group or another, as we've seen in every election. It'd be interesting to see, especially in this next election that comes up, what all the advertising is all about, who is spending money on that advertising, who sponsored those ads.

It would be interesting to see what happens in the next election and where a lot of the advertising does come from because that $2 million for a party to advertise itself is not a lot. Good thing we don't have – you know, they could never afford a commercial during the Stanley Cup playoffs, never mind the Super Bowl or anything like that. Certainly, they might go and get some radio ads. I know from my neck of the woods that people aren't as interested in politics, so they don't care to hear a lot of the advertising. A lot of those folks probably won't mind if there's less advertising and that sort of thing. Again, I'm curious to see what happens in practice after these bills are all passed and how our next election will look.

Democracy, accountability, and transparency: that's what this government preaches when they talk about drafting these bills, but again that transparency, that accountability disappear when the loopholes are left in for things like organized labour to advertise accordingly for one side or the other. That is disappointing. Some might even call it hypocritical. There are all sorts of concerns around there. You know, we've been trying to teach you guys about transparency and accountability in our democracy. Certainly, that is a reflection of all of our speeches as we try to educate you folks. I hope that at one point you guys will have that epiphany, and the light bulb will go off. I don't see those light bulbs, just very dim-bulbs right now.

Mr. Ceci: Hey.

Mr. Yao: My apologies to you, sir. I would never say that.

The agreement in principle: that is what makes up the United Conservative Party when they amalgamated the Wildrose and the Progressive Conservatives, and it was created to honour the spirit of the law. The United Conservative Party never had any intention of taking advantage of a multiparty structure spending limit, but the NDP: you know, you don't feel that we're onboard, and that's a shame. You chose to legislate this issue, but again you missed out on some other ones. That is disappointing.

The increase in penalties for political entities: you're bringing in those new penalties in line with penalties set for third-party advertisers, which were laid out in Bill 32, so I can certainly respect that.

Again, it would still be nice to hear more from our stakeholders regarding the provisions that require parties to include contributions relating to general elections and by-elections in a quarterly filing to the Chief Electoral Officer in addition to a campaign return within six months of a general or by-election. I'm curious to see how much more work my CA personally will have to do. You know, everyone who volunteers on my association works long and arduous jobs, 12 hours a day. With commuting and that, it's a 14-hour day, and they'll do one-week stretches. Some run four on, four off. Others run one week in, one week out. Some work two weeks in, a week out. So I hope that my team can handle the extra management of paperwork. It'll be interesting to see.

Most importantly, there will be a by-election up in the Fort McMurray-Conklin area, and I do look forward to that. I see that our government side picked out a candidate who has a name, a reputation already, so this is their most high-profile candidate. I'll be curious to see what kind of advertising will get put in there for this person. Yeah. It'll certainly be an interesting perspective on things, to see how many resources are allocated towards that by-election.

But just so you guys know, every single rule and law that you have put in has hurt my town of Fort McMurray, has hurt the people up there dramatically . . .

Mr. S. Anderson: Not true.

Mr. Yao: . . . from personal taxes to – oh, the Minister of Municipal Affairs says that he hasn't hurt Fort McMurray. I would question you on our municipal taxes that we're about to get the shock and awe from, and I challenge you to talk about that at the door with the constituents that you are trying to get to support you.

Through the Speaker, Madam Speaker, I would ask that the government side, certainly when they are campaigning up in Fort McMurray, knock at all hours of the day and that you ask those questions about municipal taxes and ask about what the people of Fort McMurray feel about all the internationals being chased away from our region. There's a lot of disappointment there. It's interesting. Yeah. So we'll see how it goes here.

Now, election finances and contributions disclosure statutes: again we're going back and fixing legislation that you guys already put in. You've done that a few times now. You keep on retracting things and going forward.

Even yesterday, when I was asking the Health minister about the doubling in cost of a structure, the answer she gave wasn't very valid. She just simply said that the timelines were doubled and that they were budgeting for places, for many years for a project that is getting built. I still have questions around how she answered that. But, again, you know, how you guys build infrastructure is a prime example of how you guys work on your bills. You just ramrod these things through but then realize all the errors and mistakes that you made before or how you underestimate things, and then you have to go back and re-evaluate. All these decisions that you're making: these things are costing Albertans a ton of money, a lot of money. To build that lab, that's going to cost a substantial amount of money, $600 million. That is disappointing.

Now, the noncompete clauses that you said that you pulled out: that is good to see, that you pulled them out, because again that demonstrates a level of collusion. We're happy that you agreed with us in identifying that allowing two parties to do noncompete clauses with each other is suspicious and shady, for lack of better terminology. That is the stuff that we want to see out, and it is important that we do so.

Now, I do have some questions around what the Election Commissioner could constitute as similar political programming or policy statements because I see a lot of overlap respectively within all the political parties. Quite honestly, at the core of it all, we're all Albertans. We're all Canadians. There are some values that are very similar. We don't have any anti-Semitic comments in our stuff like the government side does, certainly, but . . .

Mr. Schmidt: Whoa. Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: We have a point of order.

Point of Order False Allegations

Mr. Schmidt: Under 23(h), (i), and (j). The member opposite just accused us having anti-Semitic statements in some of our policies and platforms. You know, honestly, the things that come from that man's mouth are enough to drive a person to drink, but that takes the cake, Madam Speaker. I demand that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo withdraw those comments immediately and apologize to everyone in this House for accusing us of anti-Semitism.

Mr. Yao: Madam Speaker, I was simply referring to the Leap Manifesto, but I recognize that they state that they've dissociated themselves from such a document, so perhaps my comments were inappropriate, and I withdraw them.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to expand on that?

Mr. Yao: I wish to apologize for those comments associating them with the Leap Manifesto and those comments that were in there. My apologies.

Mr. Schmidt: Can I speak again?

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Madam Speaker, you know, to link the Leap Manifesto to anti-Semitism is such a giant leap. We've seen some pretty huge conclusions jumped to in this House, but this takes the cake. There's no way that we can link the Leap Manifesto to anti-Semitism, so I humbly ask that the member withdraw his statements about anti-Semitism and apologize for implying that we are an anti-Semitic people.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: With all due respect to the hon. member, the member has apologized and withdrew the remarks. It's over. I know that the hon. member would love to stand up and verbally beat somebody with a stick, but the fact is that the hon. member has apologized. The hon. member withdrew the remarks. Madam Speaker, with all due respect, that's normally the end of the issue here although I can see that the hon. members would love to drag this out. I know he had to apologize and take back some remarks this week, which he did, and I will say that this side left the issue alone at that point, which is the right thing for him to do at this point.

The Deputy Speaker: I do agree that, yes, it's usually an apology to the satisfaction of the House. I was sensing some concern, however, from the majority in the House that perhaps that apology wasn't clear enough. However, I think we've accepted now that the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo has withdrawn the comments and has apologized to the House, and we will move on.

You've got a few minutes to continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. Yao: I've lost my spot now. Let's start all over here, shall we? Amendments to Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, again, this bill that you introduced last fall which made sweeping legislative changes to the rules and procedures that govern elections and by-elections here in Alberta. As well, Bill 32 established that new, independent office of the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), the hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. While I was listening to the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo up until the very last couple of minutes, you know, and preparing the comments that I was going to make in response to his speech, I was going to congratulate him for raising the level of discourse to which we're normally accustomed because at least he didn't accuse socialists of eating dogs. Unfortunately, he drove himself into the ditch just a couple of minutes before he ended his speech. Unsatisfactory apologies notwithstanding, I would like to offer some comments on what we've heard from that member with respect to this bill.

First of all, I guess the overarching theme that we've heard from every member opposite is that this seems unnecessary because the United Conservative Party, in signing their memorandum of understanding, put their hand on their heart, you know, and promised to be good citizens and respect the $2 million spending limit. Of course, we know the value of the promises that the Leader of the Opposition makes to anybody, including his own members.

Mr. McIver: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. McIver: Right away the hon. member, shortly after talking about the importance of discourse under 23(h), (i), and (j), leaps into avowing false motives to another member of the House and saying things that are designed to create disorder in the House. You know, the hon. member is right when he says that discourse should improve around here. He himself had to apologize and take remarks back just this week, and a member of our side did. It's not acceptable for all sides, and this member, having been already chastised and required to take back remarks earlier this week, should know. I would ask you respectfully, Madam Speaker, to ask the hon. member to live up to the standard that he is promoting.

Mr. Feehan: Madam Speaker, I find the point of order here absolutely ridiculous. He's indicated that this speaker applied false motives, but we know that that's not true. We know that the Leader of the Opposition promised to disclose his contributions and failed to do so. We know that the Leader of the Opposition said that there was a grassroots guarantee, and then, when it was inconvenient, he immediately withdrew that grassroots guarantee. This is not false motives. This is a statement of fact.

I think that we need to, you know, stop using points of order here to display outrage about things that we know to be true just to protect members who are making ridiculous statements in the House and are being forced to withdraw them. Instead of addressing the issue of whether or not something wrong indeed was said here, he brings up issues from another time, and he continues to stand, against the orders of the House, while I'm speaking. What we're seeing here is a complete disregard of the rules of this House, a use of this section of our code of conduct in order to waste time and in order to display contempt not only for yourself, Madam Speaker, but for this whole House.

I would like them to stop doing this now, and I would like them to get back to debate and get back to the agreed-upon conversation that we're having. If they want us to have a debate about the behaviour of their leader, then I'm happy to have that debate. I'm happy to put the facts forward. But that is not what they're doing. They're just rallying against things in order to waste our time, and I do not respect them in doing that, and I wish them to stop. They have 20 seconds left, and I'd like them to finish their 20 seconds.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, we still have a lot of work that we need to get done this morning, so in the interests of trying to move on, I will say that I had some very deep concerns about the accusation that was levelled. I was concerned that perhaps the apology wasn't clear enough for the House, which is why I allowed a little bit of discussion on that to try and clarify that. I think it's incumbent on all of us to be aware of the language coming out of our mouths, that we are never accusing another member or party of having any kind of anti-Semitic policies in the things that they're doing. We know that that is simply not true. I would caution members to never go in that direction, please.

Now, that being said, I would also caution all members to please be aware of the things that you're saying and how you are levying comments regarding individuals in the House. Let's move forward and try to be a little bit more respectful of one another.

Go ahead. Please continue.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and . . .

Mr. McIver: Is this still the point of order, Madam Speaker?

The Deputy Speaker: We're done with the point of order, and we're moving on.

Mr. McIver: Okay. Are we not done with 29(2)(a) as well?

The Deputy Speaker: We're still under 29(2)(a).

Mr. Schmidt: I still have time under 29(2)(a), correct?

The Deputy Speaker: You still have three minutes and 20 seconds.

Debate Continued

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the interventions from the Member for Calgary-Hays. I suspect that deep down he really enjoys this kind of back and forth as much as I do, so I'm glad that we have the opportunity to spar in this way. It certainly livens things up around here.

My original point, though, in response to comments that were made by the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo and comments that I heard from other members who got up to speak in regard to this legislation, was around the idea that we on the government side should just trust them. My earlier comments were designed to indicate that there isn't a really high level of trust, I guess it's fair to say, in what the members opposite intend to do.

That's why we brought forward this legislation, Madam Speaker, because we've observed a repeated pattern of behaviour of maybe not following through on their intended promises. That's why it was concerning to us and concerning to the people of Alberta that we hold them accountable, that we bring forward legislation that actually forces them to do what they said they were going to do. You know, if they were given the opportunity to do so voluntarily, we've seen before that they wouldn't necessarily do that, so I think that's why it's been important to bring forward this legislation and deal with this.

It's concerning to me, Madam Speaker, the number of times we've heard the members opposite get up and say that they would never do such a thing. You know, when somebody goes to such great lengths to say that they won't do something that they don't intend to do, I certainly ask myself the question, as do many members on this side and many people out there in the province of Alberta: why is it that they're working so hard to convince us that they would never do such a thing?

You know, I'm glad. I think that they have decided to vote in favour of this legislation although it's not always clear from their speeches whether or not they intend to support this. So we'll see, Madam Speaker, when they do vote, whether or not they actually support this. But it's important to provide this insurance to maintain the integrity of the democratic system and to make sure that we have responsible finance laws that are respected by all parties and create a level playing field between all parties that are contesting elections in this province.

I'm glad that we're able to bring forward this legislation and deal with it. You know, the Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo then proceeded to veer off track a little bit, accuse the minister of . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: I'd just like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion to adjourn debate carried]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, May 16, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, it's great to see the hon. Member for Stony Plain here today. [applause]

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly our special guests from the Pacific NorthWest Economic Region, also known as PNWER. PNWER is an excellent model for regional and binational co-operation because of its proven success to foster economic growth, cross-border relations, and market access efforts. We've worked hard to get tariff exemptions for Canadian steel exports to the U.S. and have a fair deal on NAFTA. In my role as vice-president of PNWER for Alberta I want to acknowledge the PNWER leadership joining us here today: Senator Arnie Roblan from the state of Oregon and PNWER president; Mike Cuffe, representative from Montana and PNWER vice-president; Matt Morrison, executive director of PNWER, which operates out of the state of Washington; and Brandon Hardenbrook, COO of PNWER. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly several members from the Canadian Welding Bureau. We have – and I'll ask them to stand as I call their names – Ms Michelle Stanford, senior vice-president, industry services; Mr. Craig Martin, vice-president, public safety; and Mr. Saro Khatchadourian, senior consultant. The CWB is a certification, registration, and training organization for companies involved in the welding of steel structures. They hosted a fantastic spring reception last night for MLAs, where I had the opportunity to try the welding simulator. Unfortunately, my high score was beaten by the Minister of Advanced Education. I'd like to now invite them to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the House Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop. Eric and Darlene have fought tirelessly and at great personal cost to gain personhood and equality of law for men and women and children employed as Alberta farm workers. Their efforts played a crucial role in the creation of the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act. Since the passing of the act, Eric and Darlene have continued their efforts to help Alberta farm workers overcome the continued misrepresentation by the UCP members and take their rightful place in society. If they'll stand, we'll give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the amazing students from Christina Gordon public school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Erin Gates and Gavin Rutledge, as well as chaperones Cameron Loose and Jen Hoiland. I must say that during our interviews earlier these kids grilled me like the media does when they corner a politician. If everyone could give them a round of applause, please.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Yao: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce a second class to you and through you to all members of the Assembly, the fantastic students from Timberlea school. They also were very inquisitive when I went to visit them in class, and I couldn't help but notice, but now I understand why these two groups were so knowledgeable: they were prepared to come here. They're accompanied by their teachers, Bambi Lafferty and Justine Kelly, as well as their chaperones, Tracey Penney and Cassandra McLean. I'd ask that the House please give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a remarkable group of grades 5 and 6 students from Champion school, which, of course, is in the village of Champion, which is, of course, in the Little Bow riding, as you know, sir, and also very close to my home. My daughter was actually educated from her elementary school to junior high in the same school. I met with these students and teachers out on the steps as we got our picture taken this afternoon. As I say your name, please stand. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Amanda Rodgers and Mr. Nathan Jackson, chaperones Mrs. Tami Sanderson and Mrs. Melanie Groves. I ask that the rest of the class please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you the team from Telus who have been outside all day helping to serve our constituents by hosting kits for kids. It's a program that helps kids in ridings with school supplies. They've helped more than 15,000 students at the start of every school year, giving them pens, papers, notebooks, and so forth. I'd ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Airdrie.

Mrs. Pitt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly three members from the Foundation for Addiction and Mental Health. The FAMH is a grassroots, community-based charitable organization committed to sharing the reality about addiction and mental health, the potential links between addiction and other secondary health conditions, and the continuing care required for long-term recovery. Would you please rise as I call your name. Alistair Hepworth is the vice-chairperson for FAMH; Cory Hetherington, the chairperson for FAMH; and Dr. Raju Hajela, the medical adviser for FAMH. Please receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the whole House the Paul band First Nations consultation team, Donny Rain, Raymond Cardinal, and Vince Rain. Consultation in indigenous communities on projects that might affect their rights is vital to the success of our partnership with nations as we work to protect the environment and support economic growth for all Albertans working together in the spirit of reconciliation. In addition to working on project-based consultation with Alberta's aboriginal consultation office, Paul First Nation is also partnering with Alberta Environment and Parks with the goal of collecting environmental data needed to guide management and recovery actions under the north-central native trout recovery program and the whirling disease program. I also would say that this team is working on the Trans Mountain with Kinder Morgan and upholding the values and needs of the community. Please welcome Vince, Raymond, and Donny.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Culture and Tourism.

Miranda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Lauren McMahon, a summer intern with the Ministry of Culture and Tourism. Lauren is working hard at her second year at university, working on a degree in peace, conflict, and political science. Originally from Calgary she has travelled to India and Vietnam on several international community development projects. We're very glad to have Lauren join our team, and I ask all the members to give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House two Albertans who are working very, very hard to communicate and share their ideas to make the future of Alberta brighter. I first met these two gentlemen on Twitter, and then I was really pleased to see two weekends ago that they were at UCP AGM, where they were totally willing to be involved, share their ideas, talk to each other, and, with 3,000 other Albertans, build a stronger future for Alberta. Strong family men, strong entrepreneurs, strong Albertans. I would like to ask Spencer Bennett and Payman Parseyan to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the House. Thanks for being here.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the Reverend Kurt Katzmar and his wife, Marcia. Reverend and Mrs. Katzmar joined our community and the congregation at Sherwood Park United church in October 2016 from the U.S.A., when Kurt joined the worship leadership team. On April 15 I was pleased to be present when Sherwood Park United church was officially declared an affirming ministry of the United Church, recognizing and celebrating all legal marriages, including same-sex couples, previously divorced people, and couples of different religions. As the MLA for Sherwood Park it is my honour to represent the Katzmars and Sherwood Park United church. Kurt and Marcia, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today to introduce some committed hospital foundation volunteers who are seated in the members' gallery. They are dedicated to enhancing care in communities across Alberta, and they share their passion for philanthropy and building excellence in health care. I want to thank them for their contributions and invite them to rise as I say their names and stay risen until the end of the introduction: Catherine Williams, Alberta Children's Hospital Foundation; Waseem Jabre, Drayton Valley Health Services Foundation; Jim Brown and Dr. Allewell Nieberding, University Hospital Foundation; Zicki Eludin and Mayor Omer Moghrabi, Lac La Biche Regional Hospital Foundation; Ralph Westwood, Tri-Community Health and Wellness Foundation. Thank you so much for all of your contributions to the people of Alberta and to the hospitals in your regions. We are very grateful. Please, colleagues, join me in extending a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Associate Minister of Health.

Ms Payne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you patient advocates and members of the ALS Society of Alberta. We're a couple of weeks ahead, but June is ALS Awareness Month, a time to focus attention on advocacy, prevention, research, and cure. I'd like to thank the ALS Society of Alberta for its dedication to making each day the best possible for people living with and affected by ALS and their families as well as for their tireless work to increase awareness of the illness so that greater compassion and understanding is extended to Albertans with ALS. Our government is so grateful for the work you do and for our partnership. I would invite Cathy Martin,* Karen Caughey, Lisa Copeland, Mary Thorp, Rodol Reyataza, and Matt Jarbeau and his family to rise if they are able and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a very special introduction today. I'm proud to introduce one of the most engaged residents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. I don't know if he's ever been introduced to this Legislature, but he's certainly well known to all of the members, Mr. Brad Jones. Brad Jones writes e-mails to us every day on matters of import of that day. He is certainly to be commended for his active engagement in the political process in this province, and I'm proud to call him my friend. I ask Brad to please rise, and I ask the members of the Assembly urgently and permanently, with no foot-dragging, to give him the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Organ and Tissue Donation

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in the House on behalf of the thousands of Canadians whose lives are on pause as we speak, on pause waiting for organ and tissue donations. Right now there are approximately 4,500 Canadians and 700 Albertans on the transplant wait-list, waiting to get a call that will change their lives forever. That's 700 families praying for a miracle that is organ donation, 700 individuals whose lives are on hold or are in pain or are limited while they wait, 700 Albertans whose lives could fundamentally and permanently be changed by the generosity of a perfect stranger.

In 2013 the previous government passed legislation to create an organ and tissue donation agency to help Alberta address the serious deficit of organ donation in our province. The legislation would require private registry agents to ask everyone renewing their licence if they wish to donate their organs. Despite those efforts, our province is still well below the national average in terms of registered donors. In 2016, 260 Canadians sadly lost their lives while waiting for a transplant, 45 of which were Albertans.

Recently we saw the amazing impact of organ donation when Logan Boulet, the Humboldt Broncos player, saved six lives by donating his organs following the tragic bus accident that killed him and 14 others. Organ and tissue donation, Mr. Speaker, are the gift of life. It's the greatest gift that we as humans, Canadians, and Albertans can give.

In honour of Logan Boulet I want to encourage my fellow MLAs and everyone in this House and all Albertans to consider giving that gift of life and registering to be an organ donor. I was inspired to become a donor by Logan, and I hope that you will all join me in signing the back of your health card or registering at your local registry agency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Female Cabinet Ministers

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a recent UCP policy meeting attendees applauded comments from a senior member who said that a government cabinet made up of 50 per cent women was humiliating and patronizing and even said she would have trouble naming five ministers. It's against the rules to use names in the House, but here's some help.

Minister of Labour and Democratic Renewal. She introduced job-protected leave for sexual violence survivors and put the power of our democracy back in the hands of Albertans. I know her name.

Minister of Justice and Solicitor General. She amended laws to protect gender identity and gender expression and to allow for sexual assault cases that are older than two years and appointed Alberta's first female First Nations Provincial Court judge, Karen Crowshoe. She also has a baby. I know her name.

Deputy Premier and Minister of Health. She expanded midwife services, announced the Calgary cancer centre, and introduced legislation that will protect a woman's legal right to access reproductive health services without harassment. I know her name.

Associate Minister of Health. She is opening up harm reduction services across the province. She also has a baby. I know her name.

Minister of environment. She just created the world's largest boreal protected forest. I know her name.

Minister of Seniors and Housing. She is overseeing the building of $1.2 billion of provincial housing. I know her name.

Minister of Children's Services. She has created 7,300 affordable $25-a-day child care spaces. I know her name.

Minister of Infrastructure. She is overseeing the largest infrastructure build in Alberta's history. You can believe I know her name.

Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women. She announced $8.1 million in comprehensive support for survivors of sexual violence, a first. Also has a baby. I know her name.

Our Premier. She asked these amazing women to run for the NDP. Conservatives called that quota filling. We call it empowering women to take on the roles they rightly deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

G7G Northern Railway Project

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Generating for Seven Generations, also known as G7G, has plans to construct a railway from Fort McMurray to Alaska. Investors have lined up to finance the project, so it doesn't need funding; it just needs provincial government support. It's hard to imagine why this government won't support it because G7G rail checks off all its boxes. Let me review them for you.

Tidewater access for Alberta energy: check. This rail line will go to the existing west coast port facilities in Valdez, Alaska, and it'll be able to move in excess of 1 million barrels per day.

Economic diversification: check. The railway will carry a multitude of commodities for many resource sectors, including forestry, agriculture, mining, and energy.

First Nations partnerships: check. All First Nations along the route support it with resolutions. Furthermore, G7G plans for First Nations to acquire 50 per cent equity ownership in the railway, and their communities will benefit from long-term employment.

Create jobs: check. The railway's operations will generate employment all along its path as well as even more jobs created through economic development in northern Alberta, the Yukon, and the Northwest Territories, not to mention the rail line's construction.

Encourage renewable energy: check. It's green, an electrically powered train driven by wind turbines.

Mr. Speaker, the G7G railway is innovative, with design safety features, versatile, and welcomed by our northern neighbours. As I've just demonstrated, it checks off every box. I look forward to hearing that this government is working with G7G to make this railway a reality because going north is the right direction for Alberta's future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Alberta Boycott of British Columbia Wine

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 22 the hon. the Premier lifted the wine boycott of British Columbia, saying that she thought there was certainty that the government of British Columbia would allow the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. The Premier said at the time: we know we have tools in our tool box. What are those tools, and why have none of them been used?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms. Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the member opposite knows, we did get small movement from the B.C. government in terms of stopping the immediate action to restrict products going into B.C. with respect to the wine ban. He also knows that we have been working with leaders across the country to work on changing and developing public opinion in support of Kinder Morgan. That is one of our tools, and it is being used quite successfully. In addition, today we will be further debating Bill 12, which he also knows is part of that plan.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, does the Premier believe that it sent the right message to her New Democrat friends in Victoria about our determination on Trans Mountain that she lifted the wine boycott? Does she think that was the right thing to do in retrospect?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that we have done a number of things to make our position with respect to the need to get Trans Mountain built very, very clear to the government of B.C. I can tell you that very definitively. One thing that we'll be doing tomorrow is meeting with a mission of business leaders from British Columbia who are coming to Alberta to talk with us and share the fact that they understand the value of this pipeline to the B.C. economy and talk about how they will make sure that that opinion is shared even more in the province of B.C.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the Premier for the answer, and I commend the Vancouver board of trade for that initiative. I look forward to their visit.

But, Mr. Speaker, the question is really about the strategy because the British Columbia government has not stopped their stated intention to obstruct and prevent the construction of the pipeline, yet our government here decided to reduce pressure on the B.C. government. Is the Premier sure that was the right call to make? Doesn't she think that instead we should have increased pressure rather than releasing it on the B.C. government?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would suggest that there is nothing but growing pressure on the B.C. government with respect to this matter. The discussions that have been going on over the last several months have increasing impacts on pressure. More to the point, probably the most important form of pressure is public opinion in the province of British Columbia. We have been working very hard to influence that public opinion, and we are succeeding on that topic. I wish the member opposite would actually join in that instead of constantly trying to call down our efforts and cheer for failure on the part of Albertans.

The Speaker: Second main.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, we certainly hope for the construction of the pipeline, as I've reassured the Premier on multiple occasions. We just want the most effective way of ensuring that it gets built.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase Proposal

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the Premier: is she offering to buy the Trans Mountain pipeline from Kinder Morgan?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member opposite has probably heard me say in the media, we are working daily, talking daily with the Minister of Finance. Our officials are working with federal officials. We are engaged in complex, multilayered negotiations with Kinder Morgan to ensure that we meet their deadline, that we ensure that the summer building schedule is resumed and that no time is lost, and that we get the pipeline built.

Mr. Kenney: Well, that wasn't an answer to the question. The question was: is the Premier offering to buy the Trans Mountain pipeline? Mr. Speaker, is the government offering to buy either the proposed expansion, which is, I think, a $7 billion capital commitment, or is the government offering to buy the 60-year-old Trans Mountain pipeline operated by Kinder Morgan, or both?

Mr. Mason: I'd love to play poker with you.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the House leader makes a very good point, that it's not helpful to reveal your full hand when you are negotiating on these matters.

As I've said, we have been very focused, we have been working very hard, we've been working very closely with the federal government, with the clear intention of ensuring that we remove both the legal and the financial uncertainty that has been troubling Kinder Morgan and to ensure that the project moves forward without delay. We are very confident that we will get there.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Kinder Morgan has made it clear repeatedly, including this morning, that what they are seeking is absolute legal certainty that the pipeline will be built in British Columbia without obstruction from the provincial government. Has the Premier received any such assurances from her counterpart Premier Horgan in Victoria?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What we have done is that we are working with the federal government to meet the concerns that are legitimately raised by Kinder Morgan with respect to their ability to proceed with building this pipeline, and we will continue to do that. I think it's very clear that at this point we haven't got those kinds of assurances from the B.C. government, but we are working to put pressure on them and/or to render their participation in this irrelevant. We are continuing to do that, and we'll get there.

The Speaker: Third main question.

Federal Bill C-69

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta-based Canadian Energy Pipeline Association says that the federal pipeline bill, Bill C-69, will make it virtually impossible to imagine a new pipeline being approved in Canada. The Premier committed to this House to raise concerns with the federal government about these provisions in Bill C-69. Has she received any undertakings from the federal government that they will substantially modify that bill so that it does not effectively block the prospect of future pipeline approval?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I believe both our minister of environment and our Minister of Energy have engaged with the federal government to outline the significant concerns that arise from elements of that bill, and we have been assured that they are hearing those concerns. We haven't gotten any formal undertakings yet, but we are continuing to work with them because there are definitely some uncertainties that exist in that bill that need to be remedied. So we will continue to do the work to make sure that happens.

Mr. Kenney: Well, the problem here, Mr. Speaker, is that there were consultations leading towards this bill over the past two years, yet a bill was introduced that, according to the industry, will block future pipeline approval. That bill is now proceeding through Parliament. No changes have been made, so apparently the efforts of the Alberta government have been ignored. Will the Premier join with us in expressing concern about the prospect of a new federal law that according to the industry will make it impossible to get future pipelines approved?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've already articulated our concern about the impact of this suite of laws on the ability to move forward on a number of different projects, including pipelines, so we have looked at a number of different ways to ensure that it doesn't have the effect that our reading of the legislation might well have. One thing, for instance, would be to ensure that the climate leadership plan is recognized as sufficient for evaluating upstream greenhouse gas emissions associated with pipeline projects. As a result, we would see C-69 not have any impact. But there are a number of different mechanisms at our disposal, and we'll continue.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's actually only one mechanism available, and that would be an amendment or a series of amendments to Bill C-69, amendments which have not been forthcoming. Again I will ask the Premier: will she join with the industry in expressing grave concern that Bill C-69 could cause significant further investor damage to confidence in our oil and gas sector, and would she join with us in adopting perhaps the unanimous motion of this Legislature calling for major amendments to that bill to protect our industry?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, our ministers have already been engaging with the minister of environment with respect to this bill, and we will continue to do that. We will ensure that industry in Alberta is protected, and I suspect that we'll see some good resolutions with respect to that matter. We support ensuring that we have an accountable but time-determined process to get these projects approved that ensures certainty for investors and accountability to Canadians.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party wants to see the Kinder Morgan pipeline built. Unlike others, we will never cheer against Alberta and hope for the pipeline to fail because we think somehow that's going to help our political fortunes. Today the federal Minister of Finance in Ottawa said that Ottawa would indemnify Kinder Morgan and that that would transfer to new owners if the pipeline was sold. Now, interestingly, he said that there are plenty of investors who'd be interested in taking on that project. To the Premier. You have said before that you would consider buying the entire project. Is Alberta one of the investors considering taking on a stake in the Kinder Morgan pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I appreciate the member's question, but as I've said, we are working very closely with the federal government. Our officials are working very closely with them. We're speaking, again, with lead negotiators on a pretty much daily basis, and negotiations are under way. There are a number of different elements to those negotiations. When we get to the point where we are in the best position on behalf of Alberta taxpayers as well as Alberta citizens to release more information, we will do that.

Mr. Clark: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting. You've said that you won't negotiate in public, but your headlines say otherwise. When news about the troubles with Kinder Morgan first broke, the government overreacted, saying immediately that they would buy the whole thing. The Premier even said that the pipeline project was, quote, too big to fail, which further jeopardized Alberta's negotiating position. It seems that every time the government speaks, the price goes up. To the Premier: will you commit here and now to exercise some discipline and not speak publicly about the Kinder Morgan pipeline negotiations until there is a deal to announce?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a darn good thing I didn't answer his first question. Yes, we will certainly be very strategic in the way we engage in the communications on this because we understand that the stakes are high and that we need to be very strategic on this matter. What we do know is that at the end of the day, there are a number of different paths to ensure success for Albertans, and we are pursuing all of them rigorously on behalf of the people of Alberta.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, here's my concern. It isn't just government officials speaking openly about this project; we have backroom operators leaking like a sieve as well. According to the CBC a senior official in this government said, "Kinder Morgan is not making this easy." Now, as tempting as it may be for the government to grab for headlines, these sorts of leaks damage our relationship with Kinder Morgan, they damage Alberta's reputation, and they hurt our chances of getting a pipeline built. Again to the Premier: will you ensure that none of your officials or anyone with knowledge of the Kinder Morgan negotiations speaks to the media on or off the record until a deal is done?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I will ensure is that we are as strategic as we can possibly be to ensure that we get the best outcome for Albertans, one that represents the overall public interest, that is reflected in getting this pipeline built, as well as one that goes as close as possible to achieving the best commercial interest in terms of the way in which the pipeline is built. That's a complex process. We are working very carefully to navigate it, and we will do so in the best interests of all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

Support for Postsecondary Students

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, my constituents are very concerned about the policies passed at the recent UCP policy convention, particularly motions passed that would make life harder for students, like making student union fees optional. These organizations rely on these funds to deliver programs and services that benefit everyone on campus. To the Minister of Advanced Education: how does this government continue to support student-led organizations?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-South West for being such a powerful advocate for student issues. Certainly, it's been my pleasure as Minister of Advanced Education to work with many students' unions on issues that are important to students, like maintaining access to affordable higher education in this province. I'm proud of the work that we've done to keep tuition affordable as well as making student mental health grants available. It's clear that the motion that the Conservatives passed two weeks ago is intent on crushing dissent at universities because they plan to make big cuts to postsecondary education and they want to weaken students' ability to fight back against that. The funding that students . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

A government policy question. First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that students' unions benefit all students and given that I'm hearing from students in my constituency about how they appreciate these organizations, again to the same minister: what are you hearing from student organizations about how they support students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The thing that I hear from students over and over again is how vital students' unions are for providing students with essential services such as scholarships, student food banks, and support for refugee students. The Conservatives want to make big cuts to postsecondary education, and they want to impair student unions' ability to fight back. With this kind of policy students would be poorer, hungrier, and less supported. We're proud to make education more affordable, and the Conservatives would do just the opposite.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, about those big cuts. Given that those past big cuts by Conservatives to postsecondary education made life more difficult for students, what supports is this government providing for students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, we've been proud to freeze tuition for four years as well as provide millions of dollars in new funding every year to every university and college in the province, which stands in stark contrast to the previous Conservative government's famous cuts for universities and colleges. They managed to find creative new ways to hurt students such as implementing market modifier tuition hikes. Despite being one of the wealthiest provinces in the country, our universities and colleges were the most expensive. Under our government they're among the most affordable.

Pharmacy Funding Framework

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're one day away from the deadline for Alberta pharmacists to sign on to the disastrous new pharmacy funding framework, which has thrown the Health department into full damage control mode. Now, last week's hastily called briefing included representation from even the Premier's office. That doesn't happen until an issue is really going south. To the Health minister. We know your department is scrambling. What contingency do you have in place for the pharmacists who don't sign off by tomorrow's deadline?

Ms Hoffman: I want to say that nothing could be further from the truth. We respect the opposition and want to support them in being able to do their jobs, and that's why we arranged to have staff, including staff from my department, sit down with any members of the opposition through your offices. We certainly welcome you to have the information, to be able to have the best information about what it is that we're doing on behalf of all Albertans.

I'm very proud of the work that we've done to make sure that we're making life more affordable and not hurting front-line services. We know that Conservatives have called for deep cuts. We've kept growth to only 3 per cent, and we've improved services for the people of Alberta. I'm proud of the work that we've done with pharmacists, and we're going to keep doing it, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, this framework is nothing the minister should be proud of. Given that we now know that the new framework was driven by a desire to reign in a large Ontario-based drugstore chain that had dubious dispensing practices and given that this government's heavy-handed approach will hurt small mom-and-pop pharmacies and their most vulnerable patients, to the minister: why don't you work with the RxA to investigate this chain? Why are you instead penalizing hard-working Alberta pharmacists, hurting both them and their patients?

Ms Hoffman: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we sat down with the RxA. We brought a budget forward to them, a budget that's very reasonable, a 4.3 per cent increase to account for volume growth and population growth. We said to them that this is a reasonable increase. We know that the Conservatives are pushing for deep cuts. We're not doing that, but we need to have sustainable growth. We sat down with them and we came up with a formula that will ensure that we have that while reducing copays that seniors are paying, while protecting the important services that matter to the people of Alberta. I'm proud that we're investing in health care instead of moving for deep cuts or trying to get rich people richer. We're standing up for ordinary people in this province.

Dr. Starke: Wow. Well, Mr. Speaker, that just shows that this government has shown a consistent pattern of distrust and disdain for various health care professionals, and you can now add pharmacists to that list.

Given that this government's solution to every problem is to nationalize it and bring it under government control and given that the federal NDP has already indicated that a national pharmacare program will be a major plank in their next election platform, to the minister. You've nationalized laundry. You're nationalizing lab services. We know you hate private business. Is it your ultimate goal to nationalize pharmacy services in Alberta?

Ms Hoffman: Well, let's just back up about a minute and reflect on who it was that was disparaging certain providers in this province. It certainly wasn't me. I'm proud to stand up with the people of this province, including the health care workers. Instead of moving forward with billions of dollars of cuts or instead of laying off people who are working in laundry facilities throughout our province to privatize them and move them into urban centres, Mr. Speaker, I stood up for the people who live in your riding, who work in your hospitals, who want to be able to keep doing those services for the people of Alberta. I'm proud of that, and I welcome all of you to stand up for important jobs in this province, including front-line health care providers, instead of pushing for deep cuts and calling every day for us to lay off people. On this side of the House we're standing with front-line services, and we're standing with . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, has the government of Alberta made a submission to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development with respect to Bill C-69, the environmental impact assessment act?

Ms Hoffman: You know, the Premier has answered this question before, and I'll answer it again. The ministers of Environment and Parks and Energy did make a written submission to the minister of environment. We know that the member opposite likes to spend a lot of time in Ottawa – I get that – and that he wants everybody to spend a lot of time in Ottawa. Here we're focused on Alberta, making sure we get good results for the people of Alberta. We're proud to do that, and we've certainly made our position clear to the minister of environment. We will continue to fight for access to tidewater, and we will succeed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, to correct the hon. the Deputy Premier, the Premier did not answer that question because I didn't ask her that question. The question, just to be clear, is: has the government of Alberta made a submission to the federal House of Commons Standing Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development with respect to Bill C-69, which, according to the energy industry, may make it virtually impossible for another pipeline to be approved in the future? This is a question of vital economic interest to Albertans and Alberta jobs. The question is: has the government made a submission to the committee studying that bill?

Ms Hoffman: Just to reinforce what we did, the Minister of Energy and the minister of environment wrote a letter to very clearly outline their concerns to the federal government to make sure that the positions of our province and of our industry are taken as the highest priority as we continue to move forward while protecting the environment and protecting good jobs, Mr. Speaker. We're not afraid of staying in Alberta and doing our jobs here. We show up to debate bills, we show up to meet with our constituents, and we want to continue to show up for an industry that we know is so important to this province of Alberta. We will continue to do that. I know that some people miss Ottawa a little bit too much, but we're really proud to be in Alberta.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that the government is not showing up to defend Alberta's energy industry from a federal bill that could impose massive damage on it. Given that, my question is: will the government agree to make a submission to the House of Commons committee studying a bill which, according to Alberta's energy industry, may have a massive, damaging, long-term effect on Alberta jobs? If not, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, both the minister of environment and myself have shared our concerns with our counterparts in Ottawa more than once. We have reviewed the process and absolutely have stood up for our energy industry. We continue to do that. You know, it's something again – we have a robust climate leadership plan which is absolutely part of Canada's goals. If they want to reach those, Alberta is absolutely part of it, and they know that. We stand up for our energy industry every day, something you folks should be doing as well.

Methane Emission Regulations

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, how is the government standing up for the industry by refusing to even make a simple submission expressing concern about a bill that can impose massive permanent damage on our largest job creator? How is that standing up for Alberta when they can't even send a submission to a committee?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry; I just have to take this first one. How is it standing up for Alberta to hop on an airplane and jaunt off to Ottawa every time you get a chance to meet with a committee when we have ministers right here in this province who are speaking directly with the government of Canada, the ones who are in the position to be a majority government, I might add, to be able to make these changes? Mr. Speaker, we will continue to push at all opportunities to stand up for the people of Alberta. We are doing it in Alberta. We're also making sure that we reach out to people in the public and other jurisdictions. That's why we've got majority support in British Columbia now. The only place that we seem to be struggling with majority support is on the opposition benches. I trust that you guys will get onboard . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Kenney: That's true. We plead guilty to not supporting the government's job-killing policies.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada is proposing regulations on methane, which could also be massively damaging to Alberta's largest employers. Has this government received any assurances from Ottawa that the federal government will not impose those federal methane regulations but will allow our province to regulate in that area ourselves?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, when we've been developing the methane regulations, we've worked with industry, environmental groups. We've had talks back and forth with our federal counterparts. Again, our climate leadership plan is crucial to Canada's goals. They know that, and we've had lots of robust talks about that. Our methane plan is going to be crucial to our goals, and we've worked, again, with industry and everybody involved.

Mr. Kenney: So to translate that into plain language, the government is proud of the NDP carbon tax. We already know that.

Mr. Speaker, the question was: has the government received assurances from their federal counterparts that the damaging proposed federal methane regulations will not be imposed on Alberta in a manner that will kill Alberta jobs? Have they sought and received such assurances?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've worked on a balanced plan that is a made-in-Alberta plan. We don't want an Ottawa-imposed plan. We've taken steps, again in concert with industry, to look at ways to reduce methane pollution and tackle climate change at the same time. We've had great feedback. The AER has taken the lead, and we've had great feedback from them. We've absolutely had ongoing conversations with the federal government, and we'll continue to do that.

Mr. Kenney: Well, I guess ongoing discussions means they have received no assurances.

Methane Emission Regulations

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, will the government join with us in calling on Ottawa not to impose federal methane regulations on Alberta that would kill Alberta jobs?

Ms Hoffman: You know what would kill Alberta jobs, Mr. Speaker? Failing to move forward with our climate leadership plan, a climate leadership plan that is investing in many sectors of the energy industry in the province of Alberta. You know what would kill Alberta jobs? Pulling that opportunity for us to say that we are global leaders. We are going to stop at nothing to ensure that everyone is proud to have Alberta energy products flowing through Alberta pipelines to Canadian tidewaters or Canadian pipelines to Canadian tidewaters. It's important for us that we stand together and united on ensuring that we have a strong environmental reputation because environment and jobs go hand in hand. You can't have one without the other. You guys tried. It didn't work out. We've got other people making the decisions now.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody is fooled by a word salad of talking points. The question was very simple. Will the government join with us in calling on their federal counterparts not to impose the proposed federal methane regulations, that would kill Alberta jobs? This is a pretty simple question. I think the only right answer here is yes. Will the government commit to join with us in opposing the imposition of such damaging federal regulations?

Ms Hoffman: The government of Alberta has brought forward a climate leadership plan for Alberta, a climate leadership plan that's a made-in-Alberta solution, not a made-in-Ottawa solution. You don't need to always turn to Ottawa to tell you what to do. In Alberta we came forward, working with industry, working with environmentalists, and working with leaders from throughout our province, and came up with an Alberta plan. We want that Alberta plan to succeed.

Instead of making grandstanding political gestures that you're going to pull it – you know what? Your colleague in Manitoba, who you used to sit in the House of Commons with, said that if we do nothing, we get Trudeau; if we do something, we get our own plan. Mr. Speaker, we're proud to have our own plan, and we're going to keep moving forward with it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Premier Pallister also said that he'll see Justin Trudeau in court if he tries to raise the carbon tax, unlike the NDP, that said: we'll happily increase it by 67 per cent. They want to punish Albertans for heating their homes because Justin Trudeau asked them to.

But, Mr. Speaker, the whole point here is not to be dictated to by Ottawa in the field of our jurisdiction, environmental regulation. Why is it so difficult for the NDP to stand up for Alberta and say no to Ottawa's threat to kill Alberta jobs through the federal methane regulations?

Ms Hoffman: You know, it's interesting, the comments that were made yesterday about going high. That's an interesting tone, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I have to say that that isn't what I saw when I was reading the newspaper today. I saw somebody who was going very low and was very shallow in his criticism. We are working to make sure that the Alberta plan, the Alberta climate leadership plan, something that has gotten us the approval of two pipelines, moves forward and that the federal government sees that we have the ability to lead, that we don't need to always turn to them and then ask them what direction we should go in. Albertans are leaders, Albertans are innovators, Albertans have a plan that will work, and it's about time the opposition got onboard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Government Spending

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The previous Conservative government had a habit of using taxpayer funds to finance their lavish lifestyle. With my constituents' tax dollars the government financed private planes, a sky palace, and a $45,000 trip to South Africa. Now, given that the previous government had runaway travel and hospitality expenses, can the Minister of Treasury Board and Finance tell me how this current government stacks up in terms of travel and hospitality expenses?

The Speaker: The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The entitlement of the Conservatives across the way was most evident when it came to boondoggles and travel expenses. Millions of taxpayer dollars were wasted on the sky palace and lavish trips. Since our government was elected, we have done away with all that Conservative waste. Travel expenses were cut to one-sixth of what they were under the previous government. This is only one of the ways we have cut wasteful spending and found $750 million in savings last year.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is this government doing to ensure that expenses are kept low and that the budget priorities are right?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the biggest thing we can do is not follow the lead of the previous government. Under their leadership salaries for executives were out of control, private health care and golf club memberships were handed out like candy, all on the taxpayers' dime. Albertans rightfully rejected that. We got rid of all that and brought salaries of the highest paid public servants back to where they should have always been.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the previous government, when the price of oil was high, spent vast amounts of money and, when the price of oil was low, made drastic cuts to spending, to the same minister: how is this government ensuring that we do not have these drastic and volatile spending swings?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This was and remains a top priority. The previous government had wild spending increases when times were good, often upwards of 10 per cent year over year, but then they would cut drastically in bad times because of their poor planning. Unlike members opposite, we believe that funding for our kids' classrooms and our loved ones' health care should not be dependent on the price of oil. That's why we have invested in those services while responsibly limiting spending growth. Budget 2018 sets out a plan to continue providing that stable funding while avoiding wild spending swings. The members opposite have prioritized the flat tax.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Gasoline Prices

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost daily Albertans ask me why we pay so much for gasoline when the oil comes out of the ground literally beneath our feet. People in this province understand that oil is sold on the world market and that there are refinery costs. However, this government continually shows that it doesn't have the backs of Albertans and, in fact, rides on the backs of Albertans, making things even worse. You see, the carbon tax presently adds almost 7 cents per litre to the cost of gasoline. The provincial gas tax is 13 cents a litre. That's roughly 20 cents a litre of provincial taxes on gasoline. To the minister: isn't the carbon tax on everyday Albertans unreasonable, and why wasn't 13 cents a litre enough for this tax-hungry NDP government?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, our taxes on things like gasoline are on par with all other provincial governments. We're not exploiting Albertans in that regard. We do know that if there are taxes, there are decisions made by people to reduce their use of things and to cut emissions. We are doing these things because they're, really, following through with the government's plan to make life more affordable, to make life better for Albertans and reduce emissions, and to bring in a carbon levy that works for everybody.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that's their definition of making life more affordable and that the federal gas tax is 10 cents per litre plus the 5 per cent GST calculated on the fuel and on the other taxes also and given that removing all taxes from, let's say, $1.30-a-litre gasoline would leave the price at 94 cents a litre – wouldn't that be nice? – Minister, don't Albertans pay enough tax on gasoline? Do you really need to increase the carbon tax another 4 and a half cents per litre because Justin Trudeau asked you to?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, you know, news flash to the member opposite: gas prices rise in the summer. It happens every year, and it's not because of the carbon levy in any one year. It has everything to do with the rising demand we see at this time of year and refinery issues. We can't control when refineries go down or when demand spikes in the summer, and we can't control the price of oil. What we can control is how we support families through tough economic times. We've done it. They would cut them loose.

Mr. Loewen: News flash, Minister: we're talking about taxes here.

Given that this means that at $1.30 per litre almost 30 per cent of that price of $1.30-a-litre gas is taxes and given that Albertans have had enough with the constant tax hikes of the NDP and their ally Justin Trudeau and given that the NDP could cancel the carbon tax tomorrow and join Saskatchewan in standing up to the Trudeau Liberals in Ottawa, will this government finally cut Albertans a break and cancel the carbon tax and for once defend Albertans from Justin Trudeau's Liberals?

Mr. Ceci: Referring to taxes, Mr. Speaker, there is no sales tax, there is no payroll tax, and there are no health care premiums. Albertans still pay the lowest overall taxes in the country by $11.2 billion. I don't think that side would be happy if it was zero taxes that Albertans paid, but that's not the way government runs.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Education Funding

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Red Deer public board passed a budget with a deficit of slightly more than half a million dollars. They identified a number of fiscal issues that I'm concerned about. Almost half of this deficit is the result of a shortfall in their transportation budget. The government's continued insistence on supporting last session's Bill 1 was identified as a factor in this budget shortfall, and the carbon tax makes these issues even worse. To the Minister of Education: what are you doing to work with school boards like Red Deer public who are experiencing budgetary stress as a result of your policy changes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, I work with all school boards across the province to ensure that we're providing excellent education and that our students are being looked after in the broadest possible way. You know what I did to begin with and for the last four budgets? I built a budget, together with this fine caucus, that funded for enrolment, funded for growth, something that the members opposite were not going to do. That's part of the reason they lost the last election.

Mr. Smith: Interesting answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, given that at one point or another, including today, this session the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Advanced Education, and now the Minister of Education have all stated that their government is funding for enrolment growth and given that the Red Deer public school board noted that per-pupil funding is an issue for them, with officials saying that enrolment growth takes place every year but that they have not received a funding increase from the province in the last five to seven years, to the minister: who is telling the truth? You or the Red Deer public school board?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I think the truth lies somewhere betwixt the two. In fact, Red Deer has been working with us very closely every step of the way and working with the enrolment increases that we have given them. Certainly, we're happy to be financing what is a growing city and a growing school board, but I think the hon. member opposite might have some math issues that he would like to work out in terms of how that all adds up. Certainly, we are in total congress between myself and Red Deer public and working very well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that I've repeatedly raised the issue of the seemingly never-ending negotiations between the ATA and local school boards and given that the current deal expires on August 31 and that various boards continue to contest the deal, with some even seeking resolution through the Labour Relations Board, and given that the Red Deer public board presented the expiring ATA contract as a medium to long-term risk to their operations and decision-making, again to the minister: when will the current deal be fully completed, and how are you going to prevent this from happening during the next round of negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, as it happens, we resolved the wage issue around teachers for the collective agreement here quite a few months ago, and I think perhaps he's referring to local bargaining, which is continuing on, as it should. We, I think, did a great service to not only teachers but for certainty for our budget as well by starting provincial negotiations with teachers in terms of wages. That's what we did with Bill 8 a few years ago, and it's been going very well. We've had excellent bargaining in good faith, and we will continue to do so.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:30 Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Gotfried: Mr. Speaker, Nancy Southern is one of Alberta's most prominent business leaders, whose family has contributed so much to this great province. Yesterday at the ATCO annual meeting she took Justin Trudeau to task for his lack of leadership on Canada's economic competitiveness. She went as far as to say that Canada's decline was heartbreaking. To the minister of economic development: have you raised this competitiveness issue with your close allies in the Trudeau government?

Ms Jansen: You know, Mr. Speaker, it appears that the Prime Minister of Canada, Justin Trudeau, occupies a lot of rent-free space in the heads of the members of the opposition. I would suggest that the next time the Leader of the Official Opposition is in Ottawa, which I'm sure is any day now, he can ask for some of that money, and we can put it towards the deficit.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A great response for those allies out in Ottawa.

Given that this government is very fond of referring to guidance received from David Dodge and given that David Dodge has stated that Canada is doing a number of things to shoot themselves in the foot when it comes to economic competitiveness, again to the minister. The federal government continues to fail Alberta. What specific changes have you requested from your Trudeau Liberal allies to ensure that Alberta is not left in the dust as a result of their and your damaging policies?

Ms Jansen: You know, Mr. Speaker, when we circled back with David Dodge, the former Bank of Canada governor, to have a conversation, certainly, about our capital plan and about a lot of details around our budget, one of the things he said to us was that the most important thing we could do was remove the impediments to growth in Alberta, and that's what we did. That was the lens through which we viewed our capital plan and all of the work we do in our ministries. That is something that is extremely important to us. David Dodge and his comments are important to the work we do. We continue to listen to him, and certainly when it comes to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time to switch feet or learn a new dance, I think.

Mr. Speaker, given that Suncor CEO Steve Williams, in talking about the investment exodus, stated – and I quote – that he thinks we're running out of companies to leave in a sense, that the big guys have already exercised some of their options, and given that he went on to say that generally around the world there's been an off-Canada signal and given that this is yet another example of you and your ally Justin Trudeau failing Albertans, again to the minister: if the PM won't step up, what specific policy and regulatory changes, including scrapping the carbon tax, will you make to improve our economic competitiveness?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, one of the things we have done to keep Alberta competitive is having the lowest overall taxes of any province in the country by $11.2 billion. That's not trivial. As a result, GDP growth last year was up 4.9 per cent. Manufacturing is up in this province. Exports are up. Small business confidence is up. I can go on and on and on. Cities like Calgary were doing better last year, and of the cities in the prairie provinces they'll do the best again this year. We're on the right path.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Health Care Concerns

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we heard the Minister of Health claim that her office is accessible, welcoming, and happy to deal with concerns. Indeed, I did meet with the minister a month ago regarding the lack of psychiatric hospital beds at the St. Therese health centre, and that's an issue I've brought up several times in the House. AHS designated this health centre as a psychiatric hub for the northeast area, yet they continue to be underresourced. As the minister seemed very eager to fix this issue, can the minister give us an update, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member. I was proud to welcome him and other stakeholders from the community to my office to discuss this very issue, and certainly it is a complex matter. I think we all agree that we want to increase capacity to support people living with mental health challenges. One of the big things that was mentioned more than once in that meeting was the desire to have supports for wraparound services like homelessness, to make sure that we're not discharging people from hospital into homelessness, that we should be investing more in these areas. Certainly, we're investing more in these areas. I wish the member opposite would have voted for that budget. We certainly welcome him to revisit his position . . .

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that I continue to hear concerns from some hospital patients in the area and outside of my area as well regarding the quality of pre-prepared off-site foods, will the minister agree to mandate freshly prepared food on-site so that all Alberta patients get the same good quality of food in their centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker, for the question. What we have been able to do is provide significant improvement in terms of the number of meals. We prioritize first long-term care, of course, because patients are going to be in those facilities the longest. It's their home, and that's where they plan on living. And we've increased previous percentages of foods that were prepared on-site significantly. I think we're close to the 90 per cent mark now Alberta-wide. That is certainly the highest priority.

I know that I appreciate having fresh, locally made food. We want people to get out of the hospital as quickly as possible. We know that long-term care residents will be there a little bit longer, so that's where we've put our focus at this time.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Hanson: Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that yesterday I made her aware of the cancellation of a very popular front-line service in St. Paul, Minister, have you made the call to reinstate the mobile collection services to Sunnyside lodge?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We did receive the correspondence from your office yesterday evening, so we thank you for that. I'm good, but I'm not quite that good. We certainly did commit to following up with Alberta Health Services, and we are proud to do that. We certainly welcome you – again, my number is 427.3665 – anytime you have concerns like this. Please do reach out to us. It's certainly the fastest way to be able to address local issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Wildfire Update

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Dry conditions throughout the province have resulted in a number of major wildfires, including one that is burning in Strathcona county. This week the Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park and myself had the opportunity to experience the challenges our firefighters face by spending a day in their shoes. It is an exhausting and demanding occupation. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: can you please provide an update on the wildfires near my constituency?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Wildfires are always scary. We empathize with community members who have been impacted by the recent spate of wildfires that have happened over the last few days. On May 12 two wildfires near Bruderheim spread rapidly, with one of them growing to an estimated 500 hectares. The Lamont county fire is now under control as of Tuesday. The Strathcona county fire has stabilized, and the fire is being held as of May 15. The Fort Saskatchewan fire department remains on standby to assist with any incoming calls in the area, and Alberta Wildfire will continue to assist as deemed necessary.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how is the province supporting the fight against these fires?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to protecting Albertans and their communities from the threat of wildfire and to ensuring that the necessary resources are in place to fight fires when they happen. Because these fires are outside of the forest protection area, the municipalities are the lead agencies, but the province has been assisting with air support and other resources. So far the province has provided as many as 45 firefighters and support staff, three helicopters, and heavy equipment to help build fireguards. Even though things appear to be settling down, with the fire now being held, we'll be ready to provide further support if necessary.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that the mayor of Bruderheim, whom I spoke with this morning, would be very happy to know about the support of the province for the fire near his constituency.

Then, Mr. Speaker, as we head into the long weekend, thousands of Albertans will be heading out to camp, to enjoy the outdoors, and to work on their farms and ranches. What precautions is the government taking to prevent the outbreak of more fires?

The Speaker: Hon. member, before you answer that, just let me tell both sides of the House that preambles are continuing to go on. I've reminded you so many times. On both sides I heard several questions today that had preambles after question 4, so please be conscious of that.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for the very important question. The member has identified one of the most important parts of fighting wildfires in this province: preventing them in the first place. So far this year almost all of the wildfires have started because of human behaviour. We're telling Albertans to be smart and safe while enjoying our wildlands. We've instituted penalties for risky behaviour, like using incendiary targets and leaving campfires unattended, and ramped up campaigns to make sure Albertans understand wildfire risks.

Just yesterday I helped unveil a new fire ban app that will help folks heading out for the long weekend to know where there's an increased risk of a wildfire . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Pro-pipeline Advertising Carbon Levy

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, just days ago the Alberta government announced that billboards are now on display across British Columbia to highlight the benefits of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. The opposition agrees that Canada needs this pipeline, but we're only 15 days away from Kinder Morgan's deadline, the date when the company requires certainty that the project will actually proceed. Minister, we can't help but wonder: does your last-minute pro-pipeline advertising campaign mean that you admit that your expensive carbon tax on Alberta families, businesses, and nonprofits hasn't actually gotten us the so-called social licence for Trans Mountain?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to talk again about how our government has been fighting for Alberta's strong environmental standards, for Alberta's strong oil and gas industry, and for Alberta to have access to tidewater. This has been a big push of our government, and that's why we've got two pipeline approvals. We also are at the table working diligently to ensure that we get the barriers out of the way to have that pipeline construction begin this summer. That's also why we have the majority support of Canadians, including people living in British Columbia, now on the side of this government for the pipeline.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, given that the Premier said in support of their advertising campaign, “It is important that Canadians understand what’s at stake . . . it is putting the national climate plan at risk,” is the only reason this NDP government wants this pipeline to go through because their carbon tax is at risk?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, since day one we have been fighting for not just this pipeline but other pipelines because market access is so critical. It continuously astonishes me that the opposition here doesn’t want to support Albertans, they don’t want to support Alberta workers, and they don’t want to support the industry. They just continually cheer for us to fail. But you know what? On this side of the House we’re standing up for all of those people, and we’re standing up for this project. If advertising on billboards in B.C. is what it takes, that’s what we’re going to do.

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, I sure hope it works.

Given that the Trudeau Liberal government has failed to deliver on their promise for legislation to assert federal jurisdiction and given that the B.C. NDP government has failed to back down from their opposition to the pipeline and that this government’s federal allies have done nothing to deter their obstruction, it’s clear that the carbon tax failed to secure anything more than a paper approval. Mr. Speaker, a simple question: why is the NDP government agreeing to a 67 per cent hike in the carbon tax instead of scrapping it altogether?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what we’re agreeing to is that our climate leadership plan got two approvals for pipelines, and we continue to support those pipelines. Again, it’s something that the opposition should have done both federally and when they were in power, and they didn’t. They failed to do their job. On this side of the House we’re not failing. This pipeline will be built, and it will be built soon.

The Speaker: In 30 seconds we will continue, hon. members.

Members’ Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Economic Recovery

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about something on all of our minds and likely on the minds of every Albertan, and that is the economy. Alberta is recovering from one of the worst recessions this province has seen. On the doors and in the community the concerns of Albertans about the future of our province are clear, but so are their hopes.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans envision an economy that leads across the board, not just in resource extraction or primary agricultural production. Albertans see a future where we are world leaders in all parts of the energy sector, from refining to renewables to research. Albertans see a future where value-added products are just as much a part of the agricultural sector as sun and rain. And they see Alberta becoming the Silicon Valley of the north and a destination for software engineers and programmers.

Everywhere I go in Spruce Grove or St. Albert, I hear about these hopes and dreams. I see it in the faces of our schoolchildren who are going to new schools funded by our government. I can hear it in the voices of young mothers who are accessing the $25-a-day daycare funded by our government. I can feel it in the new-found confidence of minimum-wage earners who can finally afford to feed themselves while working full-time without relying on the food bank.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we listen to the voices of everybody in our province and are doing everything we can to build a recovery and a future that includes all Albertans. On that side of the House they don’t care about the voices of everyday Albertans. They would rather give a tax break to the wealthiest 1.2 per cent of Alberta taxpayers and make the rest of the province pay for it. They are so busy looking to the Alberta of the past that they’re forgetting the Alberta of the future. That’s not a vision we can support because that’s not a vision Albertans want.

Thank you.

Mental Health Initiatives in Airdrie

Mrs. Pitt: Mr. Speaker, silence is not always golden, and I am pleased to see the shift towards increasingly open discussions about mental health even after Mental Health Week has concluded. Airdrie is taking action, and great mental health initiatives are taking root. The Airdrie Mental Health Task Force was recently launched. The idea came from the Thumbs Up Foundation and the Airdrie and area health co-op. It’s to be a citizen-driven initiative that will examine what the current pathways are for mental health treatment and mental health prevention, and then it will make recommendations to improve the pathways and related services.

I encourage constituents to go online and participate in the survey found on the Thumbs Up Facebook page. Many agencies are getting onboard and are willing to collaborate. The Thumbs Up Foundation also recently piloted a peer support group for families with a loved one facing mental health issues. The results were overwhelmingly positive, and a new session is beginning this month.

This foundation was started by the Titus family, who lost their beloved son Braden to suicide in 2015. Braden fell through the cracks, and other Canadians are also falling through the cracks when it comes to mental health.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Titus family for their work and their advocacy, which has already made a difference in so many lives. Airdrie residents and Albertans are also very fortunate to have access to the services of the Foundation for Addiction and Mental Health, or FAMH, and members of their team are here in the gallery today.

Mr. Speaker, mental health issues are dark clouds that hover over individuals and their loved ones, but I’m optimistic that we are seeing some sunlight breaking through these dark clouds because of organizations such as these.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Wild Mountain Music Festival in Hinton

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Come to the original Crossroads near Hinton and join us for three days of bliss, the Wild Mountain Music Festival, July 13, 14, and 15, at the historic Entrance Ranch just off highway 40. This year’s lineup includes an impressive array of Juno award winners, nominees as well as local up-and-coming groups and artists from across Alberta and Canada.

Wild Mountain has the best beer tent ever, with a great view of both performance stages. Camping is included with every weekend pass, but the field is rustic, so bring everything you need. Wild Mountain is a family-friendly event with a full schedule of performers and events for the children at the children's tent. But sorry; no pets allowed.

Wild Mountain will run a shuttle for three drop-off/pick-up spots in Hinton to the site. The shuttle will get you to the show prior to the start of the music and they will run well after the music ends, so you can ride the shuttle and not miss any of the fun.

We expect to attract 9,000 visitors to our region, which will make a major contribution to the economy and bring a unique arts event to West Yellowhead.

For more information search under the website Wild Mountain Music Festival 2018. The Wild Mountain Music Festival started in 2007, and this one hundred per cent community-owned and volunteer-run initiative has relied on sponsors to grow into one of the province's most important artistic events.

I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the many individuals and organizations without whom this event would not exist. I look forward to seeing you in Hinton in July.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present the requisite number of copies of an article that I referred to in my questions during question period titled Red Deer Public School Board Passes 'Another Tight Budget' for 2018-19.

Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 12

Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act

[Debate adjourned May 10: Ms McKittrick speaking]

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure and pride to rise and speak very briefly to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. This is a bill, I think, that emphasizes, in fact, that Alberta's prosperity is Canada's prosperity and builds on the principle that has been established and fought for by Peter Lougheed and others that Alberta has control over its own resources and has a right to defend its ownership of those resources to ensure that Albertans get the full value for them and that they can move freely to markets.

We've seen a number of developments that cause the government very great concern, you know, in terms of actions taken by the British Columbia government which are, in our view, potentially unconstitutional. It is important, I think, that some tools be added to our tool box in order to make sure that we can in fact get full value for the resources that all of us Albertans own together, Mr. Speaker. That's really important. This resource belongs to Albertans, and Albertans know that to the very fibre of their being. That's why there is such intense interest in this.

Now, I want to deal a little bit with the opposition and how they've been handling it. Mr. Speaker, they've been spending a lot of time trying to criticize the government's actions on this file. Furthermore, they focus a great deal of attention – in fact, I would dare say they seem almost obsessed – on the current Prime Minister,

Mr. Trudeau, and the federal government. It seems to me that their focus is there as much as it's here. Their focus is in Ottawa as much as it is here in Alberta. While it's important that we take into account what the federal government is doing and we hold the federal government accountable to protect its own constitutional authorities and to protect the rights of people of our province, I think it's important to remember that it's here in Alberta that we need to focus. Right now we need to focus on overcoming the activities of another provincial government that would restrict and restrain us from exercising our authority over our own resources and receiving the full value.

The opposition, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, is a tail that keeps trying to wag the dog. They're not the government. They keep saying, "Will you follow us in taking these actions?" when in fact the government of Alberta has a very carefully considered strategy, which the opposition attempts to disregard and to try and run the show, as it were, drive the bus from the back seat. That's not how it works.

You know, we've seen the opposition make a great deal of fuss about this bill and why it wasn't passed sooner. Well, Mr. Speaker, we wanted to make sure that all Albertans had a chance to know what the Legislature has under consideration, and I think we've achieved that. I'm very hopeful that we can pass the bill now in a very quick fashion.

But just to deal with the opposition activities a little bit more, Mr. Speaker. This is something they really don't understand. Just because you make sure that you have an additional tool in your tool box, it doesn't mean that it is advisable to use that tool right away. For example, you might be building a house or a fence, and you go out and you get a hammer. You already have a saw. The opposition would like us to start hammering before we've sawed the boards that we need to build the fence. That's exactly what they're doing.

Let's be clear, Mr. Speaker. If we want to restrict exports of Alberta's natural resources to British Columbia, then this is a tool that this bill gives us, but it is not something that we want to do at all. You know, it's sometimes better to speak softly and carry a large club. I think there was an American President that said that. It might have been Teddy Roosevelt. I'm not sure. You don't have to go in swinging, but that's what the opposition wants. It's what the opposition leader keeps wanting to do. He has belligerent language for leaders of other jurisdictions, provinces, and federal government with whom he disagrees politically, and he has aspirations to be Premier. I certainly hope that never comes to pass, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine a Premier trying to lead this province who has offended his neighbours, his colleagues across the country, the Prime Minister, other Premiers? Who knows what other politicians he has denigrated and attacked on a regular basis?

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I know from this place is that while you have strong political differences, it's very helpful to have relationships across the aisle with the other political parties because, you know, ultimately, disagree or not, we're all here to work for the same end, which is to improve the lives of Albertans. That's a lesson I think that the Leader of the Official Opposition could learn because his partisanship on this matter is, I think, very detrimental to Alberta's case and I think really undermines his claim to some leadership on this file.

I don't think that we can trust the Leader of the Official Opposition on this issue because he is too hotheaded, Mr. Speaker. He's too antagonistic and belligerent. He stands in this House day after day attacking political leaders of other jurisdictions within Canada with whom he disagrees, and that's not an effective way to get things done. We can take on opponents, we can be tough, and we can be effective in our strategies, but in the end we're all part of the same country, and we have to have those relationships in order to make this country work. That's something that has eluded the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

So, Mr. Speaker, this bill does give the government more tools, very strong and effective tools, and it's my hope that by passing this bill, by giving those tools to us, we'll send a message to those who want to stand in the way of Albertans' right to sell their resources, sell their products in the world market. It will mean that they'll get it. This is a hope, not a prediction, that we will not have to use this particular tool in the tool box. I dearly hope that we don't. We don't want to inflict harm or pain on anyone, but we do want to make sure that we have the capacity to effectively stand up for our rights as a province and as a people. For those reasons, I think this is an extremely well-advised piece of legislation, something that will strengthen Alberta's position and will help us.

What doesn't help us is attempting to demand that we use the hammer when we have a lot of sawing to do ahead of us. That's what the opposition is doing. They're out of sync. They don't have a sense of the strategy that needs to be followed and the fine touch. I'll use another analogy, Mr. Speaker, and it's playing pool. Now, I did spend some time in my youth, when I should have been maybe somewhere else, in a bit of a pool hall. One of the things that you've got to learn in pool is that sometimes to sink a ball that might be right near the corner pocket, for example, you have to use a really light touch. If you fire that cue ball across the table at 90 miles an hour, you know what's going to happen? You're not going to sink the ball. In fact, both balls are going to end up on the floor.

That's the approach that the Official Opposition is taking. They're like some kind of a rookie pool player on steroids. They just want to fire that pool ball in any direction and think it's going to go into the pocket, and it's not. You need a little bit of spin, maybe a little bit of backspin. You've got to be able to bank it, you know. And this eludes them. I think they approach the game of pool as if it was a game of dodge ball, and I don't think that it's particularly effective.

You know, having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do hope that we will have unanimous support for this bill. It is something that I think all Albertans want to see. All Albertans are watching this debate. They want our government to succeed, and I wish that the opposition would show through their actions that they also want us to succeed, because that has not been apparent from their behaviour and from their approach in question period.

It's time to pull together, Mr. Speaker. It's time for unity in our province. This bill is one example of what we can do if we work together. But we need to employ it after it's passed in a judicious manner because the object of the exercise is to sink the ball.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's 29(2)(a) yet. I'm the first speaker in third reading.

The Speaker: I think we have – is this the second speaker?

Mr. Nixon: I'll go under 29(2)(a). Sure. Happy to, Mr. Speaker. I thought there was no 29(2)(a) at this stage, after the first speaker. It was interesting to hear the Government House Leader's comments on this legislation. I'll probably have more to say when I speak to the main bill.

First, I'm not too surprised to hear that the hon. Government House Leader in his younger days spent a little bit of time in the pool hall. I don't think that surprised you either, Mr. Speaker. It may not surprise you either that in my younger days I played a little bit of football. In fact, when I arrived in high school – I still remember that, in fact, our late good friend Manmeet Bhullar and I used to play football together. I remember arriving in high school, and the very first thing the coach did – my high school in Calgary went from grade 9 to grade 12. The coach of the senior football team took a beeline across that high school when he saw me arrive and said, "Do you like football?" and then offered that I could play, and I said: "Well, I'm in grade 9. I can't play on the senior team." He said, "Oh, we've got to try to figure a way around that." And then I would go on to play high school football.

The reason I bring that up, Mr. Speaker, is because the analogy that the Government House Leader is trying to use is kind of ridiculous, and I'll show you why. When I played high school football as the largest person, probably, in the league, definitely a threat and a tool for our football team – in fact, they often would not let me off even for water breaks; I had to stay on and play both lines – it would make no sense if the coach then announced, "Hey, we have this six-foot-eight, 290-pound kid playing for us, but we're not necessarily going to put him in the game" or indicated that there was a possibility that we're not going to put him on the bus and bring him to the game, that we may hold that tool back.

What the Government House Leader fails to acknowledge or just glosses right over is the fact that that is exactly what his government did during this process. Our leader and the United Conservative Party have been abundantly clear that this should be the last resort. In fact, he has been calling on this government to take action for well over a year, and they have not. Now, you know, with the clock ticking and in an urgent situation, we have to rush through decisions. That's unfortunate. They should have listened at that time to the opposition leader's advice.

But what the opposition leader has made clear is that you don't tell the other side that you won't use the hammer. You don't tell the other side that. That is what this Premier and this NDP government have done since the start, which is why the opposition has been concerned and trying to get this bill to the floor. The question I have for the Government House Leader is: why did his leader and his government, the first time that they met with B.C.'s now Premier, Mr. Horgan – he was in opposition at the time – not even bother to try to persuade him on pipelines? Why did his leader bring in a wine ban and then declare victory in this House when there was no victory and then pull back that wine ban? Why did his leader travel to Ottawa – travel to Ottawa – and meet with the Premier of B.C. and the Prime Minister of this country and then tell the Premier of B.C. that she probably would not even use this legislation? Why did his leader do that?

The reality is this, Mr. Speaker. The opposition has been clear: last resort, but we have to have that tool in our tool box. All that this government has done is to indicate to B.C. that they will not use it. That's silly. Again, you know, we're in Edmonton. Do you think it would be smart, during the heyday of the Edmonton Oilers, that in the Stanley Cup finals they indicated that they may not bring Wayne Gretzky to the game? Doesn't make any sense. "We're going to put him on the bench. Don't worry." That's what this government has done, and it's unfortunately done.

The other thing that has to be clarified from his comment is that the opposition has not led the way on this file. The hon. Government House Leader's leader made fun of the Leader of the Opposition before he was even the Leader of the Opposition when he raised doing exactly what we are here to talk about today. This government is asking for support from the opposition for exactly what the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed suggested they do, and at the time, Mr. Speaker, they made fun of him. They tried to compare him to the American presidential candidate.

The Speaker: Just checking, hon. member: do you have . . .

Mr. Nixon: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you don't want me to continue, but in the House what's been happening lately is that the other side has been going for five minutes.

The Speaker: I just wanted to know if you wanted to give him an answer.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I have some questions I still want to talk to him about, Mr. Speaker.

The reality of this is that. So whether the tail was wagging the dog, which is the analogy that he wanted to talk about, I can tell you that I don't care how we got there at the end of the day. The point of it is that we have to get here because Albertans are depending on us. So if the NDP want to come in here and say, "Oh, this was all our idea from the beginning and not the Leader of the Opposition's," so be it. The record is clear.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Speaking to the bill, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to the bill.

The Speaker: Yes.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on third reading of Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. As everyone knows, third reading is about the implementation. We have spoken in support, in principle, of developing tools to ensure that our energy industry has a viable future and that the rights of all Albertans and Canadians are respected with respect to the national interest, our oil industry, and an approval that has been a long time in the works.

But in terms of implementation we have grave concerns that this bill grants extreme powers to the NDP government that will allow them to unilaterally force the energy industry to reduce exports without any accountability. It breaches the democracy that we, I think, all adhere to, something that most Albertans, I think, would have great difficulty with and would find disconcerting, especially as it entails a commitment by this government to buy the pipeline if necessary. That's one of many concerns that we will raise.

The Energy minister will have the authority to grant and renew, suspend, revoke, and amend export licences. If companies or individuals want to appeal this decision, their only option will be to plead their case back to the same Energy minister. Why is there no independent, arm's-length appeal process? The oil and gas industry is understandably concerned about this new power. Indeed, it will be fined up to $10 million a day for breaches of this new, arbitrary power.

Most important, the bill lacks any details, which is disturbing, giving itself extraordinary powers to interfere with the oil and gas industry but not providing any specifics or limitations on those powers. The bill needs to be supplemented by clear regulations and limits before it can be effectively implemented. Mr. Speaker, the devil is indeed in the details.

This is a divisive strategy that has the potential to result in job losses, economic downturn as well as a costly blank cheque, which this province, this Premier appear to want us to give her in this Legislature, billions and billions of dollars. Beginning when? Ending when? And what are the checks and balances and accountabilities to Albertans? As a strategy there's no guarantee that pushing the price of gasoline to $2 a litre in B.C. will actually get the Trans Mountain pipeline built. What's most certain, however, is that it will result in a backlash, indeed, divisions exacerbated across this country.

Mr. Speaker, I have great concerns about these new and unfettered powers that this government is seeking. It may be politically convenient legislation, but this is not necessarily good legislation for Albertans. It could well have a backlash against Alberta that would reverse our growing economy by restricting exports. We may well be shooting ourselves in the foot, as they say. Providing these extreme and unilateral powers without accountability is not in the interests of my constituents.

We in the Alberta Liberal caucus cannot support this at this time without more details, accountability, and an appeal process that is recognized and independent. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Mountain View under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to begin by thanking the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood and Minister of Transportation for his excellent comments. Some of my comments will follow, I think, in the same vein, not exactly because we don't agree on everything.

I rise today in support of Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, and I do so for a number of reasons. First, Alberta's gas and oil industry has been – and I will quote Her Excellency the Right Honourable Governor General Julie Payette from yesterday – the economic thrust in our country for many years. It is so in terms of employment, sale of resources, and spinoffs from that industry, to name a few. Much of that spinoff, much of that industry is right here in Alberta. It's in British Columbia and, in fact, right across the country. Many have said: when Alberta works, Canada works. I believe that that's true.

The second reason for supporting this is because it ties directly to our taking steps with respect to climate change. A phrase that has been used many times was: we received social licence. I have been a proponent of renewables for virtually all of my adult life. I recognize that to eventually get there, a dynamic process has to be in place, and it is. This process has begun and taken some significant strides forward.

My colleague in Lethbridge-West, the minister of environment, has along with our government put forward our climate change plan, a plan to reduce drastically our carbon footprint. I also see that oil and gas have recognized that they have to do things differently if they are going to sustain themselves. They are investing in renewables and doing their business, specifically gas and oil, in a more environmentally friendly manner, that respects and protects our environment. Our government has and is supporting green energy, innovations, and technology, which are all steps to improving our climate now and into the future.

The third reason. I will use an example. I recently saw – it was either on Facebook or Twitter – a video which gives a visual of the impact of stopping oil cold turkey. If you haven't seen it, let me give you a visual. There is a young man sitting on a couch about to watch the Winnipeg Jets game in the playoffs. He's pretty excited, probably because it's been a long time since Canada was in this position. He picks up the remote control, and – poof – it disappears. He is taken aback. He attempts to adjust his glasses to see what happened, and – poof – his glasses are gone. Then the big-screen TV disappears, the covering on the couch, and he's left sitting on a wooden frame. The camera pans to the right. You see through the window the body of his crew cab, the interior upholstery, and the tires disappear as the frame lands on the driveway. Are you getting the picture?

Oil isn't just about transportation. Your car or your truck, your flight to someplace warm during the winter, or even keeping your house warm, especially this winter, all use oil re transportation.

Is your house sided? An oil-based product. Are any of your blankets a plush product? If so, that's an oil-based product. How about your toothbrush or your hairbrush? Oil-based products. Oil is not disappearing for quite some time. Anyone who says that we could just stop production is daydreaming in technicolour or some altered-reality haze.

The fourth reason. Currently oil and gas resources, that belong to all Albertans, are being sold at a discounted price. This is because our neighbour to the south is now our biggest competitor. We have to get our resources to tidewater because we have to be able to supply other customers. This impacts us dramatically here in Alberta but also in the rest of the country. Our economic thrust here and in the country is dependent on getting our resources to tidewater. Our Premier has said over and over again: this pipeline will be built. This bill, I would say, is a key piece to getting that done.

I particularly liked the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands-Norwood when he said that, you know, we have a big stick. This is our big stick, but we don't go into the fight throwing that big stick around our head. We go in to have a discussion and to treat the other party with some respect. They know we have the big stick, they know that we can use it, but we have to have the big stick if we want to go and have that conversation.

I don't think there is anyone here or in your constituency who is not impacted by oil, oil by-products, or jobs that are directly or indirectly related to the oil industry. Every one of us can pick a relative or several relatives whose employment is directly impacted by the oil industry. In fact, last night at the welders' event I spoke to a welder from Lethbridge who said: are we going to get it done? His job depends on our getting that pipeline completed.

So I expect you to vote for this bill. If you don't, I believe that you are showing your true colours of nonsupport for this province and this country, just like you did this week when it came to women's reproductive health choices, and that is beyond shameful. It is not doing your job, not representing your constituents, Albertans, Canadians. Vote for this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), questions to the Member for Lethbridge-East?

The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to stand and talk on Bill 12 in third reading. I want to start, from the outset, by saying that I will be supporting Bill 12 but that I do so with reservations. You know, a lot of my reservations about Bill 12 were actually very well articulated by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I have significant concerns about the powers that Bill 12 imparts, and some of those powers haven't even been clearly defined because they will be left up to the regulations, that are still to be developed. I'm certainly very concerned.

But I want to just back up a little bit. You know, Bill 12 really is talking about, if you like, if you want to sort of really précis it, turning off the taps, right? This is a narrative or at least a phrase that we've heard a lot over the last number of months, that Alberta should turn off the taps, and there's usually a reference back to Peter Lougheed and the actions that he took in the 1980s. I remember when it was first articulated, and then when the Premier took up that call as well and when it was mentioned in the throne speech, I thought to myself: I don't believe that Alberta has the power to do that. The circumstances that were faced by our province in the 1980s were really quite different than what they are today, so I did some checking with some authorities on this. In fact, they said: well, not under the present framework, no. Alberta does not have the power to simply turn off the taps unless some legislation enabling the province to do that is passed, and indeed that has been the genesis of Bill 12.

But I guess my concern with regard to Bill 12 is that it confers a series of very significant powers to the Energy minister and, in a broader sense, to cabinet with regard to restricting both oil and gas and refined products and their export from our jurisdiction. In talking to people who are involved in the oil and gas industry, they have expressed a great deal of concern about that to me as well. We know that there are already many oil and gas producers who have expressed concerns about the stability of the situation with investing here in Alberta. We know that some of that is because of uncertainty on a number of issues. My concern with Bill 12, quite frankly, is that it adds to that uncertainty. Bill 12 allows the government, in its purview, to place restrictions on the export of oil, gas, and refined products.

If I'm a producer and I'm considering making a large-scale investment in an oil and gas facility or some other means of producing oil and gas, while those resources are, in fact, the property of the people of Alberta, considerable energy, considerable costs, capital costs and otherwise, are going to be invested in ensuring that those resources can then be extracted. Yet I know throughout this that the government has the possibility of restricting my ability to provide my customers with those products, on which I will probably have contractual obligations. In fact, I would say that almost certainly I will have contractual obligations to provide that product to those customers and that the government could interrupt that. That would cause me concern, Mr. Speaker. That would cause me a great deal of concern.

One of the first things that I thought to myself when I heard about this piece of legislation was: well, at the very least, there needs to be a limitation on the length of time that this measure could be used, that this bill would be enforced. We're hoping, at least, that this bill is being brought in as a response to the very specific situation that we find ourselves in currently, and because the current laws don't allow the powers we require to, as we say, turn off the taps, that's why Bill 12 has been brought in. But it is, hopefully, a temporary situation. It is, hopefully, a situation that will not be perpetuated over a long period of time. When I first heard about it, I said: "Well, is there a sunset clause here? Is there some limitation here?" As we know, there wasn't.

Now, I know that during the committee stage an expiry or sunset clause was brought in and was passed as an amendment. I think that's a truly important limitation on this bill and in many ways is part of the reason why now I've got at least some comfort to vote in favour of the bill as opposed to opposing it. Mark my words, Mr. Speaker. I want our province to succeed, I want our nation to succeed, and I know full well that the success of both our province and our nation is dependent on getting our products to tidewater.

I also want to talk a little bit here about what I'm seeing, even during third reading, as being an extremely polarized argument. Now, the speakers that we've heard so far from both the government and — we haven't heard a great deal from the opposition yet, but I'm sure we will. There's a lot of back and forth and finger pointing and blaming and that sort of thing. It's frustrating, Mr. Speaker, because this is a critically important issue to Albertans. It is not one that should be used to score political points.

You know, I have to say that I find it interesting when NDP members lament the fact that they feel that their government, their Premier are not getting the credit they deserve for defending the oil and gas industry and for taking up the fight on pipelines. Well, I will tell you that there's a very simple reason why that is happening, and that is that this government has a deficit. This government has a deficit in credibility. It's not a dollar – well, they have a dollar-and-cents deficit as well. They have a credibility deficit, and that credibility deficit, Mr. Speaker, has been built up over a long time. It didn't just happen overnight.

It is not only because they have shown in the very recent past that they were opposed to pipeline development, that in the very recent past they were opposed to the oil and gas industry itself, but their cohorts in other provinces – in fact, the government that is opposing the Trans Mountain pipeline is the NDP in British Columbia – are opposed to the oil and gas industry. The national NDP is similarly opposed to the oil and gas industry and opposed to pipelines. At the not-so-long-ago convention of the national NDP, here in Edmonton, despite what I understand was an impassioned speech by the Premier saying why the Leap Manifesto would be bad for Alberta and bad for Canada, the national NDP proceeded with it anyway.

So, Mr. Speaker, whether you like it or not, whether you care to admit it or not, you folks have a credibility deficit, and the people in the oil and gas industry simply don't trust you. Now, they may come around to trusting you someday, but at least right now they don't trust you. The reason they don't trust you is because supporting oil and gas is not in your nature, and what we mean by that is that it's not part of your past history. It's not in your nature.

You know, there's a fable, Mr. Speaker, and you can probably appreciate that, coming from me, it's an animal fable. It's been around since the mid-50s. It's the fable of the scorpion and the frog, and it applies here. The fable goes like this. One day a frog and a scorpion found themselves at the side of a river that they both wished to cross. The frog, of course, is able to swim, but the scorpion is not. So the scorpion says to the frog, "Would you allow me to ride on your back to the other side while you swim across the river?" The frog, who is suspicious of this arrangement, says to the scorpion, "Yes, but what if you sting me?" And the scorpion says, "Well, if I sting you, then we both shall die, so why would I do that?" So the frog somewhat reluctantly allows the scorpion to climb on its back and starts swimming across the torrent. About halfway across the frog feels a sharp, stabbing pain in his back and then starts to feel the effects of the scorpion's paralyzing venom in his body. As the frog is sinking below the surface of the water, with his dying breath the frog turns to the scorpion and says, "Why?" And the scorpion with his dying breath says, "It's in my nature."

If you're wondering what the correlation here is, the oil and gas industry is the frog, and you folks are the scorpion. That is what we have in Alberta. We have an industry that is trying to trust the current government, an industry that in many ways has no choice but to trust the current government because it has to work with that current government, yet it knows that at any time the scorpion could return to what is in its nature.

When I talk to oil and gas people, certainly in my constituency and around the province, the oil and gas industry folks that I talk to tell me that at least at this point they simply do not trust this government – and neither do most Albertans – on the issue of oil and gas and promoting pipelines. That's not to say that the efforts that have been put forward, by the Premier especially, haven't been appreciated. I think those efforts have been acknowledged – and they should be – by Albertans right across the province.

Certainly, a great deal of effort has been put in, but the problem that you've got and the reason that you're having so much trouble convincing people is because of your credibility deficit, and making up that credibility deficit is incredibly difficult. Make no mistake; those credibility deficits work a number of different ways, and you folks exploit them just the same way. You folks exploit them against people on this side of the Chamber whenever you need to make a political point, and it is every bit as unfair going either way.

I think of one instance in particular, when the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was elected as the interim leader of the United Conservative Party. He received a great deal of ridicule and criticism because 10 years previously he had participated in a radio program that espoused some very controversial views. He said very simply and plainly that in 10 years his views had changed and that he has learned a lot and that he's a different person today, yet that didn't get him any credit at all, none, not a bit, because it was more convenient for you folks – and it was easier for your narrative – to continue to brand him in a way that you felt was politically beneficial.

That's part of what is blocking good political dialogue in this province, Mr. Speaker. We are not acknowledging that people can and do change. We're not acknowledging that people can see a better way; for example, the NDP. I have no doubt that this government today is trying to support the oil and gas industry, but if they weren't in government, if they were over here, as they were a little over three years ago, I suspect they would be every bit as hard on the oil and gas industry as they always have been. But they finally acknowledged that, sitting over there in government, they don't have that luxury, that they must govern on behalf of all Albertans, and that includes our main economic driver.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote in favour of Bill 12. I think it is important that the government has this tool, but I think it's extremely important that this tool is used very judiciously. You know, the Government House Leader talked about a hammer. Well, this bill is a power nailer. The only thing we've done to reduce the potential use of it is to put a time limit on it, and I think that's a very important improvement. But I am certainly concerned about this government using this bill. If I was an oil and gas investor, I would also be very concerned and hoping that at some point this bill could potentially be repealed if the conditions change.

In the meantime I say to the government that the oil and gas industry is the frog from my fable, and the oil and gas industry is ever watchful for the scorpion and ever wary of its sting. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster?

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to be able to rise to speak to Bill 12, an act to preserve Canada's economic prosperity. I'm very pleased to be able to speak to it today in third reading. First, let me begin by offering my thanks to all Albertans for the support and the solidarity that they have shown each other over the last few months. Our fight to build a pipeline to Canada's coast for the most part on most days transcends partisan politics. It unites us in the conviction that we can achieve great things for our province if we work together, and it shows that when Albertans think big, big change is possible.

Mr. Speaker, before I speak directly to Bill 12, let me set the context and speak about how far we've come and the moment that we are at today. The economic arguments in favour of building a pipeline to the coast are well understood by Albertans. We are an energy-literate province, to say the least, so I won't restate those arguments in great detail. But for the record and as I have repeated countless times to countless Canadians, a strong Alberta means a strong Canada. Every school, hospital, road, bus, bike lane, or port in the country owes something to Alberta's energy industry. So when Alberta is forced to sell our country's most valuable commodity to one customer at a discounted price, Canada is not at its best.

Lack of pipeline capacity is costing our economy, by some estimates, $40 million a day. That means that our schools and our hospitals are just not as good as they could be and that working people have fewer opportunities than they should have and that our country's economy is not as competitive or productive as it must be. Every dollar that evaporates into thin air because we wilfully handcuff our economy represents a lost opportunity to build a better Alberta and a better Canada.

When my government was elected, we were determined to change that, determined to overcome decades of failure and frustration, determined to not repeat the mistakes of the past and to change our approach because – let's face it, Mr. Speaker – overall what we were doing before just wasn't working. Albertans elected this government to shake up the failing and out-of-touch status quo. Where former governments ignored climate change and ignored the need for environmental sustainability, leaving Alberta's number one industry exposed to attack, we took on the issue head-on; where former governments just pointed fingers and demonized everyone who had questions and concerns, we listened; and where former governments were content to talk to themselves, we hit the road and talked to Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, a funny thing happened along the way. Frustration started to give way to hope. Albertans from all walks of life – industry, First Nations, environmental leaders, and everyday working families – worked together on solutions, and in short order change started to happen. Alberta's environmental laws were modernized with the climate leadership plan, the most comprehensive response to climate change anywhere in North America. It's a made-in-Alberta plan that fundamentally changes the game on old-style pipeline politics, that were failing the province before.

For too long the choice between our economy and our environment was framed as a trade-off, a zero-sum choice that led to zero results for our economy and for our environment. The climate leadership plan blew that thinking apart because it can't be one or the other. If it is, it is failure on both. It must be a plan that builds our economy and protects our environment for future generations. So in addition to reducing methane emissions, phasing out coal, and pricing carbon, the plan capped emissions. This is critical. In capping emissions, Alberta delinked pipelines from climate change once and for all, a breakthrough that reframed the debate about the economy and the environment.

Mr. Speaker, soon after the climate leadership plan was introduced, Ottawa adopted it as the model for a national plan. And they did something else, too. Ottawa approved the Trans Mountain pipeline, another breakthrough for our province and for our country, proof that when we change our approach, when we don't pit people against one another, when we unite around common aims and shared values, change is possible.

But, of course, the story does not end there. Our job was far from done. A former federal government approved Northern Gateway and didn't do a thing to support the decision. Mr. Speaker, we weren't going to make that mistake, so we hit the road to talk to Canadians in rooms of supporters and opponents. In Toronto I spoke to leading environmental organizations about why a pipeline is key to Canada's climate plan and meeting our international commitments. In Montreal I spoke to thousands of union members about why action on the environment and the economy is possible. On Bay Street I spoke to business leaders. I said to them: there is no escaping what is at stake for our national economy. They can't sit on the sidelines anymore.

In B.C. I spoke to the Vancouver board of trade, among others, and I told them that Albertans cherish our coastline and how proud we were that the decision to approve Trans Mountain was paired with a $1.5 billion oceans protection plan, that will improve safety for all shipping along our west coast. I asked them to stand up and make their voices heard, and as I mentioned earlier today, I'm pleased to say that tomorrow the Vancouver board of trade is coming to Edmonton to do just that, a powerful and welcome gesture, fellow Canadians supporting each other for a larger, national goal.

In Ottawa I carried a message to Canada's national party leaders. To those in my own party who oppose the pipeline, I said that it's time to smarten up, and quite frankly I still say that. We cannot build a more equal, more prosperous Canada if we write working people out of the formula for climate action. To the federal Conservatives I said: it's time to listen up. We are not going to make more progress on pipelines if we dismiss Canadians' real concerns about the environment. That strategy, if you want to even call it that, got exactly zero pipelines to tidewater built. And to the federal Liberals I said: step up. The pipeline approval is in the national interest. The decision was made for the right reasons, so it is now time to forcefully back that decision.

But as important as it is for us to speak to national, political, and economic leaders about Trans Mountain, the most important conversations are happening on shop floors, in hockey rinks, soccer fields, and over kitchen tables, Canadians speaking to Canadians. Albertans from all walks of life have stepped up to this task. Tens of thousands of people have signed our petition calling for action. Tens of thousands more have reached out to their friends, neighbours, and families. My government has done everything it can to arm Albertans with the facts and to take those facts to Canadians. To those who may be listening today, I still say: visit keepcanadaworking.ca to learn everything you need to know about why Trans Mountain is so important to our future, and while you're there, sign the petition.

Drive into Victoria from the airport or walk down Robson Street in Vancouver and you'll see billboards reminding everyone that Trans Mountain is about more than getting oil to the coast; it is about those good schools, good hospitals, and good infrastructure. Click onto Facebook or Twitter and you will no doubt see social media posts promoting the benefits of the pipeline. It's the largest social media campaign ever undertaken by the government of Alberta.

Friends, all of these efforts – the climate action plan, the outreach, the information campaigns, and the one-on-one conversations – are working. Canadians from coast to coast to coast support Trans Mountain in large numbers, and public support is the most effective tool that we have in winning this fight. And, yes, that public support includes our neighbours and friends in British Columbia. In B.C.'s rugged and beautiful interior, in the bustling Lower Mainland, and on Vancouver Island, polling shows that a growing majority of British Columbians back Alberta because they know, like we know, that a strong economy and a clean environment are possible. They know, like we know, that we can't tackle climate change if we write working people out. And they know, like we know, that we can't build a modern economy that works for working people if we turn our backs on the environment. This is the emerging Canadian consensus, Mr. Speaker, and I'm proud to say that Alberta is at the forefront of that consensus. Now, of course, as I said before, there is no celebrating until the job is done, and we know it is not done and that, in fact, hurdles remain.

British Columbians and Canadians may back us, but we know, as everyone knows now, that the new minority government in B.C. does not. Of course, that is their right. But on January 30 of this year the B.C. government did something that they have no right to do. They took direct and unconstitutional action aimed at harming Alberta's economy, claiming they would restrict the flow of Alberta's resources across their border, what is now known as point 5. To call point 5 a provocation is an understatement. Point 5 undermined the very nature of our Confederation and our economic union, and it's triggered the events that lead us to this day.

Mr. Speaker, from the moment B.C. took its action, Albertans have stood together, and we've executed a careful strategy to protect our jobs, our industry, and the pipeline. We banned B.C. wine and got B.C. to back off its imminent and immediate threat. We established the Market Access Task Force made up of prominent Canadians from around the country to help Alberta win. We continued our court interventions. We increased our outreach to Canadians to win the battle of hearts and minds. Alberta is winning in the courts, where we have won every case brought against the pipeline so far. In the court of public opinion, as I have talked about, more Canadians are with us than ever before. On the national stage we have the backing of many fellow Premiers and the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, as I speak, the federal government is fully engaged with Kinder Morgan and Alberta to ensure that this pipeline is built. As I've said before, I'm optimistic that these discussions will be successful. I'm aware, as well, that the leader of the federal Conservatives as well as the Leader of the Opposition here in this House are fighting against federal support, but let me just say this. When the Leader of the Opposition was in Ottawa, he helped write a $9 billion cheque to bail out the auto industry, and I simply can't understand why, after first supporting my call for federal help, he would now so forcefully oppose Ottawa backstopping a project that will add tens of billions of dollars to the Alberta economy alone.

Mr. Speaker, now is not actually the time to grandstand. Now is not the time to chase headlines. Now is not the time to score cheap short-term political points. This is a critical moment in our history. Now is the time to stand with and for Albertans, and I encourage the leader of the UCP to put Alberta first – there will be lots of time for politics later – because our first and only focus must be to get as much value from our resources as possible using all the tools that we have at our disposal.

This is where we come to Bill 12, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's energy resources belong to Albertans. They are our natural inheritance upon which we have built this province. In Alberta we have the right to maximize the value of those resources in our interests. With pipeline capacity stretched to a limit, we have the right to choose how our energy is shipped so that Alberta gets the best possible return. Bill 12 gives us that power. With a price differential on our oil taking billions out of our economy, Alberta has the right to act in the public interest to reduce the cost to the treasury and to the economy. Bill 12 gives us that power. With the B.C. government seeking to limit what energy products can flow across provincial borders, we have the right to make that decision in terms of exporting for ourselves. Bill 12 gives us that power. Make no mistake; we will not hesitate to use the powers Bill 12 provides to ensure Albertans get the best return possible for a product that fuels Canada's economy because we Albertans have come too far to ever turn back.

Alberta's energy industry is the bedrock of Alberta's economy. It's defined our past, and it's critical to our future. That's why this government and all Albertans are fighting so hard to defend Albertans' interests. It's why, upon being elected, we chose to set aside the failures of the past and charted a new and better course. With the climate leadership plan we've helped bridge divides that have held us back in the past. No one can ever say that it's the economy or the environment. Alberta has shown that we can lead on both. With the approval of the Trans Mountain pipeline we're closer than ever to breaking the land lock, opening up new markets, and securing our economy for a new generation.

It hasn't been easy. Important things seldom are super easy, Mr. Speaker. The critics and the naysayers want us to fail. Proving that we can do things differently is a threat to some people, and the promise of change must be joined to the practicalities of politics in a very complex and a very diverse country. But we are closer than ever to the results we need.

At the end of the day, only results will matter. That's what we've been focused on from the very start, drawing on the hard work and ingenuity of this province with a plan to secure a better future. Today our renewed advantage is clear. We are young, we are diverse, and we are confident. We Albertans aim to have the most educated and skilled workforce anywhere in the world. We Albertans aim to ensure that every child, no matter what their circumstance, can achieve their full potential without limit. We Albertans aim to be at the forefront of energy and environmental leadership at exactly the same time. We Albertans aim for the inclusive society that welcomes the world, and we Albertans aim to build a modern, diverse economy that works for the many – the many – not just the few.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day, the Trans Mountain pipeline is a means to these many larger ends. We will get there together, and we will do what it takes to make all of this happen. That's why I encourage all members of this House to stand together and vote in favour of Bill 12.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, are there any questions or comments to the Premier under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing and hearing none, are there any other members? The Member for Stony Plain.

Ms Babcock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker [applause].

Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be one of the cosponsors of this bill. Unfortunately, I've missed quite a bit of the lively debate that I've heard is going on in this House. But I'm also very proud, as I've stated many times in this House, to be from a family in the oil and gas and to be a pipeliner's daughter. This bill is about protecting the jobs and livelihoods of thousands of Albertans and our ability to keep Canada working. It's simple. When Alberta works, Canada works.

It continues to be the greatest honour to be able to sit in this House to represent the people of Stony Plain, and I can state that on this side of the House we know – I know, Mr. Speaker – how important it is to come to work to do the jobs that we've been elected to do and to engage in fulsome debate in the effort to make Alberta stronger.

We did not start this fight, but let there be no doubt that we will do whatever it takes to build this pipeline, and we will get top dollar in return for the oil and gas products that are owned by every Albertans, whether they're oil and gas families, health care families, or families that are in education.

While we're standing up for Alberta and a healthy Canadian energy sector, this is for the long-term benefit of all Canadians. We're taking simple steps to defend our workers, our economy, and our progress on climate action, things that we are so proud of having worked on for the last three years on this side of the House. We're giving ourselves the greatest range of tools that we can use as we go forward. A pipeliner is only one step in building a pipeline. This legislation is about having maximum flexibility and leverage in the event of future efforts to delay or block construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. Mr. Speaker, it's going to be a fantastic day, the day after May 31.

Albertans have been clear: get this pipeline built. We listen to our communities on this side of the House, so we have heard them. Albertans are right because this pipeline must be built. Alberta is prepared to do whatever it takes to get this pipeline built. Every day that it's delayed, the national economy, let alone Alberta's economy, loses millions and millions of dollars. We are barricaded and prevented from moving forward with the economic recovery that so many Albertan families are looking forward to and need so heavily.

In my riding of Stony Plain, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of families that have been affected by the downturn that happened, and there are a number of families that haven't seen the results of the recession being turned around yet. Those families and those constituents of mine in my communities need to see this pipeline built.

Ground zero for this pipeline is in Wabamun. We have seen the investment from Kinder Morgan in Wabamun already. They put money towards a town square that makes it more viable for the tourist industry to come into Wabamun and be part of that community. These are things that wouldn't happen if we didn't have the Trans Mountain pipeline. We know that they're also supporting Enoch, where they put down land for a lay-down yard. Those things are supporting the local economies in the region to the west of the city here, and they wouldn't be happening if this pipeline wasn't going to be built. We recognize the importance of oil and gas.

I wouldn't be here if it wasn't for oil and gas. I wouldn't have the education I have without the oil and gas sector in this province. You know, my father was one of the early retired under the previous government in 2015, when the oil and gas sector tanked. It was a very difficult thing for him to have to deal with. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that he sat and he watched the first budget presentation that our minister put forward. He had all this time; he was on the couch. He called me. My father was up in Fort McMurray for many, many years. He was a member of the PC Party at one point. He was blue through and through. He called me, and he said: "Erin, your family, your caucus, what you are putting forward, this is exactly what Alberta needs today. This is exactly what Alberta needs to go forward." I said to my father: "But why did it take you this long to figure it out?" And he said: "Because we were making money hand over fist. We didn't care. We didn't care that we weren't making what we should be making. We weren't caring that Albertans weren't getting the supports they needed because we were getting money hand over fist." He said: "I've had time to read now for the first time in 40 years, and you're doing it right."

Mr. Speaker, I have to say that for somebody who is a blue-and-blue Conservative to have turned a corner to understand the long-term goals of what we're trying to accomplish in this House and for all Albertans is an amazing thing for me to hear. I think that there are many Albertans who have a similar story, who hear what we're trying to accomplish and understand that it's for all Albertans because we can't be successful if everybody's not successful.

Mr. Speaker, I am really proud of this bill. I'm really proud of being able to have these tools at our disposal so that we can move this forward in a thoughtful way instead of yelling like children. I will say very clearly that I hope every colleague of mine in this House supports this bill at this reading.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville, on 29(2)(a)?

Mrs. Littlewood: No. Not on 29(2)(a).

The Speaker: Not on 29(2)(a). Please proceed.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to Bill 9, a bill that of course is in the interest of getting the Trans Mountain – oh, Bill 12, not Bill 9. Bill 12, a bill that would see the expansion of the Trans Mountain line into B.C. As another MLA that represents a region where we have a lot of oil and gas industry and a lot of the workers that work in that industry, this is a bill that's really important to me to make sure that I'm representing those voices.

I've heard a lot from constituents across where I live that are asking, you know: "What are you doing? What is your government doing? When are you going to be passing this legislation?" And it's because they have a feeling of frustration. I think it's tough when you've become accustomed to this boom-bust over a couple of generations, and it makes you concerned for your family, and rightly so. You're not sure when that next cycle is going to hit.

It's an area that has a long history, you know, of being worried about things like the national energy plan, being worried about politicians with the last name of Trudeau. It's a long history that has created a lot of people who are circumspect when government tries to do things that they know, that they believe are in their best interests, but they're suspect.

This is one thing that I think is really important to show people, that we are endeavouring to put all the tools at our disposal that we can, tools that we don't know if we'll have to use or not. But we have to ensure that those tools are at our availability.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

You know, it's my honour to be able to fight in the interests of families and workers and labour groups and industry, all that falls inside of Alberta's Industrial Heartland. We have seen more progress on this file in the last two and a half years than we saw in the previous 44, quite frankly. This pipeline was built back in the 1950s, and the capacity has been reached. The capacity needs to be expanded, and it's not in Alberta's interests to not be able to work with other jurisdictions. That is part of the reason why we have been ending up land locked with a lot of our resources, having to move it by rail, something that's less safe, more expensive. Those were the options that were left to industry.

That wasn't as pressing an issue when oil was at $140 a barrel, but now, when we saw, of course, a massive dip in the world market prices for oil and gas, we know how important it is to actually make sure that we have the most efficient means of transportation that is also safe and why it is that important to open up our markets and not have to ship billions of dollars and thousands of jobs down to the Gulf coast. That's not in the interests of Alberta, and it's not in the interests of Canada.

Of course, you know, we see the benefits of our oil and gas industry on a day-to-day basis. In my constituency having a job there means being able to own a home. It means being able to put your kids in hockey. It means being able to send your kids to postsecondary, university or college, or getting them into the trades and taking on, potentially, their parents' trade. It means having money in your pocket, hard-earned dollars that you can actually put back into nonprofit organizations, back into your community.

You know, you see some of those direct large-scale impacts because of having these industry partners. In Fort Saskatchewan we have the Dow Centennial Centre. It's not just a rec centre; it's for dance, theatre, recreation, gallery space. We have a hospital where the wing is named for Sherritt International. It's a place where you take your family for world-class health care in Alberta. There are more partners, of course, because it is such a hub of oil and gas activity. We have initiatives like technology purchases that are made by Shell Scotford for local high schools. Dow provides scholarships in the STEM fields and looks at ways to make sure that we are bringing more women into those industries.

The opportunities that have opened up for Alberta have been huge, but they've also been opened up for the rest of Canada. I know that in the city of Fort Saskatchewan we had a pub opened up by people that came from the east coast. People are, you know, opening up different restaurants and pubs with the themes of where they came from because we have so many people of diverse backgrounds come here to make a life for themselves. These opportunities can only be afforded if we actually demand a fair price for those resources.

In continuing to have our economy being held hostage by one customer, the United States, and one price, it causes us to lose billions of dollars and thousands of jobs. You know, now we are seeing that stranglehold on our economy by the B.C. government. That is why we will not hesitate – and we have said that since the Speech from the Throne – to take bold action on this file, the same bold action that Premier Peter Lougheed had taken when our energy economy was attacked in the past.

You know, we cannot be treated as a landlocked country. That is not the point of having a federation of provinces. The point is that we're supposed to be able to work together for a mutually shared benefit. We see the rest of the country. Quebec has $2 billion worth of their GDP linked into our oil sands. That's why that interprovincial jurisdiction is controlled by the federal government.

We are proud, Madam Speaker, to be identified as Albertans, but we must hold paramount our identity as Canadians. Without access across our provincial boundaries by pipeline or by rail, we would not be able to grow our economies. We stand as a country right now with three coasts. It's not fair that the provinces that enjoy having those coasts directly at their service, so to speak, should make us suffer economically. That's why we have a country that is supposed to be united. Of course, we don't have to look far in the world to see what detrimental effects it has on nations when they are landlocked. That's the problem that we are facing right now. Canada's decade-long inability to diversify our markets and diversify our customers holds our entire country back. That's why I am proud of the actions of our Premier and our government. They have continued to fight on behalf of our province but also on behalf of our entire country.

Burnaby tried to block the Kinder Morgan pipeline in court. That's why we intervened. That's why the Premier intervened. As a result, Trans Mountain was granted an injunction against those same blockades at two terminals. When B.C. tried to limit what could go through an interprovincial pipeline, something they had no right to do, we shut down talks that would have meant $500 million per year in electricity sales. To put that into perspective, Madam Speaker, B.C. had fought to get $20 million a year from Kinder Morgan as part of their previous agreement – $20 million a year – and we were talking about $500 million in sales of electricity.

When B.C. threatened the livelihood of 4.3 million Albertans by restricting the flow of our resources, we responded by banning B.C. wine, and I don't believe that that was arrived at easily. We share with B.C. our value of protecting working people. But they had attacked every single Albertan, and our government could not let that stand. This action of banning B.C. wine was applauded by Jim Carter, former president of Syncrude and a member of our new task force that is continuing to look for options that would be available to our government to get the TMX built.

Of course, this pipeline must get built. Alberta has the best regulated oil and gas industry in the world, and we must demand a better price for the resource owners of Alberta. Our government has been able to take that leadership role because we have been the most responsible in taking a stand on climate change. We have capped emissions. We have passed laws that allow coal plants to be converted to natural gas.

We've decided to expand on the previous Conservative government's action in 2009 that priced carbon from heavy emitters, and we made that market-wide. The specified gas emitters regulation, a carbon tax levied by the previous Conservatives, recognized the impacts of carbon dioxide and applied a price for clean tech and efficiency development. Making this price market-wide allows each Albertan to play a role in our economy while raising the revenue needed to retrain workers, help coal-affected communities develop and build on their strengths, and continue to have their own long-term economic success. Also, it can build greener infrastructure, and it will help companies that are interested in developing technologies. It can recover bitumen, clean tailings ponds, and help Albertans invest in energy efficiency in their own homes.

The Leader of the Opposition should be supporting these efforts. His record under the Harper Conservatives committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 30 per cent by 2030, down from 2005 levels. Even their friends at the conservative think tank the Manning centre are telling them that carbon pricing is the right thing to do. They also agreed with G7 nations to phase out fossil fuel by 2100, which sounds, Madam Speaker, a little extreme to me, but we should remain responsible developers of those resources.

That is why we developed a plan that is made in Alberta, a plan that leads a path to balancing the economy with the environment, without having a plan imposed on us by the federal government. That is why our province continues to add jobs, 90,000 jobs over 2017. We led the country in GDP growth last year, and we will tie, at least, for growth this year again. Our plan is working. Our plan received approvals from the federal government for two pipelines, and it's helping fund the cleanup of orphan wells and has also expanded employment income eligibility for Albertans that have been hit the hardest during the downturn that we all have seen and felt. As our economy turns around, we will continue to hear good news. Earnings will continue to go up. Investment is increasing. Drilling activity has gone up. Manufacturing has also been on an upswing.

But that doesn't mean that every family has felt it. That's why we know that we are doing the right thing, Madam Speaker. We need to diversify our energy sector. We need to move to where the world's energy economy is moving so that we're not left behind. Right now we need the opportunities that this pipeline, the Trans Mountain expansion, will afford us in the present and in the near future.

Thank you very much for allowing me to speak to this bill. I look forward to supporting it.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to have the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. You know, I have to admit that I have not had a lot of personal history of involvement in the energy or resource industry in the province of Alberta. Though I have lived in this province all my life, probably the closest that I personally got to working with oil and gas were the summers that I spent manning the tar tank and shoveling and raking asphalt with road crews with the city of Edmonton. But, indeed, I recognize that the energy and resource industry in Alberta has been the lifeblood of our province for many, many years.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, it had great benefit, I know, for my own family. You know, my father came to Canada from Trinidad in 1967. He'd taken some training in Trinidad, and when he arrived here, he earned his ticket as an electrician, and he began working in that field. My father was just starting to work during the late '60s, into the early '70s, around about the time that we were starting up with the work in the oil sands. We were first beginning to see the results and benefits of government investment to get that industry started, recognizing, of course, that it was investment by the government which laid the foundations for that industry, which private industry has now built on so successfully and to the benefit of our province.

My father had many years of good work as an electrician. He worked on a number of construction projects across the province, and we recognize that it was royalties that came from the development of that energy industry that were helping to fuel a lot of that construction, that was allowing people to have good jobs. It allowed them to build good homes. We know this was part of what helped my father work because when we had the drop in prices, the economic recession that came in the early '80s, that had an impact on my father's ability to work.

Throughout the mid-80s, as Alberta was struggling with that recession, my father struggled to find work. I remember that he had to go far afield. He would spend weeks away from home working up in the Northwest Territories, northern Alberta, other places. That was the only place work was available. There would be long periods where I wouldn't get to see my dad. Eventually he went on and went back to school. He became an electronics technician, and he was able to work very well in a public service job for the remainder of his career.

He worked repairing equipment at the Royal Alex hospital. I think that is every bit as honourable a job as he had before but, also, work that was, we recognize, fuelled in part by the royalties which were taken in by the government of Alberta, which then allowed us to pay for those public services, which included being able to hire my father to maintain the equipment, which in turn maintained the health of many Albertans at the Royal Alex hospital. So I recognize, Madam Speaker, that the ability for our province to get the best possible price for the resources which we proudly produce is essential to the well-being of Albertans and the Alberta economy.

Indeed, as many speakers before me have noted, it's not just the Alberta economy. Alberta makes incredible contributions to the Canadian economy because of the strength of our resource industry. As people have said, when Alberta does well, Canada does well. Indeed, we've had our discussions in this House about equalization.

We've had members that have expressed their concerns about that formula. But we recognize that the reason Albertans contribute so much to that is because Albertans have done so well, generating a lot of federal tax, which has then gone to the federal government, who then divides that up for equalization payments, as I know all members are aware, although they don't always quite express them in terms quite that accurate.

All that to say, Madam Speaker, that Alberta is an essential part of the Canadian Confederation in what we offer, in what we provide, and the support that we give to the rest of Canada. That's why I'm very happy to speak in support of this bill, a bill to help ensure a pipeline which will help Alberta get our resources to tidewater, where we can access a much better price. Even setting aside any opportunity for further expansion of the oil sands, simply the opportunity to actually send our product to a market where we are not trying to sell to our largest competitor, where we can instead sell it to Asian markets and others who will pay us a better price for what we have: how could I not support a bill that was going to help support that?

Pipelines have been a difficult conversation for Canadians for some time, Madam Speaker. You know, I started watching politics in Canada around 2008. I'm not quite sure exactly what triggered that. But under the government of Prime Minister Harper, I guess, that was about when he got his first — well, there was an election that year, I believe, and the Conservatives had perhaps their first majority. I could be quite mistaken. But I recall that that point is when I first began to watch federal politics. It was of interest to me to watch the way that we communicated and to watch the way the federal government worked with provinces.

Indeed, I watched with some interest as we began to have the discussion around the Northern Gateway pipeline. I recall in January 2012, when one day ahead of the hearings that were going to take place on the Northern Gateway pipeline, at that time Minister Joe Oliver took the opportunity to issue a letter. It was a fairly strongly worded and harsh letter warning that he felt projects were taking far too long to get off the ground and targeting for that specifically what he considered to be environmental radical groups. It took a very particular tone, Madam Speaker, one which someone could read as somewhat antagonistic. I could understand. Again, we understand the importance of this infrastructure for Alberta and indeed for Canada, and I understand that for that particular government it was a particular issue that they wanted to see happen.

They chose to strike a particular kind of tone in how they approached this. It was an antagonistic tone. It was a very aggressive tone in some respects. In that letter he warned of "environmental and other radical groups," including "jet-setting celebrities" funded by foreign special interests, who "threaten to hijack our regulatory system to achieve their radical ideological agenda." That's not unfamiliar language, Madam Speaker. Certainly, it sounds like language we've heard from particular leaders, leaders of the opposition and others, who think this may be the best approach and best way to get a pipeline built.

But, Madam Speaker, when I look back, I recall what happened with that pipeline. Certainly, that sort of aggressive language and posturing in many ways, I think, just grew stronger opposition. We saw the results of the work of that particular government and the way that they approached trying to get a pipeline built, that sort of belligerence that they brought to their attempts to take another approach with the regulatory system, to take another approach with the consultation, to try to take steps that they felt, in their view, would be able to get that pipeline built faster.

In the end what ended up happening is that even though they provided the approval for that project, subject to 209 conditions, the Federal Court of Appeal ended up ruling that they had failed on the consultation piece. So in their zeal and their zest to try to get things done so quickly, to try to move things along without taking due time, care, and attention, without working with all parties involved, they had significantly failed on that particular piece.

Indeed, the judges said, “The inadequacies – more than just a handful and more than mere imperfections – left entire subjects of central interest to the affected First Nations . . . entirely ignored.” They pointed out that this was not a difficult thing to do. They said: “It would have taken Canada little time and little organizational effort to engage in meaningful dialogue on these and other subjects of prime importance to Aboriginal peoples. But this did not happen.”

Madam Speaker, I bring that up because we need to be careful about how we approach this. We’ve heard numerous accusations from our colleagues across the aisle about the manner in which our Premier and indeed our ministers have gone about advocating for this pipeline. They have expressed a desire to see much more belligerence in the tone, to add much more aggression in how we go about it. They did not like the strategy of the conversation that the Premier continued to have.

Now, Madam Speaker, we know that the Leader of the Official Opposition understands a few things about strategy and building relationships. The evidence of that lies just across this aisle, the fact that he successfully merged these two conservative parties together with a surprisingly minimal loss of members, sitting members, in this House.

Dr. Starke: We didn’t all like it.

Mr. Shepherd: Indeed. Indeed.

But it shows that he had at least some understanding that you don’t have all your conversations in public, that you don’t find all your success by standing and yelling or posturing, that sometimes you sit down and you have conversations with people and you talk out your differences. You discuss what aspects of policy you may or may not agree on, and you find common ground. Much in the same way he has made a public commitment, in fact, to improving the tone of debate in our Legislature, and he’s been largely successful with that, with perhaps some occasional failures, like we saw this morning. But on the whole, again, he has recognized that at times it is appropriate to have a reasonable dialogue and try to maintain a more even tone.

Now, Madam Speaker, I deeply appreciate the work that our Premier has done and her advocacy on this issue. Indeed, when I go out and I knock on doors in my constituency, when I go to various events with people from all sorts industry and all walks of life, even people who say, “I do not like your party and your policies,” tell me that they like how our Premier has stood up for this pipeline and this project, and that is by using a range of tools, by maintaining a number of conversations, by not discussing all of those conversations publicly but keeping private conversations where they need to belong.

But, also, Madam Speaker, by bringing forward steps like this, not in a belligerent way, not at a time when she had not yet had the opportunity to sit down and talk with our partners in industry and the people who this would also affect – to ensure that we had their support and understanding in moving forward with this, she waited until such a time as it was appropriate, when they had drawn it up in such a way that it would be able to provide the results that we are looking for. And she has been very clear that if the province of B.C. continues to use tools to delay and frustrate the construction of this project, Bill 12, which we hopefully will have the opportunity to pass today, will be ready and waiting and will be deployed.

Again, Madam Speaker, we want to maintain a good tone. We would love to be able to have this conversation with the province of B.C. and have them work with us and work under the Constitution of this country and under the jurisdiction of the federal government to build this federally approved infrastructure. However, they have shown on multiple occasions that they are not willing to do that in good faith. Indeed, the Premier of B.C. seems to have a penchant for misrepresenting the Premier’s remarks, for trying to paint things in as good a light for himself as he can, and members of our opposition seem to delight in taking him at his word, though they don’t on many other factors.

I will say that this legislation is going to provide us with one of the further tools that we may need. The Premier continues to have conversations with Kinder Morgan, continues to work with the federal government, as does the Minister of Energy and other partners within our government. But we are taking prudent steps to ensure that we have the tools available that we need to work with Kinder Morgan to ensure that the Trans Mountain pipeline is built, that we have the opportunity to move our resources to the best markets, where we can get the best price for the benefit of all Albertans.

As other colleagues have noted, Madam Speaker, we are doing that while also addressing the issue of climate change. Indeed, I do have constituents who come and talk to me, and they express concerns about the ecological costs, the possible environmental costs of continuing to expand the oil sands. It’s been my pleasure to have some great conversations with them. Many of them come to understand much better when we’re done.

Some aren’t quite convinced, but I explain to them the work that we have done in our climate leadership plan by placing that cap on emissions from the oil sands, that will allow for further expansion but, along with the carbon levy, is incenting companies to find ways to reduce the amount of carbon in the barrel. Indeed, Alberta companies, being the entrepreneurs and innovators that they are, are doing that work with this continued investment that comes from the funds that come in from the carbon levy, from investments from the federal government, from the opportunities they have and will have once we get this pipeline built to get a better price for their product.

Alberta is going to lead the way in the world in terms of being a green energy producing, resource-extracting jurisdiction. That is due to the leadership of this Premier, Madam Speaker, and the leadership of our Minister of Environment and Parks, who have worked with industry, who have worked with partners across this country, indeed, have worked with our federal government to . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29(2)(a), the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was so intrigued and so, I’ve got to say, enthralled by the amount of knowledge that the Member for Edmonton-Centre was sharing with us, and I’d like to give him the opportunity to just wrap up his comments if he doesn’t mind.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I’ll be brief.

All that to say that I am proud of the work that our government has done. I’m proud of the work that we continue to do in what, as I described, has been an incredibly challenging and difficult endeavour for multiple governments in this country, both Conservative and Liberal and indeed now the Alberta NDP. But I am confident in the work that our Premier is doing. I am confident that with the work of our ministers and the conversations that they continue to have, we will see this pipeline built, we will move Alberta's resource industry forward, and we will do it in a responsible way that will allow us both to support new industries here in the province of Alberta, renewable energy and many other things, and allow us to reduce our emissions and continue to provide the well-paying jobs that allow Alberta families to thrive.

With that in mind, Madam Speaker, I will be proud to vote in favour of Bill 12. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm really pleased today to rise to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. All members I think recognize that we are at a very momentous occasion in our Confederation, actually, when we are considering getting this pipeline built to tidewater. Bill 12 is a pretty serious and powerful tool, and members across the way have recognized this. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has expressed satisfaction that there would be some limitations by means of an expiration date on the powers contained in this bill because he recognizes how strong they are. And strong they must be because if indeed we don't have the ability to get our products to tidewater, if this country has the ability for one province to prevent another from building such a pipeline, then our country is not functioning as a federation and we've reached an impasse. This is the reason, I say, for the seriousness of the situation.

We have a real responsibility to approach the mechanisms for fixing the situation very, very carefully with respect to the long-term consequences for our federation and knowing that there will be long-term consequences one way or the other. The option, of course, is to fail. It can't happen that way, Madam Speaker. The pipeline to tidewater is a responsibility of not only provincial governments but the federal government to ensure that it happens. This is about protecting the jobs and livelihoods of thousands of Albertans and our ability to keep Canada working. It's simple. When Alberta works, Canada works.

You know, I was talking to other members of my caucus, many of whom have had some experience working, as a result of oil field money, in good-paying jobs over the years. I for one did many years in the real estate industry, and we saw the ups and downs in the economic cycles as a result of the price of oil dictating how our economy reacted.

I also in my earlier years worked directly in the oil industry. I actually know the smell of crude oil quite well because I've been covered head to toe in crude oil, working on a service rig just north of Edmonton, in a Redwater oil field in the St. Paul area. So I know exactly what it's like to be directly involved in the oil industry and know what it's like to experience an economy that's on fire as a result of a huge demand for oil and high prices for the product. Now we're not looking at necessarily that type of an on-fire economy because the situation has changed since that time in the '80s, when I was working in the oil patch as a fairly recent high school graduate.

I do remember when former Premier Peter Lougheed actually made his fireside chat speech to the country. I watched that broadcast, and it wasn't a happy day for Confederation in this country. It was something where we were, I think, as a nation very saddened to know that we'd gotten to and reached that point. What Premier Lougheed did at that time, of course, was to empower the province to reduce exports of oil to Ontario by 15 per cent, thus causing an increase in price and securing the principle that Alberta controls its own resources. This is what Bill 12 will also do in making sure that we tell not necessarily the population of British Columbia – because the enemy in this situation isn't the people of British Columbia; it's the position of the B.C. government. Unlike the situation that happened in the '80s with Premier Lougheed, where the fight was with the federal government, the federal government and the B.C. government are really the combatants, and we're caught in the middle of the situation.

It's a political pickle that nobody could have predicted, but right now that's what we face. The situation is one where we need to arm ourselves with all of the tools necessary in order to show that there are consequences for the position that the B.C. government is taking and that consequences will result in higher prices for petroleum products in British Columbia, thus keeping momentum on the current increase in support for this pipeline in British Columbia.

That momentum is expressed and that sentiment is expressed in calls I've received from former real estate agents that I worked with who are now living in Victoria. Many people, of course, move from Alberta to British Columbia and the island for different reasons, for retirement but also because they like the lifestyle and always wanted to go to British Columbia, to the coast and so forth. They're phoning me and saying: "Right on. Tell Premier Notley and tell the rest of your government caucus that we like what you're doing. We're living here. We've got a constituency of people who are telling us as we're getting together for coffee and we're talking about it that that's what the provincial government in Alberta should be doing because we support that pipeline and we realize that it's a national requirement for our country to be able to move its products to export." That's not something that right now the British Columbia government is purporting to allow.

I remember in younger years when we would go on trips. There were six kids in my family, and we'd go on trips with my grandfather. He'd take two or three of us, and he loved going where new projects were being built. There was a new highway. He loved to take the Yellowhead before it was actually fully complete. He took three of us one year – it would have been probably 1966, something like that, '65 – up to the Bennett dam when it was under construction. This was an exciting thing because, you know, it was something that we heralded, a major project. It was going to be, in that case, hydroelectricity. Back then not as many concerns were expressed or we didn't really look at the side of the equation of where the environment was valued. We would joyfully herald the new construction of a dam, and then when the oil sands were later being developed, we would be very, very happy about that and know that our Alberta technology had triumphed over the difficulty we had in figuring out how to get the bitumen out of the sand and make a viable product. The environment wasn't necessarily in the equation.

Well, that story has changed now, Madam Speaker. It is in the equation, and that's the reason that we have to be responsible stewards of the environment as well as making sure that the resources that we have are developed to our economic benefit. It behooves me – and I'm very, very curious. I'm not sure how many studies have been done on this, but I mean, we should have had extra capacity to tidewater for decades, long before now. To get to this point, where we're at a choke point, when we don't have pipeline capacity to tidewater to match our export capacity, is really a shameful situation to be in. Previous governments, of course, are to blame for that.

We relied upon the U.S. market as a sole market. We were taking a discount on our product for decades by simply relying on the U.S.

market and not developing export capacity and pipelines to tidewater. That situation has cost us billions. As has been mentioned before today by previous speakers, up to $40 million a day is being lost in economic opportunity because we can't get our product to tidewater. That is a mind-boggling number, $40 million a day, that we would be able to spend on schools and hospitals and public services and actually build a long-lasting heritage savings trust fund, which we could use as a sovereign wealth investment fund if we can get our product to tidewater and receive full market value for it, full world price for those products.

This bill is, I guess, one more chapter in the story that's being written about Alberta's oil and petrochemical industry. It's one where, hopefully, we'll finally correct a long-standing situation and get this particular pipeline built and ensure that our product gets to tidewater and receives the world price. In the situation that we're in right now, it's difficult to imagine that, you know, we've let it come to this over the decades, but it has happened.

Now, members opposite have accused this government of perhaps not reacting vociferously enough or, you know, not bashing the federal government and not coming out like gangbusters to attack the federal government for not dealing more harshly with British Columbia. In fact, it's not a strategy that would necessarily have the right effect. It may sound good coming from the opposition benches, but it doesn't necessarily make a winning strategy. Fed bashing as a party policy maybe works well for the opposition, but it's not necessarily good public policy for a government such as ours here in Alberta, that wants to ensure that we have a long-standing relationship not only with British Columbia and the federal government but with all other provinces as well because there are going to be situations that arise in the future where other provinces wish to transport commodities across provincial boundaries and into other international markets where this will be seen as a precedent.

That's one other element that I think we have to be careful about, Madam Speaker, is to concern ourselves with the precedent we're setting for our federation constitutionally as far as the ability of provinces to transport across interprovincial boundaries and to international markets commodities such as petroleum – it could be other commodities as well down the road – which there may be interprovincial disputes around. What we're doing here we have to be very, very careful with and keep an eye to the precedent that we're setting. It is one that, hopefully, will be seen as a way or a pattern or a method or a behaviour of solving disputes interprovincially that is reflective of what used to be called co-operative federalism, a collaboration of different levels of government that show examples of how this federation can work.

To attack the federation, to attack the federal government when there are jurisdictional disputes or where there's a situation such as we're in right now doesn't necessarily bode well for the future of the federation. I think the tactics, the strategies that we have taken, and the federal government as well, as we approach the fulcrum of this issue have been demonstrably the right ones to have taken. We see that there are possibilities of success coming forward, and we know that the probability of this pipeline actually getting built is pretty, pretty high. We'll do everything necessary to make sure it actually happens because every MLA in this House has constituents whose livelihoods depend upon the petroleum industry.

The Kinder Morgan pipeline runs through my riding, and I look forward to the day when a secondary line by Kinder Morgan will be running through that constituency, taking all kinds of products to the coast: petroleum products, bitumen, and – who knows? – maybe even some diesel fuel. I expect that that situation, with the pipeline still being a single pipeline, will be finally solved in the not-too-distant future, but it will be solved by people actually getting together. No matter what dispute a person is involved in or our governments are involved in, ultimately, whether you're bashing each other, if you're going to get it solved, you have to sit down and talk to each other reasonably. To start out that way is probably the way to go forward from the beginning. I don't see the benefit, as the Leader of the Official Opposition suggests, of basically going to war with the federal government when, in fact, I think it can be shown that they have been pretty diligently covering . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Ms Fitzpatrick: I was quite interested in what the member had to say, in particular about collaboration between federal and provincial, if you'd like to say a little more about that.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's always pained me in this country – and I've been a student of politics for a very, very long time here – when we find that different levels of government or provinces end up at loggerheads with each other over whatever type of dispute may be in the offing on the particular day in question. As I mentioned before, once a dispute happens, in order to resolve it, ultimately people climb down from their platforms and negotiate in good faith and with respect and actually get the job done and solve the issue at hand.

This one, this issue, getting this pipeline to tidewater, is a particularly tricky situation. I don't think anybody could have predicted or even would have thought of the various different marbles that are in the air politically that happened to land in the places they did in Canada. The fact is that we are where we are. We have a B.C. provincial government that is under threat of losing power if they don't meet the demands of the three members of the Green Party there. That dictates some of their behaviour, and that of course has to be taken into account. It's a reality. I don't tend to speak in analogies because I think they can get twisted and turned although they are sometimes quite humorous. Our Government House Leader is one of the best at turning a good analogy.

But I know that with the situation that we have right now, the reality of it is, I think, strong enough to deal with as far as looking at a story of what lays before us rather than depending upon analogies. The fact is that the B.C. government is going to have to accede to the reality of the situation, that we have a Confederation that allows us to get that product to tidewater. We've had 14 court decisions that say that.

I look forward to our government's continuing strategy of respectfully but very forcefully making it known that we have the right – and the willingness to enforce that right – to get our products to tidewater, to get this approved pipeline built. Madam Speaker, the intention of this government in bringing forward Bill 12 is to ensure that the British Columbia government knows full well that we're prepared to use this legislation if indeed we have to.

Premier Lougheed in the 1980s was not pleased that it had come to the situation where he ended up having to act on the powers that he had at his disposal then to ensure that this provincial resource was demonstrably controlled by the province. In this case many years later, Madam Speaker, we are with different circumstances showing British Columbia, showing Canada, showing this whole federation that we will do what we need to do to protect our rights as a provincial government to control the flow and movement of our resource products across provincial boundaries to our national tidewater.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to stand up and to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, and to say how proud I am of the Minister of Energy and the Premier for bringing this bill to our attention in this House. Another way of thinking about this bill, as some have called it, is the Shutting Off the Taps bill. It is evident, if you read the bill, that right under section 2(3) it talks about that any shipper, any company exporting natural gas, crude oil, or refined products must obtain a licence first, and there'll be a decision made about whether, in granting that licence, it is in the public interest of Alberta to do so. That's how serious this is.

We know that the public interest in Alberta and indeed Canada is not upheld if the important natural resources, that are part of this province's great legacy – they're lawfully produced, lawfully created – are not allowed to get to market. Unfortunately, for far too long we've had those constraints in this province.

We can know that Budget 2018 lays out before us a whole section on the importance of market access. That market access of a lawfully produced product is the right of companies, and it's the right of this province to receive the benefit from that product by way of royalties and other taxes. Unfortunately, there are some who choose not to behave in the way that all Canadians need to behave, which is to respect the laws of this land. So the actions that we are initiating today lay the groundwork for actions that may need to be taken, and our Minister of Energy, under the direction of the Premier of this province, will do what's in the best interest of the public in Alberta each and every time a licence is applied for. We have to ensure that both this province and this country are seen by the rest of the world as states they can count on in terms of lawful behaviour, and when we can't count on that, we do ourselves a lot of harm.

I was flipping through Budget 2018 and looking at the number of places where we've had to make forecasts kind of trying to understand, make assumptions on what the future will be. Madam Speaker, those assumptions, those forecasts are made way more difficult because we cannot count on the lawful activities of another province.

We are in a difficult situation as a province as a result of the oil price crash in late 2014 and 2015, which carried on through 2016 and 2017, and only now are we seeing some lightening of that whole situation. You know, we're four months, five months into 2018, and the whole idea of lower for longer in terms of oil price forecasts have been realized but are made doubly more difficult because companies want to continue to produce and are doing it in better and better ways. We know that, looking out, there will be production gains in this province as a result of the oil sands producers doing even better in terms of their efficiencies, and those gains are troublingly constrained in this province. If they can't make sure they get to international prices, notably tidewater access, then, frankly, we're underachieving as a province, and we're underachieving as a country. My colleagues here have laid out quite convincingly what that lack of being able to address our real capacity will mean for this province, will mean for this country.

Madam Speaker, we don't want to constrain this country and this province. We want to achieve the best value for a nonrenewable resource. That's the right and proper thing, knowing that you can't make any more oil in the ground. When you exploit it in a lawful way, you should be able to get the highest price for it.

We're doing other things in Budget 2018 to try and redress that by looking at incentivizing private companies to do partial upgrading, but that's not the kind of thing that'll happen quickly. It'll be years and years before that is achieved in this province. That's really the direction that Albertans want to go, and they often ask the question: why has that not happened earlier in this province's history? There are probably some good reasons, but it's not an excuse to not take another look at it, to try and do it right this time, Madam Speaker. We know that there's a partial upgrader under development now. It's in the testing phases, and it'll be ramping up into higher and higher production in the future. It being joined by other partial upgraders is probably a good thing for this province to get a higher value for this nonrenewable resource.

But the things we can do today are encompassed in Bill 12. Bill 12 is significant to the extent that the Minister of Energy has been in consultation with producers of oil in this province, energy companies. She has their support. She wanted to make sure that there are no surprises in any of these actions that are identified in Bill 12, and there are no surprises because she's met with these producers. She's met with them and talked about the actions government could take and will take and is taking. They're onside as well. We know that there are a growing number of Albertans and Canadians who support this action.

We need to always reflect. You know, these are actions that are important. We need to reflect. We need to be sober and think about these things. My colleagues have done that. They're ready to pass this bill because then we can begin to show the rest of the country, particularly those who would take unlawful actions, that this is how you move things forward, that this is how you stand up and say: I need to be counted because I'm taking actions that are within our purview. We're not doing anything a person or a company wouldn't do who was lawfully following the rules of this country and looking for the proper redresses for their activities.

As a group we're in a place, you know, we wish we wouldn't have to be in, but frankly we've been pushed as a Legislature into these actions. We're taking them because it's the right thing to do not just for us, not just for Albertans today, but it's the right thing to do for the future of this province going forward.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to comment under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-St. Albert.

Mr. Horne: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and talk on this bill although it's not one that I am particularly excited that we've had to bring forward. You know, I've been reflecting on this bill a lot in the past weeks and thinking about what it means for the province, for the country, and why I ultimately support it.

Before I really get into that, I want to first take a moment to talk a little bit about a piece of my childhood. We had a spot out at Lac La Nonne that we went to every weekend. Most weekends we were out there we spent fishing, and occasionally we'd go berry-picking and such. There were, you know, many days in Alberta, having the unpredictable weather that we do, that we would end up being rained out so that, instead, we would end up sitting around the kitchen table, often playing cards.

Now, I bring this up because anybody who has played cards knows the importance of a trump card. This is a card that you don't want to waste, that you want to be very careful with. Now, there are some that will often play it at the first opportunity they can, and they'll get really excited because they've played their trump card and they've won that round. You know, two or three rounds later they go to play that trump card, but they've already played it, and now they're not doing as well as they could have if they had played a bit smarter earlier.

Madam Speaker, I think that's a very similar situation that we could have found ourselves in today, and that is a situation indeed that we were in for far too long with a Conservative government here in Alberta and a Conservative government in Ottawa, where instead of trying to work co-operatively and collaboratively and really listen to everybody and play strategically, as it were, there was a tendency to immediately stomp your feet and hold a press conference, where anybody who's critical of anything to do with oil and gas was anti-Alberta. Thinking back to the trump card, it sounds a lot like some of the rhetoric we hear down south.

But there's a very important change in strategy that we took when we formed government, and that was to try to work more collaboratively with all of our stakeholders. You know, we had the climate leadership plan, where we had industry and indigenous groups and environmental groups all collaborating on: how can we as a province move forward and try to advance on some of those criticisms that we were facing? Now, members of not just the Official Opposition but indeed some of the smaller parties that are represented in this House have criticized the climate leadership plan in a lot of ways. That is their right, but it is also very concerning that there is a continued tendency to try to ignore some of the criticisms that we're facing. So I was very proud to see that we took that shift and we tried to work collaboratively to address some of the concerns that we are faced with.

Now Alberta is situated to become one of the greenest oil-producing economies anywhere in the world, and I'm very proud of that. But the fact that we are creating a greener economy is currently being hamstrung by the fact that that oil we produce, that is the source of the economic activity for so many in this province – indeed, thinking back to the lake, there was a family just down from us that was from Fort McMurray. They, of course, had a much longer drive. We drove an hour; they drove several every weekend to be there.

It's very concerning that for the barrel that we sell, we are seeing a massive price difference. For the same barrel produced down south from the same type of extraction, we're seeing a $15 to $20, sometimes higher, price difference between what we can sell our product for and what an American source can sell for. Now, historically that wasn't as big a concern. There wasn't too much activity. There was activity but not as much in the States. They certainly weren't producing as much oil as they were consuming, so we sold oil anyway. That led to our booming economy. Indeed, it was fairly good for us. But then fracking came along, and the Americans expanded their extraction. Now the group who used to be our biggest customer is our biggest competitor. They've prided themselves on becoming an energy exporter. You know, I can't blame them for that. That's fair enough, but it's something that we have to respond to.

Now, many people would say: well, we should simply refine all of our oil here. Indeed, I think that that is something that is good for us to look at, how we can refine our oil. But that's Bill 1; this is Bill 12.

I'm very happy to see that we're working towards a pipeline to the west, but I'm very, very concerned that our neighbours to the west are trying to block that. I have heard some people raise concerns, when I talk to some of the few contacts I have in B.C., about: "Well, how would you feel if the pipeline ran through your community? How would you feel if this was your backyard that you're talking about?" Now, I don't believe that you've been to my office, Madam Speaker, but I have a map of Spruce Grove on my office wall. On it I have marked where Trans Mountain runs through my community. So in response to that criticism, I am very happy to see that we have oil in every community in this province. We are impacted by it in every community in this province, and that is why I am so especially concerned that we have had our neighbours to the west trying to block our industry.

That gets me to why I support this bill, although hesitantly. I would have hoped that it wouldn't have been necessary, but I hope that all members in this Assembly can support this bill and get our product to market.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to speak to Bill 12 here at third reading. I along with my Alberta Party colleagues will proudly be supporting this bill, but I think it's important that we understand the context that got us to this point. I will say that it is a terrible shame that it has come to this, that in the great Confederation of Canada we need to be in a position where we pass legislation in this Assembly that could have the impact of hurting our neighbours. It's unfortunate because the reason that we need to do that is that our neighbours have chosen to take actions that hurt the people of Alberta. It's a real shame that it got to this point.

When I reflect on how it is that we got to this place and why it is that we find ourselves in this position, I can't help but think what it is that this government could have done sooner to ensure that we were in a better position, to ensure that it didn't come to this. This is a government that's moved forward very aggressively with an environmental platform, with what they call their climate leadership plan, and I truly think that they believe that by simply having a carbon tax in the province of Alberta, the majority of the people of British Columbia and the government of B.C. would go: "You know, good enough. I'll accept that grand bargain. I see that Alberta is taking action on climate change, so those of us in B.C. will accept the pipeline." I think that was meant to be this grand bargain, this great trade-off. But, of course, here we are. It obviously hasn't worked out that way.

The issue of climate change is a defining issue of our time. It's an issue that the people of Alberta and the people of B.C., certainly the government of Alberta and the government of B.C., both being New Democrat governments, ought to be aligned on. Alberta has taken action to reduce carbon emissions, to stimulate investment and innovation that's going to not only address carbon emissions, water use, land use, environmental impacts of oil and gas production in the province of Alberta, but those technologies are going to be the next generation that's going to diversify our economy. That's the idea behind what this government has been pushing. What is such a shame is that that aspect has not been shared with the people of British Columbia. The environmental benefits of shipping Alberta crude through British Columbia to world markets have not been aggressively marketed by this government, certainly not until recently. I would even argue that the environmental case has never really properly been made by this government to the people of British Columbia.

Sure, they talk about the economic benefits, and those are real. Those are real to the people of British Columbia. Those are real to indigenous communities all along the route, both in British Columbia and in Alberta. There is real, genuine partnership with indigenous peoples. Kinder Morgan did a remarkable thing in the work that they did with consultation with indigenous communities, and good on them. I think they've set a standard for what that consultation can and should look like. Is support unanimous? Of course it's not. I don't think you'll ever get unanimity on really any issue, certainly not an issue as contentious as this one, but I do think the process has been very good in terms of how indigenous peoples have been consulted. Again, that is not something this government has done much work to really emphasize.

Instead of talking up the environmental benefits of this pipeline, instead of talking up Alberta's track record as a responsible producer of oil and gas, as a responsible regulator – in fact, our regulator is world renowned. Alberta exports its regulatory expertise all around the world. This is something that we should be shouting from the rooftops, that Alberta should be the shining example that the rest of the world aspires to. Well, the good news is that Alberta is the shining example that the rest of the world aspires to. Our regulatory structure is far, far more advanced than the United States even and certainly in comparison to the countries whose crude we will be displacing on the market with Alberta oil sands crude, places like Venezuela, Nigeria. Their track records are abysmal. Their human rights records are just abhorrent. Alberta has the most environmentally responsible, the most socially responsible oil and gas industry in the whole world, and that is something we ought to be fiercely proud of in this province.

Unfortunately, it's not a story that's been told loudly enough or often enough by this government. As a result, we are in this position where British Columbia is retaliating against Alberta crude and, I guess, a pipeline that, by the way, has gone through I think one of if not the most extensive regulatory review processes in the history of these sorts of projects. The 157 conditions that were placed on the project I think speak to the comprehensive nature of that environmental review. We have gone through a review. The project has been approved by the national regulator, the National Energy Board. It has been approved by the federal government, and it should go ahead.

But for political reasons in terms of saving their own political hide, in terms of the fact that the B.C. NDP find themselves in a position to be propped up by just three lonely Green Party MLAs, we are in a position of having to potentially take action to make sure we maximize return to Albertans from our natural resources. That's what this bill is all about. That is why while I certainly do not wish that producers would need to suffer from having the powers that are invested in this bill be used, if that's what it comes to, well, so be it. That's what has to happen. But if that is what it comes to, I think it's very important that this government think very hard about what compensation industry would receive.

Now, I've talked with many, many people in industry, both in my constituency, just walking down the street, and talking formally with advocacy groups, part of the energy industry, and they have said to me in general terms: "We are supportive of Bill 12. We're onboard with this. We'd really rather it didn't have to come to this, but here we are." But there is some concern about whether there would be compensation paid should the government of Alberta dictate to whom and when and where and in which volumes Alberta product is shipped.

There's concern about the impact on existing shipper agreements. Would the companies, the shippers perhaps be exposed to legal liability? Certainly, there's a financial liability. Again, there's an understanding that we're in this thing together as Albertans and as Albertan companies and that if this is what it takes to get a pipeline built in the best interests of our province, well, so be it. That's what it takes. I would have liked to see in this bill or at least hear more definitively from the Minister of Energy or from the Premier specifically what the plan would be for compensation. We haven't heard that. I have heard more generalities, that perhaps, maybe, possibly something might happen, but I would have liked to have seen more specific detail on that.

The other piece is that when you have a piece of legislation as powerful as this, this power ought to be limited in some way. That is why I was so pleased that the government did in fact accept the Alberta Party amendment brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill – and thank you very much to her for stewarding that amendment through the Assembly – that added a sunset clause to this bill.

This bill will expire unless further renewed by the Legislative Assembly, and I believe that has given industry some assurance that these dramatic powers will not exist in perpetuity unless there is a legitimate need for them. We are in extreme times, and desperate and extreme times call for desperate measures. That's what this bill is. So it is good that we have been able to limit the power of government to exercise such powers to a relatively short period of time, until hopefully we bridge and get past this point that we find ourselves in and these powers are no longer needed. But to the degree that they would be, they're there and can be exercised.

We'll certainly be supporting this bill, especially given the acceptance of the government – and thank you again for working collaboratively across the aisle – to build in that sunset clause to improve the bill. I look forward to voting for Bill 12 at third reading.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Does anyone have any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to speak to support this very important bill for our province. Like many Albertans, I had a long career in the energy industry. I started, actually, as a receptionist for an oil company, a little one called Petrocorp. Like many oil companies, it expanded, changed its name.

I was really fortunate to meet a lot of very good people throughout my career. I moved from being a receptionist into business development, and that helped me parlay the rest of my career. I've been really lucky to work in many areas of the energy industry – drilling, operations, accounting, land management, even the oil sands – and the energy industry made my life better, like it has for many others in the province. Bill 12 is necessary to ensure that our energy products can reach their markets and that Albertans can continue to have careers that provide a good standard of living.

Bill 12 was introduced because we're dealing with a set of extraordinary circumstances in Alberta's history and Canada's history. The situation we want to solve with this bill will hopefully be resolved very quickly. In conversations with industry stakeholders there's wide support for the bill and the temporary actions it enables to ensure that Albertans get the maximum return on Alberta's natural resources. We're not getting that now, and it's having a negative impact on both government revenue and investment in our province.

I'm glad that both the government and caucuses in opposition recognize the urgency of acting to resolve our pipeline dispute with B.C. as soon as possible by working together to include a sunset clause amendment to this bill. The power to arbitrarily dictate to whom, where, and when industry can sell their products will only continue so long as the Legislature approves it to continue.

As a national priority improving Alberta's pipeline access to tidewater strengthens the economic security of our entire country. I'm proud to be part of an Assembly that has set aside partisanship to get this measure passed. This isn't just about one pipeline; it's about the ability of our nation to support provinces when they are contributing to our national prosperity.

In the wake of questions about Canada's commitment to global investment and trade and the measures that some in B.C. have taken to show that not all British Columbians oppose the pipeline, we have to reaffirm our commitment to being open for business in the 21st century. It's crucial to our future. Investor and customer confidence is key to ensuring that Alberta continues to attract capital and growth in oil and gas, renewable energy, and other sectors more broadly.

We have to simultaneously show that we are committed to our established energy industry and that we are continuing to innovate and diversify. Showing that Alberta is committed for the long run to defending our exports, whether in energy or other forms, will become increasingly critical to our ability to attract and retain investments in renewable energy, in artificial intelligence, in rural connectivity, and in other emerging infrastructures and sectors for future economic growth.

This bill is a prudent bipartisan measure, which I'm proud to support.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, I will recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I begin, I do want to open with some of the comments that came from the Member for Calgary-Elbow about the three lonely Green MLAs. While I strongly disagree with the policies that come from the B.C. Green Party, don't be so hard on a three-person caucus. [laughter] That got a laugh out of him.

Nonetheless, you know, the one thing I've reflected on during this session of the House is, really, the history of the NDP and where we've come from as a legacy. When I look back at 1932, when our party was founded under the previous banner of the CCF in Calgary, my hometown, in a uniting of the UFA and Labour, it was really coming with the heat of the Great Depression and a focus on sustainable resource development, whether that's growing off the land or it's mining or extracting our natural resources or our nonrenewable resources. It was always focused on very sustainable ways. When I think back to J.S. Woodsworth or M.J. Coldwell or any other previous leaders, like Tommy Douglas, I cannot see any of them standing in the way of this pipeline development.

So I find it unfortunate and very disrespectful to the legacy of our predecessors in this party for the B.C. NDP to be standing in the way of this development. You know, when we go across the country and we talk to our colleagues from the NDP in Saskatchewan or the NDP in Manitoba and hear the support that they have, they recognize the value that this has within the federal landscape and how we all are going to benefit from this.

When I look back at where we came from and the history side of things – you know, I remember when Peter Lougheed passed away. My parents were emotional. My parents are long-time New Democrat supporters, and it comes as far back as my great grandmother, who carried a century club membership because she donated $10 a year, and that was a lot of money at that time. Nonetheless, they got emotional at that time because Peter Lougheed did a lot of great things for this province. While they disagreed on some things, when it came to resource development, there was a lot of agreement here.

As we move forward with this policy and many of the policies that our government has done, we really take pride and celebrate the legacy that we got from Peter Lougheed and many of the accomplishments and things that he did. Unfortunately, that government lost its way after his departure. We stopped seeing investment in petrochemical diversification, and we saw a little bit of pullback. We stopped seeing money being put into the heritage savings trust fund. Fortunately, an NDP government came into place, and we've started to restart and kick-start a lot of those programs, including investing in petrochemicals, trying to diversify the economy in that way, investing in other sectors while recognizing the value of our oil and gas sector.

The one thing that I have to comment on. You know, we talk about our climate leadership plan and the initiatives that we've launched to really try to achieve social licence. When people say that it hasn't worked, that could not be further from the truth. The fact of the matter is that we had a lot of challenges with the narrative when we got into government. We saw previous governments that were not consulting with people across this country in the appropriate ways and sharing the story appropriately. While we were having a lot of our oil and gas companies like Kinder Morgan sharing the story in a very sustainable way, we saw a lot of bullying coming from previous governments. We didn't see the right message, and we weren't celebrating the leadership that we were seeing from our energy companies at that time.

The reality of it is that if you look at the national narrative on it, the narrative that we were getting from the previous Conservative governments around pipeline development was why they lost the last federal election, because Canadians rejected that narrative. And it's one of the reasons why we gained this election, because the previous government was not sharing the story appropriately.

If you look at the polls right now, every single news media – I hear about polls in relation to pipeline development and support for the pipeline – is saying that public opinion continues to go up. The reality of it is that it's because we have a government that is taking the environment seriously while developing resources. We have a government that understands the importance of social programs and social licences, who does amazing initiatives that were overlooked for many years, whether it's basically trying to solve the challenges we're having around payday lending or private members who are bringing forward legislation to allow women who are in domestic violence to break their leases.

The fact of the matter is that we have a government who cares about people and their well-being and is going to put policies in place while bringing policies in place to protect the environment while supporting resource development. People are taking our message very seriously, and that is why across this country we are continuing to see the polls go up and why the narrative is starting to shift.

The fact of the matter is that we have this very strong enabling piece of legislation, that I am very proud to support, that will continue to drive that narrative. If we have to use this, if we have to enact it, we will have a tremendous amount of support that's coming from across this country. The people of B.C. are going to look at this and say: this government, the Alberta government, has done so much for the environment, and our government has continued to stand in their way. That's why I'm proud to stand here and support this legislation, because I think it's a final tool. If we have to use it, we can.

You can already start seeing the narrative shift in B.C., and I really hope, if the B.C. government and their members are watching this, that they recognize that their people, the people in B.C., know this is important for them. They know that pipeline development is going to benefit jobs, that the First Nations are behind it, and that, you know, if we have to reluctantly go down a path to ensure that all Canadians can prosper from our resources, we will.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Now, I just wanted to, I guess, talk a little bit about this and maybe ask the member a couple of questions here. We're sitting here on May 16, I guess, and we're about to pass this Bill 12 that the government has been working on. This bill was brought forward on April 16. We've been sitting on this bill for a month now. Obviously, this is a bill of extreme importance. Obviously, I think everybody in here at least says that they believe that this pipeline is important to Alberta and important to Canada. This government, of course, brings this bill forward only a month ago, and we spend a month here, and we work on lots of other things. This bill could have been passed long ago, so I'm kind of wondering if the member could maybe explain a little bit along those lines as far as: why?

Of course, we had the Speech from the Throne on March 8. We started in the Legislature here on March 12. So there was even a month before that that we were sitting in this Legislature where we could have been working on this bill. We could have had this bill passed, probably, by March 14 had the government brought it forward, but of course here we are, sitting here on May 16, two weeks from the deadline that Kinder Morgan has put on this pipeline decision. If this bill is that important that we could actually use this to encourage British Columbia to stop their plan to, you know, stop this pipeline, then why wouldn't we be working on this two months ago? Why would we not have this passed already? Why would we not already be able to use this to work on this pipeline?

Now, I know that some other members on the government side have suggested that we have belligerent words on our side and that this needed to be handled differently. Of course, we remember here not too long ago a dispute that we had with Saskatchewan regarding licence plates on work sites. Now, just reading from a couple of news articles, as I said: on Thursday Alberta again threw down the gauntlet, saying that Saskatchewan has until next week to reverse the decision. The Minister of Economic Development and Trade warned about other unnamed consequences. He also went on to say that Brad Wall needs to smarten up. So this government sits here and says that we use harsh words on this side of the House, which isn't even true, and then we have a situation where when it comes to dealing with Saskatchewan over the licence plates issue, this government made all sorts of threats. They made all sorts of accusations and, you know, called people names. Of course, you know what happened one month later? The problem was solved.

But when it comes to dealing with their friends and allies in British Columbia, the NDP government there, and their friends and allies in Ottawa, the Liberal government there, it seems like they've got velvet gloves on and they just can't say anything or do anything to offend them. Of course, when it comes to Saskatchewan, there's no problem. There's probably been no province that's been a greater ally on the pipeline dispute than Saskatchewan.

I just want the member to kind of explain a little bit of the thought process that goes on over there when they say that they really care about this pipeline issue. We've been sitting here for over two months in this Legislature, and we're in the process here now where we might be actually getting to pass this bill today. All I can say is: about time. About time.

Now, another thing is that when we're talking about harsh words – we heard multiple times the government talking about inflicting pain on the people of B.C. with this turn-off-the-taps legislation. That sounds pretty harsh, those kind of words: inflicting pain on the people of B.C. But the problem is that it isn't the people of B.C. that's the problem; it's the government of B.C. that's the problem, the NDP government of B.C. It's not the people of B.C. Those are our friends and neighbours, but we have a government there that's doing everything it can to obstruct what's best for Alberta and for Canada. Of course, we also have a Prime Minister in Ottawa that has the power to make this go through, and he's doing nothing for us.

Madam Speaker, I just wanted to have the opportunity to have the hon. member respond to some of these things as far as why we're sitting here two months after we started the Legislature. We're finally passing this legislation. We're two weeks before the deadline that Kinder Morgan has put out. I don't understand why we've delayed this long with something so important. Again, it's about time. Let's get this thing done and get this thing passed and then see what we can do about getting this pipeline to happen.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise and speak today regarding my support for the Trans Mountain project, that would benefit my constituency of Red Deer-North immensely. Fellow members, my city of Red Deer engages many of the support aspects for our oil and gas industry. With a population of over 100,000 this pipeline would mean tremendous growth and breathe a strong sigh of relief for Red Deerians as well as all Albertans. Red Deer has been home to many of the oil and gas service companies for many years. It is our mandate as legislators within this Chamber to strive to support our oil and gas industry as it has provided so much to our great province for decades.

Supporting the Trans Mountain pipeline would result in a stronger economy for Red Deer as well. It means that families can continue to provide the necessities as well as some of the extras for their households. It means that people can breathe easier, embracing the economic recovery that provides peace of mind. This pipeline enables families to put food on their tables and helps regain the momentum that the recent downturn had impeded.

Madam Speaker, a strong economy means that people are working and supporting other industries. When we are in a position of strong economic stance, we see retail and hospitality flourish. The entrepreneurial spirit that our great province was built on becomes alive again and knows no limits. With the recent degree-granting status of our Red Deer College, we will see our future Albertans seeking the education that reinforces the strength of our workforce both within the oil and gas industry as well as the peripheral. This pipeline means growth.

Members, it was three years ago that we initiated the momentum to diversify the Albertan economy. By investing in infrastructure, we created an environment that segued to our current position. The QE II corridor is now safer for our Albertans to travel on and to transport product. The conditions are becoming optimal to stand together as a province and as legislators and to do what we can to bring this pipeline to fruition. Our progress cannot be capped because we do not want to cap the potential for our Albertans, our economy, or the realm of prosperity that this project represents.

While I realize that this speaks to the potential for all Albertans, it is my duty and my privilege to bring to the forefront what the Trans Mountain pipeline means to my Red Deerians. Madam Speaker, Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, is about protecting the jobs and livelihoods of thousands of Albertans and Canadians, and we know that when Alberta works, Canada works. Our government will do whatever it takes to build this pipeline and to get top dollar in return for the oil and gas products that are owned by all Albertans.

Madam Speaker, I fully support Bill 12 and hope all in the House support it as well. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Northern Hills.

Mr. Kleinstaubert: Yes. Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's nice to have an opportunity here this afternoon to speak to Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. Through Bill 12 our government is demonstrating that we are standing up for Albertans, and by doing that, we are standing up for a healthy Canadian energy sector, including all working women and men that are employed in it.

Historically speaking, our biggest customer for Alberta oil and gas has been the United States, but in recent years it has shifted dramatically. At this point the United States is not only our biggest customer; they're also our biggest competitor. As a result, oil and gas resources that are sold to other markets from this province are being sold at a discount, and the spread between western Canada select and WTI, west Texas intermediate, is costing energy producers in this province, and it is costing the province in potential royalties that we could be collecting. I find this discrepancy unfortunate, and we must find additional ways to get our natural resources to foreign markets.

That is why our government supports the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion. We firmly believe that the twinning of this pipeline project will help oil and gas producers get better value for their products and that we as Canadians will all share in the benefits derived from these resources. Passing Bill 12 will ensure that the interests of Albertans are optimized before authorizing the export of natural gas, crude oil, or refined fuels from Alberta. This legislation would give our government authority, if necessary, to require any company exporting energy products from Alberta to require a licence. It is legislation that is centred on making sure that government has a series of mechanisms, if necessary, to protect the best interests of Albertans.

I'd like to take a moment to talk about some of the feedback that I've heard from constituents in Calgary-Northern Hills. Through my travels, events, and door-knocking this topic has turned up frequently in conversations. In fact, I can think of a few constituents specifically keenly interested in shutting off the taps and sending a message to other areas of the country that oil and gas resources are important and that we all depend on them to heat our houses, to fuel our vehicles, and to power our aircraft. Then there are the petrochemicals and plastic products we use every day. Madam Speaker, I've tried to go a day without using a plastic cup or plastic cutlery, wearing polyester clothes. It's not easy. These products are literally everywhere.

Bill 12 has not only received the endorsement of many constituents in Calgary-Northern Hills, but I'd like to take a moment to read an endorsement from the mayor of Calgary, Mayor Naheed Nenshi. He said:

I'm strongly behind Premier Notley on whatever she does to push this. I'm also calling on the federal government and their jurisdiction in this matter and ensure that we don't hold up the economy of all of Canada – to make sure that we have

... safe, clean Canadian energy – for political reasons in our province.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is about being prepared for action should it be necessary. As many have said before me, the power of this legislation should not be taken lightly. We must defend our rights under the British North America Act to ensure the best possible value for our resources. These are resources that belong to all Albertans. We need to defend the public services that all working families have come to rely on.

With that, I'll be supporting Bill 12 and hope that every member of this Assembly will join me in their support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Obviously, we are running a bit short on time, so my comment will be simply to say that I couldn't be gladder that this is a step that our government is taking and a tool that we're willing to give ourselves.

With that, I think I will just request unanimous consent from the House to move to one-minute bells.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure to rise and close debate at third reading of Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act. I want to start by thanking members on all sides of this Assembly who have spoken in favour of this bill. It's never a great day when you have to bring legislation like this forward, when you're forced to defend workers and families across Alberta and indeed Canada from unfair and misinformed attacks aimed at their industry and the jobs that so many Canadians depend on. It's a sad state of affairs that even though we followed the rules and have led the way for Canada on climate change and responsible development, those who choose to ignore the rules and ignore the facts can continue to harass and obstruct responsible energy development that is so vital to Canada. It's heartening to see that as representatives of the people of Alberta we are all on the same page, that defending the interests of Albertans and Canadians is more important than partisan politics.

I think we can agree that Alberta needs to have this legislation ready in its tool box in the event that it's needed, and I think we can all agree that we hope it is not needed because we all know that it may cause some temporary hardship for industry, for the workers they employ, and for the communities where they are based here in Alberta. But as I've said before, we've been in discussions with industry from the beginning. They understand its importance and how it can help ensure the long-term well-being of the energy industry not just here in Alberta but in Canada. We are all aware of the continued obstructionist tactics, and we are also aware that we are losing significant dollars every day into our economy here in Canada. With the passing of Bill 12, we will have a powerful tool at the ready that will ensure that the interests of Albertans are optimized.

Once again, let me be clear. This would give the government authority to only if necessary require anyone exporting energy products from Alberta to acquire a licence. Companies will not automatically be required to apply for an export licence. They will only be required to do so if I as Minister of Energy determine it is in the public interest. The criteria we've discussed over and over in the bill, and it is quite clear. We've outlined in earlier debate the terms and conditions for export licences that would be established. It's also been established that there is some leeway in setting those terms and conditions. This would be necessary in dealing with a wide variety of potential situations in a timely manner. The Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act also outlines the steps that would be taken if anyone fails to comply with the requirements of this act and future regulations or terms of the conditions of a licence.

If we do have to use this legislation, we will have strong measures to enforce it. But as I've said to many industry members – they've told us that they support the objectives of this legislation and want to comply with any export regulations should restrictive measures become necessary because they know, as we all know, that this is for the greater good of our industry.

I want to again thank the members for taking part in discussing this legislation in a constructive debate and for suggesting amendments for a sunset clause. As I said during Committee of the Whole, this looks reasonable to me, the amendment, and we're happy to move on and vote for this bill today. It's not just about one pipeline or exports in one direction. This legislation is about being prepared to take action in all directions should it be necessary to defend Albertans, our resources, and the economic future of Canada.

With that, Madam Speaker, I would like to close debate on Bill 12.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing as we have passed a very important bill and made some good progress today, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:48 p.m.]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 16: Mr. Feehan]

The Acting Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. It's great to have an opportunity to rise to talk about Bill 16. Bill 16 is an interesting piece of legislation that was added on at the last minute, if you would. What I find most interesting about Bill 16 is that it shows without a doubt two main issues: one is the fear of the NDP government of the United Conservative Party, which we'll talk about in a minute; second is the NDP's tendency when it comes to bills associated with our election system to try to, if you would, stack the deck, which we've talked about many times when the government has brought forward legislation in this area.

First, let's talk about why this bill shows the NDP's concern about facing a United Conservative Party in the next election, so concerned, in fact, Madam Speaker, that they have to rush a piece of legislation to the floor in the spring sitting because they're so nervous.

Now, my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and I as well as the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, amongst others who are not MLAs, had the privilege of sitting on the unity discussion group and working to bring both the great parties, the Wildrose Party and the Progressive Conservative Party, together to be able to create this United Conservative Party that we now see here in the House, of course, united. We also see it united across the province. In fact, Madam Speaker, I'm proud to tell you it's the second-largest political party in the country, the first-largest political party in the province, the most popular political party by a long shot in the entire country of Canada if polls are to be believed. We know what polls can be for, but there is no doubt that the excitement around the United Conservative Party is very real.

But long before we were able to get there, some of us had to go in a room and had to overcome some significant legal hurdles to be able to make this happen. The reality is that the law was not very friendly or able to accommodate political parties coming together in the province of Alberta. Federally it was, which we saw, of course, with the Reform Party and the PC Party. They were able to unite because the law was able to do that. But the law inside Alberta did not allow for it.

Interestingly enough, though, when we were going through that process, we recognized that the way around that was to have all three parties fall under one leader, one executive, and be under the control of one unit. And that's how the United Conservative Party, the Wildrose Party, and the PC Party are now because that was the way that we had to deal with the legal circumstance around that.

Now, what that would allow for, Madam Speaker – under the last law that this government brought forward in regard to election issues, they capped the spending of political parties at $2 million per writ period for a party. There are different rates for the constituency associations, and I don't think we need to talk about that today. But the way that we used to be able to bring our parties together would have allowed us to be able to spend $2 million for the Wildrose Party, $2 million for the Progressive Conservative Party, and $2 million for the United Conservative Party.

Now, my colleagues and I, the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and I and our colleagues inside the unity discussions, recognized that that would be against the spirit of the law, a law that we voted for and supported inside this Assembly. As such, as the authors of the agreement that brought these parties together, we made a determination to put into the agreement that we would respect the spirit of the law. Only one cap would be spent despite the fact that we control three political parties. Now, that's in the agreement in principle. It's been signed by both leaders of the legacy parties that brought it together and by the current leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. Let's also be clear, Madam Speaker. The easiest way to have dealt with this would have been to let those parties merge together and move forward because that's what we've been able to accomplish anyway.

Now, sometime over the last few months somebody over on the NDP side – it just dawned on them finally that we might be able to spend $6 million in the next election. They're a little bit behind us on that process, but they had a look at it and they realized: oh, these guys may be able to spend $6 million. So they panicked and reached out to us. We said: "Whoa, whoa. It's okay. We've put it in this agreement, and we don't have any intention of breaking this agreement. You know, it's there. It's written down. It's signed." But they started to panic. They started to look at the fundraising numbers, probably the polls that show them 30-35 points behind right now and went: "Oh, my. What if these guys actually spent $6 million? Our law didn't work."

Now, that's fair. It's fair. That's why the unity group made sure to put in the agreement that that cannot happen because we want to honour the spirit of the law. The problem comes, then, Madam Speaker, though, is that the easiest way to fix that would have allowed these entities to finally merge instead of creating a ridiculous law to continue on to keep them as separate entities and the extra complications that come with managing that, et cetera.

The fact is, Madam Speaker, that despite the NDP's biggest wishes and their hopes, I'm sure, last year these political parties came together. Right-of-centre political movements, free-enterprise political movements in this province have united. The majority of Albertans support that side of the spectrum. I know it makes them very, very nervous.

But to then try to just do one little piece of the puzzle and make sure that we can't spend $6 million, all of which we've already agreed not to, and not allow those political parties to come together, shows exactly what is wrong with this government, and that is that they continue to bring legislation in regard to our election system to this House that at its core is often designed just to stack the deck for this government. That is how desperate they are right now and how scared they are about what will happen in 11 and a half months, when they have to go to their boss, Albertans, who they have completely neglected in their time in office. They have to go back to those Albertans, who are going to probably send this government packing, Madam Speaker. Then they continue to bring forward legislation to try to make it easier for them, and in this case they could just allow these political parties to come together, but they can't do it.

It goes back to the very first time that they brought a bill to this House, actually the second time. The first time was about corporate and union donations, which, of course, we supported, but the second time they came to this House and through a whole committee process tried to get my constituents and your constituents to pay for their campaign expenses. Do you remember that, Madam Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: They were stacking the deck.

Mr. Nixon: Stacking the deck. They know it. That's what they were doing, and when they get called on stacking the deck, they finally have to cave, but that's what they were trying to do. Now, it's a good thing that the Official Opposition was there to be able to catch them trying to stack the deck.

We saw in this House a motion to bring forward a new Election Commissioner with some legitimate questions from the opposition around salary and different types of things that certainly appear secretive. What did the government do, Madam Speaker? They brought in time allocation for the second time in their mandate. The only other time that they brought in time allocation was during Bill 6, when they were absolutely being destroyed politically for that ridiculous piece of legislation, but the second time they do it, after all these years, is something to do with elections. Over and over – and I'm sure some of my colleagues will talk about it tonight – this government's main focus is stacking the deck.

Mr. Coolahan: Stacking the deck?

Mr. Nixon: Stacking the deck. The government, you hear them, Madam Speaker. They're talking about stacking the deck because they know that that's what they're trying to do. If they were not trying to do that, why would they not just accept the fact that these parties have come together, allow them to merge? Of course, we will have to look at changing that law if we're fortunate enough to form government in a year to allow that to take place because it's pretty silly for it not to.

But this government, in a mad panic to make sure that we would honour our agreement, which is fine, brought forward a more complicated way of doing it. The easiest way to do that would have been to allow these parties to become one entity to make sure that they all fit under the cap. Instead, they bring forward a bill that has what appears like other loopholes for different parties but not for the Conservative Party, that is only focused on making sure that the United Conservative Party can't spend $2 million for each of its legacy parties plus itself. It draws all this stuff out in a big lengthy process to be able to make sure that that works legally, when all they had to do was change one clause in the law that would allow the Wildrose Party, the PC Party, and the United Conservative Party to join together. They're stacking the deck. That's all this government can do.

You know, I lost respect for this government a long time ago, Madam Speaker, but the number one thing that caused me to lose respect for this government is when they tried to get Albertans to pay for their campaign expenses. It's one of the most shameful things that this government ever did.

Mr. Schmidt: I can't believe we lost your respect then.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely disappointing. I mean, I know the minister of postsecondary is heckling how much he wishes that could have happened, but it didn't, sir. We caught you. It never happened. We got ya. We got ya. You know, it was worth a try, I guess. I think it's kind of disappointing that you would try to do that – through you, Madam Speaker, to the minister of postsecondary – to Albertans.

An Hon. Member: Not a problem.

Mr. Nixon: And, of course, the Minister of Municipal Affairs now wants to chime in about his great hope to make sure that taxpayers can pay for his campaign expenses. This side of the House would not accept them stacking the deck. On that one we managed to win, Madam Speaker. We managed to win one for the good guys. And sadly those wins have . . . [interjection] The minister of agriculture right now. Maybe he's hoping right now that they'll get another chance to get his campaign expenses paid for. Not under my watch, sir. Not under my watch, sir. Not under my watch, sir.

Just because you have a majority, minister of agriculture, does not mean that you should try to take taxpayer dollars to pay for your campaign expenses. That would not make any sense.

The Acting Speaker: We were off to a good start. If we could go through the chair, please. If we could respect the speaker, I would appreciate it. Thank you.

Hon. member, please continue.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It was getting hard to hear you. I'm glad that you were able to get the government back in control.

An Hon. Member: Because you're so loud . . .

Mr. Nixon: Already, Madam Speaker. That's the minister of postsecondary. Through you, Madam Speaker: he can't even obey your ruling from the chair.

An Hon. Member: Education.

Mr. Nixon: Or Minister of Education. Sorry. He can't even obey your ruling from the chair. The minister of postsecondary. Can't do it. You know why? This government's instinct is to not follow the rules, and it's to try to stack the deck to make things easier for them. That's what this government does. They want to laugh about it. I don't think it's funny. I think it's absolutely appalling that that's what this government has tried to do. And they continue to do it.

It gets even worse. There have been about five pieces of legislation associated with our election system since this government came to power. Each and every time that they have brought a bill, each and every time, Madam Speaker – it's shocking – they've had to come back by the next sitting to fix the mistakes they made with the first bill on our election system.

In their desperation and their blind run just to be able to try to make it easier for them, just to try to make it easier for them, they end up making terrible mistakes. Then they have to bring forward extra PAC legislation that they should have got right the first time.

Mr. McIver: Lots of mulligans.

Mr. Nixon: Mulligans. Over and over. That's exactly right. I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays's description of mulligans is a great description. That's what we get from this government.

So I will encourage my caucus to support Bill 16 because, as I said, Madam Speaker, our intent is only to spend one cap and follow the spirit of the law, which we voted for in this Assembly, which we signed an agreement on amongst our parties to make sure it would happen.

Ms Payne: How about the grassroots guarantee . . .

Mr. Nixon: Well, you know, the Associate Minister of Health wants to heckle about grassroots guarantees. Well, let me ask through you, Madam Speaker, to the minister: how good is the NDP's grassroots capability when they go and try to take money from that grassroots to pay for their campaign expenses? That's what this government did. That's one of the legacies of this government: trying to manipulate the system to be able to get their campaign expenses paid, trying to manipulate the system to pay for their campaign expenses.

And you can tell how sensitive they are about that issue today, Madam Speaker, because of how much noise you're getting from this side of the House because of the fact that they won't listen to your ruling from the chair and stay calm during a debate and allow us to have the floor when we talk. They are disappointed that we're pointing out the ridiculousness of their position, the fact that they want to bring legislation here just to manipulate things or to protect themselves but not make it fair for all parties.

The minister should stand up and explain why she would go through the most complicated process to be able to deal with this situation rather than let these three legacy parties come together.

At the end of the day, Madam Speaker, it does not matter. We figured out the way to handle this under the law. This group across the way will be facing a united, free-enterprise vote in all of their constituencies.

An Hon. Member: Not in Strathmore-Brooks . . .

Mr. Nixon: That's going to happen no matter what. It will happen in Strathmore-Brooks, too. There'll be a United Conservative candidate. But Strathmore-Brooks doesn't exist anymore, minister of postsecondary, so try to follow along.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members. We are in second reading. Can we please respect the speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Again, in closing, you have a government who has brought forward a bill because they're scared the United Conservative Party is outfundraising them. They know we have more votes than they do, and they're in a panic. That's fine, but we already agreed to do this. Instead of dealing with it in the easiest and most efficient way to get it done, they went with an extremely complicated way to still try to punish their political opponents. It is absolutely appalling and disgusting that the NDP continues to do this with our election system, that they continue to try to manipulate it to their advantage.

Madam Speaker, I predict through you to all of them that it will not work and that the time for this government is coming to an end. They better enjoy it because soon they will have to go to the doors, and Albertans will look at them and say: we don't accept the ridiculousness of what you've done, particularly the fact that you tried to manipulate our election system, and as such, we're going to send you packing.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Are there any members wishing to close debate?

Seeing none, I will now call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 7:46 p.m.]

[Fifteen minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Seeing none, I will call the question.

Bill 11 Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Chair: Are there any members wishing to offer any comments, questions, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to speak in committee on Bill 11, Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. The bill proposes to amend the Lobbyists Act to better regulate lobbying activity and make it more transparent. It prohibits lobbyists from giving money, gifts, or other benefits to public office holders that would result in them contravening the Conflicts of Interest Act. It requires that lobbying activity be reported regardless of who is asking for the meeting or who made the first call. That's progress. It requires individuals or groups that lobby government on behalf of their employer or business to register the activity after 50 hours of lobbying in a year. That 50-hour reporting threshold will include preparation time. That's half the time that it was prior to this, and only face-to-face meetings were reportable in the past.

It requires lobbyists who are paid as consultants by organizations to file with the registry within 10 days of starting their efforts. That's progress. It prohibits contingency fee payment arrangements that allow consultant lobbyists to be paid only when they're successful. Grassroots communications will now be included in the definition of lobbying to reflect a lot of lobbying practices currently. It exempts indigenous elders who approach government officials to advocate for their communities from having to report such actions.

Bill 11 does not change the rule for lobbyists hired by outside clients. They're still automatically required to register regardless of the time spent on an issue, and the law requires them to register within 10 days. Information about lobbyists is posted publicly on a registry maintained by Alberta's office of the ethics and conflict-of-interest commissioner.

The concerns I have are that it's still got some major deficiencies that relate to the need for a stronger code of conduct for lobbyists. It isn't clear and should be explicit what an acceptable code of conduct for lobbyists is. Other jurisdictions have this. It identifies strategies and behaviour and incentives and disincentives that are appropriate for a responsible relationship with government.

If the aim of the legislation is to enhance transparency, why does it not compel lobbyists to disclose the names of those they met, the topics of discussion, the time, date, and location of the meeting, and other relevant information? This could have gone to a greater length to provide all of us, including citizens, with the certainty and the accountability for some of these lobbying activities.

A case in point was the tobacco lobbying, that I raised in question period this week, where in spite of having international agreement on prohibiting lobbying behind closed doors, it became evident that there was lobbying by tobacco lobbyists, including friends of the Premier, that are meeting behind closed doors and are now going to be, hopefully, addressed in a more transparent way. I look forward to seeing the evidence for that.

A final concern is that we should be capturing lobbying done by front groups on behalf of other Conservative – other commercial interests.

Mr. Fildebrandt: A Freudian slip?

Dr. Swann: A little Freudian slip there. Are you getting a lot of lobbying from the Conservatives over there? Yeah. It must be a problem.

More transparency I guess is better if we're talking about lobbying. Albertans deserve to know who, when, where, and what is being discussed.

Apart from those, I think the bill does make progress. There's no question that this is better than we've seen in the past. It's incremental. One would like to have seen a little more dramatic commitment to some of the issues that I've raised, including a code of conduct, but on balance this is progress, and I will be supporting it.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 11?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments or amendments to be offered in regard to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Before I begin, I've already provided an amendment to the table officers. If it could be distributed before I begin speaking.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 6, Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I'll speak to the bill in general, but I'll also speak to the amendment that is before members right now. Members will note that I've distributed this amendment to the different caucuses in advance in genuine hope that this is an amendment we can pass to improve upon this bill and improve the lives of many Albertans as we move into the post cannabis prohibition era.

Now, I apologize for my voice right now. As we discuss cannabis, I am technically on drugs. I'm full of cough medicine right now, a little woozy, but I've thought long and hard about this bill in advance, so it is still my pleasure to speak to it.

We are finally coming to the end of at least part of the destructive war on drugs. The war on drugs has disproportionately hurt and targeted minorities and people of colour and various indigenous people and different vulnerable people in our society and even more so in the United States. The war on drugs takes very different forms on different drugs, and we can certainly debate the merits of it at large, but we are in this bill debating the merits of ending the war on drugs for cannabis.

Now, I hate to admit when this government does something good, but I'm going to give them credit where credit is due. As the federal government moves us into the postprohibition era, the government of Alberta has, while it's not perfect, I think actually led the way nationally on the best retail and administrative system for pot. They have embraced the free market. They've embraced the power of free enterprise and decided that it is not good to follow the advice of the Alberta Federation of Labour and set up bong bureaucracies. They've decided that pot should be in the private sector. If Bob Marley was alive today, I'm sure he would sing a song about: privatize it. I've waited a while to say that.

I'm going to give credit where credit is due. There's a lot of very good in this system. I think the main exception to that would be online sales. I've talked with some members of the government outside this Chamber. It's just not going to work. You can go online. Some of you are probably going to be moving around your computers a lot tonight on the less interesting parts of debate, when you're all done listening to what I have to say, and if you want to buy pot online right now, you can do so from your seat in the Legislature. Now, I haven't done it, at least that I've been caught for. I haven't done it, and I wouldn't tell you if I did. But it's not very difficult. You can go online right now. It's pretty easy to get it. I've got friends who have done it without too much trouble. You know, flavoured tobacco is illegal to buy in Alberta, period, online or in stores, and I'll let you in on a secret. You can get it online. And it's illegal.

So if your goal is to somehow establish an online monopoly, it's not going to work. It's going to cost a ton of money to set up this bureaucracy, and regardless of who's in power in a few years, it's going to get scrapped. So continue to embrace the power of free enterprise. If we're going to snuff out the black market in cannabis, the only way to do that is really by being more competitive than it and embracing free enterprise. That is the advice I offer to the government, which I'm sure they'll take.

Outside of the online monopoly that they seek to establish, it is otherwise a very good program that they've put forward. It is really opening up new markets in Alberta for people producing and selling. If you just look at the number of stores popping up just in Calgary alone, it's incredible. In my constituency is Wheatland county. Some have proposed they rename it Weedland county with all the growing that's starting to come up. It is really a boon for business, and Alberta is actually going to lead the way nationally. It's a real growth opportunity. No pun intended.

But there is a part of this bill that needs to be addressed, and we have an opportunity to help some people here enter the legal licensed market and participate in licensed establishments. Now, broadly I do believe that for laws that are changed to make something that once was illegal no longer illegal, we should provide amnesty or a pardon for those people. You know, when the Wheat Board monopoly was abolished – the Member for Drumheller-Stettler went to jail for the crime of selling wheat. Wheat, not weed. For the crime of selling wheat, he went to jail. Now, it is completely crazy that someone went to jail for the crime of selling their own wheat to someone besides the government.

Dr. Turner: He was smuggling it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: He was a smuggler. He was the pirate of the South Saskatchewan River.

Dr. Starke: There's a song about that.

Mr. Fildebrandt: There is a song about that, and I think it's about him.

Once that Wheat Board monopoly was abolished, Prime Minister Harper provided him and some of his, as he calls them, jailmates a pardon. It was the right thing to do. It was no longer against the law. It was an unjust law to begin with, but it was no longer against the law, and they should no longer be treated as criminals with any kind of record. That's the right thing to do.

As we move, as is expected at least, by July 1, to end cannabis prohibition, it will no longer be a criminal offence to possess small amounts of marijuana, but there are still people who currently will carry criminal records for the rest of their lives. They may have been caught with a joint at some point, as a teenager or in their '20s or at some point of their life, as I'd guess some people in this Chamber may have been at some point. The Prime Minister has admitted to smoking it at some point, but he doesn't require a pardon because I guess he's not been charged for it.

But people are carrying around a record for the rest of their lives, and I think it would be a great move forward for these people if the Minister of Justice were to call on her federal counterpart to provide a general amnesty or pardon for Canadians who have been convicted of possession of small amounts of marijuana, not dealers, not large amounts, not for hard drugs, just for marijuana in small possession. There are a lot of people who are not real criminals who have been tagged by this.

You know, can we imagine someone carrying around a criminal record because they got caught in a speakeasy in the 1920s? No. We've moved on from that. So I think it's time we give these people a pardon and some justice so that they can move on with their lives. A pardon on a criminal record is a federal matter, but what we can do here within provincial jurisdiction and within the scope of this bill is with regard to licensing.

The current legislation allows the AGLC, or AGL Ceci, to determine who can actually have a licence to own and operate these businesses. They also actually require licences for people just to work in them. That's very interesting. As far as I know – someone can correct me if I'm wrong – you don't require a licence to work at Co-op Liquor or Solo Liquor. You know, you need a licence to own the business, but you don't need a licence to work in it. But this is actually going to . . . [interjections] Pardon?

Some Hon. Members: You need ProServe.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh. ProServe, yes, to actually serve.

But in a store I don't think they're going to be smoking over the counter. At least, I don't think that's the plan under the regulations. If they're just buying in the store and they're not consuming it on the spot, I think it's more akin to a liquor store than an actual bar.

Now, I'm actually okay with the AGLC being able to green-light and red-light some people for this. I think if people have been actual drug dealers, they should not be in this business. But if they've simply been pegged with a small possession charge at some point in their life – they got caught with a joint – it is now very possible that the AGLC, under the current legislation, will disallow them from being allowed to work in these stores. I don't think that's fair. I don't think that's just. They're being held criminally responsible for something that is no longer a crime. They will have already paid for it, but because they're carrying around that record, they're not allowed to get a job in a legal and licensed facility.

I think it is the reasonable and the compassionate thing that we allow for there to be an appeal process. The amendment that I've put before members of this House leaves all of the legislation intact but simply adds a power to the Minister of Finance, responsible for the AGLC, that in the event that the commission, the AGLC, denies someone the right to work in these stores – I'm not talking about the right to own and operate one of these stores. This bill doesn't get into it, so I'm not able to bring that amendment forward, but simply for regular blue-collar employees working in these stores. If the AGLC under the current rules decides that someone cannot work in that store, they will have an avenue for appeal. They can make a written appeal to the minister responsible for the AGLC, and the minister will have it in his discretion whether or not to allow this person to work in one of these stores.

The intent of this, now, is that it would be at the discretion of the minister. I've consulted with Parliamentary Counsel. We were not able to spell out exactly under what conditions because that gets into areas of federal jurisdiction. But the minister would have the ability, in regulations and in his own decisions, to decide . . .

An Hon. Member: Or her.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Or her, but it's currently a he.

. . . to allow someone to still work in one of these stores. He would have some discretion there as a form of appeal. I would expect that, in good judgment, if someone has been charged and convicted of trafficking, if they've been involved in other crimes related to drugs, be it violent crime or hard drugs or property crimes, all of these things, then I think that request and that appeal should be denied. But if someone simply got caught with a joint at 20 years old, I don't think they should be told that they can't get a job. I don't think that they should have to carry that around for the rest of their lives when it is no longer illegal.

This would be the equivalent of someone who got caught with a bottle of hooch in the 1920s, and they could no longer work in a liquor store when Prohibition ended. It just wouldn't be fair. It's not compassionate. This is an industry that is just starting off in Alberta, and we're getting off to a great start. This government has made – again, I hate to say it, but you guys have made in aggregate some very good decisions on how to proceed with the administration of cannabis in the postprohibition era.

I'd encourage all members to support this amendment. I'm very happy to discuss it with members if they have any questions. I think that this is a very nonideological issue. This is simply being compassionate and being reasonable to people who are going to be saddled by something from the past that is no longer a crime.

I thank you, members, for your time, and I ask that you give consideration to this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Dr. Swann: Well, Madam Chair, this is an extraordinary day. I find myself once again agreeing with the member. We may have to change our names over here to the Valhalla party. But I think that I heard a compassionate Conservative speak just now. It made eminent sense to me that we give more discretion to the minister. These are difficult, interesting, challenging, and unprecedented times. All across this country we're going to be making decisions about cannabis, and particularly for those who've been involved with a drug that was illegal until this year, it carries all kinds of baggage for people, their employment, their ability to work in the industry, which they may know very well having had some past experience which wasn't exactly legal, people who have expertise, who have lived experience that can be helpful in the industry.

This is really, in many ways, recognizing the minister with the discretion that a minister should have to make decisions that may vary somewhat from the standard policy but in circumstances that require it to make different decisions and intervene in lives in ways that would be helpful and constructive from an employment point of view and a mental health point of view and indeed a legal point of view.

So I find myself in support of this amendment. I don't think there's anything to be lost. I think that the member has rightly identified an area in legislation that just hasn't maybe been considered fully. This would add another dimension to it in which, obviously, the minister would have discretion, would consult potentially with others, and is in a position to then make decisions on individual cases that would be in the interests of not only that individual, their family, perhaps their community but also in the broader public interest.

I'll be supporting this amendment, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the amendment from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I would like to begin by stating that I appreciate the thought that he's given this particular issue. I certainly recognize that the enforcement of laws around cannabis has been shown to statistically have targeted more individuals from marginalized communities than from the mainstream or, shall we say – let's be honest – the Caucasian community. That is something that I think we need to be aware of and that I'm certainly hoping the federal government is considering. As the member has suggested, the federal government should be considering providing pardons or exemptions for individuals who have been convicted under laws which are now going to be taken off the books and indeed recognizing that those laws have impacted individuals from marginalized communities more than from others.

It would be my hope, particularly as we work towards issues like reconciliation with indigenous peoples in Canada, and certainly as the federal government has indicated its intent – it recognized this year the International Decade for People of African Descent and has made other efforts towards trying to balance some of these issues – that it would be considering the impact these laws have had on these communities and, indeed, with legalization of cannabis would be moving to help redress the problems that have been caused for those communities by the application of those laws disproportionately.

That said, in regard to this particular amendment we believe that the requirements that have been put in place so far for cannabis workers are important to ensure that the product is distributed safely and legally and to achieve the goals of keeping cannabis out of the hands of children, those under the age of 18. Those requirements are not subjective. They are: a minimum age of 18; a completion of the mandatory SellSafe training, which will be related to the ProServe training we were discussing earlier but for cannabis; and passing a records check.

Now, of course we believe that it is important for individuals to have recourse if they feel that they've been excluded when they should not have been, and the AGLC is well suited for that task. That's why they were given the job of overseeing the use and sale of cannabis here in the province. They've long been a quasi-judicial board here in the province. They hear appeals on liquor and gaming issues. They have the capacity to do the same with cannabis.

We recognize that the board is going to require some additional capacity in order for them to take on this additional work. That's why this legislation also moves to expand the AGLC board to nine members. The additional capacity will allow the board to add the expertise it will need and to deal more quickly with both policy issues that may arise and to address additional appeals and hearings. They have a well-established process in place to deal with concerns or complaints of this nature. We have confidence in this process. We believe it would be inappropriate for the minister to get involved in such decisions. It's our belief that the legislation as it's currently presented allows us to achieve our goals of keeping cannabis out of the hands of kids, protecting our roads and public spaces, and curbing the illicit market.

Indeed, Madam Chair, I've encountered a similar circumstance. Recently I've been talking with some folks who had been told that they would no longer have access to a casino licence through the AGLC due to some changes that had occurred, so they came to speak with me in my office, and we discussed it with them. Ultimately, they had the ability to appeal through the AGLC to make that decision, and that is as appropriate. With the AGLC being an autonomous body, we wouldn't want the minister interfering with the decisions that are made.

But I am happy to report, as I do understand the concerns of the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, that the AGLC has already put in place some of the regulations that would be around determining what the requirements would be to be a qualified cannabis worker, that being, as I mentioned, the minimum age of 18, completion of the mandatory SellSafe training, and passing a records check.

In February they defined in the regulations that a person does not pass a records check if they've been charged with or convicted of an offence under the Criminal Code, the Controlled Drugs and Substances Act, the Food and Drugs Act, or the Excise Act, and, in the opinion of the board, the offence is sufficiently serious that it may detract from the orderly or lawful conduct of activities authorized by a cannabis licence. But in doing so, they specifically excluded from these charges or convictions the possession of cannabis, so a cannabis charge for possession would not be an automatic exclusion.

The criteria and the processes that I mentioned are in place, then, including the offences against which an assessment might be made, and that process includes escalation for assessment through the director of investigations with the AGLC.

Finally, then, if the qualification was denied at that level, the worker would have the ability to appeal to the vice-president of regulatory services within the AGLC. So there is a dual-level appeal process that has been set up within the AGLC, and, as I said, I believe that's the appropriate place for that to occur, at a distance from the minister, so that they can continue their work as an autonomous agency on behalf of the province of Alberta.

With those thoughts, I'll give, I guess, any further members the opportunity to respond. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Yes. Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It truly is bizarre land today. Let's take note of the date, May 16, 2018: the United Conservatives agreeing with the NDP, the Liberals agreeing with the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

I'd like to thank the previous speaker for his words. I do concur with what the Member for Edmonton-Centre said. You know, the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission is indeed a quasi-judicial board, and certainly there is an appeals process. Again, you can appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, certainly, if a particular decision is not liked by a particular party.

That being said, as indicated by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, there appears to already be an exemption for simple cannabis possession, so, you know, I certainly encourage the government to do whatever they can to support people who have been convicted for a substance where it's now about to be legal.

I can tell you from my own personal experience, Madam Chair, that I never ever really felt comfortable laying that simple possession charge for marijuana, and it's not really a particular charge that I certainly spent a lot of time laying with alleged offenders at that particular time.

Again, I don't want to belabour the moment and the discussion here. I will only add that it also doesn't seem practical to send it all the way to the minister's office for a final appeal. Certainly, there's an alternative way, and I think we do have confidence in the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission to deal with it, so I would like to encourage members not to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank members for their comments. We really have entered the twilight zone when the liberals and the libertarian are on the same page, and the socialists and the conservatives are, too. We make for strange bedfellows in this place sometimes. But I want to thank all members for their comments. I think they're still all well taken.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre had very pertinent and important points about how a lot of drug prohibition laws have had a significantly disproportional effect on a lot of disadvantaged minority groups. Our First Nations, visible minorities have been far disproportionately charged and convicted under many of these laws, even more so in the United States. I don't think it's as acute in Canada, but I think that these problems still do plague us here.

There is actually a very clear history in the United States of how cannabis prohibition was actually quite explicitly a racist law, meant just simply to give governments the powers to oppress African Americans. That was the whole intention for many behind the initial push for cannabis prohibition. It eventually got sold in other ways because that's perhaps not a very civilized pitch for a law, but those were some of the main intentions behind the original push for cannabis prohibition in the United States. If that was here is more difficult to say, but we often follow the United States's lead on things, for better or worse.

But to the Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments, then, I think, in large measure echoed by the Member for Calgary-West, you're actually not incorrect in most of what you've said. The AGLC is a very respected and established organization. They have excellent professionals who do a very good job of regulating the liquor and gaming industry, and I've got quite a bit of confidence in their ability to do so when cannabis becomes legal here, expected July 1.

They are reinventing the wheel a bit here. They're looking into a new industry that has not existed in Canada in a legal form in the modern era. Like, they're going to be making decisions that are not purely administrative in nature. Alcohol prohibition ended, if I'm not mistaken, in the 1920s in Canada, in the 1930s in the United States. We have not had a licensed, above ground, legal cannabis industry in this country in the modern era. They are reinventing the wheel here. They're going to face a lot of major challenges, and some of these decisions that they're going to have to make will be political in nature. Some of these decisions will not be easy decisions with a lot of precedent behind them.

You know, if you've been charged under the Excise Act even for non pot – what if you screwed up paying duty free coming through the border once and you may have had an Excise Act charge? You could potentially fall under that. So some discretion is going to be necessary. Some of the decisions around how we administer legal, licensed cannabis, at least in the first few years, will be political in nature, and there needs to be a final stage of appeal where decisions can be made that are of a more political nature.

The AGLC is very loath to make political decisions. Like most bureaucracies, they will err on the side of caution. In many cases I fear that people, especially who are in more extraordinary circumstances, could be barred from entering the legal market.

I take as prime examples Marc and Jodie Emery. They operate out of Vancouver. They're not here, but I know they want to set up businesses in Alberta. I was actually just talking to them today, consulting about this amendment going forward, and I have them in mind. They don't have simple possession. They are technically dealers. They sold seeds. They didn't sell cannabis. They sold seeds, and they had a big storefront with a sign on it. They paid taxes, and they said on their tax forms exactly what they did and sold. They remitted GST to the federal government. They remitted PST to the provincial government. They accepted payments by credit card for seeds. Now, I don't know any street dealers who remit GST to the federal government. I don't know any street dealers who have a nice storefront and accept MasterCard or Air Miles. That doesn't fit the definition of a dealer or organized crime, but they are an ambiguous case.

They were targeted because some of their sales went towards activism for legalization in the United States, and the DEA had Marc extradited, and he spent five years in a U.S. prison unjustly. He did nothing wrong, but the DEA wanted to stop his activism. So he has a charge against him. Now, he is an extraordinary case. There'll be very few cases like that, but that's what this amendment is for. If the AGLC is faced with a decision that is not very clear, that does not have a lot of precedent behind it, because there is almost no precedence in this – they're a quasi-judicial body. Where are they going to look to? They can't even look to examples in other provinces because we're all going towards legalization at the same time.

So there needs to be a final route of appeal at the end of the road. The AGLC is very well equipped to handle probably 99.5 per cent of these cases, and there is an appeals process there within that can handle appeals reasonably. But at least for the first few years there will be ambiguous decisions, decisions that are not clearly outlined in the law as one way or another, decisions that may require a political call at the end of the day.

That's why it is important that after someone has gone through the entire process in the AGLC, they have the ability to request in writing to the minister a final route of appeal. The minister is under no obligation to accept it, under no obligation whatsoever, but if they've exhausted the process in the AGLC, there needs to be a final place that they can go where an ambiguous decision that doesn't have precedence behind it, that might be extraordinary can be addressed. I think that that's just justice. I think it's fairness, and I think it's compassionate.

I actually agree with the vast majority of what the members for Edmonton-Centre and Calgary-West have said. They seem to have a good grasp of the AGLC and the way it's working. It is a very good organization that we can be very proud of. As far as we can be proud of bureaucracies, we can be proud of the AGLC. It does a very good job. But it is important that for these extraordinary cases, as we're writing the book on this, making history, without any precedents to look to in the law, there be a final route of appeal.

So I ask that members consider this in making their decision on how they would vote on this amendment so that we can take Alberta, which is without a doubt the best example in the country for how we should be moving forward with legalization, and make it all that much better and set an example for other jurisdictions that we understand that it is not right to treat people as criminals for activities that are no longer crimes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any of members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I won't take long. I've just been asked to provide a bit of information on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Solicitor General in regard to some questions that have been raised during debate so far. There's been some good discussion about the changes so far, and I'd like to thank everybody who has provided their thoughts and their opinions.

In response to a question regarding whether an 18-year-old high school student could have cannabis in his or her possession on school grounds, I think it's important to make clear that, as is the case with tobacco or alcohol, which may be legally possessed by those who are 18 years of age or older, school boards are able and have the right to establish policies governing possession on school property. Government rules for legalized cannabis are designed to protect youth by ensuring that cannabis retail locations aren't located in close proximity to schools, that minors are not permitted in cannabis stores, and indeed that cannabis products and promotional materials aren't visible to young people.

In regard to some concerns that were raised by other members regarding the potential for confusion, with different rules existing in different parts of the province around where cannabis can or cannot be smoked or vaped, to be clear, in the fall session here in the Assembly we passed Bill 26. That bill prohibited individuals from smoking and vaping cannabis anywhere where they are prohibited from smoking tobacco as well as in additional specified areas that are likely to be frequented by children. That would include, of course, schools, as I mentioned, but also play structures, playgrounds, splash parks, and the like. As with restrictions on tobacco smoking, municipalities then have their own discretion respecting local decision-making through bylaws that reflect local priorities and circumstances. Public education campaigns ahead of legalization will help to inform Albertans about what the provincial regulations are while emphasizing where local rules may vary to help avoid confusion, so perhaps between Calgary, which has opted to put some tighter restrictions on where cannabis may be consumed and, say, the city of Edmonton, which has opted so far for a more open approach.

There are also some questions that were raised regarding why the government would allow some retailers to sell items other than cannabis and cannabis products. Again, these are changes that were part of Bill 26 when it was debated and passed in the fall session. Currently in the case of liquor sales we recognize that there are some remote locations in Alberta where a stand-alone liquor store would simply not be viable. They would not have the sales volume to make it worth their while. There is in existence already a special class of licence that allows liquor sales in retail locations where they normally would not be permitted; for example, in a small, remote community at the general store. When it comes to cannabis, given that online sales are going to be available, as has been mentioned, we don't know at this point if there's actually going to be a need or if there's going to be a demand or indeed any interest for alternative retail locations in some remote communities, but should that be found to be necessary, the legislation establishes the authority to create regulations to govern those exemptions. So it's provided in the provisions, once we actually see how things start to operate in the field, to have that option available just as it is for liquor.

Now, in regard to a comment that was raised around the Drug-endangered Children Act and a question about whether our cannabis regulations are placing children in danger, I want to make it very clear that the purpose of the Drug-endangered Children Act is primarily to protect children from exposure to the dangers associated with illegal drug manufacturing or production, for example hazardous chemicals, or to the dangers associated with trafficking and other forms of illegal drug activity. Much different from small amounts of cannabis. It was largely established in response to encountering children in meth houses or in high-risk cannabis production situations that were using butane hash oil, which is explosive. Those risks are not anticipated in households that are limited to up to four legally grown cannabis plants for personal use.

That said, the use of organic solvents such as butane hash oil remains a criminal offence, and if there are reasonable and probable grounds to believe that a child is in need of intervention due to endangerment by a guardian for whatever reason, the powers under the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act remain available to help protect those children.

Lastly, there was a member who asked, stepping away from cannabis for a moment – this bill does deal with a couple of other things – if this bill will allow you-brew operations. The answer to that is yes. The authority established in Bill 6 here will allow the AGLC, which, interestingly, as has been mentioned, is going to be the Alberta liquor, gaming, and cannabis commission – unfortunately for those of us who love a good pun, it will remain the AGLC with one C and not two. We'll find a way to live. Anyways, this bill allows them to create appropriate licence types for on-site brewing for patrons under the guidance of a licensee.

The details of what activities will be allowed specifically under this licence type will be established by amendment to the gaming and liquor regulation and developed in consultation with stakeholders. The you-brew scenario would be one potential option for a licence holder. There are a few pieces in here that are sort of opening up a few more opportunities for folks that are operating businesses that primarily sell alcohol but may also want to branch out into allowing others to come in and brew at their premises as well.

In short, if passed, Bill 6 is going to, I think, be another step in our continued work to prepare for the legalization of cannabis and build a system that I truly believe is going to prioritize the health and safety of Albertans. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Government Bills and Orders

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the government should pursue other measures to reduce the cost of doing business in the province, including the introduction of legislation to eliminate the carbon levy, which, if implemented, would make the measures proposed in the bill unnecessary.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 15: Mr. Mason]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any hon. members wishing to speak to Bill 2? The hon. Member for . . .

Mr. Cyr: The reasoned amendment.

The Acting Speaker: Oh. Yes, we are. We are on the reasoned amendment. The hon. Member for – where are you? – Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Yes. It's getting late, so I do sympathize with you. And the material that we're about to go into is a little dry, so I sympathize even further.

Now, Bill 2. I had earlier talked on the main bill about how I was concerned about the fact that we may be training massive numbers of Albertans to be working in other provinces. I did go through how I thought that maybe that would be a poor strategy if we do not have jobs for these individuals, and I think that's a reasonable concern.

Moving on from there and dealing with the reasoned amendment, this does also go on to credits, the Alberta investor tax credit, the AITC. It also goes on to the capital investment tax credit, the CITC. Now, when I started looking for press releases – I like to know what it is that the government is saying that they're trying to achieve with whatever bill that they're putting forward – I came across the last time that we had a bill put forward that was similar to this. I'd like to mention that we had a press release put out by the government on February 21, 2018: Tax Credit Spurs Growth in Northern Alberta. This is good to hear, that they're trying to spur growth in northern Alberta, especially with the fact that my constituency is based in northern Alberta.

It says right underneath the title here: “Alberta's north will see new jobs and business expansion with support from the Capital Investment Tax Credit.” That's the CITC. That's the one that I just mentioned that is in Bill 2. This is the next phase, if you will. It sounds like there was three tranches when they came out with the original one.

Now what we've got here, moving forward, is a quote from the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. The minister says:

We're proud to have created a tax credit that helps businesses in Alberta create good jobs in a variety of sectors – diversifying our economy and helping protect us from the oil price roller-coaster. Other provinces have had tax credits like this for decades. Per capita private-sector investment in Alberta rose to more than twice the national average last year, during the first round of our CITC. We will keep building on that momentum.

So the government comes out with something new. They justify it by saying that it's done in other places, so it's going work here. What we continued to ask for was an economic impact study.

Clearly, the government doesn't like doing those. But for argument's sake, if we put forward a tax credit, it would be nice to know if the first one worked before we move on to a second one. I don't believe that's unreasonable. When we ask for anything that they would have, all we hear is: you're trying to mislead Albertans; you're trying to, more or less, put down what we're trying to achieve.

I don't agree with that because if you fail, my communities hurt. That is just a fact. We have high unemployment rates. We have incredibly high vacancy rates. We have businesses closing, which I addressed last week. Lafarge is a good example. Lafarge Canada shut down two cement plants within my constituency. So let's be clear. I want to see these things work as much as you do, but I want to know that they're going to do something. Now, I understand that the argument is that if we study it, then potentially we're going to be taking time away from helping people, but the fact is that we don't even know if the first one worked.

What I would like to know here is that when we start looking at how these more or less corporate welfares work – I went and found an article by a man named Mark Milke, and this was written on January 22, 2017. The title of the article is The Non-transparent Reality of Canadian Corporate Welfare. This is exactly what I am talking about. We need transparency to know if it worked. Now, I'm going to read some of this article because a lot of it, actually, is relevant.

Politicians offer many justifications for handing out taxpayer cash to corporations. They include how government grants and loans are akin to "acorns" that will ostensibly grow companies to great heights.

Or the usual canard, on offer recently when the federal and Ontario governments gave $83.6 million in taxpayer cash . . . to Honda of Canada: that extra jobs and tax revenues will result.

What happens is that we get a government that says that we're going to give this money out and that we're going to get this money back in return. So is it unreasonable for Albertans to find out if that first bit of money that we had given out achieved the targets the government had set?

Now, when we look at this, it's very clear that they're saying that what happens is that the government is really good at announcing subsidies and grants and loans to corporations. They say that we're going to create jobs, we're going to create wealth, and we're going to improve Alberta as a whole. The question is: did that happen? I, again, want to see these things work as much as you do because it means jobs in my constituency.

It goes on to say:

The economic literature on such claims is almost uniformly negative. Here's what Terry Buss, a professor in Australia formerly with the World Bank, and one of the world's leading experts on subsidies to business, points out: The claims and the flawed supportive studies that accompany them are inevitably "based on poor data, unsound social-science methods [and] faulty economic reasoning."

What we've got here is a government that puts out a projection. Now, we hear the government in this House say that they've got a six-year plan – six-year plan – yet we hear the government say that we can't plan out beyond a couple of years because of the fact that we don't know what oil prices are going to be. So making something out that far really is guesswork, or a guesstimate if you will. Now, I do see value in saying that we should be looking out further, but putting all of our ducks in one basket that that one six-year plan is going to actually be achieved is a little bit of a stretch.

Now, it moves on to say:

As an example, the substitution effect is ignored. That's where the money used for subsidies to business – corporate welfare in common parlance – comes from other businesses and individual taxpayers. That transfer thus depresses economic activity, jobs and tax revenues elsewhere in the economy.

What we're saying here is that we have to take from one place in our economy, and we're picking a winner and loser in another part of our economy. Now, what's happening here is that when we take from businesses that are already hurting like businesses within Bonnyville-Cold Lake that are already running, then we more or less start driving them into the ground so that we can create diversification. That could be very harmful. That's why I'm asking you: did you do an economic impact study on the fact that this first round didn't work? I haven't seen evidence that shows it, but I do have evidence that there are businesses still closing down in my constituency. I also have evidence that shows that investment is moving away from Bonnyville-Cold Lake when it comes to the oil sands. We've got large companies, international companies that are outright telling this government that what you're implementing in policy is hurting them and that they are moving their investment away. That isn't good for anywhere, especially Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Now, this one here says, arguments over the efficacy of subsidies to business aside, taxpayers at least deserve to know how much of their money is granted, loaned, and repaid – including how the loans perform.

This moves on to say that if you're going to do it, there should be some incredibly strict guidelines and performance measures that are in place. We need to track this. That is just a fact, because when we start giving out taxpayer money, we have no idea where it's going.

I'm going to go down a little further because this actually goes on to a part that I had talked about before, which was Bombardier. Now, what we've got here is that when the federal government had given money to Bombardier, this individual, Mr. Milke, had asked for transparency. He went to the federal government, and he used the FOIP program, which is the way residents get to find out if the money is being used responsibly because sometimes the government actually has these answers and refuses to release them to the public. That is shameful unless there is something that is preventing them. Normally what happens is that you'll find that the only reason that they could come forward with is that it's embarrassing to the government of the day.

Now, it goes on. It says that the department told me to file an Access to Information request. I did, for all grants and loans over $5-million for all companies. The request came back with information for Bombardier (and some other companies) blacked out – completely. Bombardier's information was clearly missing because I possess the results of past Access to Information requests – now five years old, which were more transparent.

Recent practice is to deny such information. That is in part because Bombardier is in Federal Court blocking Access to Information data from being released. It is also because of department and Information Commissioner interpretations of Section 20 of the Access to Information Act. That section requires a department to not release information that might result in material financial loss or gain to a third party, or which might prejudice their competitive position.

Now, I would like to just wrap up saying that when it comes to these programs, we give a lot of money, we have no ability to be able to track if it was successful and what your intent was, and then when people want to find out, they can't even FOIP that information. This is why Bill 2 needs this reasoned amendment to go down. We need to make sure that we see this bill brought to a committee or any other way, but we need to make sure. The fact that this is working is very important.

Now, Madam Speaker, I would like to move that we go to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and speak today to government Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, which is really a basket full of a bunch of different pieces that are all meant to rescue our economy from its current state. I think there are some of these pieces that seem useful. I haven't got a doubt that they've been brought forward with some good intent and with a bit of a will to try and make some things better, but I'm not sure I can have a lot of confidence based on the reality that the government's past track record in actually consulting with stakeholders and hearing from them directly hasn't been very effective. Too often consultation turns out to be nothing more than seeking those who will give some confirmation bias but doesn't really challenge the ideas or challenge the need to look at things a little bit differently. For that reason, I'm in favour of the reasoned amendment and will support that amendment.

The reality is that in my own connections with people I've run into some stakeholders in the film industry that don't even know about the interactive digital media tax credit. I think that in order for this to work any better than the last one, as my fellow member here was just speaking about, clearly it's going to need to be promoted. People are going to need to be aware of it. The truth is that it tells me that there probably hasn't been a lot of broad consultation even within industry when at this stage in the game they don't even know anything about it yet.

While I think the bill shows some good intentions, I do have my doubts, as I say, as has already been described somewhat by the previous member, and I would further say that the reality is that there have just been too many other damaging policies come from this government that have crippled the ability of business and the people to really trust where this is leading. We need a fulsome study of this bill, and we need to look into the actual effectiveness or not of the previous one.

I guess part of my concern also rises from realizing that folks at the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation, which focuses on entrepreneurship and how to develop entrepreneurial realities, have done some significant study on the whole business of government funding development in certain business fields and, studying several hundred of them across the U.S., have discovered that there's only very, very few of them, in the order of maybe half a dozen, that have ever actually returned anything to the taxpayer of real value. What the taxpayers pay and what they get in the supposed results just never does add up although it does seem to be a favoured political move of politicians to try and make the promise and the promotion.

So there are reasons to be concerned, reasons to question: was the last one that we've just had here in this province actually of any effect or not? As I just mentioned, major studies indicate that quite likely it hasn't been. While it all sounds reasonable and I accept the good intention, I think there is some further work that needs to be done. I think there's some real additional homework that should happen before we rush ahead and commit a bunch more taxpayer dollars to something that's motivated with good intent but maybe not a lot of wisdom in it. It has the appearance, as so often these kinds of government initiatives do, of sort of grasping at straws to try and make something happen, try and stir something up to make things look better and to make it look like the government is busy, but too often they actually end up hurting the economy rather than repairing it, and I think this basket full of many little pieces may have some of those characteristics to it, to be truthful.

So let's look at some of the pieces. The bill creates tech spaces in postsecondary institutions, creates a framework to invest new scholarships and programs for tech industry. It also launches the interactive digital media tax credit, as I referred to a moment ago. It continues the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. It gives the minister responsibility also for a new piece, the unmanned aerial systems sector. Quite frankly, the only thing that ties these all together is the wish or the hope that somehow these are going to improve the economy, that these are going to make things better for the economy, and that somehow Alberta's economy is all of a sudden going to be revived because we have these pieces in play.

But, as has been said, the last Alberta investor tax credit wasn't entirely successful. A lot of it was and has probably brought some benefit, but just recently checking the website, there's still $1.4 million that were unallocated, so there are some questions there about: was the intake lower than expected? Was it not efficiently advertised or distributed? Just some questions there that I think need to be answered before we rush into something new.

With regard to the last Bill 30, Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, from December 2016, both of the legacy parties had a hard time supporting the bill, again, without some kind of economic facts and a study to back it up and to support it in a very real way. If we want to do what's right, we need to know whether what we've been doing is the right thing to do, because, as I think Einstein quite well said, if you keep doing the same thing, you're going to get the same results. If the results aren't what we're hoping for, then we need to do something a little bit differently.

That Bill 30 and this Bill 2 leave me feeling somewhat the same. The truth is that if this government had not implemented sort of global damaging economic policies, Alberta really would be in much better shape and be a much better place to live today than it is. We see some glimmers of hope. By now we should be actually into full-blown growth and recovery. The little bit of hope that we're seeing here now is minimal compared to what has happened in other areas. In Saskatchewan and the U.S. they're into full growth, and here we're just struggling along. The truth is that when the environment is healthy, plants flourish. When the environment is not healthy, plants just barely survive. When the economy is healthy, business and investment flourish, and they do so much more. We're not nearly where we could be or where we should be at this point in time, and these kinds of efforts to fix the major problems, as I said, of global economic policies, universal economic policies that have hampered and damaged our economy are the real problem, the things that we really need to be fixing.

So it seems that this government is just sort of trying to put a Band-Aid on it, to fix an economy that's been broken under their care, that really has been damaged by risky and radical policies, and something else needs to be done.

I'd like to refer to the very recent, May 14, Conference Board of Canada report Alberta Has Entrepreneurial Spirit but Falls to a "D" Grade on Conference Board's Innovation Report Card. Clearly, something is not right here because Alberta has fallen to a D grade. We're 19th amongst 26 comparative jurisdictions – 10 provinces, 16 advanced countries – behind most in Canada here. Our innovation report card is not doing very well, yet when you look into the details of this Conference Board of Canada report, it's even more instructive. It confirms that Alberta, in fact, is a province of self-starting entrepreneurs, because we rank first amongst provinces on both entrepreneurial ambition and enterprise entries. But the trouble is that while there are a lot of people trying to be entrepreneurial, the low and the falling rankings in the numbers are the fact that we don't have people willing to invest deep amounts of money in research and development. Venture capital investment is way too low. Public and business research and development are not what they should be.

The reality is that while we get an A plus for ambition – Alberta wants to be entrepreneurial – we earn a D on most of the things that would make it happen, which includes the willingness to commit to research and development, which is an indication, quite frankly, of political risk – they view the risk as too high – and the fact that we don't have anybody willing to invest here, again because of political risk. Seventeen per cent of Albertans report some kind of early stage entrepreneurial activity, and then it drops right off. Why? Because they encounter a wall of regulation and delays and costs that make it impossible for them to have the hope to proceed and go through.

We get a B on labour productivity. Albertans want to be there, they want to do it, but they've got a government, quite frankly, that is making it extremely hard for them to do it, a government that is causing innovation to leave the province, a government that puts up so many regulations and difficulties that they give up after they make the initial effort.

I think that these overall policies that create this kind of a report from the Conference Board of Canada are much more important considerations. The way to draw and attract investment into Alberta is simply to reduce all the red tape, reduce the regulatory burden, reduce the tax for all businesses, and create an overall environment that is actually supportive of business rather than holds business as somehow a suspicious activity and people that have the capital to invest as somehow evil and betraying the rest of society. Those are just simply not true. We get what we are investing in here, which is driving the money and the investment and the innovation right out of our province.

I also struggle with the policy that selects relatively small slivers of industry and supports them. What about all the rest? If we had universal policies that were supportive of business, business in so many other areas would also proceed and advance. The problem with picking winners and losers is that it creates a market distortion, it creates an artificial demand, and it creates an environment that's unsustainable in the real world. So I don't think playing favourites is a good idea. We've seen what's happened in other provinces when these same kinds of policies have been put into place. Government basically drives business out in the process of trying to say that they're creating it.

Here we have in Alberta over the last few years a situation in which our strongest industry was in recession. Prices plummeted, no doubt. A majority of those kinds of high-paying jobs were lost, sending tens of thousands of people out of work, but not in Saskatchewan or the U.S. They're doing just fine, quite frankly. Sometimes the jobs people have now in replacement are part-time jobs just to feed their families. Many of them have lost their homes, including in my own riding, because of the financial hardship that's driven by policy.

The reality is that we've had a government that's continually put up barriers for the industry and created difficulties, and that's what has driven the industry out. We started in 2015 with a royalty review because the Premier was very clear that Albertans deserved their fair share. In the process we created nine months of uncertainty for industry, continued to drive capital out of the province, and in the end, after nine months of uncertainty, the Premier had to come forward and say that, well, in fact, Albertans are getting their fair share. This idea that somehow business and investment are evil and wrong just needs to be challenged and corrected.

Then we have all kinds of other damaging policies like increasing the minimum wage, increasing taxes on business. Oh, and let's not forget that ill-conceived carbon tax. All of this has driven our province into a tailspin, is already hurting our economy, drove investors out. We would be much farther ahead now if we hadn't had this global policy of being antibusiness in so many respects.

At the time when the NDP first came into power, they were very vocal that they were against the oil and gas sector and against pipelines, calling Albertans embarrassing cousins because of it, and as a result, investors have withdrawn from the province and decided not to invest in any projects inside Alberta's jurisdiction. I mean, the NDP made this abundantly clear in the beginning years. They raised business taxes by a whopping 20 per cent. The money that's been taken out of business in this province, that could have been reinvested in so many different industries and created tens of thousands of jobs, went elsewhere, which is a tragedy. Who raids businesses during a recession? Really. That's crazy. It's a move that was destructive and has reduced jobs in Alberta, and all of these things together have contributed to an environment that has caused us to suffer in our industry.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and let me apologize in advance to all of my colleagues for taking up an additional five minutes, but I just couldn't restrain myself. You know, I understand that the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka in a previous life was a minister. I haven't been converted, but I am convinced that there is an afterlife. Certainly, listening to the member speak, I hope that it comes quickly.

I do want to address some of the issues that were raised in some of things that we heard this evening from the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka as well as some of the other things that we've heard because, you know, one of the things that we continue to hear in speeches to this bill is about how economic development in Alberta is suffering, right? If the members opposite were to be believed, our economy is lagging the country, people are not feeling the recovery, and while it's certainly true that not everyone is feeling the recovery, economic growth is up. Every economic indicator that should be up is up.

You know, when I listen to the members opposite talk about the economy here in Alberta, I'm reminded of that scene from Monty Python and the Holy Grail, where they drag the patient out of the house and say, "Here's a dead one for you," and he pops up and says, "Well, I'm not dead yet." Of course, they claim that he is dead. He says, "Well, actually, no; I might feel better." Then they actually kill him to prove their point that he's dead. When I hear the United Conservative Party members opposite talk about Alberta's economy, it's reminiscent of the way those people react to their claims that this person was not dead.

You know, the other thing that we continue to hear is whether we did an economic analysis of the capital investment tax credit and the Alberta investor tax credit. For everyone's reference I want to reference a press release dated February 5, 2018, where we provide some information about the effectiveness of the capital investment tax credit. To quote from that, it's created "more than 3,000 jobs, with companies investing more than $1.2 billion to build or upgrade . . . facilities." So that's a significant economic impact.

What's interesting, though, are two things when we talk about economic impacts. We know that the Leader of the Official Opposition, when he was in Ottawa in 2009, voted for a $10 billion subsidy to the auto industry in Ontario, and I invite the members opposite to table the economic impact analysis that the government did at that time when they voted for that industry.

What's also interesting, though, Madam Speaker, and I know is interesting to many of our colleagues is that the members opposite continue to call for tax cuts, personal income tax cuts as well as corporate tax cuts, yet they don't provide any economic impact analysis of those tax cuts. The good news is that they don't have to because we've done the economic impact analysis of those tax cuts, and I'd like to take a few moments and just elucidate those for the people listening.

We know that millionaires and billionaires will be given an extra $700 million, which is $700 million that will come out of the government's budget to spend on things like health care and education. So if we look at $700 million out of the Education budget, for example, that means people would only be able to go up to grade 8 – right? – which was good enough for my grandparents' generation, but it's not good enough for Albertans today. We need to have not only more Albertans graduating from high school, but we need more Albertans to go on to postsecondary education, which is another thing that this bill that's before us is contemplating. You know, $700 million, of course, would mean that we don't get a Calgary cancer centre or a new hospital in Edmonton or would significantly impact the construction of the green line or hundreds of schools across the province. It would throw thousands of teachers and nurses out of work, Madam Speaker.

That kind of economic impact analysis the members opposite aren't honest about, but fortunately the people of Alberta can rely on us to tell the truth about what kind of economic impact we can expect from those kinds of tax cuts, Madam Speaker. You know, it's quite clear that those economic impacts would be devastating to the people of Alberta except the millionaires and billionaires, who would stand to gain significantly.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the reasoned amendment?

Seeing none, I'll put the question.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Seeing that we've made tremendous progress this evening, I'd like to move that we adjourn the House until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

Mrs. Pitt moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future in accordance with Standing Order 74.2.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 9: Ms Ganley]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Orr: Lacombe-Ponoka.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry. Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: It's all right. A little farther north.

Thank you, Madam Speaker. I consider it a privilege today to rise to speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. I believe we're on a referral motion, so I will speak to the referral and the reason why I think referral is important for this, that it be referred to committee and there be some further research put into considering it.

What's happening here is that Alberta is in the process of radically remaking our entire electricity system. We're moving from what has been an energy-only market to a capacity market. A capacity market pays investors to build capacity whether they will actually ever use that or not. It pays them the capital costs of constructing it. A parallel would be to say that we should pay the car manufacturers a fee just for the privilege of them actually manufacturing a factory, and then they make money off the sale of the cars.

It really is about indemnifying the risk of the investors more than anything else. It guarantees that the investor will not lose money on their capital investment whether there's a demand for that electricity or not – that's an important point – whether there's a consumer need for it or not. In effect, what it does is that it switches the risk and the liability away from the investor, away from the corporations that have money to invest, onto the backs and the responsibility of the citizens. Some that have written about it speak of it as a means of socializing the risk of the investment for electricity infrastructure, so it becomes then the risk and the responsibility of the citizens and of the consumers to actually pay for that capacity whether or not it's actually used. Unfortunately, the reality is that world experience has shown in multiple jurisdictions that, in fact, the capacity is not used in many cases. It's overbuilt, so that becomes a real challenge, a real problem.

The reality is here that this is a further example of the current government driven by an ideology to socialize everything – old code language for that is to nationalize everything – even if it's at the risk of the consumer. I would have thought that a current government concerned about the ordinary person, the little guy in the province, would be more concerned about pushing the risk of loss onto the backs of the supposedly rich and evil corporations and letting them lose money rather than having to take it out of the wallet of the ordinary person, which all too often is the case. I actually think that we should make the investors responsible for the risk, and if there's loss, which does in fact sometimes happen, let them bear the loss. Let the national banks that finance them bear the loss rather than having to raise the taxes of individual consumers in order to pay for something that may, in fact, not actually be used.

There is the argument presented that, oh, it's necessary that we do this because we need to protect from brownouts. Well, studies show that there are, in fact, brownouts under capacity markets just as much. It happened quite a bit in the eastern U.S. in the early 1990s. The capacity wasn't there. There were other issues. So brownouts aren't really solved just by creating a capacity market. That's a cover that sounds good, but it doesn't really solve the problem.

What it does, though, is that the intent of it is to incentivize the capital build of electricity generating capacity, so it incentivizes corporations because it basically indemnifies their risk. It guarantees them a profit no matter what, and the result in too many cases is that, in fact, there is an overbuild of capacity, and then that overbuild sits. I'd like to refer to just a couple of illustrations from other markets that have occurred around our world.

The Texas regulator is a good example there. Back in 2010 to '12 there was a huge public debate in Texas, whether or not they should actually move to capacity markets. I refer to an article called Texas Regulators Saved Customers Billions by Avoiding a Traditional Capacity Market. I'd like to just point out a little phrase there, too, "traditional." Our current government has tried to tell the people of Alberta that this is something new and innovative and that they're actually doing something that's never been done before when, in fact, capacity markets have been around for a very, very long time. Their history and their track record is fairly well known, and in many places they have been looked at and rejected. As I said before, they are generally moved to not so much for economic reasons as for political agenda reasons.

In Texas the reality is that they had this long debate over a period of years. Regulators rejected the idea of capacity markets. The Electric Reliability Council of Texas looked at it, tried to predict where they were going. There was, of course, a huge debate over it, as we're having now, and the reality is that they avoided it and saved billions of dollars of potential consumer costs that would have raised the electricity costs for their consumers. In fact, their capacity issues, the amount of capacity online to make sure that there were not brownouts, things like that, have actually increased over the years under the current choices that they've made, energy-only, and it's saving their customers a substantial amount of money.

The capacity has increased for a couple of reasons. It's increased because of the ongoing build-out of renewable generation, which happened without the need for a capacity market. There's tremendous expansion in the renewable market. It also happened because of the reduction of natural gas costs, which we also have here, so it's quite natural that people would move to that market. Then the reality is, too, that the – oh, I forgot what I was going to say.

I'll move on to the next piece. In essence, what they saved: the study shows here that if they had moved to capacity markets to close the supposed revenue gap for generators, it would have been an extra $3.9 billion in 2014, an extra $5.2 billion in 2015 for the consumers or the taxpayers of the state of Texas. Because they did not go to capacity markets, they've actually saved that much money for the consumers.

Oh, I know what I was going to say a minute ago. The reason that the increase in capacity has occurred is partly also because there's been a slight demand-curve decrease across the state. In fact, there's been research and study to show that across many, many jurisdictions, due to renewables, due to reduced costs, LED lights, the installation of new kinds of meters that charge people based on the demand hour – and the rate changes depending on what time of day they use, so people have become more responsible in when they use their electricity – the demand curve has slowly been reducing over the years in quite a few jurisdictions.

The result is, then, that staying with the energy market rather than going to capacity market has done a very good job of saving the people of Texas at least $9 billion in two years alone. This is a serious consideration. We need to at least look at the example of other jurisdictions, find out what their experience has been, and use it as a little bit of caution as we move forward here in Alberta rather than just rushing forward on an ideological idea that seems like it might be really good. In fact, it hasn't always turned out that well in other jurisdictions.

A forward-capacity market that would have focused on guaranteeing investors the kind of money they want in Texas would have actually erased all of these savings of $9 billion, as I just said, over two years, and consumers would have been out that much more money. Essentially, Texas regulators have let the investors assume the risk of reading the tea leaves of where demand is going to go, where we need more command, and allowing the generating companies to recover their costs through the actual sale of the electricity through forward markets.

Sometimes, then, the argument is thrown out: well, peak demand and other things cause huge escalations in price, and therefore we need to protect consumers from that. Well, that's a bit of a misnomer and a bit of a scare tactic, quite frankly, on the part of the government because it isn't the consumer directly that pays those peak prices; it's the distributors and the retailers. All of that is protected through forward hedging contracts in almost every jurisdiction in the world. It's averaged out over the period of the year, and the consumers never pay those massive, escalating prices that we've heard from the other side, thousands of dollars a kilowatt hour and that kind of thing.

Sure, it happens during peak demand, but those escalating costs, when they finally get to the consumer, are truly mitigated by means of forward averaging contracts, by the reality of the fact that we are now, across most parts of the world, moving to energy meters that can control and price the consumption of electricity at the retail level based on peak demand or nondemand and the fact that energy conservation appliances and lights and all the rest of it are reducing demand.

The world is changing in ways that – oftentimes governments try to predict and try to create policy predicting the future, and their predictions don't always turn out quite the way they thought they were going to. The conclusion of the Texas market is that the decision-makers elsewhere should reconsider using forward-capacity markets to balance energy revenues in order to recover operating costs for producers. It's just a word of caution that we need to be careful how fast we jump into this thing because while it sounds like a great story, it hasn't always worked out in other jurisdictions.

In contrast to that – in Texas they chose to not go to capacity markets – on the other side of the example, in Western Australia they did go to capacity markets in spite of the fact that there were huge amounts of renewables taking place, several million solar systems being put up. They were trying to use a hybrid, both capacity and energy markets. Again, their predictions: the reason they went to it is because they predicted that the demand for electricity was going to continue to go up substantially, and in fact the demand didn't go up in Western Australia for the reasons I've already enumerated.

The government decided that they had to make sure that they were going to have a safe system, that they had to protect the consumer from potential shortages of power, et cetera, et cetera, the same story we hear. So they set out to procure capacity to meet a 1-in-10-year scenario for peak demand. They did that. They spent the money. They went through a whole process to get there, and then in spite of their predictions, the demand actually began to fall on them.

What happened is that as – there's a researcher, Philip Lewis, who has studied over 60 different markets around the world, and he says that since about 2006-2007 the reality is that the demand curve for electricity in the 60 markets he's studied, including most of the major ones, is actually falling in some respects, as I've said, because of these reasons: better meters, better use, those kinds of things.

What's happened now in Western Australia is that, in fact, they have 600 to 1,500 megawatts of overcapacity that they've built, that they've paid for, that they continue to make capacity payments on to the investors. Some of it is still being built under this system with little expectation that they're ever actually going to use these systems because the demand isn't there. But they set out in policy that we needed to do all of this. They paid for it with taxpayer money, and their conclusion is that in our system the excess capacity is socialized through the system rather than falling on the investors.

That is, truthfully, the risk that we are facing here by moving to a capacity market, that we may in fact be putting on the backs of consumers excess cost to create, to actually build electricity facilities to produce power that may in fact never actually be needed, as in Western Australia: 600 to 1,500 megawatts of overbuild that's been paid for, and it sits there basically mothballed, not being used. Although they had great intentions and good plans and actually thought they were doing a great thing, the truth is that it has not turned out the way they thought it was going to. To quote: capacity markets have proven to be a very expensive way to meet forward demand.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was really following very intently the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka's comments. It seems he did a lot of research on other markets in Texas and Australia and elsewhere. He also talked about the forward hedge contracts that will derisk consumers and transfer the risk to the major companies, the big investors. He also made an interesting comment that this NDP government, who indulges in big propaganda every day, is on the side of regular Albertans, the common man. But it seems they're very tight with all these big businesses, big oil, and that they've forgotten about those regular Albertans who elected them. I would ask the member to share his thoughts on that aspect.

Also, how do we actually derisk consumers from paying higher prices, not artificially capping at 6.8 cents per kilowatt but actually encouraging the generators to take that risk independent of the capacity they have and still provide reliability to the grid?

Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Thank you. Madam Speaker, yes, there is a difficult balance between how much is enough capacity and how much is too much because if we don't have enough, of course, we do have brownouts. If we have too much, the reality is that somebody has to pay for it and it has to come out of somebody's pocket. In reality it kind of turns out to be a bit of wasted money. Now, we need a little bit of reserve capacity, no doubt, but if we go over too far, the concern is that – well, for instance, in Texas recently, since 2016, there's been a lawsuit actually brought forward by one of the power companies over being fraudulently misled into investing $2.2 billion in new combined power that isn't actually going to be needed. So what's happened even in Texas with energy-only markets is that the market has overbuilt.

What it boils down to is that this is a very delicate balance that no matter which system you use, you're never going to get it completely perfect, although one way or another eventually it sorts itself out, and we get the right balance.

My concern is that we really should be letting the investors bear the risk and not the taxpayers because the taxpayers shouldn't have to bear that. I think sometimes government, well, tries too hard. We try to look like we're fixing everything in the world. We jump into things that we really don't have the ability to fix. So we need to be careful as government that we don't jump in with great intentions but, in fact, end up costing consumers huge amounts of money that is in fact not wisely spent when things turn out somehow different than we originally thought they would in the first place.

We need to look at these other places. That's my whole point. I think this should go to referral. I think we need to study it carefully, that we really need to examine with all the stakeholders involved whether or not this is, in fact, the right thing to do or that maybe, in fact, it's a huge risk for the stakeholders. Primarily the taxpayers is what I really mean, that we're putting taxpayers at risk.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, and good morning to you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 13 and in particular to the referral amendment to committee from my colleague from Airdrie. I think that it'll come as no surprise to you and other members of the House that I'll be speaking in favour of sending this important piece of legislation to committee. I think my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka has pointed out a number of very good reasons why it's important that we actually study this piece of legislation, why it's important that we hear from a wide variety of stakeholders.

There is significant, significant risk to Albertans and to the government with respect to the capacity market. We've heard much debate about the merits of that. We've heard the government talk about how everything is perfect and everything is going to go according to plan, but we've also seen the government literally cost Alberta taxpayers billions and billions of dollars on this very issue, this issue of electricity and powering our province. You'll know, Madam Speaker, that the Balancing Pool itself has lost $1.96 billion, and that's only in this year's financials. That doesn't include all of the monies that it lost prior to this year. You'll know that the Balancing Pool actually had a significant surplus prior to this government starting to turn the dials in the electricity market, if you will.

One of the challenges that we see is that the government makes a bunch of decisions that seemingly are: shoot, aim, and ask questions, in that order. The electricity market is such a complex grid, a complex system that when you move one dial over here, it actually affects a whole bunch of dials in other areas of the grid and in other areas of the market.

We've seen the government just make an absolute mess of this particular issue and this file. You know, the government was suing Calgarians for an extended period of time before they finally came to an agreement. I believe and many in this House and many stakeholders believe that the reason why they came to an agreement was because they were actually going to lose that particular case because it was their actions that created the problem in the first place, and whether or not they knew about it, they certainly should have known about it.

This is the exact reason why we need to send a piece of legislation like this to committee. The government has proven that they didn't know things they thought they should have known, and the results of that have literally cost Albertans billions of dollars. It is just so critical to the future of our province.

Madam Speaker, you'll know that the fiscal outlook of the province is not very good. The Finance minister introduced a budget just a couple of months ago that includes $96 billion in debt. When we govern, we ought to make decisions in advance of costing Albertans billions of dollars. You know, the government made a mistake, and it cost a few billion. You'd think that they would not want to do that in the future, and one of the ways to not do that is to have all the appropriate information. I also think that it's important for Albertans to have that information.

You'll know, Madam Speaker, that I and my colleague from Calgary-Foothills reached out to the Auditor General just about two weeks ago and asked for him to provide some detailed information on just exactly the scope of the problem that the government has created, because it is north of a billion and a half dollars, quite likely over $2 billion, that these decisions have cost taxpayers.

The other challenge is that as we look forward, we don't know what the end costs are going to be as well, another good reason why we could have this discussion at committee so that we can talk about some of the ongoing expenses and get some good information around just that.

My colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka highlighted a number of issues with the capacity market itself and why we should have a discussion about that at committee. One of the other things that I've heard a lot from stakeholders, whether they're in the industry, as in they are power producers or retailers or providers, one of their really, really significant concerns – the government is right in that you can certainly find individuals in the industry who will speak positively about a capacity market. But one thing that I have found in my conversations is that universally even those who are pro capacity market have very significant concerns, Madam Speaker, about the speed at which this government intends to implement the capacity market. It's actually very difficult to find any situations or any cases that can be studied with respect to the timelines that the government looks to implement. I think that should really provide pause and really provide us some flashing red lights on the dashboard.

You know, you're driving down the highway, you're heading somewhere, not entirely sure of the end destination, Madam Speaker, and the check engine light comes on. You think: oh, maybe we should just slow down and check this out. In the case of this government the check engine light might have been the cancellation of the PPA agreements or some of the early decisions that they made that caused billions of dollars in damages to the province of Alberta. But the government continued to drive. I don't know what sort of vehicle you drive, but in my vehicle the check engine light might come on if there is a problem that one should address quickly. In the vehicle that I drive, if there's a big problem, it actually starts flashing, and that's an indication that you should have your engine or your vehicle checked in the next 50 kilometres. And that's really where we are today. There's a giant check engine light flashing in front of the government, particularly around the speed in which they are proceeding and intend to proceed into the capacity market.

Those who are supporters and proponents of the capacity market – and there are many of them – have spoken with me about their concern around this very issue. I think that it would be of critical importance that we send a piece of legislation like this to committee so that some of those folks – and, listen, they are going to be in favour of doing exactly what the government wants to do, so I don't know what the government would be afraid of. The government can bring in all the folks who are pro capacity market and ask them these questions, ask them questions about what happened in Texas, as my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka has highlighted, ask them questions about Western Australia. There's one thing that is for certain, and that is that there is learning that can be done from those jurisdictions. My big reservation is all around the timeline, the costs, and the exposure to Albertans but, in this case, certainly the timeline. I don't see any good reason why we would proceed on Bill 13 in its current form.

You know, I think it's important that organizations like the Market Surveillance Administrator, the Industrial Power Consumers Association of Alberta, the AESO, the Alberta Utilities Commission, the AUC, would have the opportunity. Then on top of that, of course, would be a bunch of the power producers in the form of EPCOR, Enmax, and all of the others and the retailers that provide such a valuable service to the grid and to our homes.

You know, one thing that I was very interested to learn about this summer – and you'll know that I had the opportunity to do some touring around this summer, and I toured a number of power plants. If there was one thing that I was more certain about after than I was before, it's just how complex the electricity market is, how complex the grid is, and just how many people it takes every single day so that I can have the benefit of waking up in the morning and switching on a light switch in my own home. There are literally hundreds of people at work every single day just so that we can have that luxury of turning on the lights in our home.

It is a complex system. It is a complex grid of individuals, of competing interests, of common good. All that comes together to ensure that we have the benefits in all of our homes and our businesses that power our economy and drive jobs and all of these sorts of things. The government continues to interfere in what has been a very stable and sufficient and better-than-good market as well as in performance. It should be important to the government that we refer this bill to committee so that these important players can come and provide context and feedback about some of those other markets, how they can reassure us that that's not going to happen here.

Goodness knows we don't have to look even outside Canada to see a total disaster in electricity markets in the form of Ontario. You know, the people of Ontario are in the middle of an election right now, and one of the big concerns in that election is power prices because the government in Ontario, just like this government, made a total mess. This government is in the process of making a very similar mess. These decisions that they're making today are going to have a long-term impact on Albertans at significant cost to Albertans.

While it's difficult for people to engage at this level at this point in time, people are going to be very engaged when they begin to see the significant cost increases, when they continue to see the government carrying billions of dollars of debt for other organizations like the Balancing Pool. At some point in time those costs are ultimately borne by the Alberta taxpayer.

I don't understand why the government wouldn't want to make sure that they're not making a terrible decision, why they wouldn't want to ensure that they have all of the information, not just them, the members of cabinet, but certainly members of the backbench. They as well as members of the opposition all represent their constituents. I know that it is of critical importance to get this decision right. When you don't have to look very far to other jurisdictions to have some learnings, you would think that the government would want to do that.

Instead, they are rushing at breakneck speed into the capacity market, and this is just an absolute disaster in the making. The issue around the timing of this: you know, people thought that Ontario made a mess of it quickly. This mess is going to be made in, like, half the time. This is not good for Albertans. While the electoral success of the NDP may in fact fall on some of these decisions, I actually would prefer to see them make a good decision on this particular situation because, at the end of the day, those who are going to pay are people like me and you, Madam Speaker, like the constituents of the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. They are the ones who are ultimately going to pay the price for the mismanagement of this NDP government, just like the people of Ontario are paying the price for the mismanagement of the Liberal government in Ontario. The people of Ontario aren't happy about that, and certainly the people of Alberta won't be happy.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I've actually been eagerly awaiting the opportunity to enter into this debate. I'm going to start off with a quote from somebody that I think has a lot of credibility on this issue. It's Jim Wachowich, the long-term president of the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta. His quote actually was supported by a member of the legacy Wildrose Party four years ago – I'll mention that quote first – and that was Mr. Anglin, who was the Energy critic for the Wildrose Party at that time, who said that the energy-only market was broken, was a complete catastrophe, and that it was really important that if the legacy Wildrose Party were to form government, they would immediately transition away from the energy-only market because that energy-only market was broken.

Premier Klein, at the time when he deregulated, didn't put any safeguards in the system. We ended up with rolling brownouts, and we ended up economic withholding that resulted in tremendous volatility of prices, with prices going from 3 cents to 15 cents in the matter of a few minutes. It was the consumers that were damaged: people on fixed incomes, people that couldn't afford their electricity bills, people that ended up having their electricity shut off because they didn't pay their bills. Now, the opposition stands up and says: well, you know, they could have entered into a long-term contract, or they could have maybe borrowed money from their kids to pay their electricity bills, because we don't want to burden the taxpayer with the possibility of protecting those vulnerable citizens from price volatility.

What Mr. Wachowich said was:

As an independent... consumer group, we're encouraged by legislation that's designed to protect Alberta utility consumers. We're pleased to see the government views efficient and effective consumer protection as an important part of the public interest.

This is our job in this Legislature, the public interest. It's not the companies, the corporations; it's the public. It's the consumers. Those are our prime concern, and we need to put in systems that protect the consumers of Alberta from that tremendous price volatility and assure consumers of Alberta, just as the previous speaker said, that when they wake up in the morning and turn their air conditioner on or they want to turn their computer on, there's actually going to be a power source there. The capacity market system does that.

The other thing I need to remind the opposition of is that the capacity market is a fact in Alberta. Six months ago we passed legislation in this Chamber – and it actually wasn't discussed at great length by the opposition – to create a capacity market. It's a fact. In 2018 we need to actually get the regulations set up, get the systems going to ensure that the capacity market functions well. If we put this referral motion in place, it's going to delay that, and it's going to make it impossible to accomplish what is needed.

What I would really like to know from the member that was speaking is: what is the UCP policy on this? Are they going to reverse the capacity market system? Albertans need to know that. A year from now they're going to be making some decisions about who should be governing this province. I want to know, as a citizen of Alberta, what a UCP government would do in terms of protecting consumer rights and making sure that we have an effective and efficient capacity market.

By the way, that capacity market is supported by investors. The managing director of Morrison Park Advisors says...

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 13 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 13? Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 13. I know that there has been some significant debate on this particular piece of legislation, and I think it's important that we highlight some of the concerns and some of the challenges around it. I had the opportunity to do a little bit of that during my remarks on the referral amendment, but I'd like to just take a couple of seconds and speak briefly to the bill a little bit more broadly, and then actually I intend to move an amendment as well. I'm happy to do that now, and then I'll speak to it a little bit in my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You know, Bill 13 has some significant challenges before it, and I think that it's important that those challenges are dealt with. In fact, I think that the government should go back to the drawing board on this particular legislation. We just saw moments ago the government unwilling to refer this bill to committee. Since they're unwilling to refer the bill to committee, I think that the bill should actually not be read a second time, and that is the intention of the amendment that we just circulated as well. I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a third time but that the third reading be three months from this day."

Sorry. Oh, no. This is the one that I want.

This piece of legislation needs to go back to the drawing board. I understand that the capacity market is moving forward, but the government's unwillingness to send the bill to committee and have a discussion about some of the importance around that is, I think, of significance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I just note that this particular amendment references third reading. We're presently at second reading, so I would seek your guidance in terms of how to proceed.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Deputy Government House Leader. I actually had just noticed that myself. It means that this motion is not in order, so we'll have to refer back to the main bill.

Mr. Cooper: Well, I'll continue to speak to the main bill. I'll continue to speak to second reading while counsel makes the necessary adjustments for the amendment to read "second reading" instead of "third reading." I'm confident that in the 15 minutes that we have before us, we'll be able to get this particular task accomplished. I think we can speak to the intention of the amendment, which will remain the same despite the amendment referencing third reading instead of second.

You know, it's very clear that the NDP have made electricity more expensive, and Bill 13 continues in that trend of exposing Albertans to risk. There will be significant challenges ahead in the electricity market because of the work that the NDP is doing on this very important file or, more importantly, the work that they're not doing, and that is considering all of the risks that are ahead. Bill 13 will make electricity more expensive for consumers by transferring more risk away from generators. I've heard the government talk about how industry and generators are so excited about the capacity market. In some respects, certainly, there are large supporters of the capacity market. One of the big reasons is that it provides a lot of assurances and guarantees to those . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, if I could just interrupt for a moment. I've been advised that Parliamentary Counsel has made the necessary adjustment. Rather than reprint the amendment, if all members of the House will simply read their copies as if it read "second reading." We'll have the official documents adjusted accordingly.

You can go ahead and speak to the amendment.

Mr. Cooper: I couldn't be more happy that we saved 95 sheets of paper this morning as well. I'm sure our good friends in the paper industry are a little disappointed with our lack of additional photocopying, but everybody else is very pleased that we were able to do that. For those of you following along at home, if you need to make the adjustment, it's just in the first sentence, the third sentence, and the fourth sentence, if you change it. I may be number 3 in the program, but I know we're number one in all of your hearts.

As I was mentioning, significant risks and challenges are ahead because of the capacity market. Certainly, some industry players have voiced significant support for that, particularly because the risk gets moved away from them and placed onto Albertans. As I mentioned previously, we have reached out to the Auditor General in hoping to get some comment from that office around the importance of having a full and broad understanding of the costs of this particular move.

In light of the fact of the government not being willing to do the committee level, I think it's important that the government take a pause and make sure that they get this right. I certainly know that there are lots of problems in the bill as well, in particular around section 17. Instead of just tinkering with some smaller changes, I think it's important that we just put the whole thing on hold until we can make sure that we get it right.

You know, I've spoken at some length in the House about: if we're going to do something right, we should do it right the first time. That's what this amendment does. It provides the government with the ability to get this piece of legislation right today because it'll allow them to come back in the fall session and do this again. Goodness knows, we've seen the government do something in the spring and then have to fix it in the fall on numerous occasions. There is definitely going to be some fixing that needs to be done on Bill 13, and this hoist amendment provides that ability to do so. That is exactly what we should do this morning.

I know that my colleagues from Chestermere-Rocky View as well as Calgary-Foothills will be pleased to speak about the importance of this amendment but also to remind us all of some of the large concerns about why we shouldn't proceed with this legislation. In particular, generators, the AESO, Market Surveillance Administrator, investors, consumers groups: all of these people have raised significant concerns. As I was mentioning previously this morning, you know, so many jurisdictions across Canada and North America and right around the world have made major, major, major missteps.

When we talked about the capacity market a number of months ago, we did highlight some of those concerns. I think that it's important that we put a pause on Bill 13, step back from it a little bit so that we can move forward in a way that has a much better balance between protecting generators, protecting consumers, and ensuring that everyone is getting the closest to a win-win as possible. The legislation before us is just not that. There are all sorts of issues and challenges around the retail side of Bill 13.

It would be my strong recommendation that we not read this bill again at second reading but that we read it in three months into the future and provide the government with the necessary pauses put in place. The government has been seemingly so unwilling to put a pause on damaging and devastating legislation. You'd think that after three years of warning from the opposition that the government would start to clue in that the goal of the opposition isn't just to oppose the government but actually to warn them when they're making bad decisions for Albertans. That's what our intention is here this morning.

A friend of mine, who also works here in the precinct: I've heard him state that from time to time politics breaks out in the Legislature. But this morning isn't about politics. This morning is actually about trying to get the government to do what's best for Albertans. Listen, there are times when it is about politics, but today it's about: what is the best path forward for Albertans? Right now the government isn't on it on this file.

Like, listen, there have been a number of pieces of legislation already this session that the opposition has voted in favour with the government on. You know, I can think of a number of those situations, like Bill 5 and the good work that the Member for Calgary-Currie is doing. We're going to support Bill 16, which is an elections financing bill. The politics can be put down.

Now, I haven't seen the government actually at all in the last couple of years put down the politics when it comes to changing legislation that the opposition is suggesting. I have seen the government from time to time ridicule the opposition, then adopt the opposition's ideas, and then go around talking about how they were always their ideas, in particular in things that the Leader of the Official Opposition has done. But with respect to legislation itself I have yet to see them put down the politics and actually make the best available decision for Albertans.

I encourage them to do that this morning. That's what this particular amendment would allow them to do, to put down the politics, put this thing on pause, make sure that we get it right, and come back to it when we've done so. I look forward to hearing the remarks from my colleagues and to hearing the rest of the debate this morning.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak on 29(2)(a)? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you so much, Madam Speaker, for saving the planet by being innovative and using the same sheet of paper with minor corrections.

I would also like to thank my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills this morning for a couple of reasons. The first one is for pairing with me to approach the Auditor General to do some audit and investigation of this whole file. We couldn't get any answers here. We couldn't get any answers from the ministerial staff at PAC. I'm a member of that standing committee. I tried everywhere I could to get some reasonable answers on the concerns that I heard in Calgary-Foothills and also across the province.

Also, I would like to thank the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills for again pairing with me this morning to wear the same tie to celebrate Ukrainian heritage day today. Although there's a lot of brotherhood between Calgary-Foothills and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I think he's crossing the line a little bit. He's trying to play good politics, but he's telling the government that he's giving them opportunities to improve their electoral chances. I don't know. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud already gave up. He said that he wants to know what the UCP government will be doing in 2019. He's already keen to know. I think the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills should make note of it.

Also, you talked about doing this right. You and I had concerns. We approached the Auditor General. We'll wait for the response, but in the meantime I feel it is a reasonable amendment because we need to get the AESO here. We need to get the Balancing Pool. We need to get the Alberta Utilities Commission. In your previous speech you used the analogy that if you dial in something here it has a cascading effect somewhere else. I used a different analogy, Whac-A-Mole policies. Because of their ideological carbon tax policy that kicked in, other measures are required to fix that problem because that's taking away reliable, cheap electricity without any tangible outcomes, whether it is health benefits or anything that is not quantifiable. I asked those questions in this House. Let's talk about the economic impact analysis of that policy. How much emissions are we reducing, and what are the other benefits, and what's the overall cost to the consumers and taxpayers, who are the same?

We didn't hear that. So, to your point, can you share your thoughts on that and on how we can actually bring all those stakeholders and get this right, not for today but for future generations? Some of these costs are actually going to be in the future. We won't see them on any financial statements of today's government, but that will impact future Albertans.

Mr. Cooper: Well, I think that is a very good point that you make. I was going to mention your very nice tie this morning.

Another analogy. I think, you know, that when it comes to the electricity market, it's like when you have a wool sweater and you pull a string and you keep pulling the string and the sweater is unwinding. If the government is not careful, they're going to wind up with no sweater at all, and they're going to be out in the cold. They will have created a pile of string so discombobulated that future generations are going to pay the price. That is exactly what you were saying, that we're not just making a decision for today, but we're making a decision for tomorrow and for generations to come. When you make such sweeping and broad changes to the market and to the grid and to each one of these players, you create a...

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and, again, thank you so much for the opportunity to speak to this. There's something I want to start with. Fair, efficient, open, and competitive, FEOC: this is something that was attributed to the energy-only market. Interestingly enough, the reason for a hoist and the reason for a postponement is that I would think, at the very bare minimum, we'd want to make sure that that piece of this puzzle is there: fair, efficient, open, and competitive. It's interesting because that piece of what was part of the energy-only market is not applied to the capacity market. In fact, it's in the documents.

I wanted to bring up a couple of points that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud had brought up. I want to thank you for speaking about that. You're right. The legacy parties did have issues but not with this part of it. The part that is being misunderstood, Madam Speaker, is that the retail part of this was not the issue. We had issues with transportation and distribution, for sure, and those were parts of the market that I think would have been worth while looking at to see where those issues were. I do believe that under normal circumstances and with time those were issues definitely worth looking at, but the government attacked the part that was working, which is retail. Just to be clear, that's the part that this government has messed up on with regard to the PPAs, with regard to stranded assets.

The member had asked, you know, what we would do differently. Well, I can tell you what we wouldn't have done. We sure wouldn't have rushed this. Electricity is so complex, and then on top of that, we're bringing in renewables. This is a piece of the puzzle that, at the very, very least, we know for sure is not consistent.

To just give you an example, the government wants to bring on 9,000 megawatts, but only 35 per cent of that capacity will be used. Guess what, Madam Speaker? The Alberta ratepayer/taxpayer is on the hook for 100 per cent of that. Is that protecting Albertans? No. The interesting thing is that it is hidden in a flat rate. We have zero utility debt right now. The member had also asked how we'd protect consumers. Those were called rate riders, and it was very transparent.

Like I said, there were issues. There are issues with the model – I one hundred per cent agree – but not this part. The ability to be able to have the consumer have access to every single piece of the puzzle on that electricity bill is the way the government should behave so that the person who is paying that fee understands exactly what they're paying for, top to bottom.

Like I said, I think that there were so many aspects of this that could have been looked at, but because this is being pushed through so quickly, the consumer is completely at odds with understanding how this is going to work.

To the point from the hon. members for Calgary-Foothills and Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, it's not going to show up in your government. It's going to show up down the line. Our children and our grandchildren are going to be paying for this for a really, really long time.

As you know, I actually agree with the energy-only model, but had there been the ability and the capacity to actually sit down and talk about this and the way that this market could have worked, Madam Speaker, anything is possible, but this is an ideological change. This isn't a change for Albertans. You know what? Albertans are catching on really quickly. They sit down and talk with us, and we go over the information on what this is actually going to cost them down the line. And you know what's even more interesting? We can't get any straight numbers out of the government at all, which is why the Member for Calgary-Foothills and the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills asked the Auditor General, because we don't know. We actually have no idea as the opposition even how to tell our constituents how this is going to work.

Bill 13, like I said before, is this interesting piece in the puzzle. The government basically took away the powers of the market surveillance adviser to be able to report on renewables being brought online, so the Minister of Energy has extraordinary powers to be able to bring renewables online without ever telling Albertans what she did. I don't know how else to put that, Madam Speaker. I find that completely, completely disrespectful to Albertans.

Albertans would love to see renewables come online – I love renewables; I'm one of those people – but you have to be honest with the people of Alberta about what the cost is so that they have a say and they have an understanding. Especially right now, of all the times to be looking at this, people are suffering. The government keeps using this as their climate leadership action plan, that moves forward all of these other things, forgetting that it's the very people that they represent in here that are going to be paying for this.

On top of that, absolutely zero transparency. Not only did they remove the powers of the market surveillance; they put it in with the AESO. So when they start to build REP 1, when this starts going forward, Albertans will have no clue on the cost. We're not just talking about the cost of bringing renewables online; we're talking about the infrastructure.

I mean, already the system is overbuilt. The government is looking to overbuild again. The capacity of what they will be overbuilding will land on the backs of the taxpayers, Madam Speaker. And guess what? The government doesn't even have to report that because within their own legislation, when they removed it during Bill 27, Bill 34, it removes all responsibility from the government to be transparent with Albertans about what they do.

I find it interesting, too, that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud said that we didn't talk about this at all. I have pages and pages and pages of Hansard in here from bills 34 and 27, of those discussions leading up to Bill 13 and the capacity model. In fact, I can tell you exactly the number of times that I spoke to the capacity model and my issues with that. So I find that a little bit disconcerting, that the member would stand in here and say that we didn't talk about the capacity model. I have proof otherwise, actually. I have an entire binder here full of the discussions that we had on bills 27 and 34, which were leading up to this. I find that extremely interesting.

Lookit, the combined-cycle and simple-cycle natural gas obtained through peaker plants, in order to replace coal and provide the necessary backup for renewable forms of energy, needs to be a steady stream because we know that wind and solar are not reliable enough. That is why this needs to go back. We need to postpone this and actually look at the numbers. Why can't we work on this together to see what's the best way to bring this online? If the government truly believes that this is what Albertans want, why don't you give us a little bit of time to discuss this?

Madam Speaker, the government is creating legislation to fix the mistakes that they've made in other bills and fix the mistakes of going against the PPAs and fix the mistakes of the costs that they're charging Albertans right now. This government didn't protect Albertans when they turned back the PPAs; they cost Albertans almost $2 billion. That's not protecting Albertans. On top of that, they sued them and acted as though somehow they didn't know what was going on.

Well, we have proof otherwise, because changes to this were being made before the capacity market or any of the other pieces came online, and they were discussed. I mean, I have quotes where the Minister of Energy said that it wasn't in her binder, in the transition binder on electricity. Now we're basing an entire set of rules and legislation changes on a mistake, when the minister didn't know what was going on with the PPAs, and now this is what Albertans are left with.

Like I said, if there is a clear choice here and if this is the right decision to be made, there's absolutely no reason for the government to hide it in smoke and mirrors. Absolutely none. In fact, if it was the right decision, I think Albertans would get behind you a hundred per cent. But the problem is, Madam Speaker, that it's hidden in a flat rate. There is no transparency or accountability. Those words were removed in Bill 27, I believe, when the capacity market was being brought forward, and that took away the powers of the market surveillance adviser to be able to ask questions. Now, on top of that, Albertans don't have anybody to watch over them.

I was asking the other day, on our other bill, about the increase in the ability for Albertans to talk about water issues. Right? This is great, that that's been expanded. I asked the question, too: is that expansion going to also include renewables? Are Albertans going to have an advocate that they can go to when they don't understand how much of renewables are being brought online and when they're being charged extra but don't know why because they can't tell from their bill? I'm telling you, Madam Speaker, that when property taxes go up and business taxes and everything else that has to happen in order to compensate for this, we're going to be in real trouble. Like the Minister of Energy said, you know, they got a great price on that first auction for wind. But the thing that she forgets to tell is that that's also subsidized by the taxpayer.

Madam Speaker, I think that the intention of the government is correct, and I love the fact that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud wants to protect his constituents from fluctuating, volatile rates. That's what we should all be doing, but I don't believe that this is the methodology that will work. There's something in between that may or may not work, but there are absolute, imperative pieces that are missing from this, and it is imperative for us as government and as opposition and the people that work in this beautiful building to be able to look at this a little bit closer and see what the ripple effect is going to be of this particular piece of legislation that's coming forward. Like I said, on many occasions we could see this legislation coming. It had to in order to fix the mistakes that were done in other pieces of legislation.

Bills 27 and 34 fundamentally changed the market functions. As the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills was saying, he's talked to people in the capacity market, and even people who agree with the capacity market are concerned about this methodology. It's because there are a lot of gaps in the system.

The other thing, too, is that having those watchdogs in place, Madam Speaker, is absolutely imperative to Albertans. Those electricity watchdog folks at the market surveillance: these are the people that have stopped large corporations from taking advantage of Albertans. The government has actually taken away the right of that group of people to protect Albertans.

Who's going to protect them if a solar or wind company decides to take advantage of Albertans? I'm not saying that they will, but we've seen other companies do that. They were fined, they were caught, and it was public. That's the whole point of this entire situation, Madam Speaker. None of that is in here.

I go back to my original – we're talking about fair, efficient, open, and competitive. Is none of that part of this discussion? I mean, I would suggest that, based on the government and what they say, these are words that they live by: fair, efficient, open, competitive. This fundamental piece of how the electricity market works and a fundamental philosophy of how electricity works in this province has been left out of the discussions around the capacity market.

As a person on the opposition I would very, very much suggest to the government that they take a very, very close look at this. This is on you. The wonderful thing about a hoist amendment, about being able to do something like this, is that it actually buys you some time. Really, folks, it buys you some time to take a look at this. If you're right and you can prove that that's right for Albertans, what a wonderful opportunity for you, six months before the election. But I think the government prefers at this point in time to hide it in smoke and mirrors and to hide it under a flat rate and hide it in the idea that we're getting a great auction on wind and all these things, not telling Albertans that that's subsidized by them.

There are a couple of other things, too. I mean, we're already overbuilt, right? We're already overbuilt. The government is going to be overbuilding considerably more for this in order to be able to bring that capacity online. That is a really major piece of the puzzle that needs to be discussed with Albertans because it was part of the problem before, right? That's why Albertans were angry before with the overbuild originally.

Did you know, Madam Speaker, that this government is doing the exact same thing that got previous governments into trouble? Even worse than that is that they're hiding it. That overbuild will come in. Albertans are going to see that again. Guess what? They do not benefit from that overbuild. There is absolutely no equity for Albertans to be able to participate in in that overbuild. There's nothing. So everything that this government says that they disliked about what previous governments have done, they're doing, and they're doing it five times faster.

Madam Speaker, I think that when you're looking at unpredictable and renewable electricity and you haven't been able to bring forward cost implications, we need to think about it.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you. Again I'm pleased to participate in this discussion and debate. I just want to bring up one point that was mentioned in the previous speech, and that's about the authority of the Market Surveillance Administrator, MSA. What was stated was completely erroneous. In fact, Bill 27 actually has a statement in it that the MSA has a clear mandate under the Alberta Utilities Commission Act, section 39, "to carry out surveillance in respect of... the supply, generation, transmission, distribution, trade, exchange, purchase or sale of electricity," including renewable electricity. It has the authority to investigate such matters and to undertake activities to address contraventions of our electricity legislation and regulations, including any "conduct that does not support the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the electricity market." This includes the authority to bring matters before the AUC for adjudication around penalties. Its mandate includes investigation and enforcement of the conduct of electricity market participants.

You know, I really wish that the members opposite would actually be aware of what's in the legislation, and I would remind them that this legislation was passed six months ago. It was passed after remarkably little discussion in this House because the opposition wanted to get out of here before Christmas. I remember that period very well. They didn't want to be here because there might have been some questions about some of their members. I'm really quite anxious to hear what the member has to say about that, particularly about the MSA.

The Deputy Speaker: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you so much. It's interesting that you bring that up. In Bill 27 that was removed. If within the regulations the government has changed that, that's very interesting to me.

I'd also like to bring up that the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud likes to keep, you know, casting aspersions. The difference is, Madam Speaker, that we actually talk about policy on this side. They can cast as many aspersions as they want to. That's fine. If you want to say that we wanted to get out of here, I find that interesting since we're the ones that extended our stay here. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, I think actually you need to look at your information and be very clear about how it was that that discussion went forward. I'm not sure. Maybe we can take this offline, and he can tell me exactly why it was that we wanted to get out of here. I know that I was debating here fairly late on all of those debates. I can prove it to you in Hansard if you'd like. We can take it offline later. I'll show you later.

Anyway, as far as the Market Surveillance Administrator goes, the difference is that – I'll read this to you about the investigations. The MSA in 2017 had an "investigation of the Balancing Pool arising from complaints about the Balancing Pool's conduct related to Power Purchase [agreements] ... This matter remains an active investigation."

This is still going on, and as a result of it – the thing that the member doesn't understand is the extraordinary powers of the Minister of Energy, who has the ability to remove the MSA's ability to look at renewables coming online. If the renewables come online and there's an issue thereafter – I'm not sure. Maybe the member is correct that the ability of the MSA to be able to look at those situations might be possible. The difference, Madam Speaker, is that the Minister of Energy has complete control over that. She has extraordinary powers over anything happening with the MSA. The MSA is no longer an arm's-length group of people that oversee this on their own. It is by the discretion of the Minister of Energy. There's a huge difference in that, a massive difference, in fact.

In other opportunities to talk about this particular bill, I will bring forward that exact information. I don't have it in front of me right now, but I'm very, very happy to bring forward all of those pieces of information. I appreciate the member explaining the piece about the MSA. I'm really looking forward to digging into that. I will be researching that today to find out when that actually came online and how that applies to this particular industry. But more importantly... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment moved by my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. It is very timely, I think, to move this amendment. The information that we have obtained from industry and consultants who have been reviewing the rollout of the capacity market comes down to: the NDP needs more time. That's what it's coming down to. To get this correct, two years is a little bit of a rush. The stakeholders told us that usually in other jurisdictions it took longer, up to three to six years.

The changes we are contemplating are massive, and they have a big impact on the day-to-day lives of Albertans because of the affordability of the electricity. People are already subject to so many other taxes, like the carbon tax, and so many other cost increases due to this government's ideological policies, whether people can afford that or not. I mean, everyone on this side of the House at least likes renewables. We support them as long as they're self-funded and as long as they're affordable. We have to do it in a responsible way so that the grid doesn't become unreliable. We have to be careful. At the same time we have to ensure that the cost of the electricity is affordable.

This amendment does exactly that. It will slow down the implementation of the bill and give the minister the necessary extra time to go out and do real consultations with industry and consumers, not just on the legislation but also on the regulations. We won't see the regulations until the bill is adopted, but if we are doing proper consultations, then we'll come out with appropriate regulations well ahead of time. This extra time will also give AESO the time to consult on the market rules and get them right before going to the Alberta Utilities Commission for approval. The extra time, surprisingly, will bring stability to the market and confidence in the bids on the capacity contracts. Why? Because we have increased the chances of getting it right.

One criticism I have seen about the capacity market so far is that some parts of the new market design appear to be equivalent to being locked in a casino, for example, and being forced to play at a table where your potential outcomes are losing 130 per cent of your money or breaking even. That tells me everything about this NDP plan. The NDP wants something for nothing, but they're gambling. They don't have a solid business case here, or at least they couldn't illustrate that to us on this side of the House, the soundness of their business case. The NDP wants electrical companies to generate electricity and make it free for all. As you know, Madam Speaker, economics doesn't work that way.

Another complaint is that several areas of the new capacity market design violate the principles of fair, efficient, and open competition, the so-called FEOC, that my colleague from Chestermere-Rocky View referred to a few minutes ago. We want our markets to be fair. If they are not fair, no one will bid and build the capacity. We want our markets to be efficient. Nonefficient markets mean waste and money down the drain, and we don't want to waste taxpayers' money like that. We want open competition. Open competition means new players could show up and build and bid on electricity. Madam Speaker, you remember when Areva, the French nuclear giant, came around looking to build reactors. If we didn't have an open and competitive market, that wouldn't have happened.

We know that the NDP spent $1.36 billion to shut down the coal plants early and convert them to natural gas, but then there was another $2 billion to bail out the power purchase agreements, let alone the litigation. The litigation is, in fact, really offensive because, being a Calgarian, I was sued by this government. I don't know how my neighbours, like the Member for Calgary-North West or Calgary-Hawkwood or Calgary-Northern Hills or Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, feel about that, but I felt really offended because they sued that company, quoting the Enron clause, and they blamed a guy called Neil McCrank. He said that government was not correct in their approach. He tried to defend. All he asked for was a simple apology, but the Minister of Energy refused to apologize to him, so then he had to go to court to defend himself. He being a former bureaucrat who is indemnified by the AUC, we ended up paying for his legal fee in defending his honour and dignity.

So this government doesn't know what they're doing. That's why I use that Whac-A-Mole analogy. They make one mistake, and to fix that mistake they had to, you know, bring in another regulation or legislation, wasting taxpayers' money and time and energy.

Now, Madam Speaker, we have $74.3 million to subsidize electricity prices this year, and $9 million got spent in April as TransAlta idled the Sundance 3, 4, and 5 coal-fired units. The natural gas fired plants are actually coming, but TransAlta is building a pipeline to ship gas to Sundance to convert the coal-fired generators. You know, that's all wishful thinking, hoping that the natural gas prices will remain low so the feedstock for these generators based on natural gas, the price and the cost of that generation, would stay low. That's our wishful thinking.

But what happens if the natural gas prices go up? There is a lot of demand in the world for Canadian natural gas, and this NDP's best friend and their cousin in B.C. John Horgan: when he manages to build those LNG export facilities and build a pipeline to export natural gas, then the prices will go up. When it happens, there is no hedge here with coal or some other baseload. That's what the Member for Lacombe-Ponoka spoke about, that forward hedged strategy. That's another risk we foresee, Madam Speaker.

Also, another important factor is that this capacity market will be in place after 2021. It's not going to happen tomorrow, but it's going to come into force in 2021. But power prices are already going up today. In April we spent $9 million to actually pay for the difference between the price capped at 6.8 cents and the current market price. That's the subsidy from the taxpayers, whether we like it or not. No one wants power plants – ratepayers are paying for that – that just sit idle and don't produce anything. That's what this bill does.

That's why, for all those reasons, Madam Speaker, we have one shot at getting this right. That's why I'm hoping the government MLAs here would really think about that because they have to think about their constituents, who will feel the pain. They're already feeling the pain because we already paid $9 million more in April, and there are going to be a lot of hidden costs, which won't show up on consumers' bills today or taxpayers' taxes, but this government is going to – because of the mistakes they're going to do in a hasty way, Albertans in the future will end up paying for that.

Madam Speaker, can you imagine the disaster we would have if we had a capacity auction and no one would bid on the capacity contracts? It's a possibility. We can go ahead and auction the capacity, but there may be nobody because there are so many questions that the marketplace is questioning. That's why we have to get this right, and we have to slow it down a little bit and talk it out. Let's make sure that we have it right. If not, this NDP government is answerable to Albertans.

By creating unnecessary capacity today – today we are sitting at 16,000 megawatts of installed capacity, and our peak load is about 11,000 megawatts. Even if the coal generation is taken out sooner, with the accelerated coal phase-out, there are many cogen plants that are coming up. All these oil and gas producers up north, particularly in the Athabasca and Cold Lake regions, many of these in situ developers told me that they are planning to convert their power plants from the existing type of production to cogeneration, which would help so they can actually use the steam to put into the reservoir to make viscous bitumen flow and also generate the electricity that is required for them. They're creating additional capacity, which they're going to put on the grid, so that will provide some reliability.

But if we are creating too much of a capacity which is not reliable, then we are paying for idling capacity. We asked some questions about that for all these renewable projects, if we are going to pay for their capacity even though they're not reliable to produce. We haven't got those answers. I don't know who is taking notes for the Minister of Energy. I would like to get those questions answered because those are reasonable questions asked by my constituents and my stakeholders. I tried to get those answers from the minister in this House and her officials, and I was not successful. I'll make another attempt.

That's the reason, actually, I stayed up a couple of nights thinking about this file. I and my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills approached the Auditor General as a last resort because I was not able to get any of those questions answered here in this House and also at PAC. As a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I tried to get those answers, and I didn't get those answers. We don't want to load up the Auditor General with additional workload, but it's a matter of public interest. Electricity is not a luxury; it is a necessity that impacts the livelihoods of regular Albertans.

That's the reason I raised those concerns, and this amendment would be helpful so we can bring in the important stakeholders like AESO and the Balancing Pool and the Alberta Utilities Commission. All these changes actually are happening when . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?
Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Foothills for some of that very good explanation on this. I must say that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has done excellent work on this file, excellent, excellent outreach with stakeholders, detailed work with his constituents and with people who are coming and asking him questions. I'm sure every person in this House has had people coming in with their bills and asking questions.

I wanted to talk to him a little bit about the prices because in the short term there's an expectation that customers are going to be paying increased rates as a result of the coal-fired power plants going offline. As they go offline and because, Madam Speaker, this is extremely expedited – the costs of that expedited move of coming off coal-fired: as the generators withdraw, we're expecting to see those costs increase. Well, with the analysis, we're looking at the fact that as they come off, there's an unfair competitive advantage. As a result of that, there's a possibility that there could be a withholding of power, and that could impact the system's reliability on top of everything else that we've been talking about.

This is why we talk about the market so much, Madam Speaker, because what ends up happening is that it negatively impacts the market and the ability of new firms to come on. Otherwise, there's no compliance within the system, and as a result of that, it could impact not only the reliability but also the ability for the market to be able to decide what is in the best interest of the taxpayer/ratepayer, the same person.

I was curious if the Member for Calgary-Foothills could talk a little bit more. You were speaking about the market and also the fact that the Market Surveillance Administrator doesn't have a head right now. We don't have somebody at the head of that. If you could please speak a little bit more about what you were saying with respect to increasing rates that will happen as a result of these changes.

The Deputy Speaker: Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. She's right. All these changes and all these policies they're bringing at a time when three of the four boards won't have heads. It's the Alberta Utilities Commission and the Balancing Pool and – what's the third one? – AESO.

Mrs. Aheer: Yeah, AESO.

Mr. Panda: Yeah.

So three of the four won't have the key top executives in place. I know there will be others in those departments to look after because all those boards and agencies won't run based on one person. I get that. But the key leaders: when they're not in place and you're trying to rush all these important policies, that's not helpful.

It's not like people on this side don't like renewables. That's another criticism government benches throw at us. When I visited the Member for Chestermere-Rocky View, actually she has solar panels on her house, and this was done a while ago, when the price for solar panels was too high and the technology was still evolving.

So don't say that we don't like renewables. We do. We are talking about the affordability and the reliability of that.

With this fast-paced implementation of this policy, it's actually going to hurt Albertans. It's not going to help them. The stakeholders I talk to say: we have to look at the big picture, and we have to look at where we can improve the efficiencies. They're thinking that generation is the problem. I don't see generation as a problem today. We have to look at efficiencies in transmission, distribution, and retailing. Some of those stakeholders are saying that they need more time. In other jurisdictions it took four to six years to implement this kind of capacity market. Here we are rushing, and already we are seeing, although it won't come . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I've been listening to the discussion this morning, I think I've finally figured out why we have so much purple. It's because I need to lift my spirit up. Every day, I stand here in the Leg., and I just hear that the sky is falling every single day – I think that it's time to actually talk about the good news for Alberta – and keep thinking that everything that we're doing in terms of the electricity is bad news for Alberta.

I also am very intrigued by the fact that this amendment has come to the floor of the House because the amendment calls for us to go and meet in the House again in August. I don't know about the members of the opposition, but it does indicate to me that they're not interested in consulting with their constituents, that they prefer spending time in the House to meeting constituents. I also noticed that they've been absent from some very important debate in this House such as Bill 9. So I really don't understand why we're being asked in this amendment to not read it for a second time but to come back and meet here in the middle of August because I indeed spend a lot of my time meeting with constituents.

Many of my constituents have talked to me personally about how delighted they are with this bill. One of the things we haven't talked about this morning – and maybe the members of the opposition might like to look at the bill a bit more closely – is that this bill would bring more accountability to the electrical system, and it would address concerns from their constituents, ordinary people, I think, the little guy. I think one of the members of the opposition said those things.

It would address concerns about incorrect power bills and issues in consumer services from electricity and natural gas service providers. My constituency staff actually spend a lot of time on these issues, and I'm delighted to see that in this bill the Utilities Consumer Advocate will be able to deal with these issues and to address them by issuing penalties to electrical and natural gas service providers for specific breaches. I don't want to delay this bill because I want my constituents to have an ability to have their concerns addressed in terms of their utility bills. I am not in support of delaying this bill, as the amendment suggests.

Then there's another issue that this bill really addresses. Maybe the members of the opposition have never met any members who are involved in community renewable energy, but I have. Actually, for the last three, four years I've spent a couple of hours every month talking to them, and I know that our government has worked very, very closely with those advocates in the community renewable energy sector. They include co-ops, they include municipalities, and they include community-based organizations who really want to have their ability to generate electricity and feed it back to the grid.

I would really like to encourage members of the opposition to meet some of them, and if you're interested in a list of these communities and co-ops and small-scale providers who have been advocating to the government for such changes to regulations that would allow them to generate electricity and feed it back to the grid, please contact my office. I would be very happy to encourage you to go and meet with them and to understand why this bill is very important for them. Actually, it so happens that many of them are in your ridings, and maybe I would encourage you, when you're not sitting in the Leg. or not failing in your duties to vote on a bill, to go and meet with some of them because I think these are really important constituents of ours in Alberta.

Maybe because we haven't really discussed a lot about that sector, actually, just so that we're all clear on what we mean by small-scale and community generation providers, I thought I might read into the record this definition. Small-scale generation refers to electricity generated from renewable or alternative sources closer to consumption so that it can bypass the transmission system and be connected directly to the distribution system. Examples include a group of neighbourhood homeowners who set up a system to generate their own electricity, a rural or town operation that sets up a system to generate their own electricity, or an indigenous community that owns or operates a renewable energy project. Community generation refers to a subset of small-scale generation that provides benefits to communities such as training, environmental protection, and economic development opportunities.

As you can see from this bill, the government is interested in helping the everyday Albertan and especially in helping them to be able to have environmentally safe renewable energy projects that benefit them. This is different from microgeneration in the fact that in microgeneration it's usually just for the homeowner that puts solar panels on or for the farm, but the community renewable energy sector is also intended to possibly feed energy back into the grid.

This bill does two really important things that I think the opposition has failed to mention in their opposition to it. They have failed to mention that this bill will really help consumers with their energy issues and that this is so needed. I mean, when I told members of my constituency that we were really looking at working with the Utilities Consumer Advocate to make it possible for changes to be made and for possible penalties, they were delighted. I think this is something that the government is doing because we do have the backs of everyday Albertans.

When we think about the potential of community renewable energy projects, including in the constituencies of the members of the opposition, you realize how important this is. Just think of a developer that builds a community renewable energy facility. The whole subdivision can have their own electricity, and the profit can go back to those homeowners collectively. I think there's so much potential in that.

For those reasons, I think it's really important that this bill is passed before the end of the session. If members of the opposition really feel that they want to spend more time in this House and come back in August, I would really like to encourage them to actually vote on the bills that the government has put forth, not to disappear when they disagree with a bill but to actually show to all constituents of theirs that they actually do care what happens in this House.

Madam Speaker, having said this, I would like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

[Adjourned debate May 14: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to Bill 10? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, otherwise known as the PACE, or property assessed clean energy, program. As it's been stated many times over the course of debate, this legislation will enable municipalities to establish energy efficiency and renewable energy programs like solar panels while deferring the cost to their property tax installments.

Here in Edmonton I've had a chance to speak with some of the city councillors, mainly in my community in west Edmonton, and it's been made very clear to me that councillors here in the city are very interested and find climate change to be an issue that we need to tackle with great urgency. Also, the need for environmental stewardship: they take that very seriously as well. Through my conversations with some of those councillors I know that they support this legislation as it gives people in our city the ability to take action without the traditional front-end costs that we see.

I feel that it is important to say once again, though it has been said several times on this side of the House, that this legislation will not force any person or any municipality to, you know, use this program if they don't want to. It simply enables them to make that decision. Madam Speaker, as you may know, I spend quite a bit of time door-knocking in my community. At this point I've knocked on just about every door if not every single door over the last three years, and energy efficiency and renewable energy is a topic that comes up often, obviously behind the economy, behind pipelines. It does come up a lot.

There is a large segment of the population that is extremely interested in putting solar panels on their property, but until now there weren't enough mechanisms or methods of financing for them. Traditionally we see the costs being $20,000 to $30,000, depending on the size of your house. Not many people can afford to pay that on the front end. Now, with a program like PACE, residents will be empowered to look at the cost and the benefit and to make a decision on whether this program works for them.

I can see many benefits to a program like PACE. Before, a homeowner would have to decide whether it is of value to them to cover the initial costs, which might be a disincentive if they are planning to move in the near future. Now, if this legislation is passed, they can make the decision to pay through their property taxes, which would then be transferred to the new homeowner if they chose to move, which, in my opinion, makes more sense than trying to recoup the entirety of the cost at the point of sale. Of course, the cost will be little as they are able to reduce their energy bills while needing to buy less energy from the grid, reducing their energy costs.

As you may know, before becoming elected to this Legislature, I was an apprentice electrician. Through that work and through the work of being in the Legislature, I've had an opportunity to speak to many stakeholders, whether it be my own local union, IBEW 424, or ECAA, the Electrical Contractors Association of Alberta, or private companies within my own constituency and business owners. Honestly, I have not talked to anyone who didn't find this legislation to be of importance to them, and I've found a lot of support out there, probably unanimous support, for this program.

Many of them have been advocating for this program for many years, even before we came into this Legislature.

These groups see the incredible benefit that renewable programs like PACE mean for jobs in our province. My local union also has an exceptional training centre on the south side of Edmonton, where they're able to train their apprentices and their journeymen and contractors for solar installations, and a program like PACE will ensure that that training centre keeps busy while helping to diversify our workforce and our economy.

I think there's also something to be said about the idea of builders offering a program like PACE to somebody working to customize their first home or second home, whatever it may be, and I believe it will be a great opportunity to increase the abilities for microgeneration for all residents in our province while, once again, putting more electricians to work.

Make no mistake, Madam Speaker; this legislation is extremely positive for those in the industry. This is a program that I truly believe should have been implemented a long time ago, but as we have seen, there are quite a few common-sense programs that we've implemented over the last three years that have left people wondering why these weren't in place before. Ontario, Nova Scotia, and Quebec already have PACE legislation, and since 2008 33 states across the United States have enabled PACE programs, which has led to $6 billion of economic activity across the United States. I think it's time for Alberta to move forward on this important program.

Madam Speaker, if you take a look at the original news release that was sent out with the PACE legislation announcement, you'll see a number of stakeholders talking about the importance of PACE. The Building Industry and Land Development Alberta Association, the Alberta Construction Association, the mayors of both the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, and other private companies have said that they understand the benefits and that they're excited to see this moving forward.

Now, I believe this program will change our province in a big way. There is no doubt that, if implemented, thousands of solar panels will go up on homes across our province, including on my own home – I'm very excited to use this program – employing thousands of Albertans in an industry that is growing exponentially, creating more opportunities for people to train in an industry that is quickly shaping the province and the future.

I'm proud to stand in support of Bill 10. I thank the minister for bringing it forward. I thank the many people within the industry who have been advocating for this program for many, many years. Once again, I'm proud to support it, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak to it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm happy to rise and speak on Bill 10, titled An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. I listened carefully to the member that started the debate this morning, and part of what he said I agree with. I think a lot of Albertans are interested in making improvements to their homes that would make them more energy efficient, things like perhaps adding solar panels or other things, and I'm not surprised at that. Albertans care very much about the environment.

I have to say that the program as advertised by the government – and I'm reading off the government website page here – says things to the effect that the program “should not be mandatory,” that the “legislation is enabling in nature.” It says that “Municipal Councils will choose whether to pass a PACE bylaw.” It sounds pretty good. But then somewhere else on their website it says that municipalities will pay for and finance these things and then collect the money back off their property taxes.

Well, you can imagine, Madam Speaker, that both of those things can't be true, yet they both come off official government documents. So one could only reasonably ask and, hopefully, get some kind of an explanation from the government before this thing is done on which of those two things on the government website is true. I think it's pretty easy to imagine that both of them cannot be true at the same time, yet both of them exist at the same time. So one of these things does not belong with the other.

It also says, again on the government website – these are not my words, Madam Speaker; this is what it says in the government of Alberta document – that “municipalities are not interested in administering the program and incurring administrative costs.” Then in the bullet underneath that it says that “it is envisioned Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the program on behalf of municipalities who have passed a PACE bylaw.” Well, you can imagine how municipalities might like that, yet again it says on the government website that municipalities will finance these things and collect. So it sounds to me like the municipalities are doing all the administration.

Again, it can't be both. It has to be one or the other. I think that at some point it would be a fair question for someone in the government to stand up and say which part of their documents are incorrect. Or maybe they're both incorrect. Maybe there's a third story we haven't heard yet. These are concerns that I think are legitimate and fair for us to ask.

It also says here in this government document, again, Madam Speaker, not my words, the government of Alberta's words: “Municipalities are not interested in a lending role (financing upgrades). It is envisioned that private capital will finance clean energy upgrades through agreements with [Energy Efficiency Alberta].” Yet again, for the third time, and I think reasonably so, I will point out that on the Alberta government website it says that municipalities will finance these improvements and then pay for them. Imagine my surprise. The government, that I should be able to trust, is telling me two what seem to be exactly different things, and if I am an Alberta citizen, I would think: wow; my government maybe doesn't have their story straight, maybe doesn't know what they're doing, maybe hasn't figured it out yet, maybe is still figuring it out.

I don't know. Maybe there's a third story that's true, and maybe neither one of these is true. I mean, until we get some clarification, how are we to know, especially when we have two things written on the government of Alberta website that give different answers to the same question? So I think there's much to be concerned about here.

You know, when we look at, again, the program as advertised, it sounds nice. It says that it “reduces financial barriers associated with high upfront costs for energy-related property improvements.” It says that there's “an opportunity for longer-term repayment periods and lower interest rates.” Okay. I don't see any numbers there that say what those lower interest rates are. If it's on someone's taxes, I guess, then the municipality is administering it. I'm not sure. I wonder how happy the municipalities are with administering a loan program that they may or may not be in control of the interest rates for.

It appears that through the legislation they're going to turn municipalities into ATMs or banks as well as collection agents. I guess that if that's what the government is going to do – they're the government; they certainly have the right to do that – they should probably get their story straight as to whether they’re turning the municipalities into the banks and the collection agents or whether indeed Energy Efficiency Alberta is going to become a bank, which I think would be mission creep for them, and a collection agent. I don’t know. But these are, I think, obvious questions that, obviously, should be answered. And who wouldn’t want solar panels? It sounds like a nice idea.

Again, here’s the other government document that I’ll read straight from, on the government of Alberta letterhead.

Under PACE, municipalities would install . . .

See, now they’re in the installation business. They’re not just administering them, okay? On one page it says that somebody else is going to do it all, and on this other government of Alberta page, which is in my hand here, it says:

Under PACE, municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property and recover costs through the owners’ property taxes.

Here’s where it gets fun here, too. It says:

Since first implemented in California in 2008, PACE programs have expanded to every region in the United States . . .

The hon. member before me just said, “33 states,” and I don’t take any issue with him that he said that.

. . . generating nearly $6 billion in economic activity. Ontario,

Nova Scotia and Quebec have also adopted PACE legislation.

Well, if you don’t read too carefully and ignore where things say exactly the opposite on one page from what they say on the other, you might actually be convinced that it sounds pretty good.

It says that it will be “a voluntary program for municipalities and property owners,” yet the other page in the same document, the page before, said that “municipalities would install and pay for upgrades.” One does need to ask whether the government has their act together on this and has figured out what they’re doing when they have so much conflicting – and all these things that I’ve quoted are not from me; they’re off government of Alberta documents. Government of Alberta documents. They do not seem to have their story straight.

Now, it gets to be more fun because what’s not in the government of Alberta documents is that in the States there are lawsuits against the PACE program. So it raises the issue of consumer protection, whether somebody perhaps gets a $30,000 set of solar panels that maybe are only worth $3,000. Maybe. I don’t know. But let me just say this. Down in the States there’s not just one lawsuit – wait for it – there’s a class-action lawsuit against the PACE program.

So when the government talks about how everything is shiny and beautiful and that it’s all figured out, their own documents betray the fact that that may not be the case, Madam Speaker. All these things that I’ve said are not my words. They’re from the government of Alberta website. I haven’t invented any of these words. They’re all in government of Alberta documents. You can imagine my concern when I’m seeing exactly the same things, opposite things, underneath a government of Alberta logo. I think most Albertans might share my concern and have a few questions for the government on this.

So in light of some of the things that we were able to find with some research, Madam Speaker, I would like to move an amendment to Bill 10. I have the requisite number of copies here. I will wait for your permission to continue if that’s okay with you.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. McIver: Thank you. I move that the motion for second reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended by deleting all of the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not provide sufficient detail to ensure there is adequate protection for property owners to avoid the type of litigation that has arisen with the PACE programs in California.

Madam Speaker, listen, I’ve seen the government documents. An organization I respect very much, AUMA, is quoted in here as saying that they like the program. I think RMA is a little bit less enthusiastic about it so far, but I’m not saying that they’re against it. But I am saying to not read it right now and give the government sufficient time to ensure that litigation won’t happen; give guarantees to Albertans that consumer protection will be put in place, that vulnerable Albertans will not be taken advantage of at their front door or through other mechanisms of marketing, that people won’t lose their homes because they can’t pay their property taxes if they get talked into improvements they perhaps can’t afford the tax bill for.

Listen, the government may be able to get this right still, but by passing this amendment, it will actually give them time to get on the same page not with us but, rather, with themselves. If they can get on the same page with themselves, they’ll be in a better position to convince Albertans that this is good.

Now, again, I accept what the hon. member from the other side said, and I agree with him that a lot of Albertans are interested in upgrading their properties to make them more energy efficient and more environmentally friendly and all those things. I don’t disagree with that at all. I don’t even disagree with the government’s idea about helping people do that. I certainly wonder about the fact that they have conflicting information. I haven’t read enough about how consumers are going to be protected. I haven’t read enough about who’s going to pay for the improvements, whether it’ll be the municipality – actually, I’ve read that it’s both. I’ve read too much on that. I’ve read that the municipalities will pay for it, and I’ve also read that Energy Efficiency Alberta will pay for it.

Now, I see the minister shaking his head, and I’m sure he’s got lots to say, and I’ll actually be happy to hear it. He’s probably a little embarrassed that documents are floating around that say exactly the opposite things, but that’s what ministers get to sort out. That’s part of the challenge of that particular difficult job. I admire how hard some of the ministers work on doing their job, especially when they have to sort out stuff like this on television. It doesn’t make their job any easier.

So I think it’s a reasonable amendment under the circumstances. I think it’s a program that has potential to have good things in it. I think the evidence, not provided by me but, rather, provided by the government itself, indicates that the government is not really ready to launch it yet. I think that the amendment will give the government time to undo the inconsistencies that they’ve published, to maybe get one clean story out to Albertans, maybe get their story straight, maybe not have such big inconsistencies floating around out there. At that point they may be able to come back and mop up the inconsistencies and have everybody in this House know what they’re voting for in legislation and have the public get one consistent message out of their Alberta government. At that point we might even be ready to support this thing.

I’m certainly not accusing the government of having bad intentions here. It’s just that it appears the cake isn’t fully baked, Madam Speaker. In fact, it’s pretty obvious that the cake isn’t fully baked. So I hope that all members of the House will support the amendment to give the government a little more time to be consistent in their messaging, to not confuse Albertans, to make sure Albertans know that they’re protected, to make sure that this thing is well communicated. It certainly isn't the case yet. I'm not accusing anybody of bad intentions here, but the evidence, again, not from me but, rather, from the government's own websites and such, would indicate that this thing isn't ready.

I think the worst thing the government could do is to thrust something onto Albertans that isn't ready, and I think that the best thing they could do is to just say: "Okay. Let's take a breath. Let's find out where we're inconsistent. Let's come back to Albertans with a nice clean, consistent message. Let's deliver that to Albertans, and let's see if Albertans like it." I think that would be the best thing for the government to do. It's what I am proposing, and I sincerely hope that all members of the House will see what I think is the obvious good sense in doing that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you. I don't think you'll find it surprising that I will not support the amendment, but I do want to clarify a couple of things, and I'm glad that the member brought it up. One thing, first off, is that legislation is the number one source that we have to get our information from.

There is one sentence that I've been made aware of from the member that on the website does kind of give a little bit of – it's not clear, and it seems like a contradiction. I do apologize for that. It seems like it's a little bit of a mixed message. I think it's because – I've got a note that I wrote here – the payments for the clean energy improvements are being done through the property taxes, and the municipality must be the one that delivers a service. It doesn't mean that the mayor and council are going to be installing solar panels or windows or doors on your or your neighbour's home. Just like they don't repave the streets, it will be contracted out to a third party.

So I appreciate that. There was a mistake on the website. But, again, the legislation is the number one source, so just to make sure that we always follow that. I appreciate you bringing that up.

Consumer protection is under the Fair Trading Act. It's pretty straightforward. I want to make a point, too, that it's not just solar panels that we're discussing here. We're talking about windows, doors, insulation, small things that can make a big difference, especially for people on fixed incomes, nonprofits. It's not just residential. I think a lot of this is going to be very beneficial for a lot of bigger projects like older apartment buildings with giant boilers in them that are super inefficient. So I just wanted to make that point.

It's also not going to be the municipality that pays for these, and Energy Efficiency Alberta isn't going to be the one that's paying for these. There will be third-party lenders. We've set it up as I've done with the MGA, the massive piece of legislation, the same way. This is a framework. The framework for this is coming through right now. We've discussed this before in the House, and I've made it abundantly clear that the regulations – and we've already consulted with a lot of people – will be consulted on through the summer to make sure that we get all those details right. So it won't be thrust upon Albertans without discussing it with them and getting all the information out to them and all the details to them. That is something that we want to make sure that we do through whatever the spring is right now and then through the summer and then into the fall, when we'll bring the legislation back and then make the final decision on that. I just want to make those points clear.

Like I said, I do appreciate the member bringing that up, that there was a line on the website that was a bit mixed messaging, to be honest.

There are a lot of people that are behind it. You know, I had a message from the president of AUMA a few days ago – and actually I've discussed it with him a couple of times after – that AUMA backs this. They're behind it. I've also got letters from Clark Builders, from EllisDon, from architects, the Green Building Council, from the whole myriad of people that have stood behind this, a homeowner, Mr. Hanlan, in Edmonton who says, "PACE would be of great benefit for senior homeowners by providing them with a source of funds to retrofit their homes for energy efficiency." There are a lot of people out there that are behind this. I'm actually accumulating all the letters and all the information so at some point, when I have time, I can let more people know who's behind it.

Yeah. I just wanted to make a few points there about that and to clarify for folks. If they do have those questions, by all means, make sure you bring them up to me. But, again, the legislation is the number one source of information, and then come to me and ask if there are questions.

Thank you very much, Member, but, yeah, that amendment is not something that I will be behind. I hope that nobody else is either, on our side.

The Deputy Speaker: Did you wish to respond, Calgary-Hays?

Mr. McIver: See, there it is. I didn't accuse the government of wanting to do anything bad. I think the minister has said that he doesn't want to do anything bad. No one has accused the minister of that, but he has acknowledged that there is some confusion there.

The only thing I would take issue slightly with in what the minister just said is that while he might believe that the legislation is the main place to get information, the public doesn't typically go to the legislation. They usually go to the government website, right? For those people listening and watching at home, if you were wanting to know about a government program, any government program, would you look up the legislation, or would you go on the website and look up the topic? Of course, I believe that the vast majority of Albertans would go to the website and look up the topic because that's what people do. Again, I'm not taking big issue with what the minister said. Maybe his friends all go to the legislation; I think that most of my friends would go to the website. I truly believe that.

That could just be a difference of opinion that the minister and I have, and that's fair. We're allowed to have differences of opinion in here. I don't find that offensive, any way that he disagrees with me, and I hope he doesn't find it offensive that I disagree with him on this. But I think it does support my point that the government could use more time.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the amendment? The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and good morning, everyone. Today it is my intent to speak once again about some of the problems that we had noticed beforehand and, through some other research, you know, been concerned about since we first got onto this bill. I'm here to speak and put forward some of the basis behind the reasoned amendment that my colleague from Calgary-Hays has presented, which I'm in full support of.

I think we know what the reasoned amendment says in essence. It's basically:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not provide sufficient detail to ensure there is adequate protection for property owners to avoid the type of litigation that has arisen with the PACE programs in California.

Madam Speaker, we are making this amendment today based upon information provided by the ministry on the proposed program in the original technical briefing plus information we have obtained from the ministry's website. We also have details from the news media, articles published recently in the state of California regarding serious legal proceedings involving the PACE program. As a result of this information, we have very serious concerns that approval of this legislation could lead to similar legal difficulties for the public here in Alberta.

Madam Speaker, I want to reflect back a moment, actually, at this time and take a look at the substantive issues that have led us to make this amendment here today. As I mentioned during my last presentation here, two days ago, as an opposition member I look upon the task of reviewing proposed legislation seriously as it is our role and responsibility in this House to ensure that what is proposed for the benefit of Albertans is worded correctly to ensure that the purpose and the intent are achieved and that it prevents unintended consequences from occurring. It is for that very reason that I stand before this House today, as I believe this proposed legislation is not appropriate at this time because the program that is to be enabled will potentially, left as is, without detail, have the opportunity to cause Albertans great financial difficulty.

When the government first invited my assistant and I to the technical briefing regarding Bill 10, I was cautiously optimistic, actually. Documents provided by the ministry indicated that the PACE program being promoted by the staff was originally implemented in 2008 in California, and it outlined how property owners would be able to finance renewable energy projects which would constitute upgrades to their properties, and repayment would be collected through property owners' municipal tax bills, much like off-site levies that we have today. However, the briefing document went on to indicate that many of the Alberta rural and urban municipalities had serious concerns regarding the implementation, the administration, and the financing aspect of the proposed PACE program. That is a fact. It is in the document.

The document reported that large and mid-sized cities were not interested in administering the program or incurring any administrative costs with such a scheme, nor were they interested in a lending role. Additionally, the briefing document went on to mention that in addressing those concerns, the ministry had envisioned instead that Energy Efficiency Alberta would be administering the program and that the lending role would be provided through agreements with that agency. So some of the municipalities' concerns were addressed somewhat in that regard.

However, despite those comments and investigation, as was mentioned earlier here this morning, the quickest search of the program came upon the Alberta website and yielded the concerns that we were just mentioning here a few moments ago. It did say, "Municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property and recover costs through the owners' property taxes." It was also repeated on the second page. Now, that totally contradicts the information that we got in the original briefing. I think the minister did address that somewhat and admitted a few minutes ago in the previous conversation and exchanges, therefore, that there seemed to be some error on the government website.

Nonetheless, at this point in time, though, we wondered: what were municipalities actually told, then? That contradiction in information leads us to believe that there was something kind of faulty in how they were putting this proposal together and how it was presented by the ministry to municipalities. In that regard, one of the things that I found the most troubling, though, about the administration of the program was that the eligibility for this program is going to be based primarily on property information rather than the industry standard in lending, income and credit information. Although this would make the program easy to qualify for, I suspect, a proper loan should only be considered through risk assessment, with a repayment plan in place. The basis would normally be an individual's history with finances in almost any other setting.

It would appear that the government is so eager to get this green spending out the door that by not following normal lending qualification practices, they are prepared to put this program together which may put ordinary Albertans at risk, especially seniors, who are not necessarily well financed. If a family can't pay, they risk losing their home, ruining their finances, or being plagued with the burden of debt for a decade or two or more.

But the most crucial information pertaining to this reasoned amendment, Madam Speaker, was found when our members along with our staff also discovered these news articles, that the PACE program is facing class-action lawsuits in the United States and in the very state that the ministry has essentially been modelling the program from, specifically L.A. county in the state of California. Let me reiterate that in case those that weren't listening would like to just get me correctly. There is a class-action lawsuit filed in L.A. county over the PACE program due to the program lacking adequate consumer protections. We'll be tabling copies of that article later today, after question period, in the process this afternoon.

Attorneys representing homeowners allege that this county program that funds energy-efficient home improvements, known as PACE, has ruined the finances of many borrowers saddled with loans that they cannot afford. They claimed that the lenders did not provide adequate protections. There were no special safeguards for seniors, and many PACE participants were left living hand-to-mouth to hold on to their homes. We have the same concern here with this program, Madam Speaker. We see nothing in the legislation to offer these protections. People are on the verge of losing their homes over this program in L.A. county, actually. A homeowner can be foreclosed upon if a PACE loan goes unpaid. In the boondoggle of their trial run with this program they particularly noted the lack of special safeguards for seniors.

What I'm getting at, Madam Speaker, is that making this same program accessible here for all applicants in Alberta would do nothing but put a great portion of them in a position of potential risk as well. The legislation doesn't say anything about safeguards. We're tasked with making sure that legislation is correct, yet we cannot make a fair judgment in the absence of that information. We are worried that they would possibly risk losing their homes, just like in California, ruin their finances, be plagued with the burden of debt for a decade or two, and suffer many of the same unfortunate fates that those in the States are currently enduring and over which they are suing their county.

Madam Speaker, I'm surprised and appalled by this situation. Why should the Alberta government even consider to propose, promote, and legislate a program that is of the very same type and name that is involved in class-action lawsuits in another jurisdiction and in the very state that this government told me in the briefing meeting they're modelling it on? That's quite surprising.

Madam Speaker, if the money is not capable of being repaid or if the money being lent is greater than the value of the home or if for any other reasons an individual undertakes more than they are capable of repaying – it's sometimes called biting off more than they can chew – that is a problem. It's, of course, a problem for the government, that will not be getting its money back, but it's an exponential problem for property owners, who are now possibly, if they participate in a program without proper protection, losing everything.

As eligibility will be based primarily on property information rather than the income or credit check, as I said before, I am at a loss for how they expect the money to be paid back if there is no emphasis on financial responsibility or even a credit check to see if there's a lending risk. Again, the legislation has no detail on that. How are we to judge if it doesn't include information pertaining to that very risk?

Madam Speaker, this proposed legislation and the program in its current form simply don't pass the smell test, in my opinion, for Albertans. There should not be any type of government-proposed program that leads to people being fearful of losing their homes and possibly ruining their finances. There already exist several types of lending services for home improvement, from lines of credit to second mortgaging plus the CHIP program, which involve proper qualification standards that protect the homeowner and the financing companies. Therefore, this program is entirely unnecessary.

To conclude, we've attempted to show in previous submissions during the second reading debate of this bill that the legislation is vague and has insufficient details that would be pertinent to prevent future unintended financial consequences or even potential litigation. We've also shown how the municipalities have serious concerns over the implementation, administration, and financing aspect of the proposed PACE program. Those words are not mine, Madam Speaker. Those are the words that were in the briefing document that we received. They had serious concerns over the implementation, administration, and financing aspects.

We've shown that this same program in L.A. county in California has some serious problems for its citizens that have actually been so bad that it's led to class-action lawsuits. Therefore, we can only conclude that Bill 10 does not provide sufficient detail to ensure that there's adequate protection for property owners to avoid the type of litigation that has arisen with the PACE program in California. That's the reason for our amendment. We think this needs to be redone with more detail to satisfy us that this legislation can and will be viewed by Albertans as being correct. They could receive a bit of reassurance with it. Given all of the above, I urge all of you to think about what I've just said. We are charged with ensuring that legislation is correct and has proper detail in it.

I urge all of the members of the House to protect Albertans from the same fate as what has already happened in L.A. county. Make it better. Do so by voting in favour of our reasoned amendment so that this bill does not proceed in its current form.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. minister.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate that one of the things we have in Alberta, I think, to be honest, is the opportunity to look at other programs around not only this country but other countries, the United States being one, and to learn from them. It's just like when they say that everything we're doing in Alberta is the same as Ontario, which is completely wrong. We've learned from other jurisdictions, and we take things that are going to work well for Alberta. That's what we do here because Alberta is unique – frankly, I'm biased – and, I think, better.

Again, with this program it's the same idea. I understand the concerns that they're bringing up about the United States, and they can beat that drum all day long, about lawsuits and things, but they forget about consumer protection up here and how we have different laws and the Fair Trading Act. There are numerous things that we have up here that are different than the United States. We're different countries.

So that's fine. I understand the concerns, and I appreciate that. We have learned some lessons from how PACE was implemented down there, and those lessons, combined with how we are proposing to enable this program through legislation, will make it impossible for predatory contractors or lenders to use the clean energy improvement tax to be able to take advantage of Albertans because the municipality or its contracted administrator must be involved in the process. Only property owners who apply through those official channels will be eligible.

In addition, a list of approved contractors will be developed in consultation. I will say that word again, "consultation," which is super important to me and to Municipal Affairs and the rest of this side to make sure that we get it right. I've said it I don't know how many times in this House that this legislation is going to be put in place here as a framework and that we will consult. We've done consultation already, but we will do this formal consultation again through the spring and summer to bring it back in the fall because we need to. As I said, it will be developed in consultation with Energy Efficiency Alberta and Alberta's energy-contracting stakeholders. This will also ensure that these improvements are being installed appropriately to achieve Alberta's climate change goals and to protect consumers.

Ultimately, Madam Speaker, what I would like to do and what I am doing is bringing forward a program that's going to help consumers, that's going to help contractors, builders, farmers, ranchers, nonprofits, seniors, people on low incomes. But one of the most important parts about it is that they're accountable to themselves. They make that choice. It's enabling. They can make that choice if they want, just like right now if they go and try to buy something or make a choice on buying a car or whatever it might be. We as human beings have choices, personal freedoms in this country, which other people in some other countries don't have. I'm not forcing anything on anyone. It is simply enabling legislation that they can choose to use if they would like.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, do you wish to respond?

Mr. Stier: Yes. Well, thank you, Madam Speaker and through you to the minister. I appreciate his comments, and I appreciate the work that has been put in by the department. I know many of the people over there, and I appreciate that their intent, I'm sure, is well above board. But the problem is that, as I said earlier – and it's part of our system, I think – when we're working with legislation in the House, a lot of times it is bare bones, structural with no detail. I know that regulations will come forward at some point in time from the department after they do the work that the minister alluded to, but we are charged with deciding about this legislation now, the legislation that we've been presented with. In the absence of any of the details, that he just shared now, how are we supposed to make the choice that this is appropriate in its current form? If all of those things should be important to Albertans, I would say that they should be in the legislation.

Madam Speaker, I appreciate the time this morning. I appreciate the incredibly great amount of co-operation we have with the minister's ministry and with him. I look forward to perhaps seeing changes to this legislation, something to give us some satisfaction, where we can move forward with this with more confidence and more confidence for Albertans.

Thank you.

11:50

The Deputy Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I begin, I'd just like to say that I have a lot of respect for the minister. I think you've done a good job on this file. I thank him for answering some questions here this morning. Some of my speaking notes now are going to be repetitive of what everybody else has said as he's already answered some of the questions. You now, I'm getting used to this, but our job over here as the opposition is to question. You bring the legislation, and our job is to question it. I guess that's what I'm doing here. We can't just rubber-stamp everything you do, so it's all with respect and just doing our jobs and looking out for Albertans.

You know, one of the things that I'm a little concerned about is that it's almost like the municipalities will become a bank, that they're doing banking, then. Basically, they're lending the money to homeowners to upgrade their homes. They can get loans and mortgages at a bank already, so now the municipalities will be competing with the banks. I get it that it makes it easier, but if they can't get the mortgage at the bank, that means they probably don't qualify. The bankers have their rules to go through. In making their mortgage payments, they always take into account what they have to pay for taxes, what they have to pay for utilities. Now this is going to be an added cost on there, and they're going to take that into account if they're trying to decide if the homeowner can afford the payments.

If the banks say, "No, we won't do it," they must think they can't afford it. So then they'll come to the municipality like the lender of last resort. I know it's not the same, but there is a chance that the municipalities will be funding homeowners that the bank won't. That kind of brings up the odds that they might not be able to make the payments. You know, I don't know if the municipalities want to have to go through the hassle of doing that.

The municipalities I've talked to actually – you know, I've just talked to the ones in my constituency, and most of them really don't know much about it. I think they've heard of it, but they don't really know. They're not sure about it. They're not sure if they want to get involved. But I guess the good thing, as the minister has pointed out, is that it's optional. I mean, they can do it, or they don't. Each municipality gets to decide that, so if they're not comfortable with it and don't think it's something they want to do, I guess they don't have to. That's a good part of it.

Then it's a little confusing, but I think I've got it. The minister has said that he's going to consult all summer, so I wasn't sure if that meant they're not going to move this bill through the final stages. We've done that before and consulted and come back in the fall and moved it. Or is it a matter of moving it now and then consulting after the fact, after the legislation? I assume it's consulting on the regulations. Then he says that he'll consult, if that is on the regulations, and then bring it back in the fall. Usually the regulations don't come back here. You know, you might consult, but I don't think it'll come back to this Chamber in the fall. I guess I'm not really sure what he's meaning there.

There are some questions on the legislation, but the details all come out in the regulations, so that's a lot of work to do. The minister is going to consult on it, but it just reminded me of one thing that's been said lots of times before: the devil is in the details. So once we see the details in the regulations, I guess we'll know more about it.

I'm just going to read some of my speaking notes. I know they kind of repeat what's been said before and that the minister has already answered some of the questions. I thank him for that.

You know, I rise to support my colleague's reasoned amendment not to proceed with further readings of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Madam Speaker, the more we've researched Bill 10; the more the critic and caucus have become concerned about it. You just heard my colleagues point out comments about the pitfalls of this proposed legislation. We cannot proceed further with Bill 10 if we are to provide a good legislative framework to Alberta's municipalities. It's out of concern for municipalities and consumers and the taxpayers of Alberta that we ask this Assembly to end the bill at this stage.

As usual, the title of Bill 10 sounds wonderful. How could anyone not support a bill that enables clean energy improvements? But it is our job as legislators to scratch below the title of the bill to ensure it is a benefit to Albertans, not a detriment. Our investigations have raised too many red flags to allow us to support Bill 10. For instance, after reviewing the government's PACE website, we discovered that the municipality installs and pays for the upgrades. That was interesting because the government was assuring Albertans and municipalities that Energy Efficiency Alberta was to be the administrator of the PACE programs and that municipalities had little to do or worry about. It certainly sounded promising, but like so much of Bill 10, the details were to be left to the regulations.

The government might have forgotten that it provided some of those details on its PACE website. Madam Speaker, it appears that the municipal government was always to be a partner, in fact, more than a partner, in this program. When we find this out through our own research rather than from what the government told us about the bill, it makes us question other aspects of the bill.

Madam Speaker, the information on the website was followed up with a look at the California experience with the PACE program. That state introduced it in the late 2000s, and it created problems for many homebuyers. In California PACE loans are recorded against the property as a tax lien, and in the case of someone defaulting on the mortgage, before they're able to sell their home, they had to first pay off the loan to attract buyers. You know, that may not be the case here, as the minister said, but like I say, we don't know those details. Those details will come out in the regulations. Some financing institutions chose not to lend to homebuyers when a PACE loan was outstanding on the property. In other words, it hampered both sellers and buyers. Why would Alberta want to go down this same road and also put PACE liens on the property?

This program is clearly problematic, and it would be unfair to lead Alberta homeowners and municipalities down that same road. The California homeowners had a poor experience with this program, and since Alberta is following the same model, could we not also have some problems? Why would the Municipal Affairs minister not have known about the California experience, and why is he so keen to import it to Alberta? For all of these reasons, I support the reasoned amendment on Bill 10.

We have also heard from the minister that we just do not understand Bill 10. You know, the minister has explained some stuff today, and he's had time to explain about the finer details, but I think even he doesn't know all the details yet because of the regulations. So, yeah. We don't understand it. I don't think all of the homeowners understand it or the municipalities. Until the regulations are produced, I don't even know if the minister and the department understand all the details to it yet.

The act offers little help because it leaves so much for the regulations to fill in. That is yet another good reason to support this reasoned amendment. Without details about the program and with the mixed and somewhat contradictory information provided by the government about how it will work and the California experience with PACE, which points to a loan program that created problems for both home sellers and homebuyers, not to mention municipalities, Madam Speaker, I'm not sure why the government is so keen on PACE. There are too many red flags to allow this bill to pass.

I would like to point out that homeowners have options. If they want to invest in energy efficient home renovations, they can go to their bank and review their options for loans, lines of credit, and mortgages. Despite the government's ideological belief that it makes economic sense for household finances, Albertans will take these measures without government pushing them to do so. They have been doing it for years and will continue to do so without government meddling.

Madam Speaker, I would like to see this government show more faith in Albertans to not only do the economically sensible thing but to do the right thing. Government does not have to manoeuvre them into doing so. With the pitfalls PACE serves up to homeowners and municipalities . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(2.1) the House stands adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 12 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Thursday, May 17, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-South.

Ms Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the brilliant students from Eastview middle school in the spectacular constituency of Red Deer-South. The students are accompanied by their teachers and chaperones, and I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my distinct privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly an amazing group of grade 11 students from the Calvin Christian School at Coalhurst, which is just a few minutes north of Lethbridge, as you know. It's always nice to have visitors from way down south up here at the Legislature to visit us. I met with these students, teachers, and chaperones as we had our picture taken, of course, out here on the steps leading to this Chamber. They also took part in the mock Legislature this morning over at the Federal Building. I understand that the young fellow that was doing your role as the Speaker – I stood beside him; I think he's about six foot four – is looking for your job here pretty quick. As I say your name, please stand: Johannes Gerardus Jacobus Lock, Jacqueline Oudshoorn, Albert Oudshoorn, Harry Oudshoorn, Christina Oudshoorn, and Geraldine Vanden Hoek. They must be behind me. There are some over there. I ask that the rest of the class please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. M. le Président, c'est avec fierté que je me lève à la Chambre aujourd'hui pour introduire students from the beautiful Covenant Christian school in Leduc. Today they debated a bill about making parents go to daycare for two hours at the end of the day, which I thought would be a great break from things. They are accompanied today by their teacher, Beth Gillard, and their chaperones: Roland Owens, Angela Cardinal, Tanya Dennis, Lidia Kuessher, and Pastor Dennis Gulley, whom I've also had the pleasure of meeting before. He's a fine gentleman. I wish they would rise, and if we could give them the warm greeting of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today and introduce the guests from Morrin school in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler. I had a chance to meet with the folks from Delia school but not Morrin school today. Kealey Gordon is their teacher. I was wondering if the rest of the class would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there any other school groups, hon. members? The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got the honour of being able to introduce to you and through you a school from my constituency, the Holy Cross elementary school. It is an incredible school that both my children go to. I have the privilege today to say that one of my daughters, Amelia Cyr, actually is here in the stands with the grade 6 class. I also have to say that I think the teachers that come up here and do all the hard work to educate my children – I'd like to acknowledge them. If you could stand, please, as I read your names. Let's start with Mr. Clinton Lamarsh and Miss Laurence Dubois-Jolin. Those are the two teachers with the group. We've got the chaperones: Jacqueline Jorgensen, Sherrie Follett, Nadine Pitclett-Janvier, Anna Bekkema, Chris Bekkema, Olivia Larocque, Chris Vining, Samantha Walker-Dean, Amber Yantha, David Morrison, Leah Palmer, Lesley Mills, and Julia Colbourne. So we have quite a few people. If the rest of the students can stand so that we can give them a warm welcome from the Assembly, please.

The Speaker: Hon. member, they may not have been in the House yet.

Any other school groups?

The hon. Minister of Labour and democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly some amazing community leaders and volunteers from Edmonton's southeast. We're very fortunate in the southeast to have what is called the Mill Woods Presidents' Council, who meet together to share ideas to work collaboratively to build strong communities in the southeast. Today from the Mill Woods Presidents' Council we have Michelle Gosselin, president of the Summerside Community League, and Leigh Makarewicz, one of the volunteers from the North Millbourne Community League. These individuals are leaders in our community. They dedicate countless hours, and sometimes the Mill Woods Presidents' Council meetings are not short. I want to say thank you to them for all of the work that they do and recognize how important they are to our communities. With that, I'd like them to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Chamber my courageous friends Kerri Workman and her partner, Malcolm Eyjolfson. They're from Calgary, and they are seated in your gallery. They're here today at the Legislature to speak to two ministries about the choking game and what can be done to prevent children from taking part in it and keep them safe. I'd like to ask them to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Strathcona-Sherwood Park.

Cortes-Vargas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly guests from the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose. Today is International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia, and Biphobia. The Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose works hard to raise funds for other organizations which provide services to the LGBTQ community, and it has become a yearly tradition to bring the court and introduce them to the House. Here today is Empress 42 Kenya DeWitt, Emperor 42 Trey LePark Trash, and the other members of the court: Harvey Steele, Carrie Du'Way, Dyxson Kuntz, Melinda Verga, Jessie Cann-Dewitt, Christy Heely, Lady O Mercy, and Angelo Mercy. I would ask them to all stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a great group of individuals who work each and every day to protect one of the most important areas of our province, an area that many of us refer to affectionately as Alberta's west country, my backyard and their backyard. I'm glad to see them here today. I'd ask that they stand up as I say their names: Ronald Willert from Snow and Mud; Dean Bradko from the Lac Ste. Anne off-highway vehicle association; Garrett Schmidt from the Alberta committee for eastern slopes stewardship – I love your trails – Jason Smith from Safari Club International Red Deer; Calvin Rakach, my neighbour and friend from the Clearwater county trail initiative; and Brent Hodgson from the Alberta Off Highway Vehicle Association. I thank them all for all their hard work that they do for the eastern slopes and ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to do three introductions today. The first is two constituents from Edmonton-Glenora, Karen and Adam Jones.* They are seated in your gallery, and they are the very proud parents of Mark, one of our pages, who is seated directly below them. They are here to observe Mark in his role as a page. Mark attends Jasper Place high school, and he is a talented writer, long-distance runner, and a theatre enthusiast. I ask that his parents please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: My second introduction, who is in the members' gallery, is the newest member of the board of directors for Alberta Health Services, Robb Foote. Robb is currently the executive director of Lakeland primary care network and the interim executive director for both Cold Lake and Bonnyville PCNs as well. After working with health care management in the United States for 15 years, Alberta's public health care system called him home. He is the proud father to Brenden, Joshua, Tyler, and Kaitlyn as well. I'd ask that Robb please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Hoffman: My final introduction, Mr. Speaker, is to recognize World Family Doctor Day, which is May 19. This year's theme is Family Doctors: Leading the Way to Better Health. I'd like to thank the Alberta College of Family Physicians for their leadership in improving the health of Albertans and for their work in promoting excellence in family medicine. Here today on their behalf are Dr. Fred Janke, president; Terri Potter, executive director; Susan Wong Armstrong; Adam Filiatreault; Wendy Steele; Susan Soufi. Please rise and receive our appreciation. Yes, family docs do rock.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dan and Erin Walker and their sons Damon and Keith.* The Walkers are friends and constituents. I think Dan and I get along because he doesn't pay attention to politics. It's great to have them here today, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second but certainly not least, it is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the three people that make fighting for a better Alberta not only possible but a great honour: my incredible partner and wife, an amazing mother and cook, Sarah, who really does it all – and the best thing is that she does it all for us – and also my wonderful children, my daughter, Mehna, and my son, Kieran. It's such a pleasure to have them here today. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome. Hon. member, your son was shaking his head. I don't know what that means.

Mr. Coolahan: I noticed that.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of introductions today. First of all, it's my pleasure to introduce some of Alberta's physiotherapists and members of Physiotherapy Alberta College and Association who are seated in the public gallery. May is dedicated to physiotherapists as they dedicate their careers to the well-being of others. Physiotherapists work to help Albertans get moving and keep moving. I ask William Tung, Alayne Barreda, Simon Cooke, Tress Gibson, Allyson Jones, Jody Prohar, June Norris, and Leanne Loranger to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Mr. Schmidt: For my second introduction, Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege to rise and introduce two dedicated volunteers, Michelle Devlin, a volunteer with the Stollery Children's Hospital Foundation, and Tammy MacKay, a volunteer with the Tri-Community Health and Wellness Foundation. Both are seated in the members' gallery. They're dedicated to enhancing care in communities across Alberta, and they share a passion for philanthropy and building excellence in health care. I thank them for their contribution and partnership. I invite Michelle and Tammy to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Any further introductions, hon. members? Please proceed.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the privilege to introduce my wife, Megan, who has come up, and my daughter Charlotte. I also have the fortune to have my sister Melonie Dyck, her daughters Annalise and Rebecca Dyck, and my nephew Matthew Dyck. It's great to have all of them come up and visit us in this Legislature.

*These spellings could not be verified at the time of publication.

It's also a privilege that I have Matthew here. He's a part of my member's statement that I'll be giving this afternoon. It is just an incredible honour to have all of you here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

LGBTQ2S-plus Rights

Cortes-Vargas: Twenty years ago legal history was made. Julie Lloyd, Alberta's first openly gay judge, described this change in momentum in the landmark Delwin Vriend case, that has become the foundation for the protection of the rights of gender and sexual minorities.

All the ridiculous arguments that had been given to discriminate against gays and lesbians just started to fade away. They disappeared like a puff of smoke in the clear light of the Supreme Court. Each of the arguments was revealed to be specious, haranguing, alarmist and simply untrue.

Mr. Speaker, today is the International Day Against Homophobia, Transphobia, and Biphobia. We must remember that the courts might provide the foundation, but it is those that are visible and vocal, that work every day on changing the culture, that truly eliminate discrimination.

I stand being visible alongside those that cannot park their identities. We stand with those that have experienced violence, job loss, bullying, and stigma because of who they are and for who they love. We stand alongside those who have paved the way, some through the courts and others, like the Imperial Sovereign Court of the Wild Rose, who continue to redefine gender binaries. We stand with allies in the government that have not wavered in their commitment to support safe and inclusive spaces. We stand with regular Albertans that refuse to accept that their hard-fought rights are again under threat. We stand with equity and equality because it strengthens our community. We stand with more than just words.

Our government and our party will never waver when it comes to standing up for human rights. We will continue to fight for the rights of gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgender, queer, nonconforming, questioning, intersex, pansexual, two-spirit, asexual, and gender nonconforming Albertans. We will not relent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to take this opportunity to recognize the valuable contributions of Albertans with developmental disabilities to my community and to the province at large. We all have people in our communities and in our lives who face the challenges of living with a disability yet despite these hurdles are still able to add so much value – so much value – to our lives.

This weekend in my constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake we'll be recognizing one of these amazing individuals in a celebration of her retirement. The remarkable woman is Lynn McFarlane. She is retiring after an amazing 30 years with the Tri City Value Drug Mart in Cold Lake, and I want to wish her all the best going forward.

Mr. Speaker, prior to becoming a member of this House, I had the honour to serve as a volunteer director for the Dove Centre, which provides opportunity and support to those living with developmental disabilities in my constituency. I can say that it was a privilege to make a contribution to this cause, and I do my part to help members of our community who live with these disabilities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on a more personal note, I want to take this opportunity to acknowledge my nephews Matthew and Kaden, who live with autism and also bring so much joy to our family. To Matthew, Kaden, Lynn, and all Albertans with developmental disabilities: thank you for everything you contribute to our vibrant society.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Choking Game

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pass-out challenge, knockout game, space cowboy, cloud nine: these are some of the names that the choking game is known by. It's a risky practice of self-asphyxiation that many kids engage in, bringing themselves to the brink of passing out. Sadly, some kids suffer brain injuries, and some kids die. In October 2014, at the age of 11, my friend Kerri's son Bryce Eyjolfson was playing the game. She didn't know about it until she discovered him lifeless in his room. Most parents don't know about the choking game. Many school-aged kids do know about the game and probably know someone who's playing it.

Sometimes we hear reports of the choking game and deaths in the media, but rarely do we hear about injuries or near misses or about education or prevention. Deaths from the choking game are often classified as suicide, and Kerri and her partner, Malcolm, had to push to have their son's death reclassified. It was originally listed as suicide. Among the many videos available online, there are those that show how to play the choking game.

Kerri has offered to share her experiences with several ministers here today. I join her in the effort to bring attention to this dangerous practice and to urge for more education, both for the public and in our schools, so that we can keep our kids safe and families from having to experience the deep grief that I've seen my friends go through. I urge all of my colleagues to meet with Kerri and Malcolm while they're here and to learn about the impact of the choking game and to raise awareness.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Carbon Levy and Education Costs

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The carbon tax has been causing a great deal of economic hardship for school boards across Alberta. Every other week there is a story in a rural paper about an additional school board with a significant transportation budget deficit brought on, at least in part, by this burdensome tax. The Rocky View school board was pushed to the point where they had to ask parents' permission to divert funds out of the classroom in order to help cover their $360,000 carbon tax payment. To the Premier: why do you continue to punish school boards across Alberta with this ideological tax?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that as a former trustee it was actually the policies that were being proposed by the government of the day that inspired me to run, because it was very clear that there were going to be very deep cuts to education, far in excess of the price on carbon, that there were going to be children showing up in classrooms with no additional resources for them in any way. While I appreciate that for any cost people pull out their books and try to find the best balance, I can tell you that I am so proud that we stopped those regressive cuts that were coming, and we're going to be fighting to do that again in 2019.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School boards across Alberta continue to run budgetary shortfalls brought on, in part, by the massive carbon tax payments they are forced to make back to the government. The Department of Education projected that during the 2018 calendar year the carbon tax is expected to cost Alberta school boards as much as $18 million. That represents the salaries of roughly 250 teachers. To the Premier: has your government completed an impact assessment for Alberta school boards which addresses the upcoming 67 per cent increase to the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. I'm just going to remind everyone how many teachers and educational assistants have been hired because this government has fully funded enrolment, and that's 3,600. The Leader of the Opposition said: oh, well, we probably would have just frozen spending at 2015 levels. That's 3,600 teachers and educational assistants who wouldn't have been hired in this province. We are working with boards, and I'm so proud that we are funding students' enrolment, that we're funding new schools, hiring new teachers for classrooms instead of prioritizing $700 million in tax breaks for the richest of Albertans. We're standing with ordinary families.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every time our caucus brings up the cost that the carbon tax is heaping on school boards across Alberta, we receive vague talking points in return, just like what we received now. Yesterday I brought forward the financial issues the Red Deer public school board is having, and the minister responded with vague platitudes or non answers. I'm concerned that this government is blinded by their belief in the carbon tax and is continually refusing to take this issue seriously. Again to the Premier. The education system requires leadership to keep all available dollars in the classroom. Will you do the right thing and scrap the carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, the right thing is taking leadership on supporting children, their classrooms, and the boards that help do that. That's why we've invested in education, allowing for the hiring of 3,600 new teachers and educational assistants, when the members opposite are talking about either freezing budgets or cutting them to 2015 levels. That would mean thousands of staff not there to support children. And guess what? We're also investing $50 million from the carbon levy in a solar energy initiative that's expected to help schools reduce their carbon emissions by 5,300 tonnes. Children want to take leadership. They want to ensure that they have a good climate for future generations, and so does this government.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Economic Competitiveness

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week one of Alberta's most prominent business leaders said that the federal Liberal government's policies are scaring away investors and that Canada's economic competitiveness is in decline. Alberta families are the ones paying the price. Earlier this month Lafarge Canada announced that they are shutting down the ready-mix concrete operations for Bonnyville-Cold Lake due to a lack of economic viability. Minister, has this government raised these concerns with their Trudeau Liberal friends, and if so, when will we actually get an answer for this?

Ms Hoffman: We are proud to fight for the people of Alberta each and every day, Mr. Speaker, and we keep pushing the federal government to make sure that they keep Alberta as a top priority. We want to ensure that Albertans have strong opportunities for future generations and for this one as well. That's why we are so proud that we got two pipeline approvals, and one is very much on the brink of being able to break our land lock. We have approval to tidewater on the Canadian coast, and we are so proud of that, something that the federal government, when they were in Ottawa and we had federal Conservatives here as well, weren't able to do for nine years.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not only the federal Liberal government's lack of action that's sending a message to job creators. Imperial Oil's Aspen project is a proposed 150,000 barrels per day project. They have now been waiting four and a half years for the government of Alberta to give this project the green light, four and a half years of waiting on a multibillion-dollar job-creating project. A simple question to the government: do you actually think that this is an acceptable length of time, and what message is this sending to other prospective job creators in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. We're very proud to work with the job creators of Alberta. That's why we were able to celebrate that there were 90,000 new full-time jobs coming to Alberta last year, mostly in the private sector, Mr. Speaker. We know that there are still families that haven't felt that direct uptake in the economy yet, and that's why we're continuing to push forward. That's why we were so happy that in April Canada's energy stocks rose by 7 per cent, with CNRL up 14 per cent and Suncor Energy up 10. Canadian-based Calfrac Well Services reported more than double its first-quarter revenue from last year. Things are trending up. We're working with industry, and we want to keep moving Alberta forward, including a pipeline.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A report from GMP FirstEnergy last month said, quote: we suspect we will see more oil sands divestitures from foreign companies in the coming years. End quote. The federal Liberal government's Bill C-69 will, according to the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, make it difficult to imagine that a new major pipeline can be built in Canada. These projects are creating jobs in Alberta and supporting Canadian families. Yesterday this government said that they had raised concerns with the federal government on Bill C-69. What specifically are they requesting to ensure that there aren't further job losses in Alberta?

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Our government is very active in lobbying and pushing the federal government to ensure that we not only get our pipeline to tidewater, something that the Leader of the Opposition failed to do when he was in government in Ottawa for nine years, but also that we have access to get those products to the Asia Pacific markets that are really seeking those resources. We have no lessons to learn from the members opposite. They like to say that they got success on pipelines. I have to say that a pipeline to Jasper is not a pipeline to tidewater. Thanks for trying, but this side of the House has got the job under control.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Methane Emission Regulations

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, gas prices in Calgary are about 30 cents a litre higher than they were in May 2017, and that is squeezing charities that rely on donations and fixed grants. It seems that the NDP have decided to allow the oil and gas industry to be exempt from the carbon tax for five years in order to reduce their methane emissions. My question to the Finance minister is: now that you have exempted big industry from the job-killing carbon tax, will charities, school boards, and the municipalities be exempted next?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in all our climate change plans we've consulted with industry, academics, environmental groups. When we look at tackling methane, that's one of the biggest focuses that we could work on in reducing GHGs. We're working with industry, and we know that there are going to be a lot of costs up front for them to work on tackling methane. We are, as I said, working with industry on a cost-effective plan to tackle one of the most serious GHG problems we have.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers wanted to use a fleet-average approach, with a lower cost to industry, to reduce methane emissions, and this would have reached the same methane reduction goal the NDP wants to accomplish with the more expensive site-specific approach. To the minister of environment: is this some kind of exercise to shut down the industrial sites that cannot meet your targets when the industry can meet the overall goal at a lower cost?

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what information the hon. member is reading from or who is telling him this, but in fact we've worked with industry. CAPP has been one of the industry groups that have worked with us. We've gone back and forth about what we need to do. We all know the goal is over here, and we're working together on that. We've listened to industry, and we're looking at cost-effective for them but at the same time achieving our goals.

2:00

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, it appears that the provincial methane reduction plan is running headlong into the federal methane regulation plan. The fact is that the regulation and the development of Alberta's natural resources is a provincial matter guaranteed under the Constitution. What actions has the Minister of

Environment and Parks taken to assert Alberta's jurisdiction and tell Ottawa to back off and get their nose out of Alberta's business?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in all of the things that we've done with industry, the Minister of Environment and Parks and I have worked very closely with them to develop made-in-Alberta plans because we certainly don't want a made-in-Ottawa plan imposed on us. Our industry gets that, and they've been good partners with us to get our made-in-Alberta plan. We have the draft directives that speak to methane, and we're very proud of that. Honestly, we don't need advice from the other side. They haven't been part of this. Industry has, and we're very proud of that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Choking Game

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A 2015 review in the Archives of Disease in Childhood found that between 5 and 7 per cent of kids engage in the choking game, often alone. Many kids are aware of the practice, and 17 to 40 per cent of youth think there are no risks. Very sadly, 93 per cent of parents of choking game victims are surprised to discover their child's participation because it often leaves no observable signs. To the Minister of Health: how are you equipping Alberta health care providers to recognize the signs and educate people about the choking game?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for her question. I certainly want to recognize the family that's here today. I couldn't imagine the grief that must be experienced when you say goodbye to a child. No parent should ever have to go through that. Certainly, one of the big pieces we need to do is ensure that everyone is aware that self-harm is risky, that there are consequences that come with self-harm, and whether it leaves bruises or not, it doesn't mean that you're doing something that's safe. Certainly, education to youth, families, and health care providers: it's a three-pronged approach.

Again, our deepest sympathies to the family.

Ms McPherson: There is much awareness of and concerning high participation rates in the choking game among youth aged four to 20. They are learning about the choking game from online sources and from their peers. To the Minister of Education: when will the provincial health curriculum include information about the risks of the choking game throughout our children's education?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the member for the question. Certainly, we've been looking through the curriculum as part of our new curriculum writing process for places where we can improve and strengthen personal safety, and this specific behaviour and in general does take place in the kindergarten to grade 9 health program now, but I think it bears upon all of us to be responsible to strengthen that position and to remind ourselves on a regular basis about both the gravity of the situation and the fact that there are students that are engaging in this kind of behaviour.

Ms McPherson: It's hard to develop strategies to address the choking game without good data, and there's a lack of consistent reporting about choking game deaths. Deaths are often recorded as suicide, leaving families without closure for their children's death, and it means a lack of accurate data. To the Minister of Justice: what will you do to improve the way child deaths are recorded so that we can know how many kids die this way and so that their families can have a little peace in very distressing circumstances?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member again for the important question. The member is correct. It is very difficult to move these items forward without ensuring that we're collecting accurate data. I've been very lucky to work with our current Chief Medical Examiner to ensure accuracy of data collection in a number of areas, and I'll be happy to have those conversations and follow up offline with the member.

Supervised Drug Consumption Site in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, I'm so proud of my city of Lethbridge and the people that make it such a great place to live. An incredible example is the supervised consumption site at ARCHES, which, sadly, the opposition leader has publicly spoken against. Despite his ideological opposition during their first eight weeks of operation this site has saved the lives of over 70 Albertans. To the Minister of Health: would you tell me a little more about the positive stats that you have received about Lethbridge's site?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for her question. I'm so thankful for the incredible work of ARCHES, the Lethbridge police chief, the city of Lethbridge, and of course the members from Lethbridge as well for their work on supervised consumption. This is what happens when we put people first. The ARCHES site has had more than 7,200 visits since they first opened, far above the anticipated demand. More importantly, not one fatality has been incurred. They've reversed 70 overdoses. That's 70 lives saved, and we couldn't be more proud.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. I know there are many positives to having such a site, and one of those positives is that it can receive referrals from physicians and other health care professionals. In fact, it has received over 1,500 referrals. Would you tell the Assembly about what kinds of referrals are being made?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some in this House choose to disregard the evidence showing that supervised consumption services save lives and actually help people move away from substance use. Through ARCHES these 1,500 referrals have connected people with food, laundry, naloxone, and long-term treatment. Clients have had a further 1,300 referrals to wraparound services like addictions counselling, wound care, and housing. These are all services that every Albertan should be able to expect to access and that we're proud are being accessed because of ARCHES.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Fitzpatrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is also to the same minister. The expected number of visitors to the site have tripled, as you mentioned. How will your ministry provide support to expand the site and the delivery of services to meet this need?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. We are putting extra service capacity in place before the long weekend, Mr. Speaker. Four additional temporary overdose prevention booths will be operational at ARCHES tomorrow. Within a few weeks ARCHES will be adding four more permanent booths on-site as well as an overdose prevention site at the Lethbridge Shelter and Resource Centre. While the Leader of the Opposition regards these services as nothing more than, quote, addicts injecting poison into their bodies, we will do whatever it takes to keep these people alive because somebody loves them, and they deserve to have a chance to live that life.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, the natural gas industry was only given 30 days to review and analyze the extensive draft directive and respond to the NDP, and now only a week is left. Given the NDP's extensive record of failed consultations and the importance of the natural gas industry to Alberta jobs, why did the government think that such a short period of time for a review was adequate?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government, as I've mentioned many, many times, works with industry on a number of matters, and we get good advice from them. We get good advice from, when needed, academics or environmental groups, and we come together to do what's best for the industry here in Alberta because regardless of the regulations we do not want something imposed from the outside. We're very proud of that. This collaboration together has gotten us a solid climate leadership plan, which has three pipeline approvals. We have the Keystone XL, we have line 3, and soon TMX will be under construction.

Mr. Panda: Yeah; they can add Keystone, too, to their feather, Mr. Speaker.

Given that the impact that these new regulations will have on industry will lead to thousands of job losses and hundreds of millions of dollars removed from the economy, will the Minister of Environment and Parks table the socioeconomic analysis of her methane reduction regulations, and if not, why not?

The Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the methane draft regulations are online on the AER site, and there's probably a link through the site of my ministry. They're fully available. They're there for industry to react to. Again, we've worked with industry off and on. We've come up with a plan that we all believe is good for Alberta, good for our industry, at the best cost to industry, and has the best outcomes for the environment.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the minister knows there is a real, serious cost to implementing the new methane regulations, so much so that she has given the industry a five-year carbon tax holiday, and given that this impact will mean thousands of people out of work and hundreds of millions lost from the Canadian economy, Minister, if industry's proposed regulations would have done the job, why are you ruining the lives of thousands of hard-working families? How is that making life better for Albertans or affordable?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this is more conspiracy theory and fearmongering from our opposition. It couldn't be further from the truth. We've talked to industry. We feel we've got a balance. We're standing up to the federal regulations. We don't want Ottawa to impose this on us. We've come up with a made-in-Alberta solution and at the least cost to industry to do that. They have been given a bit of a break because we know it's going to cost them money, and we do not want to see jobs lost. That's part of this whole package, and I wish the opposition would quit fearmongering so much.

North Saskatchewan Regional Land-use Plan

Mr. Nixon: Public land-use decisions not only affect the way of life of local residents and the recreational opportunities for Albertans at large, but they also affect critical economic activities throughout our province. From forestry to agriculture to tourism and other sectors, our public lands support millions of dollars of economic activity and thousands of Alberta jobs. I could not find a single mention of any independent economic impact study when reading through the NSRP regional advisory council's report. Does the minister believe that land-use changes should be made without independent economic impact studies?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to the North Saskatchewan regional plan, the government has been consulting for years. In fact, the regional advisory council includes many fine people, folks living in the member's riding who have contributed to this work since 2014, since his own colleagues in his own caucus were part of setting it up. We certainly appreciate all of the work that they have done through the North Saskatchewan regional plan, and we respect the work of folks who live in your community, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, given that I know the folks that live in my community, given that some of them from my community are right now in the gallery, and given that the minister says that she respects the work that they did on that regional plan, then why is it that this government, through leaked memos and through the Minister of Energy's confirmation on behalf of the minister of environment, has already predetermined the result for the Bighorn and did not listen to those fine folks who worked on the North Saskatchewan regional plan?

Ms Hoffman: Well, just to clarify, Mr. Speaker, the information referred to is advice from the options note that was created for the Department of Environment and Parks. No decision has been made. We've said that over and over again to you, hon. member. That's a fact, and I would appreciate if you reflected on facts in this House instead of again creating conspiracy theories. It is no secret that officials have been working with options for more than five years because these members across the way never got the work done when they had the chance to when they were in government. Our government is going to take care of it and finish the job.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that it is this government's leaked memo that has caused the problem, nothing that I said, and given that this government has continued to refuse to consult with the people of my community and will only talk to the special-interest groups that they want to talk to, will this minister then stand up and commit right now that she will respect the regional advisory council's recommendation not to put a wildland park inside Bighorn?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, the memo that the member refers to was advice that was given. We are gathering advice from 21 different town halls, advice from the folks who worked on the council, advice from department officials. No decisions have been made yet. We are committed to making sure that we get this project right, and the member opposite is being irresponsible with the truth. We just provided $200,000 in grants to Bighorn Heritage ATV Society with their OHV trail development, promoting responsible recreation. That's our track record. Those are the results that we've brought forward.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I clearly asked this government several times, very clearly today, that if it is not true, the memo that was leaked from their government, that if this is not predetermined, will the minister stand up and assure the people of Alberta and the people of my community that this is, one, not predetermined, which she has done, but, second, that she will follow the regional council's advice and there will not be a wildland park in the Bighorn? Yes or no? No more rhetoric answers, just a straight yes-or-no answer.

Ms Hoffman: Well, I don't tell you how to ask questions, hon. member, and you don't get to tell me how to answer them. What I will say is the truth, and the truth is that we are taking advice from many folks, including experts in the department, experts in the region, the 21 town halls that were held to ensure that we get this right moving forward, Mr. Speaker. I wish the hon. member's colleagues would have done something about this when they were in government just three short years ago. But you know what? This side of the House is no shrinking violet. We will stand up, we will make sure we do what's right, and we will reflect on all the advice we're being given.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, again I will note that the Deputy Premier will not answer the very simple question.

Yes, this side of the House actually got it right. They put in a process for regional planning, which has been followed, a process that this government has kept hidden from the public for over a year and has now finally released. The question I am asking is very, very simple, Mr. Speaker. Will this government respect the recommendation from that report and not put in a wildland park or not?

Ms Hoffman: Again, the answer is more complicated, Mr. Speaker, than the member wants to allude to. We are getting advice from lots of folks, including folks who are part of the North Saskatchewan regional plan, folks who are part of those 21 town halls, folks in the department who are giving advice. All of this is advice, and the reason why I can't give an answer is because we don't have an answer yet because we're reflecting on the advice. We're doing the responsible thing, consulting with folks and making sure that we get the right determination as we move forward.

Mr. Nixon: Well, there certainly have not been 21 town halls inside my constituency. Given that I am the only one that has actually held a town hall completely open to the public, a hall that was so full they had to shut a provincial highway, while this government continues to only meet with select people, I'll ask another simple question, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Deputy Premier. Will this government finally meet with my community, not lie about meeting with mayors, but finally come to meet with them?

Mr. Mason: Point of order. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Hoffman: Yesterday – or maybe it was the day before – the Leader of the Opposition said: when they go low, we go high. Hon. member, you are no Michelle Obama, I can tell you that much.

I have to say that the folks of the North Saskatchewan regional plan, the council developed opportunities for 21 town halls. Folks that are a part of your own community, hon. member, worked to make sure there were 21 town halls that were available so that people could give their advice. The reason why the advice was released was so people could give their feedback on that advice from . . .

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Ms Hoffman: . . . the folks from within the department itself, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that I am very proud of the fact that we're making sure we get this right and that we're not rushing to rash stunts like the members opposite continue to . . . [interjections]

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Deputy Premier. Thank you. Cool it down, folks.

Mr. Loewen: From the caribou draft plan: "The Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society (CPAWS) of Northern Alberta modelled and analyzed areas for priority for caribou protection." Now CPAWS is also trying to actively influence the outcome of the North Saskatchewan regional plan by undermining the work of the regional advisory committee, particularly when it comes to the Bighorn area, calling the Bighorn Regional Advisory Committee advice out of step with most Albertans. Now, in estimates the minister told us that the North Saskatchewan regional plan process was the primary tool used to consult with ordinary Albertans. Given this, can the minister tell us why the government has been working closely with organizations like CPAWS, who delegitimize part of the public consultation process with Albertans?

Ms Hoffman: I think slandering organizations that are global in perspective is also delegitimizing the role of the opposition, I have to say. We are happy to have the feedback from all Albertans, including the 21 town halls that were held by the council to gather input. We are very proud of the work that the North Saskatchewan regional plan has been engaging in, Mr. Speaker. We're proud of the fact that we just provided $200,000 in grants to the Bighorn Heritage ATV Society, the OHV trail development promoting responsible recreation. That's our track record. Those are the results, and we're proud of them.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister doesn't seem to understand that the problem is not CPAWS, that it's the minister putting special-interest groups like that ahead of Albertans, and given that the government is clearly relying on foreign-funded interest groups to drive the Bighorn planning process and given that it has already been confirmed that the government decided an outcome of a new wildland park prior to the completion of the public consultation process, can the minister tell us: when did the backroom deal on this predetermined outcome happen, and which special-interest groups were there?

Ms Hoffman: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the members opposite maybe own tinfoil companies these days because I have to say that conspiracy theories keep coming from across the way, when the truth is – and I've said it over and over again, and I will continue to – that there was an advice document that we received from the department. There was also advice from 21 town halls that were held on this specific matter, and the regional advisory council includes folks from the Bighorn area. We're proud to receive their advice and make sure that we're working to do the responsible thing. It's been five years of consultation. I wish you guys would have gotten it right when you had the chance to, but don't worry. We will get it right.

Mr. Loewen: Given that the minister can evade the question but not reality – now, this is an anticipated timeline for development of the North Saskatchewan regional plan; it's not advice; it's a government document – and given that it is one thing to have secret backroom deals with special-interest groups and quite another to actually consult with Albertans, Minister, I have a simple question: will you commit here and now to holding a genuine open and transparent public consultation process, including personally attending open town halls in the community to listen first-hand to everyday Albertans whose lives will be impacted by any changes made to the Bighorn?

Ms Hoffman: I'm proud of the fact that we are probably one of the most accessible governments in the history of this province, Mr. Speaker. We're proud to continue to meet with Albertans, ordinary Albertans, every day, and we're proud of the fact that there were 21 town hall meetings that were held in advance of this. Also, the advice document that the member refers to is advice, and the advice is posted publicly so Albertans can give their feedback on it. We certainly welcome your feedback and the feedback of all Albertans regardless of their expertise. We want to welcome all information so we can make the very best decisions moving forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta Teachers' Association

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Teachers' Association has been a strong and consistent advocate for public education, something that I believe in wholeheartedly. It was encouraging to see the teacher salary negotiations end on a very positive note for both the ATA and the government. Given the improvements we have seen in this relationship and given the importance of public education to Albertans, to the Minister of Education: how is this government consulting with teachers and, in particular, with the ATA during the curriculum review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're listening to teachers, the ATA, and people across the province when it comes to our new curriculum. With our old curriculum, some of it was more than 30 years old and needed to be updated, so we've engaged with tens of thousands of parents, teachers, and regular Albertans to find out what our kids should be learning. They're telling us that schools should not just teach the basics but also teach problem-solving skills that they need to thrive. The Leader of the Official Opposition said that he would put this work on the curriculum through the shredder if he was given the chance, and I find that horribly offensive.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How is your ministry working with the ATA to help to uphold professional standards of practice, including making sure that GSAs are available and respected?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, our government strengthened the law to ensure that every student can form a gay-straight alliance no matter what school they go to and without the fear of being outed. The ATA is instrumental in helping to ensure these safe spaces for GSAs or QSAs are created for students. I'd like to also point out that it was just a few days ago when the members opposite voted at their policy convention to out students. Shameful.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ATA does a great job representing teachers, both as a professional association and as a bargaining unit. To the same minister: what would be the effect of splitting these two functions like the opposition would like to do?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, collaborating instead of attacking has allowed us to move this province forward on common-sense collective bargaining agreements, new professional practice standards that will support the continued excellence of teachers across the province, and investments such as the classroom improvement fund. Dismantling the ATA is an attack, and it undermines the collaborative relationship our government has with teachers, with parents, and with school boards. Quite frankly, it's a distraction from their real motive, which is to give big tax cuts to the rich.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Calgary Board of Education Funding

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, the Minister of Education has talked about how proud he is that his ministry has fully funded enrolment growth. The Calgary board of education would beg to differ. According to the CBE they are facing a $35 million shortfall. Provincial funding simply has not kept up with enrolment growth, there's no backfill funding for reduced school fees for alternative programs, the funding they have provided is at 2015-16 levels, and that doesn't even consider the nearly $200 million in urgent deferred maintenance. To the Minister of Education: who's right? How do you explain the discrepancy between your claims and the challenges faced by the CBE?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this has become an annual event, where I have the Calgary board of education saying that they have this deficit, and then by the end of the year they end up posting a surplus, so I have had them under audit for the last few months. We've been working collaboratively for ways by which we can rectify this process, and we have a very collaborative and constructive relationship by which to do so.

What you really don't do if you want to make contributions to education is that you do not make massive 20 per cent cuts to education, as the members opposite are saying that they are going to do.

Mr. Clark: Well, good news, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Party's shadow budget has a higher investment in education than this government's budget currently. Given that the shortfall in funding is going to result in jobs being cut and given that many of the jobs lost will be support staff who work with students with complex learning needs, disabilities, or mental health challenges and given that reduced funding levels of support staff will have serious negative consequences for those students, again to the Minister of Education. You've been telling Albertans that your government supports public education, but your funding plans clearly says otherwise. How can you explain this to students, parents, teachers, and staff?

Mr. Eggen: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, you know, I did have the Calgary board of education under financial review, and we're looking for ways by which they can make sure that they prioritize to spend money in classrooms. Given the substantial investment that we have made into the CBE, it's my expectation and all Calgarians, for that matter, that they make decisions to make sure that they balance their budget without influencing and cutting front-line staffing levels in the city of Calgary.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, given that one of the reasons the CBE is facing a shortfall is this government's carbon tax and given that asking school boards to pay a carbon tax really is just transferring dollars from one level of government to another and given that school boards have a very limited ability to reduce the carbon tax they pay because there are a fixed number of school buses required to transport kids to school, once more to the Minister of Education: will you acknowledge the unintended consequences of your plan and eliminate the carbon tax on school boards?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, it's interesting. The members opposite want more money, and then they want us to make cuts. It's all very confusing. I can give a very simple process by which we are making sure that – we owe it to our children to give them great schools and education, that we are investing in, and to protect the planet that they will inherit from us. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is not negotiable, and I don't think it is for the majority of Albertans as well. We are making investments in schools. We've made significant investments in Calgary in regard to the solar energy initiatives in terms of upgrading schools, upgrading boilers, improving windows and lights to make sure that they are not just . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.
The Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Carbon Levy and Agricultural Costs

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government of Manitoba has announced its made-in-Manitoba climate and green plan, which will exempt natural gas for heating or cooling a farm building and for operating your grain dryer if metered separately. The Manitoba plan will be implemented on September 1, 2018. Minister, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition suggested similar exemptions when you introduced your crippling carbon tax on Albertans. Why are you making it harder for Alberta's farmers to remain competitive with other jurisdictions such as Manitoba and Saskatchewan?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Early on with our climate leadership plan we recognized some of the challenges that producers might have, so we exempted marked fuel for farming operations right across the province. We've also very recently announced an $81 million fund that will help them find that efficiency. When I talk to farmers and ranchers across the province, they ask me what they can do. How can they do their part to reduce greenhouse gas emissions? I'm very proud that this government is answering that call, being able to find those efficiencies, reduce those greenhouse gas emissions, reduce their costs as well.

Mr. Strankman: Again, Mr. Speaker, given that farmers produce commodities whose prices are set on a global market and given that these increased costs cannot be simply passed on to the consumer and given that you could easily go through 400 to 600 gigajoules when you're grain drying, even more if farming up north, Minister, was any thought given to how crippling your tax would be on these Alberta farmers' and ranchers' viability, or does ideology trump all?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an example, the Schuurman Dairy farm near Millett, Alberta, says:

The energy-efficiency programs offered by the government gave us the incentive to move ahead with installing solar power on our operation . . . we have found that by investing in solar power we have been able to lower our dairy operation's power consumption by over 60 per cent.

There's efficiency to be found. I will continue working with the producers, farmers, and ranchers right across the province that continue to find those efficiencies whatever their operation might be: dairy farms, chicken barns, irrigation structures, and grain drying as well.

Mr. Strankman: Given that with approximately 49,000 farms in Alberta the carbon tax will cost Alberta farms upwards of $182 million and given that each year this total far exceeds any rebates from any of the available efficiency programs, Minister, with your government set upon increasing the carbon tax another 67 per cent to appease the Trudeau Liberals, has your government done any economic study on how much this increase will impact Alberta farms to compete in a global market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I already mentioned the exemption on marked fuel, for instance. Farmers and ranchers can do their part and want to do their part to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Energy efficiency as well is available to them to lower their costs, make their operations more efficient, make them more competitive in the global marketplace. The rebates for the greenhouses, for instance, were called extremely good news by the Alberta Greenhouse Growers Association. There continues to be good news from this side of the House. I'm very proud of this government and the good news that we are offering farmers and ranchers right across this province.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The business climate in Alberta is truly heartbreaking. ATCO president Nancy Southern says that regulatory policy and a litany of roadblocks constrain our business environment, that governments in Canada are busy bringing in multiple and compounding policies and regulations, policies that are growing into boulders of burden on all manner of businesses and that, in fact, Stats Canada reports that foreign investment has dropped from $50 billion to $31 billion, 38 per cent. Minister: name one regulatory policy that you are willing to remove to make business more competitive and bring investment back into Alberta.

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, I think this whole narrative about the situation for business in Alberta that the opposition is trying to create is an absolute disservice to the people of this province. You know, I can only speak for Calgary in saying that it's the fastest growing city in the prairies this year. The Conference Board of Canada explicitly points to projects like the cancer centre, the green line. Compared to a year ago, Calgary created over 31,000 full-time jobs. Take a look at the business expansion in this province. Viking Air just added 150 aviation jobs in Calgary. They're looking at even further expansion. Goodfood Market Corp. is currently . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you.

Mr. Orr: It's not our narrative. We get it from the people of Alberta.

Alberta companies are being forced to diversify by moving away from risky Alberta government obstructionism to other parts of the world. Given that ATCO is building a hydrogen power plant – where? – in Australia and given that ATCO is building an office tower in Idaho because they say that it's not competitive building it in Alberta anymore, which are their words, not mine, and given that Alberta businesses are finding that opportunities are actually surfacing abroad and not at home and that companies are being forced to diversify Alberta risk and look into other jurisdictions: is this what the NDP government means when they say that they want to promote diversification?

The Speaker: I would again remind the House to please, hon. members, manage the preamble comments that tend to be raised in this place on occasion.

The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government is committed to working with companies like ATCO – in fact, I met only a few months ago with Nancy Southern – as we transition off coal and stabilize our electricity market. You know, ATCO's CEO did donate more than $21,000 to the opposition leader's PC leadership campaign. I understand as a former Conservative that they are certainly good friends of the Conservatives. We are still committed to listening to all Alberta businesses and certainly are happy to do so.

To continue on in talking about the successes in business in this province, Mr. Speaker, Amazon . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you. [interjection] Hon. minister.

Hon. minister, you were speaking while I was speaking, so you may not have heard me. But we try to be fair with the 35 seconds. I would ask that all members in this House make that a practice.

Folks, we have the whole of next week where we get a chance to not see each other, so be nice while you're here, okay?

I think we are at the second supplemental.

Mr. Orr: Well, there's also the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. Canada has fallen from fifth to 34th out of 35 countries. Given that a delay is as good as a cancellation and that a delay is a deliberate strategy, will this government finally admit that delay, with risky ideological policies, is driving investment and industry out of Alberta, including our own ATCO corporation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more you talk about that narrative, the more we will stand up and talk about the successes in this province. In addition to Calgary's 31,000 new full-time jobs and Viking Air and Goodfood and Amazon, there's Champion Petfoods, 340 construction jobs and 200 jobs at the plant itself; Pinnacle, 70 new jobs; Cavendish Farms, the biggest private-sector investment in the history of Lethbridge; Aurora Cannabis, a hundred million dollar investment in Leduc, 400 new jobs in Edmonton, another 450 jobs in Medicine Hat. The list is long and getting longer. Our minister of economic development is always on a plane . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. [interjection] Thank you again.

The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Carbon Levy and Rural Education Costs

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The carbon tax brought in by this government represents the single largest tax hike in Alberta history. The result has been severely impacted school division costs. Buffalo Trail school division costs have increased $65,000 since the tax was implemented, for the schools alone. Minister, this amount represents one full-time salary. With ever-increasing costs and decreasing student enrolment, what is this government doing to ensure the viability of rural schools?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What are we doing to ensure the viability of rural schools? They had a big ceremony, and the bulldozers were there. They were starting to build the foundation for Irma school in Buffalo Trail yesterday – very proud of that – an investment that not only builds a lovely school but a community centre as well, using the latest technology to reduce emissions so that they will save money on their utility bills. So, yeah, we're building schools. We're educating kids. We're making efficiencies, reducing carbon, and doing a great job.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Taylor: Thank you for building that school, but the carbon tax is cutting teachers' jobs.

Given that the government is set to raise the crippling carbon tax about 67 per cent to fund their green slush fund and help pay down the debt that they are currently racking up and given that nonprofits and school boards will continue to be harmed by this punitive tax, Minister, have you determined how much the average school division will have to pay when your increased carbon tax comes into effect, or have you not done any economic studies to estimate the burdening cost to school boards?

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, as school boards move forward in close co-operation with my ministry and in working with individual schools as well, we've come up with lots of ways by which we can save money, by which we can reduce carbon and improve education opportunities, too. We have a more than $50 million solar program, for example, that's going on, that includes real-time activities for the kids to see how much electricity they're producing and so forth on the roof of their schools.

This is an ongoing process, Mr. Speaker. It's a learning process. It's a teachable moment. I'm very proud of the progress that my ministry has made in regard to . . .

Mr. Taylor: The Premier once said, quote: it could sometimes be a question of taking a bus, walking, you know, those kinds of things in terms of the patterns of fuel use that people engage in. Unquote. Given that walking is an option that rural school kids simply don't have, Minister, since busing or dropping off students at school by car are pretty much the only options rural parents have to get their children to school and to extracurricular activities, will you consider exempting school boards from any future increases?

Mr. Eggen: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, we are working on a transportation initiative right now to build better transportation systems in all corners of the province. If the hon. member has some constructive ways by which we can do so, he can make a submission, and we will use it. We've had thousands of people that have contributed to this. I'm very pleased that we have created a co-operative means by which to build a better transportation system, build a better education system in general by making investments in four straight budgets, a budget that this hon. member and his party failed to support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein

School Capital Construction

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The previous government failed to invest in maintaining and preserving government-owned facilities in this province. This led to many buildings and structures crumbling and falling apart. Two schools in particular in my riding fell victim to the previous government's neglect. To the Minister of Infrastructure: can you please give an update to my constituents on the status of the St. Francis and James Fowler high schools?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, St. Francis high school is currently undergoing a $29 million modernization. That is expected to be done in May of 2019. James Fowler high school has a $20 million modernization, including modernizations to its career and technologies classrooms and labs. That's going to be completed by September of this year, so students actually get to move in there.

Investing in infrastructure is something that benefits everyone in Alberta, not just the people like the kids who get to use it in the member's constituency but the folks who get great jobs out of that infrastructure. Maintaining infrastructure preserves . . .

The Speaker: Thank you again, hon. minister.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is still maintenance to be done to restore schools neglected by previous governments and given that our population continues to grow and we'll also need to build new schools and that this government has chosen to invest during the downturn instead of pursuing drastic cuts, to the same minister: can you please tell us what this investment has meant for schools in my constituency and for the province of Alberta?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, you know, the opposition stated that they would cut $9 billion in infrastructure funding. That is on top of an infrastructure deficit that went back generations in this province. Those reckless cuts meant cramped classrooms for students – we saw that – out-of-work teachers, crumbling facilities, less opportunity for extracurricular activities. Seeing as how extracurricular activities aren't big on the list of the opposition, we can see from their policy that maybe that's not a priority for them. But classrooms and what they look like and kids' ability to operate in them . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what is the economic value of investing in school infrastructure?

Ms Jansen: Mr. Speaker, over the next five years we're investing $2.2 billion in planning and building and modernizing school facilities. That's $393 million for 20 new school projects across Alberta. You know, when kids have good schools, it's easier for them to learn. Infrastructure is critically important. I know that in the past infrastructure was the first and the easiest place for Conservative governments to cut, and they did it, pushing that debt onto a future generation. It's our job now to fix that problem, and we are doing it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we move on, I would invite the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre – you wish to make a statement with respect to a matter from earlier?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I would be happy to withdraw and apologize for using the word “lie” during question period.

The Speaker: Thank you very much, hon. member. That's good to hear because I know that the Government House Leader had a speech that he wanted to give, but he's not going to get that opportunity.

You're going to withdraw the point of order as well?

Mr. Nixon: That first point of order, yeah.

The Speaker: I also have had a request for unanimous consent for an introduction.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you individuals who have travelled here from India to visit and see our beautiful province. Suniel and Mana Shetty are visiting their relative Ashok Gangwani, who's a good friend of mine. Suniel Shetty is a financial analyst involved with various NGOs and with raising funds for the welfare of various committees. Mr. Gangwani is a long-time resident of Edmonton and a founding member of the Press Council of Edmonton, a grassroots organization made up of local journalists that strive to connect with various multicultural groups and deliver up-to-date, relevant news in their own language. I wish you all a wonderful visit in our beautiful province of Alberta. Thank you for coming to visit us in the Legislature Building. I'd ask my guests, who are now standing, to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Premier's and Official Opposition Leader's Allies

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Official Opposition and his caucus are fond of using the refrain: the Premier's good friend and ally Justin Trudeau. It is important to have friends, and it is a testament to the good working relationship they've developed that Prime Minister Trudeau praised our Premier and said that he could not have approved the Trans Mountain project without the leadership of our Premier and Alberta's climate leadership plan.

But why just focus on the Prime Minister? The Premier has many good friends and allies, such as Mark Scholz, head of the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, who said, “We are very supportive of [the Premier]. She has shown some incredible leadership on this file,” and the Alberta Fire Fighters Association, who said, “We've been way behind other provinces as far as a lot of our WCB coverage, and I think this government is very proactive in trying to bring them up to date,” and Cenovus Energy, who called Alberta's climate leadership plan an important step forward in addressing climate change.

Now, to be fair, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to give the impression that the Leader of the Opposition is without friends. He, too, has many close friends and allies like Rebel media, who endorses the UCP leader and whose media outlet he and many of his colleagues have appeared on regularly; allies like the Campaign Life Coalition, who have given the opposition leader a 100 per cent rating for his voting record on life and family issues and who are helping him recruit candidates; and close friends like former Wildrose interim leader and Progressive Conservative cabinet minister Heather Forsyth, who called feminism the f-word and dismissed the idea that women face barriers in politics as socialist crap at the recent UCP convention.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to say that both the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition have many close friends and allies. As the old saying goes: show me your friends, and I'll tell you who you are.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Official Opposition Leader

Connolly: Mr. Speaker, it's flip-flop season, and the leader of the United Conservative Party has been out in full force this month, strutting his ability to both disagree and be disagreeable. He started off the month by going back on his grassroots guarantee. On August 1, 2017, the leader of the UCP stated, quote, the policies of the United Conservative Party must be developed democratically by its grassroots members, not imposed by its leader. On May 7, 2018, that same leader stated, quote: “Guess what? I'm the leader. I get to interpret the resolution.” I think the member opposite and I may have different interpretations of the word “grassroots.”

In 2009 the UCP leader voted for a nearly $10 billion bailout for the Ontario auto industry, but when Alberta and Canada talked about investing in the Trans Mountain pipeline, the Leader of the Opposition said on May 14, quote: the fundamental message that this sends to investors is that if a project doesn't work, we'll buy your way out of it. It's interesting that the member thinks investing in Ontario is A-okay but investing in Alberta's oil and gas sector sends the wrong message.

On May 15 in this very House, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the UCP quoted Michelle Obama by stating, “When they go low, we'll go high.” Then a day later the leader of the UCP was quoted by the Calgary Sun, saying, “I know Justin,” referring to the Prime Minister of Canada. “This guy is an empty trust-fund millionaire who has the political depth of a finger bowl . . . He can't read a briefing note longer than a cocktail napkin.” I didn't realize that the height of the opposition leader's decorum would be at the bottom of the Mariana Trench.

If the UCP leader believes that he is best suited to sit in the Premier's chair, I would suggest he start acting like it. Going back on promises and smearing people you have to work with are not helpful in any position, much less the top job in our province.

I'm proud to work with a Premier who is ensuring pipeline access and working with our federal and provincial counterparts rather than making ad hominem attacks.

Provincial Election Third Anniversary Reflection

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, this Saturday horse racing fans from around the world will be watching Pimlico raceway in Baltimore, Maryland, for the 143rd running of the Preakness Stakes. Meanwhile, back here in Alberta we've also been witness to a fair bit of jockeying for position this past year. Welcome, racing fans, to the Legislature Downs and the third running of what used to be called the NDP Stakes. That name has been dropped because the Environment minister doesn't think we should eat beef. As the horses are being loaded into the starting gate we have two late scratches. B.C. Wine Boycott and Licence Plate Brouhaha have been scratched.

They're at the post, and they're off. Breaking quickly from the gate is Green Shoots and Up Up Up. Following close behind is Blind Optimism, Mountain of Debt, and Credit in Shambles. Investor Confidence is lagging, and Pipeline Construction has yet to leave the starting gate.

As they go into the first turn, here comes the odds-on favourite, Carbon Tax. This horse is undefeated and looks 50 per cent stronger this year than last, but his stable mate Social Licence is once again nowhere to be seen. Social Licence has yet to start a single race this year, leading skeptics to speculate that it does not even exist.

Moving down the backstretch, Green Shoots is wilting, and Up Up Up is going down, down, down. Here comes Mountain of Debt, Credit in Shambles, Outta Here as well as the crowd favourite, Sewer Rat.

As they enter the clubhouse turn, it's Carbon Tax by two lengths over Mountain of Debt, Outta Here, Sewer Rat, and Credit in Shambles. There's a late charge by the curiously named We Want the NDP. According to the racing program this horse was bought by the Finance minister at 10 times market value, financed by craft beer and online weed sales. Investor Confidence has disappeared, and Pipeline Construction is still stuck in the starting gate. Now making up ground on the outside is Sewer Rat, 96 Billion Reasons, and prerace long shot Cannabis Causes Communism.

Down the stretch they come. It's Carbon Tax and Credit in Shambles going head to head. There's a late charge from Outta Here and 96 Billion Reasons. They're neck and neck, and at the wire it's Carbon Tax by a nose, followed by Credit in Shambles, and 96 Billion Reasons, We Want the NDP, Outta Here. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order.

By the way, hon. member, it was refreshing – very refreshing – to hear that. You might even get double time if you were to do that again.

Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Bill 18 Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that was very, very impressive. I would just mention in the House that it has been done before by me. His was good, too.

I would request leave to introduce Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

Bill 18 contains a number of minor housekeeping amendments. The amendments are intended to provide clarity and update a number of other acts. The draft of the bill was provided to opposition MLAs for their review, as is typical for miscellaneous statutes amendment acts. At the request of the opposition the bill name was changed. We are expecting some debate as this bill proceeds, Mr. Speaker, on certain clauses.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table a petition that was started by Leanne Zee on February 7, 2018. As of May 16, 2018, it has 17,004 signatures on it. I have the appropriate copies. These are 17,000 people who want to make it clear that this government has not consulted with them on the future of the Bighorn and would like the government to talk to them before they make decisions about their backyard.

I thank the pages in advance, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any other tablings or reports, hon. members?

Now, hon. members, I just want to clarify. Government House Leader, I believe the hon. member acknowledged earlier your point of order. We can move past that, or was there a second one that you had?

Mr. Mason: No, Mr. Speaker, I only had the one.

The Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we had a second point of order. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has that point.

The Speaker: Okay. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has a point of order.

Point of Order Gestures

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(h), (i), and (j). Earlier today the Minister of Advanced Education raised both fists in front of his face at the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. Now, multiple people on this side of the House saw this. This member has repeatedly made outrageous and insulting comments. Multiple times we've had the Minister of Justice get up and say that she heard nothing even though she sits right in front of him and multiple people on this side have heard these things. I'm going to guess that the Government House Leader is probably going to get up and say the same thing, "Well, I didn't see anything," because it happened behind his back. I think it's about time that this minister grew up and cut the childish actions and comments and starting acting like a minister. I think he should stand up, apologize, and withdraw what he did there.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I have in fact confirmed that this incident did in fact take place; therefore, on behalf of the Minister of Advanced Education I would like to apologize to the House and to the member.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. members. I believe there are no further points of order.

Orders of the Day
Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 2
Growth and Diversification Act

[Adjourned debate May 16: Ms Larivee]

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Are there any members wishing to speak to Bill 2? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have an amendment to put forward here. I'll have it distributed before I continue speaking.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as RA2.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Bill 2: I can't find particularly much redeeming about it. We were debating Bill 6 last night. It was a generally positive bill being tweaked, but Bill 2: I find very little redeemable about it. It won't come as a great surprise for members of this House to know how I feel about corporate welfare, that no government, regardless of their ideology or party stripe, is well suited to decide what businesses should be winners and what businesses should be losers. You know, Ronald Reagan said: if it moves, tax it; if it keeps moving, subsidize it; and if it stops moving, buy it. That seems to be this government's economic philosophy.

Now, governments of all stripes engage in this. You know, in Ottawa the Conservative Party of Canada, unfortunately, has regularly engaged in corporate welfare, going so far as even to nationalize the auto industry or partially nationalize it, causing me to actually leave that party for several years in protest. I thought it was completely against my beliefs as a conservative. I returned to the party during the leadership campaign of Maxime Bernier very specifically because of his commitment to scrapping corporate welfare. Conservatives engage in it sometimes, but they at least feel a little less comfortable with it because it's against conservatism, so Conservatives tend to feel a less comfortable doing it.

But the NDP has no such scruples when it comes to corporate welfare. I find this difficult to understand because they're supposed to be the party of the blue-collar worker, of the regular guy, not handing multimillion-dollar cheques to billionaires and corporations, but they seem to very comfortable doing it. They seem to believe that they are very well suited to determine how businesses should be running their internal affairs, presumably because they believe that the government knows more about business than businesses.

Now, corporate welfare is bad enough. It's bad economics, but Bill 2 goes significantly further than regular corporate welfare. It gets into affirmative action, gender, and racial quotas. In its own bill this piece of legislation will require businesses that want the cash handouts and tax incentives provided from the taxpayers to these businesses – for them to be eligible for them, they're going to have to meet quotas for their employees, for their boards of directors, or for their CEOs, to fill those positions not on the basis of merit, not on the basis of who's best for the job, but on the colour of their skin or their sex or other criteria that have absolutely nothing to do with who's best for the job.

Now, depending on the workplace, it often is good to have men and women and people from different backgrounds – it's a positive thing – but that is for that business to determine, not for the government. It is not the business of this government whatsoever to determine who is best suited to work at a business or to sit on its board. But if they want to receive these cash handouts from the government, then they're going to have to follow diktats about who they should be hiring.

Corporate welfare is bad economic policy, but affirmative action and racial and gender quotas are bad economic policy and bad social policy. It is social engineering extended into the private sector. It is contemptible when governments or even political parties engage in gender or racial quotas or any kind of affirmative action programs of their own to put people in jobs or positions on any other basis than merit and who is best for the job. It's bad enough when government does it internally or when political parties do it internally, but when they require that the private sector do it, when they require that private businesses in their own internal affairs accede to the government's social agenda, whatever it may be, they are far overextending themselves. It's not their business.

If businesses of their own accord wish to hire people on a basis other than merit, if they want to hire someone simply because they maybe meet an internal quota that they have decided upon themselves, independent of the government, that's their business. Quite literally that is their business. That is their decision to make. If a business decides that they're going to have a quota for X group to be filled, they can do that. They do not require a government to do that. But most businesses that I know don't have quotas for race. They don't have quotas for gender or any of the many different categories or boxes that we can tick off in these things.

You know, the government, I think, should not be engaging in this themselves. If they wish to engage in it themselves as a political party, I suppose that's their discretion. I don't believe it's the right thing to do, but that is their discretion. I don't think any political party should be engaging in gender and racial quotas, but I suppose that's their own business. But it is complete overreach for the government of Alberta to use legislative powers and tens of millions of tax dollars to require that private businesses meet racial and gender and identity quotas.

The amendment that I have put forward would scrap this bill. It would send it away. I don't think it needs to even come back. I think there's very little redeemable about it to begin with. Beyond just the affirmative action quotas within it, it is engaging in gross corporate welfare, and I don't think there's much in it, that it even needs to come back. It doesn't need to go to committee. It just needs to be scrapped outright. The motion that I have put forward in the form of a reasoned amendment to members right now will scrap this bill, send it back to the trash pile, and we can consider better economic policy moving forward that doesn't pick winners and losers in business and doesn't require business to pick winners and losers in a quota system.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the referral amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have to tell you that I'm a little bit surprised to see the Member for Strathmore-Brooks bringing this motion forward, seeing that he does not support tax credits for gender and for ethnicity and for those with disabilities, but he's more than happy to take government subsidies for Airbnb. That's quite interesting.

But on a more serious note, our government has been working very hard to support diversity, whether it be in our creation of the Ministry of Status of Women, our work on agencies, boards, and commissions to create more spaces for gender and ethnic diversities, as well as our many programs like the $15 minimum wage as well as $25-a-day daycare programs or child care programs, that most often do support women getting back into the workforce and support them to be able to have jobs that can help support a family.

There is no doubt that throughout history those who are Caucasian and of male gender have been advantaged in the workplace. Through my conversations with those in the interactive digital media industry who I've had chances to consult with – I'm not sure that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has done any consulting on this issue, but it's well known within that industry that those with a disability or those that consider themselves of a female gender or those of a different ethnic background are disadvantaged.

You know, that's on the one point of the interactive digital media tax credit piece and the inclusion parameters within that and the 5 per cent extra tax credit for that. But to say that we should throw this entire bill away because of that one issue? I just don't understand that at all. We've seen the track record of the capital investor tax credit. We've seen the record of the AITC. It has created a lot of diversity within our province, and it's brought massive amounts of money into our province.

The conversations that I have with companies, especially start-up companies in our province – you know, we go back to this debate of: oh, we need to lower corporate taxes. We have an $11.2 billion tax advantage over the next lowest taxed province, which I support for the most part. I think it's important to have that competitive advantage. But what I hear when I talk with these companies is that they need that start-up capital. So for the member across the way from Strathmore-Brooks to say that we should throw this entire bill away because he doesn't like one section of it: I find it to be quite disingenuous.

I would be happy to speak to more amendments, which I probably won't support judging on the track record of his amendments, but I'm not willing to throw this whole bill away. I think it's an important bill. I think that it will help our economy diversify and that it will help corporations, both start-ups and larger, in my communities get to a place where they need to be to create jobs throughout all of our communities.

I would recommend that none of my colleagues support this. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment RA2 lost]

The Acting Speaker: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Carson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. Just a little recap. As laid out by the Minister of Economic Development and Trade, Bill 2 continues on the important work of the Alberta investor tax credit, which offers a 30 per cent tax credit to investors to provide capital to Alberta small businesses doing research, development, or commercialization of new technology. Bill 2 also supports the continuation of the capital investment tax credit, which provides a nonrefundable tax credit valued at 10 per cent of a corporation's eligible capital expenditures for manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure, making an investment. The CITC program alone has brought in over $1 billion of investment to our province, creating thousands of new jobs in emerging markets.

Both of these programs have been widely supported by chambers of commerce across the province. I'm very supportive to see them move forward, creating more success stories like the second-round recipient Aurora Cannabis, who's CCO explained:

Our Aurora Sky facility will be larger in capacity and more advanced than anything that's ever been built or operated before in the cannabis sector. With support [specifically] from the CITC, we are using an unprecedented level of new technology and automation. This will be the most sophisticated and efficient cannabis production facility in the world . . . technical positions requiring advanced science degrees, and we're proud to have established this flagship site in Aurora's home province of Alberta.

Madam Speaker, continuing these two important tax credits will mean companies will continue looking to Alberta to start or expand their business, leveraging these credits to raise capital, creating good jobs and helping to diversify the local economy.

While our government continues on these two important tax credits, we are also creating more opportunities for investment through the interactive digital media tax credit. The IDMTC would provide a 25 per cent tax credit for labour costs to eligible digital media companies. This investment will ensure our province plays a bigger role in the growing digital media and technology sector, fostering new development, encouraging innovation, and accelerating growth in new industries.

Of course, we have many success stories within our province in the IDM sector, including Edmonton's own BioWare, founded in 1995, the creator of the truly exceptional titles Mass Effect, Dragon Age, Star Wars: The Old Republic, Baldur's Gate, and Neverwinter Nights, all truly fantastic games if I do say so myself. I do have to give a plug today to the creators of BioWare: Ray Muzyka, Greg Zeschuk, Trent Oster, Brent Oster, Marcel Zeschuk, Augustine Yip. Of course, Muzyka, Zeschuk, and Yip had recently graduated through the medical program at the U of A and decided to make the jump into creating video games. I'm not sure how that connection happened. You'd have to ask them. But they pooled some resources together and were able to pull together about $100,000 in capital to create BioWare.

Like I said, I'm sure they could tell you this story better themselves, to find out how they made that jump, but it is an incredible story nonetheless. With the interactive digital media tax credit we will see more stories like this develop, ensuring that we are exporting products across the globe, not exporting our talent.

As I was reading comments from people in my community in regard to Bill 2, someone made a great point that though we have a few incredible game developers in our community, talent will often look elsewhere, to places like Quebec. They want to settle in a community where there are more opportunities, more gaming companies because they want to have more job opportunities. If this legislation is passed, I'm confident we'll see more companies popping up, which means more people are willing to come and stay here because if they were to lose their job, well, in some cases, they might not be able to find another company to work for in this jurisdiction.

It's also important to note that organizations like BioWare bring between $50 million and $80 million to our local economy, with their workers making an annual wage of $71,000. When we look at the costs for the IDM industry and the video game industry, we see that labour costs make up the majority of those costs, around 65 to 90 per cent of the production costs. That is why this tax credit is aimed at labour specifically.

We do see similar programs, as was mentioned, across the country. B.C. has a 17.5 per cent tax credit, Quebec a 37.5 per cent tax credit, with Manitoba and Ontario at a whopping 40 per cent. With those figures, you can quickly understand why it's so important for us to move forward on this initiative and another reason why it's important to understand the difference between having a low corporate tax above all else. It's important that we are able to compete on all levels, and in this case it's a tax credit offered to interactive digital media companies.

Companies like BioWare have long explained that Alberta is losing when it comes to holding on to our talent, and I'm extremely happy to see, moving forward with Bill 2, that we will be able to level the playing field. We won't have tax credits as high as 40 per cent, but we'll at least be levelling it a bit better.

Madam Speaker, I'll admit that I'm a bit of a video game enthusiast. For the last two years I've participated in a fundraiser for the local Stollery children's hospital, who was here within the last two weeks. It's called Extra Life. I will also mention that the Minister of Labour joined me as well as a few other MLAs. Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-South West, and Edmonton-Decore also made an appearance. Edmonton-South West beat me in the game that we played at the beginning, but I won't hold it against him. Extra Life is a 24-hour gaming marathon where gamers from across North America come together to play games for 24 hours. It's the only marathon that I participate in, and it's sponsored by many local game companies like Retro Active Arcade, Happy Harbor Comics, Fragapalooza, and The Gamers' Lodge, just to name a few.

Now, Edmonton has an incredible community of game developers and, of course, game players, and this bill will definitely be good news for them, especially when we look at the 3,000 postsecondary tech spaces that we're talking about creating through this legislation. It's important, when we look at the postsecondary institutions, that we're able to help them grow in this industry and expand the scholarships that will be offered for programs in the high-tech industry.

At the announcement of Bill 2 the minister of economic development and the Minister of Advanced Education were joined by Trent Oster, who cofounded BioWare and started the international gaming company Beamdog. I'll add that just last week they released their – oh, this is a bit of an old speech. A couple of weeks ago they released their Neverwinter Nights: Enhanced Edition. Just a shut-out for them: go pick it up on Steam.

He explained that the tax credit will help the industry in Alberta. He said: I'm happy to be an Albertan, and to be able to play here with a level playing field excites me greatly; we're the best in the world at interactive content, high-speed simulation, user interface; the next 20 years is going to be built on these technologies; augmented reality, virtual reality are all based on high-performance simulation; the games industry is going to feed that, and it's going to grow huge.

Once again, in the past we saw companies like BioWare increasingly move their operations to provinces with these tax credits, specifically Quebec in this case. Now we can keep our homegrown talent here, benefiting from the jobs they create and the products they export.

Now, as somebody who graduated from the radio and television broadcasting program at NAIT, I've always hoped that one day my voice might make it into a video game. It hasn't happened yet, but, you know, BioWare, you can give me a call any time. With this funding I think that we'll see more opportunities for postsecondary spaces to work together with programs across the board, and I would love to see more partnerships like that for future students and graduates.

Now, I also have to mention another conversation I had, with a fellow named Aaron Clifford, who is a virtual reality producer with an Edmonton company, KOVR. Robert Lennon is the CEO there, and Mike Bowman is the managing partner. This organization uses VR programs like Unity 3-D and Google augmented reality core to show their clients how final projects like lighted signs on buildings will look before they make their final decision to buy their product. In my conversations with Mr. Clifford he explained that they are bidding on interactive projects for businesses and media and that the IDMTC program will help them compete globally. He explained: we're still finding our path, and this credit will give us 25 per cent more time to find those amazing clients.

Madam Speaker, this is a perfect example of an organization filled with experienced leadership working on projects that will diversify our local economy. It's also a great example of the flexibility of the jobs within the industry as in their spare time they are working on VR games that will soon be in the beta stages, which I look forward to testing on my own virtual reality product Oculus Rift.

We see examples of VR and AR more and more in industries like advertising. Realty organizations are moving to this platform to give homebuyers the full experience before making the final decision to purchase a home, and the same is happening within the architecture and project development industries. It will truly revolutionize the way that we see concept projects, not to mention the breakthroughs that are happening within the medical industry and education as a whole, using VR and AR to experience situations that can help students practise before the real thing. I've also seen a few instances where retirement homes are using it for people and where long-term care facilities are using it for seniors that are experiencing Alzheimer's and even dementia. It's an opportunity for them to experience, whether it's music or certain places, you know, Paris or anywhere else, that again without having to leave the facility. So there are some great opportunities there.

Back to the contents of the bill. I was also incredibly proud to see the diversity and inclusion component within Bill 2, although the Member for Strathmore-Brooks doesn't find it to be particularly important to him, adjusting the AITC program for these investors who invest in companies where the majority of the board, including the CEO, are members of an unrepresented group, providing an extra 5 per cent tax credit. This extra 5 per cent tax credit also extends to the programs that were already in place, the AITC and the CITC, but also to the digital media tax credit as well, and it is the first of its kind across Canada when it comes to truly supporting those who focus on inclusive employment.

Finally, if Bill 2 passes, it will enable this government to strengthen our ties with the unmanned aerial systems sector. Partnerships with institutions and industry will enable the testing of technological applications and will expedite the uptake of advanced technology industries in Alberta. Of course, Alberta is already home to the Canadian Centre for Unmanned Vehicle Systems, and we want to continue to support the centre. Unmanned aerial technologies have economic applications in a number of sectors, including oil and gas, agriculture, resource management, wildlife tracking, transportation systems, and emergency response processes. All of this has the potential to create new employment opportunities and positions Alberta as an attractive investment location.

Madam Speaker, I'm very proud to see the initiatives put forward in Bill 2 moving forward: extending the existing tax credit programs, creating the interactive digital media tax credit program as well as 3,000 postsecondary spaces and more scholarships for those attending our postsecondary institutions. I'm very proud to stand in support of this legislation, and I look forward to seeing it move forward. I'm very thankful to the minister and all of my colleagues here, who have helped to shape this program moving forward, as well as the many stakeholders that have been consulted on it, and I look forward to seeing it move forward.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Very good. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I know that it's getting late and it's the last day here, but I couldn't miss an opportunity to stand up and point out the failings of our government one last time before the break.

Madam Speaker, although I would like to find the humour in this situation, it simply is no laughing matter. The government has implemented so many disastrous policies that investors have fled the province.

Mr. Mason: We miss them, too.

Mr. Hanson: The Minister of Transportation misses all those companies. Is that what he said?

Their administrative and corporate tax hikes, their complete bungling of the electricity file – and who can forget the job-killing carbon tax? You know, let's talk about the carbon tax for a minute. We've brought it up in question period many times, looking for exemptions for school bus drivers, school boards, food banks, virtually every business in Alberta, and virtually every family in Alberta. Now that they've driven out investment and are scrambling, they need to introduce legislation to attempt to make Alberta once again the attractive place to invest that it once was. Unfortunately, the damage has been done. Not only that, but the damage continues to be done. Introducing a bill that would promote investment when their carbon tax still has its grip on Albertans seems counterintuitive. It seems to me as if they are trying to mop up the water without having plugged the holes in the bottom of the boat.

The first logical, common-sense step would be to repeal the carbon tax, would it not? Madam Speaker, we are now at a point where we need to use incentives, a.k.a. the money of hard-working Albertans. A reminder: it is the taxpayers' money, not the government's money. We're using that money to try to encourage investors back to Alberta and to promote the diversification of Alberta's technology sector.

Of course, a large, blossoming tech sector would be a great thing for Alberta, and I certainly support that, as I'm sure my colleagues on this side do as well. Where my issue takes root is that providing tax credits to a specific sector of the market has the potential to distort that market. The NDP government insists on having a hand in all free-market activity in this province, but this has the potential to create tax credit or subsidy-dependent industries.

Madam Speaker, when it comes to the economy, the NDP has no leg to stand on. We've seen this over and over with their track record of increasing the regulatory burden as well as the tax burden for businesses, driving investors out. They've damaged the playing field. As a matter of fact, they've plowed up the playing field and have no other choice but to bring in yet another bill that tries to repair a sector that they've bungled up.

Let me remind you of what happened when they thought they knew better on the electricity file. They pushed that legislation through, and then Albertans were left with volatility and unpredictability. Investors urged the government to do something, so they were forced to bring in Bill 13. This is yet another one of those bills that has been brought in to do damage control by the NDP after they have scared investment away with their tax and administrative hikes.

According to CFIB, and I quote: 92 per cent of business owners are not confident the Alberta government is committed to improving the business climate. Madam Speaker, that says a lot. The overwhelming majority of Alberta's hard-working business owners do not believe that their government has any interest in actually welcoming investment back to our province, getting private capital flowing, increasing jobs, or getting Alberta back on track. They do not feel that this government has their backs. Albertans are not confident that their government wants what's best for their business. But now the government will do what it takes, meaning taking more of taxpayers' money to fund these credits, to lure investment back, only to see that the economic climate here has not in fact changed at all.

CFIB has also stated – and I quote – that entrepreneurs in Alberta are the least confident in the country. In the entire country Alberta now has the least confident entrepreneurs. Alberta used to be the province that people would think of in Canada when they imagined opportunity and economic success, or what we Albertans called the Alberta advantage. Now the NDP government has bungled it up so badly that they need Bill 2 to try to get back at least some of the investor confidence they lost.

To re-emphasize, we don't have trust in their ability to restore the economy when they have already damaged it so recklessly by raising taxes on larger businesses and high-income earners, increasing environmental and other regulations, imposing a carbon tax, and creating increased labour costs. According to the Calgary Chamber of commerce it's becoming harder to run a successful business in Calgary, which cites the carbon tax in addition to rising labour costs and increasing personal and corporate taxes as the causes. When the Calgary Chamber of commerce is citing the carbon tax as well as other tax hikes as the causes of hardship for business owners in Alberta, it should be as clear as day to the NDP government.

Madam Speaker, any time the government wants to introduce something new into an existing market, the NDP's track record is cause for concern for me. Last year there were difficulties and delays in providing the Alberta investor tax credit funding in a timely fashion. Meanwhile the interactive digital media tax credit program will not have any program or application details until the summer of 2018, probably not a great surprise to anyone as these last three years have proven the great inefficiency of the NDP government. In fact, the Calgary Herald published a headline last year that read: New Alberta Tax Credit off to Slow Start with no Money Awarded Yet. The government's own program, and they couldn't get it out the door.

Madam Speaker, the government continues to play favourites. We've seen them introduce tax credits in relatively narrow sectors, with the potential of creating market distortion. Alberta not only needs to remain competitive to neighbouring provinces as well as all Canadian provinces, but it needs to stay competitive globally. Alberta is competing on a global stage, and when the investment has left us, it has gone somewhere it deems more favourable to set up shop, to safer investment climates like Iran.

This side of the House has lost trust in the government's ability to restore the economy and investor confidence, and so have Albertans. For that reason, I will not be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak under 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Mason: Just a question. I'm not sure that I caught what the hon. member said correctly. Did he really say that he felt that Iraq had a safer investment climate than Alberta?

Mr. Hanson: Iran.

Mr. Mason: Iran. Okay. Just wanted to make sure we had that on the record, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak?

Seeing none, hon. minister, would you like to close debate?
Then I will call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to thank all members of the House for their co-operation and contribution this afternoon and this week. I think it would be nice, to start our long weekend, if we had, you know, maybe just an extra hour so that people can beat the traffic and travel on those beautiful Alberta highways. I'll move that we adjourn the House until 10 o'clock – no, until 9 o'clock . . .

An Hon. Member: It's 1:30 on Monday, May 28.

Mr. Mason: I've got to get better notes, Madam Speaker.

Okay. Yes. I'll move that we adjourn, and I wish everybody safe travels and a very productive constituency week.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:30 p.m. to Monday, May 28, at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Monday, May 28, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Hon. members, I know that I speak for all of you. It is, with humility, an honour and privilege to be a part of this historic reconciliation. At my request Elder Herman Many Guns from the Piikani Treaty 7 territory has provided me with a prayer. I would ask that each of you reflect and/or pray, each in your own way.

Prayers

The Speaker: Creator gave us life to live in harmony. Creator created and gave us our Mother Earth. Creator taught us how to share with all walks of life. Our way of life was darkened, and we had to walk in the shadows of a foreign way of life that destroyed our beliefs and that of future generations. Today our children of tomorrow may see the new and true life of the future, so we have to adapt to change. We start by acknowledgement of ceremony and begin healing the darkened wound of our souls that have gone before us. We pray for a new tomorrow for all of the '60s scoop survivors, past and present, and continue to work with government on truth and reconciliation for a better future and continue building better relations for tomorrow.

Hon. members, ladies and gentlemen, we will now be led in the singing of our national anthem by Debbie Houle, Sherry Sewepagahan, and Sarah Pocklington. Together they are the group Asani in the gallery today. I would invite all of you to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all of us command.
Car ton bras sait porter l'épée,
Il sait porter la croix!
Ton histoire est une épopée
Des plus brillants exploits.
nohtāwīnān kanawēyihta.
Kakanata, kinipawīstamātinān;
Kakanata, kinipawīstamātinān.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my profound honour to introduce to you and through you special guests who are joining me to bear witness to a historic day in Alberta history. Sitting in the Speaker's gallery are members of the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society of Alberta, which was formed to represent survivors throughout Alberta and to advance the work of true reconciliation and healing. It's difficult to understate the role that SSISA has had in getting us here today or my gratitude. On this long-awaited day I ask the board members to rise: Adam North Peigan, president; Sharon Gladue-Paskimin, vice-president; Sandra Relling, treasurer; Kathy Hamelin, director; Orlando Alexis, director; Lena Wildman, secretary; and Lew Jobs, former director. Several family members are also in the Speaker's gallery to bear witness and support their loved ones. I ask that they also rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Larivee: Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that I was a little bit unclear as to who are visitors and who are guests. I think, in my mind, they're all visitors, so I'm going to step in and say that I also want to acknowledge several elders in the public and members' and Speaker's galleries. These elders have guided us through individual '60s scoop engagement sessions throughout the province or led us in ceremonies so integral to those sessions. I ask that the elders who were able to be here today stand to be acknowledged by the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms Larivee: Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you several representatives from First Nations in Treaty 8 territory who join us today to witness the apology. We have Chief Albert Thunder from the Whitefish Lake First Nation, and we have Councillor April Isadore from Driftpile First Nation. Please join me in honouring these guests and offering the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you a number of special visitors who are here to join us in witnessing the '60s scoop apology. These visitors that I'm introducing are from the First Nations in Treaty 6 territory, upon which we are gathered here today. I'd like to acknowledge Chief Bill Morin, chief of the Enoch First Nation; Irvin Bull, chief of the Louis Bull First Nation; Chief Kurt Burnstick and Marsha Arcand from Alexander First Nation; Bernice Martial, chief of the Cold Lake First Nation; Chief Tony Alexis from Alexis Nakota Sioux Nation; on behalf of Chief Craig Makinaw councillors Cheryl Montour and Daniel Wildcat from the Ermineskin First Nation; representing the Montana First Nation Councillor Bradley Terrance Rabbit; and Faron Bull from the Paul First Nation. It's my honour to ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Indigenous Relations.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To continue our acknowledgement of our special visitors here to witness the '60s scoop apology, I would like to begin by introducing the AFN regional chief, Marlene Poitras. From First Nations in Treaty 7 territory I'd like to acknowledge Chief Stanley Grier of the Piikani Nation and Chief Lee Crowchild of Tsuut'ina Nation. As well, representing the Metis Settlements General Council we have Gerald Cunningham, president, from East Prairie Métis settlement; Ken Noskey, representing the Peavine Métis settlement; and Herb Lehr, representing the Fishing Lake Métis settlement. Finally, representing the Métis Nation of Alberta, I would like to introduce Audrey Poitras, the MNA provincial president; Diane Scoville, region 1 president; Cecil Bellrose, region 4 president; and Sylvia Johnson, region 6 president. I would ask all of my guests to please rise and receive the warm reception of this House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ms McKittrick: Mr. Speaker, on this important day it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Jim Gurnett. Jim Gurnett has been a Member of the Legislative Assembly and has worked in staff positions with other members. In community work and friendships over the years he has been aware of and troubled by the '60s scoop and is happy to see its dark history being addressed. He has had a special focus on supporting connections between indigenous people and recent newcomers from around the world. As the MLA for Sherwood Park it is an honour and a privilege to represent constituents like Jim who have demonstrated a deep and long-standing commitment to social justice and serving our community. Jim, I ask you to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I would like to introduce to the Assembly a special guest of yours seated in the Speaker's gallery. Lewis Cardinal is a long-time advocate and educator on indigenous issues in Alberta. Most recently Mr. Cardinal has been working with your office on creating a better understanding of indigenous culture and incorporating it into the Legislative Assembly. He's received a number of recognitions for his work both provincially and nationally. I would ask Mr. Cardinal to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour on behalf of the Minister of Environment and Parks and minister responsible for the climate change office to rise and introduce to you and to this Assembly a team of individuals helping to ensure dam safety in our province. The team from Environment and Parks is responsible for the regulation of dams and canals in this province under the Water Act and the ministerial water regulation, excluding energy-related projects. The regulation provides oversight to ensure dam and canal owners can take active responsibility for the integrity and safe operation of their structures. In total we have about 1,500 dams that fall within these requirements in our province. I would like to introduce the members of this team who are joining us today. We have Garry Bucharski, Gary Titosky, Jenna Montgomery, Kaisie Moxam, and Shannon Higgins. I thank them on behalf of my colleague and all of us for their hard work and ask members to join me in the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: I recognize the hon. Premier.

'60s Scoop Apology

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to begin by acknowledging that we are gathered here today on the traditional territory of Treaty 6, and I'd also like to acknowledge the Métis people of Alberta, who share a very deep connection with this land.

I rise today in the spirit of truth and reconciliation. Before we begin, I'd like us all to take a moment and just look up. When we speak about colonialism and its vestiges, when we speak about the need for truth and reconciliation here in Alberta and across Canada, when we speak about healing, we must remember always that we speak about people. Above us today are survivors of the '60s scoop: women and men, children and grandchildren, parents and grandparents, all of them survivors. As we speak today in their presence, we are mindful that their presence carries with it also a terrible absence: parents lost; children taken; families destroyed; cultures shamed, ignored, and forgotten; by force, a proud way of life taken away.

The decisions that led to that personal trauma: many of those decisions, Mr. Speaker, were made right here on this floor in this Chamber. The government of Alberta owes these people an apology, and today that's what we are here to do. But for that apology to have the meaning that these women and men deserve, these women and men deserve to know that their experiences were heard and are heard and are understood as best we can. These women and men deserve to know that we stand here today looking up at them not only with hearts of reconciliation but with eyes that see the wrongs of the past as clearly as we can. So before we can offer our apology, please allow me to speak to the work done to make this apology meaningful for these brave women and men, because they deserve nothing less.

The '60s scoop is the colloquial name for the government practices perpetuated in Alberta and across Canada from the 1950s to the 1980s. Indigenous children were taken from their birth families, from their communities, put in nonindigenous homes, without meaningful steps, in some cases without any steps at all, to preserve their culture, their identity, their relationship with their community, and, even most importantly, with their family.

To speak of the '60s scoop in these terms is to speak merely of the broadest and the most impersonal strokes. To appreciate the trauma these women and men lived through, we need to hear it from them in their voices, and that's what we set out to do. Over 800 courageous survivors of the '60s scoop shared with us their heartbreaking experiences, and I want to thank each and every person who participated in that. All of you who came forward and shared your experiences did so with courage beyond measure. You didn't just share the trauma of what was done to you; you spoke truth to power. You spoke truth to the same power, the same institution, the government, that inflicted this trauma on you in the first place. So to all of you, thank you.

The stories that you, the survivors, shared with us are heartbreaking. These stories transcend generations: children – kids, babies, toddlers, teens – ripped from your families; parents unable to see through the tears as they took your children away from you; grandparents forced aside as your families were destroyed. We heard stories of how you were lied to and told that your families didn't want you or couldn't care for you. We heard how many of you were never told where your children had gone, where your parents had gone, where your brothers or sisters had gone. Many of you were placed into foster care, with no linkages to your culture, bounced from home to home, place to place, with no stability or sense of who you are and the proud place that you came from.

We also heard clearly that some of those foster homes were also not safe. Many of you faced terrible abuse – physical abuse, sexual abuse, mental and emotional abuse – forced labour, starvation, and neglect. A survivor shared this quote with us, and I want to share it today because I believe it reveals the horror and the tragedy of what was done to these children. That person said: "I was abused in every home. The worst part was that we actually had a family that loved us." Many of you shared that even as children you contemplated suicide.

Those feelings were often compounded by the isolation that you experienced. When you were placed in nonindigenous homes and communities, the dominance of colonial thinking meant that you regularly faced racism and discrimination. Some of you were forbidden to speak your own language, forced instead to speak English or French. Many of you were not allowed to honour or express your culture. Make no mistake. The '60s scoop was an assault on indigenous identity, your sense of self and who you are. As a result, many of you never felt at home anywhere, not in the homes and communities where you were fostered or adopted and not even when you returned home. One survivor remembered: "At 19 I went back to the reserve. One minute I am white. One minute I am red. I never knew which side I belonged on." Another said: "I lost my spirit. It was taken away from me."

The impacts of these government actions are still felt by you and your families today. The scars of this tragedy still linger, some as fresh as they were a generation ago. Many of you told us that you still experience family dysfunction and difficult relationships as a result of what was done to you. Some survivors shared that they never felt love during childhood. One survivor said, "I couldn't understand what real love was." Many of you struggle with self-identity due to losing your culture, your language, and the connection to your families. Many of you spoke about ongoing challenges with government systems and education and police and justice. When we look clearly at what was done to you, what we did to you, it is no wonder that it is so hard for so many of you to trust again.

Many survivors spoke about poor physical and mental health, about drug and alcohol addiction, about depression and suicide and early deaths amongst families and friends. The legacy of residential schools was and is a constant shadow over your lives. Many of you had parents and grandparents who were traumatized by residential schools. These traumas were often passed on to you, and many survivors spoke of the ongoing trauma their parents experienced. Many fear that they passed this trauma on to their children. A survivor told us, "The cycle needs to stop," and we agree.

I ask again for the members of this Assembly to look up, to see these survivors, to honour them and their ancestors with our full attention. To you, the survivors of the '60s scoop, to your children, to your parents, to the rest of your families, and to your communities, from me as Premier of Alberta, from all of us here as the elected representatives of the people of Alberta, and on behalf of the government of Alberta, we are sorry. For the loss of families, of stability, of love, we are sorry. For the loss of identity, of language and culture, we are sorry. For the loneliness, the anger, the confusion, and the frustration, we are sorry. For the government practice that left you indigenous people estranged from your families and your communities and your history, we are sorry. For this trauma, this pain, this suffering, alienation, and sadness, we are sorry. To all of you, I am sorry.

In Cree the word is ni mihtâtam. In Dene the word is bek'e nasdlj. In Beaver the word is sekaa-tah. In Nakota the word is wéčā ptač. In Blackfoot the closest term is tsik skāp(h) tsap spinaa'n. In Saulteaux the closest term is gaween-ouchi-dahh-do-taw-naan. In Michif the term is ni mihtatayn. We are sorry.

For an apology to be worth anything, it must also carry with it a promise. Here is my promise, our promise, to the survivors of the '60s scoop. We will work with indigenous communities, with each of you. We will ensure that your perspectives, your desires, and your priorities for your families and communities are reflected in what we do going forward. No one knows what indigenous children and families need better than First Nation, Métis, and Inuit communities. We will honour that. We will work together with you, your families, your elders, and your communities to correct historical injustices and find a path to true reconciliation between our government and indigenous Albertans. Together we can help heal the wounds of the past, together we can ensure that indigenous children grow up happy and healthy and connected to their families, their communities, and their cultures, and together we will ensure that all indigenous Albertans enjoy the same privileges and opportunities as every Albertan.

With all of this work we are not starting from a standstill. The work that began with the '60s scoop consultation continues, and the relationship being built through those consultations, a relationship that we hope is a new and growing form of trust, will serve us well as we continue together down the path of reconciliation.

Honoured guests, Mr. Speaker, members of the Assembly, thank you for the privilege of speaking with you today and for the opportunity to express our deepest apologies for the government practice known as the '60s scoop. Before I conclude, I do want to acknowledge the amazing work of the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society of Alberta and thank them for their guidance and their leadership over the past months. To everyone who participated in the engagement sessions over the past months and told their story, thank you again for your bravery and for putting your trust in us. We will honour that trust.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all members of the Assembly rise and join me in offering their thanks and their honour to the survivors who are with us today. [Standing ovation]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the spring of 2016 I received a meeting request from Adam North Peigan to discuss the '60s scoop. They were frustrated in their attempts to reach out to the government, so they asked for my help.

The experiences that they related to me of how they and others had been taken from their families and how those that survived were now trying to reconnect with family, community, and culture: I listened to Sharon, who, along with her sisters, was living with her grandparents on reserve land until a social worker came to visit. Shockingly to the social worker, this family was living in a house with no power, no indoor plumbing, and living on wild meat, so the children were removed and separated. Mr. Speaker, that was in the mid-1960s, the same time when I was growing up. Many, many Albertans lived that way. We didn't have running water in our house or indoor plumbing until I was 12 years old, but nobody came to rescue me.

On budget day 2016 I introduced 22 survivors of the '60s scoop here in the Legislature and helped Adam and his group raise awareness and bring this issue to the forefront. Over the last year, sessions were held all across Alberta to meet with and listen to the people affected. I attended the session held at Blue Quills university. I heard many stories of children being removed from their parents or grandparents and then, to make it worse, separated from their siblings.

One of the most touching stories was related by Eva. She told of walking with her nine children from Saddle Lake to St. Paul, a distance of 30 kilometres, so that she could go to school to further her education and make life better for her family. They walked over 20 kilometres before somebody would stop and pick them up. Eva ended up in Edmonton with her children, trying to go to school and work, but it got too tough for her, so she contacted social services.

Rather than lending a hand so she could keep her family together, they took her children, separated them, sending some to foster homes and others to group homes, depending on their age. She talked of the struggle to reunite her family.

We are here today because of the province's role in decisions that were made that affected thousands of families, intergenerational. I'm sure that those involved at the time thought they were doing the right thing. The troubling thing for me is that while we can look back at the past and say that we were in error, we are allowing this to continue under our watch today.

I had the privilege of standing in for the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre on the child intervention panel on several occasions. At one of these meetings we heard from a number of young people that had recently gone through the system. This was in 2017, Mr. Speaker. A young man named Jessie related how he, now 17 years old, had been through 14 foster homes before finally being adopted. He said that after the third transfer he felt that no one loved or cared for him.

The same day Samantha, also 17, said that she had lived with the same family for over 10 years and was very, very much considered one of the family. They never mentioned the words "foster child" until one day when she was 14 and her foster parents told her that Children's Services would be coming the next day to get her. No explanation was given to her. She was taken from that loving family environment and put into a group home setting. It was only after a FOIP request to view her own file that she discovered the reason that she was removed was her age. Her foster parents were only allowed children in a certain age group.

Many people I've talked to that have survived despite the system are frustrated because they are not allowed access to their own files. Even after many, many years they still have to pay to FOIP their own history, only to have much of the information blacked out, redacted.

On Friday, May 18, I was asked to sit on a panel at the Blanket of Remembrance event in Edmonton to remember a little girl named Serenity. We heard very emotional speeches from both her mom and her dad. Then right at the end of the panel discussion her grandmother stood up and tearfully talked about her recent fight to get her grandchildren back from social services. Why did she, a caring relative, have to fight for years against the system for the right to raise her own grandchildren? She tearfully told us that when she finally got them back, she said: they're ruined.

Back in 1951, when the responsibility was handed off from the federal government to the province, it was handled poorly, to say the least. That is why we're here today to recognize the efforts of people like Adam North Peigan and his group for shining a light on this issue and forcing the government to take responsibility for their role. Here we are in 2018 and, as you can see by the experiences I've related, the system is still very much broken. This is happening now. We need these departments to open up, put away their black markers, and fix this before we can take another step forward, or we'll be back here again in the future addressing another generation.

Hay-hay.

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to allow a response on behalf of the Alberta Party and on behalf of the Alberta Liberal Party.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with humility and is a great privilege to address this House on this special day and to address the guests and visitors in this Chamber. Let me start by also acknowledging that we're on the traditional land of Treaty 6 First Nations. I'd also like to thank the Premier for her leadership on this issue, for her heartfelt and thoughtful words.

On behalf of the Alberta Party caucus I rise today to join the government in apologizing for all those affected by the actions of those in power. The '60s scoop was a tragedy on every level. It was a personal tragedy for those that were taken from loving homes; it was a cultural tragedy, where a generation of indigenous peoples were forcibly separated from their traditions, their identities, and families; and it was a societal tragedy, that we allowed and perpetuated such a terrible and callous act against our indigenous brothers and sisters.

It's my hope that this apology is a step towards true reconciliation, that by acknowledging where we have gone wrong in the past, we can continue to work towards healing and true partnership. There are too many lost years, shattered families, stolen childhoods for this to be fixed by words alone, if indeed this can be fixed at all. But as we've heard today, this is about breaking the cycle. It's about naming and recognizing those that have suffered through these horrific policies. This is about ensuring that we do everything we can to ensure that something like this never ever happens again.

To all indigenous Albertans, your families, your communities, your ancestors: we deeply, deeply apologize. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me add my humble thanks to all those present today, including the Premier, with her very passionate tribute to our indigenous people and Métis community, who have suffered for so long and at such depth and persisted under such difficult circumstances for so long hoping to educate a very slow-learning western culture.

The '60s scoop is one of the many dark chapters in modern Canadian history: indigenous children in alarming numbers taken from their families, their homes, including kinship care, taken from the life they knew, the culture that fostered them, and the most basic experience of security. Governments past have actively undermined their culture and identity as indigenous, appropriately termed cultural genocide, which all of us as treaties people must help redress at every opportunity.

Over many generations the residential school system added to this family violence, and more recently Canadians are recognizing this particular period, the '60s scoop, which actually spanned decades, including our current times, with intergenerational trauma and fostered ongoing racism. We apologize for this profound trauma and commit every one of us today to do what we can do in our personal and public and professional lives to help the healing together.

Even today many indigenous youth in government care are cut off from families and culture as the child care system continues to lack cultural resources, especially on our reserves, for which we have challenged the federal government to step up, to preserve critical connections and indigenous identity and to build the capacity for indigenous health care, indigenous education, indigenous social and child care services. Two-thirds of children in Alberta in care come from our indigenous communities despite indigenous Albertans only comprising 10 per cent of our population. Research from the tenacious Dr. Cindy Blackstock has well demonstrated the discriminatory funding for health, education, and child and family services on-reserve, something the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal has ruled unacceptable, unlawful, and discriminatory.

I applaud both levels of government for taking this important step, recognizing not only the '60s scoop but beginning the substantive policy changes and key service changes that I know are coming and that we will be holding them accountable for. With an urgent need in Alberta to implement the recommendations of the Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention of this past six months, it's time for tangible change in all our relations with indigenous communities at all three levels of government: federal, provincial, and municipal. Only then can we confidently say that there will be no more scoops, no millennial scoop that is currently being talked about.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give notice to the Assembly pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) that the Routine shall continue beyond 3 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, I've had a request from an independent for unanimous consent to speak.

Ms Ganley: Then I would make that request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I want to begin by welcoming our brothers and sisters from our First Nations and Métis communities here today, many of which are outside in the rotunda because there's not enough space in this place for everyone to fit. I want to join the Premier, the Leader of the Opposition, the Alberta Party, and the Liberal member in sharing these comments towards peace and reconciliation in Alberta with our First Nations.

The '60s scoop was an attack on families, on individuals, on a culture, and on nations. As the Member for Strathmore-Brooks I've developed a very close and positive relationship with the Siksika First Nation, which is next door to my constituency and is in many ways a sister community to Bassano, Gleichen, Cluny, and Strathmore. The '60s scoop violated treaties, it violated trust, and it violated our own values.

We have come a long way since then. We have come a long way in coming together as common Canadians and Albertans and as just humans, but there is still much to do. Together we take responsibility for what happened, and we ask for your forgiveness as we move forward together.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just briefly I would like to thank the Premier for her gracious remarks and the gesture of this important apology and, on behalf of the Official Opposition, join with the government in sharing our highest esteem for the survivors who join us today in the Chamber, in the rotunda, and across the province.

'60s Scoop Survivors Ministerial Panel on Child Intervention

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, would the Premier care to expand on her remarks and suggest what further measures could be taken to advance reconciliation with the survivors of this terrible historical injustice?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much to the hon. Official Opposition leader for that important question. The work that we need to do going forward is fundamentally important. It is a continuation of what our government began when we adopted and committed to moving forward with the principles of the United Nations declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. As it relates to the survivors of the '60s scoop, we know that there is much we must do to do a better job supporting families and indigenous communities to care as best they can, as they should, for their children and to move forward on a number of different fronts supporting indigenous communities so that they can grow in the years to come. That's the work that we've begun on many different fronts and that we will continue to do in partnership.

Mr. Kenney: I thank the hon. the Premier for her thoughtful response, Mr. Speaker.

Is it the Premier's view that more historical research needs to be done to identify the policies of the government of Alberta that led to this? I understand there have been listening sessions, and I myself have listened to the members of the '60s scoop survivors association. At the federal level I led redress projects with respect to things like the Chinese head tax and found it very important to establish a permanent historical record. Is the government committed to helping to do that through archival research and other projects so that we never forget the lessons of this injustice?

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much again to the member opposite for that insight. I think that we're certainly open to moving forward on the priorities that are primarily given to us by the survivors themselves and by leaders within indigenous communities across the province, so the work will continue in terms of the consultations between our ministers and the leadership in terms of: what's the best path forward to redress the wrongs of the '60s scoop as well as to move forward on full reconciliation under UNDRIP? Certainly, the suggestion made by the member opposite is worthy of consideration.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, members of the '60s scoop survivors association and others, including members of this place, have raised ongoing concerns about the treatment of children in care. That has obviously been a point of great concern for the government and the Legislature through the special Legislature committee that spent well over a year studying this. [Noises in the gallery] I would like to ask the Premier if she would care to update us on the progress of implementing the recommendations of the Legislature committee on children in care.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, our minister of children and families, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake, has been working in a very focused way to move forward with those recommendations. There were a number of very meaningful and substantial recommendations that came from the all-party committee, some of which have short implementation horizons and some of which we need to work on for years and years to come. But we are very committed to moving forward with those recommendations and ensuring that we fund them appropriately so that we can get at the root causes of many of these concerns that continue with us today.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure, through you to our visitors in the gallery, that we understand if they will absent themselves. I know that all members would look forward to meeting with them afterwards, but the work of democracy continues.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, in three days we face the possible cancellation of the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project. I'm wondering if the Premier could update the House on whether there are any developments to give us cause for optimism in this respect.

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, our government has been clear that there is one outcome – and one outcome only – that is acceptable to the people of Alberta, and that outcome is that construction resumes on schedule this summer and that uncertainty is removed and that that pipeline to tidewater is built. It is fundamentally important, obviously, to the people of Alberta and to the energy industry across this country and, frankly, to investment in all sectors across the country of Canada. We are committed to getting it done.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I obviously agree with the hon. the Premier about the importance of this project and thank her for her hard work on this file, but my question was on whether there are any tangible signs of optimism.

Mr. Speaker, the government announced its intention to introduce turn-off-the-taps legislation four months ago and then reinforced that in the throne speech in March. When will that legislation become effective?

2:20

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, on the matter of tangible signs, I did forget to mention in answer to the last question that we were very pleased last week when the proponents of the project won not one but two legal decisions at the B.C. Supreme Court, once again supporting the work of everybody who's been working towards getting the pipeline moving forward and doing their due diligence to approve it after considering all the necessary information. That was good news.

Generally speaking, with respect to Bill 12 we will move forward on that at the time that is most strategic, representing the interests of Albertans.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier decided not to attend the Western Premiers' Conference last week. Why did she not see it as an opportunity on behalf of the Alberta government to look across the table at Premier Horgan and indicate that Alberta will indeed turn off the taps unless we have absolute legal certainty that the government of British Columbia stops its strategy of death by delay through obstruction? Why did she miss that opportunity, and why is this legislation not yet coming into force?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said in advance of the Western Premiers' Conference, it struck us as quite surreal and quite tone deaf to spend two days to go to a meeting to talk about how to spend money, albeit on very good projects, as opposed to staying back in Edmonton and doing the hard work of ensuring that we have the capacity to earn the money that would pay for those important programs like, for instance, pharmacare. That was the message that we delivered, and it was delivered extremely articulately by the Deputy Premier, and I want to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Madam Premier.

Third main question.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've said before, a threat is only effective if the other side of the table believes that the threat will be used. Premier Horgan walked away from his meeting with our Premier and the Prime Minister several weeks ago in Ottawa saying that he was given assurances, effectively, that he didn't have to worry about this threat. Given that there are only three days left, when will the government bring Bill 12 into effect? When will they actually follow through on the threat to turn off the taps to defend our vital economic interests?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, to be very clear, at no time has the Premier of British Columbia ever been assured by anyone that has any line of sight into my strategies that they needn't be worried about Bill 12 being implemented. Let me be perfectly clear. They are fully aware that that is an issue, and they are fully seized of the matter. That being said, we are not in the business of jumping out of a plane without first checking to see if the parachute is in place, and more importantly we only do it when we're over the place we want to be. We will be very strategic, we will be very thoughtful about how we implement this bill, and when it is necessary, we'll let the member opposite know.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm simply quoting the Premier of British Columbia, who said, following that meeting, quote: Alberta didn't necessarily think they were going to act on Bill 12. It seems that the government of British Columbia has called our bluff, and that's why they have not downed tools on their death-by-delay strategy. How many billions of tax dollars is the Premier prepared to risk in her offer to buy the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think that implicit in that question is the notion that now the member opposite is not actually interested in Albertans investing in Albertans' futures in one fashion or another, yet previously the member was in favour of that. I guess he's only in favour of it when it's the government investing in Ontario jobs, to spend $9 billion rescuing the auto industry. Let me be clear that the principles are these: we will get the pipeline built, and we will ensure certainty and we will ensure value for Albertans in whatever strategy we adopt.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, to correct the hon. the Premier, implicit in that question was that the Official Opposition and the people of Alberta are not prepared to give the NDP a blank cheque to clean up the political mess that they have created.

Mr. Speaker, is there any sense of fiscal limits in the government's negotiations with Kinder Morgan, or are they so desperate – so desperate – to dig themselves out of this terrible hole that they're giving Kinder Morgan a blank cheque in these negotiations?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. One thing I can say for sure is that we won't write a $9 billion cheque on behalf of Ontario workers. But even though the member opposite seems more concerned about them than Alberta workers, what we will do is that we will move forward with very key principles in place, absolute value for money for Albertans. They need to make money off this. Moreover, we will move forward to ensure that there is certainty on construction and ultimate completion. At the end of the day, this is about standing up for Albertans, standing up for our energy industry, and making sure that we're better off than we were before.

The Speaker: Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that facts matter, and for many Albertans the fact that matters the most is that we still don't have any certainty on the future of the Trans Mountain expansion. The reality on the ground is that spending on the project is still suspended, and we're days away from the project being abandoned entirely. Despite all that, this government seems quite confident that they'll succeed on this file. To the Premier: without revealing any more details about the negotiations with Kinder Morgan, can you assure this House that the matter will be resolved by the May 31 deadline?

Ms Notley: Mr. Speaker, what I can assure this House is that this government will never stop fighting to make sure that this pipeline gets built and that, in fact, it will get built. I can tell the member opposite that we are working very hard every day to get this matter across the finish line. We are cautiously optimistic. In fact, I'd go beyond that. We're reasonably confident that we are going to meet the deadlines the member opposite referenced. In any event, we are absolutely sure that we will fight as hard as we need to fight at exactly the right time to get this pipeline built for Albertans.

Mr. Fraser: Well, another place where facts matter is in the courts. B.C. is currently bringing a court challenge over Bill 12, and this government may have given them the ammunition they need to win that challenge. It's a fact that a law can't specifically target the economic prosperity of another province, and while Bill 12 doesn't specifically name British Columbia, it's also a fact that the Minister of Energy said in public, "We're going to be introducing legislation shortly which will inflict pain on British Columbia." To the Premier: why would your government expose Bill 12 to a constitutional challenge just for the sake of political points?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, as the member opposite probably knows, the courts will interpret a bill on the basis of what is in the bill. The bill is very clear that the purpose of moving forward on it is to ensure that we maximize the return for Albertans in the way that is best possible. It could include a whole range of options, all of which are allowed for in the bill. That is the way that we will go forward, in a strategic way to ensure that we get the best price possible for Albertans at the right time.

In addition, when it comes to the courts, as I mentioned to the other member, we just won two cases last week. You know, that's a good thing.

Mr. Fraser: Well, we know for a fact that the federal government is able to exercise their authority on things it believes are in the national interest. We only have to look at how they've pledged to impose a carbon tax on provinces that don't come up with their own. In light of that, it's confusing and concerning that they've been so reluctant to exercise their authority on the approval and construction for an interprovincial energy project. Again to the Premier. Minister Morneau is going to be in Calgary this Wednesday, and we all hope that he brings good news to share. What is your government prepared to do if the federal government refuses to put their full support behind this project?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of tools that we are very ready to use to ensure that the folks who have the authority to do the thing, to get the pipe built, use their authority and that the thing happens and that the pipe is built. We are looking at all the various people who have a role in that, whether we're talking about the government of British Columbia, whether we're talking about Kinder Morgan, whether we're talking about the federal government. We will always fight for Albertans, we will stand up to defend this province on any front, and you can count on us making sure that this pipeline will get built.

'60s Scoop Apology

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we witnessed a historic apology and acknowledgement of the wrongdoings committed towards indigenous people by the past governments in this province. I've heard from survivors in my constituency about the damage that the '60s scoop caused, and their stories are heartbreaking. To the Deputy Premier: why was this so important, that our government make this apology, and why did it take so long?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. This apology is an important part of truth and reconciliation, and our government wanted to ensure that we got it right. That's why we worked closely with the Sixties Scoop Indigenous Society of Alberta to plan the engagement that led to this apology. As survivors themselves their goal was to raise awareness about the '60s scoop and support other survivors in Alberta. Their members and especially their president, Adam North Peigan, have shown strong leadership and courage, and we thank them for their wisdom and guidance throughout this process.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, given that thanks to the advocates and survivors sharing their stories, Albertans are more aware of the impacts of the '60s scoop and why it was so important to apologize, to the same minister: how did you get input from the survivors to ensure that this apology was meaningful to the survivors and their families?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you. Again, I really want to thank SSISA for their work that they've done to help us get to this point. Together we conducted six engagement sessions across Alberta, and we heard from hundreds of survivors about the impact of the '60s scoop. The purpose of the engagement was to listen to survivors, to gain a deeper understanding of their diverse lived experiences, and to empower survivors through respectful and inclusive engagement to inform a meaningful apology and a meaningful day rather than just a few seconds of apology. This has been really, I think, a very powerful day, especially for people of indigenous heritage, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hinkley: Mr. Speaker, given that this apology is only a first step and given that we know it cannot be the only step in the path to reconciliation, again to the Deputy Premier: what are you doing to ensure that this work continues long after the apology today?

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, hon. member. To you and other members of the Assembly who, I know, have a deep connection to this issue and this history: I really want to commend you for your advocacy and recognize that it's just one step in truth, reconciliation, and healing. Our government is also implementing training for the Alberta public service staff to learn about treaties and residential schools and antiracist education for employees of Alberta Health Services. We're revamping the curriculum so that Alberta students learn about indigenous history and contemporary indigenous issues, including the residential school legacy and the '60s scoop legacy. We're working with indigenous communities to co-operate and cocreate an action plan . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Diversity-related Tax Credits

Mr. Fildebrandt: Buried in the government's agenda is a policy that will mandate gender and racial quotas for businesses in the private sector if they wish to qualify for tax credits. The plan is to take taxes from people and businesses and give some of it back to them only if they hire a proportion of groups designated by the NDP to be worthy. Everyone I know in the private sector hires and fires on the basis of merit only. A business owner's prejudices would only hurt their bottom line. Does the government believe that Albertans are so prejudiced and hateful that quotas are necessary in the private sector?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know what? I'm quite proud of the work that our government has been doing to promote diversity and inclusion in the workplace and in the private sector and the public sector. I'm proud that in Bill 2 there is an opportunity to try to encourage people from underrepresented groups to participate more fully in sectors where they traditionally haven't. Quite frankly, I'm curious to know why the member doesn't believe that we should be encouraging diversity as opposed to restricting it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: You don't lift someone up by putting somebody else down, Mr. Speaker.

Given that governments and political parties have long engaged in racial and gender quotas as a way to appear politically correct because government has the resources to hire on a basis other than merit but the private sector does not – the linchpin of government mandating equality of outcomes over equality of opportunity is the neo-Marxist world view that society is a strata of groups and not free individuals – does the government believe that people's group identities should trump their value as individual, free people?

The Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, I'm proud of the work that our government has done on a number of different fronts to support and promote the participation of those especially that are part of underrepresented groups. You know, our investor tax credit would have a diversity top-up, something that doesn't exist in other jurisdictions, in order to promote participation of those underrepresented groups, similarly with our digital media tax credit. This is widely celebrated and was asked for by industry when we were designing these programs to ensure that we are promoting inclusion and diversity.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, I encourage you to remember the rule about preambles if you would, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Given, Mr. Speaker, that privilege exists but in a different way than many members here might believe – some are born into wealth and health and functional families, but the human condition often only gives us two out of these three – and given that someone born into a poor, broken family in a Strathmore trailer park but who happens to not meet some of the identity groups identified by the government is not privileged, does the government believe that the way to build opportunity for the underprivileged is to lump them together into racial and gender groups?

The Speaker: The Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our government recognizes that there are intersectional factors that affect some particular groups more than others. In Alberta we have the largest gender wage gap in Canada. This is unacceptable, and we must do better. There are grassroots organizations across the province working very hard to ensure that people of diverse backgrounds, including women and other minorities underrepresented in the STEM fields in particular, have a fighting chance. That's what this does. It was asked for by the business community. Quite frankly, it's shocking that we would see anyone speaking against something that works towards improving the outcomes for women in this province.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, last fall the NDP quietly rehired John Heaney, former chief of staff to the Premier, just weeks after he tendered his resignation to return to B.C., where he still resides. According to his contract he barely even came off the government payroll, quietly transitioning directly into the role of executive adviser to the ministers of Energy and Finance, earning over $130,000 a year. Mr. Heaney is currently the subject of an ongoing investigation by the Privacy Commissioner for political interference. To the Premier: do you honestly not see any ethical issues with Mr. Heaney's continued employment?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To address this question and to unpack some of it, let me just say that after leaving his position as the chief of staff for the Premier, Mr. Heaney was retained as the executive adviser to both the Energy minister and myself. He's been tasked with providing legal advice related to pipelines and market access, working specifically on the Trans Mountain pipeline to make sure we get that expansion to tidewater and assisting me on our path to balance, which was new this year from this government.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that in addition to being the subject of a political interference investigation, Mr. Heaney is also a registered lobbyist in B.C. and given that the code of conduct for political staffers states that employees may not engage “in any business or undertaking other than his or her employment with the government” and given that Mr. Heaney registered to lobby for a B.C. client in January 2018, months after the new contract started, can the Premier please explain why she would allow this blatant violation of the code of conduct?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The contract that is referenced here also comes with an exemption to work outside of government. Again, there’s mudslinging from that side with no relevance at all. Mr. Heaney is on contract with the government of Alberta. As such, he’s not permitted to lobby government members or employees of the government of Alberta.

Mr. Cooper: Special rules for the government.

Given that Mr. Heaney has quietly been working for your administration since October despite very publicly resigning from his position as the chief of staff to the Premier to, according to the Calgary Herald, spend more time with his family, to the Premier: did your office deliberately mislead Albertans when it announced Mr. Heaney’s resignation, or did misleading Albertans happen accidentally?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When structuring the addendum to Mr. Heaney’s contract, we actively sought the advice of the Ethics Commissioner of Alberta. Of course, we’re happy to follow up with any further information the commissioner requires. We have been complying with the Privacy Commissioner on the FOIP investigation, and we’re happy to provide information there as well.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, during the Energy estimates debate the minister indicated that she added a staff member to deal with things like the off-coal agreements, the coal-to-gas conversions, the electricity price gap, renewable electricity, the transition to the capacity market, the methane reduction strategy, and output-based allocations. My question to the Premier: who is the real Minister of Energy, the MLA for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley or the B.C. NDP Premier’s best friend John Heaney?

Ms Hoffman: Really nice to see the new tone that’s been set under the new leadership here in the Official Opposition.

I have to say that I am so proud of the strong women on the front bench in this government. We have some pretty great guys, too, but we have strong women leading on important files. Of course, the Member for Dunvegan-Central Peace-Notley is the minister. She’s doing a tremendous job. No government has ever been as close to accessing new markets and tidewater as this government with this Minister of Energy, and I couldn’t be more proud of her work, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier’s director of communications said that John Heaney has been tasked with providing legal advice in spite of not being registered here in Alberta for giving legal advice and given that another NDP lawyer, Joseph Arvay, who handled the PPA lawsuits for the NDP, is now fighting against Alberta, defending B.C. on Bill 12, Premier, are you and John Horgan channelling Cicero and crafting some real political theatre that only serves to . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I’m so proud of the work that this government has done to make sure that we are moving forward on construction of line 3 moving to the east and, of course, getting a pipeline to tidewater. Members opposite like to talk about the progress they made. Let me tell you that a pipeline to Jasper is not a pipeline to tidewater. This side of the House is going to get that job done. This side of the House is making sure we’re moving forward to ensure that people get the jobs and the economic benefits that come with those and that we continue to invest in the people of this province instead of mudslinging like the members opposite.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that John Heaney returned to Victoria to be with his family in August 2017 but that this new contract was inked in October 2017, less than two months after his departure from the Premier’s office, can the Premier confirm or deny that John Heaney has been working for the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Finance from home in Victoria, B.C., this whole time?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, the opposition couldn’t find tidewater if they were standing on the pier in Victoria. This side of the House is employing the appropriate people to ensure that we get the job done, and we won’t be lectured by people who had nine years in government in Alberta and nine years in government in Ontario at the same time to make sure that they could have gotten this project done. We’re working hard here in Alberta. We’re working hard in B.C. Feel free to spend your time in Ontario, but this side of the House is getting results, and we’re going to get that pipeline.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Calgary-Foothills just asked the Minister of Energy about the terms of the contract with Mr. Heaney, the Premier’s former chief of staff. She didn’t even pretend to try to answer the question. She offered a typical partisan rant instead. So let’s come back to the issue because hopefully the government understands that it has to be accountable to taxpayers. How much is this contract for, when was it signed, and where has Mr. Heaney been working from?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The annual sunshine list is due to be released in late June. Mr. Heaney’s contract took effect this past February. There hasn’t been a sunshine list released in that time, but it will be released in June. He has been giving us advice on the Trans Mountain pipeline, he has been in consultation with Energy, and he has been in consultation with members of Treasury Board and Finance. We have done a number of things to make that happen to get his advice.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, did Mr. Heaney receive a severance payment from the government of Alberta after his termination as chief of staff to the hon. the Premier?

Ms Hoffman: You know what? Fair question, Mr. Speaker. I know that under Conservative governments in this province, many times people did get insane severance payments. What we did in our government is that we haven’t been writing those kinds of contracts that have those kinds of nice victory lap, gold-plated pension plans that pay out, like Conservatives did in this province many, many times. Mr. Heaney left his position of his own volition. He has taken a different position in an advisory capacity, and we thank him for the work he's doing because – you know what? – it's going to get us a pipeline.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I'm listening with the earpiece to try to get every word here, but I think I still missed an answer to the question, which was whether Mr. Heaney, the Premier's former chief of staff, received a severance payment after he left the Premier's office. Let me ask the question a third time just for the sake of absolute clarity. Did Mr. Heaney receive a severance payment from the government of Alberta after he left the Premier's office, and if so, how much was it?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, severance, I believe, is what happened many, many times under the Redford government and many other governments when people were fired. Mr. Heaney left of his own volition. He did not get terminated. Certainly, we respect the fact that he wanted to spend more time with his family and still wants to serve. He quit that position. My understanding is that he did not receive any severance. If that's not the fact, I will make sure that I correct the record. He quit instead of being fired, like we saw with many scandals under the former government. That certainly wasn't the case here in the province of Alberta. We respect the fact that he chose to leave, and he did so of his own volition.

Champion Lakes Wildfire

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, residents of the MD of Foothills, Rocky View county, and the hamlet of Bragg Creek are concerned about a wildfire that started over the weekend near the McLean Creek provincial recreation area. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: can you please update residents on the status of this fire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the important question. Wildfires are often scary events, and we empathize with residents in the member's constituency that are currently facing these issues. This wildfire has been named the Champion Lakes wildfire and is currently about 100 hectares in size. While it is moving slowly, Alberta Wildfire is taking this fire very seriously. It is currently the number one provincial priority for the wildfire management branch, and the province has dispatched many resources to manage it as best we can. There is no immediate threat to the town of Bragg Creek, but I urge all residents of the area, including rural residents, to be vigilant and use all information resources available.

Mr. Westhead: Given that residents are concerned about their safety and property and given that the conditions continue to be quite dry, to the same minister: can you tell us what resources you've committed to this fire?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Member. This is our number one priority right now, and we have put substantial assets into fighting the fire and protecting communities and property. In addition to air tanker support we have dispatched dozens of firefighters, eight helicopters, and many pieces of heavy equipment. The office of the fire commissioner has also dispatched a wildland urban interface structural protection team. We'll continue to monitor the situation and are working with local officials to ensure that we're doing what we can to protect the member's constituents.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the wildfire risk is very high and given that many communities across the province have had tragic experiences with wildfire, what is the government doing to prepare communities for the threat of wildfire and to prevent fires from starting in the first place?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member. We all know that we need to do our best to prevent wildfires. It helps to focus resources and stop the threat from happening in the first place. That's why last week we instituted a fire ban in many parts of the province to further attempt to prevent fires. It is the same reason we amended the Forest and Prairie Protection Act, to give officers more tools to discourage risky behaviour and restrict the use of items like incendiary targets and other high-risk products. We've also been working with communities through the FireSmart program and have tripled investment in that program so that communities can undertake planning, manage fuel and education, and perform other preparedness activities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

NDP and Pipeline Development

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government remains steadfastly committed to a punitive carbon tax. Part of this devotion arises from the false belief that it has or will grant social licence, yet we have NDP Premier John Horgan continuing to unlawfully obstruct an approved project and federal NDP leader Jagmeet Singh saying that the approval process was rigged, the science was ignored, and that it is clear that the pipeline should not be built. To the Premier: how can you continue to believe in your so-called social licence when you can't even convince your own fellow travellers to support Canadian pipelines?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we developed a made-in-Alberta plan rather than an Ottawa-imposed plan, and we're very proud of that. I wish the opposition would quit cheering for us on a number of fronts to fail. The reality is that we are winning the hearts and minds of not just people in B.C. but, in fact, in Canada. Make no mistake. This pipeline is going to be built, and it's going to be built because of our climate leadership plan.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that in 2016, amid opposition observations that the NDP social licence wasn't working, the Premier said, and I quote, that that's just wrong and it's also quite silly, and given that today we see yet more prominent NDP politicians openly opposing pipelines than in 2016 despite pipelines generating significant dollars for public treasuries, something spendthrift NDP leaders should be most conscious of given their proven inability to control government spending, again to the Premier: how can you maintain that social licence is working when your own party is leading the charge against Alberta's constitutional rights?

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I'm very proud of the leadership our Premier has shown on this and indeed many of my colleague ministers. We know that $40 million a day is being left out of our economy here in Canada because of the lack of capacity, and that's money that could be spent on roads, hospitals, schools, and a lot of programs that all of us in this House would agree are important. This climate leadership plan has gotten us the approvals, and the work we're doing is going to continue. We are going to get that pipeline built.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess on Thursday we hope the answer is a positive one.

Given that this government remains steadfast in its belief in social licence despite mounting evidence that your plan has failed and given that the minister of economic development stated in April 2016, "We've also introduced the most robust climate leadership plan in the country that . . . will get the social licence to get pipelines approved and our product to tidewater," again to the Premier: why are Albertans still paying an all-economic-pain, no-environmental-gain carbon tax, that has clearly failed to get a so-called social licence to build much-needed pipeline capacity?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the member for the question. I'll walk him briefly down memory lane. It was the work that the Premier and the Minister of Environment and Parks did building our climate leadership plan, which is something that we're very proud of, which led to the Prime Minister giving approval of several pipelines, including the Trans Mountain pipeline. I would argue, in fact, that the climate leadership plan has been successful. At the same time, we're showing that the economy and the environment go hand in hand. We're working very closely with industry across sectors to ensure that Alberta continues to remain the best place to invest and to do business, and we will continue to fight on behalf of businesses to ensure that there is economic prosperity shared by all Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Carbon Levy Revenue Utilization

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "Every penny raised by the carbon levy will be rebated back to Albertans or put back to work for our economy in new economic initiatives." That was the Premier in 2016 attempting to pass off her job-killing carbon tax as revenue neutral. Albertans weren't fooled in 2016, and they aren't fooled now. To the Premier: why did you mislead Albertans when you said that the carbon tax was revenue neutral?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, the carbon levy that is part of the climate leadership plan is reinvested back into Alberta through a number of mechanisms. Rebates that Albertans get are one mechanism, and innovation investment is another. Those companies that need to turn over their coal-fired generating plants to gas fired: that's another way it's getting reinvested. We're doing the job that Albertans need to reduce GHGs, and we'll continue to do that. I just wish that they would get onboard with believing in climate change and things like that. They don't seem to. Lookit, they're totally . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Barnes: Given that when their ally Justin Trudeau raises the carbon tax to $40, then $50 in 2023, and who knows after that, the NDP will direct all carbon tax revenue into general revenue and given that a carbon tax is a tax on everything and a PST is a tax on everything, a carbon tax is regressive and a PST is regressive, Albertans don't want a carbon tax and Albertans don't want a PST – Albertans are having trouble understanding the difference – to the minister: what is the difference between the two taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. We have been fully upfront every step of the way. We've said that up to $30: those monies will go back to Albertans, be reinvested into the various programs I mentioned in the answer to the first question. After that, you know, it's contingent on the Trans Mountain pipeline being under construction and built and finished and all that sort of thing and delivering product to the coast. Those monies that come as a result of the federally imposed increase to the carbon levy will go to bring us closer to back to balance and reduce the deficit.

Mr. Barnes: So it is a PST.

Given that specific estimates vary but the consensus is that a provincial sales tax would raise around $1 billion for every percentage point and given that last year the government raised over a billion dollars in revenue from the carbon tax – the difference is that a carbon tax allowed the NDP to skirt the law and forgo a referendum – to the minister: why won't you be straight with Albertans, admit the carbon tax is just a ploy to circumvent the law, and call a referendum to scrap the carbon tax?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the talking points from that side are coming from. What we are doing is addressing GHGs with regard to the carbon levy and the climate leadership plan that is in this province. We have been clear. We're not bringing in a sales tax or a PST. We haven't done anything to make that happen. That side seems to want to talk about PSTs. Well, then bring in a platform. Put it in your platform that you don't seem to provide, that you don't give us in terms of a shadow budget. No shadow budget from anyone on that side. Where are your thoughts? Where are your abilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mountain Pine Beetle

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pine beetles are threatening 15 million acres of Alberta's forests, putting $8 billion of pure pine stands at risk as well as the operations of major forest companies. We must contain this infestation because Alberta is the final barrier before the beetle begins a devastating march across Canada. To the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry: what do the preliminary results show about the survival rate of the pine beetle from this long, hard winter?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the very important question. This past year there was indeed a survey. Those results are still being compiled, still being analyzed, and will be available later this summer. I'll be happy to share with the member once those results are available. It's important to note that this goes a long ways to ensure that we have all the necessary tools we need in our tool box to continue this fight with the pine beetle. The member is absolutely correct. This is the western front for the battle with the pine beetle, a battle we've been fighting for some years and currently are able to keep on top of.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the mountain pine beetles are on a rampage through Jasper national park, which means the Hinton area is their next feeding ground, and given that if the beetles survived this winter, just one day of strong summer winds could transport millions of them into the foothills east of Jasper, to the same minister: what progress are you making in convincing the federal government to help battle the beetle infestation in Jasper national park?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and the member for the important question. You know, the province has had a very aggressive management strategy throughout the years when it was very bad in the northeast in 2006 and 2009. We have seen a 50 per cent decline in the number of affected trees, so the programs we have in place are necessary. The member is correct. In the Hinton area now it is the worst in the province. About 50 per cent of all the control we're doing now is in that area. We'll continue working with the communities. We've had grant programs to Hinton, to Whitecourt, Canmore, and other areas to ensure that those communities as well do what they can.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the province has announced funding for suppressing pine beetles discovered on municipal land and in the Hinton area due to the infestation occurring next door to Jasper national park and given that the vast majority of the pine forests in that area are actually on provincial Crown land, to the same minister: what is your government's containment plan for beetles that appear on Crown land in this critical area?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Absolutely, it continues to be important working with all our stakeholders, including the communities, including the forest industry. It's important to note that those stakeholders have played a big role over the years in helping to combat this pest. It is about combatting this pest. We're probably not going to get rid of the beetle, but we can, with proper management, control. The province has allocated again this year $25 million to do just so. Even though it is a threat, it is an imminent threat to our communities, to our forest industry, I do believe that this government is on the right track to do what we can to make sure that we control the pest.

The Speaker: Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Carbon Levy and Methane Regulations

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day Albertans are forced to pay the carbon tax just to go to work and heat their homes in a failed attempt to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. On top of that, methane regulations can have serious impacts on some of Alberta's biggest employers, potentially impacting future job creation. On May 17 the Minister of Energy claimed that they've had talks back and forth with their federal counterparts on methane regulations. To the minister: what assurances have you received that Alberta will be able to continue to regulate its own jurisdiction?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, protecting jobs for our oil sector in Alberta has been job number one for us and a top priority. We've engaged them, as I mentioned, along with other stakeholders to develop a made-in-Alberta plan to deal with methane, and that's exactly what we've done. The draft regulations have been open for 30 days to the public and to industry, and we look forward to seeing that feedback and working towards our final regulations.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the true effect of the carbon tax would be measured by the amount of emissions being reduced in Alberta and given that information does not seem to be available anywhere and that baseline and scientific measurements are not being reported and given that the carbon tax has clearly failed to result in shovels in the ground for a pipeline, contrary to this government's claims, to the minister: why won't this government stop punishing everyday Albertans and scrap this all-pain, no-gain carbon tax?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Nothing could be further from the truth. We've worked with industry from day one on a number of matters, whether it was the royalty review, climate leadership plan, methane, any number of issues, and we continue to do that. We have a great relationship with our industry. We understand that we need to be competitive, but we also understand that we need to deal with climate, and that's why we have a very robust climate leadership plan that's guiding us in all of those matters.

Mr. van Dijken: Given, Mr. Speaker, that just over two years ago the Minister of Economic Development and Trade stood here and said that the carbon tax would, quote, get the social licence to get our product to tidewater and given that the federal Liberal government has failed to deliver on their promise to assert federal jurisdiction on the pipeline against B.C.'s obstruction, why is this government still forcing Albertans to go along with Ottawa's 67 per cent carbon tax increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, we have a plan that's made in Alberta rather than made in Ottawa and imposed from Ottawa. We're going to continue with that. But I would challenge the opposition: we hear nothing from your side on a number of matters. We don't see a platform. We don't know where you stand on anything. All you do is complain about the climate leadership plan, but we hear zero from you. Looking forward to hearing it soon.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Classroom Improvement Fund

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Class size is important. Parents want to make sure that there are appropriate supports in the classroom to ensure that their children get the best education possible. I've heard that the classroom improvement fund is supposed to help with this. To the hon. Minister of Education: what are some of the best ways that you've seen this funding being spent in the classroom?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we've seen lots of innovation around the province. For example, in Fort Saskatchewan they hired reading specialists, and they can see a measurable increase in improvement for young children within even the first year. That's why we were glad to put it back in this year as well. In Calgary we saw the Calgary board of education focus on math, hiring math specialists. Again, we can see lots of progress taking place there. So you put the money into the classroom, you make sure you invest responsibly, working with teachers and parents, and results will happen.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that there are some changes to the funding being provided this year. What can the $77 million classroom improvement fund now be spent on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year we realized from the last year that the best way that you can invest is to have teachers and support staff in the classrooms in front of kids, so we have $77 million in the classroom improvement fund this year focusing on hiring teachers and support staff. We expect to see more than 450 new positions as a result of the classroom improvement fund this year.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've heard from teachers how beneficial this program is, but I've also heard some concern from the ATA about whether the funding is permanent. Again to the same minister: are you looking to make this a permanent funding arrangement?

Mr. Eggen: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, when you are making a study of a phenomenon, you look for patterns. We have delivered four budgets in a row for education that have funded for increased enrolment across the province. I'm very proud of that. We saw how great this classroom improvement fund is in the first year. Now we're putting it back in for the second year. I have to go back to my caucus and cabinet and Premier, but I can show definable scientific results that we are improving education here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds we will continue.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Official Opposition Leader

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans like politicians who say what they mean and who mean what they say. They like straight shooters, leaders who they can respect even if they don't agree with everything that they stand for. What they don't like are leaders who talk out of both sides of their mouths. One of these Albertans is a former Wildrose member and activist. This is what he had to say in a letter that he wrote to me recently.

I'm thoroughly disgusted with [the Leader of the Official Opposition]. He and the UCP MLAs are being paid by us people to conduct the province's business. Yet they walk out whenever they don't like an NDP motion. That's like an employee of a supermarket walking out if a lousy song comes over the public address system. We pay them to work, not to walk.

I'm also disgusted with [the Leader of the Official Opposition's] flip-flopping about grass roots support. He's proven that he uses his members for his own ends, not to make Alberta a better place for all. He made a big show about letting the grass roots members make policy and then he acts like an old style politician and claims his is the final decision. I'd snap his pen in half if I could.

Remember too that most of the grass roots support came to Brian Jean. [The Leader of the Opposition] parachuted in and won the leadership race with his big donor money. Now he's repaying them by behaving like the old boys of the PC days. This isn't what I supported with my 2015 vote.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that this constituent speaks for many who went to Red Deer expecting to be part of a populist grassroots movement and then found out that the new UCP is the same top-down, big-money-dominated party they left the PCs for being. If this is how this new party is starting out, where will they end up? Who knows? What I know is that if Albertans want a government that has taken big money out of politics and that makes the tough choices necessary to secure our continuing future prosperity and can be trusted to stand up for regular Albertans and the services they depend on, there is one clear choice, and that is our NDP government.

Finally, I'd like to thank this honest and frank constituent for his letter. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Provincial Intergenerational Debt

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, since the Second World War the west embraced the value of permanent progress. The idea that each generation should be better off than its parents can be found at the very core of our economic and political systems. We invest in modern infrastructure, technology, and education because we know it will improve our children's ability to compete and succeed. We value progress because we want to leave more freedom and more opportunity for the next generation.

However, when we finance paying for modern infrastructure, technology, and education through debt by running deficit budgets, we are not leaving our children better off. We are in fact setting them up for failure. Borrowing, once reserved for emergencies, is now being used to fund the day-to-day operations of this NDP government. According to the NDP's most recent financial plans Alberta's budget will not be balanced until at least 2024, at which time the debt will have reached a staggering $96 billion. That's when the bill really comes due, Mr. Speaker. According to a team of researchers at the University of Calgary Albertans will eventually be forced to shell out $3.8 billion annually just to cover the interest on this massive pile of debt.

Who will ultimately be responsible for paying for this fiscal mess? According to the researchers our province's young people. A typical 16-year-old in 2023 will be forced to pay an additional $42,252 over the remainder of his or her life just to cover the interest on the NDP's debt, and according to the U of C's research team those aged 16 to 25 will pay 20 per cent – 20 per cent – of the additional tax compared to just 2.4 per cent for seniors. Today's youth, who were given no democratic voice in this government's reckless and irresponsible spending, will ultimately be stuck with the consequences of today's political decisions, less freedom and less opportunity. That's bad news.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Support for Immigrant Women

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People in the great constituency of Edmonton-Mill Creek are very aware of the wide range of cultural and ethnic diversity brought to us by people from all around the world moving to Alberta over the years. Many of these newcomer groups often support and help each other as they adapt to their new country and new ways of life. One notable organization is the Indo-Canadian Women's Association, formed in 1984 by a small group of determined, resourceful, and courageous women. I had the privilege of meeting a few of the founders of this group, who described some of the issues that they and other immigrant women were facing when they formed the group. They took it upon themselves at that time to meet weekly and support other women who were struggling in a strange and new landscape.

The Indo-Canadian Women's Association has grown to be a thriving and well-respected nonprofit in Edmonton, providing evidence-driven, outcome-based services to newcomers and expertise for all who wish to learn about the challenges faced by immigrant women and their families. The organization also works to challenge gender stereotypes and biases, to promote visibility of women, and to be an advocate for uplifting women and celebrating women's achievements.

Another group working to provide support to immigrant women is called Tea Connection. This group focuses on women who are socially isolated and need support to meet people other than their families. The women who attend Tea Connection help each other figure out how to get around Edmonton, practise speaking English, understand how schools here work, and learn what other supports are available. This group provides a secure space for people to develop skills and a safe place to talk about their concerns. For many older immigrant women who do not work outside the home, this is . . .

Air Ambulance Service in Northern Alberta

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, at various times the Minister of Health has referred to questions on the air ambulance issue as mudslinging, irresponsible, and fake questions. She's also stated that there would be no base location changes and that the contract would only be assigned to a proponent that could secure hangar space. Alberta Health Services issued an air ambulance service update on March 15 stating that it will base one plane in Peace River on the tarmac, exposed to Alberta's unpredictable weather, because the successful proponent does not have a hangar, with a second plane based out of Grande Prairie to service that region. This was followed with an assertion by AHS on March 16 that this was an improvement to patient care. Yet AHS met with the town's representatives on March 15, and according to the town they were, quote, completely blindsided by their plan as they totally contradicted every assurance they gave us. End of quote.

We asked the Minister of Health if she could explain how one plane stationed on the Peace River Airport tarmac is equivalent to the levels of service being provided by the current supplier, being two planes stationed in a fully serviced hangar. No answer. On May 14 this minister stated:

I also want to set the facts straight on some questions that were asked last week. The member said that things were shut down for two and a half hours with regard to an air ambulance. It was [only] 10 minutes. Mr. Speaker, I'm sick of the mudslinging in this House. If you want to talk facts in improving health care, I'm there. I'm willing to do it with you. I welcome you to the table.

Well, here are the facts. In response to this statement I was informed in an e-mail from the town chief administrative officer that on Saturday, April 29, at approximately 10 a.m. a Can-West plane was stuck in the mud at the airport. The town security cameras captured video of the entire incident. The medics were dispatched at 9:30, and based on AHS's wheels-up requirement, the aircraft should have been in the air by 10 a.m. The aircraft departed after 12 p.m., approximately one hour and 40 minutes late. A second plane had to be brought in. I was further informed that the town has pictures, videos, and e-mails which document both the incident and the efforts to alleviate the situation.

In the words of the town's CEO, this is a ticking time bomb . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

The Member for Edmonton-South West.

Premier and Official Opposition Leader

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now it is my pleasure to rise today to point out a contrast between leaders. I am so proud to sit on this side of the House, where we have a leader that makes promises and sticks by them. On the other side of the House we have a leader who guaranteed that "the policies of the United Conservative Party must be developed democratically by its grassroots members, not imposed by its Leader." I know that I wouldn't buy a car with a guarantee that can be tossed out at the whim of the dealer. And during the PC leadership campaign the leader opposite said that his campaign finances would be disclosed after the contest. Another broken promise. I sure wouldn't trust a financial institution which changed its rules after my money was already in its hands. So we have a pattern.

On this side of the House we have a leader with a different kind of pattern, a pattern of making tough and fair decisions, a pattern of sticking to her guns. When the international price of oil plunged more than 50 per cent, our leader promised to have the backs of Albertans during a difficult economic time. The opposition screamed for cuts and voted against schools and hospitals and roads and jobs for Albertans.

Now, our leader is keeping her promise to support everyday Albertans. We're opening new safe and caring spaces for seniors in their communities; building and modernizing schools across the province, with 20 new school projects scheduled to start this year; protecting women from harassment when accessing legal health care services; enhancing safety in workspaces; creating affordable child care spaces for families; and supporting the fight against rural crime. The list goes on and on, Mr. Speaker.

On this side of the House our promises won't shift in the direction in which the political wind blows. We promise to clean up Conservative waste and corruption, fight for pipelines, and build an economic recovery that will last, Mr. Speaker, and that's exactly what we will continue to do.

Pregnancy Pathways Program for Homeless Women

Mrs. Aheer: For a moment imagine expecting a baby. Now imagine that you live on the street. You don't know where to turn, you don't have any home, no support, you may not have a job or a family, and your only thought is: how am I going to take care of my baby? You would feel completely alone, you feel afraid, you feel ashamed, and you feel like the odds are stacked against you in this seemingly insurmountable situation.

I had the pleasure of meeting with Pregnancy Pathways. They are an amazing, dedicated group assisting vulnerable pregnant women in the city of Edmonton through affordable housing, services co-ordination support, and mentorship. Too often vulnerable women do not access care for essential services, and you might ask: why? It's because of shame and fear that their baby will be taken away from them. Together with community organization partnerships, Pregnancy Pathways works to connect these women with essential mental health and addiction supports, security, prenatal care, life skills, financial literacy, and to connect them to available services to empower them, to give them and their children the best possible start in life. Pregnancy Pathways is supporting five extraordinary women with culturally sensitive resources as they grow to their full potential. One of those resources is the amazing wellness co-ordinator, who during a recent meeting noticed that a client was extremely anxious and was able to perform a smudge ceremony on the spot.

There are approximately 100 homeless pregnant women in Edmonton a year that desperately need the help and guidance of Pregnancy Pathways. This groundbreaking pilot project is making a real-world impact. Pregnancy Pathways has been made possible thanks to the generous support of a variety of donors, and I would encourage all of my colleagues in this House to support this remarkable initiative, like by donating to the Boyle McCauley health centre or the Royal Alexandra hospital.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a letter I received from a group called the Clearwater Coalition, who have raised two major concerns about water extraction from the Clearwater River by a number of oil and gas companies and also about the long-term impacts of fracking in the area on not only drinking water but on earthquakes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a petition of thanks and gratitude from the students, staff, teachers, administrators, and parents of Bearspaw Christian School in my riding for "continuing to maintain stable funding through the 2018 Provincial Budget."

Mr. Speaker, I also have other tablings. The first one, by Andrew Khouri, is entitled Lawsuits Filed Against L.A. County, Lenders over Green Energy Program and is from the Los Angeles Times, April 12, 2018.

The second one, by Kirsten Grind, is from the Wall Street Journal, January 10, 2017, and is entitled America's Fastest-Growing Loan Category Has Eerie Echoes of Subprime Crisis.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a Calgary Herald article from September 2016 titled Notley Remains Confident 'Social Licence' Will Work, in which it dismisses the notion the NDP government's strategy to win support for pipelines is failing.

Orders of the Day

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'd like to call the committee to order.

Bill 203

Long Term Care Information Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any amendments, comments, or questions to be offered on this bill? The hon. Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville.

Mrs. Littlewood: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to stand up and make some comments and to ask a couple of questions about Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. Having had the experience of looking for an assisted living facility for my mother after she was assessed by a home-care nurse to see that she did in fact qualify for level 4 assisted living, it was an interesting process of trying to figure out what places she qualified for as well as how much it would cost. We did have some help, having that home-care nurse do some advocacy within Alberta Health Services as well as working with my mother's social worker, that deals with her AISH file, but it was a really convoluted system to try and navigate. One of our biggest concerns – this was just a few years ago, when we were starting the process – was how she would be able to afford it.

Not having a lot of experience in actually finding housing for someone who was in need of it – I worked in that field, in long-term care, when I was in my early 20s, so I knew what it looked like from the inside, but I didn't know what that system looked like from the outside – going through living facilities to try and figure out where she qualified to live, because she was a few years shy of 65 and needed intensive care that could not be delivered fully with my mother still staying at home, was a real challenge. That, of course, was, you know, just another step along the way in an entire life of trying to help look after my mom with my two sisters.

When we were trying to figure out places that she would qualify for, there were different places that saw to complex mental health issues, complex addiction issues. We were trying to find a place that would allow her to have more independence but that would allow her to have a better quality of life. At the time my mom was in an apartment that was one storey below ground level, and stairs became very, very difficult for her to traverse on her own. Just to go to the store was becoming a larger and larger challenge as time went on.

When we were looking at different places, it was absolutely impossible to find information about what different facilities were available aside from working within and trying to get information from Alberta Health Services. Even now I can see that going online and trying to figure out how much extra costs can amount to when someone goes to live in assisted living or long-term care is virtually impossible.

There are facilities that say that they do have the allowance to charge more for certain services, whether it's laundry, assistance to and from meals, medication costs, looking after the management of cigarettes. All of these things became a big concern because when someone goes into care and they're on government assistance with their finances, whether it's AISH or whether it's seniors' benefits income, you are only allowed now – and I think it increased by $30 under our government – $315 at the end of the month every month.

To worry about my mom and whether she would be able to meet the needs of her life with $315 became a massive source of stress, and that was with having the assistance of her three daughters. You know, I've heard a lot more stories now, since being elected, about people basically being impoverished by this because their medications might not be fully covered and that they might need all of these extra costs. I know that my mom has a monitoring device that she wears around her neck every day, and that has an extra cost added to it as well.

When the seasons and the weather change and you only have $315 at the end of the month every month to try and plan for expenses, whether it's something as simple as deodorant and toilet paper and shampoo and lotion, these things, you know, pile up and make it more difficult for people to have what we would commonly accept as a quality of life that someone, especially as they are aging, should have a right to.

I'm very pleased to see this legislation coming forward. [interjections] I certainly would hope that the members opposite would be as interested in this legislation as I am. Maybe they could keep it down just a little bit, Madam Chair. I'm sorry. I can't hear over them. Okay.

At any rate, it's incredibly difficult to try and find the information for this, so I'm glad that there will be legislation that will compel care providers to be able to provide this for people. You know, it's another complication of aging in our province. It shouldn't be another extra burden on the individual that's going into an assisted living facility or be a burden on the family to try and traverse that all by themselves without any sort of central information gathering. I'm glad that the Member for Red Deer-North is putting this forward. If I could ask her to give us some information on this and on how the bill will address it and perhaps on currently what some of those extra costs are that people are burdened with, I would appreciate just some information from the member about that, please.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

3:30

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I thank the member for the question. First of all, I'd just like to thank the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville for bringing forward her story, her experience that she as well as her sisters endured when it came to their mother's care. That's just one story of thousands. Right now there are 15,000 Alberta seniors that are living in roughly 170 institutions all across Alberta that offer long-term care in over 100 communities across our great province. The member brings forward just one story of thousands of stories: here you are living your life, and all of a sudden you get a phone call from a doctor, perhaps your mother's doctor, saying that your mother's health has deteriorated and that maybe you might want to look into long-term care. And there you are, like so many other hundreds and thousands of Albertans: "Where do I go? What do I do?"

I brought this bill forward to be able to address where you would go looking for an easily accessible long-term care website that people can go to and it has all their options. They can look at a community, maybe the community of Fort Saskatchewan, and see what their options are there. Maybe they want to look in the community of Stettler or the community of Red Deer. They can go online, and they can find out all the basic information that would be pertinent to be able to make the decision as to where to place their mother.

Some of the information that this bill talks about is, of course, the contact information like the address, phone number, and e-mail address. Some of the other information would be how many beds the facility offers. Some people maybe would like to live in a facility that has many different options available in a bigger facility whereas some people might feel more comfortable living in a smaller facility. We each have our own needs, what makes home for us, what makes it special for us.

I want to thank the member for bringing her story forward. Exactly what this bill will do is just outline the different services, what's available in each long-term care facility and auxiliary hospital across our great province. Hopefully, that'll make the hard decision that many of us have to make in our lives a little bit easier.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thanks very much, Madam Chair. I believe we're speaking in general to third reading, and I'm happy to give my comments.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just to clarify, we're in Committee of the Whole, not third reading yet.

Dr. Swann: Yeah, committee. Sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: The bill obviously fills a tremendous need in this province. Many of us in our roles as MLAs would be hearing from families and individuals who recognize a need for change and are terrified by either delays or lack of clarity around what the options are, everything from, of course, improved home-care services to hiring personal care attendants, many of whom have questionable training, right to the full gamut of 24-hour, seven-day-a-week nursing care. This is a much needed support to people making these decisions without having to travel the province or to find individuals who have either lived there or worked there and get personal testimonials. It does importantly put this information online.

With over 170 institutions across the province that are providing these kinds of services, it's critical that people have some ability to evaluate what the options are both in terms of the quality of care and in the other amenities that are associated with that particular setting. It provides the basic data, including whether it's public, private, nonprofit, and the type of the facility, what services are provided, the total number of residents, the details of the services, the charges, including extra charges for extra services, how old the institution or service is, and a description of the status of the resident and family council if it exists, which is another great contributor to comfort and understanding of what to expect.

Also, there is the accreditation status. Clearly, if there's anything more common for me to get calls about, it's the accreditation status: what it means, how authentic an accreditation is, whether it has actually been done by people who have themselves appropriate credentials, whether or not it's being done frequently enough, whether it's being done unannounced so that they can actually see how things work when people haven't prepared for the accreditation. I think that's all part of what people are looking for in terms of valid reviews.

I understand that the minister will ensure that information contained in the registry is updated periodically, every six months.

I guess it raises the question of whether client and family evaluation is going to be actually included there. Like with some of the travel websites or some of the other websites – hotels and doctors – where people can register their own personal experience, good and bad, whether those will be part of it is, I think, an important question. There should be no fear of individuals and families registering their evaluation of an experience here because, surely, that's part of what is needed to objectively evaluate what happens there on a day-to-day basis.

Many of these places will never live up to the expectations of individuals and families, but we at least have to be open to the fact that if people have had negative experiences and if a number of people have had negative experiences, the public has a right to know something about those and what the nature of the concerns were, whether it was staff time, whether it was staffing, whether it was attitudes, whether it was language issues that were barriers to appropriate care, whether there were, you know, issues with the physical plant or renovations that were delayed, access to extra supportive services when changes in a person's condition arise. These kinds of stories and anecdotes and experiences should be part of an online – and maybe that's something that hasn't yet been considered, but I hope it will be. This is a very progressive and much overdue opportunity for people and should help significantly in both improving the targeting of individuals and their families to the right place but also in holding those institutions more accountable. With more scrutiny comes more accountability and a higher standard of care; I have no doubt.

I'll certainly be supporting this and appreciate the member for this private member's bill.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act, at Committee of the Whole. This bill seeks to create a publicly accessible online registry to provide information on long-term care facilities in Alberta. You know, our seniors are remarkable. They have given so much to every aspect of this province and serve as pillars of our communities, sources of enormous wisdom and knowledge, and they also make up a group of people in my own life who I'm proud to call friends. I think that bears repeating, that our seniors deserve nothing but excellence as they go into their golden years. They have worked hard to build this province that we all enjoy, and they have paid their dues.

It is also worth noting that families want to provide for their aging relatives with the best of the best when it comes to a home in which they can retire in peace and comfort. It is their opportunity to give back to their loved ones, so it's understandable that this process can be a daunting task, and unfortunately, as many of us in this Chamber know, it can also be a frustrating task that is fraught with systematic failures on the part of the health care system. The Auditor General has made a variety of recommendations regarding long-term care facilities, which have highlighted long-standing issues such as wait-lists, overcharging, or exceeding allotment of care. In October of 2014 the Auditor General released a report stating that the government needed to work to

- develop a system to periodically verify that facilities deliver the right care every day by implementing individual resident care plans and meeting basic needs of residents.

As of the most recent AG report those recommendations remain unimplemented.

We also know that the wait-lists for long-term care facilities are substantially backlogged and that divorce by nursing home remains a concern for many Albertan families. I have had a number of constituents come to my constituency office at a loss for how to protect their elderly loved ones. I have heard from adult children whose parents required different levels of care and due to this were separated and had to be put into different facilities.

One constituent cried while telling about the stress the separation had caused her parents and the toll that had been taken on their mental health. Her parents had been married for over 50 years and had never slept in different beds until they were separated by the lack of options for long-term care facilities. This also puts an enormous amount of stress on their own marriages and children as they attempt to see both their parents after work every day. This constituent talked about the extreme guilt she felt whenever one left one parent to go to the other, knowing that whoever she left would be lonely. It's a problem. It's a problem that's out there, a problem we need to address, of course.

I was also shocked to hear my colleague from Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo point out the story of Ethel in his constituency, who went to visit her husband of several decades to find out he was in a state of disarray, soiled, and uncomfortable. When she asked why her husband had been left in such a shocking, inhumane state, she was told that her husband had exceeded his allotment of care.

Madam Chair, these instances of what constitute senior abuse are completely unacceptable and should never be allowed to happen. So you can understand my disappointment when instead of this private member's bill being one of substance that can actually address the numerous systematic issues our seniors and families are facing in regard to long-term care facilities in Alberta, as the Member for Red Deer-North brought forward in this piece of legislation, to be honest, this bill is fine, but it's innocuous, and it doesn't rock the boat. I'll vote in favour of it; it just doesn't have a lot of substance. This bill doesn't make any meaningful change. It doesn't solve a problem. It wouldn't make life easier for our seniors and their families.

I am disappointed about this because all of us in this Assembly have a duty to work hard to bring forward legislation that impacts the lives of Albertans for the better. Drawing a private member's bill is a gift. My friend and colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake is someone who has had his own private member's bill passed. From my conversations with him he's quite proud of the fact that his bill passed, and he should be. The bill I'm referring to is PMB 202 – I believe that's correct; he's nodding – Protecting Victims of Non-consensual Distribution of Intimate Images Act. This bill has addressed a real problem.

It is truly a remarkable opportunity to make the changes that we need to see here in Alberta, and there are so few private members' bills that actually get to the floor for debate, Madam Chair. There have been so many amazing ideas for legislation that won't be implemented because they weren't high enough on the private member bill draft. It feels like this is such an opportunity, and it has been squandered on solving a problem that was already solved. I remain confused. Instead of addressing one of the numerous real issues facing our seniors, the Member for Red Deer-North chose legislation on an issue that, one, was not a problem that needed fixing and, two, even if it was a problem, could have been implemented through the Department of Health without a legislative debate, which draws out the timeline for this initiative being implemented.

- provide residents with an adequate number and level of staff, every day of their operation [and]

Mostly, I feel confused by this bill. Now, Madam Chair, I'm happy to be corrected on part of the reason why I'm confused by this bill that will create a website, that will create a registry to provide information on long-term care facilities in Alberta. After 30 seconds or so, if you do a Google search, you can already see that there are two such registries, information pages that already exist through Alberta Health. I found a document entitled List of Publicly Funded Designated Supportive Living Accommodations and Long-term Care Facilities, an open Alberta website, as well as a searchable page with information on supportive and long-term care accommodations in Alberta, which is even broader than the mandate of this bill. So what does this bill do that is not already being done? What will this new registry provide that is not already being provided to Albertan families? I'm happy to admit if I misunderstood and this is a huge problem, but from a simple search it appears that this problem was already solved a long time ago.

I don't understand why we're not legislating on actual issues in this House. I think that if the member felt that this was an issue, she could have worked with the Ministry of Health – I mean, you have that direct access to work with the Ministry of Health – to have it addressed outside the Chamber. The only way that I could see this bill improving the lives of Albertans is if the website is a one-stop shop for Albertans considering moving to a continuing care facility. Since this bill only mandates the creation of a registry of long-term care facilities, namely nursing homes and auxiliary hospitals, without including supportive care facilities and other types of assisted living facilities without long-term care facilities, a potential user of the registry will only have a portion of the information available to them, somewhat defeating the purpose of the registry.

I'll be voting for the legislation, but I would caution my colleagues with future PMBs to ensure that they are using them as a valuable tool and a meaningful way to solve problems for Albertans here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to thank the Member for Battle River-Wainwright for getting up and speaking today. I will say that there are a few things I agree with you on. I very strongly agree that our seniors are indeed very remarkable, and, yes, they have worked hard to make this province the absolute best place in the world to live and to work and to raise a family.

But some of the language that was used I take offence at, the word "squandered," when it comes to my private member's bill. I have to say that I take this private member's bill very seriously. I have worked in long-term care for my entire adult life. I have worked with seniors, and they mean so much to me. When I have people coming into my office that say, "Can you come to my house because I can't bring my parents here and you need to have a conversation with them? They're looking for long-term care" and I drive to their house, I meet a very lovely couple that have been married for over 70 years and now find themselves where they need long-term care. They're living with a daughter, and they feel guilty living with the daughter because the daughter is working full-time as well as taking care of them. She had been working for five months to try and find a long-term care facility that would be comfortable for both of her parents.

You talked about a simple search. It is not a simple search, and I hear that over and over and over again from my constituents. I have people that call my office, come into my office as an MLA. But when I worked in long-term care, it broke my heart to see people coming into the long-term care facility just to see what it was about, what you have to offer, because they went online and tried to find that simple search. It is not a simple search. It is very difficult to navigate, and if you don't come from health care, you may not know all of the language and what it means, dementia and level 3 and level 4. It's very complicated, and these people are at a time in their lives where we should be, as legislators, taking care of them. That is why I took this bill very seriously. I wanted to have something that was easy for Albertans, an easily accessible online tool for them to go on and find where would be the best place for them to live out the rest of the days of their lives.

I take offence at some of your language, but this is an actual issue. I quote you as saying that it was not an actual issue. This is an issue. I hear it from my constituents. I had consultations, and I heard over and over again from my constituents not only in Red Deer but surrounding Red Deer. This is something that they've been wanting to do for a very long time. I've reached out to just about every resident and family council in all of Red Deer and met with them to explain about the new act, the Resident and Family Councils Act, as well as my private member's bill. These are people that have just placed their loved ones, a mother or father, into a long-term care facility. They just went through months and months of trying to navigate through this system. They are very happy with the bill.

I just have to say on behalf of all Albertans and our seniors that I am very proud to bring this bill forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am very pleased to see this bill, and I do believe that the Member for Red Deer-North should be very proud of it.

I did a little bit of research, and I came up with an article. It's Long-term Health Care: A Look Inside the Often-baffling System. This was written by Theresa Boyle on June 21, 2013. I think that this article, even though it's out of Ontario, does a good job of explaining the struggles for people that are trying to get into seniors' homes. I'm going to go through some of this article to really reflect what an actual person is going through when they're trying to find that nursing home. Now, right off the top it says:

You're turned upside down. This is a priority because in five days' time you have got to choose where your loved one will live for the rest of their life and probably will die. You [will] want to make sure it's the best and that you can advocate for them.

That's quite a statement right there. Let's unpack it. This was by Howard Cohen, and he's actually trying to find a place for his mother. What happened here is that when the hospital decides that you need to go to long-term care, you've got five days in Ontario to find that long-term care. Trying to find a place without online access would be a struggle. In this specific case it's even worse. I have to say that whenever you add layers of burden in order for seniors to be able to find those homes, it's not good for any one of us.

Now, this bill – and I think it's important to touch on – is going on to what it does, and I think we need to describe what this bill is actually trying to do. We'll go through the descriptions here. "Operator name and contact information, including a mailing address and telephone number." What we've got here now is that we've got a list of institutions, and you can choose the institution that is closest to you. This is important. This is one thing that has come up in my constituency a lot. When you finally made that decision, that one facility in my constituency may not have the spaces. It just might not be there. Right now one of my seniors' facilities has an 80-person wait-list. You can see where that is challenging. So then having facilities around Bonnyville that can take them until they have a space for somebody in Bonnyville is what's important here. Making sure that that senior knows all the options for them is what's important here, making sure that that senior who has made that choice to go into long-term care, because that's a big decision, is provided for.

Now, what we've got here is a "description of the type of operator." For me, I have found through my career, already three years as an MLA, that it can be publicly operated, nonprofit, or privately operated. For myself, so far I have found that there have been flaws in all of them, but there have also been successes with all of them. In my constituency I am very proud of every one of my seniors' homes, each and every one of them, whether they're nonprofit, private, or public, because they are out there doing their job.

On Mother's Day I take my family and I go out and I give a pink rose to all of the wonderful senior ladies at the seniors' homes. It's an opportunity for me to ask each one of those seniors: "What do you think this facility is like? Do you feel you're being treated well? How is it that this facility is meeting your needs?" And you know what? A resounding, incredible reinforcement says: the staff is wonderful; the food is good; they are doing an incredible job. That is success. That is success that I think we can all take home. The problem in my case is finding a facility you can get into. That is the problem.

Going back to this bill, trying to address the fact that we may have some good facilities – we do have excellent facilities out there. We may have poor facilities out there. But, in the end, identifying the facility that best fits you is what we all need to aim towards.

Now, it goes on to "description of the type of facility" and the "total number of residents that may reside at the operator's facility and a description of the intake process for that facility." One thing that I have noticed is that there is confusion on how exactly you can get into the facility. That is one thing that comes into my office. Unfortunately, not all of our seniors are Internet savvy, if you will. They're not able to just go and start clicking stuff, and that, unfortunately, seems to be the place that they need to go in order to get the resources they need. So having a place for them or their family where they can go and see all of this compiled into one spot is probably good for everybody.

Moving on, "details of the services provided at the operator's facility." Let's talk about the different levels. Let's say that your parent has dementia. You found that wonderful facility that is a neighbour. Everybody is talking about how great it is. What if it isn't a 4D? What if it's a 3, right? Or, in some cases, what if it's a 5? It's important to make sure that you identify what facility type your parent, grandparent should be in. Having this listed is actually good for everybody so that we know what they're rated for.

Now, one thing that is a barrier for most – and this is a really good point – is the accommodation charges payable by residents. If there's extra cost, let's make sure they're aware of it. I think that's a reasonable thing that we can all say, that if we've got a senior that is struggling financially that they're able to know what they're getting into before they get there. And if we have problems – you know what? It is important that if you need to get into a facility and you're having trouble, your MLA will always be there to help you.

I cannot speak for everybody here, but I am sure that no senior will be turned away from an MLA's office.

Now, moving on, the date on which the operator's facility was established. This is important because what we're trying to see is: is the facility new? Is it old? What state is this facility in? What happens is that you may need to have – it gives you an idea of what age and what type of facility. Is it old? Is it new? Is it something that you really would want to live in? I think that's another great point in there.

Description of the status of the resident and family council. Here's something that is saying that if you've got a resident council there, how is it operating? That's the way I understand that one to work out. This is important because we saw in the Lacombe facility, where they didn't have one, that we had a clear, unfortunate breakdown with the Alberta government when it was about taking care of those seniors. I'm not here to put down any of the facilities, but I am saying that there was a breakdown, and it could have been solved by having a very strong resident and family council. So making sure that this is implemented and how involved I think is a great idea.

The accreditation status I think is another good point, which is what I brought up.

The results of the inspections conducted under section 12 of the Nursing Homes Act. Now, this one the member may need to clarify, but what happens here from the way I understand it – and if she can clarify this for me – is that what Alberta Health would do is that they would go in and do an inspection, and if they find any deviation from the rules, they would post that online so that you could find out what infractions they've had and whether they've been corrected or not. If that is the case, I believe this is a great idea because in the end if you've got a seniors' home that has significant infractions that have not been corrected, I want to know about it.

Now, moving on to this article that I was talking about earlier, the long-term health care:

Cohen ...

He's the gentleman that's putting his mother into the institution.

... started to climb what would be a steep learning curve, researching and touring homes. He was perplexed by the disparities, particularly when it came to what the homes had to offer residents with dementia. These same disparities result in some homes having empty beds, while others have [wait times] as long as 14 years.

That's quite lengthy.

He was stunned to discover, he says, that he had been misinformed and given inadequate information about how to select a home by a hospital social worker and a case manager from one of the province's 14 community-care access centres (CCACs), which control entry into LTC homes.

After intense research that involved talking to seniors' advocates and even consulting the Long-Term Care Homes Act, Cohen discovered ...

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Long Term Care Information Act. I'd like to thank my colleague the MLA for Red Deer-North for bringing this bill forward and indeed echo her comments earlier regarding the comments from the MLA for Battle River-Wainwright. I found those comments to be in fairly poor taste, especially considering that to suggest that any member's concerns that they are bringing forward from their constituents are not worthy of consideration in this House, that somehow that is being squandered, that somehow it is not as worthy of consideration and debate as anything else that has been brought forward before this House by members on either side of the aisle is frankly insulting, condescending, particularly considering that the Leader of the Opposition not that long ago, a few weeks ago, took over a private member's bill for the sheer purpose of grandstanding regarding the pipeline, bringing forward a private member's bill that all knew would not pass in this House, and using up an opportunity to perhaps bring forward something, as the MLA who was speaking earlier might have considered, in his words, more substantive.

That said, I'd like to take the opportunity to debate the bill that is before us. Not too long after my election I received a letter from a constituent named Sally. As the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake noted, often when individuals need to select a place for a loved one to go to receive long-term care, this can occur very suddenly. It can occur without much warning. In those situations people can find themselves with a matter of days to review a wide number of facilities and make what may be one of the most important decisions of their life, where their loved one is going to spend the final years of their life in care. Having a codified, online registry, as proposed by the Member for Red Deer-North, could make this a much easier process for families. Indeed, if families have some advance notice, if they're aware of the deteriorating health of a loved one, whether that's mental or physical or perhaps both, they would have that opportunity to be perhaps better informed and better prepared.

Now, when Sally wrote to me, she told me about the circumstances with herself and her husband, who had been diagnosed with Parkinson's disease and Lewy body dementia. She'd been taking care of him for about over a decade at home, and he'd been attending a day treatment program. He was seeing a neurologist, a psychiatrist, a family doctor, and they all gave him clearance to take a vacation with his wife to Mexico in January 2016. It seemed like a great opportunity for them, but two days into that trip he began to fall. He began to show signs that his Lewy body dementia was indeed getting worse. He ended up in a hospital in Puerto Vallarta for 12 days. He received good care there, and eventually their insurance company was able to help them get back to Edmonton. Arriving back in Edmonton, unfortunately, they were caught in the emergency department for a while but were eventually able to move from there into a hospital bed. After evaluation and after having been looked at there, it was determined that he was going to require long-term care.

Now, they faced some challenges there in the system, and I had the chance to meet with Sally and talk through them with her and hear from her directly and to indeed pass her feedback on her experience on to the Minister of Health for consideration. One of the challenges they faced was that indeed they had to make within a number of days a tour of care facilities across the city to evaluate their top choices, to try to find the right place for him, a place where he could stay, where he could receive the care he would need, a place where he would likely spend the remainder of his life. It was incredibly difficult for them. Not only did she and her children have to watch the deterioration of a husband, father, grandfather, but they were also then faced with these challenges of trying to find a place for him to stay and the challenge of having limited information and being put under a good deal of pressure and feeling that they did not have much support in making that decision.

This bill, Madam Chair, provides the opportunity for families to in advance know what is available in the province of Alberta, to know indeed what each of those facilities offers: what type of operator, the facility's capacity, the services that they provide, any additional charges that might apply, results of any inspections or investigations that might have taken place.

I know that my colleague consulted considerably on this bill, speaking with Alberta families, speaking with the long-term care facilities themselves, with a number of stakeholder groups to ensure that within the reach of what she was able to within this bill, as a private member, she provided as much substance and indeed action as possible because we recognize, Madam Chair, that not all changes we get to make in this House are major. We don't always get to make the big decisions. A lot of that falls to the hands of the ministers. Frankly, I am deeply appreciative of the work that our Minister of Health has done to advance the number of long-term care beds available in this province. We are well on our way to fulfilling our promise of 2,000 new long-term care beds to support Alberta seniors, Alberta families, because the experience of my constituent is one that is all still far too common. Unfortunately, it is due to years of neglect by previous government who failed to make the investments to put us in a position where we were prepared to offer dignified, appropriate care in community for what we knew was a rapidly aging population.

We are taking every step we can now, Madam Chair, to try to fulfill that backlog, to take responsible action. Indeed, that is the province of the minister, and she is doing that well. But I appreciate that my colleague has done what many private members' bills do, and that is to identify smaller gaps in the system which can be addressed through a private member's bill, which are within our grasp and focused in scope, and that allow us to indeed, sometimes even in just smaller ways, make a difference, to make life better for Albertans.

I'd like to thank my colleague for bringing this forward and see if she has any further thoughts as to how this bill might further address some of the concerns that were brought forward by my constituents.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I'd like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Centre for his words and for the story that he brought forward. I'd just like to say that in working in long-term care over many years, I've seen so many members of the public walk in looking for those answers, looking to see what the different facilities offered. It was heartbreaking to see seniors come in with their walkers or their wheelchairs. You could tell that some of them were in pain when they walked in with their canes just to find out the answers that could be so easily accessible at home, in the comfort of their own homes. The information that this online website will have is information that is already there. All the operators, operator-owners already have all of the information that will be on the website. It's just a matter of putting it in place and the minister setting it up.

This will make the lives of Albertans and our seniors so much better, and I'm very proud to be able to do that for them. You know, they are the ones that made this country, this province as great as it is today, and just even having something like this put in place that will make life better for them, I am very proud to do.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Madam Chair. I also want to just express my disappointment at the words of the Member for Battle River-Wainwright, who has clearly never had to go through the process, that he would make the comment that this is not a necessary bill or not important. I consider this an extremely important bill, and I'm so grateful to the Member for Red Deer-North for bringing it forward. I think that, in a nutshell, the reason why this bill is so important is because we're not out there looking for a facility; we're out there looking for a home.

I'd like to just share the experience that we went through with my parents, with my dad in particular, to help illustrate just why that is so, so very important. I'll give you a little bit of background and tell you about my dad. My grandparents actually had a homestead on the southeast end of Edmonton. There weren't very many properties out there at the time. There was the refinery and then their farm and a few other farms around there. My dad grew up in that area. He rode his bike. He delivered newspapers. He went over the Beverly Bridge to deliver papers to the north side. He was an integral part of that community right from the time it was growing, from the time that there was nobody there. It was home to him.

After he got married to my mom, they initially lived in what she would always call a shack. I don't remember it. I wasn't there yet, so I don't know what it really was. It was very small. Then he built a trailer. My dad was very good with his hands. He was able to pretty much do anything, fix anything, build anything, so he built a trailer. By the time I came along, that's where I grew up. My first early years were in this trailer. Of course, after my brother and then my other sister and my younger brother were born, we needed some place bigger, so my dad then built a house. Again he did this himself, with help from members of the family who were in construction. It was important to him. This was his home. He invested his own blood, sweat, and tears into building this home. And that's where we grew up. We spent all our time and my grandkids spent their young years in this home and just loved it.

When the time came that my mom had terminal cancer, she tried to stay at home as long as she could. My dad took care of her until finally she knew that there were only a few more days left. The process of getting her into hospice was complicated, but it was relatively straightforward. There was support, and there was help.

Once she was gone, my dad tried to stay on his own in this home that he had built. He succeeded for a little while. I was already living up in High Level, so a lot of the bulk of having to take care of all kinds of things like this fell to my sister. He managed for a while. We got in home care for a while. We had somebody actually come and live in, and then later on we found out that a number of his credit cards were missing and a few valuable items, so that one didn't turn out so well. He'd tried really hard. We tried to support him. We wanted very much for him to be able to live out his days in his home. But the time came when he had a fall, and he ended up in the hospital. There we were faced with suddenly having to make a really quick decision on what was going to happen.

I think that we already sort of knew that the time was going to come, so my sister had been doing some research and having discussions with him about what his alternatives might be. She sort of had a sense of where he wanted to go, but my dad was fiercely independent, of course, and he didn't want to have to be anywhere where he'd have to rely on people to do things for him. It was important that he was able to be independent in the decision-making. But when we went, my sister and I, and started to look online and tried to see what was there, yeah, there was a list, but it really didn't help much. It didn't give us all of the details. It didn't tell us what was in this particular facility that would truly make it a home, a place where my dad would be well taken care of, where we could be confident and know, when I'm up in High Level, far away, that he would be safe and be taken care of and be treated with dignity in his home. Those kinds of details weren't in the website list that we found, and they only covered certain facilities. They didn't cover everything that was out there.

In our searching around, we discovered that there were some smaller I guess you'd call them private facilities, that were almost like a home. There were maybe five or six residents only that lived there. Then it ran the whole gamut, from larger facilities to small. To have had a centralized registry, where all of these things were in one place, where we could have gone and said, "Okay; we can compare this; we can see what this is like, where it's at, how this one compares to the other one," would have been so helpful, and how much I wish this bill would have passed a couple of years ago.

I'll take a step back just to explain how traumatizing it is for families. When we had to pack up my dad's house, I wept all the time. My sister kept looking at me and saying: "Why are you crying? He's not dying." But, for me, it was a form of death. We were leaving the home that we had grown up in. It was such an integral part of our family. So it was important that we be supported through that process and not be traumatized further by struggling to find a place and not knowing where was going to be a good place for my dad to call home. That's what families are facing. We need to make that decision as easy and as smooth as possible for them. That's how we make their lives better.

But even once we chose the place – and he eventually did end up in a facility that was pretty good – there were problems. You know, they had difficulties with staff. It was one of the better facilities in the city, but he told me some real horror stories. I'll tell you just one because it just blew me away. The cleaning lady would come in. She'd put on her gloves, and she would go around and clean the toilet, clean the bathroom. His roommate was very sick and was coughing all the time. She'd go clean up his bed. Then she'd come with her gloves and pick up his water glass at the edge of the rim, wipe the table underneath, and put his water glass back down. My dad, of course, got around that by drinking out of a straw. But he was terrified to say anything. I said: "Dad, why don't you complain? Why don't you bring this up?" He said, "No, because then I'm afraid they'll treat me badly or that something negative will happen." So he would not speak up when these kinds of things happened. Had there been a family council available, at least maybe he would have had the confidence to know that he could say something safely.

If these things were online, if the reviews of facilities were online, at least residents and people like my dad would be able to go and say: "Okay. There are some negatives here, but I'm free to speak up. I can have the confidence that if I say something, I'm not going to be punished, because it's going to be out there. It's public." It protects people. It's really, really important as a way to empower the people that are living there. I think this bill is incredibly, incredibly important.

I envision what this might look like. The other day I was looking to buy property on a real estate website, and I was blown away. I hadn't looked for property for years and years. This website had everything. You go on there, and you can tour the house. You can see the vicinity. You can see the neighbourhood, a 360-degree view. You can see what's close by. You know, it's an amazing thing. If we can have that for real estate, to purchase a home, why can we not have something like this for the home for us at the end of our lives? It's a no-brainer as far as I'm concerned.

I do want to just comment a little bit about – this was our personal experience with my dad, but in my constituency, being a rural constituency, some of these decisions are even more difficult. The residents up there don't have as many options. Sometimes they are faced with having to go a long way from home to find a place to stay, so it's even more important that they have some kind of facility to be able to look at and say: "This is how I can compare this place to this place. This is where I'd like to be. This is where I want to have the last years of my life." It's incredibly important for rural residents as well to have this.

I did want to comment a little bit about how, you know, we are playing catch-up, absolutely. Up in High Level we're thrilled because, finally, we're going to have a seniors' facility. After years and years and years of the previous government promising and promising and then just making the announcement and then never ever coming through, finally we're going to be breaking ground next month in High Level, and people are so excited.

Fort Vermilion is working on a facility for them, but they're planning now because the need is growing, and they know they're going to need it in a few more years. This is part of good planning. We are planning right now to have this registry so that as we finally catch up and have the number of facilities that we actually need to meet the needs of our seniors, then this will already be in place, and people can make informed choices about the home that they're going to go and live in.

I think this is absolutely essential, and I really, really appreciate the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for doing this. I really look forward to seeing it implemented. Hopefully, it'll be very soon. One day my kids are going to be looking for a place for me, so I'm hoping it'll all be there.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yes. I was interrupted in my last speech, so I'm just going to continue on from where I was there. I was talking about Mr. Cohen. What he was saying was that he went through a lot of process to find out if the information that was given to him by the government was accurate, and at the end here what he says is, "I felt pressured, there is no question about it, in trying to make a decision."

What we've got here is that it's important that we choose a facility for our loved ones, but it has to be the right facility. We need to make sure we have the right information sitting in front of us to be able to at least give us a place to start. In this case here Mr. Cohen goes in and says that he was told that he had three institutions that he could pick from a short list, if you will. Then what would happen is that they would more or less choose where his mother was going from there. Clearly, that's not a good way of finding a place for your loved ones. I think it's important here to be clear that we respect our seniors, who have worked and built this incredible province we all live in and enjoy, that they are taken seriously and given the dignity that they deserve. What we've got here is that he went through a lot, actually. This is actually quite a lengthy article.

To bring up one point that is important in this article, it's that this actually is something that appeals to the Conservative in me. In this article – and I don't know if it's the same in Alberta, but I have to suspect that it's fairly constant – it says:

One day in a hospital costs $1,000; one day in LTC ...

That's a long-term care unit.

... costs $130; and a day of home care or community care costs $55.

The auditor ...

That's the Auditor General of the province.

... said that by freeing up beds occupied by patients waiting for [long-term care], there would be more available for other patients, including those coming in through the ER, where [wait times] can be long.

What it's saying here is that finding people the appropriate place to be able to reside actually saves the government money, significant amounts of money if we can get them out of the hospitals. That is actually one of the things that attracts me to this bill, I have to say. It brings dignity to our seniors and saves money. How can you go wrong with a bill that's going along that road?

Now, unfortunately, I do have some criticism but not regarding this bill. More or less, I have the 2017 government of Alberta's 2016-2017 Health annual report. On page 28 of the report are performance measures and indicators, performance measure 1(a), which is "Access to continuing care: Percentage of clients placed in continuing care within 30 days of being assessed." Now, what we've got here is a bar graph. In 2012-2013 it was at 67 per cent. What happens is that that slowly degrades over time. What we've got is that for '16-17 it is sitting at about 56 per cent, so we're showing that we're holding more seniors within our hospitals for longer periods of time.

Now, the government, to their credit, is saying that we want to at least bring it up to 62 per cent from the existing 56 per cent, but clearly they need better ideas on how to get our seniors out of the hospitals into more comfortable atmospheres that they actually would want to live in, what I would want to live in. I'm waiting patiently to find out when the next Health annual report comes out because I'm curious if they actually met this target or if it went down. I speculate here that we probably haven't seen a lot of change there, and that is problematic.

The Member for Red Deer-North at least is actually trying and has a concrete plan to possibly bring down the wait times, and I think that's something that she should get some important recognition for. When we see that this trend is actually happening right now, when you've got ideas that more or less cost almost nothing to implement, it just makes sense.

To go on in this report, under Results Analysis:

A number of factors have contributed to this year's lower than targeted result, including an ongoing need for capacity expansion due to an aging population as well as some unanticipated continuing care capacity and facility issues that arose in 2016-17. These challenges have driven longer waits and higher waitlists for placement into continuing care living options.

Right now what we've got, more or less, is no list. We don't know which facilities are currently needing some potential help from the government because we don't have a complete list. This is one thing that is obviously problematic. Whenever you see the government bring forward a performance measure that says that they're going to get better but they don't actually seem to have any real plan on how to do that, that's troublesome.

Now, I do understand that the government always wants to protect our seniors, and I would give this government that same reasonable expectation that they're trying to do that as well. When I see these performance measures at 62 per cent, I think we can do a lot better and I would hope that we do a lot better because in the end we're trying to save money when it comes to trying to get people out and into more comfortable positions.

To finish up here, I think that this bill has some real valuable parts in it, and I do look forward to seeing it implemented. Again, I want to thank the Member for Red Deer-North for putting forward this bill.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you. I'm delighted to speak to this bill. I wanted to start off first by expressing my disappointment in the remarks that were made earlier today but especially by reading this other thing that I read on Twitter recently where members of the UCP or their allies were commenting on the background of MLAs in this House. I have to say that I am very proud to be here as an MLA with at least three MLAs on our side who've actually worked in long-term care, and I think we're really representing . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt. Are you speaking to the bill?

Ms McKittrick: I am. I'm addressing the expertise . . .

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Please go ahead.

Ms McKittrick: . . . of MLAs to be able to speak to this bill.

We actually have MLAs on this side of the House – I don't know about the opposite side – who've actually worked in long-term care and who really understand thoroughly the issues around long-term care and the dilemmas that elderly people and their families face. I am very confident that the bill that the MLA for Red Deer-North has proposed really meets the needs of those seniors that we've been talking about all afternoon.

I'm really thankful to her because she has acknowledged that this is something that she's worked on for many years and that she learned from experience in working in these places. I have never worked in a long-term care hospital. I haven't worked with elderly people very much, but I also know that the work that happens by the staff requires someone to be not only caring but also to be involved in doing a lot of things that are not always the most pleasant. You really have to work with elderly people and make sure that they're fed, that they have proper hygiene, and that their emotional, spiritual, and physical comforts are met.

I think this bill comes from some very powerful experiences. It comes from the experience of someone who has experienced first-hand what it means to be either a patient or a family member in these facilities. I wanted to thank her, and I wanted us to be reminded that in this House our private members' bills and the things that we're passionate about come from our own experiences and the lives that we've led and the expertise we have by doing that. So I wanted to start off by saying that.

I did a little bit of research, like most of the members, and I realized that I could not find any place where I would find the whole list of available facilities in the Edmonton area, because I happened to be the MLA for Sherwood Park, that included the name of the facility; the website; if it was private, public, or not-for-profit; who had the ownership – was the ownership local if it was private, or was it a multinational? – and the kind of staff that you had and the staff ratio and the quality; and especially the cost of the extra services that are provided or what will be the costs, because all of the time it says to you: well, you need to contact the facilities, and then the costs will become apparent.

Last weekend – the MLA for Strathcona-Sherwood Park was with me – we went to visit a seniors' facility. In talking with one of the seniors, the first thing she said to me: you know, I really, really like this place, but I don't know if I can afford it for a very long time. She said: my children put me in this place, but it's very, very expensive. This really was a great reminder to me that if I was going to put any elderly relatives into long-term care, I would really need to make sure that I knew the costs, especially the costs of extra services, and that I would have to evaluate carefully what the costs are over the long term.

I think that probably the year after I was elected, an elderly gentleman came to visit me in my office, and he begged me to go visit his wife in one of these long-term care places in Sherwood Park. He had to pay over $1,200 a month so that his wife would be fed. She had dementia. She could no longer feed herself, and if he was going to have somebody feed her three times a day, he had to pay for that service. Of course, his budget had not accounted for it. So the gentleman every single day prepared food for his wife that she liked and went every single mealtime to feed her because he could not afford the cost of having somebody else feed his wife. I went with him, and I visited him as he fed his wife. It was a very moving experience for me not only because this gentleman obviously cared for his wife deeply but because when his wife had to go to this place, nobody had told him that if her dementia got progressively worse, then he would be on the hook for paying to have her fed.

So I'm very concerned about these issues.

I'm also very concerned about the fact that couples are often split. If I was putting a couple in a facility, I would want to know: what are the policies for these couples in the facility? What is going to happen when they do require two levels of care? Will the facility split them up? Do they have arrangements? Do they have any special policies that will allow elderly couples to be together? I think that as MLAs we've all heard of the really sad stories when an elderly couple is separated. I recently dealt with one of those cases, that I'm still working on to see if something can be done.

What I would like to ask the Member for Red Deer-North – I have actually, really, two questions because none of my research on the Internet has allowed me to know the answers. I'm really hoping that the bill will provide these answers to me. My two main questions that I'm hoping this bill will cover are: in your research have you found a website that has all of these long-term care facilities that are available in one place with all of the information that we're talking about? Then my second question is – I'm particularly interested in this – is there any place that you've found where the additional charges to the families or to the patient are outlined? I think that, for me, too, one of the questions that I'm really wondering about: on a website is there any place where the level of the staff, the training of the staff, the number of staff, staff ratio are and also what's available 24 hours, what's available only at night, and what's available during the day?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Sherwood Park. I appreciate very much your comments and your questions.

I have a very easy answer to your question. Is there a website available right now with all of that important information that seniors and their loved ones are looking for when they want to put a loved one in a long-term care facility? Absolutely not. That's why we're bringing this bill forward. That's why this bill needs to actually be a bill, because that information is not available right now. There are different websites that offer piecemeal information, but there's not a website with all of the facilities, the over 170 facilities that we have in Alberta in over 100 communities. There is not a website that has all of those facilities entered and what services they offer and what those sites look like, how many beds, whether they're accredited. So to answer your question, no, there is not a website.

The additional charges. There are a few jurisdictions across the country that have additional charges online, but this is something that we need to have in Alberta as well so that when a loved one is going into long-term care, we know exactly how much money it's going to cost them to live there month to month, whether there's an additional charge, like you were saying, to take someone to the dining room, whether there's an additional charge for foot care or an additional charge for the beauty salon, what all those additional charges are. I hear over and over and over again from my constituents that they were shocked to see a bill at the end of the month with these additional charges that they were not informed about and had no idea about.

I thank you very much for bringing those concerns forward, and you're absolutely right. There is nothing right now, and this is what we're trying to do with this bill, to have that easily accessible online website that has all the information that seniors are looking for, including additional charges and how many beds the facility has.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Ms McKittrick: Yeah. Thank you for your answer, but you didn't really address the whole issue of staff qualification. I think this is an issue that loved ones really want to know about, the qualification of the staff, who they're supervised by. And some other questions have also come to my attention. Is there a doctor that visits? Do you have to have your own doctor? So what other information do you think is not currently available in one place that, from your own experience, would really benefit ourselves as possible people who will be in long-term care or family members?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Schreiner: Well, thank you to the Member for Sherwood Park for asking that question. You're absolutely right. This is something that's important to seniors and their loved ones. When they're looking to place someone into long-term care, they want to know if there will be doctors' visits in the facility. They want to know if there's a registered nurse there in the facility 24/7. They want to know if there are licensed practical nurses and health care aides to make sure that their loved ones are getting all of their needs met as well as if there is a dietary professional to be able to assess their loved ones. Will there be recreation therapy that will, you know, help keep their loved ones happy? They want to know what the staff ratios are. This is something that is absolutely very important.

I know that this bill will enable to have that information online so people can look to see that, yes, there's a registered nurse that's there 24/7; yes, the doctors come and visit at least once a week and do their doctor's report. It's very important information. Whether or not there's a dentist that comes to the facility to look after their loved ones, whether there's a wound care specialist, nurse practitioners: all that information will be right there readily accessible on that online website, a very important website.

Thank you. Thank you for the question.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung.

Mr. Dach: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am pleased to rise today to speak briefly on the matter before us. I wanted to make it known to the House that it's not only family members who are faced with counselling a couple or an individual who may be going into long-term care. It's also a number of professionals who really are placed in a position of trust and need to give good counsel and good guidance to individuals who, for reasons usually due to health or age, find themselves with increasing difficulty staying in their own home, whether it be rented or owned.

My personal experience, of course, typically, over the past 30 years, as a real estate agent formerly, has been to assist families who owned their properties with making the decision about where to go when they were no longer able to function properly in their existing property. That is something that I, of course, willingly agreed to do, and I said, "Yes, I can help you with that," not knowing exactly how big a job I was undertaking. When I first offered to help families which were facing a family member going into long-term care and were wanting to list and sell their property, doing a bit of research, I found it was a wide open minefield and not something that was easily undertaken. So I'm really, really glad to see that this website is going to be available online for professionals in the real estate world, who are now able to go online much more easily to find out reliably what options exist for their clients.

I guess others have already asked this question. I mean, I think this is self-evident. This website exists because of need. I for one would have really been grateful to have seen this much earlier than it has come forward, and I'm happy to see it now.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Upstream and Downstream Emissions

505. Mr. Kenney moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately demand that the government of Canada introduce any necessary legislative changes that would prohibit the consideration of upstream and downstream emissions by a federal energy regulator at any stage of the pipeline approval process.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise in support of my own motion, Motion 505. Let me begin by offering some historical context. In the history of our federation it was not clear in 1867 that provinces had regulatory authority or indeed ownership of subterranean, subsurface resources because this was not an active issue in 1867. But in the 20th century provinces began to realize that they had vast wealth to be developed in mines with heavy metals plus oil and gas. This was clearly the case here in Alberta. Our provincial government in the 1920s succeeded in establishing that by getting an amendment to the Constitution Act recognizing provincial ownership of subsurface natural resources.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

However, the federal government did not surrender a putative claim of regulatory authority over provincial resources later in our history. This is what led to the national energy program, the infamous design of former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, which sought effectively to micromanage Alberta's oil and gas sector from Ottawa and which, of course, led to a catastrophic failure of that industry, leading to what until recently has been the longest and deepest recession in Alberta history, in the early 1980s.

This is precisely why the late, great Premier Peter Lougheed brought forward the original version of Bill 12, which this Legislature has recently adopted. This is why he brought forward the legislative tools to allow the Alberta government to stop the shipment of oil to central Canada at that time in order to send a message to a different Trudeau federal Liberal government that Alberta would use every tool at its disposal to defend our resources, our wealth, our economy, and our way of life. He used the threat of turning off the taps in order to force the federal government to the negotiating table, which occurred throughout the negotiations on repatriation of the Constitution, the British North America Act, in 1981.

In those negotiations, because of his threat, Premier Lougheed managed to secure a new section in the Constitution Act, under section 92A, under the delineation of federal and provincial powers, so that it now reads and has read for the last 36 years:

(1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively ...

Key word: "exclusively."

... make laws in relation to ...

(b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources.

Let me just recap that for the sake of clarity, Madam Speaker. Since 1982, thanks to Peter Lougheed's threat to turn off the taps, we have established in the Constitution that this Legislature has not shared but exclusive jurisdictional authority to make laws in relation to the development, conservation, and management of nonrenewable natural resources. That's a critically important historic gain by an Alberta government. Frankly, this is something that provincial governments had fought for for decades and failed to obtain until Peter Lougheed was willing to go to the wall, with the support of this Legislature, 38 years ago.

So, Madam Speaker, the clock moves forward to 2017. Now we have another Trudeau Liberal government in Ottawa that decides it's going to ignore the Constitution. More than that, they've decided that they will not just ignore it; they will violate the black-and-white meaning of section 92A(1)(b) of the Constitution Act. They will disregard this historic, hard-fought strategic victory for this province to manage the resources that belong not to Ottawa but to the people of Alberta, these resources that fuel so much of our prosperity, our quality of life, our social programs, our public finances.

How did they do so, Madam Speaker? Well, the Trudeau government in its unbalanced zeal, a government with a Prime Minister whose principal secretary, Gerald Butts, once said that he does not want any pipelines, any alternative pipelines, that he wants an alternative economy with zero hydrocarbons, a government led by a Prime Minister who has said that he wants to phase out the oil sands, a government that vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline, a government that surrendered to Barack Obama's veto of Keystone XL – both of those pipelines, by the way, opposed inexplicably by the Alberta New Democrat Party.

Then it came to Energy East. Now, Madam Speaker, Energy East was a proposal made by a great Alberta company, TransCanada PipeLines, several years ago, and it was really the achievement of a new national dream. We often speak about the Canadian Pacific Railway, that bound Canada together with ties of iron from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific coast. It was the condition precedent of Confederation, of British Columbia joining the federation, of Canada maintaining sovereignty over what was then the North-West Territories. Without that railway, Alberta could very well have ended up like the rest of Canada's northwest, having become part of America's expansionism, of manifest destiny. That was the national dream of the 19th century. Many of us have shared a national dream in the 20th century of a country that shares its resources, its wealth, and its energy so that we could displace our dependence on foreign oil imports from some of the world's worst regimes.

TransCanada was prepared, with good partners like Irving Oil in New Brunswick, to make this dream a reality by reversing a series of long-existing pipelines and building additional infrastructure to allow us to effectively ship Alberta heavy crude to Canada's east coast, to refineries in New Brunswick and in Montreal and in Quebec City, to effectively displace the billions of dollars of foreign oil imported by our fellow Canadians. It was a great proposal. It was a $15.7 billion proposed capital investment that would have increased our capacity to ship Canadian oil by 1.1 million barrels per day, which is about a third of our total current production. It would have also allowed not just for the displacement of energy imports but for Canada to become a net exporter, a major exporter, to substantially reduce the price discount, which is currently costing us $40 million a day.

But, Madam Speaker, something happened. Something happened called the Trudeau Liberal government, which, since coming to office in the fall of 2015, was determined to do everything it could to damage Canada's energy sector. As I mentioned, they vetoed the Northern Gateway pipeline. Our Premier admitted in question period two weeks ago that her close ally Justin Trudeau did so at the invitation of the Alberta government, that said: we were only looking for one coastal pipeline. It killed Northern Gateway.

Then the Trudeau government instructed the notionally independent, quasi-judicial regulator the National Energy Board to get into the business of assessing up- and downstream carbon emissions notionally associated with proposed new pipeline projects. The National Energy Board clarified this in black and white in their letter to TransCanada on the Energy East proposal on August 23, 2017, in which the NEB said:

Given increasing public interest in GHG emissions . . .

That's greenhouse gas emissions.

. . . together with increasing governmental actions and commitments (including the federal government's stated interest in assessing upstream GHG emissions associated with major pipelines), the Board is of the view that it should also consider indirect GHG emissions in its NEB Act public interest determination for each of the Projects [associated with Energy East].

I have the letter right here, Madam Speaker. This was the death knell of Energy East. This is why we are now just three days away from the potential cancellation of the last remaining coastal pipeline project. The NEB, black on white, told TransCanada PipeLines that "the federal government's stated interest in assessing upstream GHG emissions associated with major pipelines" means that the board will now consider "indirect . . . emissions in its NEB Act public interest determination for each of the Projects" associated with Energy East.

Well, it only took two weeks before TransCanada responded. They issued a statement on September 7 of last year saying that they were pausing the project subject to further review "due to the significant changes to the regulatory process introduced by the [National Energy Board]" on August 23. Of course, as we know, TransCanada went on later, in October of last year, to cancel the project. Lest there's any doubt, there's a direct line: Trudeau government commitment to get into the regulation of GHG emissions on pipelines; the NEB telling TransCanada that they are following their orders getting into the regulation of even indirect emissions on pipeline projects, including Energy East; TransCanada hitting the pause button because of the regulatory uncertainty created by this decision; TransCanada cancelling Energy East and, with it, a $16 billion project and the dream of energy independence.

Now, why do I walk through that so deliberately? Because for some inexplicable reason our Premier, a very capable, intelligent, and committed person, I believe has been misbriefed by – I don't know – somebody, by her office, her officials because repeatedly she has misstated the facts, I'm sure in good faith, Madam Speaker. She said in response to a question from me on March 12 in this place that "the outcome with respect to Energy East had nothing to do with the NEB decision."

She further said, under questioning from me at Executive Council estimates on April 18, that "I think it's really important to put that on the record, that Energy East was never meant to be covered – and it was very clear that it was never meant to be covered – by the proposed policy changes that the NEB voted." So our Premier does not understand the simple, undeniable, factual record about what happened here.

Now, Madam Speaker, I have asked – in fact, we have put forward requests on multiple occasions – for unanimous consent for consideration of motions calling on the government of Canada to amend the National Energy Board Act to respect section 92A of the Constitution Act and our exclusive jurisdiction over the regulation of the production of oil and gas by precluding the NEB or its successor agency, the environmental impact assessment agency, from intruding in our jurisdiction.

Now, Madam Speaker, when the NEB talks about considering indirect GHG emissions, upstream and downstream emissions, in a pipeline application, let's break this down. Upstream emissions are emissions – first of all, a pipeline itself produces virtually no emissions. A pipeline ships energy. There are trace elements of emissions, much lower, by the way, than emissions generated, for example, by train cars, according to two exhaustive studies done by the United States State Department under the leadership of former secretary Hillary Clinton. So pipelines themselves are not a significant contributor to GHG emissions.

But the board wasn't saying that they were going to consider the pipeline's emissions but indirect emissions, by which they meant that every barrel of Alberta crude that might end up being shipped by that pipeline from Hardisty to Saint John should be taken into consideration in terms of the GHG emissions associated with its production in Alberta. In Alberta. But, Madam Speaker, I quoted the Constitution, which says:

- (1) In each province, the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to . . .
- (b) development, conservation and management of non-renewable natural resources.

Oil, bitumen, is a nonrenewable natural resource. Its development, environmental conservation, environmental and resource management, obviously, includes any regulation with respect to emissions. So this decision by the National Energy Board was a gross and obvious violation of our province's jurisdiction.

Now, we've been trying to get the government's – I really, you know, with respect to my colleagues opposite, don't imagine that there's any ideological, or there should not be, or any deep policy difference between my party and theirs, between the opposition and the government on this. I can't imagine that. Obviously, we have honest disagreements on a number of issues. I can't imagine why this would be one of them, Madam Speaker. I can't honestly imagine why this government would be indifferent to or indeed, at worst, invite the federal government to intrude into this Legislature's exclusive constitutional jurisdiction on the production, conservation, development, and management of our bitumen, of our oil and gas. So I would ask them honestly to maybe just go back and check the record. Maybe they just haven't followed the track here on what the National Energy Board did.

Maybe I'm wrong, Madam Speaker. Maybe I'm wrong, and they can prove me wrong and debate on this. But maybe the documentary record and I are correct, and maybe TransCanada was correct in the way it read the threat created by the NEB.

Donald Savoie is considered the leading academic scholar on public administration in Canada, de l'Université du New Brunswick à Moncton, and he said:

Politics, not market conditions, killed the Energy East pipeline. If government and regulatory agencies drag the puck long enough and if they keep changing the rules of the game and adding new requirements along the way, market conditions will surely kick in. The Energy East initiative is a case in point. Not only was the approval process changed . . .

on up- and downstream emissions

. . . and requirements added, [but] it was done so retroactively.

Dennis McConaghy, former TransCanada senior executive, said that we have an utterly dysfunctional regulatory system for projects like this; the company had spent billions of dollars, and the hearing process hadn't even started when this was killed.

The Canadian Energy Pipeline Association also confirms my understanding of the documentary record.

Madam Speaker, as I begin to wrap up, this motion is an opportunity for Albertans to speak with one voice in defence of our hard-fought exclusive constitutional jurisdiction to be the masters of our resources. If we choose to do so in co-operation with the dominion government, that is our choice, not Ottawa's choice.

Madam Speaker, in closing, it's not only a question of upstream emissions about which I am particularly concerned but also the downstream emissions because I'll tell you this much. The oil tankers coming in from Venezuela, Nigeria, Iran, Qatar, and Saudi Arabia are not regulated for their GHG emissions, direct or indirect. The cement factory that the Quebec government built recently with half a billion dollars of subsidies and loan guarantees, that was exempted from environmental review, produces 2 million tonnes of GHG emissions. Bombardier, associated with that cement factory, the same ownership, is not limited based on its GHG emissions.

Madam Speaker, if we as a province are going to be the engine of Canada's prosperity, then we need to be able to develop these resources without a federal government violating our constitutional jurisdiction to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Motion 505. You know, I'm pleased to see the opposition finally engaging in a debate that we've been having with the government of Canada for well over a year, starting with a letter and a technical submission from my department in March 2017, a debate that's carried on through a number of subsequent submissions, including a letter last June, a second letter in August, and a letter last October. Copies of all these letters, by the way, were tabled in this Legislature on October 30 last year.

Madam Speaker, we would love nothing more than a unanimous motion from this Assembly on Alberta's position on this issue provided it was based in fact. That's why we proposed to the opposition an amendment which more accurately reflects the work our government has done on Bill C-69. That motion as amended would have read as follows:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately demand that the government of Canada introduce any necessary legislative changes that would prohibit the consideration of downstream emissions by a federal energy regulator at any stage of the pipeline process and recognize Alberta's climate leadership plan, including a legislated oil sands emissions limit, as sufficient for evaluating upstream emissions.

Unfortunately, they've chosen to pass on the opportunity for a unanimous, fact-based statement from this Legislature on Alberta's position on Bill C-69 in favour of their usual brand of political theatre.

Madam Speaker, we've been clear all along that we do not need federal government regulation on upstream emissions. That is because Alberta's climate leadership plan, which includes a hard cap on oil sands emissions, is sufficient to meet this need. That plan effectively delinks pipelines from increased greenhouse emissions.

Madam Speaker, if the members opposite aren't prepared to present a clear position to the government of Canada based on the facts of the matter, then they leave us no choice. We would have supported the motion as we proposed to amend it, but we cannot support the motion in this form. It's not factual, it's not useful, and it adds no value to this important national conversation. So I will be voting no to this motion, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

5:30

Mr. van Dijken: Madam Speaker, I stand to speak in favour of Motion 505, and I want to thank the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, for bringing the motion forward. The motion reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to immediately demand that the government of Canada introduce any necessary legislative changes that would prohibit the consideration of upstream and downstream emissions by a federal energy regulator at any stage of the pipeline approval process.

It appears to be very clear to me that the motion that's being put forward is to recognize that the government of Canada has been interfering with some of the provincial jurisdictions that we have protecting provinces with regard to regulatory approval and so on with their resources. The Minister of Energy might claim that this motion is not factually accurate, but I would suggest that it is very clear to me that it is accurate and can be moved upon without any delay.

It does concern me, Madam Speaker, that we seem to see that unity in Canada takes a nosedive any time we see the Liberals and especially a Trudeau take power in Ottawa. They always seem to find some crevice of national discord to try and wedge open and fan the flames that erupt and then act like heroes when they try to solve the crisis. It is really easy to do when you disrespect the Constitution and when the federal government goes playing around in the domain of the provinces in sections 92 and 92A.

Former Premier Lougheed fought to stand up for our province and our energy industry by securing section 92A of the Constitution, and we must do the same. It is plain to see that the federal Liberal government remains unwilling to stand up for our energy industry beyond empty platitudes. It's time for the NDP to stand up for Albertans, not to stand up alongside their federal Liberal allies.

By their deeds you shall know them, and under the federal Liberal government's watch the much-needed $15.7 billion job-creating Energy East project was scrapped following an outrageous mid-review mandate expansion from the federal regulatory agency. This should be very troubling to anyone in Canada, where we have politics getting in the way of due diligence and proper regulatory oversight.

I would suggest that some of the quotes that we have heard from industry are very accurate on the concerns with regard to the past and the regulatory changes with upstream and downstream emissions and also going forward with Bill C-69. To quote TransCanada, the Energy East project was scrapped “due to the significant changes to the regulatory process introduced by the [National Energy Board].” That’s a quote from September 7, 2017. Yes, Ottawa imposed upstream emissions tests and got playing around in provincial regulatory domain.

Dennis McConaghy, a former TransCanada executive, said that we have an utterly dysfunctional regulatory system for projects like this; the company had spent a billion dollars, and the hearing process hadn’t even started. That’s in the Globe and Mail, October 10, 2017.

What’s troubling, Madam Speaker, is: where was the NDP in fighting this invasion into provincial jurisdictions by the federal government? Is that the sound of crickets chirping? Where were they? Do you know how angry the cancellation of Energy East made the industry? The cancellation of Energy East made the Irving family of New Brunswick very angry. The Irvings got so angry that their newspaper, the New Brunswick Telegraph-Journal, ran a column, written by our very own Member for Calgary-Foothills, excoriating the latest plea for help for Bombardier by Premier Couillard of Quebec while the Montreal elite chose to stick a fork in Energy East.

Changing the rules mid-game is not the only thing the federal Liberals are doing. The federal Liberal government’s new approvals process, Bill C-69, the impact assessment act, as I referred to earlier, continues down the same troubling action. According to June Warren-Nickle’s 2018 oil and gas industry outlook survey 62 per cent say that the NEB modernization, Bill C-69, will limit new projects. Bill C-69 is a disaster for the Alberta energy sector, let alone the Canadian energy sector. Again, the NDP government sits here and mouths platitudes.

Madam Speaker, meanwhile the world wants more oil. All of these climate change do-good policies do not change the fact that demand for oil will continue for the foreseeable future. It will continue to rise, and someone has to supply it. We have a perfectly legal commodity that is in high demand around the world, and here we are putting in regulatory reviews and accepting product from outside of our country into our country that does not have to even undergo the same reviews that our own domestic production has to go through. Utterly irresponsible, in my opinion. Canada is being the proverbial Boy Scout by trying to shut down our own production not necessarily in order to allow but in allowing products coming from dictators in the Middle East, from Vladimir Putin’s Russia, from frackers in Texas, North Dakota, from all around the world, allowing that to supply the world’s petroleum needs.

According to the International Energy Agency the global oil demand growth for 2018 will be 1.4 million barrels per day. That’s oil demand growth for 2018, 1.4 million barrels per day. That’s huge growth, and it continues to grow. We need to recognize that we have the product available that can supply that demand. If we don’t supply it, somebody else will. The most environmentally friendly produced oil is produced right here in our backyard. The Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion pipeline could solve half of that demand. Energy East could have solved 79 per cent of that demand. These are projects that, in my opinion, the federal government has made a mess of, and our provincial government has not stood up and ensured that our industry is being heard and that they’re being fairly represented.

Madam Speaker, the words of Peter Lougheed, the late Premier of Alberta, come to mind: the Ottawa government has without negotiation, without agreement simply walked into our home and occupied the living room. Quebec doesn’t put up with that. Alberta used to not put up with that. But the NDP just rolled over and let Ottawa mess around in our jurisdiction. It’s as if the thieves have broken in, and the owners, not knowing any better, have welcomed them in with beer and munchies and have started a party. Meanwhile no one sees the big screen TV and grandmother’s jewellery going out the front door.

But it gets better yet, Madam Speaker. You see, because of the confusion and dissension sown, we now have two sets of regulations coming in to reduce methane emissions, one federal, one provincial. It continues to get skewed. It continues to get messed up. Industry doesn’t know who to follow anymore. Ottawa? Alberta? Neither? Or both? We need to recognize that when the federal government starts getting involved in what would be considered provincial jurisdictions, the provincial government needs to have the backbone to stand up and say: no, this is not acceptable.

So while Ottawa has been taking time consulting on these regulations . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. It is an honour to rise to speak in this Assembly. I have to say that I’m a little surprised by the government’s reluctance to support this motion. Obviously, I am not now nor will ever be a member of the UCP. I differ with that party on many things. But listening to the Minister of Energy, this feels like a very, very thin argument as to why she and, I assume, the government side would vote against this motion. I can only assume that they don’t want to give the UCP a win somehow on this.

I would hope that of all the issues this Assembly deals with, this would be an issue of great national importance, that we get pipelines built, that we advocate to the federal government that their regulatory structures are predictable, consistent, and fair around the country, and that all members of this Assembly would want to do something like that. This is not legislation that we’re talking about passing here. This is a motion urging the government to take certain actions. I would hope that the government would take those very actions in doing that. It’s a shame, Madam Speaker, to see the partisanship gone wild on this particular issue.

Let’s talk, though, about the substance of the motion itself and the federal government’s attempts to consider both upstream and downstream emissions from pipeline projects and in particular downstream emissions. I can’t help but notice that every time Ottawa provides a grant or a subsidy to a car plant, I don’t see any consideration of downstream emissions. It’s remarkable, you know, that automobiles in this country and around the world are the ones that consume the product that Alberta produces, that we ship very safely and responsibly through pipelines, yet the federal government seems reluctant, not even considering downstream emissions when they would fund a project like that, like an auto plant.

Let’s talk about another example. One of the great products that comes out of Alberta’s oil sands is jet fuel. A company called Bombardier produces airplanes that consume jet fuel, yet I see absolutely no mention of the carbon emissions that are caused by the production of those airplanes themselves or, of course, of the fuel that the airplanes themselves produce.

So it’s deeply hypocritical for Ottawa to be imposing such restrictions on an industry that is specific primarily to Alberta, not exclusively. Other parts of this great country produce oil and gas. Pipelines certainly benefit the people of Alberta, but I would say, without question, that they benefit the entire nation in many, many different ways.

The other great concern with the shifting rules that seem to be coming out of Ottawa these days is that they are having a tremendous impact on investment, foreign investment in this country and domestic investment by energy companies. You know, although Canada is geographically large, we simply don't have the population base, we don't have the business base to generate all of the investment that we need to unlock all of the natural resources in particular that we have in this country available to us, so we need foreign capital to support that.

If we have an inconsistent regulatory system – what had historically been a strength of Canada is that investors were very keen to invest in a country that has tremendous political stability, that has regulatory predictability, and that follows the rule of law – we will see the problems that we're having with the constant barriers that British Columbia is attempting to put up, to constantly question a legitimate project in Kinder Morgan that has been rigorously, rigorously approved and reviewed, with 157 conditions. I can assure you that not a single project in some of the other oil sands producing regions of the world like Nigeria, Venezuela, or some of the traditional oil production that happens in Russia or Saudi – I'll bet you that collectively those projects have not had 157 conditions imposed upon them in terms of their regulatory structure. This is a single pipeline.

I am fiercely proud of the regulatory regime in this country. But, unfortunately, adding upstream and downstream emissions as part of the consideration for pipeline projects is just another barrier to investment, another barrier to job creation, another barrier to the legitimate and responsible energy industry that has become and has been such a big part of what Alberta is. Instead of putting these artificial barriers in the way, our federal government ought to be proud of what it is we are in this country, and I would hope that this government in Alberta also is proud of what Alberta has delivered in terms of our energy industry.

For those who may construe this as some sort of anti-environmental argument, let me be very, very clear. The Alberta Party believes that climate change is real, it is human caused, and it is a problem that we need to address. We need to have solutions that can and should include a properly constructed and responsible carbon tax as part of that overall package in addressing and tackling climate change. We should not just be looking at it as some barrier to be overcome; we should be looking at it, in fact, as the single greatest economic opportunity of our lifetimes if we do it properly. It is absolutely possible.

Alberta can solve carbon. That is going to help support our base industry in energy, oil, and gas, and it is going to help diversify our economy by creating companies and technologies that we can sell to the rest of the world, which is exactly what's happening just outside of Calgary at the Shepard natural gas power plant, the new Enmax power plant. Just recently a two-year pilot project kicked off with five different companies with different carbon reuse technologies, a long-term pilot project supported, yes, by carbon tax dollars from here in Alberta and by the federal government. This is precisely the kind of thing. It's the only example of its kind anywhere in North America.

Anyone who says that Alberta is some sort of environmental laggard or is irresponsible doesn't know the story, doesn't know the facts. It is Alberta that is going to solve carbon for the rest of the world. We are going to therefore enable the continued responsible development of our energy industry, and we're going to diversify our economy. It's absolutely possible, and it's happening right here in Alberta.

So a motion like this, I think, is exactly the right way to go. It allows us to send a strong message to Ottawa that, in fact, Alberta is doing the right thing, that we shouldn't be punished, that the companies that have made their home in this province, that responsibly develop pipelines, that responsibly develop the oil sands and traditional oil and gas resources, should not be land locked, should not be punished. We need to send that strong message, and I believe that's exactly what this motion does. I would really urge the Minister of Energy and the entire government side to reconsider their opposition to this reasonable motion.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my privilege to rise this afternoon and to express support for the Member for Calgary-Lougheed's private member's Motion 505, which urges the government to immediately demand that the government of Canada introduce any necessary legislative changes that would prohibit the consideration of upstream and downstream emissions by a federal energy regulator at any stage of the pipeline approval process.

I appreciate the previous member's comments. Quite frankly, I'm deeply disappointed that the government has decided for purely partisan reasons that they will not support this, they will not express a united front for Alberta on this very, very important issue. The motion really depicts an intent to stand up for and to protect Alberta's oil and gas sector against federal intrusion into provincial jurisdiction. I still want to express hope that all members of the Assembly will vote in support of this motion and prove that we are together to stand up in the gap to protect Alberta's interests. The intent of this motion is really not only just for the pipeline approval process, but without a doubt it's about restoring Alberta's economy, about restoring jobs in our province, about restoring the authority of our legal jurisdiction, and restoring our prosperity in this province.

We've had a little bit of a history lesson. I'd like to add just one little bit more to that. Even going back a bit farther, when this province was first created, the federal government challenged the future authority and success of our province. What are now Saskatchewan and Alberta were to be one province, but Ottawa chose to divide them into two to keep them weaker, to keep them smaller lest we would somehow challenge their authority. Then in the 1920s we had to fight again for the right of ownership of our resources, the affirmation of that. Then in the 1980s Ottawa attacked us again with a national energy policy, when in reality the truth is, as has been said, that the Constitution recognizes the exclusive power of provincial Legislatures to make laws with regard to the development and conservation and management of provincial nonrenewable resources.

These are our resources. They belong to the people of Alberta, and I think that the government of Alberta needs to stand up for our people rather than hide behind some partisan quibbling over the wording of the intent of the bill. What happened in 1982 is that Premier Lougheed, through section 92A, challenged the federal government, pressed them to the wall on it, and actually won some success for Alberta in that tremendous success. That's part of his legacy, something that we need again and something that now Bill C-69, the impact assessment act, completely contradicts and goes against.

It seems to me a bit interesting that earlier this year our Premier and the NDP went to great efforts to align themselves with Premier Lougheed. The Premier even mentioned in her throne speech in March: "In the past when workers in our energy industry were attacked and when the resources we own were threatened, Premier Peter Lougheed took bold action.” Oh, that we had such a Premier today, Madam Speaker. The reality is that if the NDP want to wrap themselves in the cloak of Peter Lougheed and want to claim the kind of glory and honour that he had, then they need to do the same kinds of actions.

Premier Lougheed actually cut oil shipments to the east. He did things that were more than just comfortable little phrases and talking about it. In the Premier’s speech she cited him and referred to him, and we’ve heard it again in this House numerous times how they want to be like Premier Lougheed. Well, with two days left, which is all we’ve got left till the cut-off date, I would assume that it’s more necessary than just to invoke idle sentiments. Bill 12, that’s supposed to be acting like Premier Lougheed, is still unproclaimed. It’s just a bluff. There’s nothing coming of it.

If they want to compare themselves to Premier Lougheed, who was a protector of Alberta’s resources, then it would only make sense for all of us to stand united, to stand up with Premier Lougheed for our province, for our energy industry, and support this motion to demand that the government of Canada introduce any legislation necessary to prohibit the consideration of upstream and downstream industry emissions by a federal regulatory agency.

The reality is that we are standing at a crossroads in our history, where the federal Liberal government have proven themselves opposed to the energy industry, and now they’ve blatantly brought forth this process in the middle of the development, C-69, the impact assessment act, which includes upstream and downstream emissions. According to the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association it will make it significantly less likely that future projects will get approved.

I think it’s patently unfair and unjust that these things are applied to Alberta but not applied to other parts of our country. Tanker oil comes into Canada every day. It’s drilled in another hole down in some other part of the world rather than drilled in an oil hole here in Alberta, and they don’t have to pay any of that. There are no emissions attached to them. There’s no carbon tax attached to them. They are completely free in terms of bringing in tanker after tanker after tanker of oil, and if we try to send one railroad tanker car of oil out, we get all of these things assessed against us. It’s unfair. It’s completely unfair to the people of Alberta, and the government of Alberta should be standing up for our people.

We all watched how last year, under the federal Liberal government’s watch, the $15.7 billion job-creating Energy East pipeline was scrapped precisely because in the mid-term of their working through on that one, mid-review, the rules were all changed.

Now, you know, when my grandkids get together and they start playing a game and partway through the game somebody wants to change the rules, inevitably it’s viewed as unfair and unjust, and it creates a great hue and cry. It isn’t fair to change the rules to suit me or somebody else halfway through the game. Well, that’s exactly what the federal government has done here with regard to Bill C-69 and the Energy East project. No wonder, when you change the rules halfway through like my grandkids do, they get mad and they walk off and they won’t participate.

You know, this is far more important than a child’s game, yet the federal government is changing the rules midway through, driving industry and investment and the hope out of Canada. This is not what should be happening in Canada. It’s making us the laughingstock of the world, and as we’ve heard, our regulatory process is completely broken when, like little kids, they can change it halfway through and totally stack the game in their own favour.

It should be no shock that the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association said that now, with the built-in climate change tests only for Alberta oil, not tanker oil, but only for ours, covering upstream and downstream greenhouse gas emissions, that it is the federal Liberal government’s intent, declared purpose, to curtail oil and gas production as an attack on Alberta. This will mean that no more pipelines will be built, at least here in Canada, and that Bill C-69 sure has hit the mark to make sure that no more of it happens here in Canada.

We need to stand up for this. Our government needs to stand up for our people instead of hiding on this issue. What happened to Energy East was senseless. It’s an important, job-creating project, and now we’re doing even more of it, and the government won’t stand up for the people. The NDP promised that a massive carbon tax and caps on our upstream industry inflicted on Albertans by large emitters would buy us social licence somehow, an approval for pipelines from our federal cohorts, but we have seen none of that, and two days from now Kinder Morgan may very well just walk away from the whole thing.

Our leader, along with UCP caucus members and others, has repeatedly discussed our concerns with the federal government with regard to the federal government’s efforts to force upstream and downstream emissions consideration and that energy investors will be discouraged. Investment will effectively be extinguished, a squelch on our industry, and the NDP refuse to stand up and vote for it. This energy industry is our strength. It’s the thing that gives us the income, the energy, and the resources by which to actually make investments in green development, and we’re going to cut that opportunity off from ourselves.

This action by the federal government to include upstream and downstream emissions is a direct intrusion into provincial jurisdiction, and it should not be tolerated by us. We should not simply roll over and allow them to do this. We need to restore investor confidence. We need to restore our jurisdiction on our authority and our economic stability.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the motion? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. We have but a brief moment left, so I’ll just quickly note some quotes from a letter written by the Minister of Energy to ministers McKenna and Carr. Actually, this is a joint letter from the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment and Parks.

The Government of Alberta submits that our Climate Leadership Plan should be recognized as sufficient for evaluating upstream greenhouse gas emissions associated with pipeline projects originating in Alberta.

It goes on to outline then the specific steps we have taken as a government under our climate leadership plan.

That was sent on August 28, 2017, and followed on October 2, 2017, with a further letter expressing our continued and growing worry regarding the potential impact on Energy East, in which the minister notes:

It is our government’s position that the inclusion of downstream uses in the scope of the Energy East review is an historic over-reach. In our view, this is simply not an appropriate issue to include in the review.

Later in the letter she also wrote:

I am asking for clarity on whether the scope of review for the Energy East project can be seen as precedent-setting for what the regulator will be mandated to review for future projects in the new legislation.

On upstream emissions, Madam Speaker, she noted: Alberta’s climate leadership plan and in particular the oil sands emissions limit should satisfy concerns about upstream emissions; the Prime Minister directly cited our climate plan in his approval of two new pipelines last fall.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, our Minister of Energy has, in these particular letters and in her continued conversations with the ministers and in continued communication with the Prime Minister, continued to raise our concerns regarding this evaluation and this approach. This is severely problematic in considering downstream emissions because, indeed, as other members have capably explained, the consideration of downstream emissions simply is not a reasonable option in that it forces . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but the House stands adjourned until 7:30 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 6. p.m.]

Government Motions

Duty on Cannabis Products

24. Mr. Ceci moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta approve the arrangement between the government of Alberta and the government of Canada outlined on page 128 of the 2018-21 fiscal plan presented by the President of Treasury Board and Minister of Finance to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on March 22, 2018, Sessional Paper 43/2018, with respect to the implementation by Canada of a duty on cannabis products to be imposed under the Excise Act, 2001, Canada, in respect of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Finance minister and President of Treasury Board. Good evening.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What that all means is that when it comes to cannabis taxation, a co-ordinated approach with our federal and provincial partners will help ensure consistent pricing and drive out the illegal market in Canada. We have asked the federal government to use the federal excise tax to collect cannabis tax revenue on behalf of Alberta. This includes Alberta's share of the tax room that was agreed to by federal and provincial finance ministers, the greater of 75 cents per gram or 7.5 per cent of the producer price. To ensure Alberta can apply a similar level of total tax compared to other provinces, an additional amount would be collected from licensed producers. This amount would be equivalent to 10 per cent of the retail price and would be similar to the amount of tax applied in other provinces once cannabis is legalized. Federal collection of these amounts also minimizes our administrative costs as well as minimizing compliance costs for Alberta businesses.

Before collecting amounts on behalf of a province, the federal government requires provinces to confirm this through a vote in the Legislature no later than June 1, 2018. Mr. Speaker, we are required to bring a motion before this House before June 1, 2018, to indicate our preference about the government of Canada collecting taxation amounts on our behalf. That's why I'm bringing this forward today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Great. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I rise to speak to Government Motion 24. This motion is necessary, of course, due to the federal government, the Trudeau government, decision to legalize marijuana whether we in Alberta here are ready for it or not. As the Official Opposition critic for Solicitor General and as a former certified breath technician for the province of Alberta, I can say with certainty that we are not ready. Why can I make this sort of statement so strongly? Because unlike alcohol there is no roadside device that has been approved for reading levels of THC, which, of course, is a huge concern if we are dealing with any form of impaired driving.

Although we keep hearing about public safety being the most critical aspect of all legislation that is going through Ottawa, here in this Legislature we know that our roads will become more dangerous. The Transportation minister, to his credit, admitted that when proposing amendments to the Traffic Safety Act to include drug impairment in our provincial legislation. Perhaps this critical failure to ensure that police have access to a roadside device is one of the reasons that the Trudeau government seems ready to miss its long-held target of July 1 as the marijuana legalization day. We do not know for sure because the government is fairly quiet on this issue and perhaps a little embarrassed, as it should be.

Now, in Alberta, however, our government has been bringing a few pieces of legislation forward each session to prepare for July 1 or whatever day, of course, when legalization is now about to occur. I must commend them. I mean, this, Mr. Speaker, is like drinking out of a fire hose. It is very much a challenge. But we've seen the aforementioned Bill 29, which amended the Traffic Safety Act, and Bill 26, which dealt with the retail structure and public consumption. By the way, our UCP caucus warned the government that marrying marijuana use with tobacco laws rather than alcohol would not offer the kind of public protection Albertans, especially children, would require, yet the NDP rejected our amendment that would have done just that. And now what is occurring? Alberta's municipalities are left dealing with it.

Government Motion 24, while necessary and supported by the UCP caucus, also leaves a blank area for municipalities. Let me just spell this out for you, Mr. Speaker. This motion is asking the Legislative Assembly to approve the deal crafted between the provinces, specifically in this case Alberta, and the federal government regarding taxing marijuana. They came up with a tax limit of $1 on each gram sold. I'll address the importance of that price in just a moment, but right now I want to stay focused on municipalities.

This government has admitted that the lion's share of the cost of implementing legalized marijuana will fall to municipalities. Edmonton and Calgary, for instance, have both pegged the cost of planning, zoning, and administration as well as bylaw policing and inspection services at approximately $9 million to $12 million. Let me quote Mayor Nenshi in a December 7, 2017, Calgary Herald article.

We've not padded this number... We're looking north of $10 million a year, so it's incredibly important that any revenue that is gained from cannabis sales, the excise tax on cannabis sales, be shared directly with municipalities.

That is the outstanding question, Mr. Speaker. Just how much of the tens of millions of dollars that the province will collect will go to municipalities? The Premier has stated that the first few years of legalized marijuana will likely be a net loss despite the revenues from the tax estimated to reach approximately $80 million in the first full year of legalization.

Now, hopefully, there's a huge policing component that might be involved because Alberta needs those officers specially trained in recognizing the signs of impairment. This is especially important because there is still, again, no roadside device that can test the levels of cannabis impairment. That means that it will totally be up to the officers to recognize drug impairment because the next step is an invasive blood test. The province hasn't yet told us how they plan to deal with the need for more of those facilities and, of course, the court times that would be involved in that as well as planning and execution of blood warrants if that is indeed required. As you can see, legalization of marijuana will be expensive to the province and to the municipalities, so I urge this government to not dismiss the municipalities. They're carrying a huge burden, and they want to do everything right for their citizens, which are our citizens.

This tax on marijuana will provide important revenues to ensure legalization occurs properly in Alberta with a crucial eye on public safety. Public safety, of course, includes ensuring our retail regime stamps out the black market. For the black market it means organized crime, and that brings deep-seated trouble for Albertans. Now, remember, this is an industry that is currently owned and operated by organized crime, so the thrust behind the organized crime is money. A goal of legalization is to erase the black market, which they control, by offering a safe product by legitimate retailers. The price, however, must also compete with the black market. That's why this tax on the sale of each gram is so important, Mr. Speaker. Curiously, and thanks to previous governments, which refused to implement a sales tax, Alberta will have the lowest cost for marijuana in Canada. Since the price of a gram is the same across the country, $8, as is the excise tax, $1, the only variable involves the various sales and harmonized taxes. Remember, people who sell marijuana illegally do not care if they are selling this substance to children.

Bill 6, which is before this House right now, allows the AGLC to add a markup. We have been told that this mechanism is there for the future, not the present, and is something that we will have to watch very carefully if we want to make and keep the black market irrelevant. Now, I certainly hope that the NDP government, which likes to surprise Albertans with unexpected taxes, does not look at the markup as an opportunity for revenues. I'm aware that the markup proposed in Bill 6 is only for the cost of the legalized recreational cannabis to the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission, but I still want to add a caution that adding a markup for cannabis can create a rejuvenated black market for marijuana. We want to avoid that as much as possible. We must be cognizant of that, Mr. Speaker. Although legalized marijuana may not have been the choice of everyone, eradicating the black market and organized crime that controls it can be a positive effect to come out of this process.

Mr. Speaker, although I am in support of Government Motion 24 because it is part of a much bigger picture and Alberta needs revenues to enforce the marijuana laws, I want to take this opportunity to say that I personally think that this government could have gone a bit further in some of the public safety fronts. Hopefully, when legalized recreational marijuana rolls out in a few months, if changes are needed to legislation or regulations, the government does not hesitate to address them. You know, I speak specifically on two issues, marijuana in schools and public consumption. I have already indicated an issue with the NDP government choosing to align consumption specifically with smoking and vaping of tobacco. Marijuana is an intoxicating substance, yet Albertans will be able to smoke it almost everywhere in public, and that's why municipalities are having to scramble to create public consumption bylaws, because this government refused to deal with it in a responsible way.

So let me expound for a moment on the school issue, for I believe it is important that that, too, has gone under the radar. Students aged 17 and under cannot possess marijuana at all. They cannot buy it. They cannot consume it. Yet students 18 and over can. Although last fall's Bill 26 restricts them from smoking it on or comparatively near school grounds, there is nothing to prevent them from having it in their possession at school. This is the kind of public safety issue that I believe the government has sadly failed to address. Perhaps it sees no issue with some students being able to possess marijuana. Perhaps it plans to address this hole in some other way. But I ask the government to take care of it before the fall. I think that we all can agree that the safety and well-being of children are most important to each and every one of us on both sides of this House.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the costs of the marijuana. The federal government had $81 million in start-up costs to provide to the provinces. Alberta's share should have been approximately $10 million. Did the municipalities see any of it?

The excise tax is estimated to bring in $80 million in 2019-2020. Will municipalities see any of that? These are legitimate questions to be asked. Municipalities are partners with the provincial government. Local governments take care of Alberta's citizens in their communities. The work that they do is critical to a well-functioning provincial government. I, of course, urge this government to view them as a partner in the rollout of the cannabis framework and always hold up the safety of children and families and citizens as the most important objective not just in approving legislation here but in making sure that it works well for Albertans on their streets.

Thank you for your time, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to talk about Government Motion 24, to which I will offer my support. I do have some concerns. I am relatively pleased to see that this motion applies to cover the first two years of legalization and a common set of principles between the government of Canada and the government of Alberta. Unquestionably, this area, this change, and this legislation could have considerable unintended consequences.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to start out by saying, you know, that I can't help but feel that we haven't talked enough about the safety, about the effects of the legalization of marijuana. Of course, as legislators our primary duty – our primary duty – for anything we do is for the safety of our communities, the safety of Albertans, and especially the safety of children. My goodness, there's adequate, ample, an abundance of evidence about the effect of frequent consumption on adolescent brain development. I just feel that it's necessary that every time we move into this area of change, we be reminded that with every change there come positives, there come negatives, and there are always unintended consequences.

My colleague from Calgary-West spoke very, very well about the concern with our police forces, our first responders. We all know how taxing and how hard their job is now, and thank goodness for each and every one of them. What a whole new level of duty and diligence and care the implementation of cannabis into our society is going to have on these people. I don't doubt for a second that their professionalism is more than up to this job, but I don't doubt for a second that it will cause extra work and extra concern. I'm grateful for them, and I offer my support.

Mr. Speaker, that brings me to one of my other concerns. We've all heard and the media has been very, very great at reporting how bad the federal government has been at getting this out, defining the rules, stating how it's going to happen. It's thrust on all the provinces and, of course, now thrust on the municipalities to bear the costs. I can't help but wonder if this two-year agreement is just a way for the feds to legitimize stepping into an area of Alberta's economy. They need our approval to put their taxation into effect. They're straying into an area of provincial jurisdiction. They're straying into an area where we, at least, are closer to the people than they are and we can help the best. That's why their first idea of forcing their rules and their plans on Alberta and taking the lion's share of the money was so ridiculous.

Still, is this just a plan to legitimize their need to dip into the money we'll need for our citizens, for our municipalities, for ensuring that the unintended consequences of this are minimal, for ensuring that we can support our first responders at the level that we have to? Okay. I get it. It's a new thing. It sounds like the feds have handled this terribly. At least, there's a two-year limit on this, and that will give everyone a chance, you know, to have a look at it then.

I have some concerns. Our researchers have discovered that some states with legalized marijuana have run into a particularly interesting dilemma. I have Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Massachusetts, and Maine. After they legalized marijuana, guess what? The price dropped. Then they found themselves at: now what do we do? The price dropped. Do you start to promote it? Do you start to advertise it? Do you start to combat the black market, which obviously doesn't have to deal with any level of taxation? Mr. Speaker, I don't doubt that a lot of our good policemen and RCMP people and people that are living life on the streets protecting us have a better understanding of where this will lead to, but I don't think that our government and the bureaucracy do.

My concern, again, is if the home growing and the home consumption turns out to be a big market and the price drops because of the black market or because of other things. Who knows where culture will take us? Mr. Speaker, this government may find themselves in a very awkward spot.

For all those reasons, I will reluctantly support the government on Motion 24, but I will ask that in the next year and in the foreseeable future they do everything possible to monitor this, to watch for the unintended consequences, to make sure that the federal government does not step any further into where the Alberta government and municipalities should be and should be supported, and to make sure that all Albertans are protected, especially our young people.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Any questions to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat under 29(2)(a)? The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: I would like the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat to clarify where the two-year limit you're talking about is in my motion or in the fiscal plan.

Mr. Barnes: Okay. Well, thank you for that. My summary has that this is a common set of principles that would cover the first two years of legalization. Hon. minister, if that's not the case, could you please correct me?

Mr. Ceci: I don't have the agreement before us here, but I'll go up and check it as soon as I have the opportunity. I just would like to ask the member again to – no. I think that's clarified.

Thanks.

The Speaker: Any other members wish to speak to Motion 24? The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. To close, I want to address some of the things that I heard the Member for Calgary-West talk about with regard to, you know, the municipalities needing to provide the lion's share of support for cannabis in communities. I'm not sure I ever said that. I don't think I said that the lion's share of responsibility would be on municipalities.

I can tell you that the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission is busily getting ready for the legalization of cannabis, not only with online purchasability for Albertans that want to do that but ensuring that only Albertans who are over 18 years of age can purchase and are identified through the online purchasing. We're getting all of that ready.

We are getting ready the ability to receive cannabis from licensed producers and to distribute that to legal retailers throughout the province when that is put in place. We're also putting in place an ability to approve retailers, check the backgrounds of those retailers as well as every person working for them. The government of Alberta is going to, if I could suggest, do the lion's share of this work with regard to getting cannabis ready for distribution throughout the province.

Certainly, municipalities have asked to be at the table with regard to the sharing of revenues at some point when those revenues actually net out positively, and we really don't know when that will be. It could be in a couple of years' time, more or less. We will work in a co-ordinated fashion with municipalities, and we will have discussions with municipalities about that revenue sharing at some point in the future.

The approach to cannabis taxation with our federal government and other provincial partners across the country is the best way to get consistent pricing, Mr. Speaker, and to help drive out the illegal market. I think that on that point I agree with the Member for Calgary-West, that that is a critical aspect of all of this.

The specific tax on cannabis is no different than applying product-specific charges on other commodities such as provincial fuel and tobacco taxes and liquor markups. That's the only way we can ensure that Alberta can apply a similar level of total tax compared to other provinces. As was noted, there is no sales tax in this province, so we need to ensure that our pricing in this province is consistent with other provinces. The federal government has agreed to, on behalf of Alberta, make the sale of each gram consistent with the approximate average of other provinces. I did mention that we're going to be as efficient as possible with administering the costs and complying with the requirements around cannabis taxation, and if it's handled by the feds instead of us setting up our own process, that's going to be more cost-efficient.

I just want to look at a few of the other thoughts that were brought up by the Member for Calgary-West. Of course, we'll not dismiss municipalities and their efforts to do the best job they can in their communities. They're closest to their communities, so I think it makes sense that at some point in the future there be discussions about this with them, and there will be. They know their communities best, and they more likely know what the mores are than us sitting in Edmonton and making laws that affect them. We've made them permissive so that they could decide to do things differently if they chose, and some of them, most notably Edmonton and Calgary, have. But, again, we're not forecasting positive income on this until 2020, 2021.

I think those were some of the issues that were brought up that I believe needed to be further clarified.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is responding to a federal government initiative. We're responding with a full suite or a complement of processes in this province that will continue to place safety very highly in our communities, place very highly the lack of legitimate cannabis getting into the hands of young people. We don't want that. We want to make sure that our communities are great places to live, work, and to recreate, and that's why we're doing the responsible thing like putting a process in place before the legalization of cannabis. I think that's as Albertans would expect.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Before calling the vote on the motion, the Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: I seek unanimous consent to revert to one-minute bells for the rest of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

[Government Motion 24 carried]

Government Bills and Orders

Second Reading

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

Mr. McIver moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be not now read a second time because the Assembly is of the view that the bill does not provide sufficient detail to ensure there is adequate protection for property owners to avoid the type of litigation that has arisen with the PACE programs in California.

[Debate adjourned on the amendment May 17: Mr. Drysdale speaking]

The Speaker: Any members who wish to speak to the amendment to Bill 10? The Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's always a pleasure to rise in this Chamber and speak to legislation that affects all Albertans – today is no exception; today we speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements – and specifically to speak to the reasoned amendment that my colleague from Calgary-Hays proposed.

Bill 10 was introduced in order to allow municipalities to establish a program that would help private property owners make energy efficiency upgrades. This bill also allows or enables municipalities to pass a bylaw, a bylaw which creates the property assessed clean energy program, or PACE. The intent of the bill is to offer the instrument for property owners to finance affordable energy efficiency, renewable energy, and water conservation projects or upgrades to their property.

Now, the idea is that the municipality would be expected to borrow funds from private lenders and then use those funds to front the cost of the upgrade. The municipality would then put the cost of the upgrade plus the interest onto the property owner's tax bill, and the said property owner would then pay for the said upgrade over time through their municipal tax bill on an annual basis.

I call that glorified financing or backdoor financing. There's no other way, I don't think, to put it. I think it was called innovative financing on the government's technical briefing. Backdoor financing has already been in place for several states down south of the border for some time. I believe that California was the first state in the union to implement the PACE program. I could be wrong about that, but they've had it for several years. I'll talk about that a little bit later.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there are a few people on the government side of the House that have spent time in the role of opposition members in the Alberta Legislature – I don't know that there are any in the House tonight – but some have been opposition members quite recently as well. So whether the people that were here when they were opposition members have shared with the rest of their colleagues what the duty of the opposition is in this House is something that we don't know.

But the reality is that on this side of the House we are challenged with the task of reviewing proposed legislation as it is our role and responsibility in this House to ensure that what is proposed for the benefit of Albertans through government legislation is expressed and phrased in such a way as to ensure that the purpose and the intent of the proposed legislation is indeed achieved and that there's no danger of unintended consequences occurring. Mr. Speaker, from this side of the House we believe that the proposed legislation is not quite ready at this time because the program that is to be enabled, if left as it is presented without any further detail, will potentially have the chance to cause Albertans possible financial difficulty.

Like I said, I do have a copy of the original technical document that the government gave to those that attended the bill briefing, and it starts off talking about exactly what I've already said, how property owners will be able to finance renewable energy projects, which would constitute upgrades to their properties, and how repayment would be collected through property owners' municipal tax bills. Now, that reminds me a lot of a program that we have used in Alberta for quite some time called off-site levies, which have been successful; don't get me wrong.

Again, the document that the government gave us at the bill briefing made it very plain that large and mid-sized cities were not interested in administering the program or incurring any administrative costs. They also weren't interested in a lending role for the program. The briefing document on page 7 asserted that “it is envisioned Energy Efficiency Alberta will administer the program” and that the lending role would be provided through agreements with that agency. Now, that, I suppose, relieves the municipalities' concerns about having to have a role of lending in this program, but the words “it is envisioned” I think mean that we would picture the role of the lender mentally, especially in some future event.

Now, in all fairness, I don't believe I've heard the minister state unequivocally that Energy Efficiency Alberta will indeed be the administrator of the PACE program. If he has, I stand to be corrected. The fact is that Energy Efficiency Alberta has not been named in the legislation as the administrator or the lender of the PACE program. What I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister stated last week that the legislation is the number one source that we have in order to get our information. But, once again, the information regarding Energy Efficiency Alberta isn't available in the legislation.

While I'm at it, I believe that the minister indicated that indeed there was a mistake on the government website. One of my colleagues brought up a potential mistake that stated that municipalities would install and pay for upgrades on private property. That certainly contradicts the information within the briefing document. I guess from where we're at here, we weren't involved in what information was given to the municipalities, but the question is: what were the municipalities told? Which version? I just wonder if that doesn't point out, you know, just a little bit, that there could be some uncertainty among those who would use this legislation. One document says one thing, and another says something else. That just lends more credence to the amendment that my colleague from Calgary-Hays has put forth here.

What about financing? We were told during the technical briefing – a data sheet was presented – that it is envisioned that private lending institutions will indeed be the lenders of the PACE program. But does anyone – this is a question for me – who applies to have energy efficiency programs done on their property qualify? It appears that eligibility for this program is chiefly to be based on property information rather than what I would call the industry standard in lending, which assesses the applicant's income and which seeks credit information about the individual applying for the financing before any monies or in this case property upgrades are completed.

You know, it looks like qualifying for the PACE program loan would be rather easy. Is there no risk assessment done on the borrower? Those are things that we don't know yet. I guess that another question is: who does that assessment? Another question is:

is the borrower aware of the interest rates for a loan that is to be paid off through his property taxes? Here's another question. If the borrower's history with finances is suspect, does he still qualify for the loan? For instance, if the borrower has a history of delinquency on debt repayment or, worse yet, has a history of delinquency on tax payment, does the property owner still qualify?

I mean, I can look into the legislation to find that under section 7 on page 7, proposed section 390.9(a), a regulation may be made "respecting eligibility." That means that understanding how those questions will be answered will not be debated here in this House. That will all be done by regulation. That is decided around the Executive Council table. Now, does that sound like something that could put Albertans at risk? Just a question without malice. That's how I ask that question. Does that mean that the government is asking us to trust them rather than provide some answers for the users?

Consider seniors in this province. Of course, we all know that many seniors live on fixed incomes. If they haven't had some kind of an assessment as to repayment of this loan for their energy efficiency upgrades that would be paid back through their property taxes, are they at risk of losing their property if they cannot make the additional payment on their taxes for several years? That's what happens in municipalities when somebody doesn't pay their taxes. There's a real possibility at the end of the day that the property will be put up for sale. It can be sold at auction. I don't see anything in the legislation that refers to that kind of a scenario at all.

There is another point that is left to regulation under the same section 390.9:

The Minister may make regulations respecting clean energy improvements, including, without limitation, regulations . . .

(e) respecting the disclosure of clean energy improvement agreements to prospective purchasers of property.

I'm going to reference the United States and the issues that they've had with the PACE program, and I know it's been talked about here before and the minister has likely heard all this before. I know the minister will probably stand up and tell me that the Fair Trading Act protects consumers. Well, to be honest, I believe that the Fair Trading Act likely does protect consumers when it comes to exerting undue pressure or influence on a consumer; when it comes to being deceptive, misleading, or ambiguous about the terms and consequences of a transaction; when it comes to many types of unfair pricing practices, charging fees without informing customers in advance and using terms or conditions that are harsh, oppressive, or excessively one-sided or misrepresenting that a supplier's representation that goods or services have sponsorship, approval, performance, characteristics, accessories, ingredients, quantities, components, uses, benefits or other attributes that they do not have.

I took that right out of the act, sir. I quoted it word for word.

As I look at the act, as far as I can see, it doesn't pertain to anything like what may happen in the PACE program, certainly what we know has happened in the PACE program in California. In California PACE has been an option for several years for property owners that want to do energy upgrades for their property but don't have cash upfront. The complaint by county supervisors is that the program places liens on property owners that can make it difficult to sell or difficult to refinance a property. The loan is different from a standard mortgage. It is given out by private companies and is paid off by a property owner's property tax. The county, or in our case the municipality, then puts a lien on the property until that debt is paid.

Now, last week the minister stated – last week is not right. The week before the minister stated that it's also not going to be the municipality that pays for these energy projects and that Energy Efficiency Alberta isn't going to be the one that's paying for these upgrades. There will be a third-party lender. That being said, it looks like this program looks a lot like the States' program.

What happens after the loan is made is what the U.S. realtors are talking about. Down there the property owner was told that the debt that was incurred to do energy upgrades could be passed on to the next purchaser of the property. Apparently, according to the realtors, that never happens. When a buyer purchases a property with energy efficient upgrades, they are buying those amenities. When the property has a lien on it, even though it is through annual taxes, this is a debt against the property. In that case, purchasers will expect that the debt will be cleaned up before they purchase the property, that the lien will be erased.

It's just like if you borrow $10,000 or $30,000 or something to do a reno on your property. I think it would be fair to say that a prospective buyer is not going to pay for that refinancing. Now, down in California it seems that the property owner is usually unable to pass on PACE-related debt to the buyer. I'm afraid, once again, that I can't see anything in the legislation, Mr. Speaker, that tells me that an Alberta property buyer is going to accept PACE liens when buying a property with PACE upgrades.

Consider if a buyer agrees to take on the incurred debt that comes with a PACE property. That buyer then would have to qualify for this additional property tax in their mortgage as well. You'd have to qualify for the debt as well as the . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, under 29(2)(a), any questions or comments to the Member for Little Bow? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was riveted to hear about some of these concerns that realtors are bringing forward, and I would ask that the member finish his speech.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess, as I was saying, the proposed purchaser would then have to qualify for money that would actually pay the lien off as well. According to feedback that our caucus has received from Genworth Canada, the largest private residential mortgage issuer in Canada, any PACE property taxes would be included in their calculations of an individual's mortgage. This means that any potential buyer with a Genworth-insured mortgage approved for a PACE property would be able to afford a more expensive property, likely with the energy efficiency upgrades that are already paid off.

It appears that California's advice to those that were thinking of using the PACE program – the PACE program has stayed. County supervisors and realtors that have been involved with this PACE program suggested that it would be wise to spend substantial time in the home or the property if using this program or plan to keep the property as a rental property. That would be good use of the PACE program in their opinion.

Once again and without any malice of any kind, the minister told my colleagues that they only need to go to the legislation for all answers. Frankly, this legislation doesn't say anything about the safeguards for Albertans in any of the circumstances that I just mentioned. The Official Opposition's job is to make sure that legislation presented in this House is fair and responsible and palatable for Albertans. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, this is simply glorified financing.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there are already a lot of lending services for home improvements, from lines of credit to second mortgages to the CHIP reverse mortgage program. These services involve proper qualifications, proper qualification standards that protect the property owner and the lending companies. That tends to beg the question as to why the program is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, we in this House are charged with making a decision about whether or not the legislation should proceed now. We have to decide if the legislation is clear and concise for those Albertans that it will affect now. Considering that the legislation doesn't answer a lot of the questions that I brought up, how are we supposed to do that? I heard the minister say that he will be consulting the stakeholders through the summer and bringing the legislation back in the fall for the final decision. I hope I heard that right. If not, then this legislation is just a little too vague for me.

It seems that there are some questions that my colleagues and I have asked that are not intended to be out of line in any shape or form. They're serious questions about much of what this legislation is lacking, which, in my opinion, is detail. Of course, my biggest concern is how a property owner sells the property he has that is involved with the PACE program. Passing on an incurred debt for energy upgrades to a buyer of a property doesn't make sense to me. Those are two separate actions. I can't for the life of me understand how a buyer would purchase a property that has a lien on it, especially when their mortgage qualifies them for a property without existing unpaid improvements.

I haven't seen anything, including the Fair Trading Act, that talks about a property owner selling a property with PACE attached, so how are we to determine whether to support this legislation that will simply have difficult questions explained away in regulations and may negatively affect Albertans?

As I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to pass on some concerns of the Alberta Real Estate Association. Section 7 of the legislation under proposed section 390.7 on page 6 reads:

If, after a clean energy improvement agreement has been made, the council refinances the debt created to pay for the clean energy improvement that is the subject of that agreement at an interest rate other than the rate estimated when the clean energy improvement agreement was made, the council, with respect to future years, may revise the amount required to recover the costs of the clean energy improvement included in that agreement to reflect the change in the interest rate.

Specifically this provision introduces... [The time limit for questions and comments expired]

The Speaker: Hon. members, any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise to speak to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements. Yes, this is an act that intends to provide a mechanism for property owners to finance affordable energy efficiency, renewable energy, water conservation projects, upgrades to their homes, and several other things.

8:20

The Speaker: Hon. member, to clarify, it's on the amendment.

Mr. Orr: That's correct.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Orr: Yes. I am speaking to the recent amendment, and that was the next piece that I'm getting to.

I think the ideal and the minister's intention here are truly honourable and positive in intent. It's a great goal, but I do have serious concerns that it might be the wrong way to get there or that there is a great deal of need for taking a look at that. Because of that, I think that we should treat this as a reasoned amendment, that we should support the reasoned amendment and take a little bit better look at this and make this a truly safe option for Albertans to develop clean energy and green energy in their homes.

I'm a hundred per cent in support of green energy. I think I've said in this House before that I built a house just a couple of years ago. I did insulation to 50 per cent above code simply because it's smart, it's good value, it saves energy. That's both the walls and the ceilings. I also did not put in any hydrocarbon heating within that house. It's entirely renewable and electricity. Again, it baffles me that we need all kinds of government programs to inspire people to do things that are good and that are positive, that are actually helpful for our world and actually beneficial to us. They do save money. They're just plain the right thing to do.

Now, when we begin to create all of these tinkering, I guess I think of them as, and projects whereby government can busy themselves and make themselves look like they're trying to make the world a better place, I'm concerned because the unintended consequences often are much more challenging than we first think they are. I think that we really do need to learn from those who have been down this road before and who have discovered some very, very serious potholes in the road or, I might even say, some bridges out over some difficult spans.

The reasoned amendment does ask that the bill not be read a second time now. The reason for that is that it does not provide sufficient details, and particularly it does not ensure the protections for Alberta property owners to avoid the kinds of pain and litigation and municipal difficulties that have arisen with PACE programs in other jurisdictions. Some jurisdictions are actually now even cancelling their engagement of PACE programs altogether because of the difficulties and the problems that they've encountered. Now, I'm not saying that it can't be made workable, but I do know that in light of the experiences of others it's not necessarily that easy to make it workable and safe and efficient and that, in fact, it takes a very, very careful look at how we get there and what we are leading Albertans to.

The bill on the surface does look like a good piece of legislation, I confess. It is potentially intended to help advance clean energy improvements in Alberta, potentially support the development of more clean energy in the province. But while this is all well and good, the reality is that there are some very serious concerns, which I'd like to enumerate in the next few moments.

One of the concerns that I hold with this particular piece of legislation is that in the province maybe more now than ever in history the difficulty of buying a home is actually rising, particularly for low- or fixed-income owners. We have a combination of two major headwinds to home ownership in Alberta. One is that we have experienced in the last months significantly more difficult mortgage rules at a federal level, which are going to make qualifying for a home much harder for a lot of people who are sort of on the borderline income level to qualify for the particular home that they want to buy. Those more difficult mortgage rules are going to certainly disqualify some people from buying.

Then you add on top of that that the utility prices for a home are escalating significantly, the carbon tax and other reasons. The reality here is that utilities are part of the calculation for mortgage qualification. If we were to imagine that here in Alberta that we will possibly not too far in the distant future have the same kind of utility rates that fellow Canadians in Ontario are experiencing, the reality is that we could be looking at utility bills being very closely equivalent to the mortgage financing bills that people are having to pay.

In my riding – I just checked – the average price of a lower end home is only $250,000-ish. Financing for that is not that much, but if you were to add Ontario-style utility rates on top of that, the utility costs would almost equal the mortgage cost. Those kinds of obstacles to home ownership are in fact going to make it extremely difficult for many people to buy an entry-level home. Then we're going to begin to add further debt burden onto them. But in this case, with the PACE program, they may not really realize the impact of that additional debt. By allowing them to participate in these programs regardless of income level checks, it could mean disaster for their families, as has happened in other locations. It could mean the loss of their property.

I'm just concerned that the details of these kinds of things and the due diligence of making consumers aware of the implications of this kind of additional debt burden on the purchase of their home may actually push those who are already struggling to experience home ownership into a deeply difficult position. That's why I think that we also need to really ask ourselves – it isn't in the legislation – if there should be a required educational piece that goes along with this program. In other jurisdictions the problems have arisen from contractors and others who promote and push the program as a way for them to do their business, but the homeowners don't quite understand. When you're only sold the rosy side of everything, people don't understand the risks and the potential dangers of the program. It could cause serious issues. I think there needs to be a required educational piece for every person who signs on to this.

The question is: is that going to happen? Who's going to be responsible for that? Who's going to be accountable for that? In other jurisdictions the qualification of potential purchasers got left completely out of everybody's thought. It's not the contractor's responsibility to do finance qualifying. There isn't a bank directly involved. The municipality doesn't want to qualify the financial ability of potential consumers. Who does this? It has led to significant difficulties, particularly when you have a program in which eligibility is not based on income levels or on how much debt a person is already carrying. There's no requirement to even check credit scores to see if they're capable of carrying this extra debt load. These are major concerns. What will happen to those who unwittingly and unintendedly end up in a situation where their payments are more than they can afford to manage? Who's going to bail them out? Are they going to get bailed out, or are they going to then become just further victims of unintended consequences of a bill?

I think we also really have to ask the question of contractors. I mean, I understand they want to make a sale. There's an incentive to do that. There's an incentive to promote extensive upgrades. There's an incentive to upsell. You know, you get going and: well, just add this and add this. Every piece they can add on improves the viability of the job for them, but where does it leave the homeowner? As I said a moment ago, it's not the contractor's responsibility to qualify that. Who's going to monitor and hold accountable the contractors who sell and upsell this whole thing?

You know, we try to put in consumer protection, but I don't see it here in this particular bill. I really hope that the minister will resolve these issues over the summer since he says that that's his intent.

Another problem I have with this legislation that's been brought to my attention is that buyers and sellers all of a sudden have a point of difficulty in reaching an agreement. Homes have definitely become harder to sell in regions where there are PACE loans attached to the home. The new purchaser doesn't want to buy them. The seller maybe doesn't even get enough money out of their house to actually cover the thing. It can lead to very disastrous situations, especially in those circumstances where families are forced to sell because of financial necessity.

I mean, even in this downturn here in Alberta the number of repossessed homes has gone up substantially. I could see that being even worse if there are PACE agreements attached to many of these houses. It's a potentially disastrous brew of things. There needs to be protection in place.

You know, it took many decades in Canada for us to figure out how to create a safe mortgage system that doesn't get mortgagees in trouble. The Americans didn't figure that out very well, so they had their financial crisis a few years back. At least in Canada we were able to protect most of our citizens from those kinds of predatory mortgage practices. I want to make sure that this doesn't become a predatory loan attachment to their taxes that is going to create the same sort of difficulty in these kinds of situations.

It's a necessary thing that these questions be examined. Really, the way this looks at the moment, the only necessary requirement to have a PACE program is that you have a home that needs upgrading. It doesn't matter if you qualify. It doesn't matter if you can afford it. It doesn't matter if your credit limit contributes to it. If you've got a home and you want it, you can have it. I mean, it's the highest level of retail mortgaging: put everything you buy on your credit card. Then people end up finding themselves unable to meet their credit card debt and having to declare personal bankruptcy. People need to be aware of these risks and rewards.

Another concern that I have is: what will the terms of this borrowing, or debt attachment, to their title actually be defined as? I mean, what will the interest rates be? How often will the interest be triggered? What fees and penalties will be involved? What kind of repossession triggers will there be? Will there be any forgiveness of any kind for missed payments as you can get on a mortgage currently? There are so many questions here. The reality is that in many cases, I suspect, you can probably get better money – let's remember that this is just all about buying the use of money. You can probably buy money cheaper from a home equity loan or a line of credit than what these have proven to be in the U.S. Again, that needs to be taken into consideration. Will people be aware that they can actually shop around and get the same thing by just doing their own home equity line of credit or an equity loan? These are very real questions.

Making it supposedly so simple generally tends to be making it so simple that people get sucked into something they didn't quite understand, and then they have serious buyer's remorse after. We don't want to create an environment where our citizens have buyer's remorse. We try to protect them from predatory lending. Let's make sure we don't do that with this particular piece of legislation.

Another big piece of this, of course, also questions that need to be answered, again sort of just left to regulations – maybe; we hope; we'll see – is the requirement for disclosure. PACE property tax loans may not actually be clearly disclosed because there's no requirement on it. Most lenders would check the tax, but maybe not all do. I mean, I've had people come to me after having bought a house, and they find out things that they should have asked before they bought and that everybody would have thought they would have asked, but they didn't. There's nothing at all in this legislation that ensures transparency in selling a property with a PACE property tax piece added to it. I would hope that the real estate agencies will actually make that happen.

The Speaker: Any questions under 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you. I, again, am very interested to hear about how poorly rolled out this PACE program is, especially when you see the failures across the United States when it comes to this, so if the member could please continue, I would enjoy it to hear the rest of his speech.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Orr: Yeah. I won't take too much more time, but I do have some concerns that we make this thing safe and actually good for our Albertan citizens. Leaving too many things to regulation is difficult. I mean, we have Bill 6, the farm tax. We still don't have the regulations for it. How long will it take to get safe and workable regulations for this? Some of these things need to be worked out a little bit sooner rather than later, and these questions should be answered before the legislation is rolled out rather than roll it out and then try to figure out how to make it safe later. That's part of my concern. To just trust that somehow it'll all work out in the end generally leaves a few victims along the way who learn the hard way, and by them we learn what has to be fixed. I would hope that we don't have to do that kind of thing.

While bank mortgage rules are tighter, there's real challenge for people who are new homeowners or seeking to become new homeowners at least, and I just think we need to be very careful how we approach this.

So I would encourage everybody in the House to actually support the reasoned amendment that's before us at the moment. Thank you.

The Speaker: Any other questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?

Any other members who wish to speak? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to this amendment. Currently, as I understand it, there are 31 states in the U.S. as well as one province in Canada that have PACE programs. Some of the states include California, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska. We also have British Columbia. So there's quite a wealth of knowledge about PACE programs in different jurisdictions. I believe that using the lessons learned from those jurisdictions, it's possible for us in Committee of the Whole to introduce any sorts of amendments that might be helpful in making the bill more robust for both municipalities and consumers.

PACE is a financing tool. It has capital coming primarily from private investors who are looking for secure, long-term investments. While I can appreciate some of the comments here regarding education of consumers and contractors and municipalities – I think those are all very important – at the end it's a financing tool that has a side effect of being an incentive to install retrofits for energy efficiency. But the most important thing to remember is that it is private capital by and large that's going to be financing this. They're looking for secure, long-term investments, and they're not apt to be lending money that's going to be defaulted on. So I think that's something else we want to keep in mind in terms of more information about this particular bill.

Another point that I'd like to make is that right now solar installers are already facing significant business downturn while consumers are waiting for municipalities to create their programs and implement them. That means that right now they are seeing a downturn in their investment. If we were to pass this particular amendment, refer the bill to committee, that means that there will be an even further downturn for solar installers. These are by and large independent small and medium businesses, and they certainly can't withstand further delays in their income streams that would be as a result of referring this bill to committee.

For all of those reasons, I cannot support this amendment, and I'd like to encourage my colleagues to vote against it as well. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment to second reading of Bill 10 lost]

The Speaker: Hon. members, we will now resume debate on the motion for second reading. Anyone?

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to close debate.

Mr. S. Anderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all the members that were up speaking earlier. I appreciate it. There were a lot of good questions that were asked. As one of the members said, I did say that we are going to consult through the spring and the summer – well, I guess it's straight into summer now – and bring it back in the fall with all of that information to make sure that everybody can vote on that. That's what we do in this House, that's what I did with the MGA, and that's what I promised to do here.

I'm excited about it. I've talked to many builders, realtors, homeowners, private homeowners, nonprofits that are excited about it. I'm excited to get it going and to have some conversations outside of this House with more people so we can bring something positive forward that's going to be a game changer for this province.

With that, I'll just close debate. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

Mr. Cooper moved that the motion for second reading of Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day three months hence.

[Adjourned debate on the amendment May 17: Ms McKitrick]

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk, of course, about the hoist amendment and Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, an act to secure Alberta's energy future, because it's not that. This NDP government made huge mistakes on the backs of Albertans, on the backs of families, communities, the next generation and, of course, had to react by introducing a capacity market. I want to go there for a second and talk about the huge errors that this government has made financially and in their implementation, but when we're talking billions and billions of dollars, when we're talking about an essential part of an economy or a community or a household such as electricity, it only makes sense to take some extra time, to have some experts, to hear some different opinions, to take a long, long look at things to make sure that we get legislation, regulations, and any changes that are deemed favourable or necessary correct.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Of course, this government's need to push this through so quickly because of the uncertainty, because of the lack of security in the energy industry has maybe made them feel that they have to charge ahead at light speed, but again it'll be Albertans that will be facing all the consequences of that.

Let's start with the first step. Mr. Speaker, under the federal regulations Alberta was meant to phase out 12 coal-fired generating plants, as per the previous government's reasonable agreement, by 2029. Instead, what this NDP government did was doubled down and phased out the six remaining coal-fired plants that could have run past 2029. Keephills 3 was meant to go until 2061 and Genesee 3 to 2055.

So it was a stroke of a pen by the Premier, an okay by the Energy minister, but, Mr. Speaker, what that cost was $1.36 billion. You've got to ask yourself: who did that cost? It cost Albertans; it cost ratepayers; it cost taxpayers. Well, what it means, first of all, by my quick calculations, is that's 11,333 nurses that won't be on the front lines to help Albertans have babies, fix a sprain, or something worse. It's also 54 schools that could have been built, 54 schools that could have been built from scratch, never mind modernized, never mind improved, and never mind that could have gone to help rural Alberta.

You know, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the reasons that this amendment is necessary, so that we can get a gauge of the further cost, we can get a look at the further damage that this government is doing to our economy.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I want to come back to where we were at under the previous government: 2016's wholesale price of electricity averaged 1.7 cents per kilowatt hour, of course, as a result of the open, competitive market. It was meeting a fast-growing demand for electricity in Canada. Now, what I want to talk about is the fact that from 2001 to 2016 competing generators added over 8,000 megawatts of new supply; 8,000 megawatts. We had a situation in Alberta where the supply was about 50 per cent greater than the demand. What a great position for Alberta families, communities, and businesses to be in. What a great position, where we had a bid-in electric generation situation, where we had competition, where we had great pricing, we had the opportunity, and we had growth of demand.

Of course, what this has done, Mr. Speaker, has made it so that electricity generators will be paid not to produce; will be paid to be ready in a competitive market. I want to talk for a second about this. We all know that the government had to put on a 6.8 cent cap.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I've heard it many, many times in this House, but it still is astonishing that it wasn't mentioned. I'm still surprised when I sit and talk to Albertans in coffee shops and I tell them that the taxpayer is the one that covers the cap for the ratepayers. My goodness, the ratepayer has a cap, but guess what? The taxpayer doesn't. No cap for the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I think we were only about eight days into this fiscal year, so somewhere around April 8, when we actually hit, I think, 8 or 9 cents a megawatt, already over the 6.8 cent cap. That day cost Albertans I believe the number was $9 million. Of course, the report that I spoke about earlier in the House today, the debt and the interest burden that this government has placed on younger Albertans: I put it out there that it's $50,000 in extra tax that a young Albertan who's between, I think, 25 and 35 years old is going to have to pay, $50,000 in extra tax just on this NDP interest. I put it out there that, you know, that person could instead buy a truck, take their family on a vacation. I put it out there that if that money was invested in an RSP, it might grow to $100,000 or $200,000, and that person could take care of their retirement. I had financial planners e-mail me and say: "I can do much better than that. Give me an opportunity to help that young man or that young lady."

Mr. Speaker, I contrast that with this government, that first of all adds that $50,000 burden to our young ladies and our young men and now adds this burden of higher electricity rates, with no cap on the tax, with no cap on how much the taxpayer may end up paying the ratepayer. Can you imagine what that could grow to for our kids and our grandkids and do to our ability to compete in the market?

You know, this NDP government has scared a lot of investment, a lot of business out of Alberta, because we know that today's deficit, today's debt, is tomorrow's tax, especially on business. But think of what it's doing to our youth, our youth that are faced with this additional $50,000 of NDP interest tax burden. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, if the price of natural gas goes up? Let's say that the price of natural gas were to double. Could you imagine what that would do to utility rates? It would absolutely be devastating to our young families and to our economy, to our seniors on fixed incomes and to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I feel the need to talk a little bit about Medicine Hat, the area that you and I both represent. I know that we're both so grateful to do that. Of course, Medicine Hat just attracted two substantial businesses, both who are considerable, huge electricity users. There comes a time when maybe these companies go to a different jurisdiction because this government has pushed it too far. Now, I don't know what arrangements the city of Medicine Hat made with them. I'm very, very grateful for the work that the people did and the opportunity to have these companies there, but I do know that a favourable electricity deal was part of it. It's a competitive world. These companies can go to many different jurisdictions. We've seen oil and gas companies move investment to Kazakhstan and Iran, jurisdictions that they feel are much safer, much more stable than an NDP Canadian jurisdiction. Think of what this destabilizing of our electricity market may do.

Mr. Speaker, it only makes sense to me that we hoist this bill, we go out and we talk to the experts. My goodness, there are all kinds of experts in this industry, from AESO to the industrial users, to market surveillance administrators and consumer groups, who all have a huge vested interest – a huge vested interest – in ensuring that our electricity prices are competitive, our supply is stable, and there's not too much risk.

Mr. Speaker, again, I feel the need to say that that risk includes the risk to the taxpayer, not just the ratepayer. We all know that when we looked at our utility bills the last, you know, few years, the cheap part of the electricity bills was the electric generation. What a surprise that eight or nine days into this new fiscal year we were already at 8 cents. We were already having the taxpayer have to dig into his pocket to pay the ratepayer. I think it was just short of $80 million that the Finance minister put in his budget for what he thinks will be the year's total for what the taxpayer will have to pay the ratepayer for securing Alberta's energy future.

Mr. Speaker, I think it'll be a few years till we see the total cost of this capacity market, this paying people not to produce, this situation where we were so ideological that we had to close down plants early, where we had to expose Albertans to all the risks of natural gas going up, where we had to expose Albertans to a less competitive market for creating jobs and for creating the wealth that we need to tax.

It has surprised me in the Alberta Legislature – and I've said this before – how we don't take more time with a lot of these bills and we don't send them, like I understand the federal government does, to permanent standing committees or committees where experts, where Albertans, where consumers, where investors can be brought in, and they can tell us their side of the story. I hear daily about a big solar plant that's taking up, I think, maybe a quarter section of land and is only 4 per cent efficient. Mr. Speaker, I'll be the first to admit that I hear that in Tim Hortons; I hear that in The Roasterie; I hear that, you know, in the coffee shops. I don't know that it's a hundred per cent accurate, so wouldn't it be great to have the experts in here? Wouldn't it be great for us to hoist this bill and take some time and actually give us time to go out and see what this capacity market will cost? Wouldn't it be great to hear maybe how the city of Medicine Hat found a little advantage and was able to attract those two businesses when other parts of Alberta couldn't?

No, no. Instead, that's not what we do. What we do is: because when the NDP decided that they had to shut down some fairly new coal electric generation plants quickly at the cost of I think the number was $1.3 billion, we have to double down. We have to now make sure, again, because the renewable market is not as reliable as a coal or a natural gas market, that we don't have disruptions. So we have to charge ahead and pay people just to be ready to produce electricity just in case we need them.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, somebody has to pay these bills. Somebody has to make sure at the end of the day that the debits equal the credits and we don't pass on any more hardship to our kids.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat?

Seeing and hearing none, the hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to speak on the hoist amendment for Bill 13. I think it's an honour to be able to talk about this because it's important to take caution when looking at this bill.

I believe that if we step back and take a bit more time, which a hoist amendment allows us to do, then we can see more clearly the consequences – or should I say the unintended consequences – that might happen as a result of passing a bill such as this. We owe it to ourselves, to current Albertans, and to all future Albertans to make sure that we get this bill right.

I frankly feel that it's necessary to speak to some of the components of the bill as it truly changes how our electricity market works. This bill takes us from an energy-only market to a capacity market, and in doing so, the electricity prices will be more expensive. As the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat has talked about, we're already seeing that. The NDP would argue that the cost to the consumer is capped and the price cannot go beyond 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour until 2021. The government is so offside with this that they had to set aside $74,310,000 in the budget to look after the potential shortfall of revenues to pay for this misguided agenda from the proceeds of the carbon tax.

What if this isn't enough to cover the costs? I'd like us to go back a couple of years so that we can see that there was a formulation, I think, of a plan by this government so the average costs could be paid for not by the consumers necessarily but by all Albertans in the form of debt. You have to bear with me because I'm going to go back to 2015.

In 2015 I recall that we were sitting here and we were discussing the budget. That was in the fall of 2015, and the government at the time said: we want to borrow up to 15 per cent of GDP. They said: "Well, we'll never use that much money, but trust us, we want to borrow that much money. It's just to be able to hedge, just in case we needed to have to borrow that much." Unfortunately, four months later we came back into the Legislature and we had another bill, another financial bill. It was Bill 10, Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016, which at the time took away the accountability of the Legislature with regard to how much it can borrow.

Looking back, then we knew that there was a problem, but at the time we didn't altogether know where the problem was heading. Going back to 2016 again, we got to have another bill, which kind of lends itself to what we have today with this bill. We had Bill 34, Electric Utilities Amendment Act, a bill that is arguably one of the smallest bills that I recall seeing in this Legislature, but it had tremendous consequences. Really, what the act said – and it only had a couple of points to it – is that “The Electric Utilities Act is amended by this Act”. That was the first point. The second point:

The following is added after section 82:

Loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee, 82.1 The President of Treasury Board [and] Minister of Finance may, on the recommendation of the Minister of Energy, make loans to the Balancing Pool and guarantee the obligations of the Balancing Pool.

Now we’re getting kind of a clearer picture of why they wanted to have the Fiscal Statutes Amendment Act, 2016: so they could borrow more money. Now we’re seeing that they have to borrow more money for this program as well. Here we see that they guarantee the obligations of the Balancing Pool by the Minister of Energy so that no matter how badly they messed up this file, they would always have a way to cover it. This will not be the consumers but the average taxpayer, who will be on the hook for whatever the shortfall is because the government can borrow whatever it takes on for this or any project and leave the taxpayers on the hook, Mr. Speaker.

Well, let’s just dip into this seemingly unending pot of debt that this government has set up through Bill 10, as I previously mentioned. This brings us to today. As a result of the coal-fired generation phase-out and the rush to push for 30 per cent renewables generation by 2030, the reliability of our electrical system seems to be compromised. The phase-out of coal-fired electricity: the federal government under Stephen Harper said that the existing plants built in the last 50 years would be grandfathered, meaning they would have up to 2030 to close or introduce carbon capture and storage technologies to reduce emissions. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there was an option for these plants to continue on.

What effectively has happened here, too close to home in communities like Hanna, Forestburg, Keephills, for that matter, is a premature closure of their coal-fired plants, and that is, frankly, harmful to these communities. This bill is a result of this government’s plan to phase out coal or to push for renewables. In doing so, this NDP government has compromised the reliability of the electrical system and has made it so that the electricity prices will be more expensive and less reliable.

What I’d like to draw your attention to are the communities of Hanna, Forestburg, or generating plants like Keephills 3, which was to close by 2061, Mr. Speaker, or Genesee 3, which was to close in 2055. Coal-fired electricity has made up over half of the electrical generation up to this point and has provided us with a safe, stable, inexpensive, and reliable base that Albertans could rely on. They were paid for what they produced out of the capacity market. Using renewables, there seems to be a problem because the wind, well, doesn’t blow all the time, and the sun, you know, just doesn’t shine all the time. The backup plan is simple cycle peaker plant generation to cover off for the wind. AESO demands that there will be a 15 per cent reserve margin, and neither wind nor solar can be used in this factor.

The good folks in Hanna and Forestburg, in all of Alberta, that I’ve talked to seem to have zero trust. In my riding they have zero trust in the NDPs when it comes to the electricity market here. They can’t get their minds wrapped around it. In fact, not only is reliability a factor in why these folks have no confidence in their ability to deliver reliable power, but so is the harm that they are doing to these communities. This is what makes passing this amendment so important. It will give time to the government to fully consider what the trickle-down effect to these communities may entail.

Take Hanna, for example, which will be losing about 200 jobs, Mr. Speaker. Those are full-time, great jobs that you can raise a family on, that are paid about $90,000 per year per job. You know, that’s a tremendous loss. If you’ve been to Hanna, you’ll know it’s a very small town. It’s a tremendous loss for these families and the town. These are great-paying jobs that are just going to be lost.

Simple math, Mr. Speaker: $90,000 per worker for 200 jobs is $18 million. Eighteen million dollars is going to come out of that community. Perhaps that would not be a huge loss of income or jobs in places like Edmonton or Calgary in pure numbers, but for a town like Hanna, that’s 7.5 per cent of their population. If you did the same comparison to, say, the city of Calgary and you did an initiative that cost the city of Calgary 7.5 per cent at the stroke of a pen, then Calgary would lose about 90,000 jobs. Ninety thousand. What do you think would happen to the economy and the housing market in Calgary if you did that? Well, I can tell you that the market would tank. So why does this government think that Hanna won’t be affected in much the same way when much of this money and the great-paying jobs are taken out of it? Not only are these direct jobs affected, but then there’s less money to go out for dinner, and consequently the restaurants suffer. There’s less money to fix up your home, and the hardware stores suffer. And the list goes on.

What has this government done to create a plan? Well, they felt quite magnanimous, I can tell you, because what they did was that they gave the community of Hanna $455,000. [interjection] Yeah, $455,000. They’re losing $18 million that they had in these jobs, but they’re giving $455,000. Do you really think that that’s going to be enough to cover the jobs lost, the $18 million in lost wages?

There’s a ripple effect that happens here in these communities. Take Forestburg, for example, where power is generated. Jobs have been lost. Towns like Halkirk, Alliance, Bashaw, Castor, Coronation, Donalda, Killam, and many more are going to feel the ripple effect just from Forestburg, with less money in the area. Most of these small towns will be impacted by the closure of coal-fired plants. All the pain that is hitting and will further hit these communities throughout rural Alberta is all for the sake of getting Alberta on what will likely be a more expensive, less reliable renewable generation system.

What seems to be missing from Bill 13 is an economic withholding. Companies that set up shop here in Alberta should not be receiving a capacity payment and then at the same time rejecting or denying the supplying of electricity when AESO wants electricity in order to spike electricity prices. This practice is intentionally pricing power generation out of the market to drive price spikes in many jurisdictions, and in many jurisdictions it is regarded as illegal. Without addressing it here in Bill 13, is this government accepting this behaviour and considering it permissible?

Here is another strong argument for hitting the pause button, as my good friend from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has suggested with his amendment. Mr. Speaker, this government is so concerned with new technologies and is putting money into them through their carbon emissions reduction plan. Given that coal is going to be used for power generation here in Alberta until 2030 – that’s another 12 years; it’s 12 more years till 2030 – these same coal plants will still be operating. For a government that claims to care about the environment, I have to wonder why there seems to be no investment – and you can correct me if I’m wrong – in the research and development of clean coal technology. I haven’t seen any clean coal technology investments coming out of this. Technology advancement could reduce Alberta’s emissions over the next 12 years. That would be a good thing.

If successful, these technologies could be exported to the world and have a far greater impact on the environment than any carbon tax or any domestic policy action within Canada because the rest of the world would be benefiting from lower carbon from the coal-fired plants that are still going to carry on. As a bonus – the government should like this – they would be diversifying our economy here in Alberta and meeting one of the specific goals that this government has set out. I challenge this government to use our own resources, both people and products, to make coal-fired emissions meet the standard that the previous federal government had laid out and not wait 12 years and then just shut them down.

As long as I've been an MLA, Mr. Speaker – and I realize it's only been for a little over three years – I've had the privilege to speak to coal communities around Alberta and visit the various sites around Alberta. They truly – truly – take pride in what they do. They take pride in the fact that they have provided Alberta with clean, reliable, inexpensive electricity for many years. These same coal-fired plants and communities were and are willing to step up to the plate and make coal generation cleaner. This government, in my opinion, is missing a big chance here to diversify our economy and create a cleaner environment for both Alberta and the world and at the same time fight for Alberta jobs and cheap electricity. There are so many things that you could have.

In closing, I believe that we should all agree that this bill should be hoisted and not read for at least another three months, for the arguments that I've put forward and for the arguments of my colleagues and for the reasons that I've just stated, so that we can have a fulsome chance to talk about how to properly secure Alberta's future electricity and, further, to ensure that the reliability of our electricity system is not compromised as this government attempts to transition from an energy-only market to a capacity market. I believe that it is imperative to all Albertans that we look . . .

The Speaker: Are there any questions under 29(2)(a) to the Member for Battle River-Wainwright?

Are there any other members who wish to speak to the hoist amendment? The Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just have a few short remarks about this particular motion. I'm happy to stand in support of this motion. I think that the capacity market is pretty complex. There are a lot of different things that have to happen in order for this transition to be completed. It's extremely complex.

In January 2017 the Pembina Institute actually hosted a webinar to help stakeholders understand. It was called Capacity Markets 101. By slide 4 I was pretty confused; I felt quite lost. Slide 8 includes a number of variables that I'm not familiar with at all, including net CONE. I'm not too sure what that means. Variable resource requirement curve; system supply curve for annual, extended summer, and limited resources; clearing price: all of these things intersect in lots of different ways.

By slide 13 it becomes extremely complex: marginal value of system capacity, annual resource price adder – I don't think it's a snake; I think it's a price – extended summer price adder. The wheels of understanding, for me, just completely fell off.

Time is definitely required to more fully understand the bill, what the capacity market will look like as a result of the bill, to hear from stakeholders about how the bill will affect them, and to more clearly understand which pocket the costs will come from. Will it be a tax pocket, or will it be a consumer power bill pocket?

For those reasons, I'm happy to support this motion, and I urge everyone else to do the same.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments to the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill under 29(2)(a)?

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 18
Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and move second reading of Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

This year the Statutes Amendment Act seeks to make 36 changes to 19 acts. I will shortly list the acts: A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, Alberta Human Rights Act, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, the Auditor General Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Consumer Protection Act, the Election Act, the Electronic Transactions Act, the Employment Standards Code, the Financial Administration Act, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the Municipal Government Act, the Occupational Health and Safety Act, the Public Interest Disclosure (Whistleblower Protection) Act, the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, the Public Service Act, the Public Service Employee Relations Act, the Vital Statistics Act.

As indicated at first reading, the amendments before you today are largely housekeeping in nature, updating details to align with similar legislation and current needs. They will provide greater clarity and efficiency in providing services to Albertans.

That being said, I ask all members to support this legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any members wish to speak to Bill 18? The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I thank the hon. minister for bringing this bill forward to make a number of minor administrative or technical detail changes in law. I believe there is nothing controversial here and that the government is not authorizing any direct spending of money, nor are we making criminals out of law-abiding citizens with these changes in law. Bill 18 touches on laws administered by the departments of Justice and Solicitor General, Labour, Municipal Affairs, and Service Alberta. We broadly support the changes being proposed as they are relatively minor in nature.

But there is a change I want to highlight, and that is a change to the public service transparency compensation act. When I first went through Bill 18, I was surprised at how many times I read the addition of "Election Commissioner" in Bill 18. It appears that Bill 18 needs to make a change in order to allow the public disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary. We noticed the need to add the Election Commissioner to the public service transparency compensation act.

Now, I find it interesting that back in the debate on Government Motion 16, to appoint the Election Commissioner, government MLAs were a little sanctimonious when we suggested the need to publicly disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner. On May 1 I proposed an amendment that would have required the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary, but government MLAs spoke firmly against the amendment and spoke that, well, it was all going to happen in due time and the legislation was already in place that would allow it to happen. The Member for Calgary-Currie talked about:

As my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Centre already explained earlier in debate in great detail, in fact there is legislation called the sunshine list that will have that information . . .

the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary,

. . . become public in its due time, like for all other officers of the Legislature.

But here we are now, and we see that the government MLAs voted against the amendment to disclose, and I can't imagine why. They asked why it was necessary to single out this particular legislative officer, but it is a matter of administrative fairness. Now the salary disclosure is back, and it's right here in Bill 18.

We know that the amendment was necessary because the Government House Leader admitted on May 8 that he provided inaccurate information to the House about the public disclosure of this officer's salary. I quote, from Hansard for May 8, the Government House Leader.

I'd like to briefly correct a misstatement that was made by me when this matter was under debate last week.

And then he also talked about the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, that there were provisions to correct that. There was also a comment in there – I found it very interesting – that:

I can further advise that no contract has been signed by Mr. Gibson, and there is therefore no contract to disclose. If and when a contract is signed, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to discuss the matter of early disclosure.

I'm wondering if the minister is actually prepared to discuss that at this point because I would suspect that a contract has been signed.

I further note that this change for public disclosure still won't have the effect of letting Albertans know the details of their secret deal with the Election Commissioner until after the next election, but I suppose we're not surprised by that. Therefore, we support this, but once again the government is late to admit their mistakes, and it's only when held to account by the Official Opposition that they are forced to do what is in the best interests of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, no matter our party stripe, we're all elected to make Alberta a better place. Sometimes the partisanship can get a little excessive, and little fix-ups like this one can be avoided if we drop our partisanship.

On that note, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all MLAs to support this bill and that we adopt it expeditiously.

The Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to agree with my colleague. Whenever you've got minor changes to large pieces of legislation, it's always important that we push this through fairly quick. I do have a few questions, though. Going through this page by page, I'm just curious why we needed to change, on page 1, the Fair Trading Act with the Consumer Protection Act. I am curious if the reasoning is because they just want to be able to announce that they have now protected wonderful consumers. If that's what they're doing, then that's unfortunate.

Now, to move forward, page 2. I'm curious why the Election Commissioner is going to need access to the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. From the job description, which I have in front of me, I don't see anywhere in here where it shows that he needs to have access to our Alberta Corporate Tax Act. So if the government can explain to me exactly why the new position needs access to this when our existing Chief Electoral Officer has this ability already, that would be great. It does seem that we're duplicating responsibilities.

Now, on page 3, what we've got is that the Chief Electoral Officer is having "the Election Commissioner" added as a subclause underneath that. Does that mean – and I apologize if this has already been explained – that the office of the Chief Electoral Officer is above the Election Commissioner? It is a subsection throughout this entire clause. Will the Chief Electoral Officer be running the new office? I think that's a reasonable question. It is just strange when you start looking at: every other office is its own point or its own clause. So when you're putting something underneath it like that, it just seems that the government is putting it in there. I'm just not understanding why. I'm not stating that the government has done anything wrong, but it would be nice to have some description.

When we move these miscellaneous tax acts – you can see that it's fairly thick; there's quite a bit here – and when we start going through them, we want to make sure that everything in here is actually a minor adjustment. When we do have questions like this, it is good if the government could get back to us with clear, concise answers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Any questions or comments under 29(2)(a)?
Are there any other members who wish to speak to Bill 18?
The Deputy Government House Leader to close debate.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we have had an opportunity to hear some of the concerns from the House, but given that these are fairly minor changes to various acts, I suggest that we close debate at this time and call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

The Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Noticing the time, I think that I would like to make a motion to adjourn for the evening and begin tomorrow at 9 a.m.

Some Hon. Members: Ten.

Mr. Feehan: Tomorrow is Tuesday: 10 a.m. Thank you.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 2

Growth and Diversification Act

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, good morning, Madam Chair, and may I wish all of my colleagues here a merry pipeline Christmas. I'm glad to get some recognition from across the aisle, deeply desired by myself, of course. Nothing makes me happier than getting praise and smiles from the gentlemen across the aisle.

I'm pleased to speak with everyone today about Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. I want to begin with a brief overview of the legislation that's before us this morning. As highlighted during first and second reading, the bill outlines a number of actions that will enable government to continue spurring innovation, diversification, and job creation in Alberta. The bill will enable government to reinforce two successful tax credit programs, the Alberta investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. It will create a new interactive digital media tax credit to encourage the growth of the digital media industry, a burgeoning sector that has great growth potential here in the province, and it'll support 3,000 tech spaces in postsecondary institutions across Alberta and new scholarships to help grow a future high-tech workforce.

We know that investment is the key driver of growth and diversification in Alberta's economy. This proposed bill will ensure that government continues to promote economic diversification and investment in new products, services, and capital projects while supporting employers and entrepreneurs in creating jobs and encouraging high-tech training opportunities in Alberta. We are investing in Alberta businesses and in our future workforce to help build a recovery that works for everybody and a recovery that lasts.

Second reading of Bill 2 concluded this week, and I'd like to thank the hon. members for their support and for sharing their questions on the legislation. During debate opposition members were critical of some of the economic policies our government has introduced and questioned whether these policies have hurt Alberta's ability to grow successful businesses and attract investment. I want to take a moment to highlight that Alberta is and will continue to be an attractive place to invest and do business under our government.

Alberta has world-class universities and colleges and one of Canada's youngest and best educated workforces. Albertans across all income ranges generally pay the lowest overall taxes compared to other provinces. Albertans still benefit from no provincial sales tax, no payroll tax, no health care premiums, and the lowest gasoline and diesel taxes among all provinces. Our corporate tax rate remains comparable to those in other provinces. We also have an innovative, flexible capital market and vast trade and investment opportunities across many sectors. Last year private-sector investment in Alberta was two and a half times higher than the Canadian average, and we are on track to lead the country again this year by a wide margin.

We're seeing many other signs of investor confidence. Amazon chose Alberta as the location for its new fulfillment centre. Google recognized the tremendous research capacity at the University of Alberta and brought their first-ever international artificial intelligence research office to Edmonton. Johnson & Johnson recognized our huge strength in life sciences and opened up their first-ever Canadian virtual lab at the U of A, which enables our researchers to commercialize their research and access new markets.

These companies are only the latest high-profile companies that we've attracted to Alberta. RocketSpace and Swoop are coming to Calgary, Champion Petfoods and Pinnacle to Parkland county, and Cavendish Farms to Lethbridge. At TEC Edmonton, a business incubator focused on emergent technology growth, Merck is investing in Alberta companies that create jobs here in the health sector, and Air Canada just announced that they're adding a direct flight between Edmonton and San Francisco, linking the incredible high-tech work happening here with Silicon Valley.

Mr. Cooper: In San Francisco.

Mr. Schmidt: Perhaps the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills can more easily live out his dreams of being a hippie in San Francisco when he's not spending his time here in the Legislature.

Mr. Strankman: Just like you?

Mr. Schmidt: Yeah. Well, you need hair to be able to put flowers in it, Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: I see it.

Mr. Schmidt: There are many more examples to point to, but thanks to the strong policies and economic supports our government has rolled out over the past few years, Alberta remains a choice destination for investors. Things in Alberta are looking up, and Bill 2 will help keep this momentum going and build on this growth.

Another area that members raised some concerns with was the success of past initiatives, particularly the Promoting Job Creation and Diversification Act. This act gave the Minister of Economic Development and Trade the power to establish the programs that focus on supporting workers and job creators, and that's exactly what our government has done. Over the past couple of years we've been focusing our efforts on stimulating economic growth and supporting Alberta job creators during the economic downturn.

Our government has launched a suite of initiatives to support Alberta businesses. Some of these initiatives included cutting the small-business tax; launching the Alberta investor tax credit, which offers a 30 per cent tax credit to investors who provide capital to eligible Alberta companies; launching the capital investment tax credit, which encourages companies to make timely capital investment by returning a percentage of the companies' costs, including the purchase of machinery, equipment, and buildings; restoring training programs for new entrepreneurs while adding an array of supports for established ones; providing $10 million through the Alberta entrepreneurship incubator program to scale up support for entrepreneurs and early-stage innovative companies; adding new Alberta export expansion package programs; increasing the loans and investments available through Alberta Treasury Branches, the Alberta Enterprise Corporation, and the Alberta Investment Management Corporation's heritage fund to improve access to venture capital financing and build stronger connections with Alberta entrepreneurs; working with the Business Development Bank of Canada to establish a billion-dollar fund for new business loans; and expanding consulting and mentoring supports to businesses with the BDC so that entrepreneurs can launch more start-ups, innovate, and expand.

The province experienced a serious and prolonged economic shock. Our government took action, and now Alberta's economy is looking up. We've seen 90,000 new full-time jobs created, primarily in the private sector. Exports are up almost 30 per cent. Manufacturing is up, and we're expecting to be near the top of the economic growth in Canada again in 2018, at 2.7 per cent growth.

The success of the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act was another area where members wanted more information. I'd like to highlight that this past December marked the one-year anniversary of the unanimous passing of Bill 30, the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act, and this January marked a full year since we began accepting applications for the capital investment and Alberta investor tax credits.

Since then, both programs have seen significant success. In the first year of the Alberta investor tax credit we distributed 97 per cent of the annual program budget, representing more than $28 million in issued tax credits. These tax credits leveraged $94 million in investment in Alberta's small and medium-sized businesses. Terrapin Geothermics is a prime example of one of the innovative companies who was able to offer its investors tax credits through this program. Terrapin Geothermics produces an electricity-generating device that uses geothermal energy from nonproducing wells and industrial waste-heat sources to create electricity.

I'd also like to highlight that since launching, the program has trained additional staff to ensure that eligible companies can access tax credits for their investors in a timely fashion. With this additional support in place we expect to see even more successes as the program continues. This tax credit has helped foster a more diversified economy, encouraging investments in nontraditional sectors such as health and clean technology. We expect $100 million per year of investment in new and growing small businesses by continuing to fund and support this program.

Through the capital investment tax credit we are encouraging capital investment that will help make Albertans' lives better by supporting hundreds of new jobs and injecting millions of dollars into the economy. Overall, 35 companies across the province have been conditionally approved for a total of $62 million in credits through the first and second rounds of the capital investment tax credit. Together these credits are expected to support more than 3,000 jobs, with companies investing more than $1.2 billion to upgrade their facilities.

Some examples. Aurora Cannabis Enterprises received conditional approval of a tax credit for the completion of its Aurora Sky project, a state-of-the-art cannabis manufacturing and processing facility at the Edmonton International Airport. The facility will be the largest of its kind in the world and, once operational, will run three shifts, employing 330 people. Madam Speaker, that's not just money that's going up in smoke.

Seven Generations Energy, a liquids-rich natural gas developer, received conditional approval of a tax credit to build a natural gas processing facility in the Montney-Kakwa River area. The project will create about 150 construction jobs and dozens of direct permanent jobs once operational.

Tolko Industries, a forest products company, received conditional approval of a tax credit to restart its strandboard mill in High Prairie and modernize two mills near Slave Lake and High Level. Tolko supports an estimated 1,500 direct and indirect jobs through its three operations across northern Alberta. You, Madam Chair, know first-hand how important those jobs are to the people of your own constituency. These numbers speak for themselves.

Now, one of the members raised the question of whether or not the companies that accessed these tax credits over the past year actually needed them. Innovators and investors routinely claim that there are funding gaps in two phases of a product's development and business cycle: first, the seed and start-up phase and, second, when the business is operational but needs to expand and survive. The AITC and CITC seek to address these funding gaps by incenting investments in businesses during these two critical phases of the business cycle.

I want to re-emphasize the fact that Alberta businesses have been asking for these tax credits for years. We introduced these tax credits at a time when businesses were struggling with low cash flow to boost investor confidence and incent timely investment decisions, and I think the volume of applicants trying to access these two programs is evidence that Alberta businesses see value in them. For example, the president and CEO of Tolko Industries had this to say. "With the assistance of programs like the CITC, we can invest in northern Alberta with confidence and continue to be economic drivers for these communities." Together these tax credits are enhancing investment in businesses and regions across the province.

Now I'd like to take a moment to address last year's implementation of the Alberta investor tax credit and concerns about the implementation of the interactive digital media tax credit. For the first time we introduced an investor tax credit here in Alberta that other provinces have enjoyed for decades. You can imagine all the companies that were waiting at the starting line for us to announce this, and as soon as the gun went off, we received a significant number of applications. The internal controls and procedures we have in place ensure that the investments being made meet the spirit and intent of the program. Our AITC program staff have been playing a valuable role, meticulously going over each application to ensure that the companies applying are truly Alberta-based companies whose assets are here in the province. Since launching, the program has also trained additional staff to ensure that eligible companies can access tax credits for their investors in a timely fashion.

Like any new program, after launch we also listened to our stakeholders actively making their way through the application process, and based on comprehensive feedback from the companies using the program, we made a series of amendments last year to ensure that the program best suits the needs of Albertans. Reviewing a program's success is best practice, and we will continue to review program processes, requirements, and guidelines for all of our programs to encourage growth and diversification for businesses, reducing barriers along the way.

We're also committed to pushing for more inclusion and diversity across all sectors. Alberta is a diverse place, and our workplaces, policies, programs, and services need to reflect this. We've included provisions under the AITC that enable an enhanced tax credit for investors who invest directly in companies where the majority of the boards of directors as well as the CEO are members of an underrepresented group. Where we can make immediate changes and incentives to help bolster inclusivity, we will make those changes.

In terms of the interactive digital media tax credit the proposed program design will reflect information gathered from consultation with stakeholders that have deep expertise in this sector. We engaged with a number of stakeholders, including IDM companies, industry networking groups, and postsecondary institutions during in-person sessions in Edmonton and Calgary, where most of Alberta's IDM companies are based. Each session included a discussion of program design and eligibility requirements. A continuous evaluation approach will be used to ensure that the program is successful.

Members opposite have also flagged the need to do an interjurisdictional comparison with other provinces to review the tax credit models that other provinces have used to enhance access to capital for small businesses. I'd like to re-emphasize that this work has already been done. Let me assure you that the AITC includes many of the proven aspects used in other jurisdictions, including British Columbia and Nova Scotia. For example, British Columbia's venture capital tax credit program has seen a positive impact on increase in equity available to small businesses, job creation, and economic return.

In terms of the capital investment tax credit we found that many jurisdictions around the world offer investment tax credits to specific industries, including Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, and the United States. In fact, companies engaged in manufacturing and processing are common recipients of these investment tax credits.

In terms of the interactive digital media tax credit Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia have for years offered similar programs that alleviate labour expenses through a refundable tax credit to IDM companies. With support from these programs the three provinces have successfully supported a nascent industry and built world-class IDM clusters in Toronto, Montreal, and Vancouver. For example, Quebec has seen an increase of 42 per cent in the number of video game studios since 2015, while Ontario and B.C. have seen increases of 58 per cent and 19 per cent respectively.

That said, it's important to note that not everything that works in other jurisdictions is appropriate in the Alberta context. We took these interjurisdictional comparisons into account when developing all of our tax credit programs, and we adjusted the programs where needed to make sure that our programs would work here in Alberta. In addition to conducting a crossjurisdictional comparison for our tax credit programs, we also engaged directly with businesses and industry groups to inform each tax credit's development. In all of our consultations we found that our stakeholders were supportive of these tax credits and their ability to offer opportunities for economic activity, diversification, and employment growth.

In fact, a number of Alberta companies have been quite vocal in their support for an interactive digital media tax credit, including BioWare, Serious Labs, Beamdog, XGen Studios, and CodeHatch Corp. Alberta businesses have been asking for tax credits like this for years. By extending the Alberta investor and capital investment tax credits and introducing the new interactive digital media tax credit, we're taking action to level the playing field with jurisdictions that offer similar incentives and attract investment from growing industries.

Members opposite are concerned that the scope of our tax credits is too narrow and doesn't support a broad enough range of sectors. I'd argue, however, that our tax credits are very open and far reaching. The capital investment tax credit is not sector specific and is available to companies across the province involved in manufacturing, processing, and tourism infrastructure making an investment of $1 million or more. The same can be said for the Alberta investor tax credit. The investor tax credit has impacts across the economy, offering a tax credit to investors who provide capital to Alberta small businesses doing research, development or commercialization of new technology, new products, or new processes and to businesses engaged in interactive digital media development, video postproduction, digital animation, or tourism.

While the interactive digital media tax credit is more targeted, this is a high-growth sector that develops products that impact sectors all across the economy. We see a lot of potential for this program to support significant growth in the interactive digital media industry and beyond. Not only is Alberta's interactive digital media industry involved in the development of video games and digital content that are available through a variety of digital platforms such as mobile devices, tablets, game consoles, and web applications, but it also develops interactive digital media products and technology, including augmented reality and virtual reality, that have wide applications outside of digital games, including in the health, energy, education, real estate, e-commerce, advertising, and film and television industries. An interactive digital media tax credit will help foster a more diversified economy, encouraging the growth of the interactive digital media industry and other related creative industries right here in Alberta.

Now, another concern raised was that sector-specific tax credits mean that we are picking winners and losers. I'd like to take a moment to re-emphasize something that I highlighted earlier. The Alberta investor and capital investment tax credits focus on activities that are applicable across a variety of sectors. When it comes to the interactive digital media industry, stakeholders have consistently advocated for a tax credit program similar to those in other Canadian jurisdictions, and the government of Alberta research and modelling has determined that additional support is needed to meet the needs of this industry.

Alberta interactive digital media businesses are competitive with other provinces' cost structures in terms of labour, rent, utilities, and other operating costs. However, Alberta companies are not disadvantaged due to higher costs or poor performance; they are at a disadvantage because of the significant long-term subsidies offered in other Canadian and American jurisdictions. Research, analysis, and economic modelling have confirmed the need for targeted, consistent support that helps offset labour costs in the IDM industry. By introducing an IDM tax credit here in Alberta, we will level the playing field with other Canadian jurisdictions that have already had similar programs in place for years, bringing more tech entrepreneurs and companies to the province while preventing those already here from relocating to other jurisdictions.

We strongly believe that this is much-needed and strategic support to ensure that Alberta does not fall behind and continues building on our technology growth in the province. We want to foster a more diversified . . .

The Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. I was very interested to listen to what I felt was a response to some of the questions. I do actually appreciate that from the minister, yet there were a couple of things in there that I had questions about. If the minister could respond to these, it would be, again, very helpful.

First of all, one of the things that the minister said was that they had heard from Albertans that this was something they had asked for extensively. Then he went on to quote the people who had asked for those subsidies, and the names that he quoted were from companies that would receive the subsidies. It does make sense, Madam Chair, that these companies would look for those subsidies. I mean, I don't know any company that wouldn't look for free money.

I guess the question is: has there been any analysis of what Albertans in general would like to see? Would they like to see these boutique taxes? We've used the term – and he has used the term as well – “picking winners and losers.” Is that something that Albertans are looking for in general? He has said that there is an appetite amongst Albertans to be able to have this. If this is true, I would be very interested to see the analysis done by the government to show that Albertans in general are interested in this.

The other question that I have. I'll just kind of point out that as I thought about these tax boutiques, these subsidies, I am the first to admit that there actually have been successes in this province in the past that have used this model. One of them down in my area is the irrigation districts. I can say that as we look to the south in Montana, they have not done what they needed to in terms of being able to have the capital injection into those irrigation districts, and they look to the north into our province enviously. So I do accept that there are models where we've seen a net value to being able to do this.

I want to just go back to this issue here because there was a comment made, again, by the hon. minister that said that if we don't have the same kind of subsidies as other jurisdictions such as Quebec, he mentioned, then we're falling behind. Now, the question is: let's say that we offer the same subsidies and we incentivize companies to come, maybe because we have other comparable advantages to those other jurisdictions such as lower tax rates or a better climate, whatever it is. Are we not going to be in a situation where these companies now are going to at that point be looking once again, shopping for the best deal in Canada or any jurisdiction throughout the world, really, where they can say: “Okay. Well, now Quebec has upped the ante, and they're going to increase the subsidy to X amount.”

I guess the question is: where does the rabbit hole end in the subsidies? Is there a point where you say: “You know what? We've got to jump off. It's getting too rich for this industry or too rich for us to be able to subsidize this industry”? At any given point does the government say: “You know what? It's not worth that investment”?

So those are a couple of questions that I have. I've tried to be fair with the questions, partisan out. I'm just looking for some more clarity on this issue. I've said already that I have seen some examples where this has worked, and I just want to know whether or not this type of vehicle would facilitate that.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll thank the member for his comments and questions, and I'll attempt to address them. When we look at – and the Minister of Advanced Education mentioned a number of different companies that have been asking for this, but this goes far beyond the three or four that he included in his speaking notes. You know, I can tell this Chamber that I've been travelling around the province over the past couple of years speaking with many different chambers of commerce, many different economic development entities and associations, business associations throughout the province, who told me, once this ministry was created, when our Premier created it in October 2015, that they had asked previous governments for decades for a tax credit for investors and one that would help spur capital investment.

Now, of course, capital investment: you know, when the price of oil was fairly high into our oil sands or into our gas plays, there wasn't a problem to get that. Capital investment in some other areas was a little more tricky. But especially in the past couple of years with the price of oil, when it collapsed, it was a challenging time to get significant capital at that moment in time, when we needed it to help the economy recover. So with the capital investment tax credit, as the Minister of Advanced Education explained, we conditionally approved just over $60 million worth of tax credits that have leveraged $1.2 billion worth of investment. So I think the numbers in that example speak for themselves as far as investment that maybe wouldn't have happened or that wouldn't have happened at this moment in time without that bit of incentive, so that 10 per cent nonrefundable up to $5 million.

On the investor tax credit, for example, the province of British Columbia has enjoyed an investor tax credit since 1985. When we've talked with economists as to why British Columbia's economy is quite diverse, one of the tools – I'm not saying the tool but definitely one of the tools – was an investor tax credit, that helps a couple of things. First of all, again, it's not sector specific; it's sector-wide. This applies to agriculture, food processing, manufacturing, forestry – I mean, you name the sector – tech space, health innovation.

It helps companies that need to scale up, and it provides an opportunity for Albertans to invest in companies in their own backyard, which is something that I'm very proud to offer Albertans to be able to do that. So companies are able to scale; they're able to grow; they're able to hire more people. At the same time, Albertans are able to invest in their own companies, their neighbours, their communities. Really, it's a win-win as far as a tax credit.

Just to the member's first point, this is something that businesses and the business community all over the province have been asking for. This goes far beyond the number of companies that have received the credit. Also, I can tell you there were a number of venture capitalists and those looking to invest and wanting to keep their money here at home. Their dollars are being lured to other jurisdictions. So this essentially levels the playing field. That is what we're trying to do here.

The other point that the member brought up. We talk about the digital media tax credit, again something that the provinces of British Columbia and Quebec have enjoyed for a number of years. Quebec has a very, very strong digital gaming/interactive digital media cluster within the province due in large part because they do offer an incentive, because for those companies, their number one cost is labour. These are highly paid, highly skilled jobs that aren't project based. They are, you know, on a continuum, on a long term. We know that we have incredible talent that we are graduating here in the province of Alberta. Part of the challenge is that once the talent graduates, people looking to set up companies are lured to other provinces.

Let's take BioWare, for example. Once upon a time BioWare had about 800 employees here in the city of Edmonton. Due to, again, Quebec's attractive tax credit program, approximately 500 jobs have moved from Alberta to Quebec over the past 10 years. There are, I think, approximately 300 employees in Edmonton or in Alberta that are employed by BioWare. The reason that they've stayed and that they haven't moved shop altogether: what they told me is that, again, you know, the founders are from Edmonton. They're an Edmonton-based company. There's a loyalty to our province and to our city, but again as a company they need to be competitive. Again, when you have other jurisdictions that are providing incentives to lure them away or also to help them reduce their costs, a company has a hard time being able to justify staying in a jurisdiction that is much more expensive to do business in.

Now, we have a number of advantages over other provinces. We know that. We talk about that all the time as far as no health care premiums, no payroll tax, no PST, and that is significant for companies. But in the space of digital media and tech, again, we have the talent. We have incredible postsecondaries across the province. In fact, I'd love to – I learned that many of the grads from GPRC are hired by BioWare when they graduate. I mean, that's, you know, a very positive story. We want to see more companies in that space in the province pop up and grow. I'm using BioWare as an example, but before the member jumps up and says, "Oh, this is a credit designed for BioWare," not at all. We've spoken with a number of small companies, with start-ups, and others that are looking at developing talent and their companies here.

I think, you know, really, what we've done and what we've been able to do is a trifecta to attract and retain talent and support companies in the tech space here in Alberta. We have not only the digital media tax credit; we also have made a commitment to 3,000 new spaces in our postsecondaries that are tech related through the Minister of Advanced Education and also scholarships to be able to attract and encourage students into the STEM field, especially women. We want to see a much more equal number of men and women in that space.

Then we also have worked very closely with the city and the airport and Air Canada to get a direct flight from Edmonton to San Francisco. I can tell the House that when I'm down there on trade missions, there is significant interest in the Bay Area back into Alberta. They recognize that there's talent. One of the barriers that companies that I sat down with had mentioned was that a direct flight is absolutely critical. So with our new linkage now between Edmonton and San Francisco on that front, we have three different outcomes or tools that are able to help us continue to develop this space.

On the comment to the member as far as where we landed and studies, we did a comprehensive analysis, looking at other jurisdictions, like I had mentioned – British Columbia, Quebec, other jurisdictions in the U.S. as well – as far as different programs that are offered to help support the business sector and entrepreneurs. Again, our eye was on levelling the playing field and ensuring that we're supporting our companies in our areas of strength. You know, when it comes to interactive digital media and gaming, I mean, this is an industry that is worth hundreds of billions of dollars world-wide, and we have an incredible amount of talent here. This is one of the ways that we're supporting that talent. We're supporting our companies to grow and expand, to stay here in Alberta.

I mean, I'll leave my comments there. But what I do want to point out and what I find fascinating is that the members opposite, when Bill 30 first came through this House a year and a half ago, all voted in favour of the investor tax credit and the capital investment tax credit. I don't know if this has something to do with their leader change. Back then, of course, they were under the leadership of Brian Jean, and all spoke about how this tax credit was beneficial, how they saw that this would help our companies in the province grow. Now, today, under their new leader suddenly the tax credits are not something that they're interested in doing. You know, I've put the question out to folks on a number of occasions. I would love to know why the Leader of the Official Opposition is not interested in and would essentially kill all three of them.

The Chair: Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Chair. As we are in Committee of the Whole, I do believe that the Minister of Advanced Education could have answered those questions. I appreciate the answer, but again I want to just point out that I've asked the question now, and I didn't receive an answer. The question is on specifics. I'm going to ask it in a different way so that the minister can answer.

In order for the government to be able to provide a tax credit or a subsidy to a business, the only way the government can do that is if the government takes a dollar from the taxpayer. This is why the question is a relevant question. In order for the government to be able to go to the taxpayer and say, "I'm going to give $1 of subsidy to this company, XYZ company, but I need to take $1 from you in order to be able to do that," they have to sell that idea that the subsidy is in the best interest of Albertans, not just in the best interest of one specific industry or one specific group.

Once again, I don't know any business out there that wouldn't take free money. Actually, maybe there is a company. I remember when down in the States Ford decided that they weren't going to take the bailout money. GM decided they were going to. Dodge decided they were going to. So maybe there are some companies out there that actually take the high road on this.

But, generally speaking, I would say that if a company has the ability to receive free money, unencumbered by shareholders or by market forces but free money, they're going to take it. There's an interesting book called The Law by Frédéric Bastiat that talks about this specific issue, you know, written long ago. Some of the things in the book, obviously, I don't agree with, but that is a point that he brings up, that if you actually give an incentive to someone, they're going to take it. That's just a natural inclination and disposition of people.

So my question is still the same. If they take a dollar out, if they say that they're going to give a dollar in subsidy to a company, in order for them to be able to do that, the only way that they're going to be able to do that is if they take a dollar from the taxpayer to be able to do that. That's why the question is very relevant to this House.

Now, again I go back to this point. I have seen situations where this kind of vehicle has provided a net benefit to Alberta in irrigation down in my riding. Also, in the oil and gas industry we've seen successes. We've seen failures in the oil and gas industry with this kind of vehicle as well. If the government has this empirical evidence that would allow them to go forward with full confidence that Albertans in general, not just the people who are actually getting this subsidy but Albertans in general, are one hundred per cent onboard, would the government be willing to table the evidence to show that Albertans are onboard with that? If there's anybody on the government side that would be willing to answer that question, I would be very interested in hearing it.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, amendments?

Bill 16 Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I am really pleased to rise and speak to Bill 16, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, here at Committee of the Whole. I want to thank all the colleagues for their commitment to this bill and, through the debate that has happened so far, for identifying their concerns, which I'm happy to address.

Bill 16 would ensure elections are fair by requiring associated parties to adhere to a single combined spending limit. The proposed amendments would guarantee a level playing field by ensuring that associated parties cannot pool separate spending limits to support the same candidates. It would also increase transparency by enhancing reporting requirements. Our amendments put forward a simple concept: electoral fairness requires that associated parties be subject to the spending limit of a single party. If Bill 16 is passed, associated parties must share that $2 million spending limit for a single party.

There were several concerns raised during the debate at second reading, and I'd like to just quickly address each of them. One concern was raised as to whether the Election Commissioner could conclude that political parties that decide not to run a candidate in an election in the same constituency might be considered associated parties. To clarify, what this bill does is that it prohibits a registered party from circumventing or attempting to circumvent an expense limit through collusion with another registered party. The bill would also enable the Election Commissioner to investigate whether two or more registered parties are associated registered parties. An agreement between parties not to compete in a constituency is unlikely to be considered collusion. It's unlikely that the Election Commissioner would make a determination that registered parties are associated based solely on an agreement not to compete in a constituency. Of course, the decision as to whether political parties are associated is the commissioner's decision to make.

Another concern was whether agreeing on specific issues would make political parties associated. The commissioner will not be using a single criterion to determine whether parties are associated. When determining whether or not parties are associated, the Election Commissioner must consider all relevant information. The criteria include whether the parties have common leadership, political programs, or policy statements, whether one party controls another, whether parties have the same advertising material and brand name, and the nature of agreements and interactions between parties.

If parties are concerned whether they could be considered associated, they would be free to approach the Election Commissioner in advance of an election to seek advice on whether or not they'd be in compliance.

A concern was also raised as to what would happen to political parties that decide to get together after an election. A member asked whether there would be penalties for this or whether another election would be called. It's really important to emphasize that this bill is about electoral fairness. If registered political parties are closely associated, electoral fairness may require that these parties share a single, combined spending limit. There is nothing wrong with political parties being associated. Parties that are associated would not be subject to fines simply because they are associated, nor would another election be called.

We were also asked whether a federal political party and a provincial party would be considered associated under this legislation. To clarify, Alberta's election financing rules only govern political parties that are registered in Alberta. During the debate at second reading opposition asked why the proposed amendments do not enable the merger of political parties. Again, we want to emphasize that our government's intent is to preserve the fairness and integrity of elections in Alberta. We are closing a loophole that could weaken our democracy, and protecting our democracy is not a partisan issue. We recognize that the opposition has publicly agreed to stick to the spending limits of a single party. Our amendments ensure that our democracy stays healthy by making this an official requirement of all future elections.

We've also heard concerns from members about how unions could force their members to donate to a political party that they don't necessarily support. To clarify, only individual residents of Alberta may make political contributions. Both unions and corporations are prohibited from making political contributions. We have been working hard to find the right balance between taking big money out of politics and making sure that citizens of our province can exercise their constitutionally given right to participate in democracy.

In addition, last year Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, brought forward the most comprehensive legislation in the country addressing third-party entities. We've limited their participation in the election period and have made it more transparent. Now, a member of the House expressed concerns about the newly appointed Election Commissioner. Under Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, which came into force December 15, 2017, the position of Election Commissioner was created as an independent officer of the Legislative Assembly. The position has responsibility for ensuring compliance with and enforcement of certain obligations of the entities regulated under the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

I would like to remind the members that the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices reviewed applications for the position and passed a motion, with a recorded vote, recommending to the Legislative Assembly that Lorne Gibson be appointed as Alberta's first Election Commissioner. The Legislative Assembly has now passed that motion to appoint Mr. Lorne Gibson, and that is now in effect.

We're working to preserve the fairness and integrity of Alberta's democratic electoral system for all future elections within our province. We've discussed all our proposed changes with the Chief Electoral Officer to ensure they are workable. The Chief Electoral Officer shares similar goals around transparency, and we've taken his recommendations into account.

I hope I've been able to address some of the concerns raised during second reading. These amendments would enhance transparency and protect fairness in election spending. Fair elections depend on all parties and candidates having a level playing field so that ideas and not money decide who wins. Bill 16 is another step to preserve the fairness and integrity of all future elections in our province. I'm happy to continue debate now that we are in Committee of the Whole. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, the boutique legislation of all boutique legislation, that has clearly been created, as mentioned previously, as an act to prevent the conservative movement from being one conservative movement. All sorts of interesting titles could be used for this particular piece of legislation because it's specifically written for the Official Opposition. So we take a little bit of pride in the fact that the government is writing such specific legislation to do something that the Official Opposition is also already committed to doing, and that is to respect the election laws and the intention of them. I find it a bit unique that we're here.

I appreciate the comments from the minister; however, one question that she didn't answer, although she alluded to it, is the single largest question that is before us, as far as I'm concerned, and that is: why didn't the government just create legislation that would allow political parties to merge? The reason why is that they're concerned that that would not be of benefit to the NDP Party and could potentially cause challenges to them. So instead of doing what is actually about creating fairness and an equal set of rules for everyone, particularly on a go-forward basis, the government made the decision to create a piece of boutique legislation that only addresses one problem.

It's my guess that in 30 – well, who knows how long? – or in some period of time in the future this type of legislation will actually be repealed and replaced with something that makes much more sense, that actually creates a more democratic playing field for everyone and actually allows parties to function in the way that they see fit and that is best for their membership. You know, I think that when you write boutique legislation like this, it's the type of legislation that gets very old very quickly. There's lots of legislation that's still on the books that needs to be removed, legislation from decades and decades ago. My sense is that this is exactly the type of legislation that is being created, because of the very, very, very, very small problem that they're trying to prevent.

Like I said, Madam Chair, my sense is that it's because it is most expedient for the NDP Party in their desire to perhaps prevent other political parties from merging that might like to, be it the Liberals and the Alberta Party, or maybe the NDP might like to merge with some other leftists in the province at some point in time. This is no way to govern. This is no way to govern, to create such small, boutique legislation.

Now, having said all that, Madam Chair, while I don't agree with the path which the government has chosen to solve the concern that they have before them, I will be supporting Bill 16 because the intention of Bill 16 is to do exactly what the Official Opposition has already committed to doing, and that is respecting the intent of the elections law and not having multiple legacy parties each spend to the limit of $2 million in our election endeavours.

Now, we all know that this got started with taking big money out of politics. Goodness knows we've heard that on numerous occasions from the minister and from folks on every side of the House. But maybe it would be advantageous to just remind the House that the biggest money in politics is not actually union money, not actually corporate money; it is actually government money and the amount of money that the government spends advertising itself in the lead-up to the election. So there is a significant advantage that continues to remain for the government. You know, we saw them spend $9 million alone on advertising the carbon tax. I'm not sure if that's what they called it, but they spent $9 million alone on advertising the carbon tax and speaking specifically about that.

The Official Opposition, in the upcoming provincial election, will be able to spend $2 million total. I was certainly not a math scholar in high school or at any other point in time in my life, but one thing I do know for certain is that $9 million is more than $2 million. So we will see over the next year the government spending significant amounts of money, taxpayers' money, advertising the work, good, bad, and indifferent, that the government is doing. We'll see very clearly significant numbers of announcements in target areas that the government is targeting. We'll see funding announcements in areas that are specifically important to the government and them using massive amounts of dollars in the lead-up to the election. So let's be clear. There is still big money in politics, and it is taxpayers' money that is going to be funding a lot of the work that this government is doing.

One of the other big problems with Bill 16 and the legislation that's before us is the fact that we've been here before. The government's track record on election financing is not ideal, and in fact if it wasn't for the Official Opposition, we probably would see government-funded political parties. You know, my hon. colleague from Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre will tell you that the government spent a full summer trying to stack the deck in their favour in funding political parties. So we've been here before. We have seen election financing pieces of legislation two, three, four – I think this is the fifth time that it's been before the House. The government fails to consider all of the challenges before them, so we wind up creating legislation that is ad hoc and, as I mentioned, boutique legislation.

One of the problems that we saw even just last session was that we passed another election finance bill, Bill 32, and the government failed to consult with the Chief Electoral Officer. He wrote at some length about his concerns around that. Now I see that the Chief Electoral Officer has sent a letter to the chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices requesting nearly $9 million to cover the costs of Bill 32. These are the types of ramifications that the government doesn't consider.

The Chief Electoral Officer is asking for provincial door-to-door enumerators and will be required to hire 7,000 of them. Now, I know that government is into job creation, but they seem to only be creating government jobs. I think today was a good reflection of that. There are significant costs, $9 million of costs that come along with Bill 32. While it appears that Bill 16 doesn't have any additional costs associated with it, one thing that it does do is to provide significantly more swath for the Election Commissioner, and Bill 32 was the deliverer of the Election Commissioner. These two things are almost undividable. The government chose to put an Election Commissioner in place, and now there are significant costs that are associated with that, including other pieces of Bill 32 that are problematic and have significant costs to the taxpayer.

During Bill 32 we spoke at length about the fact that the legislation required door-to-door enumeration, which was ridiculous. Door-to-door enumeration is astronomically more expensive than targeted enumeration, has significant safety risks, and the Chief Electoral Officer was not listened to at any point in time with respect to door-to-door enumeration. Every single province has moved away from it, but this government has chosen to put workers at risk, which is exactly what the Chief Electoral Officer's primary concern is around, the risk to enumerators. There are a whole bunch of challenges before us, and it's going to cost $11 million.

These are the types of implications that come when you write legislation based on ideology and not based on due diligence. The due diligence on Bill 16 was to allow political parties to merge, but it didn't suit the narrative of the government, so now we see Bill 16, legislation specifically drafted to prevent political parties from merging but also preventing them from doing what they've already committed to do, or preventing them from spending $6 million in the case of the two legacy parties in the United Conservative Party. For the record, even if we did that, it would be less than the government is going to spend on government-funded advertising in the lead-up to the provincial election. The Leader of the Official Opposition committed to not doing that, so that's exactly what we would have done regardless of Bill 16.

We've seen so many of these bills on electoral reform, on electoral democracy. You know, in an ideal scenario these pieces of legislation would have been rolled into a single bill. Rather, we've seen bill after bill after bill coming forward in little bits and pieces. It's my guess that if we have a spring session in the lead-up to the 2019 election, there will be another piece of legislation specifically targeting the Official Opposition, to try to handcuff the Official Opposition in the days leading up to the next provincial election. The government is starting to scramble to do everything that they can to rig the system, to put in place obstacles to the Official Opposition's ability to be able to compete fairly in the next election.

Again, the biggest obstacle is the fact that the government is going to be spending big taxpayer dollars on their campaigns and their announcements in the lead-up to that election, whether it's carbon tax money that they're announcing or infrastructure projects in target ridings and otherwise. It is a significant concern that we have as we continue to see the government try to do everything they can to hold on to the chair of government.

Now, there are a few positive housekeeping measures inside Bill 16, which are good to see. In fact, the fines for registered parties, registered candidates, registered nomination contestants, and the chief financial officer of these entities who exceed the spending limits will increase. These current fines are quite small and, really, kind of an incentive for those wishing to take advantage of the law, so it is good to see that they are providing some additional strength.

The legislation will also mean that election advertising period rules will also apply in by-elections, which is good, which will bring advertising done by third parties during a by-election under election rules as opposed to political advertising, which is where they currently fall. Election advertising rules apply starting December 1 prior to the election and end on the day of polling whereas political advertising, of course, is year-round.

On balance, we will be happy to support – well, we will reluctantly support Bill 16. Again, Bill 16 is more about the government's concerns about the Official Opposition than it actually is about creating good policy for the province of Alberta. Governing is about governance and good governance, not about writing legislation that is against your opponent. Any time that a government is doing that, we need to take stock and pause and ask ourselves the question: what is really the intention of this legislation?

While we support the fact and are committed to the fact that we will not try to circumvent elections legislation or the intent of that legislation, we're disappointed that the government wrote legislation to create and serve its own needs, not the needs of the greater political sphere. It doesn't encourage political engagement. It doesn't encourage political parties to potentially merge if that is what their membership wants.

Again, the government has a long track record of removing choice, not encouraging choice, and this is just another example of that, of trying to govern private entities, of trying to govern parties and creating rules that would prevent them from doing what might be advantageous for them but not advantageous for the government.

So we will be supporting the bill, with some significant reservations, and look forward to the rest of the debate as we move forward.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak about Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, and it's a pleasure to do so. I was part of the Ethics and Accountability Committee, where the opposition parties really pulled every trick to not get dark money out of politics. You know, they even organized a walkout, which actually has become quite a habit for the United Conservative Party. It seems like when the conversation turns into something that makes them feel uncomfortable, they like to get up and leave, and it's a shame. It's a shame to this House, it's a shame to democracy, it's a shame to their constituents, and it's a shame to Albertans.

I'm proud that our government is moving forward with transparency because that is what Albertans deserve. They deserve honesty, which is why the first bill that we passed as government was Bill 1, which bans union and corporate donations to make elections fair. Albertans deserve to have elections decided on the basis of who has the best ideas, not on who has access to the most money. I know the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills mentioned that we pass a lot of bills here in this Chamber to make elections more fair and to have more transparency in Alberta.

You know, I mentioned Bill 1. We also passed Bill 35, the Fair Elections Financing Act, that lowers the cap on political donations to $4,000 per individual per year. We have a $2 million spending cap and a combined spending limit of $50,000 per candidate when the election is there, when the writ is dropped.

We also passed Bill 32, An Act to Strengthen and Protect Democracy in Alberta, and this was a really important bill. I know that the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills had a lot of questions on this bill, so I would like to maybe talk about it a little bit to clear the air. You know, if it was up to the United Conservative Party, this would never have happened. They want to keep dark money in politics because it really benefits them. It doesn't benefit their constituents, but they like to pretend that it does. So I would like to stand up here and make sure that everyone has a clear understanding of what Bill 32 is, and then we'll get into Bill 16.

Bill 32, making elections fair and more accessible, was passed to make elections in Alberta more accessible and help them run smoothly, efficiently, and fair. Bill 32 amends the Election Act and the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act to enhance the fairness and integrity of elections, encourage greater voter participation, make it easier for people to vote, enhance the efficiency of elections administration, and enhance the fairness and integrity of elections.

The new limit on third-party spending: now, this is something that we talked about in great detail in the Ethics and Accountability Committee. As I said before, the opposition parties were very much reluctant to talk about this, to pass that in the committee, to the point where, like I said before, they walked out. You know, I'm really glad that we have a government in this province that has Albertans' backs, that aren't going to be pulling little tricks like that. I know that when they go door-knocking, if they even do that, they probably don't go talk to their constituents and tell them that they pulled that one. I'm pretty sure they're probably feeling a lot of shame right now.

Talking about the third-party spending limits, they were applied starting I think December 1, 2017. Third parties will not be permitted to spend more than $150,000 on political advertising before the election is called. Of that $150,000, no more than $3,000 can be used to promote or oppose the election of one or more candidates in any one electoral division. So money spent on canvassing and organizing events to promote or oppose a party or candidate will be considered advertising expenses towards this new limit. Political parties, leadership contestants, nomination contestants and candidates will be prohibited from colluding with third parties such as political action committees to circumvent spending or contribution limits.

You know, I think this is something that's extremely important and, like I said, makes elections fair. We're doing this because our government respects democracy, and I think it's about time that there is a government that actually does that.

You know, I want to get into Bill 16 right now. The primary purpose of this bill is to ensure that the democratic process remains in the hands of Albertans. To accomplish this purpose, the act regulates how election spending works in the province of Alberta. The act states that parties cannot spend more than $2 million during an election period. The election period runs from the writ drop to the close of the polls on polling day. Also, no one candidate can spend more than $50,000. These amounts are adjusted for inflation. Nomination contestants may not exceed 20 per cent of the spending limit for a candidate. The changes proposed in Bill 16, if passed, will ensure that the associated parties must comply with the election spending rules set out in the act. As well, minor changes to ensure transparency in the electoral process are being introduced.

I know that the United Conservative Party said that out of the goodness of their heart they wouldn't be doing this, but frankly I don't think Albertans trust them. When I go to the doors in my constituency, I certainly hear that. They're very grateful and they're happy that they have a government that has their backs and that they're not going to be pulling a fast one on their own constituents.

It's concerning when I'm listening to the other side. They say that they agree with this bill, but I hear a lot of resistance. If it was up to the United Conservative Party, they would keep dark money in politics. Albertans do not want that, and that's why they're losing trust in that opposition.

You know, I'm proud to stand and support Bill 16, as I was proud to stand and support Bill 1, as I was proud to stand to support Bill 35, as I was proud to stand to support Bill 32. This is just another level of transparency that this government is bringing to this province, and I encourage all members of this Chamber to support it.

Thank you very much.

11:30

The Chair: The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I do know the hon. member said that he's better looking than me. I assume that may be true . . .

Mrs. Littlewood: Agreed.

Mr. Nixon: . . . though my mom always said that I was a good catch. The hon. member from Vegreville-Viking is now heckling about what I look like. It's kind of weird where we end up in this Chamber.

But what was really, really weird was the comment that we just heard from the Member for Calgary-Bow in relation to her time on the Select Special Ethics and Accountability Committee. I also was a member of that committee, Madam Chair, as you do know, and the points that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow just laid out are not what took place in that committee. That's what confuses me. That really takes away from the debate in this place and how this legislation connects to it. One of the things that the hon. member spoke about was that she alleges that the opposition walked out of the committee. Nothing could be further from the truth. The committee met for months and months and months, but there was a day where the government was stacking the deck during the process, and there was a stage where the opposition walked out to say: this process is not being fair to the minority.

Now, do you know who led that process, Madam Chair? The Minister of Infrastructure, the hon. Member for Calgary-North West, organized that walkout. She was right at the time. She put together the main points of why that walkout happened for those brief moments to make it clear that this government was attempting to stack the deck against Albertans to make the system to their advantage. Now, I don't agree very often with the Minister of Infrastructure, but in this case I agreed with her wholly on her having the courage to stand up and point out what this government was doing. Their minister – I see that the Member for Calgary-Bow doesn't want to talk about that – led the opposition members out of the room to draw attention to the abuse of process, from our perspective, that the NDP was doing.

Now, what's also interesting during that process was how much the Minister of Infrastructure spoke out against this government's process, this government's deliberate attack on democracy, and this government's deliberate stacking of the deck to try to advantage them. The hon. Member for Calgary-North West, the Minister of Infrastructure, a member of the government across the way from me, has pages and pages in Hansard during that committee where she speaks very vocally on behalf of her constituents about the crazy and inappropriate behaviour of this government. And I don't use the word "crazy" lightly, but do you know what the main thing was that the government was doing during that committee, Madam Chair? They were trying, including the Member for Calgary-Bow, who just spoke, to get my constituents and your constituents and the people of Alberta to pay for her campaign expenses and to pay for that party's campaign expenses.

So, yes, if that is disrupting the process, as she just accused us of, darn right, Madam Chair, we disrupted the process. We fought hard every day during that process to stop this government's abuse of taxpayer dollars and to stop that Member for Calgary-Bow from getting taxpayer money for her campaign expenses. Side by side with the Minister of Infrastructure, I'm glad that we got to fight that. What was great about that was that we were successful with the process that we used to hold the government to account for their ridiculous attempt to take taxpayer money for their campaign expenses. In the end, they stopped.

The Chair: Hon. member, can I just remind you that we're speaking on Bill 16 and not about a previous decision or previous committee, so if you could maybe stick to that.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm responding to Bill 16 and to the comments from the Member for Calgary-Bow, who spent 20 minutes talking about Bill 32 and what happened in that committee. That's the response that I am discussing and its relation to this piece of legislation.

Dark money in politics is something else that this member wanted to talk about. The biggest dark money, I guess, if you want to use that term, in politics is the government's purse. This government and that Member for Calgary-Bow have worked diligently to stop the opposition from being able to pass legislation that would stop them from abusing taxpayer dollars during elections. They have stopped that at every turn. They don't want to get that big money out of politics. They just want to get one kind of big money out of politics whereas the opposition has always said that we need to get big money out of politics, period, including government money, stuff like not being able to make election announcements with money during by-elections, a bill that they made sure to send to committee because they didn't have the courage to vote against it in this House. So they had to send it somewhere to hide it and to try not to stand up for their constituents, just like they did when they tried to take their constituents' money to pay for their campaign expenses.

This bill, though, at its core, as the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills articulated very well, Madam Chair, has nothing to do with the issues that the Member for Calgary-Bow raised, not one of them. It is a piece of legislation that was hurriedly put together, that actually seems to have the broad support of every member of this House, which is great. The minister and the government all of a sudden became concerned because they realized that while they were going out of their way to uphold the law that would not allow the Wildrose Party and the PC Party to merge, they accidentally created a situation where both of our legacy parties would be able to spend money inside the next election, something we'd already committed to not doing.

The minister – and I thank her for recognizing that – recognizes that we signed an agreement that would not allow that to happen, but she wanted to make sure that that could not happen in the future. We agree with the point of that, which is why we agreed to honour the spirit of the legislation. What we find alarming is that this minister and this government continue to bring election changes to this House and then get it wrong every single time, and then we have to have another bill come forward to this Assembly and then try to fix the mistakes that they make.

Mrs. Aheer: Like the PPAs.

Mr. Nixon: Well, there's other legislation – you're right – on other things where they have continued to do it. It's a pattern of this government. But specifically on electoral reform, which is what this bill has to do with, this is what this government does. They make a mess of it. They fall short because they won't talk to the people that are involved. They get their blinders on, Madam Chair, and are so focused on trying to deliberately stack the deck to their advantage that they end up making mistakes that they don't think of. This is a prime example of that. This is a mistake they didn't think of.

Instead of this time sitting down and getting it right, allowing those two parties just to come together, which is the simplest and cleanest way to deal with this situation, they still want to try to make things harder. It won't work, but they still want to try to make things harder. Instead, they make it overly complicated.

The other thing the Member for Calgary-Bow spoke about in her comments in regard to dark money – I think she was primarily referring to PACs. It's interesting. At the end of the committee that she referred to in her speech, all members of that committee, from all parties, voted unanimously to continue the work of that committee, recognizing that we had not gotten the work done on PACs, that we had run out of time. Every member, including the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, the member from Vegreville-Viking, the Member for Calgary-Bow – and the list goes on and on – voted with the opposition on that. They voted with the opposition on that without a doubt. You can check Hansard. It's there. It's on the record. I know the member from Vegreville-Viking may not remember her vote, but that's how she voted, to extend the work to make sure that we could get PACs ready. But they didn't do that.

Instead, they chose to bring a hurried bill to the floor because they were very concerned that the opposition was raising more money than them at the time. They brought that legislation. It was broadly supported, getting union and corporate donations out of politics. And what happened? You go a couple of months later, and they realized: "Oh, wow. That committee was right. We didn't get it right on PACs. We fell short. We haven't dealt with that." Now we come back to the next sitting, and there's another bill here trying to deal with the issues that they forgot to deal with. The problem with that is that they never talked to anybody again. They went into a room somewhere and came up with a piece of legislation with some good stuff in it, but it fell short. Then we got to the next sitting, and they had to bring in another piece of legislation to fix it. Now here we are in yet another sitting with another piece of legislation to fix it.

The point, Madam Chair, is this. Our party will support the intent of this bill. We'll vote for the bill because it is what we've already agreed to. But we are calling on the government to stop focusing on stacking the deck in our election system to their advantage and to put the focus back on Albertans, to put the focus on getting the legislation right here that will make sure that our election system is fair for generations to come. Even when this government is on the opposition side of the House in little under a year, they're going to deserve to have fair elections. Everybody deserves to have fair elections. Most importantly, Albertans deserve that our election system is fair, and they fundamentally reject the NDP's stance to continue to try to stack the system to their advantage while getting legislation wrong over and over and over and having to come back to this House and say: whoops; we made a mistake.

Then, lastly, Albertans will not allow the Member for Calgary-Bow and those other members who spent that entire first summer of their legislative term trying to stack the deck to their advantage and trying to get constituents to pay for their campaign expenses. It's disappointing. They should stand up, and they should finally apologize for it, because I can tell you, Madam Chair, that the constituents of Calgary-Bow and other ones are extremely disappointed in that behaviour.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Listening to the Member for Calgary-Bow, you know, I have to say that I've been in this Chamber for six years. I'm honoured to be here and watch a number of things play out, but, yeah, just a few things have happened since I've been elected, in 2012. There's this conversation around dark money, and I want to ask the Member for Calgary-Bow or any other member of the government about what I did before I got elected. Were you aware of what I'd done for the community before I got elected? Were you aware of the members for Chestermere-Rocky View, Grande Prairie-Wapiti, Calgary-Fish Creek, Calgary-Hays? We love to evoke people like Peter Lougheed and others when it's politically convenient.

We're talking about a bill here, and I support Bill 16 in terms of the idea to make elections more fair and transparent, but the last time I checked, Madam Chair, every contribution coming into my campaigns, my latest leadership run and elections past, is all up on a public website. They're there. So where is the dark money? What the member is suggesting when we talk about these things – and, yes, there are issues and there are going to continue to be issues in this Chamber and in this province that we have to deal with as legislators, but we totally shake the confidence of the voter and disrespect them. To the Member for Calgary-Bow and to the government caucus: who had more money in the last election? The Progressive Conservative Party, which became the third party. So to suggest that dark money rules the day is not only false, but it's an insult to the people who elected you.

At the end of the day, when we're talking about this, Madam Chair, the point that I'm trying to make is that the Member for Calgary-Bow was duly elected and expected to do a job but also to speak respectfully about the other people and the people that elected me. I respect those folks that elected this government.

An Hon. Member: Cross the floor.

Mr. Fraser: The member says to cross the floor. I've been in a couple of different parties, but I don't know if I'm going to go that far yet.

At the end of the day, everybody here is trying to do their very best, and they come with their voices. It is not about the Member for Calgary-South East or the Member for Calgary-Fish Creek. We are the conduits, we are the voices of our constituents, and we need to hold that with the deepest amount of respect. When we talk about things like dark money – which is just simply false because every single contribution shows up on a website.

Now, I'm all for the idea – whether it's a PAC or whether it's a union, hey, just post it. If you stand for a particular issue, run on that issue, but don't talk about innuendo and things that are just simply not true because, respectfully to the Member for Calgary-Bow, when you make these allegations, you not only make this Chamber look bad, but you make yourself look bad and the idea that people just can't trust politicians. I believe there are so many people on the government side and the opposition side that have worked in their communities for years and years and years to get the credibility to get elected into this Chamber to talk honestly.

Again, I just take offence at the idea that in anything I've done in my career, whether it was with the government, whether it was my time in cabinet or my time in the third party or on the opposition benches, somehow I have gerrymandered my way to having this seat. It's disrespectful to my constituency, that elected me based on the work that I did in the community, not based on the amount of money I raised. You can go look at my contributions. I don't raise a lot of money. I'm happy to talk and defend anybody who's contributed to my campaign. I'm willing to stand behind that, and if I'm not, then I just simply don't accept that money.

Again, Madam Chair, we need to raise the level of debate in this House and respect each other. I just think that "dark money," that term, doesn't sit well with me – and I know it doesn't sit well with my constituents – because we need to be building everybody up in this Chamber so that Albertans can trust what's happening in here.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you very much, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on Bill 16, Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I wanted to thank the Member for Calgary-South East for pointing out the human component to all of us being here. I think that sometimes we forget that every single person in here is somebody who came from somewhere, who has family, who has people that they represent.

I wanted to talk a little bit, actually, on the dark money piece because it's been language that's been used right across the board, whether that was with the motion for the Election Commissioner – the Member for Calgary-Bow today brings it up again. I question, with all due respect – and I realize that you were on the Ethics and Accountability Committee. Madam Chair, what is darker than trying to use taxpayer money to pay for your campaign expenses? Even I wouldn't have used that term, "dark." That comes from the government. But I can't imagine a situation that is more disrespectful to the taxpayer than expecting that it's their responsibility to pay for my campaign expenses. I can't imagine.

The Member for Calgary-Bow: she's been through a lot, not only here but in this Chamber and even in her career starting out here. I remember adamantly defending her right to be here at the very beginning, adamantly defending her right when she sat on the opposition side as an independent, regardless of her background, regardless of where she came from. She was duly elected by her constituency. I would still defend to this day her right to be here.

And then to hear an accusatory tone coming across from the member, Madam Chair, accusing the people on this side of somehow bringing in dark money when, in all honesty, this piece of legislation is here because the government has made several mistakes along the way with regard to transparency in elections – let's talk about this bill for just a moment. The member had mentioned about: if we door-knock. Well, I would suggest that the member maybe go on our Facebook pages and look at the people that we're impacting not only through door-knocking but attending events. I know the member attends a lot of events in her area, too.

We have the privilege of not only working within our own constituencies, Madam Chair. We work with Albertans. All of us on this side also hold critic portfolios that expand way beyond the mandate of our constituencies, so we're actually dealing with people in other constituencies all the time because we represent them at a critic level in a portfolio as well. We have that added exposure and that added privilege of being able to work outside of our constituency boundaries because of that.

I wanted to also thank the minister. It's so nice to see a minister stand up and answer some of the questions that we had. I really, really appreciate that. I wanted to just mention, though, that you had talked about the associations and whatnot, and I really appreciate that. But just to be clear, when you go into the bill, Madam Chair, the reason why we asked about the associations and why we were looking for clarity on that is because within the definition, not only is the definition very, very broad, but it is open to interpretation by the Election Commissioner.

The minister had mentioned – sorry; I don't have the benefit of the Blues – that we had passed the motion in our committee for him to be elected. I just want to be clear that it was the government that voted for the commissioner. We have made very strong statements in this House about even the need for an Election Commissioner, let alone Bill 32. Many issues with that. I've spoken about that at great length. Just to be clear, I think that when we're stating that, we need to be clear about how it is that this commissioner has come into existence.

The clarifications, I think, on those pieces with regard to the associations: we have a lot of language in this bill, Minister, that says things like "if." Like, there's a lot of language – the words "could," "if" – that is not specific, that would very much allow for the interpretation of the commissioner based on any particular issue. I'll read the definition here. This is where I'm concerned: or at the request of an elector or a registered party in order to determine if two or more registered parties are associated. Now, you answered that question, but that is still up to interpretation based on the request of the elector or the registered party. We have "could."

Then a little bit later on in the definition it says: if parties are associated. But parties do not need to meet a set number of these qualifiers in order to be deemed associated. Again, the interpretation, Madam Chair, by the commissioner could – based on this, we don't know what those qualifiers are, so even though the minister has said certain pieces about whether or not an association is occurring, within the definition itself it is extremely broad and leads to an intense amount of interpretation by the commissioner, should the commissioner deem that. I mean, I would want to make sure. Obviously, we're going to vote for this legislation, but there are really huge concerns there about the broad aspects of what that means and the interpretation of the person that is then charged with making that decision.

The other thing is that a little bit later on within the definition it says that if registered parties have the same leader, executive director or person in a position similar to an executive director, or CFO, they could be deemed associated. Again, what does "could" mean? How do we define that? Who's making the definition, whose interpretation, and how does that reflect on whatever party that happens to be at that time? I do not see in the legislation any clarification over the word "could."

I honestly believe that if we're looking for transparency and fairness, which is what this is all about, language like that within legislation – obviously, there's interpretation in legislation. We can't get away from that. But this is specific to a party that would be merging or could be merging or all those kinds of things, specifically this side, specifically the opposition. As a person that this legislation is for, yeah, I would like to understand what "could" means. I think the minister is, hopefully, going to be able to answer that after, so thank you, Minister, for that in advance.

Then another part of this is that it says: "the activities of the registered parties and their registered constituency associations and candidates." They can take into consideration – this is another piece. This is a concern. The Election Commissioner will also take into consideration the activities of the registered parties and their registered constituency associations and candidates. To what extent is that? What do we mean by that? Again, this isn't a definition. This is more of a broad-based perspective based on, I believe, especially based on what the Member for Calgary-Bow said, an interpretation of distrust in a procedure where all of us are held accountable.

Truthfully, Madam Chair, if you look at the legislation, the government could have actually created a very strong piece of legislation regarding mergers of parties and, within that legislation of mergers, could have laid out what that is supposed to look like. Obviously, I mean, we're the ones who even said . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report progress.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following bills: Bill 2 and Bill 16.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the hour and the progress we have made today, I would move that we call it 12 o'clock and adjourn until 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Tuesday, May 29, 2018

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Please be seated.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Ms Jabbour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am so thrilled to introduce to you and through you a school group visiting us here from Ridgeview central school in La Crête. I know that these students have the distinction of travelling perhaps the longest distance of any school students that ever come to visit the Legislature, so I'm always so excited when they come to visit. Accompanying the students are their teachers, Karie Becker, Eran Cardinal, and chaperones Abe Driedger, Chad Friesen, Angela Wiebe, Tracy Neudorf, Wilma O'Rourke, Laura Martens, Mary Jane Driedger, and Diana Driedger. I'd like to ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a class from McKee school, which is in my riding of Edmonton-Strathcona. This is McKee elementary. They are a wonderful group of students, who are here with their teacher, Mrs. Lisa Zimmer. In the past it has been my great privilege to visit them at least once a year and read them stories during Read In Week. They are one of the most diverse schools in the city, and they represent the face of our province's future. It's wonderful for them to be here. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly students from Landing Trail intermediate school in beautiful Athabasca, Alberta, a very bright group. I had a chance to visit them last year and catch up a little bit today. You know, I don't think you'll find a finer bunch of bright kids in the province. They're accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Calvin Klaczek and Mrs. Hope Bradfield, as well as educational assistant Mrs. Jamie Aubé. If the students and staff can rise – I'm assuming they're behind me; there they are – and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased to be able to stand to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two constituents from the riding of Edmonton-Mill Woods. These individuals are active leaders in our city and in our communities, and they help to build a strong community in Mill Woods not only through their participation in their local community league, the North Millbourne Community League, but through their participation in the greater Mill Woods Presidents' Council, which works to co-ordinate work between community leagues to share great ideas. They do fantastic work. I'd like to ask them both to rise. We have Leigh Makarewicz, who is a board member with the North Millbourne Community League, and Brandon Kowalczyk, vice-president of the North Millbourne Community League. Thank you both for all that you do for the North Millbourne Community League and greater Mill Woods. I'm so pleased to have you here with us today. I'd love for them to receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, I should have noticed earlier. Are there any other school groups today?

Seeing none, the Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you a great kid. Marigold Mioc is here along with her mother, Lily Ahonen. I had the pleasure of meeting Marigold and her mother earlier this month at the 2018 Great Kids awards gala. Marigold is no ordinary eight-year-old, possessing a love of CPAC, dreams of 24 Sussex Drive, and multiple selfies with the Premier on her Twitter feed. She was Little Miss Calgary in 2016 and also started her own business, Marigold's Heart Garden, selling flower headbands she used to sponsor a Syrian refugee family. Just a few days ago she cut off her hair to donate her hair to Angel Hair for Kids, which provides wigs for disadvantaged children. Marigold is working hard to make this world a better place. I would ask you, Marigold, and your mother to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today, all from groups who facilitate and provide innovative co-working spaces in Edmonton and Calgary. First, it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Frances Connolly and Mariann Roberts, who are with Homestead, which is a professional co-working space here in Edmonton. Members join Homestead to have somewhere inspiring to work, a change of scenery to keep ideas flowing, and to surround themselves with like-minded Edmontonians. Their membership currently has 30 businesses and 60 individuals.

Next are Alex Putici and Arielle Land, who are with Work Nicer, one of Alberta's entrepreneurial catalysts. Since 2015 Work Nicer has seen much growth and now supports over 250 members, with two locations in Calgary and one soon to open in Edmonton. They help to build bridges that connect, empower, and grow the small businesses and entrepreneurs of Alberta. Alex is also a cofounder of the Calgary Coworking Alliance.

Lastly, I would like to introduce Tiffany Linke-Boyko, the CEO of Startup Edmonton, which is committed to supporting tech-enabled companies as they start and scale. Startup Edmonton is a thriving community that serves as home for our city's innovation and technology meet-ups. Currently they work with 900 members and 90 companies through a variety of support streams. Since 2009 they've been at the forefront of some of our country's most exciting and successful start-up and scaling companies. I ask all my guests – I see they've risen. I ask now that we provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you Aurora Claire Borin. Aurora lives in Banff, where she works with passion as a music educator. As a volunteer she built the Bow Valley Music Festival up to the provincial stage, where it remains a source of inspiration for young local musicians. She's a constant advocate for queer and trans folks and always makes herself available to help those in need. I'm proud to call her a constituent and a friend. I'd like to ask her now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain Pipeline Update

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to update the House on something that is of importance to all Albertans. Today we took a major step forward for working people in Alberta and across Canada. As I said earlier today, the Kinder Morgan deal announced today puts people to work building the pipeline right away, creating good jobs. This deal and this pipeline will unlock investment in our oil sands because we are now on the path to getting full value for our energy resources. This deal and this pipeline will help us build up the things that matter to working families such as our schools and our hospitals.

As members of this House will recall, our work to get this pipeline built started three years ago. From the very beginning we said that good jobs for working people and meaningful climate action can and must go hand in hand. Put another way, any climate change plan that ignores the needs of working people is a plan that's doomed to fail, and any economic plan that ignores climate change is setting our businesses, our kids, and our future generations up to fail. We can tackle climate change and still protect our good energy industry and the jobs it creates. This commitment to working people and our environment has driven our strategy from day one.

At my first meeting with all of Canada's Premiers we convinced governments of the day to agree on the need for new pipelines through a Canadian energy strategy. We then worked with all Albertans to bring in the most comprehensive climate leadership plan on the continent: capping oil sands emissions, phasing out harmful coal emissions, putting a price on carbon, and attracting record investment in renewable energy in our province. We have travelled the country, speaking to business leaders, to workers, to investors, to environmentalists, to academics, and more, building the case for why Canada needs new pipelines, particularly to tidewater, and why this pipeline is unlike any other before it.

We've invested in winning the hearts and minds of all Canadians, making sure everyone understands the importance of our energy resources, and this work paid off. We moved public opinion. We moved public opinion on pipelines in a way that has never happened before in Canada. First, we made people aware of the project, and then we made sure people knew why this pipeline matters to working people and how it can still put us on a path to good jobs and responsible environmental stewardship. This support is growing, and it's growing on the basis of our economic arguments and our environmental arguments.

Now, a lot of commentators like to throw around the term "social licence," but it is, in fact, even about more than that, Mr. Speaker. What this comes down to is good governance. It's about building the economy for working people while protecting our environment.

Progress on the economy and progress on the environment: you cannot have one without the other. This project meets that test.

When Kinder Morgan issued its deadline on April 8, we responded immediately. We promised that the deadline would be met and that certainty would be provided, and today we are delivering on those commitments. As of today we have the most certainty that this project has ever had. That certainty is critical.

I want to thank the federal government for working with us to get to this point. After all, this is not a conflict between provinces. British Columbia took a run at the authority of the federal government and the interests of all Canadians, so we challenged the federal government to step up, assert its jurisdiction, and do whatever it takes to give investors the certainty they needed to see this project through.

In return the federal government asked Alberta to be part of the solution. We said that we would so long as three conditions were met, Mr. Speaker. First, construction needs to resume immediately; second, there needed to be certainty that the project would be completed; and finally, Albertans needed to see value for any investment that they made. I'm happy to say that those conditions have been accomplished through today's announcement. By purchasing the project, the federal government now has the power to make sure it goes ahead. Alberta has contributed to today's announcement by investing up to $2 billion to backstop any risk. That investment would be payable only once all oil begins to flow through the pipeline, and at that point our investment would be converted to equity, maximizing the return for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, this project will be the first direct pipeline to Canadian tidewater built since the 1950s. In a project of this magnitude, so clearly linked to the task of nation building, it is sometimes the case that the public sector does have a role to play. I would suggest that complaints about this investment are short sighted and ignore the needs of working families and Canada's economy.

The certainty provided today will be especially important to our shippers, who, as we all know and as everyone in this House knows, attract the single largest private-sector investments to Alberta and to Canada. This announcement helps them get product to market and helps us all get on the path to full and fair value for our resources. In doing so, we will ensure that good, long-term, mortgage-paying jobs are created for people and for families. That is what this is all about.

We were elected to get things done for working people. The approach to pipelines in the past let working people down. Rather than hurling insults and engaging in political theatre for political theatre's sake, we made the choice to roll up our sleeves, bring people together, and do whatever it takes to create jobs, get our resources to market, and support working Albertans. Mr. Speaker, Canadians have come together, and we brought them together.

There's work yet to be done, but, Alberta, this is a major step forward for each and every one of us. We said that we would meet the deadline; we've met the deadline. We said that we would provide certainty; we're providing certainty. We said that we'll get this pipeline built; we're getting this pipeline built. Mr. Speaker, we will not stop until the job is done.

The Speaker: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the hon. the Premier for updating the House and for her hard work on this important issue. The Official Opposition and the government do not agree about how we arrived at this point, but we do agree about the enormous importance of coastal access for Alberta energy products.

Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that some political leaders of this province have in the past referred to us as the embarrassing cousin of Confederation, that no one wants to talk about. I think most Albertans are enormously proud, not embarrassed, that we have been one of the key engines of Canada's economic prosperity, sharing hundreds of billions of dollars of our wealth with other parts of Canada and being for many years the key job-creation engine of our economy. I think most Albertans are proud to know that we are the most environmentally responsible and ethical major producer of oil and gas in the world, with the third-largest oil reserves on the planet, reserves that have a current notional value of over $11 trillion, wealth which represents a potential for a bright future, for our ability to handle our huge and growing debt obligations, growing health care and other social costs.

But, Mr. Speaker, that wealth means nothing unless we can get it to markets at a fair price, so we agree with the Premier that it is unacceptable that we should be forced to undersell this critical asset by some $40 million a day. It is a strategic imperative for the future of our way of life, of our economy. Indeed, I would argue that it's a moral imperative that we get Alberta energy to market so that we can compete with and, we hope, displace energy produced at much lower environmental, human rights, and labour standards by some of the world's worst regimes. That is why we must do everything we can to ensure access to coastal markets.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in a situation today where governments are effectively buying out a private-sector company that was willing to risk over $7 billion to invest in the Canadian economy and in this dream of exporting Canadian energy. Today, sadly, is an indication of yet more damage done by markets and investors and their confidence in this country.

Let us be clear about what has led us to this day. The decision of the current federal government arbitrarily to cancel the approved Northern Gateway pipeline, the decision of the current federal government, through the national energy ... [A timer sounded] I didn't realize ...

The Speaker: I will give you just one more minute if you would like.

Mr. Kenney: I'm sorry. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't clear on the time.

Mr. Speaker, the decisions to cancel Northern Gateway, to kill Energy East, to surrender to the Obama administration's veto of Keystone XL have been compounded by the failure of the federal government to ensure respect for the Constitution and the rule of law with the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline. That is why Kinder Morgan pulled out today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in this regrettable circumstance. We do not agree with the Premier that it is cause to celebrate today the failure of investor confidence, the decision of this company to withdraw from a major investment in Canada. We will with reluctance support in principle the proposed $2 billion potential indemnification of cost overruns associated with the hopeful continuation of this project, but we will discharge our responsibility as the opposition to ask questions and demand transparency with this or any other risk of tax dollars.

We, I submit, Mr. Speaker, are no closer to certainty. We need to see the federal government step up to the plate to exert leverage on the B.C. New Democrats to ensure that the rule of law is respected, and we will continue to call on this government to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent of the House to permit a representative of the third party and any independent member who wishes to respond to the Premier's statement today to do so.

Upon the conclusion of Ministerial Statements the minister of economic development would like to do an additional introduction, so I'll request that as well of the House.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

1:50

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If today's announcement gets a pipeline built, it is a good day not just for Alberta but for Canada as a whole. But today's announcement doesn't actually get the pipeline built. It is just one more step on what is still a very long road, and that's why I urge the government to show some restraint. It is far too early to take a victory lap.

There are many questions still to be answered, questions like: what will the government of Alberta do to win over B.C. and those who will use any means to block the pipeline from going ahead? What are the details of Alberta's $2 billion potential investment? Under what conditions would this investment be made? Will the investment be transparent, and will the true costs and risks be shared with Albertans? What message does it send to investors that a private company that followed every single rule the government made requires a government buyout to get a project built? Who will ultimately buy the project? Will the province push to ensure there is significant indigenous ownership in the eventual pipeline?

The Alberta Party is pleased to see that we are one step closer to getting a pipeline built to tidewater, and we will continue to hold the government accountable for making sure that this is the right deal for Albertans and, most importantly, for making sure that this pipeline actually gets built.

Thank you.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, today I rise from my seat in the Alamo as the only MLA again in this House to oppose a major decision from this government. The Trans Mountain pipeline can and must be built, but this government and the federal government have bungled it every step of the way.

Ronald Reagan said: "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." That is the economic credo of this government: the carbon tax, emissions caps, prostrating over and over to win over nobody. This is not an investor problem; this is a government problem. Our federal and provincial governments have been more focused on obtaining a mythical social licence and pandering to extremists than on the rule of law and the Constitution.

By negotiating in public, the parties that have supported the nationalization of the Trans Mountain pipeline have handed all of the negotiating cards to Kinder Morgan. We are not getting a good deal when we negotiate in the media.

Now the Trudeau Liberals, the NDP, and unfortunately, the opposition support one of the largest corporate welfare programs in the history of our country. Alberta fought one Trudeau owning our national energy infrastructure decades ago. Now we have handed it over to another Trudeau without a fight but, in fact, with a thank you. The NDP may not care about this, but Conservatives should. We have handed Prime Minister Trudeau a chokehold over Alberta's energy infrastructure, that he will be able to use to ensure the enforcement of his carbon tax. If we attempt to scrap the carbon tax, do we believe for one moment that Prime Minister Trudeau will not simply turn the taps off on us if he owns that pipeline? This is a multibillion-dollar corporate welfare program. It is a sellout for free enterprise, it is a sellout of taxpayers, it is a sellout of the Constitution, and it is a sellout of Alberta.

I challenge the government to put this issue to a full debate and a vote in this House no later than the end of this week. I know where I will stand.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's announcement with regard to the Kinder Morgan Trans Mountain expansion certainly raises as many questions as perhaps it answers. In fact, I see this as trading one set of uncertainties for another. I want to be clear from the outset that I share the government's – I wouldn't go as far as saying "joy." But I share the government's and, I suspect, all Albertans' – this project now has a measure of increased impetus going forward.

But I have a lot of concerns and uncertainties going forward. Some have already been articulated. Certainly, there is concern about the $2 billion or up to $2 billion in indemnification and what conditions they would carry with them. I think those are important things that this government must answer. I think, furthermore, that there's a larger question that needs to be answered, and it is for the private investor community, and that is: when you have a project that is approved, that is legal, that has passed every hurdle in place and is in fact opposed by, in some cases, illegal and unconstitutional means, will that project necessarily always be nationalized by some order of government? And what criteria will be used to decide whether that project is worthy of being nationalized? I think these are troubling questions and ones that should be on the minds of those of us who are here in this House.

So while I share with the government's approval, I do not share in their sense of jubilation because I suspect that today's decision, while it is positive in the short term, comes with cost. It comes with short-term monetary cost, and it comes with unknown future cost to the prospect of private investment in our oil and gas economy, one that I think is incredibly important and one that we shall remain watchful over.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank all members of the House for allowing me to do this brief introduction. I rise to introduce to you and through you to all members in the Assembly an incredible group from Beacon Heights. They're the Beacon Heights seniors in my constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. Their motto is: have fun, be kind, and help each other. If I may, this group really is part of the heartbeat of our community. I'll ask you to rise as I call your names: Pat Moffitt, Betty Franko, Vivian Cheperdak, Pat Sharun, Jenny Kolada, Audrey Peltier, Lil Fediuk, Alene Carter, Elsie Gizowski, and Joanne Houtstra. They're celebrating their big event, the kickoff to Seniors' Week celebration, June 4 at the Abbottsfield rec centre: crafts, hobbies, games, music. All are welcome to attend, so I invite all members of the Assembly to join these lovely seniors and many others in my riding.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the hon. the Premier received any assurances from British Columbia Premier John Horgan that he will stop the policy of his government to do everything possible to prevent the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, we've not had any direct conversations. I can say that just today the Premier of British Columbia was quoted as saying that, in fact, what they are now doing is doing everything possible to protect the coast and that they have officially switched from it being focused on everything possible to stop the pipeline. That was in today's press conference. That being said, though, I think the real key issue here is that through the federal decision to purchase, the issue of Crown immunity changes the situation and provides more certainty than we had before.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier just said that it provides greater certainty. Could the hon. the Premier please identify a single environmental organization, municipal government, First Nation, provincial government that has indicated, as a result of today's announcement, that they support and will stop efforts to obstruct the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What I can say again is that what we know is that the concern about investor uncertainty has been eliminated because the investor that is currently in play is absolutely committed to getting the pipeline built. In addition, through Crown ownership there is a legal principle of Crown immunity that actually further strengthens the role of the federal government from a legal perspective as it relates to complaints that might be raised by some of the organizations outlined although not the indigenous groups, where we were all very committed to continuing to work with them respectfully.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, accepting the Premier's claim that federal ownership will clarify federal jurisdiction, does the Premier then support the undertaking of the federal government to sell its interest as soon as possible to private-sector shareholders?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, in fact, you know, we will keep a watchful eye on that matter, but I do know that even as the federal government is looking at that option, they are looking at doing it in a way that pairs that option with the kind of additional legal certainty that I was just referring to in answer to the last question. So we will be sure that that certainty remains. That's one of the principles that we outlined on April 8. That's one of the principles that we were very happy to deliver today on behalf of Albertans for working Albertans to build this province and this country.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. the Premier has said that the decision by Kinder Morgan to withdraw its planned pipeline expansion project increases certainty. The Canadian Energy Pipeline Association instead has said that they are concerned about the implications of the government's financial intervention for future transmission pipeline projects. Many other leaders and associations in the energy industry have echoed the same concern, that in fact today's developments do not increase but, rather, undermine investor confidence in Canada's energy sector. Does the Premier believe that CEPA and other industry groups are wrong?

Ms Notley: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've actually heard from a number of people in the energy sector today that this is good news and that this actually increases certainty and that it does not undermine it. You know, the Trans Mountain pipeline, when it is completed, will be the first direct pipeline constructed to tidewater since the 1950s. Every now and then it becomes necessary for the public sector and government to be involved in nation building. That's what many people actually elect their governments to do. We are proud to be part of it. Walking away, tying our hands, and pretending that we have no role to play: that's how you have failure.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Mr. Kenney: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have failure because the federal government cancelled the Northern Gateway pipeline, killed Energy East, surrendered to the American initial veto on Keystone XL, and has still done nothing to exert pressure on the government of British Columbia to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion regardless of who happens to own it. Will the Premier agree with me that the federal government must exert pressure on the NDP government in Victoria to stop its policy of obstruction and of death by delay?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, the member opposite started his question by saying that what we have today is failure. I tell you, he is like the person who shows up at a dinner party empty-handed, complaining about the food and the colour of the cocktail napkins, I swear to God. This deal puts people to work, it unlocks investment, it helps us build schools, hospitals, and roads, and it gets us to tidewater. It is exactly what we said we would do, it is exactly the thing that Albertans wanted to see their government work on, and that's what we've done.

Mr. Kenney: Yet, Mr. Speaker, this is a Premier who seems to have celebrated a policy that's led us to every private-sector investor trying to build a coastal pipeline withdrawing or having been vetoed. This seems to be the NDP's definition of success, being backed into a corner and forcing taxpayers to pick up the tab. Now, the question is: given that Premier Horgan has tripled down today on his threat to do everything possible to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline, will the Alberta government use Bill 12 to exert pressure on the B.C. government to ensure construction of the pipeline?

The Speaker: Thank you.

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, in fact, that's not exactly what happened in B.C. today, so first of all that's not true. What we will do is that we will continue to work strategically and effectively to get this job done. Today was a major, major step forward. And let me say that if someone else had been in charge and we'd adopted their path of, first, having temper tantrums at everyone who disagreed with us and then, secondly, hurling gratuitous insults at the federal government just 'cause, you know what would happen? We wouldn't have this today. We wouldn't have a pipeline. It'd be a repeat of the previous nine years, when the member opposite was in the federal government and . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
Third main question.

Federal Policies on Oil and Gas Transportation

Mr. Kenney: Well, we do know what did happen, Mr. Speaker. We had a provincial government that signalled to Prime Minister Trudeau that he could go ahead and cancel Northern Gateway with the agreement of Alberta, that he could effectively kill Energy East with no protest from the Alberta government, that he could refuse to apply any meaningful fiscal or political pressure on the government of British Columbia without any meaningful complaint from this government. So the question is simply this. Will this government indicate to Premier Horgan that if his obstruction continues, there will be consequences?

Ms Notley: You know, Mr. Speaker, I know the member opposite likes to grab a narrative and then just hold onto it without a particular regard for the facts, but I'd like to remind the members of this Assembly that the Northern Gateway pipeline went down because the Federal Court looked at the record of the previous Conservative federal government and said that their failure to consult with indigenous people was an abject failure and that that was why the pipeline could not go ahead. So we really must clarify the record.

Our government is taking a different approach. We are talking with indigenous people, we are working with all our partners, and we will get the job done.

Mr. Kenney: The Premier is rewriting the historical record, Mr. Speaker. The court asked the federal Crown . . . [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, are you going to stop the heckling here?

The Speaker: Hon. member, I will address at what point I wish to enter in rather than it coming from a member of the House. Please proceed.

Mr. Kenney: Sure.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Court asked for additional consultation. Enbridge continued with the plan to proceed with Northern Gateway. It was the Justin Trudeau government that vetoed it and is now hammering the nail into the coffin of those exports with Bill C-48, the tanker traffic ban, and Bill C-69, that will make it very difficult to get a future pipeline built. Will the Premier agree with me that these bills are unhelpful to the prospects of future market access for Canadian energy?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, what I will agree is unhelpful is having someone in this province who claims to be onside with Albertans in the task that we all believe in, which is getting this pipeline built, but at the same time signals to investors, signals to the opposition, works with the opposition, dines out on the opposition to the pipeline in order to serve his own political interests. The fact of the matter is that today we took a very important step forward, and what we should be doing is celebrating that fact and continuing to work together rather than cheering for the failure of Alberta's working people.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I didn't appoint Tzepporah Berman to the oil sands advisory committee, and I didn't appoint Karen Mahon to the oil sands advisory committee, people who are calling for the total elimination of this industry. I don't belong to a federal party that's calling for the shutdown of Alberta's energy industry. The question was simply this. Does the Premier agree with me that we should continue to pursue other potential export possibilities by encouraging the federal government to suspend Bill C-69 and Bill C-48 to create greater certainty for other prospective pipeline projects in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's interesting. The member opposite actually belongs to a federal party that is right now saying that it doesn't think that the federal government should be putting any money toward supporting Alberta's energy industry. When it was in office, it put $9 billion toward supporting Ontario's auto industry. You know what? The member opposite says that he stands for Albertans, but I think that guarantee is a little bit like his grassroots guarantee, here today, gone tomorrow. But maybe it's just an IT problem.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.
The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government today announced that they would purchase the Trans Mountain pipeline and the expansion. While federal ownership of the pipeline does eliminate some obstacles to this construction project, we've already seen lengthy delays, and the project could be facing significant cost overruns. In light of this, your government's decision to offer up $2 billion worth of tax dollars can be a cause of concern for Albertans, and I think you can see that. With billions of dollars at risk, what is your government going to do to address the risk of delays in the construction?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's no question that there are important issues that are raised in the member opposite's question. That is why, as I've said, the government of Alberta's commitment is up to $2 billion; it is not just $2 billion. Moreover, it doesn't become payable until the oil is actually flowing through a completed pipeline. It's also attached to timelines, and it also, of course, assures equity interest for Albertans. So this is not a subsidy, as one member opposite had suggested. Quite the opposite. It is an investment for Albertans by Albertans.

2:10

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, we spoke in this House before about how the extraordinary measures being taken to push this pipeline could actually hurt the long-term prospects of energy infrastructure construction. The fact that there is a need for direct federal investment in this project to go forward sends a signal that every energy project won't succeed without government intervention. It also opens the door to political interference in the construction of energy infrastructure. To the Premier: what are you doing to ensure that the next piece of energy infrastructure in Alberta can succeed without taxpayer support?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, as the member opposite knows, we have supported – well, we have just simply celebrated; we had nothing to do with the approval of line 3. We have committed barrels for Keystone. On this matter, of course, yes, the government is involved. As I've said before, when you're talking about the first new construction of a pipeline directly to tidewater since the 1950s, sometimes it's necessary for the public, for the government to be involved. But, overall, this is going to provide more investor certainty, not less, and we're committed to ensuring that that principle is met.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Aside from the few leaks of this government, the negotiations with Kinder Morgan and the federal government were basically done behind closed doors. We totally understand the need to protect commercially sensitive information, but, Premier, I think you would agree that facts matter. The fact that this project soon could be owned entirely by taxpayers means that it is basically no longer acceptable for the details to be withheld from the public. Premier, since it's taxpayer dollars and it's their investment, it's time we release all the details regarding this project. Do you agree with that?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I definitely agree that there will come a point where, absolutely, all Albertans need to see all the details. We are still at a point, though, where some of the information is commercially sensitive. That's why what we've been able to communicate today are some high-level principles which we hope will assure Albertans in the short term: one, that they are getting equity value for their investment; two, that there is certainty associated with the project; and three, that it's only up to $2 billion, that it is not the full $2 billion. We know that more information needs to be forthcoming, but we also need to respect the issue of commercial sensitivity at this point.

The Speaker: Thank you.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-South West.

School Maintenance and Repair

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, P3s were sold to the public as a cheaper way to build schools quickly, but it's pretty clear that you get what you pay for, and we need to make sure that these schools are safe for students. My office has been in contact with Alberta Infrastructure on a regular basis on drainage issues. Given that this ongoing issue around P3s has been happening for years and is dangerous for students, what is the government doing to ensure that our school sites remain safe environments for students to learn in?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member, who actually has done some pretty incredible advocacy on this issue, and that is much appreciated. You know, the previous government, of which I was a part, had certainly a zest for P3s. You know, we were talking about some poor design and a lot of problems at these schools. We have a situation now where Alberta Infrastructure meets every month with the school board and the P3 contractor to review some important issues, as you have mentioned, and they include repair requests from the schools, security clearance issues, health and safety concerns, and we're keeping . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, to the same minister: what is the minister doing to ensure that those landscaping and mud field issues do not continue into the next year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as the member said, there are some significant problems at some of these P3 schools, and we meet every month to discuss them. I have seen mud at these sites. It gets tracked into the schools. It gets tracked into the bathrooms at the schools. It creates a tremendous amount of mess and a health hazard for the kids. These badly designed contracts have been an obstacle to fixing these problems. We are going full tilt this summer, and we're going to fix all of these things ourselves just as soon as the school kids get a break for the summer.

The Speaker: Thank you.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Dang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the answer. Again to the same minister: how will the government be handling P3 schools in the future?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, all of our new schools are public builds, and Alberta's population is growing. Families are coming to Alberta from across the country and, in fact, from around the world. We have schools to build, and we need to build them for a growing population, so we're going to do it by building schools as public builds. The previous government's approach did not work, and we're going to take the approach we're taking and know that we have full control over the maintenance of these schools.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Like many Albertans, the Alberta Liberals and leader David Khan are pleased to see the federal Liberal government negotiate a deal to help the Kinder Morgan pipeline expansion proceed, a significant economic opportunity for Alberta and Canada, allowing Alberta to safely send its energy products to new markets at a better price. However, there are still unanswered questions and concerns about our environmental and public liabilities. Premier, will the Alberta government now commit to annual full-cost accounting as we triple our greenhouse gas emissions in relation to that pipeline and, according to the Parkland Institute, exceed our hundred megatonne . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by saying very clearly what I've been saying to many people for about two years: that underlying assumption is incorrect. We will not be tripling our greenhouse gas emissions. This is because we have put a cap on emissions. That's one of the fundamentally important pieces of our climate leadership plan. This pipeline is not about increasing emissions. What this pipeline is about is increasing the value and the return for Albertans on the product that we will ship regardless, whether it's on pipeline or whether it's on rail. So the assumption is, unfortunately, not correct. We will of course commit to as open an accounting as . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. Premier.

Dr. Swann: Mr. Speaker, I and others need help in understanding how you can triple the capacity of a pipeline without increasing emissions from the oil sands.

Given, however, that Albertans need to be off the hook, will you commit to annual reporting in relation to the $26 billion cost liability for reclamation of the tailings ponds and their cleanup? Will you commit to annual reporting on that $26 billion liability for cleanup?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in answer to the first part of the question let me just say that the way you do that is that you take the product off rail and put it onto pipeline. That's what's going on here. Secondly, of course, you engage in the innovation that our climate leadership plan is investing into the oil and gas sector, that will result in reducing the amount of emissions in any barrel of oil produced. That's how you deal with the first thing.

With respect to the second thing our Minister of Energy and the minister of environment are working carefully and rigorously on the issue of dealing with the tailings ponds liability, and we'll have more to say in . . .

The Speaker: Thank you.

Dr. Swann: That's been dragging on for I don't know how many years, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to a deadline for that negotiation.

Will the government commit to not using the green fund, the carbon tax, or the heritage savings fund to pay for this project's liability?

The Speaker: The hon. Premier.

Ms Notley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, because the amount of money – it could be, you know, $5 or up to $2 billion – will not become payable until the oil is flowing, we will in fact see a significant bump in annual revenue. We have a great deal of flexibility in terms of how that money would be provided and the pace at which it's provided. But this is the fundamental principle: Albertans will get value for money. It will not be a payment; it will be an investment.

Electric Power Prices

Mrs. Aheer: Mr. Speaker, electricity is now subsidized by taxpayers when the price spikes over 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour. As a result, small industrial users of electricity like Alberta farmers are exposed to the increase of electricity prices as their price is not capped. On May 23 electricity prices spiked over 90 cents per kilowatt hour. To the Minister of Energy: why are you not telling consumers to shop around and get locked into fixed-rate contracts to ensure their electricity prices remain stable, to minimize the subsidies that you pay out?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before, we are doing many things to protect consumers, you know, as we transition from coal-fired electricity to renewables. One of the pieces, in addition to providing a cap and several things like that, is an education piece. We have been putting out some things in the mailers with some of the bills, and we will continue to do so. Absolutely, we've encouraged companies to market their products to customers so that they do know that they have a choice.

Mrs. Aheer: Actually, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, one of the constituents in my constituency was told by Enmax that they should probably pick a fixed rate very soon as electricity prices spike.

To that, the NDP government shelled out millions in April to backstop electricity prices and, unlike in Ontario, with failed electricity prices and policies, the NDP is shutting down baseload power plants, driving those prices higher, throwing thousands out of work. Minister, are farmers and ranchers in my constituency going to have to make the choice between running their operations and keeping their families warm at night?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, any reference to Ontario is somewhat misleading because we have a totally different system than theirs. We chose a far different path than Ontario did. We're using competitive auctions, that have set record low prices, and we're also encouraging projects to be where we already have infrastructure. We are not building new infrastructure.

With respect to the cap, the cap is quite high, and many farmers and ranchers actually come under that cap. So if there's a particular case in point, I'd invite the member to contact my office, and we'll look at it.

Speaker's Ruling Preambles

The Speaker: Hon. members, I continue to be challenged by the artful skill that many of you have here with respect to preambles, and every day I find a surprise. I would, however, urge you to put your paintbrushes down if you could at certain occasions and be specific with respect to the questions. I appreciate your assistance with that.

Thank you.

Please proceed.

Electric Power Prices (continued)

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that these pieces of education aren't making it out to our rural farmers and ranchers and constituencies and given that they have to run electric pumps to move water to cattle and to irrigate crops and given that these small industries are not getting a rate cap on their electricity bill and are getting double whammy from the NDP's carbon tax, how can the minister go around saying that they're making life better for Albertans, when all they've done is increased input costs for the food we eat, making basic groceries cost more and more, reducing the money in the pockets of the farmers to the point where many of them are having to leave the industry?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, increases in costs have quite a few factors.

The cap itself is 6.8 cents, and it has not risen in the last while. In fact, we've been paying some of the lowest prices right now. We are working with REAs. If the hon. member's constituent is in a REA, we are working with them. Everybody is going to be under the cap. Again, we have a fairly high threshold, so if they're above that, I encourage the member to have them contact our office. We'll work with them.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, this morning we were glad to hear that the Trans Mountain pipeline project was not permanently cancelled. However, to be clear, we're in this situation as a result of the inaction of the Trudeau Liberal government, with no opposition from this Alberta NDP government. With the private sector sidelined now, the burden and risk are, unfortunately, shifted onto taxpayers, and the B.C. NDP and activists are still refusing to back down. Minister, how will this new deal alleviate the uncertainty caused by the illegal protesters in B.C.?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the deal announced today is a huge, major step not just for Alberta but for Canada. You know, when Kinder Morgan announced their concerns on April 8, we took to talks between our government and the federal government, and today we're celebrating that commitment and the hard work of our Premier. We're pleased with the work the federal government has done, and we're pleased to continue that work until that pipeline is in operation.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, given that today the Trudeau government repeatedly dodged and deflected when asked if they were going to take any action to end the disruption tactics in British Columbia and given that B.C. has been effectively blocking this project for over a year now, will the minister please tell us their plans to address the Trudeau Liberals' failure to take action to end the death-by-delay tactics in B.C.?

The Speaker: The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the deal that we heard about today is a good gain for Albertans and for Canadians. It puts people back to work on the pipeline in the next few weeks. The deal is that it's going to unlock capital, and it's going to provide assurance that this pipeline will go forward. I know that people up where I live are very excited today, and in a number of interviews I did, there's a lot of excitement and a lot of hope in Alberta. We're going to get this pipeline built.

Mr. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, my question is simple. Had the federal government and the Alberta provincial NDP government not procrastinated until this late hour, would Alberta taxpayers have been required to purchase a viable project that was already fully privately funded?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, what happened in the past with all the efforts of the previous Conservative government and the federal government was zero. Our efforts have gotten us two pipeline approvals, and today we're closer than ever to getting that pipeline built. We've been clear from the get-go. There is no outcome but to get that pipeline built, and we're going to do what it takes to continue that work until that oil is flowing.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the government to explain why it rehired John Heaney, the former chief of staff to the Premier, as an adviser despite obvious ethical issues with his employment, including the fact that he's a registered lobbyist in British Columbia. Yesterday the minister assured us that he had worked closely with the Ethics Commissioner to achieve an exemption. To the Minister of Finance: what exactly does that exemption allow Mr. Heaney to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance and President of Treasury Board.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. The contract is an addendum. It's structured as an addendum to Mr. Heaney's contract. We sought the advice of the Ethics Commissioner. Of course, that addendum allows him to have outside employment, and he has done that.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that in January of 2018, three months after the contract had begun here in Alberta, Mr. Heaney resigned and Mr. Heaney registered to lobby on behalf of a cannabis company, Nuuvera, to communicate with the government about the production, distribution, and sales of cannabis in B.C. and given that part of his role here in Alberta is to advise the Finance minister, the very minister responsible for establishing a retail market for cannabis in Alberta, does the minister not see this as any form of conflict of interest?

Mr. Ceci: I think I explained yesterday that Mr. Heaney's role with regard to Treasury Board and Finance is talking about the path back to balance, Mr. Speaker, a path back to balance that gets us by 2023-24 to a zero balance. It is not around cannabis.

With regard to his contract the exemption is to work outside of government. Again there's mudslinging from the other side. Mr. Heaney's contract says that he is not permitted to lobby government members in this province or employees of the government, so he's not working on behalf of those cannabis . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister. Thank you.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given that this government has been on record talking about how it operates in voice mode and given that Nuuvera is also registered and engaging in lobbying the provincial government of Alberta with respect to distribution and sales of cannabis and that now Nuuvera's lobbyist in British Columbia is a government of Alberta employee, could the minister please again state for the record that he sees no ethical issues whatsoever in the lobbyist also being a government of Alberta employee?

Mr. Ceci: I think what I'll say, Mr. Speaker, is that Mr. Heaney is on contract with the government of Alberta. He has worked with the Minister of Energy and my department around the path back to balance and with that department around the Trans Mountain pipeline and advising on that. He is not permitted to lobby the government members in this province or to talk to members of government in this province.

Environmental Advocacy

Mr. Westhead: Mr. Speaker, in December of 2016 this Assembly passed my private member's motion, Motion 511, which urged the government to increase its efforts to conserve and manage public lands in Alberta's headwater regions to optimize downstream water security for future generations of Albertans.

On May 15 of this year this government announced the world's largest protected contiguous boreal forest. To the Minister of Environment and Parks: what role did that motion play in that decision?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane for his strong advocacy and hard work on behalf of his constituents, who want to see us leave a legacy of conservation and protection of nature to future generations. We've heard questions around market access and around Alberta's environmental performance in the past, and that's one of the reasons why we moved forward with the largest protected boreal forest area in the world. We have heard those concerns around headwater protection that were brought up by the hon. member, and we've acted.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what other initiatives has the government undertaken as a result of my private member's motion?

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, on this side of the House we continue to recognize the importance of headwaters, of responsible management of those headwaters. The Member for Banff-Cochrane on behalf of his constituents continues to advocate for those issues every day. One of the things that we did as a result of his advocacy was establish the Livingstone-Porcupine Hills as public land-use zones, which follows through on our commitments to science-based land management and protects the environment and protects people's private property as they go about their business of ranching and farming and so on.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how do jobs and the economy work together with efforts to better conserve and manage our environment and natural spaces?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Member for Banff-Cochrane is always a strong advocate for things like species at risk. When we have native trout populations that are in good shape, then we can grow our tourism industry, for example, and we can give our children those high-quality outdoor experiences. That shows what we can do when we work together and when we actually care about the environment that we bequeath to future generations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Education Concerns in Calgary-Elbow

Mr. Clark: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I held a town hall in my constituency to allow parents to weigh in on recent changes to student transportation that resulted from Bill 1 and to hear from them on other issues in education. I committed to ask questions on their behalf, so my questions today come from those parents. To the Minister of Education. Parents expressed a desire to move French immersion from the definition of alternative programming and make it part of a designated program. Given that Canada is a bilingual country, to the minister: will you make this change, and if not, will you amend Bill 1 to allow parents to pay extra to ensure adequate and timely bus service for students in alternative programs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can notice a marked improvement in the quality of questions based on the fact that they came from those fine parents in Calgary, so that's great.

Certainly, we're looking at all aspects of transportation. We have a transportation survey that we're working through right now, and we are looking for ways by which to make changes to the walk limit and to other aspects of busing as well. We know that we need to make an investment to ensure that busing is safe and that it is economical as well. So between the two, working with parents, working with school boards, we'll find a solution that is amicable.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No parents smarter than those in Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Speaker, given the strong support expressed by parents who attended my education town hall, their support for public education, and given questions from parents of students in the public, charter, and private education systems, to the Minister of Education: what is your vision on funding for private, charter, and public schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you've heard from the beginning, we have one of the fastest growing populations, the youngest population in Canada and tremendous enrolment growth right across the province in our schools, especially in urban areas. So we need all the capacity we can get, quite frankly. The choice that we do have available to us between each of the forms of education: francophone, public, separate, charter, and private are all certainly not just required but I think provide an excellent level of education here in the province of Alberta. Indeed, we have one of the best education systems in the country.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Clark: Why, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, given that one of the issues that has been particularly challenging for parents in Calgary-Elbow and the rest of the city is disconnected bell times due to student transportation constraints and given that there are some middle schools that start over an hour after their feeder schools and given that this makes it very difficult for families with kids in both schools and has a negative impact on parents' ability to maintain regular work hours, to the Minister of Education: have you met with parents to discuss these concerns, and if not, will you meet with them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Yes. Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, the issue around bell times in the city of Calgary is something that I've heard a lot about. Certainly, you want to make sure that it is convenient so that you have some synchronization between kids in different levels of school and so forth. So, yes, I have, but, yes, I will in the future, too. You know, it's important for us to make investments in education. We've done so over the last four budgets, and we continue to do so now, with $77 million for our classroom improvement fund, for example, which resulted in the hiring of more than 140 new positions in the city of Calgary, in Calgary public alone.

Aerospace Industry Promotion

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago Alberta's four government-owned firefighting air tankers went through an upgrade and conversion to run turbine engines. Now Longview Aviation Asset Management, which is a division of Viking Air of Calgary, has a new conversion kit to turn this type of aircraft into CL-415 enhanced aerial firefighters. Can the minister advise us today: what is the future of Alberta's four aging, government-owned air tankers, please?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the very thoughtful question. Are those air tankers in particular? They are. They still have some use to them. The air tankers are deployed across the province as contract air tankers as well. To update the House, we have well over a thousand wildland firefighters today supporting our communities, supporting our citizens, supporting our infrastructure across the province. There are extremely dry conditions, as you know, and I'm encouraging all Albertans to be extra careful as we all pray for some rain.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Minister. Given, Mr. Speaker, that aircraft conversions and new builds are able to be exported to all corners of the world, can the Minister of Economic Development and Trade confirm or deny for us that Longview Aviation Asset Management or Viking Air is a recipient of the capital investment tax credit, the Alberta investor tax credit, or any other assistance programs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've done some work with Viking Air as far as their plans to open a facility in Calgary go. I don't want to misspeak in the House, so I will get back to the member. I believe that they did qualify for the capital investment tax credit, but I will verify that and get it to the member.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Minister. Given, Mr. Speaker, that the Edmonton Airshow is quickly gaining a reputation as being the aerospace showcase for Alberta's aerospace industry and given that the aerospace sector has a shortage of pilots and mechanics, jobs that are knowledge based and high tech and well paying, Minister, what are you doing to encourage Alberta-based industries like Viking and educational institutions like SAIT to showcase their high-tech products and programs to the public at this annual gathering of over 40,000 people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll thank the member for the question. I recently spoke at the aerospace conference in Calgary, where there is significant expertise and interest in really developing our aerospace sector. There are a number of different companies throughout the province of Alberta, and we have quite a few strengths. I know that there is a role that we have played as far as engaging with postsecondary institutions to look at how we can maximize the use of training and education to help fill the supply of pilots around the world. We have an incredible flight simulator at Edmonton International Airport, that's booked year-round.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Air Ambulance Service in Peace River

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, for several weeks I've been inquiring into the procurement and subsequent award of air ambulance contracts and specifically the level of service or lack thereof. On May 10 during question period I asked the Minister of Health about a specific situation at the Peace River Airport on April 29, where a medevac plane was stuck in the mud for over two hours during a patient transfer. The minister responded by saying that she would look into the incident. On the 14th of May the minister's response to my colleague's question was that she was tired of the mudslinging and was going to "set the facts straight" and told this Assembly that the delay was only 10 minutes. While speaking, the minister motioned to a document she was holding. Can the minister commit to tabling this document or any other documents that show the delay was only 10 minutes?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The truth is that that hon. member said that it was an emergency transfer. It was not an emergency transfer; it was a routine transfer. That hon. member said that they were stuck for two hours. They were stuck for 10 minutes. A second plane did get called in because it wasn't an emergency, and the second plane was used rather than using the original one. I'd be happy to provide confirmation of that. This is that confirmation as well. Certainly, if the member requires me to put something in writing to his office, I'd be happy to do that. Our number one priority is to keep Alberta patients safe, and that will continue to be the number one priority.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I never mentioned that it was an emergency transfer.

Given that the chief operating officer of Peace River e-mailed the Minister of Health on May 11 and that in his e-mail he expressed concern over the air ambulance service in his region and the reduction of patient care resulting from it; furthermore, given that he described the incident on April 29 as a medevac being stuck in the mud for two hours, not the 10 minutes the minister stated, can the Minister of Health clarify this discrepancy between the information provided by the chief administrative officer of Peace River and the information the minister stated on May 14?

Ms Hoffman: I can tell you that the plane itself was stuck in the mud for 10 minutes, that a second plane was called. Because it wasn't an emergency transfer, they waited for a second plane rather than using the other one. If it was an emergency, certainly, they could have used the plane once it was dislodged from the mud, Mr. Speaker. The second plane did take more time. Again, because it wasn't an emergency, that was deemed as the best mode of transport. But I can tell you once again that nothing is more important to our province, to our government, and to the people of Alberta than ensuring patients' safety, and that will continue to be the top driver in Peace River and every other part of the province.

Mr. W. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, given that the town's security cameras captured the entire incident, specifically showing that the delay was in fact two hours and not the 10 minutes that the minister stated, will the Minister of Health set the record straight? Why did she say that this level of service is an improvement in patient care? Obviously, it's not.

Ms Hoffman: Just to reiterate what I said, the plane was stuck for 10 minutes. Rather than using the same plane again, once it was dislodged, they called for the second plane, Mr. Speaker. Because it wasn't an emergency, that was deemed by the people working in the community and closest to the patient as the best mode of transport. So a second plane was called in.

Again, the remarks that the member opposite is referring to: he's being very fast and loose with the truth. It smells a little bit like somebody's pants might be on fire. I certainly want to make sure that we protect all of the people of the province of Alberta, that we keep them safe and that we ensure that they have the very best access to the very best care no matter where they live, Mr. Speaker.

Coal-produced Electric Power from Montana

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, during budget estimates the Minister of Energy asserted: "It's absolutely false. The Alberta government does not purchase coal-fired electricity from Montana under any arrangement." My question to the Minister of Energy: if the government of Alberta does not purchase coal-fired electricity from Montana, then who does? Is it the Alberta Electric System Operator, AESO?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The contract that is referred to there is a private contract. It is not anything to do with the Alberta government. It is a private contract. I can't remember the number of kilowatts. It's a very small contract between a private operator and Montana.

Mr. Panda: Mr. Speaker, given that the Montana-Alberta tie-line has a rated capacity of 300 megawatts and given that there is only 189 megawatts of wind power being stored along the transmission line, to the minister: when AESO draws more than 189 megawatts from Montana – and I know they do – who is the generator supplying the electricity to Alberta? Are you sure it is not coal-fired electricity? Do you really know?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, this is a private contract. I don't know the details because it's a private contract, private company. It is not the Alberta government. If the member wishes, I could delve into it and see what I could find out, but I'm guessing that when it's a private contract, it's not any business of the government.

Mr. Panda: Given, Mr. Speaker, that the purchase of coal-fired electricity from Montana would represent gross carbon leakage from Alberta to Montana and given that such carbon leakage demonstrates an abject failure of the NDP government's signature climate leadership plan, Minister, will you admit that Montana's coal-fired electricity will continue to enjoy a prominent, low-cost place of privilege in the forthcoming Alberta capacity market?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I can say is that the capacity market is being designed as we speak. It's spoken to in Bill 13. It will be a competitive process. It will be, I assume,

Alberta companies applying, and there'll be more to say once we go through that process. I appreciate the question, but it is misinformed and not totally full of facts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has some of the best postsecondary institutions in the world. We're proud to welcome students from around the globe who want to live and study in our province. However, the cost of education for international students can be very high. To the Minister of Advanced Education: what is being done to support our international postsecondary students studying here in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, for any international students who want to take a class on getting pipelines built, Alberta is the place to be. Alberta remains a destination for international students because of our high-quality education and our top-ranked universities and colleges. We proudly welcome students from around the world, but they do need to pay a cost that reflects the true cost of their education. They do pay higher fees, but our government believes that international students should be treated fairly. Unlike the Conservatives, we are not going to balance the budget on the backs of students. We're going to ensure that all students . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you. Thank you for your answer. Under the previous Conservative government tuition fees spiked rapidly and funding to universities and colleges was inconsistent. What are you doing to provide predictability and stability to our postsecondary institutions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Schmidt: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike Conservatives, our government believes that all Albertans deserve an affordable and accessible higher education. We're proud to invest in new and creative ways to support students whereas the Conservatives want to look at gouging students, like implementing market modifiers on tuition fees. On this side of the House we're proud to have increased funding to all institutions by 2 per cent as well as provided backup funding to compensate for the tuition freeze. We've frozen tuition for four years. We've made a commitment to predictable and sustainable funding, and we've stuck to it. Finances should never be a barrier for anyone who wants to get an education.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
Second supplemental.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While costs for students rose under the Conservative government, so did compensation at the highest levels. What has the government done to bring executive compensation in line with the rest of the country?

Mr. Schmidt: Well, Mr. Speaker, our university and college presidents do critical work to ensure that their institutions deliver the high-quality education that students deserve, and they should be fairly compensated. But for too long the previous Conservative government let compensation packages get way out of control and way out of touch with the expectations of Albertans. Postsecondary executive compensation in Alberta was the highest in the country. These changes that we finally brought in will bring those salaries in line with presidents' compensation in the rest of Canada, and those savings will mean more money in our classrooms and more affordable education for our Alberta students.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the rehiring of John Heaney, the former chief of staff to the Premier, is shady at every single turn. Mr. Heaney started work just weeks after resigning in October; however, his contract was not signed until February and wasn't posted online until May 15. The Auditor General has warned this government on numerous occasions about starting work without signed contracts.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.
The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. Let me say, first, that after leaving his position as the chief of staff to the Premier, Mr. Heaney was retained as an executive adviser for both the Minister of Energy and myself. He was tasked with providing us legal advice, Mr. Speaker, on pipeline and market access, and he's been doing that – this is a good day for pipeline access, so he's very good in this job – and he's also helped us on the path to balance. There was discussion about how best to structure his contract based on the advice from the Ethics Commissioner. We've done that.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, given what we've just heard from the minister, in fact, that Mr. Heaney was asked to provide legal advice to the Department of Energy, and given that Mr. Heaney is not a registered lawyer in the province of Alberta, does it seem reasonable that you would ask someone who is not a lawyer in Alberta to provide legal advice to the province of Alberta?

Mr. Ceci: You know, Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that there is an interprovincial agreement between a number of provinces, including Alberta and B.C., that allows lawyers to practise in each other's jurisdictions. So there's nothing here, there's nothing over there that's being asked. I figured the opposition would actually do a bit of research before they brought questions like this up because it's wrong, wrong, wrong.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the Finance minister has just encouraged us to do research, it's interesting because I have done some research. That exemption is provided for 100 days of providing legal advice or practising law in the province of Alberta. October is more than 100 days ago, so I'm curious if the minister would be happy to respond to: why at every single turn is this contract of their good friend and colleague, the friend of John Horgan, the person absolutely fighting against Alberta right now, so shady, so dodgy . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Mr. Ceci: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The situation is that we have had good advice from a person who is a lawyer, and he can practise in this province. We have got pipeline access approval, of course. Today is a day we should be celebrating more around pipelines. Mr. Heaney has given us good advice, and we'll continue to see that good advice.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think you may want to take a 30-second break.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 7(8) I am providing notice to the Assembly that the daily Routine will continue today past 3 p.m.

Members' Statements

Farm and Ranch Worker Legislation

Mr. Rosendahl: Mr. Speaker, I stand today to talk about something good happening in rural Alberta that some people tried to exploit for their own political ends. Since our government introduced the Enhanced Protection for Farm and Ranch Workers Act, there have been over 1,600 Albertans who have had WCB claims approved for farm-based injuries. That is 1,600 Albertans whose health and safety were taken care of, whose families and incomes were protected, and who have a better life because of what our government did. At the same time, the number of registered farm employer accounts through WCB grew over 240 per cent. That sounds like success.

From the farmers I've talked to and the farm organizations who are involved in the ongoing consultation about regulations, there's a lot of goodwill and understanding now about what Bill 6 was all about. That wasn't always the case, and I don't think it will be a surprise to anybody when a recent article in Alberta Views said that the Wildrose Party, Rebel media, and the Leader of the Official Opposition stoked farmers' fears with incendiary speeches. Even now, the Leader of the Opposition promises to kill Bill 6 if he's elected. Barb McKinley is quoted in the Alberta Views article. "There's no reason for that other than cheap politicking."

The problem with incendiary speeches and cheap politicking is that it leads to real-world, dangerous consequences like the intimidation and bullying of farmers and farm safety advocates like Eric Musekamp and Darlene Dunlop, who stood up for farm workers' rights and safety. It leads to social media threats that were directed against some of our government members. Where it does not lead is toward a better future and a better and safe life for farm workers and their families. That, Mr. Speaker, should be a source of shame for . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Oil Sands Development

Mr. Yao: Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that way back in the year 1714 the Hudson's Bay Company wrote about a gummy substance that the local inhabitants used to seal their canoes? In the 1790s Alexander Mackenzie wrote about the bituminous seeps along the Athabasca River. Fast-forward to 1925, when Dr. Clark of the Alberta Research Council perfected a method, using hot water and caustic soda, for separating bitumen from sand. It was a major discovery, to identify a resource in the land being settled by farmers and ranchers. The first great attempt at harvesting this resource happened when they broke ground in 1964 and then started producing in '67. Thus, the great Canadian oil sands was born.

In the 1960s Canadians became aware of pollution caused by industrial activity and automobiles. Industry responded by dealing with spills into waterways, developed major advancements in waste management. New tech was created to reduce carbon dioxide emissions and reduce other contaminants like sulphur dioxide. Lead was eliminated from fuel. Gasolines were reformulated, and methods of capturing hydrocarbon vapours were instituted. Land reclamation is more comprehensive than you see anywhere else. Dr.

Clark himself had a vision that after the land was cleaned of oil, it would be used for farmland up in the north. Tailings ponds were developed so as to not dump sewage into our waterways.

The Alberta Research Council experimented with microwaves, electricity, steam, and even nuclear, that was experimented with or theorized back then, and today the most popular method of accessing oil is using steam to access these deep reserves of oil.

The legacy, sir, is that we have institutions that train highly skilled professionals, technical personnel, and tradesmen, who get extensive experience in this difficult resource, working in a challenging environment where the weather swings from minus 40 to plus 40 degrees Celsius. We have laws, policies, and regulatory authorities that address industry issues more encompassing than any other country has done.

That, Mr. Speaker, is our Canadian oil sands. This is an industry that Canadians need to embrace and be proud of, a sector that provides revenues to build our schools, roads, and hospitals for our nation. Alberta has contributed more than $200 billion in the last decade to the federal coffers, and Canadians can thank the oil sands for that.

Government Achievements

Mrs. Schreiner: Mr. Speaker, we learn when we are very young that not everybody can be on the same side of the sandbox. As we grow older, we learn that there are those on the progressive side of the political spectrum and those on the reactionary side. Today it is my pleasure to speak to how sitting on the progressive side of this House has changed our province and how that looks in Red Deer-North.

This government recently announced 90 new $25-a-day daycare spaces in Alberta's third-largest city. This side supports everyday Albertans by making daycare affordable so parents can participate in the workforce and support their families and the economy. From the opposite side of the House all I hear about are cuts, cuts, and more cuts.

Because of the infrastructure deficit we inherited from the old Conservative government, residents of Red Deer-North had the worst air quality in the province, partially as a result of the QE II corridor. This government's investment in infrastructure has enabled my constituents to breathe easier, so to speak. Now all Albertan residents can travel with more safety through and around Red Deer. Investing in the safety and health of Albertans had not been a priority of the tired, old Conservative government, and it certainly would not be a priority of the opposition.

It took 25 years and three asks to support Red Deer College's degree-granting status. I am glad I sit on the side that is moving Alberta forward instead of running toward the past, when tuition was spiralling out of control.

While these examples are specific to my riding, progressive changes like increases in minimum wage, investment in education, growth in health care services benefit constituents of every riding in the province. The work in my city and in this province is far from over, but, Mr. Speaker, I am proud that my side of the House has all Albertans' best interests at heart.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of mixed emotions today around the announcement that the federal government will purchase the Trans Mountain pipeline and the expansion project. On the one hand, Albertans welcome the news that the Trans Mountain pipe expansion was not permanently cancelled. We need this pipeline to ensure that our products reach international markets. On the other hand, this demonstrates the abject failure of governments to enable the private sector to succeed in building energy infrastructure in Canada.

Today we learned that Kinder Morgan has decided to cash out rather than have to risk shareholders' money in a country where the federal government fails to uphold the rule of law. Justin Trudeau has decided to spend 4 and a half billion dollars in taxpayers' money, but has anything really changed? I would suggest that very little has changed. The Prime Minister is still going to have to enforce the rule of law over the eco activists. He needed to and still needs to take immediate and meaningful action.

A good first step would be to pass S-245, the Trans Mountain Pipeline Project Act, and declare the project to be works for the general advantage of Canada. Trudeau needs to end the court challenges and disruption by the B.C. NDP and actually get the pipeline built. We're in this situation as the result of the actions of the Trudeau Liberal government having halted two other needed coastal pipelines, Enbridge's Northern Gateway and TransCanada's Energy East. Kinder Morgan's Trans Mountain is the only option left. We know where the Prime Minister's real interests are. They are summed up – and I quote: we can't shut down the oil sands tomorrow; we need to phase them out. End of quote.

With Energy East and Northern Gateway being cancelled, with world majors like Shell and Total divesting their assets and moving capital to other places around the world and now Kinder Morgan cashing out, Albertans rightly remain concerned that private investment dollars continue to be driven away by the political uncertainty that remains in this province and in this country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

3:00 Trans Mountain Pipeline Project

Mr. Coolahan: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the beginning we've been steadfast in our commitment to getting the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion built. We made it clear that growing the economy and protecting the environment can and must go hand in hand. First, we put in place a country-leading climate action plan. It's a plan that led directly to the approval of a long-awaited pipeline to tidewater by the federal government.

But we understood that this approval needed to be worth more than the paper it was written on. That's why our Premier called on Ottawa to step up, and it's why she travelled the country, speaking to business leaders, workers, environmentalists, and ordinary Canadians. She didn't throw temper tantrums or call people names or ignore the climate crisis. Previous governments tried that approach for years, and it failed. Now it's clear that our Premier's tough, thoughtful approach is working. The vast majority of Canadians, including those in British Columbia, support this project.

Today the federal government announced a deal that will immediately put people to work building this pipeline. This is a major step forward for Albertans and for all Canadians. It means that tens of thousands of good new jobs are on the way. It means that a better price for our natural resources is on the way, and it means that billions in revenue to build roads, schools, and hospitals are on the way.

Mr. Speaker, we know there is more work to do, but with this deal no Canadian pipeline to tidewater has ever had this level of certainty. We are closer than ever to accessing new markets and creating new jobs. Thank you to every Canadian who spoke up for working families, thank you to our Premier for your leadership, and thank you to all Albertans who have joined us in this fight.

Thank you.

Exercise Maple Resolve 2018

Mr. Taylor: On this international day of peacekeepers I'd like to acknowledge Maple Resolve, the largest and most comprehensive Canadian Army training event of the year, which was completed at the training base in Wainwright: over 6,000 troops from not only across Canada but including 1,500 of our allies from the United States, United Kingdom, Australia, and France. This is not just another exercise. Rather, members undergo a full year of intense training, given the responsibility of being on the road to high readiness. It's awesome to know that our Canadian Army's flagship training program, that prepares soldiers for these domestic and other deployments, happens right here on the doorstep of our town of Wainwright. It's impressive, to say the least, to watch the tanks, the troops, and the equipment that have all been rolling in and out of town for quite some time and now are starting to leave.

Although Maple Resolve happens strictly from May 13 to 24, it takes the better part of a year to prepare and to execute. This exercise offers full-scale dress rehearsal for combat. Short of an actual deployment, this joint exercise provides the most realistic and real-world experience to prepare Canadian troops for an operational deployment.

Mr. Speaker, this exercise is a force-on-force battle where Canadian troops work to liberate the fictitious country of Atropia against the aggressive nation of Ariania and re-establish the international border between the two. Soldiers of all nationalities play both native and enemy forces and use their expertise just as they would on a real-life battlefield. These soldiers practise skills not only in combat but in peacekeeping, infrastructure, building, and repair. In addition, soldiers interact with citizens of these warring countries, who are played by actors for this exercise, making the simulation as realistic as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I'm proud of Canadian soldiers and their commitment to this country. Thank you for your service.

Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. W. Anderson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have two tablings. One is a copy of a letter from Christopher J. Parker to the Minister of Health outlining the situation in Peace River regarding the airplane being stuck and a commitment and a documentation of the security camera, the fact that this plane was stuck for a considerable period of time and not 10 minutes. I have the appropriate copies.

My second tabling is the time-stamp of the security camera outlining specifically the time frame that this airplane was stuck in the mud – believe me, it was a lot more than 10 minutes; I have the appropriate copies of that as well – from the same individual, Christopher J. Parker, the chief administrative officer of Peace River.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Rosendahl: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the five requisite copies of two articles from Alberta Views that were referenced in my member's statement today. The first is entitled Beyond Bill 6, and it contains the quote about cheap politicking that I referenced in my member's statement.

The second article, also printed in the Alberta Views, is from a CBC news article entitled Alberta Couple Pays High Price Advocating for Farm Workers' Rights.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise to table a document today. It is from the office of the Registrar of Lobbyists of the province of British Columbia. It is the lobbyist information for one John Heaney, the former chief of staff to the Premier, and it outlines his client information: Nuuvera Corp, “a global cannabis and industrial hemp company based in Toronto, Ontario,” the same company that is currently lobbying the provincial government here in Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I believe we have two points of order today. The Opposition House Leader.

Point of Order Language Creating Disorder

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on 23(h), (i), and (j) in regard to an interaction between the Deputy Premier and the hon. Member for Highwood during question period. The hon. Member for Highwood was asking some questions about a patient that was stuck on a plane, and the plane had been stuck in the mud. The Deputy Premier, during that conversation in question period, repeatedly almost made some references early in that question that could be taken as calling the hon. member a liar, but I didn't call a point of order.

But when the Deputy Premier said that the airplane was only stuck for 10 minutes and the hon. member then got up and pointed out that there was, in fact, actually a videotape of the incident which clearly shows, even as late as one hour and 40 minutes into it, that the airplane was still stuck, the Deputy Premier then seemed to lash out at the member. She said at that point that he was playing “fast and loose with the truth,” said that his pants were on fire, clearly in reference to, you know, the same thing that my kids say to each other, “Liar, liar, pants on fire” – I know it's quite shocking that the Deputy Premier would talk the way my kids do in the backyard, but that's what happened – and a few other comments in her speech.

I would quote Speaker Kowalski on that, that you cannot try to do indirectly what you're not allowed to do directly. While I do appreciate that the Deputy Premier was frustrated that she had been caught – I don't think the Deputy Premier was lying. I'll give her the benefit of the doubt. But when she had been in that spot where she realized that the plane had not been stuck for 10 minutes – in fact, there was a video of it being stuck longer – her reaction to that should not be to lash out against another hon. member and call him a liar. She should just withdraw and apologize for that.

The Speaker: Hon. member, any other arguments to the point of order rather than speculating about it?

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving us that whole 30 seconds.

The Speaker: Thank you.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, there are many instances in this House where the creative use of language has been utilized in order to make a point. The rules of the House and the rulings of you, Mr. Speaker, and other Speakers, have clearly indicated that context is very important. Clearly, the hon. Deputy Premier had made a clear statement with respect to what had happened and was not prepared to accept the facts as they were being put forward by the other member in the opposition.

There are many cases. For example, in Alberta Hansard on page 1611, October 30, 2017, the then Opposition House Leader made a point of order that one member of the government had suggested that the other side was telling whoppers, and, Mr. Speaker, you ruled – the quote was: “I guess . . . if you're going to spread around mistruths, then you might as well tell whoppers” – that “mistruths” was out of order, and an apology was duly given. But you did not so rule with “whoppers.” It is the creative use of language. It's important to consider the context.

In this particular case both members had different information, and the Deputy Premier clearly did not accept the assertions of the hon. member. She used that language but did not suggest that the hon. member was lying or telling mistruths. So I would ask you to take into account those facts, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief, but I have to say that I'm surprised to hear the Government House Leader make the argument that he has because, frankly, if we accept his logic, then I think we're on a very, very slippery path in this Assembly, where members on both sides could abuse the ruling. Very clearly, I think that when you say that someone's pants are on fire, then as the Opposition House Leader said very clearly, we all know where that comes from. I kind of wonder if maybe next it's cockney rhyming slang as a way of insulting one another or skirting the rules.

I do think that the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, third edition, 2017, page 619, is useful, where, in fact, it spells out what the Opposition House Leader has said, and that is: “a Member ‘cannot do indirectly what cannot be done directly’.” I think that is a very important principle here because, frankly, I think that if you do not find that this is a point of order, I worry about the future of decorum in this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I do not have the benefit of the Blues, but my recollection of what I heard – I think the House leader for the opposition has, in fact, a good case, a good point where he references the decision made by the former Speaker Zwozdesky, I think. “He is playing fast and loose with the truth” and “pants on fire” are the particular references that were made today. I thought I heard something in addition to that, but I ought not to speak to that until I see it.

I would agree with the Government House Leader's argument that it is in context when the Speaker makes the decision. Well, in this context I believe the Deputy Premier ought to have been more cautious with her comments and not left the impression of what might be construed by others as a deliberate falsehood. I would say that in this instance, in fact, there was a point of order, and I would hope that we proceed in the future using more caution.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if that's the case, then on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Deputy Premier I will withdraw the comment and apologize and assure the House that we do not believe the hon. Member for Highwood's pants are on fire.

The Speaker: I'm just . . .

Mr. Cooper: Taking it all in, sir?

The Speaker: I have significant insight into the future because of, in fact, context, and in that context maybe the Government House Leader can get away with it.

The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. I rise to argue a second point of order. Before I begin, I might just say that sometimes you're surprised in the Assembly as to the way a discussion goes. I never thought I'd see a time where we were talking about people's pants on fire here in the Assembly. Nevertheless, we digressed.

During a question this afternoon that I asked the Minister of Finance – and I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j) of the standing orders today; unfortunately, I also don't have the benefit of the Blues – it is my belief that the member, the Minister of Finance, implied or said directly that I was misleading the House with respect to the question that I'd asked on the Premier's former chief of staff, John Heaney. I think that it's important that I just spend a brief moment discussing some of these concerns that I have.

Clearly, I am not misleading the House. I rose to speak specifically about Mr. Heaney's contract. The fact that he'd begun work in October, signed the contract in February, and then that contract was posted online in May: all of those facts are available to the government and are on the government website as the information I received was from the contract.

Secondly, I tabled the document in the House today that gave an indication that he, Mr. Heaney, is currently lobbying on behalf of a cannabis company in the province of British Columbia. Nuvera cannabis, I believe, is the name of the company.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you are getting to the point of order?

Mr. Cooper: Yeah. The point of order is that he said that I've misled the House, and I am providing you the evidence that shows clearly that I am not misleading the House, only giving the government the very information that they have provided to me. The minister is making an accusation that I have misled the House. The document that I tabled today is an indication that he, in fact, is a registered lobbyist for a cannabis company and that he works for the Minister of Finance here in the province of Alberta as a senior adviser to the Minister of Finance, that same minister who is responsible for the sale of and the creation of a retail market for cannabis in the province of Alberta.

The other thing that we spoke about at length today was the fact that he is not a registered lawyer, but the Minister of Finance said that he was here to provide legal advice. He has provided legal advice for over a hundred days here in the province of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. member, where are you going with this? There's an allegation that the Finance minister made a statement. Is that correct?

Mr. Cooper: That's correct, and I'm providing you the evidence that I did not mislead the House.

The Speaker: More and more we ought to have a rule around the idea that when we're listening to this, there is not a story told two or three times that has already been mentioned.

The allegation is that the minister disputed the facts that you said and that you now support with actual evidence. Am I right?

Mr. Cooper: No. The allegation is that he made a claim that I misled the House, which clearly I have not. I mean, not to belabour the point, but the very fact that there's a code of conduct that he is in breach of presents a significant challenge to the fact that the Minister of Finance would make this allegation that I'm misleading the House when all of those documents are available to the Minister of Finance, and he should know that I'm not. As such, he should withdraw and apologize for making such an outlandish accusation.

The Speaker: Wow.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, there may have been a lapse on my part. I didn't hear that particular part of the exchange, so I'm not really in a position to argue. Obviously, if the Minister of Finance did suggest that the hon. member had misled the House, that would be a breach of points of order, and I would deal with that appropriately. I'm not in a position to confirm or dispute the hon. member's suggestion of being accused of misleading the House.

3:20

The Speaker: Hon. members, I did not hear the allegation. I would remind the House that when you are rising on a point of order, is the allegation to the degree that it was misleading rather than to determine the truth of the statements leading to the dispute?

To the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I think there was much discussion about continued disagreement about the facts but not necessarily to the misleading statement made in the House.

I do not see a point of order in this situation.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms. Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

The Chair: Hon. members, are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to Bill 1 in Committee of the Whole. This bill is the Energy Diversification Act. This government received the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee's report. There are some good points in this bill. We, actually, as the Official Opposition, the United Conservatives, support efforts to diversify and grow our petrochemical sector because that will also help to free up some of the pipeline space. We get that, so we support it.

But if you look at this government's record, Madam Chair, in the last three years they have done nothing to promote private investment. They actually chased private investments away from this province. They raised taxes on the job creators by 20 per cent, and they also dramatically increased the red tape. They imposed the job-killing carbon tax. They never said once in their campaign platform that they were going to bring in the job-killing carbon tax, which is an economy-wide carbon tax. When they brought that in, they said that by imposing the job-killing, economy-wide carbon tax, they'll create jobs. On the other hand, they actually killed the economy, they killed the jobs, and they killed the investments.

Madam Chair, if they had done other things right, then we wouldn't have required this Bill 1. Their message to the investors was very clear. By bringing in their tax increases, by bringing in a carbon tax, and by bringing in regulatory red tape at every stage, the Alberta NDP were telling global investors that you'd better invest your money elsewhere.

Given all this, Madam Chair, it's really hard to see how effectively these modest loan guarantees and grants, spread over eight years, draw much-needed investment back in any meaningful way or in any timely fashion. Albertans have clearly taken note of the NDP's policies of the first three years. Now the NDP is trying to pass legislation to counter that. There is a pattern here. This government makes one mistake, and to fix that mistake, they have to make another mistake, and to fix that, another mistake. That's why I call it Whac-A-Mole policy. They bring each time one policy, and there are flaws in that. We identify them. We tell them. We move amendments to make their bills better, but they won't take our advice. They just ignore us, and they vote down our sensible, common-sense amendments.

It would be, you know, far more effective to start repealing their harmful policies rather than bringing in new legislation and adding more red tape. It's not even clear why the NDP needs legislation to carry out this agenda as opposed to using their executive power. This is clearly a political exercise to try and distract from their own record.

Talking about their record, Madam Chair, this government and their federal ally Justin Trudeau killed the Energy East pipeline, they killed the Northern Gateway pipeline, and, you know, they did everything they could to get Trans Mountain to the stage where we are here today. We need both the federal and provincial governments to backstop Kinder Morgan's losses. The government is now saying: okay; we'll buy you out because no other private investor is ready to invest into the project. We have to spend taxpayers' money to give that certainty of completing a pipeline to ship our product to the Canadian coast when their federal ally Justin Trudeau could have just implemented and enforced the law and invoked 92(10)(c).

That could have saved lots of time for the project proponent, and that could have saved billions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money, but this Alberta NDP government did nothing. For three years they have been saying that their climate change leadership plan will get us social licence and that then that will change the minds of people like Tzeponah Berman and Karen Mahon, but they haven't moved any opponent of the pipeline from no to yes as of today, including today. Even today John Horgan said that they'll fight to the end and that they'll use every tool in their tool box. This Premier: we equipped her with Bill 12, and she kept saying that she would use it in her tool box. But today she said that, no, she's not going to use that. That's the record of this government, Madam Chair.

Having said that, coming back to Bill 1, which was actually not required if this government was doing their job, we as the Official Opposition definitely support diversification of the petrochemical sector. Also, we support partial upgrading because it will definitely free up the pipeline space.

You know, as the bill is written, there are some shortcomings, particularly on accountability. It's not good enough to just have the programs and the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission, the APMC, send reports to the minister and cabinet. The government is actually the steward of the resources for all Albertans, so it is critical in this era of openness and transparency that reports be brought before and tabled with the Legislative Assembly. Madam

Chair, the people that elected me in Calgary-Foothills are looking for accountability, and as their representative they would expect me, being the critic for Energy, to hold this government to account and bring openness and transparency. At the end, we are the elected representatives, and the buck stops here, in this temple of democracy, the Legislature.

Also, the Auditor General called for improved reporting from APMC, so we have serious concerns about this bill. The APMC is also currently running on a "trust us" basis. They say: don't worry. When we ask questions in PAC and everywhere, they say: "Don't worry. Trust us. Believe us. We are the experts. We know what we are doing." That's the kind of response we get, Madam Chair, and that's not good enough for the government's accountability.

That's why I move an amendment to Bill 1. With your permission, Madam Chair, I'll read this. I have the requisite number of copies, and I'll give them to the page here. I'll wait till you get the copies.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended by striking out section 4 and substituting the following:

Reports

4(1) The Minister shall prepare an annual report on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2, and shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

4(2) The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission shall annually, and more frequently if the Minister directs, report to the Minister on any project supported by the Commission through any programs established under section 2, and the Minister shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Madam Chair, it's about accountability. This government talks a good game. If the Premier is serious about bringing openness and transparency, all I'm asking is that every member of this Assembly support this amendment and pass this amendment so that we can strengthen Bill 1 to make the legislation stronger.

I ask all of my colleagues here to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Great job, Madam Chair. Thank you very much. I really appreciate the opportunity to stand again and speak to this amendment on Bill 1. I have spoken to Bill 1 previously, and I'd just like to reiterate a couple of the points there. This amendment is talking about transparency and accountability. It's one of the things that I recall this government ran their campaign on, so I don't think it's unreasonable for us to ask for amendments that can address that.

While I'm on, you know, Bill 1, we talk about incentivizing investment in Alberta. I worked in the oil and gas industry for a very many, many years. Alberta was a great place to invest, specifically over the last 25 years or so, especially in the oil and gas industry, where we really, really grew the economy up in the Bonnyville area, up in the Grande Prairie area, all over northern Alberta. But when I look at why we're doing this – and we had the announcement today about the Trans Mountain pipeline and the federal government getting involved. I almost see Bill 1 as kind of the same thing, where the government has kind of gone in and meddled with things and muddled things up to the point where they actually have to step in and start putting taxpayers' money at it.

Now, when we talk about accountability and this diversification, we're dealing now with Justin Trudeau's government, and he's been very clear that he doesn't really support pipelines or our oil and gas industry. So in handing over control of this to him – you know what? – there are a lot of Albertans that don't trust him, and I think the polling is showing that. At the same time, we do have to talk about our provincial NDP government and their allies, the federal Liberals and their federal NDP counterparts who support the Leap Manifesto. We see the true colours of the NDP being delivered by the Horgan government.

Now, when I look at the NDP and their sudden stance in support of the oil and gas industry – I believe I've talked to a few of my colleagues about this, and I may have even mentioned it in the House once or twice. When I was a kid, I used to spend a lot of time at my grandparents'. My grandfather was a worker. He was up early in the morning, sun-up to sundown, except on Saturdays. At 1 o'clock on Saturdays there was a program on CFRN TV called Stampede Wrestling, and it was fantastic. You know what? Everything would stop. It didn't matter what you were doing, if you were in the middle of seeding or anything; it was Stampede Wrestling. Ed Whalen was the announcer, and he would get the crowd fired up. I believe that it was filmed down in Calgary. The Hart family was a real big part of that. There were numerous villains. You know, they would pack dust inside their wrestling shorts and throw it in the guys' eyes.

The reason I'm bringing this up is that when I look across the aisle and I see all the NDP that used to be protesting pipelines and protesting the oil and gas industry suddenly standing up and waving the flag of prosperity for Alberta – “We've got to get behind” and, you know, “We're pushing for this” – it makes me think of Stampede Wrestling because everybody that's watching it knows it's phony, but it is entertaining. It's like watching a train wreck. You can't take your eyes off of it.

I would ask for support for this amendment to this bill because it does provide some transparency. It does give us a better look and forces the government to do some reporting. But while you're at it, if you're looking for some entertainment, you could always look up some old episodes of Stampede Wrestling, and you'll kind of get where I'm going with that because these folks would get up there and put on a really good show, but at the end of it all everything was fake.

I really don't trust this government. I don't trust the federal Liberals either when it comes to this pipeline. I don't think that everybody is really all that sincere in their support for the pipeline or for the oil and gas industry. I have a very big concern for all the smokestacks out in Fort Saskatchewan. We talk about incentivizing and diversifying our economy. I think that when I talked about Bill 1 originally, I talked about how I had worked at a lot of those plants, the Sherritt Gordon fertilizer plant and the Dow Chemical plant, and that was diversification that didn't need incentivizing. I do have a concern for the folks out in Fort Saskatchewan because all of those smokestacks don't really fall into the whole Leap Manifesto doctrine, you know, the people that are supporting the document federally and our neighbours to the west and, actually, any NDP with a membership, really, that signed on to that.

So I do have a big concern for the folks out in Fort Saskatchewan at the moment that maybe they'll be next, when they look at what happened to our coal industry, when they look at the attempts to get this pipeline approved. I really think that a lot of the folks out there are quite nervous that maybe their smokestack will be next on the shutdown list for the oil and gas industry and the NDP Leap Manifesto, so we do have to take that into consideration. [interjections] I see the members are laughing. You know, they didn't campaign on the carbon tax and they didn't campaign on shutting down the coal industry, but guess what happened? So I would say that the people that I talk to in the industry out in Fort Saskatchewan are very, very nervous about you folks getting another term and seeing exactly where your focus lands.

So if I could get other people to support this. Like I said, I know that you campaigned on transparency, you campaigned on accountability, and that's all that this simple amendment is asking for on Bill 1 is to provide some accountability and some reporting.

With that, I will allow others to have a chance to speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Klein.

Mr. Coolahan: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Foothills for bringing forward the amendment. I understand what he's trying to achieve with that amendment, and that's great. I mean, I think we all want to understand what's happening to public dollars when they are going into these facilities. However, it is a bit redundant because the Department of Energy prepares an annual report, and that report, obviously, would include information on any projects that would be authorized or supported under the programs enabled by Bill 1. That report is publicly available, and it could be debated in the Public Accounts Committee as well.

I'm confident in the ability of members in this Legislature and at the Public Accounts Committee to review this annual report and to ask questions during that time. As such, I will not be supporting this amendment because it's simply not necessary.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to the amendment to Bill 1, that essentially asks this House to be willing to prepare an annual report that will go not just before a minister and Executive Council but before the Legislative Assembly. When we go through the process and the exercise of democracy, we elect people into this Legislature for a reason, so that the people and their representatives can have a say on the legislation that is brought before this House and on how the government accounts for its actions when it comes to various enactments and following through and doing the business of government.

Madam Chair, we know that the NDP campaigned on a campaign of transparency and accountability. That's laudable. It is something I believe that all sides of this House can and should support. And I will freely admit that as the business of the House comes before a committee like the Public Accounts Committee, that's an appropriate way, one of the ways, that we can deal with information that is coming from the government through the business of this province. But I would also argue that at the final end of the equation, the final authority should not be a small group of people on a Public Accounts Committee but should be the Legislature in full. It should be the Legislative Assembly and the representatives of this Legislative Assembly that have the opportunity on behalf of their constituents to be able to address this issue of transparency and accountability.

Madam Chair, it's actually really quite important for us to be able to do so in this Chamber. We are the representatives of the people, we are the voice of the people, and we are here to strengthen legislation and to hold the government to account. I believe that it is critical. This is a critical piece. This amendment speaks to a critical piece of governance when it comes to democracy, that all legislation and all government actions should at the end of the day come back before this House. You know, nothing more or less than the prosperity of this province is at stake at times, and it's important, as we meet as a Legislative Assembly, that we consider amendments like this and that we try to make legislation better. I believe that this amendment does indeed do that by asking the government to consider bringing this back before the Legislative Assembly.

Madam Chair, when we take a look at the Energy Diversification Act, we can see that there's a background to this bill that needs to be considered. You know, at one time the United States was a net importer of energy. That's no longer the case. Today, now, the United States is a net exporter of energy products. Energy-producing and -exporting nations are now in a struggle to maintain and to increase their global market share, and Alberta and Canada are not outside of this reality that we face. Nations like Canada and the United States and the OPEC nations are competing in places like Asia to sell their energy products, and it's going to be very important that we produce and that we have an energy industry in Alberta that is capable of carving out that market share and is capable of competing on the world stage.

We need to consider this amendment because I believe that as we bring back the information about how we are doing and how this is performing, the financial tools that we're going to be using to try to promote the diversification of our energy industry, it's going to be important to bring it back to the people and to their representatives.

Madam Chair, we in Alberta are going to have to compete and to participate in this global energy market, and that's what this bill really speaks to. It speaks to the fact that this government in particular has struggled to figure out how best to participate in the global energy market. As a result of that, I believe that we need to come back to the House and that we need to review through our representatives in this Legislature just how we are doing and, for the programs that we have passed through Bill 1, whether they are actually doing the job that we're asking them to be able to do.

We've seen the value of doing exactly that, bringing this kind of information and this kind of transparency to government and bringing it back into this Legislature. Legislation that's been passed through this House has obviously negatively impacted this province over the last three years, and we've had the opportunity as the opposition to try to provide constructive criticism. We warned the government about the confusion that is created when you try to address things like royalty rates, the carbon tax, emission caps, regulatory red tape that often has bound the hands of business in Alberta, increased corporate taxation, loss of capital investment.

We've had all of these things in this House at one point in time over our last three years, and we've had the opportunity as an opposition to be able to speak to these and to at least try to get the government to listen to the wisdom of the opposition. From our perspective, at least, at any rate, Madam Chair, we certainly wish the government had listened to this. We could have solved and stopped ourselves from pursuing courses of action that have severely hurt this province.

What we have seen is a government that has waffled and come late to the party when it comes to supporting pipelines to tidewater. They've come late to the party when we've tried to explain to them that you can take and pass legislation and pass regulations that actually take capital and get companies to actually not want to invest in this province. When we start talking about Bill 1, this Energy Diversification Act, and the kinds of grants and subsidies that we're looking at implementing here, it's going to be important for us to make sure that as we begin to digest whether or not they're doing the job, we come back to this House.

The section of Bill 1 that refers to how we will hold these programs under Bill 1 to be accountable and use the financial tools outlined in the bill, from royalty credits to grants: we need to know how we're going to make that accountable in the best way to the people of Alberta through the representatives of the people in Alberta. Rather than reporting to the Legislature, Bill 1 suggests that we should just report it to the minister and to Executive Council. Madam Chair, we would suggest differently, that it is not a good idea to sidestep the people's representatives. Rather, bring it back to the Legislature for appropriate oversight and insight.

I would finally just wrap up my comments, Madam Chair, by saying that it's not good enough to just have the programs and the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission send reports to the minister and to the cabinet. The government is the steward of a hugely important resource that we have in energy in this province. We've been gifted with this resource, and it's something we need to steward and to manage very carefully for the best interests of the people of Alberta. So it's critical, absolutely critical, in an era of openness and transparency that the reports be brought before and be tabled before the Legislative Assembly.

Madam Chair, at the end of the day, the buck stops with the people that have been elected in this Legislature. We have and should have the final say on how this government is acting and how the programs and the legislation that we have carried forth into this House and into the rest of the province are functioning. We would argue that we need to consider the Auditor General when he called for improved reporting from the Alberta Petroleum and Marketing Commission, that we take into consideration his wise counsel, that the Alberta Petroleum and Marketing Commission is currently running on a trust-us mode, that we know that that's not good enough, and that we bring this back into the House and into the Legislature for the final approval of the people through their legislators, MLAs.

Thank you for your time, and I would urge the government to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gotfried: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak in support of the amendment by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills.

Madam Chair, this is about accountability. It's about accountability that we all take on when we take on a role as a Member of this Legislative Assembly and the opportunity to serve our constituents in a way which is a responsible one and one which recognizes that we answer to them at the end of the day. This amendment asks us to not only honour that but to actually embed it into this legislation to ensure that we actually will meet that requirement of diligence on their behalf and to ensure that we report back to them when we move ahead and that when we move ahead with legislation, we do so with a degree of diligence that I think is not only expected of us but that we owe in terms of our ability to represent the province.

Madam Chair, we've talked about some of our concerns with this bill on a broader perspective. We've talked about the fact that we do not believe that the economic fundamentals of this province have been held intact and, certainly, in reflection of some of the past advantages that we've had – and I use the Alberta advantage – where we did not need to incentivize businesses to invest. I've been following it quite closely. We had lost – and this is going back over a year now, to actually probably as early as 2016 – at that time over $34.8 billion worth of foreign direct investment in this province. I think that I'd mentioned before in this House that I look at the foreign investors often as the canaries in the coal mine here on whether Alberta is a good place to invest, a great place to invest, or not. Unfortunately, the terms "political risk" and "Alberta" have been used in the same sentence all too often recently. Hence, we are needing to sweeten the pot for investors to even consider coming to Alberta and investing. I think that in doing so, we are taking an opportunity here, and we're taking some moves.

We've perhaps damaged the economic fundamentals with respect to the carbon tax, with respect to the minimum wage, with respect to increased personal taxes and increased corporate taxes that have scared away these investors. Now we're coming up with legislation that says: well, we want to attract you back. I think that in doing so, we need to also take into account everyday Albertans, who are on the sidelines, saying: is this good? We've heard the term "corporate welfare." We've heard different things there. Of course, we have found ways to support industry in the past, many different ways. We used to have an unlevel playing field that had Alberta and the Alberta advantage over and above our competitors around the globe. We need to get back there, Madam Chair. We need to get back there.

But in the meantime we're stuck with putting some Band-Aids on some critical wounds here in the province because of flawed fundamentals with respect to our economic situation and the confidence that investors have in our province. In doing so, I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills has put in an amendment here, one that, again, goes back to that accountability to the people we serve, those that are lucky enough to still be employed and those that are unlucky and have not found employment, not just for a short period of time but many of them getting on to two and three years. Their benefits have run out, and their opportunity to thrive in this province has run out. Many of them are leaving, and we've seen that. We've seen an exodus not only of capital, but we've seen people leave this province.

Of course, if you're not a growing province, if you're not attracting people and having that influx of investment, the creation of new jobs, eventually it leads into net negative immigration in the province, which then affects so many other industries, Madam Chair. I was in the home building industry, and the big measure for us at the end of the day was net migration. Are we adding people to Alberta? Are they choosing Alberta to invest in? Are they choosing Alberta as a great place to live and make a living? Madam Chair, that's where we run into an issue here. Are we doing that the right way?

We're accountable to all of those people. Some of them may have a spouse that's lost a job, but one member of the household is still paying taxes as a hard-working Albertan. The other member of the household may be trying to make ends meet or may have taken employment that was certainly below their qualifications just to make ends meet and to ensure that they have that opportunity to support their families but at the same time are supporting this province through their hard-earned tax dollars. We need to respect that if we're going to embark on any of these types of opportunities, albeit, again, because of flawed and damaged economic fundamentals, Madam Chair, we need to consider how we're going to approach this.

I think that we're in a situation here where we are asking this House, this Legislature, and those organizations like the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission and the minister's office and the ministerial staff to be accountable to this organization, to this Assembly here, and through this Assembly to Albertans on a broader perspective. I think we owe that diligence, Madam Chair. We owe that diligence, we owe that respect, and we owe that level of accountability to every Albertan who takes a look at this and may not understand it as deeply as we do. People in industry understand it. They have lawyers, they have accountants, and they have all kinds of experts in the field to take a look at this and to see how it impacts their decision to invest in this province. That's fine. That's what we expect. We expect that those industries are going to do that, and we hope – we hope – that they'll leverage that investment and that assistance that we're providing to them and, hopefully, invest more.

What I am concerned about is that if we take away some of these supports and incentives, people will say, "Thanks very much, and now we're leaving again" and that we will actually have damaged the economic fundamentals even further by creating a subsidy that is there and actually lowers productivity and lowers the ability for us to compete on a global scale, Madam Chair.

Those are the things that concern me, and that's why I believe in this amendment. Actually, the spirit of this amendment, the wording of this amendment, is such that it ensures that we in this House are accountable to everyday Albertans, to the people that put us into this Assembly, that vote for us every day of the week, and who pay those taxes. At the end of the day, if we remind ourselves, there is no such thing as government money, Madam Chair; there are only taxpayers' dollars. Because of that, I will be supporting this amendment, and I encourage everyone in this House to do so.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members on the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this amendment to Bill 1, moved by my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills. It seems a common-sense amendment.

But just before I get into that, I'm going to, interestingly enough, take issue with what our hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills said when he was on his feet. He actually disparaged the honour of Stampede Wrestling at one point in his remarks, and I would like to say that that was first-class entertainment and as authentic as anything that I recall. That's what I have to say about that.

Back to the amendment. Madam Chair, this is common sense. It says:

The Minister shall prepare an annual report on the Minister's progress in establishing and implementing . . . programs under section 2, and . . . lay the report before the . . . Assembly.

Now, it's just a simple accountability matter. It seems completely common sense to me.

If a minister of the Crown from any party at any particular time is going to put in place subsidies, supports for businesses at the taxpayers' expenditure, I think it's only reasonable that the taxpayers should get a report back on what the program is, on how successful it is, on what the government hopes to achieve on behalf of the taxpayers for it, I would say, in terms of tax revenue, in terms of employment, in terms of basically expanding a particular industry in order to build a critical mass so that the industry could flourish and develop further. In short, the government ought to be able to express and explain to the public that when they do this, they actually have a plan, they have intentions, and they should be able to actually express to the public measurable goals that they had and then come back each year and report progress against the measurable goals that the government ought to put in place.

If ever there was an amendment, in my view, this one makes sense. So I thank the hon. member that put that forward, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Now, it also says:

The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission shall annually, and more frequently if [required], report to the Minister on any project supported by the Commission through any programs established under section 2.

Again, the first piece is about – actually, they’re both about accountability to the public, but the second piece is also about accountability to the minister, that the agency or commission reports to the minister, that the minister is responsible for appointing people to the commission. I think it’s only right that the minister ought to hold the commission accountable. The minister ought to know what the goals are. The minister ought to require the commission to report on a regular basis their progress against the stated goals. Again, under Bill 1, if it’s using taxpayers’ dollars, then through the minister and through this Legislative Assembly that report really properly and rightly ought to be put in front of the citizens of Alberta.

Madam Chair, if there was ever an amendment that was common sense, that makes sense, that members on all sides of this House really ought to get behind – and it’s surely not partisan. There’s surely nothing here that casts a negative pall on the government side or any other side of the House. I think it’s just making – whether anybody likes this bill or doesn’t like this bill, this improves it. On that basis, I would respectfully ask members on all sides of the House to support this common-sense, nonpartisan amendment that improves the legislation that’s before this House.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Yes, I did want to take a moment to talk about this amendment that my colleague from Calgary-Foothills brought forward. Again, I want to speak in favour of supporting this amendment. You know, in reading it here, it says that the “Energy Diversification Act be amended by striking out section 4.” Now, section 4(1) presently reads:

The Minister shall annually, and more frequently if the Premier directs, report to the Executive Council on the Minister’s progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2.

Of course, what’s going to be substituted in its place is:

The Minister shall prepare an annual report on the Minister’s progress in establishing and implementing any programs under section 2, and shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Madam Chair, I think this is a pretty good amendment to bring some clarity and to bring some light into what happens with this bill as it progresses. I think that, obviously, taking it to Executive Council rather than the Legislative Assembly – now, Executive Council, of course, is just, you know, the cabinet of the government, so obviously this isn’t something that’s going to be seen in public like it will be if it’s brought into the Legislative Assembly. I think it only makes sense that if this bill has the effects that the government suggests and it’s such a great bill, then I’m not sure why they wouldn’t want to bring forward the results of this bill, bring it forward to the Legislative Assembly so that we can all see it and so the people of Alberta can see it and decide for themselves, too, the success of it or the failure of it, whichever is the case.

Madam Chair, I think this is a great amendment, and I think it definitely will bring an opportunity for some clarity and also to make sure that it’s transparent. This government talks a lot about transparency and how they want to claim that they’re the most transparent government ever. Of course, we could debate that long into the night, but if they want to make that claim, this is an opportunity to bring just a little bit more transparency to what they’re doing here. I think that’s a good part there.

Now, if we look at section 4(2), it presently reads:

The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission shall annually, and more frequently if the Minister directs, report to the Minister on any project supported by the Commission through any programs established under section 2.

Now, of course, this amendment is going to change that section to read:

The Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission shall annually, and more frequently if the Minister directs, report to the Minister on any project supported by the Commission through any programs established under section 2 . . .

And then this is where it changes.

. . . and the Minister shall lay the report before the Legislative Assembly if it is then sitting or, if it is not then sitting, within 15 days after the commencement of the next sitting.

Again, Madam Chair, this is another opportunity not only to bring light and transparency to what’s happening in this bill but also to what’s happening under this bill based on what the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is doing. Instead of, you know, just bringing it to the minister, with what the Alberta Petroleum Marketing Commission is doing, it’s going to be brought to the Legislative Assembly. Of course, this is where the public will have a chance to view this. Obviously, in the minister’s office the public doesn’t have opportunity to sit in the minister’s office and see every document that comes through, but the things that go on in this Legislature the people of Alberta do have an opportunity to see.

So I think this is a great opportunity for this government to show a little more transparency and have an opportunity to show Albertans the work that they’re doing and the results of the bills that they’re passing in this Legislature. Again, if this bill is that great and is going to do all these great things, I would think that they would want to bring it forward here so that they can show Albertans what’s happening and have that opportunity.

I think there are some odd things, of course, with this bill. I mean, the NDP is bringing in this bill after three years in government. I’m not sure what the problem is. I guess I could probably surmise what the problem is. It’s that the government has been driving investment out of Alberta for years, since they’ve gotten in. They’ve had three years of driving away investment and raising taxes and everything, so now they have to do something to gain that back.

Of course, there are things that the government could be doing to attract investment and keep investment here in Alberta, but the government has been doing the opposite. They haven’t done anything to reduce regulations; in fact, they’ve increased regulations. They haven’t done anything to reduce taxes; in fact, they’ve increased taxes. They’ve created a lot of uncertainty for the people that invest money in large projects in Alberta and elsewhere. It’s not like this money isn’t being spent now; it’s just being spent elsewhere.

Obviously, this bill is basically an admission by the government of failure. Of course, if this bill is going to do all these great things, then I think it only makes sense that the results of this bill come before the Legislative Assembly, not be hidden in cabinet, not be hidden in the minister’s office or anywhere else but be brought forward here to the Legislative Assembly so that the people of Alberta can see exactly what’s going on.

I think this is a great amendment. I think we should all support this amendment. Thank you very much.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to introduce today to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the school group from the Assumption school in the little town of Oyen, which is along the border. I'd like all those wonderful students and their parent chaperones to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to make a few brief comments about Bill 1, and then we'll be proposing an amendment, which I hope the government would agree would improve the bill. You know, in general terms I think that taking steps to expand Alberta's energy industry in any way is always a positive thing. It is interesting that this legislation doesn't really do a whole lot that the minister can't already do, so I have some concerns that the bill itself is somewhat redundant, that it's really more of a showpiece bill, as Bill 1s occasionally can be, and really allowing the government more to promote a particular political agenda rather than actually do some substantive legislating. However, having said that, it does give us an opportunity to improve upon what is already in the bill.

One of the things that I think is important is that, noting that Alberta has benefited greatly from the energy industry throughout our history, that benefit has not always been evenly distributed through our province, be that geographically or socially. So one of the things that I think is important is that we use whatever funds that are generated from a bill like this, using a portion of those to ensure that everyone around the province, those in under-represented groups both geographically defined and otherwise, have an opportunity to participate.

Given that, I will pause briefly and hand out this amendment to the page.

The Chair: It will be known as amendment A2.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended in section 2(1) by striking out clause (e) and substituting the following:

- (e) encourage increased participation and leadership from under-represented groups and geographic communities in the energy sector, and.

I'll just read section 2(1).

2(1) The Minister shall establish programs that have the primary purpose of supporting economic growth and energy diversification, including, without limitation, programs that and then right now the current section (e) reads:

- (e) encourage increased participation from under-represented communities in the energy sector.

That's great, encouraging participation from underrepresented communities in the energy sector. What my amendment would do is expand that out beyond increasing participation and leadership, not just participation but active leadership from underrepresented groups and geographic communities. I think that's an important distinction. It's not a huge difference in terms of what the government bill currently has, but it is expansive, I think, and perhaps better representative of what the minister is going to do.

I will note that the bill itself says the words "without limitation" in 2(1), so certainly the minister is not limited just to this list, but there is a list all the same. Given that, I think it's important that if we're going to name names – one of the first things I was taught when I went into public office was that when you give a speech, if you're going to name names, be sure you get absolutely everyone or name no one because you're almost certain to offend. In this case the government has chosen to name some names and list different groups or different things that the minister may do, although saying "without limitation" that "the Minister shall establish programs that have the primary purpose." So the minister has gone and named these names, and I think that in doing that – there are some great things here, but it is perhaps not as comprehensive as it could be.

So the intent here behind my amendment is to simply improve the bill by expanding out some of the wording. You know, as we move in Alberta in our energy industry to satisfy the world's energy needs, be they hydrocarbon based or other, we are in this province on the cutting edge in many ways of developing new ways to harvest, to store, to distribute, and manage energy. That gives us a tremendous opportunity to develop value-added industries in new parts and different parts of the province that perhaps historically have not simply had the blessing of having those natural resources immediately adjacent. That's going to inspire, I hope, a new generation of energy researchers from different communities in Alberta than have historically participated and different groups, including indigenous groups, that have not been full participants in Alberta's energy industry so far.

The intent here is to do a better job by including diverse geographic communities in energy diversification, diverse cultural communities, and especially and with enthusiasm indigenous communities, so I hope the government sees merit in this amendment. I would encourage all members of the Assembly to support it.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for bringing this amendment, but I have a few questions. Maybe he can help me understand this. We are removing 2(1)(e) and then replacing it with:

- (e) encourage increased participation and leadership from under-represented groups and geographic communities in the energy sector.

When you say "leadership from under-represented groups," I'm just curious to understand. Is that the leadership in those companies, like, at CEO level? When you talk about geographic communities, is your idea to spread the development across the province? If that is the case, our Official Opposition is all for spreading out the development to all parts of Alberta. Particularly when I toured in your area, Madam Chair, up north, there is a lot of potential there, but it also has to be practical.

Also, I just want to caution the Member for Calgary-Elbow that when the federal government brought in Bill C-69 – I mean, it's not exactly the same thing. I'm just cautioning from my experience with that bill. For approving pipelines, the Prime Minister wanted to apply a gender-based approach, labour considerations, things that directly won't have any impact other than ideological. In this case I don't think that's the intention of my friend from Calgary-Elbow. My understanding is that it's about spreading the development evenly across the province and bringing up the underrepresented groups like the First Nations, who were here the other day. We all thank them for their contributions in building a better Alberta and Canada. If that is the approach, I and my colleagues are open to supporting that, and I encourage everyone to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 10

An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. At this point I would like to move an amendment to Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, and I have the requisite number of copies for you.

4:30

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.

Go ahead, hon. minister.

Ms Larivee: Thank you, Madam Chair. We've received feedback from stakeholders, particularly municipalities, during the debate of Bill 10. We are listening and responding to those conversations with stakeholders, including a recent conversation between the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Edmonton's Mayor Iveson. I would like to introduce some amendments to Bill 10 as a result of those conversations.

The amendments do not change the intent or the structure of Bill 10. This is still enabling legislation, and municipalities will have the choice to pass a bylaw to establish a PACE program or not. Instead, the amendments will bring additional clarity and certainty on how we expect the program to be run should a municipality make the choice to implement PACE. The amendments provide additional clarity regarding how a clean energy improvement program is expected to operate.

A municipality is expected to pass only one bylaw to establish a clean energy improvement program and authorize borrowing to fund the program. This bylaw will include the types of property and improvements that a municipality would like to make eligible for improvements and borrowing requirements such as the amount of money that a municipality will borrow to fund the program, maximum interest rates, and terms of repayment.

The amendments also reduce redundancy regarding the listing of a clean energy improvement tax on the tax notice as this is already required under the Municipal Government Act, change the term “agricultural property” to “farmland” to align with terminology used in the MGA, and update the wording regarding prepayment of outstanding PACE taxes to align with the similar provision for local improvement taxes under the MGA.

The amendments also provide greater clarity regarding petitioning of a clean energy improvement program. Specifically, if a successful petition leads to a clean energy bylaw being repealed, existing agreements will remain in place, and those taxes will continue to be paid.

Finally, the amendments will specify that a complaint about a clean energy improvement tax, as it is entered into voluntarily, can only be made in the first year that it is imposed.

I ask that members support this amendment to Bill 10, that will bring further clarity and guidance for municipalities and respond to the feedback provided by the city of Edmonton and others.

With that, at this time I would like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 10.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

The Chair: We will now consider Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek.

Mr. Gottfried: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 2 in Committee of the Whole. I’m going to start out by giving some kudos. The minister for economic development, I know, works very hard. I have a lot of respect for the work that he does. I know that he’s been travelling around the globe a little bit recently, in some of my favourite parts of the world, to ensure that we keep the lights on and make sure that we’re promoting as best as we can in some of the Asian markets: China, Singapore, Hong Kong, and vicinity. I think that those are important initiatives.

But, Madam Chair, I guess I look at him as being kind of the jack of spades of the government over there. Sometimes he’s out there as a brave knight promoting things, but sometimes it feels maybe to me that he’s got a deck of about 37 cards and that he’s gambling Alberta’s economic future with a little less than a full deck. I mean that in the nicest way.

Madam Chair, you know, this government talks about boutique tax credits as sort of the saving grace of our economy. We’ve heard myself and other members talk about them as Band-Aids and candy and things like that. I think it’s a reminder to us that the economic fundamentals of this province have been severely damaged by a number of different things: an ever-increasing carbon tax, which we know in the future, from all indications, is actually going to end up in a situation where it goes into general revenues. We’ve seen an increase in minimum wages, and those will continue to increase, creating a greater burden, I think, on our struggling small businesses.

We’ve seen increases in personal income tax, which has had the effect of chasing away many of our high-income earners, who, not surprisingly, are the same people that invest in venture capital and many different things and try and move ahead our economy and are deal makers and entrepreneurs and risk takers and those sorts of things which those of us on this side of the House greatly appreciate, that respect for risk capital and that respect for the rewards that may come from those risks but are never guaranteed. The fact is that those are the people, those are the individuals who actually make those deals, and they network with each other, and they interact with each other and typically are looking for those venture opportunities that come up.

Of course, increased corporate tax: we could talk about at great length as to what that’s done, Madam Chair, what we’ve seen in terms of the investment-repelling and job-killing policies that we sometimes talk about on this side of the House. I hope that the people on the other side of the House are thinking about that as well. We’ve lost $34.8 billion in foreign direct investment. Again, that number is from almost two years ago. I wonder what the real total is now. If we throw in the pension fund money that we know has left this province as well, I would suspect that we’re probably well in excess of $50 billion, $60 billion, or even $70 billion that has left this province because of what is perceived as political risk and what could be also perceived as death by a thousand cuts, the death of the Alberta advantage by a thousand cuts of ill-advised and ill-thought-out policy and the overburden of labour and employment standards, which I hear on from restaurants, I hear on from small businesses day after day after day.

In fact, Madam Chair, I was in a restaurant not that long ago, about four or five weeks ago, and the owner there was telling me that they had gone from working 50-, 60-hour weeks and had already not been paying themselves any wages but were forced into tightening up on the hours for their employees as best as they could and were now individually themselves working 70-hour weeks so that they can actually keep the lights on and still not paying themselves a wage. She shared with me that, thankfully, her husband was still employed and was paying the mortgage and keeping food on the table in their home but that she was not only not paying herself for a 70-hour week but not taking home any return on her investment in doing so. Those are some other layers, more of those thousand cuts that we see coming along.

Madam Chair, this government needs to be more concerned with protecting and enhancing the fundamentals of the Alberta economy. I’d say that the fundamentals of the Alberta economy, those are really where we have to focus. We have to focus on being attractive not just to the investors that we have tax credits for and capital investment credits for and digital tax credits for but for the entire economy – the entire economy – because it’s an entire economy we all live in, an economy which is very much engaged and interactive and dependent on each other.

We’ve been blessed in the past to have a robust energy sector. Make no mistake, Madam Chair, that the entrepreneurs that came here that weren’t in the energy sector came here because there was disposable income, because people had disposable income to spend on the great idea that they may have brought here from Saskatchewan or Manitoba or British Columbia or the Maritimes. They knew that Alberta was a place of opportunity and a place of advantage, the Alberta advantage, again, that we talk so much about, that this was the place to come with their good idea and make it a great idea, that they could do that and they could find investors, and they could take the risks with their own assets and their own blood, sweat, and tears and make a go of it and have success in this province because of the Alberta advantage. That was the attraction to this province for so many people. It wasn’t just the jobs in the energy sector.

When I was with Calgary Economic Development in 2012-2013, in this province we created 87 per cent of the new jobs in this country, and that was before we had this. We actually had an unlevel playing field, Madam Chair, but – guess what? – we were the ones that were at the high end of that unlevel playing field, and things came. People climbed up that hill, that unlevel playing field. They climbed up that hill to come to Alberta to make a success of themselves because they knew that they could take risks here and that they could succeed through hard work and a great idea and that they could find investors to invest in those ideas because of a robust economy where people had disposable income, the disposable income that is so compromised when the economic fundamentals of this province are damaged, where so many people are living now not just paycheque to paycheque but minus at the end of each month with paycheque to paycheque and relying, maybe and sadly, on their credit cards or on taking equity from their homes or on dipping into retirement savings because one member of the household is unemployed.

They've tightened their belts, and they've tried to reduce their burn rate to survive and succeed and maybe not have to change their lifestyle as drastically as they have to. But many of them are having to do that. They've having to change their lifestyles drastically, in many cases, to avoid foreclosure on their homes, to avoid foreclosure on their businesses. Those small-business people that were hurting because of bad economic fundamentals, Madam Chair, don't have EI, and if they run up their debt, their short-term debt, on a credit card or take money out of the equity of their home, when they finally have to close the doors on their businesses, I'm saddened by the fact that they may look back and say: "The mistake I made was not closing it two years ago because now I have a compromised mortgage, now I have a credit card that I can't pay, and I have no safety net, no EI because I'm an entrepreneur. I'm a self-employed individual, and I don't get EI."

I worry about those families. We hear about them from Todd Hirsch, the economist from ATB saying that he's worried that there is going to be an increased incidence of foreclosures in this province. That, of course, begets a whole other cascade of impact on the communities that we live in because when there are foreclosures, it actually depresses the value of other real estate in those areas. When businesses close in strip malls, then you have that burden, that impact that's put on the landlords and passed up and maybe on to their investors.

So the level playing field: we've had the minister mention that before we had these programs, we were uncompetitive and that we needed to level the playing field. But we actually had an unlevel playing field – and it was to our advantage – when we kept our eye on the ball of fundamental economics. If the NDP had not severely damaged our economic fundamentals with their bad policies, we would not need to be looking at tax credits like these. We would be having the people taking the risks, in the deal flow, attracting people from around the globe but even just here in Alberta investing in venture capital opportunities. We need to reduce the regulatory and tax burden for businesses and investors. That would do far more good for Alberta, Madam Chair, in Alberta's ability to attract investment, than these tax credits would be.

I mentioned before, you know, that I was in the building industry. You know what? The builders of this province – and I talk to many of them – live and die by net migration. At the end of the day, if you're not a growing province by population, by investment, by business creation, by job creation, you're probably a declining province, and net migration is key to them. They're suppliers to the economy in many ways. They build homes, and they hope that there are enough people that feel confident enough, so not necessarily just new people but people confident enough to move up or to change their lifestyle and maybe downsize. It creates opportunities for those builders to survive and thrive. We know that there are indicators out there, Madam Chair, that are just not responding to this.

Again, we're picking some winners and losers because this is not applying across the economy to all those small businesses and all those entrepreneurs who take risks and have taken risks with an eye towards an opportunity, but when they see the lack of confidence out there, they don't have the ability to pass on the additional carbon tax and the addition to the minimum wage because they're scared of losing their customers every day of the week.

Take a look around this province, Madam Chair, and look at the specials in the restaurants: come and see us on Tuesdays because of this and Wednesdays, which is that, and Thursdays. There's a special every day of the week because they have to to attract their customers because people have less disposable income. They have less disposable income. That is the economic fundamental that will drive an economy, that ability for people to feel the confidence, to develop and to be able to earn that disposable income, which is that little bit that they earn over and above paying their taxes in three levels of government, paying for their housing, which typically is somewhere between 30 and 40 per cent of their income, and paying for their everyday expenses: the insurance, the food on the table, their utilities, and all those other things that they pay for outside of taxes and housing. Then if they're lucky enough, they have a little bit left over at the end of the day.

In a good economy, a robust economy, where the economic fundamentals are strong, they have an opportunity to actually have a little bit more, Madam Chair. Then they go out and spend it in the economy, and that's where we get the economic multipliers which support a robust and healthy economy. That's what Albertans are not feeling today. It was shared with us before, and we've seen it from some of the economists.

Madam Chair, you know, I've had some great opportunities recently to talk to people from Alberta Innovates, Alberta Enterprise Corporation, Tecterra, Calgary Economic Development, Edmonton Economic Development, many of the economic developers across the province, Innovate Calgary, and some of the start-up groups, and the chambers, and I'm impressed. These people are working hard to attract businesses. They're working hard to work with their membership or their stakeholders to try and ensure that they can position their cities or their jurisdictions or their towns or their regions and this province to attract the kind of investment we need. Some of them probably do need some of these credits because, again, they're suffering the same malaise of bad economic fundamentals and bad policy which is hurting this province, Madam Chair.

It's hurting this province every day, and it concerns me because it's not just us today. This could be multigenerational, inter-generational. Madam Chair, dare I mention that the debt burden is being put upon us by this government's irresponsible spending and not understanding how you generate additional income, how you attract the investors to come here to increase the size of our economic pie so that we can tax fairly. Tax "fairly." I'm not sure that that word is understood because anybody who actually generates income and takes a risk and makes some money seems to be just a pocket to reach deeper into. Those are the deal-makers, those are the investors, those are the risk takers, and those are the venture capitalists.

As we've talked before, it's not just them. It's the large corporations who have chosen, those canaries in the coal mine, which I've mentioned on a few occasions, which are the international investors. When they leave, they are the canary in the coal mine, Madam Chair. They are leaving here. Then the local companies, the big ones that have the wherewithal to invest internationally, start wondering what they're doing that maybe they shouldn't be doing, and we start hearing of large companies talking about relocating to Houston or Denver or moving their assets and moving their productive capabilities to Texas. That's not growth. That's not strong economic fundamentals. That's not attraction of investment in new businesses. That's decimation of that.

Now, I worry about that for my kids and grandkids to come down the road sometime. I want them to be able to not only stay in Alberta but thrive in Alberta. I have brought my kids up to think of the world as the place where they will work. If they want to work in Singapore or Timbuktu or London or Paris or Johannesburg, I encourage them to be global in their thinking. But I want this to be their home. I want them to have the opportunity to have gainful employment in their chosen fields in this province, not just a job but a career and an opportunity and the chance to make a living and to build the kind of lives that I believe my generation has had the opportunity to do, as generations before me have had, because of the opportunity, the can-do spirit, the entrepreneurial spirit, and the 'agripreneurial' spirit that has built this province. I'm scared, Madam Chair. I'm scared that we're losing that.

This policy is again focusing on playing favourites and delivering, you know, a narrow focus of tax credits for a very small sector of industries and cross-section of industries. It creates a potential for market distortion, and maybe it even damages productivity and competitiveness. What happens when another jurisdiction says: "We've got a better credit. We've got a better subsidy. We're going to help you out even more"? Is this a race to the bottom, Madam Chair, where we think we're now having a level playing field? Well, that level playing field can be tipped very quickly if your fundamentals are not strong enough to attract people within their own rights, to attract investment and businesses to create business activity and economic activity in this province. That can be upset very quickly.

You might find that the competitive analysis that we have shows that New Brunswick or B.C. or Manitoba sweetens the pot because they say: "Oh. Look what Alberta has done. We've lost a couple of businesses to Alberta, so let's sweeten the pot." And then you may have created an opportunity for them to say: well, if you don't sweeten the pot again for us, we're going to have to move to B.C. or Saskatchewan or Manitoba or Texas or Idaho or Pennsylvania or Brooklyn or wherever it is. And that scares me because what that does is that it begets a lack of productivity and competitiveness that this province needs to focus on. We need to be competitive globally.

We've had various economists and credit-rating agencies point out time and time again that our rapidly accelerating debt levels are damaging our competitiveness, yet this current government has done nothing to curtail expenditures and I do not think actually fundamentally understands how to increase revenues. We've heard even more rumblings yet again from the Moody's and the DBCs of the world that we're on watch. We're on watch because we can't seem to get anything done. We can't attract the investment we need to get out of this hole. Like I say, what happens when those credits and subsidies disappear?

Madam Chair, I was in the airline business, and I've seen time and time again: "Well, airline X or Y, why don't you come to this destination? We'll subsidize you for the first couple of years just to get you here. We want you to come and fly to our destination." I can tell you what happens two years later. "Well, that million dollars of yours isn't quite enough, so unless you give us a million and two, we're going to have to pull out." That's what happens. You attract them there. You subsidize them. They become used to having that kind of subsidy. I worry about that when we're talking about pipelines, that we're creating a situation here where nobody is going to come to Alberta unless we have a big cheque waiting for them, equity or indemnity or whatever you want to call it, and that concerns me.

The government will point to the tax advantages that Alberta has relative to the other provinces. Well, less than they were before. That was the result of some better economic fundamentals, where we actually focused on attracting people here through competitive tax levels, and that has deteriorated. But, you know, we see here comparisons. We're still the best in Canada. Well, guess what? You're welcome, from the Conservative governments of this province in previous years. We need to compete on a global stage, not to have a race to the bottom on a global stage.

Madam Chair, I'm going to share some statistics here so that we can talk about what this looks like, what this economic fundamental looks like, not the up, up, up we hear from the Minister of Finance. That's not what I'm hearing from my constituents. I talk to my constituents every day and to people in the business community every day. I talked to a fellow this weekend, a gentleman who was in the oil and gas industry for 45 years. He's worked in Venezuela. He's worked in Canada. He's worked in the United States. He said that in the 45 years of his career, he's never seen it this bad. That's what we're facing, a failure of economic fundamentals and a failure for people that have seen the ups and downs of this industry.

Madam Chair, this is not a bill that we can support at this time. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to introduce an amendment to Bill 2, the Growth and Diversification Act. This amendment seeks to include foundational pieces of modern digital media products; namely, structure data such as geophysical information, GIS, that is useful for learning about the environment and climate, and real-time data such as positions of vehicles or energy generated, used, or stored. So I move that Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended in schedule 1, the Interactive Digital Media Tax Credit Act, in section 1(d) by striking out subclause (iii) and substituting the following:

- (iii) is capable of presenting information in at least 2 of the following forms:
 - (A) text;
 - (B) sound;
 - (C) images;
 - (D) structure data;
 - (E) real-time data.

I will give the amendment to the pages.

The Chair: Hon. member, can I just clarify that you are moving this on behalf of the Member for Calgary-South East?

Ms McPherson: Sorry. Yes, Madam Chair. Thanks.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A1.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thanks. The existing list already covers two visual information formats that can be displayed on a screen both in text and images. I'm sure the minister didn't intend to omit other information formats critical to interactive digital media applications, but listing only two suggests that other visual formats do not qualify. As written, the bill would not cover Smart boards, which is a true Alberta innovation success story, since real-time changes to a virtual whiteboard may not contain any text at all nor necessarily be accurately described as an image or even a series of images. Now, if you've ever scratched on one of those, you know what I mean.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Similarly, the bill would not cover three-dimensional interactive visualizations such as those used to train surgeons to perform surgery in virtual reality or those used by geologists to explore formations in caves. As written, the bill would not cover a product that displays a real-time chart of household energy usage because it would not necessarily be text nor would it be an image comparable to a photo of the Legislature. Alternatively, if we want to define images to include charts, there's no reason to keep text as a separate category.

I urge all MLAs to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Economic Development and Trade.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll thank the member for her amendment on this. I just want to explain real quick the reason that the definitions in 1(d)(iii) and then (A), (B), (C) are just text, sound, and images. Essentially, we modelled this piece after legislation from British Columbia. We did a cross-jurisdictional scan when we looked at different interactive digital media tax credits. The rationale for using a combination of the text, sound, and images as a requirement is that these are primary sensory methods of interaction with an IDM product. Data, either structured or real-time, is not a method of sensory interaction; it's information. The addition of those two would significantly broaden the scope of the program well beyond its policy objective to specifically support the interactive digital media sector.

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

You know, an example that we've come up with if we did broaden it and accept this amendment by adding structured or real-time data is that a business could use the program to develop an online app that provides things like weather, news, or stock exchange information, which is not an interactive digital media product. For that reason, I will be encouraging members of the Assembly not to vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Seeing as we're speaking of media and the promotion, I did take a little walk down memory lane earlier, and apparently I might have stepped in it a bit and upset some of the security forces here that stand and protect us in the House every day. It's kind of like telling your kid brother that there's no such thing as Santa Claus or the Easter Bunny. Apparently, I've upset them by saying that Stampede Wrestling wasn't real. So I do apologize for that, and in recognition of that, I'd like to talk a little bit about it.

Mr. Sucha: Predetermined. The term is "predetermined."

5:00

Mr. Hanson: Predetermined. Sorry.

Stampede Wrestling was established in 1948 and actually ran till 1984 and had a long list of alumni. I'll read them into the record for you if I could. We have Adrian Street, Abdullah the Butcher, Bad News Allen, Hercules Ayala, Ben Bassarab, Black Tomcat, Steve Blackman, Bulldog Bob Brown, Kerry Brown, Leo Burke – all real people; that's why I'm bringing this in in recognition of these folks; this was a real program; these were real people – Larry Cameron, the Cobra, Cuban Assassin, Steve DiSalvo, Dynamite Kid, Dory Funk Jr., the Great Gama, Sumu Hara, Bret Hart, Bruce Hart. And the list goes on and on.

I'd just like to apologize to the good security. I didn't mean to upset anyone.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, was that in relation to amendment A1?

Mr. Hanson: Yes, ma'am. Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. Thank you.

Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to make a point. I'm not sure if there's maybe a gap in understanding. I am moving this on behalf of another member, so I don't have the benefit of the context that the amendment was developed in.

Something that the minister said: he was talking about structured data and real-time data not being part of interactive digital media. With all of the data that's presented, however data is presented to a user, there is data being fed behind it that facilitates that interaction between the user and whatever application there is. The example that I used in the comments was Smart boards, and that is definitely an interactive application of data. So I really am not understanding what the concern is in particular. I heard that it would open things up, but it seems that things are quite closed off by the limitations right now. I just wonder if the minister would be able to offer some clarification.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. My point was that text, sound, and images are the ways that an individual interacts with the media. Structured data, real-time data are not modes of interaction; therefore, we feel, I feel that it doesn't necessarily augment this program. What it does do is open up the scope to businesses that may use it for non interactive digital media purposes, which really is the crux of this program. Hopefully, that helps clarify.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: We are back on the bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment that I would like to move. This is a simple amendment that enables smaller businesses starting out in digital media to benefit from this bill at the time when they would benefit most from the support by reducing the threshold from $50,000 in wages to $25,000 in wages. On behalf of the MLA for Calgary-South East I move that Bill 2, Growth and Diversification Act, be amended in schedule 1, the Interactive Digital Media Tax Credit Act, in section 4(1)(c)(ii) by striking out "$50,000" and substituting "$25,000."

The Chair: This is amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Not every business or Albertan who works in interactive digital media starts out in that industry as their main business or full-time occupation. The skills required to succeed in digital media overlap with other sectors, with many other sectors such as graphic design, video production, animation, programming, engineering, artificial intelligence, health informatics, data visualization, and other vocations that are enabled for anyone who can afford a laptop. Consequently, there is a much larger pool of talent who contribute to the interactive digital media industry than who work full-time.

Recognizing the actual structure of Alberta's digital media workforce is key to the success of the bill. Apps are routinely designed by students who aren't necessarily working full-time in interactive digital media but who wish to enter the interactive digital media industry. Companies and organizations with existing data that could benefit more Albertans might not want to become interactive digital media companies but may still invest in a part-time or contract role to put their data and information online in an interactive way. Individuals employed at organizations might want to explore careers in interactive digital media during their off hours. What better way to support more Albertans to experiment in interactive digital media than by offering them a boost to get in? We can do better for Albertans by reducing the threshold from $50,000 to $25,000 to open the interactive digital media door to more Albertans.

I urge all members of the House to support this amendment to improve the lives of Albertans pursuing business in interactive digital media.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you, Madam Chair. My pleasure to rise and speak to this amendment. I want to start off by thanking the member and her caucus for putting this forward. I completely appreciate the spirit of this amendment as far as lowering the salary from $50,000 to $25,000.

What I will say is that, you know, my ministry did some comprehensive work reaching out to different companies, looking at different jurisdictions across the country as far as what they do in other jurisdictions. What's interesting is that in British Columbia, for example, the minimum threshold is actually $100,000, substantially higher than what we proposed. The reason is that this tax credit goes to employees that are game developers, program developers, programmers. These are typically high-paying jobs. The median wage in Alberta in this space is I believe somewhere between $70,000 and $75,000. That's part of the reason that we decided to make the minimum $50,000. We want to make sure that we catch different wages and ensure that we catch employees.

We actually took initial feedback from the companies when we were first designing this credit program, again, as I said, in a crossjurisdictional scan and looked at what the wage are. I can tell you, Madam Chair, that, again, $50,000 is the amount that the majority of stakeholders that we've spoken with have also agreed is middle ground between a high enough threshold for dedicated IDM companies but not so much that legitimate small firms would be inadvertently unable to access the program. Really, what we want this for is for companies that are serious about growing and scaling. You know, if there are companies that are more in the area or aligned with doing this as a hobby, that isn't necessarily what this tax credit is aimed at because, really, we're trying to help support and grow the industry.

Again, we shopped that number around in conversations with a number of different stakeholders, and when you look at where Alberta is, again, British Columbia's is the minimum of $100,000. We decided to go with $50,000, but I'm a little concerned that dropping it down to $25,000 could have some unintended negative consequences, or it could be potentially encouraging, you know, a race the opposite way, a race down to the bottom as opposed to recognizing that the majority of these positions are well-paying jobs. That's what we want to promote and support. Again, I think the $50,000 is a reasonable number that will allow for companies to be able to make use of this but not to take advantage of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd ask the Chamber if we could revert to introductions briefly, please.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Chamber a grade 6 class that is here from Eckville in the great riding of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre. It was a pleasure visiting with them just a few moments ago as we were taking our picture. They were telling me that their favourite thing about Eckville is actually GTI in the middle of the town, which happens to be my favourite thing because when you ride around a riding as big as yours and mine, Madam Chair, you get to know the gas stations very, very well. In Eckville the GTI always treats me very, very well, so I agree with them on that. I would ask them all to stand – go ahead; don't be shy – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks, did you want to do an introduction?

Mr. Fildebrandt: An introduction, yes.

The Chair: Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I don't do too many introductions around here, but I wanted to welcome – if he could stand and rise – a new employee in my office, Michael Tiberio. He's from Calgary and is working in my very large caucus office. We've now come to a staff of two. He's a passionate young conservative and a former semipro soccer player. A condition of employment was that he now has to cheer for Germany. He has not agreed to it, but we'll see how good a job he does. If all members would join me in giving him the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 2

The Chair: On amendment A2, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the minister for his comments. I did have a couple of points that I wanted to make. I've heard a couple of comparisons to British Columbia so far this afternoon, and a point that I would like to make is that B.C. has a good decade's head start on us in terms of the development of their tech sector. I think that it's really incumbent upon Alberta to not just be reasonable but to be unreasonable in the pursuit of developing the digital media business industry in Alberta as well as the tech industry as a whole. For those reasons, yes, $75,000 is a median salary at a big company like BioWare, but what this amendment does is that it opens up the playing field for small players, for people who don't have a lot of time to dedicate but are very committed and passionate about digital media.

I'm thinking of an example of somebody that I used to work with. I worked in IT for a number of years. This was a young man who was very talented in network administration. Unfortunately, he had an accident, and he broke his leg. Now, this isn't directly related to digital media, but it shows what our circumstances can do in terms of promoting our ingenuity. He was actually really badly injured in this accident, and his leg was so badly injured that he risked losing it. He was on crutches for a number of months. What he did was that he came up with an exoskeleton for people to wear on their legs so that they didn't have to use crutches. Crutches are very cumbersome. They're very uncomfortable. It's very difficult to get around with crutches. He was able to start playing with his kids again by using this thing that he developed.

Now, he wasn't a full-time product developer. He was a network engineer, and he's been able to access some funds to help get his product off the ground. I think it's stories like those that really should encourage us to open up programs like this to more people who are innovative, who don't necessarily have the structure of a company around them, who aren't even interested in starting their own company, because they need to be able to prove their product, and all they can afford to do is to hire a developer for $25,000 a year part-time.

This suggestion for this amendment came from a stakeholder. It came from somebody who's already in the business. This has validity. It comes from the industry itself, and I would really encourage, urge all of the legislators here in the Assembly to be unreasonable and to support this amendment because it does open up this industry to more people.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I looked at this, and just from a practical standpoint and from the government's position, you know, legislation should probably be drawn up, whenever possible, to last a few years. I think the government would agree with me on that, and probably the mover of the amendment would agree with me on that.

To be clear, I'm not onside with the government's plan to raise the minimum wage to $15. Nonetheless, they're the government, and they will probably be in government long enough to raise the minimum wage to $15. I believe that's a fact. So I'm just considering that for somebody that makes $15 an hour, when the government gets there, even at minimum wage and working 40 hours a week, that's $600 a week. At 50 weeks you're looking at $30,000. That's above this.

Just from a practical standpoint, the minister said – and I think he's reasonable in his assertion – that if the government is going to give subsidies or supports to a company, if they're going to get government support, they don't want to be fooling around at something; they want to be serious at it. I think I'm in line with what the minister said there: not a part-time person.

So if you've got a full-time person even making the minimum wage – and one would think that in any technical industry they would be making more than the minimum wage, which actually more than makes my point – even the lowest paid full-time person in that tech company making the minimum wage would be making $30,000 a year if they're full-time, which makes me scratch my head a little bit and wonder how we would pick this particular chosen number, a number below what people are likely to be making in Alberta a year from now.

I would be interested if the mover wants to stand up and talk about this, but I think even the mover will understand why I'm asking the question, and I'm not trying to be hard on the mover. I'm sure that the mover's intention is good, and I'm not suggesting anything otherwise but just on the practicality of having an amendment to a piece of legislation that essentially, if it's not out of date today, will be out of date the next time the province raises the minimum wage. They do have a majority and they do have a year left in their mandate, so I think there's a pretty good chance that they will do that. As much as I think it's a bad idea, I haven't heard any evidence that they're changing their mind on that.

I think I'm asking a reasonable question, and I would be interested in the mover's opinion on the choice of that number of $25,000.

Ms McPherson: I'm intrigued by your question, but I'm not clear what it is.

Mr. McIver: If that's the case, then the mover shouldn't be surprised when I vote against her amendment if she's not clear on what I just said, because I thought it was crystal.

The Chair: Any others wishing to speak to amendment A2?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will have a series of amendments coming forward, which I'm sure all members here are looking forward to with delight. Many of them are in the same vein, but they'll have to come in different pieces because this bill is constructed in a rather unique way, not in regular sections but in schedules.

The bill itself is packaged and viewed so far, in the lens of the media, as just a regular corporate welfare bill, that we're going to take tax dollars and give some of it back to specific businesses for doing things the government wants them to do. Most corporate welfare, you know, be it GM or Bombardier or perhaps now even Trans Mountain, is generally some way of trying to keep the business afloat when it has run into problems, be it their own fault, like GM or Bombardier, or when it's not their own fault, like Trans Mountain. But I have yet to see a form of corporate welfare in this country that seeks to micromanage the employee composition of a private business, that seeks to take finite tax dollars from all businesses and redistribute it back to them if they meet gender and racial quotas. Now, members can correct me if I'm wrong, but I'm not familiar with any other province that has to date done this. I would certainly hope no others have. This is a quantum leap in what we do through corporate welfare.

Now, part of this bill is dealing very specifically with the Interactive Digital Media Tax Credit Act, which is dealing, obviously, with this specific area of corporate welfare. But it also is dealing with the broader Growth and Diversification Act, which is across the entire economy.

This bill will be taking finite tax dollars from businesses and individuals and redistributing it back if they hire certain groups that this government will define at some point, one would imagine, as deserving of special help. Certainly, some groups are advantaged, and some groups are disadvantaged. But when government gets in the business of deciding who they are by classifying people as groups and categories, treating them as bar codes and numbers on a spreadsheet to tally up points, we're no longer treating people as humans. We're no longer treating people as individuals, as people with their own lives and their own experiences.

You know, government and political parties have long engaged in quotas on race, on gender, sometimes based on region if you're building a cabinet. We've done that since 1867. We would balance religion and language. There are all sorts of things that go into building cabinets because those are political considerations. Within the bureaucracy governments have engaged in more explicit and legislative racial and gender quotas for a long time. Governments seem to be able to afford that because the resources of government are effectively infinite. It can always borrow and borrow. It can tax and it can borrow whereas the private sector cannot.

In the private sector virtually all hiring is on the basis of merit. Perhaps you might hire a friend. Perhaps you might hire a family member, or, you know, an uncle put in a good word. But, overwhelmingly, people are hired in the private sector on the basis of merit. Now, we are not living in a horribly prejudiced and hateful society. [interjections] You know, I'm surprised to hear many New Democrats across the way scoff at that. Do they really believe that the people who have elected them are hateful or bigoted, racist or sexist or misogynist? Do they really believe that people in the private sector need to be told who to hire specifically?

This is only going to apply to certain groups, and this is just one of the many problems with having government in the business of not just picking winners and losers between businesses, as regular corporate welfare does, but picking winners and losers based on the colour of people's skin, based on their sex. They're going to pick winners and losers by classifying people into groups, and it doesn't seem to make particularly much sense.

You know, the daycare that my daughter goes to is staffed exclusively by women, and they do a fantastic job. Maybe having a man on staff would help things, maybe not. Either way, they are a private business, and it is their decision, and I'm confident in that daycare to provide good, quality care for my daughter. I really don't care about the colour of the employees, and I don't care about the sex of the employees. The fact that it happens to be an all-female workplace is their business. If I don't like it, as a consumer I can take my business elsewhere.

That's the way free enterprise is supposed to work. If you are not hiring someone because you are prejudiced against them based on their sex, their race, their religion, or even their soccer team – I came close on that front; he's an Italy fan. If you hire anybody on a basis other than merit, you are only going to hurt yourself. In my case I'm going to hurt the effectiveness of my office and organization. In the case of a private business you are going to hurt your profitability and only hurt yourself. A qualified person who's been discriminated against will probably find a good job somewhere else, and the loser is the employer who refused to hire them. By putting people into these categories of race and sex, we are denying their individuality.

You know, I know quite a few members of this House pretty well and members across the way a little less well, but I've gotten to know some of you. But I don't know where you come from. I don't know what your story is. Some of you might be white, male, Protestant, straight, essentially all of the things that would not get you a tax credit here, but I don't know your backstory.

Perhaps you're privileged. Perhaps you come from a wealthy background and a good family that had two parents. You got a good education, were wealthy. Perhaps you come from that, but maybe you come from a broken home. Maybe you come from a rural, isolated community. Maybe you come from a poor family. But based on the categories established in this kind of legislation, if you are poor, from a broken family in an isolated community, you're still considered just as privileged as the Justin Trudeaus of the world. You might come from a racial minority background, and you also might come from a poor family, a rural, isolated, broken family, and also not be advantaged. But you also, despite coming from a minority background, may have a good family background, have a good education, come from a higher economic strata with a good education. There is no way to determine who is really privileged here or not. There are privileged, and there are underprivileged, but government has no possible way of determining that.

You know, I come from a series of small army and air force towns, low-income places. The number of people I grew up with, my friends in school who were on welfare, who got caught in drugs, who were into dealing drugs – you know, a lot of the people I grew up with didn't get out of there. They never got out of those small towns, or they joined the army and they fought in Afghanistan because that was the only opportunity. Some of them are just dead. But they came from demographics that according to this bill are privileged. They are not privileged, and they deserve just as much of a hand up as anybody else regardless of their race and their sex. We are denying their individuality. We are saying: "We're going to make a judgment on you like judging a book by its cover. We're going to judge you by your demographics and say that you are privileged or not privileged based on that, and your backstory, your life experiences, don't matter."

Now, this is well intentioned from the members across. I know there's no hateful intention. It's not bigoted towards any one group. You know, we were dealing with the '60s scoop yesterday. That was government action and legislation that targeted people based on their race but with malicious intent, and I do not believe that this bill has malicious intent by any stretch. I believe that they are genuinely trying to help people, but it will not. It is still legislating judging on the basis of race and on gender, and there is something wrong with that. We should not be singling people out.

I'm going to have a series of amendments here dealing with this in different sections of the bill. I'm precluded from doing it in one larger single amendment, which I'm sure makes members very sad. I'll speak about this amendment in particular once it's distributed by the pages.

The Chair: This is amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

5:30

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment deals with schedule 1 of this bill, more specifically on the Interactive Digital Media Tax Credit Act. Other amendments that I bring forward will deal with this topic of race and gender quotas more generally, as are being imposed through the Growth and Diversification Act, but this will be dealing more specifically where it's essentially noted a second time in the bill as a part of the interactive digital media tax credit.

The government has got no business deciding what races and genders should make up the employee roles of private businesses. If the government does believe that every business should be a microcosm of Alberta's demographics more broadly, do they then agree that the daycare where my daughter goes to has to hire 50 per cent men or should? Will the daycare that my daughter goes to be eligible for a tax credit if they hire 50 per cent men? They're already quite diverse in terms of race. Perhaps, you know, there are a lot of East Indians there, so do they have to diversify to other groups as well?

We are micromanaging the specific employee composition of private businesses. Government has not got the skill and expertise to make a decision on what decisions a business should be making in general – that's one of the many problems with corporate welfare – but they certainly have no expertise to determine what employees they should be hiring.

This amendment will very clearly strike out clause (l) in section 1, strike out section 7, amend section 20(1) by striking out clause (a) and substituting:

(a) defining “eligible activities” and “salary and wages”; and also strike out clause (e).

This will be the first in a series of amendments to, at the very least, if the government is going to go forward with a corporate welfare bill, take all references to race and gender out of it. If a company is going to hire somebody, let them just make the decision on merit alone.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Advanced Education.

Mr. Schmidt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to respond to a number of the comments the Member for Strathmore-Brooks made in bringing forward this amendment. First of all, let me disabuse the Member for Strathmore-Brooks as well as anybody who might be inclined to side with him on this that we are in any way implementing any quotas. There's not a minimum requirement for hiring particular numbers of gender or ethnic groups to qualify for the tax credits. It's hiring one underrepresented employee described in the regulations. We're not saying that a company needs to have a minimum percentage of women in their corporation or a minimum percentage of people from an ethnic group, which is what a quota system would be. So let me just disabuse everybody in the House of this notion that we are somehow implementing a quota system. We are not.

Secondly, I want to take a few minutes to discuss an issue because this is an issue that is important, I think, and doesn't get a lot of discussion at our level. The member says that we don't have an electorate that's actively sexist, particularly when it comes to the interactive digital media world. I want to just remind the members of this Assembly about an issue that struck the interactive digital media world quite severely three or four years ago, and that was the Gamergate discussion.

To remind everybody in the House or to educate those who maybe weren't paying attention, the Gamergate controversy started when a jilted ex-lover of a female game developer wrote a 9,000-word blog post accusing that woman of having an illicit affair with a game reviewer to get good reviews for her game. Madam Chair, that woman was the subject of death threats, rape threats. She was forced to flee her home, and it didn't stop there. The people who were on the side of this blog poster took it upon themselves to not just attack the particular woman who developed that particular game but thought it was their duty to chase women out of the gaming industry entirely. So they focused on other women developers in the gaming system. They focused on media critics who looked at issues of sexism in the gaming industry.

There is a very high profile case of a media critic named Anita Sarkeesian who also was the subject of death threats, rape threats, who also had to flee her home because people found her personal information, her address, her workplace, posted it online so that people could hunt her down and find her where she lived, Madam Chair. She had to cancel a number of speaking engagements on university campuses, where she was supposed to talk about issues of sexism in gaming, because these people who were hounding her online were making violent threats to hurt her if she appeared in person on campus.

So for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks to get up and say that there isn't sexism in the gaming world is completely untrue. Sexism is virulent. It is very dangerous in the gaming world, and it needs to be addressed.

Madam Chair, my only regret is that this doesn't go far enough to address the serious and very present threat that sexism makes to female gamers and female employees of the gaming industry. But it's a step in the right direction, right? Women are incredibly underrepresented in the gaming world. They don't play games at the same rates that men do, they don't work in the gaming industry at the same rates men do, and the gaming industry is really being held back by that fact.

You know, the gaming industry is one of the largest entertainment industries in the entire world, and it's managed to achieve that by locking out almost half of the world's population. Madam Chair, imagine how much more successful and profitable the gaming industry could be if it opened the doors to the other half of the population that it currently actively seeks to keep out. That's what we're trying to address. By tackling the issues of sexism in gaming, we're making the current world of gaming safer for the women who are already there and we're expanding opportunities for more women to feel safe and to feel valued and included and to participate in the gaming world. That will make them safer. That will make the gaming industry more profitable and more successful.

So for the member opposite to get up and say that this has absolutely nothing to do with the growth and success of the gaming industry is completely false, and I really hope that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks goes back home tonight, reconsiders his comments, and – well, ideally, I'd like him to retract this amendment. I don't think that my words have been persuasive and convincing enough to get him to do that, Madam Chair. But to anybody else who is listening, I just want them to understand how destructive sexism is in the gaming industry and how our tax credit to employ more women in the gaming industry will help that industry be successful and will help our women feel welcome and included in a world that they aren't feeling very safe in right now.

For all of these reasons that I've laid out, I urge everyone in this House to vote down this amendment and to support getting more women into the gaming industry.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Strathmore-Brooks.

5:40

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, the member's comments around Gamergate are interesting. Obviously, what happened in that case was disturbing, but I don't think that a couple of nerds sitting in their underwear in their mom's basement harassing somebody justifies collective punishment. I don't think it justifies the government legislating how many women or men or what specific races should be involved in a particular field.

It's not just about gaming here. This government's bill here, Bill 2, is not dealing just with gaming or even just with digital and online issues. It extends into the entire economy. If his goal is simply to get more women into gaming, why doesn't the bill specifically say so? It doesn't just say: women into gaming. It just says: “underrepresented groups.”

That's a bit difficult to swallow because it's not just about women. It's now talking to racial groups. I don't think that you can make a very strong argument that, you know, it's a rabidly racist industry within it, say, that Southeast Asian Albertans or east Asian Albertans are being systemically excluded from the gaming industry. That's patently false, yet this bill makes no distinction. This bill is simply going to give businesses money from their competitors for having people on the payroll who are simply from "under-represented groups." This is not just in gaming or digital; it's across the entire economy.

If we're talking about underrepresented groups – and I will have an amendment to clarify what the government means by that at a later stage here – if that is the case, in some industries you might have men underrepresented, and that's okay. Sometimes – and perhaps it might be heresy to say so in the NDP world – in some industries or professions certain sexes gravitate towards certain professions. Not always so, but sometimes that happens. You know, the nursing profession is overwhelmingly women. That's great, but it doesn't mean that there's a problem for men there. Teachers are disproportionately women. I think that's a good thing, that certain professions disproportionately attract people from different demographics. That's okay. They should be open to everybody. Nobody should be barred from it.

My mother-in-law was one of the first lawyers to work in Calgary in her day. She's retired now, but when she broke in, she was one of the only women to be a lawyer in downtown corporate Calgary. That was not a friendly place for women, but she broke into it. Now my sister-in-law is a lawyer, and she's certainly far from alone now, but she's still outnumbered by men. Some professions are just going to disproportionately attract people from one demographic or another. With the military, no matter how many quotas you bring in there, I'm willing to say that the military is going to be disproportionately men even if you mandated that it wasn't. You know, that's people's free decisions. People are individuals, and not every business, not every institution needs to be a makeup of Statistics Canada. Private businesses have the right to hire who they want, and employees are going to be attracted to the jobs that they want.

The member across says that this is not a quota. No. It is a quota. It is not a hard quota in the sense that businesses are forced at the gunpoint of government to do so, but it is an incentive quota, that if they do not meet the government's race and gender quota system, they will be denied the tax credits given to their competitors. They'll still be paying taxes to the government, but the government will take those revenues and give them to their competitors who accept the government's quotas. It is a soft quota, it is an incentive quota, but it is a quota nonetheless, and it is legislating on the basis of people's race and on the basis of their sex.

Now, I don't know the member's background. I don't know what his family history is. I don't know how wealthy a background he comes from. I don't know his educational background, other than that he runs it. But I judge him as an individual. On the surface he is a white male, and I don't know much about his background other than that. That does not give me any ability to judge him or his life story, what he's been through. Perhaps he comes from privilege, but perhaps he does not. Perhaps he comes from a rural area, a poor area. Perhaps he comes from a broken family. Would that make him still a privileged person? Well, under this legislation, yes, it would because the legislation will judge him as a book by the cover.

That's not right. We're supposed to be beyond that. The modern left's obsession with race and sex and identity politics is driving people mad. Most people outside of this House just don't care. If they're in the private sector, they just don't care. They're going to hire the best person for the job. There is going to be the odd racist or sexist or misogynist, but it is not this grand epidemic across the province.

The Premier, for goodness' sake, was elected duly by the people of this province. I certainly didn't share the opinion that got her elected, but she was not stopped from being the second woman Premier of this province. I think that's fantastic. I may very strongly disagree with her policies, but there is clearly no evidence of this sexist and racist epidemic gripping the majority of Albertans, that is distorting the hiring decisions of people on the ground, stopping people from getting jobs if they're the most qualified persons for them.

I'll reference a story of someone I know. I won't name him for privacy purposes. He's a young man applying for university. His application was sent back to him, and he was asked essentially if he could check any of the boxes that would mean that he's not privileged of some kind. He had to think about it. He had to think about what he could come up with because they were simply not going to give him that slot and that scholarship if he could not prove that he was anything other than, unfortunately, the demographic that I fall into. It's not fair. He doesn't come from a background of privilege. He comes from a middle-class background but nothing special, and he comes from a family with a single mom. Yet he is being treated under this legislation as a Justin Trudeau, someone born into power and wealth and celebrity, with all the possible advantages that you could hope to be born with in your life.

Any legislation that comes before this House dealing with gaming, dealing with industry more generally, or dealing with the private sector or public sector, any legislation that comes here that seeks to codify and categorize people by their race or their sex or their gender or anything other than the merit of who they are as an individual man or woman is beneath the duty we have to maintain the equality of opportunity for all Albertans and should be voted down accordingly.

The Chair: The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I'll try to keep my comments brief. There are just so many things wrong with what the member just said that I don't know where to begin. What I will say, first of all, is that diversity is a strength, not a weakness. On this side of the House we celebrate diversity in the workplace and we celebrate diversity everywhere, quite frankly. What we'd like to see and what you do see in a lot of very successful companies is that the companies reflect our society, similar to what we're trying to promote.

Now, Madam Chair, I can tell you, first of all – and maybe the member is confused – that this is a 5 per cent top-up to a tax credit if a company so chooses to hire people from underrepresented groups. The member had made a comment. I just want to clarify that, you know, when you look at our postsecondaries and you look at, for example, the University of Alberta's gaming program, women make up about 30 per cent of the classroom, of the students. However, their employment rates are much, much lower. The Entertainment Software Association of Canada estimates that in 2015 only 16 per cent of workers in the IDM sector were women. So there are clearly barriers to employment. What this diversity top-up does, Madam Chair, is that it provides an additional carrot or helps the market catch up, again, as a carrot for companies to be more diverse in their hiring.

I can tell the member, you know, that I think it'd be a little far fetched to say that a company is about to take unqualified people for a 5 per cent tax credit. So for 5 per cent of their salary they're going to hire someone completely unqualified: not at all, Madam Chair. What this is doing is drawing light and attention to the fact that especially in the IDM sector it's very homogenous as far as the workers that are typically employed in that sector. Again, what we're trying to do is to help encourage diversity.

With this amendment – I don't even think I need to strongly encourage members of this House not to support it. I think they will see for themselves the value of what we are trying to do in this bill and how this amendment would take away from that.

The Chair: Any other speakers to amendment A3? Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Well, I want to thank the minister for his comments. I would agree with his first statement on the face of it, prima facie, that diversity is a strength, but diversity is a strength when it's natural, when it's organic, when it's something that people have done voluntarily, as citizens coming together. It is never a strength to force people to hire someone or to give them extra money to hire someone over someone else because when you provide a subsidy to a business, even 5 per cent, they are going to change who they're going to hire based on that. You know, it is a carrot on one side, but it's a stick to somebody else. Businesses, unlike government, are finite in how many people they can keep on the payroll. If they have one spot open and one person might be slightly less qualified than the other, but they're going to get a 5 per cent top-up, for a business operating on the margins, as businesses do, that's going to make a real difference.

You don't lift somebody up by putting somebody else down, and that's what this bill will do. It is incompatible with our universal beliefs in equality of opportunity because this is focused on equality of outcome. I've certainly noticed the noticeable lack of other Conservative voices in this debate, for reasons I won't speculate on. But possibly the least conservative thing we could do would be to vote for a bill codifying race and gender as reasons for corporate welfare. It is putting equality of outcome before equality of opportunity.

I don't think I've been nearly eloquent enough to sway members of the government, but I would certainly hope that all members of the opposition take a principled stand against any attempt by the government to legislate race and gender above merit.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just thought it was important for somebody who was actually a woman in technology to get up and say a few words. I don't agree with this amendment. I think that the provision in the bill makes a lot of sense.

I was often the only woman in many of the departments that I worked in. I really strongly believe that technology should be developed by both men and women. It should be developed by a diversity of people so that the products that are created out of that development accommodate the people of our society. If we only have white men predominantly developing products, that's the bias that's in there inherently. It doesn't mean that they're rabid misogynists. It doesn't mean that they are even somebody that would consider themselves to be sexist. I see that I got some little side eye here about that comment. This is based on a lot of research. Companies do better when they embrace diversity. Encouraging diversity I think is a smart move.

From what I've seen of the bill, it isn't a requirement that you have X number of people of this gender or X number of people of colour. It incentivizes. I think there's a lot more that can be done by society to encourage companies to embrace diversity so that they can realize the benefits to their bottom line. Also, it's just the right thing to do. It's just the right thing to do to make sure that you have fair representation of women, of people of colour, of people of all minorities reflected in a business, and for these reasons, I will not support this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers for amendment A3?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 7 Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise in the House and present some additional thoughts surrounding Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. Now, we have established that this bill has a primary focus to standardize the use of organic labelling and certification. This goes to ensure that any food products grown or produced here in Alberta will comply with current CFIA standards in labelling and certification.

Certainly, there is no one recognized threshold for products produced locally for sale within Alberta. This act will now make a uniform minimum standard. It's my understanding that the overall purpose of this act will be to encourage the development of our local food sector throughout the province and to regulate agricultural products that are produced or processed in the province and marketed and sold as organic products within the province. This will be achieved, Madam Chair, primarily through three parts of this act, starting with establishing organic standards; creation of a local food week to coincide with Open Farm Days in August; and, finally, this act proposes to establish a local food council.

I'm going to quickly focus on the organic aspect of this bill. As I understand it, previous to this products sold within Alberta had no established common criteria for organic labelling or standards. However, if you exported these same products outside of Alberta, you had to comply with CFIA standards for labelling and certification. Going forward, these CFIA standards will have to be met within Alberta in order to use the term "certified organic" on these products. This now puts us to the same standard of other jurisdictions excluding I'm thinking at this point in time Quebec and Saskatchewan, who currently don't have the same requirements.

But it has been brought to my attention that the act, specifically on page 4 under the application 3(a), seems to have consequences that far outreach what the bill has presented. This section (a) talks about all agricultural products.

3 This Act applies to

(a) agricultural products produced or processed in the Province.

Madam Chair, my question is: why does an act that is identified to be primarily about organic labelling and certification include subsections (a) and (b), which separate organic products and all other agricultural products? Why the distinction? Is that a needed distinction? I would argue that subsection (a) may not be needed.

Madam Chair, you know, we live and breathe in a descriptive wording atmosphere in this place, and we've seen a lot of that demonstrated here today and on other days in the Chamber. In that vein, I'd like to propose an amendment, and I have the requisite copies here for the pages.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. If you could just wait until I have a copy at the table. Thank you very much.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to read my amendment. Mr. Strankman to move that Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended by renumbering section 6 as section 6(1) and adding the following after subsection (1) . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to clarify. The amendment that I have in front of me is about appointments.

Mr. Strankman: I would have to apologize, then, Madam Chair. There may be some error. That was the information that I was given.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I think the table has two different amendments, so we may have mixed your piles.

Mr. Strankman: I may have mistakenly given you what I perceived – I gave you the two. I may have spoken about the . . .

The Deputy Chair: Do you want me to send them back to you so you can clarify which one you would like to speak to first?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, if you don't mind. I'd appreciate that.
The amendment applies to section 3. I'm sorry, Madam Chair. "Section 3 is amended by striking out clause (a)."

The Deputy Chair: Is that the one you would like to start with first?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, please.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Can I please just have a copy of the one the hon. member is speaking to?

Mr. Strankman: I apologize, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: No, that's fine.
That one will be referred to as A1. If you could please just clarify for the House which one you'd like to start with.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair.

Mr. Nixon: She needs to know which one you'd like to start with.

Mr. Strankman: I said the one that's talking about section 3.

The Deputy Chair: So you're looking for: "Section 3 is amended by striking out clause (a)," and "(b) section 6 is struck out"?

Mr. Strankman: Yes, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Thank you very much. Please go ahead.
7:40

Mr. Strankman: Mr. Strankman to move that Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended as follows: (a) section 3 is amended by striking out clause (a) and (b) section 6 is struck out.

The reason for this amendment is straightforward. I apologize again for the mix-up in the paperwork going forward here. The minister does not need power over all agricultural products produced or processed in the province. As I stated earlier in my dissertation here, we're simply trying to clarify and be more exact in the wording going forward. This act is primarily about setting standards for organic products, not all products produced and manufactured. As you know, Madam Chair and to the minister, there are other commercial entities, whether they be JBS or Cargill, that commercially process beef, for example, in large commercial standards, and they would fit under the process of all products but not necessarily organic. My goal here is to simply have a clear set of well-defined rules for organic certification, singularly, everybody on the same page. What isn't needed is giving the act absolute power over all agricultural products, again with the emphasis on the word "all," be they organic or not. It's overreaching, it's too ambiguous, and it's not necessary, so I'm highly doubtful I would support this act and this bill without the amendment.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Yeah. Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you to the member for what he's trying to propose here. He is right in one sense that, obviously, not all foods produced in Alberta are organic or can be considered organic, but that's what is going to be captured here. Are those products going to be marketed separately or differently from organic? You know, there are opportunities to market your products in many other different ways and making sure that that is not lost, not lost on the consumers, not lost on the producers, that they're able to market their products as perhaps grass fed or raised naturally or raised without antibiotics or raised without hormones. There are many different labels they're able to do, and we're looking at making sure that with those labels we don't lose anything there, that we're able to continue with the good products of local food that is grown in Alberta, wherever it might be in Alberta, and that they're able to use those other labels, if you will, to market their products right across the province, maybe across the country or around the world, using those labels that are not necessarily organic.

I think it raises a level of confidence not only with consumers but with producers as well that they're able to do so. That is what, you know, this will capture, those opportunities for those producers to be able to do so. Looking for the advice from the local food council, to be clear, Madam Chair, is not the same as an agency, board, or commission. It's quite separate from that, but legislation allows us to set up committees to be able to look at one-offs, to have reports back on. That's what we're looking for even for the local food council, to have a report on what these other marketing tools might have for producers. I think it's an opportunity for confidence within the consumers themselves and within the producers to be able to do so.

I hope that clears the air a little bit for the member with the amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of my colleague's amendment to Bill 7. This amendment will allow Bill 7 to be amended by striking out clause (a) in section 3 and striking out section 6. The section that will be removed will be

- 3 This Act applies to
- (a) agricultural products produced or processed in the Province.

The remaining section will read: "agricultural products produced or processed in the Province that are intended to be marketed and sold within the Province as organic products."

It is important to state that this bill emphasizes the local food movement and specifically the move towards organic products. The main purpose of this bill is to bring organic standards in line with federal organic standards. Now, with that being said, it is important that we allow this bill to regulate only organic products. It's quite an overreach for all agriculture products to fall under this act, when, really, only organic products are being targeted. While I support the main purpose of this bill, I don't think it's necessary to go beyond what needs to be done. We should move provincial organic regulations in line with federal ones, but let's not get ahead of ourselves and put all agriculture products under the act.

Therefore, I do support the good Member for Drumheller-Stettler's amendment removing section 3(a) from this bill and section 6. Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler's amendment to Bill 7. To be clear, this amendment will allow Bill 7 to be amended by striking out clause (a) in section 3 and striking out section 6. The section that will be removed will be: "agricultural products produced or processed in the Province." The remaining section will read: "agricultural products produced or processed in the Province that are intended to be marketed and sold within the Province as organic products."

It's important to state that this bill emphasizes the local food movement and specifically the move towards organic products. The main purpose of this bill is to bring our organic standards in line with federal organic standards. With that being said, it's important that we allow this bill to regulate only organic products. It's quite an overreach for all agricultural products to fall under this act when, really, only organic products are being targeted. While I support the main purpose of this bill, I don't think it's necessary to go beyond what needs to be done. We should move provincial organic regulations in line with federal ones, but let's not get ahead of ourselves and put all agricultural products under the act.

Therefore, I support the amendment from the hon. member, and I think it's incumbent on the agriculture minister to explain in more detail why he would not support this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Chair. One thing I want to touch on is in relation to how we kind of got to this bill here. I serve as the chair of the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future. One of the things that we did was – and this came from the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Before he was a minister, he was sitting as a member of this committee. He brought forth a motion for us to look at ways that we can expand and explore and grow our agriculture and agribusiness sector as it was a sector that was emerging and, as we saw during the low price of oil and downturn that came from that, a sector that could absorb some of the shock that we were facing.

I have to admit that I was pretty moved by how efficient the committee actually served and worked in that process. We unanimously passed about 13 different motions that the committee report cited. Members like the Member for Little Bow and the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock had some very good insights in this meeting.

One of the motions that was passed was:

That the Government expand the Explore Local [food] initiative to include a made-in-Alberta brand to assist in expanding and promoting local [food] market demand for local products as well as creating a recognizable brand that signifies sustainable, responsible, and quality food products.

Another thing that was cited in this report is looking at organic foods, which has been addressed in this bill.

One of the reasons why I cannot support this amendment, simply looking at section 4 as one of many examples, is local food week. If we're looking at striking out this clause that promotes "agricultural products produced or processed in the Province," and then we tie it into local food week, the concern, the big challenge I have in relation to that is that it would create a situation in which celebrating local food week becomes extraordinarily broad. You can't necessarily define what local is without that clause being in this bill. At the end of the day, could we define local as being Montana? Could we define local as being North America as a continent? It leaves too much up in the air. As the member alluded to, wording is very important.

So I cannot support this amendment at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to talk to this amendment on Bill 7. The mover, the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, makes a good point. I know the previous speaker was talking about the amendment being poorly worded. I would actually go back and say that the reason for the amendment is because the bill, frankly, is poorly worded. It leaves the minister with a great deal of overreach beyond just organic food production and market and actually gives the minister the opportunity through this local food sector act to reach into all areas.

Now, the previous member talked about: what does that mean? Well, I think, essentially, after spending 25 years in the meat business on the inspection side, the whole time I was working in the industry – it's probably the same way today, but it's been a few years since I've been out of it. The fact is that there's federal inspection for meat and there's provincial inspection. Frankly, it's pretty clear. If you have provincial inspection, you can sell it across the province. If you want to go beyond the provincial borders, you need federal inspection. I think it's quite clear. Of course, if you want to go internationally, then you need HACCP and potentially a bunch of other approvals to sell your product that way.

This actually is an important amendment in terms of making the bill supportable. I wouldn't be surprised if all members of the House are okay with doing things for the local food sector. The problem is that when the bill is written in such a fashion that it allows the minister to automatically overreach, then you could reasonably start questioning the true intention behind the bill, whether the bill isn't really about local food, whether it's about other things. It's certainly not in the spirit of the title of the bill, the local food sector act. So this amendment is actually quite important. Actually, it's well thought out. It removes some of the overreach that's in the bill for the minister.

You know what? Albertans that are buying food deserve to know what they're buying. Frankly, there's a variety of opinions, and in my view all of those opinions are legitimate. There are probably people that would say: "I don't believe in organic. I'll never buy it." There are other Albertans that would say: "I'll only buy organic. It's the best thing. It's the only thing." And there's probably a variety of opinions in between: "I'll pay for it as long as I don't have to pay too much more for it than nonorganic." In my view, all of those opinions are legitimate, how people think about the food they feed themselves and their families. They're entitled to be pro-organic, they're entitled to be antiorganic, and they're entitled to only buy organic if it's within 5 or 10 per cent of the price of the other products that are available.

So not giving the minister overreach in order to take pieces of the food industry that are functioning well now and allowing the minister the arbitrary authority to change things that are operating well now, I think, is a reasonable limitation to put on the legislation. I think it's part of what my hon. colleague is suggesting. As a result, I support this amendment. I think that if the government side looks at, they'll see that it's actually an improvement to the bill as it's written right now, and I'm hopeful that they will consider supporting it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'd like to seek your pleasure to bring forward another amendment, please, in regard to this bill. I understand that the table has the original copy. I've given the requisite copies to the pages, and I'll await your direction.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you can please proceed. Your amendment will be referred to as A2.

Mr. Strankman: Madam Chair, I move that Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, be amended in section 5 by striking out subsection (2) and substituting the following:

(2) The Minister shall appoint members to the Council on the recommendation of a nominating committee that is representative of Alberta's agricultural producers, which shall include large producers, the local food sector, small producers and processors.

The act currently reads:

(2) The Minister shall ensure that the members appointed to the Council are representative of Alberta's local food sector, including small producers and processors.

As a result of this, Madam Chair, it creates a good deal of uncertainty on who would be on the council at this point in time other than that the minister would ensure that the members appointed to the council are representative of Alberta's local food sector.

We have concerns, Madam Chair, about the council being dominated by one sector. In our reaching out to stakeholders, small producers, and large producers, the small producers worry that the council could be controlled by large producers, and vice versa, the large producers are concerned about the council being controlled by niche producers. The idea with this amendment is that the minister would choose the council from a list of candidates submitted by any Alberta producer group or council that wishes to participate in the local food council.

While still not as openly democratic, I believe that this achieves a balance of costs and that the minister could make his selections and allow people who participate the opportunity to do so of their own free will. It also gives the minister a ready list of groups that are interested in this council and its work. It allows for a degree of openness if the council is chosen from a known list of potential candidates, and this list could be made public. It also strives to be inclusive, fair, and transparent.

It has been discussed in committee, Alberta's Economic Future, as my colleague from Calgary-Shaw talked about, that there would be work done in creating a uniform, made-in-Alberta designation or label. There would be certain standards, et cetera, in order that they be allowed to use such a designation or certification. This amendment would ensure that producer groups are consulted prior to any sort of identifier or certification so that their concerns or ideas could be taken into consideration prior to regulation being developed.

Again, Madam Chair, this is about transparency as this bill primarily deals with and is meant to deal with organics. It's a vital aspect of any legislation that deals with agricultural products that need to be fully discussed openly with producer groups so they may share their input and have an opportunity for public input.

I rest my case, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Mr. Yao: Why, thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak in support of my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler's amendment to Bill 7. This amendment substitutes this wording for subsection (2):

The Minister shall appoint members to the council on the recommendation of a nominating committee that is representative of Alberta's agricultural producers, which shall include large producers, the local food sector, small producers and processors.

This amendment allows the makeup of the council to be slightly more democratic, and while this is not as democratic as we would like, this would allow those that wish to participate the opportunity to do so. This amendment would also address some of the concerns we have heard from stakeholders, where small producers were concerned over the council being dominated by large producers and vice versa. The idea behind this amendment is that the minister would choose from a list of candidates submitted from any Alberta producer group or any council that wishes to participate. This helps give a voice and a seat at the table to groups that may otherwise be left out. It further allows for a degree of openness if the candidates are chosen from a list. It is a good goal to be inclusive, fair, and transparent – I know those concepts are foreign to you all – which is why I'm supporting my colleague's amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Minister of Forestry – of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. You can say "Forestry" ahead of "Agriculture" once in a while. I think the forestry guys would probably like that.

You know, with all due respect to the member who is proposing this amendment, I think what he's basically suggesting here is that we strike a committee to strike a committee. I think that's probably a little bit more red tape than I would normally see from the members across the way, but I understand what they're getting at. I understand what their concerns are; that is, ensuring that the council itself is well represented.

You know, in the wording of the legislation, in subsection (2) of section 5, it does say that "the Minister shall ensure that the members appointed to the Council are representative of Alberta's local food sector, including small producers and processors." So I think it well captures what the member is trying to allude to, and that is that it's representative of all producers, all the types of producers, processors right across the province. I think that adding a layer of red tape by striking a committee to strike a committee gets a little too onerous for a council that I hope, if this bill is passed, will be able to be quite nimble to be able to come up with some of those recommendations, including on what other marketing tools local food might have across Alberta, not just organic but others, as I mentioned earlier, Madam Chair.

With that, you know, I can't support it. I understand the nature of what the member is trying to achieve, but because of that, what we have here already in the bill is sufficient. I believe it is very sufficient. Therefore, I can't support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Why, thank you, Madam Chair. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and talk about the finer points of springtime in rural Alberta with respect to calving and branding and other activities that take place, that I know the minister of agriculture is very familiar with, very, very familiar with. One thing he's not familiar with, though, is this amendment. At no point in time did my colleague recommend that there needs to be a committee for a committee, just merely stated that the minister shall appoint members to the council on the recommendations.

I think that it is of critical importance – of critical importance – that they have a widespread representation of producers on the committee. Goodness knows that we've seen the type of appointments that this government has made. In fact, I think one of them, Tzeporah Berman, was tweeting again today about how there are 22,000 people ready for all hell to break loose in British Columbia. These are the type of people that this government has produced and has appointed, people like Karen Mahon. They appointed folks like that.

All that my colleague is trying to prevent is this sort of thing from happening again in the future. This is exactly the problem, and there's no reason why we shouldn't put some checks and balances in place so that we don't wind up with a council full of folks who aren't accountable to producers, who aren't accountable to Albertans, and so that we don't have a real dominance of one sector over another on what is a very, very, very important council.

I hope that the minister will reconsider his poor choice this evening, make better choices in the future, and encourage his colleagues to do the same.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to speak to amendment A2 to Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. The amendment is pretty straightforward here, and I think it speaks to good democratic practice in that one of the things that we want to try to do at times when appointing people is to get free from the politics of life and of business. Sometimes that can dominate government decisions. I don't think this is unique to any one particular party. Here we have an opportunity, with this amendment, to address this in a nonpartisan way, a way that doesn't necessarily affect any one political party but all of us, I would argue, at some point in time or another in the future. Obviously, we have examples of poor choices made by the government in some of their appointments, but this would help to address that.

One of the things about a democracy is that you need to have checks and balances at times to ensure that the government is representative of the will of the people, and I believe that this amendment speaks to that by making sure that a wide range of stakeholders are involved in decisions as a part of this act. One of the things that this amendment does is that it asks to include large producers. While I respect the opinion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry, that he believes that it is a full encompassing of stakeholders, I would argue that it's clear from this amendment that it adds at least one more set of stakeholders for consideration when it comes to this committee.

I would speak in favour of it. I think that there are times when we need to remove the politics from the situation, and I believe that by having a committee that lists and puts forward the names of individuals and a broad range of individuals, it just speaks to some common sense, and I would encourage everyone in this House to support this amendment.

8:10

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity. Now, I know the minister was trying to be clever and maybe even meant what he said about having a committee to arrange a committee, but the fact is that the government already appoints people to lots of agencies, boards, and committees. In many, many cases the government appoints people to agencies, boards, and committees out of organizations that already exist; for example, in this amendment – and it's spelled out here – through "agricultural producers." It could be large producers. It could be out of the livestock industry. You've already got cattle producers, pork producers, chicken producers, turkey producers, and maybe those people would put one or two people on the board. You've already got pulse growers. You've already got the Barley Commission, different grain commissions, and maybe out of those already.

In other words, we're not creating a committee to create a committee. We're talking about creating this new committee out of existing organizations to make sure that all the weight in this new committee doesn't come from one area of the agricultural community. You understand that, Minister? I think it's a legitimate concern. I know that the government's intention is not to do that, to give all of the power to the grain growers over the livestock producers or to the livestock producers over the grain growers or any of the other combinations thereof.

I think my hon. colleague, through this amendment, points out that it's actually worth it to put some parameters around it, not to create a committee to create a committee, which the minister I think incorrectly stated, but to create some structure out of currently existing agricultural organizations and pick from each segment of the currently existing, not new, agricultural organizations and say, "This group of one or two or three organizations appoints one person, and this group of three or four existing organizations appoints another" and so on so that one sector or more of those who produce food are not left unrepresented and, consequently, unfairly treated.

With that perspective, I sincerely hope that the minister would reconsider what I'm just hoping he hadn't thought of when he spoke earlier and see the wisdom of making sure that this well-intentioned local food group is representative of all the producers so that no one is left out. I don't think the minister's intention is to unfairly have a sector of those that produce food in Alberta unfairly put upon, unfairly ignored, or to have rules put in place to somehow restrict or eliminate the marketing opportunities of a sector of the food industry.

I don't believe for a second that that is the minister's intention. I don't think it ever was and I don't expect it ever will be the minister's intention. I hope the minister will think about the fact that if you pick from the currently existing organizations to create this new local food organization, it will actually probably make the minister's job easier. It will probably make the minister less susceptible to criticism by producers of food whose sectors are not included in the selection of the local food organization and probably also get better and more balanced results, which I actually think the minister wants.

Again, there's nothing partisan about this amendment. I think it's truly meant to be helpful, and I think that if the minister thinks about it, he might actually see that it could be truly helpful. I hope he changes the position that he took a few minutes ago as a result.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Possibly, Madam Chair, three times may be the charm. I don't know. I'd like to move an amendment. We have a copy here for you and for the pages.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I'd like to see the Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act amended by renumbering section 6 as section 6(1) and adding the following after subsection (1):

- (2) The Minister shall consult with producers and processors for a period of not less than 60 days and consider any comments or feedback provided prior to making a regulation under subsection (1).

The act currently reads, Madam Chair, under section 6:

The Minister may make regulations

- (a) establishing a certification program for agricultural products other than those certified as organic products under Part 2;
- (b) respecting the creation of a protected label, the use of which may be restricted or prohibited.

Madam Chair, we're simply trying to achieve government consultation. I know that, as we've said before, sometimes there's a lack of definitive wording. We're simply trying to create public notice to those that are affected by this legislation.

This ensures that prior to enacting any regulations dealing with certification, there would be a public consultation period, rather than just special-interest groups at the whim of the minister. That would allow that there be certain standards in order to be achieving a special designation or certification. This amendment would ensure that producer groups are consulted prior to any sort of special identifier or certification so that their concerns or ideas could be taken into consideration prior to regulations being developed. That's part of the legislation.

Finally, to almost sound redundant, Madam Chair and to the minister, this is about transparency. The intention of the bill is to deal with organics, and it is vital that any aspect of this legislation that deals with agricultural products be fully discussed with those producer groups so that they may share their input. We're simply trying to achieve that as we move forward with the amendments.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, I absolutely understand what the mover of the amendment is attempting to do. I would even consider supporting the amendment if not for the fact that the bill already stipulates the formation of a local food council. What he is asking in the amendment is what a local food council would already be representing, what the producers and processors across the province would actually be considering. So any considerations they have on establishing some type of certification program for foods other than what's stipulated in the legislation around organic, might that be grass fed to cage free, whatever that might be, whatever recommendations that might come out of the council, that then would hit the minister's desk, would be considerations that are already deliberated by the council that is already made up of various producers and processors.

So I think adding another layer of red tape isn't necessary only because of the fact that we do have, you know, the feedback from the local food council already. Though I understand the nature of the amendment, to ensure that producers and processors have that feedback on any proposed possible different certifications for different agricultural products, I think that is already built into the fact that a local food council will be struck and then will report back to the minister within 12 months. There is a period there where, obviously, they will have an opportunity to discuss and talk to other producers and processors as well.

Again, you know, I can't support this amendment. It's close. I would suggest that the member is getting closer but just a little bit off the mark on this one.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It never ceases to amaze me the things that will come out of this government at a certain point. I mean, red tape, the NDP government talking about red tape. There are all sorts of jokes there. But the night becomes late, so I won't touch that. But the fact that the minister of agriculture is saying that if he is required to consult with the agriculture industry, that is red tape: I think that given the track record of this government, maybe what the minister of agriculture is saying is that it's red tape for him to be able to continue to unilaterally make decisions for the agriculture industry without talking to them because that's what this ag minister has done for the last three years.

Let's talk about this government's ability to consult and whether or not the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler has a reasonable point by bringing forward this amendment to the Legislature tonight. This government's signature piece of legislation associated with the agriculture industry was a bill called Bill 6, Madam Chair. You may remember that piece of legislation. Maybe you don't. Maybe you've forgotten as time has gone by. I can tell you that the farmers and ranchers in my communities have not forgotten that.

Now, what was the biggest concern that came out of that process? The number one concern was that this government made a decision to bring forward significant legislation that impacted the agriculture community and family farms in particular, and they never talked to them. In fact, the first that most of those family farms and those people began to hear about that was at a meeting of that minister and the Minister of Labour's staff in the Grande Prairie area, I believe, in which a very famous thing was said within that debate. When there were some questions about what would happen when calving was happening at night, how that would work within occupational health and safety regulations, the response from that minister's staff was: don't let the bull out anymore with the cows at night, and the calves will not go through.

Now, my friend the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster is a veterinarian, and he may be able to take it offline and explain to you why that strategy won't work. I will leave it to him to discuss the science of that because I suspect, Madam Chair, that that would be difficult to do in Hansard. But that does not work. That's the point.

That is the consultation that we see from the minister of agriculture. Now, he calls that red tape.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you are going to link this back?

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely. We're going back to his comments about that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler's amendment is red tape because it would require that minister to actually talk to the people that he is responsible for governing.

This government has a terrible track record when it comes to consultation. There's no doubt about it. They can't hide from that. It is not unreasonable for the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, who is a producer himself, to point out that the industry wants to be consulted before they make significant decisions. So the minister, who belongs at least to a government that has the worst record of consultation with the people of this province in the history of this province, should at least turn that back over to the people of Alberta. Instead, though, it appears by his own words that he wants to avoid the red tape of consulting with farmers and ranchers inside the province of Alberta, and that is a shame.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's with some interest that I address the amendment that is being proposed to Bill 7 with regard to requiring consultation prior to the invocation of a certification program. I really worry in a lot of instances with regard to this bill but specifically with regard to the certification. I would really appreciate the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry actually addressing this; that is, what is his familiarity with certification programs as it deals with food production, whether it be animal or plant production? I'd really like to know what that level of familiarity is because I will tell you that I have a considerable degree of familiarity with certification programs, how they work and how they don't work.

I'll provide an example that I'm very familiar with, and that is the pork quality assurance program that was brought in by the pork producers of Alberta some 15 years or so ago. Now, the pork producers, being a very progressive and forward-thinking lot, realized that it was important that consumers are given assurance that the pork that was being produced within Alberta is of high quality and that it removed a number of the potential hazards that could occur, including the presence of antibiotic residues, including the presence of broken needles in the pork meat, and a number of other things. They recognized this before it was demanded by consumers, before it was mandated by government. This was something that was led by the producers themselves. They developed a pork quality certification program within the industry, and that certification program was then expanded a number of years later to include animal welfare issues. That certification program was in fact run by the pork industry.

My concern with what is present within this act right here is that that would clearly fall outside of the organic food production section, starting with section 7 in the act, and a program like the pork quality assurance program could be mandated by government as a certification program. When the Minister of Agriculture and

Forestry assures us that that's what the local food council would look at, my concern is: what if there are no pork producers on that local food council? That could easily happen. There is no mandated requirement that specific producer groups be included. What if during the course of the recruitment of the local food council no pork producers stepped forward or were in fact nominated or appointed to this local food council?

Now, the local food council may decide: hey, it's a good idea for us to develop a certification program. Or it might not even be the council that thinks that. Maybe someone in government would say: let's have a pork quality assurance certification program. The minister would then go to his local food council and say: well, what do you think? There being no pork producers on said council, they might say – well, first of all, they would have really no idea as to what sort of impact that would have. But they might say: "Sure, Minister. That sounds good. Go ahead with that." This amendment requires the minister to actually go to the pork producers of the province and say: hey, I need your feedback on this. But without this amendment that certification program or any other certification program that the government of the day deems desirable could be put in place, and it could be implemented without feedback from the directly impacted producer group.

That, Madam Chair, is a flaw in this legislation. It is a flaw that the Member for Drumheller-Stettler is, I think, honestly trying to help the minister with in terms of improving the legislation, yet the minister says that it is not needed. Well, it's a little bit like insurance; you don't know how good it is until you actually need it. In this case you don't know how good this legislation will be until something like this comes up.

Now, I've used the example of pork certification because I'm very familiar with it. It was a program, as I said, run by the pork council of Alberta, and the certification was performed by certified registered veterinarians across the province who had to take specific training as far as being auditors and validators of pork production in the province. But no, the government thinks that it can just institute a certification program and go ahead with it. My concern is: what if we're talking about a small producer group, a relatively tiny niche group that somebody, though, decides, "Wow. We should have this certification program," and that niche group is not represented on the minister's local food council? Who speaks for that producer group? Who will tell the minister, "Whoa. This certification is either unnecessary, a duplication of what already exists, or running contrary to what happens"? None of those safeguards or checks and balances will be in place because this legislation does not provide for them.

So, Madam Chair, this is a flaw in this legislation. Now, I would hope that the minister would recognize that this amendment attempts to address this flaw and attempts to address a situation that could become extremely problematic for a specific producer group. I can only conclude that if the minister does not see that as being a potential flaw, if the minister does not see the need for this amendment, he is satisfied with the legislation as it stands. But I will tell you that the legislation as it stands leaves significant potential for a certification program to be introduced that would be specifically detrimental to a sector of agricultural production, and there are no checks and balances in place to prevent that from happening. So I would certainly encourage the minister to rethink this, to take this back to his ministry officials if need be, to adjourn debate on this amendment if need be, but this amendment is a good measure to try to close what potentially could be a very detrimental part of this legislation.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Is the hon. Member for Fort McMurray-Wood Buffalo still wishing to speak?

Mr. Yao: Sorry. There was a list.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead.

Mr. Yao: Madam Chair, it's hard to follow Vermilion-Lloydminster because, quite honestly, he's a great orator, so I will just stick to my speech. I rise to speak in support of my colleague's amendment to Bill 7. This amendment will add the following subsection to section 6: "The minister shall consult with producers and processors for a period of not less than 60 days and consider any comments or feedback provided prior to making a regulation under subsection (1)."

Now, Madam Chair, you know, my colleagues are correct. This is about consultation, and quite honestly we've been trying to teach the government side consultation for the last three years to no avail. I should not say that. I give due credit where credit is due. For the daylight savings time bill they consulted, and they consulted very thoroughly. They set the bar there for consultation because they sent it to committee, and they did a proper communication with the public. They got people from all over to speak on that, and it was good.

All right. Anyways, the point is that it was great consultation. It set the bar for consultation. We thought they had learned, but they did not. My good friend from Drumheller-Stettler has provided a good amendment that is really trying to cover the bases for the good minister. You know, too often this government lacks real consultation with those affected by the legislation, but this amendment would allow for more proper consultation with stakeholders prior to any new regulation being enacted. This is a very important amendment, as we want to be sure that those that are affected most by this legislation are consulted before any changes are made. Again, this bill is about transparency and giving groups a proper voice so that any changes made are done with the support of the industry and for the benefit of Albertans.

Madam Chair, I encourage all members to vote in favour of this amendment. Thank you so much.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak amendment A3? The hon. Member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate this opportunity. This amendment truly is about consultation, something the government could actually use a reminder of. Bill 6 was raised here. I understand that there was a time not that long ago where the minister was at a beef meeting in Red Deer. He picked up an apparatus and suggested that it might be for piercing ears. He learned later on that it was for use on the other end of the animal, that it assisted with the transition from bull to steer. Had there been consultation before that, had he actually consulted before this particular event, the minister might not have gone through that embarrassing little question-and-answer period. I'm sure his colleagues will all want to ask him about this particular incident after this evening's proceedings.

It's about consultation. It matters. Now, listen, the government, with all due respect, has embarrassed itself constantly in the last three years by bringing out a piece of legislation without talking to people and then having to follow up with another piece of legislation to fix what the first piece of legislation did and then having to bring up another piece of legislation to fix what the first and second pieces of legislation did and in some cases even having to bring a fourth piece of legislation to fix what the first, second, and third pieces of legislation didn't get right.

What comes to mind right now as another example are the election finance bylaws, where they seem to have to change it twice a year even though every time they do it, they claim that it's the best ever and it's perfect. Why? Because they don't consult before they make the decisions and commit them to legislation. You know what? Everybody that works with something every day is an expert. If you live on one side of the street and go to the other side, you're an expert at crossing the street at that corner.

They're about to make legislation now about food producers, food producers in a whole range of areas. You would think they would have figured this out after the Bill 6 fiasco that they authored. They're dealing with a whole range of producers. All this is saying is: take 60 days. Talk to those producers before you put the regulations into place so you don't have unintended consequences, so the government doesn't have to come back here in the fall embarrassed for the mistake that they made in the spring.

Now – you know what? – in the best world maybe this is perfect, but the government's track record is not one of being perfect. Their track record is of botching the job and having to come back two and three times to fix what the first piece of legislation got wrong, and in almost every case because they didn't ask the people that the legislation was affecting. All this amendment is asking the government to do is take a little time, talk to the food producers, the livestock producers, the crop producers and say: before we put these rules into place that are going to affect your life, how is it going to work for you? They might be pleasantly surprised. They might be surprised, whether it's pleasantly or not, about the suggestions that people might make. Whether it's a pleasant surprise or not, it might prevent the government from being humiliated and having to come back and fix what they say doesn't need fixing, again, because it's happened so many times.

You know what? In consultation, it says here, with some organic producers, some have said that this is far from perfect, this legislation, but it's a start. Well, if it's far from perfect, perhaps it would be incumbent upon the government before they put the regulations in place to spend 60 days and make it a little bit closer to perfect since it's already been stated that it's far from perfect.

Again, unintended consequences. We've heard from producers, a former Calgary greenhouse owner that said, referring to the carbon tax, something that they've had to come back and change three or four times for all the mistakes they've made, "You couldn't come up with better policies to crush not only small farms, but I think small Alberta businesses in general." That quote was from Global on December 15, 2016.

At what cost to producers is certification, one has to ask. Well, if you ask the producers, they might tell you. Minister, we're trying to throw you a lifeline here. We're the best friends you've got, because you keep botching the job, and we keep giving you great suggestions on how to not botch the job, and you're drowning, frankly, and you keep pushing the flotation device away. Grab onto this one. This is a good idea. You'll be happier. You'll be happier when you don't have to come back and bring in another piece of legislation to fix it because you made a whole bunch of food producers angry because you put them out of business or made it harder for them to stay in business.

This is an opportunity for the minister to get it right. This is an opportunity for the minister to actually – what's really crazy is that this is about talking to Albertans. The minister has just said that he considers talking to Albertans to be red tape. It's actually his job. This is just a polite suggestion. I'm probably being less polite than the amendment actually is, but the polite suggestion of the amendment is that talking to the Albertans whose lives you're going to change is not red tape; it's a good idea, which is why I'm going to vote for this amendment and I sincerely hope the government does, too.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

I will now call on the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. A pleasure to rise and speak to the amendment this evening. I'd just like to point out a couple of things. You know, this evening many of us had the pleasure of eating some local food. It was so kindly provided by the Alberta Beef Producers. I think some of them have joined us here in the gallery this evening to witness the proceedings in this very important bill debate, interestingly enough on a piece of legislation that will be very, very likely to affect beef producers in the province of Alberta, along with a whole swath of other producers, including barley producers. I understand that there was some . . .

Mr. McIver: Bless the barley producers.

Mr. Cooper: Bless the barley producers.

. . . barley production that also took place at the dinner this evening and was consumed, some good Alberta barley. Liquid barley.

I don't know. I think that if you were to go up to the gallery this evening and ask the beef producers: would you like to be consulted prior to regulations being changed on a piece of legislation that directly affects you? I'll almost give you a 10 out of 10 that they will answer: yes, we would like to be consulted. I heard the minister this evening say: "Well, that's what the council is for. It's to talk to them about consultation. Trust us. We'll talk; we'll talk to them; we'll talk to the council. Don't worry. We've got it all covered. I'm from the government; I'm here to help." What we ought to do is trust but verify, and that's exactly what this amendment does. We trust that the minister will consult, but this amendment produces verification that, in fact, consultation will take place for at least 60 days prior to the changing of a regulation.

Now, this particular amendment isn't even all that prescriptive. It doesn't specify the type of consultation. It doesn't require notification. It still leaves even more ability to the minister than perhaps I would have if I was writing the amendment, but I know that my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler is kind and gracious and wants to allow the minister to make sure that he still has the tools to do his important work. So he wasn't overly prescriptive of the minister in this particular case but merely asked for 60 days. I can tell you that nothing this government does gets done in 60 days anyway. I mean, look: the most important piece of legislation that they had to introduce, Bill 12, was introduced probably close to 60 days ago, never received Royal Assent. You know, even the most important thing they do takes longer than 60 days. The member isn't asking for six months on every single regulation change, merely 60 days of consultation.

It behooves the minister . . .

Mr. McIver: Hooves. I like what you did with that.

Mr. Cooper: It behooves the minister . . .

An Hon. Member: Another one. Very good. He's on a roll.

Mr. Cooper: That one was an accident.

... to take stock about where exactly they're at with respect to interacting with producers, with a wide variety of producers, in allowing folks who are going to be affected by legislation to provide feedback.

I don't need to remind this House, because a number of my colleagues have, of the debacles in the past. I don't need to remind this House of the missteps that the minister has made. I don't need to remind the House how the government has continually turned its back on rural Alberta. I don't need to remind the House that the situation in rural Alberta with respect to crime has been outrageous and that the government did nothing for way over 60 days. You know, I don't need to remind the House about all of these negative situations that the government has been responsible for, but this type of amendment right here is exactly – exactly – what can prevent these sorts of actions in the future.

I encourage members of the government to act on your own accord, not just the accord of the minister. Act on your own accord. I only see a few ministers here present today, so here's your opportunity. [interjections] I didn't refer to the absence of any minister, just that there are only a few here.

Mr. Westhead: Point of order.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, a point of order has been called. The hon. member for Banff-Cochrane.

Point of Order

Referring to the Absence of Members

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's against good parliamentary practice to refer to a member's presence or absence, and I think the hon. member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills should know better. I would like him to retract that and apologize.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. – what are you? – Official Opposition House Leader. My apologies.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. I blend in with the rest of my colleagues. I understand.

First off, I notice there's no citation from the hon. deputy government whip. As would certainly be the tradition in this place, you should rise with a standing order citation.

That said, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills did not refer to any specific minister's absence and therefore did not break the tradition of this House. While I understand that the deputy whip would really like to just avoid the core point of the fact that this government doesn't want to consult with people, he should probably listen to what the member has to say. It will help him out.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Hon. members, there is no point of order, but I would caution all members of the House. I recognize that we're enjoying the debate this evening, but maybe we could try to refocus on the amendment at hand and refrain from deviation.

8:50

Mr. Cooper: Well, in the name of reaching across the aisle, I'll be happy to withdraw my remarks.

An Hon. Member: All of them?

Mr. Cooper: Not all of them because 99 per cent of them were really, really excellent.

Debate Continued

Mr. Cooper: The point remains the same, Madam Chair. The goal here is to save the minister from himself. The goal is to require consultation with the very, very, very important producers that are all across the province. That's exactly what this does.

I encourage all members to act on their own accord and not on behalf of the minister. I see that we may have the numbers in order to pass this this evening if everyone wanted to vote with the opposition on this. Do the right thing, and support consultation.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I will be brief. I do feel it important to stand up and speak to amendment A3 to Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. Essentially, my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler is bringing forth an amendment that makes a lot of sense, to try and close some of the holes within this bill. I believe that the minister has a responsibility to properly consult with the public, with the industry, with the stakeholders that are being affected by legislation that's being brought forward, and I do not see anywhere in the bill that it is protecting stakeholders, industry from government sticking their fingers in the business of industry. We need to be careful that we're not doing something from the government side that will interfere with what is naturally occurring quite often at the industry level.

I reflect back on debacles of the past without proper consultation and how that has affected this government. But I also reflect back on the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster's comments with regard to the pork quality assurance program. Having been in the pork industry for a couple decades and then some, I was able to be part of that whole process as a producer. That consultation and that development of the quality assurance program within the pork industry was a very healthy development of a program that brought certainty to consumers about the quality of the product that they were going to be able to buy and purchase. It was a healthy development of the program because the people, the stakeholders that were directly involved got to have their say.

We had many town halls right across the province – I attended a few of them – and we had open discussion on the best way forward. The fact that that education took place alongside that consultation became very effective in the buy-in from producers to realize the need for such a program and for such regulations that they would have to put in practice on their operations. It is critical that we have producer buy-in, that we have industry buy-in.

You know, we have the bill in front of us. The local food council is being put in place by the minister. We really don't have any parameters on the structure of the local food council, who will be participating, who will not be participating. It's completely under the guise of the minister to make those decisions, to make those appointments. In that regard I would suggest that it's very important that the minister recognize that there is quite likely the possibility that the local food council is not going to be able to cover all the bases of the different segments of food production that are currently in Alberta.

When regulations are being brought forward by the minister, we have a small segment of food production that's being represented on the local food council. We have that small segment of food production being appointed by the minister, so it does concern me as a food producer that the minister is receiving a fair bit of leeway in the appointment of the council and also the development of the regulations that will be put in place with regard to local food.

I do know that the minister is regularly consulting with producers. In fact, this morning on my way into work I met with some of the dairy industry and the Alberta vet and pork industry representatives and beef industry representatives who were going to meet with the minister on concerns with regard to some prescription drugs and the availability of these. I know that this is happening at this time. I believe it's a healthy discussion that continues to happen, but I have concerns where we have the potential for the asparagus producers of this province that they might not get heard. I would suggest that quite likely the asparagus producers of this province will not be part of the local food council.

You might say: well, yeah, we don't grow asparagus in Alberta, do we? Actually, there are asparagus farmers in Alberta. I was privileged to tour one of the farms in the Olds-Didsbury area and learned a lot about asparagus growth in Alberta. These are the types of individuals that might get blindsided by regulations put forward where the minister and the government feel that it's in the best interests of that individual, of that producer group, yet they are not fully aware of all of the aspects of what those businesses, what those producers are facing on a day-to-day basis and how these regulations could impact their businesses and their bottom lines.

We have to be very careful how we move forward as governments and not to stick our fingers into the business of industry and potentially create damage to an already healthy – we want to try and improve and continually try and move forward with industry. I believe that this is a very healthy, a very good way to try and close off some of the loopholes within Bill 7, and I would encourage all members of the House to vote in favour of this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to stand up and briefly speak in support of the amendment from our senior member here from Drumheller-Stettler.

I just find it a little bit ironic that we're actually having this conversation tonight, being that a lot of us here in the House from both sides attended a very nice meeting and greeting with some great Alberta beef and some great beers. I remember the minister actually getting up and speaking about the respect that he has for the producers and the ag industry in our province. He talked about the importance of those industries, and I think you're absolutely right, sir, that they are very, very important to us.

We also talked about the idea that there were 1,400, I believe, different brewery products that were around the province and his desire to go out and with the help of one of the other ministers try all 1,400. I think that would be a great opportunity to get out and meet with these producers, and maybe we could go to different areas of the province and sample that while we're consulting with these folks on some of this regulation. I don't think it would be all that unpleasant, Minister, if we got out and actually met with these folks.

What I want to do is that I just want to read this amendment, and then if the minister could please comment on exactly which part of that he has a problem with. Here it is.

(2) The Minister shall consult with producers and processors for a period of not less than 60 days and consider any comments or feedback provided prior to making a regulation under subsection (1).

If the minister would please clarify for us exactly what part of that statement you have an issue with. Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 7. Are there any comments? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 7 at the committee stage. You know, I will share with the Assembly once again, as I have in the past, that when it comes to food production, this is an area that as a veterinarian I've had significant involvement with, and the veterinarians take very seriously their role in ensuring the wholesomeness, safety, and nutritional value of the food that is produced from the animals that are raised in Alberta. I think it's been said before and it bears repeating that the food products that we produce in Alberta are sought after the world over. The minister will know this from his trips abroad, that the products we produce are of high value and are highly sought out the world over. But we also have a burgeoning local food market. We have a burgeoning local food movement, and that was certainly discussed in a previous private member's bill, when we talked about a local food act and promotion of local food.

I think the point that I'm raising here is that this increase in interest and in consumption of local food is happening – it's interesting that we would use this term – “organically.” It's happening on its own. It is happening without the assistance of government. It is happening without, in fact, the interference of government.

My concern with Bill 7 is that, as this government has done so many times in the past because it has a government-knows-best attitude, it is a solution looking for a problem to solve. There is no problem that needs solving here, yet the government has come up with this bill to ostensibly solve a problem that has been undefined and does not in fact exist. Local food production, local food consumption, the interest in local food by consumers, by restaurants, by various other quarters within the province of Alberta, is exploding without the government's assistance or, in fact, their interference. So the need for the government to intervene here is questionable.

You know, again, we were just at, as has been referenced earlier, a reception where Alberta locally produced beef was provided as well as some of the beer that is brewed in Alberta today. A lot of that expansion is happening without a local food act, and my question, in fact, is on how the government thinks that, of course, you can bring something like this piece of legislation in, and it just will make things go better because the government's assumption is, specifically, this party's assumption is, that things go better when they're run by government. Well, they don't always.

I will offer specifically an area that I have, again, some knowledge and expertise on, and that is starting with section 10 of this act. I would really appreciate if the Minister of Agriculture and Forestry would actually listen to my comments. I know he's engaged in a very active conversation with his colleagues there. I can appreciate it's very important, yet I'm trying to point out some flaws in your legislation, Minister, as they relate specifically to the process of complaints and verification of certification status.

It relates to the topic, Madam Chair, of biosecurity. I'm not as familiar with plant producers, but I will tell you that with regard to the production of animals in this province, many producers in our province conduct very strict and stringent biosecurity rules in their production. In fact, I have been the consulting veterinarian, for example, once again, in the pork industry for a pork barn, and I could not have any contact with live pigs for 72 hours prior to setting foot in that farm. Prior to going into the barn, I had to shower and change my clothes completely. It was a shower-in, shower-out facility. You know, that's not unusual. There are lots of facilities in Alberta that run like that. That is true in the poultry industry. That is true in the turkey production industry. That is true in many, many operations in this province.

Yet in this bill in the certification section there is absolutely no provision for respecting the biosecurity of the facilities to be inspected. In fact, I would suggest to the minister that because these are organic facilities and many of these facilities do not use antibiotics, will not use antibiotics, then in some ways those animals are in fact more susceptible to disease and that if a disease was accidentally introduced by an inspector, the government could be liable in that situation, yet there are no safeguards in the legislation whatsoever to protect against that happening.

Madam Chair, this is not some esoteric or theoretical threat to producers. In fact, you know, during the consultations on Bill 6 – and the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville will remember this because it was in Vegreville – this point was raised about biosecurity, and one producer, who talked about the level of biosecurity on her premises, indicated that if an occupational health and safety inspector came to her farm gate, she would force that inspector to strip to his underwear before she allowed him on the farm. She said that, depending on her mood of the day, she might not even be that fussy about him leaving his underwear on.

[Mr. Hinkley in the chair]

Now, Mr. Chair, that may all sound humorous to some members on the other side, but the truth of the matter is that that is just how serious our producers treat biosecurity on their premises. They have specific protocols in place to ensure that infectious and contagious disease organisms are not introduced inadvertently by inspectors or people that come onto the farm. You don't go onto these farms just casually to try to sell something to the farmer. You don't just pull up to the barn door and say: hey, I've got this new piece of equipment or this new feed I'd like to sell you. That doesn't happen because these Alberta producers are very concerned about biosecurity.

The provisions in this bill, Minister, do not safeguard producers against breaches in biosecurity. There's nothing in here. And the regulations that you might draw up are unknown to this point, and they give producers absolutely no comfort in this regard.

Mr. Chair, I pointed out the broader difficulties that I have with this bill. This bill is not necessary, and in fact this bill has greater potential to do harm. The local food sector is doing very well. Organic food is doing very, very well in this province. My younger son works at a Planet Organic grocery store in Calgary, and they are very, very busy. That sector is doing very well. The consumers do their research, and they're very, very careful about how and where they source their products. I just am very concerned that we have found in this legislation enough examples of flaws that in now trying to have government regulate a sector which is already growing, which is already expanding, which is already having great success, the government is simply going to get in the way of all of that.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Madam Chair, I can't support Bill 7, but specifically I would like to hear from the minister what measures are going to be in place as he sends out these verifiers, these inspectors to go onto farms to inspect the different areas of verification that are described within section 13 of the bill. How is he going to assure the producers of Alberta, those who have adopted high-level biosecurity practices, that from these casual visitors the production facilities aren't then going to be susceptible to the introduction of a contagious or infectious disease that could spell disaster for that production unit? How are you going to prevent the introduction of porcine epidemic diarrhea where that doesn't occur in a production facility? What about transmissible gastroenteritis? How are you going to protect against that? It's highly contagious. It can easily be transmitted by vectors, vectors being things like vehicles, clothing, and that sort of thing.

Madam Chair, these are not theoretical, esoteric considerations. These are very real-world considerations. The minister, by introducing this bill, has brought forward a mechanism which threatens some of our highest level producers in the province because it allows for inspection of facilities with no provision for the respect of biosecurity. I think the minister needs to answer to that. I think Alberta producers deserve some response from this minister, whether he does that now or whether he does that at third reading, to ensure that these biosecurity protocols will not be violated and that these producers will not inadvertently fall victim to the introduction of a contagious or infectious disease that could spell the end of their production facility.

I'm not overstating this. Producers have been ruined by the introduction of a contagious or infectious disease. It was one of the risks of being a practising veterinarian. It was one of my worst nightmares, that a producer could be rendered basically bankrupt because I inadvertently introduced an organism into their production facility. I can tell you that we took very, very, very careful steps to make sure that never happened.

Madam Chair, again, I'm opposed to this piece of legislation, but with the specific provision of these inspectors I need to hear from this minister how he intends to assure Alberta producers that their livelihood will not be threatened by an inadvertent, accidental introduction of contagious or infectious disease into their production facilities.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members that are wishing to speak to Bill 7?
The hon. member for Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Yeah. Well, Madam Chair, this is a sad point because the government brought a bill that, if they had taken a little more time, has the potential of doing some good things, but it's clear that that isn't the case. My hon. colleague from Drumheller-Stettler put on the floor three amendments, all of which could have improved it, and the government shot them all down, which is their right to do. The problem is that now we're left with a bill that while the government could have made it supportable, it has chosen not to do so, has chosen to put a bill in place without committing to consulting with the industry members that will be affected. They've not committed to dealing with the industry committees that already exist before creating the local food councils to make sure that no important sectors or segments of the food producing industry are left out.

For the producers what are they to think except: "While this might be a good idea, what if the government leaves my sector out? What if I produce a particular crop that isn't represented on the local food committee? What if I produce a type of livestock or egg that isn't represented on the food products marketing council, and they put in rules that make it impossible for me to do business? I don't even have that 60-day period to talk to the government to say: hey, what about me? What about my family? What about my job? What about all the people that work for my farm, for my ranch, in my business?"

We've got a minister that in the debate complained about red tape on a bill which is essentially creating red tape. He talked about a committee creating committees. This is a bill creating red tape. The silly thing is that the red tape or regulations potentially don't have to be bad. They could be helpful if the minister would commit to doing it right, but after multiple efforts to correct it, all of them rebuffed, they've made it impossible to support this bill.

The Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 1

Energy Diversification Act

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we are now on amendment A2. Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for bringing forward this amendment. I certainly think that there's a laudable sentiment behind it, one that the government shares, which is to increase the participation of underrepresented groups in our energy sector. I also want to see communities from all regions and all groups of people in our province benefit from these programs.

You know, Madam Chair, there's a tendency when we talk about these programs to only focus on the immediate construction jobs that will build them and then the full-time staff who will be hired to operate the facilities once they're built. It's one reason that people focus on the locations where the facilities are built, and that's perfectly understandable. But the fact is that projects of this scale have enormous spinoff benefits for other businesses, and projects like these create many jobs for those contractors as well.

During a recent visit to Fort Saskatchewan with the Member for Fort Saskatchewan-Vegreville I had the opportunity to meet with some of the contractors working with Inter Pipeline, who the members know was one of the successful candidates in the first round of PDP. I learned first-hand how widely spread the benefits of the Inter Pipeline investment are. I met the head of an indigenous company from out of Peace River. I heard that Cleantek, which is based out of Balzac, near Calgary, has been manufacturing light towers being used for the construction site. A few weeks ago the Premier and I visited Trade Winds, a subcontractor to the Inter Pipeline project, that currently employs a couple of hundred staff and is poised to hire another hundred merely for the increased business of Inter Pipeline. So I'm very excited by the possibilities I see for these programs to generate opportunities for companies right across the province.

Madam Chair, the current bill refers to programs for improving participation in the energy economy by underrepresented groups, which could include indigenous in some cases. The draft evaluation criteria for the program, separate and apart from the bill, specifically encourage indigenous community participation in the projects. I'm sure all members will agree that we need to encourage more indigenous participation in the energy sector.

That said, Madam Chair, I'm concerned about adding more specific requirements into this bill. One thing we did right in the first round of the PDP was evaluate specific applications on their merits, and the integrity of that first round was independently verified by a fairness monitor. We want to replicate that process again. We want to be sure that we are looking at the best projects to achieve the government's objectives. A big part of the process of evaluating each project is its economic viability. That means such factors as access to feedstocks, utilities, water; access to a trained labour force; transportation to markets; and infrastructure support. All of that needs to be considered. For that reason, I think it's best that the programs remain neutral on geographic location and that we leave it up to industry proponents to demonstrate how their location sets out the best possible location that derives the greatest benefits to Albertans.

Again, I thank the member for his amendment, and I want to assure him that I did reflect carefully on the intent behind it because it is one I share. We do want to ensure that the benefits of these programs are as widespread as possible, but I believe we need to avoid adding further conditions to these programs at this time. So I will be voting no to this amendment, and I am encouraging other members of this Assembly to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill, Bill 1. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, thank you so much for the opportunity to speak again at the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill 1. A couple of hours ago my colleague from Calgary-Elbow and I tried to reason with the government and tried to make Bill 1 a better bill. I'm so disappointed that the NDP would not pass those amendments.

I have another amendment here, which I'll give to you shortly.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A3. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: Okay. Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended in section 2(3) by striking out "to use any financial tools available to the Commission under the Petroleum Marketing Act, including, but not limited to, loan guarantees and equity investments" and substituting "to use any financial tools available to the Commission under the Petroleum Marketing Act, with the exception of loan guarantees and equity investments".

Madam Chair, we fundamentally disagree with the use of loan guarantees and equity positions in businesses except if it is an emergency situation like the Trans Mountain expansion. When the government policies fail the investors, then there is no other way other than supporting, backstopping losses to the businesses. Other than that, in normal course we fundamentally disagree with the use of loan guarantees and equity positions.

We know the minister can still use these tools under the Petroleum Marketing Act, and that act is not being opened here. We also disagree with the minister being able to use any financial tools available. By restricting taking an equity position to businesses that produce dividends, it would be a matter of mitigating that risk. Madam Chair, that's why I brought this amendment. Businesses that produce dividends typically have a stronger financial position. For example, you know, the New Brunswick Liberal government got into big trouble by handing out loans and loan guarantees to Atcon Construction, and they did that knowing the company was near the brink of insolvency, and the New Brunswick government is on the hook for tens of millions of dollars that they don't have.

We don't want the same situation here. We understand the intent of this bill, but at the same time this government failed all those businesses. No one wants to invest in petrochemical diversification because of the record of this NDP government and their ideological policies. That's why they need this Bill 1, which has some good intentions, but, you know, if we keep doing this, then investors will lose confidence, and there are no private investments coming based on the good policies. Businesses are leaving Alberta, so that's why I brought this amendment. I hope this House will pass this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: I'll be brief, Madam Chair. You know, this whole bill was formed on advice that we got through the EDAC committee, who did consult a wide breadth of Albertans and industry and indeed did some studies of what was done in other areas. They did this consultation over about 16 months, so I think we have some fairly solid advice on that.

I will be voting against the amendment, and I would ask members to also join me in that.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A3?

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-South East.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just have an amendment to move on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Please go ahead. Your amendment will be referred to as A4.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's my honour to stand and rise and speak to this House on behalf of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I have to say that when he comes up with these amendments and he works on these amendments, he's typically nonpartisan when he's looking at it. It's in earnest. He's trying to come up with better ways not necessarily to help the government but to help Albertans, and that's what we really should be here for.

My amendment on behalf of Mr. Clark is to move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act [interjections] . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, he's reading the amendment out loud. Please give him the floor.

9:40

Mr. Fraser: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. Member, let's all get along tonight.

. . . be amended in section 2(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (e), by adding "and" at the end of clause (f), and adding the following after clause (f):

- (g) promote and encourage domestic and international consumption of products supported under these programs.

This amendment aims to make Bill 1 more robust by looking for more opportunities to export energy in new ways as in the amendment I just stated. Although section 2(1) already states that the economic growth and energy diversification programs may be established under this act without limitation, the government saw fit to explicitly list a number of areas of focus. I believe that we can do better for Albertans by including diversification of export markets in energy diversification. One of the weaknesses that has been brought to the fore recently is our dependence on pipelines to export our energy products. We really want this bill to help Albertans develop and export energy products in ways other than fluids through pipelines or electricity through power lines. We want to help uncap Alberta's full energy potential.

Alberta is blessed with an abundance of relatively inexpensive electricity and natural gas, which can be combined to make a variety of value-added materials that embed carbon in objects that will last for centuries. We could also make this hydrogen gas for fuel cells, producing next to no environmental contamination if spilled. We can use our potential clean energy wealth to build our electric-intensive manufacturing or chemical treatment. We could use our electricity wealth to export computational capacity, which is critical for our data-intensive artificial intelligence and machine learning futures. Today we might not conceive of what inventions and discoveries will come in the world of energy future, but we can prepare Alberta to become a full participant and a leader.

We must do better for Albertans by considering and developing a platform for energy innovation for our future, and I urge all members to support the inclusion of more export opportunities in developing the future of Alberta's energy industry. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair, and I would like to thank the hon. member for presenting that on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I agree that it's well thought out, but I do have concerns that it fundamentally changes the intent of the bill. I think some of what has been described can be captured under Bill 2, and some of the work we are doing in market access within my department and some that is being done in some of the others it covers.

Again I will not be voting for this amendment, but I do thank him for the thought put into it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now on the original bill, Bill 1.

Hon. members, are there any speakers to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. I'm speaking to Bill 1 again, Madam Chair. We tried a couple of amendments and were not successful. I have another amendment here, and I have enough copies here. I'll give them to the page.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A5. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: I didn't keep the copy. Sorry.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. If we can just get one of the pages to bring you back a copy.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. I've got one. Okay. Don't worry.

The Deputy Chair: Oh. You found it. Okay.

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended by striking out section 2(2) and substituting the following:

- (2) Financial support made available by the Minister for a program referred to in subsection (1) shall, subject to section 3(2), be limited to the use of royalty credits and tax credits.

Madam Chair, for the reasons I explained in my previous amendment, fundamentally I disagree with handing out grants to businesses. Also, the free money without government having some hold over the business is a recipe for abuse and disaster with the province's finances. Government gets into the business of picking winners and losers. That's what happened. If we allow the minister to use this bill, then it will end up picking winners and losers.

In the normal course, businesses should be able to find financing from a bank or a private lender, but because this government has issues with their economic policies, no one is investing here. That's why they had to bring in these bills to provide grants and loans and all sorts of handouts to keep the businesses in Alberta. I'm against that policy. When governments hand out free money to business, it's called corporate welfare. This party is supposed to be looking after the common people and looking after regular Albertans' interests rather than, you know, helping out their big businesses. That's the reason I would encourage them to look at their economic policies.

The minister mentioned the EDAC report. In that EDAC report the advisory committee actually advised the minister to look at the red tape, the regulatory red tape, and asked her to reduce the regulatory burden on the businesses, and in this Bill 1 that's not addressed.

There are so many things they could do before they give out loans and grants to the businesses. That's why I'm proposing to amend this Bill 1 to remove those options.

I'm asking this Assembly to support the amendment unanimously. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. For reasons I mentioned two amendments ago, this would change the intent of the bill. I want to point out that there is a fairness monitor, who is a third-party validator, for the process, so the concern about choosing winners and losers isn't valid. There's a solid set of criteria. Again, this would fundamentally change the bill, so I will be voting against it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the original bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Fraser: Madam Chair, I have another amendment on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A6. Please go ahead.

Mr. Fraser: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again it's an honour to rise on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Elbow, to move that Bill 1, Energy Diversification Act, be amended in section 4(1) by striking out "Executive Council" and substituting "Legislative Assembly."

This is a simple amendment which changes the Energy minister's reporting to cabinet to reporting to the House on the progress of programs affiliated with this act. As the amendment states, it's simply just making things more transparent. It's important that we do our best for Albertans by keeping them up to date, through their MLAs, on an initiative as important as this one. This amendment in no way prevents the Energy minister from reporting to cabinet as frequently as the Premier requests. I hope all members of this House support this small but impactful improvement to this bill.

Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. It is similar to, I think, an amendment from yesterday or previously about reporting. I want to point out that there is annual reporting that would be online and could be submitted to the Legislative Assembly, but I think it's more important that cabinet stays in there as the one making decisions. But there certainly is a requirement already. It's called an annual report, and I think that's more than transparent.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A6?

Seeing none, I will call the question.

[Motion on amendment A6 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to Bill 1?

Mr. Panda: Madam Chair, I have another amendment to improve this Bill 1. I have the requisite copies here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you'd like to proceed, your amendment is A7.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move to amend Bill 1 as follows: section 1 is struck out, and the following is substituted: "Definitions" – I mean, everyone has a copy. They can read this.

The reason I brought this amendment, Madam Chair, is that if grants must be handed out to keep the businesses that are running away from Alberta because of NDP policies, we have to make sure that they're there for things that can still be used on the industrial site if the businesses getting the grant go bankrupt. What it means is that when this government picks winners and losers and if some of those business are not sound and they lose money and they go out of business, at least if we are giving out grants, they should be spent on things like roads; railway sidings, spurs, or yards; telecommunications like towers and fibre optics; water and watershed drainage because we can't build on swamps; ground levelling; electrical transmission or distribution to the site to energize it; or natural gas distribution lines to heat the buildings; but not to provide feedstock for industrial operations.

Madam Chair, as I explained, if an industrial site goes bankrupt after receiving grants from the NDP – and we have one in the heartland – at least the site services can be used by someone else taking over that site. When others come forward to take over that business and if the money that we've given as grants is used on infrastructure, that money will be put to use for a good purpose. This kind of infrastructure does not go to waste and can be accounted for.

Another thing we can use the grants for is job training. If the money is spent on job training, then they're also accountable in that the funds can flow directly to the college or trade school to support the workers of the facility who need training. The NDP is supposed to look after working-class people. This way, if we put a condition on when we give grants to these companies that that money should be used for job training, that money is well spent.

For those reasons, I'm just hoping the minister would support this amendment and ask all her colleagues to work in favour of this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. You know, all the criteria that, as mentioned, are part of the application process for these companies: companies are checked for viability, that they are a good, solid company; their records; their means of operating; how many trained staff they have. All of that kind of thing is encompassed in the application process, so I don't feel it's necessary to put it in the bill. It's a bit redundant. Again, all of the health of the company – and there's quite a bit of criteria for them to get the project, and they have to meet milestones before they even get the grants. All of that is in place already, so I will be voting against it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A7?

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm getting really, really encouraged in this House to move amendments unsuccessfully. I have another amendment. I'm sending you the copies.

The Deputy Chair: Once I have a copy at the table, you can proceed. It will be referred to as A8.

Mr. Panda: Okay.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you can go ahead. I now have a copy at the table.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Madam Chair, this amendment is to cover NAFTA, the North American free trade agreement, and the comprehensive economic and trade agreement in compliance. It's too late in the night, so I'm forgetting the abbreviations.

Any support the government is going to provide to a business should complement our international trade agreements, like NAFTA and CETA. At the same time, we need to make sure that our competitors for the petrochemical sector play fair. When I say "play fair," we don't want this government to pick winners and losers. At the same time, the businesses that are receiving grants and loan guarantees from Bill 1 should not be unfair to their business competitors. That's why our minister needs to stand up and go after Pennsylvania and other states in the U.S. like Texas if they're playing games and using unfair practices to lure businesses to their jurisdiction. When we have trade agreements like that, we have to be fair to our trading partners. That's why I'm asking the minister to go through this amendment and support this, because any new petrochemical facility is of no use to Alberta if they don't play the game fairly with their business competition from other businesses in other jurisdictions that are partners in NAFTA and CETA.

I hope everyone in the Assembly agrees to this amendment and passes this.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I can assure the House that in the drafting of this bill we did it in conjunction with the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. Canada, as you know, is a signatory to several trade agreements, so we did make sure that all of these programs are trade compliant. We also did through the EDAC report look at jurisdictions like Louisiana and Texas, who have incentives. We may not have the same types of incentives, but we have ensured that they will be trade compliant. This work has already been done.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Motion on amendment A9 lost]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on Bill 1. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I have another amendment. I'm sending you the requisite number of copies.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, please go ahead. Your amendment will be referred to as A9.

10:10

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment which everyone has now deals with the economic impact assessment of partial upgrading. Partial upgrading is proposed in this bill, that they would receive about $800 million or $1 billion. The Alberta Chambers of Commerce had many questions about the assumption in the Energy Diversification Advisory Committee report that more refining in Alberta makes economic sense. We have to validate that assumption.

That's why I'm asking for an economic impact assessment of doing refining here versus elsewhere. Madam Chair, we need an economic impact assessment that proves or disproves that there is a greater economic benefit to Alberta as a result of refining in Alberta versus removing the discount on our bitumen products and refining where it makes more sense, where the refineries already exist.

Madam Chair, this has been a huge debate for more than 10 years in Alberta, and it needs to be resolved once and for all. All I'm asking the minister is: "Show us the numbers. If you have done the economic impact assessment on this particular policy, especially how many jobs it would create or how much pipeline space it will free up, if you have that information, please share with this Assembly." We don't want to blindly accept the NDP's friend and the president of the Alberta Federation of Labour's support for such refining projects as a ringing endorsement because of ideological reasons. That's why I brought this amendment.

I have some personal experience. Back in 2008 just north of Edmonton there was an Upgrader Alley created during former Premier Ed Stelmach's time. At that time I was working at Suncor, and I worked on the Voyageur upgrader. That is exactly partial upgrading technology that was employed on that upgrader. It's accepted as full upgrading, not partial upgrading. But after sinking $5 billion, that project was shelved. The same thing happened with legacy Petro-Canada's Fort Hills north upgrader. The numbers didn't work. It didn't make economic sense for the management of Petro-Canada, so they cancelled that upgrader. Like that there was another one. Value Creation Inc. and BA Energy had their upgrader planned. The economics didn't work. There was no business case, so they cancelled that project.

That's why I just don't want to blindly support this Bill 1 giving out grants and loan guarantees for partial upgrading. I'm asking the minister to present the economic impact analysis if you have it. If you don't have it, why don't you do that and provide that to the members of this Assembly? Till then please accept this amendment as presented.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I want to refer back to the process again. These are incentives of different forms for partial upgrading as one of the things. I want to remind the Assembly here that this is a competitive process. In that process there are a number of criteria, and one is the health of the business. They have to present a business case and a number of things. A reminder that they don't get these incentives until they are building and in production. I think that's already built in. I'm frankly quite surprised that the opposition is so against the diversification of anything in Alberta. It feels like it.

Anyway, I also want to remind that in EDAC a number of those things are all outlined. The expertise of the thing you mentioned, hon. member, one member of a bigger group, EDAC. There were economists and people who had the same expertise as the member across, and there were a number of subgroups all consisting of industry and businesspeople and economists. So I think a number of those things have been well covered. Again, it's a competitive process, a third-party evaluator. They have to be building, and they have milestones to reach before they get any money in particular, so I think a lot of that is covered. Again, I would refer people to the full EDAC report to look at the biographies of the members of the council and all the subcommittees.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A9?

Seeing none, I will call the question on amendment A9 as proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on Bill 1. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

10:20

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just received advice from the Energy minister that I should read the EDAC report, that I've read, and I actually talked about the recommendation in that report that asked the minister to focus on reducing red tape. In Bill 1 I haven't seen any provision to reduce the red tape.

Anyway, having said that, the minister also said that we don't support diversification. That is really rich coming from the party and from the minister who, I mean, were actually not supportive of pipelines until the other day, and now suddenly they're pipeline champions. This is the party which never campaigned on the carbon tax, not even once. Then they implemented the job-killing carbon tax without realizing their actions and the impacts of their actions that are causing businesses to leave Alberta. Actually, they're fleeing Alberta, running away from Alberta because of the economic conditions created by the NDP.

Mr. Cooper: Running just as fast as we can.

Mr. Panda: Yeah. Then, shamelessly, they're pointing to the opposition. We're not the government. Our job is to make their bills better. Tonight everyone watched how hard I tried to make their bad bill a better bill, but they wouldn't support that, so I'll try one more time, Madam Chair. I have one more amendment, please.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, if you could wait until I have a copy at the table, that would be great.

Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A10. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. This particular amendment, although it talks about economic impact assessment, is a different economic impact assessment. The previous amendment was about a partial upgrading economic impact assessment. This particular one is an economic impact assessment on each project that's getting support. When we talk about support, Bill 1 is providing grants, loans, loan guarantees, tax credits, and royalty credits, all those things that are received in a particular project. We have to measure the performance of that investment after we hand out grants and loans to those companies. If that business goes under after receiving these grants, that's not a good investment for Alberta and Albertans. That's why we have to measure the economic impact of the business that receives the grants one year after that business is up and running, or after one year if that business goes into bankruptcy, to show the impact of the government's spending. That's why I brought this amendment.

I ask the Assembly to pass this amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. Again, I won't belabour some points, but I'll just remind that this is a competitive process. When the successful proponents are chosen, there are milestones set, and they must meet those milestones before they get any kind of incentive, whether it's a grant or a royalty in kind or anything like that. If they don't meet the milestone, they don't get the incentive. So I would be voting against this one as well.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

Prayers

The Acting Speaker: Good morning.

Let us reflect, each in our own way. Let us remind ourselves of the great privilege it is to advocate on behalf of the constituents who elected us. Let us remember to respect and accept each other's points of view although they may differ from our own. Let us understand that the price of success is often the result of hard work, dedication to the job at hand, and unwavering determination regardless of the outcome.

Please be seated.

Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Sweet in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I would like to call the committee to order.

Bill 14

An Act to Empower Utility Consumers

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered in respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak on this bill. As I've said before, I am looking forward to supporting a bill that empowers our consumers. Whenever we've got legislation that's going forward that shows that we're serious about bringing clarity and resolution to constituents' ability to be able to deal with water, this is something that I think everybody can move forward with.

Now, what I'd like to say is that while we're looking at something this important, I myself had a complaint come into my office regarding hydro bills. In this case what it was was that a businessman came into my office. The businessman said that he was having a hard time with one of my local municipalities. In this case what it was was that he was looking to get clarity about how his bill could be so high. What it was was that his business literally has three washrooms and a little kitchen, and somehow he was using more water than an entire family. Clearly, something wasn't quite working right. He called the city, again, this municipality, to say: "Something is not right. My bill has got too much water usage. Can you please review this and go over it?" Well, the city sent somebody. They tested the meter. They said: "The meter is working fine. That is as far as we're willing to go."

Then what happened here was that he actually did a little bit of troubleshooting. This meter, I believe, was in litres. He went to his sink, and he poured out a litre of water. He went back to that meter, and it showed that he actually used a metre of water. So you can see that there's clearly a problem with that meter. Now, what happened was that he identified what the problem was. It was clear that a decimal place was put in the wrong spot on that meter. It's literally that simple, right? The meter was working fine, but in the end this specific businessman clearly figured out what the problem was.

What he did was that he contacted the local municipality again and said: "I figured this out. Yes, this meter is working fine. I wholeheartedly agree it's working fine, but the decimal is in the wrong spot." What the municipality did was that they tested the meter again and said: "You know what? This meter is working fine. There's nothing we can do." But it was clear that this wasn't working right. Then he said: well, let me show you. He did the same test. He showed them the litre showing a metre. They said: well, that's just the way this works.

When he went through this process, he was way overbilled. It took him a year and a half to finally resolve this problem. Now, what happened was that he had a several thousand dollars property tax credit, but they said: we don't refund money. You're, like: holy cow, you guys. So they were willing to put it against his property taxes. In the end, it took another six months to get the money out of the municipality. This is an example of somebody that came into my office that clearly had a problem that wasn't being resolved by our local municipality.

Now, I'm not here to put down my local municipality because – you know what? – the men and women that work at my municipality work very hard. But when a problem is identified, it is important that there be a mechanism for the residents of a municipality or a water commission to be able to identify what the problem is and work that through. It was clear that in his case the water bills were not correct. It was clear that the machine, the water meter, was working correctly, so there was something wrong, but nobody was willing to address that.

Now I'd like to move an amendment. If it's okay, I'd like to keep one copy, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Please. If you could just give me one minute for the original to arrive at the table.

Hon. member, your amendment will be referred to as A1. Please go ahead.

Mr. Cyr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I will just read this into the record. I move that Bill 14, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers, be amended in section 2, in the proposed schedule 13.1, in section 3 by adding the following after clause (e):

- (e.1) to disseminate independent and impartial information to consumers relating to the cost of any taxes, levies or charges that may be collected by a distributor, provider or retailer relating to the provision of electricity, natural gas or water;
- (e.2) to collect feedback from consumers with respect to the impact on consumers of any taxes, levies or charges relating to the provision of electricity, natural gas or water, and to publicly disseminate the results of that feedback on an aggregate basis annually.

Now, the intent here. The government says that the bill is meant to empower utility consumers. It is right there in the title if you look at the bill before you. The way that the Utilities Consumer Advocate, the UCA, is meant to do this is by providing information to consumers and providing an outlet to deal with utility issues. While this bill and the current act provide tools for consumers to access information and provide feedback when it comes to the distributors, providers, and retailers, it does not address matters that rest in the hands of government.

This amendment serves to close this gap. It will empower the UCA to provide detailed and impartial information to consumers on the true costs of taxes and levies on their utility bills. It is critical that consumers can see how costs break down on all of their utilities so that if they are dissatisfied, they know to whom to address the concern. What we are trying to do here is to say that – when my municipality had brought forward that there was clearly no problem when it came to that water meter, going back to my original example of the businessman within my constituency, there was no process.

Now, what happens here is that there are fees being added to our local bills that people should really know are there, and they should also know what that fee is trying to accomplish. What we recently heard was that a fee was added by the city of Edmonton to help with the administration of paperwork, and in the end that fee that was added to each new home was collected and turned into a slush fund for the council. Clearly, this is not the appropriate use of that money. It was never intended for it. What we're trying to do here is to say that if a fee is collected, it is clearly labelled on the bill, and we are ensuring that that fee is being used for what it is shown for on that bill.

This is a good improvement to this bill. Again, the opposition has already said that we agree that Bill 14 is a good bill, but as opposition we also need to be always looking to make legislation that much better. I would hope that the government would also agree that transparency on a water bill, gas bill, or electricity bill is something that we all want to strive for because this is a necessity of life in many cases. We can't go without heating our home, we can't go without the electricity to start the furnace, and we can't go without water. These are all essential services going into our home, so it's easy to tack on fees for this necessity because we have to pay this bill. It is a necessity of life.

This is something that is important, that we identify that municipalities or businesses may be collecting fees that are not appropriate. I would hope that whenever we have a fee on a bill, there's somebody that is going to be explaining the fee, what it's going to be doing. Then what happens with a fee or a levy or charges from a different level of government or a business, in some cases, or a commission is that we have a consumer that is able to ask the question: is that fee or charge going to be used according to what it was first put in place for?

Now, if it goes out of line, like what happened to the city of Edmonton, we need to reel them back and we need to be focusing on the fact that this fee needs to either be abolished or removed from the bill as it is not being used as it was intended, or we need to make sure that that fee actually is used in the promotion of whatever the fee was intended for. This is really just about getting information to our consumers. I think that by not having this now, we're more or less putting consumers at risk because what happens is that all we end up with is one line number that says: water, sewer, garbage, and recycling. If fees are hidden within those lines, it is important, it is imperative that we know about them.

Let's use recycling, for instance. I have heard that there are municipalities within Alberta that collect a recycling fee. They go and collect it from your curb, and that garbage ends up right back in the local dump. Clearly, that fee is not being utilized for what it was intended for. It is not okay to be charging a recycling fee when the municipality is not actually recycling the refuse that the citizens are putting forward. I think we all see that there is value in recycling, but it is disappointing to see that municipalities added a fee to a bill and that there's no accountability for that municipality to actually show that they're going to be recycling.

Now, there are lots of examples where we can show that it is easy to just be able to put forward some sort of well-intended charge, but in the end it's our seniors, it's our low income, it's all of the disabled people within my constituency that can't afford these things. If it's not there for a purpose and that fee is not being used for that purpose, then we need to protect those individuals. The only way to do that is by bringing clarity, by bringing some sort of responsible mechanism to be able to have our consumers be able to get this information disseminated to them.

I believe that when you look at this, this is a reasonable amendment. I believe that whenever the government is moving any piece of legislation forward, we should always be trying to move the best piece of legislation forward. Now, I've put other amendments forward against legislation. In the end, the government may or may not agree with the amendment I've got here. But it is going to be hard to say that this is not an amendment that the government doesn't agree with because of the fact that they're actually saying in the name here – and it's important – that we're here to empower utility consumers. Empower utility consumers. We can't do that if they don't have the information.

So, Madam Chair, I encourage everybody in this Legislature to vote for this amendment. It is a good amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for his comments in support of this bill. I absolutely agree with his earlier comments and think that they really highlight much of the importance of this bill and of it moving forward.

In response to the amendment specifically, there are two parts to this amendment, so I'll deal with the second part first. The second part deals with collecting feedback from consumers, giving the ability to the UCA to aggregate the information in their reporting online – well, it doesn't specifically say online, but that's how they do their reporting – and to be able to provide information about the consumer's experience with respect to the water utilities in terms of the reporting that's being done. In fact, the bill does provide for that. That's one of the pieces that was actually taken from, I believe, Bill 208 last session. There was quite a robust reporting piece and information aggregating function that was included from Bill 208 that was really the catalyst for this legislation. That part, I am confident, is already, in fact, dealt with in the bill.

In respect to the first part this is much more complicated. Firstly, this bill has been in the House for weeks now, and this is the first that I'm hearing of this recommendation. This recommendation would require consultation with the distributors themselves on this particular issue. There simply is not time for that as the member is asking for that to be accepted.

That aside, however, there are other issues with it. We have done lengthy consultation with AUMA and RMA. These are the municipalities. These are elected representatives that are in charge of their own constituencies and that have certain powers granted to them under provincial legislation. It's very important that if the government is taking any steps, we make sure that when we're looking to do something that touches on the responsibility of the municipalities, we do that in a way that is in concert with the municipalities, that is together with the municipalities, that the municipalities feel is something that would be assistive, and that we work together. We've done that in this. In fact, through our consultations on what we initially proposed to them, they asked us to go further. They believe that this is an important piece of legislation, and we agree.

In fact, when it came to the reporting of discussions around reporting around water utilities, specifically as a nonaggregated piece of information, there were vocal concerns raised from the municipalities. Amongst those concerns they stated that this would start to look like and to be interference in the municipal jurisdiction over setting water rates. They expressed concern and in fact wrote to me looking for assurance that this bill was not going into the setting of water rates and was not going into the UCA taking a stance in terms of rate hearings, et cetera, because that is their jurisdiction. That would be an overstep of the provincial government into the municipal jurisdiction, so we agreed with that.

Additionally, unlike other utilities like natural gas or power, being electricity, there are other providers that one can choose from. In the city of Edmonton, for example, there are multiple different electricity providers that somebody can turn to, so it makes a lot of sense to provide that information to consumers so that they can make an educated choice as to which provider they're going to go with. However, when it comes to water, each individual is subject to the water provider in their area, and there's only one. There's no competitive ability that it would make sense that this reporting would assist with.

In this bill and what this bill provides for, the UCA is taking a third-party mediation role, one that is not adversarial, that helps the two parties come together. It's really important that this legislation allows them to do that work without creating an adversarial relationship, and the first part of this recommendation, as has been described to us upon consultation, would step into creating an adversarial relationship with the municipalities given the overreach that it would go into.

Additionally, and this is another piece of this, it would certainly be jurisdictional overreach if the UCA is to be auditing the books of municipalities. The UCA is a portion of Service Alberta. It's not a separate body. I know that the term "advocate" can lead folks to believe that it is in fact some sort of legislative office or something that is more independent of government. It is, however, not. It is not at all independent of government. It is within government. It is a portion of the Service Alberta department. The work that the UCA does is government work, so we need to be cautious with respect to government overreach in looking at the jurisdiction of municipalities.

To that end, in summary, the municipalities have expressly asked us to respect their jurisdiction in doing this work, but at the same time they support what this work achieves. We have struck a very good balance, one in which all of the players who are affected by this legislation are willing to play and come to the table. I believe strongly that if this first part of the amendment in particular was passed, it would disrupt that balance and throw off the parties that we actually need to come to the table in terms of the mediation.

Thank you. I would encourage all members to vote against it.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Mr. Ellis: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. First of all, I'd like to thank the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for this reasonable amendment. I'd like to thank the minister for her words as well in regard to this amendment that has been put forward to this House.

You know, I guess let me start off by saying that I think that what has been proposed by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake is consistent with the bill's title, which is An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. You know, if I read the amendment, "to disseminate independent and impartial information to consumers relating to the cost of any taxes, levies or charges that may be collected by a distributor, provider or retailer relating to the provision of electricity, natural gas or water," I find that to be a very reasonable component. Why would we not want to disseminate independent and impartial information to consumers relating to the cost of taxes, levies, or charges? I think that is, again, something that the public has a right to know.

I look at section (e.2), "to collect feedback from consumers with respect to the impact on consumers of any taxes, levies or charges relating to the provision of electricity, natural gas or water, and to publicly disseminate the results of that feedback on an aggregate basis annually." Again, it's something that is reasonable that I believe that the public has a right to know.

The theme that I'm going with here, Madam Chair, has to do with strengthening transparency and clarity for the public because the public has a right to know. These bills are not clear. Many of these bills and specifically the one that we're talking about here, where consumers have to decipher and have to call somebody for assistance just to understand their bill, I think, is very much problematic, which is, of course, why we have this bill before us, An Act to Empower Utility Consumers. I think anything that we can do to strengthen the public's accessibility and their right and their ability to understand what they are being charged is very important, again, for their right to know what is going on.

That brings me, Madam Chair, to something that we call public trust. Any time that there is an erosion of public trust, that's where we start to get the public having an issue with confidence in government or service providers or services that are being provided. Something as helpful as the amendment provided by my friend from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, I think, only strengthens what I believe to be the intent of this bill which, again, is to empower utility consumers – right? – so that they have the ability to know what they're being charged, what is going on. I think that can only be positive for the consumer.

When consumers are informed, then society is just better off overall. They deserve to be informed on the effects of the government and, of course, their policies, just as they have a right to know regarding the details of the utilities and the utility markets. I do not believe that this amendment in any way takes away from this bill. I believe that it only strengthens what already currently exists. Again, just to reiterate, it strengthens the transparency, it strengthens the clarity, it improves the public trust, and it gives the public that right to know, which I think only – only – improves the quality of the service that is going to be provided by that utility.

In closing, Madam Chair, I just want to say thank you for the opportunity to speak on this. I'd like to thank again the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake for bringing this forward in order to, again, ensure and strengthen public trust. I certainly encourage all members of this House to support this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Ms McLean: I just wanted to respond to what the member said. In my earlier comments I gave the member moving the amendment the best possible interpretation given his comments and the wording here of what he was saying that this amendment did, and then I argued from that position. I did not realize that you were simply suggesting that one ought to know the taxes, levies, and charges in relation to electricity, natural gas, or water, full stop. I thought it was actually more than that. But given that that's from the comments that were just provided, it seems like that's not really any more than what you're asking for.

I would like to inform you that the fees, taxes, et cetera, are already on people's bills, and the UCA has a web page that breaks it down and explains it for you.

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1?

Bill 13

An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, are there any members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. To set our system on the right track, I rise today to move an amendment to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: Minister, if you could just wait until I have the original.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Absolutely.

The Deputy Chair: Please go ahead, Minister. Your amendment will be referred to as A1.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment is to strike out section 1(2) of Bill 13 and to strike that subsection from the Coming into Force section, section 5(1).

As its name implies, Bill 13 enables the changes needed to modernize Alberta's electricity system to ensure it becomes a more stable and reliable network. As we prepared these necessary changes to our electricity system, we also looked at correcting a long-standing gap in existing legislation that goes back over a decade.

The issue is: who pays for losses and who gets profits when a regulated utility asset is sold, destroyed, or no longer used to provide a utility service? Courts have found that provincial legislation does not provide clear authority for resolving this issue, a problem that stems from 2006.

We discussed this matter considerably with stakeholders, and most agreed that we need to address the gap and to bring clarity. However, since introducing Bill 13, we have heard from stakeholders that we need to undertake more discussion on this. As a result, I am introducing this amendment to remove section 1(2) of Bill 13, which would have added section 17.1 to the Alberta Utilities Commission Act.

We will continue to work with industry, consumer groups, and the relevant government agencies to develop the best possible policy for Albertans. Alberta needs clear policy and legislation on how dispositions of utility assets are treated. We're committed to developing it and to ensuring that it is the best possible policy for consumers and for investors. That is why at this time I am bringing forward this amendment to allow us to continue this important dialogue and to find the right balance.

Now, while this amendment is necessary to get the right balance on a long-standing issue, the rest of Bill 13 needs to move forward. As the name of the bill implies, this legislation lays the groundwork for our electricity future and Alberta's long-term prosperity. We're transforming Alberta's Wild West system to a modern, reliable network, a system that will not only deliver reliable energy, attract investment, and prepare for a low-carbon future but will also protect Albertans from volatile prices.

We understand that the opposition does not agree. They have defended their energy-only market, blaming the growth of renewables for what was already a broken system. So let's take a moment to recall just how poorly that system has treated Albertans.

The archives of our Alberta newspapers are full of examples of price spikes, going back to the very first years of the system, but the opposition has said that it took some time for their market to become fully functional. So let's just review the subset of price spikes that happened fully 10 years after the system was in place. After 2011, where consumers felt the sting of a quadrupling in power prices over just three months, shooting to over 12 cents in August 2011, then came 2012, which kicked off an immediate spike in January.

The Edmonton Journal headline on January 20 of that year reads: Power Price Spikes Shut Plants. It described industry shutting down to avoid high prices, including a steel mill east of Edmonton and Whitecourt's pulp and paper mill. Things got so bad that in February the Calgary Herald reported that Wildrose Vows to Reform Volatile Electricity Prices, with their leader explaining that power prices are "always [a] No. 1 concern at rural meetings."

The Fort Saskatchewan Record had the Wildrose calling for the government to Pull the Plug on Power Deregulation, saying that they would "go back to the drawing board." So let's be clear. The Wildrose at that time noted that electricity "charges to consumers have doubled over the last year.” So they asked the province to purchase “long-term power contracts as a hedge against increasing rates.”

It was so bad that the Wildrose called for a rebate program to help people purchase more energy-efficient appliances and reduce electrical consumption. By July the Edmonton Journal was talking about blackouts. It explained that the Klein deregulation system brought rampant volatility. “There’s no incentive to build anything that isn’t practically profitable. That makes the system less elastic and could lead us into occasional darkness.”

Indeed, while prices spiked, blackouts left Albertans and visitors stranded in blistering sun on the Skyride at the Stampede. A Herald headline read: Alberta Power Rates among Highest in Country; Deregulated Market Blamed for Price Spikes. A year later, in 2013, the Rimby Review was still talking about rolling blackouts in Alberta, which the Wildrose blamed on “a direct result of a broken system that needs to be fixed,” that “the system is not working, especially given that consumers have been gouged by the system before because of planned power” outages. Once again the headlines pointed to Alberta’s highest prices in Canada, and the Wildrose asked for a change to how the wholesale market operates, calling the PC Energy minister “oblivious to the deficiencies in the power market.”

On to 2014, the fourth straight year of our little jaunt down the price-spike lane, and the Calgary Herald warned consumers in April about another price spike as prices jumped to 11 cents. Every single year the headlines were riddled with threats of blackouts and power spikes, which the Wildrose opposition clearly blamed on the broken energy-only market. Once again in October 2014 the Wildrose Energy critic said in the Edmonton Sun that “the market is volatile and unaffordable for businesses and families on fixed incomes,” and he pledged to “reduce price volatility for consumers and businesses.”

But somewhere along the line, in cozying up to the same PC Party that put us into this mess, they forgot what the PC’s market put Albertans through. Now they defend the broken market system as working properly, or they blame renewables for breaking it. In this very Chamber they’ve told Albertans that the energy-only market has worked well. One called it “a once prosperous and high-functioning energy-only market.” They even told us that the price spikes are what make it work, explaining that we just don’t understand “the up-and-down nature of the market.”

No, Madam Chair, we do understand it. We, like most Albertans, understand it all too well. Like our constituents, we remember living through the spikes of past years. Alongside our neighbours we endured months of skyrocketing power bills under the previous Conservative governments, and now we’re fixing that problem. They want to make like we broke it, but we know full well that the system was broken. They said as much over and over for the first half of this decade. Then we formed government, and we heard from experts and investors that this system could no longer attract the investment we need for new supply. That would have meant more price spikes and blackouts, just like we saw throughout the five years before we got our chance to fix the system.

That’s why I’m excited today, Madam Chair, to vote for Bill 13, which implements the capacity market. The capacity market will provide consumers with greater stability. Over the past 18 months we’ve been working with stakeholders, including industry and consumer groups, to design our capacity market. Ours is a made-in-Alberta approach to a proven market. It will enable us as a province to get the new, low-cost electricity supply we need to power our long-term economic prosperity, one that attracts investment from industry and makes life better for Alberta consumers.

But while I’m excited, I’m also worried. I’m worried about the amnesia afflicting some members of the opposition about the failings of the system we inherited. Based on what we’ve heard in this Chamber, the other side opposes this transition that is so necessary to ensuring that our electricity supply is secure. The capacity market is a tailor-designed system to track the new investment in generation supply that we need and which the Conservatives’ preferred system was failing to attract. But they have made it clear that they do not support this transition. They want to turn back the clock to a system they now pretend was working, and that scares me, Madam Chair. That scares me for investor confidence, but it scares me even more for Albertans facing price spikes and blackouts, wondering how they’re going to pay their bills and keep the lights on. I didn’t think it would be possible that folks hoping to lead this province would choose to revert to price spikes and threats of blackouts, but that is what we’ve heard in the debate on Bill 13.

Madam Chair, this legislation ensures that the necessary legislative changes are made to prepare Alberta’s electricity system for the future, a system that is more stable and reliable for consumers, more attractive for investors, and better for all Albertans. We can’t go back to the volatile and unpredictable system that the Conservatives wanted continued. We need to move this bill forward. We also need to move forward with other elements that correct mistakes and oversights of the past.

Madam Chair, consumer protection is a big part of this legislation. An Act to Secure Alberta’s Electricity Future will not only provide consumers with stable electricity prices; it will protect Albertans from poor customer service from electricity and natural gas service providers. When the Conservative government deregulated the electricity sector, they instituted a system that relies on price spikes to attract the investment necessary to keep the lights on. They also failed to put the necessary measures in place to protect consumers. They exempted competitive retailers from the AUC’s service quality rules. We’re talking about basic rules around billing services like billing accuracy and basic customer care rules and rules around call centre services. Bill 13 would hold these service providers accountable for inappropriate business practices.

Moreover, it would provide the AUC with the ability to directly issue specified penalties to electricity and natural gas service providers for particular breaches. The only enforcement tool the previous governments put in place was through a formal hearing process, which can be lengthy and costly. That process is not in the best interest of consumers when it comes to dealing with minor infractions. If your provider has tagged you with an extra $100 on your bill, that’s a big deal to you. When you’re trying to make ends meet, it’s a big deal. But it’s not a big enough deal to justify the time and resources you’d need for a full hearing process. If you’re persistent, you can get your money back – you can be made whole – but there is no usable system for penalizing the bad actor, to account for your time and effort, or to dissuade them from continuing violations.

Along with the volatile energy-only market, that they continue to defend, the Conservatives also failed to protect consumers from bad service like overbilling. Thankfully, we can make this right by moving forward with Bill 13 as amended, which protects consumers from volatility and bad customer service. I ask that members support the correction in this amendment so that we can move forward with Bill 13’s critical consumer protection elements.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Are there any other members wishing to speak? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the minister's amendment and thank her for her comments. It is a little interesting – not a little interesting. It is very interesting that we find ourselves yet again in the same spot that we find ourselves in on almost every piece of legislation that the NDP government brings to this Chamber. We talk about this a lot. They bring a bill to the Legislature. The opposition says: "Hey, you haven't consulted with communities. You're moving too fast on this. We're concerned that you haven't gotten this right. Who have you talked to?" We ask some reasonable questions. The ministers across from us stand up and go on partisan rhetoric and on rants along the way.

Then a couple of days later they're in the Chamber trying to amend their own legislation that they just tabled a few days before, proving the opposition right yet again, that this government will not consult with people. They get it right sometimes, but they get it right very, very late into the process because they don't take that step. Sometimes they have to wait for a whole other sitting to be able to come back and fix the legislation that they bring to this House that then ends up damaging and hurting Albertans. We've seen a tremendous number of examples of that, and this is another one. The minister stood up here today, moved an amendment to her legislation, then never spoke about the amendment at all, went on a partisan rant about the bill itself, didn't speak or justify the bill at all.

I see that the Member for Edmonton-Centre is laughing about that. It is kind of humorous, but it's not humorous when you think about the consequences to his constituents or to my constituents of moving legislation forward without consulting about it. Over and over, particularly on this file, the government continues to speed through it. The minister will not – I mean, you see it in question period, and you see it here – discuss the actual details of what she's bringing forward in this place and instead goes on a partisan rant.

The minister herself, just a few moments ago, when she tabled this, Madam Chair, said: we realized, after we tabled it, that we did not consult. She said that more than once. She then said: we've adjusted now that we've consulted. But they were consulting after they tabled the bill.

You know, yesterday there was another bill before this House, and the government wanted to switch over to debate it, which seemed quite reasonable, Bill 10, I believe. Then all of a sudden they started indicating to the opposition: "Oh, we can't switch over quite yet. We have another amendment for this piece of legislation, but it's not out of the photocopier yet. Could you help us keep things going just for a little bit here while we get this amendment out of the photocopier?"

Then this amendment, that was in the photocopier just a few moments ago, comes into the House, and it turns out that it is a three-page, major amendment to a piece of legislation that the Municipal Affairs minister got wrong. Then people across Alberta all of a sudden start phoning – this is what they call consultation – and saying: hey, Minister, you got it wrong. The opposition caught the minister in the fact that municipalities actually will have a significant role to play in that legislation. They panic, they go and make another amendment, bring it forward here, and then try to get it passed.

The problem with that, Madam Chair, is that nobody knows whether they've gotten it right this time. How do we know that this minister has actually gotten it right this time? What has changed this time? How do we know there are not other problems in the bill that she forgot to talk to people about?

Mr. Coolahan: Read it.

Mr. Nixon: The Member for Calgary-Klein says, "Read it." We have read it. This is an extraordinarily complicated bill. The Minister of Infrastructure is laughing, but I can tell you that my constituents, that have to continue to pay out of their own pockets because of the ridiculous ideological behaviour of this government, don't think it's funny. They don't think it's funny that you can't come to work prepared, a minister of the Crown who will table a piece of legislation repeatedly in this place and then ask for us to have to change it within days or hours of them tabling the legislation. They can't get it right. They can't get it right.

The minister then goes on and says: "But don't worry. We had to change this part of the bill, but the rest of the bill is okay. The rest of the bill is fine. Everything is fine." Well, how do we know that she's not going to be back here tomorrow saying: "Hey, I need some help. I actually realized that I never called the people that were involved, never talked to Albertans, and now they're calling me and recognizing that I made a mistake." How do we know that? How do we know that she's actually communicated with all of the relevant people on this section of the bill? Or does it just happen that there have been a few people that managed to be able to get to her to be able to explain this problem? How do we know that she hasn't rushed that?

Maybe, Madam Chair, there's another amendment in a photocopier somewhere that's jammed up right now, and we'll see that in a few moments. I don't know. It's tough to tell from these ministers because they don't come here. We've seen it again with the election finance issues that have come before this House, repeatedly having to fix the mistakes in the bills that they brought forward in their rush to do it.

The most famous of that would be Bill 6, one of the worst pieces of legislation that ever came from this government, something my communities have not forgiven this party across from me for and will never forgive them for, quite frankly. They then had to rush forward – remember that, Madam Chair? – rush into here with an amendment. In fact, they had to bring in time allocation on second reading of their bill to try to force that bill to Committee of the Whole as fast as possible to bring in an amendment to try to fix their legislation because they didn't consult with the people of Alberta.

I used an example last night that really showed that the departments weren't consulting. They stood inside an agriculture community and told farmers and ranchers to not put their bulls out with their cows at nighttime so that the calves would only come in the day. I can assure you that if you consulted with a veterinarian or anybody – anybody – they would know that that is not, in fact, a reality, not something that they should say. It's just not appropriate, and it shows that this government will not consult with people, and then when they get in a jam and they realize they've made a mistake, they have to try to come and fix it. But often it's too late, and already Albertans have paid some consequences.

The attitude that you have from this government on this issue was very clear last night from the agriculture minister, who spoke against an amendment that would require him to consult with farmers and ranchers and the agriculture industry before he changed significant regulations, within 60 days of doing that. He stood up and said that that was red tape. Talking to farmers and ranchers and the industry that he is responsible for is red tape: that's the attitude.

So I guess my question to the Energy minister would be: was it red tape to talk to these people? Through you, Madam Chair, to the minister: why didn't you talk to them before you tabled this bill? How many other people have you spoken to about this amendment?

What other sections of this bill do you think you have not consulted with people on? Why, when you stand up to speak for this amendment, that the minister is asking our support on, do you not speak about the amendment but can only speak in partisan rants? Why can you not defend this amendment, that you want my support and my colleagues' support for? Instead, you'll talk about your partisan policies.

Why were these people not consulted in the first place? What happened? What broke down within your department that caused this to take so long? You admit, in your presentation to the House on this amendment, that this is an extraordinarily complicated piece of legislation, and it is. The minister is a hundred per cent correct on that. That would show, again, why there would need to be proper consultation. Through you, Madam Chair, to the minister: why did you not consult with these people in the beginning, before you tabled it in this House, and can you please provide some assurances that you have now properly consulted with them and will not need another amendment before the end of the day?

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.
The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. Certainly, we did consult extensively, but in the matter of parliamentary procedure and privilege, as members would appreciate here, the exact language of the bill could not be shared until it was introduced here. We need to make some small wording changes in that one part, and we've agreed to take the time to do that with industry. To be honest, we've heard nothing about any other part of the bill, so we believe that they're very happy with that, as are consumer groups. Again, it was over 130 different groups we consulted with over a period of time.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, through you, Madam Chair, to the hon. Minister of Energy. I appreciate her answering the question. It seems to me that the assertion that the minister just made for having to cut out an entire subsection to her own bill was that she could not consult with the industry and appropriate stakeholders and people that were involved in it until the bill was tabled in this place. That, I would submit, is a ridiculous answer. While I would agree that parliamentary process means they couldn't have possibly seen the entire bill before, the content of the subsection certainly could have been reviewed with them.

If the minister would indulge us and please answer this question, then: did she talk not about the exact wording of the bill but about the content of the subsection with the people that she has now consulted, that have indicated to her that this should be removed? Were they consulted on the content of it at all at any time during her preparation of this bill?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. Absolutely, we consulted. Going back to last fall, we did an enormous amount of consultation on the content of the bill. We received advice from a number of stakeholders, over 130, in different parts about the capacity market, all the consumer pieces and that. But as I said before, because of parliamentary privilege, we are not allowed to share the exact wording of the bill until it's been introduced in this House, and at that time it was brought to our attention that there is a bit of a problem in one little section with the wording. We're going to take the time to get that right because we want the best bill possible for Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, Minister.
The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you to the minister for the answer, Madam Chair. The concern I have with that answer – and this does apply directly to this amendment – is the fact that we have heard significantly from REAs that because of some of these legislative changes, there were significant consequences for how they've had to operate their operations. Since then there has been, after several months, a whole bunch of consultation that's happened on the side, with the ag minister and others trying to get those issues addressed. That, though, Madam Chair, indicates that despite what the minister is saying, this is not just one issue in this bill. How many more issues will this bill need to have fixed, like the REA issues or this issue? How many more issues does the minister think will have to be fixed because of this amendment?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just want to put it on record that I met with the Alberta REAs yesterday, and they actually thanked me for the amount of consultation they had on this bill. We are confident that this is the only piece that needs to be adjusted. Everything else is good. Again, the REAs have been included. Indeed, yesterday morning, when I met with them, they thanked us for the amount of consultation they were granted.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. The minister confirmed again what I just said a few moments ago while avoiding answering the question at all. I do agree. That's what I opened up saying, that they have fixed the issue with the REAs, but that issue was there because they did not consult with the REAs. Then they bring this stuff forward, and the REAs call them up and say: "Wait a minute. This is going to have a dramatic impact."

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: No. Not true.

Mr. Nixon: The minister is indicating no, but that's not what the REAs tell us.

In this case she did consult, she wants us to believe, but then in the other case she didn't consult.

The point, Madam Chair – then we'll move on because some of my other colleagues probably have some stuff to say about this – is that this government continues to refuse to consult with the people of Alberta. They bring half-hearted legislation to this place over and over and over and have to change it. They have to change it. That is not appropriate governance. It is costing people that I represent money. It's hurting our economy. They are moving too slowly to communicate with people. You know why? They've already admitted why. It's because they are having trouble finding Albertans that share their world view, and they only want to talk to people in their bubble. It's a shame.

Don't worry, though, Madam Chair. Very shortly, in less than a year, we get to consult with Albertans, and I suspect they will render a very negative verdict on this government.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A1? The hon. Member for Lacombe-Ponoka.

Mr. Orr: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the opportunity to rise to speak to the government amendment on this particular bill. The government clearly is floundering here again. They haven't done their homework on this. They really don't understand the complexity of this market, and now they're into another difficult situation, where they're having to amend their own bills shortly after they're put out, removing whole sections of them, simply because of the complexity of what they're trying to dive into. They really haven't done their homework except to listen to their own particular echo chambers of people that tell them what they want to hear.

I'd like to refer, actually, to a March 2018, just a few months old, School of Public Policy briefing paper from the University of Calgary. The title of the briefing paper is Capacity Market Design: Motivation and Challenges in Alberta's Electricity Market. All I need to actually refer to is even just the summary because it makes the points extremely clearly. The rest of the document anybody can read if they want. The second sentence, actually, addressing this move by the Alberta province to move to capacity markets says that "the province should proceed with caution." I don't see this government proceeding with caution. This is an extremely complex process. There are growing concerns, as the briefing paper points out. The challenge here is to make sure that there will be suitable investment for the province in terms of electricity.

It goes on to say in the opening that the switchover to do this "is not as simple as it sounds." Clearly, that's the case. When the government is already into amending its own bills, it has to confess that it hasn't consulted with the right or enough people about this. They're into trouble on this thing already, before they've even begun, because they are rushing ahead. They haven't examined the complexity of this. It is not simple. There needs to be extreme caution used here.

This is a problem, where we're going to Albertans with this and the minister in her presentation tried to make this sound like they're saving costs for Albertans. The reality is that numerous studies already presented in this House over the last weeks point out that capacity markets are actually probably more expensive. They may provide certain trade-offs and benefits, but to say that it's cheaper for Albertans is just patently not correct according to most studies and most experiences where studies have been done on existing capacity markets. Capacity markets aren't new. They've been around a long time, so there are real challenges here.

The Calgary School of Public Policy says clearly that "a capacity market is more complex and requires that regulators specify numerous parameters that are essential to the functioning of the market." One of the key components that they point out here is that Alberta's electricity demand is actually tied to the demand created by the interconnected ups and downs of global oil prices. When prices are high, the demand for electricity in this province rises; when prices are low, the demand for electricity goes down. So there's a very clear interconnectedness, as pointed out by the Calgary School of Public Policy, on electricity demand and global oil prices.

We have a government that says we want to get off the roller coaster of oil and gas economic impacts on our province, and now we're tying our electricity grid to it as well. This does not make a lot of sense. There are serious concerns here. The real challenge is that consideration has to be given to the reality of outside investors, which is what this is all about, trying to secure and make safe the investment parameters so that we have enough supply so that there aren't shortages or price spikes or any of those kinds of things. But the reality is that outside investors are wary about uncertainty, and what we're actually creating here is more uncertainty. Political and regulatory uncertainty can undermine the success of a capacity market, and the government has not wrestled with this adequately.

The problem here is that the government needs to not only project what capacity prices and things like that will be, but they also need to be projecting the future demand level for power across the provincial grid, which is inherently tied with oil and gas ups and downs, in order to create that certainty and that future demand curve or graph of how much power we're actually going to need because we can create a capacity market that has a capacity, as we've already seen in studies from other countries, that actually is way more than we may need in the future.

So integral to any understanding of whether the capacity market is going to be right would have to be a study of the projection of our power demands, and the government hasn't even presented anything in regard to that. They have no idea what our power demands 10 and 20 years out are, but we're going to build a capacity market that creates capacity – how much? – and is dependent on oil and gas prices.

There are incredible uncertainties here where the government can get this wrong in terms of projecting how much capacity we actually need, and they may be too high, or they may be too low, as studies have demonstrated. As the Calgary School of Public Policy states, "The capacity market is not a panacea for the potential downfalls of an energy-only market." There are so many complexities here, and capacity markets are inherently more complex than energy-only markets.

I would like to see from the government some sort of study, some sort of indication as to what the actual demand curve is going to be so that we have some idea as to what kind of capacity level we are building. Capacity markets are clearly more complex. The government has not done their homework on this. They are leading Alberta into a worse quagmire than we were in before, and it's not going to save Albertans money; it's probably going to cost them millions if not billions more. We've already seen in the rest of their tinkering and playing with the electricity market that they have not understood, and this has cost Albertans very dearly.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, I will call the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: We are now back on the bill. Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. So we are now back on the main bill?

The Deputy Chair: Yes.

Mr. Panda: Thank you. Madam Chair, this Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, is very, very flawed and very, very complex. You know, the NDP have made electricity really expensive, more expensive. Bill 13 will make electricity even more expensive for consumers by transferring more risk away from generators and putting more risk onto the ratepayers and taxpayers.

This minister, the Energy minister, who spoke just before, talked about investor confidence. It's really rich: an NDP minister, an NDP front-bencher talking about investor confidence. If they really look at that $35 billion of investment that left Alberta since this government came to power, that would make them realize what their ideological policies are, you know, resulting in. If this government really wants to talk about investor confidence, since they came into power, between them and their federal ally Justin Trudeau, they killed two pipelines, about a $30 billion investment, and then in addition to that, their federal ally and best friend Justin Trudeau killed another $40 billion worth of LNG projects on the west coast. That's why when they talk about investor confidence, they should go and talk to people in downtown Calgary. There is still 30, 35 per cent of office space vacant there, and thousands of my former colleagues are still looking for work. No one wants to hire them because of NDP policies.

Now coming back to Bill 13, I consulted so many stakeholders, and I door-knocked a lot in Calgary. People told me that they have zero trust in the NDP when it comes to electricity because of their Whac-A-Mole policies. They blame the Harper government for this electricity problem, but as per the Harper government's plans they were supposed to close out 12 coal-fired generating plants by 2029. This NDP government accelerated the coal phase-out program, and they also brought in the carbon tax, which they never campaigned on. That brought those generators to dump the power purchase agreements. Because the power purchase agreements were done, this NDP government has to pay compensation of $1.36 billion to shut those coal power plants. That's only the costs that we know as of now. There are so many future costs which are not accounted for by this government, which will run into billions and billions of dollars, that will be paid by future generations.

That's not just the only outcome of this NDP's ideological policy. Because the capacity is taken off the market, now they have to make sure that capacity is available. To the point that my colleague from Lacombe-Ponoka made, currently we have about a 16,000-megawatt capacity, including coal-fired electricity, and then our peak load is only 11,000 megawatts. We still have capacity, but the NDP just want to, you know, fix the problem they created by accelerating the coal phase-out. Instead of going gradually, they accelerated that. To fix that problem, now they have to bring in this Bill 13, which they haven't consulted people on. They said that they did. In other markets usually it takes five to six years to implement a capacity market. Here they want to do it in two years. That's going to cause a lot of problems for the stakeholders.

Then the coal conversion to natural gas: there are some plans for some of the coal-fired power plants to be converted to natural gas. But that won't be as efficient as brand new natural gas powered electricity generation.

AESO modelling actually showed that the renewable electricity program will decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and earn a profit. That's why it is deterring investments. Also, Bill 27 was introduced in 2016 and set the target for 30 per cent renewables. That means 5,000 to 6,000 megawatts of electric power have to be replaced with renewable energy, which is intermittent and not a hundred per cent reliable. We're going to create a capacity market and pay for the capacity, but actually it doesn't generate any electricity. So those assets will be sitting idle, and we pay for their capacity, and they're not actually producing. Those are some of the concerns – serious concerns – that people in Calgary-Foothills have expressed to me.

You know, all these changes they're ramming through when the key personnel, the heads of the Balancing Pool, the Alberta Utilities Commission, and the Market Surveillance Administrator, are not in their positions: this government is rushing through all these bills, so there is no watchdog. There is nothing happening.

Then they bring these bills without consultation, as my colleague from Rocky Mountain House mentioned, and then they have to fix their own bills on the fly. Without any consultation they rammed through these bills. The minister said she consulted. If she consulted – she's saying: "Well, it's parliamentary procedure. We can't share the draft." I mean, it's a common practice. You talk to the stakeholders. You come up with draft legislation. You actually talk to them. If there is no conflict of interest or financial disclosures, if they really consulted, they would have got good counsel from the stakeholders, but I doubt they did.

Under the NDP, without the capacity market, the $1,000 cap on electricity prices would have risen to $5,000 per megawatt hour – from $1,000 to $5,000 per megawatt hour – to attract investment to make the system reliable. That's why they had to create the capacity market. One mistake after another mistake: to fix one mistake, they're making another mistake, and to fix that, they bring another bill, and then they bring amendments to fix that bill. So there is a pattern there, Madam Chair.

Now the NDP has left Albertans with a choice between high electricity prices with volatility and high risk – I mean, that's the choice people have to make – or higher electricity prices with stability and lower risk. As I said, the capacity market is transferring the risk to the consumers and the ratepayers whereas in the energy market all the risk was taken by the generators. I mean, occasionally there might have been some issues that were temporary issues. The minister talked about temporary darkness, but with the NDP's policies they're creating permanent darkness here for the economy, for the consumers, and for the ratepayers.

This government is following in the footsteps of their close allies the Ontario Liberals, and we know what happened with the Ontario electric system with policies similar to what the NDP is pursuing here. In Ontario they had gone through that part, and now we all know where they're at. Probably they're running third in the polls, the same as the NDP here. Maybe number two here in Alberta, but in Ontario they're number three, the Liberals. So is that what they want to be at in a year's time? I don't know.

Madam Speaker, the devils are in the details, and particularly with a bill as complex as Bill 13, we need more time to consult and to get this bill right. This minister has one chance to get it right, and if she goes through our amendments that we are bringing forward, we can make this Bill 13 less bad. I can't promise that we'll make it better or the best bill, but we can make it less bad.

In that spirit, I have an amendment here. I'll send you the copies, and I'll wait for your instruction to talk about my amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member. Your amendment will be referred to as A2. Please go ahead.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I move that Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended in section 2(29) in the proposed part 2.2 in section 41.45(1) by adding "Subject to subsection (1.1)," before "The Independent System Operator shall" and by adding the following after section 41.45(1):

(1.1) The Independent System Operator shall not make a capacity payment to a capacity market participant if at any time during the obligation period the capacity market participant fails to meet its obligations under this Part.

Madam Chair, this amendment will fix the problem we have with the bill. It's wrong to receive a capacity payment and then deny the market electricity. If they're paid for a service, they should offer the service. For the benefit of my NDP colleagues I'll give you a simple analogy. For example, if they hired the Broadbent Institute to submit to them some study and report and if they're paid for that service and they don't provide that report, how do they feel?

Cheated. In the same way, you know, if they hired Tzepporah Berman or Karen Mahon to look after Albertans' interests but they didn't do their job, they didn't provide the service they paid for, how do you feel about it?

That's why denying electricity to the market when they are paid for capacity would actually drive up the electricity prices, too. We want to keep the prices as low as possible for the average consumer. So when AESO asks for electricity and if the generators have signed a capacity contract, then they must offer electricity for sale because they are paid for that. If you do not offer electricity for sale, you do not receive your capacity payment.

That's what this amendment will do, and it's fair. You know, when you are signing long-term contracts that put Alberta taxpayers and ratepayers at risk, then they want to get the service they paid for. This amendment will exactly fix that problem if the minister is serious about making this bill better or less bad. I ask all the colleagues in this House to support this amendment.

Thank you, Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

10:40

Mr. Taylor: Thank you, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this amendment. I think it's a really important amendment to be able to do exactly what he's talking about. You know, I'm going back again to what he has stated in the amendment. It says:

The Independent System Operator shall not make a capacity payment to a capacity market participant if at any time during the obligation period the capacity market participant fails to meet . . . obligations under this Part.

Why is that important? You have that ability right now to be able to deny electricity to the market and drive up prices. Madam Chair, we don't want to see our prices driven up.

We've all seen the consequences here in Alberta and across Canada when markets have been denied and prices have been driven up. What I'm talking about is fuel. What we see often is that refineries seem to shut down at the same time coincidentally, and the price of fuel goes up. We have that here in Alberta. That's happened this year, that our prices have been driven up because they have been denying the gas or the fuel for the market. Right now denying electricity would drive up the prices.

I was in Montana not too long ago, and they were charging about 65 cents a litre, would be the comparison. That's still in U.S. dollars, but it was 65 cents a litre. Now we're over here with a buck 30. That American dollar comparison doesn't compute. We're not paying double the amount of money to be able to have that same fuel. That's fuel that should be the same price or relatively close if we had the same tax structure, but unfortunately we have taxes, the carbon tax, that have been put on our fuel here that have driven up the prices.

All things aside, we want to make sure that we're not driving up prices unnecessarily. Like I say, in the case of refineries they're able to make the price in Alberta and Canada go up, but we really want to make sure that we keep prices as low as possible for the average consumer. The average consumer, Madam Chair. We're looking at people that could very well be your moms, your dads, your grandmothers, or kids. In my case, I have my kids, and they're on a tight budget. You have single moms that are in this same market. We want to make sure that we keep this price for these consumers as low as possible. We don't want to see our people that are elderly, that are living in their homes have to bundle up or find alternative ways to be able to live just because the prices have gone out of control in this electricity market.

It's wrong to receive a capacity payment and deny the market. That's what I want to make sure and I want to make a point of saying. It's absolutely wrong if you're getting money for this product but, on the same token, you're not actually giving them the power. Why are we doing that?

Mr. Gill: It's the carbon tax.

Mr. Taylor: Well, that's part of it. That's part of the problem, this overall plan this government has put in here.

Another part of the problem that I see is that when we have these prices – and I don't know if this government has done a fulsome study. I tend to agree with our previous speakers that this is a very complex bill. The electricity bill and how this whole market works are very complex.

When we see that we don't have enough electricity, we have to take it from places like Montana, and when we're taking it from places like Montana, are we guaranteed what we're getting there? Are we getting coal-fired generation? If we have less electricity in this market, when you look at Montana, they're going to have to amp up how much they're able to give to us. If they're giving us more electricity, well, we're going to see that in the form of coal, something that this government is trying to back away from by 2030 with the renewables. They're saying that they want to be able to take the coal-fired emissions right out of it. However, we're still having coal-fired electricity that's going to be coming to our market as a result of not making sure that we do this bill right and making sure that we have enough electricity for the Alberta market as we'll need.

I don't know if this government has done, like, a long-term study. The long-term study should be looking at – right now we're seeing an increase in the use of air conditioning systems. People that are younger like their air conditioning systems, so consequently we have more and more demand for that system. Going into the future, I know that the demand for electricity should be increasing because the demand for electric cars is rising. Tesla is making billions off the demand for electric cars. I'm asking the government: have you done a projection on how much electricity we are going to need in the future to be able to look after the electric cars and the demands on all the electric appliances? Bitcoin sucks electricity like you can't believe, and there are people that are mining for Bitcoin. As people are demanding more, we have to make sure that we can keep up to that demand and not have to rely on places like Montana.

When AESO asks for electricity, if you're on a capacity contract, you must deliver that electricity for sale. Right now we know that they can't give a hundred per cent of the electricity coming from a renewable such as solar and wind power just because the sun doesn't shine all the time and the wind doesn't blow. We know that that has to happen, so we know that we will have to go to natural gas. I know there is a changeover for that, but again we're still putting coal into this mix regardless of how this government wants to do it.

The important part here is that if you do not offer electricity for sale even though you're being paid for it, you shouldn't receive your capacity payment. This amendment to this bill really kind of states that quite clearly, that we don't want to see price spikes happen here for all the people in Alberta. If they're actually making sure that they're producing the electricity, then they'll get paid, but if they're not producing electricity, they should not be paid. So it's: "shall not make a capacity payment to a capacity market participant if at any time during the obligation period the capacity market participant fails to meet [the] obligations under this Part." To me, this is fairly simple. Let's keep the electricity prices low and make sure that if a person is not producing, then they're not being paid for it even though that's what would potentially happen.

This is a good amendment, and I would like other members to be able to speak on it, but I encourage them to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there other members wishing to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair. I am indeed pleased to stand and speak on this amendment, that is basically amending section 2(29) in part 2.2 of An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future. Fundamentally, I think the opposition is avoiding the reality that six months ago we passed legislation in this House to establish a capacity market. We're not here today – and I don't think it's very productive – to be spending a lot of time discussing the pros and cons of a capacity market even though a capacity market is the best way to manage the electricity supply of this province. It's going to ensure that consumers, small business, farmers, and all Albertans are protected from things like rolling brownouts and the volatility that the electricity-alone market caused.

10:50

Getting to the amendment, fundamentally, this is basically not necessary. The legislation actually has provisions in it. It's provided for under section 41.42(2)(c). It's called the rule-making process. This is an AESO rule. Basically, it says that any provider in breach of the system operator rules would be ineligible for inclusion in the capacity market. The member is suggesting that a company that has secured a capacity contract would be able to get paid under contract without producing actual power, and it's simply not the case.

[Mr. Sucha in the chair]

Generators need to be able to do maintenance, and we want them to be able to do that to keep the system functioning well. It's particularly true for the old coal plants, which the opposition apparently wants to continue past 2061. Even if they're under a capacity contract, they're going to need to be turned off for maintenance. AESO knows how to manage this. One of the things that the capacity market is doing is preventing economic withholding, that caused so much disruption in the previous market.

Basically, I don't think that this amendment adds anything to the value of the bill, and I would encourage all members of the House to vote this amendment down.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Mr. Barnes: Thank you, Mr. Chairperson. I want to thank and acknowledge my hon. colleague from Calgary-Foothills for his effort and his experience in bringing this forward. I certainly want to disagree with the last speaker. I think this amendment is an important amendment, and I think what it adds to the bill is certainty. It's absolutely clear in my colleague's amendment that the Independent System Operator shall not make a capacity payment to a capacity market participant if at any time during the obligation period the capacity market participant fails to meet its obligations.

I'm sitting here thinking, wondering: why would this bill need certainty? Well, our House leader said it well half an hour, 45 minutes ago. When the government stands up and makes amendments to their own bill and their own people, their own experts, their own ability or their own lack of willingness to consult – they've had three years to get to this point – have time and time again, Mr. Chair, proved so erroneous, so incapable of getting the job done properly the first time, it's absolutely incumbent on us on this side of the House and it's incumbent on those on that side of the House to give these bills a second look and to make sure that the certainty is there.

An hour ago we had the Energy minister talk about some consultation that developed late in the game that should have happened the first time to get it right the first time. Of course, with the government's majority, that one was put through, so I would just hope that the government intends and the NDP nongovernment members have the desire to input and inject some certainty into Bill 13.

Another reason that I'm thinking that certainty is absolutely necessary – absolutely necessary – is that my colleague from Wainwright just stood up and talked about the capacity market and in that speech and in an earlier speech talked about how it was only necessary because of this government's ideological decision to destroy our competitive advantage of coal-fired electricity generation, because of their ideological decision to shut down coal early even though the federal government was well on the way and what were going to go past 2029 were new coal-fired electric generation plants with strong environmental safeguards.

Here's where the government missed so badly on that, Madam Chair. I think it was about six months ago that the report was out, the articles were out that the Alberta government was actually buying coal-fired electricity generation from Montana. I mean, okay. We're going to change the world, we're going to shut everything down, we're going to cause disruption because we want to get rid of coal, but then we're going to buy coal-fired generation from Montana. Then I'm told that we don't need certainty. When the principle of what this government tried to do destroyed Alberta's competitive advantage, when they made it tougher for families and businesses, and when they missed it so erroneously, so inexperiencedly, and so hypocritically, yes, absolutely, we need to spend time and look at my hon. colleague's amendment here. Let's do everything we can to make sure that we've got it right.

Of course, the other article out at the time was on how Alberta was going to be buying electricity from British Columbia and site C. My goodness, Madam Chair. It will be so interesting to see where that goes.

You know, there are some other areas of uncertainty. I've talked to many, many people around Alberta in the electricity generation business and in the renewable business of electricity generation who tell me that they don't think that this government's plan has enough redundancy. What I mean by redundancy is that we all know that the wind doesn't always blow and that the sun doesn't always shine. We hear about solar farms that take up a quarter section to three sections that are only 4 per cent efficient. We look at the AESO reports that said many, many times that wind or solar is providing zero or 3 per cent of our electricity needs, of course, in one of the coldest climates in the world, where our grandmothers and our grandfathers, our fathers and our mothers have been tremendously successful because of their innovation and because of cheap electricity.

I'm told by many experts that they didn't get the redundancy right. They don't have enough redundancy to make sure that we're not going to have some brownouts or that we're not going to have some of those issues because of their haste to shut down coal, because of their haste and their need to put in a capacity market. You know, here's a colleague who wants to make sure that one part of this bill is a little stronger, and I think we should pay attention to that.

I want to go a little bit further. You know, I'm told that one of the big risks young Albertans have right now is the price of natural gas because natural gas is the backup plan, because natural gas is going to become at least 70 per cent of this market. Can you imagine what happens if the price of natural gas doubles?

Obviously, the ratepayer is protected at 6.8 cents, but, Madam Chair, as we saw on April 8, eight days into our new fiscal year, our spot price of electricity hit, I think, 8 cents. Already the taxpayer had to dip into their pockets to subsidize the ratepayer to a tune of $9 million. From the budget documents presented to us around that same time, we know that the government has got almost $74 million of taxpayer money going in to subsidize the ratepayer. If we've already spent $9 million on the eighth day, my goodness, would anybody be surprised if that number hit $200 million or $300 million? Again, I am just back to my hon. colleague, who put the time and the effort and the good thought into trying to make sure that this government added some certainty.

Madam Chair, I will be absolutely supporting this amendment, supporting my colleague, and hoping and praying that parts of this capacity market do not cause such economic uncertainty as the capacity law has in the market and that, going forward, the Alberta economy and Alberta families have the best opportunities possible.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Are there any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Chair. It's always a pleasure to rise in this House and speak on a piece of legislation. Today is no exception as we speak to Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, specifically to the amendment that my colleague from Calgary-Foothills has put forward.

This movement from an energy market to a capacity market, of course, affects Albertans. We always talk about how it affects them. To be perfectly honest, Madam Chair, I wish this had gone to committee, as was suggested earlier on when we were discussing this bill, to hear if there were indeed some positives that the regular, everyday, downtown Alberta person was thinking about, to listen to and explore what generators may think of the idea, just stakeholders in general. I also think that a lot of the committee members would have been interested to ask questions of those stakeholders to try to get a handle on how they're really affected. But that was a different amendment.

Clearly, Madam Chair, this is something that will affect Albertans to one degree or another. The Alberta Electric System Operator I believe ran many models in its quest to determine how the change to electricity provision in Alberta would shake out, including the use of intermittent renewable to be part of electricity generation in this province. It appears that the Alberta Electric System Operator modelling showed something that may have been expected, certainly by folks on this side of the House. The model showed that the renewable electricity program will decrease the revenue needed for all generators to recoup investment and earn a profit. In AESO's opinion, this will deter investment.

Generators, in the opinion of the Alberta Electric System Operator, their model, show a huge outlay of money. Generators may quite possibly not be able to earn enough revenue to get back the investment that they've made. Getting back money on an investment is, of course, how things really work. Generally speaking, an investor isn't interested in investing in something that doesn't show some kind of a return, and if they can't see their way clear at the end of the day to see a profit from that investment, they may not be interested at all.

Interestingly, the Alberta Electric System Operator report from October of 2016 also said that system reliability will be compromised. I think we've talked about that in the House a lot. I will quote from that report.

Without investment in new firm generation (or equivalent but alternative sources of firm supply such as demand response, etc.) to replace retiring coal-fired electricity, the market will be unable to support increasing volumes of intermittent renewables and provide a healthy reserve margin to manage through a wide range of system conditions. System reliability will be compromised.

Nonetheless, Bill 27 was introduced in November of 2016 and set the target for 30 per cent renewables in Alberta.

Now, the government purposely compromised the electrical system's reliability, and they did this without a guarantee that the peaker plants would be built to produce electricity when, as my colleagues have all stated, the sun doesn't shine and the wind doesn't blow, hints, I guess, of the need for a capacity market. Electricity stakeholders that deal in Alberta are therefore all demanding a capacity market: generators; the electric system operator, AESO; the Market Surveillance Administrator; investors; and consumer groups. Madam Chair, under this NDP government, without the capacity market, the $1,000 per megawatt hour cap on electricity prices would have to rise to $5,000 per megawatt hour in order to attract the investment needed to make the system reliable, meaning lowering the potential of brownouts or, heaven forbid, blackouts due to shortage of electricity, probably at peak times.

I don't know about you, Madam Chair, but myself and my colleagues on this side of the House and, for heaven's sake, all of our constituents, no matter what side of the House you come from, could not and would not stand for monthly power bills that went up by a factor of 5. Now, according to the Alberta Electric System Operator while the $5,000 per megawatt hour cap on electricity may provide revenue sufficiency, it does not provide any revenue certainty. Revenue certainty, of course, is what an investor would be looking for. Not all investments come with a guarantee – that's understood – but, generally speaking, investment in a utility can generally be viewed as a good investment.

It appears, Madam Chair, that the government has given Albertans a choice between high electricity prices with volatility and high risk or higher electricity prices with stability and lower risk, all because the government is moving to force renewables into the market and close down the coal-fired power plants early. I think it would be fair to say that no Albertan that is watching today or listening wants the absolute disaster that is known as Alberta's electric system. I don't think I can name any Albertans that want power plants, that the ratepayers are paying for, that sit idle and don't run.

Now, I spoke on this bill two, maybe three weeks ago. The last time I spoke, the NDP government announced the conception of the capacity market. Bill 13 is about financing coal-to-gas conversions, new natural gas generation, combined-cycle gas, and backup for renewables, the simple cycle gas peaker plants. As I've said previously, Bill 13 is here to fix some of the confusion and the mess from the coal phase-out that tended to make the grid unstable. Under Bill 27, 30 per cent of renewables were included to be part of Alberta's daily energy use.

The Alberta Electric System Operator contracts renewables capacity through a bid process. Now, when we talk about a capacity market, the Member for Edmonton . . .

Dr. Turner: Whitemud.

Mr. Schneider: . . . Whitemud – thank you very much – suggested that a capacity market does not pay the generator in two ways, which I understand it does. I'm more than happy to be corrected. Even as I looked on the computer here after the member had spoken, I believe it pays companies both for the capacity that they could offer the market – and that would be the case even when the facilities are not operating – plus the price they receive for the electricity they generate when indeed they are in operational mode or generating energy. It's clear Albertans pay for capacity now, but that cost is bundled in with their monthly energy costs.

This is the kind of thing I wonder if stakeholders ever had a chance to give some opinion on. The minister spoke this morning, and I was glad to hear that she had indeed done some consultation with stakeholders in that regard. We'll have to take her word that they all believe that this is the right way to do things. I'm sure they'd love to talk about paying a company that generates electricity and then also paying them when they aren't producing electricity. The minister has made it clear that several changes are going to have to be in place in order to attract investment in energy production after the province shifts away from coal-fired power, by 2030. I guess it becomes a question of: I wonder what companies would invest if it were not for the subsidies being offered.

Presently, when I look at the statistics in Alberta, coal-fired power makes up, well, right around 50 per cent. It's probably a little under that and has been for a long time, of course. That backbone of electricity that we rely on in Alberta, the fallback, will need to be replaced if the coal is gone, and the province will need companies to build new generating stations. Those generating stations will also need to consistently produce a lot of energy. When the math is done, they'll need to produce about 8,000 megawatts of electricity by 2030. Of course, over the same period, since the province has mandated 30 per cent renewables by 2030, the province is also going to be looking for companies to invest in those types of projects.

Just to speak about the amendment for a moment, this amendment kind of speaks to something that went on in Alberta several years ago when TransAlta withheld electricity when AESO asked for it. At the end of the day, it was discovered that TransAlta had done that, and they were fined millions of dollars. The member's amendment talks about that it's wrong to receive a capacity payment and then to deny the market electricity. I believe that comes directly, if I'm not mistaken, from that case that TransAlta was involved in. Denying electricity, of course, will drive up markets. It cannot help but spike the market. As my colleague from Battle River-Wainwright talked about, of course, our goal here should be to keep electricity as low as possible for the average consumer when you figure that there are several people in this province that live on a fixed income.

When the Alberta Electric System Operator asks for electricity, if you are a capacity contract, you must offer electricity for sale. Simply not offering when the call comes out for electricity is not going to be acceptable. If you do not offer electricity for sale, you really should not receive the capacity payment.

This whole capacity market started when the government implemented a carbon tax. They introduced a carbon tax and levied it on the heavy industrial emitters. The target was coal-fired power plants, that have created a large portion of Alberta's electrical use for some time. Of course, as we've mentioned plenty of times in the House, this tax was not something that was included in the government's election platform. When the tax was levied on those companies that were energy producers using coal power, they opted out of their power purchase agreements because of the contract that these energy producing companies had with Alberta. It stated that they could do just that, opt out of an agreement with the province if any government made those agreements uncompetitive. So that's what they did, and that's all just facts that we know.

Now, there were six of Alberta's plants that had actually been scheduled to be shut down much later, as late as 2061. Genesee 3 was to shut down in 2055. These were considered state-of-the-art facilities, certainly state of the art in 2018, and as we have seen over the years, our coal-fired plants were leading the world in technology that would clean up the emissions that were given. I'm not saying that they would have gotten anywhere where the government has suggested we need to be, but the opportunity was taken away.

As power generation companies handed their contracts back to the Balancing Pool, now the cost of the Balancing Pool has turned out to be $70 million per month. At the end of the day, the pool lost an incredible $2 billion. The government poured a lot of money into the Balancing Pool while they tried to come up with a Band-Aid, something, anything to stop the hemorrhage, a lot of money that generations of Albertans will be stuck paying for many, many years.

On top of the hundreds of millions of dollars that Albertans are forced to pay, we find that several coal communities that were of the understanding, of course, that their coal plants would be operational for some time to come got blindsided – they basically got blindsided – by this government and their coal phase-out under the guise of greening Alberta. Plenty of Albertans have been forced out of work decades earlier than they had planned. Retirement plans have been destroyed, equity in homes lost, and dreams shattered.

So as we speak about electricity here, I think it's fair to say that there's no question that the cost of electricity cannot help but go up. The electricity part is already starting to move up. How far the price of electricity will go is not known. That is a little bit of the scary part. Coal conversion to natural gas for these plants is not as efficient, of course, as brand new combined-cycle natural gas power plants. Conversion to these plants is costing Albertans in the neighbourhood of $1.36 billion to shut them down early and do a conversion to natural gas.

But, Madam Chair, this government was bent on forcing renewable electricity on the good people of Alberta, and it appears that they were prepared to do that at any cost. This has concerned the United Conservative Party enough that we've written to the Auditor General in regard to the NDP's tampering with the electricity system. We asked for his outlook on the full costs and implications of the power purchase agreement losses as well as on the province's decision to phase out coal-fired electricity and its cap on electricity rates because, as seems common when we deal with legislation in this House, we find that sometimes tangible details are hard to get.

Once again, Madam Chair, most of the details of this bill will be written into regulations. The devil will be within those regulations. Those are the details of this bill that will not be debated in this House. This is the part of Bill 13 that says to everyone: don't worry; we're from the government, and you can trust us.

One more small point I'd like to make, Madam Chair. Bill 13, as it is, allows companies to receive capacity payment, but the companies can then deny the provision of electricity, which, thereby, would allow the spiking of prices in Alberta, which I spoke about a few minutes ago. Sometimes the last point you want to bring up is not the best one.

What we are seeing here and for those Albertans that are playing the home game, they need to realize that this government is trying to implement a capacity market over a period of two years instead of trying to implement this market over a period of three to six years, which is, according to the stakeholders that have approached us, how it should be done.

Madam Chair, I'm going to steal a few words from my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti, who spoke on this bill probably two to three weeks ago. He stated that Alberta after many years had finally gotten to a point where the electricity prices were down to a cost where Albertans weren't being gouged. Now, I know we heard the minister speak this morning of some spikes with Alberta's energy. All true. I'm not denying anything she said at all. The electricity utility in this province was not hurting the average Albertan. That's supposed to be kind of the goal, I think, when we're creating legislation in this House. We do our best not to actually hurt the folks that pay the freight in this province. The generation market was working before the 2015 government took the reins. Ideology basically changed how we were going to do business in Alberta as far as electricity is concerned.

Madam Chair, I think I'll let it go at that, just to say that I will indeed be supporting my colleague's amendment. I think it adds some strength to the legislation. Anyway, I'll let it go at that.

Thank you very much, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to speak again on Bill 13.

[Ms Jabour in the chair]

Welcome back, Madam Chair. Thanks for the opportunity to speak to Bill 13. We talked about why Bill 13 is required. Bill 13 is required to fix the mess the NDP has created in the first place with their ideological climate change plan that they brought in. They have to accelerate the coal-fired electric generation being shut down. To replace that shortfall of electric generation from coal-fired electricity, they said that they will replace that with renewable energy, with wind and solar, and also convert some coal-fired electric plants to natural gas based electric generation, which would take a much longer time. In the meantime they brought in this capacity market creation bill, which will drive up electricity prices.

Also, if we are short of electricity here because we shut down our coal-fired electric generation in Alberta, the NDP is saying to Albertans: "It's okay. We will import coal-fired electric power from the United States of America, from another country. It's okay to import coal-fired electricity from the U.S.A. into Alberta, but we want to shut down our coal-fired electricity here. We want to accelerate the phase-out of coal-fired electric generation much faster than the Harper government forecasted, in 2029. We are okay, Albertans, to shut down the coal-fired electricity here and kill jobs in Alberta. We want to help the United States of America because we want to import coal-fired electricity from Montana, a state in the U.S.A., and help create jobs in the U.S.A.. We want to kill jobs in Alberta." That's what the NDP wants to do, Madam Chair.

Then they talked about that this bill is required to create investor confidence. Just look at the $35 billion of investment that left Alberta since the NDP came to power. That's $35 billion of investment. Companies have disinvested, multinationals have disinvested in Alberta and gone to other jurisdictions. They didn't switch to other business. They're still investing in the same business but not in Alberta. They don't mind going to other locations which everyone else think are more risky for business investments. The investors that are leaving Alberta: for them, it's less risky than Alberta. The Minister of Energy said, you know, that it's about investor confidence. Just go talk to people in downtown Calgary. Those towers are still empty. When I go and walk on the +15 to meet my former colleagues, they say how much space is available in those towers every time.

Coming back to Bill 13, Madam Chair, all we are trying to do here is to make Bill 13 – because this government wanted to speed up the implementation of Bill 13, which normally takes four to five years. That's what the stakeholders told me, at least four to five years to implement a capacity market in other jurisdictions. But this government wants to do it in two years, which will drive up the prices, and to put an artificial cap of 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, telling Albertans: "We will import coal-fired electricity from Montana and supply and meet the demand here. If the prices go up, we'll cap it at 6.8 cents per kilowatt hour, but you won't see that on your electricity bill. Taxpayers will cover it, but we'll hide it. We'll be innovative in hiding those costs from Albertans." That's what they're saying. Their consultations were not really meaningful, and they rushed them.

To be fair to TransAlta, who was penalized because they hadn't offered the capacity – the regulating authority found that they were in breach of the contract, so they were penalized – that same TransAlta came and helped me to bring in my previous amendment, which the NDP voted down. TransAlta is an Alberta-based business. They made a mistake. They want to fix it. That's why they helped me to draft that amendment in the first place, to make sure that the capacity participants won't get paid if they don't generate electricity when AESO demands it.

This NDP government, which says that they consulted, which is not true if that is the case – TransAlta told me that they made that mistake. They want to fix that so that in future Albertans are not gouged. That's their intention. That's a business that has the interest of Albertans, not this NDP. This NDP wants to punish Albertans, kill the jobs in Alberta, and import coal-fired electricity from the United States of America. That is the status of this bill, Bill 13, Madam Chair. All I'm trying to do is to make it less bad.

I agree with the minister. This is a very complex bill, Bill 13, even for people sitting at your desk. I'm sure they'll agree that this bill is such a complex undertaking. It's a serious bill. I get that. But the minister has another opportunity here to get it right to some extent. It won't be a hundred per cent right. The timelines for implementation of this bill are really short and tight, so we need all stakeholders onboard providing the best advice so that this can be done a little bit more correctly this time, while we are in the Committee of the Whole stage of debate.

That's why I'm proposing an amendment. I'll give you copies of this, Madam Chair, and I'll wait for your instructions.

The Chair: This will be amendment A3.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Panda: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'll read this amendment into the record. I move that Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended in section 2(29), in the proposed part 2.2, by renumbering section 41.46 as section 41.46(1) and adding the following after subsection (1):

(2) The Minister shall consult with stakeholders for a period of not less than 60 days and consider any comments or feedback provided prior to making a regulation under subsection (1).

Madam Chair, as I explained, a 60-day time period is a fair and reasonable time frame to make sure the regulations are correct. The nature of this bill is very serious and complex, so we have to get that correct before we pass this bill finally in this House and give it royal assent.

Also, the Energy minister said that she wants the regulations to be developed by August, so my amendment is completely within the timeline of the minister's plan, since we haven't done good consultation and the industry stakeholders want in future at least a 60-day consultation time period, which is reasonable. Sixty days is not very long.

We know what happens when we've passed laws and acts in this House like Bill 6 in the past. We know what happens. Those are the unintended consequences of ramming through bills without thinking it through. That's why I think that this amendment will make Bill 13 a less bad bill.

I ask all my colleagues in the House to pass the amendment. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Dr. Turner: Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to the member for this amendment. As with the previous amendment, basically the position of the government is that this is not necessary. There have been extensive consultations done in the preparation of this bill. The AESO as well as the ministry continues to consult widely with consumer groups, with producer groups, with the various players in the capacity market. I don't think that this amendment really adds anything to getting our capacity market functioning and making sure that Albertans are protected from the price volatility and making sure that we have a plentiful and efficient, effective electricity market.

I urge all of my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members on the amendment? The hon. Member for Battle River-Wainwright.

Mr. Taylor: Yes. Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm honoured to be able to sit here and, I guess, look at this thing as well. The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud doesn't think that we have to give that extra time, but I think it's really necessary to have that 60 days to be able to consider the comments and feedback provided prior to making a regulation under subsection (1), as this amendment speaks to. This, I think, is a really good amendment. We're setting ourselves up so that we're not giving ourselves enough time for consultation. I have to disagree with the amount of time that's been given for the consultation.

Even if we look at this bill, the government has made an amendment to the bill because they didn't get it right in the first place. We've got to make sure that we have the consultation to make sure there's not something else out there that is going to be problematic for the people here in Alberta as we go forward. What we're doing here is that we want to make sure that we get all of the stakeholders onboard – they will provide the best feedback – so that we can get this done right the first time.

If we go back to Bill 6 – and we have talked about that this morning – Bill 6 had more pages of amendments than it actually had for the bill. The consultation wasn't done correctly on that bill, and it should have been done beforehand. What this allows is a reasonable 60-day period. That's a reasonable, fair time period to make sure that we get the regulations correct. We're seeing time and time again that we're having bills where the consultation just isn't adequate or that all the stakeholders aren't involved. I'm not sure what stakeholders were engaged in this discussion beforehand. Have all the stakeholders that needed to be, all the co-operatives and the REAs, all been engaged in this discussion as well? Like I say, we need to make sure that we're getting all the stakeholders involved.

We just look at some of the bills that we're looking at right now with the PACE program. I've asked people in my communities and in the municipalities: what are your thoughts on the PACE program? Well, these are the people that we should be consulting. These are stakeholders that are directly affected by that kind of legislation. And when I've talked to the people in municipalities, the most common thing that I hear is: "What's the PACE program? You know, what are you talking about?" The government hasn't consulted with the municipalities specifically. I've had to bring them up to speed, show them what the bill looks like and what the implications could be for the municipality, and give them some of the links to YouTube on the things that are happening in California.

We have to make sure we get these things right in the first place, and that's part of what we were talking about before is consultation. We don't want to be trying to fix something afterwards when we can get it right, or at least as right as we possibly can, the first time. We know that whenever a bill goes through, there are unintended consequences that can be attached to a bill because there's something that was unforeseen. We don't want to have as many unforeseen consequences as possible. So when a member has asked us to just have "a period of not less than 60 days [to] consider any comments or feedback provided prior to making a regulation," I think that is absolutely fair and reasonable. These timelines, in my opinion, are far too short and far too tight.

If we go back again to Bill 6, that we've talked about, the farm and ranchers enhancement or safety – I forget exactly what the name of it was. But that was back in 2015 that we talked about Bill 6. It's still not passed. We're still working on it. The government is still trying to make sure; they're trying to get through this. Well, if you do the homework ahead of time, there won't be any unnecessarily problematic things that'll happen in the future.

The minister really wants to get this thing through as fast as possible. You've got the one shot to make sure you're getting this one right. We're talking about the capacity market, which is going to affect Alberta for the future, you know. It's a serious and a complex undertaking, and we should be giving it that due diligence that we're looking at it as a very serious and complex bill and making sure that we're getting this right, making sure that we have our consultation done and that it's correct. We want to make sure that we get all the stakeholders onboard and that we can get the best advice. The government has found that they were putting forward a bill and the stakeholders said: here's a correction that you need to make. So if we engage more stakeholders, more stakeholders than we have, the ones that are directly going to be affected as a result of this, we can get the best advice, and that best advice will just make this bill better. I don't see a problem with trying to make a bill better.

So you've got this bill, and we're going to be going to a capacity market.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt you, hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 4(3) the committee will now rise and report.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 14. The committee reports progress on the following bill: Bill 13. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report? Say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Feehan: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Noting the time and the work accomplished today, we'd like to adjourn until 1:30 this afternoon.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 11:56 a.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Good afternoon. It's nice to see that rain out there. Our farmers can use it.

Please be seated.

Statement by the Speaker

Page Recognition

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have an important presentation to make this afternoon before we commence our usual business. I would like to call forward – please come over here – all of the pages. If they would join me at the dais.

Now, there are some pages, hon. members, who are not with us today, but I would like, on their collective behalf, to read you a letter which they have written to the House.

Dear Mr. Speaker,

The end of Session signifies something different for everyone. For some, it marks the halfway point of the Fourth Session of the 29th Legislature, while for others it represents the end of their time on the Chamber floor. Our time as Pages has bestowed upon us everlasting memories that we will carry throughout the next page of our lives.

Some of you may want to use one of these members to write some of those speeches.

We would like to express our sincerest gratitude for the extraordinary opportunity to serve the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

The support of numerous individuals has provided us the ability to grow into the Pages we are today. We would like to extend our many thanks to these individuals: the Sergeant-at-Arms for demonstrating the importance of leadership; the Table Officers for passing on their extensive comprehension of parliamentary procedure; the office staff in 315 and 325 for their patience with our never ending questions, and for reminding us of the significance of our position; the staff in 412 for their dedication in being the solid foundation of this Page Programme; and, the LASS for their companionship during long divisions and late night sittings.

Companionship. Hmm.

We would like to extend our whole-hearted thanks to you and through you, Mr. Speaker, to all Members of [the] Assembly, because without all of you, it would not be possible for us to be here today.

The Page Programme has impacted each of us immensely – we have come out of this program with a new sense of identity, direction, and perception. It has been an eye-opening experience serving the Members of this House: each with their own unique speaking styles and gestures, coffee preferences, and comments under 29(2)(a).

The Government House Leader occasionally cheats and eats a cookie.

After countless hours spent under this dome, we have come to realize how much time and energy is given by the many people who work here to better our province and the lives of those who live within it. Through collecting tablings and petitions, delivering Bills and amendments, and listening to [the] Points of Order, we were able to see firsthand each Member's passion and dedication, in leading our province into a better tomorrow. Our time spent in South Members' Lounge has shown us their essential talents in forming relationships, entering negotiations, and resolving conflicts. Not only will the knowledge we gained here enable us to be informed and responsible citizens, but it will also allow us to engage others in doing the same.

The privilege of joining the ranks of former Pages – whose footprints have forever marked this green carpet – will serve as a reminder of the importance preservation has on the democratic process. While our departure from these four chairs is bittersweet, we look forward to watching the next generation of Pages from the galleries.

Although you may be returning in the fall under Standing Order 3(4)(b), for us this is the dissolution of Session. Once again, we would like to extend our appreciation to everyone who has afforded us . . . an exceptional opportunity.

Yours Truly,

29th Legislature

My apologies again for the pronunciation of names. You've evidence that I've failed at other times.

I would ask the Deputy Speaker if she might come forward and present our head page, Amanda Porter, a small token of our appreciation. [Standing ovation] I know I speak for all of you when I say: while they say that it's a privilege to be here with us, the privilege is ours to be here with them.

Thank you. Don't deliver any more cookies, okay?

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you four members that are in your gallery, the former MLA for Edmonton-Manning Mr. Peter Sandhu and his wife, Kamal Sandhu. They have two guests with them from India, Mr. Pritam Kal Sharma and Mrs. Shard Sharma. Mr. Peter Sandhu, if you had the privilege of attending the Nagar Kirtan on the weekend – 40,000 people gathered there – was able to collect the names of 100 people that are willing to donate their organs in the future under the organ donation act. I would ask them to stand and please receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The Minister of Health and Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The first is a school group. I'd like to introduce to you and through you a group of remarkable students who are in grade 6 at Aurora charter school in the constituency of Edmonton-Glenora, which I have the honour of representing. These students are always engaged. They're sharp dressers, and when I spoke to them earlier today, they shared some of their learnings, including learning about Alberta's namesake. I would not be surprised if some of these students end up on this floor as future pages. If I could ask the teachers, who are Mrs. O'Connor and Mrs. Schulz, as well as their chaperone and all the students from Aurora to please rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly grade 6 students from Landing Trail intermediate school – this is not the same group as yesterday; I'll have another group coming tomorrow – one of my favourite schools. I had a chance to talk to students just as brilliant as the group yesterday. If they could rise along with their teachers, Mr. Jeff Semenchuk, Ms Shauna Bredo, Mrs. Tracy Radkewich, along with their chaperone, Mr. Ross Hunter, so they can receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: Welcome.

Hon. members, are there any other school groups here today?

The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Starke: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a fourth-generation Albertan who has been farming the same piece of land in east-central Alberta for over 108 years and a former member of this Assembly, Mr. Jack Hayden. Mr. Hayden is a former councillor, a former reeve, and also a former board chair of the school board for the county of Stettler.

An Hon. Member: He doesn't look that old.

Dr. Starke: He doesn't look that old. He'll love that.

He served the county of Stettler. He served the people of Alberta in a variety of capacities, including representing Alberta on the Federation of Canadian Municipalities from 1998 to 2004. He also has served Albertans and Canadians, for that matter, representing rural interests in a variety of capacities both during his time as a reeve and county councillor and afterwards. In 2007 Mr. Hayden was elected as the MLA for Drumheller-Stettler and has served the people of Alberta as Minister of Infrastructure, minister of agriculture as well as minister of tourism, parks, and recreation. He is a dear friend. I dare say that it's good to have you back in the Assembly, Jack. Please give the warm welcome of the Assembly to Mr. Jack Hayden.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Loyola: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, it is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the entire Assembly Mr. Max Méndez. He's the musical ambassador of El Salvador. For over 20 years Max has been the lead vocalist for the Latin rock band Frigüey. His band has gained notable success throughout Latin America and has reached various audiences around the world. In 2017 Mr. Méndez was named the musical ambassador for the country of El Salvador, and he represents the music of his nation on a global scale through tours and outreach. Currently Max is visiting Canada for the first time and has chosen Alberta to explore the music industry and learn more about the local Latino-Canadian culture.

Accompanying Mr. Mendes today is Sandra Moreno, a constituent of mine who is a divisional co-ordinator for the Edmonton Police Service with the victims' services unit. Aside from being incredibly dedicated to her job and helping Albertans, she sits on the board of directors for Sunrise of Life, an organization dedicated to development projects in Tanzania. Currently Sandra is completing a master's of human security and peacebuilding through Royal Roads University. I ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Ms Jansen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions. First, as part of Paramedic Services Week it's my pleasure to introduce you to two front-line paramedics who are seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they rise as I call their names: Justin Nunes, a primary care paramedic with Edmonton metro EMS, and Patrick Scollard, a primary care paramedic with Calgary's own clinical operations interfacility transportation and a constituent of Calgary-North West, which makes him extra special. Thank you for your service and your life-saving care. Please join me in extending the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, also seated in the Assembly are individuals from Pomerleau seated in the members' gallery – and I ask them to rise as I mention their names – Pat Blais, a construction director, and Sean Strickland, the director of business development and industry relations. Now, Pomerleau is a national construction company that maintains offices in Calgary and across Canada. They are currently building the Willow Square continuing care facility in Fort McMurray, a project the community has needed for many years, and it is a lovely facility. We are absolutely thrilled with the pictures of what it's going to look like. I ask Mr. Blais and Mr. Strickland to receive the traditional warm welcome of this House. Welcome.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two additional introductions. The first: it's a pleasure to introduce Caroline and Andreas Schwabe, who are seated in the public gallery. I ask that they also rise as I introduce them. May is Speech and Hearing Month in Canada, and Caroline has suffered from progressive degenerative hearing loss since her childhood. In December 2017 she received a cochlear implant. Once her implant was activated, in January, she completed her rehab in just four days, which is 36,000 times faster than a typical recovery. It is phenomenal. Andreas is her husband, and he's a media and communications consultant as well. Together their blog and podcast My Beautiful Cyborg has provided a window into understanding the nature of hearing loss. Thank you so much for sharing your experiences with so many and helping them navigate the system. Please join me in welcoming them.

My second introduction is also of a group of folks who are in the gallery who are very sharply dressed as well. They are paramedics, and they are here because this is part of Paramedic Services Week. It's my pleasure to introduce them. They are front-line workers as well as members of Alberta Health's emergency health services team, who provide Albertans with expert life-saving and trauma care. I ask that they rise as I say their names: Brad, Darren, and Ian, who are stationed in the Edmonton-Glenora riding, as well as Connor, Jordan, Ian, Jessica, Nicola, Alexandre, Bre, and John. Thank you so much for the work you do to take care of us in what are arguably the most traumatic instances in our lives. We really appreciate all the work you do to care for Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two members of the Calgary board of education. They were meeting with me this morning; we had a very productive meeting. If the board chair, Trina Hurdman, and Julie Hrdlicka, trustee, could please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Farmer's Day

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great personal pleasure I rise today to give recognition to the upcoming celebration of Farmer's Day. For more than seven decades this day is still recognized and celebrated in rural communities across the province and by our agricultural industry. Farmer's Day was first established at the UFA's annual convention in 1945. The co-operative passed a resolution to lobby the Alberta government to declare the second Friday of June as a provincial holiday. Although no longer a provincial holiday, the United Farmers of Alberta co-operative has chosen to continue to celebrate this day by acknowledging the hard work and contribution of Alberta's farmers. This year Farmer's Day is slated for Friday, June 8, and throughout the province there will be a daylong celebration.

The business of farming and ranching is not an easy vocation by any stretch of the imagination. Commodity prices, noncapped electrical prices, droughts, fires, and other weather-related issues are far beyond their control. What they also haven't been able to control is this government's love for ideological-based legislation. Their crippling carbon tax severely hampers their ability to compete on provincial and international levels. Farmers and ranchers are not, as many people seem to believe, exempt from the carbon tax. They are greatly impacted by this tax on everything, a tax this government didn't campaign on. Costs continue to soar. Expenses such as transportation costs go up for the trucks and trains that ship the grain, crops, and livestock to consumers around the world. Those costs will have to be absorbed by the producers or passed on to the consumer, leading to rises in food costs at grocery stores and restaurants.

The business of agriculture provides life's necessities, including food, clothing, and shelter, and we should all be grateful for what they do. Farmer's Day is a significant day to honour and celebrate those in the agricultural community, who work tirelessly throughout the year. As the saying goes, Mr. Speaker, if you ate today, you should thank a farmer. An interesting report from the farm manager of Strankman Farms . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

Official Opposition and Government Fiscal Policies

Ms Luff: Much has been made of the UCP's dangerous social policy positions, and there are certainly many of those, but I think it's also important to highlight their dangerous economic policy positions. The UCP policy on taxes in Alberta is to restore personal and corporate taxes to a flat rate. This is effectively a $700 million tax break for the richest Albertans. Why would the UCP want to do this? It's because they believe that if you give tax cuts to the wealthy, they'll create more jobs, and everyone will be better off. Sounds nice. However, this idea is called trickle-down economics, and despite being tried extensively in the last 40 years, it's been found conclusively to be a false and ineffective policy.

Economists at the IMF have found that as the income share of the top 20 per cent increases, GDP actually declines. In other words, wealth does not trickle down. With these trickle-down policies in place in Alberta under Conservative governments, real wages stagnated, the top 10 per cent of earners took an increasingly bigger share of the pie, and income inequality became the worst in Canada. And income inequality has real costs. It has costs to our health care system and to our social services. It has costs to our children and to our families.

1:50

I'm proud to be part of a government that is working to address this inequality. We've raised the minimum wage. We've invested over a billion dollars in affordable housing. The Alberta child benefit and the Alberta family employment tax credit will help over 300,000 low-income Albertans. We froze university tuition. We lowered school fees. We provided grants to the cities of Calgary and Edmonton for low-income transit passes. And, yes, we have asked folks in Alberta who make over $125,000 a year to pay a little bit more.

We have done these things because we know that for Alberta to succeed, all Albertans must succeed. This is in stark contrast to the UCP, who just want a $700 million tax break for their wealthy friends and insiders.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Public Purchase

Mr. Kenney: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we saw the spectacle of the NDP high-fiving each other and cheering a decision by a global company to pull out of Alberta, to sell out billions of dollars of assets in Canada. They were cheering a decision that is going to cost taxpayers billions of dollars. We've gone from a $7 billion private-sector investment to a $12 billion government risk. While we agree that it is necessary to ensure the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline, why does the government think that Kinder Morgan's decision to pull out is a reason to celebrate?

Ms Hoffman: Canadians have come together, Mr. Speaker. From coast to coast to coast they're providing support for TMX. The deal reached this week provides greater certainty. TMX adds 15,000 jobs and $15 billion to the national economy. Members opposite want to throw tantrums and talk down this project of national importance. I instead want to thank those working people who spoke up and who helped us build a nation with yesterday's historic announcement.

Thank you.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. the minister seems to have missed the reality of what happened yesterday. A global company, a company that builds pipelines in third-world dictatorships and kleptocracies, said that they're unwilling to take the risk to build a pipeline in Canada. Does the minister really think that that is a reason to celebrate?

Ms Hoffman: I remember hearing a song: every party needs a pooper. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that what we need to acknowledge is that we have had significant progress. I have to say that if we would have reached Thursday without there being a deal, they'd be complaining. On Tuesday we announced a deal, a deal that adds 15,000 jobs and $15 billion to the national economy and will stop us from losing $40 million a day to an economy south of the border. This is an investment in Canada. You bet I'm going to party, and we welcome you to join it.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association said of yesterday's decision that it is deeply concerned that the government needed to purchase the project . . . [and] about the implications of the government's financial intervention for future . . . pipeline projects. We do not is deeply concerned that the government needed to purchase the project... [and] about the implications of the government's financial intervention for future... pipeline projects. We do not believe that this outcome will instill investor confidence in Canada.

Does the government believe that the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association is wrong in its assessment that yesterday's decision will not instill investor confidence in Canada?

Ms Hoffman: Well, here's the deal, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday members said that it was good news. They actually congratulated the Premier on the work she did. Today they're saying that this is a huge failure. I know that it is summer, I know that things are getting warm, but I'm sick of the flip-flops. This project is in the national interest. This project is going to put tens of thousands of families to work, paying their mortgages, and get us away from the huge differential that we're seeing. The reduction that we saw on that resource was $17 last week. The kids in the gallery own this resource, and we deserve to get the best price for them. I'm proud that we will because of this government and our Premier's leadership.

The Speaker: Second main question.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the question was on whether the government agrees with the assessment of the pipeline association that yesterday's decision by Kinder Morgan to leave Canada undermines investor confidence. I take from the Deputy Premier's non answer that she does not agree with the Energy Pipeline Association.

GMP FirstEnergy is the largest finance business in the energy industry. They said yesterday that they view this decision as negative for entities considering large resource-focused capital investments given the inability for the rule of law and regulatory approvals to allow projects to move forward. Does the government agree with that assessment?

Ms Hoffman: You know, Mr. Speaker, I am so proud to agree with the working men and women of this province, like Gil, who wrote in yesterday. He lives in Calgary, and he said to the Premier: every day on the streets all I see is you; we are fighting against this darkness of recession; we are fighting under your wonderful leadership against all odds, and I'm sure you will bring out the best for us. We are on the side of Gil and of all working people in this province. I know that the member has a history of voting billions of dollars for the auto industry in Ontario, but – guess what? – you're in Alberta, and you work for the people of Alberta. Start doing it, start standing with us, and get this pipeline, because yesterday was an excellent day for the Canadian economy and for Alberta workers.

Mr. Kenney: Perhaps it was an excellent day for New Democrats that they got to nationalize a project that otherwise would have been built with private-sector dollars, Mr. Speaker. We had a private company willing to risk shareholders' dollars to build a pipeline, but it couldn't. It couldn't partly because this government was unwilling to lift a finger to ensure respect for the rule of law and free trade within Canada. They talked a good game, but they wouldn't bring in Bill 12. They wouldn't turn off the taps. They repealed their wine boycott, and we ended up with uncertainty that pulled billions of dollars out of our economy. Why didn't they fight back against the B.C. New Democrats' obstructionism?

Ms Hoffman: We have fought, and we have been victorious, Mr. Speaker. The opposition leader supported a $9 billion bailout for the Ontario auto industry, but now he's unwilling to invest in Albertans, in an Alberta project that will create 15,000 jobs, $15 billion to the economy. I won't take his ideas on how to get a pipeline to tidewater because he has none. But – you know what? – he did have a campaign slogan that seems to ring true today: he didn't come back for you, Alberta. [interjections]

The Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kenney: It seems the Deputy Premier is using the same writer who came up with the sewer rats line, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] And the heckling continues.

Albertans expect civility. They demand seriousness. The Deputy Premier just said that they were victorious. Mr. Speaker, yesterday John Horgan tripped down on his commitment to do everything possible to stop Trans Mountain. Tzeporah Berman and her associated radicals have said that this emboldens them to do everything they can to stop Trans Mountain. Can the Deputy Premier identify a single group that has gone from no to yes on pipelines as a result of yesterday's announcement?

Ms Hoffman: Again, Mr. Speaker, say one thing; do another. I have to say that the member opposite and his ability to rehash issues from the past is phenomenal. We are investing in the TMX because our country needs this project. We received countless letters and phone calls of support; like I said, the individual named Gil. There was a gentleman in British Columbia. His name is Bill. He owns a utility company, and he's so proud of our Premier. You know what? I'm going to stand with Bill and Gil and the 15,000 Alberta workers who are going to have a job because of the good action that this Premier undertook. Feel free to be disappointed and sit in the corner, but this is good for Alberta. I wish you would join in the celebration, and we welcome you to pick up...

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. leader.

Provincial Response to Pipeline Opposition

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the question that the Deputy Premier did not try to answer is whether she could identify a single organization that's gone from no to yes on the Trans Mountain pipeline as a result of Kinder Morgan withdrawing their $7 billion investment.

I asked the Premier yesterday, and I'll ask the Deputy Premier today: has the government of Alberta spoken to Premier Horgan? Has he given any assurance that he will down tools and stop his policy of killing Trans Mountain, a policy of obstruction, a policy of death by delay?

Ms Hoffman: You know, 16 out of 16 court cases Trans Mountain has been successful on, and when I sat down face to face with Mr. Horgan just last week, Mr. Speaker, we had a very clear determination of where we are moving with this. And guess what? Yesterday was another very clear sign that we are winning. We won a significant investment. I know the member opposite wants to give money to Ontario for their auto industry, but we've got an investment in a Canadian pipeline to get Canadian products to tidewater so that every single Albertan has the opportunity to benefit from that resource. This is good for working people. Put down your weapons, pick up a tool, and help us...

The Speaker: Thank you. Thank you.

2:00

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, nobody is using weapons. We're simply discharging our responsibility as the opposition to ask questions on behalf of Albertans and hold the government to account. I would ask the Deputy Premier to exercise a modicum of rhetorical restraint. [interjection] More heckling.

Mr. Speaker, can the government identify a single environmental organization that has announced that it will no longer try to stop the Trans Mountain pipeline as a result of Kinder Morgan's decision to sell out of Canada as a result of this government's decision to replace that company with billions of tax dollars?

Ms Hoffman: Not only did our climate leadership plan get federal government approval; they also backed the TMX and are investing to restart construction in the coming days. Our Premier has been clear that we can balance the economy and climate action. A plan that leaves behind working people is no plan at all, Mr. Speaker. A plan that doesn't care for the environment is no plan at all. I have seen their record, zero pipelines to tidewater. I have seen our Premier's record. I know who I am rooting for. We might not be in the playoffs for the NHL, but we are certainly in the playoffs and in the final stages of getting our product to tidewater.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the government here for four months has issued empty threats about turning off the taps to respond to the B.C. New Democrats' commitment to use every tool possible to stop Trans Mountain. That commitment continues from the government in Victoria. It's part of their agreement with the Green Party that keeps them in office. My question is: will the government of Alberta use the threat implicit in Bill 12 to turn off the taps unless and until we have an assurance from Victoria that the pipeline, that we now are part owners of, will be built?

Ms Hoffman: We stood up to B.C., and we took action. We have a perfect record in court: 16 cases, 16 victories. The opposition leader went on national television to say that no particular pipeline project was a national priority. We are playing our cards carefully and strategically. Bill 12 is a tool still in our tool belt. Bottom line: this pipeline will get built. Yesterday was a very good day for Alberta. I know it wasn't a very good day for people who are cheering against the pipeline for their own political means, but it was a good day for Alberta, and we welcome you to join in the celebration.

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The historic federal buyout of the Trans Mountain pipeline and expansion is definitely a benefit to Albertans now, but this hasn't addressed the systemic issues with the regulatory process. Governments shouldn't have to buy projects to get them completed. Chris Bloomer, head of the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, said, "We do not believe that this outcome will instill investor confidence in Canada," sentiments echoed by other industry stakeholders. To the Premier: what about future projects requiring regulatory approval? Will future energy products have to be bought out to move forward?

Ms Hoffman: Well, the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association also said that they're very pleased that the Trans Mountain expansion project will be constructed. Through its completion Trans Mountain will create thousands of jobs, deliver economic benefits across this entire country. Canada will continue to need major pipeline projects to deliver responsibly produced Canadian energy to markets around the world while ensuring a fair price for our resources, Mr. Speaker.

Again, yesterday was a victory. I know people keep wanting to cheer for a defeat, but this side of the House and all Albertans are excited about the fact that we're finally going to get a fair return for our resource and the first new pipeline to tidewater since the 1950s.

Ms McPherson: I totally agree that it's a great thing that happened, but we have concerns about what's going to happen in the future. As a partner in expansion Alberta is now committed for up to $2 billion. Warren Mabee, director of the Queen's Institute for Energy and Environmental Policy, expects strong backlash from groups we were supposed to get social licence from. Alberta's carbon tax is intended to reduce emissions, and since pipelines are far more energy efficient and environmentally safe than rail or road for transporting oil to tidewater, to the Premier: how much of Alberta's up to $2 billion investment will come from carbon tax revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the commitment is correct, up to $2 billion, but the commitment also is that not a penny of those dollars will be expended until oil is flowing in that pipeline. The pipeline is going to get built. It could be zero; it could be $2 billion. There's a range in there.

Ms McPherson: Former TransCanada executive Dennis McConaghy recently commented that it does raise a lot of questions about how did we ever get ourselves into this situation where federal approvals aren't sufficient for private-sector capital to want to take on the completion of the project. To the environment minister: please help us understand the disconnect between the Alberta climate leadership plan, the social licence relied on to secure regulatory approval, and the situation we find ourselves in where Alberta and Canada are at the mercy of B.C. in getting the Trans Mountain pipeline built.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There isn't a disconnect because that pipeline and line 3 were approved precisely because of the climate leadership plan. Now we are in a position due to our oil sands emissions cap where we can say to our neighbours, to our trading partners that the oil that flows through that pipeline is subjected to a carbon price. It is also one of the only energy-producing jurisdictions in the world that has a cap on emissions. More to the point, we're also investing in innovation to reduce the carbon in the barrel, $1.4 billion worth of investments in innovation. That's something we should all be proud of.

The Speaker: Athabasca-Sturgeon-Redwater.

Mr. Piquette: All right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday saw a pivotal moment in the construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project, a project that our government has fought long and hard for. Now, I've heard a lot from members across the aisle that our plan simply wasn't enough to get a pipeline to tidewater and that we should spend our time fighting against the government in Ottawa. To the Energy minister: how has making it our government's priority to work with our federal counterparts helped us secure the construction of the Trans Mountain pipeline?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think the Premier said it best yesterday when she said that Albertans don't elect us to put on a play for them, but they elect us to get things done. Indeed, our Premier has shown a lot of leadership in getting things done, and she's gotten things done by being tough and by being smart. She made it clear to the federal government that if they didn't assert their jurisdiction over interprovincial pipelines, we would use Alberta's jurisdiction over our own natural resources by turning off the taps. She showed real strength in having a better case to make and to capture the hearts and minds . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
First supplemental.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the significant investment of both the federal government and ourselves, to the same minister: what does the construction of this project mean for government revenues?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the Conference Board of Canada estimates $46.7 billion will be collected by government treasuries in the form of taxes and royalties from the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project during the development and the first 20 years of operations. I think that's a pretty good return on investment. It's important to remember that right now the federal government, as they acquire the existing pipeline, that is an asset they are acquiring. It's an investment, and they're getting a revenue stream from that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Piquette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that members opposite argue that investment in the energy sector is drying up and that jobs are disappearing, to the same minister: how many good-paying jobs will the Trans Mountain project support?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms McCuaig-Boyd: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, we support the federal government's decision to go this way because it's important to get people to work right away. Again, the Conference Board of Canada estimates that this pipeline will create the equivalent of 15,000 jobs in construction and the equivalent of 37,000 direct and indirect and induced jobs per year of operations. You know, I live up north, and I see every day the benefit that the energy industry brings to my town when people are working, and Alberta and Canada are going to get working.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Multiple Sclerosis Research and Treatment

Dr. Starke: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is World MS Day. Multiple sclerosis has sadly been called Canada's disease because Canada and specifically Alberta have one of the highest rates of MS anywhere in the world. Now, this morning we were introduced to some of the world's brightest and best researchers who have come to Alberta because they acknowledge that the work done here is leading the world in MS research. To the Minister of Economic Development and Trade. We also heard from your ministry's director of biopharmaceuticals and life science initiatives. On World MS Day would the minister outline what MS initiatives are being conducted by his department, their costs, and what results they have achieved.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Certainly, this is a very tragic situation. The member is absolutely right. Alberta's numbers are higher per capita than most other parts of the world. This is a disease that impacts women often more than men and often younger rather than older, but anyone can get MS at any age. Certainly, the impacts are devastating. I am so proud of the fact that we have some of the best research and the best opportunities to address and find a cure for MS. One of the youth I met said that MS is his generation's polio.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that once diagnosed, MS is a chronic, lifelong condition, and given that research conducted here in Alberta has shown that the drug minocycline provides very promising results for the treatment of early-stage MS patients and given that minocycline costs about $600 per year while other MS medications typically cost between $20,000 and $40,000 per year, to the Health minister. Minocycline is not approved by Health Canada for the treatment of MS. What efforts are you making to change that situation to benefit the thousands of Albertans who live with this disease?

The Speaker: The Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member as well as the many Albertans who are engaging in advocacy on this very issue. We do respect Health Canada's role in identifying drugs being on label or not being on label as well as the Pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance and the work they do around drug purchasing and access. We'll continue to make sure that the committees have the appropriate information, and we will continue to be advocates for a fair process so that we can get the best outcome. We appreciate the monetary opportunities here, but the biggest goal is to make sure that we improve people's lives.

Dr. Starke: Well, Mr. Speaker, on that subject, given that advancements in Canadian MS research have increased the number of medications for treatment of this disease from one to 14 and given that different MS medications will have different clinical responses in different patients and given that one such medication, Copaxone, was approved by Health Canada in 2016 but is still not included in the Alberta drug formulary, to the minister. The Alberta Health website still lists Copaxone as requiring special authorization. What is the reason for the delay in its full approval, and when might patients who could benefit from this drug anticipate that happening?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and again to the member for the important question. Again to the MS Society and everyone who's advocating for increased treatment opportunities – all the physicians, family members, and patients who are continuing to do work on this – we honour them and their work while we all work together to find a cure. Making sure that we have the right treatments along that journey is also important.

In terms of the Pan-Canadian Pharmaceutical Alliance piece that I mentioned previously, that's one of the pieces that's still working its way through the system to ensure that we get the best results as well as the best investment for the patients, the citizens of Alberta.

Thank you.

Provincial Debt-servicing Costs

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, borrowing, borrowing, and more borrowing. I'm sure it all sounds so inconsequential to the NDP, but there's a real cost to this misguided borrowing, $2 billion this year and $4 billion by 2023. Two billion dollars could have hired 25,000 nurses; instead, Bay Street bankers will pocket the money.

To the Minister of Finance: how can you explain to Albertans that due to your wall of debt, $2 billion of interest this year will get them nothing?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to put this all in context, of course, first. Alberta has the lowest net debt to GDP ratio among the provinces, and that will still be the case when we return to balance in 2023-2024. It shows that our plan is working. We've reduced the deficit by $1.5 billion in November at the Q3 without having to fire thousands of public servants, like that side over there would do any day of the week.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that every dollar we spend on servicing our debt is a dollar that cannot be spent on critical services and given that money paid towards interest will not hire front-line health care workers or front-line educators to take care of Albertans, to the minister: what is your plan – what is your plan – to get Alberta back to debt free so we can get back to funding Albertans' priorities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. First, we need to get to balance, and we're going to do that by 2023-2024. We need to put our borrowing costs in perspective. Again, just to do that, Ontario spends 8 cents of every dollar for borrowing costs; we spend only 3 cents. We're also taking a look at all the expenses and making sure that we're spending each tax dollar in the best way possible. We've cut the salaries and eliminated the bonuses of the highest paid executives. The highest paid executives were put in place by the Conservative government, and we've reduced those by $33 million over three years.

The Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. Barnes: Mr. Speaker, given that the Finance minister's benchmark is Ontario, the subjurisdiction deepest in debt in the whole world, and given that by 2023 this Finance minister will be sending $4 billion annually to Bay Street bankers and given that $4 billion is more than the operating expenses of the entire Community and Social Services department, to the minister: how can you justify – how can you justify – sending billions to big banks instead of to critical Alberta services?

Mr. Ceci: It's interesting. They run Ontario down some days, and other days they go down to Ontario and they talk about how it's the best place in the world, Mr. Speaker.

Our debt-servicing costs are also lower than British Columbia's, Mr. Speaker. We're doing those things we think we need to get us back to balance. We have a number of actions that we're taking to freeze salaries of management and non-union employees. We strengthened the hiring restraint, and we have cut travel and hospitality expenses, something that side didn't do. They travelled like drunken sailors. We're not doing that. We've cut those expenses significantly.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.
The Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mathematics Education

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary board of education has had to hire 31 math coaches to cover 61 targeted schools at a cost of over $3 million. The other 180 schools will be tasked with appointing math leaders, teachers, or administrators with math expertise. However, we need to ensure that there are enough teachers in Alberta who graduate with this math expertise. To the Minister of Education: what specific actions are you taking, along with Advanced Education, to increase the number of math specialists graduating from Alberta's various educational programs?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the question. Certainly, we are focusing, as part of a new curriculum development, on strengthening the math skills of our students. I applaud the CBE for their initiative. We're looking specifically with postsecondary institutions in regard to – we have a bursary available for people to take math specialty training. We're working with the postsecondary institutions to help build the curriculum to strengthen the math area, and it's a very productive relationship, that we will continue to nurture.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that last year within the Calgary board of education more than 25 per cent of students in grades 6 and 9 failed their math PATs and given that the grade 12 diploma exam results in math are consistently lower than other core subjects and given that at least some of these poor results can be directly attributed to the heavy focus on discovery math, again to the minister: what specific changes to the way math is taught in Alberta are being introduced in the new curriculum, and how are we going to avoid the fiasco that was discovery math?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, through our work in curriculum, our work in the PATs – in the grade 6 PATs and grade 9 as well we introduced a no-calculator portion of that exam and saw some interesting results and places where we can actually focus to improve. Grade 12 exams: we're having a written portion for those exams now. You know, we're taking the bull by the metaphorical horns here in regard to improving math outcomes, and we're doing that through the curriculum and doing it through long-term, stable funding for our education system.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that parents are concerned that the math curriculum doesn't reflect a movement away from discovery math and given that one parent described this approach thusly, that it's almost as if there is an expectation of failure before students even have an opportunity to show what they are capable of, again to the minister: what specific actions has the minister taken to ensure that basic algorithms and traditional teaching practices are included as the driving force in the new curriculum?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, the no-calculator portion that I put into grade 6 and grade 9 is an indication that we're looking for fundamental skills, foundational skills in mathematics to be emphasized. Certainly, we have been working hard with teachers in building the new curriculum and so forth. You know, you have to look forward in order to build something that is appropriate, and part of that is to actually have new curriculum. For the Leader of the Opposition to suggest that he would put the curriculum into the shredder if elected – hopefully not – is definitely not looking forward. It's looking deeply backwards.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

2:20 Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I've repeatedly asked this government to explain why they felt it was appropriate to hire John Heaney, the former chief of staff to the Premier, as an adviser despite being the subject of an ongoing investigation. Now, twice this week the minister has assured this House that he worked closely with the Ethics Commissioner to achieve an exemption that would allow Mr. Heaney to lobby another government while working for the government of Alberta. To the minister: who authorized this exemption for Mr. Heaney?

Mr. Ceci: To correct the record, I didn't say that I worked closely with the Ethics Commissioner. I said that there was work done with the Ethics Commissioner to find out more about the exemption, that was signed off on by the chief of staff of the Premier of Alberta, who signs the contracts for the Premier's staff and for ministers' staff and their offices. That's the person who did that, Mr. Speaker. We're very happy with the results that Mr. Heaney has helped achieve with the pipeline approval and the government of Canada coming in to buy that pipeline.

Mr. Cooper: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that that is not what he said earlier in the House and that just minutes ago he told a reporter that the Ethics Commissioner had granted the exemption and that now we all know for a fact that the Ethics Commissioner never granted an exemption and that it was merely the chief of staff to the Premier or perhaps even your chief of staff, will he table the exemption in this House and actually reveal who provided the exemption?

Mr. Ceci: I think I've been clear. The Ethics Commissioner was consulted on the exemption. She provided that information. Her office did. It was signed off on by the chief of staff of the Premier of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, you know, this seems like a desperate distraction to take the air out of the room with regard to the pipeline that the federal government has bought on behalf of probably all of Canada now and which will make things ultimately way better in terms of the economy of this province and Canada.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, it's very clear that he implied that the Ethics Commissioner provided an exemption.

Given that the news release from the Premier's office last August claimed that Mr. Heaney would serve as chief of staff, quote, till October 6 before returning to practise law in British Columbia, end quote, and given that his new contract was posted online and claims that he actually started on October 9, to the minister: why did the government announce that Mr. Heaney was leaving on a Friday when he was actually quietly retitled on the next Monday?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, he wasn't retitled. He was hired on a contract. We did consult with the Ethics Commissioner on the exemption. We will table the exemption. This is, again, a desperate attempt to talk about anything else but the success of the pipeline approvals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Sherwood Park.

Educational Curriculum Review Participants

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I was at two different events on the issue of how representative of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students and visible minority children the current K to 12 curriculum is. Questioners were concerned that the current curriculum did not address their history, culture, and contribution to Alberta. These questioners were interested in contributing to the revision of the revised curriculum. To the Minister of Education: how have First Nations, immigrant, and visible minority communities been involved in and contributed to the revision of the curriculum?

The Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, our government is working with teachers and postsecondary institutions and with expert tables on working on the grade 6 core subject areas. With this rewrite, we are incorporating content on the history and the culture of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit people into every single subject in our curriculum so it better represents our province. Our government is providing teachers with lesson plans as well to have that same First Nations, Métis, and Inuit history come to life in our classrooms.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that some, including the Leader of the Opposition, have suggested they would put this government's revised curriculum through the shredder, how important is it to all students that the curriculum is representative of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students as well as visible minorities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Eggen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's extremely important that our curriculum represents our province in the broadest way, both the history and what the composition of our population is here today. Students deserve to see themselves represented in our curriculum. You know, of course, some of this curriculum that we are currently using is more than 30 years old, so it's high time to build curriculum, which is what we are doing, instead of perhaps moving back, suggesting that we simply shred that curriculum, as the opposition had suggested.

The Speaker: Second supplemental.

Ms McKittrick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: since some members, including the Leader of the Opposition, have suggested that the curriculum revisions were done by a small group of socialists, could the minister elaborate: how were Albertan parents consulted, and how were teachers, educators chosen to participate in the work of the curriculum revisions?

Mr. Eggen: I think it's good to clear the air on that one, Mr. Speaker. We have literally, I think, more than 30,000 submissions from the Alberta public in regard to the curriculum. We have an ongoing interaction with parents. We have the K to 4 curriculum right now being looked at by parents and by postsecondary institutions and teachers and so forth and boards as well. You know, it's the most open and transparent process of building curriculum that this province has ever seen. Quite frankly, I'm very proud of the process thus far, and we will build something very strong that will help to define better learning outcomes for Alberta kids.

Mr. Loewen: The complete failure of the Alberta NDP and the Trudeau Liberals along with the obstructionist B.C. NDP and the radical environmentalists has caused Kinder Morgan to pull out and has made it necessary for the federal government to purchase the 65-year-old Kinder Morgan pipeline along with the new project, but this really changes nothing as to the question of certainty. Everyone that was opposed is still opposed. This issue was never about Kinder Morgan not having the money. How does the federal government buying out the pipeline change the fact that the federal government still has to enforce the law and Alberta's constitutional rights?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much. We know that the Leader of the Official Opposition has a history of investing in the Ontario auto industry and that, you know, his caucus seems to be okay with that, but this new federal investment is in Alberta's industry, oil and gas. It's about ensuring that we get fair value from that industry as well. So, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that sometimes you need to pick up the right tools to make sure you get the job done. We have been waiting a very, very long time to get access to tidewater, nine years, when the Leader of the Official Opposition was in cabinet in Ottawa. With our Premier here in Alberta we've been able to get this pipeline, and I'm so proud of it.

Mr. Loewen: Given that that wasn't an answer to the question and given that the Premier's hand-picked OSAG co-chair Tzaporah Berman promises that, quote, all hell will break loose, end quote, with 22,000 protestors and that the Environment minister's good friend and book cowriter Mike Hudema agrees with Berman and is vowing to fight and given that the Premier's good friend John Horgan has said that the purchase changes nothing in his fight against the pipeline, how can the NDP be taking victory laps when the only change is the ownership of the pipeline and the reality is that the federal government still needs to step up and enforce the law and Constitution?

The Speaker: The Minister of Environment and Parks.

Ms Phillips: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, the fact of the matter is that a majority of British Columbians now support this project; a majority of Canadians support this project. You know what? A good 80, 90 per cent of Albertans, maybe more, support this project. It seems to me that the only people who don't support this project are the United Conservative Party.

Mr. Loewen: Given that, Mr. Speaker, we have supported all pipelines all the time, unlike the government members, and given that the Alberta NDP have never applied any serious pressure on the B.C. government and other pipeline opponents and given that the federal government has refused to enforce the law and their constitutional authority, then how can this government claim success when their supposed victory comes as a result of the absolute failure to enable a private company that was willing and able to use its own money to build a pipeline, which only required government to do its job and facilitate construction without unreasonable delays?

Ms Hoffman: Sorry for my laughter there. The support from Conservatives in this country was about as valid as the support for their grassroots guarantee: here one day, gone the next; lots of paper approvals, no actual pipelines to tidewater. This government under our Premier's leadership has been able to achieve something that Canada hasn't seen since the 1950s, and that's approval and significant progress, construction that is imminent in the days and hours ahead, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that we get our Canadian product to Canadian tidewater and get a fair price for our industry.

Adverse Possession of Property

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, a few short weeks ago this government stood against property rights for Albertans. By allowing adverse possession to continue, Albertans remain at risk of property loss because you did not take the opportunity to do the right thing. My constituent Jim McIndoe, who was introduced during the debate, has since been forced to pay $14,000 to the individual who legally seized his land thanks to this archaic law. To the Minister of Justice: why did you choose to ignore my constituent's and other impacted Albertans' rights by rejecting this opportunity to appropriately address adverse possession, known as squatters' rights?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Solicitor General.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and to the member for the question. Again, this is an issue that was discussed at committee, in an all-party committee. The committee recommended that adverse possession be abolished. The government therefore went to the Alberta Law Reform Institute and asked them to write a report on how it should be abolished to ensure that we weren't just affecting two acts but, in fact, every act that touched on the issue of adverse possession. We've asked them to do that work. The work will be coming back, as I understand, in the fall, and at that time we will examine it.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, given that Mr. McIndoe has lost $100,000 worth of land which in any other province would legally still be his and given that in addition to this egregious seizure, he has been forced to pay $14,000 in legal fees to his neighbour, $5,000 in surveyor's costs, and $40,000 of his own legal costs, for a grand total of $159,000, again to the minister: can you explain to me and all Albertans why your government continues to support the current legislation, which has left my constituent $159,000 in the red because of an archaic law and a land-coveting neighbour?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think it's quite clear that the government is not supporting an archaic law. We are moving forward to make progress on this issue. It went to an all-party committee. The all-party committee voted entirely in favour of that. This government is moving forward on getting rid of adverse possession. Those folks over there sat here for 40 years and did nothing about it.

Mr. Gottfried: Mr. Speaker, that committee recommended you abolish it.

Given that the Department of Justice has dithered time and again in taking meaningful action to abolish adverse possession and given that this failure comes despite repeated motions by the Standing Committee on Resource Stewardship, supported by strong recommendations from the Property Rights Advocate, and given that both Mr. McIndoe and I have little faith in this government's commitment to abolishing adverse possession before the next election, to the minister: can you tell Albertans specifically when you formally directed the Law Reform Institute to study this issue, and will you commit today to abolishing adverse possession before the next election?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I'm not sure why we're answering this so many times in a row, but an all-party committee, supported by our members over here and the government, has recommended the abolition of adverse possession. We are awaiting a report to ensure that we get it right since this affects the fundamental property rights of a number of individuals. This government has made significantly more progress on this issue in three years than those folks did in 44.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the Premier's former chief of staff resigned in October of last year. Just days later he was put on contract to receive $135,000 from taxpayers while also being a lobbyist for the marijuana industry. The Minister of Finance said earlier today that this was approved by the Ethics Commissioner. That is not possible. The Ethics Commissioner doesn't give approval for exemptions for former senior government staff to become lobbyists. Why did the minister mislead the media on this?

Mr. Ceci: Mr. Speaker, what this Finance minister is endeavouring to do is to say that there were discussions with the Ethics Commissioner with regard to the outside work of Mr. Heaney. Mr. Heaney is working as a consultant on contract to the government of Alberta with regard to other actions not involving cannabis, not involving the outside work that he's doing. He's working for us around the path to balance and the Energy file.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea what the minister is endeavouring to say. What I do know – I have a transcript of what he said. About an hour ago he said that an exemption was granted for his New Democrat friend Mr. Heaney to become a lobbyist, by the Ethics Commissioner, but no such approval was granted. Why did the minister mislead the media about this?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much. We followed the advice of the Ethics Commissioner with regard to the work that Mr. Heaney was doing outside of government on his own time and his own business. That outside business or undertaking approval: there was a consultation with the Ethics Commissioner around that, around how that should be structured. I have that here, Mr. Speaker, and I'll table it later.

Mr. Kenney: To be clear, Mr. Speaker, the government claimed that it got approval from the Ethics Commissioner, but it didn't.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the minister: is this whole affair a reflection of the NDP standard of public ethics, that they take a chief of staff in a six-figure job and put him on a sweetheart contract with a six-figure income while he's making big money from the pot industry? Is this what Albertans expected from the NDP when it comes to public ethics?

Ms Hoffman: I just want to reiterate that the minister has made it very clear that he spoke – he's clarified that several times, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing I want to make clear is that we did invest in ensuring that we had the best advice to get us approvals and to get us action on the Trans Mountain pipeline, Mr. Speaker. We got that yesterday. We got huge advancements, and construction is imminent. I want to say thank you to the Energy minister and to the Premier for their leadership on this file and for having the staff to support them in doing that work. Yesterday was very good news for Alberta and for the Canadian economy.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the government if Mr. Heaney received a severance. They said no, but it now appears that he did receive a severance called a $135,000 contract, a sweetheart golden handshake, while at the same time going out there and becoming a high-priced NDP lobbyist for the pot industry. Isn't the government ashamed of itself for allowing this to happen? Is this really the standard of public ethics to which it committed itself to Albertans in the last campaign?

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, I get why the member is asking about severance. Under Conservative government after Conservative government here in Alberta we saw massive severance and payouts. Our government has chosen to do things differently. We've gotten rid of the sweetheart contracts that they used to have. We've gotten rid of the massive golf memberships and other types of perks like that. Instead, we're hiring people to do specific jobs. The specific job that was referenced was helping us get Trans Mountain, get our product to tidewater. Yesterday we achieved that. We are so proud, and we welcome you to help us celebrate that work.

Mr. Kenney: Mr. Speaker, Albertans can see this for what it is. It's a sweetheart golden handshake for a top, wealthy New Democrat lobbyist. I'd like to ask any minister of this government: has Mr. Heaney lobbied or spoken to any minister of this government about representing his clients in his pot industry, for which he received enormous compensation?

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: Point of order noted.

Ms Hoffman: Mr. Speaker, we hire real people to do real work, and we're getting real results for the people of Alberta. Yesterday we saw a huge victory for the Trans Mountain pipeline. I know it isn't a $9 billion cheque to the auto industry of Ontario. It's an investment in a pipeline and ensuring that we get the very best product and the right jobs, 15,000 jobs, $15 billion to our economy, because of the work of this Premier and this government. I'm very proud of that.

Mr. Kenney: Is the minister very proud of her government enriching a powerful pot lobbyist who used to be the Premier's chief of staff, and will the minister confirm that said NDP lobbyist has not spoken to a single minister of the Crown in representing his clients?

Ms Hoffman: Well, I can assure the hon. member that I haven't experienced any lobbying in that regard, and I will certainly consult with my colleagues. But, Mr. Speaker, what I can tell you is that we hired somebody on a contract to get us results on Trans Mountain pipeline. Yesterday we saw very good results for Trans Mountain pipeline. This is good for the people of Alberta, it's good for the people of Canada, and I do not need to apologize for that. It's about time that you guys stopped trying to throw shade on yesterday's good news and help us get this pipeline built. This is very, very good news for the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Accessibility Initiatives

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This week is National AccessAbility Week. This is an important opportunity to advocate for increased accessibility and inclusion of persons with disabilities in Alberta and across Canada. To the Minister of Community and Social Services: what is the government doing to support this important week?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Member, for the important question. Albertans of varying abilities deserve every opportunity to participate fully and meaningfully in all aspects of economic, cultural, social, and political life, and as government we are committed to working to increase accessibility and inclusion, to value and recognize the hard work of countless advocates, leaders across Alberta who champion accessibility each and every day.

The Speaker: First supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is the government doing to increase accessibility and reduce barriers for Albertans with disabilities? To the same minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have made a number of changes; for instance, by improving service dog rules to increase access for Albertans. Five new schools were added to the qualified list, and owner-trained dogs can now be tested. We are increasing access to postsecondary education by funding inclusive post-secondary education. We have increased access to employment through our internship program with government. Twenty new student interns were hired. We have also appointed a 15-member Premier's council to advocate on the issues relating . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, Minister.
Second supplemental.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that while these improvements mentioned by the minister have been made, many Albertans with disabilities still face barriers, what is the government doing to break down these barriers so that all Albertans can participate fully in their communities? To the same minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While our government has taken a number of important steps, it is clear that there is more work that needs to be done to make sure that Albertans with disabilities are fully included, and that is why we are taking further action by hiring Alberta's first disability advocate. We have introduced Bill 5 to make sure that Albertans with disabilities have greater financial stability. Instead of making reckless cuts, we have increased funding to the PDD and AISH programs, and we are also doing a review of the PDD program.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. minister.

Hon. members, in 30 seconds we'll continue with Members' Statements.

Members' Statements (continued)

Off-highway Vehicle Users' Public Land Access

Mr. Stier: Mr. Speaker, once again it's evident that Albertans simply cannot trust this NDP government. One week ago an article regarding changes and restrictions regarding access to public lands for random campers and off-road enthusiasts along the eastern slopes was published in the Calgary Herald. This caught the attention of a vast number of extremely concerned southern and central Alberta outdoor recreationalists. After all, in just three short years, despite assurances in a letter in December of '15 to the local Off Highway Vehicle Association and other recreational groups from the Minister of Environment and Parks that off-highway vehicle use would continue to be permitted, the policies since then have drastically reduced the access by almost 70 per cent.

As a result, recreation associations, off-highway equipment dealers, RV dealers, sporting goods distributors, retailers, recreation enthusiasts, people with families, and the general public are all greatly worried in southern Alberta that their leisure activities and recreation choices are now being eliminated, and they now have almost nowhere to go.

This entire situation seems so unfair. For years both federal and provincial governments had agreements and provided $2.3 million in funding in recognition of value of this form of recreation and the good work accomplished by off-highway vehicle associations like the AOHVA and its member clubs. They have contributed thousands of volunteer hours and the proper use of those funds to educate users, to assist in the stewardship of trails, and even purchase and construct bridges over valuable stream beds. All of that now seems lost forever to them, so it's no small wonder that recreation associations and outdoor recreationists don't trust this NDP government. It's readily apparent that user agreements are not worth the paper they're written on and that taxpayers' money has been wasted again.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Climate Leadership Plan

Drever: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November 2015 our government introduced the climate leadership plan, a made-in-Alberta strategy to reduce carbon emissions while diversifying our economy, creating jobs, and protecting our health and environment. When I go door to door, my constituents are always asking me about the climate leadership plan and how it will affect them. It's a good question. With all the fearmongering from the UCP, it can be hard to get to the truth. The plan is designed for Alberta's economy, and it is working.

First, the climate leadership plan was directly responsible for the federal approval of two new energy infrastructure projects, the Trans Mountain expansion and Enbridge line 3, that are critically important to Alberta's economy. Second, 60 per cent of Alberta's families will receive a full carbon levy rebate, and every penny raised will be invested back to diversify Alberta's economy and create more jobs in infrastructure, energy efficiency, and renewable energy. Finally, all Albertans, including businesses, not-for-profits, and recreational and community centres, will benefit from energy efficiency programs, which will not only help families save on their heating bills but also create hundreds of jobs right here in this province.

These benefits are possible because of the climate leadership plan, and it is made right here in Alberta, not Ottawa. It is designed by Albertans for Albertans. That means that our economy and our communities will see the most benefits from the actions we take. Mr. Speaker, unlike the United Conservative Party, we understand that climate change is a real and man-made problem. Don't believe the fearmongering. With this made-in-Alberta climate leadership plan we are moving forward, taking our place as a global energy leader with new pipelines and new jobs in a stronger, more diversified economy. This was proven yesterday by the decision on the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion, a well-thought-out economic plan that works hand in hand with our climate leadership plan to ensure success for our families and communities.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Premier's Former Chief of Staff's Consulting Contract

Mr. Cooper: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last three years this government has made a mockery of the principles of openness, accountability, and transparency. The NDP have continually shown patterns of secrecy over the course of their mandate, whether it's the deletion of over 800,000 e-mails by incentivizing government officials to clear out their records in return for gift cards or the fact that they currently have not one, not two, not three, but four open investigations regarding their activities before the office of the Privacy Commissioner.

So you can understand my shock at the very public leaving of his post on October 6 of the Premier's former chief of staff to, quote, spend time with this family and return to British Columbia, when Mr. Heaney was immediately rehired on October 9 to serve as the executive adviser to the Minister of Finance, earning a cool $130,000 a year to provide legal advice despite the fact that he's not able to practise law in Alberta, nor does he reside here. But perhaps most shocking is the fact that Mr. Heaney is a registered lobbyist for Nuuvera cannabis in B.C., which is in clear violation of the code of conduct for political staff. Mr. Heaney reports directly to the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the rollout of cannabis sales in Alberta, and Nuuvera is currently lobbying that same minister.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've heard from both the Finance minister and the Deputy Premier several times that Mr. Heaney's contract has an addendum and that he has an exemption for his lobbying, which was approved by the Ethics Commissioner. Given the government's pattern of misinformation, I decided to follow up on that claim and now know for a fact that Mr. Heaney did not receive an exemption from the Ethics Commissioner. This government owes Albertans an apology.

2:50 Supervised Drug Consumption Site in Lethbridge

Ms Fitzpatrick: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be in this Legislature to represent my constituency, my city, and the people of Alberta. Today I'm speaking about ARCHES' safe consumption site. Last year as the scope of the opioid crisis continued to escalate, ARCHES took the steps necessary to address it. They formed a coalition incorporating 16 groups with a vested interest in dealing with this crisis, from police to Alberta Health Services. They successfully completed the stringent application process both federally and provincially.

In just over the two months since the site opened, the use and demand at ARCHES is higher than expected. Seventy-plus deaths have been prevented, over 2,000 naloxone kits have been distributed, and over 150 overdose reversals have been reported. We know that there are approximately 3,000 drug users in Lethbridge. Based on our positive results and other evidence-based research, we know that harm reduction works to move people through the spectrum from active use to treatment. This saves lives.

But there is more work to be done to help people move forward. Other services also need to be available so that people who are ready to make the change in their lives don't slip backwards. These are real people with parents, siblings, children, and loved ones. They are not just addicts who inject poison into their bodies, as the Leader of the Opposition characterized them. I am proud that our government is moving forward with help and, we know, must do more.

I will continue to advocate for more services such as intox to help the citizens of Lethbridge and Alberta . . .

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to provide notice that at the appropriate time I will move the following motion.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project is completed following the withdrawal of Kinder Morgan, the recently announced deal with the government of Canada, and the declaration of continued opposition and uncertainty from the NDP government of British Columbia.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Mr. Speaker, I will be moving the following motion. You have already received copies in advance.

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, details of Alberta's support for the Trans Mountain expansion project.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of an article that I referenced today. It's an analysis by the CBC titled Oilpatch Pleased for Pipeline Progress but Concerns about Investment Climate Persist.

The Speaker: Any other hon. members? The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Yes, The tabling that I mentioned that I was going to provide: this is a tabling of an amended employment agreement with regard to Mr. Heaney, which advice in its construction was from the Ethics Commissioner's office. It is dated February 7.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the Assembly that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. On behalf of the hon. Ms Gray, Minister of Labour and minister responsible for democratic renewal, pursuant to the Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act the Association of Science and Engineering Technology Professionals of Alberta annual report 2017, the Association of Professional Engineers and Geoscientists of Alberta annual report 2017; pursuant to the Agrology Profession Act the Alberta Institute of Agrologists 2017 annual report and conference handbook; responses to questions raised by Dr. Swann, Member for Calgary-Mountain View, and Mr. Hunter, Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, during Ministry of Labour 2018-19 main estimates debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think we had one point of order. Or were there two?

The Government House Leader.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Nonmember

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to raise a point of order. The Minister of Finance was asked questions today by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. The content of the questions, including the preambles, in my view violate some very important rules and standards of this Assembly.

I'll start by suggesting here that the violations took place, and I have made some notes here. I don't have the Blues, but I think these are pretty accurate. He suggested that the contract that Mr. Heaney signed with the government was "a sweetheart, golden handshake." He accused the government of enriching a powerful pot lobbyist, Mr. Speaker. He actually asked members of the government if Mr. Heaney had lobbied any member of the government on behalf of their clients, being the cannabis company, and that he's been told that Mr. Heaney's role is restricted to the province of British Columbia and is not happening here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on page 622 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, under rules of order and decorum, it states:

Members are discouraged from referring by name to persons who are not Members of Parliament and who do not enjoy parliamentary immunity, except in extraordinary circumstances when the national interest calls for this. The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent not only from outright slander, but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and has suggested that Members avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people from outside the House who are unable to reply in their own defence.

Mr. Speaker, in Beauchesne's, page 151, section 493(4) states: "The Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

Mr. Speaker, on June 25, 2015, you yourself cautioned members that "members must remember that when they refer to people outside of the Assembly, those individuals have no ability to respond to the allegations" that have been made there.

Previously, Speaker Zwozdesky in 2012 made similar cautions. On November 26 of that year he said: "We should not be referring to people who are not here and not able to defend themselves."

Mr. Speaker, what the Member for Calgary-Lougheed did was outrageous. He asked members of government if Mr. Heaney had violated the ethics laws of this province with no evidence whatsoever that that had taken place. He has no evidence. He is trying to smear an individual whose contract is public and who is providing value for money for the contract that he has been engaged in.

This is very interesting because these are the very tactics, Mr. Speaker, that were employed by Joseph McCarthy during the witch hunt trials of the 1950s: smearing people by implication who can't defend themselves. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the Leader of the Official Opposition, purports to be and upholds himself as the defender of order and decorum, but it is pretty clear that he is very ready to get right down into the gutter and smear individuals with no evidence whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, it's my view that you in your role as the Speaker of the Assembly have a responsibility to intervene in these cases. It is always most difficult for us during question period to wait until the end while this kind of disgusting behaviour takes place in this Assembly. I want the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the Leader of the Official Opposition, to come into this place and apologize to the House and to Mr. Heaney for smearing and slandering his reputation with no evidence whatsoever. If he has evidence, then he has a responsibility to place it before this House. Otherwise, he needs to desist from this disgusting behaviour.

The Speaker: The Opposition House Leader.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was an interesting rant from the Government House Leader. Let me first start off by being very clear. The Leader of the Opposition nor any member of this party will ever apologize for standing up for Albertans and asking this government questions on behalf of Albertans. That is our job.

It is interesting the reaction that we're getting from the government about a question. At no time did the Leader of the Opposition accuse Mr. Heaney of anything, to be clear. He asked some questions about what the Finance minister said in regard to Mr. Heaney. In addition to that, he asked some questions about what that contract looks like and his role with the government. The Finance minister earlier today told the media that they, in fact, consulted with the Ethics Commissioner during this process. That now turns out not to be true, and the hon. member was discussing that.

Now, I'd like to refer, because the Government House Leader brought it up, to the House of Commons Procedure and Practice on page 622. Let me be clear. The quote he's talking about says, "Except in extraordinary circumstances when the national interest calls for this." I would submit, without a doubt, that the public interest is at play here. It is the job of the opposition to ask questions on behalf of the public, and this clearly was in the public interest.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, it is very rich for the NDP to stand up in this House and give an argument like that by the Government House Leader when that party across from me spent the entire fall session, when the hon. Leader of the Opposition was not a member of this place, saying his name in this place and slandering it over and over and over to a record number in parliamentary history. Over and over, no objection. In fact, when we raised a point of order about that to try to bring some semblance of control and pointed out that that hon. member was not a member of this Chamber and did not have an opportunity to defend himself, that Government House Leader stood up and said that they had the right to do that, and you ruled with them. You're the Speaker. You felt that that was the appropriate ruling, and that was your decision. This certainly doesn't change anything.

Now, with all that said, this is clearly a matter of debate. While the government wants to dodge answering questions on their behaviour on this contract, the fact that they hid this contract from the public, the fact that they told the public that this individual had left the employment of the Premier and then just 72 hours later gave this individual a significant contract, which never became public till sometime around April, is really the question. Why the Finance minister told this Chamber that the Ethics Commissioner was consulted is a question. Why the Finance minister told the media that the Ethics Commissioner was part of that process is a question.

There are lots of questions that remain, but what is clear is that this is, in fact, not a point of order. It is an attempt to distract from this government's behaviour and for this government to go out of their way to not be held accountable in this Chamber. And that will not happen, Mr. Speaker. I can promise you that.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I find it very surprising that the government is calling a point of order around questions that need to be asked of the government. Let's go back a little ways to when the government was the opposition. Right now if the Progressive Conservative Party – when I was part of that government and cabinet, they would have lit their hair on fire with the idea that a registered lobbyist has access to cabinet, looking at finance details and energy details. I'm not suggesting that the government is doing anything untoward or despicable, but it is not a stretch to imagine. It's easy to draw the lines, and it is shaking the public confidence that a registered lobbyist – I'll use this example. How do the people trying to create businesses in Alberta around marijuana and the sale and distribution of marijuana feel about their business plans knowing that a B.C. registered lobbyist is working on behalf of those companies but has access to the government, the Crown, in Alberta? That just does not make sense.

I am surprised that this government has put themselves in this position. I'm surprised that they have put Albertans in this position. We should not even be here.

Mr. Mason: That's not the point of order.

Mr. Fraser: This is the point of order. You're calling the point of order. So I'm saying that this is not a point of order; this is a matter of asking questions where you've put Albertans and Albertans' businesses at risk by allowing a B.C. registered lobbyist access to your government. It's completely wrong, and it's unacceptable.

The Speaker: Hon. member, if I might.

Mr. Fraser: It's not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-South East, the point of order as I understand it is whether or not it's appropriate for an individual who is independent from the Assembly – he's a contract employee. Would you believe, in your opinion, that it is fair and reasonable that that person's work relationship could and should be mentioned within the Assembly. Is that correct?

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify. When somebody works for Executive Council and for cabinet but is also listed as a registered lobbyist, in my mind, that is an extension of this government. They're working on behalf of the government, not private members. So it's a matter of debate. I don't feel that it was a point of order. This gentleman has put his name up as a lobbyist, and now he is working for the Crown in Alberta.

I think the questions are valid, and I don't see a point of order here.

The Speaker: Is there any new information, hon. member, new, significant information?

Mr. Cooper: Yes.

The Speaker: You'd better get to it quick, hon. member, because I've had too much experience in this place.

Mr. Cooper: I'll get to it very quickly, and I'll make one point, and that is just to correct the record. Mr. Heaney is not a contracted employee; he is an employee of the government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, this particular one I'd like to defer to a later date. I need to do some more research and thought on this matter.

Requests for Emergency Debate

The Speaker: Are you speaking to the Standing Order 30?

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Completion

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for recognizing me. I am rising on the Standing Order 30 that I already gave notice of. I won't reread it to save time. I will point out that according to our standing orders I had to provide two hours' notice for this motion, and we were able to get that to your office well before 11:30 today.

The question, of course, is urgency in regard to Kinder Morgan. I think that all of the province and all members of this House agree on the urgency of that project. But the urgency of the debate that we are requesting today, the reason that that is an urgent situation and that we ask you to provide us the opportunity to have a discussion on behalf of Albertans in this Assembly is because, quite frankly, of the announcement. While all Albertans and all members of this House stand and are focused on making sure we get this project built, and our leader was very clear about that yesterday, our concern still remains that the deadline is essentially here tomorrow. Kinder Morgan has now left the situation. You have already recognized that that was an urgent situation and let us have a debate on that, but clearly the urgency and the certainty for this project has not been handled in the announcement by the federal government.

Yesterday B.C.'s Premier said: we will continue with the full force of my efforts within the courts and within the rule of law. Yesterday, in addition to that, Tzeporah Berman, the deputy director of Stand.earth, said, "All hell is about to break loose in British Columbia." The Prime Minister, despite promising on April 15, 2018, to reassert and reinforce federal jurisdiction on Trans Mountain, still has not done that, and the government of Alberta still has not given royal assent to Bill 12 nor used it.

What that is doing, Mr. Speaker, is that it's still creating a tremendous amount of uncertainty around this project, now a project that is owned by the taxpayers and something that we need to get fixed. A capital market analyst said yesterday: we maintain our previous concern that the federal Liberal government will likely be highly reluctant to exercise force approaching the window of the next election cycle, expected next fall. GMP analysis said: we view the announcement as negative for the entities considering large, resource-focused capital investments to Canada such as LNG, pipelines, or oil sands projects given the inability for the rule of law and the regulatory approvals to allow projects to move forward.

Mr. Speaker, as you can see, the uncertainty of the situation, the certainty for this project still have not been addressed. No clear action has been taken by either the federal or the provincial government, in this case Alberta, to deal with the main issue, which is that the B.C. government continues to disrupt this project and that the federal government has not taken any action against the environmentalists that continue to block it illegally.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, I will close with this. One of the things that you need to consider, as you know, is whether or not there are other opportunities for us to have a debate on this process. Yesterday the Premier of Alberta stood for eight or nine minutes and talked about this from one angle. Some of it we agree with. Then the Leader of the Opposition only had about three minutes to be able to discuss that, and then that was the end of it. There is nothing else on the schedule for this House to discuss what is, arguably, the most important issue facing this province and this country right now.

This is the opportunity for the people's representatives of this province to have a discussion about the way forward on Kinder Morgan, and I ask that you rule that we can have a debate.

The Speaker: Hon. Member, just to clarify, there was an additional time granted to the leader. I'm bound by the standing orders, which is at three minutes for the response. There is no time limit that I'm aware of with respect to the ministerial, but that was the reason.

Mr. Nixon: I agree with you completely, Mr. Speaker. My intent was not to say that you ruled wrongly on that. My intent is to say that, clearly, this side of the House has not had an opportunity to debate this issue on behalf of our constituents.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think the deal that was announced yesterday will be a great step forward for our economy and for our province, and it will put people to work building a pipeline to tidewater right away. We're getting closer than ever to breaking our land lock, to getting a better price for our resources, and to creating thousands of jobs.

It is very, very important, Mr. Speaker. The announcement yesterday is extremely important to this province, and I wish to acknowledge that. I am not going to dispute that at all. But as has been stated in this Chamber many times, being something of great importance does not make it a matter of urgent and pressing necessity as required by the standing orders. The standing orders state that a motion brought forward under section 30 must meet a number of conditions, including that it "must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration."

House of Commons Procedure and Practice provides further guidance. It says that "an emergency debate should be on a topic 'that is immediately relevant and of attention and concern throughout the nation'." It's my view, Mr. Speaker, that that doesn't meet the criteria.

There are very important criteria to be considered, and they have been laid out very clearly. One of them is whether or not other opportunities have existed for the matter to be debated. It must be an emergency, Mr. Speaker, and there must be no other opportunity for it to be debated in the House.

Citation 391 states:

The Speaker [must]... enforce the principle that subjects excluded by those rules cannot be brought forward thereon, such as a matter under adjudication by a court of law, or matters already discussed or appointed for consideration during the current session, whether upon a substantive motion, upon an amendment, or upon an Order of the Day.

Bosc and Gagnon similarly state:

Emergency debate provisions cannot be used to debate "items which, in a regular legislative program of the House of Commons and regular legislative consideration, can come before the House by way of amendments to existing statutes, or in any case will come before it in other ways."

That's at page 700.

This is a principle that has been applied in this Chamber by a number of Speakers; notably, a ruling on November 28, 2012. Speaker Zwozdesky explicitly pointed to some of those other avenues of debate in saying:

Urgency deals with whether or not there are other opportunities available to raise the matter. Now, I want to clarify for you that there are several vehicles available to you to do a [number] of things. One of them is question period, where a well-crafted question that meets the rules and proprieties of this House and of Houses across the world that are part of the Commonwealth parliamentary system – that exists there as one of those vehicles.

Secondly, a carefully crafted motion for return might accomplish something very similar, or a carefully worded written question might accomplish something similar. There is room for some debate within some of these vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, I would note for the House that there have been a number of opportunities for the matters contained in today's motion to be discussed in the Chamber.

There are three separate but related parts of the request; first, "the need to discuss what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project is completed following the withdrawal of Kinder Morgan." Mr. Speaker, the issue of what measures need to be taken to ensure the construction of the pipeline has been discussed probably more than any other matter during the course of this session. We put forward a very substantive government motion on this matter on the very first day of this sitting. The Leader of the Opposition and 11 of his caucus mates, a representative of the third party, and all of the independent members of the House participated in that debate.

The throne speech discussed the importance of the construction of a pipeline. Fifteen members of the Official Opposition spoke in response to the throne speech, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 12, Preserving Canada's Economic Prosperity Act, was presented by the government in April. The bill was directly relevant to the issue of measures aimed at ensuring the construction of the pipeline. All members of the Assembly were afforded the opportunity to debate that bill before it passed earlier this month.

A debate was held under Standing Order 30 on April 9 to deal with a very similar matter, that being the news about the suspension of nonessential spending on the pipeline by Kinder Morgan. Six members of the Official Opposition, including their leader, participated in that debate.

Of course, the opposition have raised these matters at length in question period during the consideration of estimates. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition's questions this session have dealt with little else.

Yesterday's announcement was very important, and for that reason, a ministerial statement was made by the Premier. The Leader of the Opposition, a representative of the third party, and independents were provided with an opportunity to reply.

Lastly, the request refers to "the declaration of continued opposition and uncertainty from the NDP government of British Columbia." The operative word here is "continued," Mr. Speaker. Bosc and Gagnon state: "Matters of chronic or continuing concern, such as economic conditions, unemployment rates and constitutional matters, have tended to be set aside" by the chair. The position of the government of B.C. is unfortunate, but it is a continuing one and one that does not need to be debated on an emergency basis.

Criteria two, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not the matter is vital to the public interest. Another criteria is that there must be an adverse effect on the public interest if the matter is not debated. Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms is very explicit, stating that the item "must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention."

When a Standing Order 30 was actually proceeded with in 2013 on the issue of medevac services, Speaker Zwozdesky stated as follows:

I'm taking into account that the move of the medevac [airport]... is occurring tomorrow... Therefore, I find that there will be no other opportunity for this Assembly to debate this issue, which is of importance to many Albertans.

While yesterday's announcement was indeed very important, there is no reason to believe that a discussion of it this afternoon is necessary for the protection of the public interest.

3:20

I would note for members that we do have a number of very important bills set for debate this afternoon, including bills related to women's right to choose, clean energy improvements for homeowners, financial security for persons with disabilities, and the electricity market.

We talk a great deal, Mr. Speaker, about pipelines in this Legislature, but when it comes to this deal to finally build a pipeline to tidewater, there doesn't seem to be as much to debate as the opposition would like to believe. Our time in this Legislature would be better spent on issues over which we have very genuine disagreement. Yesterday the opposition leader said that he supports efforts to get this pipeline built and even thanked our Premier for her hard work. Now is the time to move beyond talk and towards action. As our Premier said to Albertans yesterday: let's pick those tools back up; we've got a pipeline to build.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: You wish to speak, Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre? Is there something significant you'd like to add to the matter?

Mr. Nixon: Are you asking me?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a curious situation because we have two very similar notices of motion under Standing Order 30. It's quite curious. I received an e-mail from your office yesterday, and it states that upon your office receiving a hard copy of a motion under Standing Order 30, it is customary for the member or caucus submitting the SO 30 to inform other caucuses or independents once a hard copy has been received by the Speaker's office.

Now, I'm not sure if government members were given official notice by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, but my office certainly was not. However, we provided significant notice both, actually, in a news release more than 24 hours ago that we'd be putting forward a very similar motion for an emergency debate as well as in an official notice that was given to your office.

Now, I'm speaking . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're dealing with the one that the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre dealt with now. I'm sorry. It must speak to the substance of whether or not it should be an urgent matter. So I'd ask that you get to that rather than talk about another Standing Order 30.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Very well. The topic put forward – I'll speak to it here because it's virtually identical to the motion I've put forward as well, to be, I suppose, debated immediately after this – is urgent, and it is timely. There has been no debate yet beyond a few questions in question period on the idea of the government owning a pipeline. We've had lots of discussion on pipelines, but the idea of the government becoming an owner: it is urgent; it is timely.

The government of Alberta has committed $2 billion of taxpayers' money to backstop it, the federal government more than $4 billion. I think that constitutes a genuine emergency. These are funds that have not been approved in any budget or supplementals. It has received virtually no debate in this House since the idea of the government owning and buying a pipeline was first proposed by the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition about two months ago.

So far, to date, every single party in this House supports the idea of the government owning a pipeline, except for myself, but it has not received substantive debate. We have only just had a very small series of questions. I've asked the question about it specifically, and it's been indirectly touched upon, I believe, in a question by the Leader of the Opposition. So it's had a total of about four questions, including supplementals. But while all parties here appear to support the idea of the government buying a pipeline and getting into that business, a clear majority of Albertans do not support the government owning and buying a pipeline. It is urgent, and it is an emergency because this deal was just cut and announced yesterday. There's been no time to debate it. The government is committing $2 billion without any authorization from this House, without any authorization in the budget. That's a very substantial amount of taxpayers' money.

If they want to go forward with that, however much I might disagree with it, I think it deserves a little bit of debate, even if we were to informally agree to limit the amount of debate so we don't take up the entire afternoon of today's business on this particular matter. If we were to agree to one speaker per caucus or a maximum of two speakers per caucus, we could keep this in a relatively timely manner and go forward.

It will be interesting how you will rule, Mr. Speaker, because you'll have two virtually identical motions under Standing Order 30 before you.

I'm just curious as to why some members might not be able to stand the idea of me doing my job and showing up for debates and not skipping out on votes. I certainly hope that while some members would like to have a debate right now that if this debate does not take place, they will at least stay for the next debate and participate in that debate and vote in that debate.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 30(2) provides that "The Member may briefly state the arguments," which we've had today, and it's the role of the chair to decide "whether or not the request for leave is in order." I am prepared to make a ruling at this point in time on the request for leave for this motion to proceed under section 30(2).

The Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre has met the requirement for providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at – it's important that the House hears this – 7:39 this morning. That motion, which I believe has been distributed, reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the need to discuss what measures must be taken to ensure that construction of the Trans Mountain expansion project is completed following the withdrawal of Kinder Morgan, the recently announced deal with the government of Canada, and the declaration of continued opposition and uncertainty from the NDP government of British Columbia.

The relevant parliamentary authorities on this subject have been cited earlier, pages 694 to 704 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice and Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 to 390.

Hon. members, let me point out, firstly, that on April 9, 2018, the ordinary business of the Assembly was adjourned to debate a Standing Order 30 matter, the subject of which was somewhat familiar to the application that has been brought forward today by the Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

I wish to note for the Assembly that, while similar, the application made today constitutes a different question and therefore on that basis does not contravene Standing Order 30(7)(d).

3:30

On the question of whether or not the matter relates to a genuine emergency, while it is absolutely clear that the Trans Mountain expansion project is of great economic importance to Alberta and indeed to all of Canada, it would be difficult to conclude that a debate on what further measures must be taken in light of the government of Canada's announcement to purchase the pipeline on May 29 is a genuine emergency. There has certainly been considerable discussion over the last several months and sessions about this subject.

Similarly, I would find that the need for a debate relating to the Trans Mountain expansion project was of a much more important nature in the circumstances facing the province of Alberta on April 9, 2018, when the debate on the previous standing order application went ahead. The circumstances are significantly different, and accordingly the chair does not find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put.

I think we had a second Standing Order 30, from the Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Trans Mountain Pipeline Expansion Support

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a bit of an odd situation, where I suppose you're going to be making a nearly identical ruling. Perhaps I will move you with my eloquence and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd really appreciate that you not leave when I'm speaking to a member. In getting between my eyesight and the other's, it's difficult to watch. Members, feel free to move now.

Member, just hold on a sec.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I suppose some don't want to stay for the next debates.

I'm not sure if I will move you with the eloquence of my arguments, Mr. Speaker, because I suppose your ruling on my motion, my request for emergency debate under Standing Order 30, is virtually identical. As I note . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you ought not anticipate what I will say. That's up to me. But please continue.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Oh, I'm expecting to move you with the eloquence of my arguments, Mr. Speaker, but the arguments laid out, I believe, in the last round of discussion are very similar.

I believe that there has not been substantive debate yet on how the people of Alberta feel about the federal government owning a key and strategic piece of energy infrastructure for Alberta and about the Alberta government itself putting up up to $2 billion towards backstopping this in the event that it fails. I believe that this is urgent and has not been substantively discussed, the idea of government ownership of the pipeline, as I pointed out. I asked a single set of questions in question period a few weeks ago, so if you include supplementals, I've mentioned it three times, and I think the Leader of the Opposition mentioned it perhaps once yesterday. So it has not received significant debate in this House.

We're talking about $2 billion of provincial money and more than $4 billion of federal money that are not approved by either level of government and a huge change in the strategic lay of the land for Alberta's energy industry in that we are now going to ostensibly support the idea of Prime Minister Trudeau controlling a strategic piece of energy infrastructure. It feeds into a whole lot of other debates. If we believe that we can ever get rid of the carbon tax, we certainly are never going to have a chance of doing that if there is a Trudeau who can turn off the taps on Alberta. If he owns the pipeline, I've got a pretty good feeling that that can be used as a hammer to hit us over the head with.

So I think this is important. It's timely. It's not been appropriately debated in the Legislature. This is a similar motion to what was put forward before. I feel like it's pretty much just that we are standing in a queue and pretty much just skipping the line. I'm not sure what the point was, but I gave notice to . . .

The Speaker: It's the urgency, hon. member. The urgency matter: that's the thing you need to be talking about, not the substance of the debate, please.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah. It is urgent, but it has not been discussed. There are likely not that many more sitting days left in this Legislature for us to be able to discuss this. I understand that people want to get back to their constituencies and out of here, so I would be – it's certainly an easy thing for me to say that my caucus will only put up one speaker, but if other caucuses were to agree, perhaps we could find a way to truncate the debate somewhat so that it doesn't take up the business of the entire afternoon.

The Speaker: Thank you, hon. member.

The Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that to sum up the argument is to say that this was an incredibly important step for Albertans. I think that no issue has been as important for Albertans in a number of years as this issue is, but as the Government House Leader has made clear, importance and urgency are not the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I am willing to be guided by you. I am happy to go through and reiterate some of the remarks made by the Government House Leader in response to the previous motion, but if you would be willing to simply take into consideration those remarks made by the Government House Leader, again, on this argument, I am happy to sit down and let you simply give that consideration.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Hon. members, the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has met the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker's office by providing the required notice at 8:42 this morning. I say that in reflection of the earlier time. The Member for Rimbeyst-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre arrived at my office earlier.

The motion from Strathmore-Brooks reads as follows:

Pursuant to Standing Order 30 be it resolved that the ordinary business of the Legislative Assembly be adjourned to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, details of Alberta's support for the Trans Mountain expansion project.

I would begin, hon. members, by commenting on the format and the substance of the application brought forward by the Member for Strathmore-Brooks. I would note that it should be clear from the application what the nature of the emergency actually is. Furthermore, this Standing Order 30 application, again, has to do with the Trans Mountain pipeline expansion project. Specifically, it deals with Alberta's support for the project in light of the announcement yesterday, May 29. Accordingly, this application, while similar to the one that was just dealt with, again, constitutes a different question. Therefore, on that basis, it does not contravene Standing Order 30(7)(d).

On the question of whether this matter is a genuine emergency, I would say that the matter does not meet the test as set out in Standing Order 30 and in the various authorities. As I noted earlier, debate relating to the Trans Mountain expansion project was of a much more urgent nature in the circumstances facing the province on April 9, 2018. In addition, I would find it difficult to make the conclusion that debating details concerning Alberta's support of the project would constitute a true emergency. Accordingly, the chair does not find the request for leave in order, and the question will not be put.

Orders of the Day

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a request for unanimous consent to introduce a guest.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a number of incredible women who've been working to ensure abortion access and reproductive rights for women in Alberta for years. They are from organizations like Planned Parenthood, Woman's Health Options, formerly known as the Morgentaler Clinic, Kensington, and the list goes on. I ask that they rise as I introduce them. I'm not going to say each of their organizations, but I will say each of their names. We are so honoured to have you here today: Celia Posyniak; Sarena Finston Perry; Laura McBride; Erin Bilawchuk; Shirley Goodbrand; Melanie Anderson; Cathy Dawson; Muriel Stanley Venne, who's accompanied by Gwen; Nicole Jones-Abad; Tracey Berry; Donna Sansinsky; Nicole Bounds; Liz McCord; Heather Halpenny; Marie Gordon; Sheila Bellen; Ellen Ticoll; Joanne Combs; Barbara Howell.* I know that there are other women who are here as well and other supporters. Please rise if you're here to witness this debate and this historic advancement for women. Please, colleagues, join me in extending the warm welcome to all of these observers here today.

The Speaker: Welcome.

The hon. Minister of Service Alberta and Status of Women.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly staff from the Department of Status of Women who worked very hard and advised on Bill 9. We have with us today Susan Taylor, our deputy minister; Maryna Korchagina; Kelly Buckley; Michelle Hutchinson; Rabia Naseer; Stephanie Gazzola; Alondra Sanchez; and Cory Habulin. I ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Welcome.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 9

Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier and Minister of Health.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and good afternoon to everyone. I'd like to begin by thanking all who've taken the time and energy to debate this piece of legislation, that I know will make life better for Albertans. This legislation is important to our government, as are the people this legislation will protect, patients and health care providers, many of whom are joining us today and are seated in the gallery.

It's fitting that we begin third reading of this bill today. Women's rights advocates remembered and recognized yesterday the anniversary of the death of Dr. Henry Morgentaler, who devoted his career to expanding abortion rights in Canada. Further, many of us were inspired this past weekend watching as Irish women went home to vote in a referendum on one of the world's strictest abortion bans. I know that many of us followed #hometovote and were moved by stories and images of women going to great lengths, literally, to fight for their rights to assert their bodily autonomy. It's difficult to express how powerful it was to see tears of joy and expressions of love, support, and solidarity. These women reminded us, reminded the world that the fight for women's rights continues. Here today we honour that fight, and we move the marker a little bit more forward.

I'm pleased to bring up third reading of the Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care Act. This bill's purpose is to help protect Albertans from real safety concerns and barriers to privacy when they access health care. Here in Alberta no woman should face bullying or harassment when accessing health care, and no woman should have to live in fear of threats, intimidation, or violence. The legislation will also protect physicians and service providers, because supporting a strong public health care system means supporting the people who work in that health care system. Abortion has been legal in Canada for decades, so there's no reason why women who choose abortion should still feel that they have to face barriers, fear, stigmatization, and judgment.

Over 75 per cent of abortions in Alberta are provided in the two clinics I mentioned earlier, Kensington in Calgary and Woman's Health Options here in Edmonton. I've had the honour of visiting both of these clinics, and I've met with the staff who work there. They told me that they've seen an increase in protester activity, including women and health professionals being shouted at, photographed, and harassed as they enter and exit their doctors' appointments. Currently both clinics rely on injunctions to limit the number, proximity, and activities of protesters, but even with injunctions in place, protester activity at these clinics is increasing. Women accessing health services at these clinics and their supporters are reporting anxiety and fear as they approach and leave the clinic. Staff have also expressed that they feel unsafe while coming to and leaving their place of work. Mr. Speaker, that's just wrong. That isn't what a health care system built for all Albertans should look like.

We shouldn't be making patients go to court to protect themselves and their rights. We need stronger laws in place so that their harassers are the ones that end up in court, not the other way around. So that's why we are taking action. Bill 9 supports women by making this a public health and safety issue. It demonstrates our government's commitment to protecting safe access to all health services.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Some members at a recent political convention may have heard that women's rights are a swear word – I think it was feminism, actually – or that removing barriers for women is socialist garbage. Today I want to make it clear to all Albertans: women's rights are human rights. So I get concerned when members of this Assembly, elected to represent people, including women, from their communities, refuse to even engage in the conversation, and I get really concerned when the Leader of the Official Opposition says that women should just go to court if they want to access health care without harassment and intimidation.

Madam Speaker, Alberta women – care providers, patients – have all told us that the current protections aren't working. During the debate over this bill I've received letters from Albertans working in clinics, talking about what life is like for them under the status quo. One person, a doctor, talked about how painful it is that she can't guarantee the safety of her own patients. Another staff member, who's a social worker, talked about clients being followed to their cars by relentless protesters. Even maintenance workers and mail carriers visiting the building get harassed and intimidated.

I was troubled to hear that a patient and her mother experienced extreme harassment outside Woman's Health Options just two days ago. This patient was intimidated and videotaped while entering the clinic, inside the current area that is covered by the court injunction. She was traumatized, worried that the protester would continue to intimidate her when she left her appointment or that her face would appear on social media or in an antichoice ad. I'm incredibly thankful to the caring, compassionate staff at Woman's Health Options who spent over two hours taking care of this patient after this horrific incident. But, Madam Speaker, they should not have to. That's not their job. Our job is to ensure that they can do their jobs and that women who exercise their choice can do so safely, without fear, harassment, or intimidation. Their jobs are demanding enough.

I'm dismayed that some critics believe that the status quo, which allows something like this to happen to a woman, is acceptable, because it is not acceptable. This legislation would make it illegal to take photos or record patients who are inside the access zones and would make it illegal to distribute those photos and recordings. With this legislation that woman, that woman just two days ago, and many others will be protected.

Madam Speaker, Alberta women are tired of being bullied and harassed when they access health care. They are tired of extreme special-interest groups trying to control their bodies, and they're tired of waiting – waiting for decades – for a government to finally bring in legislation to protect their human rights. We have heard this from women and health care providers and other allies and patients in the province whom I've met with and who've written and called my office, including Jennifer Berard. You might remember her; her story launched the same day we introduced the bill.

After refusing to debate or vote on legislation, Alberta women are right to ask the Official Opposition where they stand. Do you stand with Jennifer, or do you stand with extreme special-interest groups that have built your new party? Do you stand with the antichoice groups that encouraged members to vote to defund women's health care at convention, the folks who voted to ensure that parents have to sign off when a minor is accessing a health care service? In a few minutes, when we have another chance to vote, will you stand, or will you hide?

I know whose side I'm on. I know where we stand. We stand with women. We stand with health care providers. That's why on our side of this Assembly we'll be voting yes. This is certainly a pivotal moment in Alberta's history, Madam Speaker.

Thank you so very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will be speaking in general to third reading of the bill, but before I speak to it more broadly, I would like to put forward an amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The amendment I'm putting forward is that Bill 9 be not now read a third time. There's more to it in the words than that, but I do not believe that this bill should move forward.

Now, I want to thank all members of this House who have participated in the debate, who have made their views known in speech and in their votes, who have participated in one form or another. We may disagree, but this is a place that is supposed to be full of disagreement. At the end of the day, a majority government pretty much always gets its way. Very, very rarely does a government have to back down. There are exceptions like Bill 6, et cetera, but when a majority government wants something, a majority government gets something.

In the Canadian Westminster system of our Parliament the opposition almost never gets to win a battle against a majority government, but what we do get to do is have our say. We get to speak up for our constituents, represent a minority of the Legislature, perhaps a majority of the public sometimes, but certainly the minority of the electorate from the last election. We might not get to change the final outcome of a vote, but we get to have our say. In fact, it is our duty to have our say, to speak up for our constituents on bills that we support, on bills that we oppose, and on bills that we might not even want to talk about. If they're on the floor of this Legislature, it is our duty to our constituents to stand up, speak up, and be counted every time.

Now, on the bill itself, I want to thank the Minister of Health for spirited debate on this. I think we have very different views on the suitability of this particular bill. I think it is well intentioned. It is trying to achieve something that I would . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I'll just interrupt you for a moment, hon. member. I've been asked to clarify something with you. With this type of an amendment – this is a recommit amendment – once you have presented this, you will have your speaking time on that, but then you cannot speak again in third reading. Just so that you're aware.

Mr. Fildebrandt: There's no debate on the amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: This is your third reading debate.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Yeah. You can go ahead, just as long as you understand that this is the one opportunity.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you.

We have different views on the bill, but I do believe that the government's bill is well intentioned in trying to fix something that I think, if we were to deal with it in a more co-operative and nonpartisan spirit, we could actually find some common ground on, but I do not believe that it strikes an appropriate balance.

Now, regardless of how you feel about abortion, whatever you feel about its legal status or from a moral perspective – and I do believe that people can have legitimate different views on the topic. It is a painful and difficult topic for most people, and for most people not in politics it's not pure black and white. They can have honest differences of opinion on it. But regardless of how you feel about abortion from a moral or a legal perspective, we should all agree that if a woman is accessing an abortion, she should not face harassment or intimidation. She should not be photographed. She should not be bullied. She should not be screamed at.

Now, while these things have happened before, they are very rare occurrences. I believe that the government is using a cannon to kill a mosquito here. What this will do is perhaps embolden some protesters to do this because they're told they can't do it. It is not striking an appropriate balance.

No right in the Canadian constitutional and common law tradition is absolute. We have the right to freedom of speech, but that freedom of speech is not absolute. It is as it is justified in a free and democratic society under the Charter. The right to freedom of speech is not absolute. You can't slander. You can't incite violence. No other Charter right is absolute. Virtually every Charter right comes into at least some conflict with another Charter right, and both legislators and the judiciary are faced regularly with trying to balance competing rights. When we declare that one right does not need to be balanced anymore, that it trumps all others, then the delicate balance of the Canadian Constitution and our carefully constructed liberties begins to fall apart.

Women have the Charter right and all people have the Charter right to security of the person. That is a fundamental Charter right. I think that that is a right that the government is trying to uphold here, and good on them. But we also have the Charter rights of freedom of expression and freedom of assembly. It would not be unreasonable to have some reasonable restrictions placed upon those latter two rights if they could be properly justified and balanced but also applied broadly. I do not believe that government should ever legislate on the basis of someone's race, religion, sex, political views, or social views.

The French philosopher Voltaire has a famous quote incorrectly attributed to him: I may disagree with you, but I will fight to the death for your right to say it. That is fundamental to our understanding of free speech. If you believe in free speech, you don't just believe in it for people who agree with you. You believe in free speech for those who disagree with you. In this case, frankly, I think even most passionate pro-lifers would disagree with people harassing people outside of an abortion clinic. There is nothing compassionate about that, there's nothing productive about that, and I don't believe there's anything even Christian about that. It is not becoming of someone to do so.

I'm not arguing and I don't think anyone here is arguing that people should be allowed to harass and yell at someone. But if we are going to restrict freedom of assembly and speech for one group, we should never single out a group because their political or social views are unpopular either broadly or with the government of the day. As much as some may feel that they'll be in power forever, you will someday be in the opposition, and someone else will be legislating your rights. Someone else, whom you disagree with, will hold a majority of seats in a Legislature, and you will pray that they respect your right to freedom of speech and freedom of assembly when they disagree with you. Governments of all stripes, on the left and on the right, too often forget that. It tends to be not a left/right issue but something that only the opposition of the day tends to remember and the government of the day tends to forget, but I'm sure members, if they ever were to find themselves in opposition again, would be reawakened to the principle.

There are, I know, in this House different views on the topic of abortion. I know some members here very well, and I know where they stand on the issue of abortion. There are passionate pro-choicers in this House, and there are passionate pro-lifers in this House. I think that there is a place for a public debate on the issue if it's before us. You know, the opposition doesn't get to pick the agenda here very often, as we saw right before this debate, but the agenda before us we have an obligation to deal with. If you are pro life or you are pro choice, if you are somewhere in the middle as a moderate, leaning one way or another, you have a right to express your views.

I am genuinely disappointed that on this issue and, frankly, quite a few more issues than I would have expected but on this issue in particular I've been given the dubious honour of leading the opposition. This corner of the House used to be known as the Valhalla section or Siberia, but I now call it the Alamo. It can be a little lonely sometimes being the only MLA in the entire House to dissent, and frankly that honour often went to Grant Notley, the father of the Premier, when he had to effectively lead the opposition, I think, with just one MLA by himself sometimes. In that case it was just a giant majority government. It wasn't just that the other opposition wasn't doing its job.

Now, there are some MLAs in the opposition who are supporting the government. They're not abdicating their duties. They're supporting the bill and speaking up. You know, I applaud them for doing so even though I disagree with their positions.

This debate on this bill should be a wake-up call that when the opposition is away, the government will play. That is why the government tripled the size of the no-protest zone in this bill. That would have never happened if there was a vigorous Official Opposition showing up for work, standing up, debating, and voting, but because there has been virtually no major organized opposition to the bill, the government has had carte blanche. That is deconstructing one of the fundamental checks and balances of our system. So while a majority government can pass virtually any bill it wants, one of the very, very few things that check its power is knowing that if they go too far on something, the opposition will at least show up to work, and when that doesn't happen, the government has no check on itself. It has no check on its own power. It therefore has the right to expand the scope and powers of its legislation beyond what it thought it could originally get away with, and that is dangerous. It takes away one of the key mechanisms of accountability in our system of government.

I believe we've had a pretty long debate on this. I think that, short of the budget, we've probably debated this bill more than any other. I'm sure Hansard or Parliamentary Counsel can correct us, but I think we've probably spent more time on this bill and certainly had more votes on this bill than any other piece of legislation other than the budget, which is curious. We've also certainly kept our pages up late at night and our security officers as well.

But I want to thank all members who have participated in this debate and made their views known and stood up to vote to represent their constituents, however it is they may vote. I would beseech my colleagues in this House who may be under orders from outside this House to leave here when the roll call is called – I understand. I understand your situation. I understand you don't want to be in it, and I understand that many of you want to stand up and be counted. I certainly won't claim a moral superiority over it because you're in a bad position. It's not your fault. But I would at least beseech you to break the party whip, to stand up if not to debate, to at least vote and represent the conservative majority of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane. On the amendment?

Mr. Westhead: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to request unanimous consent of the House to shorten the division bells to one minute for votes pertaining to Bill 9, please.

The Deputy Speaker: We've had a request for unanimous consent to shorten the bells to one minute. I'll ask one question. Is anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I must say I give credit to the Member for Strathmore-Brooks for taking a strong, principled stand on freedom of speech. Unfortunately, his amendment doesn't address freedom of speech in the act. He is objecting to section 2 and sections 7 and 8. Section 2 deals with restricted access zones, and sections 7 and 8 have to do with the residence of the physician or service provider and the physician's office, by which he proposes to justify removing this bill from the House and having more debate.

I'm unsure of why there's that inconsistency, but I certainly appreciate both his tenacity and his willingness to stand up on an issue of freedom of speech. He has done that very well in this session. We do have to be careful that we protect that sacred part of democracy that has been so badly damaged elsewhere and is always subject to threat by those who have power and those who have the ability to silence or self-censor in some cases out of fear.

Let me simply say – and this probably will also be my statement at third reading – that it's quite clear that this needs to go forward. It needs to go forward in a timely way. There are too many health providers, patients, families that are anxiously waiting to see this increased level of civility, maybe, and security. Again, I've said this in the House. The decision to have an abortion is an extremely difficult one. It rightly belongs to the woman, her family, her physician, her god. We, in the sense of creating a buffer zone around these facilities, are not restricting free speech. We're not restricting the freedom to organize. We are simply providing a measure of security and trying to reduce and even eliminate some of the harassment that occasionally occurs. It's not a regular pattern that I've seen around the Kensington clinic in my riding, but it occasionally occurs, and it cannot be allowed to continue.

Alberta, along with four other provinces, will be leading the country in ensuring that not only the patients but the health providers are not in any way feeling intimidated, harassed, or threatened and do not feel a sense of disrespect because they have a different view and because they're following the Health Act and because they're following the law of the land.

I don't think there's any basis for supporting this amendment myself. At the same time, I appreciate the member for expressing very clearly his views and his stand on behalf of some Albertans, especially in the area of free speech.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, to speak to the amendment, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: To the amendment. Okay. Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to make a couple of points, speak to a couple of the points that the Member for Strathmore-Brooks made. One of the things that he was concerned about was emboldening protesters by passing the legislation. I believe that the only circumstance where that would actually happen is if the protesters suffer from oppositional defiant disorder. No reasonable person would want to defy such legislation.

Another comment that was made essentially equated morality to Christianity, and I just want to assert that no belief system can claim authority over morality. Morality is definitely a human endeavour. It's not exclusively Christian. It's not Jewish or Muslim or atheist or agnostic or any of the major belief systems. It's something that we all endeavour to incorporate, well, by and large, into our lives.

I also want to disabuse the Member for Strathmore-Brooks of the delusion of being the unofficial leader of the opposition. I for one am not inclined to follow him anywhere.

We're at third reading, and it's taken a while to get here. We owe it to the people of Alberta to put this particular bill to a vote today, and there's no need for this amendment. This bill is not primarily dealing with a free speech matter.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a) any questions or comments?

Seeing none, any other speakers to the amendment? Calgary-Bow.

Drever: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Speaking to the amendment from Strathmore-Brooks, my message is clear here. Women shouldn't have to wait to be protected from harassment or intimidation and – you know what? – women have waited long enough. Time is up. It's time to get this bill moving forward. You know, we have a gallery full of women here today who deserve a government that will stand with them and will not run into the washroom every time a woman is asking for respect and protection. I'm going to vote no to this amendment, and I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment to third reading of Bill 9 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mr. Westhead: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise and speak to Bill 9 today. I want to start by saying that I'm really proud of our Minister of Health for her leadership on this bill. It's a long time coming and long overdue, and I'm really pleased to be part of a government who is putting women's rights at the forefront.

I also want to acknowledge that I'm entering this debate with a fair degree of privilege. I'm a cisgendered heterosexual white male. I grew up in a nuclear family, so I pretty much check all the boxes of privilege, and I just wanted to acknowledge that before beginning.

I also don't have any experience or know anyone with experience accessing these health services, but I do want to use an analogy of something that I am familiar with. In my former role as a registered nurse in the operating room one of the most important factors for us was ensuring a good patient experience. If you can imagine that people are nervous going to the dentist, can you imagine how nervous you'd be going to have brain surgery? It was our job to ensure that patients going in for such a procedure knew that they were in good hands and that they'd be well taken care of.

All of the experience that a patient has coming into a hospital from the moment they walk in the doors, when they're going to have surgery, affects their experience. It is a struggle for operating room nurses when we're meeting a patient for the first time and we have to give them the confidence that they're in good hands. So it was very important how we created a relationship with the patients and made sure that they felt they were safe and in good hands and that they could trust us. That was job number one for us, trying to ensure that patients knew that they were protected.

So when I think of a bill like Bill 9, there are a lot of parallels. A woman coming in to access a health care service deserves to have the same experience as though they were coming in for brain surgery. It's an important part of accessing the health care system for them. They may have made a very difficult decision to get there in the first place. To enter a health care facility free of harassment and abuse and intimidation and bullying is so fundamental to having a good outcome. It's about how a patient starts and enters the health care system affects their entire experience and how they view that.

I can't be more proud of supporting a bill that ensures that women can have easy access to a legal health service and be treated with the dignity and respect that every other Albertan deserves. For that reason, I'm going to be voting in support of this bill, and I encourage all members to do the same.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Other members wishing to speak to the bill? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak at third reading to Bill 9 – and it took us awhile to get here – to reiterate my complete and unfettered support for this bill and to remind everyone why the autonomy of women to make decisions about their own bodies needs reinforcing with this legislation.

Abortion affects women disproportionately. Abortion is an important element of women's rights because women are more affected by the abortion debate than men, both individually and as a gender. Pregnancy has an enormous effect on the woman involved. As Sarah Weddington put it in the U.S. Supreme Court case in 1973 Roe v. Wade:

A pregnancy to a woman is perhaps one of the most determinative aspects of her life.

It disrupts her body. It disrupts her education. It disrupts her employment. And it often disrupts her entire family life.

And we feel that, because of the impact on the woman, this ... is a matter which is of such fundamental and basic concern to the woman involved that she should be allowed to make the choice as to whether to continue or to terminate her pregnancy.

I'd also like to add the perspective of philosopher Judith Jarvis Thomas.

A great deal turns for women on whether abortion is or is not available. If abortion rights are denied, then a constraint is imposed on women's freedom to act in a way that is of great importance to them, both for its own sake and for the sake of their achievement of equality; and if the constraint is imposed on the ground that the fetus has a right to life from the moment of conception, then it is imposed on a ground that neither reason nor the rest of morality requires women to accept.

No one has the right to interfere with a woman's autonomy in seeking legal pregnancy care. Women's right to health care must not be interfered with because equality is too important to compromise. Subjecting women to harassment on the way to see a doctor is wrong. Even in the area of Home to Vote, women's autonomy is still under threat. Today's headlines include Arkansas banning abortion medication.

I feel a deep sense of gratitude to every member who has participated in the debate at every step along the way. As a woman, as a woman who at one time needed an abortion, and as a woman with a daughter, I am indebted to you. Thank you for making your thoughts known, for speaking up about an issue that is important.

I'm deeply disappointed that many members have continually absolved themselves of their responsibility in this debate. We are very fortunate to represent the people of Alberta in this Chamber, to participate in democracy in a way that so many people throughout the world do not enjoy. That honour should always be taken seriously. Because I am a feminist and because I passionately believe in equality, I am proud to stand in support of Bill 9.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 29(2)(a), any questions or comments?

Seeing none, speaking to the bill, the hon. Minister of Service Alberta.

Ms McLean: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Today I'm proud to be part of a government that since being elected has consistently offered unequivocal support to women in this province. Women in Alberta are strong, talented, and make incredible contributions to our province, and as Minister of Status of Women I'm proud to say that our government stands with the women in our province. Each and every member of this government is committed to making life safer, fairer, and better for women in Alberta. It is because of this commitment that the Minister of Health, our Deputy Premier, has brought forward Bill 9.

Madam Speaker, for too long women in Alberta have faced harassment and intimidation as they make their way to abortion services. Clinics that provide abortion services have told our government that protester activity outside these clinics has nearly doubled. These clinics and their patients have come to us and shared their concerns about the harassment and intimidation that they witness. Our government has a duty to lead. That's why the Minister of Health has tabled this legislation to create a bubble zone around abortion service providers so that those who access these services can do so free from fear and bullying.

Madam Speaker, women have a right to feel safe, and our government has a strong record of standing up for that right. Since taking office, we have boosted funding for women's shelters by $15 million to help ensure that no woman fleeing violence is turned away. We've increased access to the legal system for survivors of sexual violence by removing the time limit for bringing forward civil claims, and we have made it easier for survivors of domestic violence to get out of dangerous situations by allowing them to break residential leases without financial penalty. Just this year we announced a historic $8.1 million investment in the Association of Alberta Sexual Assault Services.

These significant new dollars go directly to more counselling, more crisis support, and more help navigating the justice and court systems in this province so that survivors who take the brave step to come forward have the vital help that they need close to home. We listened to the needs of those who have been ignored for far too long by governments that have come before, just like when on May 1 we proclaimed May as Sexual Violence Awareness Month and announced our government's commitment to ending sexual violence and just like we are doing now with Bill 9.

With Bill 9, like with all of the work of our government, we are doing this to make life better, fairer, and safer for women in Alberta. We say to the women of this province: we hear you, we stand with you, and we will never walk out when you need us. Women in Alberta deserve a government that sees our safety as a priority.

Madam Speaker, the opposition has implied time and time again that this bill is a distraction from important issues. The women who are subjected to bullying and harassment, who fear for their safety just because they are trying to access reproductive health clinics, that they have a right to access, do not see this bill as a distraction, nor do they see it as an unimportant issue. Perhaps the opposition would know that if they chose to participate in these debates, but they refuse to even listen.

Well, Madam Speaker, let me be clear. This government listens, this government shows up, and this government stands with women.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Shepherd: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care. You know, I've been here in this House and many times heard from the members opposite about the consideration that they feel I should be giving my actions in this House. I've been told that I've failed to consider how the votes that I've cast, legislation that I've supported, would affect farmers and ranchers or businesspeople or seniors or children in care or persons with developmental disabilities. I've watched as the members opposite have called myself and my colleagues out because they felt we were not speaking up enough on a particular debate. I recall in more than one debate, often during votes, hearing the refrain: Albertans are watching. Indeed, Albertans are watching today.

You know, Madam Speaker, I've also watched as members opposite have appeared on and with so-called media organizations that spread vile misinformation and prejudice about various Albertan communities, whether that be individuals from the Muslim community, the LGBTQ2S-plus community. Many have since distanced themselves. Others have continued that association recently. I've watched as the Leader of the Official Opposition has used language denigrating in marginalizing individuals struggling with substance use disorders and encouraging the spread of misleading information about peer support groups for LGBTQ2S-plus youth. I've stood in this House and I've called that out because that kind of stigma does real damage to real people. To foment discrimination or prejudice is a dangerous, dangerous thing for persons who are public leaders and elected representatives.

Now, I recognize that on many of these issues people have concerns based on religious beliefs and on convictions of faith. Indeed, Madam Speaker, I grew up in the church. I grew up in a very strict Christian home, and for much of my life I subscribed to religious belief and it was very important to me. As a young man I was quite zealous. That changed over the years as I dealt with my own experiences and I grew to know more of the world, but always what I learned in those years has shaped me as an individual, the code of moral conduct by which I conduct myself, and indeed the types of decisions I make even on legislation such as this.

Indeed, when this legislation came forward and I saw this debate in the House, I was reminded of a story from the Gospel of John, from the book of John that I'm looking at today, a story of Jesus. He had gone to teach at the temple, and as he was sitting there and teaching people in the temple, teachers of religious law and the Pharisees brought a woman in front of him who they had caught in the act of adultery. They put her in front of everybody in that crowd, and they said to Jesus: "Teacher, this woman was caught in the act of adultery. The law of Moses says that we should stone her. What do you say?"

Now, it notes here that they were trying to trap him. They were trying to get Jesus to say something they could use against him. Well, we're certainly familiar with that in politics. You know, Jesus ignored them and just sat and wrote in the dust with his finger. Then they kept demanding that he provide them with an answer, so he stood up and said: "Okay. Well, let whoever among you has never sinned cast the first stone." Then he stooped down, and he started writing in the dust again.

Every one of those people that were there to accuse that woman, one by one they slipped away, beginning with the oldest – that's an interesting note – probably because they have more memories of their life and the things they've personally done. But every last one of those individuals left. Then Jesus stood up, and he went and spoke to that woman. He said: "So where are your accusers? Didn't even one of them condemn you?" And she said, "No, Lord," so he said, "Neither do I. Go and sin no more."

Now, Madam Speaker, one of the things I have carried forward from what I learned growing up is that the most important principle when we are dealing with other people is that you put the people first. Compassion comes first. Judgment is set aside. Compassion comes first. Whatever my personal conviction, whatever my personal belief, that is the example I see when I read the gospels and when I remember what I have learned. Compassion, the spirit of the law, how we treat other people always comes before making a rule of moral judgment.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, that is at the heart of what we are looking at here today. None of us has the right to stand and cast stones at any woman at the most vulnerable point in her life, potentially, who is facing an incredibly difficult decision. None of us has the right to sit in judgment of that individual and tell her what she should or should not do. Indeed, none of us has the right to increase stigma on that woman and make her suffering worse. That is why we are bringing forward this legislation, to provide that protection and to provide that principle of compassion and understanding. Individuals can hold their personal convictions. They can do so at a respectful distance in a manner which is not going to increase the difficulty for women who are simply trying to access a health care service at a difficult time of their lives.

Madam Speaker, the floor of this Chamber, in between our two sides, is littered with stones cast from glass houses. I will say that I am disappointed. I respect that some members of the opposition are here in the Chamber today to be part of debate and as representatives of their parties, and I acknowledge the courage that takes, but I am disappointed, given, I guess, what has transpired and what has gone back and forth across this floor, that they are not here today to vote on behalf of their constituents and indeed to ensure that a reasonable and compassionate protection like this is provided to Alberta women. I will tell you that I will proudly stand in favour of Bill 9.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. minister of culture.

Miranda: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today to speak to third reading of Bill 9, Protecting Choice for Women Accessing Health Care, and I do so proudly. I say “proudly” because I’m not afraid to have my position on this very important subject matter on the record. Now, I suppose that I could avoid the issue altogether either by not speaking to the bill or, perhaps, by running out of the House and hiding when a vote is recorded, as we witnessed a few minutes ago, but I have no issue whatsoever with standing up for women’s reproductive rights.

Now, as a male I will never be faced with the choice of having to make a decision of this nature. Admittedly, it is much easier to say that you are either one hundred per cent against or in favour of a woman’s right to choose when you will never be the one in that position of having to make that very difficult choice. However, as a feminist I feel it is my responsibility to stand up and defend a woman’s right to choose, especially when others, much to their shame, choose not to. To be clear, for me the question is not about being either pro or antiabortion. The question for me is this. Who should be able to make that decision? Is it the woman, with the help of her doctor, or the government? I think – and I speak for the members of this government – that the question is very simple to answer. It should always be the woman who chooses.

Decades ago women suffered horrifying back-alley abortions or used dangerous methods when they had no other recourse. So when there is any hint of opposition or any implicit attempt to limit a woman’s reproductive rights or, in the case of the UCP opposition, to boycott the debate altogether, I really have to ask: does anyone really think that pushing women back to the back alley is a better outcome? I find it offensive that the UCP opposition has chosen to boycott any debate on this piece of legislation and has opted instead to abandon the legislative duty that they were elected to do and not vote time and time and time and time again. Truly shameful.

Fortunately, we live in a country where the issue was settled by the courts. Women in Alberta and across the country have the right to choose. In fact, on January 28, 1988, the Supreme Court found that Canada’s abortion laws were unconstitutional. The laws were found to violate section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms because they infringe upon a woman’s right to life, liberty, and security of person. The then Supreme Court Chief Justice Brian Dickson wrote, “Forcing a woman, by threat of criminal sanction, to carry a foetus to term unless she meets certain criteria unrelated to her own priorities and aspirations, is a profound interference with a woman’s body and thus a [violation] of security of the person.” On that day Canada became one of a small number of countries without a law that restricted a woman’s right to choose.

I take the opportunity today to congratulate the people of Ireland, who recently voted to repeal an amendment that bars women’s autonomy over their bodies. I bring this up because, like many around the world watching the historic vote in Ireland, I learned of the hardship faced by woman there having to travel out of their country to freely exercise their reproductive rights. That is why I stand here today in this Chamber to tell the women of Calgary-Cross, my constituents, and women across this province that I will stand with them, and so will every single member of this government.

Now, based on the research and the reading that I have done on this issue, it is very clear to me that absolutely nothing is more important or more imperative than ensuring a woman’s fundamental right to reproductive freedom and that nothing is more odious and offensive than denying women the respect and the ability to live in a society in which they are encouraged to think of themselves as nothing less than first-class citizens and responsible human beings capable of making those kinds of decisions for themselves and, in doing so, ensuring that women have the confidence to exercise their autonomy over their bodies. Now, that autonomy can only be freely exercised by ensuring that women can access those services in a safe and dignified manner.

Shortly after the government introduced this legislation, members of the UCP caucus chose to walk out of the House, an action which has been described by some, and I quote, as political cowardice and a disgraceful dereliction of their duties as MLAs. In fact, members of the opposition went in front of the media to claim that the reason they left the Chamber was due to the heckling coming from government benches. I am certain that that kind of double standard and political game playing by the members of the UCP opposition is not lost on anyone. The very thing that they allege to need, a bubble zone protecting them from the heckling, is exactly the very same thing they would deny the women of Alberta. It is truly shameful. They would stand and still allow protesters to make women feel ashamed for the choices that they make. That, Mr. Speaker, is the pinnacle of irony. While I have much sympathy, compassion, solidarity, and empathy for the women being subjected to derision by protesters, I have none for the members of the opposition who choose not to stand up for the women of this province.

This bill is one that ensures dignity, equality, compassion, and respect for the women of our province, and that is why I stand again in this House today to say to every single one of my sisters: your body, your choice, and I stand with you.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, other speakers to the bill? Edmonton-Manning.

Ms Sweet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I begin, I just want to thank the hon. Minister of Health for bringing this bill, Bill 9, forward. I have not had a lot of opportunities to be able to speak in the House and specifically to this bill, and to be honest, I was contemplating if I would be able to actually do it. But I do feel, as I tell you this story, that it would be disrespectful to the journeys that I have travelled on with some of the people that I will talk about today to not stand here and talk about it.

As many of you know, I was a social worker before I was elected. I worked in child protection, and I worked in the inner city with high-risk youth, a population of women that I don’t think we spend a lot of time talking about. The youngest that I started working with when I worked in the inner city was 12 years old. She’s now in her, like, mid-20s, so we don't need to talk about how long ago that was. She was 12, she was living on the street, and she was homeless. She had been abandoned by her family, she had been traumatized, she had been shamed, and she had been sexually exploited. She was involved in gangs, and she became pregnant.

I was her social worker, so I had a responsibility to support her through her process, her journey, and for her to be able to decide at a very young age what she was going to do. We spent a lot of time talking about her choices because my responsibility was to give her all of her options. It was hard. She was young. Of course, as an adult you think about her future and you think about this, like, young woman and what her future could be and what I saw her future being as a very resilient, amazing young woman. You know, I had thoughts, right? I had biases. I'm a social worker. We have to acknowledge that we carry our biases with us in our profession. She was a child in care. She didn't have a lot of supports and really had nowhere to go, no home. She had to make this decision, so we walked our journey together. I learned so much from her and how she was going to decide to make this choice.

She ultimately made the decision that she was going to access her rights and have an abortion. I said: "Okay. Well, let's go. I will hold your hand. I will walk with you. I will be what you need someone to be." We were in Edmonton, and we went to go access her health rights. Twelve years old.

Again, we had spent a long time talking about her options. We walked down the street, and there was somebody standing there with a sign telling her that she was a murderer, shaming her for making a choice that she had every right to make. A 12-year-old girl. She looked at me, and she said: "Heather, look, we've talked about this. You told me this was going to be okay and that this was okay for me to do." Of course, I, you know, walked her through it, and I said: "Yeah, this is your choice. This is okay. You need to make your choice."

So we accessed the facility. Of course, she went through all the supports that she gets when she goes to access her supports. She got to talk to her counsellor, and she got her time to sit quietly and think about what she wanted to do and to decide whether or not this is what really made sense to her. And we left because she couldn't do it, because somebody had stood outside that building and had shamed her.

She had been shamed her whole life. She had been victimized repeatedly in her young, young life as an inner-city youth, constantly told that she was a bad person, that she was shameful, that what she did in her life was wrong, that her whole existence in life was wrong. And the one time where she took control of her life, where she made a decision for herself to say, "I am taking control of myself, I am taking control of my body for the very first time in my life, and I am making a decision," someone stood outside of that building and told her that she was wrong.

When we stand here and we have these conversations and we talk about how this is just a political game and we see members of the opposition who love to stand up in question period and talk about the importance of mental health supports for Albertans and how we need to make sure we're taking care of children in care and how important that is and that as Albertans and as this government we need to be doing that work, well, this is doing that work.

I want to thank the women that are in the gallery, because we went back, and this young, very powerful, resilient woman, who is now an adult and is doing amazing things in her life, was able to access the supports that she needed with the support that she needed.

This bill is extremely important, and this bill is not just important for adult women who are accessing the health care that they deserve. This is about allowing vulnerable people, people that as legislators we have a responsibility to protect and to take care of, to be able to access this, to be able to make a decision, to be able to follow through on the decision that they have struggled so hard to make, to be able to do that in a safe space, to be able to go and access that without someone retraumatizing them, reshaping them, making them feel that they don't deserve to honour their own bodies. [Noise in the gallery] I hear you. That's how I feel, too.

I wholeheartedly support this bill because if this bill had existed when I had to go take that 12-year-old girl, we wouldn't have had to go back a second time, because she would have been able to make that decision, be confident in herself, be able to access that support the first time, not the second time.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

The hon. Minister of Health to close debate.

Ms Hoffman: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker and to all members who have taken the time to engage in today's discussion, the discussion of the past several months, the discussion of the past 30 years here in Alberta. We are so grateful for the courage and leadership of so many in this province who brought us to where we are today. I am proud that when we leave here today, we will be taking Alberta one step further, and we need to keep ... [some applause] Yeah. Thank you. I'm proud that we continue to move forward and not backward in women's rights and in ensuring that all of us feel safe and respected in this place.

4:50

I do want to tell one personal story and to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, who just shared her experiences. The story that I'm going to share isn't mine. Again, I mentioned in committee – or maybe it was in second – a number of stories that I heard from women at Kensington.

I want to share one from a woman at Woman's Health Options who talked about how she got pregnant while in an incredibly abusive relationship. The abuse really escalated once her partner realized that he had a fetus in her body, and he felt that he had extra authority over her body. She had been in this relationship for a while and knew that she needed to get out for her physical safety and for the well-being of herself. She knew that it wasn't going to be easy, and one of the things that she also decided was that she needed to exercise her right to have an abortion. When she showed up at the clinic that day, fleeing an abusive partner, she experienced new abuse and new disrespect and new taunting and intimidation. So just like the 12-year-old girl who was trying to exercise her autonomy, even a 30-year-old woman can experience the same sense of fear and disrespect and distrust.

Some people said: well, people on the sidewalk are trying to counsel people about their options. It is not about counselling. It is about shame, harassment, intimidation, and bullying. Counselling is what happens inside the clinic. Counselling is what happens in our community. Counselling is what happens when you call 811. Counselling is what happens when you exercise your options. When you have chosen to make that decision, it needs to be respected, full stop, the end.

We respect the workers, we respect the patients, and today I ask that we all respect Albertans, who've been asking for this legislation for 30 years, and move Alberta forward, not backward, not into the hallway. Let's stand here, let's do our jobs, and let's show women that we stand with them.

Thank you.

Bill 6

Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 6, Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

If passed, this legislation would bring us closer to putting in place a system for legalized cannabis that reflects the views and values of Albertans as well as strengthening the AGLC and creating a new opportunity for the liquor industry.

Madam Speaker, we began developing the system for legalized cannabis after the federal government announced, in 2017, that cannabis would become legal across the country the following year. As we've developed our system of legal cannabis in Alberta, we've engaged thousands of Albertans. Through that engagement we developed four policy priorities that our system is built on. Those priorities: keeping cannabis out of the hands of children and youth; protecting public health; promoting safety on roads, in workplaces, and in public spaces; and limiting the illegal market.

Madam Speaker, at every step we have taken on this file, we have taken that with the input of Albertans. It may not have been our choice to legalize, but we have put in place a plan that reflects the views and values of Albertans. I would like to thank everyone who has participated in providing input, whether through the survey, submissions, or by participating in the round-tables. Legalization will not mark the end of this process. We will continue to monitor this emerging industry as we move forward.

This legislation would bring further clarity to retailers and the public about the use and sale of cannabis in Alberta. The proposed changes would build on the important work we've done to date. These changes would modernize the act and the AGLC to adapt to a marketplace that includes legalized cannabis. This would also give the AGLC and law enforcement tools to better enforce the rules. There's been a good discussion about these changes so far.

5:00

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, legalization of cannabis represents a major shift for our province and our country. Passing the legislation will allow us to meet the expectations of Albertans as we continue to work towards putting in place a system that prioritizes public health and safety.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, and I would ask that all members support me in moving third reading.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Drysdale: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise to speak in support of third reading of Bill 6, the Gaming and Liquor Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. This bill is the third one to make changes to various acts to create an Alberta-made framework to deal with the legalization of recreational marijuana. Curiously, after years of hearing that legalization would come on Canada Day 2018, the federal government has suddenly gone quiet about the date marijuana will be legalized. But regardless of that date, Alberta has to be ready, so we have Bill 6 before us today for third and final reading.

I will point out that this bill is a bit of a hodgepodge as it also includes completely unrelated amendments to the liquor sales, but I'll keep my remarks focused on the cannabis-related sections. This bill includes marketing restrictions for marijuana and has provisions to assist the Alberta gaming, liquor, and cannabis commission to handle a higher caseload of appeals. Bill 6 also fills holes in the act introduced last session, and as legalization comes closer, we will no doubt see the government introduce other amendments as more holes are discovered. We hope that that does not mean that the government is simply writing legislation as quickly as it can to get it on the table. This is a complex issue, and due diligence needs to take place.

This government claims its top concern is the safety of children and public health, but when reading Bill 6, it is clear the government has failed Alberta's families by refusing to align its public consumption rules on marijuana with alcohol rather than tobacco. At this point, when marijuana becomes legal, people will be able to walk down the road smoking it. I've said this before: you cannot walk the road with a beer. That's why so many municipalities are scrambling right now to consult with their citizens to pass bylaws with stronger restrictions. In the end, we'll see a patchwork of consumption rules around the province, making it hard for citizens to know if it's permissible for someone to be consuming marijuana in any given place such as parks and festivals. We've been trying to highlight this problem for months, and the government has chosen to ignore it.

Bill 6 does contain some positive sections, most particularly allowing prosecutions based on evidence that a substance had an odour of cannabis or appeared to be labelled or packaged as cannabis. This section does align with the rules for liquor and is particularly important for the strict rules regarding transporting marijuana in vehicles. When the federal government legalizes edible cannabis products, allowing officers to identify them through packaging and smell will prove particularly important. The addition of this section is a common-sense amendment, likely inadvertently left out of last fall's Bill 26, and will be important when enforcing the minor ticketed offences of youth possessing cannabis, improper transport in a vehicle, and consumption in the public and restricted places identified in Bill 26.

This government has been silent, however, on the issue of possessing marijuana in schools. The problem is that students aged 17 and under can't possess marijuana at all, but students 18 and over can possess up to 30 grams, and although last fall's Bill 26 restricts anyone from smoking it on or comparatively near school grounds, there's nothing that prevents them from having it in their possession at school. This is the kind of public safety issue that I believe the government has failed to address. Perhaps it plans to address this issue in some other way, but I ask the government to let parents and school boards know now. Alberta United Conservatives will continue to monitor marijuana use in our province and deal with concerns such as this one and bring them to the government. We cannot take for granted that laws enacted today, prior to legalization, will take care of all of the issues that may arise. While this government has told us that its priorities are children and public health, we want to see those assurances reflected in legislation.

Madam Speaker, I now want to address another serious public safety issue relating to driving. Police chiefs are telling us that there are deficits in training and the tools to keep Albertans safe on our roads postlegalization. A special concern is that, unlike with alcohol, there's no roadside device that has been approved for reading levels of THC. We keep hearing about public safety being the most critical aspect of all legislation that is going through Ottawa and here in this Legislature, yet we know our roads will become more dangerous when marijuana is legalized. The Transportation minister, to his credit, admitted that when he unveiled amendments to the Traffic Safety Act in Bill 29 to include drug impairment administration sanctions. Ensuring that police are prepared to handle legalization is a critical component.

This government has admitted that the lion's share of the cost of implementing legalized marijuana will fall to municipalities. Edmonton and Calgary, for instance, have both pegged the cost of planning, zoning, and administration as well as bylaw policing and inspection services at $9 billion to $12 billion. The outstanding question, Madam Speaker, is just how much of the tens of millions of dollars the province will collect through the recently approved excise tax and how much of it will go to the municipalities. The Premier has stated that the first few years of legalized marijuana will likely be a net loss despite these revenues from this tax estimated to reach $80 million in the first full year of legalization. I urge this government not to dismiss municipalities. They are carrying a huge burden, and they want to do everything right for their citizens. For instance, they are having to step in and create public consumption bylaws for parks and streets because this government would not do so.

Another aspect of public safety includes ensuring that a retail regime stamps out the black market. The black market means organized crime, and that brings deep-seated trouble for Albertans. A goal of legalization is to erase the black market, which they control by offering a safe product by legitimate retailers. Price, however, must also compete with the black market. That's why the tax on the sale of each gram is important. Ironically, thanks to the previous Conservative government, which refused to implement a sales tax, Alberta will have the lowest cost marijuana in Canada since the price of a gram has been set at $8 by the federal government, with the dollar excise tax added on. The only variables are the various sales and harmonized taxes.

Bill 6 also allows the AGLC to add a markup to the price of cannabis. It is something we'll have to watch carefully if we want to make and keep the black market irrelevant. I certainly hope that this NDP government, which likes to surprise Albertans with unexpected taxes, does not look at the markup as an opportunity for revenues. For although legalized marijuana may not have been the choice of everyone, eradicating the black market and organized crime that controls it can be one of the positive effects to come out of this process.

Clearly, Madam Speaker, legalizing a new recreational drug is a complex, multilayered issue. We hope that when legalized marijuana rolls out in a few months, the government does not hesitate to address any outstanding issues. In closing, I urge the government to view municipalities as partners in the rollout of this cannabis framework and always hold up the safety of children, families, and citizens as the most important objective when crafting legislation and then monitoring how legislation and regulations are affecting their lives for the better.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

5:10

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I think a great deal has been said about this bill, so I will be brief on this one. Just to address the comments made by the hon. member opposite, I think that in terms of the saliva-testing devices I would reiterate that we, too, have concerns around that. Unfortunately, we don't have jurisdiction to alter the legalization date, which is a bit of a moving target at this moment, as I am speaking. What we did commit to do as a government is to ensure that we had an Alberta-specific model in place in time for that legalization, whenever it may turn out to be, and we will do that.

Madam Speaker, I think the other comment I would like to make is that when this decision was made by the federal government, this government, our government, committed to taking into account the views and values of Albertans, so we went out with one of the largest consultations I think that we have ever had. We came back, and we implemented the model that Albertans told us they wanted to see implemented.

I know the hon. member had indicated that potentially there's a problem with parks. I did want to reiterate that our model ensures that there are restrictions around anywhere you would ordinarily find children, so things like play parks, splash parks, that sort of thing, that restrict smoking in those areas. That model was very well supported by Albertans. When we went back to them and said, you know, "Is this the model that you support?" we received 73 per cent support for that. We said that we would do it, and that is what we did.

With that, I will close debate on this issue. Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 5 An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities

The Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Malkinson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. You know, as we get back into this after having a long break, I just wanted to take a quick moment as we get going with debate, and I'm sure we'll have comments on what I'm sure will be some expected amendments. I want to just start off on a real positive note that thus far in this debate the debate in this House has been quite good. It has been wholesome, and I think we've done a really good job of considering the various parts of this bill. Of course, I have to admit to a certain bias for this bill because it is pretty much verbatim my private member's bill, Bill 211. I wanted to thank all members of the Chamber for the great debate we've had on this thus far.

With that, I look forward to hearing more debate on this bill in Committee of the Whole. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Cooper: Well, thank you. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities. As I've said in the House on a number of occasions, I'm pleased to support the legislation.

You'll know, Madam Chair, that I was a little bit disappointed to see the amendment that we had proposed that would have provided for a little bit of additional flexibility amongst those who have the benefit of a trust as well as receiving AISH to not have an amount of money that would be drawn from the trust on a monthly basis have a negative impact on their eligibility for AISH – I was a little bit disappointed to see that the minister was unable to create a pathway where that could be possible. While the amendment may not have been perfect, I think that certainly the minister has the ability and has the capacity to do so, and it was unfortunate to see him not make that possible. I know that I heard from a lot of stakeholders who certainly would have preferred to see that.

As well, there is essentially no net cost or impact to the taxpayer, so it's unfortunate that we weren't able to find a win-win situation, a win-win for those who are both eligible for AISH and have a Henson trust. You know, these are the types of things where we should be looking to find ways to say yes, but unfortunately in this case the government found a way to say no and didn't endeavour to find a way to say yes on something that we could have got accomplished here during this period of debate. So that was a bit disappointing.

I know that I heard from some stakeholders afterwards who were appreciative of the advocacy that we had done, just like they appreciate the advocacy that the Member for Calgary-Currie has done on this particular piece of legislation. You know, he's done a significant amount of work, and I appreciate the work that he's done and will continue to do on not only this bill but also this very important issue.

We're happy to support this legislation, that will give much-needed peace of mind to families of disabled Albertans, knowing that any inheritance they leave to their children will not disqualify them from AISH benefits. You know, as a matter of fact, it's a little bit surprising that that wasn't the case already, so I appreciate that we've made it to be the case.

Advocates in the disability community have made it clear that they support this legislation, and we are committed to amplifying their voices here in the House. I think it's important that we listen to stakeholders, that we consult. I know that this government hasn't had the best track record on consultation, but on this particular piece of legislation I think that they've done a fair and reasonable job, with the exception of the amendment that they refused to pass, that would have had a major impact and benefit on the quality of life of so many Albertans that have the benefit of a Henson trust as well as receiving AISH benefits.

We're pleased to see that the government has included the one-year grace period to allow AISH recipients time to navigate the financial system, to make informed choices as they inherit funds in discretionary and nondiscretionary trusts without their monthly

AISH benefit being impacted. You know, any time that individuals suffer loss and, as such, have an inheritance, particularly in the form of a trust, we need to be able to give them some time and ability to make the best available decisions for them and their families.

The government has done a fair and reasonable job with respect to this piece of legislation. You know, it's not perfect. Unfortunately, it's difficult to make legislation that is perfect. There are certainly some cases that we raised some concerns around with respect to cognitive ability and the type of discretionary or nondiscretionary fund and whether or not there need to be checks and balances. I don't believe that those have been addressed in the legislation. I'm not sure if we can legislate for every inevitability, but we certainly should be endeavouring to do so wherever possible.

I'd also just like to briefly remind the House on some of the challenges of the exempt and nonexempt considerations and that we need to be aware that these exist going forward. You know, I believe that it's reasonable for us to review these types of legislation over a period of time to make sure that we have the exemptions correct. I think it's reasonable that we do that as governments on a regular basis, that we review the types of things that are exempt. Perhaps in the future there would be an opportunity to correct this issue around individuals who have the trust as well as are on AISH benefits, for them to receive an exemption for a monthly amount that they could withdraw from the trust.

On balance, I think that we have a good piece of legislation here. Albertans have been asking for it for quite a significant period of time, so I look forward to supporting it here in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Swann: Thank you, Madam Chair. I'm pleased to rise for my final comments on a progressive piece of legislation that I think will not cost the government anything and will help clients significantly. I presume, having said that, there will be more people coming on the roster who weren't eligible before because this is extending the capacity of these individuals to receive monies while being on AISH, which is good, some of those folks who formerly were excluded. It's going to be interesting to know how many the minister is expecting to come on and what that might mean for the program.

I realize that he is expending more dollars for AISH this year with the new budget – all good – but the living allowance has not been increased since 2012. There's been a significant increase in the cost of living and inflation since 2012. As the government in opposition railed against the Conservatives at the time, and as I have raised more than once in the House, we need to index the AISH benefits. These folks deserve to be able to stay abreast of the significant cost of living in Alberta today and the inflation that goes along with a growing economy such as we have.

Under current law Albertans with assets totalling more than $100,000 weren't eligible to receive AISH, although there are exemptions for such things as a residence and vehicles for disability. It's important to remember that the AISH benefits end at age 65, and this is an important added support for people and their parents and their other extended family who want to see more stability and security for their future. Close to 62,000 Albertans receive AISH benefits today if my numbers are still accurate.

There's no question, in my mind, Madam Chair, that this is positive for Albertans and especially for those who need some security into the future. Like many, particularly without the added resources to these folks since 2012, I was disappointed that the government did not accept some increase in the eligibility of supplementary funds beyond the $800 a month to allow these folks to enjoy a higher standard, especially at this time.

I am certainly hearing from people in my community on AISH who are struggling with the current monthly income, so I hope the government will take under advisement the important steps towards indexing our AISH payments and show the world, especially those people who are on disability. Most of the people on disability obviously don't have this kind of a legacy opportunity. This is a small proportion of all the people on AISH who can benefit from a trust fund. Let's take a serious look at the needs of the majority of people on AISH.

To give credit where credit is due, this government has done a lot for people on the margins, for those families and those individuals. Certainly, it's the legacy of the Conservative government before that really neglected services for many of these disadvantaged people. I do recognize that this government has done more than governments in the past, but we're falling behind. These folks at the very least need to have their income indexed to protect them against the inflation and cost-of-living increases that we're all absorbing, but for many of us it hasn't caused serious quality-of-life changes.

I'll certainly be supporting this, Madam Chair. Thank you for the opportunity to speak at this time.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to Bill 5? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to introduce an amendment to Bill 5, which seeks to improve quality of life for persons with disabilities by allowing them to keep more of what they earn due to increases in minimum wage. I move that Bill 5, An Act to Strengthen Financial Security for Persons with Disabilities, be amended by striking out section 1(3) and substituting the following:

- (3) Section 12(1) is amended
 - (a) by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following:
 - (c) respecting the determination of the income of an applicant or client and his or her cohabiting partner, including providing for an increase in the amount of the allowable deductions from employment income in circumstances where an increase in income is attributable to an increase in the hourly minimum wage established under the Employment Standards Code;
 - (b) by adding the following after clause (d):
 - (d.1) designating assets for the purposes of section 3.1(b)(ii).

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.
Go ahead, hon. member.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. Unlike most minimum wage earners, who get to keep most of their minimum wage increases, when the minimum wage increases for AISH recipients, it counts against their benefits. When the minimum wage increases, those who work face the choice of being able to work and contribute less to their communities or having their government support reduced. In both cases they lose purchasing power and quality of life as the prices of basic household goods increase due to inflation. While other minimum wage earners at least have a chance of keeping up with inflation, the total maximum of earned and supported income for AISH beneficiaries has not increased since 2012.

This amendment would index the amount that an AISH beneficiary can earn to increases in minimum wage so that they do not lose out on purchasing power every time the minimum wage increases. This isn't a perfect solution in that AISH beneficiaries earning above minimum wage may not benefit directly from this indexing, but we can do better for Albertans by ensuring that those many AISH beneficiaries who earn minimum wage can do so without worry that their spending power will be continuously eroded. It also bolsters the ability and pride of AISH beneficiaries in working and contributing to their communities.

I know this amendment would mean a lot to AISH recipients, who often struggle to get by. Madam Chair, I urge all members of the House to support this compassionate amendment for an important group of Albertans.

The Chair: Any members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-Mountain View.

5:30

Dr. Swann: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. This is a very creative and timely option, particularly as it's been six years since there's been any increase in the monthly income for AISH people. This provides a very rational and income-based alternative to the earlier comments I made about indexing this monthly stipend they receive. It's something that I hope the government will seriously entertain and adopt because it's truly adding to the support, that these folks, who are actually below the poverty line – the reality is that they live below the poverty line; these folks are not getting away with anything – have supplements to what they're currently getting. Even once their income is brought up with the cost of living, if it ever happens that they get indexing, this particular adjustment will simply be a part of that calculation when costs of living and inflation are brought into the considerations for these folks. It's eminently sensible and helpful, and I think we should be adopting this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? The hon. minister.

Mr. Sabir: Thank you, Madam Chair. First, I would like to thank the member opposite and, in fact, all of them for their contribution to the discussion on Bill 5. We have discussed Bill 5 over the last few weeks. I continue to be proud of the strength of this legislation. The foundation of this bill comes from the important work, important consultations that were done by my colleague the MLA for Calgary-Currie and the contributions of disability advocates and Alberta families across this province. Bill 5 would allow Albertans with disabilities and their families to plan for the future. It will provide them access to the same tools all Albertans have to save and provide for their families.

While the amendment that has been proposed is outside the scope of the intent of the bill and not what individuals and families were consulted on, I value its intent. Unfortunately, however, this amendment doesn't actually accomplish what it intends to as it wouldn't change anything for AISH clients for the most part. What this amendment does is to refer to an authority which already exists. This amendment doesn't speak to what the threshold should be or to what kind of change is needed, and passing this amendment would not make a huge difference in the lives of Albertans who count on AISH. Regardless, as I said, I value what I think the intent was, to make this program better.

There are 60,000 Albertans who rely on this program, who get supports from this program: a living allowance of $1,588 and other benefits, including health benefits – the costs of dental, optical, prescription drugs – and some of the costs of child care. It's a comprehensive program. Any changes that should be made: I believe that we need to make them in a thoughtful manner and in consultation with the community. Right now, with whatever information we have, we know that a little over 15 per cent of people who receive support from AISH have employment income. As I said, any potential change would need consultation and would need to ensure that it benefits all Albertans and wouldn't create any unintended consequences. I'm sure that members opposite will understand that there is a need for more analysis, and I have heard a suggestion from other colleagues as well.

We have done a number of things to improve this program. Like, in the last four budgets we have added $103 million to make sure that Albertans get the support they need. We also put forward an AISH action plan, which will make sure that this program is accessible to Albertans.

I can say that these are all very good suggestions. As government we have always said that we are absolutely committed to looking at our programs to make sure they respond to the needs of Albertans. I thank the member. I will certainly take back their suggestion and will look at that at a later time.

Thank you very much. I will ask members at this point to vote against this amendment.

The Chair: Any other speakers to the amendment? Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill.

Ms McPherson: Thank you, Madam Chair. I appreciate the input from my colleague from Calgary-Mountain View and the minister. I would question: if the authority already exists to increase the amount of money that an AISH recipient can earn without being penalized, if the power to increase that allowance already exists, I wonder why it hasn't been done already. AISH recipients are the least able to be able to do anything about their circumstances. As my colleague pointed out, many people who receive AISH are living below the poverty line, and they're dealing with disabilities on top of being impoverished. That seems like incredibly unfair circumstances to leave people in if you have the power to make it different for them.

Dr. Swann: Even a small improvement.

Ms McPherson: It is indeed a small improvement.

Bill 5 is a good bill. However, my understanding is that the number of PDD recipients that would actually be positively impacted by this bill is less than 1 per cent. If we have the opportunity today, to use the minister's statistic, for 15 per cent of AISH recipients, if we can improve their quality of life today, I cannot think of any good reason to not go ahead and approve this amendment. I wonder if there are any AISH recipients that would disagree with me. I am very confident that if we were to poll AISH recipients, we would get close to a hundred per cent support for this sort of amendment today. For those reasons, I implore all MLAs to please vote in favour of this amendment.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Seeing none, I'll call the vote.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Chair: Back on the main bill, are there further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to the bill?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[The remaining clauses of Bill 5 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? That's carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. At this time I would move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek.

Ms Woollard: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports the following bill: Bill 5. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Any opposed, say no. So ordered.

Bill 17

Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

[Adjourned debate May 10: Mr. Panda]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Ceci: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 17, the Tax Statutes Amendment Act, 2018.

I also want to thank the members of the Assembly for their thoughts and debate in regard to this bill. As we've heard, Alberta's tax laws are typically reviewed every year and amended to ensure that government policy decisions are implemented and that the integrity of our tax system is maintained. This bill will maintain consistency between federal and Alberta legislation, align provincial legislation with administrative practices, address technical deficiencies, and repeal expired provisions.

I'd encourage all members of the House to support the bill. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Ceci: Closed.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Ms Ganley: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Seeing the excellent progress we have made today and over the last several days, I would move that we call it 6 o'clock and adjourn until 7:30 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:42 p.m.]

The Deputy Speaker: Good evening. Please be seated.

Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 7

Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I'd like to move third reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act.

The Deputy Speaker: Any others wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a fine day in Alberta, and we're getting a bunch of liquid sunshine. It's a great day. For those bike riders out there, it's rain. It's an honour to rise to speak and give some final thoughts on Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. I've spoken at length about the bill and concerns. We've tried to make amendments. The minister felt that we may have been a little bit over the top or whatever, but we're trying to go forward with it. Some of my concerns have been expressed by the producers that we've reached out to. I don't know if the minister has or those of his caucus that are involved in the rural ridings have, but then I guess rural ridings in the government is kind of a stretch.

As I've said numerous times, this bill is primarily about the local food scene and, more specifically, organic foods. Focusing on the overall purpose of this act would be to encourage the development of a local food sector throughout the province and to regulate agriculture products that are produced or processed in the province and marketed and sold as organic products within the province. We tried, Madam Speaker, to get a more accurate description regarding organic products or all products, and it wasn't met with great reception.

I don't have any issues with the concept of developing organic products. The primary focus would be to standardize the use of organic labelling and certification. In this case I believe it makes sense regarding those products grown and produced in the province. I'm hoping that the concurrence with CFIA standards in labelling and certification is important. Food safety is of the utmost importance, and we saw that go forward in the province when the tuberculosis outbreak happened in the southern portion of my constituency and that of the constituency of the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat.

Madam Speaker, it's all well and good. There is no one recognized threshold for products produced locally for sale within Alberta. This act will now make a uniform minimum standard even though the verbiage and potentially the regulations leading from that verbiage may or may not be awkward at some point in time. As we've discussed numerous times, previous to this act products sold within Alberta had no established common criteria for organic labelling or the standards thereof. However, if you exported those same products outside Alberta, you had to comply with CFIA standards for labelling and certification. Going forward, these CFIA standards will have to be met within Alberta in order to use the term "certified organic" on these products. Everyone will understand the rules, and the playing field will be level for everyone who wishes to participate with the organic labelling standard.

One thing we never talked about, Madam Speaker – I see the Government House Leader listening intently, and I'm pleased at that because he knows that there are some who transgress outside the regulations and receive their penalties and fines for that in federal legislation. There's been no regulatory talk about anything for anybody who produces anything outside these regulations, but possibly we could have organic producer police formed as a new regulatory body. It would be a good job-creation project, and I know the economic development minister would be appreciative of that.

An Hon. Member: Do some hard time.

Mr. Strankman: Yes. It has happened, Madam Speaker, that some of us have done some form of hard time, and many members of the government have that to look forward to in their future when they are in opposition.

But then abiding by these regulations developed by the CFIA would be a necessary expense. The minister hasn't talked about any expense or the creation of these regulations and who will pay for that, but it may just become another known line item as we approach three numbers of deficit going forward. Once there would be a fee, collected or certified, approved associated with using the certified organic label, the question is: how would this be adjudicated and returned to general revenues? Because it would appear that the government does need a lot of funding for the general revenue to spend in their own fashion. The question, Madam Speaker, is: how long would this process take, and is there an overbearing bureaucratic process involved? We haven't really seen how that could take place.

Madam Speaker, in other circumstances, in other jurisdictions outside this place I've talked and others have talked about the unintended consequences of legislation going forward. These are important questions that producers and the producers that we've spoken to may want answers to. It's part of the due diligence that they will have to embark on as part of their business model.

Madam Speaker, I have many friends in the diverse constituency of Drumheller-Stettler who are bee producers, and the organic products that they produce don't necessarily fall within this criteria because the legislation talks primarily about animals and food products only from plants and/or animals, but it doesn't actually specifically talk about insects, so insects are certainly of a consequence. These are important questions that producers need answers to. [interjection] I appreciate the input from the hon. minister. He'll get his opportunity. He's had his opportunity, and he'll get his opportunity in the future to speak more towards lucky number seven here, Bill 7, as we go forward.

Like I said, we have no issue with the volunteer program. Producers have a choice one way or the other, but there's been no conversation regarding penalties or potential infractions as people come forward and find out whether they are or are not included in the organic producer realm. These issues were made up under the brunt of my amendments last night, amendments that were brought forth in good faith, Madam Speaker, amendments that sought clarity, openness, and transparency. Unfortunately, once again, a government bereft of any practical farming experience has decided that these amendments were unnecessary, not only unnecessary but burdensome in some way.

At some point, you know, the minister talks about more red tape, but it's only red tape when we talk about it; it's not red tape when the government talks about it. We discussed it at some length, the amendments that ensure that the minister shall consult with producers and processors for a period of not less than 60 days and consider any comments or feedback prior to making a regulation.

Everyone that has had experience in this agriculture sector understood the need for this amendment, and several of my colleagues, including the bee producers that we reached out to and also the egg producers from Nobleford, talked at length about how important it was to consult with the very producers that could be impacted by this act prior – capital p-r-i-o-r – to enacting regulations that could do them harm. It seems like a proactive and forward-thinking concept, but sometimes the minister believes and has stated that this consultation would be a burden.

I do remember vividly the conversations in this Chamber in regard to Bill 6 as it was coming down to this stage, the third reading stage, of passing the legislation, when there were some 1,800 producers or approaching 2,000 on the steps of this Legislature and causing great consternation to the security of this facility.

This government complaining about red tape, Madam Speaker, defies logic. It's something out of the twilight zone. Thinking that proper consultation is somehow a burdensome and obscene reality is, quite frankly – and I'm inclined to give the minister the benefit of the doubt – not necessarily a problem. Perhaps he simply misspoke and was making a point in a poor fashion, and I've been guilty of that. I'll openly admit to that with good faith to the minister that he would receive my input without umbrage and possibly allow the regulations that come forward or his bureaucrats that allow the regulation to come forward would be benevolent to those producers that it affects.

As a group this government hasn't exactly endeared themselves to rural folk. In fact, we heard a great deal of conversation about the discussion about attendance at the Beef Industry Conference and how actual processing of cattle does and does not take place and the understanding of what some of that processing actually is and how it really affects the development and processing of cattle for their place to be put into the food market. My friend from the outstanding constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills pointed out last night when he referred to several cattle producers in the gallery watching last night's debate in a similar fashion, Madam Speaker: consultation is never a burden, nor is it red tape.

The Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills stated in confidence that if he were to go up to the gallery and poll those producers, 10 out of 10 times he would be told that, yes, they would like to be consulted before regulations. Madam Speaker, I too, along with the minister and several others from the government caucus, attended the beef and beer presentation last night, and they did have a chance to have open conversation directly with producers. That could have been considered. I know there are other members of government that consider a coffee session or a hallway conversation as a consultation, but it's a beginning at least.

Common sense needs to be a part of this place, and it's not always the thing that happens here, but we are all here with a gentlemen's agreement about a form of democracy. The government has the numbers to defeat these amendments, and however they do that is certainly their will or wish. Sometimes we feel that it's done with alarming frequency, alarming because I can't help but wonder if they truly understood what they were voting against. Three common-sense amendments in my case were deemed unnecessary and burdensome and adding a level of red tape. The minister talked about a committee to form a committee. Well, that's his interpretation, but possibly if the producers would have been demonstrated a form or any form of good faith in the presentation of previous legislation, we wouldn't be necessarily so sensitive about how this could go forward.

Madam Speaker, I stand before you as a farmer first and a politician second. I looked at this act from the viewpoint first of a farmer. I spoke today in my member's statement about farmers, and that is where my heart is. That's where my role is, the defence of farmers from government, onerous, overbearing, overreaching government dating back before I came to this place, from legislation, outdated legislation that was created for World War II in 1943.

Through certain alignment I'll call it of the political constellations that policy has been changed, and many of the government members that were here last night that were at the beef and barley presentation heard about the fantastic exponential development and growth of the barley and the malt processing industry in this province. It's almost in the double or triple digits of expansion, and the economic development minister would take well to those kinds of self-supported initiatives, not necessarily doing it with a government handout but more or less of a place of the government getting out of the way of the regulation and being given a hand up, which is the Alberta model and the Alberta way.

I've seen that, Madam Speaker, from my vast experience of living within six miles of the social experiment politically created in 1944 in Saskatchewan, the social NDP experiment known as Saskatchewan. At that time the population of Saskatchewan was greater than it was in Alberta. Within two years of that we had oil discovery in Alberta because those oil explorators from the Regina area were driven out by the fear of nationalization of their industry.

Madam Speaker, we developed amendments that we believed added to transparency, openness, and accountability and would have also reduced the optics of the minister, through this act, having way too much authority over agricultural products of a nonorganic nature. This was a major concern of some of the producer stakeholders that we reached out to and still was when we spoke to them this morning. It seems like a rational and measured fix to a possible problem. But once again we find ourselves in a situation where the minister has said: don't worry; it's fine; be happy; the council will ensure government overreach does not happen.

My colleague quoted a famous line from the late President Ronald Reagan last night, and it bears repeating: "trust, but verify." Another comment that he made, I believe, Madam Speaker, if I could get it right, again by former President Ronald Reagan, was where he talked about: "If it moves, tax it. If it keeps moving, regulate it. And if it stops moving, subsidize it." In many ways that's the Canadian way, and it's frustrating in many regards.

We have seen the idea of regulating it and subsidizing it in the province because we have seen vast growth of bureaucratic employment in the province. It certainly has been wonderful for those government employees who simply think that the creation of their government job is the development and the beginnings of economic wealth creation. But, Madam Speaker, they need to realize that their taxpayer dollar subsidized wage that they get comes from people who don't necessarily always work in government.

The percentage of the people that create wealth in government is probably in the single digits, and those people who are not receiving government subsidy is well in the double digits, approaching 90 per cent. You may know that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has a motto that says that small business nation-wide is big business. That's who these agriculture producers are that we talk about, faced with overbearing electrical costs, overbearing taxes on the natural things that they do to produce food.

You know, Madam Speaker, I was able to receive a pleasant note from one of the legislative staffers here today after my member's statement when I made the quote that if you eat, you're involved in agriculture. One of the staffers sent me a kind note saying that he had eaten that day, and he said: thank you very much, Mr. Strankman, for making that comment.

I'll leave it at that, Madam Speaker. I've covered a lot of ground here. It would have been much better if the government would have allowed us to have some positive input – we've given what input we can – but it would appear that that ship has sailed. So I'll leave it at that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other speakers to the bill? Calgary-Shaw.

Mr. Sucha: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before I begin, I want to cite one comment from my colleague from Drumheller-Stettler about the knowledge of our members in rural communities. As I look over at the government benches – those who are watching at home know that I get to sit in this little corner of government members on the opposition side – I see members who know many things about rural communities, who represent rural communities, from the Minister of Energy to the Member for West Yellowhead to the agriculture minister.

But the fact of the matter is that many of us have become citizens of Alberta because our families moved here to become farmers, and that was the case for myself. My grandfather settled in this area from Slovakia to be a farmer in the Innisfail area. My cousin still carries on that tradition today. While I recognize that sometimes it's hard to lose sight of the fact that I'm a member from a big city, the fact of the matter is that I know a lot about farming. I know a lot about that. I have constituents of mine who work on farms who live in the city. So the fact is that we really reflect the knowledge that the reach of farming isn't just a rural Alberta thing, living in a county. Many people who live in cities and towns also work on farms, are impacted by agriculture.

The fact, too, is that we also recognize that local food ties in to local and large communities. When you look at farmers' markets, a lot of these are opening up in the urban settings. Cities like Calgary, cities like Edmonton have large farmers' markets, and that's where a lot of the organic and the bio-organic movements are occurring. We want to help encourage and set policies in place that will allow for these industries to thrive and grow.

As I alluded to when we were in Committee of the Whole yesterday, the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future struck a committee that reviewed the agrifood and agribusiness sectors. This was supported by all members of the committee from, at the time, all three political parties. All of the motions that were brought forth there were unanimously passed.

Of those motions, one of them was that the government expand on exploring local food initiatives. I will say that again, that the, key word, government expand on exploring local food initiatives. The government, therefore the ministry of agriculture, should be expanding to find ways to support local food initiatives. That's what appointing this council does. That's what this bill does. That initiative, that policy that was struck in the report by the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future received support from members who currently sit in the UCP caucus.

I must encourage and support the minister on the fact that he is following the mandate of that committee that wants to look at other ways to expand on this. He is seeking advice from the local food council that's going to look at ways that we can really explore within there. I hear laughing coming from the opposition bench side, but I'll dismiss that. You know, it's a late night.

I don't know if we're still feeling the hangovers from the beef and barley meeting that we had, but that's a sector that we can look to on what this current government has done to help expand. At the end of the day, we saw an industry, which was the craft brewing industry, hurting. It had a hard time actually expanding and growing within this province. I remember specifically – and this would actually impact a UCP member – that the town of Vulcan wanted to establish their own beer. It was the Vulcan beer. They couldn't source a local distillery to make that beer. They had to outsource it to the United States because there was no craft brewing industry that could actually produce it in the right volume without having to deal with the red tape and the challenge that happened.

But now here in Alberta we have over 60 distilleries and 60 craft breweries because of the actions of this government. They've been doing things to support the local craft brewing industry. The fact is that these craft brewers are buying local. They're buying from barley producers. They're buying from hops producers here in Alberta. They're supporting the agrifood and agribusiness sector here in Alberta, and they're starting to now look at expanding past Alberta's borders into other markets. That's because of a lot of initiatives that we have done to support local food initiatives.

Now, I heard from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster who said that these things are naturally emerging on their own. Well, that's right. Craft brewing has been emerging for the past 10 years. When I was a restaurant manager by trade, I saw that occurring. But the downside was: do you know where we were buying our craft beer from? We were buying it from Idaho. We were buying it from Montana. We were buying it from B.C. We didn't have the policies in place here in Alberta to help support that industry in emerging. So at the end of the day, we had other jurisdictions that were capitalizing on our inability to support these local sectors.

I praise the minister for finding a way to start one of many processes in which we can help support the local industry. We can help them grow, and we can establish councils that will help advise the ministries on what policies they need to bring forward to help these sectors and help this industry emerge. They can work with multiple players, from small producers to people within the distribution industries and even to people within the restaurant industries, to really find ways to best promote this.

If we don't follow through on these processes, we're going to allow other jurisdictions to come in and hedge their bets on this. When we don't have policies like organic standards in place here in Alberta, when we don't help these sectors emerge, it allows other markets to move into Alberta and to grow and flourish here. While I support, you know, the Canadian economy and Canadian industries, I do want to see success coming from Alberta, and I think the best way for us to help it succeed is by starting it from the grassroots and allowing it to expand the way it is, similar to what we're seeing in the craft brewing industry.

So I encourage all members to support this bill in third reading, and I want to thank the minister for bringing this bill forward.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)? The hon. Member for Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Calgary-Shaw for his presentation. It was interesting. I'm sure the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler, whom the Member for Calgary-Shaw was referring to in his speech, was very interested in being educated on the agriculture industry. He's only been a farmer for 65 years, but I'm sure that Calgary-Shaw has got lots to teach him, and he's listening with an open mind.

What I did notice, though, is that it's interesting, Madam Speaker, through you to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, that he glossed over everything that the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler pointed out with this piece of legislation, completely ignoring his 65 years of experience in the agriculture industry, a member who's a hero in the agriculture industry, not a wheat smuggler. Let's be clear on that. He is a famous wheat smuggler, though, without a doubt, who stood up to a ridiculous regulation that was impacting him and his colleagues. He's a hero, without a doubt, in that industry, and to completely ignore what he has to say seems disappointing.

The question that I have, though, for the member is how he feels about the fact that he belongs to a government and is supporting a bill that has been brought forward by a minister of agriculture who stood in this House yesterday in front of people from the industry and said that consulting with farmers or ranchers was too much red tape for him and his government. Is it your opinion that it is not appropriate for the government to spend some time consulting with farmers and ranchers when they make decisions on their industry, or is it your opinion that they should?

We know that your minister thinks it's red tape to talk to farmers and ranchers, something that I know that the farmers and ranchers in our caucus were disappointed to hear, that the farmers and ranchers in the gallery were certainly disappointed to hear. They were not surprised, though, Madam Speaker, given the track record of this minister and this government when it comes to the agriculture industry and their disdain for my neighbours and my friends that they've shown over and over in this place.

Particularly what I would like you to focus on is the fact – you refer to a council that would advise the minister. But when the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler brought forward a very reasonable amendment that would make sure that those people were selected from across the wide variety of industry that makes up our agriculture industry in our province, were selected by industry stakeholders that could put forward names that would be able to help the minister do the job, that was too much red tape for this minister. I suggest that that would be certainly disappointing.

Now, you talk about local food. Local food is good. I like to go to the farmers' market every week in Bergen, just outside my farm, and I enjoy it. Those who produce the food there are part of the agriculture industry, so are the farmers and ranchers that are in all of our communities, and the idea that your government seems to think that they can continue to make legislation and regulations and refuse to talk to the people that are in that industry is extremely disappointing to rural Alberta. I can tell you that. It's very disappointing to the agriculture industry.

It's another reason why this government – an NDP government who, let's be honest, in this province and certainly other provinces have their roots in rural Alberta – after the actions of this government in this term, the first NDP government in Alberta's history, in a very short period of time managed to wipe themselves completely from existence in rural Alberta because they've shown complete disdain for agriculture.

I know that members – they'll find out soon enough. I go to rural Alberta every day. I live there. I can tell you that people are still furious about how they have been treated by this government. You saw it again last night from your minister, that it's too much red tape to talk to farmers and ranchers.

Member, is it too much red tape to talk to farmers and ranchers, or do you disagree with your minister?

Mr. Sucha: Well, the amendment that we saw from there was the fact that you wanted to establish a council to establish a council. The council's process is to consult with farmers and ranchers, similar to what the Standing Committee on Alberta's Economic Future did. So when I see the opposition to this bill and the challenges that we're seeing to this local food council – it was the committee that we struck, that consulted with farmers and ranchers, that advised us to establish this, and this was supported by all members of that side of the House.

Now, with my limited time I will say, you know – and this alludes to some of the comments that I heard from the Member for Drumheller-Stettler. One of the biggest things that I heard was feedback in relation to Bill 6. Well, one of the first visits I had in the new year was with a constituent of mine who was injured at a farm. He was injured in a vehicular accident. He was a farm worker who said: "If you hadn't passed that bill, I would not have received compensation. I would not be receiving a paycheque. I would not be able to pay my mortgage." I will, number one, say that it was because of that that he could support his family and support his loved ones.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I'd like to take some time tonight here and talk about Bill 7. It was just interesting hearing the Member for Calgary-Shaw talk about his rural constituency. One thing I should remind him of is that even the people in urban Alberta didn't like Bill 6, and the farmers, of course, liked it even less. So I guess that when we hear the Member for Calgary-Shaw talk about, you know, some of their members, the NDP MLAs representing farmers, I would like to see how many of them represented farmers when we were dealing with Bill 6. I think we know the answer to that. It was actually zero.

But getting back to Bill 7 here, one of the biggest problems with Bill 7 is the vague wording. I mean, there are just so many things that are open to interpretation, open to the minister's discretion, that I think it's alarming. We see this over and over with this government, where they want a blank cheque, where they want to pass a skeletal bill and then fill in the details afterwards. Of course, that's just not what we're here to do. We're here to discuss legislation and discuss what's in this legislation, and when big details are left out, I don't think it's something that we can – you know, we don't have much to discuss, then, if we don't have the details of what's happening.

One thing that this act does is that it gives power over all agricultural products produced or processed in Alberta. Of course, Madam Speaker, I don't know if that's what the intent of this bill was, but that's what it does do. That's obviously alarming, and it gives tremendous powers to the minister. Again, we talk about how these bills that this government brings forward leave all the details out and leave it all up to the minister to decide afterwards, and of course that makes it hard to decide whether our constituents want us to support something like this or not.

Another issue is the certification process. We don't know how long it could take. It could take years, and of course if we have farmers or people growing on their land that want to be involved in the certification process, we don't know how long it takes. We don't know how much it's going to cost. Things like that add more uncertainty to a bill like this.

Now, it says here, "The Minister shall ensure that the members appointed to the Council are representative of Alberta's local food sector, including small producers and processors." Well, Madam

Speaker, we did have a chance here to pass amendments that would really identify who would be selected to be on this council, but obviously the government didn't want to have any specifics to that. They wanted to leave it vague, leave it up to the minister to pick and choose whomever they wanted. Of course, I think that's somewhat disrespectful to the agricultural producers themselves, who have organizations, who already have groups together. They could pick people that they wanted to have represent them on a council like this.

The costs associated with the marketing council are unknown. We don't know if it will be self-funded, if it is something that's government funded, or how that's done. We don't know with this bill.

Now, it is important to have the organic label mean something to Albertans, more than just a marketing ploy, so there are some benefits here. But, obviously, again, how this government gets to some of these decisions on what they do: there is maybe not always the best process involved.

Now, this legislation will use federal guidelines under the CFIA. Of course, you know, that's a standard set-up. You know, those are some Canadian standards that they want to go by. Whether these standards are something that the producers in Alberta want to have to go by or not is something that needs to be discussed.

I look at some of these other issues here, you know: the uncertainty of who's going to be on the council, concerns that maybe the council will be dominated by one sector and not be representative of all the different sectors that could be represented, and, of course, again, the costs associated with the marketing council.

Again, a lot of the producers we've talked to worry about the vagueness of the language in this bill. One of the things they wonder about is this definition: "a product, including any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from an animal or a plant." What does that actually mean? There's obviously a lot of vagueness here.

Again, I think a previous member brought up bees and honey. Is that included in "any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from an animal or a plant"? We don't know exactly what's included in some of this.

Now, I think it's proven that Albertans already support local food. In a 2016 survey 92 per cent of households bought locally at farmers' markets. Obviously, I go to farmers' markets myself, and I buy produce there, as do, obviously, lots of Albertans. We have a situation here where these producers are already being supported by the local people, and that's great. Would we like to see more? Of course we would like to see more. But we're not sure if this bill is getting there or not or if it's actually going to exclude different people from being able to market their produce, you know, in the way that they would like to.

Now, when I look at the bill itself, it says here:

12 The Minister may, on terms and conditions specified by the Minister, designate any person or class of persons to act as an inspector for the purposes of this Act.

Madam Speaker, we have a situation here where the minister, on terms and conditions specified by the minister, basically can do whatever he or she wants as far as designating any person or class of persons to act as an inspector. Without any kind of guidelines or whatever, the minister is going to decide who gets to be an inspector for the purposes of this act. I guess I don't know what that really means. I don't know who that would include or not include.

Just to give you an idea of what it entails for a person, obviously, if a complaint comes in:

Complaint

10 A person may, in accordance with the regulations, make a complaint to the Minister regarding the advertising, labelling or offering for sale of an agricultural product that the person suspects is not certified in accordance with section 8.

The minister, of course, has designated somebody to act as an inspector. Then this is where it comes in, okay?

11(1) On receipt of a complaint under section 10, an inspector must verify that the producer or processor of the agricultural product that is the subject of the complaint holds the appropriate certification in accordance with section 8.

It goes on:

(2) If the producer or processor of the agricultural product holds the appropriate certification, the inspector must notify the complainant of the producer's or processor's certification status and conclude the inspection.

Well, that makes sense. It's pretty simple.

(3) If the producer or processor of the agricultural product does not hold the appropriate certification, the inspector must conduct an investigation.

Now, going on to 13(1), it talks about inspections and investigations.

13(1) On receipt of a complaint under section 10, an inspector may conduct an inspection or investigation to determine whether a person is complying with this Act, the regulations or an enforcement instrument.

(2) In conducting an inspection or investigation, an inspector may do one or more of the following:

- (a) subject to subsection (4), enter, at any reasonable time, any place, including any means of conveyance or transport, where an inspector has reason to believe that
 - (i) agricultural products are sold,
 - (ii) advertising materials, packaging or labels for an agricultural product are created or kept,
 - (iii) a certification record is kept, or
 - (iv) a record related to the sale of an agricultural product is kept.

So this person whom the minister designates – we don't know what person or class of persons this will be – has the power at any reasonable time or any place to go to where the agricultural products are sold, where the materials or packaging or labels may be, where the records are kept, or where a record related to the sale of the agricultural product is kept. Obviously, this opens up a whole issue, of course, around the powers of this inspector, who – we don't know, again, what person or class of persons the minister may designate – has this enormous amount of responsibility to be able to go into probably a person's place of residence, I would suggest, because a lot of these small producers would be doing this out of their home, and would be able to search through a person's place of residence or work or wherever they happen to be doing this and search through all these things.

Furthermore, they can:

- (b) examine a certification record, a record related to the sale of an agricultural product, any other relevant record or advertising material, packaging or label of an agricultural product.

Again, just more things that this inspector may or may not do.

It goes on:

- (c) by written notice, require a person to provide, at a time, date and place specified in the notice, a certification record, a record related to the sale of an agricultural product, any other relevant record or advertising material, packaging or label of an agricultural product.

8:10

So after they've been in and searched and done all that work, then they can still require by written notice that this information be provided. I'm not sure why they would be able to do both: go into a person's residence or whatever, dig out all this material, or just ask for it by written notice. I mean, I would suggest that asking someone to provide it by written notice would be far less intrusive.

Going on:

- (d) subject to subsection (3), remove for review and copying a certification record, a record related to the sale of an agricultural product, any other relevant record or advertising material, packaging or label of an agricultural product.

Obviously, at this point they can start confiscating possessions of people that are suspected of something here.

This isn't just a simple bill to, you know, support Alberta's local food sector, as it suggests in its name. This is a far-reaching bill. It isn't just as simple as encouraging people to shop local and buy local produce.

Now, it goes on.

- (e) use data storage, information processing or retrieval devices or systems that are used by a processor, producer or vendor in order to examine a certification record or other record in readable form;
- (f) question any person on matters the inspector believes may be relevant.

Obviously, they'd be able to, you know, do an investigation where they're interviewing other people.

- (g) require a person to provide oral or written statements, whether under oath or otherwise, at a specified time, date and place.

Obviously, the inspector would be gaining information to be used, I guess, to prosecute somebody, with written statements under oath.

Again, I'm a little uncertain why there couldn't have been some sort of designation of who would be an inspector rather than just "any person or class of persons."

Let's go on here.

- (3) An inspector who removes a record or advertising material, packaging or label under subsection (2)(d) must provide a receipt and return the record or advertising material, packaging or label to the person who provided it within a reasonable time.

They, of course, have to provide a receipt when they confiscate something, I guess, from an individual.

It says here:

- (4) An inspector may enter a private dwelling under subsection (2)(a) only with the consent of the occupant of the private dwelling or pursuant to an order under subsection (5).

Of course, then under (5) it says:

- (5) If the consent required under subsection (4) is refused or cannot reasonably be obtained, the inspector may apply to a justice as defined in the Provincial Offences Procedure Act for an order directing the occupant to permit the inspector to enter the private dwelling to exercise the inspector's powers and perform the inspector's duties and functions.

Obviously, Madam Speaker, this person is not just any person that is going to be doing this. I would hope that the minister already has some idea who might be qualified or who might not be qualified to do this kind of work, where they're, you know, entering private dwellings or, if they can't, then of course applying to a justice for an order to be able to enter the private dwelling.

Obviously, I think there are some pretty big issues here as far as who would be doing investigations, how these investigations would be handled, and why couldn't we have had that in this bill rather than leave it up to the minister's discretion afterwards?

Of course, I just want to go into offences here. Now, these are obviously some serious things. It says:

- 18(1) A person who contravenes section 9, 14, or 15(3) or the regulations is guilty of an offence and is liable
 - (a) in the case of an individual, to a fine of not more than $5000, and

- (b) in the case of a corporation, to a fine of not more than $20 000.

- (2) Where a corporation is guilty of an offence under this Act, an officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable to the fines provided for the offence, whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted for or convicted of the offence.

Madam Speaker, you know, these aren't light fines. These aren't slaps on the wrist. These could become very serious. We see that this isn't just: "Let's help the local farmers. Let's help local produce do well and get people to buy local." This is pretty serious stuff here.

I guess maybe the government's plan here was to try to make up for the failure of Bill 6 and how they drove so many farmers and so many rural people away from themselves and really did let people know that they didn't do the consultation that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow. Is this under 29(2)(a), or are you speaking to the bill?

Mr. Clark: No, it's not.

The Deputy Speaker: Speaking to the bill. Go ahead.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Madam Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 7. You know, we've had some conversations about this bill within our caucus, and I've certainly given a lot of reflection on this bill. The first question I ask is: well, who doesn't like local food? Of course we do. Alberta farmers are remarkable; they're innovative. The local food movement is taking off, not only here in Alberta but, of course, around the world. It's one of the great gems of our province that we have such remarkable producers in this province.

We've looked at the costs that are associated with the bill. There don't seem to be massive costs here. But at the same time, whenever I look at legislation, I ask myself: well, what problem are we seeking to solve here? How do we quantify the challenges? And if there are certain problems to overcome or certain opportunities to take advantage of, is legislation, in fact, the best way to do that, or is government overreaching for one reason or another?

You know, one of the aspects of this bill that I suppose would be favourable would be the organic certification piece. It's certainly potentially valuable. But my understanding is that I don't believe we necessarily need legislation to close that gap. There are other ways of addressing that particular concern.

So it is with hesitation that I will be voting against this bill because, of course, I think that local food is an important part of the vibrancy of the province, but when I look at the problems that this bill seeks to solve, I actually don't see that there's an enormous challenge to overcome. There is some risk here that this bill overreaches and that local producers may feel put upon.

You know, I look at Grow Calgary and the work that they're doing. They do remarkable work, and they've been doing that for many years without this bill in place. I feel that there are many producers that are already doing great work. Certainly, I don't feel that that work will be constrained if this bill does not pass. I also don't see, necessarily, a direct line of sight between how that work will be enhanced should this bill pass.

It's my view that unless there's a compelling reason, a substantially massive positive to moving forward with a bill or a huge problem to overcome, legislation is a pretty blunt instrument.

It's a pretty big thing to do. So while I am a big supporter of local food, I feel that at the end of the day, this bill solves a problem that Alberta doesn't have. As a result, I will be voting against Bill 7.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Seeing none, any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to third reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. I must confess that over the last few weeks I've been doing a lot of thinking about what's being proposed here with Bill 7. There are parts of it that I can agree with, but there is an underlying theme here that prevents me from being able to support Bill 7. I believe that there were a few very reasonable amendments that were proposed to try and help improve Bill 7. They were rejected by the majority here, and because of that, I believe that I am in a position where I cannot support Bill 7 in its current wording.

One thing, I think, that needs to be recognized here is that the more and more that I go through the bill, the underlying theme that comes out to me, especially with regard to the local food council and the impacts that may have on the development of that industry and the advancement of that industry and the possible encumbrances that could come on that industry, brings great concern to me. It seems like the government, the minister are essentially saying to us and to other producers to just trust them: just trust us; we will do what's right for the industry. I've got to admit, Madam Speaker, that I'm not comfortable in doing that.

I believe that there may be good intentions involved with developing the local food industry, but I also understand that good intentions don't always come without unforeseen circumstances. The point in time where it really became obvious to me that I could not support how we were moving forward with Bill 7 was last night, when an amendment came forward to do 60 days of consultation before putting regulations in place, the fact that that was not acceptable to the minister, to the government to consider. That's a very reasonable thing to do, to approach the industry, whatever industry that is, whether that's cereal grains, canola, beef, the hog industry, the chicken, the dairy, the vegetable growers, all of these different types of industries.

For the minister to have the kind of power that is being given the minister through Bill 7 I believe is somewhat dangerous ground. I can't come to a position of just saying: I trust you. I think if there was a chance that that amendment would have passed, I think there was a good chance that I could have supported Bill 7. But the fact that the minister and the government are saying: "We know what we're doing. We don't need to consult. We don't need to go through that stage of actually asking the industry if this is going to work, if this is not going to work, getting the input," there are many times where – and we talked about it last night, about how the hog industry developed their quality assurance program at the industry level.

The government facilitated some of that, assisted in developing that. There were many times through that development that industry association representatives learned from producers why this will work or why that will not work, and we had to adjust as we went. That was a very healthy maturation of a quality assurance program. That could have been something that would have helped here, to have a 60-day consultation where one person in the industry can come up with the understanding that, you know, if we do this, then this is likely to happen. Has anybody thought of that? Then we can stop a potential disaster from happening.

I have no problem supporting the local food week. I think that's a great part of Bill 7, but I do have significant concern with how, you know, the act talks about local food. Well, what is local food? It defines local food as essentially "agricultural products produced in Alberta" and, according to the regulations that come forward, "agricultural products processed in Alberta." So this is an act that will take into consideration all agricultural products. Some people think that, well, this is just going to be the local food sector, which will be small producers and small processors. No. It definitely has the potential to be a very large impact on the food production industry. For the minister to say, "Well, just trust us; we'll do what's right," concerns me.

We talked about: "The Minister shall ensure that the members appointed to the Council are representative of Alberta's local food sector." Because we've identified that the local food sector would be all agricultural products, I'm not sure why the line in there "including small producers and processors" was necessary. Local food. We have beef that we have on our dinner table. We have chicken, eggs, dairy, pork, all of these products. The majority of these products that we're consuming within Alberta are locally produced. They're local food. So if there was some kind of a definition that would be different than all of those products. Are we giving the minister the ability to actually step into a lot of what is already happening?

And government getting their fingers into forcing industry to move down a branding exercise – because largely I look at this as a branding exercise. Even some of the quality assurance programs that were being done by industry, whether that's the vegetables, whether that's the pork, whether that's the beef, all of these types of quality, food safety assurance programs: a lot of it is about ensuring that the consumer can feel confident that the food they're going to consume is safe. Also, there are many of these products that are developed as specialty products, where the food is of high quality or higher quality possibly or of a differing quality, different aspects.

You know, I was optimistic that we would be able to come to a point where I can vote in favour of Bill 7. I want to try and promote and have the ability that the industry is able to move forward in a healthy manner, in a manner that I feel it will succeed, that it'll succeed in a way that does not have a lot of regulations put in the way of being able to succeed.

Last night at our beef and beer event I had a conversation with one gentleman. That gentleman and his partner run a feedlot in my constituency. They had discussions last week with regard to: would they start a feedlot now? Would they be able to, for one thing, or would they want to based on all the things that have changed over the last 30 years that they've run a feedlot? It's one thing to run a feedlot now or to run a confined feeding operation or to run a large farming operation, but those operations don't just spring up out of nowhere. These gentlemen: I'm not sure how many cattle they're running, but say that they have a 25,000-head feedlot. That didn't just happen overnight. That likely started as maybe a 200-, a 500-head feedlot. And they grow and they mature and they advance over time, and they get the ability to do all the paperwork that's necessary. He said that they have two secretaries and that probably a third of their time is just dealing with the paperwork for government programs and assurance programs that's necessary to ensure that they're following all the guidelines.

So we don't want to get to a point where regulations actually get in the way of individuals moving on an opportunity that they see, but the regulations are too large that they can't see their way past that. I believe that we need to have a certain number of regulations in place to ensure that the food that is being offered to consumers can be guaranteed safe, that the quality is of a standard. We have a lot of that in place now.

Bill 7 allows just too much – there's too much leeway, in my opinion, that the minister can move one direction or the other. I just can't come to the point where I can say: yes; I'll trust you with that. I believe that the minister has very good intentions, but if the minister is not prepared to take a regulation that he's been advised by the food council to move forward with, a regulation that the food council thinks will actually help the industry, and to consult then with producers in general – for one thing, we don't even know who's going to end up on this local food council. Like, we have to trust that also. Is that going to be an open nomination? Is that going to be where people can apply and where they can look at many different individuals from across many different sectors? I believe that's important, but will that happen? I don't know. Bill 7 doesn't tell me.

Another thing that does concern me is when we move into part 2 on organic agricultural products. This is all fine and dandy. But I look at all of the industries, whether they're the chicken, the dairy, the wheat, the canola, the beef, or the pork, the quality assurance programs, the inspection programs, and all of these other areas. A lot of that is industry led and industry administered and funded by industry. We don't know from Bill 7 if that will happen here.

We do see that we have inspectors being designated, inspections being authorized, investigations being authorized, all in the name of brand protection. Organic food is a brand. It's all in the name of brand protection. But at the end of the day the recovery of all these fees and charges and so on: is that going to be on the taxpayer to foot that bill, or is that going to be on the industry? Now we have a brand, the organic brand, that possibly has a leg up on the rest of industry because government is going to cover off all of these costs of validation and the auditing of farms and the auditing of processors.

The recovery of fees. It says, "The Crown may recover . . ." I would suggest that the Crown probably should recover the costs from the industry based off the other industries there. They're brand protection types of programs. They're administered by the industry, and those costs are incurred by industry.

Offences with regard to organic food. In the case of an individual . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Mr. Hunter: I was very intrigued by what the member was saying and would like to find out a little bit more about his comments and his thoughts on this matter.

Mr. van Dijken: Thank you. I just have a couple more points to finish off with, Madam Speaker. Thank you to my colleague for allowing me to continue.

Under the offences in the organic food portion of Bill 7 we have: in the case of an individual a fine of not more than $5,000, in the case of a corporation a fine of not more than $20,000. You know, like, I'm not sure why the individual and the corporation are considered to be two different fines; why the corporation is a $20,000 maximum and why the individual is a $5,000 maximum.

My farm is a corporation, but it's run by an individual. So it makes me wonder: if I was to move into the organic production of grains or others, milk or any kind of organic production, would I be considered as an individual or as a corporation? Would the inspector, then, consider me as an individual even though I'm a corporation and limit the fine to $5,000? These are the kinds of things that I think are a very weak part of Bill 7, where we delineate those two. I don't understand why we would delineate those two. If there was a delineation based off gross sales or something like that, maybe there's a reason for that, but I don't necessarily believe that that's a necessary type of delineation.

Overall, Madam Speaker, it does disappoint me that I have to vote against Bill 7 and that I cannot support Bill 7. I believe that the minister has good intentions here, but they have put forward a bill that allows way too much leeway for the minister to have power over industry, that I would not be comfortable with and I believe that many Albertans are not comfortable with.

It's interesting. In the conversations last night I mentioned to the individuals at the beef-and-beer event that, yeah, I was going to be back in the Legislature that evening and talking about Bill 7. One of the gentlemen said to me, "Oh, that's a nothing bill." I said, "Well, have you read it?" He said, "No, but I've heard that's a nothing bill." I brought up the time when we had Chops and Crops, and Bill 6 was introduced that week.

I went to Chops and Crops and the Alberta pork producers association. I had close connections with Alberta Pork at the time. I had a hog operation. I said, "So what's your guys' take on Bill 6?" And the individual said: "Oh, yeah. We're fine with it. They came and talked to us, that they were going to do a workers' compensation bill. And, yeah, that's all good. Most of our guys are on workers' compensation or the like." I said, "Well, did you read the bill?" He said: "No. No, we haven't." I said, "You should read it, and you should get your producers to read it," because that's what the consultation does. People read it, and they say: okay, now this is going to affect me in this way.

Right away, you know, within a short period of time all of a sudden we started to hear from producers that had concerns over the initial draft of Bill 6. I must admit that we were able to improve Bill 6 dramatically from when it was first introduced. But that being said, the fact that it was introduced in the way it was caused the rural communities, the producers of Alberta, of agricultural products to have grave concern with giving the minister or giving this government excess power over the ability to regulate their industry, and we need to be cognizant of that.

If we're going to have producer buy-in and if we're going to have healthy industries, we need producer buy-in. If we're going to move forward in a way that government and producers can work hand in hand, we have to consult, consult, consult. It's very much like building a home or doing any kind of carpentry work. Measure twice, cut once. It's standard. You can never consult too much.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Hunter: Thank you, Madam Speaker. To tell you the truth, I wasn't actually going to speak to this bill. I think that the issues have been clearly delineated by my colleagues, but after listening to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, I just had to get up. First of all, I have to say that the audacity, I guess, of the Member for Calgary-Shaw to start lecturing a seasoned farmer: it shocked me. Well, actually, I shouldn't be shocked in this House, but I was a little shocked.

I have another point that I want to make. Now, the Member for Calgary-Shaw said that when he was the manager of a restaurant, I believe, he was always concerned about the fact that he had to purchase, you know, alcohol from microbreweries down in the States. I think that's what he said. I want to go on this for a little bit.

If I understand correctly, the name of the bill is: Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. Let's just think about this for a second, Madam Speaker. Their solution, in their great wisdom, in order to be able to support Alberta's local food sector is to regulate the whole industry. If we just follow this through, I guess that means that they need to make sure that the organic foods that are coming into this province, that already have to follow the rules, these extra certification rules, which obviously is a cost, they have to make sure that the playing field is fair. So how is it that these guys saying that they're supporting Alberta's local food sector, creating regulations for our local producers so that it can be a fair, equal playing field with those foreign producers, how does that actually support Alberta's local food producers?

The argument that they make – you know, it goes back to this whole thing that we've been talking about for a while now, which is this. This government is a government of unintended consequences. Constantly. [interjections] I know that they're chirping over there on that side. You know what? The truth hurts. I know.

But here's the reality. The reality is that if they really wanted to be able to give a competitive advantage to our local suppliers and local producers, they wouldn't regulate them. They'd get out of the way and let them produce it, because every time you regulate an industry, that industry has to pay for it. There's a cost to it. If there was any comparative advantage that our local producers had in Alberta, they are now taking it completely away by adding this.

So, Madam Speaker, the whole argument that the Member for Calgary-Shaw was making earlier about how he was so upset that he had to buy from foreign producers, microbreweries – he is creating, supposedly, at least the minimum of an equal playing field, which could easily drive people out because they can't compete now or because they just don't have the economies of scale. There are so many factors involved. Did he ever think about that? Did the members opposite ever think about that? I doubt it.

Here we are in a situation where they are once again in over their heads, creating policy without thinking about the ramifications and the cost to the very people that they are supposed to be supporting. That's why I think it's absolutely ironic that they would say: Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. I love how they say these things, yet their bill is doing the absolute opposite.

Anyways, Madam Speaker, I felt it was important to get up and set the record straight. I will not be supporting this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under Standing Order 29(2)(a)?

Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Mr. Nixon: Madam Speaker, I'd like to move a motion to move to one-minute bells for the remainder of the evening.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak? The hon. minister to close debate.

Mr. Carlier: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I enjoyed listening to the discussion, I think, from both sides. I find some of it somewhat useful. I do. Some of it I find amusing.

It is my pleasure today to rise and speak to third reading of Bill 7, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act. This legislation is an opportunity for our government to help the local food sector realize its full potential through a more focused and deliberate approach. Alberta and Saskatchewan are currently the only provinces that have not implemented a local food strategy.

There are several key points in this legislation, including setting standards for local organic food, designating a local food week, and creating a local food council. Continuing to support the growth of this industry is an important step in achieving our government's economic diversification and job creation goals. This legislation will help create opportunities to promote the local food industry, enhance consumer awareness and education, and reinforce consumer confidence. Food and beverage processing is one of the largest employers in our province's manufacturing sector, with record sales of $14.6 billion in 2016. Consumer interest in and demand for local food continues to grow, making this an important market opportunity for rural sustainability and for Alberta producers and processors. In Alberta local food sales and direct-to-consumer channels, farmers' markets, and farm retail have more than doubled since 2008 and exceeded $1.2 billion in 2017. Alberta has a vibrant farmers' market industry, with more than 120 Alberta-approved farmers' markets, contributing more than $850 million in 2017 to the growth and diversity of our provincial economy.

This legislation, Supporting Alberta's Local Food Sector Act, is the result of widespread and robust consultation. I have hosted round-table discussions with more than 70 people in the local food sector, including individual producers and commodity group representatives, processors, farmers' market managers and retailers, board members of municipal and district associations, Hutterite colonies, and indigenous people. Furthermore, we received feedback from 170 stakeholders and members of the public through online consultations. Participants were supporting local food and promoting it through a local food week. They were also supportive of enhancing the integrity of organic products and building consumer awareness and confidence around what is and what is not organic food.

They also indicated other ways to promote our province's world-class local food systems such as enhancing local food aggregation and distribution; working with food processors to meet the needs of various market channels such as direct to consumer, retail, and food service; and financial tools through the publicly owned Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, to name just a few.

Bill 7 spells out in detail the aspects of the local food market that the local food council will be asked to explore. The council will provide advice and recommendations within a year. From honey to mead – yes, Madam Speaker, from honey to mead because bees are animals and, actually, within the Department of Agriculture and Forestry they're considered livestock. So honey to mead, barley to beer, pork to bacon: we are blessed with some of the best food in the world.

An Hon. Member: Food is good.

Mr. Carlier: Food is good.

This government is proud to work arm in arm with producers, processors, retailers, and consumers to support Alberta local food. I encourage my colleagues on both sides of the House to support this important bill, that will help ensure a sustainable and diverse local food sector for Alberta's future.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 10 An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements

The Chair: Any questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: It's a pleasure to rise to speak to Bill 10.

The Chair: My apologies, hon. member. We're still on an amendment.

Mr. Clark: Fair enough.

The Chair: Amendment A1. Are you speaking to the amendment?

Mr. Clark: No, I will not. I've got another amendment to propose, so we'll park that. Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. On amendment A1, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod.

Mr. Stier: Good evening. Thank you, Madam Chair, and thank you to everyone that's come forward tonight to have a listen to what I have to say once again about another great municipal affairs topic. It's a pleasure to visit with you all here tonight on this wonderful evening.

Madam Chair, I've spoken to this bill on several occasions already, both originally in second reading and also on a reasoned amendment that we launched earlier on in this process. It has been interesting to see how the various comments have come forward from the various speakers that have contributed to Bill 10. With that – I've already spoken to it so many times – I will be brief, but I will try to get a few points out tonight that I think are important with respect to the amendments that have suddenly been brought forward by the ministry.

When we first started working with Bill 10, we came across the technical briefing that was provided by the ministry a few weeks ago. During second reading we mentioned a number of concerns that we had after that briefing and especially after we had looked through Bill 10 itself. Members in the House may remember when I first spoke to Bill 10 that one of the major concerns that we had with the bill was that the darn thing was only seven pages long but it contained a vast change in the way municipalities might be doing business in the future, especially in terms of municipal tax and assessments. All of this was based solely on, it seemed to be, bringing in these energy-efficient types of home improvements.

What we noticed there, though, at the same time was that in those seven pages there was an awful lot of information that was missing. Members in the House may recall from when I have spoken to this bill before that I take municipal affairs as being a fairly serious topic, with my background and so on. I've always taken the time, I've thought, with this portfolio to try to ensure that if legislation is brought forward, it should be something that is scrutinized carefully. There is no other portfolio, I believe, in the government of Alberta that affects more people throughout all of these communities than Municipal Affairs. When I see a bill that seems to be vague, which seems not to have a lot of information in it, it makes it very difficult for those of us as legislators to actually be able to give it the proper scrutiny it deserves and be able to look upon it fairly and actually get a good idea of what's being presented and what is really being conveyed in the briefings that we receive and in the comments that we get from the ministry.

You know, it's something that needs to be worded correctly, I believe. It's something that needs to have a good purpose, and it's something that needs to have all of the legalese in it that is required so that if this is handed down to municipalities – that is what Municipal Affairs is about and the Municipal Government Act is about, trying to help municipalities in governing locally – it has all the meat on the bone, it has all the details so that the chief administrative officers, or the CAOs, and their councils and their staffs can work with these new ideas and programs and services that are brought forward and they can do so with the least amount of problems and to a degree of success so that everyone is treated fairly.

In my mind, my question as I read Bill 10 originally was: how could we possibly in all fairness support the bill? This was mentioned again before this amendment came out. How could we give this our support if it was missing so much information?

It's true that usually during these types of legislations that are brought forward, they do seem to be vague at first, and they do miss a lot of information. One of the problems that we've been complaining about in this House for two to three years now is that a lot of times they've left too much of the meat on the bone to the regulations. Of course, as most people know in the House, we don't debate regulations in the House. We don't have any involvement with that. The folks over on the government side do that. It's hard for us to come up with really, really good, important debate topics and subjects when the legislation itself does not contain sufficient information. You know, it's hard to give it that scrutiny when it's missing.

With the amendment that's come forward now, I was pleased actually to see the amendment come forward. I heard about it last night when I was in my office working. It turned out it was a government amendment that actually looked like it was three pages long, which is a lot larger and heavier than what we normally see in terms of an amendment that comes up during debate in this House. Normally it's a three-sentence amendment from one of the members, and either it passes or fails. Most often it fails. This one, I was told, was a government amendment, so I was quite interested in that because the original bill is only seven pages long. Well, it has a lot of pages, physical pages, in it, actually. The actual pages themselves, as most of these bills are written, are duplicates. There were only seven pages of information there in its original content. With the amendment we now see it's three pages long, so it's almost fair to say that almost 50 per cent of the legislation that was proposed in Bill 10 is being replaced, totally deleted, or amended.

We went and had a look at that, and this morning, after looking over that the night before, I attended another briefing that the department was quite kind enough to provide to us on our side of the House here. I met with one of my long-term acquaintances in the ministry, one of the assistant deputy ministers, and a couple of the staff. They went through and were kind enough to point out some of the things that are in this amendment. It was, quite frankly, satisfying to me that some of the concerns that we had and some of the missing information that we had concerned ourselves about before were now actually being somewhat addressed. I say "somewhat addressed" because, of course, with my way of thinking and being analytical most of my life, I like to see as much detail as possible, but certainly there are some things in the bill now that seem to be there that weren't before.

Just a few to mention here tonight before we get too far along. We now see that we've got actually some information with regard to key segments and key segments that were missing before, by the way, including some of the serious topics that I thought should have been there, the lending details. Some of the key topics were the topics that were sort of vague in how the municipalities would put these bylaws together. Some of the key topics were talking about how they would administer this and how they would proceed with the actual set-up of changing the tax rolls and putting in a new figure on their assessments. A new tax bill would come out with a new line on it to include a new proposed tax amount that people would pay if that municipality went ahead and proceeded with this new program.

It was actually a pleasant meeting this morning. The key segments now seem to have things. In terms of lending, as an example, they are now finally including some comments about the interest rate. They're now including some comments about the terms of repayment. They're now including some comments with respect to sources of funding, et cetera. This was key stuff, and it looks to me as if the government has admitted through the process that we've done here in the past few weeks that they were indeed perhaps at fault and hadn't quite got enough detail into the legislation, and they felt now that it's necessary to put it in. That's the only thing that you can conclude from that.

The other part that I mentioned a moment or two ago was the clarification to municipalities on the bylaw process. It was interesting to hear from the ministry this morning. They said that they had now gone out and talked to some of the key administering groups that are involved in municipal affairs, and they had realized that there was not a lot of information in there for those people themselves to work with.

I was, Madam Chair, fairly reasonably surprised and somewhat satisfied with the content of this amendment. We thought that there was some progress made here after this morning's meeting. We wonder, though, why the government didn't do this to begin with. We wonder why the government didn't go ahead right from the start with this new change in how people can actually borrow money through this system, why they didn't take the time to get it right to begin with. We find fault with that. We think that that information was key, and it should have been there.

We also find fault when the government brings forward a program that changes the way credit is going to be dealt with for homeowners, with the lending system. We find fault that the government hasn't included an awful lot of detail about how the different types of programs that are already out there today for borrowing for home improvements are going to be affected.

With that, Madam Chair, while this amendment does address a lot of things that we felt were missing, we do not support this idea as yet. We do feel the whole program is incomplete as being presented. We do not think that this government did their homework prior. We noted in our earlier comments that this same type of program is under class-action lawsuits in the States. We think that there needs to be an awful lot more work done yet. We are, unfortunately, unable to get a chance to look at what is possibly going to be in regulations. Perhaps we could be convinced in another way, or some other form of amendment might come forward again from the government or some other member. But as it stands right now, while we think it's worth while – we're not going to necessarily be very unsupportive of this amendment. We don't find that it's that bad. We think that there is some good information in it, but certainly, when it comes to the regular bill itself, we still find it to be problematic.

Those are my comments for now, Madam Chair. Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you very much, Madam Chair. I appreciate the comments from the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who, I know, has worked very hard on this legislation. His comments about this amendment are very, very realistic.

Mr. Kenney: They're on point.

Mr. Nixon: They are certainly on point.

You know, that member and myself a few nights ago in this very Chamber spent several hours interacting with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs about this legislation. We asked the hon. minister several questions about this bill. At the time, Madam Chair, you may recall, the minister had indicated that municipalities would have almost nothing to do with this legislation, that we should not worry about the municipalities that we represent. Then I brought forward some screenshots of the minister's website in regard to this bill, and every task that was associated with this bill had the word "municipality" in it. So we had that long conversation. But he assured me that he had consulted with everybody, and it was all going to be okay.

Then, much to my surprise, yesterday when I was in the Chamber, the Deputy Government House Leader reached out to me and said: "We can't quite switch over to Bill 10, this bill that we're doing today, because we need to move forward an amendment on our own legislation, that we consulted everybody on as soon as possible, but it's still inside the photocopier. Could you please hold back this legislation while the photocopiers can get it out?"

Mr. Kenney: Stop making it up.

Mr. Nixon: I know. I mean, I was quite surprised by that. But, you know, I'm a patient guy, so we held a debate on another bill, and we waited patiently for this amendment. When it finally arrived, Madam Chair, it was still hot. It had just arrived off the photocopier, hot off the presses, if you will. I was then quite shocked to realize that we were debating a four-page bill. When I was telling the Leader of the Opposition about this earlier today, I said that the amendment was the exact same length of the bill. I apologize. I was off on that. For a four-page bill the government has brought forward a three-page amendment. As the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod points out . . .

Mr. Kenney: What? They're not that incompetent.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it appears so. As the Member for Livingstone-Macleod points out rightly, this amendment changes three-quarters of the legislation that the minister brought forward to this place and is asking for support from my colleagues and myself in this Assembly.

This is the problem that we continue to talk about. We've talked about this on several other pieces of legislation today. This government continues to come to this Assembly with legislation that, shortly after they've tabled the legislation, they come back and try to fix, but before they do that, before they come with their three-page amendment to the four-page bill, they stand in the House, and they ridicule me and my colleagues, my colleagues and I. Sorry; that's a little more grammatically correct. They ridicule us. They tell us that we are fearmongering. They tell us that we're making things up, but then when we confront them with evidence like the screencaps of the website that show what we're saying is true, when we come with, you know, communication from our constituents or from municipalities, the Municipal Affairs minister finally brings forward an amendment to fix it. Sadly, though, Madam Chair, as you know, most often that doesn't happen till the next sitting, so people that are impacted by this legislation have to wait months and months and months under this government's mistakes over and over.

There are so many examples of that. One of the most common examples, I think, is actually on electoral reform legislation, which we have seen in this House every sitting since I have been elected. Every sitting since this government took power they have brought a bill to this House to change things within our election system, some of it good, some of it that we have supported. You know, getting union and corporate donations out of our system this side of the House certainly supported. But then each and every time when we talk to them, we say: "Guys, have you really talked to everybody about this? This section of the bill is going to cause this problem."

Or a great example: during the first sitting in this place when, of course, the government spent most of their time on electoral reform trying to get their campaign expenses paid for by Albertans, we continued to say: whoa; we think this is not a very good idea. I don't know how the constituents of Peace River, Madam Chair, felt about it. I can tell you that the people in Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre were not thrilled about the idea of paying for NDP candidates' campaign expenses. It was interesting. You know, the Minister of Infrastructure was with us at that time before she had joined the NDP Party, and she spoke a lot about this issue at the time. It was a serious concern, just like this.

Now you're asking us at 9:15 at night to support an amendment brought forward by the minister. The minister has not spoken to the amendment. That's also interesting to me.

Mr. Westhead: The minister moved that amendment.

Mr. Nixon: I hear the deputy whip is heckling me that the minister moved the amendment, but he did not. Maybe the deputy whip should double-check that. It was moved by the hon. Minister of Children's Services, who moved it with a great speech. I enjoyed the speech. It was interesting. Lots of the stuff that she brought up within this amendment, interestingly enough, is the stuff that was brought up by my colleague from Livingstone-Macleod, who is our critic on this issue. So I'd like to briefly take a moment and thank him for all of his hard work on this amendment. I think that the constituents of Livingstone-Macleod should be thrilled with their representative, that he was able to catch three pages of mistakes inside the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs' four-page bill.

I do think that at some point it would be helpful if the Minister of Municipal Affairs would rise and explain how we ended up in this situation but also spend some time assuring the opposition that if we were able to support all these changes, he has actually been able to catch everything that he made a mistake on along the way to this place. I'd be interested to see how many mayors he's spoken to about this, whether or not he's talked to the RMA or AUMA, what their thoughts are on this bill. I continue to be very, very concerned that this government does not consult the people that are impacted by this legislation.

This is very relevant to the amendment, Madam Chair. Yesterday when we were discussing an amendment brought forward by the hon. Member for Drumheller-Stettler that would require the agriculture minister to actually consult with people in the agriculture industry before changing the regulations in the Bill 7, the local food act, which I thought was a very common-sense amendment – I was happy to support it. The agriculture minister, with a gallery full of beef producers who were visiting with us, rose in this House and said – and everybody needs to get this. You have to understand this because this really articulates the problem. The agriculture minister rose and said that consulting with farmers and ranchers and the industry about changes to their industry is too much red tape for the agriculture minister. The irony of an NDP minister talking about red tape, we'll talk about that later tonight, maybe, but that is what we get from this government.

You know, the other side of the House gets usually frustrated when we bring this up, but it would be very, very helpful for me as I try to represent my constituents – I represent something like 25 towns and counties; this Bill 10 will significantly impact them – you know, if the minister would stand up and explain why he needs to change this piece of legislation they just tabled in this place last week, why he has basically rewritten it. At the time, though, that it was rewritten and it came off that photocopier hot to touch, the minister did not rise and discuss his bill; he had the Minister of Children's Services speak about this legislation.

Now we're in a spot where you're again asking us tonight to vote on this legislation that impacts our constituents. We have not heard from the minister. We have not heard any explanation on why basically this entire piece of legislation has been redone. The minister adamantly got very, very upset when we tried to send this bill to committee last week during second reading, when we pointed out the mistakes inside this legislation. He told me personally, Madam Chair, that I was fearmongering. Fearmongering. I was deeply insulted by that at the time, but that's fine if the minister felt I was fearmongering. But then I was proven right and so was the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod proven right, not by any magical force or luck. It was the minister sending an amendment back in that shows everything that I and my colleague presented in this place. It was fascinating to me. [interjection]

You know, the Deputy Premier is heckling away but no explanation from that side of the House on why they have to change this entire piece of legislation, no explanation on why I should encourage my colleagues to vote for this drastic change. I mean, this is a technical bill, while relatively short, that has significant impact on constituents and municipalities in particular but also on real estate agents, mortgage companies that will be drastically impacted by this. I don't want to go back to Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre and find out that there are more mistakes that the Municipal Affairs minister missed inside this legislation.

You know, the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod is very good at these types of issues. He's done a great job. You heard it just in his speech a few moments ago and last week as we were discussing this piece of legislation. But he's not the minister. He doesn't have access to the same level of resources. He can't fully explain what's been taking place here. We need the minister to do that. The question then becomes: where is the minister to discuss this? Why would the Minister of Children's Services – I don't know, Madam Chair, if you find that a little bit alarming. The Minister of Children's Services, I know her well. I've done lots of work with her. She's a very competent minister, but she's not the Minister of Municipal Affairs, you know, and I suspect that she won't fully know or maybe has not been fully briefed on it.

Interestingly enough, too, Madam Chair, when they brought this amendment in hot off the presses, the Minister of Children's Services rose and read the amendment and then adjourned debate and then had no other discussion. There has been no opportunity for the government to respond to that. So I will for this moment in Committee of the Whole yield the floor with a simple question to the government, hopefully to the Municipal Affairs minister, but if anybody from cabinet could answer: what went so terribly wrong that at the eleventh hour they need to rewrite this entire piece of legislation?

The Chair: Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I won't be able to answer the member's direct question. I'm not yet a minister of the Crown. I sure hope someday that will be my future. But I just want to make a few comments on what the hon. member is talking about.

9:20

I'm not here to defend everything the government does. I'm just fresh off voting against their Bill 7, and I have grave concerns about a lot of things this government does. But what I hear from the opposition all too often is: "We want you to go away and consult. We want you to go ask stakeholders what they think. You don't do enough consultation." So this government goes out, consults with municipalities, gets some significant feedback from municipalities on how this bill can be improved. They present the amendments, table them, and adjourn debate so that all of us in this House have an opportunity to review those amendments and then come back. [interjection] The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner is telling me that's not how it happened. I was here; that's exactly how it happened.

The Official Opposition wants, on one hand, for the government to go and consult with stakeholders, to incorporate their changes, and then put those into legislation, and when they get that, it's too complicated. It's just too much, information overload. It's big changes to a relatively small bill.

Look, this bill will enable Albertans to use an efficient and effective means of financing solar panels in their homes. That's a good thing. That's a very positive thing. I would challenge the Official Opposition to tell us, please: what is your environmental platform? I'd love to see it. I would love to see it. Let's see it. Do you believe in renewable energy at all? Is there any plan there whatsoever? I certainly didn't see anything coming out of your convention in Red Deer. So this, to me, is a thoughtful bill that improves the ability, that enhances the ability of Albertans to install solar power.

Now, when we get a chance, if I do get an opportunity, I'm going to move an amendment later that I hope even further improves the bill. But, you know, in this case I just find it a bit disingenuous. On one hand the Official Opposition is asking for consultation and change, and when they get that, they don't like it. So what I see is an Official Opposition that is trying to find every possible way to oppose anything that the government tries to do on renewable energy. When the government does come up with what I think is thoughtful legislation that is worth while and helps Albertans in a way that has very little, if any, cost to taxpayers, this is the sort of thing. This is not the first and only time that PACE legislation has been implemented anywhere in North America, anywhere in the world. This is based on requests from municipalities.

Look, I have lots of concerns with what this government does. I have lots of concerns with the way they've gone about many things. But I have to say that in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs in particular they seem very adept at going out and consulting with the municipalities very openly. They've multiple times tabled changes to major legislation like the Municipal Government Act and allowed for consultation through the summer. We have Bill 8 before the Assembly here again, where the minister has proposed some changes to the Emergency Management Act, tabled the legislation, brought it up to second reading, and given us all an opportunity all through the summer to consult. I'm doing that actively within my constituency. In fact, I'd like to see the government do more of that. In this case it is a response, not just the bill itself, to requests from not only Albertans but from municipalities. The changes that we're talking about here in this amendment are a response to requested changes from municipalities.

Again, I see absolutely no reason for the opposition to be so steadfast against this unless they just don't like the idea of Albertans installing solar panels and doing so in an economically effective way. Clearly, I'm in favour of the amendment that the government has brought forward, and I look forward to hearing what the Official Opposition has to say.

Mr. Nixon: Well, always interesting to hear from the Member for Calgary-Elbow. One of my favourite things about the Member for Calgary-Elbow is that he always makes a tremendous number of assumptions when he speaks. Interesting that he always does that.

Nowhere in my comments just a few moments ago did I even indicate whether or not I would be supporting this piece of legislation. In fact, I was speaking about the amendment that we're debating right now, that the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow just glossed right over and then started to try to take a guess on how we were going to vote on this piece of legislation. I will help him out. My colleagues in the United Conservative caucus have full intention, actually, of supporting this amendment. From the looks of it, it has primarily been written by the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who has come to this Assembly and managed to save the minister from making a terrible mistake that would have cost Albertans significantly and would have hurt the people that he supposedly was trying to help.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow has lots of questions that he'd like to ask. I think I've answered them, so how about I ask him a question. If he was fortunate enough to ever have a chance of forming government, would he bring legislation to this House that he would then have to switch one hundred per cent just a few short sitting days later in front of this Chamber? Is that how the Alberta Party would govern the province of Alberta?

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Under 29(2)(a)?

The Chair: We're in committee. Do you wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. Under 29(2)(a)?

The Chair: We're in committee. There's no 29(2)(a).

Mr. Loewen: Oh. Okay. Madam Chair, we're sitting here, of course, looking at this amendment that the government has brought up. I see that what's happened here is the government has finally – you know, it just seems a few short days ago that this government was defending this bill and saying how great it was and how anybody who was seeing anything wrong with it was obviously just crazy and wasn't paying attention. Then all of a sudden, out of the blue, they drop in a three-page amendment on this bill.

Of course, we just heard the Member for Calgary-Elbow get up and talk. We heard him talk about how great this bill was before. Now the bill has substantially changed, and, believe it or not, he still supports it. So I'm not sure. He supported it before in its failed form – even the government recognizes it was a failed form – and now he's still supporting it. I got a kick out of his little rant talking about the Official Opposition. We were sitting here trying to make this bill better and trying to point out the mistakes in this bill and things that could be improved. The government of course wanted nothing to do with that. They called it fearmongering, in fact. Now they've finally realized the error of their ways and decided to change it. It was interesting that the Member for Calgary-Elbow, who thought it was great before – I don't know if he thinks it's bad now or if it's better or what, but obviously he supported it in its previous failed form, too, just like the government.

Now, Madam Chair, there are just a lot of problems with this bill. Where this is tried – I mean, they use California as an example of how great this program is, and of course now there are lawsuits all over the place in California regarding the PACE program there. I don't understand how this government can keep on bringing things forward like this. Now we're talking about all these amendments and everything. They're trying to fix their mistakes. There are just a lot of different things going on here.

The government at least at this point has decided to fix some of the problems. Again, these were problems that were pointed out by the Member for Livingstone-MacLeod and his good work. It's good to see that the government is actually willing to admit they make mistakes. It'd be great if they would do this more often and maybe fix more of their legislation. We bring forward a lot of good amendments, and this government just votes them down. We'll see what happens with this amendment. We'll see what the government has to say. Hopefully the minister will have something to say about it, too.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the amendment?

Seeing none, are you ready for the question?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Back on the main bill. Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to table what I hope is an amendment that will improve Bill 10. This amendment I move on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Mackay-Nose Hill, who, I will say, has done a great deal of work on this and given a lot of thought to it. I would sincerely hope that the House would consider this.

The amendment that I propose on her behalf enables municipalities to finance or refinance energy efficiency improvements that are already under way or improvements that have already been completed. Before I move on, I will hand over the amendment to a page and will wait till the table receives it and then move on.

9:30

The Chair: This will be amendment A2.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Clark: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Member McPherson to move that Bill 10, An Act to Enable Clean Energy Improvements, be amended in section 7 as follows; (a) the following is added after the proposed section 390.3:

Exception

390.31 Notwithstanding section 390.3, a clean energy tax improvement bylaw may authorize a council to impose a clean energy improvement tax in respect of renovations, adaptations or installations commenced or completed prior to the passage of the bylaw if the renovation, adaptation or installation, other than the date on which it was commenced, meets all other requirements for clean energy improvements under this Division and any other conditions deemed necessary or appropriate by the council.

And (b) the proposed section 390.4(1) is struck out, and the following is substituted:

(1) A municipality and the owner of a property shall enter into a clean energy improvement agreement before a clean energy improvement tax is imposed on the property.

I could just say that that's self-evident, but I suppose I should probably keep reading the rest of the statement.

This amendment is broken into two main parts. The new 390.3(1)(a) allows municipalities to refinance improvements started or completed before a PACE bylaw is passed, and the new section (b) requires the property owner and the municipality to complete an agreement before an improvement tax is imposed in parallel with section 390.4 in the bill. There are two reasons for this.

The first: solar and other energy efficiency improvement installers have told us that business has already slowed down as a result of the announcement of the PACE program. A lot of Albertans are eager to undertake energy efficiency improvements that are financed by a municipality rather than the banks. I think we should incentivize Albertans to delay their energy efficiency upgrades for the months or years that some municipalities will require to spin up their own PACE programs. This, I believe, is an unintended consequence of this bill. Not all municipalities will in fact implement those PACE programs, but we can reasonably expect that certainly the major centres, whose mayors support this program, will work quickly to pass relevant bylaws that will make this program available on behalf of Albertans. I have to say that I believe many municipalities, large and small, are very likely to follow.

I also think it's important that we don't punish property owners who took the initiative early on to install energy efficiency upgrades. They're now, unfortunately, at a disadvantage compared to those who install upgrades as a result of this program because they were the early adopters and did not have the benefit of low-cost financing that would be available through the municipalities. Forward-thinking landlords are especially disadvantaged without this retroactivity because those who build or renovate with the PACE program can offer more energy- and cost-efficient spaces to potential tenants, that first-mover home and property owners alike are more likely to take on costs of further energy efficiency improvements.

I would suggest that it's important we help those champions lead the way to spread energy efficiency improvements to as many buildings as possible by allowing them to refinance their improvements at the lower cost we're determining through this bill.

Even if they use the proceeds from refinancing existing improvements for investments unrelated to energy efficiency, Albertans will still benefit from more value-added activities, jobs created in renovations, et cetera. Since this program, whether retroactive or not, will draw primarily upon private financing, looking for secure, long-term returns, there is little risk that adding a retroactive aspect to it will reduce funding available to new improvements.

In summary, this bill opens the door to municipalities to offer retroactive financing for existing energy efficiency improvements or improvements all under way. It does not require municipalities to offer a retroactive program. With or without this amendment, municipalities will still need to decide, with public input, whether and how to implement their PACE programs.

So I would encourage all members of this House to support this amendment because I truly believe it does make what is a good bill that much better.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A2? Calgary-East.

Ms Luff: I'd just like to respond quickly to this amendment, and I'd like to thank the Member for Calgary-Elbow for bringing it forward. Certainly, we recognized that there are some concerns that have been brought forward regarding retroactivity and the possibility of business not picking up because people are waiting for this to be implemented. However, there is some concern on behalf of municipalities. Basically, if we're making the PACE program retroactive, what it means is that municipalities would have to give out a loan on a program that doesn't exist yet before they're actually able to come up with the mechanism to collect the money. This would reduce public transparency and accountability and place the municipality at risk of misalignment with to-be-determined program criteria as developed by Energy Efficiency Alberta or by municipalities.

Basically, it is possible that the program that – you wouldn't want the program to not align with the regulations and the bylaws put in place later. Just suddenly starting to pay people for things that they've put in place already, before the program has even been instated or before the bylaw has been passed, could create misalignments, so I would encourage all members of the House to vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

Bill 2 Growth and Diversification Act

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. For members joining us this evening and those of you watching from home – I'm sure we have a wide audience this evening – I've got a series of amendments going forward here to Bill 2. I'll speak to the bill more broadly right now, adding to some of my previous comments, and then speak to the amendments specifically.

The bill before us right now has been framed by the government and in the media as a regular corporate welfare bill, that we're going to take the resources of government, pick winners and losers, one industry over another, and subsidize that industry. Now, Ronald Reagan said that the . . . [interjections] I'm shocked to hear that New Democrat members don't love it when I quote Ronald Reagan.

Ms Hoffman: It's the same quote every day.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I was going to give you the same quote. It's such a damn good quote because of where we're at. He said that the government's approach to economics is that if it moves, tax it; if it keeps moving . . .

An Hon. Member: Eat it.

Mr. Fildebrandt: . . . regulate it – enough from the peanut gallery – and if it stops moving, subsidize it.

An Hon. Member: Shoot it. Shoot it on somebody's property.

Mr. Fildebrandt: I'm going to have to concede that point. I can't think of a good comeback, but I tagged it.

Now, this approach has certainly applied to the government's economic approach broadly. It's applied to their approach to pipelines. They've taxed our economy and our industries. That didn't stop them from moving. They brought in heavy regulations. That didn't stop them from moving. But when it eventually did stop, now we're in the business of buying pipelines. This bill specifically, though, is not dealing with pipelines; it's dealing with two very different things. It's dealing with, generally, digital economy. That's a sector of the economy we should be supporting but not at the expense of any other sector. This brings us to the broader argument of reforming the tax code to do away with tax credits and subsidies for any particular industry. We shouldn't be doing it for just this industry; we should be doing it more broadly.

But in addition to corporate welfare, this bill more specifically gets into a very different kind of economic diversification. It gets into trying to micromanage the workforce, not just trying to pick winners and losers in the economy but trying to pick winners and losers in the labour force. This bill prescribes very clearly, not just in digital media but in the entire economy, that they are going to provide subsidies to businesses that meet quotas on race and gender. Now, they're not hard quotas. Businesses aren't forced to meet them, but they will be given a subsidy from the government if they do. So businesses that do not or cannot meet these quotas will be paying taxes to the government and not receive that back, but their competitors who do meet the government's quotas will, creating an uneven playing field.

Now, I believe that any legislation that categorizes people on the basis of their race or their religion or their sex or their beliefs should not be passed by this House. It is incompatible with our beliefs. It's incompatible with the values that are supposed to be behind the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I've been surprised to see that I've been the only member voting against removing requirements for race and for gender from this bill. I'm not quite sure what the reasoning is. It is perhaps the least conservative thing we can do, to be supporting an element of legislation that subsidizes businesses for hiring one group over another. Now, some people are born with advantages and a head start in life, and some people are not. But those things are far more complicated, far more diverse than what the government is able to box people into, in neat little categories. Being born – you know, if we're talking about just hiring visible racial minorities, some minorities face greater disadvantages than others. Some visible minorities face relatively no discrimination at all while some suffer more, but this bill will lump them all together as one large category. Essentially, you may as well put a bar code on every employee in the province and assign them a score about how much help this government believes that they need.

Now, this bill itself I don't believe should be passed, period, but I'll be putting forward a series of amendments here to try and clarify a few things. But before I do that, I'm going to give members the opportunity to remove entirely all references to subsidies for race and for sex whatsoever from this bill. I'm opposed to the bill generally. I don't think we should be in the business of corporate welfare, but more specifically we should be focused on making legislation as least bad as possible where we have the opportunity.

I'll put forward this amendment now before continuing.

The Chair: This will be known as amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment before members right now would strike in its entirety section 2 and schedule 2 from the amendments to the Investing in a Diversified Alberta Economy Act.

Now, when the NDP talked about economic diversification in the past, generally I always took that to mean that they don't like that we produce such a high proportion of beef and of agricultural products and of oil and gas products, and they want us to do other things. Now, in the area of economics we should be doing other things, and Alberta's economy has become increasingly diversified over the last three decades without the power of government trying to force businesses to do it.

But the NDP campaigned on a platform of increased government activity in the economy. That's generally what I thought they meant by economic diversification, but I never thought that they took this to mean that the government needs to decree diversity in the workforce. It seems to me entirely beyond the reasonable scope of government for the government to be deciding who should be working at companies. As I said, it's not a hard quota. Businesses are not forced, compelled by the law to meet the government's quotas, but they will receive an incentive, a subsidy, if they do.

But every carrot the government wields is also a stick, so when the government incentivizes one business to meet these quotas, businesses that do not meet the quotas – and some of them might have good reasons for it; they might be in an area that doesn't have large minority populations – will be paying taxes to the government, which will see subsidies go to their competitors, their competitors who have met these quotas. So every carrot the government wields is also a stick at the same time.

The amendment before you now is quite clear: strike section 2 and schedule 2 of the bill, entirely removing all references to race and gender in this bill.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4? The minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I rise to encourage all members to vote against this amendment as it very much is against the spirit and intent of this bill.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to amendment A4?

Seeing none, I'll call the question.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: Any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Strathmore-Brooks, did you wish to speak again?

Mr. Fildebrandt: Yeah.

The Chair: Go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: All right. Well, seeing as how all members of this House seemingly support the idea of government subsidies for businesses meeting race and gender quotas, I think we should at least try to clarify something here.

I'll distribute this amendment before going further.

The Chair: This will be called amendment A5.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. The amendment before members here will keep the bill intact. Since members wish to see subsidies for meeting gender and racial quotas, I think we at least need to clarify what constitutes the groups that make up that quota.

This would add a section to the bill stating:

(l) “under-represented employee” . . .

the government’s own term here,

... means an employee belonging to a group whose representation in that line of employment is significantly lower relative to that group’s representation in the general population.

Now, that would seem to be, I think, a reasonable definition of what they’re trying to meet. I think it’s ridiculous that we’re trying to meet quotas, period. But if we’re trying to meet quotas here, we should be defining it. Right now it just says “under-represented employee” and leaves that up to the minister. Now, the minister can make that whatever he or she so chooses. They can decide that there are not enough people with red hair in an industry. Perhaps we need to encourage people with red hair to be more involved in the digital business. Perhaps we need more people with green eyes in a different business. I see all the green eyes are cheering right now. You know, I personally like six-two, bearded men. I think there are a few who will go for that one.

But right now, leaving the definition, though, of underrepresented employee entirely up to the minister: now, what are they going to mean by that? Are they going to carry that into religions? Not all religions are disproportionately of a visible minority. Is it going to mean sexes? Right now, virtually, there are very few places other than the government’s caucus – I have to give credit – where it’s perfectly gender balanced. But very few areas in the private sector are perfectly 50-50. There can be very few areas. But, as I said the last time we debated this, some industries or some businesses are going to tilt one way or another, and sometimes there are good reasons for that. Sometimes there are no reasons for that. Sometimes there might be a bad reason for it. You know, in some industries there might not be as many men working there. Does that mean a business needs to have more men there? I personally don’t think so, but if we’re talking about underrepresented employees, then perhaps so.

What this amendment does is that it attempts to clarify. “Under-represented employee” would be defined in this – it’s just saying: “an employee . . . whose [group’s] representation in that line of employment is significantly lower . . . to that group’s representation in the general population.” I think that on the surface that should mean what they’re trying to get at, but it would at least put it on paper here so that it’s not just simply up to the minister to come up with whatever categorizations and little boxes they seek to put people into in assigning who gets subsidies and who does not.

The Chair: Anyone else to speak to amendment A5?

Seeing none, you’re ready for the question?

Hon. Members: Question.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks, go ahead.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. I’ll distribute this before speaking.

The Chair: This is amendment A6.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. If the government’s goal here is to have quotas for businesses to meet, gender and racial quotas, in the private sector, they should at least allow for some degree of flexibility for businesses to be able to meet this. They’ve determined that this is a desirable goal that they wish businesses to meet, and they’re going to bribe businesses with their own money to meet it, but a business’s ability to meet these quota targets will depend on the community that they’re in, in particular smaller communities.

What this amendment I’ve put forward will do is to ensure that businesses in communities that can prove that they simply don’t have enough of the groups identified in the quotas to hire are not penalized for it. A lot of our smaller communities in many cases are not as diverse as our larger communities, but there are certainly exceptions to that. In Brooks we have a very diverse and multicultural community. We have a lot of people from Somalia, Ethiopia, Sudan. We have some East Indians. We have a lot of Filipinos. Brooks is a very diverse community, especially for its size. It’s one of the most diverse communities per capita in the entire country. So if we’ve decided that we want to go down this road of quotas, a Brooks business would have a significantly easier time meeting these quotas than a business, say, in Bassano or in Strathmore.

It is just a fact that many of our smaller communities are not as culturally or ethnically diverse as others, so what this will do is ensure that businesses in communities that simply do not have a high proportion of groups identified by the minister for these quotas are not penalized. Strathmore is a significantly less culturally and ethnically diverse community than Brooks. They’re almost the same size – Brooks is just a little bit larger than Strathmore is – but a business in Brooks would have a significantly easier time meeting the government’s requirements to get these subsidies for meeting quotas than a business in Strathmore.

I think that that would be a pattern that you would see repeated across Alberta. In particular, our two larger cities are, on aggregate, more diverse. They have a larger proportion of ethnic and minority communities than smaller communities, and I think we would be well advised to ensure that smaller communities or communities that do not have as high a proportion of minorities and these other groups identified for subsidies here are not penalized as a result. This will ensure some level of fairness across Alberta so that a business in Strathmore is not penalized just because they don’t have the population around it to be able to meet these quotas.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to A6? The hon. minister of economic development.

Mr. Bilous: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I merely rise to make a very brief comment that, in fact, I think the Member for Strathmore-Brooks has missed the mark when it comes to his comments on this bill. We’re not talking about quotas; we’re talking about a very small diversity top-up rewarding businesses that are employing underrepresented groups. Clearly, there are barriers to employment for those groups. This bill seeks to address that by providing an additional incentive in addition to levelling the playing field with other jurisdictions that have enjoyed a tax credit of this nature for some time.

For that reason, I encourage all members of the House to defeat this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: Strathmore-Brooks.

Mr. Fildebrandt: Thank you, Madam Chair. Now, I appreciate the minister’s comments although they didn’t speak to this amendment specifically. This amendment would leave the government’s quotas in place, but it would ensure that communities, particularly smaller communities, that might not have the same diverse proportion of their population as larger communities in Alberta do are not penalized for it. Many of our smaller communities in Alberta simply do not have large cultural or ethnic minority communities, and this bill would penalize them.

These are, in fact, quotas. There are hard quotas, and there are soft quotas. A hard quota would be saying that they must hire X per cent. That's not what this does. It is a soft quota, saying that if they hire this per cent, the government is going to give them a subsidy for doing so. That is a quota because businesses that do not meet this government's quota will still be paying taxes to the government but will see a proportion of their tax dollars go to their competitors. They will go to their competitors and not to themselves, putting them at a comparative disadvantage. But beyond that, what it does is that it discriminates against many Albertans simply because of the colour of their skin.

Frankly, I think that any quota denigrates the work of people who have got there on their own. I've spoken to many women in my constituency about this bill, and I haven't found one yet who supports it. The women I've spoken to in my constituency have achieved what they have without handouts. They have achieved it themselves. I think when we attach quotas to people's races or to their sexes or to their cultures, we are denigrating those in those groups who have got there on their own. We are saying that you're not good enough to do it yourself, that the government needs to step in.

If we are saying that we need to give a subsidy to hire women – even if it's 5 per cent – this is the government tacitly saying that women must be 5 per cent poorer employees, and that's just not true. Women can do any job just as well as a man, and they don't need a subsidy to do it. When we offer them a subsidy for it, I think it takes away from the women who have achieved what they have without a government handout to do it.

The same applies to minority communities: ethnic, religious, cultural. We are saying that they are not good enough to do it on their own, that they need a handout from the government. It takes away from all of those being singled out for special help in the categories that will be established by this bill. We are telling those people that they are not good enough to do it on their own, that they need the big hand of government to help them out, that they couldn't do it on their own.

So for the dignity of work, the dignity of people who have achieved what they have on their own merits, I would ask members to vote for this amendment and then against this bill on the grounds that we would be taking away from the achievements of women, the achievements of minorities who have gotten there on their own without a handout.

Thank you.

Government Bills and Orders Third Reading (continued)

Bill 11 Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Labour.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. The Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018, aims to make lobbying more transparent in Alberta. The underlying principle is that all Albertans should be able to see who is being paid to actively try to influence government. At the same time, the legislation recognizes that lobbying is a legitimate activity. It's critical that Albertans, including businesses and organizations, have reasonable access to public office holders and an opportunity to provide feedback.

On that note, I would like to say thank you to all who have spoken on this bill to date. The Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018, and the changes within came from the work of a legislative committee. So thank you to the members of the committee for the work that they did and the recommendations that they made to government, which allowed us to bring forward this important change to how lobbying is conducted here in Alberta.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As always, it's a privilege to stand and speak in the House on the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018. There are a couple of things I want to chat about. One of them is specifically around red tape. We've been talking about red tape quite a bit this evening. That's one of the concerns that I have with this bill.

I just want to give an example. We've talked about this a few times. I understand where the 50-hour number came from. We started at 100. The office of the Ethics Commissioner talked about zero. I see how you ended up in the middle. It makes sense. I'm sure you've heard this, too, Minister, but that is a very, very small amount of time for folks that are going to be talking. One of the major concerns is, of course, when a group of people is reaching out to government to have those discussions and you are completely minimized by the amount of time that a lobbyist can come in and speak to you about their cause.

This is a very, very difficult thing for lobbyists to be able to do, especially if there are several people that are coming in to talk to you about any particular thing. It could be as simple as wind and solar. We have groups coming in to speak to you about particular types of energy, anything, whatever it is that government or opposition spends their time doing and learning about particular things that are going on in the province. We are very much limiting especially for some of these small groups when they are trying to be able to speak with government or with the opposition about things that are important to them. Then imagine if they're talking to both of us. It's a ton of their time.

There are a lot of things in this legislation, I think, within the regulations that need to be clarified. What counts as lobbying, what pieces of that? Is that the phone calls? Is that the preparation? I mean, preparation is included in this legislation.

I wanted to give an example. If you look at a personal circumstance of an advocate – I'll use myself as an example. I am a mother of a special-needs child. That obviously makes me an advocate. If I put together a parent group in Chestermere, where I live, this group of people is going to be getting together to advocate on behalf of a particular group of children in this particular situation, these special-needs children. Therefore, when I create that group, now I am subjected to rules and a massive amount of paperwork in order for me to be able to lobby because now I'm considered a lobby group.

There are many, many families – I mean, it's not even necessarily a disability. It could be an illness. It could be a lot of different things. You set up a support group for the parents and the community members around those people. Maybe you set up a mailing list, or you set up a method to communicate, and you become a not-for-profit. Maybe you're setting up a group that you put these families together so that they can talk about their experiences and what they're going through so they become a stronger community, so they're able to support at the community level these children, these people that are an important part of their community. So they put together a not-for-profit. They start having meetings. They're running – I don't know – some sort of funding in order to pool their funding to be able to run programming.

This is normal. I'm not talking about something unusual. We all live in communities. We all know that these things go on. I can tell you about a thousand different things that I've participated in. This is a grassroots type of communication, but because I fall under the auspices of certain things that are being laid out by the Lobbyists Act, I suddenly become part of a group – it's making it very difficult for me to be able to provide those supports for that particular group of people.

I think that in looking at maybe the hours of the organization – I do appreciate the bill. I realize the importance of this. I do realize the importance of the transparency, but I think we've overlooked some of the important fundamental ways that families, communities, and people just in general gather to make sure that they make their communities better. I think that fundamentally we have to look at how it is. Are we actually stopping those groups from happening? There is so much good work that is done by so many of these people that work together to make their communities better. We just have to be careful that the red tape in this particular type of legislation isn't stopping this from being able to happen. This is one of my concerns.

I think that every single person in this House is a passionate advocate. We are surrounded by a lot of people who are passionate advocates. I'm not saying that paperwork shouldn't be done. I believe that that's a necessary part. But when we are burdened with paperwork – I really don't believe that this is the intention of this legislation, but there will be a burden of paperwork. Again, you are putting up barriers to excellent work that is being done in the communities, and I would just recommend that there may be some flexibility.

There was a letter that came in from the Alberta Chambers of Commerce. I'm not sure, Madam Speaker, if the minister received this as well. I'd like to read this quote out.

Reduction of the lobbying time threshold, from 100 to 50 hours, and the inclusion of "preparatory time" and "grassroots communication" as lobbying activities, would dramatically change the reporting requirements for many community-serving organizations. In turn, the proposed requirements would increase administrative burdens on organizations with limited staff resources, including local chambers.

Changes to the reporting requirements may force chambers to limit activities which benefit their local community by . . .

This is the most important piece here, especially in instances where you're . . . connecting government with constituents. Organizing traditional community activities like luncheons with elected officials is one important example.

Oh, this is another really, really important piece. Madam Speaker, in the legislation why is there no ability to let the lobbying groups know what's going on? I'm going to go into that a little bit more. This was actually one of the pieces that was put forward by the Ethics Commissioner, to be able to let lobbying groups know of changes and anything that's happening so that they do not break the rules of what it is that they're allowed to do. But I'll get into that a little bit later.

Developing and circulating regular newsletters to local chamber members and community partners is another.

This is a way that is preparatory time. It is a methodology, Madam Speaker, of communicating with grassroots communication. If that's considered part of the 50 hours – I mean, we lose a lot of time in prep time. I write between nine and 12 articles a month for the various local newspapers that are in my area. I can't imagine if I was advocating for something and the amount of time that it takes to write those articles was also considered part of my lobbying. That could take a tremendous amount of time away from me as an advocate from being able to do good work with people physically. It's just something to think about.

Often, at the request of government, these communications include educational content and resources directed at the business audience.

It is essential that government engage with business at the local level. Grassroots communication is critical to that engagement. As such, in amending legislation, it is critical to avoid the creation of red tape . . .

This is coming from the chamber.

. . . that could unnecessarily limit healthy communication activities which support an informed and civically engaged public.

That's why we're all here. Fundamentally, that's why we're all here. I don't believe it was the intention of this legislation to put those kinds of limitations on things, but we are looking at actually shutting down communication not just amongst the grassroots but to us as well, right?

I have this wonderful fellow who's in Langdon who's trying to start a bus service. We're going to be having meetings to talk about how that happens. Especially out in Chestermere, which is just outside of Calgary, we've never been able to create a transit to be able to get our youth into town or even just to the boundaries, you know, when they're not quite driving yet, to be able to go and work at, like, the movie theatre or Winners or whatever, any of those kinds of things. There's been a lot of talk about doing some sort of bus service. This fellow who works in Langdon is just a great guy, and he's got this service going. We've had a couple of meetings together just to talk about what's available or how to get him organized, all these kinds of things, who to pass him on to.

You know, these are fundamental pieces. As an MLA in an area that is as diverse as Chestermere and that area, I have to be able to have the ability to talk these things out. I can't just say: "Well, you have a half an hour, and that's it. That's all I can offer you." It's not because of me but because he might want to be able to talk about this with various other people. He's going to need to do his outreach. He's going to need to do his stakeholder outreach. He's going to need to be able to provide recommendations in order for anybody at any government level to be able to support him, if that's possible, to be able to procure what he needs to be able to do his business. It's not because we as government can help him with his business, but we can certainly find out if there's even a need for that.

Now, this is more of a municipal thing, but as a provincial legislator my responsibility is to make sure to close those gaps so that that municipality and that fellow can have that conversation. Is he going to have to put that into his work pieces, having done outreach and stakeholder outreach for his own thing that he's trying to accomplish, because he's talked to a government member? These are the things where I think we're lacking a little bit of clarity. I'm not sure how that applies.

I don't think anybody who is reading this legislation who's a small group – I think the larger groups will understand how to do this, but we're talking about a small group of people. I'm just talking about one person, but if he starts a group of people, a network of people that are wanting to do this bus thing, and they start a group that is lobbying the municipal government or anything like that, how does he do that? That's just one example. The minister is, I'm sure, able to answer that for me.

But that's just one example. We have so many municipalities. I use Langdon as an example. They're a very, very high-functioning group of volunteers. They have a group called the collaborative. They meet with the chamber. They work together all the time. They're trying to build a school there that has a recreation centre attached to it. They've done a tremendous amount of work, and they are working together to support between three other groups trying to make this thing happen. Again, if they're lobbying for information about how to do this to make their community better and they're speaking with their municipal and provincial politicians, if I write a letter of support for them to be able to ask for this grant or that – their preparation time that went into that to ask me to do that: how much of that is taken out of their 50 hours of lobbying? How do you account for that, and how are you going to follow up with that? I'm just asking simply because I think there needs to be a flexibility here.

I would assume for the government members, with the outreach that they do as well, that it's imperative, for the government especially. You're going to get lobbied on absolutely everything, so how are you monitoring that? How are you making sure that's working out? You have these wonderful small communities, these groups that work so hard to make their communities better. I'm quite concerned by the addition of preparatory time. I'm very concerned about the way the communications go, that if you're circulating a newsletter, that's considered part of your lobbying piece, that's considered part of that 50 hours. I would highly recommend that the minister look at this and see if this is the right way to go.

I fully understand that necessary things are being done here. I mean, we've all had the privilege of being within those committees and talking to the Ethics Commissioner. We know what's necessary, but red tape is certainly not a necessary piece of this. We want healthy communication. We want that to happen. I don't know about you guys, but on this side of the House we are in need of that feedback. We rely heavily on feedback from our stakeholders. What if the lobbyists become less generous with their time, right? What are we going to do at that point in time if they're not able to do that? I don't want us as a Legislature on both sides of this – because it's not just us. I'm just talking about our side, but I don't want us to be penalizing the people that we're supposed to be representing. I think that this could do that. I think there's a distinct possibility that we would be absolutely penalizing not only stakeholders but people that have lines of expertise that are necessary for us.

I know that, for me, I've had the privilege of having four portfolios. There are a lot of acronyms in those portfolios. I'm acronymed out. However, I've had the privilege of meeting some of the most incredible people in my life throughout all of those portfolios, and I can't imagine if they're limited by the time that they'll be able to spend with somebody like me to educate me on the things that I need to know in order to represent them appropriately in this House. It's an imperative part of what needs to happen. I do understand the need for transparency, and I do understand the need for accountability, but we do not want to also stop that flow of information.

I mean, I actually know that for any of us who've worked on volunteer organizations or advocacy groups, 50 hours goes by like that. Think about how long – I don't know about you, but I try to create these flyers and stuff in Vistaprint. I'm horrible at this. It might take one person an hour; it takes me, like, 10. If I was the person who was in charge of that in an advocacy group, they would use up that time in a millisecond. It's because that's just not my gift and not my talent. But if that's considered part of the prep time – in order to send out a flyer to talk about a group for special-needs families that's a support network and a charitable foundation that I'm trying to bring people together for in the little rec centre in Chestermere, it took me 10 hours to do my Vistaprint thing. I think I've just wasted a whole bunch of lobbying time and imperative time to actually be able to help my community. I'm just using myself as an example. Don't hire me to do your Vistaprint posters. I'm terrible at that.

Mr. Nixon: Give it a try.

Mrs. Aheer: Vistaprint is easy, I know. I'm horrible at that stuff.

Anyways, the other thing, too, is that there are going to be additional funds that are going to have to go to the Ethics Commissioner in order to be able to handle all the influx of information that's going to come in. There is a potential for an onslaught of inquiries that they will receive as small organizations didn't have to file previous to this, and on top of that, they're going to have to try and figure this out under new legislation. Now we're bringing them under the Lobbyists Act, which they weren't part of before.

It's a bit disappointing that the government didn't follow the office of the Ethics Commissioner's recommendation to change the filing system. The recommendation was that they change it from a semiannual to an annual filing because in any sort of small groups, small organizations the first six months are really similar to the last six months. There are not a whole lot of changes. We've seen that consistently over the years. All of us have been involved in that long enough.

Again, to the minister: if there's a possibility to change that and follow the OEC's recommendation on that, I can tell you that the lobby groups would be extremely, extremely grateful for the time. Also, it gives them that year, if they have the burden of this red tape and of this paperwork and if they're a small organization and there are volunteers and if the supports around them are small, to have the ability to be able to do that. That's on their annual filing. Just something to consider.

Also, I think we need a little bit more clarity. There are a large number of lobbyists that are going to be having to register for the very first time. With the threshold being brought down from 100 to 50 hours, is their application and all of the work that they do to become a registered lobbyist part of that 50 hours that they have to use up? Is that part of the 50 hours in their lobbying allocation? I think this is an important piece of clarification that needs to happen.

There was one other thing I wanted to chat about, too, the piece where it talks about communications to smaller organizations. How is the government planning to roll out the legislation? This is just about what I was talking about. You've got a whole bunch of new groups that are going to be coming in, a whole bunch of new, small organizations that are going to be under the umbrella of this new Lobbyists Act. I'd like to understand some clarity on how the government is going to roll out this legislation with so many new organizations that fall under this act now.

The other piece, Minister, through the Speaker, is: how are we going to be able to make sure that these small groups know what they're supposed to do? I mean, they're all of a sudden supposed to decipher and understand these new regulations.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill?

Seeing none, the hon. Minister of Labour to close debate.

Ms Gray: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Thank you very much to all who spoke to this bill. As I close debate, I hope to elicit the support of all members of this House for this important piece of legislation by answering some of the final questions that were asked. I think the most important thing to state right off the bat is that this does not apply to nonprofits. If you are not paid as a contractor or if you are not employed to do whatever lobbying activity you are engaging in, this does not apply to you. If you are a group of parents or a support network or volunteers and you get together to advocate for a cause, you are not lobbyists because you are not paid to be lobbyists, and therefore this act does not apply to you.

That being said, Madam Speaker, I want to make clear that registering as a lobbyist is not an onerous task. It's a very simple form with minimal information required. It is not a burden or a barrier to an organization. But there has been some concern from organizations like the Alberta Chambers of Commerce who don't want to see having to register as a lobbyist preventing people from engaging in conversations with government, and we agree. I was very pleased to sit down with the chair of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce and an example small chamber who has a paid staff, and we talked about the small amount of time that would be required to register and the fact that the Ethics Commissioner is there as a resource to help anyone who has questions about the application of this law, whether they themselves are lobbyists, how they fill out the forms. The Ethics Commissioner is a resource, so I would encourage anyone with concerns to be reaching out to the Ethics Commissioner, and that's exactly what a lot of these small groups will find help from.

The Ethics Commissioner is also going to be the one responsible for rolling out this information, updating the websites, communicating with groups and helping them. The Ethics Commissioner is there to assist organizations who may fall under that legislation. We will not, with this legislation, be stopping the flow of information. Rather, we're increasing transparency, and it's under the guise of increasing transparency that we chose to keep semiannual filings, because annual filings would reduce transparency.

Making sure that we continue to engage with people to do the job that, as MLAs, is so important to us is all about what this legislation is doing. Again, people who are not paid like contracted-out lobbyists are or people who are not paid lobbyists for their organizations will not be captured by this. We deliberately did not change who was captured by the Lobbyists Act, Madam Speaker. I really do want to be clear. The impact of this bill on everyday Albertans will be that they will have access to more information about who is paid to try to influence government.

With that being said, Madam Speaker, I hope I've answered the questions that were asked, and I would invite all members of this House to support this work that was done by a Legislative Assembly committee, where all members had time to hear presentations from the Ethics Commissioner and to discuss and debate these issues. I appreciate the work that they did and the recommendations that they made to government. I'm very pleased to close debate on the Lobbyists Amendment Act, 2018, which I know will make lobbying more transparent in Alberta while still making sure those important channels of communication remain open.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. Well, wonderful progress tonight. A little later than we thought but good results. I want to thank all members on both sides of the House for their contributions tonight.

I will move that the House adjourn until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, Madam Speaker.

Government Bills and Orders

Committee of the Whole

[Ms Jabbour in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 18

Statutes Amendment Act, 2018

The Chair: Questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah, it's my pleasure to rise here this morning and talk about Bill 18, Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. I guess it's intended to be just kind of like a bit of a cleanup of some of the other acts and that sort of thing. When I look through and see what's included in it, I see there are parts that deal with the A Better Deal for Consumers and Businesses Act, the Alberta Corporate Tax Act, the Alberta Human Rights Act, An Act to Strengthen Municipal Government, the Auditor General Act, the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Consumer Protection Act, the Election Act. So there are lots of different parts of this bill. Again, I guess it's not supposed to be too technical in nature other than to clean up some of the administrative parts of these acts. I see the Electronic Transactions Act, the Employment Standards Code, the Financial Administration Act.

Again, it covers a lot of different things, but most of it seems to be fairly straightforward. I guess that, you know, overall, it's something that we can support on this side of the House as most of these changes are minor. But we did notice the need to add the Election Commissioner to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act.

I don't know if you recall, Madam Chair, that we had quite a discussion over the Election Commissioner and, of course, how much he's getting paid. On this side of the House we asked that the Election Commissioner's wages be disclosed and brought forward immediately so that the public could see how much this person was going to be paid. Of course, the government didn't support that. They ridiculed that and thought, "Okay; you're picking on this person" and all these different things that they accused us of at that time.

But, obviously, Madam Chair, here we have this stuck into Bill 18. Now, I guess the government has realized that maybe they should actually disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner. So all those allegations that were brought to us from the government when we brought this up earlier: obviously, the government is, I guess, backtracking on this a bit. Like I say, they accused us of singling out this person. Well, now, of course, they brought forward a bill where they are singling out this person to have their wages disclosed. This is something that we wanted all along. We'd like to have it happen immediately and not wait. That was something that we argued for, and of course we spent a lot of time in this House discussing that.

You know, when we talked about the Election Commissioner and, of course, his role, we covered a lot of different topics on that. What we realized is that the government created this new position of Election Commissioner, and we know that the job that the Election Commissioner is supposed to do is already being done. There are already investigations being done on any kind of financial complaints that come in under the elections finance act and how people are spending money for elections and for nominations and that sort of thing. We realize that this person is just going to be doing the same job that was already being done. The government thinks this is something new that the Election Commissioner is going to be doing, but of course we all know that this is a job that has been done for years in Alberta and was already being taken care of.

Of course, we also know that the person that they've chosen to have this position is somebody that actually sued the government in the past. So here we have somebody that has sued the government and lost the lawsuit because they had no grounds for the lawsuit. It was for wrongful dismissal, but there was nobody dismissed. It was just a contract not renewed. But this government, of course, has chosen to hire this person back.

We just talked about somebody yesterday that quit their job and then was immediately rehired by the government and is working and living outside the province and being paid, you know, a five-figure salary or a six-figure salary to do who knows what for this government.

On and on this government is doing things like this, that I think have Albertans wondering how they are spending their money and what benefit they're getting for that money that's being spent. What isn't happening, though, with Bill 18: you know, obviously, the salary is going to be disclosed, but we still don't know exactly the details of this deal, and we probably won't know, I guess, till after the next election. I think it's important. If this person's job is so important in elections, why can't we find out all these details before the next election? Why do we have to find out after the next election the details of this person's deal, you know, all the different things that should be disclosed to the people of Alberta? Why don't we have that?

I guess it's good that the government will at least admit their mistakes, in this situation anyways, realize that "Okay; we do need to disclose this person's salary," and have brought this forward. I mean, we could have taken care of this a lot easier, you know, a couple of weeks ago, when we had this opportunity in the House. But, of course, at that point the government would have had to admit that and support an amendment that we brought forward. I guess that maybe they can't bring themselves to do that even when it's right or even when they have to admit it's right afterwards by bringing in the same legislation at a later date.

Madam Chair, I think, again, overall, there are not a lot of big changes in here. It covers a lot of different legislation. We hope this is a good cleanup for what the government has done in some of these acts. Of course, there are lots of other things that we would love to see changed in some of the bills that the government has passed. Over and over again they prefer not to accept our advice or our amendments. We see over and over again how much trouble that gets the government into, and when the government gets into trouble, of course it costs taxpayers money. We see that over and over again with electricity, for instance, where the government keeps changing things and trying to patch up their mistakes of the past, and each time it costs Albertans money.

I'll leave it at that, Madam Chair, on Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, and thank you for your time this morning.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise today to speak to Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. In this House we have often met over the last three years to talk about how we can make our government better. I can remember that in 2015, 2016 we addressed several bills that have helped us to try to ensure that the government, that serves the people of Alberta, does so in an open and transparent way.

One of the issues that we've talked about in the past was the need for transparency when it comes to a sunshine list. Governments in the past in this province have had problems with hiring people and placing them on contracts where it is nothing more than, really, political pork-barrelling or political patronage. We've come to the decision in this House that as a part of having good government, we need to ensure that people's wages that reach a fairly substantial level have to be placed on a sunshine list.

Now, why do I talk about that with Bill 18? This bill is primarily a housekeeping bill, where government departments like the Solicitor General and Labour and Municipal Affairs and Service Alberta are just doing some housekeeping rules and housekeeping amendments to make the government run a little more efficiently in these departments.

There's at least one part of this bill that needs to be discussed and brought to the people's attention and to this Legislature's attention, and that's with regard to the salary of the Election Commissioner. Madam Chair, we understand that this is a new position that's just been brought forward, and there's been a great deal of discussion in this past session over who that should have been and whether we even had need for the Election Commissioner. We've had a Chief Electoral Officer. We've had a system of government and a process for ensuring that elections were done fairly and wisely and that people followed the rules, so there has been discussion and question as to whether there was even a need for an Election Commissioner. Well, we've made the decision to have one, and we've had the discussion about whether we've made a wise choice in offering a particular gentleman that position.

But that's not really what I want to talk about today. What I really want to talk about is the whole process of transparency when it comes to the salary of the Election Commissioner. We broadly support these changes in this piece of legislation, in Bill 18, because most of it is just housekeeping, but we do want to bring to notice that in adding an Election Commissioner to the Public Sector Compensation Transparency Act, we suggested the need to publicly disclose the salary of the Election Commissioner. We brought that into this House.

On May 1 the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment, an amendment that would have required the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary, and the government voted that amendment down. The government MLAs voted against it, and they asked: why is it necessary to single out this particular legislative officer for their salary? Well, the reality is, Madam Chair, that we have already agreed as a House on the need for a sunshine list and the need for transparency when it comes to salaries. This had been overlooked by the government, so we felt the need to make sure that this was a part of the process when we were debating the bill. The MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-

Westlock proposed this amendment, yet it was turned down by the government.

Now we know, actually, that the amendment was a very necessary amendment, because the Government House Leader admitted on May 8 that he provided some inaccurate information to the House about the public disclosure of this officer's salary, and he admitted that legislative changes would be needed to make that happen.

Often, Madam Chair, we're wondering if this House is an effective House, and the people of Alberta sometimes wonder if the government or the opposition are actually doing their jobs effectively here. I think that what we're seeing with this particular bill is that the opposition has actually done its job effectively. We brought forward a concern, and in bringing forward that concern, we have encouraged the government, through the amendment that was rejected, for the salary to be brought forward and to be made transparent and open.

This Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018, is doing that, and we're glad to see that the government is actually following through with our concern and recognizing our concern. Of course, it still won't affect Albertans by letting them know before the next election what this individual will be making. That will not become apparent to Albertans until after the next election. But having said that, we can support this bill. The government has come late to the game in understanding the need for this, but we applaud them for finally understanding and recognizing the importance of this, so this bill will have our support.

Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other members wishing to speak to the bill? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. Yeah, I just wanted to add a few things here, too, that maybe I didn't cover quite clearly enough in my previous comments. I talked about, you know, including the Election Commissioner's salary in this bill, and I talked about that we had proposed an amendment to require the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary. Of course, the government MLAs voted against this. We brought that forward. In fact, it was the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock that proposed that amendment on May 1. Again, they talked about all the different reasons why that shouldn't happen and why we'd be singling out this person and that sort of thing. Then, of course, on May 8 the Government House Leader admitted that he provided inaccurate information to the House about the public disclosure for this officer's salary, and he admitted that the legislative changes wouldn't be needed to make that happen. Of course, that's what's happened in this Bill 18. I guess they tried to kind of bury it with a bunch of other kinds of housekeeping things and add it in there.

We know that this Election Commissioner position is a position that was just created by this government. We know that the job was being done previously, but this government felt that we needed an extra person or an extra officer or whatever to do this job. Of course, also on this side of the House, we're all for having transparency and accountability and democracy. We agree a hundred per cent with that thought process, where elections need to be fair and there needs to be people looking into different complaints and allegations. Of course, we did have that, and we do have that presently even before this position was created.

Now, we also know that there was a very expensive job listing that was done. It was done through the Christmas holidays. I think it's fairly apparent that the government had a candidate in mind for this. There were other very well qualified people that applied for this job. This person may well be qualified, too, but of course, as I mentioned before, this person has a history of suing the government, and I think that's a little alarming. I know that in my business if I have an opportunity to hire somebody and I have a couple of qualified people and one of them has previously sued me wrongfully and another hasn't, I think I know which one I'm going to take. I wouldn't be taking the one that had made a wrongful lawsuit against me.

Mr. Hanson: Suing the employer?

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. You know, suing your employer is something I think you would want to think twice about. Of course, with this government, I guess, it maybe doesn't matter to them. But it matters to me, and I think it matters to Albertans when we hire people that have sued the government in the past and wrongfully.

Now, if transparency and clarity are what this government wants, then obviously this is a step in the right direction, to have this person put on the sunshine list and everything. But it is funny that this government fought so hard against having this person's wages brought out into the sunshine because the government has claimed that this person was hired to take the dark money out of politics, quote. So a person is hired to take the dark money out of politics, and this government seems to have a problem and seems to have really had to be dragged, kicking and screaming, to the point where they're going to make this person's wages come onto the sunshine list. We have the dark money on one side, and we have the sunshine list on the other. Like I say, some of these things you just can't make up, the stuff that goes on in this Legislature.

Madam Chair, I think Bill 18, I mean, like I say, a lot of it is just housekeeping. A lot of it is just cleaning up things and trying to get things, you know, kind of a little easier to understand in some of this legislation. That's fine, and I think it's great that we finally got the government to the point to bring the dark money out of politics fellow onto the sunshine list. I think that's a great addition there. It's too bad. Like I say, we could have done this back on May 1. We had an opportunity to have that amendment passed in this Legislature, and of course the government voted against it and fought it kicking and screaming all the way. Then all of a sudden here we are almost a month later, and we're at the same point we were a month ago. We, obviously, could have had this solved a long time ago.

Mr. Nixon: They do that a lot, don't they?

Mr. Loewen: They sure do this a lot, actually. Like I say, we see it over and over again, where this government passes legislation and then spends an incredible amount of time doing damage control afterwards. They tend to have this problem with going on and not being able to see the results of their actions until it's too late. Albertans have already suffered, there have already been costs incurred, and then this government decides: oh, I think we need to do something to fix this. Unfortunately, a lot of times they end up having to pass three or four or five sets of legislation in order to solve the problem they caused with their initial legislation.

A lot of that legislation that they pass has to do with an ideology that they seem to want to force. A lot of times it's like, you know, trying to force a round peg into a square hole. I mean, it just doesn't work, but they keep pounding away at it and pounding away at it and think it's going to fit, but it never fits, Madam Chair. This government tends to, like I say, keep pounding away on these things. All the time it just costs more money. It costs more stress and more aggravation. It drives investment out of Alberta. A lot of these things drive investment out of Alberta.

We sit in a situation here, for instance, with a pipeline where we have a government that's messed around with the system and created so much trouble and so much uncertainty that in the end they had to buy the pipeline. Of course, there were other ways. There was a company that was more than willing to spend the money to build the pipeline. They've been trying to build the pipeline for years, but have had nothing but obstructions and roadblocks put in the way. The government keeps moving the goalposts. In the end what has to happen? Well, the government has got to come and buy it out when really all they needed to do was facilitate the company to do the job that it wanted to do.

Madam Chair, we see this over and over again. I think Bill 18 is a classic example. They had an opportunity to bring the Election Commissioner's compensation to the sunshine list over a month ago. They fought it. They fought it. We spent hours in this Legislature debating that very thing, and now we sit here today with an amendment to do the exact same thing that we tried to do almost a month ago.

Madam Chair, I think it's just another situation where this government – we wish they would listen to us once in a while. We're sitting here on this side of the House. We're trying to do our best. We're trying to look at their legislation and trying to make amendments that are positive and that'll help the things that are going on here in Alberta and help Albertans. Again, I guess that maybe this government doesn't want to admit that we have good ideas over here. Maybe they don't want to take our advice for whatever reason, but I think they need to sit and look at what our ideas are and what our recommendations are and what our amendments are and view them with an open mind, an open mind that we do have good ideas on this side of the House. They have good ideas on their side of the House, too, and sometimes we agree with them completely, and we facilitate things and pass things through as fast as possible.

Other times, like I say, they have to be dragged kicking and screaming to the end, and that's where we're at here today with that part of Bill 18 with the Election Commissioner's ...

Mr. Nixon: It's like the huge amendment to Bill 10.

Mr. Loewen: Yeah. We just had a situation in the last two days here where we had a bill brought forward before this House. I think it was a four-page bill. The government defends the bill. We come up with ideas, amendments. We discuss the different issues with this bill, and the government, you know, calls us fearmongers and all these sorts of things. Then, of course, what happens? All of a sudden a three-page amendment shows up, a three-page amendment to a four-page bill. [interjection] We see these things all the time.

In fact, I hear the minister muttering over there on the other side about this. You know, we gave them plenty of opportunity to listen to us and to listen to our ideas and what we've said, and of course the government, in fact, the minister himself, would just steadfastly ...

Mr. Strankman: Stonewall.

Mr. Loewen: ... stonewall, stop, wouldn't accept any sort of discussion or advice on that.

He had everything under control. He had it all sorted out. There was no way that he could have done anything wrong. Of course, how do you come up with a three-page amendment to a four-page bill when there's nothing wrong? I remember at the time we were discussing that the government's website didn't match up with the government's points.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking to Bill 18?

Mr. Loewen: Yes. Bill 18.

The Chair: Please continue.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much.

I know the government doesn't want to hear about any of these other bills, but again what it does is it shows a pattern. Bill 18 shows this pattern again, where the government doesn't want to take our advice. They swear up and down that everything is perfect and that they couldn't have made a mistake. They've done all the consultation in the world, and they've got it all under control. Of course, we sit here weeks later with a situation where the government all of a sudden has to backtrack and say: "Okay. I guess you were right. I guess we have to do something different here."

Madam Chair, I'll leave it at that on Bill 18. Thank you for your time today.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments? Drayton Valley-Devon.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Madam Chair. I thought that I probably needed to stand up and talk a little bit more about just how this Legislature is supposed to work and should work. I actually believe that to a degree we see that Bill 18 is highlighting how a Legislature actually should work. We could highlight that the hon. Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment on May 1 and that the House was told by the government that disclosing the salary was singling out a particular legislative office. Yet in their denial of our point and the voting down of our amendment, they clearly made a statement that they didn't believe that there was any credibility in the points that we were trying to make in this House. It is a little bit interesting – I guess that's the word I would use – to see now in Bill 18 that they have recognized the validity of our points, the validity of our suggestions, and they have now brought it forward in a housekeeping bill.

Madam Chair, I've never truly really understood why it has to be this way. I guess, from my perspective as a former educator and talking about the process of passing legislation and bringing forward points and having debate in the House, the opposition shouldn't just be opposing for the sake of opposing and the government should be actually listening to the position and the points of the opposition. In theory, I guess, that sounds great, but one of the realities that I've found after having been here for three years now is that often egos get involved and sometimes the government isn't prepared to actually listen to some reasonable amendments. Many of the amendments that we've done through this House over the last three years coming from the opposition have been sincerely placed before this House, would have made bills substantially better.

Here's an example of one that fits that bill: expecting the Election Commissioner to actually have his salary brought before the people of Alberta and placed on a sunshine list, where we would know how much this individual is being paid. It doesn't take a particular individual and just make them sort of in the spotlight. We've done this for many, many, many people that receive a salary from this Legislature and from the taxpayers of Alberta. So the response that we received to that amendment was obviously incorrect from the side of the government, and they've recognized that now. While we would have appreciated if they had supported the amendment and had listened to the wisdom of the opposition on this issue, I guess we're happy that eventually they took it back to their caucus and the minister began to realize that maybe there were a few things that could be changed in this piece of legislation that would make it better, that the opposition idea of placing the Election Commissioner's salary so that it would be open and transparent to the people of Alberta is actually, really a very good idea and consistent with what we have done for other legislative officers in this province.

I guess I would like to take just a second or two to address the fact that it would have been nice if this would have happened before the next election. It's our understanding that the details of their agreement with the Election Commissioner will not be made transparent and will not be available to the people of Alberta until after the next election, so we've got some concerns about that. But, you know, the government has at least taken a partial step and has agreed that we and the people of Alberta will eventually know what the details of that salary are. Therefore, I would just once again say that we will support this piece of legislation.

9:30

We understand that the government is a little late to admit their mistake, but they have admitted it, they have moved forward, and they have listened to the opposition. I guess, at the end of the day, we would argue that that shows you the strength of our parliamentary democracy, where the opposition is capable of bringing forward ideas and an NDP government is capable of actually listening once in a while.

Thank you very much for the time. I rest my comments.

The Chair: Any other comments? Calgary-Hays.

Mr. McIver: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's my pleasure to stand and speak on Bill 18, the Statutes Amendment Act, 2018. You know what? For the most part, it's a good act. Traditionally statutes amendment acts usually are. Every government does it, so this government is not unique. It's not a bad thing that they're doing; actually, it's required. Sometimes you've just got to do some housekeeping, clean up some things that need to be corrected. Sometimes it's not due to the government's doing. Sometimes it's spelling errors and little minor things. Any government can make mistakes. This one would, and any other previous or past ones would, so that's not unusual.

I understand that this has to be done, but this one is interesting. Usually these things go by without being discussed much because of the fact that they're largely housekeeping. But the government, in between doing the normal housekeeping, has chosen to sneak a couple of things in that they're probably a little embarrassed about, hoping that it'll go by the boards without being talked about because it's a statutes amendment act. But because of that, I think it's right and proper that I should stand up and talk about those things, Madam Chair.

We had a lot of discussion in this House about one section of the Statutes Amendment Act, about the Election Commissioner. The government was – what's the word? – sanctimonious or kind of high and mighty in their attitude when it was suggested that they publicly disclose the Election Commissioner's salary. They spoke as if it was a personal affront to the commissioner. Of course, they actually changed their story mid-debate back then. They talked about how it was a personal affront, and then later on they said: well, we'll disclose it later. So it couldn't be both. It was either a personal affront, or they just hadn't gotten around to it yet. They couldn't quite bring themselves at that point to admit the Official Opposition was correct in suggesting that the commissioner's salary needed to be disclosed and, in fact, went so far as to say: it's already in legislation, and it will be disclosed. Then a minister had to come back and admit he was wrong and say that it wasn't in there.

Okay. You know what? I guess the point, Madam Chair, that I would say is that if the government would realize that when we're speaking on this side of the House, most of the time we're the best friends they've got, if they would listen to some of the suggestions that we have and solve the things that we try to help them solve at the earliest possible stage, then they wouldn't have to come back and kind of eat crow and do what they're doing with some of the sections of this act and admit that they maybe should have listened in the first place. But here we are. Here we are.

To that extent, I'm pleased that the government is – they tried to sneak it through by putting it in the Statutes Amendment Act, but essentially they've admitted they were wrong, and they're correcting their mistake. I congratulate them for that because that's always a positive thing when mistakes can be corrected, and I think that'll be to Albertans' benefit to have that mistake corrected. Again, it would have been easier to do it when the Official Opposition first suggested it, before we were told that we were wrong and that we were picking on people and that we were mean-spirited. Here it is, and the government is doing the exact same thing that we suggested, though they accused us of having ill intent when we were suggesting the same thing ever so recently.

So here we are with this act. Again, unfortunately, it's a pattern. You know, there have been other bills this session with the same pattern, where you've got a four-page bill with a three-page amendment after a minister stands up and says that that bill is just fine and that, really, nothing has to change much. Then an amendment comes that's almost the size of the bill, and you know that perhaps that was another – and I only raise it as a comparison, Madam Chair, because it's just an indication that when the Official Opposition is making suggestions, perhaps the government should listen carefully because, again, when we're making many of these suggestions, we're the best friends the government has got because we can stop them from the type of embarrassment that they're having this morning with this bill.

Mr. Nixon: Just like the Municipal Affairs minister. He's got a three-page amendment.

Mr. McIver: Indeed. Certainly, you're right. My colleague is reminding me that it was Bill 10 where a four-page bill had a three-page amendment, though the government protested that it was all fine. Again, that would have been another opportunity like this one this morning where had the government listened to the Official Opposition, taken our suggestion, recognized that we're often the best friends they have by making these suggestions, then their lives would actually be easier.

I would say that I'm overall in support of this bill. I think this is a learning opportunity for the government that when the Official Opposition makes suggestions, they probably should consider them carefully on behalf of Albertans. If those suggestions are to Albertans' benefit – there are parts of this bill the government could have avoided by listening to the Official Opposition at an earlier point. But at this point I think the government will find that we're happy for the corrections at whatever point they happen, and it appears it might even be now.

Thank you, Madam Chair, for this opportunity to speak to Bill 18.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair, for the opportunity to rise today to talk about Bill 18, and thank you to the hon. opposition whip for his enlightening comments on this piece of legislation that's before us this morning. I would like to start off by saying that, clearly, we in general support this bill. It makes minor changes, as the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays pointed out, most of them of a housekeeping nature, which, of course, needs to be dealt with from time to time by any government. Our concern, though, falls to the fact that we continue to see this government over and over and over having to make changes in legislation, sometimes changes to other legislation, to fix mistakes that they made in previous legislation.

This example of Bill 18 and what is happening right now in the House is a prime example of that. On May 1 the MLA for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock proposed an amendment that would have required the disclosure of the Election Commissioner's salary, and government MLAs voted against it at the time. At that time, Madam Chair, they asked why it was necessary to single out a particular legislative officer. In fact, that's what the government asked at that time. However, we know that that amendment did turn out to be necessary because the Government House Leader then admitted seven days later, on May 8, that he in fact provided inaccurate information to this Assembly about public disclosure for the officer's salary. He admitted that legislative changes would be needed to make that happen.

So here we are. We passed another piece of legislation that we debated in this House, Motion 16, I believe, at the time. I could be off on the number, Madam Chair. The Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock provided an opportunity to be able to address the issue. The government automatically refused to address the issue in their headlong approach, just running to make sure that, for whatever reason, they could continue to keep their secret deal or their secret salary with the commissioner a secret. And now here we are with the bill that's before us today, and they're doing exactly what the Member for Barrhead-Morinville-Westlock put forward at that time, seven days later.

Now the reason, Madam Chair, that this continues to become a problem is because this is the behaviour of this NDP cabinet on almost every piece of legislation that we've debated this spring sitting and beyond. We continue to have to come and try to make this legislation better. The government doesn't listen. They call us names; they call us fearmongerers; they say that we're wrong. Then they come back to the Assembly and try to gain our support to do that. Well, in general we support it because, obviously, it was our idea, but the concern then is: how do we know Bill 18 has got it right now, a hundred per cent? The minister has not stood up and spoken to this legislation. He has not explained it, not answered questions of the opposition on this issue.

Again, we know that it was on May 1 that the minister gave to this House misleading information. He came back and corrected it seven days later. We know that we saw not yesterday but a few days before that the Minister of Finance, in answer to a question from the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, implied for a government employee a situation that he worked with the Ethics Commissioner on an exemption around the Lobbyists Act. Then yesterday we find out that the Finance Minister told a reporter that they did get one from the Ethics Commissioner. And 10 minutes later they came into question period and said: oh; in fact, that's not true. A very similar example to this.

Now, I understand, Madam Chair, that the government, the NDP, don't want to hear that, but that is what the NDP government continues to do. It is shameful. It is shameful behaviour by this government, and they will not stand up and answer for it. In fact, they'll use procedural points of order and all that stuff and try to hide from Albertans their behaviour. It's extremely disappointing. We see that exact same behaviour with the core of this portion of Bill 18 which we debate today. They continually have to come and change their mistakes.

This is a government that is becoming known across Alberta, certainly, but across the country and probably the world as the government of mistakes. A government that has to continue to change their own mistakes over and over and over is not healthy. It's very, very apparent in Bill 18 that this NDP government has still not learned their lesson. They still have not learned their lesson. Their cabinet will continue, just like they did in this bill, to stand up in this House, provide inaccurate information, and then not address the fact that they have to change it. We saw it with Bill 10 yesterday, a similar example, where the minister would not stand up and acknowledge or even answer any questions about the fact that he had to change his entire piece of legislation. He had to change his entire bill with an amendment to his own legislation a few days after he called the opposition fearmongers.

Of course, Madam Chair, it's not surprising that the NDP have become known as the party of fear, the anger machine, without a doubt, and have just resorted to simply calling the opposition names. That's how they've handled this legislation. It's extraordinary that we continue to see this behaviour from this government.

Now, Madam Chair, we know that the amendment was necessary because the Government House Leader, as I said, admitted on May 8 that he provided inaccurate information to this House about the public disclosure of this officer's salary. He admitted then that legislative changes would be needed to make that happen, which is what we're dealing with now in Bill 18. So in seven short days we went from, "The opposition is fearmongering; the opposition doesn't know what they're talking about; they're wrong" to "Oh, oh; I've got to try to get this done at the end of the spring sitting because it turns out that the opposition was right and I was wrong; it turns out that yet again I came to this Assembly" – "I" being the Government House Leader in this case – "and provided inaccurate information, and now I need to get this legislation fixed."

How many times, Madam Chair, is this government going to have to come to this Assembly to get their mistakes fixed? You know, it's going to happen. As the Member for Calgary-Hays said, nobody can be a hundred per cent perfect. Nobody can get everything right, particularly when you're dealing with this much legislation. But you can't get it wrong every time. If you want to be the government of Alberta, you cannot continue to get it wrong every time. The people we represent are being hurt because of your mistakes. They're being hurt because of this government's mistakes and inability to get it right.

I can think of no other example of a government that has to have every bill that they bring to this Legislature changed by themselves. They have to bring their own amendments over and over and over to fix their legislation. They continue to show up in this place not ready to go to work. They continue to show up in this place not ready to get their job done for the people of Alberta. Bill 18 is a prime example of that, again trying to fix a mistake. Trying to fix a mistake. It's shocking that it continues to happen.

Now, I'd like to further note that this change for public disclosure still won't have the effect of letting Albertans know the details of the secret deal with the Election Commissioner until after the next election. But I suppose we're not surprised by that given that this government has only brought in time allocation twice in their time inside this Chamber. Once was for Bill 6, the biggest debacle this government ever had, an absolutely brutal attack on rural Alberta. They finally brought in time allocation because they realized they had made a mistake, and they wanted to get out of it. Instead of doing the right thing, which was to vote against the legislation and actually talk to people, they brought in time allocation to try to get around it politically.

The second time they did that was a couple of years later and just a few weeks ago – and it's directly related to this bill – and that was around the motion associated with the Election Commissioner.

They're now trying to fix the mistake that they made during that motion in this bill. During that motion they brought in time allocation because they were so frustrated and scared of Albertans understanding what they were doing in regard to the Election Commissioner.

It's no different than with Bill 6. The only other time that they brought in time allocation was when they were under enormous political pressure because of their behaviour on Bill 6. Then they came under political pressure again under the secret deal with the Election Commissioner, where they would not tell – they will not tell – Albertans that salary. Why not? It's very interesting. Even now, as they go to fix that problem with Bill 18, they still have managed to rig up the system in such a way that they won't have to disclose how much they're paying the Election Commissioner until after the next general election.

What is the main role of that Election Commissioner? It is, of course, to deal with things associated with the election, which is important. But it's a little bit interesting that the details of that secret deal would not be made public until after the election, and it's directly related to this bill. I think it's very shocking and disappointing that the government continues to not stand up and address that issue. They continue to try to hide from that issue.

Mr. McIver: I feel sorry for the commissioner.

Mr. Nixon: It's not fair to the commissioner. It's not fair to Albertans. It's not fair to anybody. But why do they want to? That question has to be asked, particularly when you shine the other light on it, that every piece of election legislation the government has brought forward lately has portions of it that are good but also has other portions of it that are deliberately designed to stack the deck for this government. How do we know that that's not what's taking place here? What reason would there be to hide that fact from Albertans, to hide that number from the people of Alberta? I can think of no reason. Maybe there is a reason, Madam Chair, but the government, then, should address that reason in this place instead of bringing in time allocation and then trying to swoop into another bill, a statute amendment act, to try to fix the mistake they made in the last bill.

Albertans are becoming very, very concerned about the secretive nature of this government. My good friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Hays and some of his colleagues from before, in the last government, would agree with what I am going to say now, and that is that one of our great legacy parties, the PC Party, went down that road a little bit near the end of their time. That's probably one of the reasons why we are sitting on this side of the Assembly. The difference is that it took them 44 years to get there. It took this government less than three.

Mr. McIver: Six months.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah, probably about six months.

We continue to see this behaviour. It is not appropriate for democracy. It does a disservice to the people of this province. It's problematic that it continues. While we are a while away from an election – and I suspect that in that election Albertans are going to render a very significant judgment on this behaviour that you see in Bill 18, in the portion of Bill 18 that I'm referring to. The reality is that this government will continue for a while and is going to be able to continue to hurt Albertans on a daily basis if they're going to continue this behaviour.

So here we are in committee. The government has an opportunity to be able to stand up and go through why they've had to go through this process, to ask for our support, to explain why on May 1 they said one thing, why on May 8 they said another thing, why they refuse to deal with it in the bill that they time allocated. Now they have to try to come and fix it in this bill. Sadly, so far – we’ve been talking about this since we got in this morning, so almost an hour – we still haven’t heard from a government member on it. We still haven’t heard from a government member to explain why they’ve chosen to go this route and what the process was that went into that. It becomes just ever more alarming, this behaviour by these cabinet ministers, not wanting to be accountable to Albertans and not wanting to be transparent to Albertans. This is a prime example.

Madam Chair, why did the Government House Leader tell us on May 1 that this was not required and then all the way on May 7 say, “Oh, maybe I did make a mistake” but then still did not deal with it in the motion that we were dealing with and then came back and tried to put it inside a housekeeping piece of legislation? Why is a very reasonable question.

The second and more important question is why they continue to make sure that the Election Commissioner’s salary will remain a secret, their secret deal. The NDP’s secret deal with the Election Commissioner will not be made public until after the general election. Even when they try to fix their mistake inside this legislation, the NDP still continues to go out of their way to be able to prolong it. They still continue to go out of their way in this legislation. It’s this bill. This is very relevant to this bill. They go out of their way to make sure the Election Commissioner’s salary will not be disclosed till after the general election.

Albertans need to ask themselves why this government has only used time allocation twice, one of them for an obvious historical – it will go down in the history books – political problem. There’s not an NDP pundit, there’s not anybody on any side of the aisle in politics that will say that that was not used at that time, as a political problem in the winter of 2016, to try to deal with Bill 6. That’s how the government chose to deal with it. It’s in the history. But the only other time that they go and do that is on a simple motion associated with an Election Commissioner to, obviously – and, again, it’s proven here in Bill 18 – try to hide their secret deal on the salary with the commissioner.

If I was the commissioner right now, I would be after the government and saying: get this open and transparent to Albertans.

Mr. McIver: He deserves to get paid.

Mr. Nixon: Of course he deserves to be paid. He deserves to be compensated significantly. It’s a hard job. It’s a tough job. There are a lot of qualifications needed to do this role. But by the government continuing to keep it a secret, they continue to cause that commissioner credibility issues, not by us but by this government, who’s keeping it secret. We’re in Committee of the Whole. Why won’t we fix that? The Minister of Municipal Affairs rewrote his entire bill this week, but we can’t have an amendment from the government to fix their mistake, that they’re continuing to keep this nontransparent process in this legislation?

Mr. Strankman: More unaccountability.

Mr. Nixon: That’s exactly what it is.

Then I have to ask myself why on behalf of the people that I represent, and so do all of my colleagues. Why? I mean, I would assume that there’s nothing here. I hope there’s not. I hope that it’s simple and that everything is up front.

Mr. McIver: They time allocated a bill and then talked more about it.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah.

I have no reason to think anything different other than the fact that the government continues repeatedly to take steps to try to keep it hidden. It’s no different than Mr. Heaney and the situation that we were talking about yesterday. They announced to the press that he has left as chief of staff and that he’s gone back to his province, and then in only, like, 72 hours, I believe it was, Madam Chair, he signed a sweetheart contract, a six-figure contract, that still allows him to live in another province, lobby about issues that are associated with our government – we don’t know if he’s lobbying the government, but there are issues that are associated with our government, for sure on the marijuana file – and then not let the public know.

Mr. Strankman: That’s a bigger kettle of fish.

Mr. Nixon: Yeah.

I mean, why does this government continue to do this? Why do they continue to go out of their way aggressively and spend so much effort to try to not let one salary – and every other salary associated with that position, the Minister of Transportation has now admitted . . .

Mr. McIver: Maybe it’s too small. Maybe he’s underpaid.

Mr. Nixon: Well, if the salary is below the limit, then that would be very simple. The minister could stand up and say that, and off we would go. But why would they continue to take steps to avoid discussing that situation?

But, Madam Chair, I suspect that, sadly, we will continue to not see any answers. In fact, if I continue to talk about this for too much longer, I suspect that very quickly the government will run and bring in another time allocation motion because they don’t want to have it discussed here, which is disappointing.

Therefore, I will make clear again that we support the bulk of Bill 18, I think all of Bill 18, quite frankly. We support the fact that we have to change these housekeeping issues. We certainly support the portion of it which was brought forward by us as an appropriate motion but shut down by the government as they scrambled, again, to protect their secret deal and that now they’re trying to fix. We certainly support that. What we don’t support is that the government continues, even with this legislation, to go out of their way to keep their secret deal with the Election Commissioner secret, to not be transparent, even with this new legislation that they brought forward to the people of Alberta, to make sure they don’t have to be held accountable for whatever decisions are in that deal until after the general election.

I mean, that is really troubling. You know, colleagues, when you think about that, that the government of Alberta is going out of their way – out of their way – using procedural motions that they very rarely use, dodging the issue, refusing to speak about the issue, to keep an issue associated with our election a secret till after the general election even though they admitted that this is something that should not be kept secret, why? What possible reason could the government of Alberta, the NDP, have for going out of their way to keep this a secret, for not wanting to be held accountable for whatever decision they made until after the general election? What possible reason could there be for that?

Mr. Strankman: We should hear from a government member.

Mr. Nixon: We should hear from the government. We won’t. We won’t. I mean, I don’t want to presume, but if the pattern continues, I suspect we will not hear from a government member.

If they rise on it, Madam Chair, they won't talk about this issue. They'll talk about other issues. They'll bring up fearmongering issues, and they'll bring up all that type of stuff, but they will not talk about the secret deal that this legislation still will put off till after the general election, a deal that is associated with the general election. Why would you want to know about that deal after the general election? It seems to me that the public deserves and would want to know about that before the general election. Now, if the government is willing to allow that deal to be known by the public after the general election and not before the general election, then one again has to ask themselves: why? Why? Why?

I will close with this, Madam Chair. This government wants to continue to be secretive, wants to continue to avoid being accountable to Albertans, wants to continue to try to stack the deck in the election system and to not be clear about contracts and deals that they're making that are associated with the election system.

The Chair: Any other hon. member wishing to speak? Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. I just wanted to add a few things here. We're talking about the Election Commissioner and how the government has had to bring in legislation, Bill 18, to make the Election Commissioner's salary public, of course. The job of the Election Commissioner, of course, is to make sure that elections are fair, to make sure that political parties and politicians are held accountable, and to bring transparency to the elections process. So I think it's rather alarming to think that the government, though now they've admitted that they've made a mistake and that they have to bring this into legislation, still won't allow for the details of this agreement with this person to be brought into the sunshine or for the salary to be brought into the sunshine before the next election.

Now, obviously, you know, when you talk about the Election Commissioner, one of the most important jobs, I would presume, of the Election Commissioner would be during an election and the process during the election, with complaints and different things like that to deal with. When we have somebody that's hired to specifically deal with that, I would think that we would want to know the details of this person's hiring and their duties, the deal with their contract, how much they're getting paid and everything. I think it's only reasonable to have those details before the next election, because after the next election it's basically too late. Albertans don't have a chance to look at what's happening and make a decision on whether they think it's right or wrong before the next election.

Of course, it's also odd that the government time allocated the debate on Motion 16. They wanted to shut down debate. They didn't want to have the discussion anymore. They didn't want us in opposition to have any more chance to speak on that. Of course, now they've realized: "Okay. We actually did make a mistake. We didn't take the amendment that the Official Opposition brought forward." They time allocated. They thought that their job was finished, so they time allocated. They wanted to shut down debate. Of course, now they've had to reopen it again because they realized they had made a mistake.

Now, I think that this government has a hard time admitting when they make a mistake and when they do anything wrong. It would be humorous if it wasn't true and so alarming. Just the other day the Member for Highwood was asking the Deputy Premier questions on a plane that was stuck. Of course, the Member for Highwood said that the plane was stuck for almost two hours or more, and the Deputy Premier said: no, it was only 10 minutes. Then the Member for Highwood said that we actually have timed video footage of the plane and how long it was sitting there. What did the Deputy Premier do? She still swore up and down that it had only been 10 minutes.

An Hon. Member: Doubled down.

Mr. Loewen: Doubled down, tripled down.

I mean, you can't make this stuff up. This government is so obstinate that they can't admit when they make a mistake. They can't admit that they could ever be wrong. Even with timed video evidence the Deputy Premier could not admit a mistake, that she could be wrong.

You know, we've seen it actually with the Municipal Affairs minister. I mean, on Bill 10 we brought forward information that the website had differing information than the bill that was brought forward. The Municipal Affairs minister doesn't often holler in the Legislature, but he often mutters and grumbles and complains about things audibly, that we can hear on this side of the House, so we hear him muttering and grumbling about that. Of course, then on May 17 he has to get up and say this.

There is one sentence that I've been made aware of from the member that on the website does kind of give a little bit of – it's not clear, and it seems like a contradiction. I do apologize for that. It seems like it's a little bit of a mixed message.

Then he goes on to say:

So I appreciate that. There was a mistake on the website. But, again, the legislation is the number one source, so just to make sure that we always follow that.

Madam Chair, here we have the Municipal Affairs minister. You know, we bring something up. He grumbles, complains, says: that's not true; that's not right. Then, of course, he has to come in and apologize and say: no, sorry; I was wrong; there was a problem with the website. We see this issue over and over again with this government. Quite often we hear them making wild allegations about the opposition. They do this fearmongering thing that anything that we say over here has to be wrong and has to be crazy and everything, and over and over again we're proved to be correct.

Madam Chair, I think we have a situation here where the government has had to backtrack again. I just wish that they would take this one step further and make the deal with the Election Commissioner public now and the wages public now so that Albertans have an opportunity to see what's going on here. I mean, this is a person that was hired to make sure there's accountability, to make sure things are fair, to make sure things are transparent. The irony here is not lost on this side of the House, where somebody that's hired to take the dark money out of politics can't be brought onto the sunshine list until after the next election. Like I say, with Bill 18 a lot of housekeeping things have got to be done. It's good to see that the government has admitted they've made a mistake and that they actually decided: okay; we need to actually pass legislation to bring this Election Commissioner's wages onto the sunshine list. Obviously, it only makes sense that we have this information immediately, that Albertans have this information immediately. They have the details on the contract with this person. I think it's only right that that's brought out before the election because that's the only thing that could be fair and transparent and have any chance of holding the government to account on this. Obviously, I guess they feel that's not necessary.

We've seen this government over and over and over again fail on consultation with Albertans. They talk a good game, but the proof just isn't there in reality. Again, you know, like I say, I go back to the debate on Motion 16, where they said, "How could you be singling out this person? It's just not right to single out this person," and here we have a bill where this person is singled out specifically, and that has to be. I mean, over and over again we see these things with this government.

We need to have these things brought out in the open. We need to have fair and transparent elections. People and politicians and political parties need to be held accountable for their actions. We believe in democracy here. We believe in accountability, transparency inside and outside of election periods. I would hope that's something that we could all agree on in this Legislature. We need to have that.

Why not go all the way, Madam Chair? Why not go all the way? Why don't we just make sure that the details of this person's agreement with the government, the contract and the wages – bring them forward now. Let's do this. Let's show Albertans that we're transparent here. Let's give this an opportunity to happen. I think there's plenty of opportunity for this government to do this, and if they don't take the opportunity to do it, obviously we can only assume that there's something to hide. We argued about this almost a month ago. They steadfastly refused. They bring it forward now and realize that, yes, they need to do some changes here. Now, just admit that this needs to be done. Bring it forward. The government has the power to do this. Let's bring some transparency to this so Albertans have a chance to look at this before the next election.

I'll leave my comments at that. Thank you, Madam Chair.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill?

Mr. Clark: I don't have a lot to say. It's the Statutes Amendment Act, ordinarily called a miscellaneous statutes amendment act.

But here's what I want to know from our friends in the Official Opposition. If the Election Commissioner's salary was 10 grand a year, would that be okay? Would that make the Election Commissioner okay in your mind? If it was 500 grand a year, maybe we'd all be upset, but is it really about how much the Election Commissioner gets paid? This particular line in this particular, very miscellaneous statutes amendment, which is amending commas and typos and some pretty inane kind of stuff: really, here we are spending an hour or more of the Legislature's very valuable and, frankly, quite expensive time debating something that – I don't understand, frankly, why you're on and on about this unless there's some worry amongst the UCP that the Election Commissioner is going to find something untoward in the way that you conduct yourselves during an election. That's the only possible thing I can think of. The rules are what the rules are.

Now, I've been very clear that I don't agree with everything this government has done to change the election finance rules. In fact, I did some calculations the other day. It's the second-most commonly legislated topic in this place since this government has been in power, so I have some critique for the government in terms of their obsession with changing election laws. Fair enough. But can we just move on and actually get to some substantive legislation that we need to actually address, that's going to help move our province forward?

Thank you.

The Chair: Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's good to see at least one member who will stand up and have a conversation in regard to this legislation although the government will not. I do appreciate the Member for Calgary-Elbow participating in the debate. It's unfortunate that he seems to think that debating some sort of piece of legislation is not important. I do know that in the past he's struggled to come to work. Maybe that's what it is. Maybe he's feeling tired and doesn't want to do his job.

As for this party we're quite content to debate every piece of legislation fully, particularly... [interjections] Again, the government wants to heckle because they continue to want to hide their secret deal. That is what this is about.

The Member for Calgary-Elbow: we know, if he actually paid attention to anything that was being said from this side, that we already said, Madam Chair, through you to him, that we have no concerns with the rules. We think the Election Commissioner can do his job. In fact, actually, we're concerned this behaviour by this government is making it harder for the Election Commissioner to be able to do his job because it's causing concerns. It's not about how much the Election Commissioner makes. No matter what, those rules need to be enforced. No matter what, there needs to be a person that's involved enforcing those rules.

What is concerning, though, is why the government would want to keep that secret. Any time that the government keeps things secret, that's concerning. That is our job as the Official Opposition, to try to hold accountable a government that continues to hold things secret, a government, again, who tells the press that a chief of staff who is under investigation has left, and it turns out that within 72 hours they give him a sweetheart deal of a contract, and they don't let the public know about it.

That's the job of the Official Opposition, something the Member for Calgary-Elbow and the Alberta Party clearly don't understand. They don't understand their role as the opposition. It's clear if you watch them. They rarely do anything to hold the government accountable. In fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow spends most of his time, from what I can see, trying to make himself sound good on Twitter, which is not what Albertans want him to do.

So the question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow is: do you think it's appropriate for the government to continue to hide things from Alberta? Is that what we could expect from an Alberta Party government, a government that would come in and go out of their way to hide contracts from the province? Maybe they would bring in time allocation on motions like this to go out of their way to hide their secret deal. [interjection]

I see the hon. Minister of Infrastructure is heckling away on this issue. It's shameful to hide things like that from the people of Alberta.

Ms Jansen: You're shameful.

Mr. Nixon: You know, I'm not the one who has brought in time allocation, who has misled the House and then had to come back and say that it's different and then bring in a procedural amendment to try to fix my mistakes. That's that member's government. That is that member's government.

Miranda: But you are the one who'll run out of the building when we debate Bill 9.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. minister of tourism is heckling away about it but won't stand up and explain why he continues to go out of his way to help hide the secret deal from the people of Alberta. [interjection] The Minister of Municipal Affairs is heckling now, who won't stand up and talk about his own amendment that changes his entire bill, but he'll heckle in this House. It's shameful.

Now, I'm glad that the Member for Calgary-Elbow rose and spoke. It's clear what I've always thought, which is that the Alberta Party is very similar to the NDP Party and that an Alberta Party government, as has been just made clear by the House leader of the third party, would do the same thing. It would hide secret deals from the people of Alberta. It does not want to be held accountable to the people of Alberta, and it thinks coming to the Legislature to do their job is too hard and would like us to accelerate so that they can go home. That is shameful.

The Chair: Any other questions, comments, or amendments with respect to this bill? Drumheller-Stettler.

Mr. Strankman: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. It's interesting to hear the comments from the Member for Calgary-Elbow. I think he's missed the mark even though he does have various times to interlude and make comments responsibly from the position of his party. But he's talking about the dollar values, and he seems to be focused more around the ground or the horizon directly in front of him, where he might put his foot next, and that may be forward or it may be backward or it may be – I'm sorry – where the pie enters his face.

The Chair: Hon. member, are you speaking to this legislation?

Mr. Strankman: Madam Chair, to the amendment, yes. It's regarding democracy, and that's the bigger picture here. We're talking about democracy and the fair effect of a democracy. That's what the Member for Calgary-Elbow is not recognizing, a bigger picture here. The unaccountability, the unapproachability of the government to recognize – publicly recognize – and effect the Election Commissioner's wages and such like that is unacceptable. The Member for Calgary-Elbow needs to recognize that.

The Chair: Chestermere-Rocky View.

Mrs. Aheer: Thank you, Madam Chair. I just wanted to address one small thing. I think I would want to ask the Member for Calgary-Elbow why he also is not asking this question. It's one thing if the Member for Calgary-Elbow has issues with the way that the opposition is bringing forward questions. That's fair. I mean, he's allowed to have that opinion. I guess the question that I would have is why he wouldn't have the same concerns we do. There is a huge difference between having an issue with discussing legislation and all that kind of stuff. That's fair. You're entitled to your opinion on that. This is not an opinion. This is a question about transparency.

I will be completely clear, Madam Chair. I have been extremely clear about my position on the Election Commissioner from the get-go, from Bill 32 right through to the amendments that are going to change the way that elections are done, especially because this person is going to be on the ground in the next election. We've asked many, many questions. We've spoken with the elections officer with him saying specifically that this particular position wasn't even needed.

When you go through the process of the fact that this position was not even needed and then on top of that, Madam Chair, it is not being disclosed to the public, that's the issue that I have with the Member for Calgary-Elbow, the fact that he wouldn't be concerned. It could be $10,000. It could be a million dollars. It's irrelevant. That's taxpayer dollars. If there is a price that the Member for Calgary-Elbow is comfortable or not comfortable with, that is truly his opinion, but the fact that he wouldn't be asking the question as to why: that is the problem. That is the problem, and it's a question that I believe Albertans are very interested in finding out, especially because the mechanism for how this will go forward is changing. We have a new position that now will span not only this time but over the course of the next election and over the course of the contract of the elections officer. We've asked many, many questions in this House as to why that's happening and what the mandate is and what the government is wanting to do with this.

On top of that, the lack of disclosure is a concern. It concerns me that the Member for Calgary-Elbow is not interested in that disclosure. I've heard him speak many, many other times on other disclosures that are important to him. I would question and ask why this one is not.

Thank you.

The Chair: Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Loewen: Thank you, Madam Chair. Yeah. I guess I was also kind of struck by the Member for Calgary-Elbow's comments there. I think he totally missed the point of this discussion here. This discussion is about transparency to Albertans. It has nothing to do with the dollar figure. That's irrelevant. This is all about transparency, and this is about transparency in a timely manner. He made some wild suggestions regarding the Official Opposition that are just totally untrue, but if he wants to throw around wild suggestions, obviously, he must want to hide with the government on this issue. What does he have to hide? Why doesn't he want to see transparency for Albertans?

I don't understand. The government has hidden this in this bill. You're right. The bulk of this bill is just basic things that are nothing to discuss, but of course the government has put this in this bill. They could have put it somewhere else. They could have had a bill of its own on this to take care of what they thought they had taken care of earlier, which they had a chance to take care of with our amendment but didn't. Now they've had to put this somewhere. They've tried to drop it into this bill. You know, it's got a whole bunch of other things. It covers a whole bunch of other topics and a whole bunch of other acts and everything. They put it in there to hide that.

Now, of course, we hear all the heckling and stuff like that that's been going on this morning from the other side and everything. Even the minister of tourism, who's usually pretty quiet, is heckling. I guess maybe it's because he's all alone there in the front row today. I'm not sure why, but I think it's . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, it is not appropriate in this House to be referring to the absence or presence of members. I would ask that you please do not.

Mr. Loewen: Okay. Thank you. I'll withdraw that.

But I think it's ironic to listen to the Member for Calgary-Elbow talk about how we're wasting time here. Of course, this is what we do in this Legislature: we discuss things. We debate things and everything, but he decided to take time to say that we are wasting time. Obviously, there's quite a bit of irony there.

I'll leave my comments at that. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Are there any further questions, comments, or amendments with respect to Bill 13? Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre.

Mr. Nixon: Thank you, Madam Chair. I rise to talk, of course, about Bill 13. At its core it is another ... [interjection] Well, the hon. Member for Chestermere-Rocky View says that it is another bill of this government trying to fix stuff, but in this case it's extremely alarming because it's another piece of legislation where the government is messing with our electricity system.

Madam Chair, I'm sure you've heard from many of your constituents – I know that I hear from mine on a regular basis – who are extremely disturbed that under this NDP government electricity continues to become more expensive. It's probably one of the number one things we hear about at my three constituency offices. And it's become even more alarming because the government continues to want to go down this path, appears to be ignoring many of the lessons that were learned from Ontario.

It was interesting. I was reading an interview with Ontario's Premier, a Liberal Premier of course, who's in a general election right now where things don't look very good for her. She was talking about how her greatest regret is how badly they messed up the electricity system. Of course, she was probably recognizing it because of the extreme political consequences that it looks like the Ontario Liberal Party is about to pay for that mistake and others. But it was interesting that as she's looking back at her time as Premier of our largest province, that that is, hands down, her greatest regret, how the Ontario Liberal Party handled the electricity file in that area.

As we now see, the NDP government of Alberta is continuing to go and mess in that area and seems to be completely ignoring what has happened in Ontario and the consequences to Ontario. Certainly, I know that the people of Rimbey-Rocky Mountain House-Sundre, when we talk about this issue, are deeply concerned about the NDP government's work and the process they've taken so far, the action they've taken so far on the electricity file and the cost that it will be to consumers: fixed-income seniors, manufacturing organizations, farmers, ranchers. Electricity has a tremendous impact. It's a very important issue for our economy. The fact that the NDP continues to make it more expensive for Albertans is extremely troubling.

Bill 13 will make electricity, as I said, more expensive for consumers by transferring more risk away from generators. Making the consumer or taxpayer ultimately have to pay a larger expense for the NDP's ideology is disappointing and extremely concerning for the people that I represent. As such, our Energy critic, the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, has done a tremendous amount of work on this file. As you know, Madam Chair, the other day he moved several reasonable amendments, attempting to address some of the issues that are wrong with this legislation. He was clear that the legislation is so significantly flawed that it's impossible to fix it all, but he was at least attempting to try to make the bill less damaging to the people of Alberta and to have less of a negative impact on their daily lives. So far the government has not listened to any of those amendments.

However, on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills I will move another amendment. I have the appropriate copies for the pages, and we'll have a discussion about that, Madam Chair, after you give me permission to start again.

The Chair: This is amendment A4.

Go ahead, hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Well, thank you, Madam Chair. This amendment simply ...

The Chair: Just a reminder, hon. member, that you do have to move the amendment on behalf of the hon ...

Mr. Nixon: I thought I did that.

The Chair: You may have.

Mr. Nixon: I am certainly moving it on behalf of the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, in case I need to clarify that.

The Chair: Yes. I think you did mention that. Thank you.

Mr. Nixon: Without a doubt – I don't have a copy back yet – the issue, Madam Chair, that this amendment is attempting to deal with is in a couple of places in the bill where fair, efficient, and openly competitive language has not been accorded to the capacity market or the standard FEOC language was not used. It's trying to clean that up. The amendment itself will clean up the bill and ensure consistency throughout the bill. It also provides certainty to electricity stakeholders who do not want legal manoeuvring to allow the government or the AESO to skip out on commitments, and it helps restore trust to the bill at its core.

One of the issues that we've had is that when the NDP provincial government of Alberta came into power, they started out by actually breaking government contracts and ended up in some significant lawsuits and negotiations as a result of that. It certainly created a situation, you know, in addition to many other things that the NDP government has done, of instability for the generators but also instability for investment markets because people don't want to invest, of course, in a province that has a government that is willing to break contracts that the government already had and to sue sometimes itself, which was bizarre. The point is that the amendment helps restore trust in this bill with the people of Alberta and the people that are involved in the electricity market.

Trust, of course, is the biggest issue that this government faces. You don't have to go too far away from the Legislature and talk to too many people, but from north to south, Edmonton to Calgary to Red Deer, the number one consistent thing you hear about the NDP is that the people of Alberta don't trust them. They don't trust them because of their record on the electricity file and on other files. They have lost Albertans' trust. Certainly, the majority of Albertans have lost trust in the NDP because they often say one thing and commit and promise things to Albertans, and then very shortly afterwards it turns out that those promises don't come true.

Sometimes the government itself, to their credit, will stand up and say: hey, we got it wrong. It's sad, unfortunately, because they were warned often along the way that they were going to get it wrong. Then they attempt to fix it, but when they attempt to fix it, they continue the same habits that got them into the situation in the first place, which, of course, is that not consulting the people that are involved, only working within the bubble of the NDP world view. You know, as the Minister of Health, the Deputy Premier, once famously said in this House: we couldn't hire as many people from the province of Alberta because we couldn't find anybody that had our world view, which is why we went and hired people outside of the province. When you're consulting only with people that have that ideological bubble view, you end up in a situation where you get things wrong.

Certainly, when it comes to the electricity file, which is extremely complicated – there's no doubt that the legislation around this file is very complicated – the people of Alberta, at their core, evaluate it on a couple of things. One is: does it cost them more money? Under the NDP government it's cost them more money. That's without a doubt and something that they talk about. Second, they don't trust the government to get this important issue right because they've gotten it wrong. Then when you put inconsistent language inside the legislation and you leave it open for legal manoeuvring to allow the government or the AESO to skip out on commitments, that just increases that lack of trust out there in the province for a government that's already lost trust.

By supporting this amendment, you make the bill more consistent, you make the language more consistent and efficient, but you also help restore trust. Again, as often is the case in this Chamber, Madam Chair, as you will know, the opposition is coming forward with a way that could actually help the government be able to get some trust back with the people of Alberta that they've lost the trust with. By supporting an amendment, a simple amendment, along these lines, that helps them do that.

Now, Madam Chair, I do have a copy of the amendment back, so I will be clear on what it says. Of course, on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Foothills I move that Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, be amended in section 2 by (a) in subsection (4), in the proposed section 5(c.1), striking out subclause (i) and substituting the following:

- (i) that the capacity market is fair, efficient and openly competitive and is not distorted by unfair advantages of government-owned participants or any other participants, and

And (b) in subsection (14), in the proposed section 20.21(2)(b), by striking out "and" at the end of subclause (i) and adding the following after subclause (i):

- (i.1) supports the fair, efficient and openly competitive operation of the capacity market, and

I can't think of any reason why the NDP government, why any government would not want to support the fair, efficient, and openly competitive operation of the capacity market. That would certainly go a long way to restoring trust. It would go a long way to giving a clear indication that this government and the province of Alberta will support a fair and efficient and openly competitive process in the market.

By the government voting this down, if that's what they decide to do, and by the way that they have written this bill, they have essentially said that they don't support fair, efficient, and openly competitive operations of the capacity market. If that is the case, it certainly, as I said earlier, Madam Chair, causes concerns, great concerns for the market, certainly, but also for the people of Alberta that, in the end, the NDP will be messing with the electricity and that it will in the end cost them more money and they'll end up in a similar situation to what Ontario has. I think that all of us, all members of the House, would agree that the electricity rates that the people of Ontario have had to pay are significant and certainly detrimental to their economy and to their daily way of life.

You know, Kathleen Wynne, the Premier of Ontario, I thought in a very open and transparent way, interestingly enough, inside that interview that she did the other day, was very, very clear that that was the biggest mistake that her government had made, that the Liberal government had made in Ontario, and the thing that they regret the most. Sadly for them, they realized that they regretted it the most when they're in the middle of a general election that appears to be ready to wipe out their entire political party as a consequence of that. But it is even more sad for the people of Ontario, that have had to pay that consequence over and over.

Madam Chair, with this amendment the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills is trying to give an opportunity for the NDP government to avoid a similar situation, where they're doing interviews in a year's time or two years' time or whenever that opportunity would come and reflecting back and recognizing: we made the same mistake as our friends in Ontario. Learning from other jurisdictions, I think, is wise.

Of course, also, this amendment provides an opportunity for the government to show that they support a fair, efficient, open, and competitive market. As such, I encourage all of my colleagues and all members of this Assembly to vote in support of this amendment.

The Chair: Lac La Biche-St. Paul-Two Hills.

Mr. Hanson: Thank you very much, Madam Chair. It's great to have an opportunity to speak in favour of this amendment, especially the clauses that we're looking for: "fair, efficient and openly competitive." I think that finding an argument against those words is pretty tough for any party.

Bill 13, An Act to Secure Alberta's Electricity Future, is just kind of – what concerns me is that up until 2015 we had a fairly secure electricity market and future here in Alberta. We had the cheapest power rates in North America, but now we seem to be going down a path that follows other jurisdictions that have made mistakes in their power purchase agreements. The capacity markets that we're entering into: you know, I did a little bit of quick research here on other jurisdictions that are following a capacity market, the United States, where they're averaging 14 to 22 U.S. cents per kilowatt hour, which translates to anywhere between 18 and 28 cents Canadian; the U.K., at 26.6 cents per kilowatt hour. [interjection] Excuse me. There are just some distractions there in the front.
