federal House of Commons and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, which are likewise relevant to the matter under consideration here today.

Members will note that an important factor in the determination of these matters has been whether Speakers have previously cautioned governments of the day on their activities in what may be a well-intentioned attempt at informing the public but, in fact, prejudices the decision of the Assembly or its committees.

I note the following passage from the Ontario ruling of January 22, 1997, where at page 1420 of Hansard Speaker Stockwell stated the following when considering a ministerial pamphlet discussing the government of Ontario's program for reforming municipal government in metropolitan Toronto:

In my opinion, [the claims of the brochure] convey the impression that the passage of the requisite legislation was not necessary or was a foregone conclusion, or that the assembly and the Legislature had a pro forma, tangential, even inferior role in the legislative and lawmaking process, and in doing so, they appear to diminish the respect that is due to this House. I would not have come to this view had these claims or proposals – and that is all they are – been qualified by a statement that they would only become law if and when the Legislature gave its stamp of approval to them . . .

It is not enough for yet another Speaker to issue yet another warning or caution in circumstances where the wording and circulation of the pamphlet appear on their face to cross the line. I say in all candour that a reader of that document could be left with an incorrect impression about how parliamentary democracy works in Ontario, an impression that undermines respect for our parliamentary institutions.

It's clear from the radio ad and the information presented on the website that the government communications concerning Bill 20 discuss the bill as if it had already been passed into law while, in fact, the bill was still under consideration in Committee of the Whole. It shows disrespect to the legislative process to presume that the passage of a bill in the form in which it was introduced in the Assembly is a foregone conclusion. There must be a balance and timeliness between the government's need to communicate information about its policies and programs to Albertans and the role of the Legislative Assembly to consider and debate any legislation required to implement these programs. While the government may certainly communicate its initiatives to the public through advertisements or online information, the distinction between the executive and the legislative branches of government must be respected.

I have concluded that the content of the radio advertisement as well as the government website, from which an excerpt was tabled on June 6, 2016, as Sessional Paper 217/2016, contain statements presenting the government's program concerning the carbon levy and associated rebates as fact when in actuality they were contingent upon passage of Bill 20 in the Assembly. The website outlines what the carbon levy and the rebates will do and contains no qualification that this is subject to the approval of the Legislature. I've no doubt that the government had good intentions in advising Alberta of the provisions and future impact of Bill 20, but at the same time the relevant radio ads aired, the bill had not passed through the necessary stages in the Assembly.

There are ways it can be communicated without presuming a decision of the Assembly. Members may note, for example, in my ruling on November 2, 2015, on page 400 of Hansard that day that I drew all members' attention to the choice of the language used by the Minister of Finance during the delivery of the Budget Address, wherein he noted that the government would be proposing a salary freeze for cabinet ministers and MLAs. Although a news release issued at the same time as the Budget Address was more ambiguous, one might say that the use of the word "propose" in the address itself was the saving grace for the government with respect to that question of privilege raised on October 28, 2015.

I have noted the Government House Leader's argument that the changes respecting the carbon levy and associated rebates were framed as part of the overall climate leadership plan. This bears some similarity to the brochure referenced in Speaker Zwozdesky's December 2, 2013, ruling, which was titled The Building Alberta Plan. Nonetheless, in that case the content was deemed to prejudice the decision of the Assembly and its committees.

In this case pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) I find that there is a prima facie question of privilege, which may be called a question of contempt, as the dignity of this Assembly was offended by the actions of the government in publicizing certain aspects of Bill 20 and presuming its passage prior to the bill making its way through the legislative process.

I would recognize the Deputy Government House Leader to inquire if he has any statements to make.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, both for your ruling and guidance, and I want to thank the members opposite for bringing this matter to our attention. This government would never, under any circumstances, want to offend or obstruct the dignity of the House, and as such I'd like to offer my sincere apologies to you and to all members of the Assembly. It was not our intention to imply that Bill 20, the Climate Leadership Implementation Act, was passed, and I regret if that impression was made to any member of this Assembly or to the public. We will endeavour to ensure that the choice of words in the future is more reflective of the legislative status of any bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. I appreciate you taking the responsibility and leadership on apologizing to the House, and I want to remind the government again to please be cautious of this in the future. I consider the matter closed.

Mr. Cooper: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order. Yes.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again on Standing Order 13(2): "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I have a request to make of the Speaker. It seems to me that what has happened is that the government has been found in contempt on a breach of privilege for which the minister gave a very eloquent apology. Seemingly he was aware that he was going to be found in contempt and provided a prepared statement as an apology, which for the record I have a hard time accepting because they have been warned on numerous occasions by you and by previous Speakers. There seems to be a systematic problem inside the bureaucracy that this issue ought to be referred to Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing, not dealt with based upon the Deputy Government House Leader's apology, that was clearly prepared prior to today.

I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that you can explain your ruling and how it's possible that they've been found in contempt of parliament and a simple apology is acceptable.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I just read a statement on my ruling, which was, I believe, quite extensive. I cannot speak to why the government and particularly the Deputy Government House Leader had a prepared statement. I believe he must have concluded that there was considerable exposure on behalf of the government of the actions that they took. If there are any other suggestions – I cannot contemplate why and how the government arrived at that point. I would hope there's no expectation that I would have.

I think past precedence has said that a member is free to provide notice of a motion referring the matter to committees. However, since an apology has been given, the matter is concluded. As a reference I note Speaker Zwozdesky's discussion on this matter, found on page 3234 in the December 2, 2013, Hansard, in which he rules that a matter of privilege is concluded once an apology is offered. That's the reasoning.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry I move second reading of Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to rise today for the second reading of Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act. The main objective of this bill is to enhance wildfire prevention, enforcement, and operational activities with the key focus on reducing the risk of human-caused fires. Historically the number of lightning-caused wildfires has outnumbered human-caused wildfires; however, the trend in recent years shows a significant increase in the number of human-caused incidents. Would it surprise you to learn, Mr. Speaker, that approximately 70 per cent of wildfires over the last five years have been linked to human activity? That's why this government must continue to put Albertans and their communities first, and the amendments to this act will do just that.

Yesterday the Premier rose in the House and recognized those who worked tirelessly protecting Albertans during the Fort McMurray wildfires. The people of Alberta and their forest resources deserve to be protected from the carelessness that contributes directly to more than two-thirds of wildfires we see each year. Each one of these wildfires is one hundred per cent fully preventable, Mr. Speaker, and through legislation like the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act we can give our wildfire experts the tools they need to bring that number down to acceptable levels.

The amendments we propose are supported by recommendations made following reviews of major wildfires such as the 2011 Slave Lake area wildfires as well as learnings from the last two wildfire seasons, which include the devastation that occurred in Fort McMurray earlier this year. The amendments can be grouped into three broad categories: enhanced fines, improved public safety and wildfire prevention measures, and operational amendments.

Fines. The proposed amendments would increase maximum fines for major offences and new penalties would focus on both industrial and individual violations. Penalties would occur for industrial offences like not having sufficient firefighting equipment on-site, to encourage improved compliance. New provisions in this act would give people like peace officers, forestry, fish and wildlife, and conservation officers as well as the RCMP the ability to hand out tickets for careless use of fire on Alberta's landscape. Those found burning without a permit, leaving a campfire unattended, or burning during a fire ban or restriction could see themselves with a ticket from between $150 and $1,000.

The proposed increase in maximum penalties for major offences would help to deter reckless and irresponsible behaviour and remind Albertans that burning in the forested areas of the province comes with risks and responsibilities. It would also bring the fine levels in line with penalties issued under comparable Alberta legislation as well as similar wildlife legislation in British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

Public safety and prevention. In terms of public safety and prevention activities the proposed amendments include provisions that would improve our ability to restrict specific recreational activities that cause wildfires during hazardous wildfire conditions. In the same way we impose a fire ban when forests are tinder dry, we would have improved authority to restrict the use of off-highway vehicles, or OHVs, during the high fire-hazard conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to learn just how easily OHVs can cause wildfires. Debris can easily be caught up in the hot spots of the vehicle – under the seat, near the engine, and near the exhaust – and then become superheated. On high to extreme fire-hazard days with only a little bit of wind that superheated debris can drop down onto the ground behind the OHV and start a wildfire. Restricting off-highway vehicles during these periods of extreme danger will go a long way to reducing the hundreds of OHV-related wildfires we've seen over the past number of years.

We also have improved authority to stop actions which interfere with fighting wildfires, including the restriction of drones, which make it unsafe for water bombers and helicopters to work on wildfires. We have seen in recent years the increased use of unmanned drones here in Alberta on wildfires and in our partner wildfire agencies across North America. As soon as a drone appears on a wildfire, all aircraft must immediately land or be diverted as a safety precaution. Much of our firefighting ability in this province is done by aircraft. Prohibiting interference with wildfire operations by drones on wildfires will help our firefighters because if you fly, we can't.

The enhanced prevention measures in the act strengthen the obligations for industry to assist in preventing wildfires.

Operational amendments. The operational amendments will further enhance firefighting activities by clarifying operational processes, roles, and responsibilities.

As the climate continues to change, we've seen our fire seasons become longer and wildfires become more intense. The March 1 start to the fire season has been established by ministerial order each year for the past five years in response to recommendations from the 2011 Slave Lake wildfires. We propose the officially designated start of the fire season be set at March 1, which is one month earlier than the April 1 date that is currently set out in the legislation. This ensures that spring wildfire preparations are well under way and our wildfire personnel will start the fire season ready to fight fires.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the proposed amendments will have a strong level of public support. Wildfire prevention and protection continue to be on the forefront of the minds of Albertans in the wake of the devastating fires in the communities of Fort McMurray and Slave Lake. As a result, the general public will be receptive to new measures aimed at reducing the wildfire risks to communities and enhancing the province's ability to combat wildfires.

An open, public survey conducted this spring also solicited input from the public as well as key stakeholders that included first responders, municipalities, indigenous people, industry, recreational associations as well as other affected groups. The survey responses indicated strong support for the proposed enhancements to the legislation and regulations, which were viewed as an effective means to reduce wildfire risk and increase accountability and compliance across Alberta. The proposal to increase fines, for example, was supported by 96 per cent of respondents.

Mr. Speaker, I am proposing that the amendments to the act be passed through this House with the subsequent regulatory changes completed in the following months. The goal is to have all of the new measures in place before the beginning of next year's fire season, on March 1, 2017.

That concludes my comments, Mr. Speaker. I ask all members in the House to support this bill and support the hard-working wildfire professionals across the province who protect Albertans from the threat of wildfires.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to also give my input to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016.

Kudos go to my colleague from Red Deer-North on her introduction of the bill. She also gave a marvellous member's statement today, and I compliment the member on that.

3:20

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we recognize the exact title of the bill because it talks about forest and prairie protection amendment here in our legislation going forward. As you know and as you've seen in recent events in the Chamber, we live and die by the exact wording of what we say in this facility, here in the Chamber, sir. It's an honour to try and effect some of that professionalism as we go forward.

This act is one that deals with legislation dealing with forest fire rules and regulations. Mr. Speaker, this is a timely piece of legislation given yesterday's events in the rotunda, which I attended. It was a heartfelt moment, the wildfire first responders and local heroes recognition event. My thoughts not only went out to the community of Fort McMurray but to all those resilient people who faced untold hardships and uncertainty during the evacuation and the many that continue to face them today.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to be visited in my home, actually, by a member, and I don't think it's inappropriate to mention his and his wife's names. Mr. Gary Exner and his wife, Bev, attended our home to express their personal appreciation for their temporary summer residence in the community of Stettler that they achieved. It was an honour to meet those folks.

Mr. Speaker, again, listening to those speeches yesterday and seeing again the raw emotion still close to the surface was a touching moment. The praise heaped upon those first responders and local heroes is richly deserved. Their leadership and conduct was not only admired and celebrated here in Alberta but all over Canada and the world at large. It's the bold but compassionate Alberta way.

In 2011, when a tragic fire struck the town of Slave Lake, numerous reports and recommendations came out of this disaster. One of note was the Flat Top Complex review. Within that report were recommendations that towns and cities adopt FireSmart policies to help such catastrophes from reoccurring. Specifically, it was recommended that various actions were taken to reduce fuel loading in the Slave Lake area prior to the Flat Top Complex, however, more could have been done. Considering the rapidly increasing number and severity of wildfires in Alberta, there is the need to increase wildfire prevention initiatives.

In fact, the town of Slave Lake and the province invested millions of dollars retroactively fire-smarting the town. The FireSmart program has proved so vitally important to the town of Slave Lake that the town is considering asking for a permanent $4 million FireSmart training centre.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Wildrose have heard first-hand how adopting some of those FireSmart recommendations was instrumental in saving private property in what's now known as the Horse Lake fire earlier this year. These practices have been seen to help communities deal with the threat of forest fires by taking some positive, proactive measures. I can only hope that the government realizes the intrinsic value of this program and invests in it accordingly in the future.

Positive lessons continue to be learned from any such events, and we can only hope that government reports that come from looking at all aspects in regard to the Fort McMurray or, as some describe it, the Horse Lake fire produce more recommendations that are adopted going forward. These reports can be very helpful in how we attack these fires and defend our communities from future fires.

While it is unknown what will be in those reports, concerns have been brought forward both from the public and industry. Topics such as: was the fire fought in the initial days with every strategic resource available? Were there enough trained firefighters, effectively, boots on the ground? Was the fire fought at first light when the temperature is the coolest, humidity is the highest, and winds are at their lightest? Additional comments included: is there a mandate for fighting fires close to populated areas until it is completely under control versus a passive approach dependent upon circumstances?

All of these questions and more, I suspect, will be asked and answered in the coming months, as information is gathered from these reports. In no way would I or anyone want to insinuate or lay blame on the heroic efforts of those on the front line who were involved directly during the events of the Fort McMurray, Slave Lake, or any other catastrophic fire incident. As we know, a fulsome examination of past events is how we obtain valuable information, and those lessons learned will make fighting future events a more effective endeavour.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if I could embellish on that subject, as a light plane aficionado and pilot for some 35-plus years I know that the Department of Transport sends out to those involved with licences of many kinds national transport safety reports stemming from transport accidents similar to that which, unfortunately, took the lives of several, including former Premier Jim Prentice, in British Columbia recently. I'm looking forward to those reports so that as aviators we can all learn from those types of incidents so that they never happen again. If the automobile transportation industry would look into something like that, I think that would be effective for reducing motor vehicle transport accidents across the country.

Mr. Speaker, turning my attention back to this piece of legislation, known in this Chamber as Bill 24, it has on appearance certain housekeeping changes that it is our job on this side of the House to exercise what I would call proper due diligence. That being said, I have a few concerns about certain aspects of these changes.

While it is understood that in recent years of drier winters the fire season has been starting earlier than in the past, it is always advantageous that fire operators are prepared well in advance of the fire season. A change to the fire season, in fact, moving the start from April 1 to March 1, as laid out in section 17(1), is one such change. Now, the minister in section 17(2) of the act always had the power to move the fire season's timeline around. So while it may be redundant, I can accept the thought process behind this move.

What I have difficulty accepting is the fact that with the changes you have not increased the length of the season, from which begs the question: how will this change affect firefighting contracts? We saw last year that this government chose to shorten air bomber contracts, ending them earlier than in previous years. If the season is starting an additional month earlier, will this mean that we may have even fewer resources later in the season? Will there be any provisions for flexibility in this regard?

Despite assurances last year there was much consternation within the industry, Mr. Speaker, and we met with some of those affected contractors. What happens if we have a long, hot summer? We had a situation last season where, despite reciprocal agreements with other jurisdictions, some resources were already unavailable to us when they were needed. I've heard in the Chamber the government's reassurance that they will stand by Albertans in the case of funding and the requirements necessary and fully accept that. Will this government ensure that we won't have fire contractors heading south or to other jurisdictions if a shortened contract offered here will be less financially viable than pursuing contracts of a larger length elsewhere?

These questions, Mr. Speaker and to members of the Chamber, are very important and need answers.

3:30

Another concern pertains to a section later in the act about fire control plans moving from being ordered by the minister to being ordered by the officer. In the section Fire Control Plans this bill says the following, and I quote again, Mr. Speaker, section 23:

(1) A person carrying on or having charge of an industrial or commercial operation on public land or within one kilometre of any public land shall at the request of a forest officer submit a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer, within the time determined by the forest officer.

(2) If a person referred to in subsection (1) fails to comply with the request of the forest officer within the time determined by the forest officer, the Minister may, by order, suspend the industrial or commercial operation of the person until a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer has been submitted to the forest officer.

It seems a bit vague on what defines an industrial or commercial operation within one kilometre of public land. Does that include a family farm next to Crown land, a taxidermist running a shop out of his acreage? I personally ranch public prairie land, and I have no inkling how I could contact a forest officer. I would challenge you, Mr. Speaker, in your constituency: how would you contact a forest officer to submit a fire control plan, never mind a satisfactory plan dictated by that officer? While this may seem as nitpicking, in this legislation it is important that we as those legislators see that there is no room for any potential overreach. The potential for an arbitrary decision of, to quote from the act, a "forest officer" having a negative impact on someone's livelihood is too great to be left to vagueness, and I'm sure, hopefully, my colleagues would agree.

Another concerning area is within section 31.4, where it talks about, Mr. Speaker, diseased and infected products and which used to say "product" but has been expanded to the direct word "thing" so that it would now read: "a forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest." While this part used to refer to a product, which is vague – but it probably isn't a large leap of logic to understand they mean a wood product – the government is now replacing this vague term with the word "thing," an even vaguer term, although possibly in a prairie environment there may be some interpretation of the word "thing," but I'm anxious to understand what that might be. It reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of a B-class horror movie that was entitled The Thing.

With all due respect, the use of the word "product" would have been much more acceptable than the term "thing." Why wasn't this term changed to “forest product” or simply just left as it was? I’d be open to hearing a concrete explanation for the reasoning for the substitution.

Mr. Speaker, I hope members opposite and the government and even members on this side of the Chamber would understand that I don’t wish to tear apart this document simply to oppose it, and that’s my position. We as diligent legislators have a duty to work for the betterment of all Albertans. There is no malice or ill intent intended today. There is much in this bill that is absolutely needed and some that needs to simply be tweaked, which is why we go through this process. While I have doubts that any of these changes would have prevented incidents such as the Slave Lake and Fort McMurray fires, I am inclined to tentatively support this bill provided that my concerns and others that may be brought forth are addressed through simple amendments to the bill.

With that, I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, a bill that aims to enhance the ability of Alberta to fight and prevent forest fires in this province.

To begin with, I’d like to take a moment to acknowledge the strength shown by the people of Fort McMurray in dealing with the unimaginable tragedy caused by just such a wildfire. To see your homes, your possessions, and your livelihoods be consumed in such a terrible blaze must truly be a horrific and traumatic experience, and the grace shown by the residents of Fort McMurray and the surrounding area is truly an inspiration.

I would also like to acknowledge the incredible work done by our first responders and emergency management teams. Without their tireless efforts this terrible tragedy could have been far, far worse. So we are here today to do our part as legislators to make sure that all possible measures are being undertaken to prevent forest fires and that we’ll also equip our first responders with all the necessary tools to ensure their safety and the safety of those they put their lives on the line to protect. I am pleased the government is bringing forward legislation to this effect.

The government is proposing this legislation to bring forward the start of the fire season by one month. That will make the start of the fire season March 1 as opposed to April 1. I believe this is a good move, a move that recognizes that the fire season in Alberta can be as unpredictable as the weather, which all Albertans are aware makes it very unpredictable indeed. This move will give our fire management teams more flexibility in marshalling their resources to combat and, more importantly, prevent large and dangerous wildfires, so I expect this amendment will be well received by the agencies responsible for fire protection as well as all the municipalities, property owners, and wilderness enthusiasts that are threatened by wildfires.

Now, I understand that there are a number of provisions that were part of a consultation this spring that are missing from the text of the legislation. I’m referring to the provisions that dealt with debris removal, energy extraction, agriculture, and recreational use, amongst others. I believe a number of these provisions are expected to be dealt with through the use of regulation, and that seems reasonable. What I’d like to see and what I think a lot of Albertans would like to see is the government begin to release early drafts of what exactly these regulations are going to look like. With legislation like this, that concerns the safety and security of a great number of Albertans, the more discussion and transparency we can deliver, the better.

There are Albertans in the province that are eager to ensure that this government has taken to heart the important lessons of the Fort McMurray wildfires. My colleagues and I are eager to see that as well so that we can be part of the discussion to do our part to avert future disasters of this nature. So in the spirit of having conversations about how to best protect the Albertans we serve, I believe our caucus will be bringing forward some technical amendments to the Committee of the Whole. But as a caucus we are generally supportive of the government in this initiative, which we hope will help put Albertans’ minds at ease.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m very pleased to speak to this bill and to offer my support and hope that all members here in the House will also support it. It’s definitely overdue.

I just wanted to comment on moving the season up to March 1. This is actually something that’s been in place now for several seasons, but it required an order in council to do that, so now the legislation is simply enshrining that. The reality is that with climate change we are seeing earlier springs and hotter springs, and this is something that’s been needed for a few years now. This simply makes it a formal process that we can now go forward on.

This legislation in particular is really important to my constituency. That’s for a number of reasons. We had our own fire scare earlier this spring when a lumber yard located very close to the town of High Level had a fire among some of the product in the yard, and thankfully the very quick and astute work by the High Level fire department managed the problem. Otherwise, had the wind changed direction the way it did in Fort McMurray, we would have probably lost the town of High Level, so it’s important to us that we have good fire legislation and that we have good protection for those kinds of things.

Forestry is a big part of my constituency. It’s one of our key industries, and the lumber yards where the forest industries operate have what they call hog piles. One of my companies has a bit of a backlog, so recently, in an effort to have a dialogue with them on how we can find some creative ways to deal with this backlog, they took me on a tour of this hog pile. What it is is waste bark, it’s sawdust, it’s all kinds of stuff that they can’t use, but most of it does get recycled and turned into pallets, other things. But for the moment this pile was starting to grow, and I couldn’t believe that when I went on this pile, it’s actually smoking. It’s like a giant compost pile, really, and it’s generating a great deal of heat. This was something I didn’t realize until I saw this, that actually it could be a fire hazard, so it needs to be monitored.

That’s why I’m glad to see that in the amendments there is going to be some alignment over industrial waste so that companies have a target that they have to work for to make sure that they’re cleaning up this industrial waste and that the penalties will be increased should companies not be responsible. Mine are, fortunately, all very responsible and doing their very best, but it’s something that does need to be cleaned up in a timely manner. The legislation also allows for an appeal, so should there be a concern or some reason why the cleanup can’t occur in a timely manner, the companies do have the option to appeal.

Another area where it’s important to my constituency is the agriculture industry. At certain times of the year you literally can’t see the highway because of smoke and fog because the farmers are clearing land and burning. They are required to get permits, but sometimes they're burning when they're not supposed to be burning. So the legislation will help by increasing the fines and giving a little more teeth to those who are enforcing the legislation to make sure that everybody has a permit and they can only burn when it's safe to do so.

Another area where it's important to my constituency is with the off-road vehicles. In the north that's kind of what everybody does. Everybody's got an off-road vehicle. Even little kids have theirs. It's quite amazing. But earlier this year there were a lot of complaints when the minister and the department had to say: sorry; no more off-road vehicles right now because it's too dangerous. People just didn't understand, so I think that with this legislation it's going to help raise some awareness as to why there are times when you simply cannot use these vehicles because it's just too great a risk.

Of course, I have a personal reason because I love campfires. I go camping, and there's nothing more frustrating to me than when we've got a fire ban and I can't go and sit out there and tell scary ghost stories with the grandkids around a campfire. But, again, you know, if I'm careless and leave that campfire burning, then I've got to be careful of that. It astounds me that 70 per cent of the fires in this province are human caused. I just think that's unacceptable and unbelievable, and while the majority are probably accidental – I know there are some that are deliberate, even in my constituency – again, we need legislation to deal with that. You get a few fines for not putting your campfire out, then the next time you're going to make sure you put it out before you go to bed. I think that's really important.

The public awareness and education piece is going to be huge as part of this legislation, so I'm looking forward to seeing how that's going to roll out. I think it's going to be a very positive thing.

I just wanted to add a little bit of a comment on some of the comments that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler said about change of language. Seizing any "thing" – you know, when I look at what's out in these lumber yards, I think it's really limiting to just call it "product" because there could be a lot of things there, so I think that the language actually broadens that and makes it a little bit easier for the forest officer to interpret what might be subject to a fine.

With that, I'll conclude my comments. I just want to say that I really hope that we'll get lots of support on this. It's a great piece of legislation and overdue, and I'm really pleased that the minister has brought it forward for us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Are there any questions or observations under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Peace River? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Peace River. I understand that possibly her representative jurisdiction may be somewhat different than mine, so I wanted to see what her thoughts were on the terminology of the legislation where we talk about the prairie.

Ms Jabbour: Sorry, I didn't catch that last word, when you talk about the ...

Mr. Strankman: Prairie.

Ms Jabbour: Oh, the prairie. You're right, yes. In fact, until you brought that up, I hadn't really considered that would affect the prairie land, but definitely, you know, the fire that's smoldering right now in Fort McMurray is underground, so I know the prairie can be subject to that as well. I think it's important that the terminology does recognize that it covers both forest and prairie and that it's comprehensive in that way.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Peace River?

Seeing none, I recognize the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in very, very strong support of this bill for many reasons that are very personal to me. In May 2011 I experienced something that nobody should have to go through and shared that experience with my whole, entire community at that time, surrounded by wildfires on all sides despite the fact that there are three highways leaving Slave Lake, or three different directions. All three were blocked by fire. My baby girl at that point in time and my father and I were in Slave Lake and weren't sure when we were going to be able to go, how we were going to be able to go. Of course, we were surrounded by many other individuals in that scenario.

When finally the RCMP said I could go, I drove past my community, and I saw the southeast quadrant on fire. It's not a superhuge town. I saw it, and I saw so much devastation, so much that had been burnt already. At the time I thought that I would never be able to return again. I thought my community was going to burn to the ground.

Thankfully, Mr. Speaker, due to the heroic efforts of the wildfire fighters despite the gusting winds, which created such incredible conditions that nobody could have anticipated, despite that – you know, it caused such a trauma for people to be driving through fire, to be driving through smoke, the effects that there were on children. Imagine these little kids driving through the fire thinking that they were going to die. That was the experience of people in Slave Lake when they left and the trauma that every single person in Slave Lake went through because they had to leave that community under threat of their life. Now, that kind of event we need to prevent. We need to make sure people don't have to go through that again.

Mr. Speaker, five years later I left this House to find out that the same thing was happening to people in Fort McMurray. I had to watch and hear all of the stories and imagine and see once again thousands upon thousands of individuals going through the same thing that the people in my community had to go through. People at the last second – again, conditions far beyond anything anyone could have anticipated led to a situation, because of a forest fire, in which those people had to leave their community not sure if they were going to make it, not sure what was happening to their friends and their family members, dealing with all of that, having to leave their community. Once again a whole, entire community was traumatized by that experience.

Both of those were spring fires. The majority of fires that happen in the spring are due to human causes, so we need to do everything we can to make sure Albertans do not cause fires that lead to the kind of trauma that happened to Albertans. We will never prevent every forest fire, Mr. Speaker, but if there's anything that we can do that can stop people from going through what the community of Slave Lake went through, what the community of Fort McMurray went through, I feel that our House is absolutely bound to do that in order to ensure that Albertans should not have to go through that if at all possible.

Certainly, those events reminded us of the importance of investing in programs that reduce the risk of wildfire. Mr. Speaker, there were a number of recommendations that came out of the Slave Lake fire, and there were many, many actions taken in response to that. Out of the Flat Top recommendations we now have more firefighters available to protect homes and communities than before. We actually have 40 per cent more firefighters now than in 2011.

As stated, we have, without the legislation in place to ensure it, begun the fire season a month early, in March, in order to ensure burning restrictions and that early start for crews. Of course, also, the FireSmart program has continued to be supported in recognition of the prevention with that. The Wood Buffalo municipality is a great partner of FireSmart and has been engaged in that. We also have improved our wildfire response through fire information officers in 10 province-wide locations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you know, just back to FireSmart, I'd like to say that there's actually been a substantial investment in FireSmart, and we're thankful for the work the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta is doing in terms of getting those dollars out in terms of vegetation management and educational programming.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of work that has been done, and I know that we are doing similar studies after Fort McMurray. I know that we will listen to those recommendations. We will move forward on those recommendations once we know what they are, and I look forward to hearing them and supporting them going forward.

Now, we have done all of that, but it is time for us to update the laws of this province to reflect those recommendations. It's time to strengthen Alberta's wildfire protection laws to enhance wildfire prevention activities and support the efforts of our wildfire fighters to keep Albertans and their communities safe. The world is changing, Mr. Speaker. The reality is that it's a longer, drier fire season. The risk is increasingly a challenge to all of us, and it is incumbent upon us as a House to do what we can to do that.

Certainly, restricting activities that human beings do, that Albertans do that would potentially cause a wildfire when fire conditions are hazardous should be a pretty straightforward option going forward that I hope everyone in this House can support. The idea that there may be actions that people are taking that would interfere with firefighting such as drone activity: you know, absolutely, there's nothing, Mr. Speaker, that should be getting in the way of wildfire fighters that are protecting people or are working to protect people, to protect our businesses, to protect industry in this province. Ensuring that we have very clear processes, roles, and responsibilities in place is absolutely essential.

Again, the amendments that we're bringing forward are supported by the recommendations and reviews of major wildfires that were done. Human-caused wildfires are a hundred per cent preventable, Mr. Speaker, so it's time that our legislation caught up with this to ensure that we do everything that we can to prevent that from happening again. I have to say on behalf of the people of Slave Lake – and I'm sure that Fort McMurray people would say the same – that, absolutely, there is tremendous support from people right across this province that watched it happen to all of us to ensure that this doesn't happen again. If there's anything that we can ever do, this is a very important measure to avoid the kind of mass community trauma that happened in Slave Lake and Fort McMurray.

Thank you so much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions to the Minister of Municipal Affairs under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I would recognize the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The tragedy of mass fire is unspeakable, so we truly must do all that we can to prevent fire, to prevent the growth of these fires, and emotion and handwringing clearly is not enough. I fully applaud the intent of cleaning this act up, of renewing the language, of adding a bit for enforcement, but I really think that there's a lot lacking here. There's a lot that should have been dealt with.

Also, just a couple of concerns that I have. I guess one of my most important concerns is in section 23(2), where we give the definition or the understanding of a fire control plan to the utterly subjective opinion of a forest officer. Now, I have two problems with that. One is that it's very subjective. It just says "satisfactory to the forest officer," but there's no standard cited. There's no regulation to guide that forest officer as to what is satisfactory. There are no definitions of what a satisfactory plan would look like. There's no template of what a plan would look like. I think this is extremely subjective, and in that regard I think it's going to lead to conflict and dangerous issues.

Furthermore, I think that to give that kind of subjective and discretionary power to a forest officer, which is a change from the previous act, which stated "the Minister," is a significant change. To give that kind of subjective decision-making power to one of the civil servants of the province who is not accountable to the people, who does not have the public awareness of the minister I think is dangerous. Changing it from "the Minister" to "forest officer" causes me concern.

I also think that in 26(1) it's the same situation. It says: "Where a forest officer finds on any land conditions that the forest officer considers to be a fire hazard." Well, again, that's extremely subjective and onerous. Again, no standard, no regulations, no definitions, no indication of what one person might feel is and what another feels isn't.

Then I'm also a little bit concerned about an absence. There's no provision or requirement in this update of the act for the province or a municipality to have the permission or the authority to create and maintain fireguards around communities.

My friend from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has a community that I'm afraid may be the next major fire area, Rocky Mountain House. If you've ever been there, there are forests all the way around and through and in the middle of that community. I also know that in the past the department of forestry has itself refused permission to cut provincial forests as fireguards. I'm afraid that that will happen again, where permission to municipalities or communities to actually create fireguards around their communities will in fact be refused by the department. I think that's something that should have been addressed in this particular update of the legislation.

The last thing that really troubles me is the removal of section 40, replacing it with 40 and 40.1, and that is that there is now no recourse on the part of citizens with regard to the administration of any of this law. It says that "no action lies and no proceeding may be brought against." We are denying the rights of citizens when we write this kind of law. I know it's become fashionable in the last few years, even reaching back into the previous government, to make it easier for administration to just do what they want to do and to allocate power to themselves while denying the rights of citizens to challenge that. There is a loss of accountability when you deny citizens the right of recourse or proceeding even if, as that particular 40.1 goes on to say, they have done it "in good faith."

I fully understand that oftentimes people may act in good faith, totally, truly good faith, but they misunderstand the situation, they misinterpret the law, especially when you grant the authority to a subjective level, to a forest officer who can do what he personally considers to be right or acceptable, a very subjective decision, and now there is no recourse to even question his personal, emotional, subjective decision on that. It's a return to medieval feudalism. It's a return to a denial of the right of citizens to challenge what government does. Either that or it's a move – and I suspect even from the previous government, moving on, as I said, it's fashionable to be moving toward a more authoritarian, dictator style of government. It's not democracy when you remove the rights of citizens to recourse.

I think that the law needs to be carefully considered and looked at. It's extremely strong in those couple of items, and it's missing a couple of other points that I wish would have been included. Personally, I would like to see this go to committee. I think the intention is good. I think that it does need to be looked at, but I think there are serious considerations, and I would see that it be moved to committee so that it could be made even better than it is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the previous speaker with interest, and I just had a few questions for him. He mentioned the firebreaks around communities and his concern about how those things will be managed. I wonder if he's familiar with the FireSmart program. I wonder if he can tell us a little about his understanding of the FireSmart program and how that protects various communities and the initiatives that that program undertakes.

Then he also, you know, went on at length about civil servants and his fear of them being subjective in their application of considering fire plans and safety plans. I'm just wondering. I have a lot of confidence in our civil servants. We hire these people because they're experts in the field. They do this day in and day out. These are the people that I trust to make these kinds of decisions. The member has made an allegation that he questions their ability to make an objective assessment of whether the plans that are submitted are accurate. I'm just wondering: is it the member's position that our civil servants aren't capable and are not experts in the field?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Yes. Thank you for the questions. You know, I'm not trying to denigrate the purpose of what's intended here. I'm just trying to say that there are spots that I think could make it better. I am aware that there is the FireSmart plan, but I'm also aware that there have been challenges in the past, and it's not absolutely clear about the authority to act on some of those things. So I think that needs to be considered.

Secondly, with regard to the subjective nature of decision-making, where there is no clearly stated protocol or regulation or rule, there's no other choice but that it can be subjective. Somebody has to decide to make it. And, yes, they are competent, capable civil servants, but that doesn't mean that they will always make the choice that everyone else considers to be appropriate. As we all know, in our ridings we all have people who phone us who are struggling with: how is the law to be applied by those who are tasked with applying it? There are issues that come up every week. All of you have dealt with those.

So I'm not calling into credibility their intent. I'm saying that if we don't give them appropriate guidance, we are inappropriately tasking them with a responsibility that will put them in a difficult place and us in a difficult place, and we need to do better than that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any other questions or comments to the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka under 29(2)(a)?

Are there any other members who would like to speak to the bill before us, which is Bill 24? The Member for Grande-Prairie Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I'd like to speak to Bill 24, Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. Of course, we've heard discussions, and rightly so, about the Slave Lake fire and the devastation that it left. And, of course, even more recently and even more catastrophic as far as numberswise, anyway, we can remember the Fort Mac fire and its effects on that community and all of Alberta and, in fact, even Canada.

The effects of forest fires – I honestly can't imagine what it'd be like to lose my home in a fire. This spring when the Fort Mac fire was burning, there was a fire in our community. That day I'd actually driven to Edmonton for the Legislature the next day. I drove here on a Sunday night, and when I got here, I received word that part of my constituency was being evacuated. Of course, I turned around right then and drove straight back and arrived home at 4 o'clock in the morning to see what I could do to help with the situation there. Fortunately, for our sake and our community, we didn't lose any homes or anything. Again, I can't imagine what it would be like to lose a home and, in fact, to lose a whole community like what happened in Fort Mac and Slave Lake.

When I look at Bill 24, I do see a lot of good things, and I want to commend the government on those good things. There were a lot of things that needed to be cleaned up in that act. In particular, what I want to address is that I want to make sure that what we're doing with Bill 24 effectively reduces the opportunity for a Fort Mac or Slave Lake fire to happen again. With the situation that we're in and with the recent events of the Fort Mac fire, I think that has to be the goal of any discussion on forest and prairie protection when it comes to fires.

Now, when I looked at it, I looked at section 14, where it adds ATVs and the vehicles that could be restricted. Of course, that makes sense at times to do that. But we did have an ATV ban this spring, so that's not something that's necessarily new. Maybe this will allow it to happen more easily, but I would like to have a little more clarification on that and a little more understanding of what this is doing that wasn't done before.

I noticed, obviously, too, that the fire season will start a month earlier with this bill. Again, this spring was a classic example of an extremely early and dry spring where something like this, of course, would have been very helpful. Now, I do understand that the minister already has that ability to start the fire season earlier, so though this may make things easier or make it set in stone that the fire season starts earlier, it isn't something that's necessarily a huge change from what was there before.

We notice that the fire season now will start earlier, but this fire season, of course, the government shortened the contracts on the water bombers by one month. So we've extended the fire season by one month, but the government has shortened the bomber contracts by one month. That seems a little bit of an odd situation there, where there's kind of a greater disparity in time frame.

Now, if we look at section 23, we see some changes there where the word "Minister" has been replaced with "forest officer." Some of that, I guess, may make sense because obviously the forest officer is the person that would be dealing with some of these issues on the front line, not the minister. So some of that may make sense.

While we're talking about section 23, it talks about having "an industrial or commercial operation on public land or within one kilometre of any public land." Of course, what it suggests is that for anybody that has an industrial or commercial operation in those parameters, the forest officer may have them develop a fire control plan that's satisfactory to that officer.

Now, what's maybe not contemplated in this bill is a possible change as far as, you know, what constitutes an industrial or commercial operation and what could be considered industrial or commercial. There are obviously a lot of different businesses and operations that would have no reasonable opportunity to pose a fire hazard. So I wonder if maybe some wording along those lines could be added into this, where we could suggest: an industrial or commercial operation that could reasonably pose a fire hazard. There could be a home-based business or something like that that doesn't operate in the outdoors at all that could fall under these parameters.

Now, if we read subsection (2) under section 23, it says:

If a person referred to in subsection (1) fails to comply with the request of the forest officer within the time determined by the forest officer, the Minister may, by order, suspend the industrial or commercial operation of the person until a fire control plan satisfactory to the forest officer has been submitted to the forest officer.

Obviously, this puts a lot of onus on the forest officer himself or herself. We have good people working in that industry, but it may be nice to have some parameters for them to work under so that they're not totally responsible themselves for anything along these lines that could go wrong.

I also wonder if there's any appeal process. Is the only appeal possible through the courts on these issues? Of course, if their business was to get shut down by a forest officer, how do they appeal or how do they make a claim that maybe they are in compliance?

We also need to realize with this same issue that having a business on public land is different than having a business within one kilometre of public land. Now, "public land" is a pretty general term that, of course, may include road allowances, grazing leases, marginal agricultural land that's interspersed with agricultural land, and then some of that marginal agricultural land has never been sold, so it still remains, you know, public land. So even though we could have a business that's within the kilometre of a quarter section of public land, they may be miles and miles from the actual forestry land that this bill would really be dealing with. I don't think that was the intent of this, to deal with businesses that are within a kilometre of land that's not expansive and could pose that chance for real catastrophic forest fire travel.

Now, in section 31.4(1) it talks about: "A forest officer may, without a warrant, seize any thing that the forest officer has reasonable grounds to believe harbours a forest pest." I think there was a change of wording from "product" to "thing." Of course, the definition of thing is: "an object that one need not, cannot, or does not wish to give a specific name to." When we talk about a thing, any thing, I think that leaves a lot of – well, I guess it basically includes everything because everything is a thing. I think that stands to reason. So I would like maybe a little bit of clarification on that. What was the reason for the change? Maybe there is a good reason, but it would be nice to know that. Maybe it could be changed to "forestry product" or something related to the forest industry. It may seem a little harsh to without warrants seize anything.

When it comes to invasive aquatic species, which is a similar issue, I believe – with invasive aquatic species, of course, they're trying to keep out these invasive species that could infect our waterways. Of course, it's very important to keep them out. The legislation on that, when it talks about the power of seizure, says that a forest officer or guardian may seize anything that the officer believes on reasonable grounds might afford evidence of the commission of an offence or that has been used in the commission of an offence or is found in or on or at a place or conveyance and is believed on reasonable grounds to be a subject organism that is held without lawful authority to hold it.

This 31.4, I mean, I presume is talking about things like the pine beetle. Of course, we know the devastation that the pine beetle has caused to British Columbia in particular and, obviously, to Alberta, too. We've suffered a lot from the pine beetle. So it makes sense that we need to try to restrict the transport of these pests because they can do great damage to our local environment. I'm just wondering if maybe that wording that's used to deal with aquatic invasive species might be a little more appropriate for this bill here, dealing with the forest pests. I believe there are lots of good wording changes in this bill. Changing some of these things from "Minister" to "forest officer" because of a forest officer being on the front line: some of that makes sense. Like I say, I don't want to see the forest officers burdened with more responsibility than they have guidelines to follow. I think there's something to be said about that.

Overall, I mean, this is great because this is something that's very timely. We need to be discussing this. We need to be bringing this forward because of these catastrophic fires that we've experienced. We have to make sure that we do everything we can, as has been said before, to stop that happening to any other communities.

I'd also like to see a little bit more as far as how this lines up with the Flat Top Complex recommendations and that sort of thing. Maybe the minister will have a chance to explain some of this in greater detail for us. I'd look forward to that. Again, overall, I really like what's happening here as far as addressing some of the concerns that we have with our forest and fire protection in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Are there any questions or comments directed to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky?

Ms Jabbour: I just wanted to ask a question for, I guess, more clarification. You had mentioned your concern that there was no ability to appeal. Section 37.6 does have the option to appeal an administrative penalty. Were you referring, then, to being able to appeal, like, the specified individual fines as opposed to administrative penalties?

Mr. Loewen: Well, thanks for the question. What I was referring to was section 23, when it talked about the industrial and commercial operations and the decisions that could be made by the forest officer in regard to that particular business, and of course in that section there it doesn't talk about any opportunity for appeals. It is good to have those opportunities for appeals, as you pointed out. I mean, that's great because in a democracy we need to have that opportunity to appeal decisions, and it is nice to be able to have the right to appeal without actually having to go to court and hire a lawyer and go through that expensive and time-consuming process.

Again, I just want to state that there are a lot of good things in here, and it would be nice to have the minister explain more. Hopefully, we'll have that opportunity to listen to him and have this fulsome discussion.

Again, these catastrophic fires are something that we need to avoid. There are other communities, I'm sure, in Alberta that could be in a situation where, if not handled properly, they could end up in the same situation, and we need to avoid any opportunity we have to lose property and even life as it comes to this.

We have to respect that the first responders, you know, when they're fighting these fires, are putting their lives on the line, and by doing so, we need to do what we can to make sure that these first responders don't have to put their lives on the line to do that. There are always going to be some fires, but we need to do our best to reduce any opportunity to have these fires and to put our first responders in harm's way like that.

I think it's our duty to look at this as carefully as we can. Bill 24 is that opportunity to look at this to the fullest extent we can, and I would hope that possibly this maybe even could go to committee, where we could look at it and spend a lot of time and really go through this carefully to make sure that we've done everything we can.

Again, I can't imagine what it would be like to lose a home in a fire. Others have gone through that. I never have, and I would hope that nobody else has to do that. In late August I had an opportunity to go to Fort Mac and view some of that devastation. Again, I can't imagine. There are people's homes that were obviously burned to the ground, but they haven't had a chance to clean up or even start rebuilding yet. There are some homes that were standing at that time in perfect condition, that people weren't even able to return to at that point. So there's all that kind of stress and anguish that those people had to go through. Again, I can't imagine what it would be like.

I think, again, we have this opportunity with Bill 24 to open this all up, to make sure we get it right, because that's what we're here for. We're here to get it right. We're not here to just graze over and just, you know, do a few little tweaks here and there. If we're opening this up, let's do it right. Let's take it to the fullest extent that we can. Let's get as much consultation as we can. Let's see what we can do about bringing this fully forward in a way that we can do our absolute best to ensure this doesn't happen again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We're under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Strankman: Yes, sir. My colleague has talked about some of the changes within the system, and I, too, talked about the changes of moving the fire season ahead, the potentiality under section 17(1), where the minister has talked about doing that. We've learned, through some of the questions that we had – and I believe my colleague was privy to that – in regard to the potential use of different products, that the time before the fire season is when our firefighters through forestry, et cetera, test the product . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

I recognize the Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I am an urban MLA, I really want to seek this opportunity to speak about something that's very unique to my constituency, something that this will really apply heavily towards, and that is the fact that Fish Creek park is right adjacent to and actually encompasses part of my constituency.

Mr. Rodney: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you.

Anyway, the thing that's pretty unique to note on it is that because it is a provincial park, it does not fall under the purview of any municipal bylaws within the city of Calgary. In fact, on a technical standpoint, if you were to walk into the park, you have technically left Calgary, which is remarkable for all those who live in that area, including myself, who can take his kids down there and can go for walks in those areas.

The thing that is very interesting to note is that during the last spring I had quite a few opportunities to meet with many of the park officials and managers of that park, and they had a lot of concerns in that area because it was a very dry winter for Calgary and southern Alberta. By around April of this year a lot of the foliage was very dry. They were very dry conditions, and, to be frank, they were preparing for the possibility of a wildfire in there. The area is very well established. A lot of the foliage is very old; it's very dry. To be completely candid, it gave them and myself a lot of anxiety because there are a lot of houses that back right onto Fish Creek park that would have been negatively impacted. There are businesses. There's even a university that backs onto that park. So there was a lot of danger that was seen there.

The problem that we have is that the city of Calgary has always been very good about keeping their bylaws up to date when it is trying to manage wildfires and grass fires in the area, but none of those apply to Fish Creek park. If there was to be a wildfire, I have a lot of faith and I know for a fact that the people who would be responding to that are the Calgary fire department. Ultimately, they would have a challenge trying to navigate some of the rules that exist within Fish Creek park and a lot of the outdated rules.

We also have to make sure that we're empowering our parks officials to have that opportunity to be able to manage the area and to prevent these wildfires from occurring. One of the things that I learned just recently is that there was a new deal signed in Fish Creek park. They're leasing part of the land near the water treatment plant for off-road vehicles, so the parks officials do need to have that power to put a ban on off-road vehicles if they know that there is a huge possibility of wildfires occurring. Further to the point, they also need to be able to have a bit more power to control uncontrolled fires that are lit within some of the grounds that are in that area as well. There are quite a few firepits and little camp stoves and things like that.

The other thing that we have to be very well aware of is that if there is the instance where a fire does occur in that area, we have to be able to allow people like CPS, who will fly HAWCS over there looking for hot spots and making sure there is no one in that park, the power to be able to do that without any disruption. So we have to make sure that we're putting those bans on the drone vehicles during wildfire events, because if that does occur, we want to make sure that everyone is safe during these times and that we can save homes and those people who are impacted and not deal with the disruptions that are coming from drone vehicles.

Now, if I may speak in regard to section 31.4, we've had an unfortunate distinction in Fish Creek park this year, and I had the unfortunate opportunity to be at the press announcement during this time. We have an invasive species, a weed that actually came into that park – and I apologize if I mispronounce it, because it's very uncommon – Thesium arvense. It's an Asian-based weed. It doesn't even have a slang term yet because it's very new to North America. One of the things that the park is doing to try to combat that, because of certain patches where it exists, is that they brought in one of our mussel-sniffing dogs, Hilo, and they've trained him to sniff out where that weed is. He can actually go around the park and find patches where they are, and he's been doing a very good job of it.

The downside is that we may not necessarily know when we have them at that park site. If we think there could be something that might have spread that weed that came into that park, we need to be able to contain that and detect whether or not that is the case. Right now Fish Creek park is doing a lot of work to combat invasive weeds and invasive species. A lot of the grassland there is not native because it is reclaimed farmland. There was some industrial development at that point, and then we reclaimed the space. But people like friends of Fish Creek and the parks officials there have been working really diligently, and they actually have some trial spaces where they're trying to prevent invasive weeds from growing and are trying to grow it back to natural land. They're trying to reclaim a lot of that space.

But the challenge is that you're going to have these opportunities where people are bringing invasive things into the park. We have to be able to control that so that we can really grow that area. A lot of people have pride for this park. It's getting a little bit older, and we're dealing with a lot of challenges that come with invasive species coming into this province from just the natural occurrence of us being so mobile and moving around. This is always going to be a fight that the friends of Fish Creek and the parks officials will be managing, but we need to make sure that we're giving them all the tools that they can have to manage this appropriately as well.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, I'm going to support this bill because I really think that it is the right thing for us to do, to give our parks officials the tools that they need to prevent any really devastating fires from impacting that area and also to make sure that they can manage and control any issues that do occur in that area.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The member just talked very passionately about Fish Creek park bordering his constituency there. I just wanted to ask the member if he feels that Bill 24 does absolutely every possible thing that it can to protect the forest in Fish Creek park.

Mr. Sucha: You know, when I look at the review of this, at a lot of the hurdles that we have in that area, I don't want to say any absolutes or have to eat my words, which would be very unfortunate if something were to happen to that park. There are sometimes bad seeds out there that will cause devastating things to areas, and it's very unfortunate when that occurs. But I think that this gives the parks officials a lot of tools that they can use to prevent fires and to also prevent the spread of a lot of invasive weeds and invasive species in this. I think it gives them a lot of great opportunities to really continue to allow that park to flourish. I fundamentally believe that this provides every tool that they need at their disposal.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions under 29(2)(a)? Drumheller-Stettler.

4:30

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the member, I too would like to ask him a question. Some of the new products that are available for firefighting are used in different jurisdictions and not so much in Canada. In the act here it talks about changing the fire season start from April 1 to March 1. I was going to ask that question to my colleague here, but I'll ask it to the member opposite. That's normally when the forestry department does their testing of new products, and I was wondering what he would think about the possibility. The product known as fire-retardant gel, actually, in urban areas similar to where the member opposite lives, provides excellent control that's able to be laid down by various forms, whether it be rotary- or fixed-wing aircraft. This product provides longer term fire protection, or so I've been led to believe. I was wondering if the member would think that this is an option, that we might want to change some of this so that it would allow the forestry department to test throughout the season to use new products that are used in other jurisdictions.

Mr. Sucha: You know, I do have to apologize to the member as I'm not as familiar with a lot of those products. I guess he's given me some homework to review when I get off duty today as well, too. You know, it's always amazing to see how technology evolves over time and how forest fire fighting has changed over this vast amount of time. Even when you look at, as I alluded to before, a lot of the wildfire combatting that we've had within the urban area of Calgary, it was remarkable to see them fighting grass fires with HAWCS when they first got the helicopter in that area because it was never something that they had at their disposal, but they had it then. At the end of the day, I would have to read into these things a little bit more to have a more accurate response in relation to some of these products that are available.

The Deputy Speaker: Further questions and comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Yeah. Just a comment on that previous question. I know that over the summer I was able to meet with some constituents that were looking at alternative products and testing of those products. In working with the agriculture minister, we were able to find ways to test and times in which they can test the different products. So I know that's already happening, specifically talking about the gels. It's not saying that it's being applied everywhere. It's going through the system of how we can test them right now. I just wanted to provide a comment on that front, knowing that a constituent of mine is also looking into that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I don't have a lot to add to the discussion except questions. Like many, I don't live and haven't lived in an area that is heavily forested, but having travelled in the U.S. a bit over the summer, I came across some folks who had some experience in the U.S. and were kind of astonished at the lack of regulations in Canada, in Alberta in particular, when I raised some of the issues around our forest management.

I'm speaking of areas like Idaho and California, where they believe they have largely controlled forest fires that affect urban settlements by very strict standards around fire belts and clearing the branches up to 10 feet in all trees that are anywhere near the urban areas. I don't know all of the conditions under which they have managed to control forest fires in those areas, but they have significantly reduced any serious threats to urban centres by setting in place some pretty strong barriers, including removing all flammable materials on the ground within several miles of an urban centre, as I say, branches no lower than 10 feet to stop it moving up trees – even if there is a grass fire, it won't move up the trees – and a setback distance of whatever it is, a very significant setback distance from urban settings for any major trees.

I wonder how much we've looked at other jurisdictions and the lengths to which they've gone to what they believe has virtually eliminated the risk to urban centres at a cost, obviously, of having nice forested areas close to urban centres and towns, which is a wonderful attraction for all of us. We love the forests. We love the wildlife. We love the opportunity to move in forests, recreate in forests.

I hope the government has looked at other jurisdictions because the folks that I ran into just serendipitously on my vacation in the U.S. suggested that they think it's a thing of the past and that there are very practical and concrete ways, with setback distances and measures to reduce flammability in proximity to cities, to actually eliminate the kind of thing that we've seen in our northern communities. Obviously, there's much more dense forest in the northern part of our province than in many parts of California, but they took this very seriously, and they tell me that they have virtually eliminated the risk to urban and even smaller municipalities as a result of very strong standards for firebreaks.

I would commend that to the government. I'm sure they have looked at other locations, but there may be much to learn from other locations in North America that have more successfully than we have prevented forest fires affecting major populations.

Thank you. I'll follow the debate and do some more research.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to rise to speak to this bill. This bill is seeking to improve the existing laws by strengthening deterrents through tougher fines, improving the ability to reduce fire risk where fire conditions are hazardous, and clarifying operational processes, roles, and responsibilities. This is something I support. These legislative changes build on the more than 100 actions taken in response to the recommendations made in the Flat Top Complex report following the 2011 Slave Lake area wildfires. This is one of those learnings from the last two wildfire seasons.

These amendments generally can be grouped into three categories: enhanced fines, improved public safety and wildfire prevention measures, and operational amendments. I'll just focus on looking into public safety and prevention. One of the things that has been talked about at length is ATVs and the importance of what those who use off-road vehicles need to do in order to prevent forest fires.

As somebody who's a bit of an automobile enthusiast – I mean, quads, for example, often have many hot spots in them with debris accumulating underneath the seat as well as around the heat shields and around the muffler. For dirt bikes, which are my personal preference if I'm going to be using an off-road vehicle, spark arresters are very important as well as, again, making sure that you have no debris around the particular exhaust pipes. This is not to say that those who use off-road vehicles are not responsible users. When I've gone out enjoying our forested areas dirt biking, I found that users, on the whole, are responsible. However, this legislation provides for the ministry to restrict that use in the case when the fire risk is so high that even an otherwise responsible user may inadvertently start a forest fire.

It's interesting that technology of ATVs – it's new technology as well that has also become a concern that we are addressing in this legislation, specifically in the use of drones around firefighting equipment, specifically planes and helicopters. You know, I can imagine that years and years ago ATVs were a new technology that I'm sure needed to be addressed in the legislation of the day, and now we are moving forward with that while including drones in the legislation as well. Spark arresters and such on ATVs as well are another excellent example of things that can be done to prevent forest fires with your ATV. So if you don't happen to have one, you should probably get one on your dirt bike or your ATV.

Lastly, you know, one of the things that's come up that I was thinking about during the debate of this particular legislation is: why would providing the ability to prohibit the operation of off-highway vehicles narrow the ability of the public to use Alberta lands? Well, I think it's in the same way that we implement a forest fire ban when forests are tinder dry and have that approved authority to restrict the use of off-highway vehicles, especially when they pose a risk and the fire danger is that severe. Of course, there are already provisions, through forest closures, to close activities in a particular area, and I would imagine that if we were to ban off-highway vehicles in a particular forested area, it would be just that one step before a complete forest closure occurs.

On that note, Madam Speaker, those are just my couple of comments on this legislation. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I like where this bill is going. I understand that we want to increase funds, that we want to make it more difficult for and try to remove that human element from initiating forest fires. I'll be curious to follow this over the years because when we're talking about the evolution of our fire management, forestry, firefighting, and forestry practices management, this is something that does take years. It is interesting to see if increased penalties and fines and other restrictions will help alleviate a lot of these forest fires. So, to that effect, I do appreciate this bill.

But that said, we have to also recognize that we have a long way to go and that when we have events where we do evacuate a large community like this, 80,000 plus – you know, we had Slave Lake before that; we had Kelowna before that – hopefully people will learn and understand just through those events alone why we have to increase all these fines and put in these restrictions, because people are just generally stupid, and we will not ever learn our lessons. I truly do question whether it will really help because it is so hard to really understand how these things start.

When this last fire in Fort McMurray started, I knew right off the bat that it would have been man-made. We knew that. It wasn't lightning strikes. There was no thunder activity in the area. From the moment it started, anyone who has any experience or understanding of that field knew it was a person that started it. So it will be interesting to see. What I do desire is that our forestry division here with our provincial government does work with the other provinces and with the federal government and reconsiders our management practices with our forests.

One thought – and this is only my own perception based on my own studies and some reports that I wrote myself even – is that we've become very good at fighting forest fires. As a result, the fuel loads in all these forests have built up. Just remember that every year there are leaves shedding from these trees, that there are branches, that there's bark. It all comes down. It creates that layer of duff. Believe it or not, that is called duff on the ground there, that layer of composting mulch.

Mr. Hanson: It's not just a beer?

Mr. Yao: It's not just a beer on The Simpsons, folks.

That is where, when we talk about those fires burrowing into the ground, it lays right now. It is slowly burning, and I fully expect this winter, when it's 20 below, we will see an area appear out of the blue that is burned up. I've responded to many of those up in Fort McMurray over the years. It is a very interesting spectacle to see a large area burned out that started from an ember that's in the ground.

I guess the point is that there is that dynamic with our boreal forests, that the type of trees – a lot of black spruces, conifers, and whatnot – are highly flammable, and we need to consider a policy about letting it burn, but we do have to ensure that we protect the priorities, which are structures and people, and use those FireSmart practices. But we do have to recognize that even with all these additional penalties and whatnot and additional enforcement, it is a lot about public education and enforcing that education in people and making them respect our forests as well. I hope that's something that we can continue on in our education system as well when we're dealing with this issue.

Fighting forest fires is a very expensive thing, as our government found out when they tried to cut back the budget. It's an unpredictable thing, and it's difficult to wrap our minds around it. It is a roll of the dice. You know, no fire might have started at all, and everything would have gone on as usual. But because of this fire we do see increased legislation, and I hope that we can affect it to do good within our province and, as well, share this information with other provinces and work together to come up with some practices with our forest management that will alleviate these issues.

These issues do happen more in the north, quite honestly, and if you look at northern Alberta, it does coincide with more increase in population, more industrial activity as well. Again, back to the fact that people are really the initiators of a lot of this, that goes without saying.

That's all I've got. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's our responsibility for today's and for future generations to ensure the safety of our communities all over Alberta. My constituency experienced a spring fire this past season, and while it was nothing like the devastation in Fort McMurray or Slave Lake and while one of our communities was under threat, our region was watching very closely, and people were evacuating. Due to the bravery of Battalion 6 Parkland fire services and others who answered the call to help, we were lucky that it didn't spread further than it did. These men and women put their community first, as must we.

Enhanced fines can prevent many of the fires, Madam Speaker, especially with the focus on industrial violations to prevent the spread of any accidents that may happen, which brings us in line with jurisdictions in B.C. and Saskatchewan that face similar challenges. The people of Alberta strongly support these proposed enhancements because we all watched in absolute horror when the devastating fires hit our northern cities in 2011 and again this spring. We stood as community members in Alberta. That's our community: Alberta.

The ability to restrict specific recreational activities such as the use of off-highway vehicles and to ban exploding targets, which also pose a higher risk of igniting a wildfire during periods of extreme danger, will help to reduce the incidence of preventable fires. In my region it was a preventable fire.

We know that many companies stood up in the spring as neighbours to Wood Buffalo and Fort McMurray, and strengthening the obligations for industry to assist will help spread the assistance so not every company gets stuck with a huge portion of the obligation.

Clarifying operational processes, roles, and responsibilities just makes sure that we know who's responsible. It gives us a line of hierarchies, if you will, so that there is somebody to respond and there is somebody to reply every time.

As the climate continues to change here in Alberta and in Canada and globally, our wildfire seasons have become longer, and wildfires have become more intense. We've seen it with disasters all over the world, and I don't think that we can imagine that we are exempt from any type of devastation.

I would just like to, you know, hope that everybody in this House supports this bill and that we can get through this and make a stronger, better Alberta. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to ask the member what she learned acting as the MLA at that time when there was the spring fire, what sort of things she was told by the municipality, perhaps, or experiences from the people that, unfortunately, had to go through it. If you could just tell us some further information that you gleaned from being the MLA at the time when that happened to your constituency.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, it was more of a grass fire, and it wasn't in one of our wooded areas, thank goodness, because there are quite a number of those in our constituency. It was around the town of Duffield, and it was very, very close.

You know, the municipality worked wonderfully. It was very clear who was there to help. The surrounding fire departments and the volunteer firefighters were out there fighting it for a number of days, and they fought it very well. They thought of us, and they let us go home every day while they stood and fought those fires.

You know, being a spring fire, it was very unexpected, especially in our constituency. And being so close to Edmonton, that was a large fire that was half an hour away. You know, had it come any closer, it could have been devastating for our entire region.

So I think, you know, what I learned was just to be able to work with our municipalities and make sure that they have the tools they need and that we're there to support them in the capacity that we can.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill? Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that this is a really important bill to bring forward. It's timely. We see that this year has been particularly devastating for a number of communities across Alberta, including Lamont county. There was a fire, the northeast Skaro fire, and it was a fire that actually sent two firefighters to the hospital. It took homes, took businesses, and had lasting impacts on the families and the livelihoods that they try to make for their families.

It's really important that we move forward with legislation that doesn't only educate even though education is a huge part of it. We need to have deterrents in place for people in Alberta to take this very seriously, knowing that 70 per cent of our fires are caused by human activity. Being able to have fines of $150 up to $1,000 for our peace officers and our fish and wildlife officers to hand out to people that don't put out their campfires is incredibly important. We have these people as incredible resources. They know the areas. They know the people that are using these camp areas, and I'm sure that they're going to be very happy to finally be in a place to actually make a better difference in taking care of these areas that they are in charge of.

Also, having fines that can go from $5,000 to $1 million for corporations and up to $100,000 for individuals is something that is a further deterrent. I don't think anyone wants to be held responsible for penalties of that amount, but it's important that we have those tools for the court system to be able to use and to help really protect Alberta because, you know, we see the devastation. We see the impacts that happen across communities.

Also, the increased implementation of FireSmart initiatives: I know that this is something that different counties in my constituency have been asking for. Beaver county, that I was just in the other day: they were asking for more support because our municipal leaders really want to do their part, but they need that support. They need the province to be a collaborative partner when it comes to taking care of their infrastructure and the families that they look after.

Also, enhanced stakeholder relationships are incredibly important. I know that the fish and wildlife associations that are in the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville are always talking to me about how they want to be responsible members in Alberta. They know the challenges, that having off-highway vehicles out in our prairie areas can lead to human-caused fires, so we have people that have that expert knowledge and first-hand knowledge that know how they can better partner with us in bettering outcomes for us.

Also, having a role for fire behaviour specialists, that we can increase that role is incredibly important. We have the highest educated population in Canada because we have people like this, that we can really glean this knowledge from and have them be also very active with us in helping to try and prevent and avoid these horrific things that can happen.

Also, the fact that we don't have legislation surrounding drones, the fact that we have unmanned drones that have the potential and have gone through these areas – when we have a fire, we need everyone to know that they might have the unintended consequence of grounding our firefighters when we need them up in the air the most. That's what happens with technology as it develops. The legislation oftentimes doesn't keep up, so we bring in legislation that has to really catch up with the innovation that has been happening. It would be nice to always be able to future-proof legislation for something as serious as wildfires, but this is one way that we can at least try and catch up to what people are currently doing for recreational activities.

We do see that the climate is changing. The fire that happened in Lamont county happened in March and April because it was so dry. We had an incredibly dry winter. People were trying their best to keep on the lookout, but the municipalities were not able to catch the fire that was happening underneath the peat, that ultimately turned into a forest fire. We need to make sure that we are keeping up with the climate, that we're keeping up with legislation that keeps us safe.

As I said before, when I was out in Lamont county to visit one of the farms, that lost 75 per cent of their fencing of their cow-calf operation and lost all of their farm buildings except for their house, which they only kept because all of their family came out and helped to keep the ground around it wet, as I sat at that table with that family, with their grandparents, with the young couple that was the farm owners, one of them holding their baby, I could see 50 feet off into the forest that there was smoke still coming up. There were fire trucks still going back and forth, trying to keep an eye on the potential further development of fires that were still burning in the area.

It was a huge devastation for them. They lost their entire shop, that the husband had set up, with $100,000 worth of tools. This is a family that was just trying to get their feet underneath them with this business because, of course, as many in this Legislature know, when you have a smaller farm operation, you need other means of income to keep that operation viable and sustainable, a stable income other than the farming operation that you have. It was incredibly devastating for them, and that was why I felt that it was, you know, a priority for me to go out there and visit them in their home.

I know that the counties and the municipalities really want that support with the FireSmart initiatives, and they keep reaching out. I am very pleased to see this legislation come forward so that I can go back to those county councillors and to the reeves and tell them that we hear them loud and clear and that they are doing the right things, that they do have the right ideas. Having the ability to bring in these bans to forests when they are tinder dry is how we can lower the risk of igniting these wildfires.

I think it's really important that there was good stakeholder engagement on this, that we heard from the public, that we heard from first responders, that have first-hand knowledge of how to deal with these situations. Like, our firefighters: they don't just fight fires. They are detectives. They are the people that know how to understand a fire that happened so that they can further educate us all in how we develop more legislation to try and address these issues that they identify.

Also, engaging with indigenous people so that we are quite mindful of how this might impact their treaty rights is incredibly important because in Alberta we all are needing to make sure that we respect those agreements, those treaties, those rights. It's incredibly important.

Engaging with industry, engaging with recreational associations: I know that the Alberta Snowmobile Association has done a lot of work with this. They have done ongoing work because they want to be good neighbours. They want to have fun, but they also want to be good neighbours at the same time.

I am happy to stand and support this bill, and I know that we have more debate to get to. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and I'll close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hanson: Just a curiosity question for you. You acknowledged the fact that it was very tinder dry all over the province in March and April of this year, and you saw the devastation that had happened in your own community in Lamont county. I'm just wondering if you'd like to comment on your thoughts when the government budget came out and cut all that money from the wildfire fighting program.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the question. I think we all know that when a fire happens in the province, all of the resources are delegated that need to be. The people are brought in. The money is spent. The aircraft are . . .

An Hon. Member: Deployed.

Mrs. Littlewood: ... are deployed. Thank you.

We had the military come and actually work within the office of the Provincial Operations Centre. There was incredible partnership from day one, and I think we know that the Premier and the Minister of Municipal Affairs did not spare any expense to try and assist those people and to try to protect critical infrastructure because we know that the replacement of all of that is incredibly expensive. We already know what the final number – well, I don't think we even have a final number. It's into the billions and billions of dollars that it'll take to rebuild it.

I think that we all are on the same page. When you have people in distress, when you have businesses that are affected, when you have pets in a home that need people to go and take care of them, round them up and feed them and water them and take care of them and love them until those families were able to get home and be reunited with them – we know that every person possible and every resource available was utilized. They stepped up to the plate in time of need and will continue to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Grande Prairie-Smoky, under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the opposition here, since we've been debating this Bill 24 in second reading, we've asked for clarification on several different issues with the bill. When we ask for clarification, it gives the government the opportunity to clarify and maybe make us fully understand why some of the changes that have been made have been proposed in this bill. I think it's only fair that somebody on the government side respond to these questions and queries that we have so that we can have clarification so that we know whether we can support a bill like this.

I'm wondering: is there anybody on the government side of the house that could answer any of our questions or concerns or the clarifications that we're seeking on Bill 24? Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, did you wish to respond?

Mrs. Littlewood: I didn't hear a specific question in there.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just want to repeat the question from the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills. How does the member feel about cutting the firefighting budget? I don't think she actually answered that question.

Mrs. Littlewood: I've already answered the question.

The Deputy Speaker: There are still a few seconds left under 29(2)(a). The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, we ask questions, we ask for clarification, and we receive nothing. We're in debate here on Bill 24, which is a very important bill. We all agree that it's a very important bill. The only thing that we would like is clarification on a few points. Now, I ask again: is there anybody over there that can provide the clarification that we've requested? Multiple members on this side have stood up and asked for clarification on multiple issues, and so far we haven't received anything. The concern is that we sit in here – we only have a certain amount of time to debate these bills. We ask questions. We want clarification. We get nothing.

The Deputy Speaker: Just for clarification, hon. member, under 29(2)(a) the intent is that the questions are directed to the previous speaker, not to anyone who wishes to respond. That would not be appropriate use of 29(2)(a).

Any further speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Well, thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak in support of Bill 24, the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act. I'm very honoured to be a co-sponsor of the bill, and I'm very appreciative for the minister's leadership. I congratulate him on this first piece of legislation, and I think that he couldn't have picked a much better topic for his first bill. So I'm really pleased to be a part of that.

Of course, I'd like to thank the first responders, who keep our communities safe. I know that in forest communities like the ones in Banff-Cochrane and particularly where I live, in Bragg Creek, when fire season comes around every year, people get pretty nervous. They never know what's going to happen. It's interesting because there's a bit of tension between people being afraid of a flood risk and a fire risk, both at opposite ends of the hydrology spectrum as it were. I do know that the forest communities can rest a little easier because they know that we have such professional people looking after us that are going to be keeping us safe and are ready to jump into action.

I'd also really like to recognize the volunteer first responders. Of course, the professional responders are the people who do this day in and day out, but it's not just the professional responders who keep us safe. There are people like Erik Butters. He is a councillor and the deputy reeve in the MD of Bighorn. He's also a rancher in the Ghost valley near the beautiful communities of Benchlands and Waiparous. I know that Mr. Butters would probably be the last person to call himself a hero, but I would be the first to say that he is, he and other volunteer first responders just like him. He's told me some stories about how he's jumped into action on very short notice and put out very small fires that could have otherwise escalated into much bigger events. So it's having people like him and others throughout our communities. He might just happen to be at home having dinner one night when he gets a call, and he has to go and respond to that immediately. It's people like that, who are scattered around our communities, who have the ability to respond very quickly to those kinds of situations and put out fires before they become a bigger issue.

There are also communities that border the Ghost valley public land-use zone, and there are, you know, accidents that happen all the time in these communities. People have accidents with their off-highway vehicles, or sometimes, despite their best intention and best actions, their fires get out of hand, so they need some help extinguishing those. These volunteer emergency first responders put their life on hold at any time of day or night. They don't know when they're going to get called. I guess that's the nature of the business.

There's another sort of category of volunteer first responders, and those are people like in the Ghost Lake village and in Redwood Meadows. We have an example of volunteer fire stations. They're people just like you and me. They have day jobs where they work, but they volunteer their time after hours, keeping their community safe. I'd really like to acknowledge those people because I think they deserve a lot of credit.

Another aspect of our public service that I'm really proud of is the fire lookout towers. I'm lucky to have three of those towers in the constituency of Banff-Cochrane. They're located at Moose Mountain, at Barrier Lake, and at Kananaskis. There are dedicated individuals who sit at the top of these fire stations and take weather reports and observe the forest all day long, looking for signs of risk. If it weren't for these dedicated public servants, again, there could be a lot of other risks that we would face. I'd like to thank them as well.

When we talk about communities that are at risk for forest fires, the community of Bragg Creek, especially, has been identified along with other communities like Slave Lake and Fort McMurray as a high risk of forest fire. You know, Bragg Creek is one of the three remaining communities that hasn't yet experienced a fire, fortunately for Bragg Creek, but it's certainly a risk for the community, so one of the things that I'm really proud of our government doing is funding an emergency egress study. If you're familiar with the town of Bragg Creek, on the west side of the river there's really only kind of one way out, which is the bridge over the Elbow River. Our government has provided some funding to Rocky View county to study different ways that we could plan an emergency egress route. There's a lot more work to be done there, but I'm glad that we're taking steps to address the concerns of the community.

You know, all across Banff-Cochrane, pretty much from Cochrane all the way to Lake Louise and all points north and south as well, all of these communities are at high risk for a forest fire. Albertans and tourists alike go to these communities for the exact reason that they're covered with trees. This, of course, puts them at risk as well. A lot of these forests are old-growth forests, so there's a lot of debris and duff, as we've heard from a member across. There's certainly a high risk there, but one of the things that we certainly encourage to reduce that risk is the FireSmart program. The communities across Banff-Cochrane have engaged in FireSmart activities. I know that Canmore and Bragg Creek have done a lot of work on this. In Bragg Creek, in particular, the fire department went door to door, actually, and made sure that everybody in the community knew about the plan and that if they had any questions or needed any assistance, the fire department was available to them.

The little community of Waiparous, which is sort of northwest of Cochrane, was actually awarded a FireSmart grant because of the work that they've done. I was just looking at their website, actually, and they post almost quarterly newsletters to the residents talking about the different types of activities and emergency planning and that kind of thing. So there are really good examples of communities taking action and making sure that people know what the risks are and how they can respond to those risks.

I'd like to get into a little bit more about the bill rather than just talking about what our communities are doing. You know, of course, we've mentioned before that the purpose of the bill is to protect Albertans and their communities from the threat of wildfires. The amendments that we're proposing here are supported by recommendations that were made in the Flat Top Complex report as well as the last two fire seasons. For people who may not have heard of the Flat Top Complex report, this was a report that was based on the lessons learned from the 2011 Slave Lake fire, and almost all of those recommendations are adopted here in this bill.

Of course, we've mentioned before – it's been said in this House earlier – that, unfortunately, human-caused fires are the most common. There's a high rate of human use in Banff-Cochrane, which is great because people are getting out and enjoying the outdoors. It's close to Calgary, and people like to take their off-highway vehicles there and go camping or whatnot, and that's a good thing, but we also want to make sure that people understand the risks of enjoying the outdoors and make sure that they take steps and understand the consequences if they don't do their part to keep our communities safe.

The bill strengthens our laws that enhance wildfire prevention activities. It supports our wildland firefighters and keeps Alberta communities safe. You know, if we can prevent fires from happening in the first place, we don't need to put our first responders at risk. If we can stop fires from happening, you know, that's a good thing in itself, but we also keep our first responders safe.

One of the things I'd like to talk a little bit about is just recreational off-highway vehicle use. We've talked about that a little bit before. One thing that I'm really proud of is to have the co-operation of the off-highway vehicle use community. I know that this is a very responsible group. They like to get out and enjoy the outdoors, but they also know that they have a role to play in keeping our communities safe, so I'd like to thank the off-highway vehicle community for their co-operation when we do from time to time need to restrict off-highway vehicle use.

Madam Speaker, the proposed regulations, from what I've been made to understand, also include a ban on what are called incendiary targets and also fireworks on public lands. This is a piece that I am particularly proud of because members in my community, including the municipal district of Bighorn and the Ghost valley community, had brought to my attention early on in 2016 that they were concerned about the use of incendiary targets. In the Ghost public land-use zone there are often people that like to sight in their guns and get ready for hunting season, and that's an acceptable use in that area, but one of the risks that the community members identified to me is with these incendiary targets. These are targets that, when you hit them, explode, and there is a risk of that explosion causing a forest fire. So in this bill, or rather in the regulations that would come afterwards, it's proposed to have a ban on incendiary targets.

It's because of the actions of the community, the Ghost valley community and the MD of Bighorn, who brought this to my attention. I, in turn, shared it with the minister. And I'm sure there are other groups as well. This is something that the communities can really give themselves a pat on the back for, standing up for themselves and making sure that they brought this to our attention.

That brings me to another point. You know, when we're talking about forest fires, when you look at a forest from a distance, it looks like there are just trees out there. I think what sometimes people forget is that there's a community in there. There are people living amongst those trees, you know, on acreages. It may be a very low density of houses, but certainly there are people living there. They want to rest easy at night knowing that they have adequate protection from forest fires and that people are going to be there when they need them, and they certainly are. But they also want to know that we're doing our part in making sure that we have laws to ensure that people understand the repercussions of forest fire.

5:20

Of course, tourism is another big economic driver in Banff-Cochrane. People don't like to see burned-out forests. You know, that nice, intact sea of green trees is something that is attractive to tourists from all around the world. We need to do everything we can to protect our forests for that. Of course, forest fire is a natural part of the cycle, so we can't just suppress fire completely, but we do undertake activities like prescribed burns. These occur on a regular basis, and I know that there were a couple just occurring either over the last couple of weeks or even right now throughout my constituency particularly. I know that we've got fire experts that are responsible for managing those prescribed burns, and that's something that also not only protects from a larger forest fire, but it also protects communities. It's actually also really good for wildlife, too. Wildlife like to live on the edges of things. You know, if we have a kind of homogeneous forest that doesn't necessarily allow for the type of habitat that is amenable to a high biodiversity in wildlife, prescribed burns and managing those fires accordingly is a way that we can also help with our wildlife.

Of course, with the forestry industry, as the Member for Peace River mentioned as well, we want to make sure that we're taking actions to protect the assets that belong to all Albertans but are harvested by our forestry industry partners, and that's something that is contemplated by this legislation as well, keeping those assets safe.

You know, with that, Madam Speaker, I think I've touched on a lot of important points as it relates to my constituency. I'd like to thank all the members for the debate we've had here this afternoon.

With that, I'd like to adjourn debate on this particular bill.

An Hon. Member: Is there no 29(2)(a)?

The Deputy Speaker: We've got a motion on the floor to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

[Debate adjourned November 1: Mr. Hanson speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to complete my speech, that I started before the lunch break today. I'll just get back to, briefly, what I was talking about, the fact that MDPs and ICFs that are required do require a lot of extensive work and commitment by both the urban and rural municipalities. My concern is for smaller municipalities and villages that may not have the funds available to undertake these tasks. We're hoping that there will be something in the legislation that will provide some funding for some of these smaller villages and towns that can't afford to do this on their own. We have to address the issue of secure, sustainable, predictable funding for all of our municipalities so that they can more easily comply with the requirements of this legislation when it comes to the MDPs and ICFs.

The intermunicipal collaboration framework: I've heard quite a few concerns from my area and others and especially at the AUMA conference as well. I've heard pros and cons from both. Urbans are looking forward to support from their rural counterparts; of course, the rural counterparts are not so much looking forward to sharing their funds. That being said, one of the arguments from the rurals is that the money collected from linear and equipment tax should be collected by the area where the buildings are or the pipelines are, basically where the taxation occurs.

The argument from urban communities like St. Paul and Bonnyville, for instance, that don't have access to those funds: a lot of the heavy traffic that is incorporated into those big industries does actually, you know, utilize the streets through St. Paul, through Main Street, through Main Street in Bonnyville as well, causing, of course, a lot of wear and tear to their roads and their infrastructure. That's how they're trying to approach the rural municipalities to get maybe a little bit fairer a share. So we're hoping that there will be some collaboration there when it comes to that.

One of the other things I did hear about a lot was the losses in revenue just over the last year in urban municipalities especially. There have been losses of residential and business tax revenue, to the point where there's delinquency and people just walking away from their homes or arranging to make payments with the cities or towns to cover their tax burden. You know, because they're unemployed, they can't just dish out $3,000, so they've actually approached the towns and offices to negotiate a payment schedule. That's a very unfortunate sign of the times.

Also, one of the other things that we've heard is the recent loss of the grants in lieu of taxes from the province that cover the provincial property within their boundaries, a very big concern. It was something that they grew to depend on. We're hoping that there'll be something in the MGA to address that as well.

Rural municipalities. Again I'll mention the delinquent linear and equipment taxes. Some have attempted to pass the uncollectable taxes on to the ratepayers. You know, even when we're talking between the Municipal Government Act and the urban and rural municipalities, we have to remember that there is really only one taxpayer. They are being taxed to distraction – let's put it that way – not only through their municipal taxes but now the upcoming carbon tax, that they'll have to be facing in January. The local property owners are talking to me about this. They would like to be heard as part of this MGA as well from the fact that they are the ultimate source of revenue for the province and the municipalities, and they should therefore have a say.

Now, there's also some concern about smaller urbans within the boundaries becoming incapable of sustaining themselves and being forced into dissolution. Does the rural municipality absorb all of these costs? I can take into account a small rural municipality like the county of Two Hills. I'm just guessing at their budget, but they've got a lot of roads to maintain – it's quite a large county – and they're probably budgeting pretty close. Now, if they have to absorb a smaller community – there are a couple of them that are, you know, very close and are being looked at right now by Municipal Affairs to see about their sustainability. Now, what happens when they're absorbed into the county? I'm sure there's a little bit of an increased tax base, but there are also all of the infrastructure costs that go with that. My concern and question regarding this Municipal Government Act is: will there be some compensation to help out these urban municipalities to absorb some of these smaller communities and not have them become insolvent themselves because of the increased burden?

The proposal for the municipal development plans may allow some of these urbans to recognize that they are becoming insolvent, which is, you know, a good part of the MDPs. The municipal development plan, if it's taken over a three-year period – and some of them have asked, actually, for an extension to five years. Now, when they're doing those plans, maybe they'll see: "You know what? As we go further, it's getting harder and harder to maintain ourselves without increasing the tax burden to the local residents." At that point they may have to go and approach the urban municipalities or the municipal government and say: "Okay. We need someone to step in here and help us out, or we become insolvent." Then it puts another burden on that rural municipality. So there are some very legitimate concerns there.

The Ombudsman. A lot of the municipalities have told me that they don't want the extended oversight. The feeling is that the options already exist for residents and businesses to get the attention of the minister if they so wish. Now, the unfortunate part of that, not so much in the bigger cities but in a smaller centre like some of my communities – you know, the village of Lac La Biche or the county of Lac La Biche, the town of St. Paul, for instance – the only outlet for residents if they have an issue with the council is to start a petition. Well, in a small town of 5,000 people, everybody knows everyone. All the town residents know all the councillors. It's a very difficult thing, and it causes a lot of division.

My thoughts and what I've tried to talk to people and the municipalities about are that possibly the Ombudsman, being the first step, may be able to talk to the people that are having the issue, show them that the county or the town council is actually operating within their parameters, and alleviate the stress that comes to a community when you initiate a petition that takes 20 per cent of the electorate. You know, when people go and start banging on doors and complaining about their municipal government, it's not a good thing, and I think of having the Ombudsman in there to maybe run a little bit of interference – I guess “interference” might be a bad word – to give them a sounding board where they could go and take it. He could have a look at what their complaint is, check it against the rules and regulations, and say: “Okay. Yes, you have a case. You could proceed with a petition” or “No, you don't really have a case, and all the petition is going to do is cause strife within the community.” I think that that's a problem with the present process, and I think that the Ombudsman could help to alleviate a lot of that. I think it may work both to the benefit of the ratepayers and the municipalities.

Centralized industrial assessment is another one that I heard a lot about both from my urban municipalities and the rurals, especially the rurals, the main concern being with the rural municipalities. They feel that local control and local assessment have worked very well, and they don't see any advantage to centralized assessment. That being said, I've also heard concerns from industry where they can have a compressor building in one county that's identical to a compressor building in another county, and the assessments can be very, very different in those two. That being said, also, the process is in place for them to appeal a decision and get some clarity on that.

You know, perhaps more consistent guidelines when it comes to assessments could be set out for these assessors so that they're more even across the board, depending on where they are located. I know that with some of them you have to also look at not just the compressor but at how much road is leading up to it, what type of highway or whatever the vehicles are travelling on. There are reasons for discrepancies in assessments as well because you have to take in all those other considerations.

Overall, I think that the people that I've talked to are quite happy with the changes that are coming forth in the MGA. With a few changes, you know, just a few tweaks, we can make this bill better so that we're not having to come back and review it and are trying to make as many people happy with, also, the highest consideration for the ratepayers and taxpayers, that are our ultimate responsibility here as a government. I think we definitely have to take them into consideration in all of our decision-making here.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to talk a little bit more about the MGA. You know, I heard a lot of questions and comments and concerns raised by the member on this, and I wanted to take an opportunity to talk a little bit about those.

You know, one of the things I heard about was concerns around the cost to the small municipalities of some of the changes that we're proposing, and it's legitimate. There are some costs associated with those, and we are committed to working with them on that, and we've talked a bit about that. One is that we continue to have available the Alberta community partnership grants, available to municipalities to do the kind of work that we're talking about, to work on collaboration, to look at regional perspectives.

We also have committed to bringing forward the templates. We have already had some preliminary conversations, for example with AAMD and C, to talk about building some templates around those pieces.

When it comes right down to it, Madam Speaker, there is value in collaboration and finding the efficiency of services and working together and saving the ratepayers' dollars through finding those efficiencies. Collaboration in many ways is simply the cost of doing business nowadays in every situation, including municipalities, going forward.

You know, again, there was some general comment around the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks in terms of looking at them, in terms of talking about some of the money exchanges there. Madam Speaker, intermunicipal collaboration frameworks are about approaching things in the way we always should. It's about taking those geopolitical boundaries off, lifting them up and off, and thinking: what makes sense as a region? How would we do things if we weren't looking at it through our own individual lenses but looking at it from the perspective of what makes sense if we get rid of our egos, if we get rid of our perspectives as a community, and what makes sense for the region and, once you figure that out, putting them back on and figuring out how we deliver those services and how we fund those services in a very fair and respectful manner. I'm really excited about the potential for this to enhance the collaboration and really improve regional services for individuals.

I know the member has also voiced a concern around uncollectible taxes. Certainly, you know, Madam Speaker, the big down swoop on the roller coaster, that we've all experienced, has hurt all of us. Certainly, the provincial coffers are challenged, municipal coffers are challenged, and so are those of individuals and businesses. We're certainly committed to working with rural communities to ensure they continue to have access to all of the services that they need: health care, education, infrastructure.

We recognize that this issue of uncollectible taxes is intensified during a downturn in the energy sector, and we are working to address it. We have formed a working group with Energy, Treasury Board and Finance, the AER, and the AAMD and C to analyze the issues and challenges, and we're looking at some potential options. Madam Speaker, as the government of Alberta we recognize the challenges of that roller coaster over and over again, and we're working really hard and implementing strategies that we know will help smooth that roller coaster out and help prevent this from happening again in the future.

I also heard the member raise some issues around the sustainability of some smaller rural communities. It continues to be a challenge. The kind of regional collaboration we're talking about is one way to address that, by finding all those efficiencies and working together in ways that make us all healthier and more sustainable in terms of the communities that we live in. The issue that you talked about, dissolution of communities, is one of the reasons we need to do that collaboration now. By working together and developing those regional programs and processes, when all of a sudden we realize that a dissolution would be most appropriate for a municipality, then everybody is onboard and understands one another and has built the kind of relationships and learned to work together and looked beyond those municipal boundaries to look at how we should deal with things. It's why a regional perspective is so important. Certainly, there's more to that. Some of those pieces were actually addressed in Bill 20 in terms of sustainability issues, but there seem to be some good processes that are working in place, and I expect the intermunicipal collaboration frameworks to be helpful with that.

I want to thank the member for the support for the Ombudsman. You know, absolutely, it is important that people have that third-party, nonpartisan person to go to. That's what we heard from Albertans. They were very loud and clear that this is what they wanted to see, and certainly our What We Heard document backed that up. I do want to say that you would actually avoid a petition by going through the Ombudsman. You wouldn't have to see the Ombudsman and say: do you want a petition or not? We'd just come right to the minister.

Ms McKittrick: Madam Speaker, I would first of all, like many others have done, thank the minister for the consultation process. I was very interested in the consultations and in the proposed act as I have had the pleasure of working with and for many municipalities in various capacities. As the MLA for one of only four specialized municipalities in the province, I have paid particular attention to how the modernized MGA will impact municipalities like mine.

I want to first of all also thank all of the municipalities – big, small, rural, and urban – who attended the consultations and a special thank you to the school trustees who also attended and spoke about their concerns regarding school sites. I have also appreciated the work that the AUMA, the AAMD and C, the Alberta School Trustees' Association, and other groups did to consult with their members and provide the minister with their important feedback. I think this really helped many municipalities to engage with the proposed act, and it identified how it might impact them. This act is very comprehensive and provides a much-needed modernization of the Municipal Government Act to prepare all municipalities for governing in this day and age.

I would like to highlight three key components of the act that I think will benefit communities. First of all, the ability for municipalities to enter into agreements with school boards regarding land for schools. As a former school trustee I know how challenging it can be for school boards to find the land that they need in the right location to meet the demands of students in that jurisdiction. The ability for municipalities and school boards to plan ahead together to set aside suitable school land is crucial.

Municipalities outside of the growth management boards will be required to adopt an intermunicipal collaboration framework. These frameworks will build on and support existing co-operation and require additional collaboration where needed. Through the frameworks, municipalities will be required to address intermunicipal land-use planning and the delivery and funding of regional services. Municipal Affairs will collaborate with stakeholders to develop the regulations that support these frameworks as well as the dispute resolution process, and the minister has spoken about how her department will be helping municipalities.

Now, I know that there already are great examples of intermunicipal land-use planning and the delivery and funding of regional services throughout the province. For example, when I worked in the county of Newell, I saw examples of the sharing of garbage services, fire services, and the joint funding of recreational facilities. The intermunicipal collaboration framework will also give businesses and industry looking to locate in Alberta a level of confidence that they can work with municipalities in the region to support their needs and maximize their investment.

I often think of the Industrial Heartland, which spans a number of municipalities and whose area I share with four other MLAs, as a wonderful example of how municipalities have collaborated together and how this has allowed the heartland to be as successful as it is, providing jobs for thousands and spearheading the economy in the region. I think that the modernization of the Municipal Government Act will make sure that this happens for every region and municipality, not just mine.

The modernized MGA will also allow municipalities to have the flexibility to include inclusionary housing as an option within the allowed-use bylaws and could implement inclusionary housing at either the subdivision or the development permit stage. A regulation will be developed, with input from stakeholders, regarding thresholds for requiring affordable housing offsets and compensation to developers for supporting affordable housing, cash in lieu of affordable housing, and transparency and accountability for standards for monitoring and maintaining affordable housing units. This will mean that all municipalities will be empowered to play a stronger role in supporting the development of affordable and social housing units in all municipalities, including rural, urban, large, and small, and I know that, especially in the rural areas, affordable housing is a big issue. The act will allow all municipalities who are struggling with finding ways to provide more affordable housing for their residents to find some solutions. There are now long waiting lists for existing affordable housing projects, for rental subsidies, for projects like Habitat for Humanity, or for seniors' affordable lodges.

We need to find solutions to create more affordable housing. Municipalities are fully aware that finding affordable housing for their residents is an important concern. Municipalities like Strathcona county are engaging their staff, developers, and residents in consultation on how to provide the needed affordable housing. I would like to take the opportunity to thank Strathcona county for continuing to work towards affordable housing solutions, including the consultations taking place this week, and I hope that the proposed inclusionary housing clauses will help toward the much-needed provision of affordable housing for singles, families, and seniors in my constituency.

Madam Speaker, I once again would like to congratulate the minister on this bill and the work that she and her staff did to consult. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to touch on something that the member was talking about, the consultation with school boards. I know that school boards had not been included in the MGA process prior to the election last year, and I was just wondering if the member could further elaborate on why it was important to engage the school boards.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you for the question. As you all know, finding space for schools is a challenging thing for school boards throughout the province, again, be it in the big urban areas or even the small areas. Schools need to find space that is appropriate, that has the right kinds of road and transportation systems and also that matches the existing bylaws and planning of municipalities. I know that in my riding, like probably many other ridings, there have been a lot of challenges for school boards to work with municipalities to make sure that land is reserved, especially appropriate land. So I feel that the provisions under the proposed modernization of the Municipal Government Act will encourage both municipalities and school boards to work together to make sure that the land is reserved and that we can build the schools that all municipalities need.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would like to start my comments today by thanking the hon. minister for the hard work that she's put into this bill. I know that over my year and a half it has been a topic of conversation in the many municipal town and county councils that are throughout the Drayton Valley-Devon constituency. I know that this bill, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, is a huge act. Attempting to address all of the myriad needs in a municipal government and to do so in a way that meets all of those needs is a very challenging job, so I thank her for her efforts.

I'm sure that as we progress through this bill, we will have the opportunity to have some debate about where this bill progresses, where it goes, and whether or not there are areas that we can amend to further enhance the effectiveness of this bill.

You know, over the past year I've been reminded again and again, as I've met with my municipal councillors and county councillors, just how important the work is that these elected officials do for the constituents that I represent. You know, whether we're talking about a town or a village council or a municipal district, these individuals show great leadership as they attempt to meet the needs of their constituents. As a matter of fact, I often think that many of these individuals that I've come to admire in my constituency, Madam Speaker, show what I would consider a servant leadership, that in many ways they are there primarily to serve the needs of their constituents. I have a great deal of admiration for them. They put in countless hours, and they have a depth of knowledge of the issues in their constituencies and their areas of concern.

They are quite amazing when I consider that they are the most intimately connected to the people. Of all the levels of government that we have, whether it's provincial or federal, it's the municipal district, the municipal councillors, the town councillors, and the village councillors that are so completely and intimately connected to their constituents, and that brings both blessings and sometimes headaches as they try to deal with some of these concerns. I've learned, as I'm sure many of the MLAs in this Legislature have learned, Madam Speaker, that these elected officials at the municipal level have just as challenging a job as what we have. I have a great deal of admiration for them.

But these municipal elected officials must face a unique set of circumstances. They have a unique set of issues that they need to address. It's the municipal councillor that often faces these unique issues, often from a position that is very different from ours, as provincial or even as our federal counterparts would agree. Perhaps one of the biggest differences is that at least in my constituency, in the smaller towns and villages of my constituency almost everybody in their community knows their councillor. Everyone knows your county councillor or your municipal councillor, and it's these municipal officials that everyone feels very comfortable in contacting directly. They often know where you live, and they often have your phone number, and they are quite willing to stop you on the street whereas perhaps some of us provincial politicians or our federal cousins have a little more anonymity.

To be able to have an act that governs all of these realities is a challenge, and that's why I think it's so important that we MLAs, when we address this bill, do the best job we can to get it right. This bill will affect every Albertan in this province in probably the most direct of ways. It provides supports to the municipal governments. This bill will cover a huge, wide-ranging area of things that are important at the municipal level, everything from centralized assessment to taxation ratios to solving problems between citizens that they may have with each other and even with their level of municipal government. So it's very important for us to deal with this and to get it right, and I'm sure that in the 15 or 20 minutes that I have to talk about it today, we are only going to be able to just scratch the surface of this bill.

Now, some of the parts of this bill are controversial. I have received diametrically opposed positions from constituents who are looking to see what this bill will do for their lives at a municipal level and what it will mean for the distribution of scarce tax dollars. In some cases I'm being told that we should take a look at linear taxation and in others that we'd better keep our hands off it. Sometimes the advice and the concerns can be quite different, one from the other, for like all levels of government, there is almost never enough money to meet all of the legitimate needs that almost any level of government has.

We're tasked with a job here when we look at Bill 21. How can we best help local government meet the needs of the community that they serve? How can we facilitate, you know, the building of roads and the providing of services that every one of our citizens needs at a local level? How can we provide the pools and the recreational centres, the skating rinks and the parks? How can smaller municipal towns co-operate with larger counties, that may have a much larger linear tax base? Yet the counties have their own unique concerns: how do they serve a smaller population, probably, but one that's more spread out and has the challenges of dealing with the problems of distance?

You know, in my constituency I have towns and I have county councils that have exemplary records of co-operation, but I also have towns and councils in my constituency that are made up of very hard-working and dedicated individuals that sometimes struggle over how to co-operate in the provision of the services that their constituents want and need and especially over how they can fund those ventures jointly where needed. That is the challenge that we have before us today, a challenge that we must seek to address and one that I'm sure, as this Legislature moves forward, we'll be able to do successfully.

Now, of all the pieces of legislation that have come before me, I think this is one where the debate in this House is actually going to have to be used to guide me as we move through the many different pathways that this bill can take us. I'm going to be leaning heavily on the discussions that I've had over the past year with various councillors, with the businesses and the residents in my constituency. I'm going to be leaning heavily on the advice that I've received from some of the stakeholders in education that we've been talking to when it comes down to dealing with off-site levies and the likes that affect education.

Know this, that as we go through this bill and as we start having more time to debate the issues that are going to be coming forward in this bill, I will be listening, and I will be referring back to the individuals and to the stakeholders that have been in conversation with me.

You know, over the last year and a half that I've been an MLA, I've learned at least one valuable lesson when it comes to municipal politics: don't stick your nose where it doesn't belong. If you're a rural MLA, you've probably learned this lesson as well. You share the same constituents as your local level of government, and if it hasn't happened already, it will happen that a municipal issue will arise where you will be asked to intervene. If I could give one piece of advice: don't. There is a reason why we have different levels of government, and sometimes, Madam Speaker, we must impress upon ourselves as MLAs and upon our constituents that local municipal issues must be dealt with by the elected municipal representatives themselves. There are channels set out in the MGA for them to address the issues and not particularly for the MLAs.

I understand that people can be upset over decisions that are made at a local level. I mean, I can remember being a citizen in my own town. I live in a cul-de-sac in Drayton Valley, and I remember being faced with my kids being all under the age of five and with probably seven or eight additional kids of the same age in that cul-de-sac when a group home for troubled youth was going to come smack dab into our cul-de-sac. This was the third time in our town that they had tried to place the group home in an area that would be suitable for it. I can honestly say that at that time the parents and the families that were in that cul-de-sac worked very, very hard to try to figure out a way that they could be reassured that their children would not be adversely affected while at the same time making room for this group home.

Now, eventually the town ruled in such a fashion that they would allow the group home into that cul-de-sac, and some of us appealed it. At the end of the day that appeal ruled in our favour. I've always felt that it sort of left a bad taste in my mouth, that it left a bad taste with everybody when they looked in the mirror. I'm not sure that anybody was happy with the process that we went through there. But these kinds of issues happen every day at the municipal level of government.

I think I bring that up because, I mean, we have had people that have come to us and asked: well, what about the processes that are open to the constituents at a municipal level to appeal the decisions that are being made? Is there room for a place for an ombudsman? You know, I'm not sure that I have the answer on this one. I understand and I can hear the citizens that would like to have that option, that additional option for residents that sometimes feel that maybe they haven't been heard or that they were not in agreement with the decision that was made by the municipal government. While I understand their position and even at times think it would appear to be a logical next step, I do have some reservations.

Municipal government is supposed to be the most local level of government, with elected councillors that understand the local issues and are therefore best suited for making decisions. In my experience, that is almost always the truth. Even if the decision I referred to earlier in my cul-de-sac had not turned out the way that I had lobbied for with my neighbours, I would have had to admit that I had at least been listened to, that I had had a fair opportunity . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 4(2) the Assembly stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 9.

Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Let us reflect. Around the world today people are concluding their celebration of Día de Muertos. It is a time of remembrance and reflection, a time to connect with our loved ones we have lost in death and keep them close. Let us keep them in our hearts today as the ripple of their lives continues to pass through us.

Please be seated.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to seek unanimous consent of the House to revert to Notices of Motions. This afternoon we're anticipating a large number of guests in the gallery, and I believe that there are some procedural discussions that need to take place under Notices of Motions. Out of respect for the government and the activities of this afternoon I ask for unanimous consent to move immediately to Notices of Motions so that I may present a motion identical to the motion presented by the current Premier in December 2013.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

[Adjourned debate November 1: Mr. Westhead]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 24 this morning. I think it's imperative that we recognize all that we do to try and mitigate the potential dangers in our forests and prairies. We need to recognize that there are still going to be accidents that happen, and that's unfortunate, but what we can do is try and mitigate as much as possible and deal with the areas of responsibility we each face as a province, as communities, and as individuals.

The minister has proposed Bill 24. While it's welcome to see some changes and updates to this piece of legislation, I have a feeling we have not heard the last of wildfires in Alberta, particularly the Horse River wildfire, better known as the beast that attacked and destroyed parts of Fort McMurray. The beast is still alive, and it lays simmering and smoldering in the peat moss in Fort McMurray and in the muskeg bogs, and it will do so for many years.

On the farm we well know how the fire gets into the ground and into the roots of the peat moss, and it can flare up many years later. The right conditions – dry conditions, windy conditions, low humidity – can get these fires going again. We need to be ready, for sure.

My colleague from Calgary-Foothills tells me about his trip into northern Alberta, an area that I'm very familiar with, living in northern Alberta, where he reports seeing huge stands of trees that are turning rusty orange, brown. No, they're not tamaracks changing in the season, but they are trees that are dying. They're shedding their needles, and we have to be cognizant that natural conditions are occurring that will cause problems down the road. We've built communities, people being able to do industry within the boreal forest, but at the same time we recognize that there's a natural fire hazard and that these stands of trees have been controlled in the past through natural fire burn.

I recall a fire in my constituency up in Chisholm in 2001, where that community was evacuated. It took out 10 homes, took out 120,000 hectares of timber. It was a very eye-opening experience for the people within that community towards the danger of fire. That fire in particular was initiated by a spark off the railroad tracks, steel on steel, and it turned into a forest fire. It was, I believe, in May 2001. I visited that community about a month ago. The community has shrunk because of the decrease in activity in the industry there, but the people that live there are very much in love with their community and do as much as they can to mitigate the threat of fire.

I reflect back to a time in my early childhood where in 1972 my father drove us up into Swan Hills. Swan Hills had just gone through a fire that came within a kilometre of the town. It was a huge fire, and it evacuated the town. The town was a relatively young town at that time, a lot of mud roads, gumbo roads. In 1981 there was another fire that went through. It came very close to the town of Swan Hills. I was a 19-year-old at the time, driving a truck delivering jet fuel to the helicopters that were moving the firefighters around in that area. At that time 2,000 people left the town, evacuated out of the town of Swan Hills because of the threat of fire.

What I refer to is the fact that those communities learned from the experience, just like the Slave Lake community has learned. But we as a province have to be cognizant of the threat of wildfire at any time. Many of our communities are within the boreal forest, and we need to do the best we can to mitigate that threat. A lot of that is going through education to provide awareness to individuals, to provide awareness to industry, and we all have a certain responsibility to ensure that the chance of wildfire is as low as possible.

Education will provide that awareness. We have some programs that also provide awareness. You know, when we look at the Swan Hills, the Chisholms, the Slave Lakes of the northern region of the province, one thing for certain is that once burned, twice shy. These communities are very aware of the threat that fire imposes on their community. We see how the FireSmart program, initiated, I believe, in 1998, has been a very effective tool to help these communities to keep their community informed, aware, and also provide grants to help them with such things as vegetation management within their communities, on the edge of their communities, and that type of thing.

The other aspect of trying to protect our forests and our prairies is, essentially, good planning at all levels: good planning, good training of our firefighters, and how that improves our ability to mitigate the risk of wildfire.

That being said, I do not believe that we have seen the last major fire. On the major fire in Chisholm the Chisholm Fire Review Committee issued the accompanying report in October 2001, so October of the very same year that the fire happened. The report on the Slave Lake fire, known as the Flat Top Complex, was issued in May 2012, a year after the fire.

On page 24 of the Flat Top Complex report there is a chart that shows total wildfires versus lightning wildfires. In that chart we'll see that it becomes very apparent that human activity is the most prevalent cause of wildfire during the month of April. Most lightning strike fires don't start until into the month of May, and we see there that that's where we can have the most impact on the mitigation of wildfire in our province.

I think what is recognizable is that humans are not the only cause of wildfire and fire issues within the province but that lightning is a situation that we have to be aware of also. While Mother Nature causes many fires, with the lightning strikes causing wildfire to open the cones and drop seeds and clear out the deadwood, the chart accurately shows that Alberta has significantly more wildfires in March, April, and May that are not caused by lightning at all.

Page 23 has a chart that shows that over a 10-year period, from 2002 to 2011, while lightning may have caused approximately 40 per cent of wildfire, resident and recreation caused 43 per cent. Industry combined caused about 10 per cent, incendiary came in at about 5, and about 3 per cent of the fires were of unknown cause.

Out of the 21 recommendations in the Flat Top Complex report, updating the Forest and Prairie Protection Act was one of the them, so I applaud this government for making updates. It has to be noted that budgeting for implementing the recommendations of the Flat Top Complex was cut by 4 and a quarter million dollars last year.

Humans are causing wildfire, over 43 per cent of it, according to this report, and people need to be educated about wildfire and how it can start so early in the spring. Education starts at home and extends into the classroom and then into the job site. Many work sites have safety briefings, and wildfire can be part of that briefing.

I reflect back again on the FireSmart program and how it has helped communities in my constituency and in neighbouring constituencies. I think of the work that's being done also in the town of Whitecourt in the minister's constituency and how they've embraced FireSmart programming to ensure that they can do as much as possible to mitigate the risk of wildfire. Every year the town of Swan Hills tries to do a little bit more to educate and to create programs that help to mitigate the risk with regard to vegetation management around their town and those types of things.

After the Slave Lake fire $20 million was spent for FireSmart in the Slave Lake community, after the fact. Meanwhile grants from FireSmart to communities are capped at $100,000. It would be good to review that to get an understanding. Is that the right number? Does the size of the community make a difference in the need within that community, and is there a possibility to look at moving that cap around based on the total area of that community? The size of the perimeter of the community is very important to understand what the costs of implementing FireSmart are. Is this good use of funds when it costs hundreds of millions to fight one incident? Has the government done any evaluation that a properly funded FireSmart program could possibly save us hundreds of millions of dollars in disaster funding?

Let's talk about people obstructing fire operations. The mass sales of controlled aerial drones – in today's world we see more and more of the aerial drones in our marketplace and individuals starting to participate in that activity. It has placed unmanned aerial vehicles into the hands of the general public, many hands. But unless you are a wildfire contractor using a drone to spot fires, Albertans are to leave the drones at home and out of the sky near a wildfire. Again, education will need to take place to ensure. We have penalties being introduced, but education needs to be in place to actually ensure that these operators know the threat of using these aerial drones.

Drones can do serious damage to air tankers. It doesn't matter if the drone is hovering or if it's moving at 50 kilometres an hour towards an air tanker coming at it at 250 kilometres an hour. The impact will destroy the drone, no doubt, so the person is out the drone. But the impact will damage the air tanker and could even cause a crash landing. Keep your drones away from wildfire. Remember, all it took was a flock of geese no bigger than a drone to put U.S. Airways flight 1549, five crew members and 150 people onboard, into the Hudson river. We don't want to be responsible for crashing one of these air tankers. Again I reiterate: penalties are fine, but education is key to people recognizing the threat that these drones have on fighting wildfires.

With all the technological advances that have given us drones, why haven't the powers that be investigated using technologies to fight wildfires? I've sat down with individuals that are . . . [Mr. van Dijken's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a) the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I was thoroughly enjoying the comments by my hon. colleague there. It sounded like he might just have a few more comments to make. I wondered if he would like to use the remaining time to conclude his comments.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. van Dijken: Well, thank you, and thank you to the member for the request. Speaking with regard to technological advances, speaking to individuals that – there are new gels and foams that have been developed that homeowners can buy off the shelf but have not been implemented in mass attacks on wildfires. Surely in this day and age of advanced science we can do better than trying to spray down our homes with a garden hose to try and save it from a wildfire. That might be the only tool we have at our disposal, but we can do better with the technology that's available.

Research and development to make the ground and aerial attacks on wildfires more effective than they have been over the past I'm going to say four decades is necessary. Madam Speaker, it is critical to make sure the best practices are being used to fight wildfire when it happens. This goes all the way back to the Alberta Fire Review '98 Final Report, prepared for the Alberta Forest Protection Advisory Committee. Those best practices include attack at first light. A legal day is one hour before sunrise. While a night attack is dangerous, the sooner firefighters can get at a fire, the better.

Boots on the ground: important. The best practices outlined in the review – aerial attack only slows the progression of a fire. It doesn't put it out, and we saw this spring that boots on the ground, the people on the ground attacking the flames, can put the fire out. We still have people on the ground today attacking the fire that we had this spring up at Fort McMurray.

When the temperature is low, low temperatures slow the burning. We all realize that. When the relative humidity is high, higher humidity slows the burning. We have very limited control over that, but we can always hope that the conditions are right to slow the burn. When the winds are light – wind spreads the fire, and the faster the winds, the more the fire spreads.

This is how gains are made in halting the advance of a wildfire. It is imperative of each and every individual, it's imperative of municipalities and communities, and it's imperative of our responsibility as a province to try and move forward in wildfire awareness, in wildfire prevention, mitigation, and education of everyone involved in trying to lessen the hazard of wildfire to the communities within the northern boreal forest.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McLean: Madam Speaker, I'd like to request the unanimous consent of the House to do an introduction at this time as there's someone that's arrived in the gallery.

The Deputy Speaker: We've had a request for consent to revert to Introduction of Guests. I'll just ask one question: is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I've noticed in the gallery Manon Plante, who is one of our ADMs in Service Alberta. She has joined us in the gallery with whom I presume are her children. That is correct. I'd like to welcome them to the House. I'd like to have Manon stand and have us all greet her with the warm introduction and greeting of this House.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 24

Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016

The Deputy Speaker: We still have a minute on 29(2)(a) if anyone has any questions for the hon. member.

Seeing none, are there any other speakers wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise today to speak in favour of these amendments. I think that they are long overdue and quite necessary. Now, does it mean that we're going to be able to avoid forest fires going forward with these types of changes? Well, I mean, unfortunately, you know, in the type of climate we live in, these are a fact of life for us, but I do think that these are very powerful tools to help us reduce the number of wildfires we have to deal with.

Now, as other speakers have noted, these amendments are supported by recommendations coming out of the Flat Top Complex after Slave Lake and also learning from, of course, the devastation that occurred in Fort McMurray this spring and then, of course, other fires that started around the same time. I mean, I think that – actually, I'm not sure if all members in the House are aware of just how close we came this spring to a perfect storm, where we had, you know, so many fires breaking out in so many different areas that we would have actually reached the point where our resources would have been strained. Fortunately, we didn't reach that point, and I think that a lot of the credit goes to, you know, the very proactive actions of members of volunteer fire departments and county emergency services, even on occasion an MLA or two in this House that got on top of the fires that, had they got out of control, would have caused some real problems for us.

Now, I know I speak for, you know – we actually had a fire around the same time in the Opal natural area in our area that potentially had been caused by off-highway vehicles. There was a lot of concern that, you know, things were so tinder dry that we could have had another fire up in Redwater as well. Some of the actions that our government took to restrict off-highway vehicle use during that time were absolutely critical to make sure that this didn't happen, so I'm gratified to see that we're actually making sure that this is now in legislation.

You know, the enhancements being proposed – the enhanced fines, the improved public safety and wildlife prevention measures, and the operational amendments – make this bill and are going to take us quite a long ways to deal with this.

This is something where, you know – I don't want to echo the comments that I heard some members of the House make last afternoon, but definitely sometimes people don't quite get the gravity of starting fires during, you know, fire bans. I think it was just after we got sworn in last summer, during the Wabasca fire evacuation, I actually saw incidents where you had evacuees from the Wabasca fire starting fires while they were camping. At that time it's like – for some people it does seem that the penalty has to be increased in order to change the attitude towards the action. Although I think for the vast majority of people no penalty would even be necessary with this type of thing – I mean, you understand what the consequences are – but unfortunately there's always that small minority of people that, you know, don't perhaps weigh the potential consequences adequately, but the fine provides an incentive. Now, of course, there's a limit to how much incentive or how much deterrence you can get from a fine, but I think we're striking the right balance with the increase this year. You know, I think that's been validated by the 96 per cent support that respondents gave when we did a survey on that.

Now, down to restricting off-highway vehicles during times of extreme danger, as I said just in my introduction, I think that doing this on a temporary basis was critical this past spring to make sure that the situation didn't become even worse. Once again, this is an issue where you have a very small number of people who perhaps aren't quite aware of just the potential gravity of their actions. You know, the majority of ATV users are, of course, responsible people. They keep their vehicles clean. That being said, though, I mean, when it gets dry enough, a bit of long grass and hot exhaust is enough to spark something off. I think that sometimes these bans, you know, as unpopular as they may be, are totally necessary, and I'm gratified to see that this is in the legislation, as I know are firefighters across the province.

Also, being able to ban incendiary ammunition: I think that is just absolutely critical. I mean, I've seen situations during the height of the fire season, where you had people setting up these targets, right? They set up these targets, and they shoot that in trees. You know, it doesn't take a lot of imagination to see what possible consequences intentionally starting fires in secluded wildlife areas can have.

I think these proposed amendments are sensible and, you know, maybe overdue. Also, I think what's overdue is the recognition that our climate has changed. Whereas it used to be that your early spring would be cooler and wetter, there'd be less chance of a fire, now, I mean, things have shifted to the point where, you know, you have that dangerous early spring window where things are still tinder dry, and then you get those winds come up and extremely dangerous conditions. You know, we've been dealing as a province with this on an ad hoc basis, as if things would simply return back. Well, it doesn't appear that the clock's going to be turning back, and early hot springs are the new reality for our province, and it's a reality we need to adjust to, so having the fire season start on March 1 rather than April 1 I think will make sure that we are better prepared on an ongoing basis for when we'll start.

I mean, that being said, I'm not at all implying that we weren't prepared for what happened in Fort McMurray. It's just that, you know, it's better to have all our ducks in a row earlier just as a matter of course. In that way, the preparations are well under way, and we have our personnel in place when the season starts.

9:30

Now, there are some other items regarding local repayment for certain types of fires, things like that. I think some of the issues may be what is talked about in Committee of the Whole, but, I mean, there's a lot of other good stuff in this bill. On second reading, you know, we have enough in here that I think this is a bill that deserves unanimous consent of the House, and I'm hoping to see that this will get it after we go through a fairly speedy passage because I don't think there's a lot dividing us on this issue.

Thank you for your time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. Now, the last time I stood up under 29(2)(a) – I just wanted to clarify. I'm allowed to make comments and questions under 29(2)(a). Am I correct?

The Deputy Speaker: That's correct.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much. Okay.

Now, I think one of the greatest concerns here is not that Bill 24 doesn't do some great things, but I think what's of utmost importance and what's on all of Albertans' minds right now is: what is Bill 24 going to do to keep another Fort Mac or Slave Lake fire from taking place? Now, we see some things in here that will reduce the opportunity for fires to start, but once fires start, we need to know how to protect these communities, and there could be other communities in Alberta that have this same issue. So I think what's foremost on people's minds right now is: how can we reduce the opportunity for something like Fort Mac or Slave Lake to happen again? Obviously, that was catastrophic.

Now, on this side of the House we've asked for clarification, more information on this bill, and we would love to have the minister get up and explain more, give us more information so that we can understand what is being attempted in some of these changes with Bill 24. Some of these things may be perfectly legitimate, but until we can have some questions answered and some clarification, then it leaves us with some uncertainty.

Now, we talk about – where to start? We talked about section 31.4, where there was a change from “product” to “thing.” Of course, we would like to find out: what was the reason for using the word “thing”? Now, there might be a perfectly justifiable reason for it, but until we have the minister explain that to us or somebody from the other side that has the knowledge of the reasoning of why that word was changed, then we really don't have that clarification that we desire.

We also have a concern under section 23, where it talks about “an industrial or commercial operation on public land or within one kilometre of . . . public land.” Why couldn't we have something in there where these industrial, commercial operations – why couldn't it say something like: “that could reasonably pose a fire hazard”? Obviously, some businesses – let's say a home-based business that happens to be within one kilometre of public land – may not reasonably pose a fire hazard. Others, of course, could, and then it could be perfectly justified. Of course, we also have some concerns, too, about: “public land” is a pretty general term and may include land that I don't think this bill necessarily desires to include.

Now, the member that just spoke talked about tinder-dry springs, and definitely this spring we had one of those years where it was extremely dry. I do want to ask him how he feels about his government in their budget not accounting for enough money to cover even the average of the cost of firefighting and also their government cutting the contract of fire bombers by a month. I'd like to find out his feelings on that, how he feels about things like that in years when we have such tinder-dry springs.

Obviously, the government is starting the fire season earlier, which is something the minister could do at any time. Maybe that'll give some opportunity for the minister to enact some preventive measures to help fight fires. There are all sorts of good things here that appear to be happening in this bill, but again, without the clarification that we need to have, we don't know what is fully being contemplated here. Yesterday in this very House we asked many questions.

Speaker's Ruling

Question-and-comment Period

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, this is probably a good time to just do a little bit of a refresher, clarification on the intent of 29(2)(a). It says:

Subject to clause (b), following each speech on the items in debate referred to in suborder (1), a period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses to each Member's questions and comments.

I've tended to give a great deal of leeway on this because it seems to be the will of the House to allow members to continue their speech or use it for that kind of thing, but the intent is really to be an exchange and a question. You can make comments, but the intent is to allow the previous speaker to give some responses. As well, I'd encourage you to try and keep your comments and questions under 29(2)(a) relevant to the previous speaker as opposed to general to the House. Again, as I say, leeway as long as it is the will of the House to use it in that way. I'd appreciate that.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise today and speak about the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016. We've got to understand that the main objective of the bill is to enhance fire prevention. Of course, the enforcement is a huge part of it, ensuring that people are following the right rules and the intent of the act.

When we look at the different programs that are out there, especially in West Yellowhead, being a constituency where we are basically living in the forest – we've got many small communities that are actually etched right out of the forest itself. The forest is right there, as in what happened in Fort McMurray.

We're definitely in full support, of course, when we look at the FireSmart program and trying to buy extra time for communities to deal with fire that may be surrounding their community or hamlet or in the case of villages near lakes and stuff like that. But it's important to understand that the FireSmart program is just a tool that's used to buy more time. When I've talked to different forest firefighter people about this: it buys you a little bit of time but not a lot. So when we get back into, I guess, the meat and potatoes of exactly what the act is trying to accomplish, it is something that we really need, and it's been needed for a long time.

The other issue that really is important to consider is the pine beetle. The pine beetle is a huge problem for the western part of my constituency in particular because of the fact that once the trees are all dead, we've got a huge fire problem. You can witness that when you go into Jasper national park, or you can go even farther west of that and look at what has happened in B.C. The forest fire concern there is huge, and with the fact that when you look at the idea of the westerly winds that can fan a fire, say that it did get started, how would you deal with such a huge mess?

Really, when you look at the purpose of the act, it is saying: okay, we're going to fine different people for doing things or companies when they do things out on the landscape. When we're looking at this, especially when forest companies pile up their debris from forest operations, for example, if we don't have particular rules about when they burn these piles, it can get away on you.

We had such a fire a few years ago, when construction was going on on a particular piece of highway, and for some reason or another the workers thought they could burn the big brush pile that was created. Guess what? It got away on them. What was further concerning was the fact that because we have chinooks in that area quite extensively, well, the fire really got big and out of hand. The problem was that they had no way of putting it out because your lakes are frozen and everything else. So these are the things, when you look at the act, saying: we need to make sure that when you do these things, if you don't do them right, the fines are big enough to make you think about what you're doing.

The other issue that we have very extensively in West Yellowhead occurs on many of the long weekends and weekends in the area because people come out to enjoy the scenery and everything else. But what do they do? They come out and they randomly camp. They don't want to go into the parks or anything else because the fact is that they have the ability to run their OHVs, whether they're quads, trikes, motorbikes, side-by-sides, and all these things. They bring them out to the area and have a great time.

Of course, when they do that, what happens? The possibility of fires created by OHV use is huge, and so is the fact about the random camping and the campfires that they build. They have their campfire in the morning, and they go quadding, and guess what? The fire is left abandoned. It shouldn't happen, but it does. We've had situations in the area where fires have gotten away. They were lucky that the forest company came in and got it out before there were huge losses. Nonetheless, this occurs on a regular basis. The thing is that it's important when you look at some of the aspects of the act, in hopefully trying to deal with this, that the understanding be there so that there are consequences, because right now there aren't any. So it's important that we look at that in dealing with it.

Also, we look at in the Hinton area the huge Hinton forest fire training centre. It is well supported by this government. You look at the manpower and the hours of training to get the forest fire people trained to adequately deal with fires. A lot of people don't know that they even have the pilot training in the centre, where they can go in there and actually sit in the cockpit of a water tanker or the plane that flies in front of the water tanker and learn how to fly it. I had a great time doing that until I crashed a few times, but it was a lot of fun, learning how to do this and the training that's provided and the hours that go into this.

So it's important that we look at this and say: we need this act; we need it to protect our forests. Also, when you look at the jobs, there are many communities in West Yellowhead that rely on forestry and the jobs and the communities that it supports.

I'm very supportive of this act, and I hope that everybody supports it. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to ask a couple of questions, make a few comments to the questions raised by the Member for West Yellowhead. I know that he speaks with a vast amount of experience from having been an employee in our Alberta parks service over the years. He's spent a lot of time in that environment, in our forests, and understands exactly the dangers of a dry forest and forest fires. I know that he has expressed to me in the past some concerns about the limited amount of power that some of the officials who work in the forest had against those contraventions they might have come across when they were patrolling in forested areas.

I'm just wondering: given his experiences what benefits does he see arising out of giving the power to issue tickets to peace officers, to forestry, fish and wildlife officers, and to conservation officers, who previously weren't able to actually issue tickets and under this bill will now be able to do so? What benefit does he see, from his past experience, in empowering these officials to actually ticket when they come across contraventions?

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you for the very important question. It is important. Before, it might be the forest officer that might be out there on the land base and that kind of thing, and of course there was always the inability, with the numbers, to be everywhere. You can't be everywhere. That is part of the problem. When you have the huge number in tourism that occurs in our constituency – for example, you can have small towns arise just on the weekends, where there are hundreds of people in groups all over the place, scattered throughout the Rocky Mountain base and foothills in the constituency – you can't cover everything whereas under this proposal it gives more ability for other people to be out there for different things who can issue tickets for this. It's important that this act does that because it puts more people out there watching and seeing what's going on.

So it is important. This is a very important part of it, to allow more people to issue tickets, and hopefully it will prevent some of what I call silliness that goes on out there. It doesn't matter whether it's the use of the OHVs or random campfires that are abandoned and these kinds of things. It happens all the time. If you get more people out there, hopefully this will be dealt with, and maybe people will take more responsibility for their actions.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. You know, I agree with you a hundred per cent that having more people out there enforcing might be a very good thing, but I just have a question for you. As a member representing a heavily forested area like West Yellowhead, how did you feel last spring when your government cut the wildfire budget and cancelled the bomber contracts?

9:50

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you for the question. I did review that very concern with the minister at the time, and he assured me that it wasn't going to affect the forest-fire fighting ability that we had in place at the time. He assured me that it wasn't going to change the way in which they could address the issue of forest-fire fighting and that kind of thing. It was important to us. Because of that very concern, I asked the minister that question, and he assured me that it wasn't going to affect it.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Just a question to the member. I know that the member has got some forestry companies in his constituency, and I mentioned in my speech yesterday how ...

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, do we have anyone to close debate? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would just like to reiterate that the objectives of the Forest and Prairie Protection Amendment Act, 2016, were to enhance wildfire prevention, enforcement, and operational activities. It was all about the protection of Albertans, all Albertans. Some of the proposed amendments were talking about strengthening penalties for violations; improving our ability to restrict activities that can cause wildfire like off-highway vehicles when fire conditions are hazardous; improving our authority to stop actions that interfere with firefighting, including restricting drones; to designate March 1 as the official start of fire season; and to clarify operational processes, roles, and responsibilities.

Madam Speaker, I appreciated all the comments and support of the amendments from both sides of the House. At this time I would like to close debate on second reading of Bill 24.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 21

Modernized Municipal Government Act

[Debate adjourned November 1: Mr. Smith speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise this morning to speak on Bill 21, the Modernized Municipal Government Act, at second reading. The MGA is a substantial piece of legislation which is a result of years of stakeholder consultations, reviews, studies, and thousands of hours of discussion. There are many people who must be thanked for their contribution to modernizing our MGA. This was certainly no easy task.

There is no magic wand to wave over a problem. However, through collaboration and thoughtful analysis we have a real opportunity to make this piece of legislation work for all Albertans. Local government is the sphere of government closest to the people, and they provide many of the basic services citizens depend on daily. This includes protection of persons and property, local transportation networks, planning and development, public utilities, critical social services, and, of course, parks and recreation and culture, just to name a few.

This summer I travelled across my constituency meeting with residents, including local citizens, elected municipal leaders, and industry stakeholders, on the proposed changes for Bill 21. There's been a wide range of issues raised. However, one thing I heard repeatedly was the question: are taxes going up again? This was important: are taxes going up again? Madam Speaker, Albertans are being taxed from every angle in Alberta, especially the middle and working classes. On the federal side the federal government has increased EI and CPP deductions, cut income splitting, and more recently doubled down on the job-killing carbon tax by proposing a carbon levy of their own of $50 per tonne by 2022.

On the provincial side the NDP government has gleefully raised personal income taxes, increased user fees on almost every government service, and of course that doesn't even include the NDP's own carbon tax on everything, which will raise gasoline and home heating prices beginning January 1.

On the municipal side taxpayers are hit with education and municipal property taxes and fee-for-use services like libraries and public transportation. This year alone Alberta raised 32 per cent of its Education budget through education property taxes charged to each property owner. While the tax itself is collected by municipalities, it is levied by the province. According to the Edmonton Journal this year's education property tax increase resulted in a typical Edmontonian family or household, assessed with a house at $401,000, paying at least $75 more in education property tax, based on initial calculations.

The constant march toward ever-increasing taxes is making things harder, and this is definitely affecting my riding of Bonnyville-Cold Lake as many of my constituents are saying that they don't have work or have reduced hours of work. That makes it harder to balance the family budget, heat their homes, and put food on the table. After seeing that, I was happy to see that Bill 21 included no new or additional taxing powers being granted by municipalities. It is nice to finally see some restraint coming from this government.

While Albertans may not face any additional taxation from municipalities, that alone does not solve the systemic issue of chronic underfunding of basic municipal grants such as the MSI, or municipal sustainability initiative. I have heard municipalities repeatedly asking, pleading for long-term predictability and a sustainable funding model, that they, unfortunately, were left disappointed with.

I am very disappointed to see city charters included not in Bill 21 but, rather, through backroom cabinet negotiations implemented through regulation. This government had the opportunity to do things differently, to improve on practices of the previous government. However, they chose to continue the regulation process that was set by the past government. Because this government refuses to address city charters through Bill 21, it is natural for people to wonder whether or not they will see additional tax increases through the city charter back door.

We are waiting to hear from the government just what these regulations will be for charter cities, but we've been told that they're not even written yet. This is the process we think must be discussed in the House, including engaging the people, the very people that may be taxed within these regulations. We are waiting to hear from the government just what these regulations will be for these charter cities. Again, how can we move forward with Bill 21 without any engagement?

I would like to take a moment to discuss the issue of centralized industrial assessment. Bill 21 proposes to centralize all industrial property assessment within the Municipal Affairs department. The cost associated with centralized assessment will be covered from the individual property owners, but the exact details are unclear. It is certain that municipalities will be left holding the bag for unpaid assessment fees, much as they are currently left responsible for unpaid educational property taxes.

Our concern with centralized assessment includes the loss of local autonomy, loss of established relationships between assessors and the industrial property owner, and concerns that the Municipal Government Board will be unable to handle all the assessment appeals in a timely manner. We recognize that there have been huge discrepancies in the way some industrial properties have been assessed from municipality to municipality. As my hon. colleague stated earlier, we hope that when we get to Committee of the Whole, there will be amendments proposed to address these concerns.

According to the government press release, the revised MGA will include the linking of nonresidential and residential tax rates. The proposal is for nonresidential tax rates to be no higher than five times the lowest residential tax rate. While there are provisions for those communities that exceed the 5 to 1 ratio, I believe there needs to be more robust conversation around this issue. Based on the information provided in Bill 21, I simply do not have enough information to make a judgment on whether the 5 to 1 ratio is justified or even if the ratio is justified at all. I look forward to hearing more from the minister on how the ratio was chosen.

Madam Speaker, I look forward to continuing debate on this bill through Committee of the Whole and third reading. Hopefully, we'll get some clearer answers from this government in the debate which will follow. The MGA review and this discussion have been an enormous undertaking for the ministry, their staff, elected officials of all varieties, and the many stakeholders. I want to thank everyone who was involved in that review. Its broad implications on local government make the work everyone has put into this act so important.

Thank you. I look forward to supporting this bill in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Ms McKittrick: I'd just like to ask the hon. member opposite: what services does he or his family use in his municipality, and isn't he using the services that are paid by his taxes? I'm kind of really puzzled about this constant issue around the amount of taxes we pay. I'm just wondering how much of those services you're actually using, and isn't this a great benefit to you and your family?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. My family lives in the city of Cold Lake. We use all of the municipal infrastructure. We, too, believe that there needs to be balance in the services that we are using. I am glad to see that the MGA is bringing forward some needed results that we are all looking forward to.

I do say that in the end, though, at this point my family is fortunate that they have my income as an MLA coming in while there are a lot of Cold Lake and Bonnyville residents that have no incomes or have limited incomes coming in right now. So it's distressing when I hear from the government that we should be running forward with increasing taxes. I do understand the concern that says that we are using these services, so we need to pay for them – and I fully agree with that concept – but at what point do we start to actually make it hard for the most vulnerable families in my riding to not be able to feed themselves, clothe themselves, or heat their homes?

This is the true concern here because in the end their incomes rarely get adjusted upwards, and we only continue to see the cost of living increase. How can we justify these cost of living increases? I will tell you that if municipalities across Alberta right now aren't talking about their mill rates during these hard times across Alberta, then I would argue that they need to go back and review the situation of their local communities because right now people are hurting, and we need to hear those voices.

I thank the member for the question and look forward to a follow-up.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Yeah. I also have an interest in the member's issues with taxes. I was just wondering if the member was aware that middle and lower income Albertans are not actually impacted by raises to personal income taxes. Those only start at $125,000 a year. Also, are they aware that middle and lower income Albertans are not going to be affected by the increased carbon levy as they will be getting full rebates based on Statistics Canada numbers for how much gas and natural gas they use to heat their homes?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's distressing that the government is using the carbon tax as not being a burden on our most vulnerable. Now we've heard a federal government that is looking like it's going down this road. When we start to discuss the fact that the cost of living does increase because of the carbon tax, the question is: how much?

We actually haven't had a study put out by the government that we can look at and say: is this an accurate view of where we're going to be seeing taxes implemented on our most vulnerable? So without the study, it is hard for us to be able to calculate the exact impact. But I will tell you that we as the Wildrose have come up with $1,000 that it will cost a family, and from my understanding, it is just over $600 that the government will be returning. That doesn't seem to be an equitable balance. If there are concerns with the government . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 21 in second reading? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to speak to this bill, the Modernized Municipal Government Act.

I'm sure the summer was a busy one for the government with this act being presented to Albertans for review and comment. I know that for me personally I certainly heard a great deal about it, a lot of discussion, concern, and some anxiety waiting for what was going to happen. It was a time to hear from stakeholders, from experts, and from Albertans. The feedback we have received has been tremendous, and I'd like to thank all of those that communicated with me and participated.

Of course, this act, the MGA, forms the basis for the way we organize our municipal government in relation to the province. Given the fundamental importance of municipal governments in the lives of citizens, the discussions we have in this Assembly today and beyond will be incredibly important.

Madam Speaker, it seems that the more local the government, the closer it gets to the people and their needs and desires. I don't just mean geographically. I mean in terms of the impact it can have on the lives of everyday people. It only makes sense that healthy, strong communities are those that are supported with good, empowered local governance. The way we can support that as provincial representatives is through appropriate, well-debated, well-thought-out legislation, and I hope – I hope – that we take the time and the proper care to do that.

There are obviously a great deal of points and policy areas addressed by this bill. Of course, our time is limited in this reading, but I hope that I can touch briefly on a few. I know that we'll have an opportunity to discuss much more as the bill progresses through Committee of the Whole and third reading and as stakeholders make their points known.

Madam Speaker, my constituency of Cypress-Medicine Hat is somewhat uniquely positioned in this MGA discussion, being a very diverse mix of metropolitan and small-town urban but also with a very large rural municipal district, including a number of hamlets. Besides the diversity of businesses and nonprofits that exist largely within the city and towns, we are heavily – heavily – tied to the oil and gas sector, ranching, and agriculture. The city of Medicine Hat even owns its own utility.

Given all these various aspects that go into our social fabric and economy, the people of Cypress-Medicine Hat understand well the importance of ensuring that legislation maintains the right balance. When you have as many different factors to take into consideration as we do in southeastern Alberta, you have to be aware of how a large piece of legislation like this can impact all those different things, all the unintended consequences, all the impacts.

Madam Speaker, I know we've heard a lot about the big-city charters this summer, but I want to focus for a moment on the needs and concerns of some smaller municipalities that often fly underneath the radar, not only the municipalities that I represent but all small municipalities in general. I want to start with the intermunicipal collaboration framework, that being section 131 of the bill at page 105. This mandates that all municipalities that share a common border outside of the Calgary and Edmonton growth management boards must adopt an ICF within three years.

Now, I'm certainly not opposed to collaboration, and I think that many aspects of the delivery and planning of regional services lend themselves to a collaborative approach. It's also prudent to encourage municipalities to work together on things that are in their shared interest and where it makes sense. Madam Speaker, some of the smaller municipalities that do not have the capacity to have development departments or dedicated staff to put together and implement an ICF might be squeezed a lot by this.

This is a concern we've heard, and it's a concern that my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod brought to this Assembly's attention yesterday, I believe. Madam Speaker, I have heard this concern time and time again. I support the intent and aim of the collaborative approach, but I do want to ensure that smaller administrations in this province don't get unduly burdened by changes and that we make sure we're considering their unique needs and circumstances. This is something I'm sure we can discuss in more detail in the days and weeks to come, but it's also something we have to keep our eye on for the arbitration process and the potential unintended consequences of that on Albertans' communities and Albertan taxpayers.

Madam Speaker, there's another section here, section 23 of the bill, that deals with centralized industrial assessment. Now, I mentioned earlier that there is a great diversity of economic activity in southeastern Alberta, including the industrial sector, the greenhouse sector, so the issue of assessing industrial property is naturally of great importance and significance. You know, we talk about local decision-making in this Assembly. What could be more relevant to that than a discussion of this MGA? This is the core of municipal local government right here.

In that vein of local decision-making, empowering good people close to the community, with their ears close to the ground level to hear local concerns and needs, I want to express that I think we could stand to clean this section up in some different ways. Madam Speaker, as it is now, I've heard stakeholders, stakeholders including the AAMD and C, express that there is a loss of autonomy here for municipalities, that could adversely affect them. Of course, I realize that on the flip side there is an argument to be made that centralizing assessment may bring some streamlining efficiencies. Linear is already being assessed centrally, as I understand the process. However, that local authority comes with local knowledge of the properties being assessed. I feel that it is good to maintain that strong connection to the community, the ability for citizens to be involved in their taxation process, their representation process. All the nuances might not be properly captured by, yet again, a one-size-fits-all approach from a government intent on centralizing.

Madam Speaker, I think that there's also the potential for the touted cost savings and efficiencies to fail to materialize. We may not save money. It may cost more. Local assessors might still be retained to verify the provincial assessments. Furthermore, these municipalities might lose some of the flexibility afforded to them under the current system. Most notably, the lack of annual on-site visits by assessors will result in assessments that are less responsive to local changes in property values. My goodness, have we seen that in the last two years, especially in our oil and gas industry and the hardship that so many good producers have faced there. Overall, I think we find that keeping this under local authority has its own advantages and ought to be strongly reconsidered.

I'd also like to make sure that we address the issue of stable and predictable funding moving forward. This bill is very, very vague in that area, but it's something we've believed in in this caucus for years. Madam Speaker, revenue sharing of statutory grants comes up over and over again from stakeholders and for a very good reason. Our local leaders need the flexibility to plan for their communities, but they also need a predictable outlook that allows them to make good, well-informed, the best for local people decisions. Revenue sharing from the province, in whatever form it takes, ought to be transparent and steady.

I think back to this current government's change with the grants in lieu program and forcing that cost in a less than fully transparent way across all ratepayers, all property owners across Alberta: the unintended consequences of taking more money out of our local communities, the hardship on property owners having to plan and in some cases raise their rents and raise their costs. When I talk to people in Medicine Hat, some believe that the province of Alberta owns or rents 60 properties. Their fear is that if this kind of program could continue across that basis, it could present some further hardship. Again, Madam Speaker, I would encourage this government to be as open and transparent as possible. It's something that we all criticized the last government for.

Madam Speaker, these concerns are just a small sample of everything we could discuss, but I think I'm running up against the time limit shortly, so I'm going to leave it there for now. I'm glad that I've received so much constructive input from so many Albertans, so many good councillors, so many good landowners, so many good citizens that rely on our services, and I hope that in the days ahead we all take the time to listen and we all take the time to get this act right. It's crucial that we take all of these perspectives into account and find the balance that allows our municipal governments to thrive and grow for the sake of all Alberta communities, for the sake of all Alberta families, and for the sake of all Albertans.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View speaking to the bill.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. A pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act. This act is good news, I think, for Alberta, in the works for many years under the previous government and now seeing some important review and positive changes that I hope we can make even better by the end of our debates. The act is being amended in two phases. The first phase, introduced under the PC government in the spring of 2015 by Bill 20, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2015: largely consensus items that came out of the initial MGA review process. The second set of amendments are a result of the review that the new government has taken, its own consultations, and some key changes that I think, in the main, are positive. The last consolidation of the MGA for the record took place 20 years ago, so it's appropriate and important that we review these issues.

In July of last year the new government announced that it would be providing municipalities under the municipal sustainability initiative $877 million in MSI funding in the 2015-16 budget. That's $3 million less than what was proposed in the spring budget put forward by the PCs and still a far cry from the $1.6 billion in annual MSI funding that had been promised under the previous government. This government, the NDP government, has not said that it is committed to funding the MSI at a particular level. I think that's an important issue, for municipalities to have some sense of certainty. No government at any level can properly plan and implement the necessary infrastructure and services without some more clarity and sustainability in their funding sources.

The NDP government has said, "We'll provide stable, predictable funding to both large and smaller municipalities and ensure they have resources they need to fulfill infrastructure priorities, such as transit." That was from their 2015 election platform. Given that we still are fairly dependent on one revenue source in Alberta, it may take some time, but we look forward to the ability and the willingness of this government to provide some certainty around this.

With respect to industrial and linear tax revenue in its 2015 election platform the NDP said that it will "sit down with local government stakeholders to review the question of linear assessment," an issue that the NDP is following from a Liberal initiative of 2008. It's an important consideration. I think we need to look at fair distribution. We're one province. We have limited new revenue sources without new taxes. We think it's an important initiative, and we would certainly support examining the more fair sharing of $1.9 billion in industrial taxes between the cash-poor towns and the cities and some of the cash-rich counties. So we support this important review and finding a way in which all Albertans can win.

With respect to regional planning former Municipal Affairs Minister Bilous said that the NDP will legislate participation in growth management boards for those municipalities in the Calgary and Edmonton regions specifically. Presently participation in the Calgary regional partnership is still voluntary. While participation in the capital region is mandatory, I don't see that there's been a lot of lost opportunity there. We would certainly support making it mandatory in Calgary as well. Without bringing people to the table, we're wasting time and we're wasting decisions. One cannot make decisions without everybody at the table in a regional partnership. At the very least, since we've made so little progress in Calgary over the last decade, I think there's reason to believe that it's now time to move, and making it mandatory to be part of the decision-making I think is appropriate.

With respect to affordable housing in their election platform the NDP said that it will "expand the powers available to municipalities to allow them to mandate affordable housing in new development projects, expanding the supply," another item that we believe strongly in, especially for Calgary and Edmonton, but it should also be granted to other municipalities through appropriate changes in the MGA. More recently the NDP confirmed its intentions to allow for inclusionary zoning, and we support that.

With respect to city charters the government has said that it will "work with Alberta's cities to ensure the City Charter process is mutually developed and respects cities as economic and social drivers . . . giving them the tools to build the services their residents expect." Well, that's an appropriate initiative, and we have supported this need for a number of years as well, including giving cities more power to tax but limiting that taxation power and not including such taxes as income tax, sales tax, and those taxes that are currently under the jurisdiction of provincial and federal governments.

With respect to oversight of municipal decisions by the Alberta Ombudsman we have not taken a position yet on this. We are continuing to consult about expanding the role of the provincial Ombudsman to include its ability to investigate municipal decisions. There is some argument, though, to be said for having an outside review, which the government calls, quote, validating procedural fairness, end quote, and we have not closed our minds to that possibility. I look forward to the debate on this and hearing more from the urban municipalities. Especially the smaller municipalities may well benefit from having some oversight from the Ombudsman. It may not be as important for the large urban settings.

With respect to urban drilling we've said that municipalities should be able to decide for themselves if they want to allow oil and gas drilling within their own boundaries instead of this being decided by the Alberta Energy Regulator, and we stand by that.

I think I've covered most of the issues. We support stand-alone legislation, then, with respect to city charters for Calgary and Edmonton, with the perspective that new powers and autonomy are key for some of the extra demands that the large cities experience. I look forward to hearing more details about what that might include.

With respect to those extra powers in the big cities Ontario, for example, has authorized that the city of Toronto through its charter can generate extra revenue, but as I mentioned, they too have limited it and excluded wealth tax, fuel tax, and general sales tax, which I think is appropriate. There are a number of other options available to cities to bring in more revenue.

We believe that accountability mechanisms for new taxes already exist in the form of municipal elections. If local governments decide to increase taxes, they will be accountable, just as the provincial government is accountable if it changes tax revenues on the people of Alberta.

One other issue that I haven't heard discussed is the grant in lieu of tax on government-owned and -supported social housing. In October 2015, soon after the new government introduced its first budget, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association issued a news release saying that the province is reneging on its obligation to pay a grant in lieu of tax on government-owned and -supported social housing. Previously, the government exempted civic agencies like Calgary Housing and Capital Region Housing Corporation from paying property taxes on their affordable housing properties and covered off municipal revenue losses with grants from the Alberta Social Housing Corporation. This represents a downloading, according to the AUMA, of about $15 million in costs onto the shoulders of municipalities, who are already struggling to address infrastructure deficits as a result of shortfalls in federal and provincial funding.

With Edmonton and Calgary being impacted at roughly $5 million to $6 million each and other municipalities across the province collectively bearing another $4 million in costs, AUMA called for a decision that would reduce this extra burden. I think we concur with that. The province should continue to pay property taxes on behalf of seniors and social housing facilities and not download this cost onto municipalities.

Finally, with respect, then, to the municipal campaign finance and disclosure legislation, we support amending the Local Authorities Election Act to ban corporate, union, and anonymous donations, to limit campaign spending to a specific amount per resident or elector, and to reduce the maximum allowable contribution amount from the current $5,000 to dissuade candidates from relying too heavily on the financial support of a few major donors.

We also propose making municipal political contributions eligible for tax deductions, just as we do for the provincial and federal elections. Since municipal political contributions in Alberta don't presently represent a tax credit, we believe it may discourage some folks from seeking public office or contributing to municipal campaigns, to the detriment of our system of local government and democratic engagement.

Those constitute my comments, Madam Speaker. I look forward to listening further to some of the debate. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any further speakers to the bill? The hon. member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this morning in the Chamber to discuss what is a very important piece of legislation. I know that in the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills there are 13 different municipalities, and many of those municipalities have taken a lot of interest in this bill and in this process. As has been mentioned on numerous occasions here inside the Chamber, this is a process that has been ongoing over a number of years and is very important.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the process of this Chamber is a passion of mine, so I'd like to commend the government. I know that it doesn't happen all too often. I'd like to commend the government on introducing a piece of legislation, consulting with stakeholders over a period of time, and then returning to the Chamber to discuss that.

I, of course, am of the persuasion that it would have been advantageous to refer this particular piece of legislation to a committee so that all members of the Chamber could have received the same sort of feedback that government received. Now, I recognize that all of the stakeholder events were certainly open to the public, and for that I also say thank you. But if it had been at the committee level, then all members of the committee would have likely been able to attend all of the meetings or at least have the same presentations, made by organizations like AAMD and C, AUMA, the Alberta Assessors' Association, all at committee. I think that we still have that opportunity. I just have a sneaking suspicion that at some point in time during my remarks I'll make a recommendation to the Assembly around that because this piece of legislation is vast.

As you know, Madam Speaker, it is significant, we've heard on a number of occasions, the second-largest piece of legislation that is currently on the books. It's important because it affects Albertans in a way that some Albertans may not be aware of because it affects the local governance of their community. It does have a direct impact on all of them. So it's critical, as my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat mentioned, and it is important that we get it right.

I'd just like to take a little bit of time and highlight a number of areas that, quite frankly, the legislation isn't perfect in. I know it's hard for you to believe that legislation that is presented in the House from time to time isn't perfect, but that is the fact. Oftentimes legislation needs amendments, and one of the things that the opposition takes pride in is providing amendments to legislation, sometimes because we disagree with legislation but always with the desire to try to make that legislation better or stronger for all Albertans. Even when we agree, Madam Speaker, the opposition feels and believes that it's our job and responsibility to ensure that the legislation we pass is as strong as possible.

I think you'll probably recall a debate around Bill 1 in a previous session, where there was a unanimous agreement amongst the members that getting corporate and union donations out of the political process was a positive. But even then we offered up a number of amendments to try and strengthen that legislation, which is our responsibility. So I can only imagine that we, too, will be proposing a wide swath of amendments to this piece of legislation because there are so many areas where it hasn't quite gotten it right or the opposition has more questions on behalf of stakeholders.

I'd like to just highlight a few of them that I think will make a very strong case as to why the next stage of this bill should actually be at a policy committee and not just at Committee of the Whole. There are so many areas; for example, the intermunicipal collaboration framework. Many municipalities, particularly in the region of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, have really great intermunicipal frameworks or agreements that they have been able to create. There are others who haven't yet accomplished that task, but I've found that the majority of municipalities have a general desire for collaboration with their neighbours.

One of the challenges, particularly for smaller communities – so, for example, in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills we'd be talking about places like Acme, Linden, Carbon, Beiseker – is that oftentimes the costs of these frameworks and the additional planning resources that come along with that create some concern around smaller municipalities and their ability to get these documents completed.

10:40

If we look at another planning document, municipal development plans, and the requirement that all municipalities regardless of population will be required to create an MDP, I think that there are some very strong cases to be made that municipalities ought to have their plans in place so that members of their community, developers, or others have a general idea of the direction of that community. The municipal development plan in principle isn't necessarily a concern or a challenge, but even some of the municipal bodies are highlighting this as a potential concern or risk, particularly around the timeline or templates for these documents. I think that we need to take these recommendations into consideration.

We move to centralized industrial assessments. Madam Speaker, I think there are some very robust arguments on both sides of this discussion, some merits in ensuring that there is some standard all across the province. But there is also merit in local assessors, who know the region better than one giant, centralized organization that may be based hundreds of kilometres away from where the assessment is taking place. There are a lot of questions around this particular issue. So far I've highlighted three. I hope to highlight another 15 or so all around this conversation about: what is the best way forward for this piece of legislation?

You know, Madam Speaker, that even this government, which was elected on being open and transparent, although yesterday they were found in contempt of the House, breaking the rules of the Assembly, something that I thought I would never see from this government, committed to being more open and transparent, and we're seeing a real track record of them not. My concern is that the government also has chatted with stakeholders, received some of the same feedback that we have, and, as such, is going to show up in the Assembly at some point in time in the next few weeks with an amendment that is probably about the same size as these documents that I'm holding in my hand, maybe 15, 20, 30, 40, 50 pages – who knows? – of amendments, that will be expected to be debated at Committee of the Whole, which, as you know, is a very quick process that allows no additional input from any outside stakeholders.

If there's one thing that we need to absolutely make sure of, Madam Speaker, it's that this piece of legislation needs to be right. So I commend the government for introducing the piece of legislation, consulting, and now coming back to the House. But if you only went half of the way and you don't finish the consultation with a discussion around the amendments, we will have done a disservice.

That's why I will propose an amendment to the bill. I'll wait until you have a copy, and then if it's okay with you, I'll proceed while the amendment is distributed.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: If it's fine with you, I'll proceed. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 21, Modernized Municipal Government Act, be not now read a Second time but that the subject matter of the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship in accordance with Standing Order 74.2."

Madam Speaker, all members of the Chamber will be familiar with Standing Order 74.2, which allows pieces of legislation to be referred to committee for further discussion and debate. One of the great things about that standing order is that "the committee may conduct public hearings on the subject matter . . . and report its observations, opinions and recommendations with respect to the Bill to the Assembly." This is a great opportunity for the government. Instead of proposing all of their amendments in one giant document here before the Chamber and then potentially – and I'm not saying that it's going to happen – rushing through that amendment in the Committee of the Whole process, they can actually go ahead and present all those recommendations on a clause-by-clause basis to the committee.

The AAMD and C, the AUMA, other vested stakeholder groups – in this case there's some significant discussion around affordable housing, so we could have individuals from the development community and otherwise come and speak to the committee, not just to the piece of legislation, which we've done a good job of consulting on already, but to what we can only imagine is going to be a significant amendment to this bill. As a result, then that piece of legislation can come back from committee, and I'm more than happy to ensure that that happens in a timely manner. That can come back to the House, and then we can proceed, having given the important legislation full and robust consultation at the committee level.

Let me just highlight, before the time has passed, some of the other very important issues around this bill. I think committee and all members of the Assembly, when it comes to actually voting on third reading, would be well served through the motion that I've presented. If we look at things like the 5 to 1 tax ratio, it would give us an opportunity to have a good working understanding of what the cross-jurisdictional tax ratios are. It would allow for communities that are already outside of the 1 to 5 threshold to express their concern around this – I know that there are some grandfathering clauses in the current piece of legislation – and to make sure that they are well heard and that we have a real grasp and understanding of why that is important.

As mentioned by the minister just yesterday or the day before, discussion is around the splitting of nonresidential tax policy and that the MGA will allow nonresidential classes to be split into subclasses and taxed at different rates as defined in the regulation. Here's an interesting discussion about whether or not the discussion around that regulation should take place in the Chamber or at committee. You know, obviously, we have some concerns about this regulation, about these very important discussions taking place at the regulation stage and not at the legislation stage because it doesn't provide the same sort of certainty and understanding of exactly . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any hon. member wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Well, I would love to state . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, my apologies. Standing Order 29(2)(a) still applies on this one. Do you want to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cyr: Yes. That's actually what I was getting up for. I apologize.

I would love to hear a little bit more because he was cut off halfway through his comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

10:50

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Let me just conclude the sentence there that I was working on and wrap it up with a big bow around why it's so important that this motion pass. There is always this constant pressure and very real discussion that should happen around what should be taking place inside the regulations and what should be taking place inside the legislation, and it's a balance that we need to get right.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

You know, municipalities have waited a significant period of time for this piece of legislation. To not rush this through this fall is totally reasonable for the committee to discuss what many believe to be significant amendments. The Minister of Municipal Affairs herself referred to the fact that she anticipates amendments, so I would strongly encourage the House to use the processes that are available to the House to ensure that we get the job right on the very important public policy that we pass here, that the legislation that we pass is, in fact, the legislation that stakeholders and, more importantly than stakeholders, Albertans need.

With that, I will encourage all members of the Assembly to pass this motion, and I look forward to debating it in committee.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, Member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Thank you to my colleague for his excellent points and his amendment to have this bill go for the opportunity for further dialogue with Albertans and for the further opportunity to get it right. I remember several instances in here between 2012 and 2015 when this government was in opposition asking the past government to do similar things and the lack of success that that had and the frustration that that led to around Alberta and in this House. I'd like to ask the hon. member if he remembers similar instances and what he thinks about that scenario.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you to my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat. You know, I very often have exact Hansard quotes from the Government House Leader when he was the leader of the fourth party or the fifth party – I can't remember which one it was at the time – chatting about the importance of committee and the importance of getting legislation right. It's not that we want to talk about these things forever and at significant length. It's about getting this right for Albertans. We've been sent to the Assembly to represent them and make sure that the legislation that we pass is in the best interest of Albertans, and I am a firm believer that the best way to do that, particularly on very complex, large pieces of legislation just like this, is for it to be done at the committee level. I have seen this government vote against this sort of transparency measure in the past, and I hope that that won't be the case today.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. You spoke about many different pages of amendments, up to maybe 20. In your experience is that not really changing a large portion of the bill that was presented to us already and has been consulted on? Effectively, it's changed. Does it make sense in your experience to debate now, before we've even seen these amendments, and then wait until after the constituency break, based on a timeline which gives us very little time before Christmas, or should we perhaps be able to see maybe some of these amendments as they become available if it's not going to go to committee?

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in opposition to the amendment. I think this Bill 21, that's in debate before the House, is one of the most widely consulted on pieces of legislation probably ever seen. I mean, we're talking about changes that came out of a comprehensive review that was initiated in 2012.

There were extensive rounds of consultation in 2014 and 2015 that involved feedback from more than 1,250 written submissions, involved approximately 1,500 people at 77 in-person community meetings in locations across Alberta, 15 months of intensive policy discussions with municipal and ministry focus groups. Then this past summer, you know, with the proposed bill, after first reading we went out and toured the province. We went to 20 communities seeking feedback on the changes to the act. I mean, this is something that has involved all key stakeholders over a period of years, as members of the opposition have acknowledged.

I'm just a bit puzzled by what value-added we would have at a smaller committee level versus going to Committee of the Whole. I guess that perhaps the opposition has been bringing in a bit of a red herring on the concerns, maybe playing on the concerns of municipalities, in the sense that they're, you know, confusing regulation with legislation. Just to be clear, the minister has promised that when they're crafting the regulations accompanying these key changes, input will be sought from municipalities, key stakeholders, and the public again, so it will be an open and transparent process.

In this situation I do not think that, you know, referring this to committee will be worth the additional effort just simply because of the unprecedented level of consultation built into this process.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise. I thank the member for his comments. I believe that in my remarks I made very similar comments about how much we appreciated the fact that the government consulted broadly over the summer, all of the good work that was done. My esteemed colleague brought up the point of: does it materially change the bill? I guess we'll have to wait and see what the amendments bring, but if essentially we're going to have an amendment that is potentially the size of a new piece of legislation, perhaps we need to make sure that we can get input and feedback from them. So instead of presenting amendments in one large form, we could do it clause by clause in committee, and I think that that would be a much better way than potentially rushing it through.

The AAMD and C and the AUMA both made submissions that I believe, you know, encouraged the government to focus on 30 different areas. That is a significant amount of input. We need to make sure that the amendments that the government produces actually get it right. The best place to do that is committee, so I encourage the member to reconsider his position and vote in favour of the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Speaking under 29(2)(a), the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Yes. I'd just like to ask the member to comment. I recognize that there has been some fairly wide consultation across the province in the summer, and for that I truly do commend the members opposite. But I think we need to be careful, and I ask the member to comment on this. Seeking consultation doesn't necessarily mean that there has been any sort of consensus arrived at, and I think that's maybe the issue that we're getting at here.

I would like to just refer to a letter which I have here from one of the municipal boards in my area that basically says that they're "extremely concerned with the proposal," and their concern is a centralized assessment agency, but that's not the point at the moment. We're talking about this particular amendment, which would be whether this should be considered in committee or not. Then they go on to say:

It has been suggested that the notion of centralized industrial assessment has been proposed based on the consensus of stakeholders. Through discussions with our municipal partners, including other municipalities, the AAMDC and the Alberta Assessors' Association we believe there is not consensus amongst them regarding this. Your clarification on this consensus [would help] us in understanding the basis for this proposal.

Yes, there's been consultation, but I do not think there's consensus, at least not from these organizations. I'd just ask the member to comment on that, please.

The Acting Speaker: Is there anyone else wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, would anybody like to speak to the amendment? The Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: I'll sit down. The boss says no.

The Acting Speaker: Okay.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:02 a.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 21 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: We are back on discussion of the main bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 21 in second reading?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Oh, my apologies. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Ms Larivee: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I certainly am hoping for great support to move this forward. Municipalities desperately need at this point some legislation that is current and reflects the realities of modern Alberta and not Alberta 20 years ago.

Madam Speaker, thank you very much for this opportunity. I look forward to seeing great support for moving this through second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 25 Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It is my privilege and honour to rise in this Chamber to move second reading of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, Bill 25.

Bill 25 establishes a 100-megatonne annual limit on oil sands emissions. The emissions limit legislation, the idea, the genesis for it, came to us through collaborative conversations between the oil sands industry, First Nations, municipalities, and environmental groups. The Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act is part of the climate leadership plan. Announced last year on November 22, 2015, the plan establishes, amongst other things, an economy-wide price on carbon, a phase-out of coal-fired electricity, an energy efficiency strategy, a methane reduction strategy, and, importantly, this 100-megatonne limit on oil sands emissions.

Now, Madam Speaker, the concept of a limit on emissions is a new one for energy-producing jurisdictions. What it does is that it proves that Alberta is serious about our commitment to being a world-leading energy-producing jurisdiction, in which we use the power of innovation and technology to move the province forward in what we know is a carbon-constrained future. What this bill does is that it establishes government as a productive partner in that quest to reduce the carbon in the barrel. The government of Alberta was a productive partner in getting the oil out of the sand in the first place, and now we will be a productive partner with our partners in industry to reduce the carbon in the barrel.

What this bill signals, Madam Speaker, is that our province, our government believe that industry, our largest job creators, can rise to the challenge of a carbon-constrained future. What it does is that it establishes government as a productive partner in finding ways forward rather than rejecting the science of climate change or rejecting action, which is a de facto rejection of the science. What we have done is to say, “Yes, we must move forward,” and we do so with the contents of this act.

Madam Speaker, this act provides for exemptions. This act provides for allowances, not the least of which is an allowance for new upgrading in the province. This is a key objective of this government, to add value to our natural resources so that we can keep good, mortgage-paying jobs here in Alberta. That is a key priority for us, so that is why there is an allowance for 10 megatonnes of new upgrading over and above the 100-megatonne cap.

Madam Speaker, this cap, the mechanism and the logistics of it will be worked out in partnership with industry, with First Nations, with municipalities, and with environmental groups. We have established a precedent-setting, collaborative, co-operative table at which all of those who are affected are making decisions together.

Now, this has historic implications for firmly establishing Alberta as a world environmental leader among energy producers. Alberta has, under several previous administrations, faced increasing scrutiny related to emissions resulting from oil sands development. But our energy industry is unique in providing a significant amount of provincial and national revenue. It has also contributed to significant increases in emissions at a time when global pressure to lower emissions is growing. Alberta was increasingly seen as the reason for Canada not meeting its emissions targets, but what we have done is ensured a path forward with this legislation. We have ensured a path that will reinvest in new, innovative, emissions-reducing technologies here at home to ensure that Alberta is successful.

The cap on oil sands emissions, Madam Speaker, complements work that industry is already doing to lower costs. It internalizes the cost to emit carbon at a time when executives like Suncor chief executive Steve Williams are dealing with a lower-for-longer scenario for oil prices. Make no mistake; carbon is an input cost. Oil producers have asked governments to provide them with a carbon and climate framework around which they can make decisions about long-term investments and lowering those costs. We have done that. In many cases, reducing emissions reduces costs for producers by lowering the volume of fuel used in oil sands operations, both in situ and mining. Bringing costs down, including the cost of carbon, means survival for oil sands companies.

The emissions cap will speed the transition to lower carbon fuels, allowing companies to accelerate their innovation efforts and providing new jobs and revenue as Alberta-developed technology is applied and adapted in other parts of the world. Some of this, Madam Speaker, is already happening. Smaller companies like Nsolv are working on ways to extract bitumen in SAGD operations with 80 per cent fewer greenhouse gas emissions. Titanium Corporation has tested equipment that extracts valuable metals from tailings ponds' waste streams, helping to reduce methane output from those same ponds. Companies like MEG Energy and Statoil have indicated their continued interest in applying innovative solutions such as cogeneration and new technology to their oil sands operations.

Instead of just talking about the issue and wishing it away, we are seeking to find specific, credible solutions that will ensure that the world looks at Alberta differently. Finding access to new markets has been difficult without a climate plan, Madam Speaker. By doing nothing, Conservatives at both the federal and the provincial levels led Albertans to an economic dead end and a boom-and-bust economy that put many families in difficulty.

The kind of collaboration that led to this oil sands emissions limit was unprecedented, and it preceded our government, Madam Speaker. In their 2015 sustainability report ConocoPhillips described it this way.

While initial conversations weren't easy, the groups discovered areas of common ground. Both wanted Alberta and Canada to have a strong economy, agreed that climate change issues should be addressed and that they had to work together to find workable solutions.

Since the climate leadership process began, our plan has been widely praised nationally and internationally. It puts us in a better position with our most important trading partners. That includes recognition from U.S. President Obama during his address to Parliament earlier this year, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, as the world adapts to a carbon-constrained future, our government has taken the position that we can either have a made-in-Alberta future on energy or we can have, as the opposition would have us have, a made-in-Ottawa or a made-somewhere-else future. Either way, there is no turning back. There is no nostalgic, olden-times era where no one objected to greenhouse gas pollution or the climate change it causes.

With this bill, Alberta makes clear to the world that energy-producing jurisdictions can establish limits and work and thrive within a carbon-constrained future. As a climate and energy leader we set a better course for our economic future by creating green jobs, green energy, and green infrastructure. Alberta must get the most value for our resources and find markets for our products, but we cannot do it without taking credible action on climate. Madam Speaker, our forward-looking approach will help to shift the debate about Alberta's oil sands production, improve market access, and provide certainty to investors.

Madam Speaker, the opposition is vociferously opposing acting on climate change, but I expect that even they share the views of Albertans that we need growth in the oil and gas sector, we need growth in the oil sands, we need the world to know that we are working hard towards reducing our greenhouse gas footprint, and we need a made-in-Alberta solution. These are the elements of a growth strategy for Alberta where the environment and the economy go hand in hand, because climate change is real.

Those who share the view that climate change is real are invited to demonstrate that by ensuring swift passage of this bill. The bill will send a clear signal to the world and, most importantly of all, to working women and men in Alberta families that our government intends to balance creating new jobs while being at the forefront of environmental policy.

Now, Madam Speaker, this bill is before this House because it is the right thing to do for our environment and our economy. This bill, crafted in consultation with First Nations, municipalities, affected communities, Métis organizations, industry, and environmental groups, is one more step to doing our part to address one of the world's most pressing problems. It is right to create conditions to get our products to markets that will pay more for our energy products as we begin the long transition to a decarbonized world in the future.

We have Albertans from all parts of the energy industry who have taken great pride in telling the world for decades just how good Alberta is at energy development, at developing new technology and sharing it with the world, at creating wealth and building one of the most successful, prosperous societies on Earth. That is justified pride on behalf of Albertans, Madam Speaker.

Now, wouldn't it be great if those same engineers, businesspeople, entrepreneurs, workers, and their families could also take pride in how their province is the most successful environmentally progressive province in Canada, how their province is a leader in clean tech and all the good mortgage-paying jobs that go with it, and how their province is the most advanced jurisdiction to take advantage of our energy resources today to invest in the energy of tomorrow?

Madam Speaker, by passing this bill, we can show the world that Alberta doesn't just do business, we mean business. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other hon. members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise as cosponsor of this piece of legislation, the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act, and proudly state that this government is following through on its climate change leadership plan, its commitment to establish a legislative limit on oil sands greenhouse gas emissions. We're taking a progressive and forward-looking approach to regulating and reducing emissions associated with energy production and will help change the debate about Alberta's oil sands production and improve market access.

It's all about long-term planning. This government is always looking to the longer term no matter what piece of legislation we bring forward to the House because, as it's commonly known, it's difficult for governments to look forward to long-term planning. They're typically focused on shorter, four-year cycles. Every effort is going to be made to make sure that the long-term solutions that Albertans seek are going to be part and parcel of the underpinning of every piece of legislation that we bring to this House.

I quite often am asked about what the reasoning might be behind this focus. It's basically because we know that Albertans are demanding that of us. Governments in the past have focused on a shorter term cycle of thinking. We in this government are determined to change that tendency and begin a path towards long-term thinking, especially in our energy industry.

Now, the limit along with the new output-based allocation approach on carbon pricing will help drive innovation and reduce emissions per barrel while still allowing for production growth and development of the oil sands resource. We strike a balance between our desire, of course, to continue producing energy in this province and to have energy be the backbone of our economy while also gaining the appropriate social licence, as is commonly said, to continue to produce these energy products and get them to market and also to receive the approval of society in general to get pipelines built to tidewater so that these products, that we so proudly produce, are sold at world price.

The limit is set at 100 megatonnes. The 100-megatonne limit provides room for growth and development of our oil sands resources to a production level that will be higher than at any time in our past and present as well as forecast out to 2030. The annual emissions limit was jointly recommended to government by Canadian and international leaders in Alberta's oil sands industry from Canadian and international environmental organizations. There is currently no plan to change the limit; however, the oil sands advisory group, which is a part of this framework legislation, will be giving advice on a pathway to 2050 and may consider the limit level.

Why now? Well, that's something that we thought important to implement right away as part of our climate leadership plan, and a commitment to establish a legislative limit is part and parcel of that plan. It's a major pillar of it, so the government of Alberta is delivering on its climate leadership plan and setting this legislative limit right now to provide certainty to industry.

It's often argued by members opposite that a cap is a limit to certainty, that it provides uncertainty, but in fact it's the opposite. Industry loves certainty, and this cap gives certainty to the industry so that it can make long-term plans, which is what this legislation is all about. It establishes a legislative limit on oil sands greenhouse gas emissions and provides the ability to make regulations in order to implement the limit. The effect is that greenhouse gas emissions from oil sands sites, after accounting for all exclusions, will be limited to a hard cap of 100 megatonnes of carbon dioxide in any year.

Now, it will apply to in situ sites, processing plants – for example, upgraders – primary production, enhanced recovery, experimental schemes, and all the buildings, equipment, structures, and vehicles associated with those sites. There are some oil sands emissions that don't fall under this limit. Many members of the government caucus recently went up to Christina Lake and visited the MEG Energy in situ plant there. We know that there are difficulties with producing certain types of in situ plants and there are costs involved. That's why there are certain exemptions under this legislation to allow that energy production to take place and to take into account the concerns that industry had about the costs that are associated with their production.

This limit does not apply to greenhouse gas emissions from new upgraders that finished their first year of commercial operation before December 31, 2015, and expansions to existing upgraders that occur after December 31, 2015, up to a maximum of 10 megatonnes combined. Now, once those emissions exceed 10 megatonnes, the 100-megatonne limit applies. These emissions were excluded in recognition of the added value and job creation that new upgrading can provide.

The 100-megatonne limit also does not apply to cogeneration emissions from the electricity portion of the energy generated or produced by cogeneration, combined heat and electricity generation. The limit does not apply to these emissions because of the low emissions intensity electricity that they provide to the oil sands sites and the Alberta electric system. The limit currently applies to primary production, enhanced recovery, and experimental schemes, but there is the ability to exclude emissions from these minor sources of greenhouse gas emissions by regulation in the future, once it's determined how the limit will be implemented.

Left to regulations is that the act provides the authority to make regulations to establish mechanisms to keep greenhouse gas emissions from within the oil sands within the 100-megatonne limit. The government of Alberta is seeking implementation advice of the oil sands advisory group on the types of mechanisms that could be used by February 2017. After considering the implementation advice of the oil sands advisory group, the government of Alberta will develop regulations to implement suitable regulatory mechanisms in 2017. It will take effect when it's passed in the Legislature's fall session.

Emissions are projected to stay below the limit until 2030 under production forecasts developed for the 2016-2017 budget. In an unlikely development situation where all Alberta Energy Regulator approved projects with an announced start date are constructed and operating, the 100-megatonne limit is expected to be reached by 2030. Since oil sands emissions that count towards the limit will likely not reach 100 megatonnes between now and 2030, the limit will not directly result in emissions reductions before 2030. Although the limit may not directly reduce oil sands emissions within the 2030 time frame, current and future oil sands producers will likely take action to reduce their emissions and emissions intensity to keep emissions below the limit.

Greenhouse gas emissions from large oil sands emitting 100,000 tonnes of carbon dioxide per year or more will be priced according to output-based allocations for any emissions above a product- or sector-benefit benchmark. The new output-based allocation approach to carbon pricing will act as the main driver for carbon competitiveness and emissions reductions across the different sectors of Alberta's economy.

The oil sands emissions limit complements the carbon levy and output-based allocation approach to reducing greenhouse gas emissions by putting a price on carbon and providing a legislative backstop on oil sands emissions. Together this will create the conditions for the oil sands sector to innovate and become more globally competitive. There will be no immediate effect on project approvals with the enactment of the Oil Sands Emissions Limit Act. The oil sands advisory group will provide implementation advice to government by February 2017, including implications for the project approval process.

Now the role of the oil sands advisory group. The group is composed of members from industry, environmental organizations, and indigenous and nonindigenous communities. An initial task of the oil sands advisory group is to provide implementation advice to the government of Alberta on the oil sands emissions limit by February 2017. Given their role in providing implementation advice, the government of Alberta sought feedback from the oil sands advisory group on the concepts included in the act. The draft bill was not shared with the oil sands advisory group in order to preserve the privilege of Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. Now, the advice coming from the oil sands advisory group in 2017 could point to implementation through one or more methods, from policy to ministerial order, from new regulations enabled under today's statute to changes to the act itself next year.

Like industry and environmentalists, we see emissions from 2030 to 2050 being established in a manner consistent with Alberta making its contribution to Canada, meeting its 2050 greenhouse gas reduction targets and international climate commitments. The industry and environmental communities' advice to us is that this is the right time to limit to 2030, after which time a new path may be needed. However, the government has not put an expiry date on the emissions limit. The oil sands terms of reference encourage it to propose a mandate to advise government of a path from 2030 to 2050. We expect to receive advice from that in 2017, and that advice is very likely to have implications for the legislation in reference to what might happen after 2030.

With that, I look forward to engaging in debate on this piece of legislation over the coming days and certainly encourage all members of the House to support it.

I now move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I wonder if I might seek unanimous consent from the House to briefly revert to introductions.

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard that request, is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a group of 13 students, actually sheriffs in training, who are here with us touring the Legislature. They're training to become sheriffs and are from recruit class 961. They're brand new recruits that started training last week and will be graduating as Alberta sheriffs in February. I'm sure that they have a wonderful career ahead of them protecting Albertans, and I congratulate them. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Earlier today I made an effort to seek unanimous consent to revert to Notices of Motions to provide the government the opportunity of not airing our laundry this afternoon. Seeing as we're in this atmosphere of co-operation, I just wanted to see if maybe the government had changed their mind and was willing to provide unanimous consent so that I may propose a motion under Notices of Motions. I ask for unanimous consent to revert to Notices of Motions.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Notices of Motions

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the government for changing your position from this morning.

I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 15(6), which reads:

The Speaker may allow such debate as he or she [sees] appropriate . . . to determine whether a prima facie case of breach of privilege has taken place and whether the matter is being raised at the earliest [convenience], and if the Speaker so rules, which, clearly, Madam Speaker, was the case yesterday, any Member may give notice no later than the conclusion of the next sitting day of a motion to deal with [this] matter further.

As is laid out in the standing orders, any member may provide notice of a motion to deal with the matter further. Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, yesterday I was not afforded that opportunity to propose that motion, so I rise to give notice that the motion I'll be moving at the appropriate time is:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) the Legislative Assembly refer to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing for deliberation and consideration the Speaker's finding yesterday of a prima facie case of breach of privilege and the determination of an appropriate remedy.

I might just add that the Premier in 2013 proposed this exact same motion, which was supported by the Government House Leader.

The Deputy Speaker: Did anyone wish to respond to that at this time?

Mr. Mason: No, Madam Speaker, I don't.

The Deputy Speaker: Oh, okay. Sorry. My error, then.

Speaker's Ruling Motion Out of Order

The Deputy Speaker: Having heard this proposed notice of motion, I'm prepared to give a ruling, the proposed notice of motion under Standing Order 15(6) concerning a prima facie breach of privilege after an apology has been given.

Hon. members, what we have today in the Assembly is a situation that is almost identical to what happened on December 3, 2013. On that day the then Member for Edmonton-Strathcona provided oral notice of her intention to move a motion pursuant to Standing Order 15(6) referring to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing consideration of the Speaker's ruling of a prima facie breach of privilege on December 2, 2013.

Speaker Zwozdesky ruled that motion was out of order under Standing Order 48 because the Deputy Premier on behalf of the government of that day offered an apology to the Assembly. He indicated that after an apology was given, the matter was concluded. His ruling can be found on pages 3303 to 3304 of Hansard for December 3, 2013.

By way of additional authorities I reference Speaker Schumacher's ruling in 1993 on the effect of an apology. That can be found at pages 463 and 464 of Hansard for September 23, 1993.

11:50

Both Speaker Schumacher and Speaker Zwozdesky cited Joseph Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada on this matter, which states on page 267 of the second edition of that book: "An apology by the offending Member will invariably close the matter without the necessity of putting the motion to a vote." Yesterday the Deputy Government House Leader apologized on behalf of the government after the Speaker's ruling of a prima facie contempt. I must rule the motion proposed by the Official Opposition House Leader out of order pursuant to Standing Order 48. The reason, once again, is that an apology was given, and according to the practices of this Assembly once an apology is given, the matter is concluded. I consider the matter ended, hon. members. Let's move on.

The hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. Just raising a point under Standing Order 13(2): "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision on the request of a Member." I'm a little troubled by what appears to be a contradiction in the standing orders. Standing Order 15(6) clearly states that "any Member may give notice no later than the conclusion of the next sitting day of a motion to deal with the matter further." Clearly, a breach of privilege took place yesterday, and not only was there an apology given, but there was no opportunity for a motion to be made yesterday.

I know that you know that in House of Commons Procedure and Practice this situation is also addressed, that when a breach of privilege has taken place, a member is provided the opportunity to provide a motion. I find it more than a little unfortunate that these particular standing orders are not being followed, and I find it very troubling that the Premier and the Government House Leader, while in opposition, found a breach of privilege very serious and at that time found that an apology wasn't acceptable, which is why they continued to move a similar motion as I am today. Now, just a few short months later, they choose to not respect the same things that they once had.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, as I have explained in detail, once an apology has been given, that concludes the matter, and no further breach of privilege occurs at that time. The apology ends the matter, and we are moving forward.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Madam Speaker, having dealt with weighty matters and debated some legislation, it's been a very edifying morning. I propose to call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:54 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, November 2, 2016

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Welcome. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Dyakuyu. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seated in your gallery, I'd first like to introduce Ukraine's ambassador to Canada, His Excellency Ambassador Andriy Shevchenko. Ambassador Shevchenko is a remarkable advocate for Ukraine and Ukraine's interests. Alberta has come to be known as the Ambassador's second home, and we are thrilled he was able to join us on this historic day. Bitamo, Ambassador.

For my second introduction, I'm very pleased to welcome to this House the executive of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council. The work that this council does in advocacy and promotion of the Ukrainian community across this province is remarkable, and they were instrumental in the creation of an act that will be introduced today, Mr. Speaker. I'll ask that they rise as I state their names: Ms Olesia Luciwi-Andryjowycz, president; Mr. Ivan Lypovyk, vice-president; Ms Daria Luciwi, past president; Ms Larisa Hayduk, secretary; Ms Romana Latenko, treasurer; Mr. Yaroslav Szewczuk, director; and Ms Christine Moussienko, director.

For my third introduction, and also seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce and welcome back a former Speaker of this House, Mr. Gene Zwozdesky. Mr. Zwozdesky, in addition to a storied career within the Alberta Legislature, is a leader in the Ukrainian community and was instrumental in bringing forward the Ukrainian Famine and Genocide (Holodomor) Memorial Day Act in 2008, also known as the Holodomor.

I'd ask all of my guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Thank you and welcome, with particular acknowledgments to Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, hon. member. You said those words like it was natural for you to say them.

I would recognize the leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you, though you hardly need the introduction, and through you to all members of this House someone that you know better than the rest of us, your daughter Ms Stephanie Wanner, who is a child life therapist at the Stollery children's hospital in the division of pediatric oncology and who joins us in your gallery to observe childhood cancer awareness day in this Legislature. Also, since this is national Take Our Kids to Work Day, I think you have met that standard.

It also gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you Ms Val Figliuzzi. Val has been the executive director of the Kids with Cancer Society in Edmonton since 2004. Val brings great passion to her role as her son was diagnosed with cancer in 1991 and she was a great advocate for the superb treatment he received in both Edmonton and Texas to ultimately achieve a cure. She continues to work very hard for all children with cancer in northern Alberta.

Also present in your gallery is Ms Carmen Huth, whose son Karsten passed away November 25, 2015, at the age of 17 from leukemia. This is still the reality for over 20 per cent of all children who are diagnosed with cancer today. Ms Nicole Brosseau and her son Emmitt, who is five years old, are also present. Emmitt was diagnosed with acute lymphoblastic leukemia – I failed medical school, Mr. Speaker – on August 5 of this year and is undergoing treatment now at the Stollery. We wish nothing but great outcomes for young Emmitt and his entire family.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I will introduce to you and through you to all members of the House my wife, Christine McIver. Christine is the founder and chief executive officer of the Kids Cancer Care Foundation of Alberta, which she founded 20 years ago. Mostly my life would be unbearable without her.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to stand today and introduce to you and through you from the wonderful small Ukrainian town of Myrnam, Alberta, a group of grade 6 students and their principal, Mr. Keith Gamblin; assistant principal, Adrienne Owen; staff Tara Campbell; and parents Irene Jacula, Deirdre Myshaniuk, and Rick Dees. If I could get the students and staff and parents to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Leduc-Beaumont.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise and introduce to you and through you two classes from the bustling metropolis of Beaumont at Académie Saint-André; their teachers Miss Brittany O'Neill, Mme Stéphanie Therrien-Messier; their chaperones Mr. Michael Foley and Mrs. Leanne Bownes. If they would stand now and please get the recognition of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you some of the brightest students from one of the most beautiful constituencies in all of Alberta. The students today are from Roberta McAdams school, which we grand opened with the Minister of Education just a week ago. I read to them just a month ago. They're accompanied today by their teacher Mr. Ash Robinson and their chaperones Mrs. Sushma Dalal, Mrs. Kawalieet Nagra, and Ms Tamsin Carreck. If they could please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

I believe you may have some other guests, leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and reintroduce to this House and all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mrs. Janice Sarich, former MLA for Edmonton-Decore and former parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Education. Mrs. Sarich served with four Premiers and worked diligently to serve and advocate for the interests of Alberta from 2008 to 2015. She is a fourth generation Ukrainian, as her great-grandparents emigrated from Ukraine to Canada in 1898 and 1901.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to introduce Heather Klimchuk, the former Member for Edmonton-Glenora from 2008 to 2015. Heather served as a former minister of culture and community services and of Service Alberta. Joining us today also is Jacquie Fenske, former MLA for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, who served from 2012 to 2015. Jacquie contributed as a member of many legislative committees and represented her community with great vigour. I would also like to express regrets from former Premier Stelmach, who is attending a funeral today.

All of these guests are here today to support the introduction and ultimate passage of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

1:40

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a group of hard-working civil servants from Alberta Agriculture and Forestry. Staff members of the competitiveness and market analysis section of Agriculture and Forestry are here with us today. They represent the many women and men who work hard to ensure that our farm families are equipped with information on how they can best compete in the agriculture market. I would like to ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Dyakuyu, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of our Assembly three distinguished guests joining us from the Ukrainian religious community here in Alberta and seated in the members' gallery. I will ask that they rise as I state their names: the Most Reverend Bishop David Motiuk, a bishop of the Ukrainian Catholic eparchy of Edmonton; His Grace Bishop Ilarion of the Edmonton and western eparchy of the Ukrainian Orthodox Church of Canada; as well as Ms Ann Lega, who is accompanying Bishop Ilarion here today. So please join me in providing the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four guests joining us from Ukrainian community organizations in Alberta and seated in the public gallery. I'll ask that they rise as I state their names: Ms Andrea Kopylech, vice-president of the national Ukrainian Canadian Congress; Orysia Boychuk, president of the Edmonton branch of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress; Deborah Stasiuk, president of the Alberta Council for the Ukrainian Arts; and Ms Slavka Shulakewych – I was practising that one; sorry about that – program co-ordinator with the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council. Please join me in providing the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and bitaemo to all guests here celebrating our shared Ukrainian heritage. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Brielle Anderson. Brielle is here with her mother, Kim Brundrit. Kim works in my constituency office, and Brielle is here job shadowing me all day as part of national Take Our Kids to Work Day. Brielle has been put to work by my constituency staff and has agreed to help any caucus who may need her help in writing a shadow budget for the upcoming budget. If you could please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Decore.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four guests joining us from Ukrainian education organizations in Alberta. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'll ask that they please stand as I call their names: Ms Marian Butz-Gauk, president of the Edmonton Catholic Schools Ukrainian Bilingual Parent Advisory Society; Ms Ivanka Soletsky, president of the University of Alberta Ukrainian Students' Society; Ms Alicia Slusarchuk, president of Grant MacEwan University Ukrainian students' society; and Mr. Daniel Moussienko, president of the University of Calgary Ukrainian society. I would ask that all members please extend the warm welcome of this Assembly to them.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this House three guests joining us from the Ukrainian community and seated in the public gallery. I'll ask that they rise as I state their names: Mr. Taras Podilsky, Mr. Jars Balan, and Mr. Michael Sulyma. If you could all please join me in providing them the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Dyakuyu, Mr. Speaker. As a proud descendant of Ukrainian settlers who arrived here in 1913 and had seven kids, including my father, it's my great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests joining us from the Ukrainian community and seated in the public gallery. I'll ask that they rise as I state their names: Mr. Vitaliy Milentyev and Mr. Yarema Shulakewych. Please rise to receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two guests joining us from the Ukrainian community and seated in the public gallery. I'll ask that they rise as I state their names: Ms Marilyn Mucha and Mr. Bill Shostak. I ask that they rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Although he's not currently here, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Legislature Mike Carter, the president of the Calgary Firefighters Association IAFF local 255. He's been with the Calgary fire department for 18 years and currently holds the rank of captain. During his career he has responded to the Slave Lake fire, the floods in Calgary and High River, and most recently the fire in Fort McMurray. I would encourage all members to give him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly now for when he arrives.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my distinct pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you and indeed to all members of the Assembly some recent arrivals from the Ukraine that have become close to our family and myself: Yuriy and Lena Yemets and our newest Canadian baby, Destina. I ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very, very hard-working young lady from my office, one of my ministerial assistants, Katie Hasenbank. Katie was instrumental in helping to pull together many of the guests and visitors that we have joining us today as well as helping with all aspects of today. I'd ask all of my colleagues in this House to please join me in acknowledging all of her hard work.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members.

Are there any further introductions? The Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Dyakuyu, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to present to the Assembly six guests. If they could rise as I call their names: Natalia Toroshenko, a former Vegreville councillor and Ukrainian teacher; Hazel Anaka, co-ordinator of Babas and Borshch, a Ukrainian festival in Andrew; the mayor of Mundare, Charlie Gargus; a Lamont county councillor and deputy reeve, Daniel Warawa; a former Vegreville councillor, Greg Kurulok, and his wife, Chris, who own the Ukrainian Ceramic Cottage in Vegreville. Proud of their cultural heritage, proud of their community work, please join me in welcoming these guests with the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Are there any other introductions, hon. members? I think I speak for all of you when I say how fortunate we are to have the beautiful and appreciative people of this province. It's something we need to all cherish.

Members' Statements

Carbon Levy Advertising

Mr. Cooper: The NDP has taken a page out of the previous government's handbook when it comes to a complete lack of respect for Albertans. In fact, the Speaker ruled yesterday that they have been found in contempt of the Assembly. The NDP have shown the moms and dads, business owners, and oilfield workers across this province that they are beneath them by not considering them when introducing a $3 billion carbon tax and then having the gall to ask those same hard-working Albertans to pick up the tab for $5 million to advertise the virtues of that carbon tax, that will hurt the economy and every single Albertan.

The NDP have shown contempt for the rules of the Legislature by breaking those rules and using $5 million of Albertans' money to advertise a carbon tax that Albertans didn't ask for or didn't want. The NDP got off with a slap on the wrist and a quick apology, and they think that's okay. Oh, how times have changed. When in opposition, the Government House Leader railed against the government of the day for being found in contempt on a very similar situation with partisan ads. The Government House Leader called the PCs an affront to the dignity and respect that should be afforded to our Legislature. Pot, kettle, black.

The facts are clear, Mr. Speaker. The NDP has been caught breaking the rules, using the hard-earned tax dollars of Albertans to push NDP propaganda on the carbon tax, and they should be paying the $5 million back. Actions have consequences, and the NDP's flippant use of taxpayer dollars to push out the carbon tax propaganda must be paid back. Albertans can count on the Wildrose for standing up to this government and for showing real leadership, unlike the NDP, who are willing to write cheques using Albertans' hard-earned money.

Statement by the Speaker

Oral Question Period Time Limits

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we start the clock on Oral Question Period, I committed to provide a response to the question which was raised yesterday with respect to stopping the clock. I'd like to briefly comment on that matter, which was raised by the House leader for the Official Opposition. I remind members that it's at the discretion of the chair to stop the clock when providing comments or direction on proceedings of this House. Yesterday I provided caution to members in the application of the sub judice rule during Oral Question Period, and I declined to stop the clock at that time. I think the particular point that was made and maybe intended by the hon. member at the time was on the length of the sub judice, which I wrote, on the second day. In the future I will be conscious of that and will continue to use my discretion, however, as to when I apply the principle.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: If we would now start the clock. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Carbon Levy Advertising

Mr. Jean: Earlier this week we saw a partial admission from this government that their carbon tax will cost thousands of Albertans their jobs on top of the over a hundred thousand that have already been lost since they were elected. Then, to make matters worse, just yesterday the Speaker found this government in contempt for breaking the rules with their $5 million carbon tax ad campaign. We knew the ads were ineffective, and we knew they were a waste of money, but now we know that they should not have been allowed in the first place to have been able to spend Albertans' hard-earned money like this. How can the Premier possibly justify this ridiculous abuse of taxpayers' dollars during a time when Albertans can't afford it?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday our Deputy Government House Leader was very clear when he said that we “would never, under any circumstances, want to offend or obstruct the dignity of [this] House,” and as such, he offered our sincere apology, and I echo that sentiment again today.

However, let me be clear that while we sincerely do apologize for that situation, we will not apologize for making sure that Albertans are informed and aware that they finally have a government that takes the issue of climate change seriously and that will move forward to diversify the economy, to protect the environment, and to ensure that we finally take action.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Jean: In 2013 the Redford PC government was found in contempt for breaking the rules with a partisan ad campaign funded by taxpayers. The now Government House Leader teed off, saying that in all his years of service he'd only seen the 44-year-old PC government held in contempt once and that a simple apology probably wasn't enough. Fast-forward to today, and it only took a year and a half for this NDP government to do exactly the same thing as the old PC government. Can the House leader please explain why Albertans should now settle for a simple “sorry” when his government broke the rules on a $5 million campaign when he thought it wasn't appropriate before?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We certainly take into account the Speaker's rulings in adjusting our position with respect to these matters. We take guidance from the chair, and we take that very seriously. I suggest the opposition should do the same.

Mr. Jean: If we actually thought it would stop them from doing so, Mr. Speaker, we could, but the only thing more grating to Albertans than this government's carbon tax ads is the carbon tax itself. Instead of campaigning an election on it, the Premier used taxpayer dollars to promote it, and still two-thirds say that they don't want it. What they do want are good jobs and, of course, a competitive industry, and they want to have a say on a carbon tax that will ultimately cost taxpayers a lot more money than $5 million. Will the Premier test the effectiveness of her ridiculous advertising and put the carbon tax to Alberta voters in a referendum?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Notley: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting. Today we received an important endorsement for our climate leadership plan, and that was from the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. On CBC he suggested that having energy efficiency programs like retrofits of public institutions and hospitals and schools was a good idea. But what the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake fails to understand is that someone has to pay for that, that renewable energy and energy efficiency don't come for free, and that you need to show leadership in order to get these things into place so that we can reposition our government as the progressive energy-producing province that we are, and that is long overdue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Prescription Drug Coverage for Rare Diseases

Mr. Jean: Albertans pride ourselves on a health care system that's supposed to provide universal health access, yet those who need the care the most still fall through the cracks. Haley Chisholm, a teenager from High River who desperately needs access to a drug called Soliris to keep her kidneys functioning, is an example of that. Her family simply can't afford it, and the province's short-term exceptional drug therapy program refuses to pay for it. Can the Premier please explain to Haley Chisholm why the health care system isn't there when she needs it the most?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, our Minister of Health, I'm sure, will look into that matter although, generally speaking, I will say that one of the things that we need to do if we're going to reduce the rate of increase in health spending is that we can't go forward with 6, 8, 10 per cent increases every year and that drugs are one of those things. That being said, on cases like this we need to be looking at it, and it will be looked at.

But, please, Mr. Speaker, to the members opposite, you can't take $2 billion out of operating expenses and not restrict people's access to public health care. These guys are engaging in magical thinking if they don't understand that.

Mr. Jean: Very insensitive, Mr. Speaker.

Haley's doctors talked to physicians in the United States who've used Soliris successfully to treat patients suffering from the same condition as Haley, but in Canada our universal health care system won't even allow drug trials for this condition because not enough people suffer from it, so Health Canada says that it's not worth while to fund it. Unbelievable. Haley Chisholm is not just a number, and the province should step up and recognize this. Will the Premier today, right now, commit to reviewing the provincial regulations that prevent Alberta Health from funding Haley's treatment?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, I'll certainly have the minister look into it and get back to the member with respect to the particulars, but what I will say is that our regulations are designed so that health care professionals are making decisions about what is in the best health outcome for people. It is not politicians, so I will not be engaging in this particular deliberation because, quite frankly, that is not the way to have a strong, evidence-based public system of health care. Our minister will look into it and get back to the member opposite with the details, but we are not going to engage in political interference in evidence-based decision-making.

Mr. Jean: “I hope the government realizes that it's not really a waste of money to spend the money on me. I hope they see me as a person and not coins that they're spending. I have plans to do good things for people.” That's a message from Haley Chisholm delivered last week. The way we treat people in our health care system needs to change. It doesn't need to be so cold and uncaring. I believe the Premier would agree. Will she commit to making the systematic changes needed to support Albertans suffering from rare diseases, like Haley Chisholm, or not?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I said, our government will continue to support our public health care system to the very best of our ability because we know that that is the way to ensure that everybody gets the care that they need when they need it. One of the ways to do that is to ensure that the matter is reviewed by medical professionals and that specific instances are reviewed by doctors who can tell us what is the best way forward. So we will certainly look into this matter and find out what the evidence has been and what the decision-making has been.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

2:00 Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit

Mr. Jean: Mr. Speaker, we've been asking a lot of questions about PPAs because the government's efforts to rip up these contracts hurt Albertans in many, many ways. When a government goes to court to rip up contracts that have been running since the turn of the century, the investment community really notices. People become afraid to invest in Alberta, and they are. That makes everything more expensive for Albertans, and it's becoming so, and that hurts everyday Albertans. Does the Premier recognize that her decisions to have the government sue its own agencies and power companies are going to hurt Albertans?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, the other investors in Alberta are the industrial consumers who need to understand that the rules that they have been advised about by the government are, in fact, the rules that are in place. Residential consumers of electricity also deserve to know that. We as a government are going to stand up for those consumers, many of whom are also investors, to ensure that the rules that they thought were in place were, in fact, the rules that were in place. Other than that, we will continue to stand up for fair prices for all Albertans.

Mr. Jean: The Premier doesn't seem to understand the great impact of the PPA lawsuit. Suing Enmax hurts Albertans, Calgarians in particular. This government acts like there is a barrel with billions and billions of dollars sitting in Enmax's office that the NDP can use in their slush fund. This government rails against the profits made by power companies, but Enmax is a social enterprise. Its dividends actually fund the city of Calgary. EPCOR and Capital Power actually fund the city of Edmonton. Does the Premier understand how our electricity system works in Alberta? Does she realize the mistakes that she's making on our electricity system in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we fully understand this matter, and one of the decisions that we've made is that we are going to do everything at our disposal to stand up for Alberta consumers, individual families and industrial consumers, to make sure that they pay the price that they need to pay and not a cent more. At the end of the day, you can choose to stand up for the power companies or you can choose to stand up for Albertans. We will be standing up for Albertans.

Mr. Jean: Last year the NDP changed the specified gas emitters tax. They didn't consult with anyone. They got it wrong, and power companies warned them that they would turn back PPAs. No one in the NDP government listened, but that's because they didn't know what they were doing. FOIP documents now reveal that the Premier only asked for a beginner's briefing on how the electricity system works in Alberta in March, 10 months – a full 10 months – after she plunged the system into chaos. Will the Premier admit right now that she didn't know what she was doing, and will she call off this absurd PPA lawsuit against the people of Alberta, particularly Edmonton and Calgary?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly urge the member to read the memo that his staff have been distributing because, of course, what it says is: further to the briefings the Premier has received on all these issues, we'd like more information. It doesn't quite say what you think it says, to the member opposite. Generally speaking, I will continue to answer this on a general basis because the matter is before the courts. Our government has made a decision to do whatever we can to stand up for Albertans – for regular Alberta consumers, for residential consumers, for industrial consumers – so that they pay the best prices they can for their electricity.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

The leader of the third party.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week the NDP government will take Alberta companies to court over power purchase agreements. With PPAs we've had a reliable supply of energy for years, and Alberta energy has been the cheapest amongst the provinces historically. Because this government didn't understand the impact of rushed policies, Alberta power companies are exercising their right to return the PPAs. To the Premier. Your ministers failed to properly consult with industry stakeholders and didn't take the advice of their hard-working public servants after you got advice. Will you now do the right thing and drop this court case before it starts because that's what's in the best interest of Albertans?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Would you please stop the clock? I simply want to remind the Assembly once again about Standing Order 23(g), the sub judice rule, which governs statements made in the Assembly about legal proceedings. I reiterate my caution to both sides of the Assembly in their statements, both in posing questions and in responses. I will provide considerable latitude, but I want to urge members to exercise discretion in making statements that may be subject to the rule.

Please start the clock.

The hon. Premier.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit (continued)

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that, I mean, it really is a bit rich coming from over there. Certainly, the position of these power companies is that they signed a deal, a deal that nobody saw in the public sphere because of an OIC to keep the deal quiet, a deal that said that they could keep their profits, and when they started to experience losses, taxpayers had to pay for it. That's what the companies are suggesting is the case, and it appears as though the members opposite think that that's just great and in the best interests of Albertans. Well, we do not.

Mr. McIver: News flash for the Premier. No matter who wins this lawsuit, Albertans lose. Albertans pay. You are causing this. You're causing extra expenses for court cases. You're causing extra distress on the very companies that invest in creating power, renewable and otherwise, in Alberta, yet you're forging ahead with the extra price tag of the court case when the same person is going to pay either way. Why are you so against Alberta-based investment? No. You just said it. You're against profit. You're offended by it. Premier, why are you offended by companies making profit?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Hon. members, please be cautious about words used that might have a volatile effect on the House.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, as you can imagine, reject almost the entire premise of that question. I will simply say that we will continue to stand up for Albertans. We will assert that the system was one where the private industry, who was intended to take the risk, enjoy the benefits of the profit, therefore, one would expect, would also endure the risk where there was some. Either way, we will continue to take whatever action we can to get the best deal we can for Albertans, and we will not back down from that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McIver: In this province only the government thinks that profit is a dirty word, Mr. Speaker.

Given that our PC government put a price on carbon, worked with publicly owned companies like Enmax and Capital Power to invest in renewable energy, it was clear that we were taking a stand on the realities of climate change. To the Premier. The economic impact study you released this week was an insult to Albertans. Will you be accountable to Albertans and share a fulsome economic impact, not the flimsy piece that was presented this week, and make the case to Albertans? So far you haven't even come close.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we have released a good deal of information about this. Indeed, as I mentioned a couple of days ago, there have been other studies out there as well that have supported our position that, in fact, our climate change leadership plan will grow the economy, will ensure that we are able to diversify the economy, will actually overtake the cost of doing nothing, something which is not in any kind of economic analysis, will actually protect the environment, will actually position Alberta as a progressive, modern energy producer, and will ultimately enhance our ability to grow our markets. It will benefit . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Royalty Framework

Mr. Malkinson: Mr. Speaker, a recent study from the University of Calgary School of Public Policy concluded that Alberta's new royalty framework is making – get this – Alberta more competitive on the energy market than other jurisdictions in Canada, in particular our neighbours in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. To the Minister of Energy. While this is great news for companies, my constituents and everyday shop-floor Albertans want to know: how will they see the benefits of this new framework?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the member is correct. Jack Mintz on Monday wrote that our new royalty framework will make Alberta significantly more attractive for investment. He continued to say that Alberta is indeed more competitive than British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and many of the oil-producing states in the United States. This is going to attract investment in Alberta, and it's going to help fund the health care and the education systems that all of us enjoy and want.

[interjections]

2:10

The Speaker: Both sides of the House, please keep the volume down.

First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the study did not factor in the carbon price, residents of Calgary-Currie want to know if the same minister can tell Albertans if and how the carbon price will impact the implementation of the new royalty framework.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is correct that Mr. Mintz's analysis did not include the carbon price. However, we have exempted on-site combustion of fuel at traditional oil and gas wells from the carbon levy for the next five years. This is going to allow companies to adapt and address methane emissions, and it will encourage investment in technology to do this, something which will be helpful to the midstream and downstream sectors.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the minister for the answer. Can the minister inform Albertans of the royalty programs that will come into effect in the new year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the new royalty framework takes place beginning January 1. We have two programs, enhanced hydrocarbon recovery program and emerging resources program. Those are for those harder-to-get resources, so it's a bit of a royalty break. It's going to bring out more drilling in those areas, and these are going to allow companies some assistance in accessing harder-to-get resources. This is a win-win-win for industry, it's a win for investors, and absolutely it's a win for Albertans, who are the owners of the resource.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit (continued)

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, it's no surprise that this government lacks the skill and mindset to partner with the greedy and selfish private sector. The Alberta no-jobs plan is a complete failure in getting Albertans back to work, yet you publicly vilify those you suggest will make massive investments in renewable and baseload power. To the Minister of Energy. Companies such as Capital Power and Enmax facing lawsuits are the same investors needed for job growth and stable, affordable power. Is this how the NDP world view envisions building relationships with industry, job seekers, and potential investors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Consumers shouldn't have to pay for business losses because regulatory loopholes were created in secret, in a way that certainly appears to have been unlawfully negotiated by that party when they were in government. That's exactly why we're moving forward by going to court. We want to make sure we have a fair and equal playing ground for Albertans and for all businesses here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, given that socially responsible power companies are investing millions of shareholder dollars in renewable power technology and given that taxpayers currently carry no direct debt related to power generation because of billions of dollars of capital invested by these same companies, again to the minister: why does your government continue irresponsible and punitive legal attacks on business, despite their significant commitments, in what may prove to be a costly, poorly orchestrated effort to drive them away?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to set the record straight that that is not at all the intention of what we're doing. We are in the process of going forward and asking the courts for clarity around a secret, backroom deal loophole that was negotiated by Enron, that certainly doesn't fit with the principles that were sold to Albertans when we were moving to a deregulated market, which created lots of opportunity for businesses to make $10 billion worth of profits. Now, the other part of what was promised by the then government is around that when there is time for losses, they need to step up and fulfill their part of the commitment. We are going to make sure that we protect Albertans as we move forward and create a good business environment for all.

The Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Premier.

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, Albertans will judge by results, not intentions. Given that the success of your climate leadership plan must include private investment in renewable power and given that this government continues to erode investor confidence by arrogantly reneging on known clauses within 15-year-old contracts, to the same minister, a simple question: do you and your colleagues understand that irresponsible, ideologically driven policies and disdain for private capital are clearly driving investment out of our province? Yes or no?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the unlawful loophole that was created was dishonest. It was not forthcoming to the folks that were part of the consultations. It was negotiated in at the eleventh hour, and it certainly isn't the kind of business environment that business partners deserve in Alberta. That's why we're moving forward to provide clarity about whether or not it was actually lawful. We don't believe it was.

The Speaker: All members of the House, I remind you again about the language and tone that you use, as it causes an uproar in this House. I want both sides of the House to recognize that.

Mr. Rodney: Point of order.

The Speaker: My apologies to the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. I missed you. Please proceed.

Political Party Funding

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. NDP members of the all-party Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee rammed through a motion for taxpayers to fund political parties despite opposition from every other party in this Assembly. This is not what Albertans thought they were getting when the Premier promised to do things differently. To the minister responsible for democratic renewal: will you commit to this Assembly right now that your government will not spend a single taxpayer dollar to fund political parties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] Minister, proceed.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The work of the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee is very important to this government. Our very first bill, Bill 1, removed corporate and union donations to begin the process to get big money out of politics. The committee itself was not able to complete all its work due to a series of delays implemented by the opposition. We have been reviewing the results of that committee, looking forward to what we may be able to do with the work the committee has completed. I am not looking at any options to include new spending in changes to the election financing act.

Mr. Nixon: This past weekend Wildrose members voted to show that they knew it was wrong to fund political parties with tax dollars, but this government clearly disagrees. Given that tens of thousands of Alberta families are out of work and that the NDP is running record deficits on the backs of future generations and has been found in contempt of parliament for illegal advertising, to the Premier: how can you justify your party's self-serving plan to line your pockets with taxpayer dollars on the backs of Alberta families when they're barely making ends meet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have told us that they want to take big money out of politics. We are looking at the best options moving forward. None of these options include new spending, unlike the members opposite, who want to increase the deficit by $1.5 billion through tax cuts for their wealthy friends.

Mr. Nixon: Given that Wildrose members don't want political subsidies and are united with every other opposition party on this matter and given that whether it's the risky and ideological carbon tax or the misguided Bill 6, the NDP government seems immune to consulting, again to the Premier: what will it take for the NDP to realize that political subsidies using hard-earned taxpayer dollars are something that Albertans just can't afford and will not stand for?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will repeat for the third time that as we move forward with our election financing changes, we are not looking at using taxpayer money or adding new money into that system. What we are doing is making sure that campaign financing, getting big money out of politics, is a priority for this government. Under the current rules a person can donate $105,000 across four years. That is big money. Getting that out and making sure that the committee could come to an agreement on that was a priority of ours. The opposition was not interested in doing so. We will continue to work to bring forward changes.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

I'm just wondering how many of the former MLAs are sorry that they're not back in this room. It's such an experience.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

2:20 Brazeau County Agricultural Disaster Declaration

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Brazeau county, which is in my constituency of Drayton Valley-Devon, declared a state of agricultural disaster "due to the hardship that weather conditions, specifically, excessive and persistent precipitation have placed on local farmers.” Approximately 75 per cent of unharvested cereals in the region remain standing according to the most recent Alberta crop report. The county has requested a disaster recovery program be set up to address this issue. What is the NDP government doing for these Albertans?

The Speaker: The Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mother Nature certainly presented a lot of challenges to farms this year: at the beginning of the year not enough water, by the end far too much. It's been a great challenge. Certainly, our government is committed to supporting the agricultural industry in this province, and we continue to look at ways to support our farm families in situations such as those in Brazeau county, who really have had a tough year because the weather just was not in their favour.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is serious as 84 per cent of the spring wheat, 64 per cent of the barley, and 79 per cent of the oats planted in this county are still standing and unharvested. The economic consequences could be dire. Given that the energy industry is hurting so badly and that Mother Nature has just walloped our second-largest industry, agriculture, what types of programs can the minister provide to these farmers who are calling for disaster assistance?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I may have heard a preamble in that first part. I know you'll be cautious on the next one.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This season, again, has been a roller coaster for many of our producers, and it has indicated again that how challenging or successful a particular year is depends completely on how Mother Nature chooses to respond. The delays in harvest in many parts of our province have substantially impacted the quality of crops, and there are tremendous concerns. We take these issues very seriously. The AgriInvest, AgriInsurance, and AgriStability programs are available to help mitigate the potential effects of these types of conditions when they occur. Again, we continue to work with the agriculture industry to provide the supports needed.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Brazeau county Reeve Bart Guyon has said that these extremely wet conditions over the past few months have resulted in very low crop yields across Brazeau county and given that he wants to call attention to this extremely important issue and he reminds us all that farmers feed families, and let's support them, will this government support our farmers in Brazeau county, and if so, how?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. AgriInsurance may be available to provide assistance through unharvested acreage benefits, which provides advance payment on insured crops that remain unharvested after November 30. We encourage producers to get in touch with their local AFSC office to explore their options and to submit their report before November 15 to help AFSC determine levels of advance if necessary. We continue to monitor the harvest carefully to evaluate the final impact of this year's wet conditions, and we will continue to find ways to support Alberta's hard-working farm families.

Government Policies

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, this weekend hundreds of conservatives from across Alberta gathered in Red Deer to discuss how to take Alberta back. Wildrose members voted overwhelmingly at our annual general meeting to kill Bill 6 and to scrap the carbon tax. These policies were proposed by the grassroots members of Strathmore-Brooks, who have felt these impacts first-hand. The closure of Western Feedlots in my constituency is a real-life economic impact study. Will the government commit to publicly releasing the full internal economic impact study of the carbon tax that the Premier talked about yesterday?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we indicated, we are looking at releasing all of the underlying data that uses the same econometric modelling that underlies the fiscal plan and the budget. Certainly, this work is ongoing with respect to the economic benefits of carbon pricing and the reinvestment of those substantial revenues in communities, in individuals, in businesses, and in First Nations.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago we got the news in Strathmore that Western Feedlots would be closing its doors. They cited as their reason that they were facing headwinds in the cattle market but also this government's policies on the carbon tax and the heavy regulatory burden of Bill 6. The concerns that we have raised are no longer theoretical. Real people in my constituency are losing their jobs. If the government will not reconsider its decision to force the carbon tax and Bill 6 on Albertans, what will they do to ensure that more businesses like Western Feedlots do not have to close their doors?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is disappointing to hear about the job losses at Western Feedlots.

I will remind the member that, of course, marked gasoline for agricultural purposes is exempt from the carbon levy. I will further remind the hon. member of an initial $10 million investment in on-farm efficiency programs, and we await additional investments from the federal government. I'm looking at how we can increase that programming over time. One final note, Mr. Speaker, of course, is that in June of last year a 1,400-pound calf sold for about $2,800. This year they are selling for about $1,800, so that's the state of the industry right now.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, at least we're hearing some positive signs that the NDP are at least quietly acknowledging that their carbon tax is creating real problems for rural Alberta. They introduced their $10 million subsidy program to compensate farmers for the huge added cost of the carbon tax, but that $10 million is equal to .3 per cent of the $3 billion carbon tax. It's pennies. Why doesn't the government just scrap the carbon tax and keep the change?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason why we are pricing carbon is that climate change is real. I know that it is fashionable on the other side of the House to retweet conspiracy theories, peddle hoax memes, and otherwise cast doubt on the reality of climate change, but that is not the approach of this government. The approach of this government is to make thoughtful investments in communities, in the agricultural sector, to make folks' operations more efficient, creating good jobs and making our economy resilient to a carbon-constrained future because, once again, climate change . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit Advertising

Mr. Fraser: Today Albertans want answers but are seeing this NDP government refuse to answer questions on legal action against PPAs to avoid prejudicing the court case. It was only yesterday that the Premier said that getting into the details would not be appropriate for this forum and should be reserved for the courts. Well, this caucus agrees. It's entirely inappropriate to attempt to influence public opinion with the case before the courts. So would the Premier be able to tell Albertans why she launched an ad campaign in papers around the province? Does she consider that to be an appropriate forum to influence public opinion?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, we think it's important for Albertans to know what their government is doing to defend their rights and their interests. The Official Opposition and the third party have made it very clear who they're interested in defending, that being the other side of the contracts, companies who have been very successful at benefiting during the good times, and now they want to pass losses onto individual Albertans as well as to industrial consumers. We don't believe that's fair. That's exactly why we're asking the courts to make a ruling on whether or not the clause that was added at the eleventh hour by the third party and their subsidiaries is indeed . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Fraser: Given that the Premier and the Deputy Premier refuse to be held accountable on this issue and the Energy minister has been muzzled and given that the NDP instead thought it would best to explain a sham of a court case to Albertans with a $100,000 ad campaign, to the Premier: $100,000 may not seem like a lot to you, but it is to taxpayers, and with all due respect, Deputy Premier, instead of spending money on NDP political spin, would it not be better spent on education and health care?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much for the question, Mr. Speaker. We are moving forward on making sure that Albertans are defended and protected. Certainly, we don't believe that the Enron clause is in the best interest of Albertans, nor do we believe it was done in a way that was appropriate. That's why we're moving forward with the courts and asking them to make a ruling on this so that Albertans don't have to pay more than what they were promised in the first place, which was shared risk and shared reward. It's time for that commitment to come through.

Mr. Fraser: Well, given that the NDP also used government services to launch a public website full of political rhetoric and given that in this House this government refuses to be accountable to Albertans on why they're suing these companies – Deputy Premier, suing Albertans is not going to bat for them.

The government can't have it both ways. You attempted to influence public opinion when the matter was before the courts, and Albertans aren't buying it. Today will you not waste another tax dollar on this litigation, trying to save your own political skin, and drop this lawsuit?

2:30

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd say that all Albertans have skin in this game, and the reason why we do is because 15 years ago we were promised that there was going to be public consultation and they would talk about what would be in the PPA contracts. At the eleventh hour the party that's asking the very question, clearly documented, negotiated with Enron and snuck in a loophole that certainly wasn't done in a way that passes any kind of nod test. That's why we're going to the courts, to make sure that the courts can make a ruling.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Educational Curriculum Review

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has committed to developing new curriculum across six subjects over the next six years. Given that this curriculum change is focused on providing students with the knowledge and skill sets needed for Alberta's changing environments and given that Alberta's families are eager to see results, to the Minister of Education: can you please provide this House with an update on this integral work?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you so much for the question. Last month we launched an in-depth survey on curriculum that's open to all Albertans. To date we have more than 19,000 responses that have taken the survey – it feels really good – and lots of great feedback that is being taken into serious consideration for the next round of development. You can see the survey at curriculumsurvey.alberta.ca, and I would encourage everyone to fill it out. Working together, we can build a curriculum that we can all be proud of.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that perhaps the most important feedback the government will receive during this review is from Alberta families, how are you engaging families in your work on the curriculum?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you for the question again. Along with the surveys we have a series of face-to-face meetings around the province in partnership with the provincial consortium. These sessions allow face-to-face meetings with parents and teachers and students to directly consult on these things. We've already had hundreds of these interactions, and we will continue to do so. Once again, of course, curriculumsurvey.alberta.ca. We'll break 20,000 by the end of today, I'm sure.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hinkley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the survey is one tool to receive feedback and guide the review and we know that this represents the beginning stages of the review, to the same minister: what are the next steps once the curriculum survey is closed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly we will be analyzing the results, and we'll share them with the public. We'll turn back to our working groups to develop a first incarnation of some curriculum. We have very interesting contributors there, including the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, who use our curriculum as well. Then we will come back to the public once again because, you know, changing the curriculum, developing, seeing what's good with our old curriculum, and improving on other aspects, I think, are in the best interests of all Alberta students.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Indigenous Community Concerns

Mr. Hanson: Mr. Speaker, it's a sad state of affairs that in our province our indigenous peoples are repeatedly left behind or face additional barriers in our system. Our justice system in Alberta has received the worst grade in the country for fairness and access. According to a recent study Alberta has the most disproportionate level of aboriginal incarceration of any jurisdiction in Canada. That doesn't happen overnight, and neither will fixing it, but we need to start somewhere. What specific steps is the Minister of Justice taking to address these serious problems in our justice system?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for what's really a critical question. The member is absolutely correct. This problem has accumulated over many years and decades, and it's really tragic, the overrepresentation we see of our indigenous populations in correctional centres. We have begun taking steps already to deal with interim remands. Ensuring that people don't go to jail for things like a C-Train ticket is the first step. We're also looking to ensure that judicial interim release is functioning in a way that's more fair to all Albertans, and we're working on other methods with the court and with the federal government, who is also very interested in this issue.

The Speaker: Thank you.
First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Given that an opioid epidemic is sweeping our province and given that finally the NDP has taken our advice and released more up-to-date statistics, unfortunately revealing that First Nations individuals are 5.5 times more likely to visit an emergency room related to opioid use, and given that First Nations individuals in our health care system are also being dispensed opioids at a rate two times higher than our non First Nations population, what is the government doing to address both the legal and illegal opioid epidemic in our First Nations communities?

The Speaker: The Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the very important question. Our government is very concerned with the overrepresentation of First Nations people and indigenous people from Alberta in our overdose statistics, and certainly we are working very closely with partners in the indigenous communities across the province. We know that the key way to address the opioid crisis is through harm reduction, which is why I'm proud that we're moving forward with expanding opioid dependency treatments as well as moving forward on harm reduction such as supervised consumption services.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you. Given that the Native Women's Association of Canada reports that Alberta has the second-highest number of cases of missing and murdered indigenous women across the country and given that an estimated 84 per cent of these cases are the outright murder of our sisters, daughters, and wives and given that the NWAC has found that overlapping and unclear jurisdictional areas have impeded solving these cases, when is the government going to step up, work across ministries and levels of government to actually do something to save lives?

Mr. Feehan: Thank you very much for the question because this is an issue that is quite central to our concerns in this province, particularly with government, who has stood up time and time again to make sure that this government is behind the call for murdered and missing women, participating right away when we became government in the calls to the murdered and missing women inquiry and in participation in all the round-tables that have happened at the national level. We are very proud of the fact that we have, through our orders in council, adopted the national commission and made sure that Alberta is going to be at the forefront. As well, we've been working very closely with the families in the . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Electricity Power Purchase Agreement Lawsuit Legal Counsel

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I provided the government with an opportunity to explain why it chose to hire a B.C. lawyer for the PPA court case rather than its own legal counsel at Alberta Justice or an Alberta law firm. As per page 1603 of Hansard the Deputy Premier chose to prejudice the court case in her comments instead of answering my question, so let's give the government another opportunity, shall we? To the Premier: why are you insulting Alberta's legal community by hiring a friend of the NDP in B.C. instead of tapping into the wealth of capable counsel here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We do have many tremendous lawyers here in Alberta, and we're proud to have many of them employed by the public service in the government of Alberta. Mr. Arvay is by far Canada's pre-eminent constitutional public and administrative law expert. He has many proven successful verdicts when it comes to standing up for the public interest, including tobacco, and it was important that we use somebody who's got a proven track record to make sure that they're defending Albertans in this case.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that we have just learned that the Associate Deputy Minister for Policy Co-ordination in Executive Council articulated under Mr. Arvay in British Columbia and given that it is a curious connection, for sure, and this relationship further creates reasonable suspicion which further corroborates that this government is only interested in working with those with the NDP world view, to the Premier: do you really expect Albertans to believe that no one was qualified to handle this case in the province of Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Once again, I'll say that we do have exceptional lawyers throughout Alberta, and we're very proud to have many of them working within the public service. We want to make sure that Albertans get what is due to them, and that is certainly somebody who has a proven track record of standing up for the public interest. I think it makes sense to have people who may have experienced that as articling students employed within the public service as well, so certainly I won't apologize for having smart people working in the government or hiring them to defend Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that since asking about the strange hiring practice yesterday, I've had many Albertans tell me they want answers and given that the Deputy Premier did not deny that Mr. Arvay was given a sole-source contract and given that Albertans are now relying on me to obtain the answers, again to the Premier: what was the process the government used in selecting Mr. Arvay? Is it a sole-source contract? Let me be clear here. How much is he getting paid?

2:40

Ms Hoffman: I imagine that the member opposite is familiar with the rules of public accounts and probably has been aware that one of the things that doesn't set you up for success is disclosing how much you might be spending on a particular case, but we will do absolutely what was done and what is practice as recommended by the office of the Auditor General around disclosure. We will continue to follow that in terms of the public interest, and, yes, there are times where there is a sole-source contract. A sole-source contract isn't a bad thing if you're picking the best person to actually move forward with the contract. I think it would be wise, and Mr. Arvay is arguably the best interest in arguing for the public interest. We'll be happy to disclose the details monetarily afterward. [interjections]

The Speaker: It's a wonderful day in the neighbourhood.
I believe we are at Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Women's Representation in Municipal Government

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Provincially our caucus is almost at gender parity and our cabinet has more women than men, but at the municipal level women hold 26 per cent of council seats throughout Alberta. What is the Minister of Status of Women doing to support more women getting elected in municipal office?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. We recently through Status of Women launched a campaign to get more women to run for municipal office. It's called Ready for Her. We're very excited about it because this problem starts well before election day. We know that most women have a good chance of winning if they run, but it's simply a matter of getting them to put their name on their ballot. In Calgary, for example, there were only eight women out of 49 individuals who put their names forward in the last election, so we're hoping to turn that around because you can't vote for a woman if she's not on the ballot.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that fewer women put their name on the ballot, why is it that fewer women decide to run for office?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. We know that women face different barriers than men do. Women are still by majority the primary caregiver in their homes, whether it's for their children or another family member. Additionally, we know that when it comes to running for office, women tend to need to be asked to run. I know that this was true for myself. I heard it from many women when we were on tour, and I know that it's true for many women who are currently elected here today. But, sir, we know that we make better decisions when our councils better reflect the populations they serve.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that women are so underrepresented now and given that they face these barriers, how many women do you expect to run next year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McLean: Thank you again for the question. For the edification of this room, we're talking about the municipal election in 2017, and I would personally like to see at least 50 per cent women on next year's ballots. As part of our tour we've created an online resource called readyforher.alberta.ca. It's a tool kit to help more women run for office and their supporters to help rally behind them. I believe in having the best candidate for the job. There are so many qualified women here in Alberta. It's simply a matter of getting those women to put themselves on that ballot and put themselves forward.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, I have a request from the Minister of Seniors and Housing. There's a supplementary response to a question from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills yesterday.

The hon. minister.

Affordable and Special-needs Housing

Ms Sigurdson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills asked yesterday about something that is in my portfolio. I had the opportunity to meet with the directors of Mountain View Seniors' Housing, and at that time they gave the information about their plans going forward, their business plans, and in their business plans they do not include any requests at all for renovation dollars for their community housing projects. They have put forward alternative plans, and we're working very closely with them, so I just suggest that the member speak directly to those directors because they know best what's good in their community.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm quite surprised that the minister of housing would stand in her place, when there are 41 bedrooms sitting vacant because this government has chosen not to provide the resources for maintenance for low-income housing, and pass the buck along to another level of government.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday we asked a very important question with respect to the housing available in Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and I would expect that the minister would want to do everything that she could to ensure that those housing units would be used by individuals.

The Speaker: Hon. member, do you have a question?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. The question is: is it not true that she would like to ensure that those units that are needed are made available?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Do you have the question, hon. minister?

Ms Sigurdson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, this government has invested $1.2 billion over five years in the capital plan. We are committed to working with housing management bodies like the one in the member's riding. These representatives – mayors, elected officials on councils – have told us: we have alternative plans to serve the people in our communities. We're working with them directly to support them to do that.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Ukrainian Pysanka Festival in Vegreville

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first weekend of July each year marks a three-day celebration known as the Pysanka Festival hosted in the proud town of Vegreville, a weekend where you meet both performers and attendees that have come from across the world to enjoy the festival and perform in it. This year the festival chose Mayor Charlie Gargus and his wife, Debby, to be the hospodor and hospodynja. They are ambassadors whose job is to welcome all guests.

There are many activities held: the art show and sale; Ukrainian folk bands in the beer gardens; a folk arts showcase that displays traditional music instruments, clothing made by artisans, and pysanky; displays that show the uniqueness of designs and colours that represent different regions of Ukraine, reaching back in time over hundreds of years.

The yarmarok is a marketplace that brings vendors selling fine wares of exquisite wood carvings, beautiful embroidery, pottery, pysanky, and ornate clothing, of which I'm wearing an example from the region of Bukovina.

There are also demonstrations such as weaving silk and wool belts, the making of Ukrainian ethnokorail, cross-stitching, and poetry reading.

Families have also been long-time volunteers, putting on pioneer activities such as a blacksmith shop, a stone mill, rope-making demonstrations, leather-working, and one of my favourites, bread-baking in the pich, where the bread always sells out.

The centrepiece, however, is the grandstand show. All generations come together to watch performances both local and global: A.L. Horton school's Ukrainian bilingual program students sing both Ukrainian and Canadian national anthems; Ukrainian dancing from the Vegreville School of Ukrainian Dancing; Sopilka School of Ukrainian Dance; Sche Raz from Manitoba; the Volya Ukrainian Dance Ensemble and the Pavlychenko Folklorique Ensemble; Oleksandr Bozhyk, a Ukrainian virtuoso violinist; choirs singing traditional Ukrainian ballads; Marianna Ilkiv, an accomplished soloist from Ukraine; and Millenia, a band that works to preserve and advance Canadian-Ukrainian music.

I will take this opportunity to say dyakuyu, or thank you, to all the organizers of the Pysanka Festival.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. McIver: Thank you, and my sincerest gratitude to you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to deliver this statement today. Twenty-five years ago my wife, Christine's, oldest son, Derek, was taken by a brain tumour when he was just nine years old. This was long before Christine and I met. I know that since that time a lot has changed in the world, but very little has changed in the world of kids' cancer. Every year in Canada the equivalent of 20 busloads of children are diagnosed with cancer, yet from all of the research funding in Canada today only 3 per cent goes to children's cancer research. Cancer is the number one disease killing children today, and we still only devote 3 per cent to research. Over 200 Canadian children die from cancer every year. That's the equivalent of over six classrooms of children dying every single year.

Since 1980 only three new cancer drugs have been developed for kids compared to over 200 new drugs for adults, and these decades-old toxic drugs are destroying kids emotionally, physically, mentally. Seventy-five per cent of the survivors face a lifetime of serious health problems after treatment and lower levels of education and poorer employment outcomes. With roughly 30,000 childhood cancer survivors living in Canada today, we need to change this.

Research is the only answer, investing in children's cancer research to develop therapies that save lives without causing the devastating health problems that cripple their minds, bodies, and spirits. Mr. Speaker, no one begrudges any of the research done for adults, but the fact is that kids' cancer is different. It requires separate and different therapies and drugs as kids' bodies are not fully developed.

Again let's acknowledge the kids present in the gallery today who are in the trenches battling cancer right now. Both the Kids Cancer Care Foundation and Kids with Cancer Society are raising vital dollars for research and other life-enhancing programs for all kids that were diagnosed. Remember: 3 per cent of research for kids with cancer will never be enough.

Gord Downie and the Tragically Hip

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, the Tragically Hip is one of Canada's most iconic and beloved bands. With a sound that makes the headphones edible, it's music that can take you away. Yeah, it's perfect. Well, it isn't, and it is. It doesn't take much to ruin a moment like this. On May 24 the band announced that lead singer, Gord Downie, was diagnosed with terminal brain cancer and broke the hearts of everyone.

It's a sad thing; bourbons all around. But only a fool would complain. We were never more here. At Tragically Hip concerts across Canada this past summer Canadians danced the sidewalks clean and saved our tears for the show. The music was so loud it flapped my pant legs.

With 14 studio albums and five solo albums Gord Downie's contribution to Canada's collective consciousness is incalculable. If I had a wish, I'd wish for more of this. But there's got to be more than just to despair. Gord Downie's latest project, Secret Path, is bringing renewed attention to Canada's shameful residential school legacy. Downie is retelling the tragic story of Chanie Wenjack, who died in 1966 attempting to escape a residential school in northern Ontario.

Gord, this one is for you. You infiltrate our lives; you resonate with meaning. Use it up. Use it all up. Don't save a thing for later. Just say it, convey it, sing out like a bird. "No tears," you said. Understood. Let's just see what tomorrow brings. There will always be much, much more than this. I'll just close my eyes; I'll just catch my breath. This is the only place to be, here, here, and here, et cetera, when something stirs in your heart, a feeling so strong and intense, when something occurs in your heart and there isn't a next sentence.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Calgary Country Hills Fire Station 31

Mr. Kleinsteuber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In late June I joined fire department 31 in Calgary-Northern Hills to have dinner and hear from the A crew after so many went to fight the Fort McMurray wildfire in May 2016. The first group of firefighters volunteered following a four-day shift cycle, boarding a bus at midnight headed north. In their words, they arrived the next morning at 6 a.m. to an eerie hellscape. Burnt trees were everywhere, neighbourhoods reduced to ash. In the midst of abandoned vehicles even a city bus was left stranded in the middle of a highway median, and fires still burned in Beacon Hill.

As the front line of the wildfire kept shifting, these Calgary firefighters were tasked with protecting critical infrastructure. Soon their five fire engines arrived by truck, and the crew was deployed to an industrial park near the airport. That first day stretched from 7 a.m. to 2 a.m. After working 53 hours in three days, this crew from Calgary was cycled out to limit exposure to toxins and other effects of the catastrophic fire. Captain Florence remarked that in 18 years he had never been to a fire they didn't put out. The crew just didn't want to leave; they wanted to stay and help the Fort Mac firefighting team.

From the 4th of May to the 7th of June 400 of 800 potential volunteers were deployed. Days after returning their skin smelled like campfire, their throats were sore, and their eyes watered, certainly from the air quality in the midst of that fire, possibly from the devastation they had witnessed. For Captain Florence and his crew it was humbling and very difficult as firefighters to leave a fire that was still burning. Yet in his words: nobody was putting out that fire but Mother Nature.

While his words ring true, we have no doubt that the efforts of these brave men and women saved much of Fort McMurray, and for that every Albertan is grateful. As Albertans we will support the front-line firefighters through the aftereffects of working in such catastrophic conditions. We'll continue to be inspired by the way these firefighters rose to the challenge to pull together in hard times and know we'll be safe because of our first responders.

I'd like to thank Mike Carter, president of Calgary Firefighters Association IAFF local 255, for joining us today.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader might have a motion to introduce.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask for unanimous consent to continue with the daily Routine.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Trust in Government

Mr. Stier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This fiscal year has sure been a doozy. The NDP has plunged our province into record debt and deficit, and we have seen four major credit downgrades as a result. But what's in even shorter supply than money these days is trust. After years of poor focus from the previous government voters were expecting a lot more on the trust file. Building trust really isn't that hard. It's about doing what you say and saying what you do.

When they were caught obstructing freedom of information requests to such a degree that the Ethics Commissioner felt compelled to step in, they broke trust. When they said that a 50 per cent minimum wage hike wouldn't cost us jobs when a leaked government memo was actually warning them about expected, and I quote, significant job loss, they broke trust. When they broke contracts with power companies and dragged them into a costly court battle even though internal documents verified that they knew all the consequences of breaking these contracts, they broke trust.

But when they planned to impose a $3 billion carbon tax on Albertans in the middle of a recession, they really broke trust. Then just yesterday we saw that this government was reprimanded for the complete contempt of this Legislature after they spent $5 million of taxpayers' money on advertisements for a policy that had not yet been legislated. They shattered trust boundaries. They say Albertans want this when, in reality, polls show overwhelming opposition to this risky policy. They even went one step further and used their majority to shut down our call for a referendum even though 30,000 Albertans signed our petition in support of that. They know Albertans don't want their carbon tax. Anything they say to the contrary is just more dishonesty from a government that has lost its way.

The NDP are about to learn a hard lesson. People are angry. When governments break the people's trust, it is not soon forgotten. In 2019 they're going to have a lot to answer for.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Bill 26

Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to move first reading of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act.

Today it is my distinct honour to rise in this Assembly and introduce an act that would recognize the endearing contributions of Albertans and Canadians of Ukrainian heritage or origin to the province of Alberta. The act will establish Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day as each September 7, beginning in 2017.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

3:00

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that pursuant to Standing Order 75 Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table information on bovine TB from the government of Alberta website. This issue was raised by the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti yesterday in question period. The document cautions Albertans that bovine TB does not readily transfer to humans. It also provides lists of precautions and best practices that hunters and farmers can adopt to prevent any potential spread of the disease. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three documents to table with you today. The first, providing evidence that I've spoken to the directors of Mountain View Seniors' Housing, much to the chagrin of the Minister of Seniors and Housing, is a list of all of the properties that are currently vacant and considered to be uninhabitable.

The second is a total listing of the deferred maintenance costs that each one of those properties will require, and though the Minister of Seniors and Housing may have suggested that they didn't ask for any resources, that's certainly the number that it will cost. As I mentioned yesterday in my question, perhaps she should consider donating one to a local charity so they could turn it into a seniors' home.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, is a copy of an article that was referenced during my member's statement where the Government House Leader made some quotes to the media about his concern around a point of privilege.

The Speaker: Hon. member, given your concern of time I was a little puzzled that you would take so much time tabling those documents, but thank you for doing that.

Hon. members, I believe there were three points of order in the House today.

Government House Leader, I believe you raised a point of order. Is that correct?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to withdraw the point of order.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The second, I believe, is from the Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Rodney: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a courtesy to you and the table officers and all members, our reference is 23(i) and (j). Out of respect for the intended unanimous passing of the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act I did not want to raise a point of order here today, but out of respect for all Albertans I must raise a point of order here today. That's the bad news, but the good news is that I will include a very time-sensitive solution in my very brief remarks.

At approximately 2:15 p.m. today the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek was asking questions about the NDP government eroding investment in renewable power by reneging on well-known clauses within 15-year-old contracts. In her reply the Deputy Premier used the term "unlawful" in a clearly unparliamentary fashion. Mr. Speaker, the comments were highly prejudicial to the court proceeding and fly in the face of your sub judice warnings in each of the past three days. It's highly insensitive and – I know we're going to hear it in our offices – insulting not only to investors but also to you as Speaker, the members of this Legislature, the taxpayers of this province, who are the investors in many of these organizations, and therefore to all Albertans.

That said, indeed, I believe there is an appropriate, respectful, rapid response that has precedent in matters such as this, and that is, indeed, that the Deputy Premier rise in this Chamber now, apologize for her remarks, and simply withdraw them.

That concludes my remarks. Thank you.

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize, and I'm happy to withdraw the remark.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in light of the very important business before the House – and I'm sure we'll have another opportunity to discuss this particular point of order – I'll be happy to withdraw.

The Speaker: Oh, very nice.

Orders of the Day

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to seek unanimous consent to waive Standing Order 77(1) such that Bill 26 can proceed to second reading immediately.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise and speak to Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. As a Polack on my mother's side and representing tens of thousands of Ukrainians, some up in the gallery, in the constituency of Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, it is my distinct honour to be part of this wonderful day, where our galleries are filled with proud Albertans and proud Ukrainians. They are here to witness the hopeful passing of an act that will officially recognize the enduring contributions of Albertans and Canadians of Ukrainian heritage or origin to the province of Alberta.

I am very thankful that we have a government that is willing to work with all of our ethnic groups and communities and that they would adopt this as a government bill because it is that important. Ukrainians were here, breaking the ground by the sweat of their brow, before Alberta even officially became a province of our great country. That is why the bill is proudly called Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. The bill was created in consultation with the Ukrainian community to ensure that they and their ancestors are properly remembered for all they contributed to Alberta.

We love holopchi and pedaha, or, as I used to know them, cabbage rolls and perogies, but Ukrainians built so much more than that. Churches were built that became the cornerstones of community and culture. Businesses were started across Alberta such as the Ukrainian Ceramic Cottage in Vegreville, a business that helped to support the Kurulok family so that Chris could stay home and work in the store while Greg was off at high school, teaching.

Nonprofit organizations such as the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, of which Olesia Luciwi-Andryjowycz is the president, have worked to preserve Ukrainian culture and heritage so that our future generations know and remember where they come from and to co-ordinate and represent the interests of Ukrainian Canadians.

Let's not forget the many political contributions that have come from people like Premier Ed Stelmach, former Speaker Gene Zwozdesky, and many more who have worked tirelessly to bring forward important pieces of legislation such as the legislation that recognizes the Holodomor as a terrible tragedy and that we have your office, Mr. Speaker, host every year, able to remember those that we have lost. This act will establish Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day as each September 7, beginning next year, in 2017.

The first officially recorded Ukrainian immigrants, Ivan Pylypiw and Vasyl Eleniak, arrived in Canada on September 17, 1891.

I'm also honoured to recognize in this Chamber our government's proclamation of the year commencing on September 7, 2016, as in Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview first publicly announced on August 7, 2016, when we were at the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village, also opening up the Stelmach House.

There are many reasons why we are all proud to announce this act. Today there are approximately 345,000 Albertans of Ukrainian descent in Alberta. Ukrainian settlers were among the first Europeans to arrive here on Treaty 6, 7, and 8 traditional lands that make up our province. These settlers, many farmers, developed Red Fife wheat, a hardy strain of wheat that is still celebrated for becoming a critical part of the growing economy of Alberta.

Over time Ukrainian culture has become an integral part of Alberta culture. There are renowned Ukrainian dance companies such as Shumka that perform world-wide. As well, Albertans of Ukrainian heritage have made tremendous contributions in every aspect from business and industry to academia, public service, culture, and sports. Ukrainian Albertans have made Alberta a better place for us all to live in.

Today I am also happy to inform you of a number of significant anniversaries for the Ukrainian community this year. It is the 125th anniversary of Ukrainian settlement in Canada, and it is also the 25th anniversary of Ukrainian independence.

Canada's ties to Ukraine remain strong as on July 11 of this year Canada and Ukraine signed the Canada-Ukraine free trade agreement, or CUFTA. I would wish to thank all Albertans and Canadians of Ukrainian heritage for their contributions to our province and for preserving their rich culture.

I will just end on one note, that I was able to take part in the Babas and Borshch festival this year, and it turns out that borscht-making is in my blood because I achieved third place. Thank you.

It is my deep honour to introduce this act, and I look forward to hearing the rest of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank everybody for being here today. It's truly an honour to be with you on this historic day here in Alberta. I especially want to say thank you to my friends, my Baba and Dido Bobocel, for the thousands of perogies and cabbage rolls I ate before my 18th birthday. It is true, and I continue to eat them regularly.

When we reflect on the history of Ukrainians in Canada, it's clear that the Ukrainian-Canadian story is a story about the possibilities of our province and our country. When two Ukrainian farmers came to this great land in 1891, they saw the opportunity in the Canadian western frontier where others saw immense challenges. The farmers sent word home about the strong farming conditions in Manitoba and what would later become, of course, Saskatchewan and Alberta. My own family came just 20 years afterwards and indeed saw the same struggles but the same opportunity and great possibilities. This movement, just two dozen years removed from Confederation, was a seriously new day in our history.

By 1914 180,000 Ukrainian men, women, and children came to Canada in search of those new, great opportunities, but life for these early settlers was far from easy, was very difficult, in fact. The rich farmland was covered in trees and rocks, and of course winter, as we know, is cold and unforgiving. Mortality rates were high, especially in infants.

These early pioneers were in many cases given no financial assistance from our government whereas others were. It was unfair and not appropriate. During the First World War Ukrainian Canadians were labelled as enemy aliens and, in the worst case of discrimination, forced to live and work in internment camps. This is unacceptable. These actions should never be repeated, and we need to remember that in order to make sure it never does, because even in victory the horrors of war were being experienced by innocent Ukrainian men and women right here at home who lost their property, their rights, and their freedoms.

The stigmatization of Ukrainians lasted for years. In fact, I just spoke to somebody that works for the Wildrose, and he told me a story of how his family had to change their name. That's unacceptable, and it's a dark chapter in our story but a chapter we cannot ignore so that we never repeat it.

Through this time Ukrainians relied on the strength of one another to persevere. Settlements were a means of survival. Vegreville, as I learned today, was more than 5,000 square kilometres and remains a symbol today of Ukrainian strength and perseverance. We've all travelled there before. I can assure you I have. I volunteered my time on a friend's farm, throwing bales of hay around just near there, and of course my kids love the giant Easter egg. Now they know what the pysanka really stands for: harmony, vitality, and community.

Vegreville is a great Alberta town, like so many great Alberta towns. It calls itself home to many – and I mean many – large Ukrainian families, and I've met many of them. It's great pride that I have that Ukrainian families are part of our rich heritage. Alberta also calls itself home to hundreds of thousands of other people, but I would say that Ukrainian Canadians have so much rich heritage that I truly enjoy.

I'm so proud to serve in this very Legislature with many vibrant and dynamic men and women of Ukrainian descent, including, of course, the hon. minister of economic development, who made today a possibility. To him I say thank you. Great move.

For 125 years Ukrainians have been contributing so much to the fabric of the Canadian way of life and the Albertan way of life. The Ukrainian story is a story about possibilities and opportunity in the face of immense hardship. But still Ukrainians have persevered time and time again, as we have in Alberta, as they fought to make their dreams of raising a family, building a homestead, and carving out their own piece of heaven, a piece of Alberta, a reality.

It is my sincere honour and privilege to help you celebrate Alberta's Year of the Ukrainian-Canadian. I am happy to do so and proud to do so. Thank you for this, and thank you to all of you for being here today. God bless you. God bless Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to start off by recognizing that one of our very own pages was born in Kiev, Ukraine, Maria Ovcharenko. I'm just looking to see if she's in the room, and she is.

On a side note, just this morning the Premier was telling me that she used to do Ukrainian dance, so we are trying to find a photograph of that.

Mr. Speaker, it's my honour to rise today and speak to second reading of Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I'm very proud of my Ukrainian heritage, and I'm very pleased that this bill has been brought forward to honour the many contributions the Ukrainian people have made to our great province.

I want to first thank the hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for introducing this bill and note, Mr. Speaker, that she's been an incredible advocate for the many constituents of Ukrainian heritage in her riding.

I'd also like to give special thanks, Mr. Speaker, to Olesia Luci-Andryjowycz, the president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council. Olesia was integral in advocating for this piece of legislation, was incredibly helpful in organizing so many of the members of the Ukrainian community to be here today, and provided extensive input on the bill. I'd also like to extend that thank you to all of the UCC Alberta Provincial Council executive members who have joined us here today. It's probably one of the most effective nonprofit organizations in our province, I think.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to acknowledge and thank my parents, Orest and Mary Ann Bilous, who, unfortunately, couldn't be here today but made sure that growing up, we not only understood and recognized but also celebrated our culture.

The journey our ancestors made to Canada was often one of sacrifice and uncertainty. My own grandfather came here as a young man alone almost 90 years ago looking for a better life. He had very humble beginnings as a shoemaker, but he made sure his children and grandchildren were proud of our culture and proud to give back to the country where he made his new home.

Many others made this journey, fleeing strife or even persecution, including the horrific events now known as the Holodomor. They overcame incredible hardships for a new start in our province, Mr. Speaker, and over the past 125 years they helped build this province. They were the grandparents, great-grandparents, and great-great-grandparents of so many Albertans today. These generations of Ukrainian Canadians became the backbone of communities across Alberta.

As the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville indicated, there are approximately 345,000 Albertans of Ukrainian descent in our province, and from 2008 to 2012 another 1,200 Ukrainians chose Alberta as their new home.

Today, as we celebrate 125 years of Ukrainian settlement in Canada and in Alberta, there is much to take pride in, Mr. Speaker, such as the strong role Canadians of Ukrainian heritage have played in building our province and our country and the strong ties that continue between Alberta, Canada, and Ukraine.

3:20

The Ukrainian language has been taught in Alberta schools since 1956, and instruction in Ukrainian was made available in 1974. Mr. Speaker, the opportunity to participate in Ukrainian immersion as a child helped me learn to appreciate my own culture and the diversity of our province, and I have to give a shout-out to my old elementary school, St. Martin. There are two Ukrainian bilingual elementary schools, St. Matthew and St. Martin, here in our great city of Edmonton.

Ukrainian culture has become a part of Alberta culture. There are renowned Ukrainian dance companies from Alberta that delight audiences world-wide, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as a boy I always looked forward to the excitement of dancing. I'm proud to also say that the Cheremosh dance company is located in my home riding of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans of Ukrainian heritage have made tremendous contributions in every aspect of Alberta society, from business and industry to academia, public service, culture, and sports. Ukrainian Albertans have made Alberta a better place for all of us.

It is in recognition of the incredible achievement of Ukrainian Albertans that I am so proud that this act will make official the recognition of the year commencing on September 7, 2016, as Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Year and will establish September 7 as Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day. Slava Ukraini. Slava Alberta. Dyakuyu.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. I'm wondering: were you the teacher of the Premier in teaching her how to dance?

Mr. Bilous: Lord, no.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all of our invited guests. Special thanks to Ambassador Shevchenko for making the trip to Alberta. We deeply appreciate your presence as we consider this important bill today.

Today is an important day for Alberta and for our Ukrainian community in this province with the introduction of Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. This year marks the 125th since Canada received its first recorded Ukrainian immigrants. Canada was still a very young nation at that time, with so many possibilities, so many opportunities. So Canada must have shone like a beacon to people looking to start a new life, to take some of those opportunities for themselves, to use them to build a future for their families and future generations, and to strengthen their new country. That call was heard halfway across the world in Ukraine, and the first of many settlers began their journey across the seas to the young nation. We have been a better country for it every day since.

The relationship between Canada and Ukraine has always been a special one. Canada has the third-largest population of people of Ukrainian heritage in the world. There are over a million and a quarter people of Ukrainian descent in Canada, and the impact they have had on our country seems even larger than that. The friendship between Canada and Ukraine goes back to even before Ukraine declared its independence, in 1991, and this is in part thanks to the vibrant and local community of Ukrainian Canadians, that have already made their homes here.

As a result of that friendship between us, the understanding built by living with Ukrainian neighbourhoods and participating in Ukrainian culture, Canada was among the first nations to recognize Ukraine as an independent nation and the first nation to do so in the western world, Mr. Speaker. I think a large part of the reason Canada has long been a friend of Ukraine is that Ukrainians have long been good friends to Canada. They have been good neighbours, leaders of business, academics, dedicated public servants. Lord knows Ukrainians work hard.

We in the PC caucus are especially aware of the talent and dedication of Ukrainian Canadians in public life as we have had the pleasure of serving side by side with so many of them. We know that the Ukrainian community is very passionate about giving back and committed to being leaders in their community. That is especially true here in Alberta, where so many of our towns and cities were founded and built by people of Ukrainian heritage.

Because of this, Alberta has enjoyed the continued presence of a very large and passionate Ukrainian community.

Outside of Ontario, Alberta has the largest community of Ukrainian Canadians in Canada, and this is certainly not a recent development. Ukrainian communities were here before Alberta even became a province. The first settlers from Ukraine in Alberta shared the same entrepreneurial, frontier spirit that defines us as a province, and in this agricultural land of plenty called Alberta, Ukrainians know exactly what to do with that. Very effective and skilled farmers. The resilience and perseverance they showed mirrored the traits that are most prized by Albertans. There are many Albertans today that have come from other provinces and countries and who can empathize with the challenges that those early settlers faced.

Like many immigrants, they didn't always receive the warmest welcome on their arrival. It is indeed likely that many early Ukrainian immigrants faced discrimination in one form or another – no, it's not likely; it happened – but that prejudice was met with the same determination that carried them across an ocean, the determination to find and build their new home in Alberta. As they built their homes, built new communities, and shared their culture, they began to build Alberta side by side with other communities, and they found acceptance here in Alberta by demonstrating that one trait that Albertans respect above all others, hard work. It is partly their example that Albertans draw from today when we say that it doesn't matter where you come from or what you look like as long as you're willing to contribute.

It's impossible to tell the story of Alberta without telling the story of Ukrainian heritage, and that is what we are gathered here today to do. We have come together as Alberta legislators to designate September 7 as Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day. This is an important step in formally recognizing the impact Ukrainian Canadians have made in our province. Just as Canada stood up and recognized Ukraine as an independent nation, we stand up today in Alberta and recognize Ukrainian Canadians as an integral part of our province.

Make no mistake. It is vitally important that we have days like these to celebrate the heritage of Alberta's many diverse communities. It's important that along with recognizing the terrific hardships that these groups have endured like the Holodomor and the aggression Ukraine is dealing with today, we also recognize the good, that we take time to acknowledge the contributions from the sons and daughters of Ukraine that they make even today in our country and in our province. We celebrate that we are a better, richer, more diverse place when it comes to new communities, one with better food and, in some cases, better music, and we recognize the value and importance of that Ukrainian heritage in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very glad to speak to this bill today. I'm happy to be able to do my small part to mark this day of recognition. To all our assembled guests, the leaders and bright stars of the Ukrainian community, and to my Ukrainian friends and colleagues: thank you. It's an honour to be part of this today, and it's about time.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you for your support. You may have noticed that I've been passing on 29(2)(a), but believe that I do so on behalf of the House.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you once again, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to take a few minutes and tell you a little bit about my family history. We don't often get a chance to do that in this environment and particularly on Hansard. I feel very honoured.

As a fourth-generation Ukrainian Albertan I want to say thank you to my great-great-grandparents William, Rose, Alexander, and Anna, who came here as courageous young adults, independent of their parents, to homestead. Before that, they had to make money in Edmonton, and they did. It was William who moved out to what was called Crippsdale at the time, originally – I think it's the Thorhild area now – and started the homestead. Rose, when she was ready, married him and followed thereafter. They had many children, who passed along, I think, those same skills of determination and hard work.

I have to say that my grandmother, who was one of eight children, was not only proud that she was able to provide for herself, but she was so proud that even though she didn't have an opportunity to complete her schooling, her younger siblings did. So many families took that sacrifice of staying on the farm and generating money to be able to support one another.

I think that it was at Easter time when we'd stop and we'd divide the one hard-boiled egg into as many pieces as there were mouths sitting around the table. We talked about Christ, of course. Khrystos voskres. The response was about: indeed he has risen. Voistynu voskres. We'd talk about that unity that brings us together and that when there are many mouths to feed, we take the time to be grateful for what we have, acknowledge those around who need, and find a way to share the prosperity. I think that one symbol, even though it was only once a year that we'd stop and divide that egg into equal parts, making sure that everyone had yolk and everyone had white, was an example of the kind of sacrifice that so many of those who homesteaded made.

3:30

William and Rose had a neighbour Alexander, who was a bachelor, and he heard about this lovely other lady, who lived over by Legal, whose husband had died the year before. She came over very young as well, married, and was clearing the land when her husband died, probably of the flu. It happened then far more regularly than it does now, of course. We're very lucky to have the strong public health care system that we do here in Alberta. She was already with child. She continued to clear the land on her own. She made it through that first winter. She planted her crop, and when Alexander said, "Would you like to marry?" she said, "Sure, but you have to come to my place because there's no way after all this hard work that I'm going to leave here and go to yours." I'm very proud that I still have cousin Isidore, his wife, Maria, and their three daughters living on that original homestead.

I think that we often talk about the great strides that women have made, and they have been making them for 125 years. They've been making them for far more than that in this province when you look back at the indigenous cultures as well. It's some of those feisty feminist roots, I think, that helped me, through the perseverance of my baba, who was widowed at a very young age, to continue to acknowledge where we've come from and where we're going.

To my nephews, Maxwell and Blake: I'm so glad that we still have the homestead in our family. I hope that they will get to spend some time there in the years to come.

Thank you to my colleagues, particularly the minister for economic development and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward this important piece of legislation and giving us the chance to acknowledge the rich tapestry that is Alberta.

Thank you again.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. If you'll allow me a comment to say that we all share so much. If we're not to know where we're going, it's important to know where we have been.

The minister – excuse me. The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, especially for the appointment. It is indeed my honour and pleasure to speak today to Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I also will be talking a little bit about my family, and I hope not to cry.

I'll just start with some history. The first officially recorded arrival of Ukrainian immigrants in Canada was in 1891 by two individuals, Ivan Pylypiw and Wasyl Eleniak, or Elaniak, as it's said up in our area of the woods there. While the first recorded arrivals of Ukrainians to Canada were relatively recent, I understand that they're thought by some to have started as early as the late 1700s. Ukrainian immigrants arrived as farmers and factory workers looking for a new life, and the settlers began to move west to set up homesteads. Since that time we've seen over 1 million immigrants, making people of Ukrainian descent the ninth-largest ethnic group in Canada.

I'd like to acknowledge my family and my wife's family, if I might. My great-grandparents, Frederick Krawchuk, originally Krevchenko – their name was changed when they arrived in Canada – and his wife, Olena Harbarenko, and their three children, Neda, my grandmother Minnie Hanson, and Uncle Paul arrived in Canada in 1910.

My wife, Donna's, great-great-grandparents John Kossowan and his wife, Marie Gumulik, arrived in May of 1889 with six children. Now every three years we hold a family reunion for the Kossowan clan, as they call it. There's upwards of 200 people, and they figure that that's about 50 per cent, maybe, of the descendants of that. They ended up with my wife's grandparents having 10 children of their own, so the family really expanded.

Her other grandparents, John Starosielski and wife Anna Onushko, and family arrived in 1929. Donna's grandfather Petro Labant also arrived 1928 and married into the Starosielski family, so that's where the connection is. We're very proud of them and very, very happy, when I look at some of the dates when these people emigrated to Canada, that they missed the genocide of Holodomor by a couple of years. You know, without them having the courage to leave at that time, my wife possibly wouldn't be here.

Ukrainian people are very proud of their heritage, their customs, and their traditions. They've been diligent in preserving their language and customs here in Alberta for well over a hundred years. My wife and I are both very proud to have been part of a Ukrainian dance group called Veselka, that we actually helped incorporate at its inception, in 1983, and we danced with them until we left the city in 1994. We're proud to say that the group is still going strong today, 33 years after it began. Being members of this group gave us many great opportunities to learn more about our heritage, traditional costumes, customs, and, above all, dance. Traditional Ukrainian dance is very vigorous, and as I age, I'm quite often reminded of my participation.

The Ukrainian people are very hard-working and devoted to family, devoted to their traditions and their way of life, and I'm very proud of my connection to the people of Ukrainian heritage, that have contributed to making Alberta the best place to raise a family in this world.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As this year not only marks the 125th anniversary of the first settlers arriving in Alberta from Ukraine but also marks the 25th anniversary of Ukrainian independence as well as the 40th anniversary of the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta, I couldn't be more honoured to stand here and speak in support of Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act.

Ukrainians have been a significant piece of the Alberta mosaic since the late 1800s. The mass immigration of Ukrainians to the west served as a catalyst for the formation of the province and its rapid development in the years to come. In the 1890s Canada promoted settlement of the prairies by allowing them to claim a quarter section of land for farming at a fee of $10. The dream of owning land and access to forest products attracted thousands of western Ukrainians who could raise the $150 needed to pay for train and boat passage. Whole families and the greater part of many villages joined this emigration, settling in western Canada. In Alberta Ukrainian immigrants settled predominantly northeast of Edmonton, which would later be known as the Ukrainian bloc settlement in east-central Alberta.

We have benefited in innumerable ways from the countless contributions of these settlers and their descendants. Many aspects of our lives have been influenced, including academia and the arts, as is shown by the numerous Ukrainian dance groups for all ages in our constituencies such as my own in Stony Plain, where the Parkland Ukrainian Dancers Society was originally founded, in November 1976, when Luba Eshenko, a Ukrainian Shumka dancer, began instructing a small group of 10 dancers on a trial basis. The course was sponsored by the multicultural centre and Stony Plain's recreation department and soon became known as the Stony Plain Ukrainian Dancers. They danced at several schools, the nursing home, Farmers' Days parade, and at the multicultural centre. Within two years the club grew to 41 dancers. Luba's brother Toby, a parent and former Shumka dancer, managed the group while Luba taught with Rodney Klimchuk, a fellow Shumka dancer.

Parkland Ukrainian dancers have performed at many events throughout Alberta, western Canada, and far beyond. Some of the highlights have included the opening and closing ceremonies for the Alberta Summer Games festival in '88; Canada Day celebrations at the Valley Zoo; Oktoberfest in Kimberley, B.C.; Malanka at the Jasper Park Lodge; and many of the banquets and award ceremonies in our own region; as well, Disneyland. Every year the Parkland Ukrainian Dancers Society hosts Malanka in honour of Ukrainian new year. This fun family dinner, performance, and dance is an event that people from all over our community look forward to.

The Ukrainian settlers and their descendants were also very influential in the education of our children here in Alberta as Ukrainian language has been taught in our schools since 1956 and instruction in Ukrainian was available since 1974.

Civil society in Alberta: many of the Ukrainian settlers and their descendants were strong proponents of the labour movement here in Alberta. Government, industry, economic advancement, and the prosperity of our province: we owe much to the hard work of those who came before us and continue to remain the backbone of communities across Alberta.

3:40

Alberta is where many of the earliest Ukrainian religious and cultural institutions were founded, organizations such as the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council; the Canada Ukraine Chamber of Commerce, Alberta chapter; and the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations, which was established by the government in Alberta in 2000 to promote and continue to integrate Ukrainian culture while encouraging Alberta-Ukraine relations.

Once the Canada-Ukraine free trade agreement comes into force, it will help build lines of commerce and strengthen supply chains between the two jurisdictions. As an important trade partner of Alberta Ukraine imports machinery, iron or steel products, meat, and animal feed.

The settlers from Ukraine embraced Alberta, and we are so blessed that they chose Canada, enriching us with their culture and being an integral part of our history.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much. It's a tremendous honour here to speak to this bill. I want to offer a warm welcome to all of the distinguished guests who have joined us here today in the galleries, especially Ambassador Shevchenko, Mr. Speaker, and Olesia Luciwo-Andryjowycz. I practised that. I was going to get it right. My sincere apologies, Olesia.

In 1924 three brothers left western Ukraine destined for Canada, followed four years later by their sister, her husband, and two young children, who were a four-year-old boy and a one-year-old girl. They travelled by ox cart through Poland, France, and Germany in a small, rickety boat across the English Channel and then via transatlantic crossing, third class, from Southampton, England, to Quebec City. They boarded a train in Quebec City, travelled across Canada to southeastern Saskatchewan. They had $10 in their pockets, and that meant that the four-year-old had to rely on the kindness of strangers on the train for some of his meals.

Now, they worked hard for 24 years as tenants of their relatives, and they moved no less than 18 times in those 24 years. They even spent parts of one winter in a granary. Now, they saved their money, and they eventually purchased their own land. In time their family grew to eight children. The sixth of those eight children is my mother, born Dee Anne Warnyca.

Now, this, I think, is a very typical Ukrainian-Canadian story. It is a real honour to honour the tremendous contribution of Ukrainian Canadians over the past 125 years. And if we've accomplished this much to this point, I can't imagine what we're going to accomplish in the next 125 years.

My family left Ukraine because they saw storm clouds on the horizon, and those storm clouds, sadly, came true in the form of Holodomor. We still have relatives in Ukraine; in fact, both my mother and my brother have been to visit the village, and I hope to go one day as well. I often reflect on how different our lives would be had my relatives not made that difficult choice to leave their family, leave home, and trek across the oceans to seek a better life in Canada.

Once in Canada those hardships, sadly, didn't end. They were not limited to just breaking the land, living in those harsh conditions. They were subject to systematic racism and exclusion, including internment during the First World War. Even to this very day my mother will hesitantly tell stories of name-calling and, sadly, much worse at school. But I have to say that my mom is the strongest and most resilient person I know.

Without question the defining characteristics of Ukrainian Canadians are that perseverance through difficult times, hard work, and a commitment to building community, a commitment to family. Now, the contribution Ukrainian Canadians have made to Alberta's economy, our educational system, agriculture, and especially the cultural fabric of this province forms such an integral part of what makes Alberta such a great place to live. That entrepreneurial, can-do spirit that motivated people to seek a better life 125 years ago, I'm happy to report, is alive and well today. So it is an honour to be one of the many Ukrainian Canadians to serve in this Assembly and to be able to recognize the remarkable history and contribution of Ukrainian Canadians that have helped make Alberta what it is today.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, again, to those who have joined us today. I really do enjoy hearing all the comments from my colleagues in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me and an honour for me to rise today on Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. I'd like to welcome as well the many guests that we have in the galleries to observe the debate today.

As I've shared with this Assembly before, I am of German descent, but my mother was born in Ukraine and lived there for roughly the first 20 years of her life, survived the Holodomor, and also survived the taking away, the verschleppt, of my grandfather in 1936, which is only one of the many things that Ukrainians both here and in Ukraine have survived. The resilience and perseverance of Ukrainians and those who lived in Ukraine is well known world-wide, and I think it has served them well here in Canada as well.

While my mother was of German descent, she could speak Ukrainian, though, which came in very handy because whenever my dad acted up, she would always swear at him in Ukrainian. It was also great because I got to eat not only German food but Ukrainian food, so I was raised with a love of pyrohy and holubtsi, but I have to admit that I just detest borscht. [interjections] It's a sad fact, especially living in east-central Alberta, which, as we sometimes call it, is that land beyond the garlic curtain.

In east-central Alberta, of course, we have many communities largely populated with people of Ukrainian descent, and I have many of those in the constituency of Vermilion-Lloydminster. They don't necessarily have Ukrainian names. Places like Innisfree and Clandonald aren't really Ukrainian names, but I can tell you that there are a lot more people of Ukrainian descent than of Scottish descent living in those very Scottish-sounding places. You know, the one thing that I'll say about the Ukrainian contribution to life in Alberta – and it's been said by many other members – is that it's been to every single aspect of life in Alberta, whether it's agriculture or health care or education, the contribution to our cultural fabric, and the contribution to public service.

It's that area that I really want to focus on today because many of our former colleagues, some of whom are here in the gallery, you know, certainly have taken up that torch, but it started many, many years ago. Michael Luchkovich was the first MP ever elected in Canada of Ukrainian descent, and he was elected in 1926. Now, at that time Ukrainians in Canada were still fighting against a lot of the kind of discrimination against Ukrainian immigrants, yet he bravely became the MP for Vegreville, serving and representing his constituents in Ottawa.

Appropriately, the Ukrainian Canadian Congress has named the Michael Luchkovich award in his honour to honour persons of Ukrainian descent who have served in public service in various facets with honour. I am so very proud of three of my former colleagues – former Speaker Ken Kowalski, former Premier Ed Stelmach, and former Speaker Gene Zwozdesky – all of whom have been named recipients of this most prestigious award.

The other part of that whole thing, you know, of the nature of being Ukrainian – and I think part of it comes from the overcoming of some of the obstacles and difficulties that Ukrainians had – is this tremendous sense of humour. In fact, Mr. Speaker, you'll be interested to know that another former member of the Legislature of Ukrainian descent decided that perhaps Speaker Zwozdesky, who used to be the artistic director for the Shumka Dancers, should decide points of privilege and order by having the combatants do a quick hopak in the middle of the hall. We could certainly save a lot of time and a whole lot of checking through precedents.

Mr. Speaker, all kidding aside, though, I think we can all agree that the contribution of Ukrainian Canadians to life in Alberta and indeed to life in Canada is immeasurable. It has provided an inspiration to other immigrant groups that have come to this country because, you know, there is a little bit of competition and a little bit of rivalry. I can even say as a German Canadian: well, if the Ukrainians can do it, surely to God the Germans can do it, too.

It is something that we should all as Albertans be proud of, whether we share a Ukrainian background or not. In many ways, because of the way Ukrainians have become a part of our province, they have taken part in so many aspects of our life here in Alberta. We are proud of that, we honour that, and we thank them for that. So to all of our guests in the gallery, to Ambassador Shevchenko and others: we thank you for your contributions, and we are so pleased to support this act on behalf of all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Allow me to say to all of you that it's a privilege to hear these stories. It is really quite rewarding. And I can't believe he doesn't like borscht.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the House today to speak in support of Bill 26, and I am honoured to be able to do so. I'm afraid, though, that I do have some bad news for members. In fact, we've been pre-empted in our proclamation by the town of Smoky Lake, who on July 29 of this year proclaimed It's Fun to Be Ukrainian Day, celebrating 125 years of Ukrainian settlement in Canada.

I'm indeed proud to represent a part of the province that has many communities that were either originally founded by Ukrainian settlers or where they had a preponderance of settlers coming from there. Boyle, which I'm happy to call home and, with apologies to Mundare, has the best homemade Ukrainian sausage in the province, Grassland, Redwater, Smoky Lake, Radway, Waskatenau are all communities with strong Ukrainian roots and a continuing Ukrainian presence that continues to enrich our region to the present day.

Although I'm not of Ukrainian descent myself, no one from northeastern Alberta is untouched by Ukrainian-Canadian culture, and indeed few are not connected to it in more direct and personal ways. Two of my brothers-in-law, in fact, are of Ukrainian heritage and, thus, so are many of my nieces and nephews, and I am blessed to have them as family.

It is indeed hard to imagine what life would be like in northeastern Alberta without the strong Ukrainian influence. Try to imagine a wedding or community dinner without Ukrainian food. Try to imagine a community celebration without the beauty of Ukrainian dance. In fact, try to imagine Alberta culture without the contributions of Ukrainian-Canadian musicians, writers, poets, and artists. Try to imagine our political culture without the strong commitment to collective action and social justice that Ukrainian faiths and political beliefs brought to the table. Ukrainian Canadians helped to build our economy and our culture and are an integral part of the rich multicultural tapestry that makes our shared culture so unique in the world and so robust. By celebrating Ukrainian-Canadian heritage, we are celebrating our own collective heritage.

Finally, the connection with our Ukrainian-Canadian community continues to enrich our province to the present day. In fact, Smoky Lake is twinned with a community in Ukraine and through this connection hopes to keep Ukrainian culture vibrant and living in Smoky Lake county while sharing Albertan technology and expertise with our new friends in Ukraine. By working together, Alberta and Ukraine can make both of our peoples richer for it. Canada and indeed the world benefit from our continued collaboration.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to rise on this occasion to speak in favour of Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. While not of Ukrainian descent myself, our family has the distinct pleasure of being close friends with some recent Ukrainian immigrants that have become like family. Yuriy and Lena and now Canadian-born Destina are new to Canada and are sitting here today watching these historic proceedings. Lena likes to refer to my wife as her Canadian grandma, and we couldn't be prouder of that title.

I would like to talk a bit about the history of Ukrainian immigration on this 125th anniversary of the first immigration to Canada. Ukrainians have been a significant piece of the Alberta mosaic since the late 1800s. The mass immigration of Ukrainians to the west served as a catalyst for the formation of our great province, and it helped accelerate its development in the years to come. The dream of owning land and access to the vast forest products attracted thousands of western Canadians who could raise the money needed to pay train and boat passage. It's my understanding that whole families and the greater part of many villages joined this immigration, settling in western Canada.

By 1914 more than 250,000 Ukrainians made their home in Alberta. Most of them were involved in crop farming, a lifestyle I share with them. While the benefit from this immigration was a great boon to our rural communities, it was also the post World War II immigrants that found their way to Edmonton, Calgary, and Lethbridge. These folks helped expand our urban centres, populating and sharing their culture within our cities, making Edmonton the largest concentration of Ukrainians in Alberta.

Today about every fifth Albertan can claim Ukrainian ancestry, making our province home to one of the largest Ukrainian communities outside of Ukraine. Ukrainian culture has become so ingrained in Alberta that I doubt you could attend any wedding or function in Alberta and not find Ukrainian food staples right alongside Alberta beef on the menu.

I will leave you with this quote, found from a recent article quoting the president of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress Alberta Provincial Council:

Ukrainians have touched upon everybody's lives... As Ukrainians we are farmers, we're agriculturalists, we're teachers, we're nurses, we're doctors. We are Canadian. We have integrated into the Canadian fabric, but we're also a very strong fabric on our own.

As I consider my new friends from the Ukraine, I couldn't agree more.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to apologize in advance for any mispronunciations.

I'm pleased to speak in favour of Bill 26, Alberta's Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. Like most Albertans, I've been influenced by the Ukrainian-Canadian community, and the first thing that comes to mind is the food. Humanity's most basic needs include food, and being able to go to the grocery store and buy locally made Cheemo perogies is one of the many advantages of living in multicultural Alberta.

A memory from growing up in northern Alberta is visiting the giant pysanka in Vegreville, and I'm sure many of my fellow Albertans have old Polaroids of themselves in goofy poses underneath it. I was happy to tell an audience in London, England, about the world's largest Easter egg when I presented at PechaKucha earlier this year.

I'd also like to acknowledge Cobblestone, here in Edmonton, for supplying the beautiful shirts that many members are wearing today and to thank the MLA for Edmonton-McClung for arranging for them.

I've been fortunate enough to attend some of the celebrations of the Ukrainian-Canadian community in Calgary this year. Most recently I attended the 125th anniversary of Ukrainian pioneers in Canada and the 25th anniversary of Ukraine's independence gala. After the world-class Ukrainian dance performers, the keynote speaker was Ambassador Shevchenko, who joins us here today. The Ukraine and Canada's Ukrainian community are very fortunate to have such an accomplished and passionate advocate. From his academic achievements to his remarkable career in media to his distinguished service in politics, Ambassador Shevchenko draws on his remarkable achievements in his commitment to furthering the interests of his country and his community. Thank you to the Ukrainian-Canadian community for your contributions to Alberta's and Canada's culture, government, and prosperity.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the contribution and impact of the Ukrainian-Canadian community are myriad, and I'm pleased to add my voice to those supporting the Alberta Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act.

4:00

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and greetings to all of our distinguished guests in the gallery here today. I am grateful for the chance to stand up today and speak to this bill. While I could certainly go on about the many, many accomplishments and contributions that have been made to our province and our country by the Ukrainian community, my remarks are more on a personal level, like many of you.

For me, a day like today, where we celebrate the heritage of Ukrainian Canadians, has a special meaning for me. I, like many Albertans, have my own piece of Ukrainian heritage. That heritage comes to me from my mother's side of the family. It's my great-grandparents – it goes back to them – a great-grandmother of mine, who I did know growing up, who came here in the early 1900s, and my great-grandfather, who came here to work as a coal miner, with the proud heritage, of course, in coal mining here in Alberta.

I sit here and I listen to all these wonderful speeches outlining the impact that Ukrainian Canadians have had on this country and this province, and I'm not at all surprised because all I have to do is think of my great-grandfather and my great-grandmother, who travelled so far from their home with so much uncertainty about what they were going to find here in this new land. I think that's something that occasionally gets lost when we talk about those early immigrants from Ukraine, and that is uncertainty. We tend to forget that the wealth of information that we have about other countries when we travel is relatively new, that they couldn't simply look up Canada online and see pages of information.

Instead, they might have a few photographs, letters, or perhaps – perhaps – as time went on, a phone call may have occurred. With just that information they would undertake this incredible journey, cross over oceans and continents in search of the opportunity to build a better future.

So, again, when I hear the lists of accomplishments, the numbers of leading public figures, the communities and legacies that have been built, I am simply not surprised because the strength required to leave everything you've ever known and travel so far in search of an opportunity defies explanation, and if you place that strength together with the freedom and opportunity that they found in Canada, in Alberta, there is simply no limit to what could be achieved.

But going back to my great-grandparents, they came here, they worked hard, and they built a life. They occupy my thoughts on a day that I don't think they would have been able to conceive back then, that one of their descendants might be sitting in a Legislature where a bill is going to be passed in honour of and to recognize the impact that they had on this community and on this province. So as much as Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day is about Ukrainian communities at large, for me it is about one man and one woman who took a chance to make better lives for themselves and their family, because Alberta as we know it wouldn't be here without our Ukrainian community, and I wouldn't have been here if it wasn't for my grandparents.

With that in mind, my thanks go to our assembled guests, to our incredible Ukrainian community in this province, those people who came here to build a better life. I thank you, all. God bless.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure as well to stand up and support this bill today. Welcome to our honoured guests.

When I first moved to Fairview many years ago, I was delighted as a Scottish-Canadian girl to find out there was an area called Highland Park just west of the town. To my surprise with Highland Park, there's not a Scottish person lives in it. It, in fact, is one of the many Ukrainian settlements in our area, and some of the first people of Ukrainian descent to come to Canada and some of the very best farmers in our area live in that and many other areas.

The first Ukrainian food I ever had was when I was in Fairview. I had never had a perogy or a cabbage roll before, and now I can't think of life without having those at many of our community events. We, too, enjoy in our area many Ukrainian dance groups, and some of them are multigenerational. There are grandparents, parents, and children all learning and passing on the culture of the dance. To fund raise, many times these groups cater, and in fact then we get to enjoy Ukrainian food again and again. In fact, it's a disappointment in our area if you go to a wedding or an event and there isn't Ukrainian food, which is a rarity.

I, too, have had the pleasure of hearing some of the stories of our pioneer people who came, the Ukrainians who came, and lived in granaries, as was described earlier. One lady in our community lived in a granary for two years. They raised two children in that granary until they were able to build their house and establish their farm. Again, when we talk of strong women, my goodness, she was one of the strongest women I've ever met.

I have a friend who is from Andrew, Alberta, who used to import up to Fairview. She had a Mundare sausage connection and would share that with all of us. In her words, that's the best sausage around.

I was often envious of people who had that Ukrainian connection because I don't in my family, but I got my wish four years ago, when my daughter-in-law, Andrea Kotylak, married my son. Her family came in the 1900s. They were one of the first, and I believe – and I was trying to text her to see if it's true – she's related to the Stelmachs. They certainly settled in that area. I see the pride in her in talking about things she's learned from her baba, and she and her dad to this day prepare Ukrainian food, the 12 dishes, the night before Christmas. To our delight, we have our own little Ukrainian cook in the family now, and I hope one day that I'll get to learn from her how to make borscht. Her mother makes the best borscht I've ever had.

I look forward to us passing this bill because then on September 7 we'll have another reason to celebrate with my daughter-in-law and have one more reason to eat Ukrainian food. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of being able to speak in favour of this bill, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act, and recognize the significant and tremendous contribution of Ukrainian Canadians to the fabric of our society here in Alberta. I'd like to take a brief moment to acknowledge the dignitaries and guests here in the gallery today and to thank them for coming out to support this.

I've heard my colleagues here recognize the many unique connections that we have to the Ukraine to this day: the shared culture, the partnerships we have fostered, and, of course, the demographics of our province, where approximately 1 in 5 Albertans can trace their family tree back to Ukrainian roots. But on this 125th anniversary of the first Ukrainian settlers to this land I'd like to take my focus back to the history.

There is a rich and fascinating story to tell about how we became the province we are today, and our Ukrainian heritage forms a large part of that. We enjoy many blessings and comforts and conveniences today, but it's always good for a sense of perspective to respect the past. One of my favourite stories comes from an elderly gentleman in my constituency who recounted how his family first arrived in the first half of the 20th century, just shortly after the railway was built. Mr. Speaker, his family got off a train and promptly walked 20 miles to their new, empty plot of land, which they had never seen before.

Of course, there was no Google Maps or GPS or anything we now take for granted. They came anyway, and they did so for the promise of peace, prosperity, and freedom in Alberta. They also carried with them all of their belongings and their entire young family, including a newborn baby. Mr. Speaker, that newborn baby was my constituent.

Now, I know that a great deal of Ukrainian immigration was focused on the north end of Alberta, a little more so than in my home riding in the southeast, but I'm absolutely sure that most of these people of Ukrainian heritage have a story like this in their lineage, Mr. Speaker, a story of arriving with little and building a lasting legacy for all of Alberta. In some cases entire communities were moved from the Ukraine to Alberta, with new towns emerging almost instantaneously.

Of course, unfortunately, there were hardships along the way. The opportunity that the land provided came with many challenges and difficulties in the cold, untamed wilderness. There were some very heartbreaking and tragic stories from this time in history as well. It is with sadness that I say that many settlers were not as fortunate as my constituent and his family. But, Mr. Speaker, these bonds, the bonds of community that sustained the Ukrainian settlers, are a source of continual inspiration for all of Alberta today. Our early communities thrived because of these strong bonds and the understanding that these challenges could be overcome together.

All told, the story of our Ukrainian heritage is a story of hope and optimism, of struggle and hardship but of resilience and strength also. Much in our world has changed in 125 years, but the lessons of the past continue to guide us today.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the Ukrainian community and all Ukrainians for the heritage that is such an important part of Alberta today. I look forward to voting in favour of this bill, recognizing this part of Alberta's unique heritage.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to have Ukrainian roots on my maternal side. My grandfather, Sergi Mike Draginda, and my grandmother, Anna Oleniuk, came from Bukovina, Austria, as teenagers more than a hundred years ago. Shortly after getting married, they moved to southern Alberta, where my grandfather worked for a while in the mines in Drumheller, and they lived in the Lethbridge area. But as soon as they had earned a little bit of money, they moved and got a farm near Hairy Hill, where they settled and raised their five children: Donna, Dave, Bill, Renee, and my mom, Mary. They had some really tough times, of course, in those early years, and they really set the standard for hard work. I'm proud to say that Draginda family members have maintained that standard, and they've contributed to this province as teachers, musicians, artists, engineers, nurses, doctors, even politicians.

One regret I have is that I never did learn to speak Ukrainian. I think part of that was that they were so focused on learning English and adapting to their new country that they really didn't see it as a priority to teach us. My grandfather's most treasured possession was a very tattered, well-worn English dictionary, and he used that book every day to learn more English and look up new words that he learned. But I think they also didn't teach us Ukrainian because that gave the adults a way to speak about private things without us kids understanding.

One thing I did learn about the culture, though, was the food – it was a good part – and it's something that I've been proud to pass on to my children and grandchildren. I've taught them all how to make pedaheh, borscht, holopchi, and nachynka. Even the littlest ones get to sit around the table and squeeze dough together.

It's something that I think is really important, when we have this bill, because it does help to shine a light on the history and the heritage of Ukrainians like my family. By having this recognition, we are going to have an opportunity for all of us to learn more about Ukrainian culture and to celebrate this together.

I'm really pleased that this was brought forward, and I thank the minister and thank all of you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a first-generation new Canadian and an oil and gas professional I rise to also add my voice in support of making September 7 Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day. We all know how Ukrainians in Alberta have contributed to the development of the energy industry in Alberta. My career before being elected was in the energy industry in Calgary, where there are thousands of Ukrainians. That's where I'll focus my comments today.

Ukrainians in Alberta joined the energy sector once the industry got fully under way in 1947 with the discovery of Leduc No. 1. It's the Ukrainian spirit of community, dedication to innovation, and focus on the strength of our families that has helped make our province one of the best places in the world. I saw it during my time as an engineer with Suncor as I travelled across the province. Our Ukrainian people and their descendants have defined Alberta and Alberta culture and our industries for generations.

As Albertans our energy sector has much to share with modern Ukraine. Ukraine's proven oil resources are 400 million barrels. That's relatively small compared to Alberta's reserves. It is the natural gas that has a lot more potential. Ukraine is believed to have 29 trillion cubic feet of natural gas and the largest shale gas deposits in Europe. So fracking, which has been used in Alberta for 50 years, will bring the gas on stream. Low-cost, plentiful natural gas will take Ukraine off energy dependence on its neighbours. Maybe Ukraine could even become an energy exporter.

I believe that with Alberta's incredible technology and workers we have a chance and an opportunity to share our expertise with Ukraine in the years ahead. It will take work and dedication. It will also mean that Albertans and all Canadians continue to stand with Ukraine and Ukrainians, who to this day are still fighting for their freedom. Canada is not a silent actor. With so many citizens of Ukrainian descent Canada will be a significant actor with Ukraine as the country reforms and moves forward.

The Canada-Ukraine free trade agreement was signed on July 11 this year, creating new opportunities for businesses in both countries. Free trade has been a boon to Canada since the signing of the original Canada-United States free trade agreement in 1989 and later augmented by NAFTA in 1993. The same can be true of Ukraine. Just as Ukrainian Albertans have worked so hard and developed such skills to develop Alberta's natural resources and make it strong and free and independent, we need to encourage the same thing in Ukraine.

Today's events have their roots in history, and that history needs to be celebrated. That's why I'm pleased to support Bill 26 to declare September 7 Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day. Mr. Speaker, I also enjoy vegetarian perogies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any other members who wish to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: I've just got a few things to say, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I rise to speak in support of Bill 26, Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. As with a number of other speakers, I don't have Ukrainian heritage myself, but I've had the opportunity to share in this rich culture in a number of ways. I went to school in northeast Edmonton, and at the time I was in school there, there was a very large Ukrainian population. One of the results was that when we got to junior high, instead of the usual things that you might learn in your standard home ec class, we learned how to make cabbage rolls and perogies, and it was wonderful. So when we left junior high, everybody knew how to cook good, basic, solid meals. We went on from there.

Later on as an adult I taught in the Parkland school division, and again there was a large Ukrainian population. What I found, to my delight, is that there were many, many people quite happy to continue cooking the traditional dishes for every social occasion.

We had a few custodial staff that everybody worked hard to keep very happy and not overworked because as a special treat they would make us a meal. So there are a lot of linkages there and a lot of benefits.

I was thinking when I was listening to people today that it was so common where we were living for people to cook Ukrainian food as part of meals and celebrations, and my children were grown up before they discovered that not everyone in Canada had cabbage rolls and perogies at wedding receptions. This was unheard of to them.

Thank you to all the Ukrainian people and people of Ukrainian heritage for the wonderful gifts you've given us all. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other members who wish to speak? I might need to look to experience to guide me.

Do you, Member for Edmonton-McClung, wish to speak?

I seek the guidance of the House. You will have heard the motion. Is there anyone who'd like to bring closure to the debate for second reading?

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26 Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act

The Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to stand today to speak to Bill 26, the Ukrainian-Canadian Heritage Day Act. Like many of the people here, I'm sure that we've all understood and recognized that modern-day Alberta would be a very different place if it wasn't for those Albertans that have Ukrainian heritage. You know, I wish I could say that I did, but I can tell you that in one of the first classes that I ever taught, one of the students in my class was named Smithinski, so I don't know if that's sort of getting there or not, but I have hope.

You know, as a part of my past, as I look at the teaching side of my life, it was a pleasure to be able to bring to the attention of my students that we have a long history of immigration in this country, and it started, basically, after Canada became a nation, with Clifford Sifton, the minister of the interior, who was responsible for seeking out those that could help to open up the west in western Canada. Of course, like so many that came to the west, to the North-West Territories in the 1890s and, moving on, into the early 1900s, these individuals came seeking land, that quarter section for a homestead. Many of them came from the Austro-Hungarian area of Europe or the Ukraine, and they made their way to this foreign land that looked maybe familiar in some ways, and they had to try to carve out a living.
